Mr. POPE moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 1551) respecting the granting of subsidies to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways therein mentioned.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the House will allow me to lay on the Table two additional sets of correspondence in relation to this matter.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said there were five or six more.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These are the only two that have been sent over.

Mr. BLAKE. Is not the hon. gentleman going to make a statement in reference to the resolutions?

Mr. POPE. In moving that you leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider the resolutions, I have only to refer to what has taken place since 1882. In 1882, we brought down to this House certain resolutions granting subsidies to railways in this Dominion. The amount laid down at that time, that we would be prepared to vote in aid of railways, was $3,200 per mile. At that time it was intimated to the House that it was the policy of the Government, as far as possible, to confine those grants to leading railways between the Provinces of the Dominion, or railways within the Provinces that might become leading railways. That policy was successfully carried out. But since that time a great advance has taken place in railway construction. In 1883 we continued to grant further subsidies to railways, and the building of railways in certain sections of the country has been found to be very advantageous to the interests of the whole Dominion. We continued the policy in 1884-85, gradually departing from the principle at first laid down that these grants should be confined, as a rule, to leading railways throughout the country. We came to find that it was very important in the interests of the Provinces that we should assist all roads, that we should open up new sections of the country to facilitate their settlement by our own people, and so develop the country at large. Sir, we find, particularly in the Province of Quebec, that this policy was necessary to restrict the emigration of our own people to the United States. It has been thrown to us across the House by the Opposition that we ought to do something to retain these people in this country, that we ought to do something further than building great lines of railway from one end to the other of the country. Well, Sir, we have also come to this conclusion, that we ought to do something to retain our own people in this country; we have come to the conclusion that we ought to go still further in opening up various sections of this country by means of railways, more particularly in the Province of Quebec, where the French people have a great love of country, a great love of their own institutions, and who will not emigrate to our own North-West, but, instead, find their way into the manufacturing districts of New England. We find such patriotic men as Father Labelle and Father Gendreau exerting themselves to the utmost to retain their people in this country, and I might mention many other gentlemen who have exerted themselves in opening up new sections of the country, some of them almost within a stone's throw to the north of us. The object is, that if our people will not go to our own North-West, that we shall still prevent them, if possible, from emigrating to New England, and endeavor to retain them at home by opening up new sections of the country by means of railways. Nevertheless, we expect to place millions of immigrants in our own North-West, a country where people from Ontario and the other Provinces may also make for themselves beautiful homes. We do not wish to restrict emigration to the North-West, but we wish to provide opportunities for those who desire to settle nearer home; we wish to meet the reproach of hon. gentlemen opposite who have stated that we cannot keep our people at home, and that we ought not to do so much for foreign immigration. We propose to devise means by which we will keep our own people at home, and particularly that class of people who are so well qualified to open up the country, and to become good citizens. We propose, by the development of short lines of railway, to give them a home in this country. No people on the face of the earth are so well qualified to go in and form these new settlements, no people are so anxious to do so, as are our French Canadian population, and we have decided to give them a chance to make a home in our midst, by opening up short lines of railway. If hon. gentlemen will look up at the resolutions, they will find that we have made every effort to meet the interests of the various sections of our people. The time is gone by when the country could be opened up by means of turnpike roads. What turnpike roads were to this country forty years ago, railways are to-day, so that there is no possibility of keeping our own people at home except by opening up the country by railways, so as to give them facilities for inter-communication. We are encouraged to do that by the noble example of those patriotic men that I have just mentioned, such as Father Labelle and Father Gendreau, who have gone into the woods and made great exertions to establish new settlements to the north and to the west. We are bound to assist them, when they come here and ask for aid to open up this country, by giving them railway facilities. Sir, while we continue the old principle, we extend it. The sum we put in the Estimates this year is something like $1,700,000. I am sure the hon. leader of the Opposition will not say that it is too much, when he remembers that when he was in the Ontario Government some years ago, he gave over $2,000,000 in one year for railways in Ontario alone. So I think he will say that we have kept within the mark in proposing these subsidies. Mr. Speaker, I move that you do now leave the Chair, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider these resolutions.

Mr. POPE.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

1. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the Railway Companies, and towards the construction of the Railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—

To the Moncton and Buctouche Railway Company, for thirty miles of their railway, from a point at or near Moncton, to Buctouche, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $96,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate my hon. friend on the grand speech that he delivered a moment ago.

Mr. POPE. That is a patent speech.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not know that the hon. gentleman had the patent of that speech. I have heard so many people speak that speech in this House, that I supposed the patent had long ago expired. But I really thought that the hon. gentleman was going to give us a business speech, to give us some information as to these particular proposals. We are perfectly well aware what the policy of the Government and this Parliament has been, and we see that the subsidies are in the direction of that policy. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us some information in regard to this particular resolution. There is a line of demarcation between the gush of patriotism and business. Having gone through the patriotism we will now come down to business. Perhaps, now, the hon. gentleman will make a brief explanation in regard to this particular item.

Mr. POPE. I will come down to business, and I will ask for a little amendment to be made.

Mr. BLAKE. St. Louis?

Mr. POPE. No. This is the Moncton and Buctouche Railway I am speaking of. I do not know whether I have the name right or not.

Mr. BLAKE. No. The hon. gentleman is too patriotic to get the name right.

Mr. POPE. That is business. You and I can arrange that. The patriotic part I have to do all alone. This road is a very important road, as the hon. gentleman will find is the case with most of the roads to which subsidies are to be given. This road starts from Moncton, which has a population of about ten thousand people. It is the headquarters of the Intercolonial Railway, where the principal workshops are located. There is a large sugar refinery, and extensive business operations are carried on. The road will run through a fine agricultural country producing a large quantity of cereals, peas, oats, &c., and there is also a large quantity of tanbark to be found in that section. The railway will run to the thriving village of Buctouche, on the Northumberland Straits, where oysters, lobsters, smelts, and other fish are caught. This road will be thirty miles in length, and its usefulness is best shown by the fact that it has received a subsidy from the Local Government. I move that the resolution be amended, so as to read: "For a railway from a point at or near."

Mr. BLAKE. Then this subsidy is not going to be limited to the existing railway company. The existing company is the St. Louis, Moncton and Buctouche Railway Company. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to the character of the country, from a railway point of view; also, as to the cost of the railway?

Mr. POPE. Yes. The estimated cost of the railway is $18,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Equipped?

Mr. POPE. Yes; a small equipment for a road of that kind. The hon. gentleman knows that on small roads a large portion of the equipment usually comes from adjoining roads.

Mr. BLAKE. Is than an engineer's estimate?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the Government engineer corroborated it in any way?

Mr. POPE. No; but the Chief Engineer is well acquainted with that section of the country, in which he has operated a good deal himself, and he thinks, from what he knows of the country, that that is a fair estimate.

Mr. WELDON. Where is it supposed to strike the River Buctouche?

Mr. POPE. I cannot tell.

Mr. WELDON. How far distant from the point where the Intercolonial crosses the river?

Mr. POPE. I cannot tell.

Mr. BLAKE. Why does the hon. gentleman propose to alter the resolution which would give the subsidy to the existing company, and insert words so as to be able to give it to another company?

Mr. POPE. I had not received satisfactory assurance of the ability of the company to build the road, and I thought I would be warranted in placing myself in a position so as to be able to give the subsidy to another company if they offered to build the road.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the amount of the Local Government subsidy?

Mr. POPE. $3,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. That Government subsidy is given to the particular company now in existence?

Mr. POPE. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any other company formed to build the railroad except the company at present in existence?

Mr. POPE. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know that any other bond fide company is incorporated, and if so, how much has been paid upon the stock?

Mr. POPE. I said I was not satisfied that the present company could build the road. The time when I shall know what amount of stock has been subscribed, how much has been paid up, and whether the company have complied with their charter, is when it is proposed to give them this subsidy. That is the time I can obtain this information, and not before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So the proposition is in air. We are asked, under the supposition that a satisfactory company will be formed, to vote this money. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman whether the Government have come to any policy as to the amount of money they will require to be put up before they grant aid, or whether they propose to take power to grant these subsidies to any company that may be formed, without any definite amount of money being put up in order to guarantee the completion or prosecution of the road?

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman will see there are two subsidies which form something of a guarantee for the building of the road. Before the contract is entered into, the company must show me what guarantee they can give that they are able to complete the road. Not one dollar of public money is expended until ten miles of the road is built.

Mr. MILLS. Is not this road very nearly parallel to the Intercolonial?

Mr. POPE. No; that is not my information. It may be that it runs somewhat in the same direction, like north-east and north and south-east and south, but it is not parallel; and, besides, it will be an important feeder to the Intercolonial.

Mr. MILLS. It would be a great advantage if the hon. gentleman would lay a map on the Table showing the exact location of the different roads proposed to be aided. Practically what we are asked to do is to make a vote of this money without knowing precisely what we are doing. The hon. gentleman, in fact, is asking the House to take a leap in the dark, as he has not given the information which we ought to have received from his Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Did the hon. gentleman say there were two companies?

Mr. POPE. No, I did not.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought you said there was a guarantee from two companies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; two guarantees—two subsidies.

Mr. MITCHELL. I may say that I know something about the locality through which this road is to be built, and I am satisfied that the road is needed. If the Intercolonial Railway had been located further to the north than it was through that section of country, perhaps this particular road would not have been required, but there are large and populous settlements along the gulf shore that are completely cut off, because, in order to make the Intercolonial Railway a short road to Halifax and St. John, it was taken in a different direction, contrary to my wishes, I must say, but according to the wishes of the Government of which I was a member and the wishes of the engineers. This locality really requires railway facilities which they do not now possess, and I think the Government deserves credit for making this grant. It is not my own county, but I know the facts with regard to it.

Mr. BLAKE. At the present moment the hon. member for Northumberland will understand we are endeavoring to get information to enable us to form a judgment, and that, I suppose, the Independent party will not object to.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, I do not object.

Mr. BLAKE. I notice that the Minister of Railways is not unfamiliar with this company, because he had an application formerly to which he acceded.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). It is not the same company.

Mr. BLAKE. It is very like it, and I was informed that it was the same company. Of course, I do not know all the companies in which, as I see by the correspondence, the hon. member for Kent requests the Government to interest themselves, as well as he does, and therefore I at once accept his statement.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman falling into the error of supposing the company mentioned here was the same company to whom a subsidy had been given to build the St. Louis branch. Looking only at the correspondence and the stock list, a stranger to the country might reasonably suppose that it was one and the same company, if he did not look into it closely. Some of the stockholders, I believe, are the same, but they are two distinct companies. Another reason why the hon. gentleman might be led into the error is that the company which constructed the St. Louis branch have sought legislation, though I am not very sure that they obtained it, to give them authority to extend their road from Richibucto via Buctouche to Moncton. While that company desired to do that, yet the company for whom the subsidy is intended had, by means of legislation and the steps they had taken, placed themselves in a more favorable position to secure the building of the railway, and therefore the subsidy is intended for them.

Mr. WELDON. What is the distance from Buctouche to the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). The distance at right angles is about thirty miles, or between twenty-five and thirty, and the distance from Buctouche to Shediac is twenty miles.

Mr. WELDON. I think it is only about fifteen.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. It is nearer twenty, if not quite twenty, than fifteen.

Mr. WELDON. Would it not be easier to build the road, and more advantageous to the people generally, to Shediac from Buctouche?

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I do not want to say anything disparagingly at all of the claims of the people who desire that, as they are numerous and have fairly strong claims for a subsidy for a railway to Shediac; but, while I have asked a subsidy for both branches when I first entered Parliament, yet the company favoring the road to Moncton have made such progress towards it that I felt that this one would ensure more quickly a debouche from Buctouche than by favoring a road to Shediac. But the time may come when an additional branch to Shediac might be both a profitable one and an advantageous one to the people; but at present I feel convinced that the prosperous town of Moncton would furnish to the surrounding country, and particularly to the country served by the railway now in contemplation, a larger, more convenient and more satisfactory market than would Shediac.

Mr. VAIL. Is there a railway from Moncton to Shediac?

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). There is a railway from Moncton to Shediac, and if the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is correct in his figures about the distance from Buctouche to Shadiac being only fifteen miles, it is evident that with a Buctouche and Moncton Railway built, the same people would be more accommodated by the Shediac road, and would have, at the very furthest, only seven and a half miles to get to a railway to Shediac on the one side or Buctouche on the other. As to the cost of the road to Shediac, while the distance may be a little shorter, the cost must be considerably greater, because it would cross the numerous rivers in that county between those two points near their mouths, and would entail much larger expense for bridging.

Mr. WELDON. What sort of a country does the line from Moncton pass through? My recollection is that the large settlements are on the shore and not inland.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). There are prosperous settlements all along these rivers, extending back to the Intercolonial Railway and beyond, which would be accommodated to a larger extent by this road than by a road built to Shediac. That is my opinion as the representative of the county, without showing any partiality to one section over the other; and with that conviction, and the certainty of this road being in a better position to be built than the other, I have latterly urged that the subsidy should be given to this railway rather than to one to Shediac, and I shall have to assume the full responsibility of that position before my constituents.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Railways says that $16,000 a mile is the estimated cost with light equipment. How much has he allowed for equipment?

Mr. POPE. From $1,000 to $1,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Railways whether he will be prepared, on the second reading of the Bill to be founded on these resolutions, to make a statement of the exact amount of our liabilities in connection with all the past subsidies. I have asked for that information two or three times, and have been promised it, but, owing, I suppose, to the hon. gentleman's illness, no detailed statement has yet been made.

Mr. POPE. I will furnish the information.

For a railway from Ingersoll via London to Chatham, in the Province of Ontario, eighty miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $256,000.

Mr. BLAKE. This I presume is for the purpose of providing competitive accommodation to those towns through which the railway passes—to put them in communication with the Canadian Pacific Railway system. Would the hon. gentleman give us information as to the character of the country and the probable cost?

Mr. POPE. The country is a very easy country in which to build railways, and the estimated cost of the railway without equipment is $15,700 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. That includes the acquisition of the necessary station grounds, &c., in London.

Mr. POPE. I think the London station grounds are proposed to be given.

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman state whether this road is located north or south of the Thames, west of London?

Mr. POPE. I understand that it will be located north. It is intended to accommodate as many of the towns that exist in that thriving part of the country as possible.

Mr. BLAKE. I should judge, from the fact that the grant is for a railway and not for a company, that the hon. gentleman has not before him any proposals of a financial description in reference to this road, nor any plans of location.

Mr. POPE. I can only say that the understanding is that the towns and cities through which the road passes will contribute largely to it. That it is likely to be a good paying road, and that with this subsidy there will be no difficulty in getting a company to build it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there a charter for the whole distance?

Mr. POPE. There is a charter. These eighty miles are intended as part of a road which it is proposed to run farther west to Windsor, and which would be about 127 miles long.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Under this head I would like to bring to the Minister's attention the interest of a very important town some thirty miles east of Ingersoll on the Grand Trunk system—I refer to the town of Paris. It would be a great advantage to that town to have competition, which could be given to it by the construction of a railway eight or nine miles long to connect with the Credit Valley.

Mr. POPE. All I can say is that we are most anxious to give all the railway communication we can to all those places. If the hon. gentleman, whom I hope to meet next year, will speak to me in time, I shall be very glad to consider the matter.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Might I ask the Minister if that is all that is necessary in reference to these matters, that I should speak to him?

Mr. POPE. There is no doubt it would have a very powerful influence, but I would like the hon. gentleman also to give me some information about the nature of the road, and how it is to be built.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course the Minister said to-day that we were widening the matter, and I suppose it is quite proper for anyone to apply for railway accommodation. There is also the city of Brantford, to afford connection with which a charter has already been obtained, and I suppose my speaking to the Minister next Session in reference to that city will have as much weight with him as he is pleased to say it will have in reference to Paris. I understood the Minister to say he could not consider these questions this year.

Mr. POPE. I do say that any representations the hon. gentleman may make will receive my best consideration, but I cannot bring these matters up this year.

Mr. INNES. As the Minister of Railways has laid down the principle that he is going to assist competitive lines connecting different roads, I hope he will give favorable consideration to a project that we have for the construction of a railway from the city I have the honor to represent to a point on the Credit Valley Railway, which is part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system. I refer to the Guelph Junction Railway. The hon. Minister may recollect that two years ago we obtained a charter for the construction of this railway, and that this year we obtained a renewal of that charter with some necessary amendments. I beg to inform the Minister it is exactly in the same category of roads as the one referred to by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and I trust that he will give it the same favorable consideration another year as that which he has promised to the road in which my hon. friend is interested.

Mr. POPE. I do not know that I can say the hon. gentleman will have quite as much influence over me as the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), but I will consider his representations. I have not known the hon. gentleman so long as I have the hon. member for South Brant.

Mr. INNES. Perhaps when you do, I will be able to have as much influence as my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister has not granted the bonus to the incorporated company. I suppose that is because he is not satisfied, as he stated in the other cases, as yet with the financial status of the company, or else for what reason is the proposed grant not made to the Western Ontario Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. POPE. I know there are respectable gentlemen connected with that company, but they have not yet shown their ability to go on with the work. Whatever happens they will be dealt with fairly.

Mr. BLAKE. The principle is a reasonable one that the hon. gentleman does not wish to give any particular company a sort of vested right, which the mention of it in an Order in Council would give, until he is satisfied they have the financial ability and standing which will enable them, with assistance, to construct the line.

Mr. POPE. Until there is reasonable expectation that they can do so.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the view I myself have taken when I had to deal with these things. I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the statement of that company shows that the distance of the railway from Ingersoll to London is twenty-two miles, and from London to Chatham sixty-five miles, making a total of eighty-seven miles, whereas the proposed grant is only for eighty miles, so that the subsidy will not cover the full length. It is like the Irishman's blanket—not enough to cover his back and heels at once.

Mr. POPE. I have got the information from the plans and measurements of my officers. If not sufficient, we can remedy it; if it is, we will be all right. My officers are more likely to get the correct distance than the company.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand the case to be a pressing one, and it may seriously interfere with the capacity of the company to make a contract from one point to the other if the grant is not adequate. I observe amongst the grants the hon. gentleman brings down, some in which complaints are made of errors of that kind which will have to be rectified.

Mr. POPE. I admit it would be better, to remove any doubt, to give the greater length, and would make an addition if the hon. gentleman has no objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You cannot alter it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is going I suppose to bring down more subsidies.

Mr. POPE. I cannot say at present.

Mr. BLAKE. If he does, he can make the rectification and it will not cost us any more money, the object being to go to Chatham in any case. The want of business competition in this case has been very much felt; a gentleman who is a supporter of the gentleman for London, Mr. Carling, informed me that for lack of this competition the city of London has decreased in population of late years.

Mr. CARLING. No survey has been made to ascertain the exact distance. I think it is about 80 miles, as the survey will no doubt establish.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford). While this item is under consideration, I wish to ask why this line should start from Ingersoll. In starting from Ingersoll to London, the road will run parallel to the Great Western, and close to it all the way; while starting a few miles further east on the Credit Valley, it would serve a large section of the country which is now without railway communication. I understand this matter has already been laid before the Minister of Railways or some members of the Government, and I cannot understand why the grant should not be given to some point on the railway. Ingersoll has no great interest in this road, for they have two systems at present. The road is more particularly for the benefit of London, and if it were to start from a point two miles east of Ingersoll, it would serve a large section of the country as well as one or two small towns.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I wish to avail myself of the remarks that have fell from the hon. Minister with reference to the bare possibility of his taking into consideration the question of bringing down more grants. I would wish to direct his attention to a claim I have for a road in which Hamilton has very much interest.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CASEY. I am unable to understand from the resolution before us what company it is intended to give this bonus to, because there is no company named. I am informed that it is the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company which is expected to build this road. Am I correct?

Mr. POPE. There is no particular company designated in this resolution. It may be any company that comes forward and shows us their ability to build the road with the subsidies granted, and that they are likely to get it through.

Mr. CASEY. But a company cannot build it without having a charter, and I do not know what company, except the one named, has any charter between those points. I want to ask the Minister if he knows what companies have charters between those points?

Mr. POPE. There is the company the hon. gentleman refers to. I do not know whether there are any other companies.

Mr. CASEY. The charter of the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company entitles it to build a railway from some point on the River St. Clair, between the town of Sarnia or the village of Point Edward and the village of Courtright.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman forgets that a charter was granted this Session which gives them the power.

Mr. CASEY. The original intention of this charter was to build a road from the point I have named "to some point on Lake Erie within the limits of the county of Elgin, with a branch to the town of Ingersoll or the town of Woodstock in the county of Oxford." Now, although the western terminus of this road may have been very properly changed in order to enable it to become an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway system, which is just what it amounts to, I do not see why there should have been this discrimination with regard to the eastern terminus, or why a bonus should be granted simply for the part between Ingersoll and Chatham, and the main line, as originally intended running to Lake Erie, should have been left out. I do not see why, if the Government are going to bonus railways for local benefit in every neighborhood, they should not have given a bonus for that part of the original main line of this railway which was to run to a point on Lake Erie. It may be said that the county of Elgin has plenty of railway accommodation at present. Of course, we have railways running east and west through the county, but we have only one or two running north and south. We have a part of the Grand Trunk system running down to Lake Erie, but excepting the eastern part of the county we have no competition elsewhere, and it would be a decided benefit to have a road coming in and crossing the Canada Southern and touching some point on Lake Erie, perhaps the same point, Port Stanley. I desire to ask the Minister why he did not take account of that?

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). I am very much interested in this road inasmuch as it runs through the constituency that I have the honor to represent. I was exceedingly anxious that this road should have been taken from Woodstock west, but, after very full enquiry, the engineering difficulties were found to be so great that it would cost a very large amount to build the railway from Woodstock west through my constituency. I have found also that it is very much easier to carry it the way it is being carried from the town of Ingersoll through the city of London and west. In answer to what has been asked with reference to the assistance that was being rendered by the localities through which it is going, I may say that the city of London is granting $75,000 towards the building of this road and also supplying the station grounds in the city of London. Our object in doing that is to get competition as against the Grand Trunk Railway, and, although the bonus is only granted to the town of Chatham, we feel we may, with the assistance of the municipalities, including Windsor and Chatham and other places through which this road goes, at no distant date have it carried through to the town of Windsor, and thereby create competition between the two great railway systems of the country, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific. As it is now, we feel, more especially the city of London, that, by getting a connection with this road at the town of Woodstock or the town of Ingersoll, we shall obtain this competition that we so much seek. As far as carrying it into the county of Elgin is concerned, under the old charter, we are desirous of carrying that out, probably at some future time; but, in the meantime, the Minister has informed us that there is no possible chance of granting it to that locality at present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford). I quite agree with what the member for Middlesex (Mr. Macmillan) says, that there are engineering difficulties in starting from the town of Woodstock. I was not pressing upon the Government that the road should commence from the town of Woodstock, though personally I should very much like to see that, but I was pointing out, that by starting a few miles east of Ingersoll and running north instead of south of the Great Western Railway, as it is at present proposed, they would serve a large section of the country with railway accommodation. That is what I wished to press upon the Government and those who are most interested. I did expect, perhaps, that at least the member for London (the Minister of Agriculture) had considered this matter and would have given us some idea of his views, or the views of the Government in regard to it. The point I wish to make is that, in starting from the point mentioned here, the road simply runs parallel with the other road and does not serve any section of the country except in regard to the object of giving competition to the city of London; whereas, by starting a few miles east, they could serve a section of the country which is very thickly settled, in which there are a couple of small towns that are very anxious on the subject, and that would, no doubt, give substantial aid towards the extension of this railway a few miles further east to join the Canadian Pacific Railway system.

Mr. CASEY. It is satisfactory in a certain degree to receive the explanation given by the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Macmillan), in regard to the policy of the Government in reference to this railway. It would have been more satisfactory, however, to have had those explanations from the Minister of Railways, and I was expecting the Minister to give those explanations when the member for East Middlesex rose; but, as it appears that he understood why it was done this way instead of another way better than the Minister of Railways, it is well that we have had the explanations, even as far as they have gone. But the explanations have been vague to this extent. The exponent of the Minister of Railways has merely told us that that hon. gentleman informed him it was impossible to do anything for the branch to Lake Erie, at the present time, but he has not told us why, and that is what we want to know. I think we have a special claim in the county of Elgin in reference to this bonus.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). I think you have.

Mr. CASEY. The special claim is this, that we have not in past years come to this Government for aid to build our railways; we have taxed ourselves to build the railways which now accommodate the county. Accounting the city of St. Thomas as part of the county, we have given a bonus of $275,000 to secure the building of the Canada Southern and Credit Valley, besides $80,000 for other railways—over $350,000 in all that the county of Elgin has given for railway accommodation, and has never had a dollar from this Government for any railway within the bounds of the county. Now we find that the company whose original charter was granted with the object of connecting some part of Lake Erie within the county of Elgin, with a point on the St. Clair River, is going to be granted a bonus for building a road to connect a point on the Credit Valley Railway through the city of London, to the town of Chatham, and that the original intention of that road to connect with Lake Erie within the bounds of Elgin, is overlooked. I think that the people of Elgin, who will be taxed to a large extent to pay these railway subsidies, should have some of the money which is being spent in this way. I claim again that if the Government is going to make this a general policy, as they evidently do intend to make it, to aid small railways, railways of the most purely local character—I believe there is one railway in the county of Huron only five miles long which is to receive a bonus, a purely local road—if that is the case, I think the claim of Elgin, either to have some substantial amount of this money spent on building new roads through that county, or to be recompensed for the money they have already spent in building railways for themselves, is so strong that it cannot be much longer overlooked. At a later period of the discussion on these resolutions I may have something more to say; I wish now to enter my protest against the diversion of the money from its proper purpose.

Mr. WILSON. Before the item passes I would like to get from the Minister some explanation with reference to this road between Ingersoll and Chatham, and I would like him to explain to me the representation made to him in connection with the proposition, and why it is that the people of the city of London complain of the want of railway facilities. Up to the present time I have not been informed. I have heard a bald statement made, but I have no fact placed before me sufficient to warrant me in voting this large amount of money for this road between Ingersoll and Chatham. I think there is a great deal of force in the remarks made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) that if they are asking the country at large to construct a road, it ought to be built where it will serve the greatest number of people and best supply existing grants. As stated by him, if you commence at Ingersoll and run to the city of London, you run directly parallel with an existing road which has been there for years. The section of country between Ingersoll and London, about twenty-two miles, is amply supplied for all purposes of competition in carrying freight between those two points. Then, if you commence further east, you can deviate a reasonable distance and have a line that will afford facilities to open a newer section of country than if you start from Ingersoll. I think if a railway is to be built, it ought to commence further east than Ingersoll.

An hon. MEMBER. West.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that Woodstock is east of Ingersoll. There is another reason that was mentioned here; and a difficulty arose as to why the bonus was not provided for some particular railway, as one road had received a charter, and why the amount of the bonus was not conferred upon that road. Now, we remember that a few years ago another railway obtained a charter from this House, and that charter was to remain in force for four years. I understand they have already surveyed the line from London westward to Windsor, and also made explorations of a portion of that line east—I mean the Canadian Pacific Railway. That charter is not yet dead, and perhaps there is a reason why this bonus was not specially allotted to the company that came to the Legislature this Session and obtained an amendment to their charter. I can tell the leader of the Opposition that it may be that the seven miles will be covered, because it is a very easy matter for the Canadian Pacific Railway to construct this branch line from Ingersoll to the city of London. They can commence their road further west than the town of Ingersoll, and branch off on the line running from Ingersoll to the town of St. Thomas, thereby shortening the distance so that it will not cover more than eighty miles in all. I have been told that their intention is to run upon the Canadian Pacific Railway as far as Belmont, branch off from Belmont, and run to the city of London, thereby materially shortening the road, as I believe the distance is only ten or twelve miles between the two points. Whether this be so, I cannot say. It is unfortunate for us that we are not favored like the city of London in having a Minister at court. We had to pay our $50,000 for the sake of getting a road from Ingersoll to St. Thomas. Now, one of these companies that is supposed to get the benefit of this subsidy, had obtained a charter whereby they could run into the county of Elgin; but the bonus as proposed by the Minister of Railways, is not to be applied, any portion of it, to the county of Elgin. As the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), stated, we have paid enormous sums there for the construction of railways, and as yet we have not received one single cent of a bonus from this Government. While I am on my feet, I may say that I think that the section of country from Ingersoll to Chatham is not deserving of being bonused at all. It has all the railway facilities it requires. That section is thoroughly gridironed already with railways. The people there are almost forced to drive railway surveyors off their lands, because their farms are already sufficiently cut up with railways. Freights are so low at the present time that railway companies contend that they can make no profit in conveying freight from one point to another. Perhaps you are not aware, Mr. Chairman, that the city of London, through greed and a desire to obtain an advantage, a few years ago deliberately sold a road which gave them competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway and with the Canada Southern.

Mr. MACMILLAN. They did not, Sir.

Mr. WILSON. They secured control of the stock. They placed the control of the stock in the hands of the Grand Trunk, giving that company control over the London and Port Stanley road. The city of London and the county of Middlesex are to-day suffering in consequence of that step. We in the county of Elgin opposed it. Have we any guarantee that they will not repeat what they have previously done? For the advantage of having the workshops placed in the city of London they gave a controlling influence and a twenty-one years' lease to the London and Port Stanley road, and shut themselves out from railway competition. Not many years ago I asked the privilege, in the Local Legislature, of obtaining a charter, so that we might build a railway from St. Thomas to London. I was opposed in that Legislature, earnestly and energetically, by the present Minister of Agriculture. They did not desire of their own free will and pleasure to have a road there, they wanted to be isolated; yet we find them coming to-day, having incurred a heavy debt, and asking the Dominion to give them a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the construction of a road where there is no necessity for it, where there is no want and no lack. They have every facility, every accommodation and every convenience. The grant is an unjustifiable one. I believe that section will look upon it in that light. It is not only unjustifiable, unjust, unnecessary and unreasonable in that section of country, but it will burden the people with a heavy tax for the construction of a road where the public interest does not require it. The Minister of Railways says that the original plan was to open up communication between the different Provinces; that after a time we advanced and became more liberal in our views and initiated a more liberal policy, namely, to subsidise railways to open up new sections of country. I ask that hon. gentleman if this is a new section of country, and if this subsidy comes under any of the explanations he has offered to the committee. If it does not come under any of the regulations, Parliament is not justified in offering a subsidy to a railway that is not entitled to one cent.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I had no disposition to take part in the discussion on this vote and I would not have done so except for the fact that the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has made a very definite statement to the effect that there are no advantages whatever to result to the locality through which the road is projected and that the section is not without that railway competition which would justify this subsidy. I know as a fact that the section through which the road is projected, the section intended to be covered by this grant, has for many years stood in serious need of competitive railway facilities. I know the progress of many of the towns has been seriously retarded from that cause. I know that the entire locality, embracing as it must, including the city of London, something like 250,000 people, has had heretofore to depend on one line of railway, and has consequently felt the want of those facilities which the hon. gentleman has said existed. That being the case, I am very glad indeed to see this road is projected and that the Government has seen its way clear to make the grant that is now being discussed. The only regret I have is, that the Minister of Railways could not have assured the committee that the grant would be of such proportions that the local municipalities would have had the prospect of being relieved of any part of the expense likely to be incurred in the construction of the road. It is perfectly true, as the hon. member for East Elgin has said, that the county of Middlesex, as well as the county of Elgin, has contributed a considerable sum to the construction of railways in the past. It is equally true, I believe, in regard to the city of London. But even if we do not receive as much as we might consider ourselves entitled to, and as much as we would like to see those localities get, and even if as a result of this step, the people of the locality are obliged to put their hands in their pockets in order to implement the grant here made, still I think the locality to be benefited will accept it as an evidence of good intention, and as an aid towards securing that competition which I say most decidedly has been the want of that section for some time past. The Minister of Railways has done that locality no injustice in saying that it is settled by an enterprising people, and there are, in that district, a great many lively and progressive towns I should like to see the interest of those kept in view as much as possible in the construction of this road. I am well aware it is impossible that all the details of such a scheme can be submitted to the committee, but I hope that, with the promise of the Minister of Railways, that it is intended to afford competition to that section of that country, the interest of every one of the towns and villages in the locality affected, will be conserved to as great an extent as possible when the project is actively undertaken. I have only this regret to express in connection with the question, that the grant is not a larger one, in order that the particular municipalities that will be expected to implement the grant made by this House might be released somewhat from the load that is proposed to be imposed upon them. The Minister of Railways may be aware of the fact or he may not, but it is a fact nevertheless, that considerable sums of money have been granted by the people of that locality to aid railway enterprises in the past. They have been generous in the past, and I believe instead of this grant leading them to be less generous in the future it will excite them to give such assistance as will be necessary, and as a result of the aid that the people of the locality will be induced to give, this road will be constructed within a reasonable time. I can assure the committee that the advantages of competition are very apparent, and have been particularly apparent since the amalgamation of the two trunk lines that served that section of the country in the past; and the only other assurance I would like to obtain from the Minister is that the public interest will be protected by preventing the possibility of the amalgamation of the projected road with any road to which it would operate as a competitor. I think the locality would accept this as a very decided assurance, and if that assurance could be given here it would be satisfactory to those localities which otherwise might have some misgiving. Of course they can have no objection to the amalgamation of the road with the Canadian Pacific Railway, in fact they would like to secure such an amalgamation because it would mean an extension of that railway. The people would like to have that assurance, and perhaps the Minister can give it, namely, that no amalgamation will take place with any of the roads that now exist with which this road might be a competitor.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman would probably have given some answer to my former question if he had not been anticipated by the hon. member for Middlesex, and had not subsequently left the Chamber. My point was this, that there was no railway having a charter to build anywhere in this neighborhood except the one to which I have referred, the Ontario and Pacific. In case that railway should not be able to show such financial prospects and solidity as the hon. Minister requires, who else could build this road.

Mr. POPE. I do not know of any other company which has a charter, but I would only say that in that case the money will not be expended, and probably some company will come to this House next Session and ask for a charter You may be sure that a country like that will not go without a railway. Some remarks were made by my hon. friend some time ago which have weighed very strongly with me with regard to those railways. When I looked at the country, when I looked at the Provinces and saw that they had spent almost their last dollar in building railways, I felt that perhaps we had exacted a great deal from them. He has referred to another set of people with whom I deeply sympathise; and those are the municipalities which have contributed very largely to those railways. I know that the people of that section of the country have done a great deal to build railways; I know that the municipalities have contributed liberally, and I do not want that we should weigh down our municipalities or the Provinces in this way in building railways which are really of general use to Canada.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman says there is no other company which is now in a position to earn the bonus and build the road except the one I have named. But he says, no doubt this bonus being appropriated some company will come next year and get a charter. Under these circumstances, I do not not know that my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Cameron) has such grounds for felicitating himself and his constituents on the construction of this road as he thinks he has. In the first place, it is absolutely uncertain what the route of the railway will be, and there is also uncertainty as to whether any company can be found to build it. My own impression is that this talk about affording competition is only a cover for the real intention of the grant. There is just one other company besides the Western Ontario Pacific which could go on and build the road, and that is the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has a general charter to build railways all over the country; and I have little doubt that this railway will be ultimately constructed and the bonus earned by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of course we all know that the object of this extension is not to afford competition to the towns between London and Ingersoll, or London and Chatham, but that it is really to afford a western outlet to the United States for the Canadian Pacific Railway, by way of the Credit Valley Railway. The only local competition it is likely to secure us in the case of London, where the residence of the Minister of Agriculture does create a certain amount of pressure upon the Government, and London's need for competition, caused by her own stupidity of action in the past, caused largely by the action of the Minister of Agriculture himself, has to be taken into account, and that need supplied at the cost of the Dominion at large. It is very comfortable that, when the people of the city of London had managed matters in the past so as to leave that city without competition, he, the representative of that city, should be in the position to induce the Dominion Government to make good that lack of competition. If my expectations are correct, that road will be built either for the purpose of an outlet for the Canadian Pacific Railway, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, or, on the other hand, it will be built by a so-called independent company and absorbed by the Canadian Pacific Railway. You will find that the local trade will be neglected, as it is on all other through lines. The Canada Southern in my own county for instance, the Grand Trunk through route, and some portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway do not care much for local traffic. They go in for through traffic. That is the object of these roads. Facilities will not be granted to local stations, so that almost the only benefit which that part of the country will derive is the expenditure of money in each neighborhood in the construction of the road. It is a part of the great scheme which we have seen progressing gradually for a number of years. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, having some doubts about the future profits of working the main line through the North-West, have been diligently securing a second through route from Montreal to Chicago, at the expense of the country of course, and this is part of the scheme.

Mr. CARLING. One word in reply to what has fallen from the hon. member for East Elgin and the hon. member for West Elgin. These gentlemen representing the rival city of St. Thomas seem to take a very great interest in the city of London, and they have chosen to say that I managed things so that that city is now without competition. I can only say that anything done with regard to railways in the city of London was done by the city council and the proper authorities who made the arrangements with regard to the Port Stanley Road. With respect to the Grand Trunk Railway, the hon. member for East Elgin is not correct, as the bondholders of that road can take possession when they think proper to do so. As to competition I can only say that it will be given, not only to London, but to all points between Ingersoll and London, and to points west of London.

Mr. CASEY. How many are there?

Mr. CARLING. There are the counties of Oxford, Middlesex, Lambton and Kent. This road will run through all those counties and give competition to the people residing along the line. I hope the thriving town of Strathroy will be on the line of this road; the town of Chatham with eight or ten thousand population——

Mr. CASEY. It has competition now.

Mr. CARLING. In what way?

Mr. CASEY. By the Erie and Huron to the Canada Southern.

Mr. CARLING. Well, this will give additional competition. Seeing that St. Thomas has so much railway accommodation, I do not see why these hon. gentlemen should object so strongly to London, Ingersoll, Strathroy and other points having competition. I am satisfied that there is no section of the country more in need and more deserving of competition than the counties through which this road will pass, and that its construction will be a source of great satisfaction to the people of those counties. If the company which is organised do not feel at the present moment in a position to go on, I hope they will be able to do so with this assistance from the Government. All the men connected with the charter I believe to be good men, and I feel satisfied that they will be able before long to take hold of this work and push it through with vigor.

Mr. WILSON. One remark made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture might mislead the House, and might convey the impression that I misrepresented the position of the London and Port Stanley Railway. He said that that road is under the control of the bondholders. He ought to know that it is leased to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for a number of years, so that the bondholders could not assume the control of the road if they wished to. There was much force in what was said by the hon. member for West Elgin in reference to competition. I say again that the citizens of London, but for their own foolishness, would be in as good a condition as any city in the Province of Ontario with regard to railway accommodation. If they are charged high rates—and I do not know that they are—they have themselves to blame; and because they have been improvident and careless, in the management of their own affairs, they ought not to come here and get the Government to relieve them from the consequences of their own want of foresight. It is very evident that this road is intended as a competing line from the east to the west for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Whether the company holding the charter build the road or not, it is intended ultimately to pass into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. This connecting link is unnecessary for the Canadian Pacific Railway at all. There is no use of disguising the fact from the people of the Dominion that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have had for some time their eyes upon the Wabash system of railways, with the view of securing communication with Chicago and the west, and this railway is part of the connecting link to enable them to get to Detroit, where they can connect with the Wabash system; and to say that it is merely to give London railway competition is to mislead the House, because the railway facilities of that city are ample already. It may be said that I am not a proper exponent of the wishes of the people of London. I have no doubt they would be very glad if the Government would build a railway to everybody's door in that city. But we know full well that railway companies with the rates at present paid, are not earning sufficient dividends, whether the stock is watered or not, and the result is that the poor unfortunate laboring men employed on those roads to-day are not getting the amount of wages they ought to have. Yet the Government, while claiming to be the friends of laboring men, undertake to construct lines that are not necessary in the interest of the country, which must have the effect of grinding down the poor laboring men still further. I say it is wrong, and I am bitterly opposed to any such legislation as this.

Mr. KIRK. Although coming from a distant Province, and not at all acquainted with this district through which this railway is to pass, I cannot sit here uninterested in what is going on. It seems rather strange to me to hear hon. gentlemen putting forth as the sole reason for so large a grant as this, that the railroad is needed only for the purpose of competition. Every hon. gentleman who has spoken either for or against this grant admits that there are ample railway facilities there at present, and that this road is to be built simply to compete with roads already built. One hon. gentleman, who is well acquainted with that part of the country, says it is gridironed with railways already, and that this road is altogether unnecessary and unjustifiable. Living in a Province where the people are exceedingly glad to get one railroad without any competing line at all, and where there are hundreds of thousands of people without any railway facilities at all, it does seem strange to me that the Government will ask for so large a grant as this for the purpose of building a road to compete with roads already built. I think there are some other reasons besides those given for this grant; I do not know what they are. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture is trembling in his seat, and it is necessary that something should be done to insure his re-election. At any rate, no good, sound reason has yet been advanced for building this road.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister of Agriculture gives as a reason for doing nothing for the county of Elgin in this connection, that the city of St. Thomas has complete railway facilities already. The city of St. Thomas has the competition of two railways, and why? Because the people of the city and the county put their hands into their pockets and paid for that competition; they did not apply to this Government to furnish it to them. And now the people of Elgin are asked to put their hands into their pockets again to pay for competition for the city of London, which threw away the chance it had of obtaining that competition itself. The hon. Minister thinks I charge him unfairly with being the cause of what was done in connection with the London and Port Stanley Railway; he said it was done by the authorities of the city. Of course it was. The hon. gentleman is very powerful in London, but he could not do that of his own notion, but he has long been the guide, the philosopher and friend of those authorities. It is well known how great his influence in that city has been, and I attribute it, as everybody does, largely to his action that this unfortunate transaction took place, for which we have now to pay. The hon. Minister of Railways was very kind and generous in his remarks about the municipalities; he had always pitied them very much for having paid so much for railway accommodation. For that reason he is going to give this bonus. In that connection, I would remind him again of my first point, which he has not noticed at all. The people of my county have very liberally paid out money for railway bonuses, and have as yet not got one dollar out of the all-round distribution scheme of the hon. gentleman. Instead of getting money out of this fund they are taxed over and over again to pay for so-called competition in other places. The hon. gentleman's own words condemn him in this connection.

To the Northern and Western Railway Company, for ten miles of their railway, intervening between the termini of the portions of their railway for which subsidies are already granted, the one from Fredericton and the other from Indiantown, and an extension of two miles down to deep waters at Chatham, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Northern and Western Railway extends from the city of Fredericton and runs in a northerly direction to the town of Chatham on the Miramichi, forty-six miles, and is now subsidised from Fredericton to Indiantown, forty-four miles. It was estimated those distances would cover the grant. But the estimated distance was eight miles short, which it is necessary now to provide for, besides the two miles of extension to deep water at the town of Chatham, so as to obtain facilities for ocean traffic at that point. I observe that the application of the company indicates that the latter object, which is to be gained by the grant for two miles, cannot be accomplished by such a subsidy as the hon. gentleman proposes. Their statement is that it would take a subsidy of $25,000 to accomplish this.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any further assurance, for there is none here, that the grant will accomplish that which the company says cannot be accomplished for less than $25,000?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no assurance, but it is the intention of the city of Chatham to contribute the balance.

Mr. MITCHELL. We will come back by-and-bye for the original sum.

To the Caraquet Railway Company, for ten miles of their railway from the end of the present subsidised portion at Lower Caraquet to Shippegan, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $32,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway is destined to leave the Intercolonial Railway at the town of Bathurst, and run in a north-westerly direction to Shippegan. Sixty miles have already been subsidised, and the present subsidy is to extend the road to Shippegan, which is favorably mentioned by Mr. Fleming, in his report of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, as a deep harbor. He recommended it as being the stepping off place to Europe.

Mr. BLAKE. The prior grant was to a point called Lower Caraquet. I do not observe this to be mentioned at all. The first grant was to Caraquet, and then to Shippegan harbor, and this grant is from Lower Caraquet, which is presumedly the termination of the present subsidised portion. I do not know the ground, but perhaps the hon. gentleman does.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know the ground.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman tell me something about the names? A person named Burns is the owner of eleven out of the twelve shares of the stock of the company, and the application is made by him. Has he any connection with the member for Gloucester.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the hon. member himself, and if the hon. gentleman enquires he will find that it is due very largely to the enterprise of Mr. Burns that this very important road is built. He has thrown himself into it with enthusiasm, and without that enthusiasm the road would not have got so far.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has exhibited so much enthusiasm. Why should he not when he owns eleven-twelfths of the enterprise? If that amount should not give him enthusiasm I do not know what the hon. gentleman could be enthusiastic about.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. His enthusiasm was manifested by his becoming the owner.

Mr. MILLS. And he is still more enthusiastic when he finds his road well subsidised.

Mr. KIRK. Is this road subsidised by the Local Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, it had a local subsidy. It will require them both.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt and more too.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the expenditure per mile?

Mr. MITCHELL. $3,000 a mile. It will require the whole of this subsidy and the local subsidy. It is a very necessary road going through a fine section of country that needs a railway. I hope hon. gentlemen on both sides will realise the fact that there are some places besides Ontario to be relieved by railways. We need some down in the east.

Mr. BLAKE. We are entitled and more than entitled, it is our absolute duty, to obtain such information as we are now asking for, in order that we may understand these grants. Those of us who happen to live in Ontario are more familiar with that country, as the hon. gentleman is more familiar with the Province of New Brunswick. We do not enquire about these things of which we know, but about things of which we are ignorant, and with us, as with everybody except some more favored individuals, the things of which we are ignorant are more than the things of which we know. I hope the hon. gentleman will not be annoyed if we ask for information.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not see why the hon. gentleman should read me a lecture. He has no right to exercise authority over me as he does over the gentlemen behind him. I occupy an independent position in this House. The hon. gentleman asked for information as to whether the road had received a local subsidy, and I gave him the information. It is my duty, a duty I owe to my constituency, to see that all objections, particularly some querulous objections, should not be unnecessarily put forward, when the interests of the section of the country I represent are involved. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman getting the information he tried to get, and I simply gave him the information he desired.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not reading the hon. gentleman a lecture, but was simply making a humble confession of ignorance as to the particular locality to which this subsidy has reference, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not be annoyed if, confessing my ignorance, I asked for information and got it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have the valuable information that eleven-twelfths of the road is held by a deserving supporter of the Government.

The Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

NORTHERN AND PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. McCARTHY moved the second reading of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 25) respecting the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company.

Mr. SPEAKER. This amendment is important. It inserts a new clause and alters a contract which has been made with the Crown, and I think, therefore, it requires the assent of the Crown before it can be assented to in this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The assent of the Crown is given.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think this amendment ought to be read without a reference to a committee, or some notice being given of the time when it is to be read. It is of very great importance.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Bill came down the other day, and has been put on the notice paper exactly for that purpose, in order that notice should be given to the House, and that the House should not be taken by surprise. That is the ordinary way of dealing with these amendments. The hon. gentleman suggests that it might be referred to a committee. I think, at this period of the Session, that would be saying, the Bill, though passed by both Houses, should not have its final reading in this House.

Mr. BLAKE. Why? The committee could meet to-morrow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. You could not have a committee just now. I have ascertained that we could not have the committee, because we must give the necessary notice, and we would not have the necessary number to take the matter into consideration. I think it would be dealt with better by the House considering the amendment now, especially when, on the objection which Mr. Speaker said was a valid one, the assent of the Crown is necessary in this case. The First Minister has given the assent of the Crown. I think it should now be taken up upon its own merits.

Mr. BLAKE. The course of the House has been, as a rule, though it is not absolutely imperative, to refer to the Railway Committee important amendments made by the Senate. I do not agree with the hon. the Minister of Public Works that a reference to the committee means that the Bill would not pass this Session, because the committee could meet to-morrow and discuss it, and this is the final stage of the whole measure. If the ordinary rule, which has been observed in my recollection in the case of all important amendments which were at all debatable, is not to be followed, one would think reasonable that this particular amendment at at any rate, should be understood, so that there might be an opportunity for the House to give it that discussion which the Minister of Public Works refers to. It is not to be forgotten that this was fully discussed in the House. I was not present, but I have read that in the Debates. It is not to be forgotten that the promoter of the Bill declared that there was no intention whatever of interfering with the position which the public occupies with reference to this enterprise by the measure which was before the House, that it was not intended to interfere with the right of the Crown to obtain this railway by paying not more than $8,000 a mile of bonds absolutely, and as to the rest dependent on the value of the road in excess of the $8,000 a mile and also in excess of the subsidy. That was the position in which it left the House, and it comes back to the House, I understand, with an alteration which practically, as you have just announced by the statement as to the consent of the Crown being required, reverses that view which it was supposed was implied by the previous amendments and makes this important change. The House has not had any explanation at all, either from the Minister or from the promoter of the Bill, as to the grounds upon which this very important change, contrary to what were said to be the intentions of those who were bringing forward the Bill, is made. I think it would be reasonable, under these circumstances, that, if the House is to deal with it and it is not to go to a committee, it should not at all events take its final stage at this time. It would be more in accordance with the practice that that which has been a debated measure and which has been dealt with in the way I have stated should not now be concurred in, in this altered sense, without its being understood that the discussion is to come on. That cannot interfere with the final progress of the Bill. We have several days yet before us, and, if it is understood that it will be taken up at the next opportunity for private Bills, it will be doing more justice to the measure, and will be more in accordance with the practice in regard to private Bill legislation which has animated us in the past.

Mr. THOMPSON. When the Bill was before the House at its last stage, the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) requested me to state whether, in my opinion, the amendment which was offered preserving the rights of the Government in respect to the previous contract would be effectual, and I made the statement that it would be. Since then, the company have made representations to the Government which I may be permitted to explain in a few words. It has been represented that it was exceedingly desirable that the company should be permitted to issue bonds to the extent proposed by this Bill without being restricted by the previous arrangement between the Company and the Government. The House knows by what took place the other evening that the limit then proposed, and in fact established by the agreement, was that, in the event of the road being acquired by the Government, the sum to be paid should be a sum of at least $8,000 per mile, and so much more as the road might be worth at the time it should be acquired. The $8,000 per mile, I understand, was a sum arrived at in consequence of an estimate that the cost of the road would be $20,000 a mile, the subsidy being $12,000, and the bonded debt, $8,000. Investigation has been made, with the result that it appears that the expenditure in constructing the work, which is now very near completion, has been very far in excess of the estimated cost. It appears that, irrespective of the cost of rolling stock, which is estimated to be $300,000, the expenditure per mile has been $26,208, and if we include in the estimate the equipment, the cost will be $28,905, so that in either case the estimate of $20,000 per mile, which was expected to be the cost, and which was the basis of that agreement, has been far exceeded. Under these circumstances, it has been represented as reasonable that the agreement should be so far modified by the provisions of this Bill, that the sum to be paid, in the event of the road being acquired by the Government, should be not less than $20,000 per mile.

Mr. MULOCK. It appears to me that we have got into the present difficulty by the Minister of Public Works, or the Railway Committee of which I was a member, adopting, what was often the case, the practice of going too fast. This Bill was not properly investigated before the Railway Committee. The facts which are now for the first time brought to the knowledge of this House by the Minister of Justice, ought to have been investigated before the Railway Committee. Before this House can consent to part with any interest that the Crown has in this road, the regular practice adopted in such cases should have been adhered to, and I submit it is not yet too late to do so. But irrespective of the whole cost of the road, I take another ground. I take the ground that no matter what the road costs, we are not justified, under the peculiar circumstances attaching to this road, in departing from the agreement of 1884. Now, if I am permitted to refer to the debate on this Bill, and I believe I am, I may say that when I gave notice of the amendment to the section under consideration, I pointed out to the House, both before we went into committee and afterwards, what would have been, in my opinion, the legal effect, as well as the moral effect, of the Bill being allowed to pass unamended as it came from the Railway Committee. I took the ground that the agreement of 1884 having, as against the Crown, limited the power of the company to bond the line to an excess of $8,000 a mile, whatever there is in the issue beyond $8,000 per mile, we were to that extent pledging the Crown to redeem the bonds so issued, and not to disturb the bondholders. When I took that position, the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), in reply, gave it as his opinion that my contention was not well founded; but even if it were well founded, he informed the House that we had no ground for alarm upon that point, because there was no intention whatever on his part to ask for any modification of the agreement of 1884. In support of that being his view then—and I believe it was—I am satisfied that he was of the opinion that that agreement ought not to be modified, and, in his opinion, the Bill as proposed did not modify it, I say, being perfectly satisfied that such was his real opinion, we in committee acted upon that statement. Now, let me refer for a moment to what the promoter of this Bill stated to the House in regard to his view as to what the action of the House should be with reference to this measure. On page 1362 of Hansard I find the hon. member stating:

"The hon. gentleman's argument amounts to this, that if this enactment is now passed, the effect of the contract between the Crown and the railway company will be practically done away with, if not in law, at all events in good faith. All I can say in answer to that is, that if that is the effect of it we can add in committee any words my hon. friend may suggest to neutralise that. That is not the intention of the promoters of the Bill. They simply desire, instead of issuing ordinary bonds, to issue debenture stock. I explained that to the Railway Committee, and I repeat it here. That is the whole object of the section, to make these bonds sectional; and if there is any doubt at all that passing this legislation would have the effect of nullifying the contract in any way, then an amendment can be put in, and I have prepared an amendment which I think will meet the view of the hon. member, which amendment is to the effect that nothing in the Bill contained shall interfere with the contract between the Government and the company."

Then further on, on page 1364, I am reported to have stated as follows:—

"I hardly think the hon. gentleman has put the issue correctly. It is true, as he pointed out, that the Act of incorporation gives power to bond the road to the extent of $20,000 a mile, but subsequently their borrowing power was modified by the contract made with the Crown. It is the position of the Crown we are seeking to protect."

To that, Mr. McCarthy replied as follows:—

"will introduce a clause to cover that."

Then, on page 1365, Mr. McCarthy states as follows:—

"As I stated, I have no desire at all that the contract between the Government and the company should be in the slightest degree affected, and I propose to add at the end of the clause the words: Provided that this enactment is without prejudice to the agreement between the Government of Canada and the company, bearing date the 12th day of April, 1884, respecting the assumption by Parliament of the portion of said line of railway between Gravenhurst and Callander."

Then he goes on to make some remarks in which the following statement appears:—

"Therefore the power to issue bonds was given in this way: There was power to issue bonds to the extent of $20,000 a mile, and the bondholders took their chances as to whether the road at that date would be worth $20,000 a mile or not. If not, then the bonds would not be assumed by Parliament. That is the position the contract was in, and it is not proposed to disturb that position in the slightest degree.

Mr. MULOCK. Does not the section disturb that?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think so. The company do not, in the slightest degree, desire to affect its contract with the Government by a side wind, but understands that Parliament, should the company not do its duty by the public, may at some future time come in and redeem the bonds, and the bondholders will buy on that chance."

Then, just before going into committee, the hon. member for North Simcoe yielded to the arguments advanced, and intimated that he would move an amendment that would entirely protect the Crown and preserve that agreement in its full force; and after recess he did introduce an amendment which appears as a proviso to the new section 1. Before the committee adopted that amendment, as the Minister of Justice correctly states, I did put a question in these words:

"Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister of Justice is of opinion that that amendment leaves the rights of the Crown just as they are under the contract of April, 1884, I have nothing further to say on this question.

"Mr. THOMPSON. I have no doubt at all that the clause which the hon. member in charge of the Bill has introduced would save all the rights of the Government.

"Mr. MULOCK. That being the case I am prepared to accept the amendment of the hon. member for North Simcoe."

The House will see that the hon. member for North Simcoe did not desire the contract between the Crown and the company to be in the slightest degree varied by any legislation. I am not aware whether he does now favor the amendment which the Senate has introduced, but the House unanimously came to a conclusion upon this question after debate extending over several hours. Now, another body, the Senate, undertakes to override the unanimous action of this House in a matter affecting the finances of the country I submit to the House whether we are prepared to abrogate our privileges, as a body, and allow the Senate to legislate in any way that is calculated to increase the burdens of the people. What is the effect of the amendment introduced by the Senate? The effect may be to increase the burdens by $1,320,000. We have a perfect right to acquire the control of the road whenever it makes default in conducting its affairs according to its agreement, on payment of the sum of $8,000 a mile, contingent in some degree on contingencies, which may mean nothing or a good deal. But we are only bound beyond question to pay $8,000 a mile. Now, the Senate has chosen to say that we shall charge against the road absolutely before the Crown can intervene and take this property, $20,000 a mile. Is it proper for the Senate to arrogate to itself the right to pass this legislation? That is not my impression as to the functions of that body, and on that point I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think this is an amendment imposing a further burden upon the people. It is, as I said before, an amendment affecting the interest of the Crown in this contract, and, therefore, requiring the consent of the Crown; but I do not think it is an amendment which will require the recommendation of the Crown before any proceedings can be instituted. It seems to me that this being a private Bill, if the House chooses to confirm the amendment made by the Senate, it will be in order.

Mr. MULOCK. That being your judgment, Mr. Speaker, I will not argue the point further. I may say that when the Bill came into the House from the committee, I then raised the point with respect to giving effect to the agreement. I did not get any ruling then. I asked whether the sanction of the Crown would not have to be given to the Bill. Probably that ruling was not given by you, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there may have been doubts as to whether the clause did go so far as I thought it was likely to go. However, we are now face to face with the merits of the question, if there are any. In 1884, Parliament granted to this road a very large bonus, $12,000 a mile. Why did it grant this large bonus? Because that road occupied a peculiar position, and it was expected that it would continue to occupy a peculiar position. It was not to enjoy all the ordinary rights of a railway, but it was to discharge certain obligations towards the whole country. It was to discharge and serve a purpose, having no special reference to one line or another, or to one part of the country or another, but it was to live up to certain stipulations set forth in the agreement. And those stipulations are of vital interest to the people of Ontario; they are of vital interest to the section of the country which this road traverses, to the section of country lying east, west and south. I am not aware of there being any road in Canada that occupies the important position this road occupies in regard to the welfare and trade of Ontario. An agreement was made—it is too late to protest against it now. The transfer of this line was made to the Northern and North-Western Railway. I venture to say that had the Government consulted the people of Canada before they made that lease, they would not have obtained the consent of the people to it. They entrusted that line to the management of two companies that have never done their duty to the people of Ontario. The Northern Railway has since its inception to the present time acted the part of tyrants over the section they served; they have entirely failed to appreciate the fact that their prosperity to some extent depends on the prosperity of the people. The North-Western Railway has also mistaken its functions. That company perpetrated what I cannot characterise as less than a gross fraud upon a large section of the country. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I think, will agree with me upon that point. The North-Western Company constructed its line with the aid of bonuses voted by municipalities upon the understanding that it was to be maintained as a rival road to the Northern. But a short time after it acquired those bonuses that company pooled with the Northern and to-day they are practically one body, and their tyranny is simply galling to the whole section served by that joint company. There is no redeeming feature in their management. Their service is defective, their rolling stock is deficient; I do not know whether it is intended to repair their broken rolling stock with money extracted from another corporation; however, their rolling stock is unsatisfactory, their management is tyrannical and they entirely neglect their duties to the public. To those two bodies the Government without reflection, without consideration for the section of the country served, without consideration for the vast interests dependent on that road, without it being known to the public, handed over the line in question, on the terms of the agreement of 1884. A greater mistake, and a more inexplicable mistake was never made, so far as we know. How it comes that that line was handed over to those two bodies under those circumstances, I fail to comprehend. At the very time the Government handed over that line to those two companies they had in their possession a tender to build the line for half the money. They had power to have got the line built from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Ontario system for half of the bonus they handed over to that line. But having given those special advantages to this particular company in the contract, and the money having been handed over, to-day we are called upon to intervene and postpone the rights of the Crown further. Why should that be done? How much independent money is there in the company? $1,800 is all the money belonging to independent shareholders which there is in that company. It is scarcely proper that Parliament should be called upon to vote $1,320,000 to this company which has a gross subscribed capital of only $200,000. We have handed over $1,320,000 to a company with a gross subscribed capital of only $200,000, of which $182,000 is owned by other railways and only $18,000 by other persons, and on that grand total 10 per cent, or $20,000 has been paid. Before they come and ask for farther aid they should have put their hands into their own pockets and get their shareholders to contribute. They seem to think all they have to do is to knock at the door of Parliament and they will get all the money they want. And it looks very much as if all they have to do is to knock and receive any amount they desire without regard to the interests involved. I will state why under no circumstances should the financial position of this company be varied as is proposed here. I want the First Minister to remember this, because it will be realised as certain as the time comes, that so long as the road is under the present management of the lessees' line, the Northern and North-Western will fail to discharge their obligations to the public. It will be managed on exactly the same lines as the lessees companies are managed. I do not ask the House to accept my testimony on this point, but to obtain the testimony, not only of those belonging to rural public, but of the whole travelling public. Take such testimony, and they will unanimously say that the management of the Northern is not such as it should be. Now, you propose to hand over this line to that management and further render it impossible for the Government to withdraw the line from that management. Now, I submit that the more you allow this road to be bonded, before the Crown can come in and take possession, the more securely you confirm the relationship between the company and the line in question—the Hamilton and North-Western. What reasons have been advanced why we should do what is asked to be done? We have an interest to-day in taking possession of that line when it fails to carry out its agreement. Hon. members may say that the company is controlled, that the Act provides that they shall conduct their business in a certain way. I admit that; but where is your remedy? Your remedy is taken away if the Crown cannot step in and take possession. To-day the Crown can take possession on the payment of $8,000 per mile after the default, and such other sums as it may be worth; but if you pass this amendment, it can only take possession on payment of $20,000, and such excess as it may be worth. It may be argued that the agreement is not varied, that because the road cost so much it is worth so much. But there is a vast difference between cost and value. Under this agreement the value is to be ascertained at a certain time. That time is when this road makes default in conducting its business according to the Act of Parliament and the agreement. When that may be, nobody knows, but my opinion is that it will be at an early date. But whenever it happens, a valuation has to be made by disinterested parties, and the value of the road will be determined on what? On its cost? Are railways sold by what they cost?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). They are sold for what they are worth.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, and what is the test of its worth?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The arbitrators will tell.

Mr. MULOCK. And on what principle will they proceed to tell? On the earning power of the road; on how much is over after expenses are paid; that is the value of the road. When the Canadian Pacific Railway the other day bought the North Shore Railway, what test did they apply? Why did they refuse so long to buy the road? They did not look into the question of cost but the earning power, and in that you have to consider rival roads. Supposing that a year hence there should be a rival road alongside this, and there are charters already to build rival roads to the Canadian Pacific Railway, would not the value be affected? Supposing that ten years hence there is another through line running alongside this road to the Canadian Pacific Railway, will the value then be the cost? No, the value is a fluctuating, a varying quantity, depending on the earning power of the road, and its future prospects. Therefore, when to-day you say you determine this transaction by the cost of the road, I submit that you are adopting an unsound principle upon which to act. Now, Sir; under these circumstances I think this House will, if it assents to these amendments, be doing a serious act of injustice to the section of country intended to be served by this railway and to the whole Province as well. At present it is the only line whereby Western Ontario can connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Ontario is specially interested in the Crown having the strongest hold upon this railway, and the more you postpone the rights of the Crown, the weaker you make the hold of the Crown upon that road, the more difficult you make it for the Crown to step in. The more you remove the obligation from the company to live up to this agreement—the more you prejudice the interest of the country. For these reasons and others which I shall not advance, owing to the lateness of the hour, I intend to oppose these amendments, and if unsuccessful here, I shall endeavor, at all events, to be successful somewhere else on the point.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. MITCHELL. This matter was fully discussed the other night. I think we discussed it some three or four hours and in a manner which quite satisfied the House that the Bill as it left this body was the Bill which should be passed by the Legislature of this country. The gentleman who has preceded me has so clearly stated the facts that I shall only refer very briefly to one or two salient points. It was said on that occasion by myself, as well as by several others, that the effect of the changes which the promoter of this Bill desired to introduce into it would be to fix upon this country a possible amount of $1,320,000 more than the company agreed with the Government, and more than legislation up to this time had sanctioned. Now, I put it to the House, and through the House to the country, whether we are prepared, without any evidence before us, to pass through this House a Bill creating such a liability as that. It is very well known that the promoter of this Bill, on that occasion, after discussion, stated that he would not consent to the amendment which was put in his hands. He modified that amendment and consented to the suggestions which were made in this House that a change should be inserted in it which would protect the public interest and which were fairly in accordance with the agreement. He disavowed any desire to change that agreement. What influences have been used in the Senate I know not. All that I know is that it is said that on the Senate Committee there were gentlemen who were interested in the success of that Bill. I can only say that it was in extremely bad taste, to say the least of it, on the part of these gentlemen to sit there and discuss this measure where there were directors of this company, and at least one person who, I am told, is directly interested financially in this measure. I say it was very bad taste on their part and very wrong to have consented to propose an amendment to the Bill which will take so much money as a possible chance out of the Treasury of the country. I am not speaking now for the purpose of talking the Bill out. I am simply going to put the question to the House, because I think this transaction is one which ought not to be sanctioned; I think it is a matter in which the Treasury of the country should be protected by the Government. I think the Government should not have consented to this Bill, and if they do consent, of course they have the power to carry it through; but it will be on their own responsibility, to be answerable to the public for it, and of having it charged upon them that they have consented to fix a possible cost of $1,320,000 on the public Treasury, which they are not liable for. Why should we do this? There was an agreement attached to the schedule of the Bill, and we have no right to go and extend that Bill. The Senate step in and they say they will construe that agreement by additions to it making it a right of the company to issue bonds to $20,000, instead of $8,000, per mile, thus creating an additional liability of $12,000 per mile, if the road should ever require to be taken over. I think it is a most outrageous piece of legislation, and one to which I hope the Government will not consent.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for North York with the greatest interest. Certainly he made a very clear and able argument. I was very careful to try and understand his argument, and the pith of it seemed to be this: That the present agreement between the road and the Government is that the Government could take it over and pay $8,000 per mile difference, between that and what it may be worth. But if you pass this amendment, the country will have to pay $20,000 a mile. But I am informed by my hon. friend beside me (Mr. McCarthy) and by the hon. Minister of Justice that this road has cost more than $20,000 a mile, and that it is worth more; that there are bridges upon it a quarter of a mile long, and that there are some four rivers to cross. Everyone knows that a road with such bridging as this road is to have will cost more like $50,000 a mile. I cannot see where the danger is in passing this amendment, and I am quite sure I would be very loth to saddle this country with such an amount as that by my vote; but at present, from the statements made, I cannot see that we should be doing that.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has stated that from his knowledge of railway building generally, it is fair to assume that the railway we are discussing is worth the amount of the bonded debt which the Government are prepared to put upon it. That may be so, or it may not be so. If it is so, I ask the promoter of this Bill why he refused to refer it to the Railway Committee in order to obtain evidence to satisfy this House what the real cost of the railway was. I for one, having heard all the discussion which has taken place on this measure, think that the amendment added by the Senate should not be assented to by this House. When the Bill was before the House on a previous occasion, its promoter, familiar with all the circumstances, deliberately accepted the decision of this House as to the power to bond the railway. For some reason which has not been stated, but which we can conjecture, when the Bill went up to the other House, in which there are gentlemen whose names appear on the list of stockholders, means were used for the purpose of having the amendment now under discussion added to the Bill. I can support the statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), that some extraordinary work has been going on in the other House in order to accomplish this, and every person must be satisfied that more interest is taken in this Bill than the welfare of the community alone requires. Why is it, after the Bill had been passed in this House, and after its promoter here signified his willingness to accept it as it was passed, that on its being taken to the other House, that House thought proper to make this amendment to it, an amendment calculated to fasten on the people of this country a liability much greater than was contemplated when this road was subsidised? Now, let us look at the history of this railway. The company was incorporated as far back as 1881, by chapter 45 of the Statutes of that year, under the same of the Northern, North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company. The hon. member for North Simcoe was the promoter of that Bill, and he was a stockholder and a director in the company. In 1883 the Act incorporating the company was amended by its name being changed to the Northern Pacific Junction Railway Company, and by additional powers being given to it. The hon. member for North Simcoe was the promoter of that Bill and a stockholder in the company. In 1882 this railway was subsidised by the Parliament of Canada to the extent of $5,000 a mile; and in 1883 it was further subsidised to the extent of $6,000 a mile, making the enormous subsidy of $12,000 a mile for a purely private enterprise—as the sequel has proved it to be—a larger subsidy, I venture to say, than any other subsidy ever granted by this Parliament to any other railway except the Pacific Railway. The company received, and are to receive, $1,320,000 of the money of the people of this country, and it was but right that this Parliament should take all measures necessary to protect the interests of the people when it was granted such an enormous subvention. It was provided that the Government of the country should have the right, at any time they thought it would be in the public interest to do so, to take possession of this road, paying for it its actual value at the time. At the same time the company was given power to create a debenture debt of $8,000 a mile, and the Government could take possession of the road for whatever sum it might be worth over and above that $8,000 a mile. Now, the road has been completed, and it is as much a private enterprise as any railway in the Dominion. Whether it has been extravagantly built or not; whether there has been jobbery connected with its construction or not, I do not pretend to say; but before the hon. member for North Simcoe comes to this House and asks us to make this country responsible for $20,000 a mile, he has a right to satisfy this House that the money this country has granted has been honestly applied in the construction of the road. He has not done so. He asks us to take the word of the president of the Northern Railway Company. He has submitted no figures whatever to the Railway Committee or to this House which would enable us to form an opinion as to the actual cost of the road. The effect of this amendment, if it becomes law, will be that the country will have to pay $20,000 a mile for this railway, which, according to the hon. gentleman's own statements and that furnished by Mr. Barker, the president of the Northern Railway, is more than the road actually cost. According to Mr. Barker's statement, the total cost of the road, exclusive of equipment, was $26,208; we granted towards its construction $12,000 a mile, which would leave the cost to the company $14,208 a mile, exclusive of equipment; so that it is proposed to pay the company $20,000 a mile for what cost it $14,200 a mile. The cost of the road, with equipment, was stated to be $28,905 a mile; deducting the subsidy of $12,000 a mile would leave the cost, without equipment, at $16,905 a mile. According to the first calculation, they are to receive if we give them power to issue the bonds, $5,800 more than the road cost without equipment, and according to the second calculation $3,095 more than this road cost with equipment. As I said, this road is purely a private undertaking. It is a speculation entered into by certain individuals out of which they, as everybody else who goes into a speculation, expect to make something. This road has not been built purely in the public interests, for the gentlemen who have been promoting it are not such patriots as to devote their time and energies in constructing a road simply for the people of the Province of Ontario. Depend upon it, there is something in this road for somebody. As I have said, it is a private enterprise. The Northern Railway Company, of course, is a road which has been run a great many years, and which the member for North York tells us has given anything but satisfaction to the country through which it runs. The Hamilton and North-Western Railway is a railway I believe incorporated by the Provincial Legislature. This Government, by an Act of theirs passed here, seize all the provincial railways, confiscate the provincial railways, and they permit this Hamilton and North-Western Railway, which has received $500,000 from the people of the counties through which it runs, and which was given for the express purpose of having railway competition, to amalgamate with the Northern Pacific Junction, thus leaving the people in as deplorable a condition as they were in before. Why is it that the promoter of this Bill takes a different position or that the Government to-night takes a different position from what was taken the other night? What influence has been brought to bear on these individuals since then? Why is it? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say that the bonds which they will issue and have issued will not be as marketable without this provision, but they entered into that contract with their eyes open, they knew what they were doing, and it is not for them now to come back to Parliament and say, if there is any loss in this matter, you and the people of Canada ought to incur that loss. On another occasion, and if you will permit, I will refer to that debate, I stated in this House that I found that this road was bonused while the hon. gentleman was a member of this House:

"I find that he, a corporator of that company, was an applicant to the Government to grant the road $12,000 per mile, the first grant being $6,000, and that being supplemented by another of $6,000 per mile. I find the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was interested in shares of the stock of that railway company, I believe, of the majority of the stock. The Hon. Frank Smith, Senator, the Hon. James Turner, Senator, and Mr. Dalton McCarthy, member for North Simcoe, are upon the list of shareholders of that company. The Hon. Frank Smith, the Hon. James Turner, Mr. McCarthy and Mr. John Stewart, appeared to hold shares to the extent of 1,820 out of 2.000, so that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and his friends controlled entirely the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, and the hon. gentleman not only controls the stock of that road, but he is sitting in this House to-day as a member and as the president of the railway which has been bonused to this enormous extent."

Then the hon. member for North Simcoe stated this:

"The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) whom I see now in his place, who made this charge, ought not I think to have made it under the circumstances, and, considering the relations between us in the past, he ought not to have taken that course without a better knowledge of what he was speaking. Had some members done so I would not have minded it, but from him I did not expect it, and I think he ought not to have adopted it and to have made the charge. It is utterly and entirely without foundation."

This is the statement of the hon. gentleman, after stating that he held the 1,820 shares in trust for the company's interest. I desire to say to that hon. gentleman now that the only information that I had upon that subject was the return brought down to this House of the stockholders in the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company. In that return I found the hon. gentleman's name, with the other two gentlemen I have named, as holders of stock to the extent of 1,820 shares. There is nothing upon that return to show that they held those shares as trustees. I desire to say to the hon. gentleman that I accept his statement to the fullest extent, that, as far as these shares are concerned, I would not for a moment think of contradicting or not believing the statement he made. As to these shares, I believe thoroughly that he does hold then in trust for these two railway companies, and I suppose that the hon. gentlemen who are associated with him as well as himself, because the three names are bracketed together, must be trustees. But there is one thing in connection with this railway which I think requires some explanation. When the Northern, North-Western and Sault Ste. Mary Railway Company was incorporated, there was a stock list. Some persons must have assigned the shares over to these hon. gentlemen in trust. There was a stock list for the Northern, North-Western and Sault Ste. Mary Railway, and I am informed that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), was a stockholder in that original company, along with some others; that this railway, the Northern Railway, and the Hamilton and North-Western became interested in the Northern Pacific Junction as lessees; and I understand that, at the time that railway became interested, the stock was transferred, and that the stockholders, the original stockholders, the men who transferred the stock to these other railway companies, made considerable profits out of the transfer. That is a rumor that I have been informed of. I have been informed that such is the case. Of course, if the hon. member for North Simcoe states that that is not the fact, or that it is a legitimate transaction, and consequently not worthy of contradiction, I shall be glad to accept his statement so far as that is concerned, but I repeat that I have been informed that in the original stockholders of this road transferring their stock to other roads, or to the persons for whom they hold that stock in trust, there was considerable money, considerable profits made out of that transaction. This is the statement I have to make as it has been made to me. I can only repeat that, if the hon. gentleman says he was not a stockholder in the original transaction, although his name appears on the Statute as a director of that road, I shall of course accept his explanation. Now, I can only repeat that, under all the circumstances, I think that this Parliament would not be justified in assenting to the amendments which have been proposed by the Senate.

Mr. LISTER.

I think it will be doing its duty to itself, doing that duty which the country expects of it, to refuse to adopt the amendments which have been made by the Senate, and that the Bill, if it passes at all, should pass as it left this House.

Amendments read the second time.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the first amendment be concurred in.

Mr. MULOCK moved:

That this House disagrees with the amendments because they seek to violate the agreement between the Crown and the company set forth in schedule B.

Mr. LISTER. I call attention to the fact that the hour for Private Bills is up.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, if the hon. gentleman takes the objection, I must rule. Do you take the objection?

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then I give notice that, on Monday next, I will move that this order be put on Government Orders.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House again resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 1551) respecting the granting of subsidies to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railways therein mentioned.—(Mr. Pope.)

(In the Committee.)

To the Lake Erie, Essex and Detroit River Railway Company, for thirty-seven miles of their railway, from Windsor to Leamington, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $118,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway is to run from the town of Windsor to Rondeau, a distance of about eighty miles. The subsidy, now proposed is to cover the first thirty-seven miles from Windsor to Leamington The road will pass through an excellent agricultural country and will not only be of local benefit, but will also afford advantages to the western portion of Ontario and to the whole country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is Leamington connected with Rondeau now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I think not.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand that this road is to run from Windsor to Rondeau? I could not hear the hon. gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The charter of the Erie and Huron road does not run from the town of Windsor, but this subsidy is only from Windsor to Leamington, thirty-seven miles.

Mr. MILLS. How does the hon. gentleman expect by this road to get from Leamington to Rondeau?

Mr. CASEY. I wish to ask why it is not for the whole line of road down to Rondeau?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You know that we must cut our garment according to our cloth.

Mr. CASEY. The Erie and Huron goes to Rondeau and then it runs up northward. Rondeau is a harbor on which a good deal of money has been spent by the country already, a valuable harbor, and if this railway is to be use ful, it should go to the more important places along the lake shore.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know exactly what the hon. gentleman's intention could be to extend this road from Leamington to Rondeau. Is it for the purpose of drawing away all the traffic from the peninsula to Detroit? Is it for the purpose of making Detroit the commercial centre of the whole west? I think the hon. gentleman will find that the population in the district in which he proposes to extend this road, would like railway connection in the direction of Chatham rather than in the direction of Detroit. My recollection is that the discussion has pointed in that direction, and I supposed, after the patriotic exhibition we had on the Treasury benches this afternoon, that the hon. gentleman would have done almost anything rather than to undertake to make Detroit the commercial centre of the whole traffic of the whole western peninsula.

Mr. WIGLE. However much hon. gentlemen opposite may find fault with the subsidies granted to other railways, I cannot see why they find fault with this.

Mr. MILLS. I am not finding fault.

Mr. WIGLE. In the first place the county of Essex, out of the millions of dollars expended by the Ontario Legislature, never received a dollar from that Government for railways. The district is so situated that it does not receive much benefit from the roads that run through there now, and this road goes in a different direction altogether from the roads now running through the county of Essex. That county has never received aid, I suppose because there are no counties behind it to back it up, no counties through which roads had to run in order to get west or south. It is bounded on the south by Lake Erie, on the west by the Detroit River, the boundary line between the Province of Ontario and the State of Michigan, and on the north by Lake St. Clair, and the roads that run through the county of Essex at the present time are direct lines from Buffalo to Detroit, and go on the north side of the county of Essex. The result is that the southern part of the county is not benefited by these roads. This proposed road commences at Windsor and runs about fifteen miles southward to a place called Harrow, in the township of Colchester, thence east to Kingsville, Ruthven and Leamington, with the intention of carrying it on to Rondeau or Blenheim and connecting with the Erie and Huron system there and then go to Chatham and so on to Sarnia. There is now a company, the stock is taken, bonuses are granted, and everything is arranged to commence within a week or two, to build a railroad from Leamington North to the Canada Southern, with the intention of still going further to the Grand Trunk, and it is needed very much in that part of the country. The hon. member for Bothwell knows well, as he has been there, and so does the leader of the Opposition, that it is a fine country, that it deserves railways, and I say we are getting no more than our rights. Then, again, opposite Leamington, only fourteen miles south, is that beautiful island known as Pelee, in Lake Erie. That island is becoming known all over this country, by the excellent wine which is made there, and it requires an outlet. The outlet for Pelee Island to-day is Windsor. They have to go sixty miles to get to a railway, but as soon as this road is completed, they will be able to get there by going fourteen. Then, again, by getting to the Grand Trunk Railway, the people of the south are greatly benefited; because the Canada Southern Railway is not a local railway for Canada, it does not go to the markets of Ontario, and the result is that anywhere along the Canada Southern, from the fact that they have to run over two roads, the people have to pay $40 a car, whereas from Windsor we can get a car to Toronto for about $22. So when this system is worked out, it will be a great benefit to the people of South Essex, and I am satisfied that all these large audiences the hon. member for Bothwell has had the pleasure of addressing in that country, will be very much pleased with this Government when they see that this matter is carried through.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman speaks about this road being opposed. I was offering no opposition to the road. I believe the road runs through a district that will make this road self-supporting, and a good investment to those who may undertake it, if it is economically managed. But I was not referring to the road the Government subsidised, but to the extension the leader of the Government spoke of, and it seemed to me that he was not very familiar with the geography of the district.

Mr. BLAKE. I would observe that this grant was made to a particular company, different from many of the other grants we have had. With respect to the grant itself, as the hon. member who represents that district has appealed to me, I may say that I had great pleasure in visiting his district, and I agree with him in his statement as to the character of the country itself. I had known a long time, from report, of the wealth of that country, but I observed, on going through it, that it surpassed my own expectations, and also that it was admirably well calculated for railway construction. The hon. gentleman is fortunate to have a very level country, and therefore he can get his roads built cheaper than most other people. I observe, also, that he has taken a long time to get the Government to do what they ought to have done in this matter. They are good at promising, as the hon. gentleman knows, and as I shall prove, but they have been very slow in performing. I have before me the papers with reference to this enterprise, and among them I find a letter to the First Minister from the representative of the other division of the county. I find that in the Session of 1884 a bonus was promised to this road by Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Railways. The member for the north division of Essex says:

"My Dear Sir John,—I enclose a number of petitions which have been forwarded to me for presentation to you, in favor of a bonus to the Lake Erie, Essex and Detroit Railway Company. This is the road for which Sir Charles Tupper promised a bonus last Session, and the people of south-western Ontario fully expect that there will be no further delay or disappointment, but that the promises which have been made will be fulfilled."

Well, this was written on the 29th April, 1885, and it also pointed out:

"I understand that Mr. Wigle, whose constituents are very deeply interested in this railway, has sent maps, &c., to the Minister of Railways."

The maps which, so far as I can judge from the statement of the hon. member for Bothwell, the First Minister has not looked at, or, if he has looked at them, has forgotten the way they described the country. So it appears from the statement of the hon. member for the north riding of Essex, that this bonus was actually promised by the hon. Minister of Railways in the Session of 1884, and the fulfilment of this promise was urgently demanded in the Session of 1885 and it is not until this Session that these promises are fulfilled. I can therefore understand how it is the hon. member for South Essex was very anxious that there should be no further delay in the fulfilment of these promises. Now, with reference to the actual grant, I observe that an application is made for $5,000 a mile in aid of the whole railway. But the hon. gentleman has observed that he must cut his coat according to his cloth, so he gave $3,200 a mile, and it seems, that being the character of the cloth, the hon. gentleman has cut it into a jacket, his cloth not being enough to make a coat. Let us hope that the hon. gentleman will be able to extend the garment and clothe the hon. member more abundantly and satisfactorily before he is called upon to meet his constituents. As the Minister of Railways stated very early in the discussion that, as he had not evidence of the ability of the Moncton and Buctouche Railway Company to build the railway the money had not been voted to that particular company but to "a company." I ask if the hon. gentleman has received evidence as to the financial condition of this company, and if he is satisfied that the company is in a position to entitle them to have this subsidy voted them individually. Of course I am not cognisant of the fact; I do not imply that the corporation is not entirely strong financially, for I know nothing about it. I do not, however, find in the papers laid before the House any evidence on that point. I think there must be some papers, which the Minister of Railways has forgotten to bring down, which will enable the hon gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. WIGLE. The hon. member for West Durham does not exactly understand the position of this road or the position taken by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson) when he wrote this letter. There was a charter which was granted in 1877 by the Ontario Legislature to incorporate the Leamington and St. Clair Railway Company. In 1884 Sir Charles Tupper promised me that if he had known about this road in time he would have given the subsidy to that road. But as he was not aware of the fact it was not granted. The charter for the Detroit and Lake Erie road was not granted till last year, and in that charter there is a privilege given to build a branch from Leamington North. The road referred to by the member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson) was that from Leamington North and it was that road to which Sir Charles Tupper also referred and not the one from Windsor to Leamington. It was the Leamington and St. Clair Railway which is now covered by a branch of the Detroit and Lake Erie road. So if this road is built from Windsor to Leamington there will then be an outlet from Leamington to the Canada Southern and also to the Grand Trunk Railway. The road to Leamington will be built this summer, the company has been formed, the stock taken, the bonuses voted by the municipalities, and everything is ready so that we can complete the road during the summer. So when the road is constructed from Windsor to Leamington it will connect with other lines and even if it is not built to Rondeau it will be a great advantage to the country, but it is intended to go from Leamington to Rondeau or Blenheim, forty miles further.

Mr. BLAKE. The Government was asked to bring down the papers which relate to the subsidy and which formed the basis on which they are to be granted. The Government agreed to adopt that course. They have brought down certain papers, and really the only papers are the letter from the hon. member from North Essex (Mr. Patterson) and the accompanying petition. So if I have made a mistake in supposing these papers to apply to this branch, it is only because the hon. gentleman who sits beside the hon. gentleman from Essex said so. If it does not apply to this grant, then there are no papers. But that is not the case, because the Government say those are the papers. So in addition to the First Minister not being thoroughly acquainted with topography, the Government have brought down papers which have nothing to do with the question, and they have represented them as having to do with it. In this matter the hon. member for North Essex says:

"I hereby enclose a number of petitions forwarded to me in favor of a bonus to the Detroit and Lake Erie Railway. This is the road to which Sir Chas. Tupper promised a bonus last Session, and the people of the county expect there will no further delay or disappointment in granting."

That may apply to some other railway, in Kamschatka if you please, but it is the document on which we are asked to grant this bonus. It seems the Government have other papers, and I hope they will produce them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. During the last and previous Sessions the custom was followed that if there was any doubt in the mind of the Minister as to the responsibility of a railway company which possessed a charter, the grant was made in favor of "a company" constructing such line. If there was a railway company having a charter, the practice had been, and very properly so, to give the grant to that railway. It makes no difference to the people or to this House, but the question I take is this: Whether this is an enterprise worthy of a subsidy out of the public Treasury. If this railway is such a road, and the Minister of Railways in bringing down the proposition gives us the assurance that it is, it should get the money. The company will obtain the money as soon as the necessary progress is made. If not the subsidy stands on the paper.

Mr. BLAKE. The ground is stated in the resolution itself I find, after setting forth the grants, this language:

"The subsidies herein before mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall be granted to such companies respectively."

There is further this language:

"The other subsidies shall be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively."

It is because he named companies that have established to the satisfaction of the Government their ability to construct and complete, that they are named as getting the grant, and it is when this has not been established that no company's name is inserted. I did not dispute but that this company might have established its ability to build this road. I simply ask what proof was furnished; what the stock of the company was, what its subscription was, what its financial scheme was; and I also desire to ask what is the estimated cost of the road per mile inclusive or exclusive of equipment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand on very good authority that the cost will be $12,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. With equipment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $12,000 and a moderate amount of equipment.

Mr. SHANLY. I desire to ask the leader of the Government to explain one point. Is it understood that payments under all these grants are made on work actually done?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. SHANLY. I think the practice, in regard to the subsidised roads, has been that when ten miles were constructed a payment is made; but the Government never advanced the money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Never.

Mr. SHANLY. The very fact of having a subsidy is an incentive to set to work and build the road, and therefore the arrangement that payments are only made on work done is a complete safeguard, and I do not think it is necessary that we should have an explanation on everyone of the thirty-one items of subsidies to railways. If this has to be done we shall not get through in a week.

Mr. BLAKE. We have already got through six or seven and there is no difficulty in dealing with several of them, for on several of the roads work is proceeding. Take, for example, I was nearly going to say the road of the hon. member for Gloucester, but I will not do it - take, I say, the road to Caraquet. A large portion of that road has been constructed and no question was asked in regard to it. But as regards other roads, no information has been given. If full information had been brought down and laid on the table it could have been perused by all the members and the financial position of the different companies ascertained. We do not find that supplied and consequently we ask for it. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) states that the subsidies not being payable until certain work is done, renders it unnecessary to discuss the standing of the company. I differ with him and the Minister of Railways differs with him, because the Minister on two occasions explained that he did not place the subsidies in the names of specific companies because he was not satisfied as to their ability to carry out the work, and you would thereby be preventing the issue of the grant to some other companies that might be chartered. I agree with the Minister of Railways on that point. I should be very sorry to delay the Session two or three hours in considering subsidies amounting to three millions and half at this late stage; but not receiving the information necessary I am obliged to ask for it.

Mr. SHANLY. I still think that the public Treasury is secure by not paying anything until work is done, and it is not at all necessary therefore that we should have such full information. It would be a great satisfaction if the Government were to assure the House that the company in each case was organised and ready to go on with the work; but this cannot be expected, and the very fact that the Government subsidised a road is a strong incentive to the people interested in it to push it forward.

Mr. CASEY. The point is, that in case the company is not financially strong, the building of a road for which a bonus is offered might be delayed. The subsidy might be kept dangling in front of the supporters of the Government as so many subsidies have been kept dangling, and the construction of the road delayed for years, with the result that the people lost the accommodation which Parliament intended to give by granting a bonus. Again, if the bonus is given to a financially weak company, it will lead to their coming back to Parliament in a year or two for an increased grant. But the First Minister does not seem to have been furnished with information with respect to the standing of the company. At all events, he has not given it; perhaps he can tell us at least who are the president and directors?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Indeed, I cannot.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the hon. member for South Essex can?

Mr. WIGLE. I believe that Hiram Walker is president. Everybody knows that any enterprise which he takes hold of is bound to go through. I am satisfied that the financial standing of the company is sound.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What length is the branch running north from Leamington to Stoney Point, and is it to be built entirely of stock and municipal bonuses?

Mr. WIGLE. The road from Leamington North is fourteen miles and was subsidised last year by this Government, $3,200, to the Canada Southern. It is not subsidised for the other six miles. The municipalities interested have already granted bonuses, and stock is taken sufficient to build those fourteen miles. The road subsidised last year was subsidised without any particular financial standing, any more than that the Minister of Railways was satisfied from what we told him that the road would be built if the subsidy was granted. Since last year we have formed the company, received the bonuses and had stock taken sufficient to complete the fourteen miles, and we are now ready to go to work in two weeks. There is no doubt that we can get plenty of capital to build the road from Windsor to Leamington and eventually on to Rondeau or Blenheim.

Mr. CASEY. What is the amount of bonuses given by the municipalities to this road?

Mr. WIGLE. Until the Government subsidy was granted, nothing was asked from them, but they are willing and anxious to submit bonuses.

Mr. CASEY. As the hon. member for North Essex has come in, perhaps he can tell us the amount of stock subscribed and paid up.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I am not in a position to state the exact amount, but I have no doubt that the railway will be built, and that the men interested are financially able to build it.

To the Thunder Bay Colonisation Railway Company, for fifty-six miles of their railway, from the end of the present subsidised section to a point near Crooked Lake, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $179,200.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway is intended to open up and develop a large and valuable mineral country at Thunder Bay. The whole subject was ventilated last Session, when there was a vote for thirty miles to Whitefish Lake, and this vote is to carry it on a little further. Nothing has yet been done on the first thirty miles except making the location surveys, which, it is understood, are advanced. The opening of this road will develop gold, silver, copper and iron mines, and provide a heavy traffic, not only for this road, but with the Canadian Pacific Railway, with which it joins.

Mr. DAWSON. This road will have the effect of opening up a very important section of the country. It passes by the valley of Whitefish River, where a great deal of most magnificent land has recently been discovered, which will be of great importance in the future to the growing town of Port Arthur, which is destined to be one of the cities of the Dominion. It will also be the means of opening access to silver mines of great richness which exist in that valley. At the present moment, crushing mills are being put up, machinery is being sent in, and the result is likely to be very favorable in the way of developing these mines. There are already quite a number of men working at Rabbit Mountain, Silver Mountain and at Beaver Mountain, all of which are in the valley of the Whitefish River, which lies south-west from Port Arthur. Proceeding further on to the westward, we come to another mine known as the Huronian Gold Mine, which is now in active operation. Proceeding further to Crooked Lake, we meet with a continuation of what is known as the Iron Range of Minnesota, near the boundary line. It is now being developed in the other side of the line. The people of Minnesota have a railway running inland for sixty miles from Lake Superior to a place called Vermillion Lake, where there are large quantities of the most beautiful iron ore, from which Bessemer steel is manufactured; and that steel is of a quality that cannot be produced from any other known ore, which may be imagined from the fact that this ore in its native state brings $8 a ton in Cleveland. The company who worked the mines shipped last year 250,000 tons of ore, and this summer they expect to ship 350,000 tons more. Now, this iron range crosses into Canada, and is susceptible of as great development on our side as it is on the other side, and this railway will run through that iron range, at a point where the ore is found in unlimited quantities. Then, in that section of the country there is a great deal of the most valuable timber. Both white and red pine have been found in very large quantities there, and this timber is now quite inaccessible without a railway, for it is found at a considerable elevation above Lake Superior, and the streams are in consequence rough. This railway will be the means of developing a very important trade in lumber alone. The Ontario Government is doing what it can to encourage the opening up of that country. It is building a colonisation road up this same valley of Whitefish River, and the promoters of this railway hope to obtain from that Government some aid for its construction. Now, here is a line of railway which will open up a mineral and agricultural country —which will develop gold, silver, copper and iron mines for all of which that country is remarkable. The people of Port Arthur have sent to the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London, specimens of gold, silver, iron and copper ores from that district, and I am told they are attracting a great deal of attention; and along with them they sent at their own expense an expert to look after them, and to see that they were properly exhibited. If this grant will lead to the opening up of that section of the country, as it no doubt will, it will be of immense advantage to the Dominion at large.

To the Parry Sound Colonisation Railway Company, for forty miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sandridge, on the line of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a population in the district to be served by this railway of about 18,000, who have no railway facilities at present. It is believed that there will be an influx of people there, as the land is suitable for agriculture, and the harbor of Parry Sound is said to do a large trade.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman state anything as to the financial standing of this company?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think there is no grant before this House that ought to receive more generous or hearty support than this one. We must plead to some extent in formâ pauperis. We are very poor people in the Muskoka district, and it is only by Government assistance that we can hope to have any railways built there. In consequence of the necessity of connecting the Ontario system of railways with the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have obtained the Pacific Junction Railway, which is a great boon to the people of that district. That line, as every one knows, runs north and south, and this line will run east and west to the westward of that line. Our hope is that the Ontario Government will supplement this grant by a subsidy, because that Government, as the leader of the Opposition knows, appropriated $8,000 a mile for building a line which has since been constructed through the co-operation of the Government of the Dominion, and we think the least they can do is to give for this short line a sum per mile equal to what they were willing to give for a line from Gravenhurst to Callander. If they do, we have reasonable hope that this railway will be constructed. When I tell the hon. leader of the Opposition that the man who has the greatest interest in this enterprise, and who is the largest stockholder in it, is William Beaty, of Parry Sound, the pioneer settler in that district, I am sure he will be satisfied that no opposition should be given to this grant from his side of the House. The railway must depend to a large extent on Government assistance, as the country through which it passes cannot afford to contribute towards it. It is purely a colonisation work, deserving of the support, not only of this Government, but of the Government of the Province, and I can assure the House that it will give energy and life to that part of the country. When the Government are spending millions in developing the North-West, and doing a great deal for the Eastern Provinces of the Dominion, I think it is doing no more than justice in making this grant to a district which has not the same natural advantages as many other parts of the country.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it is of very much consequence who the principal promoter of an enterprise is. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I shall support or oppose these grants entirely irrespective of who may be promoting them; I shall support them just as freely if my hon. friend promotes them, and I shall oppose them just as freely if it happens to be a particular supporter of mine who promotes them. From what I know of the section of country to which the hon. gentleman refers, I can agree with many of the observations he has made. It is a country from which it is not reasonable to expect much, if any, municipal assistance. I am equally satisfied that this railway is in the character of a colonisation railway, and I am glad to learn that it is being promoted by gentlemen who are themselves taking a financial interest in it. In that respect it differs from many other enterprises with superior advantages, to which we are giving public aid. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is one of those who think that enquiry means opposition; but I can assure him that I shall continue to make those enquiries which I think my public duty demands should be made. It is for those who think they are bound to carry these votes without any enquiry at all to adopt and proclaim before the public that view. It is not my view, and I shall continue to make enquiries.

Mr. SHANLY. Whenever I see the word "colonisation" and feel that the word is properly introduced, I do not feel inclined to ask any questions. Where the "colonisation" can be introduced properly, as it is here, roads of that kind will be entitled to double the subsidy they are given. I shall have great pleasure in supporting this item.

For a railway from New Glasgow to Montcalm, in the Province of Quebec, eighteen miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $57,600.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road is supposed to commence at New Glasgow, the terminus of a section of the Great Northern Railway, and will extend to Montcalm. It is only contemplated to subsidise the first section from New Glasgow to Montcalm, which will be of great advantage in the development in that section of the country.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no locality that I know of which bears the name of Montcalm.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is in the parish of St. Liguori. The railway will be from New Glasgow or St. Lin, to end at Montcalm in the county of Montcalm. The Minister of Railways has put the starting point at New Glasgow, which is now the prolongation of the St. Jérôme Road from Montreal. The line is more direct and shorter from St. Lin to the northern part of the Montcalm Road, but the St. Lin Road is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in case the company is willing to build the railway from New Glasgow to Montcalm it could do it with equal facility from St. Lin to Montcalm. This leaves an alternative, because the Canadian Pacific Railway is ready to continue the road which has been built from St. Jérôme to New Glasgow, which is only a few miles distant.

For a railway from Hereford to the International Railway, in the township of Eaton, in the Province of Quebec, thirty-four miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $108,800.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway extends from the village of Hereford, in the township of Eaton. The country is fairly settled, and the road will develop the lumber trade and greatly assist in settling that country. The estimated cost is $16,000 a mile, and this road has a local land grant.

Mr. BLAKE. The only difficulty I see about the railway is contained in the memorandum, which seems to involve a very different policy in the east than what is proclaimed in the west. The memorandum says it is for the purpose of connecting the International with the American system of railways, which is considered a very bad thing in the west.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Other countries, other manners.

For a railway from St. Felix to Lake Maskinongé, Parish of St. Gabriel in the Province of Quebec, ten miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road is ten miles in length, and extends from the terminus of the Joliette branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Lake Maskinongé, in the parish of St. Gabriel, one of the most populous in the county of Berthier and a centre of colonisation.

For a railway for Glenarman to Wingham, in the Province of Ontario, five miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $16,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road will connect Wingham with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The people of this district have taxed themselves heavily to secure railway facilities, the advantages of which they cannot fully enjoy without having this line.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree as to the enormous amount of taxation and the very unfortunate position these people occupy for the want of railway competition.

Mr. ALLEN. There is one line which I regret is not included in the subsidies.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There are a lot not included.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sins of omission.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret there is one railway left out of this list of subsidies. I mean the line from the town of Meaford past the town of Owen Sound, on into the county of Bruce and thence into the town of Wingham or Kincardine. We have no objection to either as the most suitable place. In that part of Ontario, all the railways run south-east, and the inhabitants of North Bruce and North Grey have to come down to Guelph or Hamilton or Toronto to pass by the Northern going on to Callander. This road I expect to be under construction by the end of the season or early in 1887. It will connect with the London and Huron railway, and cross the Wellington, Grey and Bruce, pass over the Stratford and Lake Huron and cross the Toronto, Grey and Bruce at Owen Sound and connect with the Northern and North-Western and the Northern at Meaford and Collingwood, thence to Barrie, thence to Callander, thereby giving that end of the country facilities in the winter time, when navigation is closed, by means of which they can go on to Callander to the west. The country has paid a large amount of bonuses in the construction of roads, not only in their own counties, but paid their share of the railways of the Provinces in general. The county of Grey has given more than $1,000,000 in bonuses for the construction of railways; Bruce has given about an equal amount, and I think the county I represent is entitled to a share of public moneys to assist them in building this road, which will be a feeder to the Pacific Junction Road and the Canadian Pacific Railway. If the Government do not bring down a grant this Session, I hope they will enquire into the reason and at an early date put in a subsidy for that road, at the next Session of Parliament.

For a railway from a point at or near the McCann Station on the Intercolonial Railway to the Joggins, on Cumberland Basin, in the Province of Nova Scotia, twelve miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is destined to connect the great stone quarries in Cumberland Basin with the Intercolonial Railway at McCann Station, and it will be an important feeder to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. KIRK. Is this road subsidised by the Local Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is.

Mr. KIRK. I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not in his place for I wanted to ask him a question whilst this subsidy is under discussion. Perhaps the other Minister will be able to answer it. It is in connection with a telegraphic despatch which has appeared in the Halifax Mail, the organ of the Government in Halifax. The telegram reads thus:

"RAILWAYS OR REPEAL.

"We can't have both, and must decide which we will choose.

"(Special despatch to the Halifax Herald.)

"Ottawa, 25th May.—Mr. Elwes, the English representative of the syndicate formed under the Nova Scotia Government's scheme, together with others, had an interview with the Minister of Justice yesterday in relation to the aid which that scheme would require from the Dominion Government. It is understood that the delegation was given to understand that no terms would or could be discussed pending the result of the appeal shortly to be made to the people of the Provincial Government on its repeal of the Union."

Was that the answer given to Mr. Elwes, and if correct are the grants which are proposed to be made by these resolutions to railways in Nova Scotia to be treated in the same way, namely, that no money is to be expended on Nova Scotia railways until it is known how the elections in Nova Scotia now pending will result.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know anything about that. I know that one gentleman came to see me about a railway in Nova Scotia, and I chaffed him. I asked him if, in case of secession, he wanted the road. He said: If I never have a headache until secession I will be satisfied. I asked him what he thought about inserting a proviso in the subsidy that the road was to be built whenever secession was defeated. He said he was not sure but would do his best.

Mr. KIRK. I do not consider that an answer to the question, and will repeat it when the Minister of Justice comes in.

Mr. BLAKE. The only paper brought down in this connection is a letter dated 26th March, 1886, from John Boyd, the Senator, I presume. In that, he says that the promoters to whom a grant of $3,200 per mile for twelve miles was promised, were most desirous of extending the proposed line three miles further, so as to include the stone quarries and the immense hay marshes which would greatly benefit the Intercolonial Railway, and their proposal was based on the loss which had been sustained by the gentlemen who had embarked in these enterprises, on account of the grant not having been given last year. The road, he said, was one in which the population was deeply interested, and its construction would afford material help in many ways he need not mention. It appears therefore that as long ago as the 31st March, it had been agreed to give a subsidy for twelve miles. In point of fact, it may have been agreed upon last Session, yet the only paper we have in connection with the affair is a letter from Senator Boyd asking for the three miles not given. We have not the papers on which is based the grant, but this is a very strong appeal for a subsidy which will materially help in many ways.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is all a case of Oliver asking for more.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Is this proposed line all in the county of Cumberland?

Mr. McLELAN. I think it is, although it is New Brunswick interest. The stock of the company that is working the collieries is all held or nearly all in the city of St. John, and during the winter there is no communication with the colliery. The opening of a railway from the collieries and the quarries and the mills to the Intercolonial Railway has been discussed for some time.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It is wholly in the county of Cumberland?

Mr. McLELAN. I think it is.

Mr. BLAKE. Is Oliver to get some more next Session?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It depends on how Oliver behaves.

For a railway from L'Assomption to L'Epiphanie, in the Province of Quebec, three miles and a-half, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $11,200.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a road three and a-half miles in length, from L'Epiphanie, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to L'Assomption. They considered it so important that they endeavored to construct it without aid. Work was commenced, but for want of funds they had to give it up, and this is to assist them in their praiseworthy endeavors.

To the Montreal and Western Railway Company, for seventy miles of their railway from St. Jérôme, north-westerly towards Desert, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy of $5,161 per mile in lieu of the subsidies granted by 46 Victoria, chapter 25, and 47 Victoria, chapter 8, a subsidy of $361,270.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the railway that we have heard of before as being the enterprise of Father Labelle. This road was subsidised for 100 miles, at $3,200 per mile. The survey for location has developed the fact that the first section of seventy miles was much heavier and more costly work than had been anticipated. In fact they got across the Laurentian range before they reached the land fit for settlement. So much was that the case that it was impossible to proceed with the work of construction on the basis of the subsidy already granted, and in lieu of that subsidy it is proposed to grant $5,161 per mile for seventy miles. The road is to connect with the Gatineau Railway at Desert. It runs through a country capable of supporting a large population, but without the facilities to induce settlers to go in in such numbers as desired. At the same time, many people have been going in. The land is good, and the encouragement given by Father Labelle induced a large number of families to go in, and several townships have been settled. They have good crops, but several of them are getting dissatisfied, and have been proposing to abandon the country. As the hon. gentleman knows, there is an enormous country in every way fit for settlement directly north of that.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain what the increase is. Is the present grant just $3,200 per mile all over?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was $3,200 for 100 miles. The present grant is $5,161 for seventy miles.

Mr. BLAKE. What is being done is to give that grant over seventy miles instead of 100 miles—the same amount?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I fancy it must be a mistake in the draft—it says "a subsidy of." Is there any reason why you should not use the words "nor exceeding in the whole," which are used in the others?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It should be put in that way.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that this does not completely meet the demands of the promoter of the railway. He points out in his letter to the Minister of Railways that the subsidy should be rather divided in a somewhat different way, that, instead of being $5,161 a mile for the seventy miles, it should be $6,000 a mile for the first thirty miles, and the remainder distributed over the last forty miles. He says:

The building of a railway across the Laurentian range being more difficult than in the interior, I would ask that the first thirty miles should have a grant of $6,000 per mile, and the balance distributed over the last forty miles. I ask you that favor, great as it is; but it is nothing for a man who is the grand dispenser and who possesses all the treasures? In short, it is just the application made by the company at the time of our last interview. Hoping that you will be always favorable to us,

I have the honor to be.

Would the hon. gentleman state why this reasonable proposal as to the division of the subsidy was not complied with? Was it not worth while? Would not the grand dispenser of all the treasures consider this application favorably?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Who was the signer?

Mr. BLAKE. Father Labelle.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It has been found that it was about the same thing and would put that road on a footing of equality with two other roads which might be considered with this one, the three great colonisation roads of the Province of Quebec, the Lake St. John Railway, the St. Jérôme Railway, or what is called Father Labelle's road, the Northern Colonisation Railway and the Gatineau Railway, opening up the immense fertile country which exists on the other side of the Laurentides. As Father Labelle puts it, it was asked that $6,000 a mile should be granted for the thirty miles forming the country where the mountains of the Laurentian range go, but, taking the information from the Department of Railways, in distributing the subsidy as it is, in fact that region will receive the amount in excess of $5,161, because, in determining the subsidies to be paid, the amount of work for each section in proportion to the other sections is taken into consideration, so that the demand of Father Labelle will be in practice granted, though the subsidy will remain the same as that of the Lake St. John Railway and the Gatineau Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. That explanation is very satisfactory. I observe that this is a repetition of the process in the preparation of the papers for the House to which I have already referred, that the applications which are brought down are those which have been refused and not those which have been granted. It is a little inconvenient, because what we have practically to consider is the ground on which the Government acted and not that on which they refused to act. Perhaps another time we may be given the information on which they acted.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It proves that the Government are wiser than those acting for these enterprises. They modified the demands so as to give the aid in a more practical and a wiser manner.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has failed to understand my point. I asked for the papers upon which the Government acted. These were brought down as the papers upon which they acted. The only paper brought down in this case is one asking for a change in the decision of the Government, which was not granted, so that the papers on which the Government acted have not been brought down.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This is granted. They will receive $6,000 for the first thirty miles, and for the forty miles after reaching Ste. Agathe they will receive $4,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Cannot the hon. gentleman perceive that the papers on which the Government reached their decision to give $5,161 a mile for seventy miles are the papers which it is important to have, and those papers we have not. What we have is a paper dated as late as the 14th May, after the decision was reached, asking for a modification which the hon. gentleman has explained it was not necessary to make, because in practice this will be accorded which Father Labelle asks, but the papers upon which this was granted are not before us.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If my hon. friend had read what is at the end of these resolutions, which is only a repetition of what is at the end of the resolutions of last year, he would have found that it is upon that paper, and it is a good paper because it is the Statute paper, that the Government have decided to grant the request of Father Labelle, but in the manner provided in the Statute, and not in the manner mentioned in the letter.

For a railway from St. Andrews to the Canadian Pacific Railway at, or at any point east of the town of Lachute, in the county of Argenteuil, in the Province of Quebec, seven miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 47 Victoria, chapter 8, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is not an additional vote, it is merely a change of location. This railway, seven miles in length, is already subsidised from the village of St. Andrew's to Lachute, it is considered in the interest of the district to make it start from St. Andrew's, to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway at some point east of Lachute.

To the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, for twelve miles of their railway from Clark's Island to Valleyfield and from Lacolle, in the Province of Quebec, to the international boundary, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway extends from the Chaudière, in the city of Ottawa, passing through Côteau Landing and Valleyfield, to the international boundary. It was commenced some years ago, and so far as it has been operated has been a great benefit to the city of Ottawa. The section of three miles, extending from Elgin street to Chaudière street, was subsidised with $3,200. It is now proposed to grant a subsidy of $3,200 on that section of two miles from Clark's Island to Valleyfield, and ten miles from Lacolle to the international boundary, which is not yet constructed.

Mr. SHANLY. The result of the whole wording of this resolution is correct, but it is not very clear. It is proposed to subsidise twelve miles, but the wording of it is very misleading. That the Canada Atlantic has twelve miles of a railway, from Clark's Island to Valleyfield, is not correct.

Mr. BLAKE. Would it not be well to say, for twelve miles of their railway, being the portion from Clark's Island to Valleyfield, and the portion from Lacolle, in the Province of Quebec, to the international boundary—two different portions ?

For a railway from Truro to Newport, in the Province of Nova Scotia, forty-nine miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $156,800.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This line will run from the Intercolonial Railway to Truro, Nova Scotia, connecting with the Windsor Branch of the railway at Newport Station. It will pass through a section of fine agricultural country unserved by railways, and when the western system is consolidated, it will give direct communication between the eastern and western sections of the Province, and bring the western section of the Province twenty miles nearer to the western section of the Dominion than any existing railway. It will also reach a fine iron deposit.

Mr. VAIL. Is it intended to give this subsidy to the company that has lately been incorporated, and that is under contract now with the Local Government to build this road ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be granted to some company. The Minister of Railways will report to the Government what, in his opinion, is the best mode to construct this road.

Mr. VAIL. Will the Minister of Finance state how far this traverses the county of Colchester ?

Mr. McLELAN. About eight or nine miles.

Mr. ALLISON. Like the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), I think this is one of the most interesting and important roads under consideration this evening, and I take this opportunity of thanking the Government for giving it their attention. It is gratifying that this Government, which has so recently made arrangements for carrying forward to successful completion the greatest national enterprise which the Dominion of Canada has yet been called upon to undertake, has, a few days ago, decided to grant no longer tardy and scanty, but prompt and ample justice to Cape Breton, and is now giving evidence that small lines of railway, some of them extending only through portions of two counties, some, perhaps, only through a portion of one, are not beneath their notice. Perhaps the best evidence that can be given of the necessity of this line, would be seen by consulting a railway map of Canada. This line is a portion of the consolidation scheme, which was proposed by the Local Government four years ago, and is also mentioned in the scheme which is now proposed by the present Local Government of Nova Scotia—although it is not absolutely a part of that scheme—but it is mentioned in it as a part that may be taken up. The advantages of this, however, seem to have impressed themselves upon the Government in a favorable way, and I am thankful to the Government for having taken hold of it with so little representation and with no misrepresentation at all. The important towns of Truro and Windsor, which it will more directly connect, the enterprising farming and ship building villages through which it will pass; the rich mineral district, comprising gypsum, freestone, antimony, manganese, gold and iron, through which the railway will pass form a galaxy of advantages, which, when presented to the observant eyes of the present Government who are so anxious to serve the public interest, have decided them to take this matter up and to construct the road. It might appear to some that possessing such advantages as those it should at once secure a large traffic, and that the district through which the road passes would do very much in the way of granting bonuses towards the construction of the road. But it will be remembered, as it is known to those familiar with the route, that there is one large tidal river to cross, the Shubenacadie, which will necessitate a very large outlay. There is not an estimate made yet, but it is supposed that it will be a very expensive bridge. In reply to the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) I will say that the road is about forty-nine or fifty miles long, some ten miles passing through the county of Colchester and the remainder through Hants.

Mr. VAIL. I am very glad that the Government have been able to grant this subsidy. The construction of this road has been looked forward to for some time. It is a road which will be of advantage to the general public in that part of the country, if it is built, and I hope that now that there has been a company incorporated the Government will not withhold their hand but will assist that company as far as possible in completing the work. If the company goes on with the western consolidation it will form a very important part of it, and I am quite sure that the grant having been given for this company, it will be able to proceed with the work.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am very glad that this bonus has been given. The hon. member for Hants (Mr. Allison) has said that the Government gave it almost without any representation being made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, misrepresentation.

Mr. WOODWORTH. There are argus eyes like those which Juno put in her peacock's tail when she discovered some improper conduct beiween Jo and Jupiter and sent Argus to watch them, when he was killed by Mercury.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. WOODWORTH. This argus-eyed Government (my hon. friend feels as proud as the peacock with all the eyes in his tail) saw this road lying there, and the gypsum, manganese, silver, gold and precious stones only requiring development. The hon. gentleman is glad the road is to be built. The member for Digby (Mr. Vail) is also glad to see that the road will go on. We are all glad; and no doubt the road will be built. But what did the Government do, this argus-eyed Government, when fifty members of the House of Commons signed a memorial to the Government begging them, in the name of Heaven, to help the western part of the Province of Nova Scotia—the Nictaux and Atlantic road, which is lying there in a state of utter collapse, with the sleepers rotting, an attempt having been made to build this road ever since 1877, the company having received a subsidy from the Local Government which was, however, totally inadequate to complete the undertaking. This argus-eyed Government did not turn their eyes in that direction. The hon. member for Lunenberg (Mr. Kaulbach) implored them almost on his knees to listen to this memorial, which graphically portrayed the extent of that road, and its necessity. It also gave the report of Martin Murphy, the Provincial Engineer of Nova Scotia, extracts from which showed the absolute necessity of the road, the counties of Shelburne, Queen's and Lunenburg having no railway communication with the outside world. I do not mean to say that they have not touched it. I do not know what goes on in that great Sanhedrim in the eastern block. I do not know what they say or do, or what may be in their minds now. They may bring this grant down, but the observation of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Allison) has brought to my notice the fact that these men do not require any representation; when they see a great and necessitous work like this, they bring a proper grant down. If they do not, I think the western counties of Nova Scotia will speak out with no uncertain sound. I think they will have something to say about this argus-eyed Government. I have every respect and admiration for their great abilities, their progressive intentions and the great works they do. I give them thanks for what they do, but I would like to know what fair play there is in giving all these subsidies to these different railways in Quebec and Ontario, and Nova Scotia, and leaving the western counties out, as they have. There are eight counties lying west of the line which I draw in this map, and in round numbers some $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 have been given to the counties east of that line, that never gave a dollar of their own money to construct a single rod of railway. To the west of this you take the Windsor Branch, which the Government own, and put it at a million, for it is only 32 miles. Take the Windsor and Annapolis, another million, making two millions, although as I say they, the Government, own the Windsor Branch. But give them credit for two millions, and I want to know what fair play there is, with the representatives from this Cabinet all from the east, with ten Senators allowed to Nova Scotia, all from the east, except one from Lunenburg; and yet the western part of Nova Scotia is treated in that manner. Why is all the money diverted to the east? Here the other day we voted for a railway from Stellarton to Pictou. I said: Yes, I hope you will put in something for this road. We have voted for a road from Oxford to New Glasgow. I said give it to them, though, mark you, they have railway communication. We voted two millions to Cape Breton. I said: Yes, give it to them. It was passed in this House. And then there was this great shipping railway which concerns the eastern part of Nova Scotia a good deal. That was voted, and we voted all these sums, while not a single item has been put in here in order to complete this road which has been lying so long in its present state. To show you the necessity for this road let me read you the memorial which fifty members of this House signed and sent to the Government:

"SIR,—The following memoranda set forth these facts, that is to say:—

"The Nova Scotia Central, formerly known as the Nova Scotia, Nictaux and Atlantic Central Railway, extends from the harbors of Lunenburg and Mahone Bay, in the county of Lunenburg, in the Province of Nova Scotia, by the way of Bridgewater and New Germany, connecting with the Windsor and Annapolis Railway at Middleton, in the county of Annapolis, a distance, including the branches to deep sea water, of seventy-five (75) miles.

"The building of this important road was commenced in the summer of 1877 with a subsidy of four hundred and twelve thousand dollars ($412,000), or about five thousand four hundred and ninety-three dollars ($5,493) per mile from the Province of Nova Scotia, and has been pushed from time to time since then in its construction, but owing to the insufficiency of means, is yet quite a long way from completion.

"When the subsidy by the Provincial Government was first granted, the expense of building such a line of railway was thought to be much less than it is now, and a much inferior class of road than what is deemed now a necessity was contemplated. Instead of wooden bridges at different places, it is proposed now to build them of iron, and to lay down fifty-six (56) lb. steel rails instead of forty-five (45) lb. iron, as was then recommended.

"The engineering difficulties were found to increase and much more work was found necessary to be done to make a good and substantial road than the engineer's report at first intimated. The road has been principally graded from Middleton to Stoddard's, a distance of about twenty (20) miles, and part of masonry done from Stoddard's to New Germany, a distance of about twenty (20) miles more. Nothing of consequence except clearing has yet been done. From New Germany to Lunenburg, the remaining distance of the road has been graded and a portion of the ties and timber necessary have been delivered but not placed. That portion of the road graded, with the timber and ties thereupon, are now lying there unimproved and useless in the present state of affairs, deteriorating day by day, while the people who will have to pay the right of way, are obliged to see their lands disfigured without the compensation of a railway.

"About five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) have already been spent in constructing said road and it will cost at least another six hundred thousand ($600,000) to complete it, and lay the rails ready for the rolling stock, which will cost about two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000) additional.

"Mr. Martin Murphy, the Provincial engineer of the Province of Nova Scotia for many years, and under different Governments, and still is the Provincial engineer, has placed on record in the journals of the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia, of the year 1876, an elaborate report of this great work and which was approved of unanimously by the Legislature, containing his professional reasons why this railway should be built, extracts of which are herewith submitted and annexed hereto, marked 'A.'

"This great work has demanded and received the close attention of successive Provincial Governments, but all efforts have failed in obtaining its completion, and it is a fact patent that if the Dominion Government and Parliament do not come to its aid, there is no hope of the road ever being finished, and all that has been expended will be utterly lost, and the hopes held out to the people of the western counties, from time to time, doomed to failure.

"This memoranda also states that this railway opens up some of the finest agricultural and mineral regions in Nova Scotia, with lands heavily timbered.

"That the counties of Lunenburg, Queen's and Shelburne have never had the slightest railway accommodation, and to the inhabitants of these counties this railway is of the utmost importance and utility.

"That it affords an easy and cheap mode of obtaining access to the cities of St. John and Halifax, and other parts of the Dominion, and will operate when completed as an auxiliary and feeder to the Intercolonial Railway.

"The harbors of Lunenburg and Mahone Bay, the Atlantic termini of the railway, are among the best on the Atlantic coast, and are open for navigation all the year round.

"The speedy construction of this road is a burning and absorbing question with the people of the localities named in Lunenburg, Annapolis, Queen's and King's, and the surrounding districts, and they ask that as the Dominion Government has adopted and acted upon the policy of giving aid to railways which are calculated to develop the country through which they pass and add strength and wealth to the country; that they extend to this railway the same aid that they have extended to other railways in other parts of the Dominion, upon the plan laid down by the Honorable Minister of Railways in the Session of 1884, and acted upon and carried out by the Government of the Dominion of Canada ever since, namely, of giving a subsidy of not less than three thousand two hundred dollars ($3,200) per mile, with such other concessions as allowed to others."

Now I have the report of Mr. Murphy under my hand in the Journals of the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia, showing the great importance of this work, and it passed unanimously in that Legislature. We know that in 1884, when Sir Charles Tupper came to the House with his resolutions giving aid to railways, he took up, for instance, the Pontiac Railway of some eighty-five miles in length, which had $6,400 per mile from the Treasury of Quebec, but this was inadequate to build it. He said it was in a state of collapse, and he came with this aid, and Parliament seconded his efforts and voted $3,200 per mile. This road is precisely in the same position, only that they had the Canadian Pacific Railway, by which the people from Renfrew and other places in that direction could come to Ottawa and to all parts of the Dominion, while the people of Queen's and Lunenburg are shut off from railway communication. For them there is no road and no subsidy. I would like to know what is the real reason that this road has been left out? The Government could do something for it at this time, as they are doing for others; we are voting millions and millions to other roads. We have that road in Cumberland, and I want to see it, for it is a populous and wealthy county and sends able men here and elsewhere. But, Heaven knows, they have railways all over it, and yet they propose to open up some mines here by this road and the sum of $38,400 is granted to it. Then there is the Newport road. It is all right to give it aid to build the road. Why should this road, which has been struggling to completion since 1877, be left out and not have a dollar given to it? I listened to-day with great pleasure to the hon. Minister of Railways when he said that the Government, whenever they found a struggling railway, came to its aid. They may have had this railway in their mind; but I would be recreant to my duty, when we are giving these votes, which those people help to pay, if I did not raise my voice and ask the Government to come to the rescue of this road as they have gone to the rescue of other roads. It will be a wrong unredressed; it will be an act for which I can see no palliation or excuse; because that country is as heavily timbered, as well watered, as fertile, as abundant in minerals and as much entitled to be opened up and developed as any other portion of the country which we have been voting subsidies to open up and develop; and I do think, while I assist to vote away these large sums of money, that I am entitled to ask, if we do not get a fair share of the patronage as compared with Quebec and Ontario, that the hon. Ministers representing us in the Cabinet should see that we in the western counties of Nova Scotia get fair play.

Mr. VAIL. I am not astonished that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) speaks in the tone he does; I am only astonished that he has not done so before. It is quite true, that of all the public grants made by the Government for Nova Scotia, two thirds if not three-fourths have been made for the eastern part of the Province, while the western part has an equal population. However desirable these grants may be—and I think they are important roads which it is proper that the Government should assist—the Government have left out the railways that should have received grants. There is no doubt that the railway which the hon. member for King's has referred to, from Nictaux to the Atlantic coast, is an important road. The company controlling that road has been struggling for five or six years, and has done a great deal of work and laid out a large amount of money; and yet, as the hon. gentleman said, the sleepers and bridges are in a state of decay because the company cannot raise the means necessary to complete it. I am sure a vote of $3,200 a mile would ensure the completion of that road in a very short time. I was very glad to find that the Government two years ago granted $3,200 a mile to complete the link between Annapolis and Digby. The work on that road has not been commenced yet; but a company has recently been incorporated, and it is hoped that it will begin work some time this year. I believe a petition was presented to the Government this year asking that an additional subsidy of $3,200 a mile should be given to that road of eighteen miles, which is all that is necessary to complete the railway from Halifax to Yarmouth. It is a very expensive road to build. The bridges on it alone, according to the best information I can obtain, will cost from $400,000 to $500,000, if they are built as railway bridges now are. I was in hopes that the Government would see their way clear this year to grant an additional subsidy of $3,200 a mile to encourage the company to complete this link. In looking over the subsidies granted by the Government since 1884, I find that in 1885 the following additional subsidies have been granted to railways on which no work has yet been commenced: The Gatineau Valley Railway Company, $3,200 per mile, not to exceed in the whole $160,000, which has been increased to $6,400 per mile, or in the whole $320,000; the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway, $3,200 per mile, in all for 16 miles, $51,200, which has been increased to $70,000, or $4,375 per mile; Grand Piles on the River St. Maurice to its junction with the Lake St. John Railway, $3,200 per mile, or in all $217,000, which has been increased to $4,350 per mile for 50 miles. It seems to me, after these roads, which are merely projected roads, on which work has not yet been commenced, have received from this Government double the sum granted to them in 1884, that we might fairly claim an increased subsidy for this road between Annapolis and Digby, which is so necessary to the whole western portion of Nova Scotia. I hope the Government will consider its claims and grant a sum which will ensure its completion within a limited time.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman has forgotten to mention that about the time of Confederation a subsidy of $1,000,000 was given to continue the road from Windsor to Annapolis, about eighty miles, and some years after Confederation the Dominion Government offered the Windsor Branch to any company that would complete the road from Annapolis to Yarmouth. A company was eventually formed, and having been also subsidised by the Local Government of Nova Scotia, it commenced the construction of that work, and made the connection all but about eighteen miles. The hon. gentleman knows that the Local Government have now made an arrangement with a company to complete those eighteen miles, and that company are expecting to receive the Windsor Branch, and they are also expecting to receive $ 4,000 which was offered by the Dominion Government two years ago. The Local Government have also agreed to guarantee $200,000 a year for twenty years to that company, part of that sum being covered by a deposit. They expect to have the Windsor Branch which cost nearly $2,000,000, and they have a grant from the Local Government of $100,000 a year for twenty years, in addition to the $100,000 which is covered by deposit, and surely a company so largely subsidised as that is, cannot fail to build the eighteen miles of road to make connection, and put the whole in good order. I have seen the representatives of that company and they express no doubt of their ability to make the connection and put the whole in proper order. With that arrangement, they could hardly expect the Dominion Government to step in and give a further subsidy.

Mr. VAIL. All we want is to have the road completed, and the company will require all they can get to complete it, because the bridging is so heavy. The Minister of Finance has referred to the gift of the Dominion Government of the Windsor Branch. The Dominion Government simply gave to Nova Scotia what belonged to her before Confederation, and what was simply transferred to the Dominion Government and formed a portion of our debt when we came into the Union. We had something to represent our debt in the shape of railways in Nova Scotia; we had built our railways to Truro and Windsor, and that property was taken over by the Dominion Government and went into our debt. Other Provinces came in which had no public works to represent their debt, but it is not worth while to particularise them at present. The Government deserve no credit for giving back to Nova Scotia what belonged to her, and what her people had built and paid for before we entered Confederation. This road was promised to the Western Counties Railway Company, or any company that would build the connecting link between Annapolis and Digby. The explanation made is to some extent, perhaps, a fair reason why this additional amount should not be given at present, but we may require the whole of it before the road is completed.

Mr. SHANLY. I would like to say this with regard to the Western Counties Railway of Nova Scotia, that I am not surprised at this discussion because it is a very much involved question that may be heard of very loudly yet in this House, and probably in the courts of law where it now is also. I shall not touch further upon it than to say that Parliament once made a grant of the Windsor Branch to the Western Counties Railway, and it proved in court afterwards they had no right or title to make the grant, but the effect was to draw a great many municipalities and individuals into serious financial difficulties for which, certainly in honor, Parliament is bound to see restitution made in some shape or other. But I am surprised to see that the road referred to by the member for King's, the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, has been passed over in the schedule of subsidies. It is a road which is as well entitled to the full grant of $3,200 a mile as any road in the schedule. It is greatly needed in that part of the country. The company is struggling to build the road and is in financial difficulties, and, as my hon. friend has said, a great deal of the work done is going to ruin and decay for the want of some aid. I believe such a grant as $3,200 a mile would enable that road now to be carried to completion. It would confer greater advantages on a larger section of country than the majority of the roads named here. I am surprised it is not included in the subsidies, and I would express the hope that the Nictaux and Atlantic road will get a fair share of Government aid.

Mr. KIRK. I do not agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) and the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) in reference to the amount of money expended in eastern Nova Scotia being so much larger than that expended in western Nova Scotia. The hon. member for King's has said that nearly all the money expended in Nova Scotia has been expended, not in the western counties at all, but in the eastern. When you consider the amount of money expended in the Windsor Branch, in the Yarmouth Railway, in the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, and in the Intercolonial Railway from Truro West, you must see there has been vastly more expended in the western than in the eastern counties. What money has been expended in the east? Colchester is not an eastern county. The only ones in which money has been expended at all in building railways are Pictou and Antigonish. No money has been expended at all in Guysboro' except in a small corner of it. Therefore, the hon. member for King's was not correct when he raised this objection in regard to grants which have been made to Nova Scotia. I agree with him there is necessity for a grant for the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, which ought certainly to be subsidised and completed, for it is too bad that, after so much money has been expended on that road, it should be allowed to go to ruin. As other hon. members have spoken of other roads not mentioned in these resolutions, I might draw attention to another road, not in the western counties either, but in the eastern counties. It is a road for which a company of capitalists have obtained a charter from the Local Legislature, and which has been subsidised by the Local Legislature and which the counties through which it will pass are prepared to subsidise, at any rate, to the extent of paying for the right of way. I refer to the line from New Glasgow, on the Eastern Extension Railway or the Intercolonial Railway, to White Haven, through the counties of Pictou, Antigonish and Guysboro'. This is a line which the Government ought, not now, perhaps, because I do not think the company is prepared to ask for a subsidy just now, but they will be soon, to grant a subsidy; but I hope the Government if it be in power—and I trust it will not, I trust it will be replaced by a Government more disposed to do justice——

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand the hon. gentleman desires to wait until then.

Mr. KIRK. I hope the Government will bring a subsidy for that railway which will certainly merit one, which at any rate, will not be a competing line with any other, and will be a feeder for the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. I was a little surprised to hear the hon. member for Hants compliment the Government upon acting with so little pressure in this case. I have read the papers brought down as to all the railways, and this railway represents the greatest amount of pressure. No less than twelve large and important public meetings were held in constituencies interested in this road, where the representative men met, discussing the subject, passed resolutions, and appointed a delegation which came here. From the evidence, the pressure appears to have been very strong and cogent, and resulted to the satisfaction, no doubt, of those who pressed the claim of this railway for aid; but that the hon. gentleman should say, in the face of this mass of papers, that the Government is peculiarly laudable because, as the hon. member for King's has said, they saw it with their argus eye, without being pressed at all, is rather too ridiculous. As to the invocation which the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) says was addressed to the Government in reference to the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, does it not occur to him that he made a slight mistake in that invocation? I understood him to state that the fifty members appealed to the Government in Heaven's name. Perhaps he had better try another name; it might be more successful.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I said, and everything else.

Mr. BLAKE. Did he? The hon. gentleman should not conjoint Heaven's name with the others.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Then the hon. member leaves me no alternative whatever.

Mr. BLAKE. As to the Nictaux and Atlantic road referred to by the hon. member for King's, having had occasion to enquire a little into that matter, my opinion concurs with his that relatively to some of the grants we are making to-night, and also absolutely, that is an enterprise which ought to be aided upon a consistent application of the policy we are acting upon to-night and have acted upon for some few years past.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad the hon. the leader of the Opposition gives my constituents credit at all events for going to work systematically. I may say that nothing like the petition the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) has referred to so eloquently, and forcibly was signed by the members of this House in favor of the road from Windsor to Truro. I am glad also to find that the leader of the Opposition is offering no opposition to this to-night. I remember two or three years ago reading from an address presented to him by a Reform association in Ontario, I think it was in the county of Simcoe, if I recollect rightly, in which the Reform convention took the opportunity of thanking the hon. the leader of the Opposition for opposing grants which were made to what they were pleased to style local railways, which were being used as "a bribe to the smaller and poorer Provinces;" but, as these railways to which grants are being made are not confined to the smaller and poorer Provinces, but are also in the larger and more wealthy Provinces, I am glad to find that he is not offering any factious opposition.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not recollect any such address; I do not recollect being presented with any such address, but the hon. gentleman will be good enough not to put into my mouth, if that is his insinuation, the words of other people. I am not responsible for everything that is addressed to me. If I were, I should be responsible for some very unpleasant things I sometimes hear said to myself.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I would say one word as to my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). He is unwell to-night and is not here; I know he will regret it to-morrow and that he would have been here, ill as he is, if he had known that it was coming up. I know that he has been pressing this matter in every way possible. He has been instant in season and out of season, and he will be sorry that he was not here pressing on a matter concerning his own county.

Mr. MILLS. He has lost an arm.

Mr. KIRK. Perhaps he has gone home to look after the election.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for ninety-five miles of their railway, from a point 50 miles north of St. Raymond to Lake St. John, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $1,961 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole (in addition to the subsidy granted by 45 Victoria, chapter 14, and 46 Victoria, chapter 25, of $3,200 per mile), $186,295.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend the Secretary of State spoke of this road when he spoke of the other principal roads leading into the interior of the Province of Quebec. This road has on several previous occasions been explained to the House. It extends from a point near Quebec to Lake St. John, a distance of 175 miles. It has been subsidised at $3,200, and the road has been constructed for a distance of eighty miles, and, it having been found impossible to proceed further without additional assistance, it is proposed to augment the subsidy of $3,200 upon the ninety-five miles not constructed by $1,961 per mile, making the subsidy on this section $5,161 per mile. This road goes through a good country. There is a splendid agricultural district around Lake St. John. The road has a local subsidy and also a subsidy from the city of Quebec.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman explain how these cabalistic figures are reached of an aggregate of $5,161? Why that last dollar? It looks almost as if it was on some calculation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These figures were come to in this way: There were $3,200 given, for example, to the Gatineau Railway. The amount was not found sufficient, and the company asked to have the subsidy doubled. We could not double it, but we took so many miles and divided the subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the whole distance, which made $5,161 a mile; and this figure, being obtained for that railway, was applied to the other railway, the St. Jérôme road, and to this road also.

Mr. VAIL. Is this road in course of construction?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Minister of Public Works tell us what amount of aid this road has received from various sources?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This railway has received from this Government $3,200 a mile for the eighty-five miles that have been built or are now being built. They received from the Local Government of Quebec the sum of $5,000 a mile on 170 miles, and then they received from the city of Quebec a subsidy of something like $400,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Then they receive a land grant of 5,000 acres a mile.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister of Public Works if any portion of this road is under contract for construction at the present time, and if so to whom?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I think there is about fifty miles now being constructed from a point near St. Raymond to Lake Edward, that is being constructed and will be completed, I think, during the year. Then the balance will be undertaken at once with a view of completing it by the end of next year.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say with whom the contract is made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the contractor is Mr. Beemer.

Mr. MULOCK. With whom was the contract made by the railway company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand the company constituted themselves a construction company and gave this work to Mr. Beemer, who has been going on successfully up to the present time. He is now going on with this road.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that there is a railway company and a construction company, and that there was a contract made by the railway company with the construction company, and that then the construction company sublet the contract to Mr. Beemer. Is that the state of affairs?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So I understand.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this Mr. Beemer the same person who had the contract for the building of the Quebec gates some years ago?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that this Mr. Beemer presented a claim against this Government on one occasion for a certain sum of money for extras in connection with the contract for building those gates. Is this the same Mr. Beemer who presented that claim for extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Could the Minister state the amount of his first claim for extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say that. That was laid before Parliament at the time, some five or six years ago.

Mr. MULOCK. Could the Minister state the rate of contract for building between the railway company and the construction company, and the amount at which the contract has been sublet to this Mr. Beemer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That I cannot say.

Mr. MULOCK. Could he say at what rate the construction was let to the construction company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot answer that. I can say the work has been delayed, and precisely because the company could not proceed with it fast enough; the interior of the country is rather rough and difficult, and this is the principal reason why this increased subsidy has been given, in order to reach the fine region of Lake St. John.

Mr. MULOCK. What is it estimated that this road will cost per mile?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. About $22,000.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not desire in any way to prevent the construction of this road, but I wish to call attention to the aid it has already received. I am told this road has already received from this Government, in aid, $560,000; that it received from the Quebec Government $850,000, from the city of Quebec, $458,000—a total of $1,868,000. It has a mileage of 170, not 175, and with that mileage the cash bonuses I have enumerated allow for construction $10,941 per mile. In addition to that, the railway company has power to bond this road for $20,000 per mile, and now it is proposed for the remaining ninety-five miles to allow it a cash bonus of $1,961, which added to the cash bonus already mentioned, makes $12,902 per mile. In addition to this, it has 5,000 acres of land per mile, which, if estimated at $1 per acre—

Mr. BLAKE. 70 cents.

Mr. MULOCK. At 70 cents it is $3,500 per mile, so that this road has in cash, land and bonds, $36,402 per mile. Well, Mr. Chairman, we are getting up into high figures in railway construction. We were told to day by the Minister that it cost $26,000 per mile to build a road through a difficult country from Gravenhurst to Callander, and it was a first-class road, intending to do a very different kind of work, I presume, from this one, which will be comparatively a colonisation road. Now, is it necessary that the public money should be given to that extent for the construction of a railway? I think under the circumstances the Government ought to have given us more particulars. The Minister of Public Works told us that the contract has been let for the construction of this ninety-five miles of road and, I think he should have told us the price.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I did not say the contract had been let for the ninety-five miles remaining to be built. I stated that there was a contract now going on by Mr. Beemer for the last fifty miles up to Lake Edouard, which will complete the eighty-five miles.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman state the rate?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the Minister of Militia can tell us. I understand he is a director in the construction company.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The cost of the road is about $22,400 per mile. The hon. gentleman must understand that besides the cash subsidies which have been enumerated, the financial position of the enterprise will depend a great deal upon what the lands will realise, and also upon what the bonds will realise. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the bonds as being available cash, but these bonds have not yet been disposed of. The hon gentleman also must know, as he seems to have taken a great deal of interest in these railway matters, that bonds at present are really not available for any cash purposes for the construction of any railway. The Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, as most hon. gentlemen know, and as the hon. gentleman who represents Megantic (Mr. Langelier), and who happens to be the mayor of the city of Quebec, knows perfectly well, is of the greatest importance for the district of Quebec. From the city of Quebec, it traverses a country leading to one of the most valuable portions of our Province. The valley of the Lake St. John is recognised as being equal to any of the most valuable and productive lands in the Dominion of Canada. It now has a population of 40,000 people, and from the fact that no railway communication exists between that valuable section of the country and the markets, the population are placed in the impossibility of continuing to remain in that district unless railway communication is given them. The subsidies which have been given are, no doubt, large, but they are small compared with the great difficulties which have been encountered in building that road. Those who have studied the geography of that section of country must understand the great difficulty of securing a line of railway starting from the city of Quebec, crossing the Laurentian range, and going down to Lake St. John. The estimated cost of the road so far, is $22,700 a mile, but that is partially equipped. Considering the difficulties that have been encountered, the building of that road, so far, has been a great success, but like all roads, traversing a difficult section of country, such as this railway traverses, it is not perfect by any means, and a great deal more money will have to be expended before it is completed and put into such a condition as the circumstances demand. I think that hon. gentlemen will admit that there is no more important road for our section of the country than the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway.

Mr. MULOCK. I shall extremely rejoice when the people of that section are in railway communication with the rest of the people of Canada. I do not ask these questions for the purpose of discouraging the enterprise in the slightest degree. I shall be glad if the Minister of Militia would inform me as to what is the difference between the contract for the construction of this line between the railway company and the construction company and the sub-contract with Mr. Beemer.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The first company organised was the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, and not the construction company. The construction was organised for the purpose of building this line. The subsidies were transferred by the original, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company to the construction company. The company felt they were not in a position to carry out the contract without letting it to Mr. Beemer, the present contractor. The hon. gentleman has enquired about Mr. Beemer. So far as his honor and ability are concerned the member for Megantic can give the hon. gentleman all the information required, The contract was let to Mr. Beemer and he has done his work very well indeed, so far as he has gone, and has given ample satisfaction to the company which had undertaken to build the road.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman rather evades, accidentally, my question. Does Mr. Beemer obtain from the construction company everything the construction company obtains from the railway company for the building of the road?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to know whether the Minister of Militia is himself a member of the construction company?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am.

Mr. BLAKE. And Mr. Ross?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And Mr. Beaudet?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And Mr. Baby was until lately?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He was.

Mr. BLAKE. He has retired, I believe. Some little question arose as to his remuneration for securing some of the aid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know as to that. I know he has retired.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon. gentleman says very rightly that the road is a very important road, and that it is of great consequence that it should be built. I have no doubt about that. The question is whether the amounts to be appropriated are being properly applied, and whether the financial basis is sufficiently strong. Having got a construction company of such respectability and influence as that, the particulars of which I have elicited from the hon. gentleman, it seems extraordinary that they should not have been able to have got along with construction without further assistance. No doubt the hon. gentleman in his position on the construction company was able to point to his colleagues the importance of adding to the financial arrangements of this railway. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would say what amount of cash has been actually paid up in stock by the company?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps there has not been very much?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There has been a good deal but I could not say how much.

Mr. BLAKE. About $10,000?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not say at all.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that this great corporation of which the hon. gentleman is a member and is also a member of the construction company, has paid in about that amount, and for that they are going to control a railway with subsidies of $10,000 a mile.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman, without informing him exactly what amount of stock has been subscribed, that no railway company in Canada, I believe, has expended more of its own cash in the building of a railway than has this company which has undertaken the building of this line. Mr. Ross and others have been for years carrying out this great undertaking, which is to produce such important results in the Quebec district. They have expended upwards of half a million of dollars upon the road, of their own cash. I think that no other company can boast of having achieved what they have achieved, and of having spent more of their own cash or shown more spirit of enterprise.

Mr. BLAKE. If this money has been expended, although the stock has not been paid up, it must simply have been advanced on the contract. Bonds or subsidies, and so forth, have been taken in security, and advances made which will now be recouped out of the public Treasury. Money is advanced in one or two ways: Either the parties lend money to the company on security, or they become shareholders. It is quite clear that if the money has not been subscribed for stock, the cash was advanced to the company, and I suppose that it will be recouped by these arrangements.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will see from the figures, that if the road cost $22,700 a mile, and if the subsidy only amounts to $10,000 a mile, there must be expended upwards of $10,000 out of the company's own money per mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Or it is borrowed on the bonds?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will understand that for a number of years, although in the company, I have had very little to do with any of its proceedings, and it is quite impossible for me to tell the hon. gentleman how the money has been disposed of—but I have shown, I believe, satisfactorily, that no company has done more to promote a great national enterprise, than has the company which has undertaken to build this road.

Mr. BLAKE. I perceive that the hon. gentleman is not well acquainted with the affairs of the company. I can tell the hon. gentleman, at one breath, where half of the half million dollars has come from. It has come out of the Quebec and Dominion subsidies, as the hon. gentleman will find stated in this letter, subscribed by J. J. Ross, president of the company:—

"An advance from the Province of Quebec, out of future subsides, of $148,000. It has also been necessary to expend, in order to complete the last forty miles, the sum of $96,000, voted by the Dominion last summer, for thirty miles previously constructed, which sum, according to the contract, should have been devoted towards the building of an independent entrance into the city of Quebec. Thus some $244,000 of the subsidy, belonging to unfinished portions of the road, have been unavoidably expended in completing the expensive central section."

There it is explained that half of the sum which the hon. gentleman has mentioned has come out of the treasuries of the Provinces and the Dominion.

Mr. KIRK. I am considerably surprised to find that only $10,000 of the subscribed capital stock of the company has been paid up. I understood that the members of the company were very wealthy and quite able to pay up their stock. I understand also that some of the members are in the habit of subscribing liberally for testimonials to members of the Government. I would like to ask whether this Mr. Beemer is the same man who subscribed $1,000 for a testimonial to the Minister of Public Works.

To the Cap Rouge and St. Lawrence Railway Company, for twelve miles of their railway from Lorette via Cap Rouge to Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This line of railway is a line from some point at or near Lorette, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, running to the mouth of the River St. Charles, either within or without the city limits of Quebec, or running by Cap Rouge, then following the north shore of the river through the coves to the city of Quebec to a point in the city of Quebec, where the company may have a deep water terminus; and in all cases, before entering the limits of the city of Quebec, the consent of the corporation is previously to be obtained. This line taps the north shore at Lorette, and follows the valley of the river to Cap Rouge down to deep water at St. Felix de Cap Rouge. It is a valuable adjunct to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and will be a great accommodation to the lumber trade by taking it from Lorette to deep water at St. Felix de Cap Rouge, and thence to the harbor works, enabling them to deposit the lumber at the various wharves.

Mr. LANGELIER. Has any estimate been made of the cost of the land damages for this railway? On the other side of the river, at Point Lévis, they have been very large, and they are likely to be still larger on the Quebec side. Unless the amount of damages has been ascertained to be very low, I do not think the subsidy will be sufficient to construct the railway.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The subsidy is perfectly protected from the fact that it can only be paid when the line is built; but I may tell the hon. gentleman that, in so far as the right of way is concerned from Lorette to St. Felix crossing, the property is held by the Young estate and Mr. Duchesnay, and it has been secured at very little cost, if any. The cove owners, who see the value of this road going through their property and coming into the city, have held a meeting; and I understand that almost all of them have agreed to give the right of way for the purpose of securing the building of this line.

For the construction of wharves and landing stages on the line on the railway from Long Sault to the foot of Lake Temiscamingue, a subsidy of $6,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is intended to aid the farmers and others in transporting supplies and produce to market, the river not being navigable at that point. The river will pass a number of rapids, and a number of transfer landing stations and wharves are required, and this is to provide for them. The subsidy already granted is for eight miles of railway. There is already a large settlement there, and settlers continue to flock in.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that the application is for another purpose, namely, for rolling stock and the requirements of steamers, I suppose, in connection with the navigation which is to form part of the scheme. They declare that a grant of $15,000 is necessary, they having been obliged to place four steamers on the water stretches. Now, what the hon. gentleman proposes is to give $6,000 for wharves and landing stages. Are there any other papers indicating the want of money for this purpose?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They made a request to the Minister of Railways for what is mentioned there, but they made to my Department a request for wharves, saying that they could not build them, and that the object they had in view and that we had in view in giving the subsidy last year to their railway, could not be attained unless we could give some aid in this way by building those wharves and landing places.

Mr. BLAKE. Here again we are in the unfortunate position of having papers brought down with reference to an application which the Government did not grant, and no papers with reference to the one which they granted. This is the third or fourth time that this has occurred. There is one observation made in the application which induces me to give it favorable consideration. I observe that Father Gendron, who requests that this amount be given to the society to carry on its patriotic intention, remarks that not one of its members have the slightest pecuniary or personal interest in view. I am surprised that the hon. gentlemen opposite did not think that a disqualification.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is very witty.

To the Gananoque, Perth and James' Bay Railway Company, seventeen miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $54,400.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The original charter was rather a large one in its design. The application now is for the first section of eighteen miles, from near Ganahoque to Delta, an important part of the line, and it is with a view to construct it that this is proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. Has there been any evidence laid before the Government as to the financial standing of this corporation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not aware that there has been.

Mr. HAGGART. The company has not been formed yet. It is chartered, and it is principally under the control of Messrs. Rathbun & Co., of Deseronto. They have built a line of road from Gananoque to the River St. Lawrence, about three miles long, and have built two iron bridges over it; and they have a line of ferry to connect with the Utica and Black River Railway at Clayton. In order to utilise the railway on which they have expended over $70,000 they have applied for a charter, and the intention is to push the road with the help of the Government bonuses and the municipal bonuses.

For a railway from St. Eustache to St. Placide, county of Two Mountains, eighteen miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $57,600.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The old road from Grenville to Carillon is extended by the change which was explained a moment ago, and instead of the railway of seven miles being constructed from Carillon to Lachute the subsidy is applied to a railway from Carillon to St. Placide. It is proposed to carry the road to St. Eustache, making it one which, in the future, I hope, will reach Sault au Recollets, giving communication with the city of Montreal, to all that part of the country on the north side of the Ottawa, and giving at the same time, as much as possible, communication with that part of the country which lies between Grenville and St. Placide, on the south shore, which have no road until the Vaudreuil road is subsidised, and that is not done at the present moment.

Mr. BLAKE. In this case no papers are brought down. Are there any papers?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I gave up giving explanations, because the last I gave was not satisfactory to my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAKE. For that reason, I simply asked whether there were any papers. I thought the hon. gentleman could answer that question.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have not had any papers.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what one may call an evasive answer. It is as much as to say that some of the other thirteen or fourteen members of the Government may have had papers, but we are not to know upon whose or what representations this application is made.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I understand that the application is made by the same company which obtained the former grant.

Mr. BLAKE.

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway through the Stewiacke Valley, on a line which will afford facilities of communication with the Iron Mines, Spring Side, Upper Stewiacke, and Musquodoboit settlements, twenty-five miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $80,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway is designed to meet the Intercolonial Railway near Stewiacke Station, and run easterly through the beautiful and fertile Stewiacke valley for twenty-five miles, in order to give facilities for communication with the iron mines of that district, which is entirely without railway service.

Mr. VAIL. Has there been any survey of this road, or who has made application?

Mr. BLAKE. I can tell the hon. gentleman who the applicant is, and I am not at all surprised that the application was granted. The applicant is the Minister of Finance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then, of course, it ought to be granted.

Mr. BLAKE. Because he has got the Treasury, and here is his levy.

Mr. VAIL. He appears to be looking after his own county, and neglects the western counties.

For a railway from Yamaska to the River St. Francis in the Province of Quebec, ten miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The application for aid to this railway is made in the name of the South-Eastern Railway, which has projected a line from Montreal to Chaudière Curve, on the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk. The total distance is estimated at 130 miles. The first section of that road is covered by the Montreal and Sorel Railway, which is built for forty-five miles to Sorel, and the distance from there to Yamaska is served by the South Eastern. The portion now proposed to be subsidised leaves the South-Eastern at Yamaska, and will run to River St. Francis, a distance of ten miles. Mr. Massue desires to call the attention of the Government to the fact that this road when completed, will be a good feeder to the local railway, and will bring that line into direct connection with Montreal. A local subsidy has been granted to it of $4,000 per mile.

Mr. MILLS. Is it proposed to put a double track on the Intercolonial Railway to do all the work?

Mr. BLAKE. With so many feeders.

For a railway from Perth Centre Station on the New Brunswick Railway, to a point near Plaster Rock Island, in the Province of New Brunswick, twenty-eight miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $89,600.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is for a line to the magnificent plaster quarries near Plaster Rock Island. It is believed that a large business would be done in this district with the western part of the Dominion if transport facilities were available. The construction of this road will afford the necessary facilities. It is to follow down the south side of the St. John River.

Mr. BLAKE. I have been informed that it is quite correct that these plaster beds are important, and they are very much required, not merely for the west but also for the east.

For a railway from Fredericton to the village of Prince William, in the Province of New Brunswick, twenty-two miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $70,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road is intended to run from Fredericton to Woodstock, a distance of sixty-three miles, following the south side of the St. John River, the population of which district are cut off from railway communication by the St. John River, the New Brunswick Railway running down the north side of the river. This section of country is well settled and a large area is under cultivation, but the people are becoming discouraged, as, since the steamers have ceased to ply on the river, the means of getting their produce to market is cut off. It is proposed to subsidise the railway from Fredericton to Prince William. It has a local subsidy.

Mr. WELDON. When was the local subsidy granted?

Mr. TEMPLE. One of the directors told me it was granted in 1885—$3,000 a mile. This road is a most important one for that section of the country. It runs along the River St. John from Fredericton to Woodstock the whole distance of sixty-five miles, and that is one of the best and most thickly settled sections of the Province of New Brunswick. During the winter there is, of course, no communication whatever, and during the summer there is communication by the boats for about six weeks at this time of the year; and in some seasons, when there is a great deal of rain, they may run for two months. Otherwise the people are completely isolated. I hope this grant will pass, because the road is very much needed. It makes connection at both ends with the New Brunswick Railway, and is also a short line from Rivière du Loup to St. John. When this link is built from Rivière du Loup to Edmonton, it will form part and parcel of that line, and it passes through one of the best sections of the country.

Mr. WELDON. There are three railways from Woodstock to Fredericton and a river. My impression is the river will not be wanted at all.

Mr. TEMPLE. I think not. If we have this railway we will do away with the expense every year of laying out small amounts in clearing the river. The Government has been very kind for a long time in giving grants for clearing out the bars along the river in order that boats may run. This has to be done every year for the reason that the large amount of ice floating down the river rolls in the rocks continually and fills up the channel by forming a bar. The small amount granted for that purpose only merely serves to clear out the river every year, and is of little or no benefit whatever.

Mr. WELDON. Has any survey been made?

Mr. TEMPLE. About two-thirds of it has been surveyed.

Mr. WELDON. How far up?

Mr. TEMPLE. From Woodstock to Prince William.

Mr. MILLS. Is any part of that road reaching from Hong Kong and Liverpool?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes, it goes to Hong Kong.

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Newcastle to Douglastown, in the Province of New Brunswick, six miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 a mile, nor exceeding in the whole $19,200.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road is destined to leave the Intercolonial Railway about three miles north of Newcastle and run down to Douglastown where large sawmills are in operation. It will give great facilities for the fishing trade of the village of Chatham on the opposite side of the river. It is proposed there shall be an amendment in this way. It provides now for a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Newcastle to Douglastown. I would add the words "or via Douglastown to a point on the River Miramichi, opposite the town of Chatham, so as to have a ferry crossing to Chatham.

Mr. WELDON. Is it a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We do not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. This is one of those cases in which I think the honorable applicant is to be congratulated. My hon. friend from Northumberland applied for from four and a-half to five miles of subsidy, and he has got six miles. Many others have applied for large quantities and they have got less. But my hon. friend, so influential in his position, when he asks for four and a-half miles, the Government give him one third more, where this tail of one and a-half mile long is to be appended I do not know; but so it is. Still I must admit there are countervailing considerations. My friend's application was, besides his great influence, based upon valuable consideration. It is one of the most potential applications I ever read. It is contained in a letter to the First Minister in which is recounted a conversation my hon. friend had with that hon. gentleman during the previous Session of Parliament, I think, or some time before. The letter is dated 18th May last, and the hon. gentleman after pointing out that he had applied for this subsidy the previous Session said:

"I discussed the matter frequently with the Minister of Railways last Session, and had a personal interview with yourself upon that and on other subjects connected with the county. Notably that of the successor in the Senate to our late Senator, the Hon. William Muirhead. I need not recall the substance of that interview in detail, as doubtless you will recollect it, and while regretting that an appointment to that office should not be made from the county where the vacancy was, and finding you resolved to give it to another county, viz., Westmoreland, I stated to you that I would be satisfied provided the two short lines of railway which I had asked for were subsidised so as to enable the county to get substantial benefit in some way or other."

The First Minister should state the account between Northumberland and the Dominion Government. The Dominion Government debtor to the hon. member for Northumberland, for one Senator abstracted from Northumberland and removed to Westmoreland, so many thousand dollars. Creditor, per contra, by one railway subsidy. Account balanced; paid in full, Peter Mitchell. I congratulate my hon. friend upon the cogency of that application. Although his reasoning had effect with the First Minister, it did not prevail with the Minister of Railways, because the hon. member points out that he made several applications to the Minister of Railways but could get no reply, and he goes on to say:

"At an early stage in this Session I again addressed the Minister of Railways upon the subject, asking him to provide the bonus customary in such cases and referring to the correspondence on file in his office. I have had several interviews with the Minister on the subject but without any satisfactory result."

So that, having unfortunately not succeeded with the Minister of Railways, he renewed his first application to the First Minister, who understands—as I observe from certain transactions which have not unfrequently occurred notably the one appointing a Senator—how to make these arrangements in an admirable political manner. I understand he can swap off a senator for a branch of railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose the right hon. gentleman will excuse me if I take upon myself to make the explanations the hon. gentleman seems to desire. He wants to know why it is, when I ask for four and a half miles I was granted six. It was because I represented the fact that, although the company chartered for the purpose of building the line to Douglastown, only made their application to Douglastown, it is necessary to go on to navigable waters, a mile further off; and therefore I asked for the additional mile, because I knew they intended to carry that out and their application failed to represent that. As to the other part in which swapping off comes up, as my hon. friend says, I will say this, that I understood last year, from a casual conversation, that I would probably get this little bit of railway; but for some reason or other it was not given. Perhaps it was not convenient; perhaps it was because I got my share, but it was allowed to stand over. However, after having written that letter, I happened to pass the chair of my hon. friend and asked him if he had received it. He said he had not. I said I wrote about that little railway subsidy. He replied: Oh, Mitchell, you deserve it, Sir; you have earned it. I said I thought I had or I would scarcely venture to apply for it, and he has been as good as his word and given me the subsidy. I must say to the credit of the Government, that the head of the Government does not allow any feeling to exist on his part against an hon. gentleman who is independent enough to give him advice. I thank him very much for the little railway I got. As to the point about the senator, I think, if I recollect correctly the conclusion of the conversation, the right hon. gentleman, when he got at what I was at, laughed and said: "Oh, old boy, you want the substance instead of the shadow." "That is just what I am after; if you give me the railway, you may keep the senator."

Mr. BLAKE. Then we are to understand that the market value a county puts on a senator, varies from $18,000 to $19,200.

Mr. MITCHELL. Whatever it may be, I believe my county is better satisfied to have the little railways than to have a successor to the senator, though we ought to have the senator too.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh.

Mr. BLAKE. I really must sustain the First Minister. I think he has given the hon. gentleman a quittance in full on his own terms. He did try to get the senatorship, but he compromised and said he would take the subsidy. He has got the subsidy, with usury thereto, and he ought not to press for the senator too. Besides, the senator is still alive.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is unfortunate, or he would have it.

For a railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, in the Province of Ontario, twenty-two miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $70,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company have constructed their road from Kingston to Renfrew Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and have arranged to run over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Renfrew to Pembroke, thirty-five miles. It is considered very important in the interests of the trade of the district that a railway be built from Renfrew to Eganville on the Bonnechère River, a distance of twenty-two miles, and it is this section of road it is proposed to subsidise. The cost is estimated at $20,000 a mile. So important do the people of the district consider this road to them that they contemplate taxing themselves in aid of its construction.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has stated that it is from Renfrew that this is to go to Eganville, but I observe that the provision is entirely vague. It says "from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville." It may be from some other point than Renfrew. What is the reason for that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is to leave some discretion as to the best starting point, I fancy.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it with the object of bonus hunting from the various localities?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It may be. If you want to get bonuses you do not settle the line.

Mr. BLAKE. I know that, but if that is the object, I do not think it is a very good object, because I think, when we decide for ourselves that we will aid a public enterprise of this kind, we ought to decide what the best route is in the interests of the country, we ought to fix that route and then let the parties get the bonuses if they can. They need not build the railway if they do not, but this business of leaving a variety of different routes open involves sometimes a very heavy tax on the municipalities, who are called upon to compete with one another, though one has really the superiority. I think, if it is to go from Renfrew, we should say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there is no harm in leaving it as it is.

To the Belleville and North Hastings Railway Company, for seven miles of their railway from the village of Madoc to the junction with the Central Ontario Railway at Eldorado, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy (in addition to the subsidy of $1,500 per mile granted by 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59) not exceeding $1,700 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $11,900.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think I have a memorandum here about that.

Mr. BOWELL. This is a short line running from Madoc to connect with the Ontario Central at Eldorado, which is built and in operation for about forty miles north of Eldorado. Last year, a subsidy of $1,500 per mile was given, which was supposed at that time to be sufficient to complete the road, but it has since been ascertained that it would not, and the proposition now is to put that short line of seven miles in the same position as other roads, and give it $3,200 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Why was it the grant was kept down to $1,500 a mile last year?

Mr. BOWELL. I thought I told the committee why. I said it was supposed at that time that it would complete it, but, after a survey, it was found that it would not, because much of the trestle work and other portions of the work on the road had decayed and had to be replaced. That is the reason.

Mr. BLAKE. The road is built then?

Mr. BOWELL. It has been built partially, and had been run on, but it has been allowed to fall into disuse; but, since the completion of the Ontario Central, which touches Eldorado, a point seven miles from the northern terminus of the Belleville and North Hastings road at Madoc, it is in the interest of that whole section of country extending 100 miles northwards in the free grants in North Hastings, that these roads should be connected, so that, when coming to the county town, instead of going all the way round to Trenton, they can connect with the Belleville and North Hastings, and go straight to Madoc village, then to the city.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that. We passed the subsidy last year, which showed we thought it was a proper road to be aided. I was asking why we were asked to more than double the aid that was then thought to be adequate?

Mr. KIRK. With your permission, and the permission of the committee, I will ask the Minister of Justice, whom I see now in his seat, the question which I asked, a little while ago, of the First Minister, and he was not in a position to answer. It is in reference to a telegram which appeared in the Halifax Herald, the organ of the Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee is unwilling, I do not see how I can allow you to proceed, unless you move that the committee rise.

Mr. KIRK. I do not think I am out of order. We are discussing railway matters, and this is a railway matter. It is an important matter, and I think the Minister of Justice will be glad to have the opportunity of explaining it.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. I do not think it is before the committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Do it with the Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. BLAKE. He can bring it up when it is moved that the committee rise.

To the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, for sixteen miles of their railway from Tamworth towards Tweed, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59, a subsidy of $70,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is merely a change. It is a subsidy for sixteen miles from Tamworth to Bogart, and the newly proposed route is from Tamworth to Tweed.

Mr. BLAKE. It is the same amount, is it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The same amount.

Mr. BLAKE. And for the same mileage?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The same mileage.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). They intend to carry it to Bridgewater. It is constructed by the Grand Trunk, and they will take that road to Madoc, and then the road to Eldorado. They cannot get a good line from Bogart to Bridgewater, but by going to Tweed, where they have a station, they will get a good road to Bridgewater. It is only a change of about three miles.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the subsidy granted originally was at a greater rate than the usual rate. It seems to be something like $4,375 a mile.

Mr. BOWELL. The contract was originally from Tamworth to Bogart and to Bridgewater, but they found they could not well reach that point, and they asked the Government last year to allow them to apply the full amount of the subsidy from Tamworth to Bogart, and now they ask to change the line from Bogart to Tweed, where they will connect with the Ontario and Quebec road and the Ontario Central.

Mr. BLAKE. Will this sixteen miles carry it to the connection with the Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I think not. They will have to go about two miles further, and it will be about eighteen miles.

Mr. BLAKE. At what point will they strike the Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). At Tweed.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see why the grant is not made for the eighteen miles from Tamworth to Tweed, instead of making it for the sixteen miles from Tamworth towards Tweed.

Mr. BOWELL. The reason is that all that Mr. Rathbun, who is building the road, asked was that he should be permitted to expend the subsidy already granted to him to build the road from Tamworth to Bogart on a line from Tamworth to Tweed, in the same county.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will amend by making it for the eighteen miles to Tweed.

To the Albert Railway Company, for their railway from Salisbury to Hopewell, in the Province of New Brunswick, which is a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, in the form of a loan, repayable at such time and secured in such manner as the Governor in Council determines, a subsidy of $15,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road is about forty miles in length, and extends from the Intercolonial Railway station at Salisbury to Hopewell. It has been built for some years, and paid working expenses, but very heavy storms of unusual severity have so injured the works of construction that it is found impossible to keep it in the same condition—in fact they are unable to repair it, and unless assistance is given the road will be closed. It is very important to the district that the road should continue to be operated, and for that purpose a loan of $15,000 is proposed. It is an important feeder of the Intercolonial Railway, and its close would seriously disturb the business of that section of the country. The transport and freight will go over the Albert Railway to the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway will, of course, collect the freight and pay itself from time to time out of the freights, and recoup itself for this temporary loan which, I think, is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BLAKE. The Intercolonial Railway will not have anything to do with the recouping; it is a loan from the Treasury. If I rightly understand it, the Albert Railway is bonded up to the hilt. I think the bonds were issued upon the London market by one of those arrangements by which a certain sum is deposited to answer for the interest for a certain time, so that it does not require that the profits of the road should pay more than the working expenses for that time. It is said that about $600,000 is the nominal emission of bonds on this railway. It seems to me clear that under the present circumstances it does not pay working expenses, and it will very shortly have to pay interest on its bonds as well, as soon as the period for which interest is provided expires. It seems to me perfectly plain that this money will never come in again, and we might just as well propose in plain English to make a gift of it, as to propose that it shall be loaned in this way. The hon. gentleman has just hinted at a mode of security upon the freights of the company, but I can assure him that if the company has to part with its freights, the road cannot be kept open. We will never see a dollar of this money again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the committee rise and report.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the committee rises, I would like to make a suggestion. Some years ago a railway was chartered from Palmerston, and the charter gave the promoters power to construct the line to the Georgian Bay, either at Owen Sound or some other point. The company went on and constructed the road from Palmerston to the town of Durham. The road stands there. From there to the Georgian Bay is a distance of about thirty miles; the people have no railway facilities over a large tract of country between the town of Durham and the Georgian Bay. An agitation sprung up some time ago in order to extend the road from Durham to Meaford, in the east riding of Grey. Meaford is situated on the Georgian Bay. A line thus constructed would pass through a country rich in timber and agricultural resources. There is on the Beaver River an immense water power to be found at several points. If this road was constructed it would tend to develop that country and its resources of timber, agriculture and manufacture, and would be of incalculable benefit to the people in that section. The Dominion Government have never expended any money in the county of Grey, large as it is, for any purpose of this character. Some railways have been constructed there, but it was done out of the resources of the people, aided by the Ontario Government. The people, with that energy and enterprise, with that progressive spirit which characterises them, have, unaided by this Government, gone to work and built their own railway. The Dominion Government have looked into other lines that are probably well calculated to develop the places in which they are built, but they will not develop a richer section of country than the one I am now speaking of; and I did hope that when they introduced this policy—I do not approve of the policy of subsidising railways, but seeing that it is becoming an established policy I thought the Government would pay some attention to those localities and those lines calculated to do the most good. I did hope that they would have considered this line in their resolutions and have extended it so as to develop a country rich in natural resources, and one waiting this accommodation to become a source of great wealth to it. It would connect the interior of east Grey with the railway systems of the world; it would bring the people in communication with the markets, and enable them to get along much better. By an Act of this Parliament some years ago, local control was taken from the roads there, and freights have been probably increased as a result. The farmer gets a lower rate for his grain, by reason of the local control being taken away and the freights being left as they are now. I think this Government could do nothing better than to insert a resolution to give aid to this line at the same rate, $3,200 per mile, that they have been giving to other lines of a local character. This line would become of Dominion concern, it would aid several large villages that are springing up, and would do a vast amount of good. I hope the Government will consider these suggestions and will give to that line such aid as will enable the promoters to build it to the Georgian Bay. The Government must be aware that in the counties of Grey and Bruce the people have spent very largely of their means to build railways. They have helped themselves, and it should be the policy of this Government to help those who have helped themselves. For many years they were without railway accommodation, and they would have remained in that position so far as the Dominion Parliament is concerned if they had not gone to work and taxed themselves to obtain railway communication. If this road extended from Durham it might proceed to Priceville, Flesherton, Markdale and on to Meaford, developing important villages and a rich agricultural district that is very much in need of a railway. I make these suggestions in the hope that the Government may see their way clear to aiding this line which would become a very useful factor in developing the resources of the country and would do a vast amount of good. There is no money given by these resolutions which would be better spent than that would be spent, and I am surprised the Government did not come to the rescue of that line so that the railway might be carried from Durham to Georgian Bay. It would give the people water communication and access to market and would develop a rich country. I hope the Government will consider the suggestion so that something will yet be done to complete the construction of this important road.

Mr. KIRK. I wish to read to the House and to the Minister of Justice the following despatch which appears in the Halifax Evening Mail of 24th May. It is headed special despatch, and it is dated Ottawa, 23rd May, Sunday, by the way.

"Mr. Elwes, of the English representative of the syndicate formed under the Nova Scotia Government's railway scheme, together with others, had an interview with the Minister of Justice yesterday in relation to the aid which that scheme would require from the Dominion Government. It is understood that the delegates were given to understand that no terms would or could be discussed pending the result of the appeal shortly to be made to the people by the Provincial Government on its repeal of the union."

I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if this despatch is a correct report?

Mr. THOMPSON. The despatch is not quite accurate.

Mr. KIRK. I should like to know if the hon. gentleman gave Mr. Elwes to understand that any such policy had been adopted by this Government. I notice in an editorial in that paper, the Mail, it is said:

"The Dominion Government have decided to defer all consideration of the Local Government railway policy until the people of this Province has decided at the polls whether or not they desire a repeal of the union."

The hon. gentleman says the despatch is not quite correct. I have Mr. Elwes' authority for saying that the Minister of Justice gave him to understand no such thing and no news paper reporter in Ottawa or anyone else gave this information to him, because he did not understand the Minister of Justice to reply to him in any such way.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have already stated, in reply to the hon. member, that the telegram which he read is not strictly accurate. I will now add for his information that nobody in Ottawa or anywhere else got the information or telegram from me, and that I did not profess to state to Mr. Elwes anything about the policy of the Government on this subject.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a word in support of the view expressed by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin). I would have been very much pleased if the resolution would have contained a clause for the purpose of assisting the road from Durham to Georgian Bay. I have been through that section of country. I happen to be one of the promoters of the road from Palmerston to Durham, and the people will very much appreciate any assistance given for the purpose of securing to them the accommodation required. At Meaford on the Georgian Bay there is a connection with the Northern Railway, but all the passengers and freight going west have to travel an enormous distance to reach London or any point in the west, and a connection from Meaford running south connecting with the road at Durham would be a decided advantage. From Durham to Meaford there is a very excellent agricultural district which would undoubtedly contribute towards the construction of the branch. I have no doubt they would very much appreciate any assistance given towards the construction of the line. I fully endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for south Grey, and he deserves the thanks of his constituents and also those of east Grey for bringing the matter before the House. I hope the Government before the resolutions are finally passed will have sufficient influence brought to bear upon them to lead them to grant something towards the construction of this road.

Resolutions reported.

SECOND READING—IN COMMITTEE.

Bill (No. 143) to authorise the construction of a railway from the Straits of Canso as a public railway.—(Mr. Pope.)

RAILWAY FROM METAPEDIAC TO PASBEBIAC.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of the Bill (No. 144) respecting certain subsidies for a railway from Metapediac on the Intercolonial Railway to Pasbebiac.

Mr. BLAKE. I have made some enquiries in regard to the position of this railway, and the hon. gentleman brought down some papers on a former occasion which I have not had time to examine fully, but I have received from other sources some information which I think it is desirable to present to the House. If I am correctly informed, and I think I am, the financial scheme of the company is this: $30,000 is said to have been paid up on the stock. $620,000 is to be given under this Bill by the Canadian Government, and there is a land grant of 10,000 acres a mile given by the Province of Quebec, in respect of which negotiations are proceeding, it is said, and likely to reach a favorable conclusion for the commutation of the land grant by cash subsidies or a guarantee or the issue of the bonds at the rate of sixty-five to seventy-five cents per acre, seventy cents per acre would give $700,000, which are the supposed or expected proceeds of the land grant in cash. That makes a finance of $1,350,000 from public sources, or, leaving out the $30,000, a net amount of $1,320,000 for the 100 miles, and besides that there is the bonding power of the company, which I understand they expect to use to the extent of $600,000. Now my information is that the road runs through a very old settled country, a very easy country, with means of communication close along to it. The work is, upon the whole, extremely easy work, and the cutting very light. It is true the first twelve miles of the first twenty miles is somewhat more difficult than the rest, though still not very difficult. After that the work is extremely easy and it is on the whole very light. As I have said, it is on an old settled country with supplies, and men, and materials and means of communication. Everything in the conditions, as to labor and otherwise, is very admirable for the construction of a cheap railway. Now, the papers which the hon. gentleman brought down show what the composition of the company is. The company is composed of shareholders holding 6,000 shares. Of these there are a batch of Robitailles. There is Senator Robitaille 500 shares; ex-Senator Robitaille, his brother, 1,000 shares; Mr. L. A. Robitaille, another brother, formerly employed by the Government of Quebec, 980 shares; Mr. Riopel the member for Bonaventure, who, I think, is a brother-in-law of Mr. Robitaille, 1,000 shares; making in all 3,480 shares or seven-twelfths of the whole stock of the company in that connection. Then there is the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. McGreevy), who I think has been associated in some transactions with Mr. Robitaille, 1,000 shares; Mr. R. H. McGreevy, his brother, 500 shares, making 1,500 shares in that connection or one quarter of the stock. Then Mr. C. N. Armstrong, of Montreal, I believe a relative of the hon. Minister of Public Works, and who is a railway promoter, having had a connection with the Montreal and Sorel Railway and whose operations on the stock exchange have redounded so much to the credit of the country, has 550 shares; making in all for the Robitaille connection, the McGreevy connection and Mr. Armstrong, 5,530 shares out of the 6,000, or over eleven-twelfths of the stock of the company. Now, as appears by the papers, on the 7th of November, 1885, an agreement was made with the company by the Government, which is laid upon the Table, and in pursuance of which this legislation is asked, that the Government would hand over to the railway company which undertook to construct the first twenty miles the $300,000 which Parliament voted for its construction as a public work, and would allocate that as a subsidy on the twenty miles; that it would also grant the subsidy for the whole 100 miles, for the remaining eighty miles, doubling that subsidy of $3,200 up for the second twenty miles, and thus giving for the second twenty miles $6,400, the result being $15,000 a mile for the first, $6,400 a mile for the second and $3,200 a mile for the remaining eighty miles. Well, according to the information I have received, the company made an agreement according to the admirable arrangement which we have seen exemplified this evening in the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway—it made an arrangement for construction, which arrangement was made with one of its own shareholders, Mr. Armstrong—who, of course, shared in the benefits, and who has the contract for the construction. The contract was that this gentleman should build the road for $15,000 a mile cash and a certain interest in the bonds, with the understanding that he was to sublet the contract, and that the company was to receive certain shares of the profits to be made out of the business. This contract, which has been in existence for some time, contains certain specifications as to the character of the work. I have not seen the document, but, according to the information I have received, it does not indicate for the whole of that work—certainly not for that portion beyond the first twenty miles, as to which we have a contract between the Government and the company on the Table—certainly not as to the other eighty miles—it does not contain such specifications as are consistent with a first class work. I do not complain of that except in so far as the permanent structures are concerned, which I think should be made of a really permanent character, in the first instance. It is certain, according to my information, that the contract which has been made does not contemplate anything but a second class road, at any rate for eighty miles of the road. Now, the contractor and the shareholder, Mr. Armstrong, as I believe, since November, when he obtained this contract, in pursuance of the understanding on which he obtained it has been negotiating with several different sets of persons in advance of the sanction of Parliament to the scheme, and of the local authorities as to the commutation of the land grant for money or securities equivalent to money—has been negotiating for the subletting of the contract, and these negotiations were somewhat upon this basis: That a construction company should be formed, of which Mr. Armstrong himself was to be a partner or shareholder with one-third interest; that the construction company should agree to build the road for $14,000 per mile, and a certain proportion of the bonds. This $14,000 per mile leaves, of course, $1,000 per mile out of the $15,000 per mile, which is stipulated in the contract of Mr. Armstrong; or $100,000. Of that one-half is to be given to the company by Mr. Armstrong, on an understanding between him and the company; the other half is to go into the contractors' funds. This gives to the company $500 a mile, or $50,000. Then it was understood in the original contract, and in these proposed sub-contracts, that the contractors were to pay the company $600 per mile out of the cash contract money, or $60,000 more. Then it was proposed that the company should retain out of the moneys paid to the contractors, 3 per cent. on all payments. This is equal to $450 a mile or $45,000 more. Then the company were to receive at once a cash bonus from the contractors—because the same operation with which the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) has made us familiar, with regard to another enterprise, which appeared to have been initiated on a somewhat similar basis as this, is intended to take place; the contractor is to begin his operations by paying money to the company instead of receiving it from the company. A bonus of from $25,000 to $50,000 is to be paid by the contractors to the company, in part to recoup them for their expenses; because I believe they have made outlays particularly at times of political activity in the county of Bonaventure. These are said to have amounted to not more than $8,000 or $10,000, and the balance, I suppose, will go to profit and loss, particularly profit. You will observe that the cash receipts of the company would be about $13,200 a mile, and to make up $15,000, it will be necessary that $1,800 should be provided for. This is intended to be provided out of the bond issue of $6,000 a mile. This is the only charge intended to be created on the undertaking, and if it has any commercial merit at all, its earning power should be sufficient to make up the interest on that amount; so that you may assume that the bonds will be sold at par, which will leave $4,200 a mile to be divided between the contractors and the company, giving $2,100 a mile, or $210,000 more. These various sums—$50,000, $60,000, $45,000, $35,000 as the net bonus, allowing for those official expenses, and $210,000 as their share of the proceeds of the bonds, added together give a gross sum of $400,000 to be received as a profit by the shareholders. Out of this, of course, we have to take the cost of the rolling stock, which, on a small second-class railway like this, as the Minister of Railways observed with regard to a similar enterprise this afternoon, would cost probably from $1,200 to $1,500 a mile, because the bulk of the work will be done by the cars and stock of the longer line with which the road is connected. We will say $1,500 a mile. That will make $150,000 to come out of the $400,000, leaving $250,000 as profit for the company. This will go to the shareholders to whom I have referred, and the names of those holding eleven-twelfths of the stock I have given to the House. They will thus obtain the railway free of expense, subject to a charge of $6,000 a mile, with a profit of some $250,000 put into their own pockets; their only risk in the whole transaction having been the original payment, if it has been bond fide paid, of $30,000 of their stock. As I say, the road, according to the plan on which it is projected to be built, will be built for somewhere about $13,000 a mile, or $1,300,000, which, with $200,000 added for rolling stock will give say $1,500,000, but it is to cost, including the bonds, some $1,920,000, or $420,000 in excess of a liberal cost of the road. The real cost of the road is going to be provided for as you know entirely at the public expense, and a sum nearly approaching the whole bonding power goes to the shareholders of the company along with the rolling stock. Of course, it must not be considered that the shareholder who has such a modest proportion of this class of profits, Mr. Armstrong, is being dealt with so unfairly as would appear from this distribution of the spoils, when he has only that small amount of the shareholding interest; because if he is limited in the shareholding interest, he has large profits with the contractors, because the arrangement gives the contractors profits far in excess of the fair commercial profits of contractors, and these I think will be found more than fair to Mr. Armstrong—something like $100,000. That is the state of the facts, so far as known and as I have been able to ascertain it, on which we are asked to agree to a vote of over $300,000, for the construction of the first twenty miles as a public work, and on which we are to agree to give $320,000 for the remaining eighty miles. In order that the profits of these projectors should be realised at an early moment—for it is not proper that they should not be kept out of their money too long—it is arranged that they should get the $15,000 a mile besides the land grant of the Quebec Government for the first twenty miles, and $6,400 besides the land grant for the second. So we may hope that their patriotic exertions, their great expenditure of capital, their earnest desire to forward the interest of the locality affected, will receive not merely a handsome, but a very early reward. You find, then, that the public money is proposed in effect to be distributed amongst these three gentlemen, of whom one is a member of the Upper House, and two are members of this Chamber. That is the transaction we are asked to sanction.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got the figures he has given. All I know in regard to them is what I know by the vote of Parliament here, the vote of the Legislature of Quebec, and by the information given by the company to the Department, that the amount subscribed by the stockholders was $300,000, on which they had paid 10 per cent. Then the hon. gentleman says that according to the scheme before the House, to which the committee has assented, we are to give to the company another $300,000 for the building of the first twenty miles. That was what Parliament voted last Session, and we tried to obtain tenders for the building of those twenty miles, and were unable to obtain a tender from anyone who would build that portion of the line for less then $128,000 more than the vote made by Parliament. Therefore they were rejected, and the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company then applied to the Government, and offered to build those twenty miles for the $300,000, on condition that half the line which would cost $150,000 more than the vote of Parliament, would be worked by them, would belong to them, and that the $3,200 voted by Parliament for the old line from Metapediac to Paspebiac should be left to the company and paid for, according as the work would proceed, and that the $3,200 per mile of the first twenty miles would be given to the second twenty miles, in order to induce capitalists to build the line, taking it as one line from one end to the other. When the $300,000 were last voted by Parliament, the leader of the Opposition said it would be a great deal better at once to say that the $300,000 ought to be paid and should be granted to this railway. It would secure the 100 miles, and thus the money would be applied as evidently it must be the intention of the Parliament to apply it. We did not go that far. We tried to have the twenty miles built as Parliament wished the line to be built, but we could not do it, and we have made this arrangement provisionally subject to the vote of Parliament. Parliament is not voting, we are not asking a single cent more for the road than we had to pay before by the Act of Parliament. We are taking the same subsidies to secure, as far as we can, the building of the 100 miles for the same money that was voted for the first twenty miles, and which was considered by the company as insufficient, because although they have been incorporated several years they have been unable to proceed with the line. The hon. gentleman says there is a subsidy of 10,000 acres of land per mile to that company, and he goes on to say that land is worth 70 cents an acre, which makes a subsidy of $700,000, and he counts that as a portion of the assets of the company. Of course, he says, that is as good as if it were cash down. Reasoning in that way, he adds that to the subsidy voted by Parliament and he goes further. He takes the $600,000 worth of bonds and counts that as cash also. These things put together make $1,950,000. He divides that by the 100 miles, and says there is a great deal more money voted than the company would require to build the road. In that way the hon. gentleman would build all the roads of the country. How is it that companies have so great difficulties in building railways? How is it that so many of the subsidies granted for the last four years to railways have lapsed? Is it because they are not sufficient? How is it that though lands are granted by the Local Government to certain railways, these grants with the moneys voted here are found insufficient? In this case the $300,000 for the twenty miles may succeed in securing the 100 miles, and I really believe it will. The hon. gentleman took the trouble to state to the House that one of the shareholders of the company was a distant relative of mine. What has that to do with the company? What business has Parliament to know that Mr. Armstrong is a distant relative of mine? I do not think that is worthy of the leader of the Opposition. It is unworthy of his high position. It is one of those small things we should not expect from a man in his high position and high intellect and the confidence he has of his party. No doubt it must have escaped him at the moment. For my part, he will never hear me reproaching him with a thing of that kind.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not believe I will.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I never act that way. I have always treated the hon. gentleman with the greatest courtesy; although he and some of his friends may insult me across the House, they will never have insults of the same kind from me. I will treat them always with courtesy, and I expect to be treated with courtesy by them.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 1551) respecting the granting of Dominion lands to the railway companies mentioned, in Manitoba and the North-West Territories.—(Mr. White, Cardwell.)

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1, Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where will this land be located?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). North of the point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it intended to give this in townships?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No; we have the power to do it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentlemen has considered that question.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The land grant to this Manitoba and North-Western is given in alternate sections. If they have to take it further west, we can arrange for them to take it in townships as a matter of negotiation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an entirely new grant, and therefore it is quite optional to give it in whatever way the Government may please.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes. I may say that I have no hesitation in expressing my own preference for the township grant, and I would be very glad to see that plan adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. This is, as I understand, for a branch of this railway?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This is a branch.

Mr. BLAKE. Has there been any statement at all of the finance of the railway?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think this is one of the railways in relation to which there can be no doubt.

Mr. BLAKE. I know what it has done, but I speak of the financial basis on which it proposes to build the branch.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I understand that they hope to obtain from the Manitoba Government the same guarantee of their land grant that they obtained on the other. The interest in this part of the country is very large, and they hope the Manitoba Government will give them the same guarantee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Manitoba Government is going to guarantee four millions and a-half to the Hudson Bay Railway, I do not think they will be in a position to make many grants to other roads.

On resolution 2, North-West Central Railway Company.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is this the Beaty railway?

Mr. BLAKE. This is the same old railway. I suppose this is intended to be in substitution for the grants formerly authorised?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No. The hon. gentleman will remember that the free grant was given by Order in Council after Parliament rose last year, subject to confirmation by Parliament. This is practically a confirmation of that grant. The Order in Council I laid upon the Table last night as well as the other papers. The hon. gentleman will also remember that, by the legislation of this Session extending the time for the company to commence operations, there was a clause inserted by which they are required to give to the Governor in Council substantial evidence of their ability to go on with fifty miles this year, before the 1st June, upon doing which a proclamation is to issue bringing the Act into force. The Act is of no effect unless that proclamation issues. I think everyone who takes an interest in the North-West at all, at any rate both sides of the House, have admitted the value of this particular line of railway and the importance of its construction, and have acquiesced generally in the wisdom of making a land grant to it. The only question is as to the construction of the railway, and I may say that the decision is that the company are required to make a substantial deposit in cash, subject to forfeiture if the road does not go on, or to be paid out to them pro rata as the road goes on; but they are to make that deposit in cash before the proclamation will issue. We take the power, in the event of their not going on with the railway, for the Governor in Council to make other arrangements for the construction of that railway, and that is why in this resolution we take power to give the land to another company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What amount is required to be deposited?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). $50,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is hardly a substantial deposit.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is for the fifty miles of railway they are to build this year. It is pretty substantial for forfeiture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt that, where 2,700,000 acres of land are to be given as a free grant.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). But not one acre of this land is to be given until fifty miles of railway are built. Therefore we have the deposit of the land in our own hands and the $50,000 as a guarantee of the construction of the first fifty miles of the railway, which takes it into a part of the country where the immediate demand has been made for the railway, and makes a basis for the construction of the railway onward, as, after that time, they will have the land grant and fifty miles of completed railway to finance upon.

Mr. BLAKE. The papers the hon. gentleman brought down last night do not contain any further papers with reference to the North-West Central Railway since, I think, the papers of last Session. They contain, it is true, the Orders in Council of a later date, but I speak of papers coming from the railway company itself. I presume there has been some correspondence and some action by the Government, after what the hon. gentleman has said on the subject of the authority with which it was clothed, as far as it could be by a Bill, with authority, or the duty imposed upon it. As he says the company have been required to make a substantial deposit. I suppose that communication was in writing?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Oh, certainly.

Mr. BLAKE. It is a pity that we have not got it here. I also observe by the public papers a statement that a contract for the construction of the railway by New York contractors, it was said, I think, had been received some days ago and submitted to the Government. Is that the case?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There was a contract laid on the Table of the Railway Committee

Mr. BLAKE. No other contract?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No other. That contract has been again submitted to the Government, but it has not been considered sufficient, and a note has been sent to the president of the company to say that he must make that deposit or the proclamation will not issue.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have heard certain rumors that financial arrangements had been made and the money forthcoming and all that kind of thing. Has the Government received any information to that effect?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We have had assurances to that effect, but we perferred a substantial deposit of money in the bank of Montreal as an assurance that these financial arrangements had been made.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes. There is too much assurance about this. The hon. gentleman will observe that the scheme he proposed and the House has sanctioned by passing the Bill was one that should ensure the possibility at any rate of some company constructing the road if this one failed, as I think, after the developments which have taken place, it is very likely to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. And ought to do.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with the hon. member for Northumberland—and ought to do. If so, it is important that the Government should clothe itself with the necessary authority, and to that end it has taken no steps. I do not know of any general statutory authority by which the Government can create a company authorised to construct this road. For that, legislation would be necessary, and I have been expecting from day to day to see the Government introduce a Bill to clothe itself with the authority necessary to carry out the plan, unless indeed the hon. gentleman places so much confidence in those assurances to which he refers that he thought it was unnecessary and that it was quite sure that he would issue the proclamation.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is a means by which that country can be supplied with railway facilities under an existing charter granted by the Manitoba Legislature last year for a southern branch of the Manitoba and North-Western. That could be done. I do not by any means intend to say it will be done, but it could be done. I think the general statement made in relation to this when the Private Bill was passed extending this charter would authorise us, under letters patent, to empower a company to go on and construct this railway with the grant of this land.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the hon. gentleman's colleague who sits behind him will confirm that statement of the Minister. I think he will find that it is not competent for him under a general statement made in the progress of a Private Bill, to create a company by letters patent with the necessary powers for constructing and operating a railway. I think, if he asks a little advice before he speaks, or, not having asked that advice, takes the next best course and obtains it after he has spoken, he will find that legislation is necessary. Of course, this company can build it, and of course there is another company that could built it, the Canadian Pacific, but what is necessary is that the Government should be clothed with full power to see that the work is done, and if we trust to the possibilities of the Canadian Pacific Railway doing it, and the possibilities of this other company he refers to doing it as a branch, the Government is fettered. There is not the same security which certainly the Railway Committee, and I think the House, understood would exist for the Government implementing that very obligation which it made. I think the Manitoba Legislature passed a vote of thanks to the Government, with the assurance that they would see that this road is put through, if not by this company, in which they did not appear to have much confidence, then by another. I do not think the Government will put itself in the position to implement that pledge by the means to which the hon. gentleman has referred, unless they take power to incorporate a company.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman will see that in this amendment we take power in this resolution to grant to this particular company, or to such other company as may be incorporated, land for the construction of a railway through that country. Perhaps I ought not to express a legal opinion on the point, but after the suggestion made to me, I think we shall probably be able to take the power before the House rises yet.

Mr. BLAKE. When are we going to rise ?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope on Monday. We can get through with a good deal in a day, with the consent of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad the Government are to give a grant to this railway in the North-West, and I regret that the step was not taken years ago. I believe if it had been, the settlers, who have been suffering for the want of railway, would have had one before this. Now, I hope there will be no mistake this year, and if it is necessary for the Government to take power before the House rises, to grant this good company these lands, I hope they will do so, so that the people may not suffer another year for the want of a railway. I will read a telegram sent by the Minister of Public Works to the Manitoba Legislature, in reply to telegrams that were sent to him as chairman of the Railway Committee :

"Telegram received and read to Railway Committee. Charter revived but not to be in force except on proclamation to Governor General to be issued before 1st June next, if company shows to Governor in Council its ability and means to build road, fifty miles to be built before the end of present year Failing this by 1st June Governor in Council will issue letters patent and incorporate good company to build road."

Now the people up there appear to feel very grateful to the Minister of Public Works for the trouble he has taken to inform them as to the intentions of the Government, and they feel satisfied, on the strength of this telegram, that a good company will be formed to build this road in case the present one fails. I hope the Government will take such powers as are necessary to enable this good company to build the road. I have no doubt that the Local Legislature will do all in their power to grant such assistance as they can to the Manitoba and North-Western to have this road built. I am glad to believe that there is no person in this House who objects to the construction of this road, or to the land grant. I think, however, the $50,000 deposit is too small. If they are going to construct fifty miles of road, as they expect to this year, of course they will be entitled to receive that back. From what has been stated by a gentleman who was a director of that company, it would seem that the company expect to make out of this road something in the neighborhood of $670,000. Now, if they are going to speculate on this charter, I think that $50,000 is too small a deposit, and I think the company ought to satisfy the Government that it will construct this road or give a larger deposit. I would ask the Minister of Interior if this company has given the Government any assurance that they are in a position to go on with the construction of the 50 miles. I have seen in the press that they had secured some $800,000 at present, and were prepared to go on with the work at once. As the season is short it is very important that this matter should be put on a solid basis.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I would like to amend that clause so that instead of saying "to such company as may be incorporated," it shall read "to such other company as may undertake the construction of said railway," as at present it would prevent us from negotiating with any existing company for the construction of a railway in the event of the present company failing to make that deposit and going on with the work. In answer to the hon. gentleman I may say that we are assured that the present company are prepared to go on, but we want them to supplement that assurance by a substantial deposit, and we think that $50,000 is a substantial deposit.

Mr. WATSON. Even if the company who have this charter put up this deposit, there is no time specified for doing the work. The fifty miles has to be completed by the 1st December, and if the Government have not the assurance that this road will be completed this year, even with that deposit, I think they should take power to themselves to have this good company organised. I do not care who builds the road as long as it is built, but I want to see the Government take such means as will secure the building of the road beyond doubt, so that the people of the North-West may have railway facilities as soon as possible.

On resolution 3, Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company,

Mr. BLAKE. With respect to this, as in reference to the others, I would invite the hon. gentleman, when he brings the Bill in which will be based on these resolutions, to make some provision as to the conditions to be inserted in the grants to these companies. He will observe that this grant, and still more the grant we have just dealt with, is for a very long line of railway, and these roads lock up the land for a very long time unless provision is made for tolerably early construction. I quite agree that construction must be progressive, and that it is important that very strict conditions for regular and very fairly rapid progress should be inserted.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman will see that in the charter the time within which the road must be commenced and built is fixed. That is within the power of Parliament to extend or adhere to as may be determined. In this particular case the Order in Council granting aid to this line fixes the time for the completion of the first section, that is between the point of commencement on the Canadian Pacific Railway and Fort Qu'Appelle, at six months from the time fixed in the charter for commencing the railway; that gives time to organise the company, and afterwards fifty miles are to be built each year.

Resolutions reported.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. McLELAN presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1887; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 28th May, 1886.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:40 a. m. (Saturday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 29th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MISSISSAGUA BAND OF INDIANS.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) asked, 1. Whether the Government have had under consideration the question, what members of the Mississagua band of Indians are entitled to participate in the amount of $68,000, or thereabouts, that was placed to the credit of the said band about the year 1884? 2. If so, have the Government decided to pay the said sum, or the interest thereon, to those who were the legal members of the band in the year 1828, and their descendants only, or to all those who are now members of the said band?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a subject of a good deal of difficulty and it is now under consideration. I hope a solution will soon be found.

REV. M. LABELLE'S REPORT.

Mr. DESJARDINS (for Mr. TASSÉ) asked, Whether the Government have received a report from Rev. M. Labelle, entrusted with a mission to France in the interest of emigration? If so, is it their intention to lay the same before Parliament?

Mr. CARLING. A report has been received from Rev. Mr. Labelle respecting his mission to France. It is the intention to publish said report as an appendix to the report of the Department of Agriculture. It would have been inserted in said report and laid before Parliament this Session, but it was not received until the commencement of the current month.

SENATE REPRESENTATION OF FRENCH CANADIANS IN ONTARIO.

Mr. DESJARDINS (for Mr. TASSÉ) asked, Whether the Government have considered the fact that each Senator for Ontario represents, on an average, 80,000 souls, according to the last Census, and that there were then over 100,000 French Canadians in that Province? If so, is it their intention to grant a representative in the Senate to the French minority in Ontario?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government are fully aware of the numbers and importance of the French Canadians in the Province of Ontario. Of course they cannot, without breach of their oaths of office, state what advice they are going to render to the Governor on this subject.

GOVERNMENT LEGAL AGENT AT HALIFAX.

Mr. MILLS asked, Whether the First Minister has received from the Conservative members of the bar at Halifax, through Mr. Daly, a protest against the appointment of Mr. Wallace Graham, as legal agent of the Government at Halifax, on the ground that he was the partner of C. H. Tupper, M.P. for Pictou, and a participator in the profits, and suggesting that the Premier had not been well advised in making the appointment, &c., or any remonstrance to like effect?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sometime ago I received a letter against the appointment of Mr. Graham, and recommending the appointment of another professional man as the agent of the Government, but not on the ground stated in this question.

THE TEMPERANCE COLONISATION COMPANY.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the House proceeds to the Orders of the Day, I would like to ask the Government if they expect to be able to indicate what course they propose to adopt in regard to the colonisation companies. Last Session, and again this Session, it was intimated by the Minister of the Interior that the Government would deal with the colonisation companies which had failed to carry out the terms of their agreements with the Government. My particular reason for calling the attention of the Government to the matter at the present time is that I have had placed in my hands a copy of a petition, which I believe has been sent to the Minister of the Interior, on behalf of the Temperance Colonisation Company. It states that this company is in a most unfortunate position; in fact, it appears to be financially embarrassed, and all the circumstances indicate the necessity of relief being given to it. I would just trouble the House by reading one letter from a gentleman concerned in the company, which letter indicates very fairly, I am told, the position of many others interested in the company. It is from a Methodist minister to a brother Methodist minister, and, as the House is aware, a great many Methodist ministers are interested in this company. Without giving the name of the writer or the person to whom the letter is addressed, I will read it:

"MY DEAR BROTHER,—With the darkest cloud of trouble that ever enshrouded my person, I write you. I am one of those unfortunate ones that hold scrip in the Temperance Colonisation Company. I was served with a sheriff's writ, and yesterday I was visited by the deputy sheriff to make a seizure of all my effects, but he did not seize. I am not able to pay; it is impossible to pay down $632. Then the prospect of being called upon to pay more, and then lose all, is bad enough. I write you to see what is going on in Toronto about the matter. Are any in Toronto being sued? Is there any hope of getting a settlement of the case? I am just crushed; the idea of having a sheriff around is killing to me."

I have——

Mr. SPEAKER. I thought the hon. gentleman was simply going to ask a question. He must not proceed in a matter that may lead to debate.

Mr. MULOCK. I have indicated what I desire to know: whether the Government propose to do anything with the view of relieving from their obligations to the Crown those companies which are unable to carry out their obligations.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I stated on a former occasion that the companies have made application to the Government for a modification of their arrangement by the Government taking land instead of the money they have already paid in, at the rate of $2 an acre. That plan is being carried out as far as the information before the Department enables it to be done. As to the case of the Temperance Colonisation Company, to which the hon. gentleman refers, I think the difficulty between the company and their scrip holders is a matter of entirely internal arrangement, and the Government can, of course, have no influence in relation to that. But the proposal of the Government is to wind up those companies which we can wind up, by lessening the area proposed to be colonised, on the basis of taking lands in place of the money they have already paid in.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I beg to call the attention of the House to a statement which I find in Hansard, made in a speech of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) on the 27th of May, when I was not present. One or two of the charges made by that hon. gentleman against myself personally are of such a nature that if I did not now take advantage of the opportunity to contradict them, it might appear as if I admitted their correctness. When the hon. gentleman came to refer to my transactions, the hon. gentleman spoke as follows:—

"I find that the Minister of Inland Revenue is a lessee, from this Administration of which he is now a member, of 59,000 acres of grazing lands on Mountain Creek, in the North-West Territories, at 1 cent an acre, on which he never put one head of cattle, but which he got for purely speculative purposes, and holds for purely speculative purposes. I find that on the 16th of February, 1882, before he was a Minister, but while he was a member of Parliament, he applied for the north half of section 14, township 6, range 16, 320 acres of coal lands. I find that his son was a stock-holder in the St. Catharines Milling Company, whose law costs this Government is paying to the extent of $11,000, in order to deprive the Province of Ontario of its rights. I find that this company obtained a license from this Government to cut timber on 3,200 acres of land in the disputed territory. I find that H. A. Costigan, described as of Ingersoll, on the 10th of November, 1882, applied for fifty square miles of timber limits. I find that this same H. A. Costigan, described as of Winnipeg, on the 14th of October, 1883, applied for another fifty square miles of timber limits. I find that an H. Costigan, described as of Ottawa, on the 23rd of September, 1882, applied for another fifty square miles, and on the same day he applied for still another fifty square miles. I find that John Costigan, the Minister of Inland Revenue, himself, on the 3rd of April, 1882, applied for fifty square miles."

With regard to these applications for timber limits, a great deal has been said during the past two or three years. I felt bound, two years ago, to offer an explanation and a contradiction of certain charges made against me in connection with these matters, which I thought were satisfactory at the time. But there are points raised here which were not raised at that time. With regard to the applications made by H. A. Costigan, I have not one single word to say. I have a son of that name, and if he chooses to make application, to this or any other Government for timber lands, coal lands, or any other lands, and is willing to pay the regular price, I do not think I am called on to defend his action. I am free to admit that if my son made application while I was a member of Parliament or of the Government, and if through my influence he obtained special favors, or if his applications obtained consideration that the applications of others did not receive, I would be open to a very serious charge. With regard to the principal charge, that I am the lessee of 59,000 acres of grazing lands on Mountain Creek, all I can say is that I never applied for any grazing lands and never held any grazing lands, either for grazing or speculative purposes, and I do not hold any to-day. I am aware that my son was interested with a man from St. John named Hays, and some others, in a lease in that section of the country. They paid their semi-annual rent; they made three or four payments in cash; but they were unable to raise the means to stock it. The Government passed an Order providing that if parties holding leases failed to put on stock, though they might have paid the rent, their leases should be cancelled; and I was present when this lease was cancelled, and I never opened my mouth to say it should not be cancelled, just because I knew my son was interested in it with those gentlemen; and the lease was cancelled a year ago, although they had made four payments on it. So that neither my son, nor any one belonging to me, holds any interest to-day in these grazing lands; and so far as I am personally concerned, I never was an applicant, and never had any stock or share or interest in them, good, bad or indifferent. More than that, I never took out of the North-West, although I was there three or four times, through speculation, my travelling expenses in going there. The only operation I had in the North-West was in getting out some ties with a man named W. J. Short, one small operation of $700 or $800. My name was afterwards coupled with that of a man named R. J. Short, by mistake, who was doing a large business in supplying ties to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. My name was mixed up with his, and I was said to have applied with him as a partner for numerous timber limits, all of which is wrong. I never had any transactions with R. J. Short, and never was interested in his contracts or operations. The only transaction I had was with W. J. Short, a brother of his, who went west, and then we applied for a permit to cut railway ties in the district of the Lake of the Woods. And under the conditions the Government laid down we had to pay twenty per cent. in advance. We paid the twenty per cent.; we never cut a tie or got a dollar back.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say that I was not here the other evening when the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) reiterated the charges which I denied the other day. I waited till yesterday evening. I had not an opportunity yesterday of answering them, because it was late in the evening before the Hansard was published, but I see in the Hansard which is on my desk to-day, a statement of this kind:

"Now, on the 4th of May, when the question of the disposal of timber limits by the Government and the parcelling out of the resources of the country was being discussed, the hon. member for South Lanark made use of this language:

"'He (that is, the member for South Huron) made a charge against me, and I have been waiting a long time, for an opportunity to meet that hon. gentleman and see if he would dare repeat it in the House, or hear what his reason was for making the charge, that I might give it a flat contradiction. He stated in reference to me:

"'John Haggart, the Tory member for South Lanark, has managed to capture out of the "loot" 320 acres of coal lands, a timber limit on the Shell River, at $5 a square mile, an interest with Peter McLaren, of Rivers and Streams Bill notoriety, and in other portions of the public property, and is believed to have had an interest in more than one of the contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Those who know John Haggart best say that there are many and peculiar reasons why he must stand firm by the Government.'

"And then he went on to say:

"'I simply state that is a cowardly, lying statement.'"

Mr. CASEY. Order.

Mr. HAGGART. I am reading from Hansard what the hon. member for West Huron stated:

"'I simply state that is a cowardly, lying statement, framed out of the whole cloth, by a party who had not a particle of evidence to justify him in making the statement.'"

That statement that I made at that time I repeat to-day. I read this charge made against me:

"John Haggart, the Tory member for South Lanark, has managed to capture out of the 'loot' 320 acres of coal lands."

I say that that statement is untrue. I never had an acre of coal lands or an acre of any kind in the North-West. I was not directly or indirectly interested in it.

"A timber limit on the Shell River at $5 a square mile."

I never denied that. I never stated anything to the contrary in this House. The papers were brought down in 1882. I was an applicant in 1879 for limits on the Shell River. I complied with the conditions that were required by the Government. I built a mill at Brandon, or was one of those interested in building a mill, and I built another mill at the mouth of Shell River. We applied; we got an Order in Council upon the usual conditions to give us the limits. The limits were never granted, unfortunately, on account of some difference between the parties interested, which is at present in litigation in Winnipeg. What I particularly denied was this:

"And is believed to have had an interest in more than one of the contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway."

That is a statement which, under the Independence of Parliament Act, if true, voided my seat in this House. I stated that that was a cowardly, lying statement, framed out of the whole cloth, and I repeat it at the present moment before every member here. There is not a particle of truth in the statement. I should have not only voided my seat in this House under the Independence of Parliament Act, but I should have been guilty of perjury.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask for your ruling on the hon. gentleman's statement, that a statement by any hon. member is a cowardly, lying statement.

Mr. HAGGART. I state that the statement made——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I understand that the hon. member is referring to a speech made out of this House.

Mr. HAGGART. Out of this House, at Wingham.

Mr. CASEY. The same statement was repeated in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, it was not. It is only a reading from Hansard.

Mr. HAGGART. I am referring to a speech made by a person of the name of Cameron at a place called Wingham, in the Province of Ontario. I state that this is a cowardly, lying statement. I heard the statement before. It not only accuses me of something which would void my seat in the House under the Independence of Parliament Act, but it accuses me of committing perjury. On the first opportunity I had, after hearing the statement or the charge against me, I came down. When the Royal Commission was sitting here, I took the opportunity of going before it, and made the statement upon oath that I was in no way connected with it. It is a statement which accuses me of perjury, of something which would void my seat under the Independence of Parliament Act, and I say that a member of Parliament who, without a tittle of evidence to support it, makes the statement, is a coward and a liar, and I cannot use any stronger terms.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CASEY. I call for your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is unnecessary to use such strong language.

Mr. CASEY. The member who has the floor stated that a member of Parliament who could use language which is known to have been used by this member of Parliament, which he states he used, is a coward and a liar. A great part of that language was used on the floor of this House, that in reference to the coal lands and the timber limits, and must be included in the statement. It is insufficient to say that such strong language is unnecessary. I ask you to rule that it is out of order, and I ask you to rule that it must be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER. I say that to apply such language to any speech in Parliament is unparliamentary and out of order, and I say that, even referring to a speech made outside, the language is too strong.

Mr. HAGGART. I withdraw the statement. I refer to the statement made by a person outside of Parliament at Wingham, and I repeat that it is a cowardly, lying statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. HAGGART. In reference, not to a member of Parliament, but to a speech made by a person named Cameron at a place called Wingham.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On behalf of my absent friend, Mr. Cameron, I call the attention of the House to this. He repeated the statement in his place. It was not his fault if the hon. gentleman was not here to contradict him. He gave every opportunity.

Mr. HAGGART. I made a denial after the hon. gentleman had made the statement, but he left his place in the House, and was not here to meet the denial. He did not give notice to me that he was going to reiterate the statement last night.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. Minister—no, the hon. the Minister of Railways—I hope he will be right hon. some day or other, as he deserves it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He understands you.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I understand him. I have great respect for him—a good deal of him.

An hon. MEMBER. How you love him!

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I have about as much love for him as I have for anybody in the House. I would like to ask him whether he could lay upon the Table of the House to-day a return asked for by me and ordered by Parliament, in relation to some claims on section 16 of the Intercolonial Railway, because I would like to use them when the Estimates come up.

Mr. POPE. I cannot lay them on the Table to-day, but I will early on Monday.

Mr. SMALL. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to say that I have received a letter from the reviser's clerk of East Toronto, denying the statement made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) the other night, in reference to the Franchise Act. He says:

"I see by the Globe's parliamentary report that Mr. Edgar credits me with a statement regarding a proposed amendment to the Franchise Act. I never made the statement, and the whole thing is utterly without foundation as far as I am concerned."

And he adds:

"It is only some of Edgar's Montreal gas escaping."

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is all right now because Mr. Edgar is away also.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 143) to authorise the construction of a railway from the Straits of Canso as a public work.—(Mr. Pope.)

Bill (No. 144) respecting certain subsidies for a railway from Metapediac, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Paspebiac. (On a division.)

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. POPE moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on resolutions respecting the granting of subsidies to railways, be read the second time.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to authorise certain subsidies and grants for and in regard to the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned. He said: I would like to say that while I was absent last night—not being able to be out very much in the evening —my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), and my hon. friend from Prescott (Mr. Shanly), stated that a certain road in Nova Scotia was of very great importance in that section of the country. I regret, Sir, that I had not been informed of it earlier, so that this road could have been placed on the list of those subsidised by this Bill. I will say, however, that the Government will be prepared to come down with a measure of relief for this road next Session.

Mr. VAIL. The Minister of Finance was absent when a certain resolution was under discussion granting a subsidy to the road from Upper Stewiacke to Musquodoboit I asked the question where this railway commenced, in what county, and nobody was able to answer me. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will tell us to-day, what some know already, whether this second railway subsidised in Nova Scotia is also in Colchester county. Of the other running from Truro to Newport, a considerable portion of it is in Colchester county. The hon. member for Hants (Mr. Allison) said eleven miles of it were in that county, but I say that the road cannot pass through that county to Newport without passing a distance of twenty miles in it. Three-fourths of this other road is also in Colchester county. I I mention this so that the people may understand what portion of the public funds is being taken to subsidise roads when there is no probability of their being built for the next two or three years. It looks at present almost as if these grants were made to influence the local elections in Nova Scotia. I would not like to say so but I am rather inclined to think that is the reason.

Mr. SHANLY. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways if he referred just now to the Western or to the Nictaux and Atlantic.

Mr. VAIL. I did not understand the Minister to say it was for both roads.

Mr. POPE. I said that my hon. friends from Grenville and Durham had expressed a strong hope that the Government would look into this matter. I had heard from other quarters that this was a very important road; and after hearing all that had been said, I felt that perhaps we ought to have included this road in the Subsidy Act. I said that next Session we would come down with a measure of relief for this road.

Mr. PAINT. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) has stated that the distance which this road from Truro to Newport will pass through the county of Colchester, is about twenty miles. I have frequently driven over the line where this road is going to be constructed, and only eleven or twelve miles of it is in the county of Colchester.

Mr. McLELAN. I wish to say that the hon. member for Digby is entirely wrong. This road has been promoted in the interests of the county of Hants, and about ten or eleven miles of it necessarily passes through the county of Colchester.

Mr. VAIL. Can they bridge the river there?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes. I do not know a better section of country than that eleven miles over which this road will pass in my county. The hon. gentleman has no reason to say that these subsidies have been granted to two roads in Nova Scotia for the purpose of influencing the elections. The grants have been given bonâ fide all through, and in almost all cases they will benefit the country at large.

Mr. POPE.

Mr. BLAKE. With regard to the statement of the Minister of Railways as to the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway, I am very glad to hear that he has considered the representations made, and that next Session, at all events, that road will be given a measure of relief. As to the Western Counties Railway, I did not refer to it because I did not want to say a word that was unnecessary, for I understood hon. gentlemen opposite, when the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) brought up the case of that road, to point to the fact that it would be embraced in the scheme of the Local Government of Nova Scotia; that there was no intention on the part of the Government to depart from the general policy and arrangements which were indicated by previous legislation in connection with the completion of that portion of the scheme, and it was suggested that the present arrangements would be adequate. I understood the Finance Minister to say that it was the expectation that those arrangements would be adequate to complete the missing link, and therefore no further measure would be brought down this Session. That is what I understood. The Government, I understood, were of the opinion that the arrangements would be adequate to accomplish that result. I certainly would say, if the arrangements were not adequate, that this was also a case which merited the attention of the Government. I did not think it worth while to say so, because hon. gentlemen opposite appeared to think that the arrangements made would accomplish the object.

Mr. KAULBACH. I had the honor to address this House some few days ago commending the Government for having come to the rescue of the deserving and long suffering people of Cape Breton in granting a railway over their island, and I expressed the hope that the claim for like privileges in the western part of Nova Scotia would not be overlooked. Notably is this the case with the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway. That road is one most deserving of public support. It is one opening up a beautiful country, a country that is unsurpassed for its fertility, its agricultural resources, its mineral wealth, its abundance of timber. It is a road upon which nearly half a million dollars have been expended. The ties are piled up on the sides of the road, trestle work for bridges and other material are lying unused, and if this state of things is allowed to continue another year it will involve serious loss to the contractors and the parties interested. I feel greatly disappointed at hearing this afternoon the announcement by our respected friend the Minister of Railways that this matter must lay over for another year. It will be a serious disappointment, not only to myself as the representative of the county of Lunenburg, but I feel that it will also be a serious loss to those interested in the road and a disappointment to the four counties, namely, Lunenburg, Annapolis, Queen's and King's, they having looked forward with gladness and hope to a subsidy being granted by Parliament to this road as well as to other roads in the Province. When interviewing members of the Government last week, I was informed that they were impressed with the idea that the newly formed company or syndicate, which is recognised as a mere bubble, which has no foundation, as I believe, which is managed by a person by the name of C. A. Scott, and which is known as The Joint Stock Association, is simply intended to retain the Local Government in power. It is a sort of mushroom company, which has only sprung up within a few days, and no one knows anything about it. This company's arrangement is, it is said, to take over the Western Counties Railway, but there is nothing definite about the Nictaux and Atlantic. It merely says they may acquire the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway and build lines from Yarmouth and Shelburne and Windsor and Truro. That statement is inserted simply to have a certain effect. If that proposition were to be carried out as contemplated, what would be the result? It would mean for Nova Scotia nothing more nor less than to take all its roads and bridge money and the appropriation for schools and drive the people to direct taxation. In that view, I think members of the Government must see that no reasonable ground can be offered for supporting the position taken by that association. I was very sorry I was unable, from sickness, to attend the House last night when the matter was brought up. So soon as I was telephoned that the subject was up I hurried here, but it was too late. I regret that circumstance. Nevertheless, I feel that there is still sufficient time, if the Government are disposed to make a grant in the direction I have spoken of, to place this road on the same footing as the other roads, subsidies for which are now being pushed through the House in the form of a Bill. I hope my wish will still be carried out, and that the Minister of Railways may see the importance of this road and recall the statement made, and feel that it is in the interest of the public and of the Province to grant a subsidy this year.

Mr. LISTER. I am sure the Minister of Railways can hardly resist the appeal of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). I am sure the language he used will appeal to the tender chords of the tender-hearted gentleman the Minister of Railways, and will lead him to make a promise such as that he made to the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth). When these resolutions came down it looked as if the Government intended to bring on an election this year; it looked as if they were preparing to capture constituencies all over the country by means of those railway bonuses; but from the assurance of the Minister of Railways made to the hon. member for King's, we must be led to believe that the day which was looked forward to with so much interest is postponed for another year, and the elections will not come on till next year. Then the hon. gentleman, in all probability will not have the opportunity of carrying out the promise he has made. If it is a railway that is entitled to proper consideration, the probabilities are that hon. gentlemen on this side, who will then be on the other side of the House, will give it their favorable consideration. In looking over the railway debate—because I was not present at the greater portion of it—there is one speech above all others that struck me as being a singularly able speech, one which must have appealed to every member of this House with almost resistless power to grant the aid which that gentleman so ably advocated. That, Sir, was the speech of my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Paint). He spoke with all the patriotism and fervor of a man who believed that his utterances were based on purely patriotic motives. He pleaded for a railway on the Island of Cape Breton in language that has seldom been surpassed or equalled by any member of this House, and the effect of that appeal was that the hon. gentleman is about to have a railway built on that beautiful and productive island. There seemed to be one difficulty which stood in the hon. gentleman's way, and that was a difficulty as to the route. It appears there are three routes by which this railway may run, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman particularly referred to one route, and that one by way of Louisburg. He said:

"Mr. Chairman, my desire to secure justice for my Province and for my county must stand as my apology for the length of this speech. The interests concerned are apparently local and provincial, but on examination will be found in reality national."

Well, Sir, these are grand words for the hon. gentleman to use. He also used the following language:—

"While rejoicing as a Cape Breton member, at substantial aid being afforded to any railway in that island, yet I cannot, as a member of the Dominion Parliament, allow the true interests of Canada to be injured by the possible selection of an unsuitable port as the terminus of the Cape Breton Railway."

This is language which is becoming to a member of this House representing a constituency which has honored itself by sending him to this House. According to the speech which the hon. gentleman made his motives were purely patriotic, and had I seen nothing but the speech of the hon. gentleman, I would have left this House with the highest opinion of him as a patriotic man. I would have believed that of all the patriotic men sitting in this House, the hon. member for Richmond was the most patriotic. But, Sir, I happen to have a letter or two written by the hon. gentleman which, I am sorry to say, to a certain extent destroys that feeling in my mind. On 7th March, 1884, the hon. gentleman wrote the following letter:—

"The matter is just as I stated to you. * * * I am working in the direction I indicated to you. I beg to enclose you herewith a letter from P. C. Hill, Esq., in regard to my railway claims, which he states he has understood from his lawyers was $72,000 of an award. There has been another award since by three commissioners, which I am waiting daily to hear announced. There are a number of influential members of this House interested in them and we are all combining to press those claims to the front, and the Government have assured us they are going to have early attention."

Now, I ask the hon. gentleman, for I am sure the House will be interested and anxious to know, who were the members who were so deeply interested in the claims which the hon. gentleman was pressing so vigorously on the Government, and which at that time he had an assurance would be responded to by the Government in a satisfactory manner. Surely hon. members of Parliament would not be found pressing claims of the hon. gentleman against the Government, and taking an interest in it. On the 15th February, 1884, he wrote as follows:—

"I am in hopes to have the Intercolonial Railway claims brought to a point, the understanding being that I am to pay you double the claim when I effect a settlement with the Government, which I am in hopes of doing weekly, the commissioners having finished their work and closed the case, but the verdict is not given or made public. Of course the Government knows and many others who are interested in Government contracts are waiting to know."

On the 14th May, 1884, the hon. gentleman wrote as follows:—

"I have some lands in which I have an indirect interest in, in the direction of where the new line of railway is to pass, in Cape Breton."

Is that true? Does the hon. gentleman have to admit that it is to sell his land to the Government that he is so zealous in pressing the claims of Cape Breton?

"I may get this matter in shape in a few weeks, as the surveys go on. If I do, rest assured you shall hear from me."

Again on the 28th May, 1884:

"There is another hope I have of being possibly able to pay you, and not detain you even until railway claims are arranged, that is the railway through Cape Breton, which is to go on to some extent this summer. I am living here watching my interests in this matter, for the county of Richmond, as the railway must pass through lands in which I have an indirect interest."

Is it the county of Richmond, or the lands in which the hon. gentleman has a direct interest, that he is watching? On the 24th June, 1884, he says:

"I have always hoped that my position in the House of Commons might help me out; if pressed it might not."

What does the hon. gentleman mean by saying that his position in the House of Commons will help him out? Does he feel that he is to make money out of this railway passing near those lands? Again he says:

"Had the Short Line Railway gone on in Cape Breton, without a doubt I could have paid you, because it would have passed through or alongside of the twenty acres of land which I offer you for debt. Instead of that Colonel Snow has failed to carry out his agreement and hundreds are disappointed, but it will go through for certain next winter. In this way you will not lose your money."

Again he says:

"If you take in consideration the land I will do my utmost to engineer the railway through it. It might be the solution."

If the hon. gentleman's speech had gone to the country just as it appeared in Hansard, the whole of Cape Breton and the whole of Nova Scotia would have given him credit for being one of those patriots—I was going to say those patriots so numerous in this House, but perhaps they would have excepted him from that class. I suppose this railway is all right, and that the Government have decided to build it as a Government road, and if it is a matter of national importance I am not going to take any exception to it. But I will just ask the hon. member for Richmond to reconcile his patriotic utterances with the letters I have read.

Mr. PAINT. It becomes my duty to reply, although this discussion is taking place after the Bill has received its third reading, and may therefore be somewhat irregular. These letters were produced in some law suits which have taken place in Nova Scotia, and they have been sent up by members of the Reform Association of Halifax to have an effect against me.

An hon. MEMBER. Did you write them ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PAINT. Never mind. They were printed and have been forwarded here by members of the Local Government.

An hon. MEMBER. Did you write them ?

Mr. PAINT. I may say that my firm were the financial agents of the contractors on section number twelve of the Intercolonial Railway, when the hon. Minister of Finance was one of the commissioners, and we lost a large amount of money by having advanced it to the contractors, and that has never been settled. I have made claims upon the Government of the Dominion ; and the hon. Judge Clark, and the other commissioners examined the claims and they chose to rule them out. This matter was brought up in the county of Richmond when I was canvassing the county for a seat in this House. It was discussed on the hustings, and I said to the people : If my claims are unjust I have enemies enough no doubt to prevent me from getting them, and if they are just, you can have no objections to my receiving them. I was elected on that basis. They knew I was pressing these claims and they elected me. Besides that, a complete answer to the insinuations is that the lands referred to in those letters were bought thirty years ago.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). You want to sell them now ?

Mr. PAINT. That is what the hon. gentleman desires me to say, but I do not say so.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am very sorry the Government have not seen fit to come down this Session with the usual subsidy to the Nictaux and Atlantic road, after it has received the approval of both sides of the House. The leader of the Opposition was forced to the conclusion that this road should receive a subsidy, and in the present Session that was assented to by the members on this side of the House by their silence and some by their speeches. We find the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly), with his long railway experience, and understanding the locality, advocating that this subsidy should be given and given now, and for a very good reason, that the sleepers are lying there rotting, and the road is falling to pieces. However, the Government have put the matter off until next year, and the hopes of this year have to be abandoned. Of course these railway subsidies are not given for support. The counties through which the subsidised railways run are supposed, at any rate, not to be against the Government granting them. I do not suppose the Government expect further support in the eight counties lying west of Halifax, if they have refused it on that ground. They could not refuse it on the ground of necessity, because there never was a proposition before any Parliament that received a more unanimous assent than the proposition that this road should receive aid. I am very sorry for my hon. friend from Lunenberg, that his hopes have not been realised to-day, for his county is more interested in that railway than any other, although Queen's, Annapolis, and the county I represent are interested as well. But the hon. gentleman can take this comfort to himself, that he has reached the last ditch, the end of his tether, and that everything must now turn for the better; reminding everyone of that old story of the man who went up on the side of a mountain, to live a recluse, taking his family, his cow, his pig, and his dog with him. First, his wife died, then his child died, then the cow died, by-and-bye the pig died, and he had only the dog left; and finally it got sick and died also. The people in the valley, hearing of his disasters, went up to commiserate with him, and to their inexpressible surprise they found him dancing and laughing about the yard. They asked him: "What's the matter?—we thought you lost everything you had!" "That is so," he said, "but every change must now be for the better; the dog is dead." And my hon. friend may have this consolation, that any change now must be for the better, because the dog is dead for this year.

Mr. KINNEY. As the leader of the Opposition has made some allusions to the Western Counties Railway extension, it may not be out of place for me to make some remarks regarding that enterprise. It is quite true, the Nova Scotia Government have taken to themselves power to convey that road to a joint stock association organised in London, and I wish to say that the terms and conditions of that arrangement are such that I trust the Dominion Government will not for a moment think of assisting in carrying it out. The scheme on its face looks very plausible and reasonable, but when analysed is found to be simply a project of the Government of Nova Scotia to hand over to a foreign company sixty-seven miles of finished and furnished railway, and the Windsor Branch, which is computed to be worth $1,000,000, for the magnificent sum of $120,000. This is the vast scheme that the present Liberal Government of Nova Scotia are going to the people with. It looks to me very much like a political scheme to delude the people of western Nova Scotia into the belief that they were sincere in building the road. But in the Bill there is a clause by which the people may be saved from being robbed of their railway system. It is that the Dominion Government are asked to give their sanction to this enactment; and I trust that the Government, when they look into the scheme, will remember that the parties interested have invested nearly half a million dollars in this railway, that the municipality of Yarmouth has sunk $100,000 in it, and that a number of bondholders have put their money into it in good faith, and I hope the Dominion Government will not permit the Government of Nova Stotia to step in and rob the people of this railway in order to hand it over to this company for a paltry $120,000.

Mr. VAIL. The hon. gentleman has referred to the contract made with this company. If he had referred to one particular clause in the contract, the House would have seen at once that the Nova Scotia Government have taken the security of providing that no money shall be paid on this road except as the work progresses, so that the Government have the whole thing in their own hands. As I understand, this company are prepared to go on and complete the work. Full enquiries have been made into their capability, and the Government are satisfied that they are able to accomplish it. The hon. gentleman says this is more like an election kite than some other railway subsidies that have been granted. I do not think it is any more an election kite than that which the hon. gentleman undertook to fly in 1882 when he promised to pay back to the municipality of Yarmouth the $100,000 which it had paid to aid this railway, provided he secured his election. He has not been able to do that yet, but I hope he will be able to accomplish it before the end of the term.

Mr. McLELAN. I would say to my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Kinney) that it is not the wish of the Government to take any action that will result in an injury or a wrong to any company. If the company he represents in the county of Yarmouth has any rights, they will, I presume, be presented to the Government, and will be considered before any action is taken in the matter finally. It was brought to the notice of the Government some time ago that a company was being formed for the purpose of completing the link between Annapolis and Digby, so as to make the railway complete from Yarmouth to Halifax. The Government expressed their anxiety to have that completion made years ago by the donation of the Windsor Branch for that purpose. At a later period they supplemented that gift by $3,200 a mile for the eighteen miles that are yet to construct. The Nova Scotia Government approached the Dominion Government, and negotiated on this matter. The Dominion Government had nothing but the greatest anxiety to see that that link should be completed and that whole road perfected, but that no injustice should be done to the municipality of Yarmouth or the Western Counties Railway, and any correspondence or negotiation, verbal or otherwise, which passed between the Nova Scotia Government and the Dominion Government, was always in the views that justice would be done, and that everything would be done with the assent and approbation of the Western Counties Railway. Any action that the Dominion Government has taken has been on the supposition that it would be with the entire assent and approval of the Western Counties Railway Company, and that no injustice should be done to them. Now the question has been raised by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) why have we not dealt with this railway? As I stated last night, it was because they had been negotiating with the Nova Scotia Government. We saw that the Nova Scotia Government had been for months making an arrangement and would perfect it so far as they could, and the terms agreed upon by which that road should be completed. If we had interfered, and there had been any failure, the Nova Scotia Government would have said: You have interfered and destroyed the whole arrangement. It is much better that their proposition shall be, if possible, carried out, if justice can be done to the Western Counties Railway, that is being tried, I think the possibilities are that they may succeed. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Kinney) thinks otherwise, that it cannot be done without doing great injustice to the municipality of Yarmouth and the Western Counties Railway.

Mr. VAIL. The municipality of Yarmouth has no objection.

Mr. McLELAN. Then, if it can be done with the entire assent of the municipality and of the Western Counties Railway, I think the means which have been provided for that are certainly ample, when they contemplate the raising of about $4,000,000 to put in a link of eighteen miles of railway and to complete the system.

Mr. POPE. I have only one word to say to my hon. friends behind me. There is nothing that I regret more than to have to refuse hon. gentlemen such as my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Woodworth) and my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) in a proposition which my friends say is a proper thing to do; but, while they have pressed that upon me for several days, and pushed it as strongly as any members of Parliament could, their constituents ought to know that, if we possibly could have yielded, we would have yielded, but we still feel that it is impossible for us this year to do more than we have been doing, although we regret that we cannot meet the views which they have so strongly urged.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. KINNEY. I wish to refer to a matter——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has spoken.

Mr. KINNEY. It is a personal explanation. While the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) was on his feet, he made a statement to the House which will leave a false impression if allowed to go uncorrected.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. That is not a personal explanation.

Mr. KINNEY. I desire to correct it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Very well; go on.

Mr. KINNEY. The hon. member for Digby said I had made a promise to my constituency in 1882 that I would relieve them from a debt of $100,000 created by the corporation of Yarmouth in connection with the Western Counties Railway. I wish to give all due credit to the hon. member, and to suppose that he was mistaken when he said that, but the statement is without any foundation. It has not a particle of foundation.

Mr. VAIL. I may give a personal explanation too. It was quite public, and I think it was stated by the hon. gentleman himself ——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. VAIL. And I think he stated so himself, and made the offer.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must accept the statement. He says he did not.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole respecting the granting of Dominion lands to certain railway companies in Manitoba and the North-West Territories be read the second time.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say if he has come to any conclusion as to the steps to be taken with reference to some other company in case the North-West Central does not comply with the terms.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No, but we will not go into committee until Monday, and I will be able to say then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give us, on Monday, a statement, if he can, of the total amount of lands which have been now pledged in one way or other to railway companies throughout the North-West, up to date.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Interior if it is the intention of the Government to give any land grant to what is known as the Portage Central for which a charter was granted by the Local Legislature of Manitoba. I believe there have been strong representations made by the promoters of the scheme, backed up by resolutions of the Local House, asking that such aid should be granted. I should like to know if there are any hopes of that land grant being made by Order in Council.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not suppose the hon. gentleman expects an answer to that question. The intentions of the Government are embodied in the resolution they have brought down; in the meantime, at any rate, any other application will be duly considered in their course.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) introduced Bill (No. 147) to authorise the granting of certain subsidies of land for the construction of the railways therein mentioned.

Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—WHARF AT NEGUAC, N.B.

Mr. McLELAN, moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the 7th of April last, I put a notice on the paper for papers in reference to the construction of a wharf at Neguac, in the county of Northumberland, and, owing to the fact that the Government business is ahead of us, we have not been able to reach it. I would ask the Minister if he would bring down these papers before we go into the Supplementary Estimates, or when we are considering them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will bring down the necessary papers.

REPORTS ON THE NORTH-WEST REBELLION.

Mr. CASEY. Before you leave the Chair, I wish to call attention to a transaction which appears to me to be a glaring irregularity in the shape of tampering with documents which have been laid upon the Table of this House. A few days ago there was laid upon the Table the long expected report of the Department of Militia and Defence, upon the suppression of the rebellion in the North-West Territory. We remember that, when the hon. the Minister of Militia was questioned as to when this report would come down, he stated that it was being delayed in the hands of the printers. On being asked where it was being printed, he could not at first remember, but, upon further discussion and questioning, he did remember that the job of printing it had been given to Mr. Foote of the Quebec Chronicle, who I believe, sublet the printing to somebody else. Instead of being printed by the Government contractors, it was given to this paper at Quebec which supports the Government, and whose editor is a very near neighbor of the Minister. He informed us that he would hurry up the printing as much as possible and get it here. Well, it got here at last in the form which I now hold in my hand, containing, in the first place, an introductory report by the Deputy Minister, a special report by the Major General Commanding, and several despatches relating to engagements, &c., and a report of Major T. Charles Watson, concerning the erection of the stockade at Yorktown. There is also the report of the War Claims Commission, including 234 pages of appendices, in which the whole evidence taken before that commission is set forth. Besides, there is the report of the surgeon-general including a number of subheadings. That is the report that was laid upon the Table of the House. There was some delay in distributing it to members; I only got my copy to-day, several days since the report was laid before the House. But, Sir, since that report was laid upon the Table, I find another report, appearing, by the inscription upon the back of it, to be also the report of the Department of Militia and Defence upon the suppression of the rebellion in the North-West Territories—having exactly the same cover as the genuine report. It appears to be printed at Ottawa, and has the regular Government imprint. It contains the submission by the Minister of Militia "I have the honor to submit," &c. From anything you can tell about this book from its outside or inside appearance, it is the only and genuine report of the Militia and Defence Department upon the suppression of the rebellion. Now, Sir, I do not know how such a report can have come into circulation. This report contains all that is contained in the first and genuine report to which I have referred, with the exception of the 234 pages of evidence taken before the War Claims Commission, which is entirely omitted. Three pages containing the preliminary statement of the War Claims Commission stating that they "submitted herewith the evidence," &c., are included in the bogus report. But the evidence which is said to be submitted is not submitted. The preliminary report of the commission contained in the second or bogus report, says:

"The respective reports submitted from time to time are herewith embodied, showing action taken on the various numbers, together with your remarks thereon."

It goes on to intimate that these are "submitted herewith," but the evidence is not contained in this report. Again, the omission of the 234 pages of evidence from the genuine report of course would affect the paging. The report of the War Claims' Commission in the original report began at page 67, and continued on for 234 pages, but the paging from that point goes on in the bogus report without the breach that would have been caused by the simple taking out of 234 pages. It is clear, then, that of this document, which purports improperly to be the report of the Department of Militia and Defence, which bears the Government imprint, and the submission by the Minister to His Excellency, the latter part has been reprinted by somebody. Whoever published this report has reprinted the latter part of it, at considerable expense, undoubtedly, to somebody. Now, I have been putting the case hypothetically. I have been saying that it seems impossible that this second and bogus report could have been issued by the Government themselves, but I am afraid, from the fact that it has been distributed from the Distribution Office of this House, that such must have been the case. In fact, I have no doubt of it, although for the sake of saving appearances, I put the case, in the first instance, hypothetically—I have no doubt that the Government have, for some reason best known to themselves, issued a second report, which I must call a bogus report, because it is not the report laid upon the Table of this House. The second report is the bogus report, from which the most interesting and important portions of the original report are carefully excluded. I am sorry that the Minister of Militia and Defence is not now in his place, as he was earlier in the afternoon, when I had not an opportunity of calling his attention to this matter. But, whether he be present or absent, I cannot allow you to leave the Chair without calling attention at the earliest moment to this peculiar transaction, in order to show the House what this omitted matter is. I must refer to one or two items of evidence included in the original report, and excluded from the second and bogus report. I have not had time to go over it carefully, as I only got my copy to-day, but there are a few points which force themselves on my notice. For instance, we find a report of a transaction with the celebrated United States firm of I. G. Baker & Co., in regard to transport, by bull or ox teams, for the military column in the North-West. The report of the commissioners shows that they received an account from this firm for freighting, amounting to $15,480. This appears to have been composed of four accounts. In the beginning they say:

"I. G. Baker & Co., freighting supplies by bull or ox teams, $15,480. A letter under date of 1st April, 1885, from I. G. Baker & Co., to the Honorable the Minister of Militia and Defence, offering ox-teams at a certain rate per day, appears to be the document containing what purports to be the agreement although there is nothing to show acceptance by the Minister."

So that they had been carrying on freighting business for a long time with a large number of teams, running up a bill of over $15,000, without any documents showing a contract between them and the Minister. Concerning one of these accounts of $1,800 they report:

"Account, $1,800. If the Honorable the Minister considered the letter above referred to a contract, and he ordered the teams into service, as stated, the three accounts amounting to $14,130 appear to be regular, and are recommended for payment in full."

And concerning the next account:

"Account, $1,350. There is nothing to show that these six teams left Macleod or arrived at Calgary, on the contrary, Mr. McGibbon states in his report, attached to the claims, that they were not reported to him; had they been so reported they would have been loaded at once; it is evident, therefore, no service was rendered, consequently this account cannot be recommended, and is rejected."

To this report is appended in italics the comment "payment approved—A. P. C," which I take to be the initials of the Minister of Militia. So, notwithstanding the report of the Commission that the transaction on the face of it was irregular, there having been no definite contract entered into—and there was really no ground at all for asking payment for one item—we find the Minister of Militia endorsed, "payment approved." I shall not trouble you with the details of these letters that were put in by I. G. Baker & Co. In regard to another point. We are aware that Colonel Whitehead, a member of this Commission, had also been in control of the transport and supply service during the campaign. The charges were that he was implicated in some of the frauds known to exist in the transport and supply service; that for that reason another gentleman, Colonel Peebles, was substituted for Colonel Whitehead during the taking of evidence on those claims. The charges against Colonel Whitehead were very serious and were put in by one of the contractors, James Anderson, addressed in writing to Colonel Jackson and Colonel Forrest. He alleges in that letter, as follows:—

"Re contract from Saskatchewan Landing to Battleford:—

"1. That Colonel Whitehead, by wire, advised General Laurie to give this contract to John Stewart.

"2. That Major Bell, transport officer, would not permit Stewart to carry out this contract.

"3. That Major Bell sent one Jones, chief clerk in the transport office, Qu'Appelle, to take charge of the Saskatchewan Landing contract.

"4. That said Jones took bills of lading from a firm, Bell & Lewis, for about 90 tons of freight.

"5. That the greater number of the teams were hired by Major Bell and other transport officers at Qu'Appelle, and shipped to Swift Current for this contract.

"6. That about 4th June one Captain Howard arranged with Colonel Whitehead to go on with the above contract, and a day or two afterwards Howard went to Saskatchewan Landing and took charge of the contract from Jones, and made receipts or bills of lading in his own name.

"7. That between 22nd May and 5th June (see "Winnipeg Times") tenders were called for to transport freight from this point and others, and the said tenders were to be in on the 5th June.

"8. Notwithstanding this advertisement for tenders which were to be in on the 5th June, this contract was arranged privately between the said Howard and Whitehead on the night of the 4th June, without reference to any tenders or competition of any kind."

I pass over one or two charges:

"That Colonel Whitehead allowed Bell and Lewis to be paid their contract from Qu'Appelle at prices 150 per cent. too high, and was guilty of improper conduct or negligence in permitting this to be done."

Perhaps I had better now quote from the deliverance of the Commission upon these twenty-nine charges and show which of them were established. The Commission reports:

"Major W. R. Bell appears to have attempted to induce Stewart to throw up the contract he had secured, and accept a share with Bell and others in the contracts covering all the different trails; a memorandum of this matter was signed by W. R. Bell and John Stewart, at Qu'Appelle, on the 21st May (See Exhibit R). Stewart swears that his object in signing this paper was to get Bell to recognise the contract he had made with General Laurie but not with the intention of carrying out the terms of the memorandum."

The terms of that letter I cannot find at this moment. It is merely an engagement between Stewart and Bell, the transport officer, that they, Bell and Stewart, shall share in the profits of all contracts awarded to Stewart, and Stewart shall also share in the profits of any contract secured by Bell:

"It is admitted W. E Jones, chief clerk of transport under Bell, went to Saskatchewan Landing, and shipped about 90 tons for Battleford. Bell swears this was to protect the Government, and to prevent a stoppage in the forwarding of supplies, pending the acceptance of tenders for freighting, by the tonnage system. Jones swears he went there and engaged the teams at $70 per ton, expecting he was to have the contract, which Bell had promised to get for him, if possible, in recognition of his services as clerk, and there is no reason to doubt Bell knew the stores could be hauled for $70 per ton as arranged by Jones, when he offered the contract to Thomas Howard at $125 per ton, less $10 for feed for teams. There is no date showing when Howard accepted this contract, or when approved by Lieutenant Colonel Whitehead."

That is pretty strong evidence showing that the Government transport officer, who was continued in office for a long time after these facts were known, let contracts to a friend for transport at nearly double the price that he knew it could be had for.

"17th and 18th. Major W. R Bell did sign an agreement on the 21st May with John Stewart, for the purpose of sharing the profits in freighting over the several trails. Stewart swears he entered into this agreement for the purpose of getting Bell to recognise his contract with Major General Laurie, but made no further effort to carry it out, in fact declined to do so; this frustrated Bell's design. The telegrams and correspondence (Exhibits A to R, John Stewart's evidence), particularly a note written by Bell at Moose Jaw, 27th May, addressed to 'my dear Stewart,' in which he says he 'has quite cleared himself with the General, and laid a foundation for a good thing,' shows Bell was trying to manipulate the various contracts for his own benefit. These very urgent telegrams and letters passed immediately after Bell's visit to Winnipeg, about the 19th or 20th of May.

"21st. There appears to have been an impression that Bell, Lewis, Yates & Walsh were the contractors, but Bell's evidence shows they were not."

Also, that Bell and others, not including Yates and Walsh, were the real contractors. On charges 27 and 28 the Commission reports as follows:—

"27th and 28th. About 1,003 tons of hay, in addition to 49 tons not yet paid for were delivered (Vide Exhibit A in evidence of William Clarke, factor, Hudson Bay Company). Bell says there was a written contract between Alex. McDonald, Hudson Bay Company's agent at Fort Qu'Appelle, and himself, as manager of the Qu'Appelle Valley Farming Company, for 500 tons, at $20, for loose, and $22 for pressed and double wired. Wm. Clarke, factor, says there was only a verbal contract; subsequently Mr. Clarke, on behalf of the Hudson Bay Company as agents of the Government, entered into an agreement with Major Bell, as a personal contractor, for pressed, double wired hay, at $25 per ton. W. L. Boyle, president of the Qu'Appelle Farming Company, says the company delivered less than 300 tons. As 1,003 tons were delivered and paid for, not less than 703 tons must have been on Bell's private account. Exhibit A shows that he was paid by the Hudson Bay Company $10,732 85, Beecher says, $9,179.35; but if the Farming Company delivered only 300 tons, Bell must have received individually fully $6,842.15 more."

The Commission then go on to point out that on Bell's private account there was a profit of $7,030. The Commission go on to say:

"Qu'Appelle to Clarke's Crossing, 18 days for the round trip, teams were being paid from $5 to $8 per day by the Government, $4.50 being the ruling figure after about 12th April; $7, therefore, would be an outside average, making $126 for the trip by the day, or say for one ton.

"The contract freighting price was $140 per ton. As these teams conveyed from one and a half tons and upwards, one ton at least should have been hauled by teams working for Government by the day, more particularly as the tonnage teams were paid by the contractors only $4.50 per day. At this price a trip, one and a half tons would cost the contractor $81 instead of $126 for one ton, thus leaving a much larger margin of profits to Bell, Lewis & Co., who were also to provide teams at $5 per day on special service, if required."

These are only a few of the gems of evidence in regard to the transport service. There is a correspondence between Mr. Boultbee a former member of this House and the Minister of Militia commencing on 22nd June, showing that the Minister had notice of these transactions at a comparatively early day. I will quote one of the letters:

"TORONTO, 22nd June, 1885.

"Hon. A. P. CARON,
"Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

"SIR,—I am instructed by Mr. John Stewart, contractor, Winnipeg, that he had a contract with the Government to carry freight from Qu'Appelle to Clarke's Crossing at $150 per ton net, and another to carry freight from Saskatchewan Landing to Battleford at $135 per ton net, and that he made all his arrangements for carrying them out, which involved the transportation of some thousand tons or more of freight. Mr. Stewart was, however, not allowed to carry out the work by those who, under the Government, had control of it, but it was handed over to other parties—Bell and Lewis and one Jones and others who have been doing the work at far higher prices than those agreed on by Stewart. Now, I think, under these circumstances, payment for the work done should be stopped, and an investigation had, in order that the profits accruing from the exution of the work may be paid over to Stewart, and not to these men, Bell or Lewis or Jones, who, Stewart is informed, are interested with Bell and others who are representing the Government, and who have been instrumental in depriving Stewart of his contracts for the purpose of improperly putting money in their own pockets. I am led to believe that an investigation into this matter will not only be the means of doing justice to Stewart, but of saving the Government a large sum of money.

"Yours respectfully,
"A. BOULTBEE."

Then he appears to have had an interview with the Minister of Militia. Again, on 25th June, after having an interview with the Minister of Militia, he writes once more to the same effect, pointing out that W. R. Bell was acting as assistant transport officer under Colonel Whitehead, and with him had the management and control of the forwarding of supplies from the points mentioned in his letter of the 22nd instant. Also that Bell was one of the firm of Bell & Lewis who had got the contract. So that the Department had notice, long before the campaign was fully over, of the state of things which was going on. Then, Sir, the Commission report on the Canadian Pacific Railway claim for transport, of which I must read one or two items. It appears that the claim put in for the transport for the Montreal Garrison Artillery from Montreal to Winnipeg by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company amounted to $24,917.53, or over $83 per head for officers and men. The Commission report that this is excessive, and they also report a basis on which a settlement might be affected with the railway company. It is to this effect:

"1. Over all finished portions of the road for officers and men, two-thirds (⅔) the regular passenger rates.
"Horses to be in proportion to the passenger rates, as compared with the Grand Trunk Railway charges. Freight to be the regular Canadian Pacific Railway rates.
"2. From Biscotasing to Port Arthur, 461 miles, 10 cents per mile per officer and man, the number of miles actually marched by men and horses over the gaps to be deducted. Freight to be in proportion to passenger rate, but charges for handling baggage, building fires, guides or charges of any other kind, except subsistence, shall not be allowed.
"3. For the return (eastward) from Port Arthur to Biscotasing, 461 miles, two-thirds (⅔) of the rates of No. 2.
"All other portions of the line the same as No. 1."

Now, Sir, according to the proposed rate at 5 cents over the unfinished portion but continuous rail, the amount would have been $15,330.68, or, if the road were completed $12,119.37. A member of the Commission, Colonel Jackson, goes on to say:

"I may here mention Mr. Drinkwater stated, in presence of the Commission, it cost about one thousand dollars to run a passenger train from Montreal to Winnipeg, consequently their proposed charge of $24,917.93 for one corps appears exceedingly large."

And then, Sir, there is a postscript, which like the postscript in a lady's letter, is important. It is as follows:—

"P.S.—It may be added the troops were returned by the North Shore route, for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway; they recommended 5 cents per mile going east per man, and proportional increase for freight, being nearly double full first class rates. There were three lines of steamers from Port Arthur and two lines of railway east of the lakes, the whole of the troops could have been sent by these routes, for two thirds (⅔) the regular rates, viz., 2 cents per mile, or two-fifths (⅖) the amount recommended.

I may say that there is no endorsation on this report either approved or rejected. By the way, I notice that the hon. Minister seems to have committed the crime which is so unpardonable in the eyes of the Mail, of signing his initials to endorsations on these documents. We have seen a great deal about "D. M." in late issues of that paper, and perhaps it will now learn that it is the customary way of signing such endorsations. I call attention to the fact that hundreds of pages more of this damaging evidence, as to the conduct of the transport business during the North-West rebellion, have been omitted from this copy, which has been put in circulation ostensibly by the Government—this bogus report—put in circulation since the original and genuine report was placed before the House. There is something else omitted from both reports which I think ought to have been there. We should have had a report from the Adjutant General. We have a report from such a comparatively insignificant officer as Captain T. Charles Watson with regard to the organisation of a volunteer company. We have reports from Major General Strange, Colonel Otter, Brigade Major Smith, and one or two others, and a despatch from the Major General Commanding, on the engagement at Fish Creek. It has not been unusual for commanders of corps under a general to make reports to him on matters coming under their personal notice, which he incorporates in his own report. We have no report from Colonel Van Straubenzee, who might have been asked by the Major General to report on the proceedings at Fish Creek and Batoche, so far as he had an opportunity of observing them. There are other omissions, but I hope the Minister will be able to give us, at least an approximately satisfactory reason for the glaring irregularity of tampering with documents which have been officially laid before the House, and are the official property of this House, and explain how it was that this bogus report got into circulation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am glad that the hon. gentleman, who has just criticised the report on the suppression of the troubles in the North-West, has found so little to say against it. It is true that with his usual zeal for the public good, he has used some very strong expressions; and if he had left out the expression of a bogus report, I think I should have had little to complain of, so far as his criticism of the report goes. I say there was nothing bogus about the report which has been brought down, and I leave it to every hon. gentleman who has taken the trouble to read it, to say that if there is one thing that can be said with reference to the report which it was my duty to place on the Table of the House, it is that that report contains every piece of evidence, contains much more than is usually placed in any public document of that kind. But, Sir, I felt that as the troubles in the North-West had attracted so much public attention, when I remembered that during the troubles in the North-West, when the Department was called upon to undertake possibly the most difficult task that I hope it will ever be called upon to undertake, the Department was severely criticised at a moment when it could not defend itself, and I thought it was only right and proper to bring down and submit to the House everything which had taken place, every piece of evidence which was gone into by the men appointed for the purpose of investigating the claims which were made against the Department. Sir, this is the report which I had the honor of placing on the Table. This report contains everything, and without attempting in any way to diminish the importance of the evidence which has been taken, I considered that in so far as distributing the report to the force or to the public outside of Parliament, the whole of that evidence was not of sufficient importance to justify me in going to the expense of having this voluminous report printed for distribution outside. I had two reports; one containing not only the various reports which have been referred to by the hon. gentleman, the report of the officers, the report of the general commanding the force; and I had also a report made containing merely these reports, and not taking in the whole of the evidence as it appears in the report which I placed on the Table of the House. I want to know whether it is not a fact that a full report has been distributed to every member of the House, and that the other report has also been distributed or will be distributed? Both reports will be distributed to every member of the House, so that if any hon. gentleman wishes to send away the report of the field operations, without the more tedious portion of the report containing the evidence of the investigations which took place, he can do so. Therefore, there has been no attempt to produce or circulate anything like a bogus report; but a great many people outside will be much more interested in the smaller report containing merely the field operations, than in the full report, containing all the evidence of the investigations. The hon. gentleman has spoken of some of the charges which were made against Lieutenant Colonel Whitehead, and has characterised those charges as very serious. The investigation into those charges, however, has resulted in altogether disproving them. Lieutenant Colonel Whitehead rendered most valuable services to the Government during that period. It is true, the position he occupied at Winnipeg, unfortunately for himself, caused animosities to be raised against him in the performance of his duty. As soon as I heard of those charges, I considered that Lieutenant Colonel Whitehead should be replaced in the investigation of the particular claims in regard to which the charges were brought against him. I instructed Colonel Peebles, an officer and a magistrate in Winnipeg, a man of high standing there, to investigate them with the two remaining commissioners, and the result of that investigation has shown that Lieutenant Colonel Whitehead did his duty, and he came out of the ordeal without a single stain on his honor or any reflection on the manner in which he performed his duty for the Government. The hon. gentleman says that those charges were brought by Mr. Anderson, a contractor. Mr. Anderson was not a contractor; he was an officer in the employ of the Government at Winnipeg, in connection with the transport service. He was examined, as well as the gentlemen whose names appear in these charges, and the charges were completely disproved. The hon. gentleman also referred to the celebrated Bell case. Major Bell had some contracts with the Hudson Bay Company, and also acted as a transport officer for the Government. For his contracts with the Hudson Bay Company he was responsible to that company alone; but to the present day that portion of the claim which was made by Major Bell upon Government has not yet been paid, but has been submitted to the Minister of Justice. I would not assume the responsibility, as head of the Department of Militia, of acting on that claim without getting the opinion of the legal adviser of the Government upon it; and although a great deal of pressure has been brought to bear on the Department, and Major Bell has complained several times rather bitterly of the delay that has taken place in settling this claim, up to the present moment it has not been settled. If it is settled, it will be because, like every other claim, the evidence will be gone into, and it will be established beyond any possibility of doubt that the claim is a just claim. The hon. gentleman also referred to the transport service carried on by the Canadian Pacific Railway. When I look back to that period, I must say that had it not been for the energy displayed by that company, it would have been impossible for us to transport the troops, the heavy guns, and the ammunition to the front in such a short period of time as we did. The hon. gentleman has referred to a report which does not bear my initials, and that indicates that that report was not accepted; but another report which does bear my initials will show that the whole case was gone into for weeks—nay, for almost a month—regarding the transport service of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The president of the Commission, Colonel Jackson, for whose services I must say we cannot be too grateful, who performed his duties as the head of the Commission in a remarkable manner, gave a great deal of his time personally to investigating every possible branch of the claim put in by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and the Commission called in as witnesses some railway men, who were considered to be the best possible authorities, to express an opinion on such claims. It was after all this investigation had been gone into, that the amount decided upon was paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and seeing that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not seem to be quite satisfied with the result, contending that we had cut them down a great deal too much, while the hon. gentleman, as one of the members of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, thinks that we gave them too much, I think between the two we must have struck about the average, and must have paid what was justly due. The hon. gentleman also says that the report of the Adjutant General should have been sent in. The hon. gentleman will consider that, in the operations which took place, it was almost impossible to send in a report unless it be one comprising all the reports which form really the bulk of this book which has been submitted to Parliament. The Adjutant General handed over the reports which appear in the ordinary annual report of the Militia Department of the proceedings of the year; but, this being a campagin which was conducted more particularly by the officers who were at the front, by those who were in command of the various columns, the reports naturally had to come from them, and the Adjutant General could not to a great extent add to the information which is contained in the reports sent in by the various officers. Of course, the Adjutant General, like every other member of the militia staff here at headquarters, performed his duties in a manner which was certainly very remarkable, and which entitles him to all the credit possible; but, as I have already explained, the reports of the store branch and the other reports which comprise the proceedings of the Department appear in the annual report and are not comprised in this report of the campaign proper. The hon. gentleman also finds it very extraordinary that there should be a report which appears as the report of Captain Watson.

Mr. CASEY. No, I did not say so. I said that, when a report which appeared to be of such small importance was to be found in this return, I was astonished that reports of greater importance were not there.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will understand that the report of Captain Watson bears upon one part of the operations which was certainly very well conducted, and which required to be looked into and studied. In case of any disturbance occurring again, it was important to know how these home guards were organised, and what had been done for the purpose of organising them. We had other reports bearing upon that and took the first that was sent in, so as to give all the information which possibly could be given to Parliament; and that is the reason why this report was sent in. I think I should have been perfectly justified in publishing merely the findings of the Commission appointed for the purpose of investigating the claims; but I thought it was better to lay before Parliament all the evidence which had been taken, everything connected with the Commission. I think that, when the hon. gentleman has more time to look into this report, when he finds, during the vacation, more leisure to be able to follow it up from the beginning to the end, he will find that the Department were anxious to keep nothing from Parliament and the country, but showed their desire, by publishing the whole of the evidence, to put Parliament and the public in full possession of all the facts connected with the campaign.

Mr. CASEY. I wish to explain one point. The hon. Minister, not having been in when I began my remarks, appears to have misunderstood the nature of my charge. I did not charge that the report laid on the Table was insufficient, or that there was any attempt at concealment in it, but I charged that another report had been published under the same heading, with nothing to indicate that it was not the genuine report and the whole report, which would go into the hands of people who had not seen the genuine report, and that that was necessarily a bogus report. I am sorry the hon. Minister has had to confess that the second report has emanated from the Department itself.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). As the Minister of Militia has entered into a defence of the operations of the militia in the North-West, in reply to the remarks of my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey), I propose for a moment or two to still further trespass on the pressing time of the House in order to draw attention to the same matter. It has been a matter of significant rumor for some time; in fact during the progress of the operations in the North-West it was alleged that those in whom the Government had placed its confidence, in the way of making preparation and arrangements for the forces in that campaign, had misused the confidence which the Government had placed in them. It is evident, even from a hurried glance at the report which the hon. gentleman has referred to, and which has been placed too recently in our hands to allow us a fair opportunity of discussing its contents in full, that public rumor has in no sense misstated the facts of the case. On a cursory examination of the report of the Auditor General, I find that in the one particular item of tea alone, this country paid for a sufficient quantity to maintain 41,362 men in the field during the entire time that that rebellion lasted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What did my hon. friend say?

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I say the quantity of tea that was supplied to the forces in the field and paid for by the Government, as appears by the report of the Auditor General and the sudsidiary statement brought up to the 30th March last, according to the per diem ration allowance, would have maintained 41,362 persons in the field for 90 days. I find that, basing my estimate on the same length of time, 90 days—and I think that is a fairly liberal allowance, taking the average of number and the average of time the forces were under arms—the meat supplies were equal to the maintenance of 14,220 men, and that the bread supply was equal to rationing 14,975 men for the time I have stated. I confine myself to the supplies furnished to the men under arms, and in that statement have not included the accounts which appear in the Auditor General's report for scouts, couriers or the transport and mail service. I have attempted, as fairly as I can, to get at the cost of the maintenance of that force in the field, and I have omitted all accounts that do not fairly bear on the maintenance of the force under arms. I also find that for many of the troops there have been allowances in lieu of rations. I find that as much as $2,000 or $3,000 has been allowed to some regiments, while in transit or while the supplies could not be furnished out of the Government allowance, which would still further increase the astounding difference between the actual number under arms and the quantity of supplies furnished; but what strikes me as most surprising of all is that, if we take the number of horses returned as having been engaged in active service in the field, we find it would require every horse that was a portion of the military force under arms there, to have eaten something like 253 pounds of forage a day, in order to consume the quantity paid for by the Government. The absolute impossibility of their doing so is a fair reason for saying that the mismanagement of affairs in that campaign was something sufficiently scandalous to bring the blush of shame to the face of any Canadian. There is not a man in this House, no matter on what side of politics, who would have objected, if the money which went to pay for these supplies had been paid to the members of the forces in the field; but when we find the Minister of Militia complaining that the House is apt to refuse the small amount necessary to engrave the medals received from the Home Government, he casts an aspersion on the House which is not justified, when he asks us to vote the vast sums of money necessary to pay for the 5,000 or 6,000 men who were in the field for the suppression of that rebellion. I do not at all allege that the horses were able to eat the quantity of fodder I have mentioned. I admit that whatever became of these supplies to the men, whatever wastefulness there may have been, it is absolutely impossible that the horses could have eaten the quantity of hay that is charged for. But the very cursory opportunity of looking over the report distributed this afternoon and that the hon. member for West Elgin has referred to, indicates to me what became of a very large portion of these supplies. I find in the evidence submitted, that the Minister of Militia has referred to as approving in that report that very inferior food was supplied to these forces. It is alleged by some of the witnesses examined before the Claims Commission that instead of oats being supplied, a very inferior quality of wheat was furnished, so inferior indeed as to be absolutely useless for the purpose of rationing the troops. The report admits besides that, in one instance, there was something like 100 tons of hay that had been paid for at a very fair price, bought through Major Bell, that proved to be absolutely worthless. I conclude from reading the evidence produced before that Commission that a great many of those men to whom the Government had given confidence as its agents for transporting supplies for that force, expected that they were to make fortunes as well out of the opportunity offered them of swindling the country. I understood the Minister to say that Major Bell had not received any money from the Government other than in discharge of the obligations as transport officer he had pledged the country to, but I find by the report of the Auditor General, on page 498, that W. R Bell was paid $6,652 for supplies furnished by him, and I find that Bell, Lewis & Co., of Winnipeg, were paid $52,774 up to the 30th June last; and according to the supplementary statement submitted of the North-West operations to the 30th March, 1886, I find that he has been paid a further sum. I find that the Qu'Appelle Farming Company, of which Mr. W. R. Bell acknowledges himself to be the manager, was paid up to the 30th June last, the sum of $52,774.92. These sums are still further increased by the subsequent statements brought down to the 30th March. Now, it is clear from the action of the Government that this Major Bell was acting in the double capacity of contractor with the Government and at the same time as transport officer in the Department of Militia. Sir, this is a very serious state of affairs—particularly in view of the generosity shown by this House to the Government last Session, when we gave the Government carte blanche to expend $4,000,000 as they pleased in putting down the rebellion. This is the way that confidence has been misplaced, and it arises from the Government putting the charge of these matters into the hands of men who have shown themselves to have been utterly unworthy of confidence. It is apparent, besides, that not only had Major Bell made up his mind that the appropriation made by this House to suppress that rebellion was fair plunder, but there were others with him, and he attempted to bring others who were prepared to tender at a fair price on their own account into collusion with him, and when they refused to make a bargain to the detriment of the country, he attempted to get the contract away from them. I will now refer again to the statement that hay was wasted in its transport to the North-West, and I will read from page 197 of the investigation. In answer to Colonel Jackson, of the Commission, the witness, C. H. Fox, states:

"Q. Hadn't Bell a certain number of teams of his own or hired teams?—A. I know of one lot that he purchased with carts that made one short trip for us, and they were represented as the private property of Major Bell.

"Q. Don't you know anything about teams?—A. Those were only owned by the Farming Company, I understand.

"Q. Who owned these teams? (Pay list produced).—A. I could not say who owned them—I suppose W. R. Bell.

"Col. Peebles:

"Q. Personally?—A. Yes, personally.

Then further on, page 199:

"Q. How were supplies generally carried to the different stations on the other trail?—A. They were there previous to my going, when the Government teams were working by the day.

"Q. Had you an opportunity of seeing quantities of hay along the way?—A. The trail was pretty well cleaned up; there was a quantity of hay at Clarke's Crossing and a quantity of oats at Humboldt.

"Q. In what condition was the hay at Clarke's Crossing?—A. I should say it was useless.

"Q. About what quantity do you suppose?—A. If I remember correctly, Captain Hudson told me several hundred tons.

"Q. Did he say anything about stopping the conveyance of it?—A. He gave me to understand that his instructions were to dispose of it."

That is the evidence as to one quantity of several hundred tons. There is another portion of evidence which indicates that oats designed for the troops were also lavishly distributed and wasted, and this fact is further substantiated by the general reports that comes from the North-West, that at present wild oats are growing profusely in all that section of the country. I have only briefly referred to a number of facts that have come out in my investigation of this report. The statements I have made by no means indicate all the interesting facts available to those disposed to examine it. The Minister has stated that the report has been available to members, and that being the case, the credit is reflected on the Government from the fact that the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has been able to find so little to question in it. It will be remembered that the report was distributed but a few minutes before the sitting of the House to-day. It is known that a copy of the report was laid on the Table of the House on the 20th instant, yet its distribution was delayed until now, and at this late period of the Session it is a glaring injustice to this House, that gave its confidence to the Government to the extent of placing four millions at its disposal with which to suppress the rebellion, that the report should not have been submitted before it in time to allow members to criticise the account created under that vote. But I say there is sufficient in what I have already stated to show that the management of the expedition was grossly extravagant. The mode the Minister adopted of sending up numbers of men unconnected with the militia force without any responsibility whatever, except that of making as much as possible for themselves, was in itself provocative of a great deal of mischief and extravagance. Men who were in the militia force had the responsibility of their commissions to weigh with them in anything they did, and if they had been charged with the duty of transport and supply service and the other services incidental to a campaign, the work would have been more efficiently performed. How does the case stand? We find that Major Bell does not belong to the militia force; that Mr. Bedson, chief transport officer, is not in the militia force; that his assistant is not in the militia force; that all along the line of the staff, a very large proportion were not men who were in any sense impelled to consider the interests of the country which they had in charge. The Government took the responsibility of placing the North-West campaign accounts in the hands of the Hudson Bay Company. In the first place they allowed that company to become purveyors for all the Government and the force might require; and in the next place they made arrangements by which that company was to receive 5 per cent. on all accounts they might cash. I find under that one head alone, the Hudson Bay Company drew, on commissions, $65,564. And while this country has been led to believe that under the ægis of the present Government, we have had constantly recurring surpluses which the Government have been almost unable to get rid of, the Bank of Montreal was paid between seven thousand and eight thousand dollars discount on notes that had been drawn on the Minister of Militia or Minister of Finance, and the discount was at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, 1 per cent. higher than is being paid to the same bank by good financial firms in the country. I find several drafts on one or other of the Departments, which does not definitely appear, at thirty days, which was discounted at 7 per cent., and for sums in each case of a quarter of a million dollars. The Minister of Finance has more than once told this House, and we were told by his predecessor, that an immense advantage resulted to this country from the advent of the present Government to power, in the fact that they were able to reduce the rate of interest to the people. Yet there was a total of something like $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 drawn by the financial agents of the Government in the west on the Minister of Finance and discounted at the rate I have mentioned. Those are the reasons why I think the opportunity should have been afforded this House to have made a closer inspection of the management of the North-West campaign. I should have been glad to have had an earlier opportunity of criticising those figures. I am sure that, independent of our party leanings, we would like that such a Department as that of Militia, embracing such a large proportion of our able-bodied young men within its fold, should have been enquired into in a spirit that would have indicated that both sides of the House felt that whenever there was anything wrong it should be enquired into without any of the possible prejudices that arise from party feelings being engrafted into the discussion. But if I continue my investigation still further I find, on the question of supplies for troops, there are some surprising facts to be noted. Up to the time when the accounts were submitted something in the neighborhood of 20,000 suits of underclothing have been bought for the forces; that the quantity of blankets was also very large but not equally so. What surprises me is the immense number of rubber blankets supplied at that time. I need not say that a supply of such an article under reasonable circumstances is judicious and necessary, but there are rumors in connection with this item which represent the peculiar methods of securing supplies for the field force. We have in the accounts something like $50,000 paid out besides for clothing supplies of which there are no details, and at the same time a proportion of the force under arms was allowed the amount that the supply officer determined as the value of a kit in lieu of the Government furnishing it. The men belonging to two or three battalions were each allowed $13.95 in lieu of the kit that the Department should have furnished. To refer again to the amount that Major Bell drew, I find on reference to a memorandum I made hurriedly a few moments ago, that according to the Public Accounts and the supplementary statement brought out on the 30th of March, there has been paid in all the sum of $103,958 to that employee of their own, either in person or as a member of one or other of the firms in which he was interested. This is certainly a surprising sum in its amount, and its scandalous character is increased from the additional fact, as evidenced by the report just submitted, that he was practically keeping up the price of the transport service, that he was protesting against the Government hiring teams at a lower rate than $8 per day, while there were opportunities for the service to get teams at something like $4.50 per day. Such is the character of the man who drew this large sum from the Department by one and another of his manifold means of pressing accounts on the Government. It is true they are not all presented in his own name, but a sufficient number were presented in his own name to make it a glaring abuse of the confidence which the Government placed in him. I referred a moment ago to the prices paid for supplies furnished to the Department. The Minister of Agriculture has more than once this Session attempted to show how much cheaper underclothing has become under the development of the National Policy than it was when a different fiscal policy prevailed. Now, the hon. gentleman would have been wise to have confined his comparison to generalities, until he had seen a statement of the cost to this country of the clothing supplied to the forces in the North-West. I find that the underclothing is charged at a much higher figure than the average he represented, and other clothing supplies are also much higher. I find that socks are charged as high as $1; in another case as high as 70 cents, and not by the single pair but by hundreds of pairs. In another case fifty pairs of gloves are charged at an average of $2.75 per pair. I find that blankets are charged as high as $10 per pair. I find that I. G. Baker & Co., who are ever present when there is something to be made at the public expense, although they do not figure as largely as in some of the other departments, supplied fifty gauntlets at $2.75 per pair, and 100 pairs of socks at 65 cents., and while the Minister thought it impossible, with the immense drain on his resources, in order to meet the requirements of this rebellion, to pay the $1,200 or $1,500 necessary in order to engrave the names of those who had so ably defended our interests in the North-West on the medals which were presented to them, while he believed that the House would not grant that infinitesimal amount for that purpose, I find that Major General Strange, who drew a general's pay for ninety days' services, a total sum of $2,752, had a pair of boots paid for him by the country at a cost of $8. I find that other gentlemen occupying high positions were equally well treated. I find that even the Deputy Adjutant General, an officer in command at Winnipeg, could not go to meet General Middleton on his return to Lake Manitoba, without taking a large supply of provisions and liquors of a costly character, against which there was apparently no protest when the account was sent in, while the Department were extremely reluctant to pay 25 and 35 cents a meal for some of the troops during a portion of their progress to the scene of action. There are many other items of this kind which attract attention, many of them which will justify the House and the country in looking much more closely into the administration of that Department than has heretofore been the case, and I only regret that the hour is so late and the disposition to get away is so strong that an opportunity for discussing these matters as they ought to be discussed has not presented itself before now. But I have deemed it to be my duty, at the risk of inconveniencing members of this House, to submit these facts, as they developed themselves in my examination of the documents, to the House and to the country, and as far as possible to excite an interest in this question, a question which in its manifold aspects is of as much interest to every true, loyal Canadian as any other question which could be discussed in this House. We have had the first expeditionary force in which the Canadian people themselves undertook the task of suppressing a rebellion without the assistance of the Home Government. We have to examine the papers to know how those on whom we conferred authority for the management of that expedition discharged their trust. It is of interest to us to know how they did so. I have attempted to show that in every respect in which men should have proved themselves capable these men have failed. I have only this to say in conclusion, that I regret that the time does not permit a closer scrutiny into these accounts. I have made the statements after examination, and I believe the facts I have stated will be borne out by the accounts. There are many others which might be discussed in the same way, and I feel satisfied that the House will appreciate the reason why I do not proceed further on this occasion.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the Supplementary Estimates which have recently been laid before us. I should have been very glad if those estimates, and the various subsidies which the Government have presented for our approval, had been of a character that would have permitted me to dispense with comment beyond what was necessary upon the several items in committee. As it is, I shall endeavor to compress my remarks within the briefest possible compass. I had hoped that the facts which were disclosed in the speech of the Finance Minister himself would have led the Government to consider a little more carefully than they seem to have done, the propriety under our present circumstances of retrenching our expenditure, as far as possible, or at any rate of avoiding adding needlessly to the fixed charges of the country. But I am sorry to say that not merely do the Supplementary Estimates, but also the several proposals which within four or five days of the close of the Session have been laid before the House indicate that a feeling, which I am scarcely using too strong terms in characterising as one of utter recklessness, has taken possession of hon. gentlemen opposite. I suppose it is idle to expect from them any particular regard to the public opinion of this country. They seem to have made up their minds that it is easier to manage that by means of divers grants for public works and railroads throughout the country, and subsidies to the newspaper press, than by appealing to the feelings which the people as a whole do, I believe, entertain, in favor of economy and good management. Now, I would have thought, at a time when a deficit of $2,250,000 had been announced for the year 1885, and when a deficit of $5,000,000, according to the statement of the Finance Minister himself, is anticipated for the current year, at a time when, unless we succeed in obtaining a much larger revenue than our Gazette returns at present indicate is likely to come into our coffers, there is serious danger that a deficit may be anticipated of a greater or less extent in the ensuing year, more particularly at a time when the Minister, in order to make a settlement and to obtain a considerable amount of money from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, had found it necessary to give up many millions of a debt which we had been informed was most excellently secured, of which in fact we were told by hon. gentlemen opposite that they fully expected to receive every cent that had been advanced —I say, Sir, under these circumstances, we could hardly have expected that hon. gentlemen would come down to the House and propose that a sum of $3,250,000 of Supplementary Estimates should be added for the year 1886, that a further sum of $2,000,000 should be demanded as Supplementary Estimates for 1887, and, when they had fair and reasonable opportunities of escaping large grants such as that to the Chignecto Railway, that, instead of availing themselves of those opportunities which were almost thrust into their hands, they should choose to increase our liabilities; still less that shey should have found it necessary to come down to us, when the net volume of our debt has been very considerably increased by the operations I have alluded to, and should propose additional subsidies involving a further charge of five or six millions, as near as I can make out, to the total debt of the Dominion. It has been abundantly demonstrated, in the debates that have taken place on these subsidies, that every one of these grants is certain to be the parent of many more—that whenever you make grants of this kind to one section of the country, you put into the hands of the constituencies not yet similarly favored almost irresistible arguments for conferring similar boons on them, thereby increasing the liabilities and indebtedness of this country to an almost indefinite extent, Now, Sir, I shall review very briefly the circumstances in which we now stand. There are two or three facts in dispute between myself and the hon. Finance Minister, which I shall merely indicate. One is as to the true extent of our liabilities. As to the extent of our gross liabilities there can be no question; but as to the amount of our genuine liabilities a considerable amount of discussion has arisen. Still, when you come to examine the question, and when you deduct the sum which we can fairly claim should be abated from our gross liabilities, that is, our cash in hand and our sinking fund, and when, on the other hand, you make due allowance for the enormous number of liabilities which have been incurred, although they have not yet matured or become due, you will find that the real difference between the net amount I estimate, and the net amount the hon. gentleman has estimated, is too slight to affect the argument very materially. In the same way as to the other question in dispute between us, the question whether the actual population of Canada has increased, as I maintain, not over 300,000 within the last five years, or 400,000 or 500,000, as hon. gentlemen opposite maintain, when you come to examine all the facts we possess, I think the House will see that there is only too strong a presumption that the statements made on this side of the House, as to the total increase, are much more likely to be verified. I may observe in this connection that we do not maintain, and we never have maintained, that the population of Canada, as a whole, has decreased. What we have alleged is, that the rate of increase during the past five years has not exceeded the rate of increase during the past decade, from 1871 to 1881; and those who have taken the pains to acquaint themselves with the returns made by our municipal authorities, and who attach due weight to the census returns taken in the Nort-West Territories, will say that at the least there is a reasonably strong presumption in favor of our side of the argument. But, Sir, there are facts which are not in dispute. There are facts which neither the Finance Minister nor any of the hon. gentlemen opposite can pretend for one instant to deny. They cannot deny that there has been an immense increase in our total debt and our total taxes during the last few years: that since the Mackenzie Government went out of power rather more than $100,000,000 have been added to the total debt of this country; that according to the estimates submitted by the Financial Minister himself, rather more than $10,000,000 a year have been added to the actual taxation of the country, and even more than that to the total expenditure. They cannot deny another fact of very great moment, that the percentage of the fixed charges to our total income has increased enormously and is now greater than it is in any other country calling itself civilised, of which we have any knowledge. I believe, Sir, that to-day you will find that the fixed charges, by which I mean the interest, the sinking fund, the subsidies, and the charges for the collection of revenue, paid by the Dominion of Canada, amount within the nearest fraction to the total annual expenditure of the year 1878. Sir, I do not wish to do more than call the attention of the House briefly to that fact; but every man of business, every man of intelligence, every man of common sense in Canada must see that when, out of a gross nominal income of $35,000,000, you have charges over which you have no practical control, amounting to over $23,000,000, and tending to increase all the time, you have a condition of things which calls for great care and economy on the part of those entrusted with our finances. Then, Sir, we have another consideration which I think also ought to weigh with these hon. gentlemen, that is, that it is perfectly clear that the whole future of Canada has been staked, rashly staked, in my opinion, on the development of the North-West. I believe that a great deal can be done there, I believe that it is a great country, but I do not approve of seeing, as we have seen, by reason of the reckless expenditure in which hon. gentlemen have engaged, such an enormous proportion of the fixed charges of the Dominion incurred in the attempt to develop the North-West. At any rate, I do not approve of it, when we have before us, unhappily, so clear a proof that the policy of the Government in that respect has been a most disastrous failure as shown by the fact, which we cannot but regret, that we have to-day in Manitoba scarcely 110,000 white people and in the adjacent Territories 23,000 whites. I cannot but regard that fact, in view of all the exactions and sacrifices the people have submitted to for the purpose of developing the North-West, as proof of gross incompetence and mismanagement on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I may add that every intelligent protectionist will feel constrained to admit that the effect of the taxation of this country is that the portion of it which goes into the public Treasury only very partially represents the extent of the burdens on the people. Our taxes are vastly more than the nominal taxes, and the nominal taxes to-day are very nearly threefold what they were eighteen or nineteen years ago. In face of these facts, we have heard the Minister of Finance openly proclaiming, in the first place, that the policy of the Government is to add to our taxation, whenever they are asked to do so by anyone who says he will open this or that factory. Sir, I say that that policy is fatal to the progress of this country and tends, as indeed has been sufficiently proved in the course of recent discussions, to add very greatly to the burthens of people in distant parts of the country and to interfere not slightly with the prospect of developing the North-West. That, Sir, is one part of their policy, and apparently these very estimates, these very proposals for additional subsidies, these very grants that have been made, these new liabilities or old liabilities that have been revived, all tend to show that the other part is to add to the debt with the utmost recklessness, with the utmost indifference to what the result may be. I am not going at present, particularly as we will have another opportunity of saying something on that head, to do more than allude in the most general way to the alterations that have been made in the tariff, but I cannot help observing this much, that as to that particular alteration, the duty on sugar, from which the hon. gentleman expects most revenue, it is only too evident that if he does succeed in extracting $400,000 or $500,000 of additional revenue from the imposition of that duty he must necessarily add not less than $1,000,000 to the total burthens of the people, while in many of his other proceedings, in particular in the tax which he is imposing on twines and cordage and the tax on such articles as wire for fences, he has shown himself, I am sorry to say, wholly indifferent to the necessities of the settlers in the North-West. Now, it is no light matter, under the circumstances, when, as I have said, almost the whole future of Canada is staked on the successful development of the North-West that almost on every occasion when a change in the tariff is proposed we find the Finance Minister and the Government of Canada making changes which press, as in the case of the two articles I have named, with very great and very unnecessary severity on the industrious agriculturists who are striving to open up and develop the North-West. I will not at present go on to dwell at greater length on what is only too apparent to all of us in the older Provinces, that is to say, the fact that older Canada has become almost stationary in point of increase of population, nor do I wish to say much more than I have already said with respect to our utter failure to encourage settlement in the North-West, other than this, that I believe that not only I myself, but all my hon. friends behind me here, before the census was brought down by the Government, would have admitted freely, that, in their judgment, there were probably fifty or sixty per cent. more people settled in the North-West than the actual returns of Government show to be the case. I am sorry to say that in all these points the mischief done is almost incalculable. It will be a very difficult matter indeed to reverse the direction which the unhappy policy of the Government has given to the stream of immigration to this country, and until that is done, until that is effectually done, it is idle for us to expect any material alleviation of the burthens of the people or to expect that anything like an adequate return can be reaped by the people of Canada for the enormous sacrifices to which they have been subjected. Now, with respect to these particular estimates which have been laid before us, I desire to point out very briefly some few items out of those, all of which are either totally unnecessary or go to show the extreme carelessness with which the estimates heretofore prepared by Government were submitted. I take these Supplementary Estimates for the years 1886 and 1887, and, first of all, I find a charge of $200,000 is to be inflicted on the people of this country most needlessly, most unnecessarily, for the purpose of administering the Franchise Bill which was put through last Session. I find a little further down that a sum of $399,617 is demanded for the service of the Indians. Now, that may be necessary. I am not going at the present moment to enter into a discussion of that point, but it only shows how right we were on this side of the House in pointing out to the Government that, when they brought down an estimate of three-quarters of a million as sufficient for the service of the Indians, they were utterly and entirely mistaken. I recollect pointing out at that time that, after you had accustomed these savages to an expenditure of nearly $1,100,000 a year, it was almost impossible with any due regard to the safety and peace of that country, to make a reduction of nearly 40 per cent., and that we must be prepared, as the event has shown, to see further estimates to the tune of $400,000 or $500,000 submitted to Parliament, and here is the proof of it. At the same time I pointed out that, if they found it necessary to add largely to the numbers of the Mounted Police, a large additional sum would probably be required for that service, and I find that for that service, wholly apart be it remembered from the expenditure for war purposes, a sum of $150,000 is required; while for additional service of the post office no less than $105,505 is asked. I will not repeat what I said about that. I am willing, and I believe the House is willing, to allow a very liberal expenditure for the purposes of the post office which has a great educating influence on our people, but I am bound to say, when we find the deficit of the post office amounting to $1,000,000 a year, it is time for us to cry halt, and to enquire whether it would not be possible to conduct the service of this country so as to give very much greater accommodation to those portions which really require it without the enormous expenditure, daily and hourly increasing, which we see taking place on that head, and which, be it remembered when I speak of the deficit, does not include the $130,000 or $140,000 which are wanted for the expenses of the head department here, which, if added, would represent a total deficit of very nearly $1,150,000. Then we find, and to this I would direct the special attention of the House and of the First Minister, that our experiments in constitutional law have cost us somewhat dear, and that we are called upon, in time of need, in time of deficit, to pay $125,000 on account of the Liquor License Act. Now, I say that of these several large items, there is scarcely one which might not by wise management have been largely reduced, and many which were most idly and unnecessarily incurred. Then we find a further sum of $100,000 demanded for the service of the Franchise Bill, and we find, although a small item yet one deserving of some special mention, that an attempt—what shall I call it?—to bulldose the Province of Ontario has resulted in a further bill of costs to be paid to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumbering Company for costs to the extent of $11,500. These are some of the items, and some of the reasons which have impelled me to put on record my disapprobation of the policy to which the Government have at present committed themselves. As I said, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House, particularly as we have only a limited period at our disposal to-night, as the facts, after all, are facts which speak for themselves louder than any tongue can speak, and as it is perfectly clear to anybody who examines the details that, in the statements which I am about to make, I am not only not over-stating but that I am under-stating the case. I am not including any of those charges which ought, I think, to be properly put in our annual expenditure for expenditures on public lands; I am not including charges which are improperly charged to capital, and which, I think, ought to go to income, such as the charges for rolling stock and Pullman cars, and other items of ordinary expenditure for the Intercolonial Railway; I am not adding, as I think I might justly add, to our annual expenditure the sums which are granted for railway subsidies, and which, if we grant them at all, I think ought to be charged to annual income and not to capital account, seeing that we have no asset, as a Dominion, to represent them; I am simply taking the facts from the hon. gentleman's own statements, from the documents submitted by themselves, and those facts, I contend, do, of themselves, almost without one word of comment, reveal an amount of carelessness, recklessness and mismanagement in the administration of public affairs which ought to call down upon those who are at present charged with the conduct of the business of the country the severest condemnation of all intelligent people. Without further comment, I now move:

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

That all the words after "that" be left out, in order to add the following:—the expenditure for the Dominion of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1878, was $23,503,158;

That the expenditure for the fiscal year 1884 was $31,107,756;

That the expenditure for the fiscal year 1885 was $35,037,060, including $1,700,000 for war expenses;

That the estimated expenditure for the present year up to the 30th June, 1886, is $38,126,413, including $3,400,000 for war expenses;

That the estimated expenditure for the year ending 30th June, 1887, is $34,220,379, exclusive of any Supplementary Estimates which may be proposed next Session;

That the fixed charges for interest, sinking fund and subsidies, together with the charges for collection of revenues, amounted to $16,970,647 for the fiscal year 1878;

That the similar charges for the year 1885 amounted to $22,442,231, and are estimated at $22,508,469 for the year 1886, and $23,079,082 for the year 1887;

That the total taxation for the fiscal year 1878 was $17,841,938, and for 1885 was $25,384,529;

That the estimated taxation for 1886 is $26,000,000, and $27,200,000 for 1887;

That the actual deficit in the fiscal year 1885 was $2,240,059, including $1,700,000 for war expenses, and that the deficit for 1886 is estimated at $4,900,000, including $3,400,000 for war expenses;

That the growth of taxation and expenditure from 1878 to 1886 is out of all proportion to the growth of trade and population and has attained such dimensions as greatly to hamper and impede the progress of the Dominion, and that the lavish outlay and the methods of expenditure and indifference to the increase of liabilities on the part of the Government during the above-mentioned period have contributed very largely to corrupt and demoralise the public service and to impair the independence of Parliament.

House divided on amendment.

Geological Survey..... $41,600 00

Mr. VAIL. Where is this money to be expended during the coming year? The reason I ask the question is because no survey has been made in the western part of Nova Scotia, and we have been asking from year to year that some examination of the country should be made.

Mr. CASEY. I have time and again on this item pointed out that far too small a proportion of the grant for the Geological Survey is expended on examining and publishing an account of the lands properly belonging to the Dominion. A great deal of money is spent on examining and reporting upon lands belonging either to the Provinces or to private parties, and too little is known of our own domain. Of course we are aware that a passing exploration was made of the North West, and that some abortive attempts were made by the use of the diamond drill to ascertain where coal was located on the supposed coal lands; but that attempt was conducted in such a bungling and unscientific manner that no further operations have been carried on. For the last year or two there has been no report of the soil and climate of the North-West and the mineral resources of the Rocky Mountains such as we ought to have had. I think the Government are not justified in spending so much money examining property of private individuals. We have very elaborate maps and reports on the geology of Cape Breton. This has been developing private property. The Dominion has been sending scientific men to ascertain what quantity of coal exists on certain private property which is for the benefit of the owners only. This may or may not be a proper use of public money. If it is held to be so, it is still more proper to use those funds in ascertaining the value of lands belonging to the Dominion itself. The Canadian Pacific Railway has opened up a vast extent of country, not only in Manitoba and the North-West where the land belongs largely to the Dominion, but in unsettled portions of Ontario. If the Government are going to report on land belonging to private parties or Provinces they should report on this land in Ontario. I am aware that Mr. Macoun was sent along the line of the railway, but it must have been but a very cursory examination made into the climate and resources. It is well known that there must be very valuable mineral deposits in some parts of the Province, at Rat Portage they are known to exist. I want to know whether any large proportion of expenditure is proposed to be spent in developing this new country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The work of the Survey will be as follows: Cariboo District, British Columbia; Rocky Mountains, in the vicinity of the Canadian Pacific Railway, North-West Territory; Regina, between the Bow River and the North Saskatchewan. That will cover a very considerable ground of the North-West. Moise River and part of the shores of Hudson's Bay; and the party goes to the south shore and in the vicinity of Albany River. Explorations will be carried on in the country round Lake Huron, in the Madoc and Hastings districts and in the Eastern Townships of the Province of Quebec; also in New Brunswick and in the north-west portion of Nova Scotia, Pictou, Guysboro', Antigonish and Halifax counties. Those are the places where surveys will be made this year. As regards the North-West, I do not quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman, as I believe that Mr. Macoun made not only a very extensive and thorough, but a valuable exploration, and one which tended to make known the character of that country.

Mr. CASEY. No doubt it was as valuable as it could be made in the course of a hurried trip through the country, but it cannot be called thorough in any ordinary sense,—because Mr. Macoun went through the country in belts very considerable distances from each other, and it would not be possible for him, therefore, to make a thorough exploration. I am glad, however, to join in bearing testimony to the fact that the work was as thorough as it could be made under the circumstances, and in the limited time. I am glad that the suggestions which have been made from this side of the House have been adopted as regards the work for the coming year. I desire to enquire whether it is the Minister's intention to continue to have this report printed elsewhere than by the Government printers, as has been the regular course hitherto. The argument that was formerly used in favor of having the report printed in Montreal was, that the Geological Survey had its headquarters there. Since its removal the Minister has been constantly urged to have this report, like all other reports, printed by the Government printers here. We have been told that the Government printers have not the facilities, though in looking over the report, I fail to see, from year to year, what there is, except the plates, that they could not do quite as well as anyone else.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Parliament so far as this House is concerned has established a printing bureau. At that time we will possess all facilities for doing that work creditably, so that an exchange of reports may at least not be discreditable to the country. So I fancy in that case there will be no doubt whatever that the Geological Report like all other reports, whether special or otherwise, will be printed by the printing bureau.

Mr. CASEY. Is that to be ready this year?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I should be sorry to see the Geological Report printed as one of our ordinary reports this year. The parliamentary printers have done, what as business men they were right in doing, refused to put in new type for the printing of the Hansard, because the contract was for too short a duration. It would be quite wrong to have the printing of the Geological Survey reports done with that kind of type—I am speaking of the kind of type in the office at this moment.

Mr. DAWSON. There was an exploratory survey going on in the Thunder Bay district last year. A very able officer was sent up there and made a very interesting exploration, I understand. Of course, we will see the results obtained when the report is issued. There is a good deal of mining going on in that district just now as well as all over the country, and if the Geological Survey would bestow more attention on mining and less on purely scientific matters it would be attended with a great deal of benefit. Last year we had a good deal of exploration going on, and it seemed to be very satisfactory. In the Lake Superior regions and all through Algoma there are immense fields there, but few people have gone over them. So at the Lake of the Woods, the gold discoveries there have been very important, and researches, investigation and reports by the Geological Survey would tend to lead people into the country and develop those mineral regions.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister if the number of persons he is putting in the field is more or less than last year.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I believe the number is about the same. That is what the director informs me, and there is a supplementary estimate of $15,000 which will bring it up to the amount of last year.

Mr. MULOCK. My reason for asking is this, that last year certain young men were employed for the summer, and I understand they have applied for a renewal of their appointments. I have had some of the replies to them sent to me, in which it is stated that if the same number of parties were put in the field their appointments would be repeated, but if not it would be a matter for the Department to consider.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have requested Dr. Dawson, the acting director, to keep within the estimate, and he is also to act on his own judgment in regard to the persons employed and everything in relation to the survey.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the cost of printing the report each year?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I cannot tell at sight. I may say with regard to the printing that, acting on a suggestion which was made in the House last year and with a view of getting the report more quickly, they are now being put out practically in pamphlet form, each pamphlet on a special subject, so that people can get reports on different districts as they require them. Some three or four reports of that kind have just come out.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood that the printing costs something in the neighborhood of $5,000 or $6,000. I would like to understand if the contract, which was given to the Montreal firm who now do the printing, was given with or without competition.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hardly think this is the proper time to go into a discussion of that kind, but as the hon. gentleman knows very well this work is not done by tender. It has never been done by parliamentary contract; it is specially excepted from the contract, and the only difference between the price paid now and the price paid formerly, is that formerly 50 cents per 1,000 ems were paid and now 35 cents are paid.

Indians—Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.....$34,838 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these amounts distributed where needed for the relief of distress or handed over to the several bands?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A certain amount is for the purchase of blankets and there is $4,200 for the relief of distress among the Indians of the Province of Quebec. This amount is expended each year, and no decrease is possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice there is a slight decrease for Indian schools.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A small amount has been saved, I think, in the salary of one of the schoolmasters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know, generally, how many schools there are, and how many scholars in fair annual attendance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not that information. I will make a note of it and give it on the Supplementary Estimates. This amount is for boys' and girls' schools, industrial schools, salaries of teachers, and so on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the exact position of this Robinson Treaty dispute? I had hoped that a final settlement might be arrived at in these disputed amounts between the Dominion and the Provinces.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The note I have is to this effect: To provide for the payment under the Robinson Treaty of an annuity to 4,897 Indians, at $4 each, $19,588; expenses of payment, $400; total $19,988; less interest accrued on funds invested for these Indians, $4,400, leaving a balance of $15,588, which is asked for.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I remember rightly we have always claimed that Ontario should pay this, and I wanted to know if that claim was admitted?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not settled yet.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I always understood that the amount claimed from the Ontario Government is in addition to the amount now paid to the Indians.

Mr. DAWSON. There is a very large sum due to the Indians under the Robinson Treaty, extending back for years, and the payments now made to them annually have nothing to do with that. They were promised a certain amount if the resources of the territory should ever be sufficient to yield it, and that amount has been paid to them since 1875. Previous to that year, for a very long period, arrears were constantly accumulating, which I understood amounted to $200,000; but I understand that, after a careful enquiry by the Department, the sum has been found to be more like $300,000. This is a large sum to be due to those poor Indians, and it is very desirable that some means should be taken to have these claims settled. The Indians, under the Robinson Treaty, extended from the Georgian Bay and the great lakes to the height of land. The Robinson Treaty made the payment to the Indians a lien on the land, and the land having fallen to Ontario by the Act of Confederation, it is claimed that the Province should pay those arrears. What I contend is that the Indians should be paid in the meantime, the question of which Government should pay the claims being left to be decided afterwards. I do not say that this large amount should be paid to the Indians at once, but that it should be funded and the proceeds used for providing them with schools and farming implements, and for aiding them when they are in distress. I draw the attention of the Government to the matter, so that it may not be forgotten.

Mr. MULOCK. I would also call the attention of the Minister to what I consider the unnecessary expenditures in connection with the Chippewa band of Indians on Snake Island and Georgiana Island. If you refer to the Indian report of last year you will find that that band consists of only 134 souls, and the gross amount distributed amongst them last year was $1,261.94, while the Indian agent receives a salary of $500 a year, nearly half as much as is given to the whole band, although his services are comparatively light. I speak from pretty reliable information when I say that his personal attendance on the Indians amounts practically to nothing. He was only appointed in the fall of 1882, when there was a change in the management. There can be no justification for such a misapplication of public money. There are reeves all through this Province who devote fifty times as much time to the interest of their particular municipality as this man devotes to the affairs of these Indians. I would call attention to another matter in connection with this band. There was an enquiry in the month of February and March last into certain affairs of this band by an officer who was sent from Ottawa to the nearest village. He went on two separate occasions, and the cost of his two trips was $198.25. Looking over his two accounts, I find these items: Board, lodging, &c., from 16th February to 28th February, both days inclusive, thirteen days, $45.50; and board and lodging, from March 1st to 29th March, both days inclusive; twenty-nine days, $101.50 He charges to this Indian fund for forty-two days at the rate of $3.50 a day. The enquiry took place in a small village, and it is absurd to suppose that under any circumstances he was justified in charging that rate during that time. It cannot be said that the $3.50 a day covers any other items, because if you examine his bills, you will find that he has apparently forgotten nothing I am aware that $3.50 a day is the recognised departmental allowance; but there can be no justification, in my opinion, for the continuance of that allowance when officers are not put to expenses that justify it. This officer has charged fully $2.50 a day more than he should have done, so that he has made a clear profit at the expense of the Indians, on this particular transaction, of $105. If he has been making similar profits among the different bands in the country throughout the whole year, he has added a considerable sum to his salary. I presume, that, in view of the status of the Indians now under the Franchise Act, they will receive a little measure of consideration which was denied them before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend has called attention to a fact which really deserves a good deal of consideration, that is the enormous proportion which the salaries paid to agents bear to the sums devoted to the Indians. I am afraid that, in a great many cases, nearly one half the sum the country designs to go to benefit these poor savages really goes to pay the officers who are alleged to look after them, and it is a very great hardship that it should be so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have taken a note of that, in order to call the attention of the First Minister to it.

Indians, Nova Scotia..... $5,032 00

Mr. VAIL. It is very evident that the Indians in the Province of Nova Scotia are in a very bad state of health to require so large an amount for medical attendance. I notice that the amount expended to relieve distress and for the purchase of seed grain amounts to $3,045, while the medical attendance amounts to $1,012, one-third of the amount contributed for the purchase of seed grain. It seems to me out of proportion altogether, and I notice that in some of the counties the charge for medical attendance is between $120 and $130, where the agent only gets $50 for his services for the whole year. It seems to me that those medical accounts require looking into a little. They are growing larger every year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are reduced by $100 this year.

Mr. VAIL. I think last year in the county of Digby $125 was expended, and the year previous about the same amount.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry they get ill, but we cannot help it, we must give them the medical aid and attendance which are required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps they have a surgeon general?

Indians, New Brunswick..... $5,090 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is an illustration of what I was speaking of. These salaries may be used for the benefit of the Indians, but salaries to the tune of $1,870 and a balance of $3,200 spent for the Indians does look like a case of all frill and no shirt.

Mr. WELDON. In Nova Scotia $4,000 is spent for the Indians, and the salaries amount to $900, while New Brunswick requires salaries of $1,870 to disburse $3,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the bands in New Brunswick are more numerous, more scattered than in Nova Scotia, therefore there must be more salaries for the agents and medical men attending to their wants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is evolving that explanation from the recesses of his inner consciousness. I do not think the fact is so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I did not say positively it was, but I think it is likely.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is rather reasoning backward. The hon. gentleman sees these large salaries, and supposes it must be so. I am rather afraid, from my recollection, that the Indians in New Brunswick are not more scattered than they are in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WELDON. They are not so much scattered as they are in Nova Scotia.

Mr. McLELAN. They are very much scattered, and the salary paid to each agent is small.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You pay twice as much in New Brunswick as you do in Nova Scotia. Is not that an invasion on the privileges of Nova Scotia?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I am glad to see that hon. gentlemen are taking so much interest in the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, we are going to do so.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I wish they had paid as much attention to them when they were in power, instead of giving Mr. Cook a rebate of $2,000, which belonged to the Indians. I think that is a matter which ought to be ventilated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $2,000? I see an item of $2,000 for a certain Dr. Jones, who edits, I believe, an Indian newspaper in the Conservative interest. Is that what you are referring to?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). No, I am referring to the logs cut by Mr. Cook in the Christian Islands. I do not know anything about Dr. Jones or about the paper he edits.

Mr. MULOCK. I call the attention of the Minister to the enormous increase in salaries in connection with the management of Indian affairs, not only in the outside service but in the inside service. I will not trouble him with details, as it is not his Department, but last year there was charged to the Indian fund for cost of management over $42,000. It is an enormous sum, and I think unnecessarily large. This sum was paid in salaries and incidental travelling expenses during the past year, and I may say that one very considerable item in connection with that is the item for travelling expenses of agents. If the Minister will cause enquiry to be made, I am sure he will be able to remove an abuse which is becoming very aggravated at present.

Mr. DAWSON. I can say that in our district there are very few agents in proportion to the number of Indians, and they are very badly paid. They receive extremely low salaries, $600 or $700 a year or something like that, and they are devoted to their duties, and take very good care of the Indians. In the district I represent there are as many Indians as in all the rest of Ontario together, and, therefore, the agents have more to do. They manage exceedingly well, and they are not overpaid. The salaries are very low and they attend very well to their duties.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not complaining of any particular agent.

Mr. DAWSON. I am speaking generally.

Mr. MULOCK. There may be cases in which there are grievances, but I think the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) will agree with me that the particular case to which I referred, where $500 are paid to an Indian agent to distribute in all $1,261 amongst a small band of 130 Indians, who are as civilised as the agent himself and quite independent of his assistance, must strike every person who takes an interest in this affair as a waste of the Indian fund. I do not profess to know what advance in civilisation the Indians of Algoma district have made, but the Indians I refer to have lived in a settled community, surrounded by whites, for many years—I will not venture to say how many, but at all events since the commencement of this century—and you can easily see that there is very little necessity for an agent to give them instruction. They are very good farmers in their way, and, if the class of Indians generally who have been enfranchised are represented by those I refer to, I would have no complaint against their having the franchise, provided they are allowed their freedom, but I am sure the hon. member for Algoma will say that his agents cannot possibly be remunerated on the same liberal scale as those I refer to.

Mr. DAWSON. No, they are not. We have a very large number of Indians in Algoma, altogether about 10,000, and the agents are paid at very moderate rates; and, so far as I know, throughout the Dominion, Indian agents are not excessively paid, not even where the numbers of the Indians are small. It is very necessary sometimes in those cases to have an agent to look after their interests. I am exceedingly happy to see that so many hon. members have something to say about the Indians. Some years ago the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) and myself, were the only persons in the House who seemed to take much interest in them.

Mr. WELDON. I find that in Nova Scotia there are seventeen agents who are paid $820 each; in New Brunswick eleven, who are paid $1,213 each. I cannot understand why they should be paid more in New Brunswick than in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if he has established a post office for the benefit of the Chippewa Indians on Georgian Island. There was a petition presented to the Department when he was Postmaster General, asking for the establishment of a weekly mail to the Georgian Island.

Mr. CARLING. I cannot give the information.

Mr. KIRK. There were $1,000 voted last year for building roads for the Indians in Nova Scotia. Has that money been expended, and where?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, The grant was made for a road from Chapel Island to the mainland and it is expected that the road will be finished before the 30th June next, and that no other expenditure of that kind will be necessary.

Indians, British Columbia..... $52,367 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must call the serious attention of the Minister to this expenditure. Now, here are $31,000 asked for the Indians of British Columbia, and so far as I can discover, on examination of the expenditure for 1885, the only sums that could be said to go to the Indians directly were $1,488 for aid to the sick and needy, and $1,344 for medical attendance and medicine. All the rest of the $31,000 goes as follows: Salaries of agents $15,234, of teachers, $2,798; travelling expenses, trip to and fro from Ottawa, of I. W. Powell, $4,149. I was in error on one point, I find that $4,000, in round numbers, goes to the Indians directly. Now, it appears monstrous that barely $4,000 out of this sum of $31,000 should go to the relief and assistance of the Indians. It may be true, however, that such items as are found under the present arrangement are for their benefit, and perhaps the same is true of the reserve commission. I find the salaries range from $1,600 up to $2,600. It appears to me there is something here that requires a great deal of attention before we can satisfy ourselves that this expense is really laid out for the benefit of the Indians who, I have always understood, are rather of a superior class and disposed to attend to their own affairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of $31,030 is divided as follows:—Salaries, $19,580; relief of distress, $1,000; for seed grain, tools and agricultural implements, $1,000; medical assistance and medicine, $1,800; schools, $1,950; travelling expenses, $4,200; miscellaneous, $1,500. The officers, of course, are numerous, because these bands are scattered through the immense Province of British Columbia. Besides a stipendiary magistrate had to be appointed, which increased the amount by so much. Then, there is a caretaker at the reserve. The hon. gentleman finds that the proportion for salaries is great in comparison with the balance. Well, that is so, but the experience of the Department has shown that these officers are required. The hon gentleman knows that there is a local superintendent, Dr. Powell, who has a salary of $3,000. That is the only high salary, except that of the stipendiary magistrate, who has $2,600. Then there is the salary of Mr. Moffatt, and other salaries, varying from $600 to $1,200. The hon. gentleman said, also, that these Indians are of a superior class. Some of them are, but very few of the bands can manage their own affairs. In Ontario and Quebec there are some bands of Indians, such as the Caughnawagas, who, to a large extent, manage their own affairs. In British Columbia there are some bands more or less civilised who can also manage their affairs to a certain extent; but for some years to come we shall have to keep a staff there and look after those Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it hardly appears what the Indian agents can do. To pay an amount of $20,000 apparently for the distribution to sick and needy Indians of $4,000 appears to be a farce. Almost the whole payment is for salary. The only item from which the Indians derive any material benefit is perhaps the item of salaries to teachers which amounts to $2,798. I do not understand what services it is in the power of the agent to render to the various Indian bands. Do the Indian agents reside among them?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Some of them do.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the majority do.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so. The travelling expenses of Dr. Powell, who goes from one agency to another, are included.

Mr. O'BRIEN. One can understand that in British Columbia it is necessary to have resident agents, not so much as distributors of money, but in the capacity of magistrates to maintain order, otherwise the white population might be placed in a very embarrassing position. But we ought to look forward to the time, and that very soon, when the Indians who are now enfranchised will be ready to fully assume the privileges of British subjects. The Oka Indians in the township of Gibson manage all their affairs, and they are no further advanced than other portions of the Ojibeway tribe. I hope the time will come when the Indians will be able to manage their municipal affairs. If they are entitled to take part in party elections, surely they ought to be entitled to manage their municipal affairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In regard to surveys there is an increase of $2,837.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many surveys are made and how many remain to be made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say. The First Minister explained the other day that those surveys would have to be continued perhaps two or three years more, in order to make a complete separation of the lands to the Indians from those of the Crown or private individuals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is proper that the Indians should have their lands surveyed; but this work has been going on for about ten years, and one would imagine it would be completed. Is the land sub-divided, or is it given on the tribal principle?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When I was in British Columbia some years ago, I found that the Indians had separate holdings. I do not know under what tenure, but they had separate holdings, which appeared to be respected by the other Indians, and became the patrimony of the family. No doubt when the surveys took place, the different holdings were surveyed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the difference between the reserve commission and the survey?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reserve commission is that to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and at its head was Mr. Sproat. I do not think the work of that commission can last long now.

Indians, Manitoba and North-West..... $850,784 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the First Minister should be in the House while this item is being discussed. It will be understood, if we waive his presence here, that if we have occasion to discuss an item on concurrence, we will be able to discuss the whole question in connection with it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does a decrease of $16,420 arise in the annuities?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The estimated decrease in the amount required to pay annuities to Indians in Manitoba and the North-West, is caused by the decrease in the Indian population of the Territory, consequent on many of the Indians having elected to become half-breeds. The estimate for 1886-87 was based upon the pay sheet of 1885, and at the time of the payment many of the Indians were scattered over the plains.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They will come back and claim the annuities, you may be sure.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Many of them have declared themselves half-breeds, and therefore have ceased to be considered as Indians, and that being the case, they do not receive the annuities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that in the judgment of the Department, the Indian population entitled to receive annuities is likely to be stationary, perhaps to decrease?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Department seems to believe, not that the Indian population is decreasing, but that a portion of those people that were considered as Indians have declared themselves to be half-breeds.

Mr. McLELAN. In some families, some elect to be called Indians and receive the annuity, while other members of the family take scrip as half breeds. The accountant mentioned, some two or three months ago, that in one district about 1,600 had gone off the list as Indians and had taken scrip as half-breeds.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I may say that while in the North-West, I enquired of many who were familiar with the subject—those who took the census and others who lived among the Indians—and their impression was that the Indian population, contrary to the general belief, was not decreasing, and if that idea is correct—and I believe it was based on pretty accurate information—I do not think we may look for any decrease of the Indian population as affecting the question of the annuities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this item for seed grain, $19,244, a new item?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The note I have is to the effect that of this amount $3,452 are for Manitoba and $15,792 for the North-West. Two-thirds of the sum required for Manitoba will be expended under treaty No. 5, where, owing to the rigor of the climate, the saving of seed by the Indians themselves is very difficult, if at all possible. No vote was taken for the current year. It was hoped that the harvest of 1885 would be so plentiful that not only would the Indians be able largely to provide themselves with food, but would be also able to secure seed enough for next spring's sowing.

Mr. MULOCK. It has been purchased for this year of course. Who is the agent who buys the grain and distributes it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no information on that head.

Mr. MULOCK. Last year, at the outbreak of the rebellion, there was a statement in some of the North-West papers to the effect that one of the Idian agents had supplied defective seed grain to the Indians, and when he was remonstrated with the answer he gave was that it was good enough for the Indians. This was for 1884 and the crops were a failure that year, bad seed having had its results in bad crops, starvation, discontent and all that followed. I am not saying that that statement was sustained by the facts, but there is nothing that should be more carefully looked after than supplying good seed, if we are to do anything at all towards getting the Indians to engage in husbandry.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand that this grain will be altogether purchased in the Territories.

Mr. WATSON. I think a good deal of abuse is practised in the purchase of this seed grain, and last winter when the grain was purchased for this sowing in the western part of Manitoba, there seemed to be something like a job in it. I was at Birtle and Shoal Lake about that time, and the posters were not put up at Shoal Lake until the day after the tenders were supposed to be received. The posters were printed at the Regina Leader office, and it was impossible that they could get there by the ordinary mail route until after the tenders were opened.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This may have been the case in one instance, but I am informed that, as a rule, the posters and advertisements give sufficient notice. I have no doubt that what the hon. gentleman says is true, since he says it is so, but it is not the general rule, by any means.

Mr. WATSON. This is a matter which should receive the serious attention of the Department, as it is not fair to the country nor to the settlers who reside in the vicinity of these reserves. In this particular case parties living along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway had sufficient notice, and they received the contracts, the result being that a higher price had to be paid than it could have been supplied at by local tenderers. The same thing, I believe, happened with regard to cattle.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice by the Auditor General's report that very high prices appear to be paid for some of this grain and seeds. I notice that over a dollar a bushel was paid for potatoes. I notice also that 348 pounds of carrot seed cost $314.80 or nearly a dollar a pound. I notice further that the sum of $5,594 was paid for freight alone on grain after paying these prices. I notice, in addition to all this, that there is $128.24 paid as commission for the purchase of these things. I think some of the prices paid deserve the attention of the committee and the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am unable to say whether these prices are too large or too small, but I am informed that all these supplies have been purchased by tender, and after having been purchased they have to be transported to the different Indian reserves. I have no doubt a large amount of these charges is for cartage, which cannot be avoided in that country until more railways are built.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the stuff had been carted during the recent war, judging by the prices paid then, these charges might be considered somewhat reasonable; but when you consider that $5,594 were paid for carting 7,000 bushels of potatoes and 12,000 bushels of grain to the different reserves, it must have been carried a considerable distance—half way around the globe.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman divides the amount by the number of bushels, he will see that it is not excessive, and he must recollect that the distances are very great, and the means of transport very imperfect.

Mr. McMULLEN. But you must take into consideration the enormous prices that have been paid. Peas, for instance, are charged at over $2 a bushel, without the cartage, and it is well known that seed peas could be bought in Ontario for 75 cents or 80 cents a bushel.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The ordinary merchants have to pay 2 cents a pound for freight from Calgary to Fort MacLeod, and 3 cents a pound from Calgary to Edmonton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the Blackfeet get many peas, things like these are probably given to Indians who are more advanced, and who are comparatively near. Such charges as that for potatoes, which are very easily grown and exceedingly good in the North-West, appear extravagant.

Mr. McMULLEN. Twenty-four bushels of corn cost $61 or $3 a bushel, besides the cartage.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I would call attention to another item in the same connection. For treaty No. 4, some $454.35 were spent for garden seeds and artichokes, for treaty No. 6, $705, and for treaty No. 7, $388.45; altogether some $1,500. These charges indicate either a high state of cultivation on the Indian reserves, or an immense expense for which the report of the Department gives no evidence of any return.

Mr. McLELAN. These supplies were purchased as far as possible by contract, and the hon. gentleman must bear in mind the large number of Indians there are in the North-West and Manitoba, and the distance the supplies have to be transported.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The average number of Indians on these reserves in 1885 was 20,384.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to suggest to the Minister that these supplies could be obtained much more cheaply and satisfactorily if they were to be delivered at a certain point along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and separate tenders were obtained for delivering them on the reserve. At present only some large contractors are able to furnish the supplies, and they do so at prices yielding large profits. If the plan I suggest were adopted, there would be more competition among the manufacturers and produce dealers in supplying the goods, because they could easily ascertain the rates on the railway to the particular points where they would be delivered. They are unable to judge of the cost of freighting them to the Indian reserves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know on what principle ammunition and twine are purchased for the Indians? I see a charge for 3,911 lbs. of twine at $2,136. That is nearly 60 cents a lb. for twine. What kind of twine is that which costs 60 cents a lb.? It appears to me to be utterly out of the way as a charge for such an article.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the nets for the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a great deal more than is ordinarily paid for twine.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That may be, but I know the twine for nets is a very special twine, and costs a great deal more than the ordinary twine.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be about the same price as good thread, and that is from 60 to 90 and $1 a lb.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend here (Mr. Kirk), who knows something about fishermen's nets, says that 10 cents a lb. is the price in Nova Scotia. I should think that any article of twine which would go into the Indians' hands ought not to cost 55 cents or 60 cents per lb. I am afraid, in a good many of these items, that, although there may be nominal contracts asked for, from some cause or other, exceedingly high prices are paid for the articles which find their way into the Indians' hands. Of course there is always at such a distance great risk of abuse, and the matter should be looked into as carefully as possible. I think the hon. gentleman should ascertain something about this twine, from what my hon. friend says as to the price being 10 cents a lb.

Mr. McLELAN. I know that in the Bay of Fundy we cannot get twine for nets for 10 cents a lb.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much do you pay?

Mr. McLELAN. From 30 cents to 50 cents, according to the quality.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If you pay that in Nova Scotia, it is not so unreasonable.

Mr. WIGLE. I remember getting some twine of that kind two or three years ago, which came from Boston and cost 50 cents a pound.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Under the item of $323,590 for supplies for destitute Indians, I desire to make a few remarks, even at the expense of taking some little time of the committee. The importance of the subject not only warrants it but necessitates it. It will be remembered that two or three weeks ago the country was startled—if not this House, the country was startled—by the statements and the speech delivered by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), with reference to the management of our Indians in the North-West by the present Government. At that time the hon. gentleman now leading the House thought it was unfair that the question should have been brought forward in the absence of the First Minister who, we all regretted, was at that time unwell. I regret also that he is not in his place to-night. I would have preferred had he been here, but we have to rejoice that he is not absent on account of illness on this occasion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to say a word on this, not to take his place, but to say that I know the First Minister is desirous of meeting the statement made by the hon. member for West Huron, and, therefore, as the First Minister could not be here, as he was unwell this evening, perhaps the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to postpone the remarks he has to make on this item till a similar item comes up on the supplementary estimates, and I will mention the matter to the First Minister, so that he may be in his place when the hon. gentleman makes his remarks.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very well. The item $52,500 for industrial schools seems to be a pretty large increase. Have any new industrial schools been started?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The estimate for the maintenance of the three Indian industrial schools established at Qu'Appelle, Battleford and High River is $32,500, or an increase of only $548 over that of 1885-86; some articles of household furniture having been replaced. The increase of $20,000 over that sum is to provide for the erection of two new industrial school buildings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you propose to teach these youngsters? Are they for both sexes, or only for boys?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Both.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who has charge of them? Are they in charge of any of the religious bodies?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The principal at Qu'Appelle is Father Hugonard, at High River it was Father Lacombe, but I think he wishes to be relieved of that charge. The one of Battleford is under the charge of the Rev. Mr. Clarke, Church of England.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disposed myself to object to a very considerable increase. If you are going to do any good with the Indians, it must be through the children, in my opinion, and, if the money is well spent, I do not think the House need grudge it, but let the hon. gentleman take a note. I should like to know how many Indians of both sexes are expected to be educated at these schools. I suppose they will teach them all handicrafts?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to a school that has been lately established by a few friends of the Indians at Portage la Prairie. It might be called an industrial school and a day school both. There is a young lady there who has volunteered her services, with the assistance of some pay from friends. I believe they have some thirty Indian children attending the school. They take about two hours in the middle of the day, and the young girls are taught to cook meals for the school, they have a kitchen in connection with the school, and the provisions are furnished by friends of the Indians in the village. I believe it would be well if schools of that description in small towns, where the friends of the Indians would look after them, received some assistance from this vote. I believe it is capable of doing a great deal of good, and last winter there were three or four Indian applicants to have their children attend the public school in Portage la Prairie. I hope the Department will take note of this and give assistance to schools of this description. They can be under the supervision of the Indian agent. Mr. Ogilvie, the Indian agent, lives in the town. These, of course, are not our own Indians in a sense. They are the children of the Sioux Indians, but I believe it is a good work and ought to be encouraged.

Mr. McMULLEN. In looking over the items in connection with the Battleford industrial school, I see that 4,200 lbs. of oatmeal were supplied at a cost of $14 a barrel delivered at Battleford. That is a high price for oatmeal. It is only worth from $5 to $6 per barrel in Ontario.

Mr. BOWELL. In many of these cases, it costs from 100 to over 200 per cent. for freight.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a considerable increase in the amount of $22,445 for farm maintenance. Is there any reason for increasing the vote for farm maintenance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In wages there is an estimated deduction of $4,582. It must be remembered that a very large proportion of the estimated deduction in wages is due to competition, not more than one-third of it being due to the reduction in the staff. Some of the farm instructors are now classed as acting agents, but their salaries remain the same and they draw rations as formerly. The food supplied by the farms cannot, therefore, be at present lessened. Other necessaries are provided, such as flour, bacon, meat and groceries. Other articles for maintenance are liberally provided for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many Indian reserves are served by this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. All the reserves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there a farm on every reserve?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, but the farm instructor embraces a number of reserves in his district.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman give me an idea as to the receipts of these various farms collectively?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is in the annual report, and when the other statement is furnished I will get it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is an item of $92,404 for general expenses. Unhappily this item, like other Indian expenses, is swelling all the time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This sum is divided thus: Manitoba, $5,044; North-West Territories, $17,809. Of course there is an office in Winnipeg, then agents, buildings, fuel, contingencies, stationery, some printing and so on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, but although last year it was very heavy, amounting to $69,000, it has now sprung up at one bound to $92,000, and there is nearly $24,000 wanted for agents and buildings besides. Now, if $69,000 was expected to be enough last year, non constat that $92,000 should be wanted this year, particularly as we are told that there are a good many Indians who, as the hon. gentleman says, have elected to be half-breeds, and are therefore supposed to be outside the jurisdiction of the Department. Here is an increase of over 30 per cent.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course I could go into all the details, but it would be tedious.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, but such a large increase must be a question of policy.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The salaries for 1885-86, in round numbers, amount to $12,000, and this year to $12,447. The increase is for a forest ranger, $700, interpreter, $250; then in travelling expenses there is an increase of $1,600; inspector and agents and their travelling expenses, an increase of $1,637; rents, fuel, medicine and medical attendance, increase $1,959; increase for contingencies, stationery, printing and other items of that kind, $1,500; medical attendance and medicine, $900. The estimated increase so far is $17,809, which may be classified as follows: Salaries, $1,250; travelling expenses, $2,970; rents, $200; light and fuel, $616; horses' feed, waggons, sleighs, stoves, &c., for all the agents, $1,973.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still, the bulk of the increase is in salaries. Is it for agents at present holding office, or have new men been appointed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These are increases in the salaries of these officers in the North-West Territories. There is an inspector appointed at $1,800; an interpreter, who was not estimated in the previous year, $900; four clerks for transfers, $2,480 altogether; a clerk at Prince Albert, $600; an agent at Battleford, $1,200. These are new officers, or increases for promotion. Then, acting agent at East Hill, $730; storeman at that place, $540; acting agent at File Hills, $730; acting agent at Assiniboine, $600; another at $900; and a clerk at $360.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice there has been a good deal of correspondence, the expense of postage was $1,339, telegrams, $1,058. These are many items which appear to be extravagant amounts.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I find there are several amounts paid to persons for superintending Indians fishing, and that is scarcely necessary when the Indians are peculiarly fitted for that occupation. The Department has exercised very great liberality towards newspapers throughout the country. They have given advertisements to no less than 106 newspapers, including every newspaper that I am aware of throughout Ontario and Quebec—of course all of one political stripe. Several papers in the Province of Quebec contain advertisements for supplies to Indians. I presume that the departmental regulations in regard to advertisements have been followed, and that the consent of the Minister has been obtained to advertisements inserted. Such an expenditure in connection with the North-West is a misappropriation of the public money. I quite admit that the Department must have a good deal of advertising to do in the North-West, but it is quite useless to advertise in such a paper as the Hull Despatch for potatoes and seed grain for Indians. These expenditures amount to subsidies to the newspapers to which they are paid.

North-West Mounted Police..... .....$799,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount of pay is for about 1,000 men, I presume ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes

Mr. MILLS. How far are the Mounted Police supplying themselves with forage, firewood and other material of that kind. I understand those sums are charged for in the Estimates, and at the same time that the police force are engaged in cutting and hauling hay and cutting and hauling wood for their own use. Are they paid for that work, or is it part of their duty ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. All those articles are obtained by tender.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I desire to direct the attention of the committee to some purchases made by the supply officer of that Department during the past year. I find that authority was given for the purchase of some forty horses at Ottawa, the first cost of which was $160 each, and when delivered at Regina $172. There were $343 not accounted for by Mr. Coleman, the party authorised to make the purchase. I find that R. R. Pringle, of Cobourg, bought 51 horses, delivered 14th April, at $160, making $8,160, and that added to this there was $116 for the stabling and care of the horses, making $8,276. Mr. Joseph Bigaouette, Quebec, purchased fifty horses at $157 each and was allowed a commission of $10 each, representing $167 for each horse. Now, it seems that they were purchasing horses in the North-West at a much lower price than they were in the east, and at the same time those which were purchased in the North-West were much better adapted for their purpose than those purchased in Ontario and Quebec. It is rather significant that when these horses were being purchased in Northumberland, an election was going on in that county, and that the horses which were purchased there cost more than those purchased in the North-West for the Mounted Police, and it is well known that horses sent to the North-West are, for some time after their arrival, inferior to those which are native to the country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These horses could not be obtained at that time during the trouble; they had to be purchased, and therefore they were purchased in the older Provinces. More than that, although these prices seem to be high to the hon. gentleman, these horses cost a great deal less than if we had tried to purchase them in Winnipeg or any portion of the west, by $50, $60 or $80. It may be that those horses coming from the eastern Provinces were not so good as horses which might have been purchased in the North-West if the troubles had not existed, but it was impossible to get them, and so we had to purchase them in the eastern Provinces, even if we had to pay a higher price.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). If the hon. gentleman refers to the Auditor General's report, he will find that about 120 horses were purchased in the North-West for $22,021 or about $145 each, or something like $22 less than the cost of those eastern horses laid down in the North-West, so that the hon. gentleman's statement is hardly borne out.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The horses purchased in the North-West were saddle horses, while the other were team horses, and, of course, cost more.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I notice that the Auditor General draws attention to the fact that the advances made to Messrs. Bigaouette, Coleman, Pringle and Inspector Norman have not been accounted for except in so far as a return of the horses has been made. Mr. Coleman certifies on his honor that he purchased those forty horses for the Mounted Police and so on, and the amount appears to have been paid on his own certificate and the certificate accepted by the Department—an irregularity which the Auditor General points out, and at the same time draws his attention to the fact that there was at that time a balance unaccounted for by one of the parties charged with the purchase of these horses.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course the Auditor General does his duty in noticing these things, but I am informed that since then those amounts have been paid. The reason he so reported at the time was, that he had not the vouchers in his office. Since that time they have been sent in, and I have no doubt that in the next report he will take care to state that those moneys have been paid.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). In the certificate from the comptroller attached to Mr. Coleman's account, I find it stated that he certified that the account was correct, and that $160 per horse was the price agreed to be paid to R. R. Pringle. It would appear therefore that if that was the price agreed to be paid he was to make what profit he could on them, but in addition to that I find that he is also allowed a commission of $10 per horse. It appears to me that it was an advantageous bargain to one of the parties to it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It may have been so, but the purchase of horses was very pressing at the time, and the Department made an arrangement with that gentleman for so much a head for horses to be delivered at a certain period. Most likely he has made a profit out of them, but that could not be avoided.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that while the price paid in Cobourg in April last year was $160, in the North-West some were purchased at $100, some at $115, some at $118, some at $130, some at $135, some at $140 and so on. I cannot see why so high a price should have been paid at Cobourg, unless it was from the fact that an election was going on, for no doubt those horses purchased in the North-West would answer the purpose quite as well as those purchased in Northumberland. I suppose the reason all those horses were not purchased in the North-West was because no election was going on there. It looks very much like it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will be glad to know that the orders to purchase horses at Cobourg were given after the election.

Mr. HESSON. And the hon. gentleman will find that $195 has to be paid for horses purchased this year, after being advertised all over Canada, and no election is going on. He will find also that they are paying as high as $200 or $225 for certain classes of horses. I fancy they paid less for horses last year than they are doing this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Surely, the hon. gentleman does not mean to challenge the Auditor General's report. I do not see how he can explain that it should be necessary to buy horses in Cobourg, when they could be got for less in the North-West.

Mr. HESSON. Indian ponies.

Mr. McMULLEN. They are not Indian ponies.

Mr. SPROULE. If horses were available in the North-West last year, why are they not this year, when we find people buying them in Ontario to ship to the North-West? You cannot get anything like a decent horse for saddle or general purposes short of from $175 to $250.

Mr. WATSON. The horses which gave the best satisfaction during the troubles last year were the native horses. The Major General, in his report, recommends them in preference to Canadian horses. That being the case, whenever the Government can purchase native saddle horses for the police, they should do so. They are much better adapted for service on the plains, and much less liable to disease or death.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble is they cannot be got.

Mr. GUNN. There were very good horses bought at Calgary last year for $125.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I do not know how well adapted the horses were which Mr. Pringle bought; but his hostler was considered a very good general purpose man during the election, in Middlesex, of my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Cameron).

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I happen to have a statement from the Calgary Tribune which bears out what is said on this side of the House. It is as follows:—

"The North-West Mounted Police authorities at Ottawa recently purchased a number of Canadian horses and sent them to the North-West for the use of the force. This seems like shipping coals to Newcastle, as the imported animals are not equal to the native ones for prairie use. Besides, the selection has been poor, and a number of cripples can now be seen among the new arrivals."

That is the certificate given of Mr. Pringle's horses that were rather electioneering horses for Northumberland than horses adapted for the use of the North-West Mounted Police.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that if that is correct, it seems strange that buyers should be purchasing horses in Ontario at an average of $150 or $160 and taking them to Winnipeg and selling them at a profit. This trade has been going on for over five years. The report of these buyers is that these horses do not do well the first year until they get accustomed to their feed, but that afterwards they do better than the native ponies, because they are larger and stronger.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no desire to question the hon. gentleman's statement, but I know that in my section horses were purchased to be taken to the north shore of Lake Superior to work on the Pacific Railway and I have no doubt that the horses the hon. gentleman refers to were taken there and not to the North-West.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw the way-bills made out for Winnipeg, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. GUNN. The hon. gentleman is speaking of farmers' horses; we are speaking of cavalry horses.

Mr. SPROULE. The standard Government horse is about 900 lbs. weight, and from fifteen and a-half to sixteen hands high. The average weight of the general purpose horse is about the same, and a number of these as well as of the heavy breed, are being purchased to-day for the North-West.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It is known to the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Gunn) and myself that one of the officers who went to the North-West returned to Ottawa with a horse which he got there, and which he considers much better value than a horse purchased in Ontario for the same money. But I do not know that a particular example like that mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) proves anything.

Mr. SPROULE. It shows that a horse purchased in Ontario is valued more highly in the North-West.

Mr. WATSON. The horses spoken of on this side of the House are not Indian ponies at all. They are horses which come from Montana, bred from native ponies; and we have the testimony of cavalry officers that these horses are better adapted for service in the Mounted Police than any Canadian horses. I do not know that the horse brought to Ottawa and driven around here cost very much in the North-West. I think it was brought down here free of freight, and was taken up there free of cost.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I find, under the heading of books and stationery, that an appropriation is made of $200 for the officers' mess of the Mounted Police, while the appropriation for libraries is only $50. I think that the committee generally will concur in my opinion that the vote ought to be reversed. We had some strictures on the North-West Mounted Police that may to some extent arise from the want of such occupation as books will afford, and I believe that, if the $200 was appropriated for books and the $50 for the officers' mess, furnishings and conveniences, it would meet the general purposes of the force better.

Mr. McLELAN. The same book can be read fifty times.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). But the same range cannot be had for $50 that can for $200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will not detain the committee, but I will make one remark for the Minister in charge and also one for the Minister of Militia. On many occasions, as far back as 1879, I called the attention of the head of the Department to the desirability, in my opinion, of providing this force with a larger number of light field pieces, and anybody who has paid much attention to the details of actions in the North-West knows that the bad quality of the guns in the hands of the Mounted Police on one occasion might have led to rather serious disaster. I am not going to say anything more upon the matter at present, but at concurrence or when this item comes up in another shape, as I think it has to, I would like to know whether it is the intention of the Government to see that these 1,000 mounted troopers have attached to them a reasonable number of field pieces. I think that similar services in similar places in the American service have a certain proportion attached, and I should like to know if it is intended to follow the same rule, and what the Government intend to do.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are six pieces now, and two more are being obtained.

Expenses of Government in the North-West Territories $74,400 60

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a large increase; what is the cause of it?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The increases in this consist in the following items: For printing and advertising, last year $3,000 was voted; this year $6,000 is asked. The memorandum given me is that the increase of printing is necessitated by the reprint of the ordinances of 1881 and 1883, and the printing of the Journals of Council which, for want of funds, have never been printed. Then there is a small increase of $500 for stationery, telegrams, postage and telephone. Then for roads and bridges there is an increase from $10,000 to $12,000 and the memorandum is that, as the country settles, new demands are made for the opening up and improvement of trails and the bridging of streams. Then there is an item of $1,000 to build a vault, which is found to be very much needed for the care of the books of the North-West Council. Then for maps and indexes, registry offices and so on, there is an increase of $2,000. The increase in this item is intended to cover the increased expenditure consequent upon the opening of a new registry office at Edmonton. It is thought that the Government will find it desirable to provide the Edmonton office with a proper registry office and vault, the same as at Calgary. Then there is an addition of $500 connected with the light, fuel and stationery of the deputy sheriff's office. For light and fuel for the Council Chamber and Government House, there is an increase of $350. For clerical assistance, there is an increase of $1,900, a rather large sum. The duties devolving upon the office through the operation of some of the ordinances have rendered additional clerical assistance necessary. There are now five permanent clerks in addition to the clerk of the Council, who is paid out of the consolidated fund, and temporary clerks have to be engaged during the sessions of Council and occasionally during pressure of office work. There is an increase under the head of incidental expenses of $1,300. Under this item will be paid constables' fees and expenses in criminal matters where the services of the North-West Mounted Police cannot be procured. Such accounts have been up to this time sent to the Minister of Justice, who now suggests that they had better be paid through this office, as well as those of the proceedings for the confinement of dangerous lunatics and inquests by coroners; for caretaker and messenger, there is an increase of $800. The maintenance of insane patients is increased $500, and contingencies $1,100 These are all the items which make up the difference, in fact, they make up an increase of $14,950, but there are two decreases—$3,000, one-third the cost of the mail service in the North-West, now transferred to the Post Office Department, and $2,000 for surveys which will not take place.

To put in force the Canada Temperance Act..... $20,000 00

Mr. WILSON. I would ask the Minister to explain how this amount of expenditure takes place? As I understand it, the Government do very little to enforce the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We know to what extent the expenditure is borne by the Government. I think most of the cost of the elections under the Scott Act is borne by the Government.

Mr. WILSON. Am I to understand that this expenditure is merely in connection with the elections, and not with enforcing the Act after it is carried?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have nothing to do with the working of the Act itself. We attend to the elections, and pay the expenses. I cannot say it is money wasted, but I know that it is spent in pretty large quantities.

Mr. WILSON. I did not pretend to say the money was wasted, but I felt it was the duty of this Government to try and see that the Act they submitted to the people should be enforced by the Government.

Mr. McLELAN. On page 511, the hon. gentleman will see that $28,242 were paid last year for elections in connection with the Canada Temperance Act.

Payment of Mr. Fabre's salary and contingencies, $3,500 00

Mr. WILSON. The First Minister promised us last year a report as to the working of this department in France. Has that been brought down?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Last year a voluminous report was laid before the House and is in the blue-book. This year, Mr. Fabre has made another very valuable report, which has been sent to the Department of Agriculture and will be published.

Expedition by water to Hudson Bay..... $10,000 00

Mr. WATSON. How is this reduction caused?

Mr. FOSTER. It arises from the fact that there is an unexpended balance, it is an old vote.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. McLELAN. Previous to this $100,000 were voted.

Mr. WATSON. I believe, along with others in the North-West, that the vessel in use for this purpose is not fitted to test the navigation of Hudson Bay and Straits. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated the other day that this vessel was sent more for the purpose of testing the navigation of Hudson Straits than to take provisions to the stations around the bay, and she was supposed to make annual reports as to the flow of ice, &c. Now I think that vessel is but litte more than a sailing vessel. I am informed she is only of forty horse power, and the engine simply acts as an auxiliary in some cases. If that is the case, she surely cannot make a practical test of the navigability of Hudson Straits. If the money is not all expended that was voted last year, I think the Government ought to employ a better vessel for this purpose. I believe, along with many in the North-West, that the importance of the North-West to this country depends largely on the feasibility of the navigation of Hudson Bay, and it is not right that the Government should claim that a vessel of only forty horse power is suitable to test that navigation. She can be little better than an ordinary sailing vessel that has to go with wind and tide, and if she gets into an ice floe, has to stay there for days. There cannot be power enough in the vessel to keep out of the ice in case of a high wind. I believe a powerful vessel ought to be put on for the purpose of making these explorations so that such results may be obtained as can be relied upon.

Mr. FOSTER. It is true that the nominal horse-power of the Alert is about fifty, but that does not give the rate of power that she really has. On account of the build of the vessel and the peculiar construction of the engine, she is really, when her full power is on, as I am informed, equal to a horse-power of from 250 to 300. She is a very substantially built vessel, and, when burning five or six tons of coal daily, she has a speed of from eight to nine knots per hour; of course there are times when a vessel, no matter what may be the power of her engine, or her speed, cannot make her way through the ice, especially ice as it is in the spring, when she first makes the attempt. If the ice was young ice it could be cut through by a powerful vessel fitted for that purpose, but when you get a vessel in ice ten to twenty feet thick no vessel on earth can get through it.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that, but I know a little about engines and engineering, and I know that no engine of a nominal horse power of forty, can run up to 250 or 300. That is impossible, and I do not think it is the case. If it was the case, and she uses six tons of coal daily, and I understand the vessel is only capable of carrying 275 tons of coal, she would only have coal to run forty or forty-five days, and that is not sufficient. It appears to me that the Government, to a certain extent, are trifling with the explorations that are supposed to be made, and as the interests of the North-West largely depend on the opening up of that route, the Government ought to place some more substantial vessel in order to make a thorough test. We know that this report has been made for three years. If this small vessel is not successful for the first three years, it will go to the world that this navigation is not feasible, which would be a great injury to the North-West and therefore to the Dominion.

Mr. McLELAN. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman finding fault with this vessel when she has been used and tested by the British Government and found so well fitted for the service of ice navigation that she was loaned to the American Government and used by them for that purpose. Lieutenant Gordon, who had command of her last year, says she was very well fitted for that service. If the hon. gentleman wished to injure the Hudson Bay route, and injure the interests the North-West has in it, he has taken the very best means to do so by spreading the report that we have not a vessel fitted for the purpose of testing the navigation of Hudson Bay and Straits. We are doing the best that can be done, and taking the means recommended by scientific men to ascertain whether that route is practicable for commercial purposes, and I do not think the hon. gentleman is serving the country or serving that route, in making the remarks he has made.

Mr. WATSON. I have read the reports made by Lieutenant Gordon, and I should judge from them, and from his experience, that the vessel is not of sufficient power to make a suitable test. A vessel with only forty or fifty nominal horse power is not fit to make a thorough test, when ship engines of thousands of horse power are built. The idea seems to be absurd. I am only expressing what is said by people generally in Manitoba, and I feel I am here to express the views those people entertain. They have read the reports of Lieutenant Gordon for the last two years, and they feel that those reports are not so satisfactory and not so good as they might be if proper appliances were used.

Commercial Agencies..... $10,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has this amount been expended?

Mr. McLELAN. It was not expended last year, but it is the intention to arrange for the use of it during the present year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How?

Mr. McLELAN. It is proposed to establish agencies at points with which trade can be cultivated, and to send out gentlemen acquainted with the capabilities of this country to cultivate trade abroad.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What points have been selected?

Mr. McLELAN. No points have been positively selected by the Government. It is believed, however, that Australia is a suitable point, that another point will be in the West Indies and another South America; and it is proposed to employ some of the persons who may be in England during the Exposition to make their special business to cultivate trade and ascertain if trade can be opened up with the various colonies of the Empire, which will have representatives in London.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If this matter is attended to properly it is an experiment that should be tried. Situated as we are in Canada, if we hope to develop our foreign trade some means such as this should be adopted, employing the right men and not going into the scheme too extensively. It is well worth while making the test with Mexico and the British Colonies.

Model Farm..... $20,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the Minister decided where he is going to spend this money.

Mr. CARLING. No place has been selected yet.

Intercolonial Railway..... $2,400,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What deficit, if any, is to be expected this year?

Mr. McLELAN. The account stands something better than it did last year. There was a small deficit last year, but for the nine months covered by the last statement the balance was more favorable than for the same period last year, and it is hoped there will be no deficit in the present year.

Canals..... $460,000 00

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). In regard to the Williamsburg Canal is a man named Pollock now employed as superintendent of the masonry work? Is he at present employed on the canal? I am given to understand that he has been discharged and that another superintendent of mason work has been employed. My desire is to ascertain the reason.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think that is the case. Now that the hon. gentleman mentions the matter I remember hearing something about it. Mr. Pollock was in the employment of the Government, on some of the other canals, by the day, and when his time expired he was not re-employed. He was not employed at the Williamsburg Canal. That is my impression, but I do not of course give it as a positive statement.

Committee rose and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 31st May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. COOK asked, Have any petitions been received by the Government from the Chippewa Indians? If so, what has been done by the Government with regard to them? What wrongs do the Indians complain of? And what steps have been taken by the Government to have these wrongs redressed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The complaints made by the Chippewa Indians of recent date received by the Department are as follows: 1. The Chippewas of Nawash and Cape Croker complain that lands purchased by settlers in the Saugeen Peninsula have not been paid for; also that timber is being cut in trespass on these lands. The settlers have been notified to pay up arrears, and proceedings have been taken against trespassers on the timber. 2. The Chippewas of Saugeen complain that they have sustained loss in their fisheries through sawdust and slabs from mills being cast into the River Sable; also from white fishermen being granted licenses for part of the Sable Beach. The attention of the Department of Fisheries has been called to these matters. 3. The Chippewas of the Thames complain that the managers of the Mount Elgin Industrial Indian Institution have fenced in part of a road allowance on the reserve. The Indian agent and the inspector of Indian agencies have been instructed to look into this matter at an early date.

Mr. COOK. What about the Christian Island Indians?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The answer sent to me does not cover the case of the Christian Island Indians.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Whether the Government have received the following resolution adopted by the Board of Health of the city of Quebec:—

"That the steamship Parisian of the Allan line, on her last trip from Europe to Canada, brought to port a person suffering from small-pox. It is said that the port physician of Quebec did not only not force the steamer to return to Grosse Isle quarantine, but allowed the patient to land at Quebec and allowed the other passengers coming off the infected steamer to continue their route to Montreal, &c, without submitting them to the necessary disinfection, greatly to the detriment of the inhabitants of Quebec and Montreal. That it is Resolved, that this Commission protest against the conduct of the Medical Inspector of the Port of Quebec, and that a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the Ministers of Marine and Agriculture, and praying that immediate steps be taken to enforce quarantine regulations, so that the public health may be protected. A copy of the above resolutions have also been sent to the Hon. Messieurs Laurier, McGreevy and Bossé, the three members for Quebec."

And is it their intention to take any and what steps to remedy that state of things, and prevent a recurrence of such acts of negligence?

Mr. CARLING. The Government did receive the resolution referred to in the question which has been put by the hon. member, and has caused an enquiry to be made into the allegations contained therein. It does not appear that any case of small-pox has been landed at Quebec, but simply a mild case of chicken-pox, which was not of such a nature as to give rise to any danger of contagion, and for which it would not have been proper to cause the return of the Parisian, with her numerous passengers, to Grosse Isle. The statement in the resolution that the ship proceeded on her voyage to Montreal without any of the necessary processes of disinfection is incorrect, as the part of the steamship where the lady was isolated so soon as the eruption on her face appeared was thoroughly disinfected, and, for special precaution, all the persons who came in contact with her were vaccinated. As respects the last clause in the question of the hon. gentleman, it is the intention thoroughly to carry into effect the quarantine regulations. In view of the pointed attack upon Dr. Rowand, the inspecting physician of the port of Quebec, contained in the resolution read before the House by the hon. member, it is considered to be due to justice to read Dr. Rowand's report in reply:—

"QUEBEC, 27th May, 1886.

"SIR,—In accordance with a request conveyed in a departmental letter of the 24th inst., I beg to state for the information of the Department that the statement contained in the copy of the Report of the 'Bureau Local de Santé,' which you were pleased to enclose with your communication, is devoid of foundation. The Parisian on her last trip from Europe to Canada did not bring to this port a person suffering from small-pox.

"The case of supposed variola was a form of chicken-pox. It began to appear on the face of a saloon passenger, Miss Dunn, of Quebec, as the steamship was approaching Rimouski, without any premonitory symptoms. The ship's doctor, Dr. Neville, an able and intelligent physician, considered it a case of measles, and desired the young lady to keep her room, and not to go to the table for dinner. The steamer arrived here late at night on the 15th inst. Before 6 a.m. the following day the ship's doctor and I saw the patient together. I considered it a form of chicken-pox, and I am still of the same opinion. The eruption was slight, pimples wide apart, and though quite recent were beginning to dry up already, which is not the character of variola.

"Although satisfied in my own mind that the case was one of chicken-pox, I ordered the lady's removal home as soon as possible, before the passengers were awake and moving about. She was well covered. She stepped at once into her father's private carriage and was driven home, accompanied by her family physician. Her father's house is separated and isolated, and none better adapted for an infectious case. She was placed at the top flat of this house.

"I have paid the young lady several visits, in order to watch the progress of the case. Four or five dozen of pimples have appeared altogether upon her face and body, getting quickly dry, and easily rubbed off, so much so that before the end of the week of eruption they had all disappeared, and this day she is perfectly well, without a scar, and no trace except an indication that some pimple had been here and there. If it had been variola it would have been at its height and greatest danger now.

"Without arrogating to myself any very extraordinary merit, I think I can in justice say that I am well acquainted with the disease of small-pox. I have always taken charge of the small-pox sheds at the Marine and Immigrant Hospital, of which I am the senior physician, with the view of further studying the malady, and I have had previous opportunities of doing so at Edinburgh, where I graduated, and in London, Paris, and Dublin. Had I mistaken the malady and ordered the steamer and passengers to return to Grosse Isle, and the facts resulted as they have in Miss Dunn's case, I would then have to acknowledge a gross error of judgment on my part; but the course I adopted, I am happy to inform the Department, was the correct one, and the facts connected with Miss Dunn's case show conclusively that she was not suffering from small-pox, and that she has not been a victim to variola.

"I desire to draw the attention of the Department to the fact that the Dr. Park mentioned in the report of the 'Bureau Local de Santé' is the same medical gentleman who accompanied Miss Dunn to her home from the steamer, and who left the steamer with her.

"It is a remarkably strange thing that this health officer, charged with public duty, should, if he were convinced that the case was one of small-pox, have allowed this lady to land, without remonstrance of any kind, or any intimation that the vessel and her passengers should be ordered to quarantine.

"I hope that the explanations which I have given will prove satisfactory.

"I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) "A. ROWAND, M.D. &c.,

"Inspecting Physician, Port of Quebec.

"To the Honorable
"The Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa."

COLLISION BETWEEN LA CANADIENNE AND ALLIANCE.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) asked, is it true that, on the 20th May, 1884, a collision took place in the port of Gaspé between the Government steamer La Canadienne, commanded by Captain Ludger Bolduc, and the brigantine Alliance, of Jersey? Is it true that, in consequence of such collision, an enquiry was instituted by the Government, and conducted by Captain P. A. Scott, of the Royal Navy? Is it true that, at the said enquiry, Captain Scott did not receive the evidence of Commander Wakeham, for the reasons mentioned in the following letter:—

"BOARD OF EXAMINERS OF MASTERS AND MATES,
"HALIFAX, 16th July, 1884.

"SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 12th instant, asking why Commander Wakeham's evidence was not taken at the enquiry into the collision between the Canadian Government steamer La Canadienne and the Alliance, I would say that Commander Wakeham informed me he was not on deck when the accident occurred, nor was he there after La Canadienne rounded the lightship. But he did say to me he saw a light which he afterwards supposed might have been that of the Alliance, and knew nothing further of the matter. As he was not present after rounding the lightship, his evidence was not taken.

"I am, &c.,

(Signed) "P. A. SCOTT,

"Chairman of Commission.

"The Deputy Minister of Marine."

Is it true that Captain Bolduc was dismissed on the 27th May, 1884, and that, on the 17th June following, Commander Wakeham was asked to give evidence which he had not given at the enquiry, and which he gave on the 27th June, out of the presence of the accused, in a simple letter which does not even bear the form of a statutory declaration? Is it true that Captain Bolduc has unceasingly demanded a fresh enquiry, in order to justify himself against the charge of negligence imputed against him in evidence given subsequently to the enquiry? Is it the intention of the Government to grant the enquiry demanded by Captain Bolduc in the following letter:—

"QUEBEC, 7th July, 1884.

"WM. SMITH, Esq.,
"Dep. Minister of Marine,
Ottawa.

"SIR,—I have received your letter of the 3rd July, informing me that no decision had been made to hold a second investigation, and that information had reached the Department that the light of the Alliance was seen from the deck of La Canadienne fifteen minutes before the accident took place. I expect that this information comes from people who would not like to see another investigation held. Further, if the light was seen, the chief officer was in charge of the look-out and was directing the wheel until a moment before the accident, and he left the bridge without notifying me. I am certain that if a proper investigation was held, as allowed to a captain of the merchant service, if the La Canadienne was found in fault for not having seen the light, the blame would not fall on me.

"Your humble servant,
(Signed) "LUDGER BOLDUC."

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to the first question, yes. In answer to the second question, it is true that Capt. Bolduc was dismissed on the 27th May, 1884, and that, on the 17th June following, Commander Wakeham was asked to give evidence which he had not given at the enquiry, and which he gave on the 27th June. This evidence, however, was not considered material to the case. In answer to the third question, yes. In answer to the fourth question, if it appears to the Government that essentially new and important evidence is possible, a new enquiry may be granted.

GERMAN REPRESENTATION IN THE SENATE.

Mr. KRANZ asked, Whether the Government have considered the fact that each senator for Ontario represents, on an average, 80,000 souls, according to the last census, and that there were then over 200,000 Germans in that Province? If so, is it their intention to grant one or more representatives in the Senate to the German minority in Ontario?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government is fully aware of the value and the number of Germans settled in Ontario. Of course, I must give the same answer as I did before. The Government cannot properly state here the advice that they will tender to His Excellency on the point.

POSTMASTER AT FAIRFIELD.

Mr. WELDON asked, Has James A. Floyd been removed from the position of Postmaster at Fairfield, county of St. John, N.B.? If so, at what time, and for what reason? Has any person been appointed in his place, and at what time.

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Floyd was removed from the position, and Mr. David Campbell has been appointed in his place. The change was made on account of the removal of offices to a more convenient place. The Inspector's report of the transfer of offices has not yet been received, and therefore the exact date cannot be given.

DISTRIBUTION OF MEDALS.

Mr. TASSÉ (for Mr. Royal) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to grant North-West rebellion medals to persons other than military men, having done duty as war correspondents during the campaign of spring of 1885?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to my hon. friend, I may say that it is not the intention of the Government to grant medals to persons other than military men, who have been engaged during the campaign of spring of 1885?

OUTRAGES IN ORANGEVILLE AND CLANDEBOYE.

Mr. McCRANEY asked, In view of the partial blowing up, on two occasions, of the house and business place of the police magistrate under the Scott Act, at Orangeville; the destruction of the house and office of the inspector at Clandeboye, North Middlesex, the burning of barns and other overt acts elsewhere; is it the intention of the Government to offer a suitable reward for the discovery of the offenders?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question involves a statement of matters of fact with which the House is charged. Therefore the question is irregular; but I would say that if the facts stated in the question are facts, it is the duty of the Government of the Province to attend to the punishment of the parties, and, if they think proper, to offer a suitable reward.

H. J. BEEMER—CLAIMS AGAINST GOVERNMENT.

Mr. KIRK asked, What was the amount of Mr. H. J. Beemer's first claim made against the Government for extras in connection with his contract for building the Dufferin gate at Quebec? When was the claim presented to the Government? When was it paid? Did he make any further claim? If so, when? And what was the amount thereof, and how much was paid him on such account?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This question was put to the Minister of Public Works two years ago by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), but, nevertheless, I have no objection to answer it again. There was only one claim made against the Government by Mr. Beemer; it was for the amount of $16,220.94. The claim was presented on the 12th November, 1879, and it was the claim of the previous contractor to whom Mr. Beemer succeeded on the 8th October, 1879. The balance of his contract was paid in October, 1883; this was $4,998.08. His claim of $16,220.94 was reported upon by the Chief Architect of the Department in February, 1884. An Order in Council was passed accordingly on the 25th February, 1884, by which the Government agreed to pay to Mr. Beemer $5,000 in full of his claim of $16,220.94, and the money was paid as above mentioned, that is to say, $5,000 in full of $16,000, on the 24th April, 1884, Parliament having voted the amount by the Supply Act, sanctioned on the 19th April, 1884.

HECTOR FABRE—AGENT AT PARIS.

Mr. COURSOL (for Mr. DESJARDINS) asked, Have the Government received, this year, a report from Mr. Hector Fabre, Canadian agent, at Paris; and if so, is it their intention to lay the same before Parliament?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg to state, in the absence of the Secretary of State, that the report from Mr. Fabre has been received this year, and it is the intention to lay it before Parliament.

FRENCH IMMIGRATION.

Mr. COURSOL (for Mr. DESJARDINS) asked, Have the Government appointed any person to carry on in France the work of Rev. M. Labelle in behalf of emigration? If so, is the appointment a permanent or a temporary one? Are the Government in possession of correspondence or reports as to the nature and progress of such work; and if so, is it their intention to lay such correspondence and reports before Parliament?

Mr. CARLING. The Government have temporarily employed Mr. E. Agostini, a member of the delegation who came out with Father Labelle. He has made a report, which will be printed and laid before Parliament.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the bounty of one dollar and fifty cents per ton on pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore, authorised to be granted until the 30th day of June, 1886, by the Act 46th Victoria, chapter 14, may continue to be granted by the Governor in Council until the 30th day of June, 1889; and that a bounty of one dollar per ton on pig iron so manufactured may, in the manner by the said Act provided, be granted between the 1st day of July, 1889, and the 30th day of June, 1891; and that the provisions of the Act above cited shall apply to the bounties which the Governor in Council is hereby empowered to grant.

Mr. BLAKE. To-morrow.

Mr. McLELAN. I had hoped that, this having been given notice of so early, it might have been allowed to go on to-day.

Mr. BLAKE. We have been in Session now three months. I am sorry the hon. gentleman was not able to make up his mind to that a little earlier.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman can give me the information now, well and good; if not, I will ask him to do so to-morrow—what amount of money has been paid under this Statute up to date; what grants have been made or bounties paid?

Mr. McLELAN. I can give that to-morrow if we are not going on with it to-day.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

NORTHERN AND PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That the further consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 25) respecting the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company be transferred to Government Orders.

Mr. MULOCK. The Government have chosen to father this motion, but as yet they have not offered any reason why they should take the course they have chosen to adopt. It has been pointed out already during the debate upon this measure that a very extraordinary course was adopted in dealing with this Bill. It has been shown that, whether by accident or otherwise—and I am not, of course, able to say, but I must assume it was by accident—this Bill did not receive the treatment that such Bills generally do receive. It has been shown by admissions here that this Bill, when before the Railway Committee, was hurried through, and that the facts that ought to have been investigated were not investigated. It was submitted to the committee about five minutes before the hour for adjourning, and was, I may say, forced through the committee without consideration at all. The committee has never discharged its duties in regard to this Bill. The committee has never investigated the evidence on which this amendment is asked. The House has not the facilities for taking the evidence that is necessary and that, I think, should be taken before the amendment proposed by the Senate is concurred in by this House. There are grave questions of fact involved in this amendment. How does the hon. Minister, or the Government, or whoever advocates this course, propose to investigate the facts, a knowledge of which should precede a judgment. We have no evidence whatever on the matter. The House of Commons took no evidence on this point. The amendment originated with the Senate, not in this House. The Senate chooses to amend a Bill, alleging in their amendment a certain state of facts. What evidence did they proceed upon in investigating those facts? Had they that evidence which they ought to have had? They choose to allege in their amendment an understanding between the Government and this railway company. How did they come to know about that understanding? Did the Government inform them about that understanding? If the Governm nt informed them about that understanding, why did they not inform this House that there was such an understanding? When this Bill was before this House for hours, not a single member of the Government ventured to tell the House that there existed such an understanding as is alleged in the Senate amendments. The Government proposes that this House, without an enquiry, shall adopt the recitals set forth in the Senate amendment as a foundation for coming to a conclusion. I intend to move an amendment referring this matter to the Railway Committee. If that is concurred in, of course I have nothing further to say on this motion, but if it is not, of course I must discuss what it is proposed to refer to this House. The Senate amendment recites as follows:—

"Whereas, by the contract between Her Majesty the Queen and the Company set forth in Schedule B hereto, it is agreed that in the event therein stated the Parliament of Canada may cancel the lease therein mentioned and take over the portion of the said railway between Gravenhurst and Callander free from encumbrance, upon assumption of the bond or debenture debts of the Company to the amount of eight thousand dollars per mile of that section of the railway, and upon payment of any further sum of money beyond the said bond or debenture debt of eight thousand dollars per mile and the subsidy paid to the said Company, as the said railway may then be worth the value to be ascertained in manner therein provided:

"And whereas, in arriving at the said agreement the Government assumed that the expenditure of the Company in respect of the said section of its undertaking would not exceed twenty thousand dollars per mile; but the said railway being now nearly constructed, it appears that the expenditure will greatly exceed such sum, and it is expedient to provide that the right of Parliament to take over the said railway should, subject to the proviso hereinafter stated, be upon assumption of the bond or debenture debt of the Company, not exceeding twenty thousand dollars per mile of that section of the railway, instead of upon assumption of eight thousand dollars per mile of that section."

How did the Senate learn what the Government understood in 1884 when they entered into that agreement? If the Government so understood it, why did not the Government so inform this House when it was dealing with the question? Was it an after discovery, or in what form was the understanding of the Government, which is sought to be used as a lever for changing this agreement, communicated to the Senate? Was it through a member of the Government? I understand that there is only one member of the Government in the Senate. Was he the medium to convey to that body the understanding of the Government at that time? If not, was it communicated by writing, or how did the Government communicate that understanding? More, I ask what record there is of that understanding. The only apparent record is the sealed agreement. Is that the way this Government draws its bargains, its contracts, that it is going to wipe out agreements involving millions by some hazy understanding of what the Government may have thought when they entered into that agreement? I submit that contracts affecting the property rights and privileges of the people of Canada which are entered into under Order in Council, which receive the sanction of the Governor in Council, which are surrrounded by all the solemnities and formalities necessary to a contract, cannot be wiped out by a mere hazy statement to another body that the Goverment meant something very different when they entered into that agreement. What would we think of a private individual who came into court and asked to have a contract set aside because he thought differently, without assigning that there was a mistake or that there was any error, but simply saying he contemplated something different? If it was understood at that time that the right to bond this road should depend on the cost of the road, that would have been the agreement, and I submit that the agreement then entered into is the only agreement, that there was no such an understanding, that no record of such an understanding can be brought to light, or, if it can be brought to light, it is too late, after the company has received $1,320,000, which it has received on the faith of that agreement. The company themselves never asserted the existence of such an understanding in addition to the agreement. They received the money on their agreement, upon a contract set forth in that agreement. In no way whatever did they ever seek to protect themselves against the language of that agreement, at any stage in their negotiations with the Government. Since this matter was before the House, I have received what seems to me important information in regard to this matter. The Government seek to vary this agreement on the ground that the expenditure made by the company exceeds $20,000 a mile. I believe that is the ground on which they say they are justified in allowing this agreement to be varied. First of all, that was not the ground taken. First of all, the ground taken was what this road had cost, I do not know to whom, to a company or to whom, but what it had cost. But latterly we find the Government taking this ground that, whatever the expenditure has been upon that line, I suppose by the company with its contractors, to that extent at least this Government and this House ought to postpone the Government's right. That,

I think, is the position the Government takes. I submit that is not the test of the value of this road, that we are not justified in postponing our lien except on the terms of the agreement, which are to the effect that the value of the road is to be ascertained at a certain time, and that when the country chooses to take over that road it can do so at its then value, less the bonus the country has given to it. That is the position the agreement puts us in. Now, the Government say that that ought not to be the position, because the company has paid out more money than they ought to have done. To whom has it paid that money? Has the money it has paid out gone into the building of this road? I state, Mr. Speaker, that I have received information which I consider reliable; it comes from a sub-contractor; it is information that I think the Government is bound to investigate before it assumes that the cost of this road is the amount paid by the railway to these original contractors. I understand that in the process of the construction of this road a contract was entered into, as set forth in the memorandum distributed amongst the members the other day, and that these contractors sub-let the greater part of that work at prices far less than those they received from the company. If so, the prices that the sub-contractors were paid indicate the real amount of money expended in the construction of this road, and if to-morrow there was an arbitration to ascertain the value of this road, the question would be: How much was actually paid for the work done and the material supplied in the construction of the railway? That would be the issue, and we would then take into consideration the shave made by the original contractors. Now, I have received such information. It may not be correct, but I submit it is the duty of the House to investigate the state of the facts before dispensing with the taking of evidence and coming to a conclusion. I have information that the railway company issued a contract as set forth, and that the contract provided for the doing of the work, not at so much per mile, but by piecework. I have been furnished the following figures at which the company gave the contract to the contractors, and those at which the work was sub-let, viz.: That the earth work was let at 28 cents per cubic yard, and sub-let at 20 cents per cubic yard; that the rock work was let at $1.80 per yard, and sub-let at $1.30 per yard; that the pile driving was let at 40 cents per foot, and sub-let at 25 cents; that the grubbing was let at $200 per acre, and sub-let at $100; that the timber for trestles and culverts was contracted at $30 per thousand, and sub-contracted for at figures varying from $18 to $20; that the taking out of the foundation for the bridges and the culverts was let at $1 per yard, and sub-let at 30 cents per yard. Those figures are furnished to me, not by the sub-contractor himself, but by a person who knows this sub-contractor, who handed them to him, and assured him that they were absolutely reliable. When he gave them to me I asked him again to see the sub-contractor and be perfectly sure there was no mistake about it, and he came the second time and told me that these figures were absolutely reliable so far as his informant was concerned, and that his informant was a reliable person and thoroughly trustworthy. Under these circumstances, I submit that it is my duty to inform this House that if this is the kind of test of the value of the work, that value must be ascertained, not by the nominal price at which the work was let out, but by something like the real price which the men who really did the work contracted for. Now, does it not seem eminently proper, under the circumstances, that this state of fact should be enquired into before we proceed further, if it is necessary to proceed. If the Government say there is not time to refer it to the Railway Committee, there is one way by which they can proceed. A great deal of this matter will rest upon documentary evidence. I presume there is a written contract between the railway company and the contractor. There cannot be much difficulty in laying that before the House. I presume there are sub-contracts, and there can be no difficulty, no practical difficulty whatever, in all these documents being forthcoming before the House is asked to concur in these amendments. If the excuse that there is no time to refer it to the Railway Committee prevails, certainly there can be no excuse for saying that the documents should not be laid before the House before we come to a decision. For these reasons, I beg to move an amendment: That said amendment be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The speech of my hon. friend would have been more relevant if it had been made after this motion was carried. The motion is that these amendments made by the Senate should be put upon the Government Orders, so that it might be fully discussed. The House will remember the circumstances. There was only one hour allowed for private Bills by the rules, and when this was discussed, your attention was called to the fact that the hour had expired, and therefore the debate was not concluded. Therefore, considering the importance of this railway to the trade of Toronto and the western peninsula generally, that this Bill, although nominally a private Bill, was of so much importance to the general trade of Ontario, I thought, and still think, that the whole matter ought to be fully discussed, and in order to do so it must be put upon the Government Orders of the Day, otherwise it must be thrown over for this Session, and the request of the company contained in these amendments, could not, of course, be complied with, and the company will be, in fact, without funds to complete the road as it ought to be completed. They cannot raise funds to complete that great link between the Ontario trade and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it cannot be made perfect unless the relief that is asked for be granted. I propose that the hon. gentleman should allow this resolution to pass, that the amendment be put upon the Government Orders, so that the discussion can go on and be completed. Those who are in favor of the proposition will support it, as I will be prepared to support it, on the ground of public utility and of its great advantage to that part of Ontario; and those hon. gentlemen agreeing with my hon. friend will have an opportunity of discussing the matter when it is brought up as one of the Government Orders.

Mr. COCKBURN. I had an opportunity of observing some of the operations with respect to the construction of this road, and I think it proper to state what my impressions are with regard to it. I do not profess to know much about the cost of building railways, but I can say this, that the road is an excellent one. Of course, we expect that the contractors will have a margin over what they pay to the sub-contractors. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has spoken about a margin between what the sub-contractors and contractors are receiving; but I know from my own personal knowledge that a large amount of work has been performed by the contractors themselves and that a large portion of it could not be sublet, and further, that a large portion remains yet to be done. Not only have the contractors done much of this work, but the company itself has been doing part of it, and is doing work still. I had an opportunity of observing the management and the mode of conducting the work, and I have a strong impression that it has been conducted in a very business-like manner. I do not think the manager of the Pacific Junction could have been in collusion in any way with the contractors; on the contrary, I am of opinion that they have been dealing very honestly with each other, and I do not know of any grounds for suspecting collusion. I know from personal knowledge that a considerable amount of money will be required for sidings and curves to make connection with the different waters which will be tributary to the line. I, therefore, think it desirable that the company should have sufficient means to complete the road and equip it as a first-class work. It is very difficult for anyone here to judge just how much money the company will require; they must be the best judges themselves. I am, however, aware that a very considerable amount will yet be needed to finish the road, provide equipment, make the sidings and water communications. I make these remarks from my personal observations of the work. I say that it is an excellent work, that it has been conducted in a very business-like way, and also very expeditiously, and I do not see any ground for supposing that collusion has existed between the company and the contractors. I think that Mr. Barker has watched the contractors' accounts very closely in the interests of the company. I repeat that it is desirable that the company should have ample means to complete the road properly and equip it as a first-class road, and this is desirable in the public interest.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think anyone disputes the necessity for the road, or its desirability. The country has willingly given $12,000 a mile toward its construction, and the argument of the hon. gentleman who has last spoken does not touch the merits of the question now involved. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has put forward certain reasons why the Bill should not receive the support of the House. I agree with him to a very considerable extent as to the objections which he has presented from a public standpoint. But the First Minister has put the case very fairly. He has said it is not desirable to discuss the question simply at a preliminary stage, and he has made the suggestion that the hon. gentleman should withdraw his motion in order that there may be a full discussion when the item appears among Government Orders. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman will be guided at all by any suggestion I may make, but I think it will be well to accept the suggestion of the First Minister, and let the subject be discussed when it is fairly up before the House on its merits, not upon a motion such as this.

Mr. MULOCK. It is perfectly clear to everyone that the suggestion of the First Minister does not meet the case. The suggestion amounts to this, that the facts shall not be enquired into, because the House has no facilities for enquiring into the facts. Supposing it should turn out that this road cost $1,000,000 less than it is allowed to be bonded for, would it be right to postpone our claim for that amount?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the hon. gentleman quite understood me. My idea was that the motion to refer to the Railway Committee should be made after this item is made a Government Order.

Mr. MULOCK. After the motion is carried, when can I make such a motion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This will be put upon the Orders of the Day, and, when it is called, the discussion can go on where it was prematurely closed the other night.

Mr. MULOCK. We do not know when the Government may take an Order up. This may be brought up at a late hour, when there are very few members present. I cannot consent to the proposition, unless the First Minister will say when he will bring up the motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are not so many Government measures on the paper as to cause the hon. member inconvenience. I have no doubt, from his well-known attention to the business of the House, that he will be present when the matter is brought up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is all very well, but I hope we shall not be here very much longer, and the Order might be called at an unholy hour of the morning, when the hon. gentleman, notwithstanding his devotion to public duties—and he is a very constant member of the House—and those opposed to the proposal, might not be present. I would suggest to the First Minister that it would facilitate business to make an arrangement to take it up at some certain time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As soon as the Franchise Bill is through I will be ready to bring it up.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that the motion to place it on the Government Orders will now be considered carried, and it will be placed on the Government Orders of the Day; and that the Franchise Bill will be proceeded with, and, so soon as it is disposed of, the next Order will be this Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Amendment withdrawn, and motion agreed to.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Order for third reading of Bill (No. 138) respecting the Electoral Franchise, &c., read.

Mr. THOMPSON. When the Franchise Bill was before the House in committee, the fact was mentioned that it might be necessary to revise two or three of the sections before reading the Bill the third time; and to give greater facility for that, I move that the present Order be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering the same.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman, before making such a motion as that at this stage of the Session, and with reference to such a Bill as this, should state, while the Speaker is in the Chair, what the general nature of these proposals are, for, if it is to go back into committee at large in this way, it is possible we may hear of serious amendments in all quarters. If it is simply a question of revising two or three sections to carry out the agreed intentions of the House, that is another question. I understood that to be the hon. gentleman's statement; but certainly he will expose the Bill to further consideration by the general proposal he now makes. I should like to know what the general character of the changes are which the hon. gentleman is desirous of introducing into the Bill, before, for my part, I should feel disposed to agree to its reference back to committee.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to state what the proposals are. In the first section of the Bill, which deals with the franchise of farmers' sons and gives the franchise to the sons of tenant farmers, I propose a merely verbal alteration which will make the section read a little more plainly. In sub-section 3, section 2, there is also a verbal alteration merely. In section 2, sub-section 9, with respect to the fisherman's franchise, I propose merely to add the words "resident in the electoral district," because otherwise the clause would disfranchise a fisherman wherever he was. Then section 4 is the section by which these clauses which changed the franchise were suspended until next year; but on account of the state of the Bill it was impossible to give the numbers of these sections, so as to see what the sections were which should be suspended; and it is therefore necessary to specify them. Now, it says, "the two sections of this Act next preceding this section," whereas we must also include the section which gives the franchise to the sons of tenant farmers, and, in fact, all those sections which create a new franchise, but leaving the franchise on the same principle as that on which we agreed that the other sections should be suspended in operation. I intend also to move that the section which relates to procedure, and imposes certain penalties on persons who do not attend the final revision, shall likewise be suspended until next year, for the reason that as many of those provisions are very close, and all of them will take place within a short time, we are imposing penalties of which the public will have no opportunity of acquiring information. In the place of section 5, I propose to offer a re-drafted section to meet some of the objections which were made to the language of the clause in committee; it will make no substantial alteration. It will be remembered that exception was taken to the language, in consequence of its seeming to be implied that the son had to prove residence with the father, even though his father were dead. The clause is re-drafted, enlarged and made plainer, but no substantial alteration is made. Then as to the oaths of qualification, I propose that instead of having one form with elaborate instructions to the presiding officer to change that form to meet the cases of farmers' sons who are absent in institutions of learning, and absent in various other ways, I propose to have a separate form for each class. The voters' list also requires a little alteration. The date was placed at the 1st of July, whereas we have made it the first of June. I wish also, in the voters' list, to alter the term "sub-division" to district, which is the word used in the Act. I would also ask the committee to reconsider the propriety of striking out the word "particular" before description. That was discussed in committee, and I think my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) was in favor of striking it out. I found, on enquiry, that in some of the Provinces there is no means of making a particular description of the property, without having to add a great deal more space than is intended. Then I propose to move an addition to the sections which we left in suspense—No. 11 of the original Bill—with regard to the preliminary list of this year. The object of that section is to confirm what the revisers have done with regard to the preliminary list. Instead of making a sub-division of a polling district and re-publishing their list in the first instance, I intend to declare that it is sufficient for the present year. Those are the only alterations.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the following be inserted at the ninth line:

Farmer's son means and includes the son of an owner and actual occupant of a farm, or the tenant and actual occupant of a farm, under lease for a term of not less than five years.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to move an amendment in the interpretation clause, so as to make the definition of the word "owner" agree with the other amendments, and to meet the difficulty which was experienced in the Howland case, and other difficulties:

"The expression 'owner,' when it relates to the ownership of real property situated elsewhere in Canada than in the Province of Quebec, means a proprietor either in his own right or for his own benefit, or if such proprietor is a married man, it means a proprietor in his own right or in the right of his wife, or the person whose wife is such proprietor of a freehold estate, legal or equitable, in lands and tenaments held in free and common soccage, of which such person or the wife of such person is in actual possession, or in respect of which such person or the wife of such person is in receipt of the rents and profits.

"The expression 'occupant,' means a person in actual occupation of real property otherwise than as real owner, tenant, usufructuary, in his own right, or in the case of a married man, in his own right or in the right of his wife, or whose wife is in such actual occupation, and who or whose wife receives to his or her own use and benefit the revenues and profits thereof.

"The expression 'father' includes grandfather, step-father and father-in law, and expression 'mother' includes grandmother, step-mother and mother-in-law.

"The expression 'son' includes a grandson, step-son and son-in-law.

"The expression 'actual value' or 'value' means the then present market value of any real property if sold upon the ordinary terms of sale, provided that the assessment rolls as finally revised for municipal purposes shall be primâ facie evidence of the value of such property."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. I move to add to sub-section 4 of section 2, on page 2, at line 26, after the words "list of voters," the words, "so far as depends on the amount of rental." It is merely to show the proper qualification.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to amend sub-section 6 by striking out the first words, which will make a very important change. The sub-section says: "Is a resident within an electoral district and derives an income of at least $300." I propose to strike out the words "resident of an electoral district," to be followed by another clause, so that an income voter may be registered either where he resides or where he earns his income. We found the other night that the clause I had prepared was inconsistent with these words, and I will leave out these words and follow up by another clause. The clause I propose to move will give the option to the voter of being put on the list, either where he resides or where he earns his income.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the voter is to be prevented having a vote in the place where he resides and also in the place where he earns his income?

Mr. McCARTHY. If a man has a vote in an electoral division as a freeholder, for instance, he goes on as a freeholder, and if he earns his income in another division, I want to allow him to go on the list there also.

Mr. BLAKE. The holder of a salary of $300 a year or the mechanic who earns that by his employment, and who lives in one ward of Toronto and labors in another, will have a vote in each.

Mr. McCARTHY. That would be the result. If he lived in the county of York, outside the city, and also inside the city, he would be entitled to a vote in the city.

Mr. MILLS. It is not the principle of one man one vote.

Mr. COOK. A laborer, domiciled in Ottawa, spends his winter in the woods. Would the income he earns in the woods apply here?

Mr. BLAKE. It would give him a vote in the county where he earned it; he gets his vote here as a resident.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know whether it is intended to allow income derived from an investment to give a vote. We ought to guard against that.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think we need trouble about that.

Mr. MULOCK. Strike out "anyone can vote who has an income derived from an investment." That is giving undue advantage to men of property who have invested money and get an income from it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think, practically, it will apply anywhere except in the cities.

Mr. MULOCK. A man has a debt due him of $5,000 in a riding, at interest; has he a vote on the income he gets from that?

Mr. McCARTHY. I would not call that an income.

Mr. MULOCK. The sub-section says, "derives an income of at least $300 annually from his earnings in money or money's worth &c, or from some investment in Canada." That would cover any debt.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, we will limit it to his calling, office or trade.

Mr. WELDON. The principle that prevails in New Brunswick is that a party who is assessed on an income in a place in which he does not reside has a vote there. Do you not think the section should read, on an income on which he is assessed in the electoral district?

Mr. McCARTHY. In the Ontario law there is no assessment on income. A man may earn $300 a year, and not be liable to pay assessment taxes. He is entitled to vote on pretty much the same qualification, but yet he is not assessed, and this spring there has been great difficulty. About 3,000 voters had to be put on the Ontario lists on the evidence which had been put together under this Bill, because they were not on the assessment roll at all.

Mr. BLAKE. What does the hon gentleman understand to be the present Ontario law as applied to this point?

Mr. McCARTHY. I suppose it is one man one vote, so that it would make no difference in that regard, but up to this time many people have enjoyed the privilege of voting twice. In Toronto, for instance, most of the business men probably earn their money in the centre division and live in the suburbs, and they have enjoyed the privilege of voting in the east or west and also in the centre, and they do not like to be deprived of that, when we have not adopted the plan of one vote for one man.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this is a very objectionable amendment. It will give the people in towns and cities the opportunity of voting twice while the people in the rural districts can vote only once. It gives an advantage to the towns and cities over the rural districts. There is another objection to it. There is a very strong inclination now on the part of people living in towns and getting a yearly income, owing to the high taxation in the towns as compared with the townships, to buy a small property outside of the corporation which they will get at a rate of assessment very much less than in the town. This will be an additional inducement to them to get a residence outside, as they will have a vote on their income inside the town and a vote on their residence in the other municipality, provided they are in two different districts. This, undoubtedly, will be an additional inducement to people to go outside of the city corporation in order to get a double vote, as there are so many facilities in all the cities, in the way of street cars and so on, for reaching their places of business. This is a wrong to the rural districts. It is giving the people who live in cities and towns two votes for one given to the farmers and farmers' sons. It is doubling the power of the cities against the rural districts. If you do this, you should give the farmer two votes, if he has the property.

Mr. SPROULE. I should think it would be an advantage to the rural districts, because it would make the city people move out and live there. Besides, it might be the other way. We have some farmers who have property in the cities, and they may move into the cities to get a vote there.

Mr. McMULLEN. The interests of the farmers and the interests of the cities do not lie in the same direction. If a question arises in regard to matters in which the cities are more deeply interested, such as we have had in the past and may have in the future, the farmers will be represented in this House only in the proportion of one against two. The cities will have two votes to one for the farmers.

Mr. SMALL. Does the hon. gentleman contend that this gives two votes in the one electoral district?

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. No; but we object that it gives property a vote instead of the individual. I believe there should be one vote for one man, and no elector should be allowed to cast two or three votes when another is allowed to cast only one. I believe the principle is vicious and the clause should be retained, providing that the voter should be a resident within the electoral district.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I understood the entire principle of the income vote was that a man should not be deprived of the vote because he had not property but had an income, but this goes further and gives him two votes. If a man pays $2 rental in one division, that gives him a vote, and if he works in another division, that gives him a vote on his income. We are getting away from the principle on which the income vote is given altogether, and are doing injustice to the farming community.

Mr. WELDON. We had a principle something like this in New Brunswick, but our franchise was based upon assessment, and there it could be applied, but it seems to me that the amendment in the direction proposed by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is a departure from the principle of the Act. This Act is based upon residence and property, not upon income or assessment, and it seems to me that the basis upon which the Act is founded, requires a man to have property or residence to obtain a vote. By the amendment you make it simply income. I think it would be far better to let it remain as it is.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think, as my hon. friend says, this is a departure from the principles of the Act. I consider that a clerk, or a laboring man, or a mechanic has just as much right to have a vote as a man who may be possessed of very large property, but it does not necessarily follow that a man with an income of $300 a year should have two votes when another, perhaps with $1,000 or $5,000 income from real property, would only have one. I think one is as good as another, as a man, but I do not see why he should be better, and I am one of those who last year voted, in what I believe is the right direction, for manhood suffrage virtually. That I believe is the correct principle, and this is a departure from it, and not exactly in Conservative lines, I think. It is giving the vote largely to a class who are not large holders of property at all, and they are not to be enfranchised because they are enfranchised before, and they have a right to be, but to have double the privileges their neighbors have. Those who live outside of cities because it is cheaper, are to have a vote there and another vote because they work in the city, so that they will have twice as much to say in the affairs of State as their neighbors. Is that right, or just, or equitable to those who are in the same class, in the same walk of life even, to say nothing of the other classes?

Mr. MILLS. We have been acting upon the principle, in a great measure, of one man one vote, and we ought to apply the principle consistently. The whole theory of this Act is, not that we are seeking to represent property, but that we are accepting property as evidence of the man's personal qualification, of his fitness for the franchise, of his ability to manage and take care of his own affairs, and, when you accept this evidence of his ability, you give him a vote. But my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) proposes to give certain parties, upon the accident of their having property in different places, two votes. If the intention was to treat all a man's possessions as stock in a bank, and say that so many hundred dollars should be counted one share and give one vote, you might multiply votes according to the wealth of the individual. But a man's having lots in six different divisions should not give him six votes any more than one who has six times the amount of property in one place. That is practically what the hon. gentleman proposes. There are many people in the vicinity of cities who have considerable income, and are taxed upon the income in the city, and have their residence outside the corporation limits, and are assessed and will vote as residents of these outside districts. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes to so alter or amend the law that they will vote in the city upon their income and will vote outside upon the property they hold as residents outside. I do not think that is the proper rule. It is not right that people who happen to reside in cities and possess much more wealth than those who reside in the suburbs, should have but one vote, whereas under the rule the hon. gentleman proposes, and a man who has a small interest in the same business in two electoral districts, if he resides in a suburb, would have several votes. I do not think that is a sound rule. The tendency is to recognise the right to vote in the individual and not in the property. He is not treated as a shareholder but as an integer in the body politic, and as such he is entitled to vote. The First Minister laid down the rule last year that this Dominion was a unit, and that the Provinces were mere fractions thereof. Here you are altogether departing from the principle. If you recognise one man who holds property in three constituencies as three political entities instead of being one, I think we had better adhere to the Bill as it is, and allow the party to vote upon his income or his property in the electoral division in which he resides. We will, by doing this, have fewer cases of personation, and fewer instances of fraudulent voting.

Mr. McCARTHY. If we were dealing with the principle of one vote one man, a great deal of what has been said on the other side would have to be answered. But this Bill is founded on quite an opposite principle, that of property qualification.

An hon. MEMBER. Property and residence.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, not property and residence at all. If a man owns property in a dozen ridings he may have a dozen votes, but he can only reside in one place, therefore we are not dealing with the principle of one man one vote. The principle of the Bill is that certain qualifications give the right to vote. Now, if a man owns property in three ridings, he has three votes. If he earns an income, the power of earning is deemed to be sufficient to qualify him to vote. In one place he happens to own property and earns an income, and why should that man be in a different position than when he owns two or three different pieces of property in one riding? We have first said there are certain qualifications which give a man a right to vote. Then we say if he owns in more than one division, he shall have more than one vote. That is merely carrying out the principle of saying that if he earns this qualification in one riding, notwithstanding that he may live elsewhere, he may vote on that qualification. It seems to me this is in favor of the poor man, and the mechanic, and laborer.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Supposing he earns an income which is derived from five or six different electoral divisions, a portion of it comes from each; would he be entitled to vote in each electoral district?

Mr. McCARTHY. If he had $300 in each, I suppose he would, if he had property in each.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, take the case of a wholesale merchant who derives his income from sales that are effected in a dozen or twenty electoral districts. He can say clearly that his business is divided. He may have men selling for him in different districts, and his income may be derived from twenty or forty ridings. According to the hon. gentleman's principle he would be entitled to vote in all these cases. Is there any justice in that?

Mr. McCARTHY. Just as much as if you had twenty-four pieces of property in twenty-four ridings.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then we had better come down to the proper principle. Let my hon. friend come forward and lay down the proper principle, that a man shall vote because he is a man, a citizen, with an interest in the Dominion, liable to military duty, liable for defence and taxation, and let all stand on the same footing.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for Simcoe misunderstood me. I did not say property and residence, but the basis was property or residence. For instance, a party who owned property in four or five electoral districts should have that number of votes; that was the principle. Now, again, where a man voted on income, or as the son of a farmer, he would be obliged to be a resident. Therefore, a man who is a voter must be either a property holder or a resident. But the amendment destroys both these principles, it is not applicable to either. The principle laid down that property should vote is there not based on the qualification, therefore it does not matter where the party is resident; property in the electoral district qualified him to vote. If, on the other hand, he has no property, but he may vote on income or vote as the son of a farmer or fisherman, as suggested by the Minister of Justice, in that case residence is an essential part of qualification. Now the amendment proposed destroys both these principles, it is neither property nor residence.

Mr. CHARLTON. This is a most absurd proposition. We will suppose the case of a mechanic who earns $300 in one division, and that entitles him to vote upon income. He lives in another electoral district, and perhaps out of that $300 he pays $150 rent, and that entitles him to another vote. Suppose you give him another vote on the balance of that money expended for groceries, you might just as well do it. The principle is most objectionable. In nine cases out of ten where two votes are obtained under this section, one would be obtained out of a portion of the money upon which he is qualified to vote upon income, and the expenditure of a portion of that money for rent, if he is living in another place, would entitle that man to vote in another place. I hold that we should treat the franchise as being a right with which the individual is invested, the right of a free man, and not a right that one man should exercise in three cases, another man in five cases, and another man in one case. Perhaps a man exercising it in one case only may have a property qualification greater than that of a dozen men who are exercising it in three or four cases. It is at variance with the principle of human liberty. It is a scheme devised, possibly, for the purpose of gaining an advantage in such ridings as Toronto where, by judicious and proper manipulation, the mechanic, earning $300 or $400 a year, may have two votes instead of one, while property owners in the country, yeomen owning large farms, will have but one vote, although the farm may be of equal value to the property of a dozen mechanics. I hope this inequality will be reconsidered by my hon. friend. It is not in accordance with the principle of this Franchise Bill; it is not in accordance with the principle of investing every man with the right of the franchise, but is placing in the hands of one particular class an advantage greater than that possessed by others, and is unjust in its application and operation.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is truly refreshing to hear sound Conservative doctrines enunciated on the other side of the House. I am particularly charmed to hear the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) talking about the "mere mechanic." However he may consider mechanics, for my part I intend to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for North Simcoe, because I think it will cause great confusion if it is carried into effect in many cases, and also because I think it is a little too democratic to meet my views. Now, while we have adopted the principle that the mechanic who earns $300 is entitled to vote, I must say that I do not think we should go further and extend that qualification, as this amendment now proposes to do. I think it is to some extent laying down a doctrine that money means franchise, with which I certainly do not agree, because I think that while perhaps not a democratic doctrine, it is certainly not a Conservative doctrine. I shall certainly vote against the amendment.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I wish to explain just what I understand by the measure, and let hon. gentlemen opposite take the responsibility of it. Every member of the House knows that the vast majority of the people of Canada are men who own their own farms: that is the business of this country, superior to any other or all others put together, and the effect of this measure is simply to make the agriculturist just half the man that the man with an income of $300 is. The man who does not own one dollar's worth of property but happens to pay $2 a month rental in one division of a city and to work in another will have twice as much to say about public affairs as a farmer. That fact the agriculturist should be brought to thoroughly understand, and if the hon. gentleman insists on the proposal they will thoroughly understand the effect of the measure.

Mr. MULOCK. This amendment brings into play an entirely new principle. Until recent years the franchise depended entirely upon real estate. Later on that principle was departed from to a certain extent in the case of farmers' sons, but even in that case the franchise was given to a farmer's son because he was the son of an owner of real estate. Then later on in the Provinces, in Ontario at all events, the franchise was given to income voters where they resided. Residence and income were required.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is where the hon. gentleman is wrong. This is exactly on the line of the Ontario system that has existed up to the present time. The man was assessed for income where he earned it, and he was entitled to vote on income in one division and on his house in another. I have voted in Toronto in that way, on my residence in the west and income in the centre. That has been the rule in Ontario ever since the income vote has been allowed.

Mr. MULOCK. It suits the hon. gentleman to adopt the Ontario franchise to prove his case in support of argument, but he abandons it when it operates against him.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was only correcting the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MULOCK. I accept the correction. I go a little further. It is true this proposal gives the franchise to a class of voters that have very little stake in the country. I am not objecting to their having a vote. But the clause goes further, and practically hands over a large portion of the franchise to the most wealthy classes. Take the case mentioned by the member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). The large wholesale merchants of Toronto and other cities carry on business all over the Province. It is true they would not be able to exercise the franchise in every riding when a general election occurs, but when there was a bye-election they could exercise it. Is it intended that wholesale merchants having business dealings in many ridings should have a vote in each. If it is, it is asking Parliament to adopt a measure for which there is no precedent. Under it the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) says he would have over forty votes, and there are some wholesale merchants who might vote in ninety-five different ridings. The section, as it is proposed to be amended, sets out that an elector shall have a vote if he derives an income of $300 a year from any profession, office, calling or trade. Is not the selling and buying of goods trade? The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says he does not mean that. But he is not to be the judge; that will have to be determined by the revising officers, who will be liable to give different rulings. If the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) proposes to hand over the franchise to wealthy people, let him say so, for that is the effect of this clause. It is to extinguish the comparatively poor man. Residence ought to be one of the conditions of the right to vote. The hon. member proposes to go on and add a clause. He is to have his option whether he is put on for income in one place or another. There is going to be great uncertainty in that. Take Toronto, for instance, where there are many men deriving incomes in the city, residing in the city, being boarders, and they can just skip across to the township, board there for about a week, at the time the revising barrister is going his rounds, and they can have themselves assessed as residents in that place, and can elect to have a vote in the country, and vice versa. I think the clause will open the door for great abuses, and that therefore it should not be adopted. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, this is a very radical proposition.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman desires to talk against the clause in that way I will withdraw it. Does he object to the principle?

Mr. MULOCK. I object to it entirely, and the hon. gentleman has no right to assume that I am objecting to it on any ground but its merits. I say that a proposition so important as this is one that should not be introduced here by a private member. It ought to come from the Government, or we ought to know if it is the wish of the Government. Is this a Government measure put in the hands of a private member, or is it entirely the hon. gentleman's own suggestion?

Mr. MACMASTER. The hon. member for Brant said that this amendment would give him thirty votes. I think he gave thirty good reasons for voting against the amendment, and for my part he has converted me and I shall vote against it.

Mr. SPROULE I think the interpretation suggested by the hon. member for Brant and the hon. member for North York is too ridiculous to be considered. To say because a wholesale man living in Toronto had agents outside who are sending orders to Toronto, which are filled and shipped at Toronto, that they shall have votes in the various ridings in which they sell goods, is, I think, an interpretation which no intelligent lawyer would give.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is to interpret it otherwise?

Mr. LISTER. I understood that the hon. member for Simcoe would withdraw this amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. If that is the sense of the committee, I will withdraw it.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. THOMPSON. In sub-section b of sub-section 7, I propose to insert in the third line, after the word "farm" the words "in respect of which the right to vote is claimed by or for him."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the words "within the electoral district" be inserted after the word "resident" in the first line of sub-section a of sub-section 7; also after the word "resident" in the first line of sub-section b; also after the word "resident" in the first line of sub-section a of sub-section 8.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to insert in line 10, on page 4, after the word "owner" the words, "on the real property in respect of which the right of voting is claimed for or by him."

Mr. MULOCK. That is a little different from the case of a farmer's son. If he is resident in the riding it is sufficient, not necessarily on the farm.

Mr. THOMPSON. He need not necessarily reside on the farm. He must reside with his parents. There are a few cases in which a farm owner lives just off the farm, but I think the case of a real estate owner is different. It is not intended to give him the right unless he lives on the property.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose the owner is not living on the property he owns in freehold, but is occupying a rented property, and the son lives with his father. If the farmer's son is entitled to a vote on the ownership of a farm, simply because he resides in the riding with his father, I should think the same reasoning should apply to the case of the son of an owner of real estate. If there is a different rule made for the two cases, I think it is likely to lead to confusion.

Mr. LISTER. I think in the Ontario Act the fact of the father being an owner is sufficient to entitle the son to vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will withdraw the amendment in the meantime. In sub-section 9, on page 4, after the word "fisherman," I propose to add, "resident in the electoral district."

Mr. BÉCHARD. It will be remembered that the other day when the House was in committee, I called the attention of the Government to the fact that a certain number of persons in Quebec, who, under the old law, always had a vote, would be disfranchised under this measure. I refer to those persons who are called rentiers, those who, having attained a certain age, give their property to one of their sons, or a son-in-law, or even a perfect stranger—the property generally being farm property—and receive as a compensation an annuity which is paid the most part of the time in products of the farm, but may be paid in money or in both. Under this Bill, they cannot qualify on their income, because, as a rule, they do not receive $300 a year. On an average, they receive from $125 to $150 a year, and that class of people is more numerous than is generally supposed. This omission passed unnoticed last Session when this Bill was discussed. It is a state of things peculiar to Quebec. In every rural district in the Province of Quebec, there are some of those people. I have here a clause prepared to meet the case, which I propose should be inserted between the clauses in which are enumerated the different qualifications of voters:

Or is or has been, one year next before his being placed on the list of voters, or before the date of application for the placing of his name on the list of voters, a resident within the electoral district, and in receipt of a life annuity, secured on real estate in Canada, by virtue of a deed of donation, of at least $100 in money or money's worth, or in both.

I showed this to gentlemen on the other side, and one prominent gentleman was of the opinion that he considered a man receiving $100 in that way as well qualified to vote as anyone who earns $300 a year.

Mr. AMYOT. There are other deeds besides donations which amount to the same thing. I move that you insert "or other titles equivalent."

Mr. SPROULE. I think this principle is entirely wrong. If we compel a man to have an income of $300 to entitle him to a vote, we should not give the advantage to another class of voting because they have a life income of $100.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. THOMPSON. This section, on page 4, says: "The two sections of this Act next preceding shall not come into force, &c." I propose to say sections 1, 2, 3 and 12. This covers all the sections enlarging the franchise, and also those sections which describe penalties.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to amend section 5. There is no change in the sense, but the section as printed merely provides that the six months' absence of a farmer's son or son of an owner of real property, shall not disqualify him from voting, and the object of this is to prevent its disqualifying him from being put on the list on account of occasional absence before, or from voting in case of such absence after, he is put on the list.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suggest that you should add to the "mariner, fishermen or student" an apprentice duly apprenticed and learning a trade.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is the clause with reference to annuitants to apply generally? Is it a new class of voters, or is it confined to those who have an interest arising from family relationship? If you are going to create a general class of voters who receive annuities of $100 secured on real estate, that is one thing, but, if it is only for a father who is provided for by his sons, that is in accordance with what I consider the very absurd principle of giving votes to the sons, because if you give the votes to the sons it is only right to give it to the farmers also.

Mr. BÉCHARD. It is not a new class, for these men have always been voters. By the present law, however, a man can only vote on an income of $300 a year, while the owner of real estate amounting to $150 is given the franchise. These annuities are based on real estate.

On section 19,

Mr. LISTER. There is a good deal of difficulty at present with regard to declarations necessary to put a name on the voters' list. Some revising officers insist on one form and some on another. I think, if a form were put in the Act, it would save a great deal of difficulty. In my county, a very simple form of declaration has been held sufficient by the revising officer, while in an adjoining county the same form was not accepted. There ought to be uniformity.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should have liked to give my attention to that had it been mentioned sooner, but it requires the preparation of six oaths, and I do not think I can undertake that this evening.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister of Justice prepare a declaration to be used as the form on which the voters' names can be put upon the list.

Mr. THOMPSON. There may be some difficulty in consequence of it being so late, but I will consider it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is very necessary that something of this kind should be done. So far as my riding is concerned, the judge there has evidenced his willingness to do what is fair, and he has assisted in every way parties on both sides with regard to the preparation of names to go on the list by declaration. But if a judge is disposed to be exact, he might cause either party a great deal of difficulty, and I think it would be well to provide a simple form of declaration for putting names upon the voters' list to which no exception could be taken.

Mr. FAIRBANK. In the 36th line, clause 7, relating to copies being taken, I would ask for the insertion after the words "copies thereof," the words "or declaration upon which the additions have been made," so that the party applying shall have a copy of the declaration upon which an addition to the list has been made.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman's object might be gained by making it read thus: "The revising officer shall furnish to any person requiring to examine the same, all notices, additions and declarations in support thereof."

McCARTHY. We know that tenants, especially in towns, frequently change their residence, they change their holdings within the year before they apply to be put on the list. Under the clause as it stands they must have one holding for the year, but I propose a clause which will enable the tenant who has had a qualification during the year, but on different holdings, to be put on the list.

Mr. McMULLEN. To be registered in the place where he resides?

Mr. McCARTHY Yes, it only enables the man who has changed his tenancy to vote on the tenancy he has held within the year.

The Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. THOMPSON. I draw attention to section 18, which confirms the existing list, and provides that there shall be no default by the revising officers of the District of Algoma having had their districts altered subsequent to their having taken the oath of office, and it is desirable that revising officers shall be protected against any action. I move that the following words be added to the section:

No action or proceeding shall lie or maintain against the revising officer of the said District of Algoma for any penalty or penalties by reason of their acting as such after the limits assigned to them had been changed and new commissions had been issued to them without taking their oath of office anew.

Mr. LANGELIER. Has any action been taken up to this moment?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

On form B,

Mr. LISTER. I think that as the principle of the law is that a man shall not be entitled to vote unless he is twenty-one years of age at the time he applied to be put on the list, he should be required to make oath to that fact before he is allowed to vote. I know that as a matter of fact many minors have been placed on the list in my own county, and they should not be there.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think it would be desirable, as the whole principle of the law is that the revising officer shall decide upon the qualification.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister what objection there is to adding simply a paragraph requiring the man who tenders his vote to swear that he is entitled to vote.

Mr. COLBY. I do not think that would be a proper clause to insert. It is not every voter who knows what the qualifications are.

Mr. MULOCK. He should not be there unless he has them?

Mr. COLBY. Yes, but a conscientious man might hesitate and might be driven from voting. You cannot expect men who are not able to read or write to understand these things.

Mr. THOMPSON. It would require a man to swear to a good deal of law, and I do not think we should call on a voter to do that. The qualifications may depend on very nice legal questions, and these are decided by the revising officer.

Mr. CHARLTON. As a man is not entitled to be put on the list unless he is twenty-one years of age when the application is made, I think he should be required to swear that he is twenty-one years of age at that time.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The assessors are allowed to put them on if they will be twenty-one years of age before the final revision. If they are twenty years and nine months old at the time of the assessment, they are legally entitled to vote under the Ontario Act.

Mr. MULOCK. Are you willing to follow the Ontario Act throughout?

Mr. WALLACE (York). So far as it is good, but we have a better one.

Mr. SPROULE. The declaration that he has to take when he is put on the list meets the difficulty.

Mr. LISTER. Some hon. gentlemen are fond of following the Ontario Act when it suits their purpose and abusing it when it does not, particularly the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace). No matter what the Ontario law is, this law says that a man shall not be placed on the list unless he is at the time twenty-one years of age. If the revising officer thinks proper to place young men on the list who are not of age, and who are therefore not qualified under the law, they should not vote. If it is thought that they ought to vote in case they come of age after the final revision of the list, make the law so; but under the law as it stands, surely we should have the power to ascertain whether they were qualified by being twenty-one years of age at the time they were placed on the list.

Mr. WALLACE (York). It is rather amusing to see hon. gentlemen opposite, who profess to want an extension of the franchise, objecting to every extension of the franchise proposed in the House.

Mr. LISTER. Do you call that honest? You may reconcile it with your ideas of honesty——

The CHAIRMAN. Order. Address the Chair.

Mr. LISTER. Hon. gentlemen opposite who have passed this Bill, have provided in it that only certain persons shall be placed on the list. Now, the hon. gentleman wants certain other persons placed on the list. Two years may elapse before this is used; in that case, young men who were placed on the list at the age of nineteen years would vote.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you make of the declaration? Is it worth anything or not? A man declares that he is twenty-one years of age, and that he is entitled by virtue of his qualification to be placed on the list, and he his placed on the list.

Mr. LISTER. Suppose a man is placed on the list; he does not make a declaration with the knowledge of the revising officer, who assumes that he is of age. It is the case within my own knowledge that no declaration has been made at all.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Then I would suppose the hon. gentleman would attend the court of revision and have the names struck off. The only point is to make the voters' list a finality. If you disturb that, you disturb the whole Bill. The qualification ought to be kept intact—make that a finality.

Mr. THOMPSON. It seems to me that the objection would apply to every qualification. This Bill provides that a man shall possess a certain qualification; and in the event of any person not coming up to that qualification in any particular, ample opportunity is given to have their names struck off the list. If they are shown to fail in respect of age, I do not see why their names cannot be struck off just as well as if they failed in any other qualification.

Mr. CHARLTON. In my own riding I am aware that a good many young men have been placed on the list by the opposite side who are not twenty-one years of age. I have instructed my agents to conform strictly to the law, and to put no one on the list who was not of age at the time the application was made. The law requires that at a certain time a young man must be of age to be placed on the list, and if through the action of the revising officer or the agent of a candidate a large number of persons are put on the list in violation of that provision of the law, they certainly have no right to vote. If that has been done, it is a very simple thing to require those persons to state on oath what their age is, and if they are not of age at the time of the application, they are not voters under this Act. We all know that the making of appeals is a laborious and costly matter; in some ridings it will be attended to with more or less thoroughness, and in some it may not be attended to at all. I think that so far as possible we should see that the provisions of the law are carried out, and it would be very simple to put a clause in the oath requiring the voter to swear whether or not he was of age at the time the list was made, as he would know, and if he swears that he was not, he should not be allowed to vote, even though his name be on the list.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. How can a young man swear positively that he was twenty-one years of age at the time he was put on the list.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. On the same principle, how can he swear positively that he is when he comes up to vote? He will be just as likely to know it at one time as at another. Last year this House passed a Bill containing a certain qualification for voters. One of these qualifications was that they should be of the full age of twenty-one years. That remains the law yet. If we change the law, and require that a man need not be twenty-one years of age when he is put on the list, but only when he comes up to vote, then we have no more to say. But in the present case you are simply providing means by which the law we enacted a year ago can be evaded. If the law provides that a person must be of twenty-one years of age when put on the list, I can see no reason why he should not swear to the fact. The hon. Minister of Justice says it is easy to get the names struck off. It is not easy to do so. People are very shy of appealing against their neighbors, and besides it is a very costly matter. There is no valid reason why the oath should not be made to conform to the law as it stands, instead of providing a loophole by which the law can be broken.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The age is only one of the qualifications of voters. There are other qualifications designated just as distinctly, and the object of the examination by the judge was to make the list a finality. If you have a right to swear a man as to age, you have an equal right to swear him as to the value of his property, that he was earning so much, and so forth. If you have a right to open up the question of age, you have a right to open up the whole qualification. Do that, and you disturb the whole law, and its whole usefulness is gone. For instance, take a man whose earnings make part of his qualification, and his keep another part. At the time of his going on the list, it might be considered a certain value to keep him, and twelve months later it might be considered a different value, and you would have just as much right to swear him as to that. If a man is permitted to go on the list after all the safeguards, and after it is finally revised by the judge, I consider that it is a violation of the law and good faith to disturb the qualification in any respect. You may test him as to citizenship, to property, and his personal identity; beyond that, I do not think you have any right to go.

Mr. WELDON. We have provided means by which the revising officer can ascertain the value of real estate, the rental, &c.; those means are available, such as the registry office and the assessment roll. But when you come to the question whether a man is twenty-one years of age or not, there are no records by which the judge can find that out. It would seem right and proper that, if it is in the knowledge of the party himself, whether he is of age or not, he should not be entitled to vote. When my hon. friend first brought in his Bill, he endeavored in schedule A to avoid that difficulty by putting in the age of the party at his last birthday. That was struck out. We ought therefore now to make him take the oath that he was of the age of twenty-one years when he was put on the list. It is clear it is not intended minors should vote or should be put on the list, and if, by accident, a minor got on the list, it was never intended he should be qualified merely because he was on it.

Mr. LISTER. If the law required that the person applying to be put on the list should make the declaration himself, there might be some excuse for the pretension that the list be final, and the person applying to vote be not obliged to submit to another oath. But one person may make a declaration for a great number of people, and swear to their qualifications from information he got from some friends of his. Wherever the parties make a declaration themselves, it may be taken for granted that they would not swear to their declaration unless it was true, but where the declaration is made by another party, abuses are certain to arise. You require here that a person should take the oath that he is a British subject by birth or by naturalisation. Well, he can swear to his age with as great certainty as to that; for if a person does not know when he was born, he cannot have a clear idea where he was born. If he is competent to swear he is a British subject by birth, he is surely competent to take the oath as to the time he reached his majority. The law does not intend that a person twenty-one years of age at the time the list was revised should not vote, and it is as easy to put in a clause requiring him to swear that he was twenty-one at the time, as to require him to swear he was twenty-one when giving his vote. This form of oath will permit people to evade the law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is due to an omission in the Act which the Minister promised to consider to-night, and, if possible, to remedy; namely, having forms of application in the Act and making all the applications uniform. If it was a personal declaration that was made by the young men, it would be superfluous to ask them to make a second declaration. But the law not being definite in that shape, the practice has been that in many cases the young man makes no declaration. The declaration is made for him by some one who says he believes that the young man has all the qualifications. It is because of that state of things, that the proposed amendment is required.

Mr. THOMPSON. The discussion has arisen incidentally on the form of the oath, but it is really not pertinent to that at all. Sections 31 and 39 provide that those persons only who are on the lists as finally revised shall be the electors, and that is made so emphatic that it is provided that even the judge trying the election case shall not be at liberty to dispute anything appearing on the list. No proposition has been made to amend or repeal those sections, and it would be inconsistent to make the returning officer, in the form of the oath, put a test which the judge is forbidden to put by sections 31 and 39.

Mr. CHARLTON. Might it not be an infringement on those sections to require the voter to swear he is a British subject?

Mr. MILLS. No one is disposed to call in question the rule that the voters' lists shall be a finality, but there is always a considerable degree of imperfection in the lists. If you cannot prevent parties being put on the list who are not really entitled to it, so far from that being an objection to the insertion of this provision in the oath it is really a reason for adding it. I mention as a fact very common on the western frontier that our young men leave the country, and it has been the practice to bring them back to vote in the first election after they had left, with the intention of becoming citizens of another country. I know of a constituency in which there was a special election in 1882, in which the list showed there were 166 in that constituency on the list who resided in Michigan; yet a large proportion of those, about 100, were brought back to vote. Is it the intention that those parties who have taken up their residence elsewhere should vote here? If the hon. gentleman's proposition is carried out, that is the intention of the Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are offering a premium to people disposed to be unscrupulous to act in that manner. The Act provides that a party must be twenty-one years of age in order to be put on the list. Any man who is so reckless of the consequences of a statutory declaration that he is prepared to present the revising barrister with the declaration that a certain person is of age, and the false statement is not discovered at the final revision, the party for whom he made the declaration will have a vote. We should come to an understanding that a man may be placed on the roll who is only twenty years of age, if you are going to allow that to be done at all; or else insist on his taking the oath that he was of age when put on the list. This provision is an injustice to those who are conscientious, and affords a means of fraud to those who do not hesitate to stretch a point in order to get a vote on the list.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think it would be possible for the Minister of Justice in the oath to devise some means whereby those who have not become naturalised citizens might become naturalised at the time when they appear to tender their vote. Take the case, for instance, of a person who has lived in the country for two or three years, who is the owner of property and entitled to vote by reason of property qualification, but who has not gone through the formula required by the Act to give him the rights of citizenship. I think a very simple and plain process could be devised in the oath by which this class of voters would not be disfranchised. There is a good deal of trouble in complying with the present law. These persons have to go before a magistrate and take the oath of allegiance and the oath of citizenship. It was the practice some time ago that they had to appear before the quarter sessions, and, if no objections were offered against them, they were allowed their rights, and then they had to file their papers and pay a fee. I believe that is the law yet. I think when they tender their vote they should be enabled to swear that they are the persons named in regard to the property, and have resided a certain length of time in the country, and they should be entitled to vote. Many persons will be disfranchised unless this is done, as they have not gone through all the formulæ. There are many Germans in this country, and they are an industrious, thrifty and sober class of people, and make good citizens. In the United States, it is much more easy to obtain the rights of citizenship than it is here, and I am told that is one of the causes why German immigration has been directed there. It is the duty of the Government and of this House, to throw no obstacles in the way of the settlement of those who are likely to be good and useful citizens of this country, and I think a very simple and expeditious method could be provided in the oath. I hope the Minister of Justice will devise some means by which these settlers can, in a less troublesome way than in the past, obtain the rights of citizenship, and be entitled to vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. It seems to me that can hardly be done in the oath they take at the polling booth. I understand that the hon. member intends to dispense with the qualification of the voter being a British subject, and that would be contrary to the spirit of the Act.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You should make him a British subject in the oath at the time, without his going through the performances which are now required. Let him take the oath of allegiance and citizenship, as he has to do by the other process.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is ample opportunity during the revision for the voter to become a British subject before the final revision. If he is on the roll and desires to qualify before the vote, he can become a British subject at any time before the polling day. I think it would be very inconvenient to have the presiding officer naturalising foreign subjects for the purpose of enabling them to vote, and making them a different class from those on the voters' list.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree with what the Minister says as to that, but I would call his attention to the difficulties now in the way of a person being naturalised, although he has been here for the length of time the law requires. Perhaps during the recess he might look into that law and provide a simpler method. It is a very cumbersome and a very expensive one now, and I think the Act which deals with the case might be amended so as to simplify the procedure.

Mr. WATSON. I would call attention to the importance of having some form laid down in this Bill for applications. In my county, Marquette, out of some hundreds of applications that have been made to be placed on the first list, there have been only three accepted, as it is claimed they were not in a proper shape, although they were in the very form accepted by the revising barrister,

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not possible to give atttention to that point now.

Mr. FAIRBANK. No doubt it would take some time to draw up a form, but it would take very little time indeed to frame a clause that additions should be made wholly upon personal declaration. The Minister may not be aware of the fact that two courses have been pursued heretofore, one by personal declaration on the part of the person who wished to be put upon the list, and the other system throwing them in en bloc.

Bill reported; on motion for third reading,

Mr. MILLS. I beg leave to move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole to amend the same by providing that all persons entitled to vote in each Province for the election of members to the Legislative Assembly for such Province, and no others, shall be voters for the election of members to the House of Commons, and that the voters' lists in each Province for the election of members to the House of Commons, shall be the voters' lists that would be used for the elections for the House of Assembly."

I think that the experience the country has had during the past twelve months, shows the wisdom of the rule that was adhered to during the sixteen or eighteen years that preceded our tampering with the voters' lists by our legislation here last year. Sir, the hon. gentleman has had nearly twelve months' experience of his measure. He assured the House that it would cost but very little to prepare the voters' lists for this Dominion, but he finds now that he has to come down to Parliament and ask for the appropriation of $300,000 to meet the expenses during the past year. There is not a member in this House who is not perfectly aware that $300,000 will not at all be sufficient to meet the expenses that have been incurred. Sir, this expense has been a needless expense, and it forms but a small fraction of the cost that has been incurred in the preparation of these lists. There is probably not a member on either side of the House that has not been put to a considerable amount of expense in order to see that these lists have been fairly made up; and at this moment there are a large number of gentleman in this House who know that a great number of these lists are most inaccurate. Why, Sir, I have been informed that in one constituency near my own, those lists that are being prepared contain the names of 200 minors, and 600 persons who are no longer residents in the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLS. An hon. friend behind me remarks that certain parties are sitting on the other side who are well qualified to join the Salvation Army. I think, Sir, that they require a very considerable reformation, and they might make the proper material upon which the Salvation Army might operate, and if the Army could succeed in reforming their manners, they would confer a lasting benefit, not only upon this House, but upon the country. Now, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to detain the House with any further observations upon the amendment I put in your hands. It is perfectly intelligible, everybody understands it. I am sure that whatever may be the judgment of this House upon that amendment, there will be no doubt as to the conclusion that will be reached upon it in the country.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mills.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MITCHELL. I feel it necessary to make a few observations on this measure and to somewhat explain the vote I have given. It will be remembered that when this Bill came up during last Session I opposed almost every feature of it, except its principle. I sustained the course taken by the Government in bringing in a Bill to regulate the franchise which should control the election of members to the Parliament of Canada. I opposed being at the mercy of a Local Legislature for a franchise under which we would be elected, and, therefore, I supported the Administration of the day on the principle of the Bill. But I must say that the opinions I entertained and expressed on that occasion are confirmed, and it is clear that in all its features and details this Bill will be most difficult to work, of a most expensive and extravagant character, one most difficult to understand and one which I think will lead to an immense amount of litigation, trouble and confusion. Entertaining the view that the Franchise Bill which should govern the election of members for this Parliament should emanate from this Parliament itself, from the highest legislative body in the country, and that we should not allow any minor legislative body to regulate and control the elections of members to the highest Parliament, I could not support the amendment. I feel it necessary to make this explanation in justification of my vote. But on the third reading of the Bill I shall feel it also to be my duty, entertaining the views I do as to the dangerous character of the Franchise Bill as it stands, and being determined that no vote of mine shall in any way perpetuate the Bill which is destructive to its interest and likely to lead to an immense amount of litigation and trouble, to vote against the Bill. I will, therefore, vote against the third reading.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the third reading of the Bill passes I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to sub-section 2, page 6. The form J has not been provided.

Mr. THOMPSON. The section has been suspended for a year, and there can be no use for such a form until after the 1st June next year.

Bill read the third time and passed.

NORTHERN AND PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 25) respecting the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company (Mr. McCarthy), be concurred in.

Mr. MULOCK. I entertained the hope when the Government took charge of this measure that they would propose to offer some solution of it. I think a very sound objection was taken to the passage of this Bill without enquiry, and certainly it is due to the country that the Government since they have fathered the Bill should endeavor in some way to meet the objections taken. It is somewhat an anomalous position to find the hon. member occupying the position in which we find the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to night, when a week ago on the floor of this House he asserted his opposition to this measure as at present before us, and to-night he is advocating, as I presume he is, its passage. He came to a solemn agreement with this House that this measure should not go through in its present form. He admitted that it would not be right to have the Bill go through Parliament as he now asks it to be passed. He induced the House, or he yielded to the argument of hon. members and came to the conclusion the very opposite to that at which he is asking us to arrive to-night. How is it the hon. gentleman has so changed his views on that question? He has not ventured to give a single explanation of his change of front. I will quote for his benefit, and for the benefit of the House, what the hon. member for North

Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) stated in this House to be his position towards the measure on the 17th May. How comes it that on this the last day of May the hon. gentleman takes such a very different position to what he did on the 17th? I am told he used his influence outside of this Chamber and induced the Senate to arrive at the conclusion at which they arrived and passed the amendments which we are now called upon to adopt. It may not be true, but I am told that he used his influence not only to bring the Senate to that conclusion, but that he took a hand in framing the very amendments we are asked to consider to-night. How the hon. gentleman came to act so differently outside this Chamber from what he did inside deserves an explanation from him. On 17th May the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was told on the floor of this House that the Bill he was then asking the House to sanction would interfere with the agreement of April, 1884, when the rights of the Crown were protected. When he was told that, not one but half a dozen times, he voluntarily admitted that the measure would have, or might possibly have, the effect suggested, and in order that no mistake might happen he declared in this Chamber that he would assent to any set of words being introduced that would protect the Crown in its full right under the agreement of April, 1884. On page 1314 of Hansard, I find he is reported as having used these words:

"The hon. gentleman's arguments amounts to this, that if this enactment is now passed, the effect of the contract between the Crown and the railway company will be practically done away with, if not in law, at all events in good faith. All I can say in answer to that is, that if that is the effect of it, we can add in committee any words my hon. friend may add to neutralise that."

And the way he proposes to add his words is to neutralise the effect; he goes outside this House and outside of the Senate Committee to senators outside of the House and outside of the Senate Committee where he cannot be reported, and there in company with others assisted them in framing this amendment which contains the words I have read. That is the way that he is giving us words which will take care of the rights of the Crown. The hon. gentleman then goes on:

"That is not the intention of the promoters of this Bill."

If that was not their intention why is it that he is the mover of this amended Bill to-night? Why did he not rise, when these amendments were under consideration on Friday night last, and point out that he, the promoter of the Bill, as one whose advice should be respected, would not assent to the amendments of the Senate. By his silence he has given his sanction to the amendments, apart from what he did, as I am told, in producing those amendments. He goes on:

"I explained that to the Railway Committee, and I repeat it here. That is the whole object of the section, to make these bonds sectional' and if there is any doubt at all that passing this legislation would have the effect of nullifying the contract in any way, then an amendment can be put in, and I have prepared an amendment which I think will meet the view of the hon. member, which amendment is to the effect that nothing in the Bill contained shall interfere with the contract between the Government and the company."

Well, he cannot say that he used those words inadvertently at one time, because we find them all through that debate taking a similar attitude. On page 1316, I am reported to have said, speaking of the effects of this Bill:

"I hardly think the hon. gentleman has put the issue correctly. It is true, as he pointed out, that the Act of incorporation gives power to bond the road to the extent of $20,000 a mile, but subsequently their borrowing power was modified by the contract made with the Crown. It is the position of the Crown we are seeking to protect."

And the hon. member in answer to that observation replied as follows:—

"I will introduce a clause to cover that."

Then later on, at page 1318, he said:

Mr. MULOCK,

"As I have stated, I have no desire at all that the contract between the Government and the company should be in the slightest degree affected, and I propose to add at the end of the clause the words: 'Provided that this enactment is without prejudice to the agreement between the Government of Canada and the company, bearing date the 12th day of April, 1884, respecting the assumption by Parliament of the portion of said line of railway between Gravenhurst and Callander.'"

And why, if he proposes that this Bill shall be without prejudice to the agreement, is he here to-day to ask that that agreement shall be so modified that it shall prejudice the rights of the people to the extent of $1,320,000? He calls that, I suppose, not prejudicing the Crown in respect of that agreement. Further on he says:

"There was power to issue bonds to the extent of $20,000 a mile, and the bondholders took their chances as to whether the road at that date, would be worth $20,000 a mile or not."

At what date? The date named in the agreement, at the time when the Crown should seek to exercise its rights and take their line, in case it were in the public interest to do so. He goes on:

"The company do not, in the slightest degree, desire to affect its contract with the Government by a side wind, but understands that Parliament, should the company not do its duty by the public, may at some future time come in and redeem the bonds, and the bondholders will buy on that chance."

Those were the words of the hon. gentleman uttered in this House on the 17th of May when he induced Parliament, as as it did unanimously, to pass this Bill as it left this House, and here on the 31st of May, precisely two weeks after, we find him advocating a measure the very opposite in effect to that which he then sanctioned. So on throughout the debate we find the hon. member for North Simcoe telling this Parliament that the agreement referred to should in no way be varied. Now apart from his attitude—because I think it is due to the House that he should explain how it is that he has changed his view—apart from his position and his connection with this matter, which to me is inexplicable, let me turn for a moment to the effect of this measure. We are told by the Minister of Justice that there has been expended on this road up to to-day $26,208 per mile. He tells us it will cost to finish and equip it with some rolling stock $28,905 per mile. Well the company is not bound to equip its line with rolling stock. On the contrary, it has no right to do so. The Bill sets forth the lease, and the first section of that lease sets forth that this company is to construct its line, and when constructed is to lease its line to the Hamilton and North-Western Company and the Northern Railway Company in perpetuity. My hon. friend from North Simcoe, the other day, stated that this company was bound to supply rolling stock. There is nothing in this lease on which to found such a statement. Section 1 is, I think, conclusive on this point. This lease, it will be remembered, was made in pursuance of an agreement between the Government and the railway, whereby the railway got the bonus, and the agreement sets forth certain provisions of the lease, one being that the company was to build the line, and when built was to lease it in perpetuity to the Northern Railway and to the Hamilton and North-Western Railway, and accordingly the company on this agreement proceeds to enter into leases with the two leasing companies. Section 1 reads as follows:—

"The lessors shall and will commence the work of construction of their said railway before the first day of July next, and carry on the same with all reasonable despatch, and shall and will construct, build and, by the first day of May, one thousand eight hundred and eighty six, complete the same, with its stations, buildings, platforms, telegraph, signals, switches, sidings and other appurtenances, from the point of junction with the Northern Railway, at the said village of Gravenhurst, to its connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, upon the location and in accordance with the maps and specifications signed by the engineer of the lessors and lessees respectively, and also in accordance with the above recited provisions of the agreement between Her Majesty the Queen and the lessors."

Not one word there of supplying rolling stock. That is what the company agreed to do to build that line—the bare right of way—with sidings and stations, and that property, so constructed, is by the second section leased to these two leasing companies in perpetuity. Section 2 goes on:

"The lessors agree to lease, and do hereby lease to the lessees, the whole of the said line of railway"——

That being the railway to be constructed under the provisions of section 1.—

"so to be constructed as in the next preceding clause mentioned, and its appurtenances, and all such branches and extensions thereof as may be from time to time constructed, and their appurtenances, and to place the lessees in possession thereof from time to time, as and when completed, so that the lessees may work the same in such manner as they may deem most profitable and advantageous, and so that the lessees may collect, receive, take and have to their own use, the toll, fares, receipts and earnings in respect thereof, to have and to hold the railway and premises so demised, or intended so to be, to the use of the said lessees."

Then it goes on to state how the profits are to be divided. Then my hon. friend tries to argue, because some vague reference is made to rolling stock in another section, that therefore this company is bound to equip the road. The section I have read is the only section calling on the company to do anything, and all that that section requires the company to do is to build the road, not to equip it; and why that company should now ask Parliament to allow it to bond the road as against the public for the purpose of spending money in a way in which it has no right to spend it, is something I cannot understand. It is bound to build a line of railway, and the very moment it is built, it is bound to lease it. It does not control the line, and therefore it would be a breach of trust in this company to spend any portion of its money in buying rolling stock, or in doing anything to acquire rolling stock except in so far as it is necessary to build the line in the first instance, and it is not pretended that the rolling stock shall be bought for the purpose of building the road. Taking that view, I find by the Minister of Justice's own figures, that this road has cost $26,208 a mile. We are told by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Cockburn) that the road is about completed, that it is in a finished state and is a very fine road; and I understand that the only reason why it has not already been handed over to the lessees is some difficulty apart from the construction of the road itself. The company was bound to have the road completed by the 1st of May, and I believe it has lived up to its agreement in that respect. Now, upon what evidence the Minister of Justice arrived at his valuation of the cost of the road, this House does not know; I presume they were based on statements given to him by persons connected with the company. Who was invited on behalf of the general public to value that road? What system did he adopt to check those figures? Probably vague statements, such as are made in the Railway Committee and elsewhere, were made as to this transaction. Would a man be willing to postpone a mortgage he has on any property on such testimony?

Mr. THOMPSON. The report of the chief engineer of railways?

Mr. MULOCK. The report of the chief engineer of railways might be satisfactory if he had time to investigate the matter. We know that the present chief engineer of railways is very loose in giving certificates; we know that it is one peculiarity of his, that he lacks that backbone which is necessary to say no when he ought to say no.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You don't know him.

Mr. MULOCK. Those who have dealt with him, railway men, say so, and it is the general opinion of the public that certificates could be got readily from the deputy Minister of Railways. I will not say that he intends them not to be correct; but he is a man of yielding mind, and he certifies when a certificate is wanted. I do not know what the chief engineer said, or upon what evidence he proceeded. But what did the Minister of Justice tell us? He told us that $26,208 a mile was the amount that had been expended—not what the road was worth, but what had been expended. Expended by whom? Paid to the contractors under the contract made by the company with its contractors, and not with the sub-contractors. This afternoon I read a few figures which I am told indicate the contract price and indicate the real cost as well. I heard my hon. friend from North Ontario say this afternoon that all the work was not done under sub-contracts. I do not care whether it was or not; it is sufficient to know that sub-contractors did build a portion of the railway at prices which indicate the cost of the whole work. I repeat what I said this afternoon, that I am informed on what I consider reliable testimony that the contract for building this road was made between the railway company and the contractors at the following prices: Earth work, 28 cents per cubic yard, sub-let at 20 cents; rock work, $1.80 per cubic yard, sub-let at $1.30; pile driving, 40 cents per foot, sub-let at 25 cents; grubbing, $200 per acre, sub let at $100; timber for trestles and culverts, $30 per 1,000 feet, sub-let for $18 and $20; taking out foundations for bridges and culverts, $1 per yard, sub-let for 30 cents.

Mr. McCARTHY. Sub-let to whom?

Mr. MULOCK. I did not give you the name of the person.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, I want the name.

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot give you the name; I am not at liberty to give it to you. I make that statement on my responsibility here. The hon. member for North Simcoe may smile and throw himself back in his chair, and think to make it a point against me that I do not give the name; but I demand an enquiry before the Committee of Railways, and see if I cannot prove it. I do not guarantee the correctness of this statement, but I guarantee that I believe it to be correct. I am not in possession of the evidence, but produce your sub-contracts. I challenge you to an enquiry on the subject before you ask us to vote away one million and a quarter of the people's money. You cannot laugh this matter away; I demand an enquiry, and then we shall see if I cannot give some evidence on the question. These figures which I have given show that this work was let in the first instance at one-third more than the construction of the line cost. Whether the company did part of the work or not I do not care; so long as sub-contractors were found who did a portion of the work at these greatly reduced prices, that shows that the price for the whole work given under the contract was proportionately large. Taking, then, one-third from the $26,208 per mile, which the road was stated by the Minister of Justice to have cost, what do we get? We find that the actual cost of the construction of this line was $17,472 per mile. Sir Charles Tupper, while Minister of Railways, estimated its cost at $20,000 per mile. He knew what he was about; he has probably had as much experience in the building of railways as the hon. member for North Simcoe, and he then spoke under the advice of the same gentleman who is advising hon. gentlemen to-day. True, Mr. Schreiber has had a little advantage in the contractors giving him evidence; but that is not the only evidence the country ought to have. They say that this road is not quite finished. For argument's sake, I will suppose that it will cost about $2,500 a mile to finish the road; I do not believe it will cost anything; but assuming that it will, I will take $20,000 a mile as the total real cost of the road. Thus, the $12,000 per mile which the country has paid the company, and the $8,000 a mile which they were authorised to borrow, was sufficient to pay the whole cost of building this road. That being the case, for what purpose is this other $12,000 demanded? We are asked to-day to postpone our position as first mortgagees of this road to the extent of $1,320,000, for that is our position, and allow as much more bonded debt to be put ahead of us before we can intervene and take control of that road. If my hon. friend had desired to conceive a plan whereby the bonds of this company might be sold and forced upon this Government, he could not have devised a better plan. Its mismanagement is a disgrace to railway management in Canada—that is the mismanagement of the lessees in respect of their present lines—and all they have to do apparently, to compel the Crown to assume this debt of $20,000 a mile is to repeat their practices over the leased line. Let them adopt the same tactics in regard to the new line, and the country will demand that the Government step in and take possession of that neutral link or build a new line. When we take control, what will we be met with? Instead of being met with a bonded debt of $8,000 a mile, we will be met with a bonded debt of $20,000 a mile; that is the prejudice that the country sustains. Are we justified in taking such a course that will bring about such a result? True the hon. Minister might say there is no time to make an enquiry. I cannot help that. An enquiry ought to have been made long ago. When this Bill was going through the Senate Committee the Government knew there was then going to be adopted an amendment which ought not to be adopted except after a thorough investigation. The Government ought to have known about it, and referred the matter to a proper committee; but instead of that, we are now asked, at the last days of the Session, when it is practically impossible to get evidence in time, even if the case was brought before a committee to deal with, as it would involve bringing in witnesses from a distance, and it is impossible to say whether they could be got here in time, we are asked to pass this measure. Surely, in the face of this position, the Government do not propose to allow the Bill to go through without providing some checks and safeguards before giving sanction to the measure. It may be possible, if the matter was referred to a committee, to make a thorough investigation; but if it is not, the responsibility falls on the Government; and it is the duty of the Government to provide means by which they will have still the veto power until they are satisfied, at least, in regard to this transaction. If such a provision as that were put in the Bill, it would not, in the slightest degree, justify any departure from the agreement. The agreement was made on valuable consideration. It is essential to the public interest that it should not be departed from, and here is no valid reason why it should be departed from. The hon. member for North Ontario dilated upon the value of the road, and so did the First Minister. I agree with them both that the road is a very important road, but that has nothing to do with the question. We have paid for a large proportion of the construction of the road; in fact we contracted for a line of railway for a large sum of money, and the contracting party is bound to supply that. We are not doing anything we ought not to do in withholding this legislation, for the contractors have no moral or legal claim upon this House for the kind of relief they are asking for, the refusal of which will not interfere with the public interest. On what principle in the public interest is this House asked to sacrifice its position now? No argument has been advanced; no hon. gentleman, with the exception of the Minister of Justice, has ventured to speak on the subject, and he merely stated there had been expended a certain sum of money under the contract, which was in its nature an extremely unwise and imperfect expenditure. For these reasons I beg to move:

That the amendments be not now concurred in, but that the Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. HALL. If I understand the argument of the hon. gentleman who opposes the measure, it is based on the assumption that in the original contract made between the Government and this company, a sum was fixed, upon the payment of which the Government could take over this road and assume its control, and the assertion is made that any change from the sum named in the contract would be irregular and unjust to the country. The examination of the original contract would show that there is no fixed sum, on the payment of which the Government could take over the road. It is to be borne in mind that when the particular provision was made that the Government could, should certain contingencies arise, take over the road for the benefit of the country, the road was not even surveyed, it was not known what the difficulties of construction would be, and the sum named was purely nominal, the minimum amount under which the road could be constructed in favorable circumstances, $8,000 a mile, but the words were added:

"The Parliament of Canada may, if it see fit, cancel the said lease and take over the said railway free from encumbrance, upon assumption of the bond or debenture debts of the lessor company, to the amount of $8,000 per mile of the railway, and upon payment of such further sums of money beyond the said bond debts of $8,000 per mile, and the said subsidy as the said railway may then be worth."

So that whenever the contingencies arose, the Government would be under the obligation to pay whatever the road might be worth whether the $20,000, which we are now fixing as the lesser sum, or a greater or lesser sum.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no.

Mr. HALL. The Government are bound to pay whatever the road might be worth at the time of taking it over, in excess of the $8,000 a mile which is merely a nominal sum. That provision with regard to the $8,000 a mile was a proper one at the time; in fact, it was the only one that could then be made. But the position is now changed, and while it was impossible then to fix a definite sum, and it is difficult now to do so, yet the necessity has arisen when we must come to a decision as to the amount. We know, from our own judgment, with what great energy the company have built the road; we have the evidence that these contractors have gone on in good faith and built a difficult road of 110 miles, within the limited period allowed by this contract, and we have the evidence of an hon. member living in that vicinity who said the road has been built energetically and well. There has been no difficulty as to unpaid contractors, there has been no difficulty with regard to unpaid right of way, but the whole enterprise has been conducted on thorough business principles, energetically and well. Again, we have evidence to show that the contract made was the best that could be made, after public tenders had been invited, and no less than fifteen tenders had been sent in, and, under the contract, the whole payment of the cost of building the road was to be, in addition to the Government subsidy, the bonds of the road at par. The road now being on the eve of completion, the contractors are entitled to their payment, and I am sure it is not the intention of the Government that they should adopt the principle that those contractors, who have put their money and labor into the work, should not be properly paid, and that the means should not be furnished by this Legislature in order that they may be paid. It would be contrary to the spirit of justice and fairness, if any other conclusion were reached. But I am sure that every hon. member in this House who has any experience in railway matters, and every man outside of this House who has any experience in railway matters, will agree with me that, under the uncertain conditions which prevailed in the original contract, these bonds would have been perfectly unsaleable, that they could not have been sold for 50 cents. on the dollar of their face value. Under the circumstances, it became a necessity that the sum should be settled. I admit the difficulty of settling it, but it was necessary that it should be settled, and I think the Government has exercised a wise discretion in arriving at the amount of $20,000 a mile in addition to the bonus. That amount of $20,000 a mile is the usual amount for which roads are bonded. I venture to say that nine-tenths of the railway charters which have been granted during this Parliament have been on the basis of at least $20,000 a mile in the form of bonds.

Mr. WELDON. They had only a $3,000 bonus, not $12,000.

Mr. HALL. It is true, but we must remember that, when once the road was contracted to these parties, it became their property, and they had the right to exercise their own discretion in regard to it, and we ourselves gave to this company the power to bond the road for $20,000 a mile. There was no opposition, there was no criticism at that time, although we were giving the necessary power to allow these bonds to be issued, and to allow them to be sold to the public. There was no criticism as to the amount of $20,000 a mile.

Mr. MULOCK. I would point out to my hon. friend that that was prior to the grant of the bonus by the country.

Mr. HALL. I refer to it as the evidence of $20,000 a mile being the usual bonding power granted to railways by this Parliament. The Government had in addition to that a very important factor towards coming to a conclusion as to the amount. That was the concurrence of judgment of the company itself and of the contractors as to this being the proper limit. It is to be borne in mind that these parties were all interested in limiting the amount of the bond issue. The contractors were to have their payment solely in bonds, and every one will appreciate the fact that the less the amount of bonds the more saleable they were. The company had equally an interest in reducing the amount of bonds, because this company is made up of the shareholders of the Northern Railway Company and of the Hamilton and North-Western Railway Company, and these two companies pay as the lease of this road the interest on these bonds. Therefore they were interested in limiting the amount of the bonds as well as the contractors themselves. When the Government saw that the $20,000 a mile was not only the amount fixed by Parliament but also by those who had an interest in reducing the amount of the bonds to the lowest possible figure, and had in addition to that the evidence of their own chief engineer as to the probable cost of the road, they were justified in assuming this figure. It is true that the chief engineer reduces the cost of the road rather below the amount of $20,000 a mile and the bonus, making together $32,000; but one has to consider two other important elements in connection with it. One is that the bonds could not under any circumstances be sold at par, but that they must be sold at a discount, and probably 10 per cent. would be a very moderate allowance, which would make of itself $220,000. Then there is the item of interest on capital expenditure while the work has been going on, and making a moderate allowance for these two items leaves about $3,000 a mile for the completion of the road, for sidings, for water tanks, for construction of stations and equipment. It may be true, as the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has stated, that the road is not obliged to furnish all its rolling stock. If it were, of course this amount would be much too small an allowance, but there is always an amount of equipment, fixed equipment, terminal facilities, and facilities at stations for receiving and discharging freight, which must be allowed for. Therefore I think that $3,000 would strike any man of experience as a very limited amount to agree upon, and, this necessity existing to which I have referred, I think the sum named, which has been accepted by the Senate and which it is proposed to submit for the acceptance of this House, is a reasonable and fair one. It is attempted, by comparing the contract with the sub-contracts, to show that the cost of the road has been excessive. I think by any one of experience the argument will be acknowledged to be a very unfair one. Of course, the main contract is over the whole extent of 110 miles, over the difficult portion of the road as well as the easy portion, over the mountainous portion, over the rivers which have to be bridged and every difficulty of that kind, and it is unfair to compare the contract over the whole road with a section which may be taken—and my hon. friend has undoubtedly selected the section most favorable—perhaps a level part of the road where no bridging is required and no rock cutting occurs. It is perfectly impossible to argue from a short section of that kind, perhaps of half a mile over the easiest portion of the road, that the cost of the whole road is at all excessive. Then it must be borne in mind that the sub-contractors receive their pay in cash as the work goes along, receive it at the expense of the main contractors who have to lie out of their advances during the whole course of construction and until the bonds are sold. These illustrations, I think, show that any attempt to make it appear that the main contract was excessive by a reference to the sub-contracts, is an unfair and improper one. There has been a good deal of reference this Session to the connection of members of Parliament with railway companies, and this measure has at one time and another brought up the same discussion. I do not share in the adverse criticism against members of Parliament identifying themselves with railway companies and with companies for the development of the resources of this country. I think it is to the credit of members of Parliament that they do so identify themselves. I do not go the length, nor would I go the length, of saying that they would have any right to make any improper use of their connection, nor do I admit that any such improper use is made, but the mere fact, which has been often criticised in this House, of the names of members of Parliament appearing as directors and shareholders being held up as open to criticism, is unfair; on the contrary, it is rather to their credit that it is so. I think the fact that the names of hon. members of the Opposition do not appear in our public companies is attributable, if it were investigated, not to their delicacy of sentiment, but to their caution, and I think it would be more to their credit if they would identify themselves more with these public companies which tend so much to the development of the resources of this country. In reference to the particular company under consideration, I am sure, as I said in opening, that the necessity existed for fixing a sum under which the bonds might be disposed of to the public, and I am equally sure that the amount that has been agreed upon is a fair and just one and will receive the approbation of this House.

Mr. McMULLEN I am not at all surprised at the remarks the hon. gentleman has made with regard to the members of Parliament being associated with railway charters, but, after the exposure we have had in this House with reference to the North-West Central Railway, I am rather surprised that any member would dare to say he has not been aware of improper acts on the part of members of this House in connection with railway charters. The hon. gentleman has referred to the matter of rolling stock. There is not a single item in the lease between the company and the contracting party with regard to rolling stock. There is nothing to compel the company to provide rolling stock, and, if this Dominion should find it necessary, in the interests of the Province of Ontario or in the interests of the Dominion at large, to repossess themselves of this line, they will have to pay over to the company $20,000 a mile, they would have to admit the amount of the bonded indebtedness, instead of only $8,000 a mile and the amount over that which the line might be valued at.

The House is virtually ratifying the cost of the road by permitting the issue of $20,000 a mile in bonds. We are admitting that the road has cost $32,000 per mile. There has been an amount of recklessness in connection with this whole matter. In the first place, the $12,000 that was granted as a subsidy was given as an off-set to the amounts which had been granted in aid of railways in the Province of Quebec and in the Maritime Provinces. The Province of Ontario is supposed to benefit largely by the construction of this road, and undoubtedly she will, but there has been altogether too much money devoted to the construction of this 110 miles of road—far more than is necessary. We had a vested interest in the road, and we could, if necessary, repossess ourselves of it by paying the actual cost of construction. But we are departing from that position, and acknowledging now, that if it ever becomes necessary to repossess the road, we will have to pay $20,000 a mile for it. Now, I may state, from information I have received from parties who went over every mile of that road, and one of whom was a builder on the Grand Trunk from the very day its construction was commenced west of Montreal, a man of extended experience in railway building, told me, when he had learned the amounts stated by the company, that there was undoubtedly a big bonanza in this thing for somebody. Now, I say it is unwise that we should permit this company to make a sale of the road, as their own property, at the rate of $20,000 per mile. We are permitting the present company, that has been charged with it, virtually to deal with this road as if it was their absolute property, and no doubt they are selling it and getting returned $20,000 a mile, less the amount that it will take to finish the construction, over and above the original amount granted. Now, I say we should have held a controlling interest in this road, and not have allowed it to pass into the hands of the company under these circumstances. The Government should not have acted in the reckless way they have done in connection with this matter. I can easily understand why the leader of the Government has made it a Government measure. A number of his friends are interested in it, and he is anxious to see them through the undertaking. I say it is unfair to this House and unfair to the country. I can fully endorse the view expressed by the hon. member for North York when he said that the amounts paid to the sub-contractors were considerably less than the original amounts paid to the first contractors. I have not a personal acquaintance with a number of those who were contractors on that line, but I have with some of them, and I am fully satisfied that the figures he has submitted to the House as the amounts paid to the sub-contractors are correct in the main, and I am certain that if the House would submit this thing to the Railway Committee and permit the hon. member for North York to adduce the evidence that can be adduced, revelations would take place in connection with that transaction that would be quite as surprising to this House and the country as those that took place in connection with the Manitoba and North-West Central. I am satisfied that money has been got in such a way, and that matters have been manipulated in such a way in connection with this road that money has passed into the pockets of men who would, in all probability, blush with shame if the way the matter has been handled were brought before the world. For my part I do not wish to make any insinuation against the hon. member in charge of this measure. His political career has been, I am glad to say, so far, such as to prevent me from making any insinuation in that connection. But he may, possibly, be used by these other parties who are experts in the matter of railway building and contracting. They may have found him a very convenient man to use in this Chamber to carry the measure through, exercising a very large influence, as he does, with the Government and the House. I know there has been a good deal of lobbying done in this matter. They have been down here week after week undoubtedly exercising an influence in favor of this Bill. I say that if the Government are prepared to act in the interest of the country, they should allow an investigation to take place and allow the hon. member for North York to present the evidence that he has in his possession, and if it shows that there are no objectionable features in the transaction, it will be time enough then to pass the legislation they now ask for. With regard to the course adopted by the Senate. I am sorry to think the Senate should permit themselves to be made, for the time being, the tools of those who are advocating the passage of this measure.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, have submitted to influences which induced the Senate to pass these amendments. I do not think they should have permitted it. The only Minister in the Senate who was there to guard the interest of the country, is the president of the Northern Railway, one of the lines most closely connected with this transaction, and no doubt he exercised a very strong influence in the Senate in favor of this transaction. Now, a remark has been made with regard to the Ontario Government subsidising roads, but I would say that in every case where aid was granted by that Government, the most searching investigation was made into the circumstances of the road, and they require specifications and statements showing the quantity of work done, before a single dollar is handed over. Sir, I think this Government should exercise a similar care in connection with this matter in order to protect the interest of the country; they ought to have instructed their engineer to make a thorough investigation and examination of the road. There is no difficulty now, with the information already possessed, for the Government engineers to make a very close estimate as to what it is going to cost. It is possible to come within $1,000 or $1,500 of the cost. When the Government ascertained the amount the road was likely to cost, they could have given a subsidy that would have enabled some company to undertake the construction. But in place of that they granted $6,000 a mile, then the next year they granted $6,000 more, and in this way they allowed parties to speculate in the matter. and now they come out with a declaration that it will take $20,000 a mile, over and above the amount the Government granted. Well, Sir, as I said before, I am satisfied that there is a big bonanza in this thing, and it would be well for the House to find out where the money is going.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are some curious features about this transaction. I fail to understand how it was that these facts which are now alleged, were not known a fortnight ago when this matter was under discussion, and if at that time the hon. member for Simcoe and the Government were aware that this road required power to borrow $20,000 per mile, why it was not stated then. There was time then to have had a full discussion, and it appears to me that they must have known then all the facts that they are in possession of to-night. I have not yet heard any evidence to show that any new fact has been elicited which was not fully known to the Government and to the promoter when this matter was under discussion. Now, what is our position? When this matter was discussed in the House before we came to a decision upon it, a matter which is peculiarly within the purview of this House, inasmuch as we have to provide the money. After we had disposed of it and sent it to the Upper Chamber, a good many members who were interested in this question having gone away, we now find the Senate takes upon itself to alter an arrangement made by the Government of this country, and to add—because that is practically the effect of it—to the burdens of the people of this country. Now, that may be technically within the power of the Senate, but practically this is not the kind of a Bill the Senate ought to be allowed by the House of Commons to alter after we have come to a decision. Another consideration is this. So far as I have been able to understand, no money at all of the lessees of the road is being put into the road by them, except a paltry $18,000 or $20,000. They got $12,000 per mile from this country, they got the power of bonding for $8,000, they now demand a further power of bonding for $12,000 making in all $20,000 a mile, and so far as I can see all the cash that the parties or the representatives of the parties put in was 10 per cent. on $200,000, or about $20,000. It does appear to me that there can be no reason whatever for requiring that the House should on such very imperfect information, and in face of the statements made by the hon. member for North York, depart from the resolution they came to after our first deliberation. If next year it should appear there was good ground for making a further concession, then after fair consideration in committee it might be granted; but after the statements made during the debate and after, as I understand, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) agreed that $8,000 a mile was sufficient as against the Government, this thing should not have been sprung upon us at this hour by amendment in the Senate, introduced, if the hon. gentleman is right in his statement, at the instance of a member of the Government, who has a direct personal interest as president of the Northern Railway in pressing this particular legislation.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not sorry that an opportunity has at length been afforded me to rise to meet the various accusations that have been made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) who has taken a very great interest in this matter, and who has now been endorsed by the member who has last spoken. Sir, it is true what has been represented as to the position and attitude I took in the House when the Bill was before it. I was discussing the legal character of the Bill with which I was entrusted, a Bill which I then presented to the House, against the accusation made by members on the Opposition side, that the effect of the legislation then proposed would be to do away with the Government contract and introduce a new term into it. I told the House then, and I repeat it to the House now, that that was not the intention of the legislation which I had in charge; that the object of it was simply to make the bonds sectional and alter the character of the bonds to be issued. I do not think any hon. member who has taken trouble to study the matter will say that that was an incorrect statement of the Bill then before the House, and I stated my willingness to put in any clause that might be suggested in order to make that which was clear to me should be made satisfactory to the House. So the Bill passed this Chamber. At that time the officers of the company, the people who are immediatety charged with the duty, were negotiating with the Government to do that which the Government had power to do. They were asking the Government to alter the contract because it was by the contract and not otherwise that this limitation in the power of the company, this right of the Government with respect to the $8,000 a mile of bonds, was stipulated. It was not by Act of Parliament, it was not in pursuance of any expression in Acts of Parliament, but the Government thought fit when the subsidy was granted to this company to say: If you do not comply with the terms of your charter, if you do not comply with the requirements, especially with clause thirty-four which obliges the company to afford all reasonable facilities for the interchange of traffic, and in order to secure the most perfect freedom and the most perfect fairness on the part of this company in the interchange of traffic, Parliament may, if satisfied at any time that this provision is not being complied with, acquire the road and take it over. Upon payment of what? Upon payment of $8,000 a mile as the minimum, and, as the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) has pointed out, upon the payment of a such further sum as the road may then be worth. With regard to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), who has taken a very peculiar position in this matter. I regret the fact, because I like to see a gentleman occupying his position acting from purely patriotic feeling, and I like to believe those are his sole motives. I regret to say that an imputation may be cast on the zeal of that hon. gentleman, because the whole of his trouble with the Northern Railway arises simply because that railway declined to give him and his friends going to his country estate, such rates and discriminations as would be, in their opinion, against the interest of the general public.

Mr. MULOCK. The statement is wholly incorrect.

Mr. McCARTHY: The cause of the hon. gentleman's trouble with the Northern Railway is, I say, and I am prepared to prove it, that that hon. gentleman applied for rates, which the public were not getting, for him and his friends to go to his country seat, and the manager of the Northern Railway did not think it in the public interest to grant them.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is wholly incorrect in his statements.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman has said so and I have made my statement. I have not far from me copies of the correspondence that passed, and if the hon. gentleman wishes it placed on the Table of the House I have no desire to refrain from doing so. I have read the correspondence within the last twenty-four hours. The hon. gentleman's zeal in the public interest against the Northern Railway, and his desire to force terms upon them, I regret to say does not all appear to result from pure and patriotic motives. Let me again draw attention to this. The question here is not, it never has been, whether there has been any liability on the part of the country towards this railway company. The Government granted $12,000 a mile, it is true; but in granting it to this link which was to connect Callander with the Ontario system of railways, the Government were only doing what the former Government, of which the hon. member for South Huron was a member, did for the Canada Central, to connect it with Montreal by way of Ottawa. The people of Ontario were entitled—and it was agreed unanimously by this House that a grant of $12,000 a mile under those circumstances was not unfair and unreasonable. But this Administration did choose to place terms on the Northern Pacific Railway Company, which the Government, of which the hon. member who last addressed the House was a member, did not think proper to impose on the Canada Central. They provided in the agreement that if at any time it was in the public interest to acquire that railway they had power to do so, and a step which they need not have taken, for the Government has always power to expropriate in their way as they have to expropriate a telegraph system. But Parliament has provided that while they should be bound to pay $8,000 a mile they could also be called upon to pay the sum the road was worth, $20,000, $30,000 or $40,000 a mile. But this is a very remote contingency indeed. We are not dealing with the present but the contingency that is not likely to arrive in our day in connection with this railway company, viz., that the Government would cause Parliament to acquire the road and pay the bonds. If that be so, then why is all this talk and what is the meaning of all these expressions of imposing burdens on the people? The people are under no burdens now. Parliament possesses the right, but Parliament is not bound to exercise that right unless it should be in the public interest. What are the possibilities? The possibility is that at some time or other this road will be so recreant to its duties and responsibilities as to refuse to interchange traffic upon equal terms with all the other railways, and if such an event should happen, then, it is true that Parliament could take the road over, but not by paying merely $8,000 a mile, but paying whatever the road may be worth at the time. That is what Parliament is authorised to do. Now, what is the proposition before the House? And why was it that this proposition was made in the Senate? I will tell the House. As I said before, negotiations were going on between the manager of the road and the Minister of Railways with regard to an alteration of that contract which, strictly speaking, did not require the assent of Parliament. Negotiations were pending between the Government and the company, when, as hon. gentlemen know, unfortunately at that time the Minister of Railway became incapable of discharging his duties, and the negotiations were in abeyance. But after the discussion in the House upon the reading of this Bill, the acting Minister of Railways thought that, considering all that had been said with regard to this road, it would not be proper for the Government, behind Parliament, to enter into an agreement with the railway company, and, as the Bill had passed through this House, the Government authorised that to be done which alone was possible under the circumstances—to introduce the amendment in the Senate, knowing, of course, that it had to come back for the assent of this House. And what is the amendment? The amendment is that instead of the Government being bound to pay, in case they do what, as I have already said, it is most improbable that they will ever be called on to do—that is to assume this railway—that instead of paying $8,000 they shall pay $20,000 per mile. Now, is there any hon. gentleman in this House who honestly believes that that road will not, in the course of three or four years, be worth more than $20,000 per mile, over and above the subsidy? Is there anyone who does not know that if the road is kept up at all—for the road is, as we all know, a most valuable piece of railway—is kept up for three or four years, with additional buildings and sidings, &c., that that road will not ere long be of much greater value than $32,000 per mile. I ask hon. gentlemen to say whether the Grand Trunk Railway could be purchased for anything like $30,000 or $40,000 per mile. I ask hon. gentlemen to look at the Ontario and Quebec, one of the cheapest roads that was ever built in this country, and they know that it cost more than $30,000 per mile. We all know that a road is constantly increasing in value. A road cannot properly be operated without constructing sidings, and other improvements necessary for its working and traffic; and the proposition here is to fix that amount, $20,000 per mile, after an investigation, when we all know of a verity that that will, at least, be its value at any time the Government desire to take the road over. What is there in that? Let us see the evidence upon which the Government are acting. The matter was referred to Mr. Schreiber, the Government engineer, and he made this report, and although the substance of it has been stated to the House, I will read it at length:

"Having as required looked into the matter of the cost of the construction of the Northern Pacific Railway (Gravenhurst to Callandar) the following appear to be the facts:

"The company have paid the contractors, Messrs. Hendrie & Symmes, for work done up to the end of February, the sum of $2,582,896. The company have paid for right of way, $41,139; telegraph line, $4,540; have let contracts for buildings, $52,300; for engineering and superintendence, $77,000, or a total for work and services of $2,757,875. Estimated value of work remaining to be done: Semaphores, $2,880; engineering and superintendence, $10,700; rails and fastenings for sidings, $24,660; earthwork, $70,000; ballasting, $14,000; riprap $31,500; off-take ditches, $4,080; making in all, $2,915,695, or, with rolling stock, $300,000, added, a total of $3,215,695."

Or within a fraction of $29,000 per mile of actual expenditure, or expenditures agreed upon, up to the present date. Now what is that over and above the subsidy? It amounts to $17,000 above the subsidy. The Government are now agreeing—the difference between the two being $17,000 and $20,000—to assume that when Parliament exercises its option—if Parliament ever is called upon to do so—that the cost of the road will be at least $20,000 per mile. The Minister of Railways was asked in the first place merely to sanction an alteration in the contract to the extent of $17,000 or $18,000 per mile. But with his experience, he said: It is useless to be doing that to-day, for you will be coming back to-morrow to get a further extension. He said: I know if the road has cost $17,000 per mile now, over and above the subsidy, it is certain before the road can go into operation for any length of time the cost will be fully $20,000 per mile, and there is no use, therefore, in having two alterations of the contract; we may as well at once deal with it in this way, and he does so accordingly. Now what is the explanation? Mr. Schreiber says:

"In explanation of this I may say that the original estimate of $20,000 per mile did not include rolling stock, as it was said the road was to be operated with the stock of the Northern and North-Western Railway. Neither did it cover a length in excess of 110 miles, there being actually one and a quarter miles of additional length. There appears to be no doubt that the works which were originally covered by the estimate of $2,200,000 will, when completed cost a sum not less than $2,900,000, the country traversed being very much rougher and heavier than it was believed to be when the original estimate was made, and the bridging being of a much more permanent, durable and costly character than was specified.

"If the rolling stock is to be provided the cost will no doubt reach $3,200,000."

Now, these are the circumstances of the case, and I think I have satisfied every gentleman who desires to be satisfied, that if the actual cost of the road now is $17,000 per mile, before the road will be fairly worked it will reach to within a fraction of $20,000 per mile. Then the question is, is the the country to be benefited, is it to be put in any better position to compel this railway company to sell its bonds at what must necessarily be a considerable sacrifice? Now, I think the hon. gentleman, who once occupied the position of Finance Minister of this country, will, I think, admit that to put these bonds on the market with that Government contract and responsibilities would be almost next to impossible. I think he will agree that those bonds cannot be floated at probably more than two-thirds of their face value. Now will that benefit us, will it benefit the country or the traffic which is to go over the road? Undoubtedly the proprietors of this road will expect to make the interest on their bonds: and if the bonds bring 66 cents instead of 100 cents, and the interest is paid on 100 cents, it is not difficult to ascertain that the cost of the road will be much enhanced, and the cost of the traffic correspondingly so. Will it therefore benefit any person to say that the Government should not at once, instead of leaving it for the future, assume that this road will cost, whenever the country proposes to take it over, $20,000 per mile; and the Government are prepared to say that if ever Parliament exercises that power, they will be prepared to assume the bonded debt to that extent? The alternative proposition is to let the contract remain as it is, to let the company float their bonds, to let them sacrifice their bonds, and thereby increase the cost of the road, increase the cost of the traffic, and certainly not benefit the travelling or commercial community. In the event of Parliament being called upon to exercise its option Parliament will yet have to pay the value, whatever it may be, and that will be no doubt $20,000 per mile over and above the subsidy. This is the proposition which excites the ire of the hon. gentleman who is now taking his change out of the manager of the Northern Railway. The hon. gentleman is now taking his innings after the manager of the Northern has had his, and I have no doubt that gentleman now regrets that he did not give the hon. member for North York the benefit of low rates on the line, or a pass, or anything else, or would regret it, if he had known what terrible opposition he was bringing up and using against him. And now a word as to how the contract was

let. Much has been said as to how this was done. I asked Mr. Barker, the manager of the road, to write me a letter, above his own hand, to see whether Mr. Moss could verify the statement how the contract had been let, and whether there was any ground for the accusation so recklessly hurled across the floor of this House, and the insinuations cast upon hon. members on the floor and upon people who are not here, connected with the building of this railway; and what is the statement made by Mr. Barker, verified by Mr. Charles Moss, who was then president of the road, and who superintended the letting of these contracts? That statement has been printed and distributed, and was, I have no doubt, in the possession of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), when he spoke this afternoon and this evening. I trust that he read it, and if he did I trust that he understood it; and understanding it, I cannot comprehend his making the charges he did make in connection with this matter. He knows Mr. Moss, and he knows Mr. Barker; and whatever his feelings may be towards the latter gentleman, he will not pretend to say either here or elsewhere that either Mr. Barker or Mr. Moss would be privy to a dishonest or a dishonorable transaction. Mr. Barker may be a hard and close railway manager, and I believe he is; he may not be a popular railway manager, just for those causes, but that he is an honest man and would not stoop to do a dishonorable transaction, I challenge the hon. member for North York to deny. What does he say:

"On the 24th June, 1884, Mr. Chas. Moss, Q.C., then president of the company, Mr. John Stuart, of Hamilton, and myself were appointed a committee of the board to open and examine tenders and report thereon.

"On the 10th July, 1884, Hon. James Turner was substituted for Mr. Stuart, during the latter's absence in England.

"The committee reported that of the fifteen tenders received pursuant to the newspaper advertisements, the three best tenders were those of Manning & Peterson, Neelon, Carroll & Co. and Dawson & Symmes, and that Manning & Peterson would accept the company's bonds in payment for the work in excess of the subsidy at 90 cents on the dollar, while Neelon, Carroll & Co. offered to accept them at 95 cents and Symmes & Dawson at par.

"The question was then submitted to the board, and after very thorough consideration the work was awarded to Dawson, Symmes & Co. by unanimous vote, the following directors being present: Mr. Charles Moss, Q.C., president, Messrs. John Proctor, C. J. Campbell, Hon. James Turner, Wm. Ince and Saml. Barker. The question was really between Dawson, Symmes & Co., and Neelon, Carroll & Co., for Manning & Peterson's tender, as amended by that firm, was higher than either of the others, and they would take our bonds only at a discount of 10 per cent.

"The Messrs. Hendrie had also put in a tender for the work, but it was much higher than the tenders of the three firms above named, and was rejected.

"After the tender of Dawson, Symmes & Co. had been accepted, they took Messrs. Hendrie in with them, and so the latter gentlemen became partners in the work, but of course on the terms of Dawson, Symmes & Co 's tender."

Mr. Moss certifies to the above as follows:—

"My recollection accords with the statements on this and foregoing page. The matters referred to in the following papers occurred after my connection with the board had ceased.

"CHARLES MOSS."

I want to know what more could have been done. Tenders were called for by open advertisements; fifteen were received; all the tenders having been submitted to a committee, they reported to the board that the three lowest were those I have mentionned; Mr. Manning's became the highest by reason of his only being willing to take the bonds of the company at a discount of 10 per cent., while Dawson & Symmes were willing to take them at par, and the contract was granted to Dawson, Symmes & Hendrie, on the terms of Dawson & Symmes' tender. The hon. member has statements from some person, whose name he will not mention, as to the terms of the sub-contracts. I do not know what the railway company have to do between the contractors and the sub-contractors. The contractors performed their work, and having done so they were entitled to their pay, and what the company has to do with that matter perhaps the hon. member will explain. Now, the position is this. The Government never supposed that $8,000 a mile would build this road, and it took power to issue bonds to the extent of $12,000 per mile; and how have these bonds been disposed of. Mr. Barker replies as follows:—

"The bonds already issued are $12,000 per mile, that being all the lessees had consented to up to the holding of the recent meetings of the shareholders of the Northern and North-Western Railways."

Allow me to draw attention to that fact. No bonds can be issued on this road without the consent of the bondholders of the Northern Railway and without the consent of the shareholders and bondholders of the Hamilton and North-Western Railway. The interest on the bonds become virtually a charge upon these railways, and a negotiation has been going on for the purpose of making this interest part of the working expenses; and if that is done, it will be ahead of the bondholders' claims on both roads. Is it possible to suppose that the bondholders of the Northern Railway and the shareholders of the Hamilton and North-Western Railway are all privy to this scheme spoken of by hon. members opposite? They have to be satisfied before assenting that the bonds have been properly applied. Now, have these bonds been applied? The contractors have been given, on account of work done to this date, over $1,000,000; the banks, on securing advances for surveys, engineering expenses, purchase of right of way, the construction of station houses, &c., $227,000; and the Canada Life, as security for advances towards the purchase of rolling stock, $64,000, or say $12,000 a mile; and that is the amount of bonds which up to date the company had power to issue. Recent meetings have been held, not with recklessness, but with caution, and the company's shareholders have sanctioned the issue of bonds to the extent of $17,000 a mile. The accounts between the company and the contractors have not yet been adjusted; and although the evidence of Mr. Bailey, the engineer, appeared to satisfy Mr. Schreiber that the cost would be about $20,000 a mile, at present the shareholders have only sanctioned the issue of $17,000 a mile. But we know that the balance of the $20,000, or nearly so, will have to be issued. Now, the question comes back to a very simple one. Is it better that this company should be empowered to issue these bonds at their fair value, or that it should be compelled to go on the market with bonds having a cloud cast upon them by the agreement made with the Government in 1874? It has been said the company entered into that agreement with their eyes open, and ought not to be relieved. While that may be the case, it may still be expedient to alter a bargain, not merely in the interest of the company, but in the interest of the country; and I say it is in the interest of the country to enable the company to float its bonds on the best terms that can be got. The company must pay the interest; and if the bonds realise only two-thirds of their value, the greater burden they will impose on the road—the greater must be its earnings to pay the interest upon them. One word more, and I am done. It is said the contract does not authorise the company to purchase rolling stock. It is true, the contract is not very explicit on that point; but it was always the intention that rolling stock should be put on the road. I should like to know what would be the use of the road if there were no rolling stock upon it. The contract implies, because reference is made to it in one part, that rolling stock should be put upon the road. But, as a matter of fact rolling stock is being put on it, and is necessary for its operation. The mere rails between Gravenhurst and Callander would not give the people of the Province what they want without the rolling stock to do the work, and rolling stock is being supplied. Under the circumstances, I do not think this House will hesitate for one moment to endorse the action of the Senate in this amendment, which is brought in under the circumstances I have mentioned, and which could have been dealt with behind the back of the House by an alteration, if the Government had thought fit to adopt that course; but it has been brought before the House to be discussed openly, so that the full merits and demerits of the transaction may be seen.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has demonstrated to the House that it is a very simple matter to build railways in this country, and in fact that it requires no capital whatever to become a railway owner. A few gentlemen can associate together; and if they have sufficient influence with the Government, they can get enormous bonuses, bond the road, sell the bonds, get whatever more money is necessary to build the road, and they become owners of the property. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), said he saw no harm in members of Parliament promoting railway enterprises by taking stock in the railway companies. There is no harm in that, but when a man consents to become a member of Parliament and then seeks favors at the hands of the Government for enterprises with which he is connected, he is placing himself in a false position, one which enables the people to say that he is compromising or may compromise himself. What do we find here? Half a dozen members of Parliament go to work and get a railway charter from Parliament. These hon. gentlemen have sufficient influence with the Government to get the Government to give them enormous bonuses for the construction of their road. They get authority, in the Act which incorporates them, to bond the road, and they are the owners of the road. Does the hon member for North Simcoe think he can persuade the House that he and his associates have been doing this work for nothing, and solely out of patriotic motives. Do hon. gentlemen sitting in this House, who are promoting railways from one end of the country to the other, think they can convince us that they are not acting in their own interest, but solely in the interest of the country? If they think so, they are relying too much on the credulity of the people. What are the facts in connection with this road? The hon. member for North Simcoe was one of its incorporators. These hon. gentlemen—I refer to the hon. Senator Smith and the hon. Senator Turner and the hon. member for North Simcoe—are stock-holders in the road. In some way that stock has been transferred, and it is now held for the benefit of the two leased roads. When was the consideration given? and what was the consideration given for the transfer? Is it true that these two roads, the Northern and the Hamilton and North-Western, paid a large sum of money for the control of that stock? Rumor says they did. Who was it that got the money? Hon. gentlemen opposite smile. They may well smile because they are as deep in the matter as many others we are speaking about. That stock is transferred, and is held in trust for these two companies. When was it transferred? What was the consideration? Did the original corporators of the Northern and Pacific Junction receive a consideration from these two railways for the transfer of the stock? Or were Senators Smith and Turner and the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) animated entirely by patriotic motives in getting this road incorporated and turning it over to these railways? There is a rumor in the country that the men who are connected with the original corporation of that road have received a large sum of money for transferring the stock and control of it to the two railways I have mentioned. Is that true? It has never been contradicted, so far as I have learned, by any hon. gentleman in this House or out of it. Whoever may have made money by this transaction, one thing, however, is certain, that the contractors have made enormous sums of money, reaching to the millions. Is the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Monck) a partner in the concern? Are there any members of this House sleeping partners in the concern? Mr. Barker is, I believe, an honorable man, but he may think this is a perfectly legitimate transaction, and it may be so far as he is concerned. But if there is an hon. member in this House involved in this transaction, he is not entitled to and should not hold his seat in Parliament. I do not charge the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) with having anything to do with it, but it is stated that the corporators in the original road received a large sum of money for the stock they held in it, on their assigning that stock to the lessor companies, giving them control of the road, control of the charter, and control of the subsidy granted by Parliament. This road may be of benefit to Canada, but when we are dealing with it, on a contract entered into, we must look at the possible consequences of the action of Parliament to-day. This road entered into a contract with this Parliament by which we have the right to take control of it anytime it is not operated satisfactorily, and if we find it necessary to exercise that power, we have no right to grant to this company power to borrow more money than the road will be fairly worth when we take possession of it. The contract was that the company could borrow $8,000 a mile; now they propose to borrow $20,000 a mile and ask of this Parliament power to do so. But if we do, we will—should we desire to exercise the right—have to take control of the road, have to assume the additional liability involved in giving them power to borrow $20,000 a mile. The hon. gentleman may say that event will never happen, but he has no right to say that. It may not happen or it may, and we have the right to see that the contract is carried out according to its terms. The contractors have received a million dollars more than the work is worth; the road is therefore worth a million dollars less than the company is paying for it, and that we will have to pay for it if we have to pay contract rates. That is the position we are in; and the Government in assuming control of the matter assumes all the responsibility. It is very well for my hon. friend to say he is now content to have this measure as it was when it came before the House, but we know perfectly well, from information from the hon. gentleman and the senators, that this matter had been arranged among them after the Bill left this House.

Mr. McCARTHY. The measure was exactly as I have stated. There was communication going on between the Government and the company to have the contract altered, and the contract could have been altered without legislation. Owing to the illness of the Minister of Railways, negotiations were left in abeyance. But on account of the discussion in the House, the Minister of Railways thought the proper way to do it was, not by contract, but by discussion of the Bill. I do not think the hon. member could find fault with that.

Mr. LISTER. Certainly not, but did not the hon. member know that when it was before the House?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not pretend to say I did not. I knew it was under negotiation, but the negotiations were not completed. The matter was being negotiated between them, and the railway engineer was taking evidence. What course the Government would take I did not know.

Mr. LISTER. Very Well. In a matter in which this country is so deeply interested, it was the duty of the Government, and it is the duty of the Government to-day, to have this whole matter referred to a committee, and, if it is not as we hear, if everything is clear and straight, there will be no occasion, there will be no opportunity of reflecting upon any hon. gentleman in this House or upon any man outside of this House. I feel these hon. senators and everyone connected with this road owe it to themselves and the country to have a thorough investigation into their whole dealings with this road, from the time they transferred the stock to these two railway companies down to the present moment. It is a matter this country is deeply interested in, and in the interests of the country, in every view you can take of it, this matter ought to be investigated.

There is a feeling, and my hon. friend must have heard of it, because it is all over the Province of Ontario, that the men who were interested in this work have made an enormous fortune out of it. Everyone who has ever heard anything of this Northern and Pacific Junction for the last six or eight months must know that in Toronto, and in other places in the Province of Ontario, the feeling is that these men have made an enormous fortune out of it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Which men?

Mr. LISTER. The contractors, and it is intimated that more than one member of Parliament is interested in the contract. I may say that my hon friend from Welland (Mr. Ferguson) is stated to have an interest in the contract. Whether that is true or false I do not know, but it is common rumor, and it is a duty he owes to himself that this should be cleared up. I say this system of members of Parliament craving from the Government bonuses to aid them in these schemes in which they have put none of their own money is pernicious and demoralising; it is demoralising to members, and it causes members of Parliament to be looked upon with suspicion throughout the country. It ought to be stopped. There is too much of it. You would not hear the clamor you do throughout the country, you would not see members getting up and denying these things, if they were right in themselves. If they were right, you would not find people throughout the country condemning them, and you can scarcely find one person who will justify them. No member of Parliament should have anything to do with a railway which is bonused by the Government or the Parliament of which he is a member. I say again that this should be thoroughly investigated. The value put on the road by Mr. Schreiber, a perfectly honorable man, no doubt, must be very superficial indeed. His valuation cannot be regarded as any criterion of what the value of this road is. I think the charge which my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) made against the hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mulock) was quite unworthy of that hon. gentleman. I am sure, if he was in his calmer moments, he would not make such a charge against that hon. gentleman.

Amendment of Mr. Mulock negatived.

Senate amendment (first) concurred in.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think we ought to have yeas and nays on this.

On the second amendment,

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice gave us some figures the other evening. This evening the member for North Simcoe has given us some figures which differ from those furnished by the Minister of Justice, if I followed the latter gentleman correctly. The Minister of Justice, in his deliberate and accurate way, gave us I have no doubt the precise figures furnished to him, and he stated that the expenditure upon the road up to the time—I suppose the time when he had received his certificate or instructions from the chief engineer—amounted to $26,208 per mile. He further added that it would cost in all $28,905 per mile to complete the road and equip it with rolling stock. Now, I will give them the benefit of their own figures. The Minister of Justice tells us that the completion of this road and the equipping it with rolling stock, which it is not bound to do, will cost $28,900. That being the case, it is asked to allow this road to bond itself to the extent of $20,000 a mile, which, with the bonus of $12,000, makes in all $32,000 a mile. Deducting from that the gross cost, we have a balance of $3,095 a mile. They now ask to bond this road for $3,095 a mile in excess of everything they say it will cost, even in excess of the equipment which they are not obliged to supply. In other words, they ask to be allowed to bond it for $340,450 in excess of their strongest imagination as to its cost. The hon. member for North Simcoe states that, when this Bill was under discussion before, certain negotiations were going on between the Government and the railway. I think it was due to this House that he should have informed the House, at the time it was discussing that Bill, that these negotiations were going on. It certainly was the understanding in this House that the agreement itself was to be lived up to, and that the proposed legislation would leave the agreement intact, and that the agreement would continue to be binding. I submit that there was a want of candor on the part of the hon. member for North Simcoe in telling us he was elsewhere endeavoring to procure that legislation, that whilst we were endeavoring to guard against its effect, at that very time negotiations were going on in another quarter which would have rendered our whole argument abortive if those negotiations were successful; and now we are told, as an excuse for this matter coming before the House, that, because Parliament is sitting and the Minister of Railways was at that time unable to discharge the duties of his Department, therefore the case should be thrown into Parliament. Well, that seems to me an attempt on the part of the Government to relieve itself of responsibility. If it has the power under the agreement to modify it, it could only modify it after a proper case being made out to its entire satisfaction, and the Government itself would then be answerable to Parliament for any mistake. It has the proper means of enquiry and the proper means of satisfying itself. It can do so deliberately, without undue haste, without accepting hearsay evidence, but after a careful and actual examination. That has not been done. It cannot be done in this Chamber, and the Government, which is able to deal with the case or which ought to be able to deal with the case, throws this question into this tribunal, which cannot possibly make all these enquiries which ought to precede legislation. But my hon. friend from North Simcoe argues, or tries to draw from my criticisms the inference, that I attack Mr. Barker or Mr. Moss's integrity. It is nothing of the kind.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, I said you would not.

Mr. MULOCK. I said I considered the contract an improvident one. That is the word I used.

Mr. McCARTHY. Would the hon. gentleman say how they could have made a contract otherwise than they did?

Mr. MULOCK. I am not the railway company. I say the results have shown that it was improvident. I have furnished figures showing the actual and real cost of the work. No one has ventured to contradict them.

Mr. McCARTHY. You will not give us the names.

Mr. MULOCK. These gentlemen know whether the work was let or not at these prices, and they will not venture to say it was not. They have the sub-contracts, no doubt; at all events, they are in existence, and we have telegraphic communication with all parts, and all they had to do was to telegraph to Hamilton and the information could be furnished. It was not done. We must draw the same inferences, and there can be but one inference, and that is that these figures are substantially correct. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) says that perhaps this sub-contract was let only for some light work. Well, I hardly think that explanation will do, because it is to be remembered that the whole work was let by piece work, and I presume that the cost of moving a cubic yard of earth is practically the same whether it is in the hill or otherwise. Then I stated that my information was to the effect that a very large proportion of the work was let at the rates mentioned in the memorandum I furnished to the House.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). It is a very difficult place to build a road, any way.

Mr. MULOCK. For these reasons, if the Government has power to deal with the matter, let the Government deal with it, and then we will have some one who is responsible, but to force the matter through this House is relieving the Government of the responsibility it ought to assume, and casting it upon a body that has not the facilities at this date to deal with the matter. For these reasons I beg to move, in amendment:

That the amendment be not now concurred in, but that it be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

House divided on amendment.

Senate amendment (second) concurred in.

SUPPLY—CUSTOMS SEIZURE AT MONTREAL.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HOLTON. Before this motion is carried I desire, with all possible brevity, to direct the attention of the House to a matter which, within the past few weeks, has aroused intense excitement in business circles in the city of Montreal, and in which the mercantile class throughout the country is deeply interested. I refer to the recent conflict between the special agents of the Customs Department and the wholesale importing firm of Patterson, Kissock & Co. The matter was briefly alluded to the other evening by the hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault); but it being my wish to refer to some points in the case which were not then touched upon, and considering the importance of the question involved, I feel justified in again bringing the matter forward, and in doing so I trust it will be believed and understood that my action is in no sense prompted by sympathy with violations of the revenue laws, for I have none, whoever the offenders may be. In my opinion such offences, when clearly proved, should in every instance be most severely dealt with, as well for the protection of the honest importer, as for that of the revenue. My object in again bringing this matter up is, in the first place, that the Government may have an opportunity of explaining how far these officers, be they special or others, are entrusted with such powers as were sought to be exercised in Montreal the other day, and then that I may be enabled to make some remarks on Customs regulations generally. I am, of course, aware that the revenue authorities are possessed of very great powers, necessarily so, no doubt, but having obtained them, whatever their extent, from this Parliament, I submit that upon a reasonable and respectful demand, the Government is bound to explain to Parliament the manner in which such powers are being exercised. It is an exceedingly important matter, for in it are involved the rights and liberties of citizens of a presumably free country. As the majority of the members of this House are familiar with the incidents of the Customs seizure to which I refer, it will not be necessary for me to enter into them further than to state briefly a few of the more important points, which are believed to have been fully substantiated. It would seem that on the 6th or 7th of this present month, two special agents of the Customs Department appeared in the warehouse of a wholesale dry goods firm in Montreal, and after a deal of official bluster and swagger, and an unreasonable—and many think an illegal—demand for the books of the concern, which they proposed to remove from the premises, not merely to examine, and without having charged the parties with any specific offence against the revenue laws, or indicating any particular goods or invoices as having been irregularly passed through the Customs, seized and actually sought to remove from the premises, the whole stock, amounting in value to $175,000, and composed largely of goods, which, being of Canadian manufacture, were in no event liable to payment of Customs duty or forfeiture. This high-handed proceeding was naturally and justifiably resented by the firm, when, although no forcible resistance was offered or proposed, these special agents insulted and treated with contempt the writ of the Superior Court under which at least a portion of the stock was ordered to be held, and one of them, revolver in hand, threatened the life of the officer of that court who was charged with the writ in question, and who was as much a Queen's officer, and as fully armed with Her Majesty's authority, as his assailant. Subsequently, this same special agent, in the same manner, threatened the lives of other citizens who were quite within their right, in being upon the premises, and in doing or saying what they may have done or said upon the occasion. These proceedings were followed a few days later by a criminal prosecution of one of the members of the firm for perjury, in connection with one or more Customs' entries made by him nearly two years ago. The circumstances of this case, as well as of others of recent occurrence, have set our merchants a thinking, and aroused in their minds feelings of distrust and indignation which it will be difficult to allay; and naturally enough it is so, for they feel that under the prevailing complex and intricate Customs laws and regulations, which are doubtless among the evils consequent upon a high tariff, it is possible for the most honest and well meaning of them to be guilty of some irregularity in passing their entries through the Customs; and if these special agents have the enormous powers which they claim, what might follow to such innocently offending merchants? A visit from these officials, a revolver at their heads, their whole stock bundled off, their business wiped out and themselves ruined. They thus have a right to know, and they demand to know, what the claims and pretensions of the Government are in these matters, and whether the recent proceedings in Montreal must be accepted and considered as an interpretation of them. I will only say now with regard to the general and wider question which this reference brings up, that in the opinion of those who best know, for their knowledge is practical and gleaned from daily experience, that the present system of espionage, and of special agents armed with such extraordinary powers, and moved by such extraordinary inducements to make seizures, justly or unjustly, is odious and vicious in the extreme, and that with it the principle of allowing the seizing or informing officer any share of the plunder, as well as the other pernicious principle of compromising with the offender, should be at once abolished to give place to a more modern and less one-sided method. It is also thought, and I wholly agree with the proposition, that in all cases of offences against the revenue laws where the offending goods have once passed from the hands of the authorities, the Government should have no other remedy than that which it can obtain through the courts of the land. Amendments to the law in the direction I have indicated would, I am convinced, be approved by the people at large, though I suppose it must be confessed that the special agents and others to whom the present system is the source of such great profit might object. I beg now to read a short article from a recent issue of the Montreal Herald referring to this case, and which so well and ably expresses the opinion of the people on the subject that it should commend itself to Parliament. It appeared in the Herald of the 8th May, and is as follows:—

"On whichever side the wrong may lie in the particular Customs case which excited business circles in the city yesterday, one thing is abundantly clear. If the special agent of the Customs Department has the powers he claims, he has quite too much; and if the Department has the power it claims it is high time its wings were clipped. It would seem that under the laws and regulations, and according to the practice of the Department—as claimed by the Department—no business man's reputation, or property, or credit would be safe, and the credit or interest of one man is another equally unsafe. The Department, without laying a specific charge or entering into details, may carry terror and ruin and commercial death into any mercantile establishment in the land. While all reasonable powers should be given to the Government to enable them to protect the revenue, it is very clear that the official practices of late indulged in savor of despotic rather than constitutional government. Things have come to such a pass that it is possible under the forms of law to do things which are practically lawless, and in the name of honest government to commit acts similar to those for which pirates have been hung at the yard-arm. In the case which so excited the city yesterday, the officers of the Superior Court were defied; the orders of the court were treated as null and void; a pistol was drawn on a Superior Court officer by a Customs agent; the removal of the entire contents of a dry goods store, without any evidence of the goods being forfeited being produced, was begun; and but for the common sense of the lawyers employed on either side, the most serious consequences might have ensued. Whether such things are legal or not it is for the courts to decide. We repeat that if they are, then let us, once for all, abandon the false pretence that we are living under a free government, and admit that we are holding our liberties and property at the mercy of our masters. We cannot believe that such acts are lawful; we know they are opposed to the rights of manhood; and we shall do what we can to put a stop to conduct so arbitrary and so harmful to the public weal."

When this article appeared the case referred to was before the courts, but the Government or its representatives having since compromised the matter with the alleged offenders or suspended it, we will not have a decision upon the questions which were involved in the case submitted. It is most important, therefore, that the Minister of Customs should give the House the explanation for which I have just asked; and I think he should also inform us why proceedings against the offending firm, including the criminal charge, should have been withdrawn or suspended, and a virtual compromise effected with the offenders, if, as the special agents who were charged with the matter have publicly alleged, they were possessed of evidence amply sufficient to convict the firm of the fraud charged against them. I venture further to suggest to the Minister of Customs, that a statement of the seizures effected by these officials during the past eighteen months, and compromised by them or their superiors, as also a statement of the total amount paid to them as their share of the loot, would materially aid in the consideration of the questions I have just raised.

Mr. MACMASTER. I happen to have a personal knowledge of the case to which the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Holton) has just referred, and it may be that it would not be competent for me to vote upon the matter if it should come before this House. But the subject-matter has come up several times by way of question and answer, and I do not think it would be proper to withhold some matters that may aid members in coming to a correct conclusion upon the subject. The case, as the hon. member has said, has attained great notoriety, and has created a great deal of excitement in the city of Montreal. That excitement was brought about, to a large extent, owing to a conflict between the officers of the Dominion Government and the officers of the Province of Quebec. It came about in this wise. The special agents of the Customs Department entered the warehouse of Patterson, Kissock & Co., in the city of Montreal, and took proceedings looking to the seizure of the whole of the stock of the firm, in virtue of a search warrant which is provided for by the Customs Act. That warrant authorises the officers to enter any premises during day or night, and to search for and seize any goods liable to seizure or forfeiture. In virtue of those search warrants, the officers seem to have power to seize the whole of the stock of a merchant, and that has been the interpretation placed upon these search warrants in Montreal in the past. The officers, therefore, claimed to exercise the large power of seizing the whole of the stock of the establishment and afterwards sift out such portions as were liable to forfeiture for violation or neglect of the Customs law. That was the position taken by the Customs officers. The firm of Patterson, Kissock & Co., acting upon such legal advice as they chose to take, were advised that the officers of the revenue had no such authority; that their authority was restricted by the terms of the Statute in virtue of which the certificate had an existence, and it simply went to this extent, that the officer might enter an establishment, might search for and having found such goods might seize such goods as were actually liable to seizure, but that he had no authority to go beyond the Statute and seize goods properly imported, which had paid duty in accordance with law, much less had he any authority to seize goods which were not liable to duty in any respect. The firm owned a stock in the neighborhood of $200,000, a perishable stock, one that depended upon the market for five or six weeks succeeding the seizure. Had their stock been tied up and subject to the long and perilous ways by which decisions are reached under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Customs, the firm might not have only lost the market, but might have been ruined; and having been advised as to what was their legal right, they notified in writing and verbally the officers of the Customs that those officers had no authority to seize the whole stock, but they might seize such portion as they could fairly show were subject to forfeiture under the provisions of the Customs laws. The officers of the Customs Department did not adopt that view, and acted upon the assumption of the authority that had been previouly exercised, and they were preparing to make a seizure of the whole of the stock, and in fact did make a nominal seizure of the whole of the stock. At that time, Messrs. Patterson, Kissock & Co. invoked the aid of the civil courts, and issued a writ of replevin or revendication, as is the term in the Province of Quebec, and sued back for the whole stock of the establishment as if it were in the hands of the Collector of Customs, for it was practically in the hands of the Customs, they having seized it. The officers of the civil court arrived on the scene shortly before the Customs officers on the following day, and while the bailiffs of the Superior Court of Montreal were proceeding with the seizure, the Customs officers appeared on the scene and interfered with the seizure on the part of the civil officers, a collision in words, a collision in conflict and almost in arms supervened. So close did the contest become that not merely was a revolver drawn on one side, but the aid of the Dominion police was invoked; the establishment was not only invaded by interested sympathisers and friends of the firm, but at a later stage of the evening a posse of Dominion police were brought into line at the entrance of the establishment and even in the establishment itself. At that stage an appeal was made to the civil courts in Montreal for an order to stop those proceedings until the Department at Ottawa could be communicated with. Mr. Justice Taschereau, to whom the application was made, stated that he did not make the order because he had not then before him the search warrant by virtue of which the officers of the Customs Department assumed to act. He did not wish to make an order which might have the effect of prejudging the case. But he gave an intimation of opinion to the counsel on both sides, that it might be well that a stoppage should at once take place of the removal of the stock by the Custom house officers, until the lawyers acting on behalf of the Government should communicate with the Department, and the whole matter be further investigated. Up to this particular point, as I have every reason to believe from the legal gentlemen engaged in the case, there had been no direct communication with the Department as to the particular method in which the seizure should be carried out. Two or three days afterwards the matter came up for argument before another Judge, Judge Doherty, but no decision was arrived at. In fact, I believe an application is now before the honorable judge, because decisions are not rendered as speedily in the courts of the Province of Quebec as in the courts of some of the other Provinces of the Dominion. I know that the counsel for the firm, on the day when the application was made to Judge Doherty, pressed hard for an order that the officers should be stopped from interfering further with the stock of the firm, but the judge said that he desired to take further time to consider the application, and he took further time. The judge, however, made this intimation on that occasion—and I think it was a reasonable and proper intimation—that inasmuch as there had come certain officers of the civil courts of Quebec, armed with the Queen's writ, which was certainly an equally good authority with that upon which the Custom house officers acted, it would have been proper for the Dominion Government and the Provincial Government as representing the Queen to have quietly made their seizures, and not have risked the conflict and commotion which took place. However, a commotion took place in the contentions of the parties for a moment, but I think the counsel on both sides agreed that the remarks of Judge Doherty in that respect and the previous remarks of Mr. Justice Taschereau were entirely in keeping with the spirit of the law and would have produced most satisfactory results. Well, as I have said, the most interest attaching to the matter is as to the question of the jurisdiction of the Dominion and the Provincial authorities, and as to whether particular officers representing those particular jurisdictions on that occasion exceeded their powers or not. In that respect there was great excitement and commotion in Montreal. The honorable judge has not decided that question yet. Later a consultation took place between the counsel as to the actual position of affairs. My hon. friend from Chateauguay (Mr. Holton) in reading a very ably written article from the Herald has given it a certain amount of credence, and very proper credence; but if I may not be accused of undue delicacy in repeating the statement here, I may say that if it had not been for the common sense of the lawyers engaged in the case, there might have been a serious collision. When time for reflection came, it was allowed that probably both parties had gone too far; that probably the Dominion officers had assumed to go too far, and probably had not sufficient ground for the distance to which they went. On the other hand it must be said, that there was something to justify their action and that they were not entirely censurable in the course which they adopted. Then, as I understand, this course was determined upon: that the solicitors on both sides in the city of Montreal should make a careful investigation together into the actual circumstances of the case, and that in the meantime, pending the decision, a deposit of $2,000 should be made to await that determination. I do not desire to express any opinion as to what the facts on one side or the other may justify. I only say, being tolerably familiar with what happened on both sides, that the course pursued was a wise one under the circumstances. Whether the results will in the end justify that or not I do not attempt here to pronounce, but looking at it from every point of view, I must say from such facts as were brought out it appears that the Minister of Customs took a prudent course in throwing upon the lawyers—able and skilled men—acting for the Crown, the responsibility for the decision ultimately arrived at. With regard to the law, I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Chateauguay that there is a necessity for an amendment to the law. I believe that those who framed the existing Customs laws, in their desire to place everything in the grasp of the Customs officials, actually over-reached themselves, and that the law practically defeats itself. I had it in my mind with such experience as I have had in Customs laws, to take some steps this Session to secure an amendment of those laws—though, perhaps, it might more properly emanate from the Government—in the direction of securing a more prompt, efficient and just administration of the law. I am free to say that the law, as it exists at present, is as much calculated to defeat justice as to secure it. I say that that law may operate greatly to the injustice of the honest trader; it may become an instrument of injustice, so as at times unduly to bear upon the honest trader; and I do think, as the hon. member for Chateauguay suggests, that the determination of these matters, which are peculiarly within the domain and the office of a judge, should not be committed to the Commissioner of Customs, to unskilled or prejudiced hands, but to a judge who will not be swayed by the evidence or the promptings of those who may be deeply interested in the finding. I do further think that, until it has been demonstrated in this country that the courts of justice are incompetent to determine such questions as these, their speedy, and final, and proper decision should be left to the regular tribunals of the land; or if it can be shown that the regular tribunals are not sufficient for the attainment of such decisions, then I say that the sooner this country constitutes tribunals on which there would be, if you will, men experienced in mercantile affairs, but above all things men trained in legal affairs and accustomed to weigh evidence, without interest in the matter, the sooner such a tribunal is established the better, I think, it will be for this country. I trust that during the next Session of Parliament the hon. Minister of Customs will introduce a measure founded on his past experience, on such experience as may be communicated to him by his officers—for what is more important than that those associated with him in the administration of Customs laws should set themselves to attain the most important and valuable information in that respect—I do trust they will set themselves to work in order to put a more perfect measure for the decision of Customs cases upon the Statute-book, and one that will be much more in keeping with the progress of the age and with the speed and promptness which is essential in the determination of important commercial matters, that come up for adjudication. A firm or an individual might be ruined while these cases were being determined by the existing methods; and if some step is not taken in the next Session of Parliament to make some improvement in the Customs laws in this respect, I will take the responsibility myself of introducing a measure, with the intention, by the assistance of the right thinking members of this House, of placing it upon the Statute-book.

Mr. BOWELL. I am sure neither the House nor the Government can complain of the manner in which this subject, which is of so much importance to the commercial interest of this country, has been brought before us. I, as the head of the Customs Department, frankly say I am glad the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Holton) has brought the subject under the notice of the House; and I am still more pleased at the manner in which he has introduced it. Had he left out a few hard terms and a few of the rather severe criticisms upon the action of the officers and upon the motives which actuate them in the performance of their duty, it would have been as well. If the hon. gentleman had a little experience in administering the Customs laws of the country, with the number of officers under his charge that the Minister has, he would perhaps be a little more charitable in the manner in which he refers to them in the performance of a most disagreeable duty. The question whether officers should be allowed a certain proportion of the net proceeds of seizures after condemnation, is a question into which I shall not enter at this moment. There are many objections to it, and there are many arguments in its favor. If we live until the next Session of Parliament, and a measure is not then introduced to meet the views expressed by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster), and he takes the responsibility of introducing such a measure, that question can then be more properly discussed. I have simply to say that in the administration of the Customs laws, it has been the endeavor of the Government to protect as far as they possibly can all honest importers, no matter what part of the Dominion they may reside in; and in order to accomplish that very desirable object, they have employed what are called special agents to ferret out violations of the law. These agents have certain powers, but not more than are held and exercised by every Customs officer in the Dominion. A special agent has no more power than the collector of Customs at ports in the Dominion. The only reason why these agents are selected upon occasions of this kind is that they are the instruments through which frauds are brought to light, and if they have exceeded the powers vested in collectors of Customs, they have not done so with the consent of either the collectors under whom they act, or the Department at Ottawa. The particular case to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and which has caused so much excitement in the city of Montreal, is simply of this character. Evidence was in the possession of the special agents that certain irregularities had existed in the entries made by the firm referred to. This evidence was of such a character as to justify an attempt to ascertain the extent to which these frauds had been committed; and when the special agents waited upon the firm, they found that the manipulation of the different entries made was of such a character as to necessitate an examination of the books of the firm in order to ascertain the extent to which the frauds had been committed. My hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) says that had it not been for the coolness and calmness and good sense of the lawyers who were called in to assist in this particular transaction, the results might have been very much more serious. I do not say it disrespectfully to the legal profession, but I say this, believing it to be true, that if the legal profession had not interfered and given advice, no difficulty would have arisen. But apart from that, the officers demanded an examination of the books of the firm. Acting under advice, the firm refused to surrender its books. There was no alternative left at that period of the proceedings except for the officers to take the extreme course of making a seizure. I will not argue what is the strict legal interpretation to be placed on the clause to which my hon. friend from Glengarry referred; but if it be the correct interpretation of the Customs Act, that an officer entering an establishment can only seize those goods which are supposed to have been smuggled, then there would be very little use in his going to the establishment at all. Take, for instance, the article of feathers, one of the articles supposed to have been improperly entered. The officer finds on the shelf $1,000 worth of that kind of goods. It is true, the firm may have imported $10,000 worth during the two or three years preceding. The answer to the officer would be at once, these are not the goods under the invoice on which you are professing to make a seizure; these have been sold a long time since. If we are only to seize the goods mentioned in the invoice as improperly entered, then I fear the revenue would suffer severely. The law giving power to the officer to demand an investigation of the books, and that being refused, there is no other course than to seize the stock in the establishment, or to shut up the establishment.

Mr. MACMASTER. The law does not authorise that.

Mr. BOWELL. Then, in the protection of the revenue and in the protection of every honest importer, the law should be so amended as to give power to the Customs Department not only to compel an investigation of the books, but to shut up the establishment until such investigation has been made. But I readily admit that there should be sufficient evidence in the hands of the officers of the Department before they attempt such extreme measures. The hon. member for Chateauguay says that the law should not permit any Customs official or the Customs authorities to follow an importer after the goods have passed out of his hands, other than through the ordinary process of the law. If you adopt that principle, if I am to judge from the results of going into the courts in the different Provinces where Customs cases have to be decided, I fear there would be very little chance of either punishing the offenders, or securing for the revenue that to which it is entitled. Let me give the House one or two instances: We had a case in one of the Maritime Provinces in which a pilot had imported goods for a merchant there from St. Pierre. The bargain was that these goods were to be landed on the wharf, and the pilot was to receive a certain remuneration for the landing of the goods, his responsibility then ceasing. When the vessel was seized and these facts were ascertained, we thought it would be a good opportunity to punish the merchant who had subsidised the pilot, instead of the pilot. We took the case into court, and the sapient grand jury made a presentment that it was the duty of the Government to punish the pilot and that we had no right to interfere with the merchant. To come to a point nearer home. My hon. friend knows we had a case in his city in which a gentleman of high standing in the community made entries and swore to them, in which the invoices covered $8,000, for a lesser amount, by changing the figures of the invoices. That case was taken into court, the accused was prosecuted criminally, as we thought it a case in which an example should be made, and the judgment rendered was, that as the man who had made these entries and had sworn to them, false as they were, was not individually interested in the saving of the money, though he held a large amount of stock in the company to be benefited by these false entries, he could not be held legally culpable, and the case was dismissed. This case happened in Quebec, but in Ontario we had a case in which a man attempted to bribe one of the officers by an offer to him to become a participator in the profits, if the officer would enter into smuggling transactions with him. As soon as that was brought to the notice of the Department, I said;

Here is a case which should be prosecuted under the Audit Act, which imposes a penalty and imprisonment. The case was clearly proved, but the wise magistrate decided that as the man did not take the bribe, he did not come directly within the meaning of the law—the bribe being offered and not accepted—so he was fined 10 cents and sent to gaol for ten minutes. These are veritable examples that have come to my notice; and I fear, unless we have a special court for the purpose of trying these cases, as suggested by my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) we will stand very little chance of enforcing the provisions of the Customs Act, and protecting honest traders who pay their duties regularly to the last shilling.

Mr. KIRK. Reduce the tariff.

Mr. BOWELL. Quite true. If there were no duties, there would be no smuggling, but I suppose we would have difficulty in imposing direct taxation, which, no doubt, our free trade friends would like to see, on the property of the country. If the hon. gentleman and his friends would like to go to the country on that principle, I have no objection to meet them. I would like to contest any constituency in the Dominion against the hon. gentleman on the principle he suggests.

Mr. KIRK. Be less extravagant and you can lower the tariff.

Mr. BOWELL. If members of this House would assist in protecting the law, and I refer particularly to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, instead of apologising for those who break them, the Customs Department would not have so much trouble in enforcing its regulations. I have but one or two other remarks to make, my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Macmaster) having made a very clear statement of the case as it stands, and they are with reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Holton) on the subject of compromises. I know of no case in which a compromise has been made, unless the hon. gentleman wishes the House to understand that when an act of smuggling has been discovered and certain penalties imposed and fines paid, that constitutes the compromise. I confess, if we should prosecute every offender against the law, under all the different clauses which the Customs Act contains; if we should shut up every establishment where seizures have been made, and in addition to that send the offender to gaol for a number of years, there would be less frauds committed, provided of course we could get the magistrates and those before whom the cases are brought to put the law in force. In the case of Patterson, Kissock & Co., there has been no compromise. I thought I had made that sufficiently clear the other night.

Mr. HOLTON. I withdrew "compromise" and suggested suspension.

Mr. BOWELL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He spoke so low I did not hear him. There has been no compromise, but there have been cases in which the fullest amount of penalties have been imposed other than those of a criminal character. I believe the sooner those portions of the law which impose the penalty of imprisonment in penitentiary are enforced, the better; but there are so many circumstances surrounding the question that it requires to be dealt with equitably as well as according to the strict wording of the law. Take the case at Montreal which was settled the other day, in which a deliberate but unsuccessful attempt at fraud was made. A man has three invoices; he has a correct invoice which he receives from Europe; he makes out two others, upon one of which he makes his entry. The second he files away for the present, to show to the Customs officer in case he should come and demand the production of the original invoice; and the third, the original invoice, is either destroyed or hidden away carefully. A case of that kind occurred the other day. When the demand was made, the information received by the officer turned out to be strictly correct; a duplicate invoice of the invoice which had been presented to the Customs Department was handed to the officer as the original. The officer asked: But where is the third invoice, the original one from which these two were copied? The merchant denied having it, and, when asked to produce his books, said he had no books. How are you to reach a case of that kind, unless you punish the man for perjury, or compel him to produce that which he says he has not? Take the firm to whom the hon. gentleman refers. It is clear the revenue has been defrauded, but the only way which officials can arrive at the evidences of guilt is by securing, if possible, a duplicate or a copy of the entries in the books of the English, French and German merchants from whom these parties purchased. When we have instances of this kind, will the House or the country condemn the officers for demanding the only evidence that can be properly adduced to establish the guilt or innocence of the accused. The council of the Board of Trade have earnestly considered this matter for some time, and they have complimented the Customs Department for the manner in which they are carrying out the law, and they demand, in the strongest possible language, that the fullest investigation that can be made shall be entered into in order to arrive at the truth and to punish the guilty party in every instance. If this be not done, there will be no safety for the honest importer or those who regularly pay the full amount of duties. It is not so much a question of the amount of duties as suggested by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk), but the protection of the honest man who carries on business alongside of a dishonest one, and makes the regular entries, pays the full amount of duties, while his neighbor makes out false invoices and false entries, and is therefore at the mercy of the latter; the prospects of the dishonest man are greater, and he can sell to the retail trade throughout the Dominion at a much cheaper rate than his honest competitor. I can truly say that the Government have no desire, nor have they attempted, to harass any class of men or any class of business. What they desire to do is to enforce the law as it stands upon the Statute-book, to punish as much as possible and in every possible case those who have transgressed the law, and to protect those who are endeavoring to carry on an honest business in the country; and I can assure you and the House that, as long as I am at the head of that Department, I shall take every possible course that is open to me in order to accomplish these objects. I do not wish to say, and I do not desire to have it understood, that there are not many cases where seizures have been made which have proved a hardship, and the great difficulty in arriving at the question of valuations has placed the Department in a position in which they have had to give the advantage to the importers where they had not the most positive evidence that undervaluations had taken place, but, under the law as it exists, in the interests of the revenue, and in the interests of the whole importing community, I think the House will agree, and I am sure the country will justify the acts of the officers of the Customs Department in trying to put an end to these frauds.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to say a few words on this question, not with reference to the particular case that is under consideration at the present time but in reference to the whole subject. We all admit that there are difficulties connected with this subject. The Minister has pointed out very clearly on his side the necessity of the Government being clothed with considerable power in order to secure the proper payment of duties and for the prevention of fraud. The whole House will agree with him that that is a matter of very vital consequence. It is a matter of more vital consequence, perhaps, not looking at it from a revenue point but from the interests of men who are trading and who are making honest entries as against those who may be attempting to make dishonest ones. But there is another side to the question, and that is that the powers which are possessed by the Customs Department are very arbitrary, they are almost despotic. They are powers so great that, unless you were sure that you had men at the head of the Department which would give every case the most careful consideration and who were actuated by a desire to do justice in all cases, it would be most unsafe to leave them in their hands. The case is rendered more difficult from the system we have adopted of making the Customs officer, who is instrumental in causing a seizure, a participant in the fines. The House must at once admit that that is rather a perilous position, I might almost say, to place an officer in. It would require on the part of the officer a very great deal of uprightness of conduct to prevent him from being swayed in a matter when his own financial interests are involved in it, and I do submit—while I am not taking the ground—for the Minister insists upon it so strongly and I am not prepared at this moment to combat him altogether—that it ought to be seriously considered whether it ought to be in the public interest. It is stated that in that way only can we make our officers vigilant, can we make them detect frauds, and it is necessary that frauds should be detected. If it is an absolute necessity, it should be borne, for the honest importer must be protected against the dishonest importer; but is it true that we have men in the employ of the Government, in the possession of large salaries, who will not do their duty in this respect without being made participants in the fines imposed? Are we to take that estimate of our officers? Are we to suppose that gentlemen who are in the receipt of $1,800 per annum will not be vigilant in the discharge of their duties, that they will not prevent erroneous entries being made, that they will not save the revenues of the country, save and except the extra inducement be held out to them? If you are sharp, if you detect an invoice that is improper, there will punishment follow, fines will be imposed, the goods will be confiscated, and you will be entitled to a share of them. I felt it incumbent upon me a year ago to move for a return of seizures made at one port alone in this Dominion, the port of Winnipeg. The return was brought down. It covered but two years, and yet I venture to say that the disclosures of that one port should be enough to make us hesitate on the question as to whether it is wise to let the officers share in the fines that are imposed. The seizure numbers are given, and I see they run from fifty-six to 100 during those two years. I suppose that the prior numbers had been made in years prior to this date. We find in almost all the cases—I do not say all—that the decision was confirmed. In about all the cases the importer was wrong, and the distribution took place. I find in No. 56 there was a fine imposed of $133.87, and $44.62 of it went to an officer who is in the receipt of $800 per annum, and $44.62 went to another officer who is in the receipt of $1,000 per annum. Then there were some smaller amounts in which $5 each was paid to two officers. Then in another, $16.67 was paid to each of two other officers. Then there was another case in which $33.33 was paid to two other officers, and another case in which $6.66 was paid. In another case, $123.66 was paid to a gentleman in the receipt of $1,700 of a salary, and $123.66 to another gentleman in the receipt of a $1,000 per annum salary. In another case, $833.33 went to one gentleman in the receipt of $1,700 per annum, and $833.33 as the result of his share of one seizure went to another officer in the enjoyment of $1,000 salary. Now, it does look as if that is supplementing salaries pretty largely.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will allow me to explain that there are a great number of cases in which these officers who receive these large or small amounts have to pay a large amount to the informers who give the information. Parties come and inform the officer that smuggling has taken place. That officer becomes the seizing officer, and he has to pay out to the informers, whose names do not appear.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In these cases I have given the names and amounts are under the head of "fines imposed," but there were other cases where fines were not imposed, but the goods were sold and the money was distributed, and I think the Minister will see there is a distinction there made between the officer and the informer. In one case, $59.42 was distributed to officers. In another case, $333.32 was distributed to officers. In the catalogue I am giving now the names of the officers are not given, and it is only under the head of "fines imposed" that the names are given, and not under the head of "goods sold." I intended to get the names in both, but they are only given in one. In another case, $16.66 was paid to officers; in another, $97.33 to officer, and same to informer; in another, $10.17 to officer, and same to informer. Then follow two or three cases not disposed of. Then $212.03 to officer, and same to informer.

Mr. BOWELL. There are many cases in which the Department know nothing about who the informer is. We do not exact that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister will see that the officer got that amount and the informer got the same amount.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a case where we knew, I suppose.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In another case $39.74, and the officer the same as the informer; in another case $997.87, and the officer the same as the informer; in another case $268 to the officer, and the same to the informer, that is the record of two years at one port. Now, I have pointed out how some of these officers' salaries have been supplemented by hundreds of dollars during these two years as the result of their share of the fines. They are in receipt of salaries varying from $1,000 to $1,800 per annum, and this is the way in which their salaries are supplemented. Now, I submit that seizures taking place elsewhere in commercial circles, taken in connection with this affair in Montreal, call for investigation, and for some change in the law. While I have no sympathy whatever with those who have perpetrated frauds on the Customs, and while I would endorse their being severely punished, you must remember that when entries are made, not with fraudulent intent, but through error, through misinformation, and yet they are necessarily treated as frauds primarily, by the Department, and an innocent man making an entry which he supposes to be perfectly correct, and he may not be correct according to the interpretation put on the invoice by the Customs Department, yet he may be considered guilty of fraud. Then it is adjudicated upon in the Department at Ottawa, and it is the consequence in most cases that the Department stands by its officers. I am not censuring the Department for that, it is natural the Department should place reliance upon the statements of their officers. But there is this other feature about it, that when the Minister receives these petitions from the parties whose goods have been seized, if they petition to have the goods restored and the fines remitted, the course he must take is to send back to get his information with reference to the fraud, as it is termed, and of the seizure, to the officials who made the seizures, to the officials who are participants, financially in the seizure, and benefit if it is maintained.

Mr. BOWELL. No, no. For instance, take the case you alluded to, take Mr. Maingy, the collector at Winnipeg, who made all these seizures to which the hon. member referred. He is not entitled to any of them. He made the report upon the whole of them, but of course he does it upon evidence.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That explanation does relieve the matter somewhat.

Mr. BOWELL. No officer receiving $2,000 a year is entitled to any moiety of the seizure.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But the collectors do participate in the seizures.

Mr. BOWELL. Not if they have $2,000 a year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It may not apply in this particular case but I know cases of officers who get that sum, and who are pecuniarily interested in making the seizure. We know cases where honest entries have been made, cases where I believe the men to be incapable of committing a fraud upon the Department, but by the ruling of the Department the goods are seized, and the Department fixes the value of the goods, they themselves being the sole judges.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not so. It is not the ruling of the Department, it is the law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, it is the interpretation of the law that is put upon it by the Department. When a person presents an invoice of goods that he has purchased, he has bought an article at $100, he believes that is the fair market value of it, his invoice shows that, he his not cognisant that it is not sold at that price in the market from which he bought; more than that, he produces affidavits from the persons from whom he purchased, showing that it is the selling price, heads of responsible firms swear that it is correct, and in the face of all this, there are cases in which the fines have been imposed and have not been remitted. Well, the parties say, we will seek redress, we will take this matter into the courts. How are they to get it into the courts? The Minister may say that he will not allow them to go into court, and while the investigation is pending, the time within which they could take it to court would elapse, and they would be shut out under the law from going to court. They have a certain length of time, I think thirty days, in which to apply. Meanwhile they are working with the Department, presenting their case, looking for justice, but the time elapses, they get no answer, the time for entering the courts has elapsed, and the doors are barred against them.

Mr. BOWELL. You are wrong again. He has a certain length of time after the decision is given, my present recollection is thirty days after the decision.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think I know a case in which, before the answer was received, the time had elapsed, and it could not be done. However, I do not press that too strongly, because I think the Minister, in the cases I have known, has expressed his willingness that they should go to court.

Mr. BOWELL I may say there is scarcely a case in which a man has asked to go into court after the lapse of thirty days. But if you have a case you can go and fight it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But suppose you go into court. Here is a rule of the Department with reference to the valuation of a certain article. The goods have been brought in for years at a certain figure. By-and-bye the Department finds that under the law the values that had been taken had not been real, and that there should be an amount added to them. The officers come forward and claim not only the amount of the importation that has just arrived, but they go back over that merchant's invoices for years back, and find how much he is short. If the merchant goes into court, what is the result? Believing he has been wronged, he goes into the Exchequer Court, where one judge sits. He soon finds it is a very serious matter to enter a case against the Crown. If he wins his case he simply gets his fine paid back to him; but if he loses his case then the decision of the court places his previous importation within the category of frauds, and his importations for months or years are not merely liable to pay extra duty but the merchant is liable to be obliged to pay their full value. So the Government will find that there is not only in Montreal, but in other cities, a deep-seated feeling that under the operations of the Customs Acts many men doing what they believe is right have had their goods taken from them when they should not have been taken, that money has been taken from them where it should not have been taken, and, with that system of seizing-officers profiting by seizures, the idea has settled down in their minds, whether rightly or wrongly, that this has had something to do with the fact that they have been treated as they have been treated. It is well that the subject has come up. It is well that those in charge of the Department and the officers who have to administer the laws should sometimes learn what the public expect from them; that the public desire that while all legitimate means shall be taken to detect fraud, a distinction should be made between those who commit fraud and those who make entries in good faith, believing them to be honest entries, but which, under the interpretation of the Customs Acts, proved to be irregular.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has fallen into the same error as is frequently made in discussing this question of arbitrary values. The Customs officers have not the power to make arbitrary valuations in regard to goods. All they can do is, if it is ascertained through their officers or by any other means, that an article is sold for home consumption at a certain price in the United States and is entered in Canada at a lower price than that for which it is sold for such purpose in the United States, under the law it is the duty of the Department to value for duty at the price at which it is sold in the market in which it is purchased. The officers have no power beyond that. The hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that many persons purchase goods at say $100 when they are to be sent to this country, but the same article may be sold in the United States at $125 or $130. Then the merchant first makes an affidavit that that is all the amount he paid. That is quite true. He then produces an affidavit from the seller that that is all he asked. That is true, no doubt; but that does not meet all the requirements of the law. The affidavit must contain these words: That is the value of the article at the time of importation when sold in the country where it was purchased for home consumption. It is very easy for a merchant desiring to flood a country with a stock of goods or to crush out any particular industry to have export and home consumption prices. We have constantly these price-lists placed in our hands and it is under those we act and not under any arbitrary prices which the Customs Department desires to place on these articles.

Mr. VAIL. I am sorry to say that the Minister of Customs did not always act on that principle, as I pointed out last year. At that time I showed that a Montreal merchant had $7,000 or $8,000 returned to him on account of a cargo of sugar, which it was contended was entered at a higher rate than it was purchased at. I brought the case before the House and I pointed to parties in Halifax that had made similar applications and were refused. So I am quite satisfied that the Minister of Customs and his Department do not always act on that principle. I, too, am very glad this case has been brought forward and hundreds of people in the Maritime Provinces will also be glad of it. I have no sympathy with smugglers. It is quite right that in the interest of the country and the Customs Department there should be a strict law against smuggling. It must necessarily be so; but in its administration where the power is placed in the hands of certain parties outside of the Customs Department who act largely on their own authority and construe the law for themselves, it is necessary that those men should be men of integrity and of somewhat high character. We know that the man who smuggles is considered by the Department a rascal. But you appoint a man who is an old smuggler to one of those positions in the outside service, in order to detect smugglers; so as a matter of course, and as the natural sequence, you have a dishonest man placed in a position which should be filled by a man of integrity and principle. If the merchants in Montreal and in the cities of the Dominion, who are importers of goods and have a certain number of clerks under their control, do not know what entries are made from day to day, he fails to attend to his duties and he must suffer the consequences. How different it is with us. Almost all the people along the shores of Nova Scotia trade with the United States, and all our small merchants own vessels running to that country. They of course have to depend altogether on the men they employ on the vessels, and over those people they have no control. It is true that an owner may control a master, but he cannot control the mate or seamen. A vessel running to the United States brings back certain goods. The vessel is seized. The Custom house officer goes to the owner and informs him that such and such goods were taken in at Boston and not entered here. The owner says he knows nothing about it. He subsequently makes enquiries and finds that such goods have been brought in by the mate or by the men, and in order to get out of the difficulty the individual is obliged to pay the officer $200 or $300 rather than have the vessel seized or tied up two or three months before the Department decides the matter. I say we have had a system of terrorism going on for the last two years, and continuing to the present day, in the Maritime Provinces, which has injured our trade and which will, if continued, ruin it. There is no remedy for this except an alteration of the law which will oblige the Department to appoint men to those positions who are paid a certain salary—men of integrity, men who will be disposed to do their duty without looking to the proportion to be received from any particular seizure. I hope the hon. Minister of Customs will take the advice of the hon. member beside him (Mr. Macmaster), and will next Session introduce a law which will protect the honest trader as well as the interests of the revenue.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I wish to say a few words on this subject. I have experienced, in my own county, some of the beneficial effects of these Customs detectives. They were through the county of King's and that whole valley, and we know pretty well what they did. Sometimes there were some very loud complaints, but, strange to say, there have been no complaints made here in Parliament. None of them ever asked their representatives to expose their cases before Parliament, and considering the multitude of cases which the Department have to adjudicate upon, the instances are infinitesimally small where the parties themselves have asked an investigation before the light of day. That being the case, I say that the system of protection which we have got in this country must be very fairly administered, or else we should have a larger number of cases coming before the people's tribunal here. If hon. gentlemen opposite would go to France, Germany or the United States, which are protected countries, they will see that the cases of such hardships here are the smallest imaginable in number, compared with what they are in these other countries. I noticed by the reports that the other day a large glassware manufacturer, a millionaire in the city of New York, who has been in Sing-Sing for the last number of years for infraction of the Customs laws, got out the other day on the plea of ill-health. If anything of that kind had happened in Canada the House would have resounded with the lamentations of the hon. member for Digby and the hon. member for Brant. Did Congress take up that matter? No; Congress said there was a law passed, as a law was passed by this Parliament.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That was a case of fraud.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I know there were cases of fraud, but will the hon. gentleman say that the criminal tribunals must be swept away because there are some isolated cases where an honest man's fortune or good name is placed in jeopardy. You cannot have a law of this kind and not administer it; and you must not blame the Minister of Customs and his employees for administering the Department under the law. If the law is wrong, amend it; but it is a question to me whether you should amend it or not. I have not considered whether you should pay those informers or not, or how you are going to get at smugglers without giving the detectives a percentage. That is a matter for consideration, but the object is to keep people from smuggling if possible. The hon. member for Digby said there were hundreds in the Maritime Provinces who would be glad to hear of this debate, but I do not think some of them would like to hear their names mentioned in this debate. I know of one firm in a certain village in my own county, who said to one of these Customs detectives, when he came in: "How dare you come into my shop; who are you?" He replied: "I am a Customs detective, and I want to look at your invoices, &c." "What do you take me for?" asked the other. "I do not take you for anything," said the detective, "I just want to visit you, that's all." The other said: "Do you know how high I stand?" "I do not care," said the detective. "Well," said the other, "ours is the first name morally, financially and commercially in this county." Yet, before the detective went out of the shop that man had signed the most abject apology and confession; he agreed to pay a certain amount of money for his smuggling, and he paid it before the detective went out of his office. Did that firm want their names brought up here in Parliament?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What was done with the money?

Mr. WOODWORTH. I do not know.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Had he power to settle in that way?

Mr. WOODWORTH. I venture to say, if it can be shown to the Minister of Customs that his men have violated the law, he will bring them back. I tried it in King's county; I fought him for months and we hardly spoke, but when he ultimately found that his officers were wrong, he dismissed them at once. It is his duty to protect his agents until they are proved to be unjust, dishonest or fraudulent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As I understand that case was not referred to the Department; it was not subjected to an investigation, but the officers went in, made a certain charge and settled the matter upon their own responsibility.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No; but subject to the approval of the Government. Those men never asked for an investigation, and that is the case with a great many such people, because the amounts they pay are after all a mere drop in the bucket. That is the reason there are not more cases before Parliament. It is not the cases which are caught but those which are not caught. How many cases of smuggling have the representatives of the people been called upon to bring before the House, and if these men were honest would they not be called upon to bring them forward. I have been in Opposition, and I know what it is to make a cry against the Government of the day, but I say, give the Government fair play, and in this case you are not giving them fair play in bringing them to task for administering the law under the law as you yourselves passed it while in Parliament. There may possibly be some cases where the law enables men to act arbitrarily, but it must be remembered that the Customs law is very anomalous and must be so. Under it a man is almost supposed to be guilty until he is proved innocent, contrary to the usual rule of English law. First his goods are seized, and then he must prove that he did not smuggle them. But you passed that law; we all passed it, but anomalous as it is, it is the law, and you should not find fault with the Department for administering it. Mr. Wolf's name has been mentioned. I happen to know Mr. James Wolf, of Montreal, and I do not believe a more conscientious, efficient, or industrious officer is in the Dominion to-day.

Mr. MACMASTER. A very excellent officer.

Mr. WOODWORTH. He has a very unpleasant duty to perform, but he does it marvellously well, keeping the good name he has earned, and the friendship of the very men whose goods he has seized. I know case after case where they have thanked him for the kind, affable manner in which he has discharged his duty. These officers are not represented in the House, but let them have fair play. I thought it was only proper that I should state what I knew about this matter.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.....$80,949 50

Mr. LAURIER. Has any step been taken to have an investigation into the causes of the recent outbreak?

Mr. THOMPSON. There was an investigation in the ordinary course of justice by the coroner's inquest, and subsequently there was an investigation made by the inspector. I may call that a preliminary investigation, because it is not intended that it should be a final one. I have determined, as early as possible after the close of the Session, and after the recovery of the warden, which I hope will not be long, to make as full an investigation into the affairs of the penitentiary as can possibly be made. I understand that it was stated in another place, in answer to an enquiry put there, that a commission would be issued. I think, perhaps, that was not an accurate statement. I do not know that a promise that a full and searching enquiry shall be made, necessarily involves that a commission shall be issued; but I do stand committed as the head of the Department to having a full and thorough investigation.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Justice is probably aware that investigations have not been wanting in the past. There has been investigation after investigation, but for some cause these investigations have always been barren of any practical result. The conviction is becoming settled in the public mind, at least in the Province of Quebec, that the real cause of all the failures of justice that have taken place at St. Vincent de Paul, has been that the establishment is conducted simply on politics. The feeling prevails that the whole personnel of the establishment is composed of creatures of the Government. I do not know that this remark applies to all the employees, but I believe, and I have, perhaps, some authority for saying, that it applies to the large number of the personnel of the penitentiary. I believe the present warden, Mr. Laviolette, is, as far as a man can be who has not had a special training for such a position, a very competent man; he has proved himself in the late outbreak to be a very courageous man; and I believe he is a man thoroughly devoted to duty. The only fault with him is that when he was appointed he had not received the training necessary to qualify him for the duty he had to discharge; but apart from that I give him the testimony quite cheerfully that he has always been willing to do whatever was in his power to discharge the duties he had to discharge. On the other hand, I understand—and I make this charge subject to correction—that he has not been properly supported by his subordinates. The men immediately under him had not the same devotion to duty that he had, and were not better qualified otherwise than he was. Under such circumstances, we must not be surprised if matters in the penitentiary have been going from bad to worse; and it will not be sufficient to have such investigations as we have had in the past. There must be a thorough overhauling of the whole system. Not simply by the officers of the Department, but by parties outside of the Department, who would be thoroughly impartial and determined beforehand to give justice wherever justice is due, and to put the blame wherever the blame ought to be put.

Mr. THOMPSON. In answer to what the hon. gentleman has just said, I will say a very few words, because it would be indelicate in me, pending the enquiry which is to take place, to advocate either one side or the other of the question—to say that any officer is to blame, or to vindicate any officer. But since the outbreak has taken place, I have gone over the records of the enquiry, and I must say that I have not reached the conclusion the hon. gentleman has formed, that the difficulty is due to the fact that the officers of that institution are creatures of the Government and are actuated by political feeling in the discharge of their duties. The staff, as the hon. gentleman is aware, is a very large one, and the warden has the absolute appointment of all his guards—in fact, nearly all the officials of the institution. When I say the absolute appointment, I mean not only that he has the right to appoint, but he is not interfered with in the slightest degree by the Department, even by suggestion, in the way of nomination to any position. The principle of the law which clothes him with the responsible office, considers who he has the right to appoint, and is vindicated to the fullest extent, and he is left entirely uncontrollable as to the choice of the persons he will have about him, except in the case of superior officers, who are appointed directly by the Department, and the faults occasionally charged against the discipline and management of the institution have been in relation to the guards and the minor officials, whom the warden has the right to appoint. I dare say that political feeling, to some extent, has interfered with the proper management of the institution. I am strongly inclined to think, however, that the political influences have come from the outside rather than from the inside, and while I admit, and in fact claim with some degree of pride, from what I have heard of him, that the warden is a brave, honorable and upright man in every sense of the word, I think he has been, to some extent at least—it would be indelicate in me to say how much—misled by advice from persons not qualified to give advice, and that he has put confidence in persons who prophesied evil in relation to the present management there and did their best to make their prophecies good.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand the hon. gentleman would feel some reticence imposed upon him with regard to this trouble, but the fact is this penitentiary has been, for some years, almost constantly in a state of crisis. It has been the habit of that institution to be in that unfortunate condition, and I regard it as one of the blemishes on our administration of justice that for so many years, off and on, and as a general rule, there should be something going wrong in the management and discipline of that important institution. There must be something radically wrong. Warden after warden has been appointed, other officers have been changed, yet you find things going wrong, with an interval of better results, perhaps, but going wrong again and again. I have nothing to say with reference to the present warden, not being sufficiently master of all the circumstances, but if I rightly remember it was this warden, of whom the inspector spoke in certainly not very favorable terms in his annual report, shortly after the assumption by this gentleman of the office. In that report he commented on the report of the warden himself. However that may be, if there is not fault with one officer there must be with another. There has been long continued and very gross neglect of that proper care and vigilant supervision which is necessary in order to prevent such events, such as that which startled us the other day, from occurring. I would ask if a special enquiry has been made as yet into the extraordinary circumstances of the escape of Viau from the prison, almost immediately after the outbreak; and in this connection, for I believe it is the only opportunity I will have of doing it, I would ask whether the attention of the Government has been directed to a circumstance, which, I observe with great regret, was stated in the papers the other day, that the warden of another penitentiary—Mr. Warden Bedson—had been concerned in some speculations or transactions in real estate with the inspector. I am not concerned in the particular character of those transactions, of which something was said in the paper in other respects, some allegations being made as to which I know nothing about the political nature of the transactions, but it seems to me it is not a prudent—I will go further and say it is an improper thing—for the inspector of penitentiaries to have any relation whatever with any warden. The inspector is an officer to whom the Government and the country have practically to look for the keeping in order and subordination the various officers of the penitentiary. He is superior even to the warden, and that he should be arranging for investments in land for him, or acting for his agent, or partner, or associate is very likely to lead to very uncomfortable circumstances.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The leader of the Opposition has mentioned the reports of the inspector,and judging from the tone of those reports he must have felt that he would not be in a condition to impartially act in any enquiry that would take place to find out the exact truth in those matters.

Mr. BLAKE. I must confess that the tone in one passage of the report did not strike me very favorably.

Mr. THOMPSON. In answer to the hon. member for West Durham, I would say that a special enquiry has been made with reference to the escape of Viau, and it was found that one of the guards was to some extent blameable in having neglected what was a very necessary duty at the time. As regards the guard in question, at the request of the warden, and pending a fuller enquiry, his case has not been fully dealt with yet, but special enquiry was made into all the facts connected with the escape. I have not had my attention called until this moment to the statement which, the hon. gentleman says, appears in one of the papers with reference to transactions on the part of the inspector and the warden. I quite agree that enquiries should be made, if such a statement has appeared, and that it is quite inconsistent with the duty of an officer, who must be depended on, as the inspector must be, to have business relations with any of the wardens. With regard to the subject of impartiality, it is necessary that the enquiry should be made by some other inspector, and that is the inspector's own desire for the reason that he has for some little time past been in a position of antagonism, if I might so call it, to the warden on account of differences of opinion regarding the management of the institution, and especially in view of the fact that the comments which have been made since the outbreak have to some extent reflected on him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that under the head of maintenance of convicts, there are 325 convicts in St. Vincent de Paul and they cost $29,125 to keep them. At the Kingston Penetentiary which has 580 convicts, the cost is $36,780. Therefore the average expense of St. Vincent de Paul is much larger in proportion than that in Kingston. The smaller number would account for some increase, but the increase is much more than can be accounted for in that way.

Mr. BLAKE. And this, notwithstanding the fact that a number of the convicts at St. Vincent de Paul are usually at large.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not aware of any convicts being at large.

Mr. BLAKE. They escape from day to day.

Mr. THOMPSON. They do not. One escaped a day or two ago, and was retaken immediately afterwards. We estimate this year a decrease in the maintenance of $2,400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still, the hon. gentleman will see that unless it can be accounted for in some way, the disproportion between the case at St. Vincent de Paul and the case of Kingston is very great. At St. Vincent de Paul, the maintenance of each convict costs nearly $100; at Kingston, it costs a little over $60; and at St. Vincent de Paul, it would be about 97 cents. So, the difference is very material, and I know of nothing in the relative cost of living at the two places which would account for so large an expenditure. The dietary and all the rest of it is the same.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is a difference in the maintenance, as the hon. gentleman will see by a comparison on page 64 of the Auditor General's report. The average daily cost in Kingston is 53 cents and in St. Vincent de Paul 81 cents, the maintenance is $63.05 as against $100.01. I am not in a position to account for it at present. I only know that all the supplies are obtained by contract, and that it is by competition we are able to ascertain that this year there will be a considerable difference in the cost. I fancy that some of the expenses which are charged to other heads in Kingston, are charged to maintenance at St. Vincent de Paul, but I will make particular enquiries in regard to that.

Mr. BLAKE. I think and I hope it is not due to the circumstance the hon. gentleman has suggested. Some years ago, arrangements were made to cast the accounts of all the penitentiaries on the same principle. The dietary was arranged to be precisely the same, and the same set of accounts was arranged for all, for the very purpose of having a check on the cost at one by the cost at another. We have had discussions on the excess of cost of St. Vincent de Paul over Kingston before now, and the only difference it has been possible to ascertain has been the difference caused by the penitentiary lying some little distance out of the city of Montreal, which is the market, I presume, were most of the supplies are purchased. The cost of transport from the city to the penitentiary must be really the only difference, and that the supplies should cost half as much again as they do in Kingston is not intelligible unless it be that the political relation to the penitentiary which the hon. gentleman eschews inside the penitentiary applies to the contracts outside.

Canadian Pacific Railway, Port Arthur to Red River, $72,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A detailed explanation of that was to be given.

Mr. McLELAN. I stated before, when this was under discussion, that there had been a final estimate made by the chief engineer of $2,864,159.89, which covered the first award of $45,000. Then there was a subsequent estimate made by the chief engineer of the final cost of the whole work, of $2,934,308.68 an increase of $70,148.79. Then there was awarded by the arbitrators for damages $395,000, making $465,148.79. The amount that was asked for was the amount of the award only, $395,600, and that was paid, leaving a balance of $70,148.79, and the chief engineer says there are some small items amounting to $1,002.81, for transport and such things, making a total of $71,151.60. We ask for the net sum of $72,000 to meet all that is possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At the time that that very large award was paid, under circumstances with which the House is familiar, and which it may be remembered were circumstances which caused the award to be very much objected to, we certainly understood that it closed the whole account, that there was nothing left.

Mr. McLELAN. The engineer reports otherwise, that the award was mainly for damages which they claimed but not for the works proper.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must say that, if we had been informed at that time there was to be an additional sum to be paid on that award, the House, I think, would have been very indisposed indeed to vote the money for it. It must be remembered that that award was rendered under circumstances which I have already referred to, and which showed that our own arbitrator expected and intended that it should be brought before the courts. We were told when the money was voted that it would be brought before the courts, and we found, when the accounts came down next year, that, on some pretext which I have never heard sufficiently explained, no reference was had to the courts and the whole sum was disposed of; and we have never been able to get the communication made by Judge Clark to the then Minister of Railways, though he admitted it was in his possession; and now to have a further $72,000 paid to these gentlemen is very astonishing.

Mr. WELDON. At the time of the debate the Minister of Railways certainly assured the House that that was the whole amount, and was the last of it, and he went into an elaborate calculation to show that, even with that amount, by the reduction in the contract there was not a large amount of money saved, but there was no mention of anything outstanding except the $45,000, the amount of the first award and the amount of the second award.

Mr. CASEY. The explanation given to-night is quite different from that given the other night. That was that the engineer's estimate included the amount of the award, which I pointed out was absurd.

Mr. McLELAN. There was a first reward of $45,000 and that $2,934,000 covers that.

Mr. CASEY. The explanation given to-night is more rational, because it does not claim that the engineer's estimates include the award. It was because the estimates did not include the amount of the award that there was an arbitration. Now, it is well known that all the matters in dispute between the contractors and the Government were submitted to arbitration. Everything that could properly or improperly be claimed was settled by the award. That was a final settlement of all matters in dispute between the officers and the Government. If there has been a subsequent estimate obtained from the chief engineer giving $70,000 more, it shows the matter has been reopened by the Government after the final award was made by the arbitrators. It shows the matter has been reopened for the purpose of allowing the contractors to put in extra claims and to give them extra payment beyond the award. The result of that reopening has been to give the contractors $70,000 more than the arbitrators awarded to them, and the only conclusion that the House can form is that the Government have been, to say the least of it, very slack in their duty. It will be remembered that one of the Government's own arbitrators on the board reported that even the award given by the arbitrators was excessive. The Government took the opinion of counsel about the validity of the award, and when we asked for returns upon that subject, returns were brought down after frequent demands, that were incomplete, and we were left in uncertainty as to the opinions of the counsel. We were refused the material submitted to the counsel upon which their opinion was based. We got the opinion of the counsel, but we were not given the material submitted to them upon which they based their opinion, and we do not know whether proper material was submitted to them or not. We are inclined to believe, from the conduct of the Government in the whole matter, that a very imperfect case was submitted to the counsel.

Mr. WELDON. It was understood that the arbitration settled all the matters in dispute by the parties. The Government then strongly pointed out that even if this amount was paid, a saving was effected. No reference was made that any further amount was demanded.

Mr. McLELAN. The late Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper), claimed and showed that there was a saving from the original estimate, of about $700,000 or $800,000, even with the award of $395,000. That award, as I understand it, was mainly for damages occasioned by the reduction the Government engineers' admitted in the work.

Mr. CASEY. The work was finished when the arbitration took place. There were no other claims then in, except those submitted to arbitration. If there is an extra payment now, it shows that new claims have been allowed to be put in since the arbitration, and have been acknowledged without contest. That is, the Government have, on the face of the matter, failed in their duty and allowed new claims without investigation, made after the whole matter had been settled. Now, there is more than that. I remember that the contractors charged for building an elevator at Port Arthur, and one of the items in the claim of the railway company, who took the road over afterwards, was $112,000, or thereabouts, for building the elevator. We found, in the returns I asked for, that the Government had allowed for this elevator to the contractors. Now, when such a transaction occurs, when an elevator is paid for twice, nobody can be surprised if we feel suspicious about an item of this kind. We all know what the relations between the contractors and the Government were stated to have been—that the Government obtained from the contractors funds for use in an election pending at the time, on the condition that extras were to be allowed them on their contract. I was informed of this by rumor some time before the final arbitration took place, and of the amount of extras which the contractors expected to receive in consideration of having advanced moneys to the Government, and by a strange coincidence the amount settled at the arbitration was almost exactly the amount that I was informed the contractors expected to receive in extras. All these things tend to make us very suspicious about the accounts of section B, and the Minister cannot expect the House to be satisfied with his explanation.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman may bring it up again on concurrence. We will try to take concurrence when the Minister is present himself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call attention to the facts as stated by Sir Charles Tupper, on 16th April, 1884. He speaks first of the $45,000 on which he says the arbitrators were unanimous. Then he speaks of this next contract and says:

"After the best defence the Government could make, two of the arbitrators awarded the contractors $395,200 for damages. That award the Government have not decided to pay. We think it prudent to take a vote, but at this moment the matter has been referred to the Department of Justice as the question is a large one and as the amount is a large one and greatly exceeded that which the Government considers they should claim by any possibility. It is proposed before paying the award to take the opinion of the ablest counsels at the command of the Government who will carefully examine the whole question."

Now the final estimates of all the work done by the contractors was $286,300. The Department intimated to us then, when this award was being voted, that that was the sum total, which, the Minister will observe, is as near as possible the difference between the sum we are now asked to vote and the engineer's report. I would suppose from that, although the whole matter is not over clear, that there was no doubt then that we would not be called upon to pay $50,000 or $70,000. There is another consideration. Why was it deferred to this day? I thought all that business had been finished two years ago.

Mr. McLELAN. The date of the final certificate is 5th July, 1884.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Hon. gentlemen opposite want a little light, and I will furnish it. The amount in the estimates now and the discussion has nothing whatever to do with the amount or questions involved in the arbitration. This amount is what is known in engineering language as the final estimate, which is given on the completion of the work, and the items in that final estimate were not involved in the question before the arbitration, were not discussed before them and had nothing whatever to do with them. There were certain specified questions before the arbitrators, and on the evidence laid before them the arbitrators awarded the sums voted in a former Session of Parliament. After those sums were paid, and they were paid principally on two heads, first, classification of material, and second, damages for the non-completion of section 15, there remained the ordinary adjustment of account which gentlemen who have any experience in these matters know is described as the final estimate. That was under discussion for many months between the engineers and the contractors, and finally it was adjusted at this particular amount, and does not influence any part of what was covered by the arbitration, and is the final estimate given the contractor on the balance of the account, the settlement of the drawback and the whole winding up of a very extensive contract. I speak from my knowledge on this subject, which hon. members know I possess, and I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that this particular item is the ordinary balance which a final balance sheet gives, and does not include any part of the items involved in the arbitration. The Minister said that the final estimate was given in July, 1884, but he must have been in error, because it is within my knowledge that it did not take place till some time in February or March.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is as I have stated. I called attention that the final estimate for all work done under the contract was $2,863,000. I call attention to the fact that Sir Charles Tupper, in his capacity as Minister of Railways, on 16th April said that the whole estimate for work done on the contract was $2,863,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The Government engineer's final estimate when made out was a little over $50,000. The contractors claimed a considerably larger sum, and finally the amount was adjusted at the amount placed in the vote.

Mr. CASEY. The information is certainly valuable. It corroborates exactly what I said, that this vote for $70,000 is not for amounts that came before the arbitrators.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). You were stating the opposite a moment ago.

Mr. CASEY. These claims have arisen since.

Mr. McLELAN. The chief engineer called one a progress estimate and the other the final estimate.

Mr. CASEY. Give the dates of both those documents?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the dates here.

Mr. CASEY. There was a final estimate given before the date of the arbitration. The arbitration was not spoken of as between the Government and the contractors till rumors had gone abroad, and the Government thought it necessary to clear their skirts by going through an arbitration. The arbitration was held, and the arbitrators gave in their award as a final settlement of all accounts between the contractors and the Government. It appears by the statement of the member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) that there has still been questions between the Government and the contractors.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I am afraid the hon. gentleman has not the necessary technical knowledge to enable him to discuss this question with intelligence. The hon. gentleman does not understand what a final estimate is. There could not possibly have been one before the arbitration. The question involved in the arbitration were questions of damages. That arbitration was not given by the Government.

Mr. CASEY. Partly damages.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Wholly damages.

Mr. CASEY. No, not at all.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Damages and a claim for an alteration and for a wrong classification of the character of the work. The questions involved in the arbitration were in no respect the same questions as those involved in making up the final estimates. The final estimate my hon. friend speaks of as a matter of compromise. It was in one sense a matter of compromise, but it was a compromise based on facts and figures. It was not a compromise jumped at, but it was based on a settlement of the question of the different quantities and allowances which had been previously based on the progress estimates, and which on the final settlement had to be corrected by the actual quantities of work on the ground. They were settled in the manner I have stated, and the arbitration was not agreed upon as a matter of policy on that part of the Government or to clear their skirts in any way. My hon. friend shakes his head, but I think that his knowledge of the subject is very superficial, and if he thoroughly understood it he would not have made a great many of the remarks which he made upon it. The settlement was not made to clean the skirts of the Government. They have nothing to clean as I am aware of, because as far as my knowledge goes I am not aware of any set of contractors who were worse used by the Government, and by their officers and engineers than those contractors were. I am not aware of any concession made to them, of any advantage given to them or any favors shown to them. On the contrary, from first to last, every possible difficulty was thrown in their way, and the fact that their chief engineer who gave this estimate reported—and it is on record as a matter contained in his official report—that the contractors could not finish the work within the time and under the contract, and recommended that the work should be taken off their hands. They disputed the right of the Government to do anything of the kind; the work was not taken off their hands; they finished the contract in time and within the strict letter of the contract, and asked or received no favors from the Government and got nothing but bare justice from them. The hon. gentleman speaks of this being done to clear the skirts of the Government. The Government, as a matter of policy, in order to have that portion of the work finished in time, insisted in altering the character of the work to such an extent that the contractors declined to go on with it on the ground that it was so changed in its character that they had no right to go on with it. The Government agreed with them that if they would go on they would leave the question of the compensation to which they were entitled for that change of the work, and any other claims they had, to arbitration, when the Government thought the position of the work was such as to justify it. That was covered by an Order in Council, which is on the Table of the House, and it was in pursuance of that Order in Council, made two or three years before the arbitration took place, that it did take place. The arbitration took place and settled those claims, but it did not adjust in any way what is technically known by engineers as the final estimate. That final estimate was arrived at this spring, and that is the amount now in the estimates, and it does not include or embrace the matters in question in the arbitration in any way.

Mr. CASEY. I never said that it did, and that is just the point. The hon. Minister was therefore mistaken in telling us the other night that it did include these matters. The hon. gentleman says I have no professional knowledge to enable me to understand this matter or discuss it intelligently. Well, I am not an engineer to be sure, but I never knew that the hon. gentleman was either. He has had a knowledge of this matter in connection with his legal and other duties—his political and parliamentary duties. I have not, of course, had such a deep and thorough knowledge of the true inwardness of this settlement as the hon. gentleman no doubt possesses, but I have carefully gone through all the documents laid before the House, and those are the only documents on which we can form an opinion, and the conclusion from them was that, so far as the final estimates were concerned, and the final re-measurement of the work on which to base the final estimates, it was begun in the fall of 1882 and continued until the spring of the following year. The final estimate based on it was brought down last February. Now that is a strange state of affairs.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). What year did you say?

Mr. CASEY. 1882.

Mr. CAMERON. Oh, no.

Mr. CASEY. It was put in in 1884 and brought down either that Session or the beginning of last Session. The hon. gentleman says that these contractors were the most ill-used lot of men he ever knew, and never got any favors from the Government. One of these contractors wrote to the newspapers in Toronto pointing out that they had complained of the conduct of the engineer in charge, that he was too severe upon them, and on their demand that he should be removed, he was removed. That was one concession they had. I questioned Sir Charles Tupper about this removal, and asked him if Mr. Jennings was removed for inefficiency, and he said no. He admitted that he had given him the highest recommendation to Mr. Onderdonk who wished to employ him, and he bore high testimony to his professional capacity and his personal character. We have the fact then that the engineer who was set to watch the contractors for that work was removed from that work and sent to British Columbia, at the request of the contractors who thought he was too severe. When I questioned Sir Charles Tupper he refused to answer whether Mr. Jennings was removed for that reason or not, but our heads are not so thick that we had any doubt about that point. The removal was made after the demand and, no doubt, because of the demand, and because Mr. Jennings was watching the contractors too closely. Immediately afterwards a re-measurement was made by two engineers whose names I have forgotten. The final re-measurement was made so long ago as February of 1884. I understand that the final estimate is based upon that final re-measurement. That final re-measurement was made long before the arbitration took place; and the points submitted to the arbitration were not merely questions of damages, as the hon. gentleman has stated, but questions of classification, as he has admitted, in regard to excavation outside of the "prism," as to what constituted "loose rock," "earth," and so on, were submitted to the arbitration; and the result of the final estimate was submitted. The question was then stated by the Minister of Railways to be finally settled, and we now find it again reopened by the Minister of Railways. New claims have been made, and a compromise has been effected, as the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), who seems to have a professional knowledge of the case, tells us. It was settled by a compromise between the engineers and the contractors, and he tells us it was based on facts and figures. A compromise cannot be based on facts and figures; it must be arrived at by allowing larger quantities or larger prices. There was a compromise, probably not between the engineers and the contractors, but between the Government and the contractors, upon the hon. gentleman's own statement, and he appears to speak here as their authorised agent in some way, by allowing them $70,000. I do not want a severer indictment against the Government than that.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I wish to enquire what engineer made the final estimates.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer, who I do not think has the reputation of favoring contractors very much.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Is that the engineer who some time previously reported that the company would not be able to complete the work within the time specified?

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to know whether the amount of the arbitration was included by the chief engineer in any estimate, or whether it was put independent of his estimate?

Mr. McLELAN. Put independent of his estimate.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the final estimates could not be dependent in any way on the arbitration?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, the arbitration not having come into the engineer's estimate at all, how is it, the work having been completed in 1883, it is not until now that we are voting the payment. Was it not as a final estimate that the sum of $44,000 was granted in July, 1884?

Mr. McLELAN. That was a sum allowed for some special work at that time.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, the work having been completed in 1883 and the final estimate being entirely independent of the arbitration, what has delayed the matter till this time?

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). No final estimate was made anterior to the arbitration, and no final estimate could be made until the arbitration had taken place. When the arbitrators settled the quantities, it was necessary for the chief engineer to adjust his final estimate based on the finding of the arbitrators. The award showed the quantities of the different kinds of work, and until the award was made it was impossible for the engineer to make up his final estimate. He made his final estimate in the neighborhood of $50,000. As invariably occurs in every case of this kind, the contractors contended that the chief engineer had not done them justice in several particulars, and they furnished evidence of it. One item was earth filling and another trestle work. The engineer obtained evidence under oath such as the contractors could furnish, and instead of allowing the prices they claimed, he only allowed them what he thought fit, which was more than he had originally allowed them and less than they had originally claimed. In that sense I said it was a compromise, not a compromise arrived at by agreement, but arrived at by the engineer himself, upon evidence furnished by his own officers upon more accurate calculations. There was no compromise by the contractors on one side saying we will take so much, and the Government saying we will give you so much. Perhaps the word compromise was the improper term for me to use. There was an adjustment of accounts, based, so far as the engineer was concerned, on the most rigid evidence and cutting down of the contractors' claim, as far as he should have cut them down, and I consider further.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has told us the final estimate was based on the result of the first arbitration, which dealt with the first classification of the work, and the arbitrators reported merely the amount of work.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I did not say merely.

Mr. CASEY. And the engineer, taking that as the basis of his calculation, made that a final estimate.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). He had to correct his figures.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman's memory fails him. The arbitrators reported, not only the amount of work properly coming under each head of the classification, but they moneyed out, to use a technical term, the total amount due at the contract prices. The engineers and arbitrators had nothing to do with settling the prices; the prices were settled by contract. All they had to do was to find out how many yards of filling came under such a heading, and they reported the amount due, which came in all to about $45,000. That was the final settlement of all the questions involved in that classification. If the hon. member wishes us to understand that this present payment of $70,000 has anything to do with the question of classification and with the contract quantities found by the arbitrators to be excavated, he is undertaking a hopeless task. The question of the quantities excavated, of the filling, of the classification of those quantities, was definitely settled by those arbitrators, and the amount they allowed was about $45,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). It was nothing of the kind, there was no such sum.

Mr. CASEY. We will settle that on concurrence, when the definite report of the arbitrators will be before us. If there has been any question since that of classification or of the applications of prices to the quantity settled by arbitration, there has been a reopening of the whole question after it had been legally and finally settled, and the Government have unduly favored the contractors by allowing that.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Finance Minister if this is the last final settlement?

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). This is the final settlement of everything in connection with section B.

Mr. MITCHELL. Have we got a new Minister of Finance?

Mr. CASEY. I have one further remark to make, and that is upon the presentation of the case by the Minister of Finance. In future, when he is dealing with railway matters, I hope he will call on the Railway Department to give him information that will enable him to explain the matter intelligibly, because in this instance he has shown an utter ignorance of the subject.

Privy Council for Canada..... $1,450 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand it, the hon. gentleman proposes to add one second class clerk and one messenger to the Privy Council office. The number of officials there is increasing very fast, and I cannot understand why they should require five second class clerks and six messengers in addition to the doorkeeper and messenger. Seven distinct messengers for the Privy Council office is out of reason and proportion to any possible work these men would have to do.

Mr. McLELAN. The second class clerk was in the estimate for last year, but by mistake he was dropped. He was put in the estimates as a supernumerary, and when we came to look over them, his name, at the request of the President of Council was dropped, because it was not understood how it came to be there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I just call the attention of the House to this because this department is increasing in expense out of all proportion. In 1879, twelve officers were required for this department; now twenty-one are required. In 1879, we had three messengers; now we have six. Two senior second class clerks did all the work then; now five are required. How can the work in the Privy Council have increased so much? There are no additional charges devolving on the office that I know of.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The memorandum I have is that the work of the Department of the Privy Council has increased very much. During last year, the President of the Council had to borrow from other Departments two officers, and as the necessary funds had not been voted, and seeing that the work continued to be heavy and the officers were required, the Privy Council thought, under these circumstances, they should ask for an additional officer who is a second class clerk. The salary is as mentioned because the man appointed was formerly in the permanent service of the Government, and being transferred from another Department had to remain at his present salary. As to the messenger, the hon. gentleman will remember that Grenier, the only French messenger, was very old, had ceased to be able to walk, was becoming blind, and therefore had to be superannuated, and the Government decided to take a new one in his place, and that is the French messenger who has been added. There was no salary provided for him for the current year, and therefore we had to ask now for $100 to pay for the time he has been there up to 30th June. The money will afterwards be voted in the other estimates.

Department of Secretary of State..... $540 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that extra work performed in the Department?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was performed to my own knowledge as night work, and at a time when two officers were ill, and we had not taken new officers for the Franchise Act.

Mr. McMULLEN. This system of allowing for extra work is going wild. By the Auditor General's report, last year we paid clerks now in the Departments $59,233.85 for extra work. If the clerks find the Government are disposed to allow them for extra work for every day and every hour they are engaged beyond their regular hours they will make a charge for it, probably they have got so used to that that they do less in their regular hours. This is increasing every year, and I think Ministers should begin to carefully enquire into the operation of this system. Last year 140 clerks got about $412 apiece for extra work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this $250 for salary of J. F. Waters?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He is an officer for whom we have provided in the regular estimates at $1,000. He was employed in the Department of Inland Revenue at that salary, and was transferred to the Department of the Secretary of State in April. His salary was provided for on the 1st July, and this is to cover the three months between April and the 30th July.

Department of Fisheries $400 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does this amount for S. P. Bauset come to be proposed?

Mr. FOSTER. It is properly a revote. It was voted last year, but the name was not inserted, and the Auditor General refused to pay it.

Department of Agriculture..... $508 33

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this allowance to H. H. Bailey at the rate of $100 per annum for?

Mr. CARLING. He was appointed as extra clerk and patent examiner, with the rank of a second class clerk.

Administration of Justice..... $47,190 14

Mr. McLELAN. I propose to amend this by inserting the name of J. A. Côté, $187.60.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does Mr. H. Roy come to figure so frequently? As I understand, he is an officer of the Secretary of State's Department. He receives a regular salary, and, looking back to a previous vote I find he receives $73 for extra work, and here he receives $266.25. This plan of giving $300 or $400 extra to gentlemen who are sufficiently well paid, for the most part of them for the work they perform, for all kinds of services, is very objectionable and leads to great irregularity and great waste of the public time. Very few of our officers work more than is good for their health, and it is a very dubious piece of policy to allow them to charge 50 cents or a dollar an hour for all the extra work they do. If they were in the employment of a private banking firm, they would have to work many hours extra for a much smaller salary, and many people would be willing to take their places if they objected.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I agree with the hon gentleman entirely. As far as the officers of my Department are concerned, I am sure the amount this year is, first, very small, and second, I hope it will not be repeated. I agree that it is not a good custom or one that I desire to encourage in my Department. As for Mr. Roy, he is innocently put as the object of the remark of the hon. gentleman. I think his account is only $16 or $17. The work done by this gentleman was copying the whole of the records in the trial of Louis Riel, all the copies sent off for printing, the whole of the translation of it, and the whole of the correction of the proofs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like some general explanation of the large sum here required. What is it for?

Mr. THOMPSON. Most altogether for the exceptional expenses in connection with the administration of justice in the North-West, the numerous trials, expenses for witnesses, and maintenance of prisoners. Up to the 28th January, 1886, there had been voted $35,000 in the ordinary and Supplementary Estimates of last year. The expenditure up to that date had been $45,000 so that we had exceeded by about $10,000 the amount voted the previous year.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to draw the attention of the Government of the need of having the clerks in the various Departments work longer hours during the Sessions of Parliament. We find it very difficult to do business with the Departments. In the first place a good many of those officers do not come to their business until 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning, and as the committee meet at 10:30 or 11, we can get no work done before the committees meet. Then after dinner we have very little opportunity of doing business before 4 o'clock, at which hour the clerks leave the office. I think it is not requiring too much of the clerks to work till 6 o'clock, and on Saturdays till at least 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like some explanation about this sum paid to Sheriff Chapleau, $1,190. I notice that he gets $1,200 as sheriff of the North-West, and $500 for travelling expenses as inspector of public works.

Mr. THOMPSON. This officer receives $1,200, and an allowance has been fixed at $800 for travelling expenses. That sum has been paid him for the last two or three years out of the vote for the administration of justice. The allowance, however, had not been fixed up to the date mentioned here, up to the 1st January, 1885, and nothing had been paid on account of it. Instead of paying the arrears of travelling expenses it was thought better to ask Parliament for a vote to cover the whole period.

Mr. McMULLEN. He gets $500 a year for acting as inspector of public buildings in the North-West, and $4 a day for travelling expenses.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I know he receives $500 for that work, and he does it well. For travelling expenses he receives $3.50 or $4 a day, the usual allowance.

Expenses connected with the Franchise Act... $200,000 00

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to have very much a statement as to what this Franchise Act is going to cost us altogether for the year. It was stated when the Bill was brought in last year that the expenses would be very moderate. Some gentlemen stated it would amount to $250,000, others, $400,000, others, $500,000, and I have been told by some members of the House who are well posted, that it will amount to $750,000, I think it is one of the most extravagant Acts that ever was placed upon the Statute-book.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the expenditure for printing up to the present date?

Mr. McLELAN. That is not known.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much has been paid, so far?

Mr. McLELAN. Nothing has been paid yet?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then can the hon. gentleman tell what has been asked?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. All the accounts have been referred by me to the Auditor General. Nothing has been paid, and the printers have been found very patient in waiting?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could the hon. gentleman tell us what is the aggregate of the printing bills thus far?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I could not say. I know it is very high, certainly as much as $100,000, for printing alone. That includes printing the voters' lists and assessment rolls.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The time has now come, I think, when the House ought to be put in possession of the views of the Government as to the salaries to be allowed to the revising barristers, also to the clerks and bailiffs employed under them. It is now a year since the Act was passed, and it is time the scale of salaries was made out. Has the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Finance ascertained what the charges will be for the revising officer for each constituency?

Mr. THOMPSON. No scale has yet been decided. The work of revision has not yet been completed, and it is difficult to tell yet the precise period from which an allowance ought to be made. Certainly the allowance this year will be in excess of what will be required hereafter, because the work of preparing the first list will be far greater than that connected with subsequent lists. A regulation was adopted in regard to clerks and bailiffs, the allowance of the former being $2 per day, and the latter $1.50, with a low scale of travelling expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman give us any idea of the number of days' work that a revising officer will have to perform in an ordinary constituency?

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am informed that the work will be likely to occupy fully three months. In many cases in Ontario a single judge takes two constituencies. From what I know, I would propose that at the very least the judge would require to spend sixty or seventy days on the work.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a very important question that has been raised in connection with the Franchise Bill. A good many people entertain the idea that we are going to have an election this summer. Some people suggest that if the Quebec elections are successful there will be an election certainly. I think we are justified in demanding from the Government that they should come down to the House and submit a statement of the approximate cost of the Franchise Act. It is a right we have before we vote money to have this explanation from the Government. If we are to have an election this summer—and it is quite on the cards—I want to be able to tell my constituents something about the cost of the franchise measure. I do not want to say, as some members say, that it will cost $1,000,000 or $750,000, or between $400,000 or $500,000, which is my estimate, but we are entitled to obtain a proper estimate from the Government.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think that the Government have any good reason for supposing that the cost of printing the voters' lists will this year be any more than in future years. The list will require every year to be revised; it will be necessary to obtain copies of the assessment rolls because the property very largely changes hands, and ten per cent. of the names will have to be changed. So there is no reason for supposing that there will be less labor this year than last year. It is true that if we had adopted the principle of manhood suffrage, to which our friends in Quebec so strongly object, there would have been less difficulty, because the question as to property would not have arisen. Last year the First Minister had a clause in the original Bill making an appropriation for revising officers. The clause was struck out, and the hon. gentleman said that the Government would acquire sufficient experience before Parliament again met to decide upon the salaries of revising officers. We are now meeting twelve months after the measure was introduced and we are no nearer solving the question yet. There should not be very much difficulty in arriving at what would be a reasonable amount, and how is the Government to arrive at an approximate amount, when they are unable to tell the House the amount of money that this revision will cost. I think when we go to the country we should know what the measure is likely to cost us. The hon. member for Northumberland says we are going to have an election.

Mr. MITCHELL. I merely give my opinion; I cannot tell.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know that the Government can tell any more than the hon. gentleman, and I am inclined to think that if they do go to the country we will not only have a provincial election in Quebec but in Ontario, where we have a great many questions which will come up as issues between the Government and the Province of Ontario. There is the question of their interference with provincial legislation, the boundary question, the plundering of the territories belonging to the Province. These are all important and interesting questions, and they show the great necessity of having further information upon the item now before us.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I hope the hon. gentleman, when he considers the question of the salaries of the revising officers, will not forget those who have to deal with the unorganised townships, because in my constituency the revising officer has to originate the lists in some forty townships. Now, whatever may be the effect of the Franchise Act in other constituencies, it will give us in that constituency a fair election for the first time. We have never had a fair one yet, by reason of various influences used by hon. gentlemen opposite, and for the first time we will have under this Act a fair legitimate election. The revising officers there will have an extra amount of work to do which will be fairly considered when the salaries of these officers are fixed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the revising officer there a Mr. Mahaffy?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes, and he has done his duty to the satisfaction of opponents as well as friends. There has not been a single complaint against his conduct or the way he has done his work.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. gentleman give me any idea of the remuneration of the revising officer of the North Riding of York?

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot.

Mr. MULOCK. It is stated that the clerk will be allowed $2 per day. What does that mean? The Act of Parliament went into force on the 1st January, 1886, and I suppose from that time until the final revision he is more or less engaged.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; the clerks do not commence work until long after that time, and I should be surprised if they were to charge for collecting information. It is for actual work while under the instructions of the revising officer.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is to be the judge of the work they do?

An hon. MEMBER. The judge.

Mr. THOMPSON. There will be the certificate of the judge, but that may not be conclusive.

Mr. MULOCK. When do the bailiff's duties begin and and when do they end.

Mr. THOMPSON. As a general rule they will begin at the time the first court is held, and will only continue while the courts are being held, and while they are posting and serving notices under the direction of the revising officer.

Mr. MULOCK. If the revising officer does his duty in enquiring who should go on the lists, he will have to do a good deal of travelling. Is any provision to be made for travelling expenses while collecting this information and attending the courts?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly not for getting information, but I cannot say whether he will be paid for necessary travelling expenses in attending courts.

Mr. MITCHELL. My county is about 100 miles long by 100 miles broad, and I must say that if the hon. gentleman's statement is correct, it is rather extraordinary treatment on the returning officers. I think that this item should either be allowed to stand for further information or passed with the understanding that on concurrence full information shall be supplied so that we may be prepared to give our people information, as to the cost of this extraordinary Franchise Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be a misfortune if the hon. gentlemen were to allow so small a sum to the judges as to disgust them with the work. We had very great objections, as the Minister of Justice probably knows, to the appointment of revising barristers by the Government at all, and I have never changed my opinion that it was a most dangerous usurpation. But the point which removed a good deal of onus from the Government in the eyes of the people of Ontario, at any rate, was the employment of the judges, who had been, to a great extent, performing the same functions before. I take this opportunity of saying that I think the Government will commit a very serious error if they reduce the sum to be paid to the judges to such a miserable pittance, in view of the very serious amount of work they have to do, as to disgust these gentlemen with the office. The county judges in Ontario have from various causes of late been very hardworked, and the amount of additional work thrown upon them by the Franchise Bill has taxed their strength and time severely. Although I am not in favor of paying unreasonable salaries to them or to anybody, I think a fair allowance ought in all conscience and justice to be made to those gentlemen, and I trust that the Government will see fit to do it.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to continue my enquiries a little further. The Minister of Justice states that the revising officer is not to be paid for doing his duty in gathering information.

Mr. THOMPSON. I said they were not to be paid for travelling expenses in going about and collecting information, and I am sure they do not go about collecting information. I know that the revising officers of Ontario adopted a resolution which absolutely precluded that course, in which they stated their intention of acting only on stated evidence or their own knowledge, and not on their own motion, beyond using the means placed in their hands by the assessment roll and the list of electors. I am sure the revising officer in Northumberland has not gone about collecting information, but has waited until proper evidence was offered of the rights of parties to be put on or taken off the list. Of course some allowance must be made for travelling expenses in the gross sum to be paid.

Mr. MITCHELL. In reply to what the hon. gentleman says in relation to the revising officer in my county, I say the information I have got is that he has travelled around in some parishes, and by gaining personal information has endeavored to get up his list. If he goes into all the parishes his travelling expenses will be very considerable, and I think it would be wrong to refuse to pay the travelling expenses of these officers when they do travel. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the duties of those revising officers are very important, and they should be paid fairly well. I would not argue giving them high salaries, but I would pay them what would be considered fair, handsome remuneration for the services they perform. I have no doubt they will do their duty fairly well, and I would not want those who have to travel around such an extensive county as mine not to be paid their travelling expenses. I think it would be a gross injustice to them.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice seems to misapprehend the functions of the revising officer. He supposes he is a judge. It is true he is in one sense; but he has to prepare the case for the judge as well. He is not to sit quietly in the court and hear claims and adjudicate on them. Such is not the spirit of the Franchise Act. His duty is to find out who are entitled to the franchise; he is not to wait in some quiet nook until they call upon him.

Mr. MITCHELL.

The theory is that the man entitled to a vote will seek his right, which is very good as a theory, but does not work in practice; so that I think the hon. gentleman will find that sooner or later he will have to meet the claims of these officers for travelling expenses. I would again ask whether any provision in this estimate is intended for the travelling expenses of the 211 clerks that are to be travelling about the country. If so, what is the per capita allowance to them?

Mr. THOMPSON. There is an allowance made for travelling expenses for each clerk. I cannot state the allowance per head, because it is a per diem allowance during actual employment, and it has not yet ceased.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman state what number of days are estimated for each clerk?

Mr. THOMPSON. Averages are very unreliable and very difficult to make.

Mr. MULOCK. I then come to the bailiff. I put the same question, and am I to consider I have the same answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Having got this satisfactory information with regard to these officers, I now come to a more important functionary, and I am sure he will not be treated in that cavalier way in which bailiffs, clerks and judges have been treated. I come to the ruler of our country, the printer. I would ask whether there has been any tariff arranged in respect to the printing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. 12½ cents per name, including the descriptions; and for all additions 12½ cents per name. That figure covers the three lists, the preliminary and the revised and the final.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any estimate for rent of offices or court houses where the courts of revision will be held?

Mr. THOMPSON. None.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the estimated cost of procuring certified copies of the lists? and revised assessment rolls, according to the Franchise Act?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It varies from 75 cents to $5. I do not speak of cities.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It will cost a great deal more than that.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the average?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I cannot say.

Mr. MULOCK. I am thoroughly satisfied now that the Government have the most conclusive data on which to invite the House to vote a specific sum of $200,000, as the full amount necessary to put this Act in force.

Mr. MITCHELL. They do not seem to give it to us if they have.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is very unreasonable not to be satisfied with the lucid explanations we have had. Could the hon. member inform the House of the estimated cost to the country of procuring to the support of the Government each bad vote under this Act?

Mr. CASEY. The Government are treating the House with anything but respect in asking us to vote $200,000 with such an utter lack of information as they have shown. The Minister of Justice said it was impossible yet to settle the salaries of the revising officers. There is no reason why they should not be settled now, for we can form a very fair idea of the work at present and the time it takes. The Minister of Justice knows well how much a judge expects to be paid per day for his time, when he is actually employed. I am not prepared at all to believe that the county judges and other gentlemen who have accepted the position of revising officer have done so under the loose promise that they would be paid according to their work.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not the slightest information has been given them.

Mr. CASEY. Then they are more careless than I would have expected them to be. The result will be that, as their pay will depend largely on the amount of work they have to do, they will make work for themselves, as the revising officer has done in my riding, so as to get as much pay as possible. The revising officer in my riding rejected, on the most ridiculous grounds, a number of applications to be put on the primary list, with the idea of making work for himself in the final revision, for which he would charge the Government. How can the revising officer act independently of the Government, when his salary is not fixed. We were told these gentlemen would be independent as judges, that their position would be fixed, and now we find they are working on the job system and are utterly dependent on the Government. You cannot imagine that these people can be looked upon as independent while they are in that dependent and slavish situation, with regard to the Government, when the whole question of their salary depends upon the favor of the Government, and if they offend the Government their salary may be put down to a beggarly pittance. Several of them have acted fairly, and my own revising officer in Elgin has acted with more fairness of late than he did at first, in fact with complete fairness, as far as I know. But they cannot be looked upon as independent when the Government have kept them under their thumb until the list is finished. It is a disgraceful proposition to make that they shall be kept under the thumb of the Government until the revision is finished. Then, with regard to the clerks, the Minister has stated that they will be paid $2 a day for the time they are actually employed, but he took good care not to say what actual employment meant. If it means the total number of days, that the total number of hours they are employed would amount to, it is absurd. Most of them are lawyers in practice, and you cannot hire a lawyer in practice for $2 a day. If it is to be any remuneration to a lawyer, it must be calculated from the time they begin to the time they finish their services as clerks.

Mr. THOMPSON. If they were lawyers of any credit, the longer they were at it the more they would lose at $2 a day.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister has shown the absurdity of his first statement by that. That is exactly the point I was making. Therefore they will be paid for some suppositious period.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to have some information from the Government as to whether they intend to adopt the suggestion I made, and give us, on concurrence, an approximate statement of the probable cost. I think we are entitled to have it, and I have three times called attention to it without getting any answer.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have already explained, that until the revision is more advanced, it is impossible to state the expense. The courts for final revision have yet to be held, the printers' bills are not all in, and the assessment rolls are not all printed yet.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree that it is impossible for the Government to give any information. It is unreasonable for my hon. friends to expect any more information than we have received. We have had such a satisfactory financial statement, what more remains for any paternal Government to do?

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose I shall have to put up with the information we have got. I certainly did not expect much information when I asked for it. There is one thing, however, they might fairly do. They state how much they allow a clerk and a constable per day, and I think it ought not to be so serious a matter to say how much they allow the revising barristers a day. However, as it is likely to embarrass them, I will withdraw my demand.

Committee rose and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 3:35 a. m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 1st June, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. EDGAR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, there is a matter to which I may be allowed to refer. I stated last week, during the debate on the Franchise Bill, that in the riding of East Toronto a number of names had been put on the preliminary voters' list of persons who are not qualified under the law, as it stands, and that the revising officer's clerk, when his attention was called to this, said that the law would be altered at the next Session so as to qualify those voters. My statement was questioned by the hon. member for East Toronto on that occasion. I saw by the papers in Toronto yesterday, that on Saturday, in the House, the hon. member for East Toronto had read a letter from the revising officer's clerk formally contradicting my statement, and I took occasion to enquire of my informant as to the correctness of the information he had given me. He not only stated that what he had told me was correct, but he said he was willing to furnish me with a statutory declaration to that effect, and I have the declaration here, which I will read to the House:

"I, Daniel Hugh Allen, of the city of Toronto, in the county of York and Province of Ontario, gentleman, do hereby solemnly declare as follows:—

"1. Soon after the publication of the parliamentary list of voters, under the 'Electoral Franchise Act,' for the city of Toronto, my attention was called to the fact that, while in the lists for the electoral districts of Centre and West Toronto, for which His Honor Joseph E. McDougall is the revising officer, there were comparatively few names as on income at their places of business, there was a large number of those on the lists for the electoral district of East Toronto, for which John Boyd, Esq., is the revising officer.

"2. My attention was specially attracted to the large number of such cases, in said Ward of St. Lawrence, in said electoral district of East Toronto; there being no less than sixty-three on the list, as at the City Hall, in polling sub-division No. 9 of this ward.

"3. Soon after making the above-mentioned discovery, being in the office of the said revising officer for East Toronto, and said revising officer not being in his office at the time, I called the attention of his clerk, Mr. Walton, to the above mentioned facts, saying that unless all those parties who had their names so placed as on income at their places of business, would have them changed on revision of the list, they would all be disfranchised.

"4. Mr. Walton at once replied that the Act was to be amended before the revision of the list would be completed, so as to make good all such votes.

"5. I was surprised and indignant at this information, and so expressed myself to Mr. Walton, who appeared to realise he had made a slip, and declined answering further questions as to his grounds for the statement he had made.

"6. I afterwards mentioned what Walton informed me to Judge McDougall and others. Judge McDougall thought no Act would be passed which would affect the lists of the present year, as it would greatly add to the labor and expense connected with the preparation of the same; and I believe there are over a thousand names wrongly placed in the St. Lawrence Ward alone. And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign, intituled: 'An Act for the suppression of Voluntary and Extra-judicial Oaths.'

"Declared before me at Toronto, in the county of York, this thirty-first day of May, A.D. 1886. (Signed) "D. H. ALLEN.

(Signed) "THOS. P. GALT,
"A Commissioner, &c."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Orders of the Day are gone into, I feel called upon to speak with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) respecting my great criminality in dealing in public lands. I was not here when the hon. gentleman spoke, and I was rather surprised when I was told that I had been put in the category of those concerned in public plunder. I was particularly surprised at this, because, whatever my sins otherwise might be, I had never dealt in any lands, or scrip, or limits of any kind from the time I came of age until this moment. Never did I apply on behalf of myself or of any client that I can remember for any lands or privileges from the Crown in any way, and, therefore, I could not understand how I could be implicated in the charges brought by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron). I, therefore, could not well understand how I was implicated, but, upon reading the hon. gentleman's speech, which I did since I was well enough to do so, I found that my sin was in having a son, that my son was practising in the North-West, and his sin was in having for a partner the son of Sir Charles Tupper, and that these two gentlemen, practising lawyers, had actually committed the great sin of dealing in lands and speculating and making applications as others did in the North-West. The language of the hon. gentleman is most extraordinary, and I was going to say, if it was parliamentary, most infamous. This is his language:

"Now, Sir, I find that the son of the First Minister of this Dominion, and the son of Sir Charles Tupper, have for years been using their all-powerful influence with this Administration, in order to secure large slices of the public domain and the public resources of this country. For years they have been trading on and speculating in that influence, and in the resources of the Dominion secured thereby. I say the startling disclosures that have been so far made in the equity side of the Court of Queen's Bench in the Province of Manitoba are enough to arouse the indignation of any people in any country."

Well, Mr. Speaker, this charge, if it means anything, means that my son and the son of Sir Charles Tupper, using their influence with their parents, had secured slices of land improperly in this country. Now, I state here, in my place as a member of Parliament, and on my honor as a gentleman, that neither of those two young men ever addressed me, or spoke to me, or approached me, directly or indirectly, upon any claim or application that they were about to make, and I would further venture to say that both Mr. Stewart Tupper and Mr. Hugh John Macdonald are honest and honorable men, and I am quite satisfied that they would not do anything which would disgrace their parents or disgrace themselves. They are, I am happy to say—because I am interested in my son's prosperity—doing very well as lawyers; they have a very considerable business, and they deal, as all other legal men are doing and have a right to do, and as everyone does in the North-West, with land purchases. It is their affair altogether, and it is too much to say that, because their parents happen to be public men, they alone of all Her Majesty's subjects in Canada should be precluded from doing legitimate business if they choose to do so. I said that I was perfectly ignorant of any one of the transactions mentioned here, but, being satisfied that the honor of these gentlemen was without stain, I caused enquiries to be made. It appears that the statements that were made by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) were based on certain exhibits filed in an equity suit in Manitoba. The firm of Macdonald & Tupper had two partners, Mr. McArthur & Mr. Dexter. The partnership was severed, there was a difference between the partners as to the accounts, and they have gone into chancery to settle the accounts between them, and these papers which were laid before the court were published in one of the newspapers, and hence the hon. member for West Huron gathers these facts, which he utterly distorts, utterly misstates, and grossly and malignantly insinuates as being dishonorable and discreditable to these two young gentlemen and to myself and to Sir Charles Tupper. Now, here is the first case, which he refers to in the following language:

"From the evidence, so far as it has been submitted—and it has only been partially submitted—these two young men appear to have secured a timber limit on the Swan River in the name of one John McMahon. Several partners were interested in that limit, and these two young men had a ninth blind share in it. But that was not sufficient to compensate these two young men for the valuable services they had rendered in securing the limit, and so the Order in Council granting it was cancelled. A new deal was effected; a new Order in Council was issued, granting the timber limit to T. P. Walsh, for T. P. Walsh, John McMahon, the Hon. Edgar Dewdney, and Macdonald & Tupper, and in that timber limit Macdonald & Tupper held a three-fifths interest; and the Hon. Edgar Dewdney, pet and friend of this Administration, offered to sell his interest in it for $50,000. I have always been amazed and astounded, considering the charges that have been made against Edgar Dewdney by the press supporting hon. gentlemen opposite in Parliament and out of Parliament, who have denounced this man as utterly unfit for the position he occupies—I say I have been surprised that a man so described by the Government's own friends, should have been retained in his place until a rebellion broke out, to some extent through his instrumentality, and even after it broke out. The mystery is no longer a mystery, this litigation has unravelled it."

I sent over to the Department of the Interior to find out all about this John McMahon and his grant, and these are the facts, as conveyed to me by the officers of that Department:

"On the 18th January, 1883, an application from John McMahon was received in the Department for a timber limit on the Swan River. This application was originally signed J. B. McArthur, but McArthur's name was erased and John McMahon's substituted therefor. On the 16th March, 1883, an amended application was received from John McMahon by his attorneys, Macdonald & Tupper. This application was granted on the usual conditions, which McMahon found so onerous that, on the 15th November, 1883, he surrendered the limit, having paid $250 ground rent thereon. On the 19th December, 1883, the same limit was granted to T. P. Walsh. Walsh never complied with the conditions, and has therefore no longer an interest in the limit, which remains in the Crown."

That disposes of that. The next case is this:

"Macdonald & Tupper also applied for, and were able to secure in the name of John Apted, a timber limit on the Rolling River, in which they held a fourth blind share, and for which a firm of manufacturers offered $25,000, although it cost these young men, I suppose, but $250, if they paid for it."

The memorandum which comes from the Department is this:

"Apted, through his solicitors, McArthur & Dexter, applied on the 24th August, 1883, for a limit on the Rolling River. Order in Council, 27th October, 1883, granting Apted limit on usual conditions passed. On 25th March, 1885, Hugh J. Macdonald applies, on behalf of his client, for an extension of time in which to make the survey. He is informed that, upon the receipt of one year's ground rent ($250), his request will be complied with. This was paid on the 14th August, 1885, and Apted notified accordingly to his address, Niles P. O., Michigan. The Department has had a good deal of correspondence with Apted, who is clearly a bonâ fide applicant, acting for himself alone."

This is all on that. Then:

"These same young men, in the name of Alexander Moffatt, secured the passage of an Order in Council on the 20th August, 1883, granting them a timber limit of fifty square miles in the disputed territory, in which they held one-fifth blind share. They also obtained a limit on Swan River in the name of someone unknown, in which they had one-fifth blind share."

In regard to that, I have this:

"On the 8th November, 1882, Moffatt applied for a limit on the Leaf River. This limit was afterwards found to be in the disputed territory. In accordance with the then policy of the Department, it was granted, but no license has been issued since the decision of the Privy Council. Moffatt is a member of the firm of Moffatt & Caldwell, bankers, Winnipeg. He is a responsible man, and there is nothing to connect the firm of Macdonald & Tupper with the application beyond the fact that Hugh Macdonald wrote a private letter to the Deputy Minister"——

That is Mr. Burgess ——

"—telling him who Moffatt was, and later McArthur, owing to Moffatt's absence in England, applied for extension of leave within which to make survey."

Then again:

"These young men appear further to have secured section 32, township 21, range 20, and section 36, township 21, range 21, west of the fourth principal meridian, 1,280 acres of coal lands at the Blackfoot Crossing, where, it is alleged, the best coal lands in the country are, and these worthy representatives of worthy sires had one-half blind share in that little deal."

In regard to that:

"J. M. Dufresne, of Montreal, is the person with whom the Department has had all the correspondence in relation to these lands. Dufresne was informed that the land would be sold to him and his associates, among whom was J. B. McCarthen, for $10 an acre, cash."——

That is the price for which all coal lands are sold in the North-West, at which they are put in the market.—

"They never paid any money and never got any land."

The next charge is:

"These worthy sons of worthy sires do not appear to have limited their operations to coal and timber lands. They were willing to turn a penny in any way out of the public resources of the country, over which their fathers then had full control, and so they applied for the salt springs flowing into Lake Winnipegoosis, and Mr. Hall, of the Department of the Interior, wrote them that those lake salt springs could be had at $5 an acre. These young men appear to have had a blind share in that little deal also."

Now, Sir, they had a perfect right to apply for these springs if they could get them. The reply to that charge is this:

"On the 29th August, 1883, Macdonald & Tupper applied, under instructions from their client, Mr. Peter Barclay, of Birtle, for a salt spring on Lake Winnipegoosis. They were informed that if their client can establish priority of discovery, he can get forty acres at $40 an acre on the prescribed conditions. He was called upon to prove his discovery in three months. This was more than a year ago, and the Department has heard no more about it."

The next charge is:

"When the late Minister of Railways fixed the terminus of the railway at Port Moody, the son of the Premier and the son of the Minister of Railways applied to this Government, over which their fathers wielded unbounded sway, for four hundred acres of the foreshore at Port Moody. Whether they got it or not I do not know, but it is very likely they did not complete the contract because the Canadian Pacific Railway changed the terminus of the road."

The answer to that charge is this:

"In August, 1883, J. W. McKay and Albert J. Hill, of New Westminster, applied for certain tidal lands situate at the east end of Port Moody. The application was referred to Mr. Trutch, who, on the 7th November, 1883, reported that, as these lands adjoined the terminal station of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they were of considerable present value and prospective importance. He, therefore, recommended that the application should not be entertained. Hugh Macdonald wrote, on the 4th November, 1885, asking if Mr. Trutch had reported on his clients' application, and on the 24th December, 1885, he was informed of Mr. Trutch's report, and told that in consequence thereof no action would be taken on McKay's application by the Department."

These, Sir, are the charges that are brought. The hon. gentleman happened to see the statement in the newspaper and he took occasion to found thereon, to found the most malignant and serious charges against myself, against Sir Charles Tupper, and against these two young gentlemen, who never did him any harm, who had the full right, not only to make such purchases and such speculations, but to make such assertions to the Government as they thought proper, but at their own risk. Now, Sir, you will see that every one of these statements are proved to be untrue, that there never was in any case a favor granted which ought not to be granted, a favor granted to these gentlemen that would not have been granted to the son of any man in this House, and it is insufferable that for mere political malignity, for a political purpose, that gentleman—I cannot call him an hon. gentleman except by parliamentary courtesy—to attempt to smirch the characters of men as honest or honester than himself, for the mean, base, low purpose of making political capital.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD When an hon. member of this House gets up and charges another hon. member with dishonorable conduct, the latter has a full parliamentary right—and I appeal to the House, and I appeal to your sense of rectitude, if it is not so—to reject and repudiate the charge with all the indignation of which he is capable, and the strongest language he can find in the English dictionary.

THE REVISING OFFICER OF EAST TORONTO.

Mr. SMALL. I just wish to reply to some remarks made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) about the working of the Franchise Act in Toronto. The revising officer's clerk of east Toronto is prepared to revise and verify the affidavit he made to the House the other day:

"I would like to know on what ground Blake and Edgar attacked the East Toronto franchise management; it is the first I have heard of any complaint being made; on the contrary, Major Allen, who was the counsel for the Grits at the preliminary revision of lists, publicly thanked and congratulated the revising officer for the strict impartiality shown and the satisfactory manner generally in which the whole business was conducted. The Conservative representative expressed himself similarly, and I fail to see where either Blake or Edgar can find fault. I now confirm what I said yesterday, and would have no hesitation in affirming the same under oath if necessary."

PROROGATION.

Mr. COLBY. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I beg to ask the right hon. Premier if he is in a condition to inform the House as to the probable date of prorogation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government are exceedingly anxious to close the Session, now becoming rather protracted. They had thought last week that probably we would be able to prorogue to-morrow, but I think that is almost impossible, looking at the work that is still before this House, and at the necessity of the business, when finished here, going to the other Chamber. But I would certainly hope that we would make such progress that Parliament may prorogue on Friday, as Thursday is a fête d'obligation.

Mr. MITCHELL. Everything will go on sweet now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. En suite.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state whether it is in the contemplation of the Government to introduce any further propositions for the consideration of Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I think not. I think we have exhausted the hon. gentleman's patience.

FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS.

Mr. FOSTER moved the second reading of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 136) further to amend the Act respecting fishing by foreign vessels. He said: There were three amendments made. By the first there was left out in section 3 of the Bill as it passed this House the words from "by" to "treaty" in the following phrase: "or has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by the law of nations, or contrary to the treaty or convention."

Mr. BLAKE. They leave out the law of nations.

Mr. FOSTER. One page 1, line 33, they leave out "to" and insert "by." That is simply substituting one proposition for another, so as to make it read properly with the preceding clause. Then the third amendment is to leave out all that part of the schedule which relates to the Act of the Legislature of the Province of Prince Edward Island. It appears that the Dominion Fisheries Act of 1868 had not been applied to the Province of Prince Edward Island, so, if that had been repealed, there would have been no law left for the Province of Prince Edward Island. That clause is left out, and it leaves the law of Prince Edward Island as before.

Mr. BLAKE. I deplore the summary manner in which the Senate have dealt with the law of nations as it was found on our Statute-book. It is quite true that Parliament failed to obtain any explanation of it when the Bill was here before; still the phrase sounded well and looked large. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would tell us, first of all, why he put it in, and, secondly, why he has allowed it to be taken out again?

Mr. FOSTER. I explained fully why it was put in; the reason for taking it out remains with the hon. gentlemen in the Upper House.

Amendments concurred in.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Bill (No. 146) to authorise the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned for and in aid of the construction of certain railways, was read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Railways agreed to bring down a statement, showing the total amount now due by the country on account of the several subsidies granted to the various railways. Has the hon. gentleman that statement?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the statement here; but I can say, in round figures, that the total amount of subsidies granted from 1882 amounted to a little over $6,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Does that include those of the present Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not include such grants as that to the Chignecto Marine Railway or the subsidies of the present Session. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that, after what has been paid, $6,000,000 will cover the several grants remaining, exclusive of those for the present Session and the Chignecto Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. The total amount granted by Parliament for those subsidies has been a little over $6,000,000. Of that, we have paid, so far as I can recollect, about $3,000,000. There are now companies going on with work which, if completed, will cause about $1,400,000 to be paid. That will make about four and a-half millions. About $1,600,000 remaining will lapse. That covers the subsidies, but not the amount voted for the Chignecto Marine Railway and the subsidies of this year.

Mr. BLAKE. Does that cover the Short Line subsidy?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. A full statement will be submitted.

On section 1,

Mr. BLAKE. I have a single observation to make with respect to this clause, which really comprises the Bill. It will be in the recollection of the House that the time before the last on which an application was made to the Government by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for an alteration and further accommodation in respect to their contract and arrangement, they proposed, as a concession for granting that further aid, that they would arrange for the completion of the western road through the western portion of Ontario giving that competition and those facilities required by a large portion of the Province. I wish to know whether a step is now being taken towards the accomplishment of that object, not in the accomplishment but towards the accomplishment of it, by one of the grants, namely, that given to a line to run from Ingersoll to Chatham, but which it has been already stated is intended to be continued to Windsor in order to connect with the American system. Has any application been made to the Canadian Pacific Railway by the Government to fulfil their promise made on the occasion to which I refer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I am not aware of any such application having been made by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it the understanding that the present organisation is an organisation intended to be worked in the interests of, or by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or is it to be an independent line?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no understanding on that point.

Mr. BLAKE. I judge, from the statements made and from current reports, however, that is the case, and that under the name of the Western Pacific Junction, or some name of that kind, this extension is going to be completed and worked as a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Ontario system. If that be not so, the railway facilities may not be so successfully attained; if it be so, this country is called upon to pay $3,200 a mile or $256,000 to accomplish work which at the time to which I refer the Canadian Pacific Railway undertook to accomplish free of expense, if we did what we did do.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not improbable that it will be worked, as the hon. gentleman says, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but we know nothing about it.

Mr. VAIL. Has there been any application for an extension of the time of the grant for connection between Annapolis and Digby, which will expire on the 1st of July? What is the policy of the Government with regard to that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I did not expect this question to-day, because it was not included in the Bill. I will, however, most likely be able to give the hon. gentleman an answer later on in the day or to-morrow.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. At the special request of the Minister of Railways, I would like to move an additional clause as the second clause of the Bill. There is a subsidy given to the Lake Temiscamingue and Long Sault Railway. Last year a small subsidy was also given for the building of that railway, and the clause which I have the honor to propose is simply to give power to the persons building the railway to get a charter for its construction by letters patent. The clause is as follows:—

For the purpose of incorporating the persons undertaking the construction of the railway from Long Sault to the foot of Lake Temiscamingue, and of the wharves and landing stages on the line of the said railway mentioned in the next preceding section, the Governor may grant to them, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter conferring upon them the franchises, privileges and powers requisite for the said purposes, as the Governor shall deem most useful or appropriate to the said undertaking; and such charter being published in the Canada Gazette, with any Order or Orders in Council relating to it, shall have force and effect as if it were an Act of Parliament.

This is the power which was granted last year in the case of the Temiscouata road.

Mr. BLAKE. This is, of course, a very small affair, and I could not understand from the papers under what authority these individuals were acting. It seems probable that some relief ought to be given to them, but I cannot but say that I esteem it a most objectionable way of conferring this particular class of corporate powers. We have thought it expedient not to allow corporate powers to be granted to persons for the building of railways under the Joint Stock Letters Patent Act, although, if we did so, we would, of course, prescribe a limit to those powers very precisely in the general Act. But legislation of this description gives the Executive power to confer any corporate powers they please by letters patent—powers of expropriation, perhaps, differing altogether in extent and character from those that we ordinarily grant. It seems to me to be legislation of a most entirely objectionable description. It is still more objectionable that it should be introduced at the last stage of the Bill. It is practically legislating by resolution. It should have been introduced by a Bill, so that we might have had an opportunity of judging it. It is also open to the objection that there is a possible interference with private rights, and that the usual precautions which we take when we propose to interfere with private rights are not in this case taken, inasmuch as the usual notice given is not given, the usual time is not allowed, and the usual facilities afforded for appearing before the committee and contending against the granting of those powers, which, indeed, it is impossible to measure, because we do not know what powers may be granted by Order in Council.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I would not have proposed this amendment at this time were it not that I know and can state to the House in two words the position of this railway. It is more of the character of a narrow gauge railway or tramway, and the road is only six and a half or seven miles in length, connecting the foot of the lake with the Long Sault. There is no interference with public rights, inasmuch as the expropriation has been made out of public lands by the settlers organised under La Société de Colonisation du lac Temiscamingue, at the head of which is that zealous gentleman who was mentioned by the Minister of Railways in his remarks in presenting this measure, Rev. Father Gendreau. This road is built, or almost built, and power is being asked to build wharves and landing stages on the lake. It was only at the last moment that Father Gendreau, who is at the head of the enterprise, was informed by some of his friends that the working of the railway, when built, would require that some such power should be granted. It was only last Saturday that the rev. gentleman came to me and asked me to see the Minister of Railways, and although this power may seem an extraordinary one to ask at this time, I hope that the smallness of the road, although the colony which is beginning to be planted there is a very important one, would be a reason for obtaining the indulgence of the House to have this provision added to the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I admit that the child is a very little one, but if it is not legitimate it is hardly usual to accept that as an excuse.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It cannot be legitimate, considering its father.

Mr. KINNEY. Before the committee rises I wish to offer an objection to the Bill—not to any of the features of the measure, but because of the absence of any reference to the Western Counties Railway of Nova Scotia. I do not wish to call the attention of the committee to this matter but for a few moments, as it is of a strongly local character and cannot, therefore, have much interest for the majority of the House. At the time of the confederation of the British North America colonies, the Province of Nova Scotia owned two lines of railway, which did not belong to the trunk line or Intercolonial Railway line from Quebec to Halifax. These two lines were fifty-two miles of railway from Truro to Pictou, and thirty-two miles from Windsor Junction to Windsor. It was clearly enunciated, as the intention of the Dominion Government, that the Dominion Government would give those two pieces of road as bonuses for the eastern and western railway extension in Nova Scotia, and in 1873 a resolution was submitted to the House by the right hon. the First Minister, to this effect:

"That the Government be authorised to enter into negotiations with some reliable association or company, for the transfer of the railway from Windsor to the trunk line from Halifax to Truro, upon condition that such association or company extend the railway from Annapolis to Yarmouth, subject to the approval of Parliament at the next Session."

At the next Session, the Dominion Government passed a Bill authorising the transfer of that piece of road to any company that would extend the railway system of Nova Scotia from Annapolis to Yarmouth. A company, which had already been formed, called the Western Counties Railway Company, chartered under an Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia, and to which a liberal subsidy had been given by the Nova Scotia Government, offered, by means of that subsidy and the piece of road I have spoken of, to build the railway desired from Annapolis to Yarmouth. At that time, the Western Counties Railway, by virtue of an Act passed, issued a loan of £280,000, and went on the London market to float it, but found, to their dismay, that the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company claimed the right to the Windsor branch for twenty-one years from 1872. The case was taken into court, and after several years of litigation it was finally settled that the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company had a right to the Windsor branch, because, amongst other reasons, the Act did not recite that the lease to the other company had been cancelled. Under these circumstances, the company was left with a road just commenced, with the bridges unfinished, with neither money nor credit, and with the whole thing in disorder—all owing to the imperfect legislation of the Dominion Parliament. In the meantime, the Nova Scotia Government again came to the rescue and subdivided the original loan of £280,000 into two liens, making the one a lien upon the road from Annapolis to Yarmouth, and the other a lien upon the Windsor branch, the Nova Scotia Government guaranteeing the interest upon the £65,000 secured upon the western end of the road, which sum enabled the road to be completed from Digby to Yarmouth; and that portion of the road has been running ever since under that arrangement. That was in 1879. In 1881 the Nova Scotia Government undertook to treat with the joint stock company to complete the entire railway system of Nova Scotia, and entered into an agreement with this Government, which was ratified both in the Provincial and Dominion Parliaments. The Local Government went out of power, and the incoming Government defeated the intention of their predecessors, so that the Bill proved inoperative. The road has been remaining ever since 1881 in that unfinished state, with only eighteen miles of the road graded, and which will cost something like $700,000 to complete, nearly half a million dollars of which must be expended for bridges alone. This is all left in this chaotic state because of the legislation of this Parliament, by which the Government were prevented from handing over that property to the Western Counties Railway. Under those circumstances it was rightly claimed by the Western Counties Railway Company, that inasmuch as Parliament had failed to carry out their intentions, and had left the people of the western counties of Nova Scotia heavily in debt, the company involved in great difficulties—and I may state here that, which is an exception in the Maritime Provinces, the municipality of Yarmouth invested $100,000 in this enterprise for which they are paying $6,000 a year interest, and for which they have received no direct benefit whatever. Now, the trouble has been existing for years; in fact that railway is in, and has been in, a chronic state of trouble, until the present Nova Scotia Government have undertaken to complete the system; and one reason why, I assume, the Western Counties Railway Company is not mentioned in the Bill is because this Government have observed and must know, by the correspondence which has taken place between them and the Nova Scotia Government within the past year, that it is the intention of the latter to finish the road, and, consequently, the Dominion Government thought it hardly necessary to step in and interfere with any arrangements that might be made by the Provincial Government. To show the committee that the plan recently devised by the Nova Scotia

Government should not be ratified by this House for several reasons, if I show the committee that plan should not be ratified, that it is impossible to carry it out, and that this Government should not assist in the endeavor to carry it out, I show good reason why the Western Counties Railway Company should be looked after immediately by the Dominion Government. The Bill which has been passed by the Nova Scotia Government, and the agreement it contains, is here. Hon. gentlemen who may not have read that Bill may be interested in knowing that the intention of the Nova Scotia Government, under the provisions of that Bill and agreement, is to hand over to a foreign company ninety-nine miles of railway equipped and running in Nova Scotia, that cost upwards of $3,000,000, for $120,000. That is all they are paying for the road. The Nova Scotia Government have swamped the $500,000 private capital, $100,000 municipal funds, the £145,000 floating and the £65,000 of bonds guaranteed by the Nova Scotia Government, and all they get in return is $120,000, less the $64,000 expected from the Dominion Government, which makes $56,000 net, or less than $600 a mile, and the Nova Scotia Government boldly asked this Parliament to sanction that transaction. This is a plain, unvarnished statement of the conditions of this Bill. There is a precious document issued by the Legislature of Nova Scotia and called "The Western Railway Consolidation." It appears that the Nova Scotia Government, after having invited tenders to build the railway system of Nova Scotia, and after having entered into communication with two or three different companies, shunted them all off with the exception of one. The hon. member for Digby, no doubt, has one of these documents, and on page 67 he will find there was an offer from a party in Yarmouth to build the railway system and retain for the Government their lien of £65,000 and pay the bondholders 50 per cent. of their bonds. The Premier of Nova Scotia says on page 67 that he fears that the offer must be modified—he cannot accept it. But by turning to page 94, you will find that another offer to complete the road was refused, because, as the Provincial Secretary said, it was not made by a banking house of unquestionable character. But, by turning to another part of this history of railway consolidation, we find that the Government of Nova Scotia, although it refused one offer because it was not made by a banking house of respectability, accepted an offer to negotiate with this precious joint-stock company of London upon the bare assertion of a notary public of London that one Charles James Watts was to be secretary and manager of a company to be formed in the following year. It is evident all the way through that the Nova Scotia Government was bound to make this particular arrangement with one company, whoever it might be, and the Government of Nova Scotia did not know who the company was until seven days previous to the contract being ratified by the Legislature, when they officially asked who were to form this company and when it was to be formed. It shunts off another offer by stating officially to the London joint-stock company that "You are the only parties authorised to treat with us." There is something else very fishy in this transaction, because we find that, under date of the 23rd of October, the joint-stock company of London wrote to the Provincial Secretary in reply to a letter that does not appear in the volume. All the way through this document it is evident that the intention of this Government was purely and simply to treat with one company. There is another very peculiar feature in this matter. This joint-stock company proposed to the Government of Nova Scotia, in their first offer, to pay a debt of $50,000 which was due by the company to the Government. The agreement is signed, and the Provincial Secretary declines to take the $50,000. I merely make this statement, which any member of the committee can verify for himself. The Government of Nova Scotia also insisted on wiping out an obligation which they were under and robbing the trustees of the bondholders of $40,000 in their hands.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. KINNEY. I am speaking to the question. The question was that the committee rise. I object to the committee rising until I show that its work is incomplete. There is a Bill before the House for the building of railways all over the country; but I object to the Bill in its imperfect state.

Mr. BLAKE. The question is, that the committee do rise; but it seems to me that what the hon. gentleman is doing is taking a rise out of the committee.

Mr. KINNEY. That is a matter of opinion. We will excuse the hon. gentleman's facetiousness at this particular time.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a serious subject to you.

Mr. KINNEY. It is a serious subject to me and to Western Nova Scotia generally; and if I am in order, those who do not wish to listen to me may go out. The Local Government of Nova Scotia to-day, through their agent, who is now in the city, is asking the Dominion Government to hand over the Windsor Branch Railway, worth $1,250,000, without paying one dollar for it. The hon. member for Digby, I think, approves of this Bill. Judging by some observations which have dropped from him, and I do not wonder at it, because, viewing the history of this railway from its beginning up to now—I am sorry I cannot say to its end—I find all the way through one interest interfering with the completion of that railway. I will not point out that interest; perhaps it would be unparliamentary for me to say that the hon. member for Digby is interested. Fourteen years ago, when the Nova Scotia Government was negotiating for the completion of this road, there was this proviso put into its legislation—that it would be imcomplete until the Windsor and Annapolis Railway recouped to the county of Digby and the county of Annapolis their interest in the land damages. The counties of Digby and Annapolis claimed that the Western Counties Railway Company should pay their interest on the money until the road was completed; and the Nova Scotia Government, out of the paltry $120,000 they are willing this company should pay for 100 miles of finished railway, compel the company to put by a sum of money to pay interest on some land damages for the county of Digby; and while the hon. member for Digby may approve of the Bill, because of that one feature in it, I doubt if the people of Digby generally are willing to sacrifice the interests of Yarmouth for that purpose. As this Bill and this agreement are absurd and iniquitous in another point, they cannot be approved of by the Dominion Government and this Parliament. In 1882, when the Nova Scotia Government made a bargain with the Dominion Government to ratify their legislation to complete the road, there was this clause inserted in the Act, that it must be approved of by the Western Counties Railway Company and the bondholders. It has not been approved of by the railway company, the bondholders or the municipalities. Hence the Government cannot assent to it, unless they pass some legislation more favorable to this scheme than the last. During the first stages of this debate, on the 29th of May, the hon. Finance Minister made these observations:

"My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Kinney) thinks otherwise, that it cannot be done without doing great injustice to the municipality of Yarmouth and the Western Counties Railway.

"Mr. VAIL. The municipality of Yarmouth has no objection."

This, coming from a gentleman occupying the position the hon. member for Digby does, may seem to some to have a semblance of truth in it; but I wish to state that I have the honor of representing the municipality of Yarmouth at the board as a director.

Mr. VAIL. Not now.

Mr. KINNEY. Yes, I do now. That is a queer statement for the hon. gentleman to make. Under the Act by which the Western Counties Railway was incorporated, one of the provisions was that if a municipality had stock in the railway, it should have a representative at the board, and I represent Yarmouth to-day; and that county has unanimously instructed me, as its representative at the board, to protest against the provisions of this Bill; and the assertion of the hon. member for Digby that the municipality does not object to it is very much out of place, to say the least of it. It does object to it most strongly for various reasons, the most important of which is that it is taking away $100,000 from it, and not giving it a dollar in return. Why would they not object?

Mr. VAIL. They have not taken a dollar of it. The hon. member does not understand the Bill.

Mr. KINNEY. The hon member for Digby (Mr. Vail) says I do not understand the Bill. I should be pleased to take a lesson from him in the history of the Western Counties Railway, and, I venture to say, in five minutes he will not understand what he is talking about, and, worse than that, nobody else will, for he has not the slightest idea of the whole thing. The hon. member was Premier of Nova Scotia when that company was incorporated, and, I venture to say, he knows as much about it now as he did then. I do not wish to be personal in my observations, but I trust that any gentleman who is constantly opening his mouth and putting his foot in it, will not attempt to show that he knows more about what I am talking about than I do myself. I would say further that, in addition to all the attempts to rob the Western Counties Railway Company of their property, there is a document which has been sent around among the members of this House signed "R. Gervase Elwes, M. Inst. C. E.," and "C. A. Scott," with the like title, in which members of this House are threatened, on behalf of the Province of Nova Scotia, as to what the Province of Nova Scotia will do. They assume to be delegated, not only by their joint-stock company and themselves, but by the Province of Nova Scotia, to threaten members of this House that, if certain things are not carried out, they will go back and take possession of the road. And they make another statement in this memorial or threat to the House of Commons, in which they say that the Government of Nova Scotia have fixed no price which may be paid for the Western Counties Railway property. True, they have not fixed the price, but they have fixed a limit to which it can be paid. They say in the Bill of incorporation, section 31, subsection d:

"They shall pay such sum, if any, as may be agreed upon between the Government and the company, not exceeding $120,000 for the acquisition of the Western Counties Railway, if such railway be so acquired."

These two parties who are threatening the members of this House with what the Government of Nova Scotia are going to do, state that the Province of Nova Scotia does not fix the sum. Here they fix the limit at $120,000, if anything—not more. Not only that, but they provide that out of that amount $40,000 shall be paid for some other liabilities. The history of this railway enterprise is such that, were it earlier in the Session, a whole afternoon might be employed in trying to tell its story, but it is so late in the Session that I will not touch it from a Provincial standpoint, or I could show the indebtedness in which it is attempted to involve the Province of Nova Scotia, at the same time that the Province is appealing for better terms and wishing to make its financial position better. If any hon. gentleman went into this, he would find that the debt which is intended to be saddled on Nova Scotia is larger than that Province is capable of bearing, and, while I claim that the Bill is not perfect, at the same time I have a very strong hope that the Government of Canada will not allow our rights to be bartered away for nothing, will not allow the municipality of Yarmouth, which has invested $100,000 in this enterprise to lose it without any compensation, and will not allow any joint stock company or any other corporation in London or in any other place to come here and take ninety-nine miles of running railway for $565 a mile.

Mr. VAIL. I am not disposed to take up the time of the committee, but, after the extraordinary speech of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Kinney), it seems necessary that I should say a few words in reply. I think the House has been very kind to him in allowing him to make this speech, seeing that the Bill is not in connection with the Western Counties Railway, and, in fact, I fail to see what this House has to do at all with the action of the Local Government in their arrangement with a certain company to complete the Western Counties Railway. The hon. member in the first place referred to the action of the Dominion Government in 1873, when they passed an Order in Council authorising the transfer of the Windsor branch to any company that would complete the road from Annapolis to Yarmouth. That Order in Council was not acted upon at the time, but, after the Mackenzie Government came in, they passed an Act authorising the transfer in accordance with the Order in Council passed by the Government of which the present First Minister was Premier. The transfer of that road was made to the Western Counties Railway Company with the view of assisting them to complete the road, and they held that road until the present Government came into power again in 1878, notwithstanding that they had not carried out their contract; and the present Government, in view, as they considered, of having done wrong in passing the Order in Council in the first place, and in view of the claims of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, thought proper to take it out of the hands of the Western Counties Railway people and place it back in the hands of the Windsor and Annapolis people. If my hon. friend from Yarmouth has been finding fault with the present Government and stating that, in consequence of their action, the Western Counties Railway people had not been able to complete their contract, I could have understood him, but why should he blame the Nova Scotia Government for the action they have recently taken with the sole view of getting that road completed which has been in an unfinished state for seven years through the inability of the Western Counties people to perform their contract? He has stated again in his speech that the Western Counties Railway people offered to complete the road and proposed a better arrangement than the present company have, but what confidence could the Nova Scotia Government have in them when they could not complete their first contract and left the road in an unfinished state for seven years, notwithstanding that, in order to assist them, the Local Government have loaned them money from time to time, until they have now a debt of $300,000 and a claim against the company for the amount which they have advanced to assist them in the completion of the road. The hon. member for Yarmouth has referred again to an arrangement made with the Digby and Annapolis, whereby the Western Counties became responsible to pay that railway damages for the time a portion of road which they had failed to complete was in an unfinished state, that is for the right of way. The Government of Nova Scotia have carried out the arrangement made by the present Minister of Justice, when he was Attorney General of Nova Scotia. It was he who made the agreement and bound the Western Counties to pay this amount of money till the road was completed. Why should the member for Yarmouth find fault with the Local Government for carrying out the agreement entered into by the present Minister of Justice? I give the Minister of Justice credit for having insisted on their making themselves liable for the payment of this amount, but they have never paid a dollar of it; they have never paid anything they agreed to pay. They borrowed money, and they have not paid interest on it, not even the small amount for which they were liable to the counties for land damages. And yet the member for Yarmouth asks the Dominion Government to step in and occupy a position which I contend they have no right to occupy, that is, to insist upon certain rights, which, if they had any in the western road, are fully protected. In fact, the company which proposes to build the road is made up of the president and another prominent Yarmouth gentleman, besides some four or five in Halifax, who are directors or incorporators of this very company. I do not see why the hon. member should make these charges against this company. I venture to say that Mr. McLean, of Halifax, and Mr. Fuller, of Halifax, and Mr. Burns, of Halifax, and Mr. Esson, of Halifax, and a number of other responsible men who are connected with this company whom I could name, are as responsible men as we have in Nova Scotia. Mr. Baker, of Yarmouth, the president at that time of the Western Counties Railway, and Jacob Bingory, of Yarmouth, two of the leading men of that town and amongst the most respectable and honorable men of Yarmouth—surely my hon. friend does not want to cast reflections upon them? Mr. Jacob Bingory was one of his own supporters, and I fancy was a good friend to him at the time of the last election. My hon. friend has referred to the amount that is due the county of Yarmouth, for the $100,000 stock they took in this railway. Let me tell him that the county of Yarmouth is fully protected; in fact, their position is improved. They loaned their stock in the new road, and it will be worth more in the new company than it was in the old. Besides that, the Yarmouth people never took stock in that road with a view of getting their money back again, but with the object of encouraging the company to build a road, because they expected to benefit by having the terminus at Yarmouth. I have letters from Yarmouth informing me that nine out of every ten men are anxious that this railway should go on, that the Dominion Government should give the president of the company every assistance to enable him to go on and build the road, but for some reason which I do not understand the hon. member for Yarmouth opposes it. I know very well that he is not acting in the interest of his own friends in Yarmouth when he proposes to throw obstacles in the way of the completion of this work. I know nothing about the present company. It is enough for me to know that the gentlemen who are associated in this undertaking are men of the highest respectability, and who are quite able to finish the link themselves without asking a dollar from anybody. I think the hon. gentleman might allow a company of that kind to go on and build a work so necessary to his own county, to the western part of Nova Scotia, and, in fact, to the interests of Nova Scotia as a whole. I cannot understand the action of the hon. member. I am surprised at the course he has taken to-day, and I am sure it will not result either to his credit as a member representing Yarmouth nor to the interests of his county.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) fails to understand what connection the Dominion Government has with the legislation of Nova Scotia with regard to the Western Counties Railway. The connection is this: That the Local Government has sought the co-operation of the Dominion Government in this scheme, and if this scheme is not in the interests of the people, I hold it should not be sanctioned either by this Government or by the Legislature of Nova Scotia. There are some reasons in addition to those which have been brought forward by the hon. member for Yarmouth, why this measure does not meet the approval of the people of Nova Scotia. It does not contain equitable provisions for the completion of that line of railway. I think the Bill is not generally known in Nova Scotia, but only to the supporters of the Local Government in this House. The members supporting the Dominion Government have not been favorable to the Bill. I had a few hours perusal of the Bill on Saturday, and an examination of it convinces me that it is a measure which should not be entertained by the Government of Canada. In the first place it imposes on Nova Scotia a liability of $100,000 a year (after allowing for deposit) on the security of the net earnings of the line. The company in addition to that demands the free ownership of the Windsor branch, which cost about $1,500,000, also the Dominion subsidy of $64,000. The Western Counties Railway is to be handed over for not more than $120,000 out of funds raised on the guarantee of Nova Scotia—a railway which cost Yarmouth and the local and foreign investors over a million dollars. The guarantee should realise for the company at least two millions, or two millions and a half, over and above the deposit which has been placed with the Government as security for the guarantee. The company do not require to pay a dollar of their own means. And after all this large outlay, what is the company to do for these concessions, and this burden of $100,000, possibly for twenty years to fall on Nova Scotia, whose resources are already taxed to their utmost? What does that company propose to accomplish? It is only bound to build the Digby gap, eighteen miles of railway, and equip the line; there is no further obligation for all this vast expenditure of money. The company is not required to build some four other branches which are allowed. There is a provision made to complete the Nictaux line—only to lease or acquire it, at the option of the company. These I think are enormous concessions for such meagre results. I do not say that the provisions are not ample to complete the line, if they were equitable. It would be idle to say that such enormous subsidies should not complete eighteen miles of railway, but in view of the representations made by the hon. member for Yarmouth and the equities involved in the case, and the heavy liabilities that it is proposed to impose on the Province of Nova Scotia to secure such meagre results, I think it is the duty of the Government to look very closely into this matter and to deal equitably with the company, and if the measure should fail in the accomplishment of the railway this year, the Dominion Government may deal with the Western Counties Railway hereafter in such a way as that the missing link may be completed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish to state in answer to some questions of the leader of the Opposition, who I see is not in the House, that the amount of subsidies granted by Parliament was $5,587,500; the amount paid out of them was $1,130,33?; balance unpaid on roads under contract, $2,847,668; unpaid on roads not yet under contract, $1,609,700, leaving a balance unpaid of $4,457,368. In this sum the vote for the Chignecto Railway is not included, nor the subsidy to the Gravenhurst Road, nor that of the St. John Bridge in Nova Scotia.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand that the sum unpaid on roads already commenced is $2,847,000? Those amounts will be used on the roads that are under construction?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Most likely.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And we are liable for the $1,130,000 already paid, and the $2,847,000 unpaid on roads that are commenced?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), moved the second reading of Bill (No. 147) to authorise the granting of certain subsidies of land for the construction of the railways therein mentioned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A statement was also promised in this case.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman asked for statements as to the amount of land granted to the different railway companies. The quantities are as follows: Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 18,000,000 acres; Manitoba and North-Western, 2,722,000 acres; for the extension provided in this Bill, 166,400 acres; Manitoba and South-Western, 972,000 acres; North-West Central, 2,880,000 acres; North-West Coal and Navigation Company, 414,200 acres; Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Company, 128,000 acres; Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Steamboat and Navigation Company, 8,500,000 acres; Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle, 1,536,000 acres;—total, 34,948,600 acres.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Is the grant to the North Western Company included in the statement?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Has the North-Western Railway Company completed its engagement made in the Bill. That engagement expires to-day, I believe?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The North-West Central, so far as I know, has not yet completed its engagement. The company has to-day in which to complete it; they have not yet given satisfactory security to the Government. I propose, in obedience to the suggestion made to the House, to add a clause empowering the Government to incorporate another company for the purpose of building that railway.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. EDGAR. Before this clause is passed, some information has reached me which I think I should communicate to the House. The information comes to me by mail, and it appears to be genuine, and it is of such a character that I think it ought to be laid before the House at this stage of this Bill. It comprises two statutory declarations, and in them there are some allegations in which the name of the Minister of the Interior is introduced. But I want to say at once that there is nothing in these declarations, although the name of the hon. gentleman is referred to in them, which warrants me in making any charge against the hon. Minister. His name was used apparently by an hon. member of this House, and, I have no doubt, without any warrant whatever. The hon. gentleman took office on 5th August, and an Order in Council relating to this railway was passed on 14th August, extending the time for its completion, and reducing the miles to be built within a certain time from fifty to twenty-three, and I suppose that Order in Council is what is referred to. But while I do not think there is anything in this information to which any weight should be attached as affecting the Minister of the Interior, I cannot help feeling that these two declarations show that another hon. member of this House, who is prominent in connection with this company, as its president I believe, and who has, until this day expires, an opportunity of getting control of this land grant, so acted that the Government should pause before they think of entrusting the construction of the railway and the grant of land to that gentleman either under the charter as it is extended or under the new charter which it is proposed to create. The first document is a declaration headed "In the matter of the North-Western Central Railway and James Beaty, M. P." It is a declaration by David M. McConachie, of the city of Hamilton and is as follows:—

"I, David McConachie, of the city of Hamilton, in the Province of Ontario, do solemnly declare that at the time I saw James Beaty, M.P., at Toronto, in the month of September, A. D. 1885, for the purpose of negotiating for the contract to build the North-West Central Railway, and proposed to deposit the sum of $125,000 in the Canadian Bank of Commerce, as stated in my letter to D. B. Woodworth, M.P., and read by him before Committee of the House of Commons, he, the said James Beaty, repeated the expression: 'But you see there is nothing in it for the boy,' too often to be easily forgotten. And that in reply to my question in reference to his certainty of being able to get the charter extended and also the time for the completion of the first fifty miles, he said: 'In the event of your obtaining the contract and building the road you need have no fear; the new Minister of the Interior is my intimate friend, and I have only to ask and what I want in that way will not be refused.' And that the said James Beaty also then referred to his power in the House, he having so many friends among the members. These expressions he volunteered as an inducement for me to agree to his terms. And further, during said conversation he, the said James Beaty, said that it would be desirable to give the Hon. Thomas White, the Minister of the Interior the sum of $100,000, part of the said sum of $15,000 per mile which he claimed. And said James Beaty justified said payment to the hon. Minister of the Interior upon the grounds that said Minister had renewed the land grant in this matter voluntarily and without waiting for Parliament to meet.

"And that said James Beaty further stated at said interview that after payment of said $100,000, and after other members of the House associated with him in this matter were 'shared with,' his portion of the $675,000 would be small, considering his personal time given and means spent in furthering the project.

"Made and subscribed before me at the city of Hamilton this 31st day of May, A.D. 1886. "JAMES OSBORNE, J.P." } "D. McCONACHIE.

An hon. MEMBER. Anything further?

Mr. EDGAR. Yes; there is one from Edward Anderson Craig Pew as follows:—

"I, Edward Anderson Craig Pew, of the town of Welland, in the county of Welland, do solemnly declare:

"That I was present when the interview took place between James Beaty, M. P., and David McConachie, Esq., in the office of the former in the city of Toronto, in the month of September, 1885.

"That I heard said James Beaty then say, after reading over the proposition of said David McConachie to build the North-West Central Railway, that 'there is nothing in it for the boy.'

"That during the conversation which followed at said time the said James Beaty stated that he would have to pay a large sum of money out of the $15,000 per mile which he demanded for giving the said contract, to wit, the sum of $100,000 to the Hon. Thos. White, Minister of the Interior.

"That said James Beaty then also stated that the new Minister of the Interior was a particular friend of his, and would do anything that he asked of him. And to make this apparent to Mr. McConachie, he cited as an instance that Hon. Mr. White had only a few weeks previously renewed the land grant to the said company, which had lapsed on account of the company failing to comply with the terms of the Order in Council granting the same. And further said James Beaty then also stated that it would be desirable to have the Minister who controlled the land department favorable to the interest of the company, as it might be necessary for the company to ask further favors in the future.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign, intituled: 'An Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths.'

"Made and subscribed before me at Welland, in the county of Welland, this 28th day of May, A.D. 1886. "J. P. WILSON, J.P." } "E. A. C. PEW.

Now, Mr. Chairman, those declarations seem to be very clear as to the extraordinary notion which the hon. member for West Toronto had as to what his duties as a member of Parliament and a supporter of the Minister of the Interior were. He certainly does not say or suggest that the Minister of the Interior even asked for $100,000, but he suggests that it would be a very good thing to give him it, and he accounts in that way, and also for thinking it desirable to distribute the money among other members, for what he was to do with the $675,000 which he seemed to think was to be had out of that enterprise. I think, at any rate, with this and with what has occurred before—what has been stated in the committees of this House by his fellow members of this House, that these documents will certainly make the Government hesitate a long time before they will grant public lands to a company presided over by that hon. gentleman.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I quite appreciate the wisdom of the hon. gentleman in saying at the outset of his remarks that there was nothing in these affidavits affecting me. What these men may have said or may not have said is a matter of little consequence; but I am bound to say that I would require better testimony than the oath of either of them, one the employee of the other, before believing any statement they made with regard to any hon. gentleman in this House.

Mr. BLAKE. With regard to this clause, it was understood that the hon. gentleman would explain what steps the Government were going to take in fulfilment of the pledge made in the Railway Committee.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I intend to move a clause giving power to incorporate a company to carry out this work.

On section 5,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I beg leave to move the following as the 5th clause of the Bill:—

And whereas it may be necessary for the construction of the railway in respect of which the granting of a subsidy is authorised by the second section of this Act, that a company should be incorporated with the powers requisite for such construction, and for making financial arrangements for the purposes thereof; therefore it is hereby enacted as follows:

For the purpose of incorporating the persons undertaking the construction of the said railway, or of a railway from a point on the Manitoba and North-Western viâ Rapid City, westward, and for the incorporation of those who shall be associated with them in the undertaking; the Governor in Council may grant to them, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter conferring upon them the franchises, privileges and powers requisite for the said purposes, which shall be similar to such of the franchises, privileges and powers granted to railway companies during the present Session, as the Government shall deem most useful or appropriate to the said undertaking; and such charter, being published in the Canada Gazette with any Order or Orders in Council relating to it, shall have force and effect as if it were an Act of Parliament: Provided always that in the event of a company being so incorporated, it shall be provided in the charter that such company shall be subject to all the present legal obligations of the North-West Central Railway Company in relation to the said railway.

That proviso was put in to protect the interests of the people who have been working on the road.

Mr. BLAKE. I would merely say that I repeat the observations I made, with reference to the exceptional character of this legislation, on the Bill which preceded this one. I think it would have been better to have introduced a separate Bill, and I think the legislation is in itself of an objectionable character.

Mr. WATSON. Can the company, under these powers, start the road from any other point than Brandon?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not know. I fancy if they can supply that section of country in any other way, and cannot get a company immediately to go through Brandon, we would be consulting the interests of the country by incorporating a company to cover the ground. The great object is, of course, to give railway facilities to the people of that district.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but they may be restricted, because the Bill mentions "a railway for the whole distance from Brandon to Battleford."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, of course, if a new company were incorporated it would be incorporated in the lines of this one. But if we fail to make arrangements with a company, and the Manitoba and North-Western have a charter which would enable them to do the work, we might give that company the grant.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think, under this clause, it would be competent for the hon. gentleman to give to any other railway company a grant for any other railway than a line from Brandon to Battleford. That is the clear interpretation of the clause, so that if the hon. gentleman wants more powers, he had better take them.

Mr. HESSON. A railway from Brandon is exactly what is required, and I am surprised that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) should object to having a provision for starting the road from that point. It will serve that part of the country, which has petitioned for railway accommodation. I have been over the ground and I know every rod of it, and I hope the Government will adhere to that provision.

Mr. WATSON. If some provision were inserted in this Bill giving the Government power to make this land grant to a company that would afford railway facilities to Rapid City and to the country west of that point, it would be satisfactory. I want to see the road built; but clause 2 of this Bill does not authorise the Government to give a land grant to any company except a company building from Brandon. If that company should fail, and it should be impossible to get another company, I believe the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company are prepared to build this road.

Mr. MITCHELL. The objection I have to this section of the Bill is this: We have had a great deal of discussion in relation to this North-West Central Railway Company and the parties who have been promoting it in this House. There has been a great deal of discussion in the press and throughout the country about it, and it has aroused a great deal of unpleasant feeling in the public mind. The decision of the Government was to put through the Bill, and allow the promoters until the 1st day of June to place in the hands of the Government such assurance as would satisfy them that they were prepared bonâ fide to carry out the work. We are informed by the Minister of the Interior that those assurances meant a deposit of $50,000. Now, Sir, this is the evening of the last day on which those gentlemen had the privilege of depositing that money with the Government, and it strikes me as very singular that we should provide in the second section of this Bill:

"The Governor in Council may grant to the North-West Central Railway Company or to such other company as may undertake the construction of the railway, Dominion lands to the extent of 6,400 acres for each mile of the company's railway."

Why should we grant a land subsidy to a company which is practically defunct? I think it would be giving an endorsation to the course pursued in relation to this matter, and therefore I most decidedly object to that section of the Bill. I want to see the bonus given for the purpose of having that road built; I want it put into hands that are clean, and that the public is satisfied are able to build the work. But afterthe exposures which have been made, I do not want to see an Act of Parliament passed granting 6,400 acres a mile to that very company, and I think the Government should alter that clause or let it stand till this evening, in order to see whether the money has been paid up or not.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will see that the Bill cannot take its third reading to-day, and by to-morrow we shall know whether the money has been paid or not; and then, if it has not been paid, we can strike out the provision making a grant to the North-West Central Railway Company, because then it will be at an end.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think these words inserted after the words "company's railway," would probably meet the case: "Or a railway along the same route from Rapid City westward, but with different termini from those provided in relation to the railway hereinbefore referred to and for the incorporation of those associated with them in the undertaking."

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman explain the object of saying different termini? Does he propose to alter the westerly terminus? Because we have Battleford stated. If all you want to do is to provide that the railway shall go from Rapid City along the same route, there is no need of making any alteration with regard to the westerly terminus. I would suggest the wording be "a railway from a point on the North-West Central, vid Rapid City along the same route."

Mr. HESSON. I hope this committee will not give Brandon the go-by altogether.

Mr. BLAKE. I would be very sorry we should take away the chances of Brandon or any other place. The object is, inasmuch as it is not known what road can be arranged with to do this, to give a larger latitude to the Government. If the Government can make it one way it will do so; if it cannot, it will do it the other way. There is nothing in the clause which will prevent the Government carrying out the scheme of giving it from Brandon to Battleford.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We are in this position, that the company incorporated for the construction of the railway have not yet got their title to be permitted to go on with the railway. If they fail, it becomes our duty to arrange some other means to build the line, and we take power to incorporate a company to build the railway exactly on the line proposed. We want to supply the country with railway facilities, and we take power to start from a point on the Manitoba and North-Western instead of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but if we can get a company to go from Brandon we will do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the gentleman connected with the promotion of this company fails to-night to put up the money, when the Government issue a new charter to any other gentlemen—they should exclude all the names on the present charter, which has created so much scandal.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Parliament has decided this road should start from Brandon and go vid Rapid City to Battleford. I can hardly understand therefore how we can alter that, and build the road from another point entirely, not touching Brandon.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Parliament did not particularly decide that Brandon should be the starting point. Brandon was decided upon in the Order in Council. The Government refused to give a land grant to a line starting from Melbourne, on the ground that fifty miles of the railway would run through a district already supplied with railway facilities. The one thing that is important is that the people of Rapid City and Battleford should be supplied with railway communication, and in case the company which has the charter to build from Brandon should fail to carry out the preliminary conditions, we want to take an alternative plan, because we know that the Manitoba and North-Western have expressed their willingness to construct this railway from the north. Therefore, if we fail to build the road from Brandon, we will be still able to supply this country with railway facilities.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The contractors will build railways where it suits them best, where there are less coulées to cross and bridges to make. Brandon, everybody knows, is the point west of Winnipeg which is bound to become a rival city to Winnipeg. The two cities of the North-West are Winnipeg and Brandon.

Mr. WATSON. What about Portage?

Mr. MITCHELL. They send a representative.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It is however only, as the name signifies, a portage, a nice quiet little place, and it sends a good, sturdy, vigorous representative here; but Brandon is destined by nature to be a centre. Portage, even if it had the natural facilities, is too near Winnipeg ever to become a very great city. But the other city, some eighty miles west of Portage, is enabled by its distance from Winnipeg to be a city, with the natural advantages it has got, and any one who has visited the city of Brandon knows that its location is most beautiful to behold, that its situation is there by nature, with a drainage that is unsurpassed, with water as fine as you can find in the North-West, and with a fertile country north, south, east and west, all round it, pouring into the city of Brandon its grain; and there are three elevators there now—I do not know if there are not four.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Five.

Mr. WOODWORTH. There are five elevators now in the city of Brandon, showing in its infant state, what the country is around it. And now it is proposed to strike this off when it has petitioned Parliament, when it has sent petition after petition, and when it has been the will of Parliament, when it has been expressed by the Government that they should start from Brandon, when the Minister of Railways, when asked the question by my hon. friend from Marquette, said they would start from the city of Brandon; and now they say the road may be built, because the Manitoba and North-Western has sent a written communication here—the Minister of Interior says he does not know whether it was written or not—to tap the Manitoba and North-Western, and clear away back through to Rapid City or to anywhere else, in space, into that infinite space, leaving Brandon, the real point of starting and the real city of the North-West, out in the cold. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior certainly does not wish to create any more dissatisfaction in that country, and their minds resting upon that—when the news goes to them that they are to be shut out, it is making an unnecessary grievance in the North-West or in the Province of Manitoba, and it will be a grievance that will not be easily allayed. It is unnecessary to make this grievance, to tell Parliament now that the contractors can build a railway somewhere else, and leave a great gap, and leave Brandon out in the cold and unconnected. A railway charter was asked this winter, to extend from Brandon towards Devil's Lake in Dakota, tapping the south, and with this railway running to the North-West, it makes Brandon what it is designed to be, a great centre, a great grain centre, and I hope and believe it will be a great manufacturing centre. Why alienate the affections and destroy and blast the hopes of that city and the surrounding country merely because we are experimenting in legislation? It really seems to me a most unnecessary departure. I can see no reason for it. I do not see what representations have changed the minds of the Government. Having visited that country, I know something about its inhabitants. The Minister of the Interior has been over it, and he knows how excitable they are, how tenacious they are of any existing rights, and to take this, which they hoped and prayed for and expected and were promised, away in this manner will cause more heart burnings and discontent than the expenditure of $500,000 will allay.

Mr. WATSON. I think the hon. member is mistaken as to the intentions of the Government and the House. I think this is intended to afford the farming community the railway facilities which they need. Brandon had no hope of being the starting point a year ago. Melbourne was to be the starting point then.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It was two years ago.

Mr. WATSON. Well, two years ago. Melbourne had the promise. Why disappoint Melbourne? I understand the object of the Government is to give a land grant to any company which will afford railway facilities to Rapid City and the west. Brandon has railway facilities to-day, and, while we all know who have visited that city that it is a very fine place, I do not see why other places are not to be considered as well. If this road is tapped on the Manitoba and North-Western, this trade will flow into what the hon. gentleman calls this little town half-way between Winnipeg and Brandon, Portage la Prairie. The great object is to afford the farming community the facilities they need, and to develop that country which has been without railway communication so long. I do not wish to say anything against Brandon or for the Portage in preference to Brandon, but I think the Government ought to have it in their power to grant any company, that will undertake the work, the land, and that is why I suggest that such a change should be made that the Government should have the power to give the grant to the Manitoba and North-Western or any other company.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The cat is out of the bag at last. The hon. member has made a frank confession. He lives in Portage la Prairie. That is his home. The Manitoba and North-Western runs from there. He wants to bring the trade, to bring the grain down to Portage la Prairie, and that, he thinks, is a capital object—Portage la Prairie, situated sixty miles west of Winnipeg.

Mr. HESSON. On a side track.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Yes; and, without making any disparagement to that little town, everyone knows it is not the healthiest place to live in. There are swales there. where—I will not say beasts of midnight howl, and the sad raven finds her haunts and there the screaming owl, but there are sloughs back of that which, if it were not for the strong constitution of the hon. gentleman, would carry him off with diphtheria in three weeks.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, no.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I have been there, and I know it. There are portions of Portage la Prairie where there is good, fine, hard land, and I have no doubt he has pitched his tent there, with the wisdom born of experience and sagacity and personal protection; but back of him is that slough where the green on the top of the water speaks of lizards and all crawling reptiles and things—yes, and they have not got it drained yet; they cannot get it drained, and it will require a good deal of provincial money to be spent before it is drained. But there is that bit of good land where good looking people like the hon. member stay, and where the Manitoba North-Western goes, and he wants to bring the grain of the North-West down there and leave Brandon out in the cold. I am surprised that the Government have not seen the trick before, and that they will now, for the purpose of giving little Portage la Prairie, sixty miles west of Winnipeg, this little advantage, destroy the hopes and expectations, and not fulfil the promises which have been kept at least to the ear, but are now being broken to the hope, of giving Brandon the point of departure. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) knows that his own paper, the paper on his own side of politics, the Brandon Sun, he knows that all the papers of the west, not leaving out his own paper of Portage la Prairie, have stated over and over again that Brandon was destined to be the great railway centre of the North-West. It is contiguous to the Souris coal fields, and, if it were not, it has Medicine Hat a little distance beyond, with millions of tons of coal. It is destined to be a manufacturing place, and its agricultural capabilities are unsurpassed in the North-West. I spoke of its location, its sightliness, and its position, sitting on a hill that cannot be hid, and, in spite of those natural advantages which have been placed there by the great Architect of the Universe, the hon. gentleman says, reverse all this to little Portage la Prairie, and force, like forcing a root out of dry ground, force a fictitious position on Portage la Prairie by giving it this road. It is the most monstrous proposition I ever heard. I know my hon. friend from West Durham is ready to rise. He is true as steel to his friend from Marquette, and I like to see that. When he sees a friend in difficulties, he sticks to him. He wants to help his friend. He has not been there. He has not heard the frogs croak and seen the lizards crawl.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not necessary to go there for that.

Mr. WOODWORTH. He knows nothing about the locality. All he knows is that his friend for Marquette has property there, that the Manitoba and North-Western goes from and to there, and that, if they tap this up near Rapid City and leave Brandon out, they will get the grant and it will help the member for Marquette. Well, I do not know, but I would almost do something if I were in the member for West Durham's place, but while he does that, Parliament ought to see that that little bond of affinity and connection between the gentlemen, is not effected.

Mr. BLAKE. I was anxious before to rise in order to point out to the hon. gentleman and to the committee an argument in his favor more potent than any argument he has addressed to the committee. Having regard to the temper of this Parliament and Government, I consider the most potent argument that could be addressed to the committee against the proposal of the hon. member for Marquette and in favor of the views of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), is that the proposal of my hon. friend from Marquette was to deprive the Canadian Pacific Railway of ninety miles of the freight from the west, and the stuff it carries down to Rapid City. If it goes to Minnedosa it will come down on the Manitoba and North-Western—Portage la Prairie, if it comes south it will go on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Are we going to bleed the Canadian Pacific Railway to that extent?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). There is no reason why you should not help the Canadian Pacific Railway with ninety miles of freight carriage when you are at the same time helping the farmers by a saving on the freight for 400 miles. The great objection to the amendment is that starting from Rapid City and connecting with the North-Western road, will deprive the people between the two roads of competition in freight. It is in the interest of the farmers in that fertile belt lying between the North-Western and the Canadian Pacific Railway, to have an independent outlet. They should be able to choose on one side between the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, and the North-Western on the other side, and if you tie that city to the North-Western, the North-Western has control of the whole of the carrying trade.

Mr. HESSON. I have had the honor of presenting numerous petitions in this House, and I received numerous letters from that part of the country and from Rapid City south, and I am satisfied that none of the settlers would be content with the change that it is now proposed to make in this land grant. The intention of the people was that they might have connection with the main line, and that Brandon might be the point. Now, I hope the House will not depart from that view. The hon. member for Marquette is certainly wise in his generation. Considering where he owns this property, and the people that he lives amongst, I think he is perfectly right, but I trust the House will not agree with his proposition. The only interest this House has to consider is the interest of the people who have petitioned for the construction of that road, and they have never asked this House to give them communication from Rapid City to Winnipeg, diverting the trade out of its regular course, and depriving them of the competition that would be afforded by connection with the other line. I have no doubt that in due time connection will be made with Rapid City by the Manitoba and North-Western. In the meantime I am convinced that the people of Rapid City are most anxious that connection should be made with Brandon. Now, as has been said, Brandon is certainly the most promising city west of Winnipeg. There is no more beautiful place to locate a city. If we give it a fair chance it is sure to become very prosperous in a very short time. It would be disastrous, and make the people feel discontented, if the Government should now alter all its previous plans and views in reference to the construction of this road. I protest against it and hope the Government will not make the change. Even if the present corporation fail to carry out their intention and construct that road, or failed to make their deposit, I cannot see why it should not be built by some other company, and that within the time specified by the conditions. I feel that can be done, and that it will be done, if this company fails to take up and complete the work. It will be a mistake and create discontent to alter the whole of the arrangements and make a new starting point elsewhere than at Brandon.

Mr. TROW. The change contemplated by the Government in my estimation is a proper one. I never could see why the road should start from Brandon simply because they had the Manitoba Southern. I have been in Brandon, probably, as often as my hon. friend, and can speak with as much knowledge of its wants. I am sorry that hon. gentlemen on either side of the House should decry their country. I have been in Portage la Prairie, and I consider it is the garden of that country.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I did not decry the country. I spoke of a certain slough which the hon. member for Marquette knows.

Mr. TROW. I know parties who have been residing there for the last twenty years, and I never heard that malaria was prevalent. It is true that there is want of water communication, but there is no green slime, that my hon. friend pictured out. I am surprised that my hon. friend who has been in that country frequently, should try, as he has done, to keep settlers from going into that great country by making such rash and unguarded statements.

Mr. WOODWORTH. My hon. friend and his friends behind him, ever since I have been in Parliament, have been speaking about the bad land in that country, and because I spoke of a single slough near a little town they think it is a most unpatriotic thing. No doubt, the hon. member for Marquette has listened to the songs of the frogs there day after day and night after night, and he knows all about the slough, and when I mentioned it, behold the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) lifts his hands in holy horror and says I am decrying the country, but this slough is in a place where nobody can live.

Mr. WATSON. No, no.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Of course the people build their houses on dry land away from this slough, but it extends nearly the whole length of the city of Portage la Prairie. There are two parts of Portage la Prairie, an east and west end, and the slough extends along the side of it at both ends. I know that contractors have been ready to build this road from where the Government stated first by Orders in Council. I stated in the Committee of Railways and Canals that I knew of railway companies who are ready and willing to build this road and start from the city of Brandon. I say they are ready and willing to-night to build this road and start from Brandon, and that being the fact, I do not see why the Government at the last hour should come forward with this proposition. I am surprised, I had no intimation of this departure, and I think it is a very great mistake.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am responsible myself for the drafting of the clause, and I had an impression that we had the power under this clause to incorporate a company that would in less than two years, supply that country with railway facilities. It must be remembered that we are not giving the railway grants to Brandon. I have very pleasant recollections of Brandon and its people, and I would not be willing to do an injury to one or the other; but the grant of land is not given to the city of Brandon, it is for a line running from the district of Rapid City westward, between that point and Battleford. There are no claims on the part of Brandon, no possible claim, or on the part of any other place, and the people cannot be disappointed if the railway does not happen to go that way. There is no suggestion that the railway should go from any other place than Brandon. This road has been asked by the people of the North-West, and they have not yet succeeded in obtaining it. We have had a number of statements made that there were contractors ready to undertake the road; but unfortunately the road has not yet been undertaken, except, so far as regards the first fifty miles, where there was some grading done. All we propose is simply that we shall have alternative powers, so that if we do not find a company really able to give us the assurance that they possess the means to carry out the work, starting from Brandon westward, we shall not be tied up and the people of the North-West deprived for another year of railway facilities, but we shall be able to make arrangements with other people who are able to supply the country with these railway facilities. That is the only question. If what the hon. gentleman said is true—I hope it is true and I have no reason or right to doubt it—that there is a company prepared at once to offer the Government satisfactory security to justify their being incorporated and given the land grant to build the road on the old line, the chances are altogether in favor of such company getting the work, because those are the terms of the charter. But if it should turn out that there is no such company, we simply provide against a contingency by obtaining the right to incorporate another company so as to supply the people of the North-West with those railway facilities. I ought to say with respect to Portage la Prairie, that if the railway is built from the north, it will not go from that town, but about eighty miles west, more likely from Minnedosa. Portage la Prairie will not derive any advantage from it. Brandon will do so, because it will be the point of junction with the Canadian Pacific Railway. But this is not a matter of rivalry between Portage la Prairie and Brandon, but it is simply a question of getting a railway built through that part of the country, and providing those railway facilities which the people have asked for and which Parliament has decided to assist in providing.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Does the hon. Minister deny that the point of junction would be the same at Portage la Prairie, where the Minnedosa and North-Western strikes the Canadian Pacific Railway, as at Brandon? The junction will be just the same. There can be no doubt that the through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be reached at Brandon just the same as at Portage.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to contradict some statements made by the hon. member from King's, N. S. (Mr. Woodworth) about the section of country round Portage la Prairie. Every gentleman who has ever travelled through the country knows that the statements made by the hon. member for King's are not true, and that so far as that section of the country is concerned it is one of the finest sections, and is admitted to be so, in the whole North-West.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Did I understand the hon. Minister to say that if there is a company ready to build this road starting from Brandon it will have that privilege?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask me to answer the question. Parliament has incorporated a company to build a railway from Brandon vid Rapid City westward. A land grant has been given by Parliament for the purpose of assisting the enterprise. It is the wish of Parliament that such a road should be built, and the Government may fairly be trusted to carry out the wishes of Parliament.

Committee rose and reported.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The third reading should not be taken until to-morrow, by which time we shall know whether the North-West Central Railway Company is really in existence; and if it is not, some changes in the Bill might become necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is desirable that we should see whether the promoter of the Bill is able to carry out the arrangements or not. If he is not, I hope the Minister of the Interior will strike off the name of the company from the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is really no necessity for any amendment in such an event, because under this Act the charter would lapse.

Mr. MITCHELL. It would be a disgrace to Parliament to have the name of that company in the Bill after the experience we have had.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At this period of the Session I think it is a matter of urgency that the Bill should be read the third time.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think so. Why did not the Bill come down at an early period of the Session? There is even now considerable business to be done, and there is no necessity for giving this Bill the third reading to-day. I think I shall have to discuss the matter further after six o'clock.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. As I stated before recess, I object to this as a departure from the proper order of the House, and also under the special circumstances of the Bill, that is that circumstances may occur between now and to-morrow which may make it fitting that the House should deal with the Bill in a different manner from that in which it is prepared to deal with it to-night. The question of whether the deposit is made by the railway company, and the local position of the railway, have to be considered, and there is no reason, therefore, why we should press this Bill through at this sitting. There is also another reason. In the committee the hon. member for Northumberland was engaged in a discussion of this very question of what would be the proper course which should be taken in case the deposit was not made, when I interposed and pointed out that the third reading should not be taken to-day but to-morrow, by which time we would be in a position to know what had taken place. If it had been the intention of the Minister to move the third reading to-day, he should have informed us of that intention at that time, and then the discussion would have gone on in committee which was intercepted by me in good faith, with the idea that time would be saved by postponing until to-morrow a discussion of that question. I think, under those circumstances, that it is not consistent with that good faith and fair play which should prevail amongst us in such matters that the Minister, having received the advantage of my suggestion in the curtailment of the discussion in committee, should afterwards deprive us of the opportunity on which he took that advantage.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was in the House at the time the hon. gentleman speaks of, and I did not hear what the hon. gentleman has just said, though, as he has said it, I am bound to take his word for it. Even then, if the hon. gentleman makes a statement of that kind to another member, that is no reason why the House should deprive themselves of their right to go on with a measure of this kind, especially at this time of the Session. Besides that, the hon. member for Northumberland was in the House at that moment as well as the hon. gentleman opposite, and therefore the hon. member for Northumberland would not complain, and could not complain, because he had an opportunity of speaking on the Bill. Besides, the hon. gentleman knows that, at the request of the hon. gentleman, on his question when the Government intended to recommend the prorogation of Parliament, the First Minister stated that he hoped this House would be able to complete the business to-morrow night so that we might prorogue on Friday. But if we are going on to day as we went on yesterday, it will be impossible to do so, and for that the responsibility must rest on the hon. gentlemen on the other side, who would not allow this Bill to have its third reading now. It is a customary thing at this time of the Session to go on with the Bills which have already been considered several times by the House and to give them their third reading. Besides, the hon. gentleman knows that this Bill has not been considered by the other House, and if we wish to have this early prorogation, as it seems to be the desire of hon. gentlemen on both sides, we must get it through the Senate in time for them to consider this measure. If we delay it until to morrow, we will not know any more about it, and the Senate will not be in a condition to consider it to-morrow. It will have to go on till Friday, and then we will not be able to prorogue on Friday. Besides, this measure being considered this evening, and a debate arising upon it, the time that we should employ in discussing the Supplementary Estimates will have gone in debating this measure, which I must say has been perfectly well debated already. The hon. gentleman said another reason which should induce us to delay the third reading until to-morrow is the fact that to-day is the last day on which the promoters or shareholders of a company, which was incorporated the other day, could make the deposit under the proviso that if on or before the 1st of June they did not satisfy the Governor General in Council that they are in a position to build fifty miles of their road within a certain period, then the Bill would not take effect, no proclamation would issue, and we would have the right to incorporate another company. Now the right for incorporating another company is given by the House of Commons, and I have no doubt will be given by the Senate—that power is given to the Government to incorporate a company. What can be gained by delaying this Bill until to-morrow? What other provisions can we put in this Bill that we had not put in it. The provisions put in this Bill for that purpose are the provisions put in the laws of last Session to the same effect, and, therefore, I believe the hon. gentleman should not delay the business of the House by preventing the Bill being read the third time.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the bounty of one dollar and fifty cents per ton on pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore, authorised to be granted until the 30th day of June, 1886, by the Act 46th Victoria, chapter 14, may continue to be granted by the Governor in Council until the 30th day of June, 1889; and that a bounty of one dollar per ton on pig iron so manufactured may, in the manner by the said Act provided, be granted between the 1st day of July, 1889, and the 30th day of June, 1892; and that the provisions of the Act above cited shall apply to the bounties which the Governor in Council is hereby empowered to grant.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Mr. McLELAN. The object of this is to afford encouragement for the manufacture of pig iron in this country. The deposits of iron, as hon. gentlemen know, are very numerous and valuable throughout the country, and it requires some encouragement to enable parties to undertake the manufacture of iron largely in this country, and render ourselves to some extent independent of other nations for the supply of iron. Three years ago Parliament adopted the policy of giving a bounty by way of encouragement, rather than increasing the duty upon the imported article, for the reason that the material iron enters so largely into the manufacture of various other articles that it was deemed expedient to give encouragement in this way rather than by increasing the duty.

Mr. BLAKE. Why?

Mr. McLELAN. The decline in the price of iron abroad has operated very considerable against its manufacture in this country by discouraging capitalists from engaging in its manufacture, but at present the opinion is gaining ground that prices have touched bottom and that they will increase very soon. There are a number of iron companies which are being established, among them the International Iron and Smelting Company, Manitoba, which is erecting works for the smelting of iron in the North-West, and there are also several companies in the eastern part of the Province of Ontario. Mr. Haycock, of this city, is at present endeavoring to form a company for the purpose of manufacturing charcoal iron; at Three Rivers, Mr. George MacDougall proposes to put up a furnace, and an effort is being made to build a blast furnace in Cape Breton. It is believed that with the encouragement of $1.50 per ton on pig iron proposed in this resolution, a number of these gentlemen will be able to carry out their designs and produce pig iron within the country. The hon. member for South Huron, I think, asked me to give the quantity that had been manufactured during the past year. It was 24,000 tons.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where has that been manufactured?

Mr. McLELAN. The greater portion of it has been manufactured in Nova Scotia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At what works?

Mr. McLELAN. At the Acadia Steel Works.

Mr. VAIL. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. I may say to the hon. gentleman that that company got into difficulties a number of years ago at the outset, owing to a manager who was rather extravagant in his ideas and ran the company deeply into debt; and it was only through the instrumentality of this bounty that that company has been able to continue in operation at all, and it is hoped that it will be able to completely reconstruct itself.

Mr. VAIL. Why does the hon. gentleman not give a bounty on sugar too? Some of the sugar industries have been in difficulties.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a protective duty on sugar.

Mr. VAIL. There is a protective duty on iron.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the exact amount of duty on the class of pig iron on which this bounty is granted?

Mr. McLELAN. $2 per ton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that, for getting 24,000 tons of pig iron manufactured we practically pay $48,000 of duty and $36,000 in bounty, making together about $84,000.

Mr. McLELAN. You get the duty as revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, we do not get the duty; if the article is manufactured here, the hon. gentleman loses at both ends; so much less iron pays duty. There is $48,000 less of duty, and he pays a bounty besides of $36,000, so that there is $84,000 paid out of the Treasury for the manufacture of 24,000 tons. As this is an industry in which the hon. gentleman used to be concerned, if I am not mistaken——

Mr. McLELAN. Not in the sense you mention—not to the value of a fraction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought the hon. gentleman was a stockholder.

Mr. McLELAN. Oh, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would be better pleased if he was, because then he could tell me more accurately. In the production of that quantity, can he tell me what is the value per annum to each operative employed?

Mr. McLELAN. I think twenty-six days' labor are employed in the manufacture of a ton from the ore to the rolled bars.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that each man in this factory only produces on the average twelve tons of iron per annum?

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman must not understand me as saying that the furnaces are run at their full capacity. They are engaged in smelting a portion of the time and also in rolling At all times during the past year two or one furnace has been idle. They run them alternately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is familiar with the species of industry. I do not ask him to be precise within a ton or two; but does he not know himself what number of tons are supposed to be produced annually by each hand in a large establishment, supposed to be conducted on modern principles? That is something we ought to know when we are considering the bounty.

Mr. McLELAN. The memorandum given to me says that it requires about twenty-six days' labor from the digging of the ore to the production of the rolled bars.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would only give twelve tons per annum, which is a very small production.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to know from the hon. gentleman what proportion of the bounty that has been paid has been paid to the Acadia steel works in the current year, and what to other establishments?

Mr. McLELAN. During the past year there has been paid to Nova Scotia, $29,000, and I fancy the most of that went to the Acadia Steel Works, and $7,000 has been paid in other parts of the Dominion. That is for the current year, to the 1st of June, 1886. The total amount paid as bounty on the production of pig iron in the Dominion was, $36,580.89.

Mr. BLAKE. The whole of that $29,000 practically went to the Acadia Steel Works.

Mr. McLELAN. I think so practically. At Pictou there were some few tons manufactured.

Mr. BLAKE. In the other parts of the Dominion, does one establishment take the bulk?

Mr. McLELAN. The memorandum sent me by the Customs Department does not separate it.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps at a later stage of the proceedings the hon. gentleman would give us the division of that. For 1885 I think the amount of the bounty was $36,654.91. Could the hon. gentleman say how that is divided—how much the Acadia Steel Works got?

Mr. McLELAN. I think they had about the same proportion.

Mr. BLAKE. And for the year 1884, the first year, the amount of the bounty was $44,089.91. What proportion had they that year?

Mr. McLELAN. The years run about the same proportion all through for the three years in which it has been in operation.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the production altogether, and the production of the Acadia Steel Works in particular, has been diminished, and is not increasing?

Mr. McLELAN. In the last year, and in the previous year, the production was nearly the same, but not so much as in the year before, because the company became involved and went into liquidation a few years ago. I think the production has fallen from forty-four to twenty or thirty during the last two years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many men are employed there for all purposes?

Mr. McLELAN. From 500 to 700, in the manufacture of bar iron and car wheels and other works.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I believe they manufacture very good car wheels, but they manufacture a good many other articles besides iron. The bulk of this bounty was paid—20,000 tons apparently were provided, so that there is some extraordinary discrepancy between the estimate the hon. gentleman made just now, that twenty-six days of labor were required to produce one ton of iron and the actual result.

Mr. McLELAN. The men may be employed in other work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then they would not use twenty-six days for the production of a ton of iron.

Mr. McLELAN. The men employed in the manufacture and transportation of the ore to the furnace and in the work of smelting, consume about twenty-six and three-quarters days' labor per ton altogether. Then, in the manufacture of car wheels and other work, other men are employed, about from 500 to 700 men altogether being employed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You say twenty-six and three-quarter days are employed to produce a ton of iron?

Mr. McLELAN. That is what they give.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At the usual rate of wages at such manufactories, the process would prove a very expensive one.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Minister refers to rolled iron.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the cost in labor of producing a ton of pig iron? It would be satisfactory to know, so that we might compare results in Nova Scotia with results in the establishments on the Clyde and other places.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not got a statement of that.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the statement the hon. gentleman is not able to find at the moment is one that runs out the details, and gives the labor in getting at the ore, in transport and conversion into pig or rolled iron or bar iron.

Mr. McLELAN. I have a statement of that kind, but cannot lay my hands on it at present.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman may be able to find it before the final passing of the measure. It is unfortunate he has not got it now. I recollect when this bounty was proposed, glowing statements were made as to the largely increased production that would result from it. All that the hon. gentleman is now able to point to as accomplished is apparently that the Londonderry Works have been kept open by it and were not forced to shut down. I understand they have been run by liquidators in the interests of the creditors.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; but it is believed that in the present season a new company will be formed. A gentleman from Glasgow is now in the country negotiating to form a company to take over the works and liabilities and furnish the necessary capital.

Mr. BLAKE. Have any new works been actually started since this bounty was established?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not able to say that any have been established. The great decline in the price of iron has prevented capitalists from going into that business.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sensibly aware of the misfortune which this country has experienced through the decline in the price of iron. I hope it will rise soon. May it become dearer, and then we can get on. The hon. gentleman has said that, inasmuch as iron is a raw material for many manufactures, it was thought expedient to afford this further encouragement by a bounty instead of by a duty. Why?

Mr. McLELAN. We have been in most cases, wherever practicable, admitting the raw material free of duty. The hon. gentleman will see by the trade returns that a very large proportion of our imports for the purpose of manufacturing are now admitted free of duty. Cotton, for instance, and other articles that are worked into different manufactures are admitted free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With the exception of the article of tea. We do not import anything for the consumer, but everything for the manufacturer.

Mr. McLELAN. Who is thereby enabled to produce the manufactured article at that much less.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But he does not give us the benefit.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state why it was considered preferable to encourage this by a bounty instead by a duty?

Mr. McLELAN. On the same principle that we have admitted various other goods free of duty or at a low duty, that enter into the manufacture of the various articles we require.

Mr. BLAKE. It is then because the duty increases the price to the consumer?

Mr. McLELAN. It may increase the price to the manufacturer.

Mr. BLAKE. To which? The manufacturer of iron? Then it is because it was thought expedient that, instead of increasing the cost to the manufacturer, which must increase the cost to the ultimate consumer, we should pay out of the general taxes a portion of the increased cost.

Mr. McLELAN. There might be a temporary increase of price, but if the hon. gentleman had given study to this question, he would know that in the United States——

Mr. BLAKE. Hear hear.

Mr. McLELAN—where there has been a very high duty on iron to encourage home manufacture, the price has now become very low. There was a time when the duty did increase the price, but prices there now are lower than here.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has told us in tones lugubrious, as consorted with the character of the announcement, of the unfortunate low price of pig iron for some time. What is the average price of pig iron, analogous to that made in the Acadia Steel Works, in Scotland and elsewhere?

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know that I can give the prices exactly as they have gone down, but as a fact they are lower, and that decline has prevented capitalists from going into the manufacture of iron. All iron is considerably lower in price than it was three years ago.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the price of pig iron now?

Mr. McLELAN. I will get the quotations and send them to the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe last year a curious illustration of the great benefits of protection to the United States; and I can possibly refresh the hon. the Finance Minister's memory. A certain class of iron which was required to be laid down at Galveston, in Texas, was offered to be furnished by the English houses at $21 per ton delivered there. The American works were able to supply it at $39 per ton. There was just a difference of $18 per ton between the price the American works were able to supply it for, and the English works; and the English manufacturers were able, after paying the duty of $17 or $18 per ton, to get the contract. That is the result of the great fall in classes of iron extensively used in the United States, and they have had a protection for 100 years.

Mr. McLELAN. A ton of pig iron represents 10¾ days' labor per man. The conversion of the necessary quantity of pig iron into bar iron represents 16·67 days' labor, making together 27 days' labor.

Mr. BLAKE. But there is an extra duty on bar, I think.

Mr. McLELAN. Bar iron is 17½.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not lately looked at the relative prices of American and Scotch and English pig, but the last time I did so, which was not long after this duty was imposed, I found that they ran very close upon the prices of the English or Scotch pig, duty and freight being added, that there was just a narrow margin between the two. I do not remember what changes have been made in the American tariff lately, but at that time I believe the duty on pig was $7, and the cost of the American pig of the same grade was just that much more than the cost of the Scotch or English pig, and some grades of Scotch and English pig were being imported into the States, notwithstanding the duty. At that time also, I ran over the results, for several months, of the imports into Montreal and some other Canadian ports, and I found that the prices in the principal markets of sale in Canada for pig were equivalent to the prices of those commodities on the other side, adding freight and duty.

Mr. CHARLTON. It would seem from the statement made by the Minister, that 10¾ days are required to produce a ton of pig iron, that the facilities of producing pig iron at this point are exceptionally good. If my memory serves me, that is as small an amount of manual labor, or a trifle smaller, than is required upon the Clyde, in Scotland, and I do not think there is any point in the United States where pig iron is produced at a less cost or number of days per ton than 10¾ days. I should infer from this that the facilities at this point are exceptionally good. The Minister referred to the beneficial effects produced by protection in the United States, from the fact that that country now produces iron at a very low rate. We must bear in mind that the taxes paid by the consumers of iron in the United States for the past twenty-five or thirty years have amounted to an enormous sum in the aggregate, and that the reduction in the price of iron in that country in late years has been due to over-stimulation followed by over-production. There is over $100,000,000 invested in useless plant in the United States, in blast furnaces that are standing idle, and have been standing idle for years, and, if we take the interest at 6 per cent. on that amount, it makes an annual waste of $6,000,000, and add that to the other outgoes under a protective system, I think we will arrive at the conclusion that the nation is paying a pretty large price for its iron, even if of late years it has been offered at tolerably low prices. The iron industry of the United States is unable to stand in the open markets of the world, with the iron industries of England or Belgium, and it has been found necessary to protect it by duties. The fact that it is lower in price than in former years does not prove that the iron industry of the United States is on a more healthy footing than it was when there were no duties at all. Before the excessive protective duties were imposed, the iron industry in the United States made substantial, healthy progress. When those duties were imposed, there was a rapid, and abnormal progress, the profits were very great, and that was followed by over-production, stagnation, and the sinking of this immense amount of capital. It strikes me that, with an ability to produce pig iron by ten and three-quarter days' work a ton, we ought to have an industry that should be able to stand alone. I doubt if there is any place in the world where it can be produced with less manual labor.

Mr. CASEY. This bounty of course will cost the country something, but I do not know but that the investment may in one sense be looked upon with some degree of pleasure by that portion of the public who have believed with us all along that the National Policy was a humbug, because, in connection with this bounty, we are placing on record, by the solemn action of this House, a confession that the National Policy has been an utter failure and a humbug, so far as the iron trade is concerned, at all events. It is almost worth what it cost, or the amount of the bounty, to have this solemn confession put on the Statute-book by the authors of the National Policy themselves. We were told that, when the National Policy would come into force, iron smelting would be greatly developed all over the country. The ridiculous failure that has followed need not be expatiated upon. I understood the Minister to say that there is only one smelting works at present in operation, though two others are projected. That is the result of the National Policy for all these years. Before the National Policy, we had several smelting works in operation. Now there is only one, in the Minister's own Province, and that one is in such a glorious and magnificent state of prosperity that the Minister, who comes from that Province and knows the affairs of that company, tells the House that they are unable to manufacture pig iron at a profit without assistance. He is afraid to give them that assistance by a further increase of duty, because he confesses that it would increase the price to the consumer of pig iron, and, although a general increase of prices may have seemed desirable in 1878, he knows that the public will not put up with it just now. He cannot give the assistance in that form, so he must give it in another form, and he gives it in the form of a bounty. In other words, the glorious National Policy has so prospered this industry in his own Province that they cannot manufacture with any profit, that he cannot give them that profit in the shape of a duty for fear of unpopularity, and that the public must pay the manufacturers the profit in order to enable them to continue to manufacture.

Mr. BLAKE. The practical result of this, as it affects the Acadia Steel Works, appears to be that they are to receive in bounty $30,000 a year upon their present production, and are to receive, under the benefit of the other branch of their favor, their protection, $40,000 a year by means of the enhanced price caused by the duties. Thus we are giving them in the shape of a direct bounty out of our taxes a sum equivalent to the interest at 4 per cent. on three quarters of a million of capital, and we are giving them in protection a sum equivalent to the interest on one million of capital, or we are giving them altogether in duty and bounty an amount equal to the interest at 4 per cent. on one million and three-quarters of capital. I am glad to hear that, with these provisions, they are actually able to get along in the hands of the liquidators.

Mr. HESSON. It is clear that the consumers are getting iron at a much lower rate than ever, and they are getting a superior quality of steel. The works we have are not sufficient to produce the quantity the country requires, and we are still importing, and those who are investing their money in that no doubt are not more successful than many others who have tried to develop the industries of the country. I wish to inform the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that good steel rails can be laid down in this country now at $21 a gross ton, less than one cent per pound.

Mr. MILLS. Where are they made?

Mr. HESSON. In England. Does it follow, then, that we must allow industries that are being established here in order to give employment to our people, to be crushed out because the people have put their money in them? I say that the consumers are getting cheaper iron and steel to-day than they were in the days of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman tells us that everything is cheaper in consequence of the National Policy, and the Minister of Finance tells us that in consequence of things being so cheap, it is necessary to give a bounty to these manufacturers. Now, if the hon. gentleman is right, why don't he have the duties taken off so that the prices will come up? The hon. gentleman assures the House that the effect of these protective duties has been to bring the prices down, and the reason these people cannot manufacture here is because the prices have gone down. If the hon. gentleman is right, all he has to do is to have the duties taken off and then prices will go up and we will not have to pay $40,000 out of the Treasury to sustain a bankrupt industry. I would like to ask the Minister to explain how it is that he proposes to pay one industry a bounty while he imposes an Excise duty upon another industry, the manufacture of coal oil. Let the hon. gentleman explain why one portion of the community should be taxed upon their productions, and another portion should be paid out of the produce of our revenue.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not one of those who sympathise with the hon. gentlemen opposite who condemn the National Policy. At the same time there is a juste milieu to be followed, and there is such a thing as running it into the ground, as was done in the coal duties and flour duties. Now, while I am in favor of giving protection to our industries, I am in favor of giving it only to those that can be prosecuted with a reasonable prospect of profit. That is where I draw the line in relation to the National Policy. I am not in favor of taxing the people all over the country in order that a few coal mines in Nova Scotia may be kept alive. I am not in favor of taxing the people on their bread in order that the farmers of western Ontario, or Manitoba, or wherever else they produce a surplus, shall have a profit on their wheat at the expense of the people in other sections of the country who are purchasers and consumers. Therefore, while I disapprove of the deprecatory remarks of the principle of the National Policy, I must say that there is a great deal to be said, and a great deal of fault to be found with the National Policy from my standpoint. Now, Sir, we are running the National Policy into the ground in another respect, in the shape of protection upon pig iron. What is going to be the effect of this? We already have a duty upon pig iron imported into the country. Every worker in iron throughout this Dominion, every blacksmith, every foundryman, every farmer who uses a plough, every man who uses a waggon, every lumberman who requires his sleds to be shod, every person who uses iron in any shape, is already contributing largely to the enforcement of the National Policy by the import duty which is imposed upon iron and steel. But while that is the case, the Government seem not to be satisfied, and now they actually propose to impose additional duty upon this article of common use. I will take again an illustration from my own county. What is going to be the effect of this policy upon the county of Northumberland? The effect will be that, in addition to all the duty that every blacksmith and consumer of iron throughout the county has to pay upon iron, there will be an additional charge upon him for his share of the revenue from which is taken this bounty to protect and support an industry which cannot be sustained under existing circumstances. Sir, if I could see a prospect that in a year or two, or in five years, this iron industry would become self-sustaining, with a reasonable protection, such as to warrant the belief that there was a prospect ahead of us, with what we know of the prices of iron in Europe, and in view of the efforts that have been made in America to cultivate that industry, I would go in and support a moderate duty, although I am not in favor of bounty, I would in some shape endeavor to encourage that industry, but I see nothing but failure in a policy of this kind. We know that the price of iron for the last ten years has been steadily going down until to-day we can land iron and steel rails, with freight and charges, on the wharf at Montreal for something like $21 a ton. Now, Sir, what prospect is there of our establishing the iron industry of this country on such a basis that it can compete against old established industries which enjoy cheap labor, and with the facilities for production which exist in Scotland and England, and which exist in Belgium? I believe we are taking a false step in encouraging a bounty upon the product and manufacture of iron in this country. My hon. friend the Finance Minister is not satisfied with imposing a duty upon the coal which is produced in his Province, and making the other Provinces like my own pay for the production of an industry that seems not to be self-sustaining without it, but he now asks us to put a duty upon iron which is produced in his Province also. What will come next? I suppose the silver and the gold mines that are just barely paying working expenses, will have a bounty put on them next, in order to encourage the gold and silver mining industries of the country. Sir, I think we have carried this thing far enough. The charges upon our people, and the revenue we require to raise to meet our increasing liabilities, require that, in addition to the economy it is necessary to practice in order to maintain our credit, we should not take the false step of encouraging industries that cannot be sustained under any reasonable protection; such being the case with the iron industry in this country, I feel bound to vote against this resolution.

Mr. PAINT. This industry we are now asked to protect has cost some $3,000,000, and I believe that if we continue to foster it, we will by-and-bye build our iron ships in this country.

Resolution reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means.

On item 1, oilcloth.

Mr. McLELAN. At the present time the duty on oil cloth is 30 per cent. It is found difficult to collect this on account of constant undervaluations, and the duty does not protect the manufacturers. This is not an increase in the duty, but it is to prevent undervaluation.

Mr. BLAKE. The proposed duty is 10 per cent and 5 cents per square yard. So collecting 5 cents per square yard will be equal to a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem. The specific duty is, therefore, on this calculation, two-thirds of the whole duty.

Mr. McLELAN. The tendency of this change will be to prevent undervaluation.

Mr. BLAKE. And also to prevent the importation of the cheapest classes of goods.

Mr. McLELAN. It will prevent the very cheapest classes—at all events it will have that tendency. It will give more protection upon the low-priced goods than upon the average classes.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what the variations in prices are; what is the lowest price of the imported article and what is the highest?

Mr. McLELAN. No, I cannot give the variations of prices.

Mr. BLAKE. A specific duty which amounts to 20 per cent. may be a very serious drawback to the importing of the low grade, and therefore give a higher protection to the manufacturers of the lower grades.

On item 3, straw board.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this supposed to represent on straw board?

Mr. McLELAN. That is on the average value of the article imported; 20 per cent. is the present duty.

Mr. BLAKE. Why is the change made?

Mr. McLELAN. It is believed that it is undervalued for purposes of duty. For years the value has been running from $40 to $50 a ton, and latterly lots have been invoiced at apparently below their real value. The specific duty is about equal to an average price of $40 a ton.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the manufacturers here have represented that it was undervalued for importation.

Mr. McLELAN. No, the appraisers have done so; and on many occasions they have increased the valuations for duty. Three years ago the value was $60 a ton. The average value is now $40.

Mr. BLAKE. Then a progressive decline has been going on?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; during the last three years it has declined from $60 to $50 and $40.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the imposition of this specific duty is to arrest the decline as far as possible, and this is being done so as to prevent our having the benefit of greater cheapness.

On item 4, earthenware, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This means a very considerable increase in the coarser articles of earthenware and stoneware. It may be, and very likely is the case, that there is no special increase on the medium articles, and perhaps a slight diminution on the best class; but on the inferior articles, those which come into common use, there is a decided increase.

Mr. McLELAN. On manufactured earthenware of all kinds there is a certain proportion which comes from the factory imperfect, and these goods are known as seconds and thirds. These goods are sent in largely from the United States from factories near the frontier, and they interfere largely with the legitimate manufacturers of goods on this side. A number of manufactories have been started in this country, which are turning out the better kind of ware at very reasonable prices; but the seconds and thirds from the American factories are sent across here and sold at nominal prices, and tend to injure our manufacturers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is going to be a very heavy impost on the coarser article, almost amounting to prohibition in some cases.

Mr. BLAKE. We know that seconds and thirds are also turned out by our Canadian manufacturers. The real object of this change is that our manufacturers may obtain a higher price for their common goods, that is the practical result of it. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what would 2 cents per gallon be on the prices of seconds and thirds as they sell in Canada.

Mr. McLELAN. The value of the seconds and thirds would be from 5 to 6 cents and the better class would be about 7 cents.

Mr. BLAKE. So that at 5 cents, the rate of duty would be 40 per cent.—a protection of 40 per cent. to the Canadian manufacturer of seconds and thirds which the poorer classes buy as against 30 per cent. on the dearer class. Then it is also to be remembered that with reference to these cheap and bulky goods the cost of packing and the transport very largely enhance the cost.

On item 5, rubber belting, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the difference amount to on this rubber belting, hose, packing, mats and mattings.

Mr. McLELAN. The appraisers believe that this will not increase the price on the medium class. They report to the Customs Department that these goods have been greatly undervalued, and this change is to avoid frauds in the revenue.

Mr. BLAKE. That may be so, but is it not the fact that for at least two years the manufacturers have been asking him to make those changes.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know that they have.

Mr. BLAKE. Now, application was made to the Government last year. I was communicated with during last Session on the apprehension that it might come forward, and the fact was made public that applications were being made. The correspondence I have received indicates that it is not only the suggestion of the appraisers, but it is also the suggestion of the manufacturers, that has induced this change.

On item 6, carriage hardware.

Mr. McLELAN. That is to make the duty on carriage hardware uniform Parts of carriages are now charged 35 per cent., but at some ports these parts are entered as hardware at 30 per cent., and it is named as carriage hardware in order to make the duty uniform.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should carriage hardware be charged 35 per cent., and other hardware 30 per cent.?

On item 7, soap, perfumed and toilet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This increases the duty apparently?

Mr. McLELAN. The memorandum given to me by the Customs Department states that this will remove serious difficulties arising out of the undervaluation of goods, which it is almost impossible to check on the present tariff of 30 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. What will be the result of this?

Mr. McLELAN. The result will be about the same duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would just call the attention of the hon. Minister and of the House to one fact, which does not apply, perhaps, so much to the article of soap as to other goods. We all know that the whole tendency of modern improvement in manufactures is to reduce largely and progressively the cost of the manufactured goods, and therefore the substitution of specific for ad valorem duty is nothing more than a large increase.

Mr. SHANLY. A correspondent writes to me that some of the materials used in the manufacture of soap are imported at high duties, like 30 and 35 per cent., so that the change made in this is simply a countervailing advantage to the manufacturer, to put him on a fair footing.

Mr. BLAKE. I would appeal to my hon. friend whether he does not think it unkind in the Government to place any difficulty in the way of their friends and followers to keep their hands clean.

Mr. BOWELL. It might be, if a coarser quality of soap were used on the tongues of gentlemen who are accusing others. It would be just as well for them to clean their own tongues and their own hands before they throw so much dirt at others. A very careful calculation was entered into when this change was made. The American duty at present is 15 cents per lb. The result of an investigation of no less than ninety-five different brands of toilet soap is the adoption of the duty of 10 cents per lb. and 10 per cent. Had we adopted the American system exclusively, we should have been placing a very heavy duty upon the cheaper kinds of soap. We thought it more equitable and equally protective for the manufacturers to adopt the mixed rate upon the particular kinds of soap now manufactured in this country, which will be about equal to 30 per cent. On the higher grades it will be less than 30 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon. gentleman does not dispute my statement that in the case of manufactured goods in which improvements are likely to take place, the specific duty tends constantly to grow into a very much larger ad valorem duty.

Mr. BOWELL. Not unless the article falls in value.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does not apply so much to this article, because the raw material, which is produced in the country, forms a large proportion of the value of the article. But I speak generally with respect to this system. When the goods are sold more cheaply than they are to-day, this specific tax will become a very much heavier relative tax.

Mr. McLELAN. If it is found that there is a decline in value, the specific rate may be lowered as in other cases.

On item 8, union collar cloth paper.

Mr. McLELAN. This is a duty of 5 per cent. on unfinished union collar cloth paper, intended to give the Canadian manufacturers the work of finishing the cloth.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a reduction, I suppose?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, a reduction on the unfinished article. The duty of the finished article is but a little higher.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the present rate?

Mr. BOWELL. Under the old tariff the duty on both kinds of union collar cloth paper was 5 per cent. Since the adoption of that tariff our paper makers have been glossing and finishing it in rolls and sheets. While we allow the union collar cloth to remain at the old 5 per cent. duty, we place the finished article on the 20 per cent. list.

Mr. BLAKE. The mills are able to produce the finished cloth under the present tariff and they are actually producing it. Why increase the duty?

Mr. BOWELL. If they were producing it, we should not have changed the tariff. They have placed in their mills machinery for the glossing and finishing of this paper, and they are now doing it.

Mr. BLAKE. If they are doing that, why put the duty on the finished article except to raise the price for the public?

Mr. BOWELL. That is not our experience, nor the experience of the country.

Mr. BLAKE. Under this plan is it supposed that the paper not finished or glossed shall be imported and finished and glossed in the country, or that the paper will be produced in the country?

Mr. BOWELL. The present supposition is that large quantities will be imported at 5 per cent., and finished and glossed in this country.

Mr. BLAKE. The article will be imported at 5 per cent., and then they will get 15 per cent. protection for simply putting it through the rolls, glossing and finishing it.

On item 10, paper hangings, &c.

Mr. McLELAN. I would ask to amend this resolution by adding the words "eighteen inches wide" after the word "per roll of eight yards." That is the length and width of paper upon which all the undervaluations are found. With regard to the other widths, twenty-one inches, nine and twelve yards, &c., there is no ground for complaint as to undervaluation; but this description of paper is often sold in job lots at one-fourth of the ordinary market value.

Mr. BLAKE. These, I suppose, are the cheap goods?

Mr. McLELAN. No, they are not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are the goods that are sold cheaply?

Mr. McLELAN. No; they are the better class of goods that are not produced in the country at less than from 6 cents to 10 cents per roll, but very often the manufacturer will have 500 or 600 rolls of different kinds on hand, which he will sell in job lots, much lower than the usual price, and they are entered at the Customs at the reduced price. There is a description of paper, twenty-one inches wide manufactured in England, which is sold at the low price of 1½d. to 2d. Of this, there is no complaint of undervaluation. In the United States, there is no paper manufactured below 5, 6 and 7 cents per roll, and in England, at times, the manufacturers have odd lots of that 6 to 8 cents paper, which they sell sometimes as low as 2 cents. It is to meet that, I wish to insert the words "eighteen inches in width."

Mr. BLAKE. It is to prevent the chronic occurrence of lots of cheap paper of this class coming to the country.

Mr. McLELAN. There is cheaper paper both manufactured in the country and imported, but this is to prevent a higher class of paper being entered under value, and the importer paying duty on that under value.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend will find I am correct. It is not to prevent cheap goods being introduced, but goods of higher class at cheap rates.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister has misunderstood me on several occasions. When I speak of cheap goods, I do not mean inferior goods, but goods of very good value for the money. We are subject to the misfortune frequently of having very good paper brought in cheaply, which is a great misfortune and it is quite right to prevent it.

On item 11, felt.

Mr. McLELAN. This is to make the duty uniform. Felt is charged 7½ cents a lb. and 20 per cent., and 15 cents and 10 per cent., and is also let in free, according to the purpose for which it is imported. This resolution is to charge it a uniform duty of 17½ per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. Why does the hon. gentleman not make it uniformly down instead of putting it at 17½ per cent?

Mr. McLELAN. This is a medium rate.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the reason the delightful combination of specific and ad valorem has been abandoned in this case, that combination which has such charms for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL. It is applied in a great many cases, but it is not necessary to enforce it in every one. The reason for making this change is the fact that there is one class of goods which could only be rated at 20 per cent. when imported for certain classes of manufactures, and when imported for another class it is charged 15 per cent., when imported for ordinary trade purposes it is charged at 7½ cents and 10 per cent. Importations were made for specific purposes, say for boot makers or glove makers, and then the felt was placed in the market and sold for other purposes. The merchants represented that this was placing them in an uncomfortable position, and it would be better for the trade generally to make a uniform rate. By that means, the manufacturer will pay 17½ per cent. and buy the goods from the merchant instead of having to import them. It will do away with the fraud of entering for one purpose and selling for another.

Mr. BLAKE. In more than one case I have expressed my approval of changes in the tariff, and in this case, as the duty stood, it was a frightful temptation to fraud; but the question I put is, why is the principle of combination of specific and ad valorem duties, which the Government appear to be adopting more widely every year, and which already existed in this case, departed from?

Mr. McLELAN. Felt often comes in a bale with other goods, and we have to open the bale and ascertain the weight, so as to charge a specific duty; and it is simply to do away with that difficulty we make the duty ad valorem.

On item 12, stereotypes and electrotypes.

Mr. McLELAN. I want to add after the word "metal" the words "and not elsewhere specified."

Mr. BOWELL. Stereotypes and electrotypes for standard books are now 10 per cent. ad valorem, and stereotypes and electrotypes for commercial blanks and advertisements, 20 per cent. ad valorem. This item is put in to prevent a difficulty which has arisen in regard to what they call the patent newspaper column, which is being imported from the United States. These columns are stereotyped out upon plate, and sent back again. Great difficulty has been found in arriving at a correct value, and it is thought better to make a specific duty of 5 cents per pound for this particular kind of plate which is used in newspapers for serial stories and that class of literature. At present, it might be ruled at 20 per cent. Some of our collectors have thought it would come within these two items, and, after full consideration as to its value, and arriving at as equitable a duty as possible, we propose this, which is about equal to 20 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. So it is to cost 20 per cent., while the other class specified will cost 10 per cent.

Mr. BOWELL. One class for standard books is 10 per cent., and that for advertisements is 20 per cent. This is a new item.

Mr. BLAKE. To cover the serial stories?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. So it puts them at a disadvantage as compared with standard books by a double duty.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. That is a stroke at the hon. gentleman's old compatriots, the newspaper publishers.

Mr. BOWELL. But it is in the interest of the printer who sets the type, the labor of the compositor in this country.

Mr. BLAKE. What about the standard books?

Mr. BOWELL. They are not printed here to any extent.

On item 13, scythes.

Mr. McLELAN. The present duty is 35 per cent., but scythes are imported and entered at fictitious values, as is found by the Custom house officers, and the duty will not put an increase on the proper value of good articles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the hon. gentleman propose to ascertain, to use his own words, the proper value of a good article? Surely that is liable to alter all the time, as improvements in manufacture are made.

Mr. McLELAN. I think it is found now that what is called a good article of scythe that a man should use—and it is only the best that a man should use—is worth $9 or $10.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, to-day, but what may it be a year hence?

Mr. McLELAN. They were more than that formerly.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a manufacturer from Oshawa behind the hon. gentleman who says we have lowered the duty on scythes, so that it is not so great a protection to the manufacturer as the old duty. The great difficulty was this: In the United States they receive a drawback of $1.50 to $2 a dozen on scythes which they send to this country, and the great difficulty in ascertaining the exact values has arisen from that fact. A specific duty will prevent that.

On item 14, wire covered with cotton, &c.

Mr. McLELAN. This is to make uniform all classes. At present wire covered with silk would be 30 per cent., and covered with cotton, 20 per cent., and it is proposed to put it all at 25 per cent.

On item 15, stove bolts and nuts, &c.

Mr. McLELAN. Wood screws are now 35 per cent. Stove bolts are very similar in their manufacture, and it is proposed to put them at the same rate of duty.

Mr. BLAKE. What are stove bolts and nuts at present?

Mr. McLELAN. We are making nuts and bolts part specific and part ad valorem, taking out only stove bolts and small bolts.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the equivalent of the present duty?

Mr. McLELAN. The present duty is 25 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. So it is an increase of 10 per cent?

Mr. McLELAN. It is 25 per cent. on all bolts, large and small, and this is putting these at the same rate as wood screws, and making the others part specific. We have by another resolution put them part specific and part ad valorem.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not find any other resolution.

Mr. McLELAN. It was passed previously.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should it be that some portions of the bolts and nuts should be specific and ad valorem, and at one rate of duty equivalent to about 25 per cent., as the Minister thinks, and these should be raised to 35 per cent.?

Mr. McLELAN. There is a great deal more labor in one description than in the other. In one, it is very little more than the iron, there is very little labor required to convert it into a bolt or nut, but in a pound of stove bolts or of bolts of the smaller make there is a great deal more labor. Stove bolts are very similar to wood screws, with the addition of a nut.

Mr. BLAKE. And it is found, I suppose, that 25 per cent. does not keep the foreign article out?

Mr. McLELAN. We have not tried that yet.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, the hon. gentleman has tried it, because he says the present duty is equivalent to 25 per cent.

Mr. McLELAN. We are changing both, the hon. gentleman will see, and the present duty did not work satisfactorily either with the manufacturers or the Custom house.

Mr. BLAKE. But how much was it equal to about?

Mr. BOWELL. Thirty per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. So it is an increase of 5 per cent.?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Or a-sixth added to the duty. To tell us that, because stove bolts and nuts are very much like wood screws, we ought to put the duty up to 35 per cent. seems to be not a very adequate reason for increasing the duty. Thirty-five per cent. is a very high rate of duty, and when we know the conditions on which wood screws are manufactured in the countries in which they are chiefly manufactured, I do not think the arrangements are very much calculated to induce one to raise the price of any articles by duties.

On item 16, handkerchiefs.

Mr. McLELAN. This is for the sake of uniformity. The present rates are 20 and 27½ upon the different kinds of handkerchiefs, whether linen, cotton, plain, or printed, and it is proposed to make them uniform at 25 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. That raises it somewhat on the cotton and lowers it on the linen.

Mr. BOWELL. Just the contrary.

Mr. McLELAN. Printed cottons are now 27½, and the officers have been charging printed handkerchiefs 27½, and plain 20.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what I was speaking of, plain and printed.

Mr. McLELAN. Plain and printed are different, and linen are different, and we are making it uniform.

Mr. BLAKE. It raises the plain.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, and lowers the printed.

On item 18, nail plate, iron or steel.

Mr. McLELAN. Steel plate is $3 per ton and 10 per cent. Iron nail plate is less, and it is claimed that very often steel nail plate is imported under the name of iron plate, and it is proposed to place all at one rate. Iron nail plate is now 12½ to 17½, according to size.

Mr. BLAKE. What is this $3 a ton supposed to amount to, on current prices?

Mr. McLELAN. I think it would be about $67 a ton. The current price is £6 to £7 sterling a ton.

On item 19, repeal item 353, Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. McLELAN. Ultra-marine blue is not manufactured in this country, but all the other colors are. Ultra-marine blue is left still on the free list, while a duty of 20 per cent. is placed upon all the other colors.

On item 20, repeal item 428, Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. McLELAN. The change is making jute cloth two inches narrower, it was limited to forty-two inches, and it is now limited to forty. It is proposed to allow jute yarn, whether plain or colored, to come in duty free. It is largely used in the manufacture of mats and matting. At present the duty on jute yarn is 20 per cent. Optical instruments for schools and colleges, not manufactured in the Dominion, are free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that restriction ought to be taken off. To impose a duty on philosophical instruments imported for education, is brutal and barbarous, whether they are manufactured in this country or not.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I think the Government will get into difficulty in imposing a duty on philosophical instruments. It would be far better to leave these goods still on the free list. Only about $10,000 worth were imported altogether, even when they were free. With a duty on those that are not manufactured in Canada, there will be a constant difficulty in ascertaining, when these articles are imported, whether like articles are manufactured in the country. It is alleged, as a reason for the imposition of this duty, that the raw material for these articles is dutiable, and consequently the manufacturers are placed at a disadvantage. But hon. gentlemen opposite have alleged more than once that the effect of a duty has not been to increase the price of the article; here is a case where that principle could be carried out, and the duty remain as it was. I know that although the total amount of importation is small, it will be a considerable tax on education, and so far as I am concerned, I am ready to place the interest of the children of Canada who are being educated above the interests of the manufacturers in these or any other instruments. I think this duty will be a hardship. I can state from experience, knowing the difficulty that has existed in many high schools in procuring these instruments.

Mr. BLAKE. Before this resolution passes I would ask the hon. gentleman to state what addition to the revenue he anticipates on these twenty items of change here?

Mr. McLELAN. It is not anticipated that there will be any change in the revenue. In no case is there anything important, and on the whole there will be no perceptible increase.

On resolution 2,

Mr. WELDON. I hope the Minister will agree to what he partially agreed to the other night, viz., to place a specific duty on cordage, which would prove much less inconvenient.

Mr. McLELAN. After considering the variations in price between the best hemp, manilla and the poorer qualities, I think it is better to leave the duty as proposed.

Mr. WELDON. It is better to encourage the importation of manilla than sisal.

On resolution 4, sugar.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not rise in the hope that I will be able to accomplish anything in the way of altering the Government plan in dealing with the sugar question. It appears that a slight change has been made in the original resolution submitted. The wholesale merchants who have visited this city have prevailed on the Finance Minister to strike out the word 13 and revert to the number that was in force for some time, No. 14. I think it was scarcely necessary for so many important gentlemen to come here to accomplish so little. But I think it is desirable that there should be an appeal from this House and from this Government to the country. We feel that the country must be made aware and the country must be informed on this subject. I now propose, in a very brief manner, to give some figures that will show the operation of the tariff in respect to sugar. I propose to do it in such a clear manner that every member of the House and every man of intelligence will be able to figure the matter out for himself. It has often been said that this is a very difficult question and that the people do not understand it. I simply ask hon. members to take down the figures as I give them. They can satisfy themselves as to the correctness of the market quotations and easily work the result out for themselves, and if I am wrong I ask to be set right now and here, because I call the attention of members to the fact that it will be important when they are on the platform, addressing the electors with respect to these matters, that they should be in a position to say that these figures were given in Parliament in the presence of the Finance Minister, and he did not challenge or at all events he did not prove their inaccuracy—if he does not do it—and if he does do so, I shall be glad to be corrected and to be set right. We will deal with the matter as per 100 lbs. to make it simple, and we will take the article of granulated sugar which is a uniform test and standard, and therefore one that may safely be adopted. I take the price of granulated sugar a few days ago, but as these are comparative quotations and taken at the same time, if the prices have varied a little in New York they have also varied in Montreal, and so there is no difference in result. The price of granulated sugar in New York, long price, is $6.25 per 100 lbs. The Canadian purchaser would obtain a drawback of $2.79 per 100 lbs., and also one-half per cent. discount for cash, making together $2.82 per 100 lbs., which would be taken off the price of the sugar. That would leave the net price in New York $3.43. The Canadian duty at present is as follows:—Specific at $1.50 per 100 lbs., $1.50; and 35 per cent. ad valorem on the long price of $6.25, which would amount to $2.18. Those two items, specific and ad valorem duties together, would raise the duty to $1.68 per 100 lbs. But that is not enough for our Finance Minister. He adds to that amount 7½ per cent. on the duty, which on $3.68 makes 27 cents, which brings up the total to $3.95 duty on each 100 lbs. of sugar, which cost in New York $3.43. I propose now to show the price at which sugar could be brought in and used under the Cartwright tariff in order to show the people—for there was a duty on sugar and the people were taxed highly—how greatly the burden has increased. Under the Cartwright tariff the price in New York would be, long price, $6.25 per 100 lbs. There would be a drawback of $2.82, leaving the net price $3.43. There was a specific duty of 1 cent. per lb. and 25 per cent. ad valorem on the net price, not on the long price of $3.43. The duty on that sugar under the Cartwright tariff would be $1.86 per 100 lbs., instead of $3.85 per 100 lbs. as under the present tariff. The total amount, putting the specific and ad valorem together, is 115 per cent., while under the Cartwright tariff it amounted to 54 per cent. ad valoerm. I desire now to make a comparison of prices. The price of granulated sugar in Montreal is $6 50 per 100 lbs. There is a cash discount of 2½ per cent., being 16 cents, leaving the net price $6.34 per 100 lbs. Let us ascertain what that sugar would have cost at New York under the Cartwright tariff. The net price would be $3.43. To that amount must be added $1.86 duty, making the amount $5.89. In other words, we would be able to obtain granulated sugar at $1 05 per 100 lbs. less than at the present time from New York. In making such a statement gentlemen sometimes remark that it can make no difference how we raise the revenue as we have to raise a certain amount, and if we did not have a high tariff on this article it would have to be increased on something else. The point to which I desire to draw attention to is, that while we would under the Cartwright tariff obtain granulated sugar at $1.05 per 100 lbs. less than under the present tariff, actually less duty goes into the revenue of the country by the present tariff than there was under the Cartwright tariff, as I will establish very clearly. The duty derived from 100 lbs. of sugar brought in for refining purposes is, according to the Finance Minister himself, $1.60 per 100 lbs. Now then it takes twelve and a half pounds extra of raw sugar to make 100 lbs. granulated, and therefore you must add one-eighth more to the duty. That makes 20 cents or altogether $1.80 as the duty which goes into the Treasury under the tariff now in force, on the sugar which would make 100 lbs. granulated, while I have pointed out that under the Cartwright tariff $1.86 would go into the public Treasury; so that you have a loss of 6 cents per 100 lbs. in revenue, or a loss of $1.05 per 100 lbs. in the consumption of sugar. Now, what does that amount to? The importations of sugar amount in round numbers to 200,000,000 lbs., or equal in granulated to 175,000,000 lbs. Let us call the $1.05 the even dollar, or 1 cent a pound, and that on 175,000,000 lbs. would be equal to $1,750,000. That is a serious loss, I submit, if we are really losing it, but when we are dealing in millions the people do not understand what we are talking about. Therefore it is well that we should bring it down to their comprehension, and I know of no way in which we could do that better than by the way in which hon. gentlemen opposite are in the habit of doing, in pointing to the benefits which we are supposed to derive by this exorbitant rate of protection, from the fact that we are giving employment to a certain number of men in our own country. That is true, and I do not want to close the refineries or drive workingmen out of the country. But I want to ask the House and the country if we are not paying too much for these men, and if there is not a way of getting them cheaper. According to the census of 1881, we had then four sugar refineries in the Dominion, employing 723 hands, and their yearly wages was $363,000, or, in other words, about $500 per hand. Since that time another refinery has been opened in Halifax, and therefore we will raise the number of hands from 723 to 1,000, as the result of sugar refineries being established in our midst. Now, what would $1,750,000 do for 1,000 men? It would pay every man of them $500 to do nothing, to be in the country and consume the eggs, the butter, and confer all the other blessings which they are supposed to confer on us. That would amount to $500,000, and we would have left $1,250,000 with which we could pay for a house and lot for each family at $1,250, and give it to them, and we could repeat the operation every year. And the amount, as I have shown to you, going into the Treasury by way of duty, is still less. Now, it will not do for hon. gentlemen to answer that in a general way, by saying that sugar is cheaper now than ever. That is an argument too silly—if I may use the expression—for any gentleman to use in this House. I might reply by saying that barley never was cheaper than it is to-day. Did the duty on barley bring the price down? Wheat never was cheaper than it is to-day, but did the duty on wheat reduce the price? If it did, hon. gentlemen are responsible for a great loss of money to the country. No, Sir, that style of argument will not do. It is a question of values and quotations, and it must be met on these points. I ask the hon. gentleman to meet them and to prove either that the quotations I have given or the deductions I have drawn from them are not correct. But it is sometimes said, as was said by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), who understands this question pretty well, that it is not fair to take granulated sugars because they do not comprise by any means the largest bulk of the sugars which were dealt with in this country, and if you take yellows it would not be the case. I submit that you have to take the granulated basis to have a standard, because, generally speaking, yellows are nondescript, and you cannot get them equal. But even if you take the yellows, I will give them figures from actual transactions given to me by one of the largest wholesale grocery firms in the west, and if it is any satisfaction to hon. gentlemen opposite, I may tell them that every member of the firm to which I refer is a staunch Conservative. Now, here are the figures which they have sent, of an actual transaction which took place since the tariff resolutions were moved by the hon. Finance Minister. They have an importation from Porto Rico, and the value of the importation from there was $1,556. They had to pay on that a duty of $1,657, or 105 per cent. People sometimes wonder when you tell them that owing to the duty on sugar they have to pay $1 for sugar which should only cost them 50 cents, but in this actual transaction, as I have said, the duty actually amounted to 105 per cent. Let us take it again on yellow sugars, if you will, that might come from England, and I take it on actual samples of my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Gunn). On this sample the price was 12s. 9d. per 112 lbs., or say $2.80 per 100 lbs. Add the duty paid by the refiner, $1.60 per 100 lbs. and you have $4.40, and that sugar is sold in Montreal at $5.25, or 85 cents per 100 lbs. more than the English yellow. If you take off 10 cents per 100 lbs. for freight, though in many cases you can lay sugar down from England almost as cheaply as from Montreal—but take off 10 cents, and you have a loss of 75 cents on every 100 lbs. This would amount, on the 200,000,000 lbs. which we consume—and in this case there is no waste—$1,500,000, which we pay more than we need to. Allowing five to a family, this would give 3,000 families $500 per annum each to do nothing except to live in this country in idleness and make a home market. In other words, you could have a city of 15,000 souls doing nothing out of this $1,500,000. I give the figures of an actual transaction; there may be weak points in the argument, but I give them in all sincerity, and nobody will rejoice more than I if they can be proved to be wrong. I invite the Minister to do so, and if he cannot, I hold it is our duty to bring the facts before the country, and to appeal to the people, not to stamp out this industry, but to say that no such excessive burdens should be laid on the people on an article of such prime necessity as the one now under discussion.

Mr. McLELAN. I shall only say a few words in reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. He has given the quotations for refined sugar in New York and in Canada. The hon. gentleman quotes refined at $6.25 in New York, and $6.34 in Montreal; so that at the hon. gentleman's own figures, the Canadian consumer is not paying more than 9 cents per 100 lbs. for his sugar more than the consumer in the United States. The hon. gentleman made a calculation on the supposition that the price of sugar to-day is the same as it was under the Cartwright tariff.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, I am applying the Cartwright tariff to present prices to show how it would work if it were in force now.

Mr. McLELAN. But the ad valorem Cartwright tariff, applied to sugar that was double in value, gave a very much higher duty. At all events, the proof of the tariff is in the working of it. The following statement will show the state of our importations, and the duty collected in 1877 and 1878, under the Cartwright tariff, as compared with the importations since 1881, under the National Policy :—

—	Quantity.	Value.	Amount of Duty.	Duty per 100 lbs.
	Lbs.	$	$	$ cts.
1877	94,509,009	5,147,712	2,208,646	2 33
1878	105,215,279	5,982,078	2,515,656	2 39
1881	136,406,513	5,110,993	2,459,142	1 80
1882	135,329,697	4,846,006	2,299,762	1 69
1883	152,729,569	5,091,530	2,467,731	1 61
1884	173,742,477	5,509,429	2,609,609	1 50
1885	200,011,541	5,100,478	2,544,921	1 27

Now, the House will observe that in 1885 we imported 200,000,000 lbs. of sugar against 94,000,000 in 1877, while in 1885 we collected only $300,000 of duty more than we did in 1877; so that the decline in the price of sugar has lessened the tax from $2.30 per 100 lbs. in 1878, under the Cartwright tariff, to $1.27 per 100 lbs. under the National Policy in 1885. These two facts, taken in connection with the hon. gentleman's own figures show a difference of only 9 cents between the price at Montreal and the price at New York, prove that the National Policy is not very burdensome, and is not taxing the sugar of the country as much as the Cartwright tariff did.

Mr. GUNN. The duty on sugar imported into New York is one-half a cent a pound more than on the sugar imported into Canada, and yet the sugar is about the same price in the two places, so that the statement of the Finance Minister proves nothing. The duty on the 200,000,000 lbs. of sugar imported last year, at an average of $1.27½ per 100 lbs., amounted $2,550,000; the new tariff at $1.60 per 100 lbs. will produce a duty of $3,200,000, an increase of duty of $650,000. The price of granulated sugar in Montreal on the 30th of March last was 6½ cts per lb., less 2½ per cent. discount; the price of granulated in New York on the same date was 6¼ cents per lb., less ½ per cent. discount. The value at these rates of 175,000,000 lbs. of granulated, the equivalent of the 200,000,000 lbs. imported, would be at Montreal $11,090,625; and the value at New York at 6¼ cents per lb, less ½ per cent. discount and less $2.79 cents drawback, is $3.43 cents in bond; add our new duty of 35 per cent. and 1½ cents per lb., plus 7½ per cent, amounting to $2.90, making a total of 6·33 cents, giving a total value of $11,033,333, or $57,292 less than the price at Montreal. But instead of getting a duty of $3,200,000, you would get a duty of $5,075,000, a gain of $1,875,000. If you gained the duty as well as the reduction in price, there would be a gain to the country of $1,982,281, almost $2,000,000, which is similar to the conclusion of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson). But you refuse this duty of $5,075,000 by prohibiting American sugar, you ignore the drawback, and you claim the duty on the long price, that is the price of the sugar coming in—35 per cent. on the long price, plus 1½ cents per lb., and 7½ per cent. additional duty, making a duty of 3·97 cents, almost 4 cents per lb., on 175,000,000 of granulated gives $6,947,000, almost $7,000,000 or $3,800,000, being 125 per cent. more than will be collected. This is from the wholesale or importing point of view, and it shows a loss of, within a fraction, of $2,000,000. Take, however, another view. Take the cost to the consumer, the housekeeper, the taxpayer. The immigrant from Europe is amazed to find sugar so dear in this country, and is puzzled to know why it should cost almost double what it costs at home, in the Old Country. In England the retail cost of brown sugar is 1½d. or 3 cents; here he must pay 5½ to 6 cents. In England the retail price of white sugar is 2d. or 4 cents, while here he must pay 6¾ cents to 7 cents, or an average of 2¾ cents more than in England, making on the 200,000,000 lbs. of sugar consumed in this country a loss of $5,500,000 to the consumer, or, deducting the duty of $3,200,000, a tax of $2,300,000 goes to the refiner. The immigrant is puzzled to know why he cannot get his sugar at 3 cents or 4 cents, and he will be told the Government tax for Customs is 1⅝ cents per pound, making brown sugar 1½ cents dearer, and white sugar 1⅞ cents dearer. That makes the price of yellow 4½ cents, and of the white 5¾ cents, adding the duty to the English price. Where does the rest go? It is farmed out like the taxes in Turkey; it goes into second hands whose share is 1⅛ cents; or, on the quantity consumed, $2,250,000. There is another feature of this new tariff. In the proposed tariff, we say 15 per cent. may be brought in by the refiners over No. 14 and may be entered by the polariscopic test. At a test of 92, that would be a duty of $1.73 per 100 lbs.; 15 per cent of the entire consumption is equal to 30,000,000 lbs., and at the rate of $1.73 per 100 lbs. that would give $519,000. The rate on similar sugar to other importers is 35 per cent. and 1½ cents per pound, making a cost of 3½ per cent., or equal to $2.73 per 100 lbs., amounting to $819,000. This, therefore, gives 1 cent more duty to be paid by the importer than by the refiner, or an increase of $300,000. If we compare the enormous protection given to sugar, as compared to the protection given to other things, in which labor is more employed, we will find that the refining industry is protected beyond all reason. Take the case of locomotives built at Kingston, the constituency I have the honor to represent. A locomotive costs on an average $7,500; the duty imposed is about $750 or that much protection. The labor in getting out a locomotive is 50 per cent. of the outturn, or $3,750 in value, so that this labor value of $3,750 has a protection of $750 or 20 per cent. The cost of a locomotive in the United States now is $6,000, and the duty is 25 per cent., or $1,500. Compare this with the protection given to sugar, at 6 cents a pound, it would take 125,000 lbs. of sugar to equal $7,500, the price of a locomotive. The duty on that at $1.60, which is a little higher than the Department expects to get—but I will give them the full benefit of the tariff and it may be produced at that, if properly tested—would be $2,000. The duty on the same quantity of American sugar at 4 cents would be $5,000, or, at the exact rate of $3.96, the actual duty would be $4,950. Now the labor employed in the refining of sugar is not more than 10 per cent. of the output; that is, $750 on an output of $7,500. This gives a protection to labor in the sugar refineries of 400 per cent, or twenty times that given to labor in locomotive works. Our locomotive works have been closed up for the last two years, lying idle, at Kingston, but they have resumed work very recently to the extent of one-third of their capacity, and this may be said in their favor, that, besides employing so large a percentage of labor, they furnish a school in which young men will learn the highest mechanics, and after four years apprenticeship will go out and be able to earn high wages. I cannot understand, therefore, why the Government should not protect such works, if they are to carry out their policy of protection, more especially as this is an article which can well stand the tax, while the other article is an article of consumption which should not be taxed.

On resolution 5, export duty on logs.

Mr. McLELAN. I propose to amend this by striking out after "spruce logs, $3," and inserting "$1 per thousand feet," being the same duty as at present. In pine logs, I propose to strike out the figure "$3" and insert "$2." And I propose to amend the proviso that the Government may, by an Order in Council, at any time, increase the duty or strike it off. This is to enable us to meet circumstances that may arise in our relations with other countries in this connection.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman has probably done wisely under all the circumstances in abandoning the proposition to increase the duty to $3 a thousand on pine logs, and I have no objection to offer to his suggestion for reducing that, but I doubt very much the propriety of the Government retaining in their hands the power, without the consent of this House, to increase the duties. That appears to me a very objectionable proposition, and against that I must protest. No doubt the hon. gentleman, like many other hon. gentlemen in this House, has received very strong remonstrances from the trade and those concerned in it as to the effect of his proposed legislation, which I took occasion to tell him at the time was dangerous; and I am glad to see that the Government have on second thoughts, wisely I think, abandoned their proposition in Parliament. I trust they will be still wiser, and abandon their proposition in part to keep in their hands the somewhat unconstitutional and certainly unusual power of increasing the export tax on these articles. That, if done at all, should be done, I contend, by consent of Parliament, and is not a fit and proper thing to depute to the Executive.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, but, Mr. Speaker, the proposition as laid before the House originally was that the duty on pine logs should be $3, and the House would no doubt have sanctioned that. For reasons which the hon. gentleman no doubt quite appreciated, the policy of the Government is, on second thoughts, as the hon. gentleman says, to make it $2. The $2 per thousand duty on pine logs is not at all a protection against our forests being swept away and the logs being carried off from our own mills to another country. There is a possibility of restrictive legislation elsewhere in this regard, and it is well to leave us the power the House would have given us originally to levy the tax.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the House has not given the power. The hon. gentleman proposes to take it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am very much gratified that the Government have seen fit to reduce the export duty to $2 per thousand, a sum equivalent to the American import duty upon lumber. I do not think the Americans can object to that rate of duty. One duty equalises the other. Logs are introduced into the United States free of duty and lumber is charged a duty of $2 per thousand, placing Canadian lumber at a disadvantage of $2 per thousand, so that this export duty on sawlogs will equalise it. The Government have acted wisely, and I have no doubt they have received from the trade in nearly all parts of the Dominion representations as to the fear entertained by lumbermen that the imposition of a duty of $3 might be considered a discriminating duty and might lead to trouble. It is always considered inadvisable to fool with the heels of a mule, particularly if you are doing it with a stick, and we might have realised the truth of that adage if we had carried out what was originally proposed. The hon. the First Minister says that the duty of $2 is not a protection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not sufficient.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am unable to agree with the hon. gentleman in that respect. The fact is that practically we have no trade in the export of sawlogs at the present moment. The total exportation of pine sawlogs last year was 380,000 feet, and the duty collected was $380. That practically is no trade at all. The total revenue from export duties was $12,305. This was largely derived from spruce, to the extent of $11,165. From pine, $380 was received, and $756 from shingle bolts. Now, the fear entertained by our lumbermen that sawlogs would be exported in great quantities is, I think, a groundless one. Under a $1 per thousand export duty, which has been the duty for many years, I think since 1879, the trade has only assumed the proportions calling for an exportation of 350,000 feet, yielding a revenue last year of $380. It is true there have been representations made to the Government, no doubt, that Michigan parties were engaging in the business of exporting pine logs. I am aware that there is one firm, and one firm only, that has embarked in that business, the firm of Emery Bros., of Towas, Michigan, and with them or with others this is purely an experiment, and I believe it will be a disastrous experiment. My knowledge is a practical knowledge in regard to towing timber, extending over a period of twenty-five years, and I know that the towing of short logs is an exceedingly hazardous business. Even on short routes of forty or forty-five miles in Michigan great losses are sustained, and whoever attempts to tow short logs across the Georgian Bay, up Lake Huron, and up Saginaw Bay, I believe will be content to retire from the business and not incur the losses which would be incurred in more than one season. I do not believe that the business will grow to anything at all, and I think it will be time enough to impose a retaliatory duty when we see that it has attained large proportions.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What about the long timber?

Mr. CHARLTON. The towing of long timber is an entirely different business from the towing of sawlogs. Trade in long timber is done to the extent of about 40,000,000 feet a year from the lower end of Lake Erie, and probably 25,000,000 feet from Ohio ports. It may be carried on by the same party, as the lumber trade is a profitable and legitimate trade, and does not interfere at all with the lumber trade. It is sold in New York at $3 per thousand more in the log than the logs would bring at the same spot. It is used pretty much for the same purpose as our square timber. Large bills are procured from Michigan at lower rates than it can be from this class of timber. I think it would be well to exempt from the operation of these duties timber over 50 feet, because that is not for the purpose of being sawed into lumber, and will not interfere with the operations of our saw mills. I place that limit, because it might be possible to take timber 32 feet in length, which would make two saw logs, and evade the law by cutting it into sawlogs after it reached the other side; but timber of 50 feet and upwards costs so much more to handle and put into the water, that there is no fear of its being used in that way. It would cost $2 a thousand more to put it into the water.

Mr. MITCHELL. And it is much more valuable.

Mr. CHARLTON. And it is much more valuable, so that its disposition would not interfere with the safeguards we seek to establish for the prevention of the export of logs to American mills to be converted into ordinary merchantable lumber there. The Minister, I think, ought in any event to change the phraseology here from logs to sawlogs, because a mast, spar, or stick of timber for piling is a log, though not a saw-log, and it will give rise to confusion in the interpretation of the Act. One collector may hold that a raft of masts or spars may be logs. Another collector may hold that, if it is not designed to be converted into lumber, it is not. I find that the exportation of masts and spars last year was considerable, but very small from Ontario. From Ontario the exportation was only six pieces; from Quebec, 655 pieces; from Nova Scotia, 15,500 pieces; from New Brunswick, 109 pieces, and from British Columbia, 1,043 pieces. This was not liable to export duty under the law, and no export duty was collected, but a collector might interpret the law, which reads that an export duty shall be levied upon logs, so that masts and spars might be liable to that duty, and it might be collected. I know that in past years duties have been collected. I myself have paid export duties upon masts and spars under the arbitrary ruling of the collector, and it was not worth while to appeal to the Customs authorities to get the mistake rectified. I suggest that that change be made at all events. If the Minister does not see fit to exempt timber of fifty feet and upwards, I suggest that the words "sawlogs" be used in place of "logs," so that masts, spars and timbers not designed for sawing, would be exempt from the operation of the duty. I have very serious doubts about the propriety of the Government reserving to themselves the power by Order in Council to raise this duty. It would be a grave step to take, and I think they had better consult this House before doing so. It is not necessary. I do not think in the next twelve months there will be any increase in this trade. I doubt whether the trade of towing on the lakes ever assume proportions to justify the alarm that exists among many lumbermen. It will be time to deal with this question when we see our timber leaving this country to go to American mills. In the meantime the reservation of this power may be held to be a menace, and I am throughly satisfied that the imposition of an export duty of $3, 50 per cent. greater than the American import duty, would produce bad consequences. Congress at present is in an ugly and vindictive mood, and they would adopt a retaliatory policy on any pretext that might be offered them. We have reason to look with apprehension on the proposition to impose this duty, fearing it may lead to retaliation by the imposition of $3 per thousand upon lumber, and possibly a duty of $4. I think the Government had better drop that proposition to retain power by Order in Council to advance these duties. The necessity for the advance of these duties is not going to arise this year. The amount of business that is going to be done, even if this party does engage in the towing of logs from Michigan, will be insignificant. None can be put in until the following winter, and by that time we will know better the condition of things, the condition of trade, and the Government will understand better whether it is likely to be necessary to impose this additional duty.

Mr. McLELAN. The Customs Department informs me that some time ago the word "sawlogs" was used. They found great difficulty, and asked the House a year or two ago to change it to the word "logs," and, with the advice of the Customs, I adopted that term.

Mr. DAWSON. No doubt the duty on logs may have the effect of protecting Canadian logs and leading to the construction of saw mills on Canadian territory. But there is another subject to which I wish to draw attention. Now, in our section of the country, in the western part of Algoma, people import rough lumber from the United States, rough sawn lumber, and they import the higher grades of that in order to dress it and saw it up, and all the manufacturing is done on our side. This ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. on that renders it equivalent to 25 per cent. to them by the time they saw it. These men who are engaged in the lumber trade have written to me on the subject, and they say this:

"On American lumber coming into Canada, the duty is 20 per cent. ad valorem, which largely exists as a tax on Canadian lumber."

And they suggest:

"We want a clause inserted in the Canadian Customs tariff to equalise the duty, and it should run as follows: Leaving the balance of the tariff relative to lumber in full force as it is, sawed boards, planks, deals and other lumber of white pine, and not elsewhere specified, $2 per thousand feet, board measure; but when lumber of any sort is planed or finished in any way, then there shall be levied and paid, in addition to the rates levied for rough or unfinished lumber, the sum of 50 cents per thousand feet, board measure, for each side so planed or finished, and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per thousand feet, and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $3 per thousand feet."

That I think would be a very fair arrangement. It would enable people there to dress rough lumber from the United States and be a great advantage to the mills we have on our side, without, I think, doing any harm.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad the Government have decided not to increase the duty upon spruce logs, but I regret they have not seen their way clear to abolish it altogether. As I pointed out the other evening, this duty bears entirely upon the Province from which I come. The whole of the duty paid last year came from the Province of Quebec, and anybody who is familiar with the border between Quebec and the New England States must be aware that a great many logs have been exported thence without paying duty. People who have bought logs in our country have taken them over into the United States and have not paid the duty, but in consequence of their being obliged to pay a duty, were they found out, they have paid our people to cut these logs on their farms, in the neighborhood of the border, the lower prices which was necessitated by the fact that they have to pay the duty. The consequence is that while our farmers clearing up land in that portion of the country, have obtained the less price which the duty necessitates, the Government of the country have not obtained that duty. We know that the sum of $49,000 obtained from spruce logs which according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, came from exports last year from the Province of Quebec, is absurdly below the mark, as was pointed by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) the other evening. It is evident that there must be some great blunder either in the returns or in the printing of the blue book, and I have no reason to believe it was in the printing, because I know that the logs are not very carefully examined or tested, and I believe that a large number indeed are carried across the border without paying duty. This is a matter which bears entirely upon the people who cut the logs. The men who are clearing up the land and trying to make farms in that new country get just so much less for the logs they have to sell and they are taxed for the benefit, so far as I can see, of nobody at all. The Government of this country does not obtain the revenue; the lumbermen here are not benefited, because it is necessary, from the relative position of the land and the mills, that they shall go across the border and not be sawed up on our side of the line. I think, therefore, this tax is a burdensome one, bearing especially upon a comparatively poor section of the community, and which ought to be abolished.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press the House to support his amendment. It is extremely objectionable to propose that the Executive should be entrusted with the power of increasing the duties. It is so far as I know unprecedented and it is certainly very objectionable. It is not, as the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has said, a reservation of power, it is a proposal to grant this power to the Executive. Then, there is no special reason for it in this case. We are not very far removed from the end of one Session to the beginning of another. If circumstances at any particular time require an increase of this duty or the creation of any other duty it is not very long to wait till Parliament will meet and the representatives of the people be called together to decide whether a duty should be curtailed or increased. I trust, therefore, the hon. gentleman after making certain improvements in the proposition submitted to the House will not accompany those improvements with a proposition which is objectionable from a constitutional point of view and from every other point of view, for I agree with the hon. gentleman, that so far from this being advantageous in a political point of view, it is more likely to be disadvantageous than otherwise.

Mr. HESSON. I hope the Government will not reduce the duty to the old standard of $1. Our forests are now being denuded and destroyed, and our logs are being carried away. I read letters the other evening that went to prove that this was the case and that lumberers are building large barges to take lumber over to Bay City and Saginaw.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is all bosh.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman has no right to say so. The evidence came from responsible gentlemen residing in the country. They are much interested in preventing this state of things continuing, and they have taken the trouble of making it known to me. I know it is not all bosh. It is a very serious matter, and the Government should not permit it to continue. We are entitled to put as much export duty on sawlogs as the Americans put on our lumber. We are doing a gross injustice to those gentlemen who have erected mills here to permit people to come here and buy timber limits and cut the logs and float them down Georgian Bay or Lake Huron and take them to the American market. They only pay $1 per thousand on logs measured in the water, when they are very indifferently measured, and if we export 1,000 feet of boards they charge us $2. It is a gross injustice. I hope the Government will not alter their policy. I should be very sorry if a gentleman, and especially one interested in the lumber trade in the Western States, in Michigan, by favoring the exportation of sawlogs in a rough state and thus destroying our milling interest and damaging the lumbering interests of the country as well, should succeed in its proposition.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to offer a personal explanation as I have been personally alluded to. I may be permitted to say in the first place that I used an expression that is not strictly parliamentary, and I retract it. The hon. gentleman alluded to me as a party engaged in lumbering in Michigan and consequently interested in having an export duty on logs. I am happy to inform my hon. friend that my interests in Michigan have ceased, that I am closing out my business there, and that I have acquired limits in Canada, and that it was from the standpoint of a Canadian lumberman engaged in Canada that I specially advocated freedom from duty. That being my position I felt very apprehensive of the effect on the Canadian lumber trade of the proposition made by the Government when these resolutions were submitted. I think the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) is also under misapprehension with regard to the duty. The Finance Minister does not propose to reduce the duty to $1, but to $2, but on spruce only, which is a very inferior class of timber, it is proposed that the duty should be put back at $1 per thousand.

Resolution, as amended, concurred in.

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg to move that "logs" be struck out and "sawlogs" inserted instead. Unless this be done, sawlogs, masts and piling will be liable to the export duty under this law, and those have been classed under the denomination of logs for a number of years past.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Finance will surely give us some explanation before he asks us to follow an unconstitutional course in regard to giving the Government the power to impose duties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I disagree with the hon. gentleman that there is anything unconstitutional in the House giving certain powers by way of delegation to the Executive. It is to be remembered that the committee of the whole House has already agreed to impose a duty of $3 per thousand. On consideration, the Government have decided to recommend the House to reduce that to $1, but they ask the House to give them power to increase it to $3 should they think it in the public interest to do so. It may be very much in the public interest to have that power before Parliament meets again. It cannot be in any sense by way of menace to anybody, because the same resolution that gives power to impose $2 gives special power to the Government to take the duty away, should they see fit. Should trade negotiations result in giving us free access to other markets this might be done. That is not unconstitutional. Parliament has given the Government power to take off duty and Parliament is asked to give them power to increase the duty to what has been already voted by Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MILLS. I think the hon. gentleman is laying down a doctrine which is wholly unconstitutional. The power of taxation is different from any other power sanctioned by Parliament. The hon. gentleman proposes that Parliament shall give the Government that delegated power which is only given to Parliament to raise taxes.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it the intention of the Government to impose an extra duty on masts, spars and piles?

Mr. McLELAN. The wording is the same as in the old Act, and I do not know that there have been any complaints of hardship.

Mr. CHARLTON. Under the same wording, spars have gone out free of duty in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, while a duty has been charged in Ontario. There has been confusion in the interpretation and application of the law, and it is to remedy that difficulty that I ask that we should define what the law is. Now masts, spars or piles are not sawlogs, and this duty is to prevent the exportation of sawlogs for the use of American mills. Masts are not exported to be used in mills but on vessels; so with spars, while piles are exported for the purpose of constructing docks and wharves. I hold that we should define what lumber is and not leave the law open to the varying construction of inspectors, as has hitherto been the case.

Mr. SPROULE. They even take pine trees the full length, and when they arrive at their destination, they are cut into lumber.

Mr. BLAKE. I move to strike out so much of the amendment as gives power to the Governor in Council to increase the duty.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will ask the Finance Minister what is the reason for increasing the duty on shingle bolts. This is a class of wood that is made up by the poorer settlers from refuse pine, and in my own section the duty is a very great hardship. I think the imposition of the duty is an error, and I cannot see why it should be increased, as the exportation was only 756 cords.

Mr. McLELAN. Many of the shingle mills near the border have been deserted, and the wood for them taken over in boats to the United States and manufactured there.

Mr. SPROULE. Along the Manitoulin Island, they take away both cedar and pine for shingles in boat loads to the other side.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is a case of peculiar hardship to a poor settler, who wants to buy a barrel of flour, that he should not take these refuse pieces of pine log and convert them into shingle wood and get the highest price he can. It seems to me that this is getting protection pretty near the mud sill.

Mr. SPROULE. Some parties have contemplated building shingle mills, and after commencing operations they have stopped, because the shingle bolts were taken to the American side, and they were inclined to believe that they could not get supplies for any length of time.

Resolutions concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

CUSTOMS ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No 148) further to amend the Acts relating to Duties of Customs and the importation or exportation of goods into or from Canada.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUBSTITUTES FOR BUTTER.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 149) to prohibit the manufacture and sale of substitutes for butter.

Bill read the first time.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know what is in the Bill, but I hope it does not prohibit the importation of all substitutes for butter. The title is rather wide. There are a good many very wholesome substitutes for butter.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wonder if it would cover molasses. Because in my part of the country the people use a good deal of it as a substitute for butter.

Title changed by adding after "sale of" the word "certain."

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 132) respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery be concurred in. He said: The amendment is not a substantial one. Section 12 of the Bill provides that every year each Department and each House of Parliament shall make a statement of the printing and stationery it requires. The 13th section provides that the Minister shall report to the Council the quantities required with the estimates of cost; and the Senate has added a provision, to preserve its privileges, that a report shall be made of the quantities as ordered by each House of Parliament.

Mr. TROW. I move that the following words be inserted in place of the words inserted by the Senate:—

In regard to the Stationery Departments of both Houses of Parliament, this Act shall not apply; such Departments shall be controlled by the members of each House respectively.

This amendment is merely to leave the purchase of paper as it was formerly in the hands of the members of Parliament. The selections are made in the old country; they are not made here. Firms here are not required to manufacture the articles required.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They are, and the contract is given to them. I have only to say that this amendment would knock the Bill to pieces. The position which my hon. friend embodies in the amendment has been fought against in England, and the Joint Committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons, in 1885, were strong in their recommendation that all the stationery should be controlled by the controller of stationery, and that his orders should be followed in regard to the quantity, quality and variety of the stationery required. I have not put that provision into this Bill, leaving both Houses to control their own stationery.

Mr. MITCHELL. While on this subject, I wish to say that I think the quality of the stationery we have been getting during the last few years has been extremely bad, and I have no doubt that, under the improved system, we shall get a better quality for the same money.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If it has been so, it is our own fault. If every year a sub-committee of members, knowing what stationery is, were appointed to make a selection of stationery as to quality and variety, I believe it could be obtained both cheaper and better than it is at present.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think that the stationery supply to the Senate and House of Commons is quite sufficient without giving us these trunks. I do not know what is done in other countries, but the unlimited supply of stationery given hon. members during the Session does away with the necessity of giving them a trunk full to bring home and distribute in their neighborhood.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I am glad to see I have succeeded in making one convert.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman says he does not know what is done in other countries. If he did, he would make very little objection on the score of economy. In the United States, each representative gets a writing desk, a dozen gold pens, two dozen knives, about $100 worth of paper and several other perquisites.

Amendment negatived, and Senate amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MILLS. I regret I have not had an opportunity of submitting to the House the motion I proposed to submit at an earlier period, so that there would be ample opportunity to discuss the important question relating to the administration of affairs in the North-West. I cannot hope, at this hour of the evening or this period of the Session, even to give the most scanty outline of the views I entertain of the policy which hon. gentlemen opposite have pursued for some years in the administration of affairs in the North-West. I shall content myself with giving a brief review of a few of the more important features connected with the administration of the Government. These matters are, no doubt, of very great importance, and I propose to ask the House to pronounce a judgment on the motion it put in your hands. I do not expect the judgment will be such as the facts warrant, but notwithstanding that, it is important, with the view of fairly placing before the country the issues that exist between hon. gentlemen on this side and on that, that I should take this course. In my opinion there have been many cases of exhibitions of incapacity, negligence and mismanagement in the conduct of affairs in the North-West Territories, and I think it is important these should be brought fairly before the country at the earliest opportunity, so that the country may be enabled to judge of the incompetency of the present Administration. We know that it is admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite that the North-West Territories are fertile, that the country is well watered, that the climate, although rigorous in the winter season, is, on the whole, healthful, but nevertheless there has not been made, in return for the enormous expenditure in that country during the past eight years, that progress in its settlement which so large an expenditure of public money ought to have brought about. The hon. gentleman who leads the Government told us, in 1880, that if it had not been for the change that took place in 1873 by the formation of the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), the North-West country would have been in a very different condition from that in which it then was. I am not going to discuss the merits or the demerits of the policy of the Mackenzie Government. I have not the time, nor is it necessary to do so; but I propose to point out the inadequate results which have followed the administration of this Government. Mr. Wells, the American statistician, has stated that the whole wealth of the United States is not more than the industry of the population produces in four years. The same statement might be made with regard to this country, but the results have not borne out that calculation. The First Minister, in 1880, gave us his views as to what was likely to be accomplished by 1890, through the course he had marked out. The leader of the Opposition said on that occasion that this country had not made the same progress in population as the neighboring Republic, and the First Minister replied that the reason was, we had not adopted a protective tariff and a railway policy, and that by the adoption of both the same satisfactory results which had been obtained in the United States, would be exhibited in this country. He said that instead of this country showing a progress during ten years of 13 per cent. of population, it would show, as did the United States, a progress of 22 per cent. He also told us that at that time, in 1879, there were going into the North-West Territory about 20,000 people, and that the report of the Minister of Agriculture, who estimated the number at 12,000, was inaccurate, that the number estimated was ridiculously small, because the Minister of Agriculture had not taken into consideration the large number which had crossed into the country from various points in other ways than by rail. He told us the population of the North-West Territory was greater than the Minister of Agriculture had shown it to be, and he expressed the confident expectation that there were 25,000 people going in that year, but he would put the figure at the ridiculously small amount of 25,000. He further stated that the number of people going into the North-West Territories would show a yearly average of about 5,000 for the years following. According, therefore, to the statement made by the hon. gentleman at that time, the population in the North-West Territories should, by 1890, amount to 75,000 at least. The hon. gentleman also said there was no danger of the lands of the North-West Territories passing into the hands of speculators, because the power of establishing municipal institutions and imposing taxes would have the effect of transfering the property that might be held by speculators into the hands of bonâ fide owners at an early day, and the Government therefore did not think it necessary to take any precautions to prevent a large portion of the territory passing into the lands of private owners for purposes purely speculative. The hon. gentleman also told the House of the results he expected to derive from the policy he was then pursuing. He said that by the year 1890 the amount of cash to be realised by the sale of railway lands would be $16,272,000; by pre-emptions, $16,440,000; and by other sales, $38,533,000; so that, by 1890, the country would derive cash from the sales of land $71,305,000. The hon gentleman assumed that the cost of surveys would be $2,000,000 and the cost of management of the lands $400,000 more during that period. So that the country would have a net sum in cash, to apply in diminution of the obligations that were about to be incurred in the course the Government were pursuing, of $69,000,000, so that by the year 1890 the $75,000,000 which the hon. gentleman estimated the Canadian Pacific Railway would cost would be reduced to the sum of $6,000,000. Then the hon. gentleman, according to the statement he made, showed a hope that by this year the population that would go in from without to that country would number 308,000, and that during the next four years 295,000 would be added to that number, so that by 1890 the hon. gentleman counted upon an addition to the existing population and the natural increase of that existing population of 600,000. In fact, the pictures which the hon. gentleman drew of the future of the North-West Territory were something like those found in the advertisements along the Missouri River in the story of Mark Tapley and Martin Chuzzlewit. What is the actual cost of surveys up to this moment? According to the reports the hon. gentleman has from time to time brought down, they amount to $4,000,000, and the net income from the sale of public lands is something like $500,000. Let us look at the cost that has been incurred in connection with the acquisition of the North-West Territories in order that we may see precisely what the hon. gentleman had marked out and expected to accomplish. There was in the first place the payment of $1,460,000 to the Hudson's Bay Company; there are the surveys and the management of lands, $4,000,000; the expense annually upon Indians in the North-West in the extinguishment of the Indian title that, under the management of the hon. gentleman, represents a capitalised sum of $25,000,000; the first rebellion, $1,000,000; the second rebellion, $4,750,000, the millions that might be charged to the North-West in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, representing altogether an annual charge something in excess of $4,000,000; and up to this moment the hon. gentleman by his management, by the policy he has pursued in the North-West Territories, has succeeded during eight years in securing a net sum of $500,000. The First Minister told us in 1880 that the lands were a sacred trust, that the Government intended to economise the resources of the North-West Territories, and to apply the funds derived from the sale of those lands to the extinguishment of the Canadian Pacific Railway debt and for the obliteration of those burdens that were incurred in connection with the acquisition of that territory. Well, let us ask how far the expectations of the First Minister have been realised. He, in fact, said to the people four or five years ago: In the North-West you have a great estate; put the management of that estate in our hands, give us a large sum of money to expend upon it, place $100,000,000—for that is what he has practically asked—at our disposal for the improvement of that estate, and we will manage it in such a way that in fifteen years we will wipe out the whole of the burden that has been incurred. In fact, the hon. gentleman assured us that there was to be no permanent burden incurred in connection with the acquisition of the North-West Territory. I wish to call the attention of the House to this fact—and I have briefly stated some of the more prominent points connected with the policy of the hon. gentleman—how large a portion of this expenditure has been altogether unnecessary. In fact, the greater portion of it is due to the mismanagement of the North-West affairs. Take, for instance, the case of surveys. The hon. gentleman has expended at least $3,000,000 more than was necessary for that purpose. If the rebellions are due to the misconduct, the mismanagement, the maladministration of public affairs, then there has been upwards of $5,000,000 upon that; and there has been, through the carelessness and indifference in the conduct of Indian affairs, an addition of $15,000,000 actually to the capitalised sum of that extent when fairly considered. Now, if we look at the surveys and at the sale of public lands, we will see how much out of all proportion the surveys have been to the actual requirements of the public service. Down to 1873, there were surveyed 4,700,000 acres, and there were disposed of as homesteads, by sale and pre emption, 212,000 acres. In 1874, 4,000,000 acres were surveyed, and 334,000 acres disposed of. In 1875, the surveys were 665,000 acres, and the sale 156,000 acres. In 1876, the surveys were 420,000 acres, and the sales 132,000 acres. In 1877, the surveys were 231,000 acres, and the sales 423,000 acres. In 1878, 306,000 acres were surveyed, and the sales were 709,000 acres. In 1879, 1,130,000 acres were surveyed, and the sales were 1,096,000 acres. In 1880, the hon. gentleman surveyed 4,472,000 acres, and sold 682,000 acres. In 1881, he surveyed upwards of 9,000,000 acres, and sold 1,000,000 acres. In 1882, he surveyed 9,460,000 acres, and sold 2,600,000 acres. In 1883, he surveyed 27,000,000 acres, and sold 1,831,000 acres. In 1884, he surveyed 6,400,000 acres and sold 1,000,000 acres. In 1885 he surveyed 39,000 acres and sold 481,000 acres. So that the hon. gentleman, up to the close of last year, surveyed, with what was surveyed during the period of his predecessors, nearly 70,000,000 acres, and he nominally disposed of less than 11,000,000 acres. When I say 11,000,000, that represents a very much larger area than the actual sales, for the hon. gentleman knows that there are a large number of homesteads taken up every year that are cancelled, and in fact the number of cancelled homesteads became so great that the hon. gentleman ceased to give those as portion of the report from the Department of the Interior. I find that, according to the reports from the Department of the Interior, the homesteads taken up cover an area of 5,193,000 acres, and yet it is no exaggeration to say, looking at the reports that have actually come to us in the few years in which reports of the cancellations were given, that 30 per cent. of this area at least has been cancelled. What are the facts? The hon. gentleman has surveyed a larger area of country than at the present rate of settlement would be occupied for the next sixty years. What I wish to call the attention of the House to is that this was altogether unnecessary, that the expense need not have been incurred; that the hon. gentleman, when he came into office, changed the whole plan of surveying the North-West Territories, and not only produced serious dissatisfaction amongst the settlers by the adoption of the policy he entered upon, but incurred a needless expenditure, and surveyed large areas of the country that will be required to be surveyed again before the country is settled. In fact, the interest upon the money spent on surveying will exceed the principal sum itself before those lands are occupied. The policy that was adopted by the hon. gentleman's predecessors in office, which was begun by Mr. Laird, was a system of triangulation and astronomical survey to fix the latitude and longitude, to establish the principle of meridian lines and base lines, and the various scattered settlements over the North-West Territories. If time would permit me, I could point out that in 1878 this work was done, that for the whole of the settlements upon the Saskatchewan River the latitude and longitude were settled in those two years, that traverse surveys were made, that plans of the settlement were sent to the Department as well as plans of survey, and that it was possible to survey, during the year 1879 and the year 1880, every foot of land that was in the possession of any squatter in the North-West Territories. I need only mention the fact that in 1877 this special survey was pressed on to Prince Albert, and the whole of that settlement was surveyed in accordance with that plan. The lots were made as wide as the convenience of the squatters required, and were made two miles in depth. In 1878 the St. Laurent settlement was surveyed, and the survey extended, according to the report of the surveyors, for twenty miles along the South Saskatchewan. It was begun by Mr. Aldous in September, 1878. Nine miles of that settlement was surveyed upon the plan of making the lots ten chains wide and two miles in depth. The remainder of that land was not surveyed that season, as there was not time to complete it, and the hon. gentleman, when he came in, applied the rectangular system to a great portion of the plans which gave rise to serious difficulties between the settlers on the banks of the Saskatchewan. If I had time I could read a report made by the same special surveying party who were engaged in 1877-78, and I could show beyond controversy that in every case the plan of survey was subordinate to the plan of settlement. Where the plan was with a view to river fronts, with lots of considerable depths and narrow frontage, this system was strictly adhered to. Sir, this plan of survey was adopted, and this work that was done enabled these hon. gentlemen, when they came into office, to complete the survey of all the settlements in the North-West Territory, which for years were neglected. In fact, if the hon. gentlemen had carried out the plan of surveying the settlement under the special survey plan, half a million acres of land of these settlements on the North Saskatchewan could have been surveyed. The House will get a better notion of it if I take a single case of the special survey party No. 4. I will pass over the other three, because I do not wish to trespass upon the indulgence of the House longer than necessary to state the facts connected with the neglect exhibited by the hon. gentlemen in the survey of the various settlements of the North-West Territory. Mr. Aldous, in his report of survey No. 4, says that he made a careful traverse of the river along which a careful survey would extend; and he did this the better to determine along which legal sub-divisions the line in the rear should be run so as to conform as near as possible to a uniform system of lots two miles deep. The report goes on to say:

"In every case where land was occupied and improved and there existed any dispute between the occupants of adjoining claims, I had them to agree together before me on some point which was to be established as their common boundary, in the majority of instances they requested me to decide between them. Their post was then planted where, under the circumstances of the case, I considered it best, divided their claims and they mutually agreed to it as their boundary line.

"When the land was unoccupied and unimproved, merely having been taken up I surveyed it in ten chain lots and entered the claimant's name for it on the plan, stating my opinion to them that such claims could at most merely give them a preferential right to purchase * * * On the 5th of September the survey of Prince Albert settlement was completed, and on the day following we moved to St. Laurent. This settlement extended along both sides of the South Saskatchewan River from its intersection with the 3rd principal meridian south to Gabriel's Crossing, a distance of over twenty miles. I saw that it would be impossible to make a complete survey this season, and therefore determined to work in that portion of the settlement where it was most immediately required.

"A careful instrumental traverse was first made of the river between the points before mentioned. Also a preliminary survey showing all the improvements from which it was evident that the most important part of the settlement lay on the east side of the river below Batoche's Crossing. Here I decided to commence work. I started from the 3rd principal meridian at the north-east corner of section 12, township 44, range 1, west, producing the section line west of the river. From this line the lots are laid out conforming as nearly as possible to 10 chains in width and two miles in depth, one mile north and eight miles south along the east side of the river. Road allowances being left as in the Prince Albert survey.

"Plans of these surveys accompany the report.

"The entire population of St. Laurent consists of French half-breeds, who, with few exceptions, live by buffalo hunting. They simply farm sufficient land to provide themselves with grain and vegetables for winter use. They nevertheless fully understand the advantage of securing land, being well aware that in a few years the buffalo will be exterminated, and that they will be compelled to turn their attention to agricultural pursuits.

Now, the surveyor goes on to state that he has run a base line out to Carrot River, and he recommends the survey of the settlement on Carrot River to the east to Prince Albert, and this same plan was adopted with regard to the settlement on the Saskatchewan. There is a report of the latitude and longitude, of the plan of settlement in the Department, and I ask the Minister to have brought here these plans of every one of these settlements that were sent to the office in the fall of 1878. We find that they also fixed the latitude and longitude of Battleford, that the work of making a special survey of that place was completed on the 8th October, 1878. Yet I find an address some four years later presented to His Excellency Lord Lorne, when he visited that place. Now, I ask the indulgence of the House while I read that address, to show how the people of these settlements regard the course that was pursued by the Government. The address of the people of Battleford is as follows:—

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY—

"We, the citizens of Battleford, wish to lay before you the following statement concerning land in this settlement and humbly pray that Your Excellency will cause the matter to be brought before your honorable Ministers at Ottawa, in the hope that more attention may be paid to a petition passing through Your Excellency's hands, than representations sent to the Department have hitherto received.

"Six years have passed away since the first settlement was made here by white men. The spring following such settlement the Government passed an Order in Council declaring a town site reserve of four square miles (or 10,240 acres) at the junction of the Battle and Saskatchewan Rivers. This was followed by a railway reserve of twenty miles on each side of this surveyed route of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which passes through Battleford. The town site reserve included land taken up by settlers above mentioned, and who are promised protection in these holdings by the Dominion Lands Act.

"Petitions have from time to time been sent to the Department requesting a survey and a settlement of the matter, but with no result. Some of these petitions have not even been acknowledged.

"Government buildings have been placed on said land and large portions of the claims enclosed for agricultural and other purposes by the officials, under authority, it is supposed, from the Department To such an extent has this been done on some of the claims that no ground has been left for the settler to farm. Surveyors have at different times wintered here, with full parties under pay, doing nothing, when they might have been blocking out townships and surveying the settlement. This was not done because the surveyors were under pay from the Indian branch, while the lands are another branch of the same Department. With due respect to Your Excellency, we suggest that carelessness or red tape should not be allowed to put the people of Canada to such unnecessary expense, nor the settlers of Battleford to such annoyance. Many good settlers have passed here to go further and fare worse, because the question of land was unsettled, and to-day we are without a mill because no one will risk the necessary expense to put a mill in a settlement where nobody knows how soon he may be ordered off by some of the numerous owners of land in the North-West.

"Your Excellency has doubtless noticed that the houses in Battleford are hardly such as might be expected in the capital of the North-West. The cause is the same, viz., that there is not title to land, and people will not put up expensive houses on land that is in dispute.

"A person would naturally suppose that having made a town site reserve at Battleford, having put up the buildings and located the capital here, having built barracks and filled them with police, the Government would survey the land, settle the disputed claims, and make an attempt to build upon their own town site. But no; having locked up the most advantageous location for a city in the North-West from sale and settlement, they refuse to sell the land themselves or to let any body else sell it and calmly see the settlements on either side of it flourish, but seem to hope that all enterprise here may be choked and Battleford returned to its previous condition as a rendezvous for Indians and buffalo.

"Appeals to the Department in person are met with the astonishing answer that if the railroad comes to Battleford, and the land is valuable, the Government will take it, but if it is not worth anything the settler can keep it.

"While surveys are being made all over the country for the Indians, white men cannot get even a civil answer from the Department. Why is this? Because the white men can be depended on to keep the peace, and the red men cannot.

* * * * "In conclusion, we humbly pray that your Excellency will kindly take an interest in our case, and by using the influence which your position gives and your abilities grace, end our trouble and confer a great boon upon a struggling community. We are cut off from many of the commonest pleasures of life and labor under disadvantages enough without having such hindrances thrown in our way."

I might give instances of other settlers and other parties who made similar complaints to those made by the settlers at Battleford. I will refer to another instance, somewhat similar, in dealing with the half breed settlement at Qu'Appelle. Those half-breeds addressed Governor Morris as early as May, 1873, asking the protection of the Government to their holdings. That assurance was given them the following year and the Lieutenant Governor and Minister Laird went there for the purpose of negotiating a treaty with the Indians. A treaty was made with the Indians who claimed the whole country about that region, and this assurance of security in their holding was renewed to the people. In the summer of 1881, 112 of those inhabitants petitioned the Government that surveys of their holdings might be made and that that survey should be made on the same principle that had been recognised in the French settlements of Manitoba and the other settlements of the North-West. They asked for a narrow frontage and great depth, and they also asked that the Government would give them hay privileges at the back of their lots as had been conferred on early settlers in the vicinity of Manitoba. No action seems to have been taken. Somewhat later the whole of the lands occupied by those people seems to have been transferred to a colonisation company, and the company warned off those men, some of whom had been in the country since 1876. On the 29th August, 1882, Lieutenant Governor Dewdney telegraphed from Qu'Appelle to Sir John A. Macdonald as follows:—

"Half-breeds holding old claims in valley waited on me to-day, and complain that Osler Land Company are warning them off and claiming their lands. Would recommend that this company be notified not to interfere with them, have written."

A petition was presented to Mr. Dewdney, and reads as follows:—

"1. That as far back as the year 1860, and up to 1879, we settled or squatted on lands situate on the banks of the Qu'Appelle River; erected comfortable dwellings and outbuildings thereon; ploughed and cultivated the soil, and by continued residence have complied with all the Government conditions.

"2. That we have erected a church and school in a central position; built and opened up roads and bridges, and made numerous improvements which are to-day of great value to the new settler.

"3. That the surveys lately made have discovered some of us to be on railway land, now owned by the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company, whose agent has informed us that we must either buy the land from them or move off. In fact we are informed that they have sold some of the land at present occupied by a bonâ fide settler.

"4. That we have refused to comply with the request of the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company, and claim a patent from the Crown for our respective pieces of land, or quarter-sections, fully believing that we are justly and legally entitled to the same. We would, therefore, respectfully ask Your Honor to lay our claims before the right hon. Minister of the Interior (who we know will do us justice in the matter), and request his earliest attention in the matter."

This petition is signed by forty-three half-breeds. The letter of enclosure is dated 29th of August, 1882. In it Governor Dewdney says:

"The declarations set forth in the petition are, to my knowledge, generally correct. I have informed the petitioners that I will duly communicate to them your answer in connection with the said petition.

"With reference to their claims I, yesterday, had the honor to address a telegram to you, and the recommendation therein contained I now beg to reiterate, as I glean that many of the claims are somewhat conflicting, and in some instances run part on even and part on odd numbered sections. I would respectfully suggest that either Mr. Commissioner Walsh or Mr. Inspector Pierce be instructed to examine into and adjust them on an equitable basis; and that, without delay, as the half-breeds interested are very uneasy about their holdings, and may be looked upon as the pioneers of the district."

On the 13th September, Mr. Andrew Russell writes Mr. Dewdney:

"The petition of the half-breeds will be submitted to the Minister on his return to the Department."

No answer was given to the petition. On the 19th March, more than six months after, Mr. Dewdney again wrote:

"Last summer I forwarded a petition from the half-breeds, in reference to their claims in this district, to the Department of Interior, on the occasion of a claim being made by the Qu'Appelle and Ontario Land Company to some of their land.

"There are a number of half-breeds in this district who have been settled in the Qu'Appelle valley for many years. These went on their usual hunt for buffalo, returning to their homes at different times during each year. Others have settled since 1879, and remained pretty constantly on their land.

"The Dominion land surveys have demonstrated that many of them have been living on the same section; and, as land became valuable, a scramble was made by land speculators to obtain the right titles and interests of those settled in the most favored localities."

I wish to call attention to the fact that those people had years before asked for surveys, according to the plan of settlement. They made a like request to the Government subsequently, but the Government paid no heed to their request. When the Government commenced to survey the country, they surveyed it on the rectangular system, and in some instances the people had only a mere gore or a fraction of a lot; and in case there was not a sufficient distance, if the Government had surveyed the lands properly, they could have acquired the amount of land to which they would have been entitled as ordinary settlers. But the Government adopted a plan of survey which was altogether unsuited to the physical circumstances of the country, and was seriously injurious to the settlers themselves. He goes on to say:

"The sooner the claims of these half-breeds are determined the better, as a number of them are bonâ fide settlers and deserve consideration. These settlers have not claimed their land as was done in some parts of the North-West by small frontages running back some miles although the bulk of them build their homesteads close to each other and near the water where they could easily catch fish."

In this statement Mr. Dewdney is mistaken because the petitions sent to the Government three or four years ago show that the Government could have made the surveys in conformity with the plan of settlement. But the Government surveyed it differently, and they were willing to accept this after the survey was made if a fair distribution of the land was made, and they were protected from disturbance by the colonisation company, into whose hands the Government had placed those lands. He goes on to say:

"They, however, consider they are entitled to as much land in area as they would have been had they taken up their claims as 'had been the custom with half-breeds.'"

Mr. Dewdney then goes on to suggest a mode of settlement. He urges the appointment of a perfectly independent man, one in no way connected with the speculators in the Qu'Appelle districts. This communication was referred on the 6th July to Mr. Walsh. Mr. J. R Hall, acting Secretary, writes:

"I am directed by the Minister of the Interior to send you herewith the enclosed copies of the correspondence concerning the claims of certain half-breed settlers in the Qu'Appelle Valley and to request that you will at your convenience investigate and report upon these claims."

It will be observed that the petitions of the half-breeds were declared urgent in August, 1882, and they were referred to Mr. Walsh in July, 1883, eleven months after. Now it will be observed that while the Department, eleven months after they were telegraphed to, after they were told that the colonisation company were warning them off their lands, after they were told that those people were uneasy, that they required assurances, that the matter ought to be settled, eleven months after, they referred the matter to the commissioner for his favorable consideration, to be investigated, not at once, but at his convenience. In December, 1883, Mr. J. W. Jackson, member of the North-West Council for this district, writes the Department that he has been waited upon by a large deputation of half-breeds, who say that the Government have been repeatedly petitioned and memorialised to settle the claims of the half-breeds; that there are half breeds in the Territory who have never received anything from the Government but who deserve consideration. So that there was no settlement up to this time. Jackson's letter was not answered till the 13th March, 1884, when Mr. Hall, on behalf of the Minister, writes:

"The Minister has himself been very anxious to have this question settled and on the 18th of September last, Mr. Walsh, the Commissioner of Dominion Lands at Winnipeg, was instructed to visit this locality, and make an investigation into the claims of these half-breeds and other matters. Owing, however, to an unusual pressure of business Mr. Walsh has so far been unable to visit the locality, but he has again been written to and requested to make this investigation at the earliest possible opportunity."

These claims were only settled by the half-breed commission in 1885. Now, I am not going to trouble the House any further with a reference to this question, but I give those instances to show the neglect and the delay which took place in the settlement. I have shown the House that there was every facility for the survey of these settlements in the North-West Territories in the year 1880, and yet we find that in the year 1885 many of these settlements on the Saskatchewan were not surveyed, and these people had not their claims settled or dealt with and that the plan of survey was not at all in conformity with the plan of settlement. I can easily understand how the Government might object to changing their plan of survey if the country was vacant at the time the survey was made, but I confess I do not understand why the Government should have carried out the particular plan of survey which was not best adapted to the physical circumstances of the country, but was altogether at variance with the actual plan of settlement of the country before the survey was made at all. There is but one other matter to which I wish to refer, and that is the question of the issue of patents. There was not only negligence in the survey of the country, there was not only an improper plan of survey, there was not only a total failure to give the people the assurances to which they were entitled, but there has been negligence in the issue of patents, not only to the half-breed population, but to the white population of that country. I will not read the instances I gave last year, the cases of Mr. Miller and others. They are but instances of hundreds in that country of the extraordinary delay which occurred and of the total absence of capacity on the part of the officers of the Department to comprehend the grievances that the people undertook to bring before them. For the purpose of showing the extent to which the administrative work of the Department has fallen behind the actual settlement of the country, I will first give the number of acres homesteaded since 1878. They were as follows: —

	Acres.
1878	308,640
1879	555,296
1880	280,640
1881	438,707
1882	1,181,652
1883	970,719
1884	533,280

Now, when a homesteader is in occupation for three years he is entitled to his patent, and the following shows the number of acres patented from 1881 to 1884:—

	Acres.
1881	38,514
1882	63,997
1883	292,715
1884	288,365

So that the area patented by the Department, is less than 20 per cent. of the lands for which patents ought to have been issued. I need not detain the House further in the discussion of this question. I stated a very few instances of the neglect, mismanagement and delay which the Government had exhibited in the conduct of the affairs of the North-West, and I beg leave to move the following motion:—

That in the administration of the affairs of the North-West, under the present Ministry, prior to the rebellion, there were grave instances of neglect, delay, mismanagement and misconduct, which were prejudicial to the public welfare, produced serious discontent among the people and retarded the development of the country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not propose to attempt to follow the hon. gentleman in the speech he has just made. The subject, on which he has spoken briefly and fairly, is one that has been pretty well threshed out during this Session and last Session, and it is not necessary to go over the old ground again. There are one or two clear statements, however, which I think it worth while to make. The hon. gentleman has said that we have gone on with the surveys too rapidly. I do not think that can be regarded as an impediment to the development or settlement of the country. When the hon. gentleman speaks of the number of acres of land which have been granted by the Crown, and which he says have been so small as to render unnecessary the survey of so large an area, he ought to remember that we have granted very large areas to railway corporations. For instance, 25,000,000 acres were granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and it was absolutely necessary, in order that that company might settle its lands, and in order that the alternate sections might be opened to ordinary homesteaders, that they should be surveyed. It was also necessary that the lands of the other railway companies should be surveyed for the same reason. Up to the beginning of the present Session there were granted to railway companies, including the 25,000,000 acres granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, very nearly 40,000,000 acres in the North-West, involving surveys. But, looking at the manner in which the surveys have been carried on by the two Governments, I find one fact, which is of considerable importance, that is, whereas it cost hon. gentlemen opposite to survey the country $12.14 per acre, it has cost the present Government $4.65 per acre; so that if we have made very large surveys, we have at least made them economically, and I believe carefully and well. Then, the hon. gentleman has spoken of the general cost of administration as compared with the revenues of the North-West Territories. All I can say is that while hon. gentlemen opposite were in power their expenditure for administration and the collection of revenue, &c., was $34,226.80 more than they received, whereas, while this Government have been in office, the total expenditures have been but 22 per cent. of the receipts. I think that shows that the administration on the whole has not been an ill-administration. Then, the hon. gentleman says we have been negligent in the issue of patents. All I can say is that while hon. gentlemen opposite were in office they issued 6,577 patents, whereas the present Government have issued 19,217. If there is any one thing more than any other about which there is no complaint in the North-West to-day, it is the issue of patents, which are issued much more promptly than they are in any Province of the Dominion or than they are in the United States. That is one branch of the Department against which no valid objections can possibly be made. Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman has referred to the position of the half-breeds at Qu'Appelle. I may say, from information which I have in my hand—and it comes from an exceedingly good source—that the half-breeds at Qu'Appelle claimed no hay lands, for the very good reason that there were none at that place. I may say, with reference to the system of surveys there, that the river system would have been impossible, owing to the conformation of the country and the character of the river. The lands were not handed over to any colonisation company. No half-breed in that section had settled outside the Canadian Pacific Railway belt. The lands in question were sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company; and in every case where a half-breed was settled on a syndicate section, and the fact was established that he had settled prior to the granting of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, the half-breed got his land. The half-breeds contended that they should have a full homestead. By reason of the broken front on the lake and river, they were not able to get it; but the Government afterwards made up the full quantity to them where they were not able to get the full quantity by the system of survey that was adopted. As I said, I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman in all that he has said, but I take this occasion, which I regret has not offered earlier, to call attention to a statement made in the public press of the country. In addressing the House on a former occasion, I read certain affidavits which were obtained from settlers in the somewhat famous township of St. Louis de Langevin; and the statement has been made by a correspondent of the Toronto Globe, who visited the locality, that those affidavits were obtained by force, by threats, by ignorance on the part of those who made them of their contents; and serious attacks have been made against Mr. Pearce—an officer who was in the service of the Department while the hon. gentleman sat on this side of the House as well as since that time, and who, whatever may be said of his manner, is certainly a man of integrity, honesty of purpose and an able administrator—for having, as alleged, forced those unfortunate people to make those affidavits. When I saw that statement in the Toronto Globe, I took what I think every hon. member will say was the proper course. I referred it at once to Mr. Pearce for his answer. I felt very keenly the suggestion that any officer of the Department of the Interior would undertake to force people, whether half-breeds or others, to do that which is not only a great impropriety, but a great sin, that is to swear to what is not true. I felt, therefore, that it was due to Mr. Pearce to get from him his explanation Now, I will read Mr. Pearce's answer, which is as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 29th April, 1886.

"SIR,—I notice in the Toronto Globe of the 28th instant, a report from its correspondent dated at Regina, the 27th instant, purporting to be the result of an enquiry made by him into the position of settlers in the now famous township of St. Louis de Langevin, and reflecting upon my conduct in connection with the recent investigation made by me, under instructions from you, having for object the settlement of the land claims of those settlers.

"The statements of this correspondent are entirely untrue, and as the subject is one which affects my personal honor, I desire briefly to refer to them. It is stated:

"'1. That for four years William Bremner could not obtain entry.' The best reply to this will be found in the third clause of Bremner's affidavit, in which he states:

"'3. That at the time of survey we had not made up our minds how we would take up the land. I came up here on account of my family. They desired the land to be taken up as river lots, and we decided to try and obtain it that way. My son Alexander concluded he would be too much cramped, so gave his claim to William Bremner, and moved to section 5. We never applied for entry at Dominion Lands Office, Prince Albert, waiting to see whether entry would be granted in other river frontages or not'

"I represented myself to Mr. Bremner as having been sent to make investigations into the claims of settlers, with a view to instructions being given to the agent to grant entries, which instructions were given by me on leaving Prince Albert, 7th December, 1885. As to his knowledge about the Prince Albert Colonisation Company and its alleged influence in depriving people of their lands, Mr. Bremner, in that paragraph of his affidavit, states:

"'4. That I never was told nor do I believe my son or son-in-law were, or I should have heard of it, that we could not obtain entry for the land as we desired it. Riel once told me possibly we would not obtain it. Had we believed, we would then have abandoned not continuing to make further improvements as we have done.'

"The best comment on the story of their fear that their interest would not be protected in consequence of the allotment to the company is this affidavit of Mr. Bremner, from which it will be seen that so far as his family were concerned they continued making improvements during the whole period of the Riel agitation and subsequent to the outbreak. The same observations apply equally to all the settlers in this township.

"That either Mr. Bremner or his son Joseph subscribed to an affidavit through fear is untrue; in no case were either threats or promises used That they were asked to sign what is not correct is equally untrue. Indeed, the care with which every statement was explained to them, and their carefulness in subscribing to nothing which they did not know to be true, is shown by the closing part of Joseph Bremner's affidavit, as follows:—

"'And declare that the statements contained in the declaration of William Bremner, corroborated by the said Moïse and Alexander Bremner, are true and correct in every particular, except regarding the statement of William Bremner as to the date Alexander commenced residence on his claim, it being stated by Alexander, in April, 1884, not autumn, 1884, as stated by William Bremner.'

"It is said that Moïse Bremner, who witnessed the signature to Pearce's affidavits, declared that Pearce caused only a part of the document to be read. In reply to this, I have to say that Moïse Bremner witnessed no signatures to affidavits, nor was he even present when affidavits were taken from parties other than himself, except possibly that of his father The practice I have always adopted in taking affidavits which, in the performance of my duties for many years, I have been constantly called on to do, is, when parties cannot read, after the affidavit has been prepared on their statement, to read it over carefully to them, and to certify the same in the jurat. Where the party did not understand English, I had it translated, and explained to them in French or Indian, as the case might be. The name of the person so translating it and the fact of such translation being certified to. This, as you will see by reference to the affidavits, was done in the cases in question. The correspondent of the Globe states that Norman McKenzie, Jean Baptiste Boucher, Moïse Bremner, George A. McLeod, Peter Carson, Charles Nolin and Thomas Slater, were not asked to sign affidavits, as they could read English. The best answer to this is that Norman McKenzie, Jean Baptiste Boucher and Moïse Bremner, did make affidavits, and these affidavits appear in the report of your speech as printed in the Hansard.

"The affidavits of Messrs. McLeod and Carson, it is true, were not obtained for the sufficient reason that McLeod had made his entry on 28th November, 1883, and Carson on the 12th August, 1885. I had only to investigate the case of those who had not obtained entry.

"As to Charles Nolin, his claim was in a township which had never formed a portion of any colonisation company's tracts, and as I was enquiring into the position of those on the land allotted to the Prince Albert Colonisation Company, there was no occasion to obtain an affidavit from him. Thos. Latter is not in the Prince Albert District, his claim being the one now held by Norman McKenzie, who purchased it from him in the autumn of 1883.

"If John Toogood was the only party who obtained entry in October, 1883, it was because he was the only one who applied. All others who were there at that date, or who desired entry, could have obtained the same.

"As to the statement that entries were refused in November, 1883, because the lands had passed into the hands of the Prince Albert Colonisation Company, it is sufficient to say that McLeod obtained entry within the tract as late as 28th November, 1883.

"The statement that a large number of settlers left the tract because they could not obtain entries is not borne out by the facts that some who inspected the land with a view to settling, afterwards settled elsewhere, is no doubt true, but that occurs all over the North-West.

"It is true that as far back as 1882, some settlers who had apparently intended to settle on the South Saskatchewan, or what is now known as St. Louis de Langevin, were persuaded by one Peter Taylor to move to what is now known as the Bresselar Settlement, above Battleford; but it will hardly be contended that their moving was in any way the result of the Prince Albert Colonisation Company. It is not true, as stated, that Mr. Duck and I kept these affidavits secret from Charles Nolin, McLeod and a few others of the most intelligent settlers. There was no reason why they should be shown to either Nolin or McLeod. If the settlers had expressed a wish that they should have been shown to them, they would have been shown—in fact, if Nolin or McLeod had asked to see them, even without being requested to do so by the parties interested, I would gladly have shown them. The correspondent then gives a list of persons who, he says, were in the parish of St. Louis de Langevin when the bonds were sold to the Prince Albert Colonisation Society, and suggests that these persons were deprived of their lands by the Government in favor of the Prince Albert Colonisation Society. In reply, I have to say that the first five named in this list were not in the colonisation company's tract at all. They are as follows: Widow Margaret Ouellette, Charles Nolin, Maxime Lepine, Norbert Finchelt and Michael Canny. The last named, it may be stated, made entry and received his patent long since. As to the others, the following are the facts as to their settlement: Alexander Bremner, commenced residence April, 1884; Alcide Légaré, not yet commenced residence, no buildings, and four acres breaking; George Fiddler, commenced residence August, 1885; Marguerite Boyer (widow), commenced residence June, 1883; Baptiste Boyer, not yet commenced residence, 15 acres breaking, and has improvements to value of $225; W. Bruce, commenced residence June, 1884; Fred. Fiddler, no residence or improvements; Antoine Richard, commenced residence August, 1883; Elzéar Swain, commenced residence July, 1884; Jonas Laviolette, not yet commenced residence; Joseph Bremner, commenced residence September, 1885; Moïse Bremner, commenced residence September, 1884; Jean Baptiste Boucher, jun., commenced residence November, 1882; Jean Baptiste Boucher, sen., commenced residence August, 1882 (the names Baptiste Boucher and Baptiste Boucher, sen., represent one and the same party, the correct name being Jean Baptiste Boucher, sen.); Marie Lavallée has not yet commenced residence (her improvements are worth $60), has been living in Prince Albert for past two years; Solomon Boucher, not commenced residence, has improvements worth $70; Charles Eugène Boucher, not commenced residence, improvements worth $50; Alexander McDougall, commenced residence October, 1884; Norman McKenzie only made his entry in March, 1886. And none of these people were in any way disturbed in their settlement in consequence of the grant to the colonisation company.

"Respectfully submitted.

(Signed) "WM. PEARCE."

That is the statement of Mr. Pearce as to the condition in which he found these people when he made this examination, and in answer to the charge made against him in the Globe; but of those affidavits, many, as you will remember, were testified to by Mr. George Duck who is agent for many years in Prince Albert—a gentleman who, I believe, was appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, who is an exceedingly good officer, who understands the French and Cree languages, and who has therefore had a good deal of intercourse with the people of that district. And Mr. Duck makes the following declaration:—

"I, Joseph Duck, formerly local agent of Dominion lands for Prince Albert district, and now employed in the office of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, Winnipeg, do solemnly declare:

"That I was appointed local agent of Dominion lands in March, 1878, and have been constantly resident in Prince Albert district, from the month of September of that year until January, 1885. That I have read the report of Mr. Superintendent Pearce on the Saskatchewan land claims, addressed to the Minister of the Interior, dated at Prince Albert, N.W.T., 14th December, 1885. That, together with Louis Marion, I accompanied Mr. Pearce on his visit to the settlers named in the list numbered 3, included in said report. That I was personally present at the interviews held by Mr. Pearce with the persons named in the said list. That I know personally the greater part of the persons so named. That, in each and every case in which the persons interrogated were not familiar with the English language, the conversation between Mr. Pearce and the said persons was conducted through the assistance of the said Louis Marion, who acted as interpreter, and who, I know, translated carefully into French or Indian the questions put by Mr. Pearce, and also faithfully translated into English the answers made by the persons interrogated. That the said Louis Marion is a French half-breed, thoroughly familiar with the English and French languages, and also the several Indian languages spoken in the Saskatchewan. That the statements made by Mr. Pearce, as to the result of his investigation herein alluded to, and contained in the report referred to, represent the facts faithfully as they were elicited by him, and truthfully and fully represent the substance of the information obtained by him, which, as above set forth, he had with the persons named in the list No. 3, which forms part of the appendix to the said report. That the chief object of the visit of Mr. Pearce was to complete the investigation commenced by me into the claims of persons resident in the parish of St. Louis de Langevin, which I could not complete owing to the absence, at the time of my enquiry, of many of the settlers having claims to lands in the said parish. That, in each case, and of every person interrogated, he asked the question whether such person had ever been refused entry in accordance with established survey, whether such person had ever been threatened, or informed, or believed that he would not be allowed to retain the land upon which he had settled, and that without exception the reply to these questions was in the negative. That, the statement having been made that certain of the settlers within the said parish of St. Louis de Langevin had been informed that, owing to the Government having sold the lands upon which they had settled to the Prince Albert Colonisation Company, their claims to these lands would not be recognised either by the Government or the said company, it was deemed advisable to investigate and find out, if possible, the origin of such report. That as many of the settlers as was possible were interrogated on the subject, and pains were taken to trace out the source from which the report had emanated. That without exception the settlers stated clearly and distinctly that no official of the Government or any colonisation company had ever made any statement to that effect. That I have read over the affidavit of Norman McKenzie, one of the settlers referred to, that he is an intelligent Scotchman, a good settler, and a man capable in every way of forming an opinion of his own. That I have also read over the statement of Marguerite Boyer, one of the declarants in the matter, that she is a half-breed widow, whose husband was killed during the recent outbreak, that her affidavit was carefully translated to her by Louis Marion, that she fully understood the same, and that the said affidavit was executed by her in my presence, in her own house, and in the presence of her family, who are conversant with the English, French and Cree languages. That I also heard read over the affidavits of the several Bouchers, Swains, Bremners, Fiddlers, and others relating to the same matter, that I was personally present at the execution of the several affidavits made by them, that I know personally each and everyone of them, that the said affidavits were carefully read over and explained to them in the language with which they were most familiar, that they fully understood the same in every particular, and that they executed such affidavits without inducement of any description whatever, but freely and voluntarily, and without coercion, or fear of coercion, on the part of any person whatever.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign, intituled: 'An Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths.'

(Signed) "GEO. DUCK.

"Declared before me, at Winnipeg, in the county of Selkirk, this 27th day of April, A.D. 1886 (Signed) "H. T. CHAMPION,

"A Commissioner in B. R."

Then I have another affidavit from Mr. Marion, the half-breed who translated these statements and the questions that were asked of these people, and explained the matter to them when asked for information which they gave under oath. This is an affidavit sworn to at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, in the North-West Territories of Canada:

"I, Louis Marion, farmer, of the settlement of Duck Lake, in the electoral division of Lorne, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, do solemnly declare:—

"That I am a French half-breed, and have resided continuously at Duck Lake since 1879. That I can speak and understand thoroughly the English, French, Cree and Sauteaux languages. That last December I accompanied Mr. William Pearce on his visit to the French settlements at Batoche and St. Louis de Langevin and their vicinity, and, acting as interpreter, explained thoroughly to the settlers in every case the meaning of all papers they signed for him, and that they understood the meaning of all affidavits they signed for him. That frequently I explained matters to the French half-breeds in both the Cree and French languages, and asked them whether they were sure they thoroughly understood the papers they signed, and that this was done before their signatures were appended, and also that they declared before signing any of the affidavits that they were satisfied and willing to sign the affidavits. That I never heard any of those settlers complain of being disturbed in their holdings either by the Government or by any person authorised by the Government or by any other person whatever.

"And I make this solemn declaration"

This was declared before Mr. D. H. McDowall, justice of the peace of the North-West Territories, on the 27th April, 1886. Now I think that, in the face of the affidavits, after the statement of Mr. Pearce, written on his own behalf and in his own defence, and in the face of the two affidavits I have just read of the two gentlemen who accompanied Mr. Pearce on the occasion, we may fairly consider that the charge, the very serious charge as undoubtedly it would be if it were true, made by the correspondent of the Globe that these half-breeds had been induced to swear to what was false under fear or threats that something would happen to them if they did not so sign, is entirely untrue. As I said on rising, I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman in the general argument he has used. We have already had the general question of North-West management sufficiently discussed in several phases during this Session, and I think the House, as well as the country, will realise that, whatever may have been the conduct of this Government, it does not come well from the former Minister of the Interior, the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), to bring up a charge of this kind. I believe that the country will come to the conclusion that, although there may have been, as in the very nature of things there must have been, in the administration of a large department of this kind, with a large territory of that kind so far away from us, some mistakes, some delays, this Government have fairly, honestly and conscientiously endeavored to govern that territory in such a manner as to enure to the prosperity of the country, and that we shall be able in a short time—and we find that a larger immigration is going into that country now than during the last two or three years, at any rate—to realise the great advantages to that country of the policy which the Government has pursued, by opening it up for settlement, by prosecuting surveys in every part of it, and opening it all, we hope, to the reasonable settlement of the people under the law which requires that the settler shall make entry of the land on which he settles within three months of the time when he settles.

Mr. LAURIER. The question involved in the motion of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is so complex that I quite realise that it is impossible to debate it thoroughly at this time of the Session, nor will I attempt to do so. As to what has been said by the Minister of the Interior, I have just this to say. The reproach which was made by my hon. friend to the present Minister was not that the Government had been too rapid in their surveys—

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Oh, yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Oh, no. He altogether misunderstood the objection of my hon. friend. It was not that they had been too rapid in their surveys, but that they had extended their surveys over land unfit for settlement. This was the main charge he made. But the charge I make is that the present Government did not prosecute the system of special surveys upon the larger rivers, which had been inaugurated by my hon. friend when he was in charge of the Department of the Interior. This is the main charge that is brought against the Government, and against which they can offer no excuse. A special system of surveys had been introduced into the country, and it was a necessity of the settlements began by the half-breed population, and not only by these, but by all the Canadian and European settlers upon the large rivers. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that the system of narrow front river lots was not only adopted by the half-breeds but by all other settlers who had settled upon the Saskatchewan River; and he knows also that the system was adopted in Prince Albert, and to some extent in St. Laurent. My hon. friend, while he was in charge of the Department, introduced that system, but the present Government as soon as they came into power in 1878, revoked that system.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No, no.

Mr. LAURIER. I say yes. The Sessional Papears are full of petitions from the half-breeds asking that this special system which had been granted to Prince Albert and St. Laurent, should also be granted to St. Louis de Langevin.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I mean that the policy pursued by the Government when it came in was this: that where there were settlements which desired the system of river survey, it was carried out, but where there were no settlements, as in the case of St. Louis de Langevin, when the surveyors went there, the plan pursued in all other parts of the territory was adopted.

Mr. LAURIER. I take issue altogether with the hon. gentleman, and if I had the Sessional Papers I could show him resolutions of the North-West Council asking that these special surveys made by Mr. Duck, near St. Laurent, should be confirmed, and asking also a special survey for St. Louis de Langevin, Grandin, and all other places which were inhabited by half-breeds, but that has never been done up to this day, and this is one of the complaints which caused the rebellion. It is no use to attempt to say now the Government has followed the system of special surveys. I deny it. I claim that the prayer of the North-West Council, which was made, if I remember aright, in 1882, asking that these special surveys made by Mr. Aldous in the neighborhood of St. Laurent, should be confirmed, has never been granted by this Government, nor was a similar prayer ever granted in favor of St. Louis de Langevin, and the other half-breed settlements, and this is one of the charges which we make against the Government. The hon. gentleman says to-day that Mr. Wm. Bremner and the other half-breed settlers at St. Louis de Langevin could have obtained their entries if they had chosen to ask for them. Of course they could have obtained their entries upon the regular system of survey, but this is the thing which they would not do; this is the thing that they never would consent to, because they asked for another system of survey.

Mr. BERGIN. They were not disturbed in their holdings.

Mr. LAURIER. Why was it that what was granted to Prince Albert was not given to them? Is there any reason at all that can be given on the floor of this Parliament why the treatment, which was extended to the settlers of Prince Albert, was not also extended to the settlers of St. Louis de Langevin? What was it they asked for in all their petitions? They said: Give us the same treatment which you gave to Prince Albert, give us a special survey, such as was given to Prince Albert. That prayer, which was refused by this Government, was countenanced by the North-West Council and by Mr. Duck, the agent at the time in that locality. Mr. Duck represented, at least on two occasions, that these people had settled upon these lands before the survey, and that therefore they were entitled to a special survey, which he asked for them, but which has never been granted. This is the reason why these people made no entry, and when we are told now that they could have made an entry, it is simply begging the question, because they would not make an entry upon the system of regular survey. They asked a system of special survey, and they asked it because they had settled upon these lands before the regular survey.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). O no, after the survey.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, I again take issue with the hon. gentleman. I can find for him in the Sessional Papers a letter from Mr. Duck of October, 1883, where he says that these people had settled upon the land before the survey, and he asked for them a special re-survey. Mr. Pearce also says that these people had taken up their land before the survey, and that was the reason he asked a special survey for them. Here is the letter of Mr. Duck to which I referred:

"SIR,—As the majority of the settlers on the south branch of the River Saskatchewan in the vicinity of the parish of St. Laurent"——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is not in St. Louis de Langevin.

Mr. LAURIER. Of course it is not. The population there is not so dense as it is in the Province of Ontario, but so far I understand it, St. Louis de Langevin, Grandin and St. Laurent are all in the same locality, and they were all settled before the insurrection, at all events. The petition goes on:

"had taken up their land previous to the survey, with narrow frontages, similar to those river claims in other parts of this district, and in view of the difficulty likely to be experienced in this office in adjusting the boundary of these claims in accordance with the section survey, I have, at the request of several of the settlers so situated, the honor to request information as to the possibility of re-surveying these sections into river lots on a simpler plan to that adopted in Prince Albert settlement."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). And that was done in St. Laurent.

Mr. LAURIER. But the petition does not ask for St. Laurent, it asks for the vicinity of St. Laurent, and that is what was not done.

Mr. EDGAR. It was done by my Mr. Mackenzie in St. Laurent.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Then Mr. Duck's letter is absurd.

Mr. LAURIER. Hon. gentlemen are trying to petifog upon this question. The hon. member says this does not apply to St. Louis de Langevin, that the prayer of Mr. Duck did not apply to St. Louis de Langevin, but simply to the vicinity of St. Laurent. Well, Sir, here is the petition of Mr. Bremner who certainly lived in St. Louis de Langevin, and this is what he says:

"ST. LOUIS DE LANGEVIN, 19th November, 1883.

"SIR,—The undersigned farmers, residents of the parish of St. Louis de Langevin, on the south branch of the Saskatchewan, beg to set forth, as follows, their grievance in relation to the lands on which they are located:—

"Many of us are here since the years 1873, 1874 and 1875; others, in still greater numbers, since 1880. Each and all of us took up our lands in accordance with the method formerly prevailing on the lands of the Red River and the Assiniboine—that is to say, in river lots.

"In the autumn of 1880 we petitioned the Minister of the Interior, at Ottawa, for a special survey into river lots, as was granted to the Prince Albert settlement, and to a portion of the St. Laurent settlement. We all signed that petition, not excepting Michael Canny, who has since entered his lot at your office as a sectional lot, and against whose action we hereby strongly protest.

"Since that date, we have sent more petitions, at various times, for the same object, supporting the same with the influence of all persons in authority who took an interest in us, such as Messrs. J. Royal, M.P., D. H. Macdonald, member of North-West Council; L. Clarke, His Lordship Bishop Grandin, and Father Leduc.

"Finally, Father Leduc, who had been sent as delegate to Ottawa by the people of Edmonton and St. Albert, showed us the answer of the Government promising a special survey for all located lands on the Saskatchewan. Since then we have waited in vain for the new survey.

"As we stated at the beginning, many of us have occupied our lots long enough to entitle us to patents, and yet there has been no way, as yet, of getting them entered at your office.

"We beg of you to represent to the Government the grievances herein in part set forth, and urge them to put an end thereto as quickly as possible, for the welfare and peace of loyal subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of England."

The Minister says that the letter of Mr. Duck applied only to the St. Laurent settlement. Here is another letter from Mr. Duck. It is dated 17th December, 1883.

"I have the honor to enclose herewith file No. 924 of this office covering a letter from Mr. Louis Schmidt and others, as also a petition signed by a number of the inhabitants of the parish of St. Louis de Langevin praying for a re-survey of the lands on the River Saskatchewan within the parish into lots of ten chains frontage, on a plan similar to that adopted in the parish of St. Laurent.

"As I have already expressed my opinion as to the desirability of such a re-survey I have the honor to refer you to my previous letter on that subject."

So that recommendation of Mr. Duck did not apply only to the parish of St. Laurent as hinted by the Minister of the Interior, but to the whole of the half-breed settlement; and so far the Government stands convicted of having refused to the half-breeds of St. Louis de Langevin the measure of justice extended to the settlers of Prince Albert. I do not propose to follow this case further. It is a case susceptible of great argument, but it is too far advanced in the day to discuss it now. I propose to refer only to the question which was specially discussed by the Minister of the Interior with reference to the action taken by Mr. Pearce, in procuring evidence from settlers lately at St. Louis de Langevin and elsewhere, with reference to affidavits which had been obtained, and had been placed before the House by the hon. Minister. It is within the recollection of every one, that a short time after the outbreak it became known that a great many of the insurgents came from that district, which comprises a tract of land granted by the Government to the Prince Albert Colonisation Company; and it was corectly reported at the time that one of the causes of the rebellion, and one of the causes which made the people discontented, was because they found their lands given away to a colonisation company, and they became dissatisfied, feeling as they did they might be evicted from those lands. The Government have been endeavoring ever since to repel the impression which was then created in the public mind. They have been trying to show that whatever might have been the cause of the rebellion by the people who took up arms, that they had not been impelled to do so by the existence of a colonisation company. Mr. Pearce visited the settlement, undoubtedly, with the view of procuring evidence to that effect, and that evidence we have before us now. But when he visited the settlement he did not visit it with the ostensible view of taking evidence in that regard. The pretence he gave to the people when he visited the settlement was that he went there to adjust land claims, and to take such evidence from the people as would place him in a position to give them the patents to which they were entitled. That was the pretence. Mr. Pearce went further than that. He did not content himself with taking such evidence as I have hinted at, but he took evidence in order to exculpate the Government from any blame in having granted those lands to the colonisation company when in possession of actual settlers. He took evidence, and the evidence is now before us. He took several affidavits which have been placed before this House, and upon the strength of which the Government have endeavored to establish that they were altogether blameless in this matter, and that, whatever was the cause of the rebellion, those half-breeds had no grievances under that head because they never knew a colonisation company was in existence. Any man must admit that very little weight can attach to affidavits framed with the exclusive object of exculpating the Government, obtained by agents of the Government and obtained from people who were lately insurgents, whose relatives were lately insurgents, and who, themselves, or their relatives, are still liable to imprisonment, to coercion and punishment. It must strike anyone's mind that these poor people, ignorant and illiterate as they are known to be, must be an easy prey to the longheaded agent of the Government. And we have the evidence of that. I have the evidence in my hands, that, whatever the agents might have meant, the affidavits that have been placed before the House do not convey the real thought which the half-breeds had in their mind when they signed those affidavits. The nature of the affidavits was known in the settlement and neighborhood before they came to Ottawa. It transpired there what the nature of the affidavits was, that the people had never heard of the colonisation company or had any uneasiness on account of that company. A gentleman at Prince Albert heard of that, and knowing that such a statement was contrary to the truth, he took the trouble to investigate the matter. I have the letter which he wrote on the 17th February, 1886, and which is to this effect:

"Some time in last December William Pearce, formerly land commissioner, arrived here ostensibly to arrange for the surveying of the French settlement into river lots. After staying here a few days he left for the French settlement, taking with him Col. Sproat, our registrar and Tory intriguer, and an interpreter. His destination was chiefly or solely the parish of St. Louis de Langevin, the district held by the Prince Albert Colonisation Company. After their return, we heard that they had obtained an affidavit from the half-breeds and other residents on the company's lands, to the effect that they had never heard of the Prince Albert Colonisation Company, that they have never feared or been threatened with ejectment, and that the transfer of the land, on which they had settled, to the company, had had nothing to do with the late trouble. Knowing this to be false, I took the first opportunity to interview one of the Métis residents of that district on that subject. He informed me that the document had been read over to them, and purported to contain only a statement to the effect that they knew nothing of the existence of the colonisation company previous to their settlement on their lands, and that they were given to understand that the signing of the document was a necessary preliminary to the obtaining of their patents. Many of them had settled on their lands before the company existed. Believing that the document, whatever it might be, was intended for political use, and as a document of that nature would be of no political value, I concluded that its real nature was more in accordance with the rumor, and being unable to find anyone who had read it over for themselves, I have the enclosed affidavit drawn up and signed by all the Métis who could be found to have signed the other in that district."

Now, I hold in my hand also the affidavits which were thus signed at the time, but before reading them, I will show the nature of the affidavits which were obtained by Mr. Pearce. I will take one as a sample of all the rest.

"Heard this land was within a colonisation company's tract, but no official of that company ever said anything to me, nor, do I believe, to any of the family, or I should have heard of it. The fact of this land being within a colonisation company's tract never gave my father, brother, sister, or myself any concern whatever, as we always believed we would eventually obtain entry as we desired.

"Sworn before me, at Township 45, Range 24, W. 2nd Meridian, this 9th day of December, 1885, having been first read over and explained to him, and he seemed thoroughly to understand the same.
(Signed) "WM. PEARCE, "Superintendent"

(Signed) "SOLOMOM BOUCHER."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Does the hon. gentleman say that the other affidavits are the same as that?

Mr. LAURIER. So far as the reference to the colonisation company goes, yes. I believe that to be the case, but if I am astray I may be corrected. It must be manifest that this illiterate population, the moment they were informed that their lands had been granted to a colonisation company, having prayed for their patents for years and not succeeding in obtaining them, must have been very uneasy. Yet these people are made to swear that, although they knew of this statement, they never had any uneasiness about it. Now here is the affidavit to which I have alluded:

"We, the undersigned, residents of the Métis settlement on the south branch of the Saskatchewan River in the North-West Territories do hereby state: That Mr. William Pearce, Commissioner of Dominion Lands, did, on the occasion of his visit to our settlement in the month of December, 1885, present to us for signature a document which was stated to contain only a statement that we knew nothing of the existence of the Prince Albert Colonisation Company when we settled on our land. As we had in most cases been on our lands long previous to the formation of that company, we signed the document, taking his word that the contents were as stated. But we have since learned with great surprise that the paper referred to contained statements that we had heard nothing of the company previous to the uprising last spring, and that we knew nothing of any rumor that our lands were to be taken away, and that the formation of the company and the granting to them of lands in our settlement had nothing to do with occasioning trouble in our settlement. If any such statements are in the document which we signed, we were entirely misled as to its meaning, because we were all well aware for some time before the taking up of arms that there was a company which claimed to own our lands and to have the power to turn us off our homesteads, and even encouraged in the belief of that fact by the failure of the Government to give us any legal title to the lands which we had so long occupied. The only point on which we were entirely ignorant was the extent of our territory which was so granted away from us and it was the fear which we all had of losing our homes that was one of the greatest causes of uneasiness among us."

This is signed by Charles Boucher, Moïse Bremner, Elzéar Swain, Napoléon Boyer, Modiste Laviolette, William Bremner, Alexander Bremner, Joseph Bremner, Baptiste Boyer, William Bruce, Solomon Boucher. To this is attached the following declaration:

"Canada,
"North-West Territories,
"Prince Albert.
"To wit:

"I, Charles E. Boucher, of St. Louis de Langevin, in the North-West Territories, farmer, do solemnly declare that I was personally present and did see the within statement duly signed by Moïse Bremner, Elzéar Swain, Napoléon Boyer, Modiste Laviolette, William Bremner, Alexander Bremner, Joseph Bremner, Baptiste Boyer, William Bruce and Solomon Boucher.

"2. That the above-named parties are resident in the parish of St. Louis de Langevin.

"And I make this solemn declaration, &c.

"Declared before me at Prince Albert, in the North-West Territories, this 16th day of February, A.D. 1886. "ARTHUR S. SIFTON, "Notary Public." } "CHARLES E. BOUCHER.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Is that document an affidavit, or is it only attested?

Mr. LAURIER. This latter is an affidavit.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The document itself is not sworn to.

Mr. LAURIER. No, it is not. The hon. gentleman has also referred to the correspondent of the Globe. The correspondent of the Globe simply corroborates what is stated in those affidavits, and gives simply the particulars taken by the officer when he procured this declaration. It may be interesting to refer to the interview which took place between the Globe correspondent and William Bremner, a Scotch half-breed.

"You are on the lands of this Prince Albert Colonisation Company, I believe?

"'Indeed I hardly know whose land I am on,' was the reply. 'One tells us that we are on the lands of that company, another comes along and says we are not. We are unable to read, and, with the exception two or three, unable to understand English. Of the outside world we know little or nothing. Newspapers and books are no use to us, and few strangers ever visit this place.'

"One of your visitors was a Mr. Pearce?

"Yes. He was here last December, I think. He was accompanied by Duck, land agent, and a few others. He took me a paper to sign.

"Did that paper ask you to say you knew nothing of the Prince Albert Colonisation Society prior to Pearce's visit?

"Yes.

"You are quite sure?

"I am.

"Did you understand what was read to you from that paper?

"Some I did and some I did not.

"Why did you sign what you could not read or understand?

"I was told our signing it would do us good, and I was, to tell you the truth, afraid if I did not sign it, it would be worse for me. What can we do against the Government? Nothing."

Now, this is the true reason why those affidavits were signed. It is manifest that those people had heard of the company. The existence of that company was well known in the North-West Territory, and the moment it was known, these people, having petitioned so long for their patents and not obtaining them, they were uneasy, and so it may have been a cause, as I believe it was a cause, of the late uprising. I shall not say any more on this subject at the present moment. I regret that it did not come up earlier. I know that the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution has waited day after day for the production of the papers which were promised, and which, although we have reached the closing hours of the Session, have not come down.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not intend to make a speech, but I think it is my duty as well as my right to explain the vote which I intend to give. I cannot agree with all that has been said on this side with regard to this question. I do not think the hon. member for Quebec East went far enough when he spoke in favor of the half-breeds, and I think the mover of the resolution has gone too far in proposing the resolution. When in 1867 the question came up about bringing the North-West into the Confederation there was a petition presented by both Houses to Her Majesty the Queen, and in that petition it was said:

"That in the event of Your Majesty's Government agreeing to transfer to Canada the jurisdiction and control over the said region, the Government and Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide that the legal rights of any corporation, company or individual within the same shall be respected, and placed under the protection of courts of competent jurisdiction.

"And furthermore that, upon the transference of the Territories in question to the Canadian Government, the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement will be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the British Crown in its dealings with the aborigines."

Then there was a resolution, signed by Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir George E Cartier and the Hon. Wm. Macdougall, in 1869, in which it was said:

"It is understood that any claims of Indians to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement shall be disposed of by the Canadian Government, in communication with the Imperial Government, and that the company shall be relieved of all responsibility in respect to them."

At a meeting of the delegates it was furthermore resolved:

"That upon the transference of the Territories in question to the Canadian Government, it will be the duty of the Government to make adequate provisions for the protection of the Indian tribes whose interests and well-being are involved in the transfer."

In 1869, this Address to the Queen was signed both by the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate:

"That upon the transference of the Territories in question to the Canadian Government, it will be our duty to make adequate provision for the protection of the Indian tribes whose interests and well-being are involved in the transfer, and we authorise and empower the Governor in Council to arrange any details that may be necessary to carry out the terms and conditions of the above agreement."

Now, the Act of Council that was passed, the deed of surrender, contained those very words. So it was well agreed, here and in England, that it would be the duty of the Canadian Government to afford the Indian tribes every possible protection. When the North-West Territories were brought into the Confederation, the Government of the day, and all the Governments since, have seemed to forget the duties they owed to the half-breeds; and I cannot approve of the acts of this Government more than I can of the acts of the preceding Government in that respect. I do not speak of the Indians now, because the case of the Indians has been discussed already; I limit my remarks to the half-breeds. We say the half-breeds are entitled to their homesteads and their pre-emption, and if they are not satisfied with them, they may look for something else. I say that is not only not fair or legal, but the Government knew it; and when they gave them scrip it was a mere farce. It was simply giving away the lands of the North-West for nothing to speculators from other countries under the pretext of giving the half-breeds their rights. I want no other proof of that than what was said in this honorable House last Session. If you take the Hansard of the 6th of July, you will find in the mouth of the hon. leader of this House these words:

"The recommendation of Archbishop Taché was that the title should be kept away from the half-breeds for three generations. The recommendation of the council was that it should be kept away for ten years. What was the policy of the Government? Go, take your 160 acres; take your pre-emption for 160 acres more, and you shall stand as well as a white man, and shall get your patent after three years, no matter what the archbishop or the North-West Council have told us. We, the Government of the Dominion of Canada, have more confidence in the half-breeds even than their own archbishop and their own council. We say: We give you the land; occupy it, cultivate it, live on it, be happy on it, and at the end of three years you will get 160 acres, and you will stand free and independent, a freeholder, a yeoman, a free man in the North-West. You shall not be subject to this paternal Government which has been urged upon you by your own friends in the North-West."

Taking away from the half-breeds their paternal Government; taking away from them the right to have large reserves on which they might have lived as a single family; taking away from them the right which we do not refuse to any man, perhaps not even to a Chinaman, of 160 acres of land; exposing them to the aggressions of surveyors who wanted to survey over their property, and to the aggressions of colonisation societies; exposing them to the insults which they have constantly received from white people; taking away from them their very means of living, without the advantages of the civilisation and the education we have, and casting them upon the open prairie—I say this is not the meaning of the agreement which said that we would give them protection and full compensation. I said the Government knew it; and to show that, I have only to quote further, on the next page:

"The nomadic half-breed, who had been brought up to hunt, having had merely his shanty to repair to in the dead season when there was no game—what advantage was it to him to give him 160 or 240 acres more? It was of no use to him whatever, but it would have been of great use to the speculators who were working on him and telling him that he was suffering."

The Government knew what would be the result; they knew of the existence of speculators:

"Oh! how awfully he was suffering, ruined, destroyed, starving, because he did not get 240 acres somewhere else, or the scrip for it, that he might sell it for $50! No, Sir; the whole thing is a farce."

Yes, it is a farce from beginning to end. It is a farce to say that you have fulfilled your obligation by giving scrip to the half-breeds. We know that following the commission which was distributing the scrip, there were land speculators, finely dressed, with money in their pockets, and whiskey, that they might, the moment the half-breed got the scrip, give him liquor and pay him $3 or $4 or $5 and get his scrip. That is the way the Treasury has suffered, and the way the half-breeds have lost their scrip and remain poor without that paternal protection to which they are entitled:

"Now, Mr. Speaker, we, at the last moment, made concessions, and we did it for the sake of peace."

Well, Mr. Speaker, it was too late to make concessions for the sake of peace; we should have done it before, we should have seen to their grievances before. When we saw that there were complaints, that petitions were pouring in constantly, the Government should have sent some friends to them, as it does to-day. If the Government had done then what it is now doing, there would have been no war, and if, instead of the police, we had sent to the half breeds people who spoke their language and were not looked upon as their enemies, we would have been saved the expenditure of $10,000,000 and the loss of 200 or 300 valuable lives:

"The Government knew, my hon. friend, Sir David Macpherson, the Minister of the Interior, knew that we were not acting in the interests of the half-breeds in granting them scrip, in granting him the land. We had tried, after consulting man after man, expert after expert, to find what was best for the country, and we found, without one single exception, they were all opposed to granting unlimited scrip and immediate patents to the half-breeds. But, Sir, an agitation arose, and the hon. gentleman has rung the changes on Riel being brought into that country."

I take it, as admitted by this Government, that no justice has been given to the half-breeds, and I consider it is an obligation on their part that they should see that the half-breeds are better treated, and that a fair compensation be given them for the land from which they have been evicted. This is the meaning I intend giving to my vote. The fault of the Government consists in having chosen too many strangers to deal with the Indians and half-breeds. If they had chosen, instead, some of the employees known to the country, and in whom the country would have had confidence, the atrocities we have witnessed in the North-West would not have occurred. I believe the Government really intend to do justice to the Indians; I believe they understand the white population cannot take possession of the North-West without giving in return some compensation; I believe in the sense of humanity the Government have been most unfortunate in their choice of employees. The consequence was the rebellion occurred and the half-breeds were either killed or ruined. I can prove that, and that is the meaning I intend to give to my vote. I do not intend blaming the Government for all they have done in the North-West. We have taken possession of the country and opened it up as fast as possible. I have often heard the Opposition blame the Government for having opened it too quick; but I think the Government acted wisely in so doing. On the question of the Pacific Railway and the general system of surveying—I except the application of the system to those who are already on their lands and had vested rights—I approve of the general policy of the Government in the North-West, and could not approve any Government which would not follow a similar policy. But, as far as I have stated, and for the reasons I have given, I will vote in favor of the motion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At this late hour, I will not detain the House more than two or three minutes. If I understood the Minister of the Interior correctly he stated that, as regarded the claim of the half-breeds to these surveys in narrow frontages of ten chains in width along the river, the Government had granted the survey required?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Wherever there were settlers occupying land in that form, the river system was given. Wherever there were no settlements practically, as in the case of St. Louis de Langevin, for a large number of those who petitioned did not live there at all, we made the ordinary surveys.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is exactly as I understood the hon. gentleman. One of the great grievances these half-breeds complained of was that their claims to have their lots surveyed, in the same manner as they were in Manitoba and Prince Albert, were not attended to. Whether they were right or wrong in that system of surveying, it was the one they had always followed, and it ought to have been recognised in their case by the Government, and their titles to the land given accordingly. The hon. Minister says that wherever they had established settlements, their claims were respected and their surveys made in that form. I would direct the attention of the House to a report made to the Department in March, 1882, by Mr. Duck, the agent of Dominion lands. He wrote as follows to the Government:—

"Sir,—As the majority of the settlers on the south branch of the River Saskatchewan, in the vicinity of the parish of St. Laurent, have taken up their lands previous to the survey, with narrow frontages, similar to those river claims in other parts of this district, and in view of the difficulty likely to be experienced in this office in adjusting the boundaries of these claims in accordance with the section survey, I have, at the request of several of the settlers so situated, the honor to request information as to the possibility of re-surveying these sections into river lots on a similar plan to that adopted in Prince Albert settlement, none of these claims having as yet been entered in this office."

On the 4th September of the same year, Gabriel Dumont and forty-six others sent a petition to the Department of the Interior, in which they say:

"In our anxiety we appeal to your sense of justice as Minister of the Interior and head of the Government, and beg you to reassure us speedily, by directing that we shall not be disturbed on our lands, and that the Government grant us the privilege of considering us as occupants of even-numbered sections, since we have occupied these lands in good faith. Having so long held this country as its masters and so often defended it against the Indians at the price of our blood, we consider it not asking too much to request that the Government allow us to occupy our lands in peace, and that exception be made to its regulations, by making to the half-breeds of the North-West free grants of land. We also pray that you would direct that the lots be surveyed along the river ten chains in width by two miles in depth, this mode of division being the long-established usage of the country. This would render it more easy for us to know the limits of our several lots."

Here are the answers from the Department to Mr. Duck's letters. First of all, this letter was written on the 21st September of the same month in which that petition was sent into the Department:

"Sir,—I have the honor, by the direction of the Minister of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th March last, stating that you had been requested by several of the settlers in the vicinity of the parish of St. Laurent to obtain information from the Department as to the possibility of there being a re-survey of their river claims by the Government, and to inform you that it is not the intention of the Government to cause any re-surveys to be made. Of course, any sub-division differing from the regular survey they may desire they can procure for themselves when the lands come into their possession. You will please, therefore, communicate this decision to the persons interested.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"A. M. BURGESS,
"Secretary."

Then, on the 13th October, I find the following:—

"SIR,—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt, through you, of a petition, dated the 4th ult., from 47 French half-breeds, on the subject of certain lands on the Saskatchewan, in the district of Prince Albert, on which they have squatted

"In reply, I am directed to request you to inform the petitioners that when the proper time arrives the case of each bonâ fide settler will be dealt with on its own merits; but, as regards the surveying of the land in question, that all lands in the North-West Territories will be surveyed according to the system now in force.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"LINDSAY RUSSELL,
"Deputy Minister Interior."

This reply was given after several applications. And now, on the 23rd December, 1884, just three months before the rebellion broke out, Major Crozier had a gentleman named S. Gagnon employed gathering information with regard to the trouble, and he reported to Major Crozier:

"As far as I can see, the chief grievances of the half-breeds is that they are afraid that the Government will not sanction the way they, amongst themselves, have agreed to take their homesteads—ten chains of frontage on the river by two miles back."

And yet the Minister tells us that these narrow lots were respected. To make the matter still stronger, one month after the rebellion had broken out and after valuable lives had been lost, one of the commissioners sent up writes to the Government:

"Our proposal is to give each occupying lake front half-breed 160 acres homestead free, allowing to retain the few acres fronting lake or river now held in occupation"——

Not free, remember, but—

"on payment of $1 an acre within two years, patent for whole to be retained until payment is made; cases few and acreage small, but concession will do good. Feeling here now very satisfactory."

Here is the answer to that:

"Your proposal as to small water frontages approved. You should declare that area of each shall not exceed forty acres, to prevent inconvenience in other parts of the country."

That is signed by the Minister of the Interior, and yet, in the face of all that, the Minister of the Interior tells us that, where these parties had settled on these narrow frontages, their settlements were respected and the lines run accordingly, and yet, when the rebellion occurred, they had not got further than selling them forty acres for $1 an acre and giving them 160 acres perhaps miles away. In the face of those documents, I will leave the House to judge how much value can be attached to the statements of the Minister.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mills.

Amendment negatived.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I might state that it is hoped that His Excellency will prorogue Parliament at five o'clock to-day. When the House adjourns, I will move that it stand adjourned to eleven o'clock this morning.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would say to the Minister of Finance that some of these items I do not feel disposed to discuss at present, but I must reserve the right to discuss them fully on concurrence, if one wishes to do so. That is distinctly understood.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Legislation, Miscellaneous..... .... $3,676.78

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On whose recommendation are these increases of salary to officers in the Library proposed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Joint Committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because a good many of these increases appear to be running up the rates a good deal above what they were formerly. Formerly we used to buy 300 copies of this Dominion Annual Register, and I think that is quite enough. You seem to be adding 100 here without rhyme or reason, to the amount that was formerly purchased.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I think one copy of this work would be too many. It is written by a man already in the employ of the Government, and I do not think we should pay him so much money for work of this character.

Mr. AUGER. Here is an item to pay for 150 of Mr. Faucher de St. Maurice's work on Parliamentary Procedure. I would like to ask the Minister what he knows about this book?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a book on Parliamentary Procedure and Parliamentary Government. It is a very useful book of reference.

Mr. AUGER. I have a copy of the book here, and it contains only reports of the decisions of the Speaker of the Province of Quebec. It is printed in both languages, one purporting to be a translation of the other. In some places, the English differs altogether from the French, and when in English the decision of the Speaker is against the motion, in French the same decision is translated as in favor of the motion. There are several such instances. In one place, the decision is given by Mr. Chapleau, of Quebec. I never heard that Mr. Chapleau was Speaker of the Quebec Assembly.

Mr. LANGELIER. He spoke much, but he was not the Speaker.

Mr. AUGER. At page 305, the French edition says: "L'Orateur décide que l'amendement est dans l'ordre." In English it is "The Speaker rules that the amendment is not in order." In some instances, it speaks of the Chairman in French as "l'Orateur," and in English as "Chairman," while in other cases the Chairman is "M. le Président." In one place, it speaks about the Speaker "rising." In French, it says: "l'Orateur se lève," and in English it is the "Speaker raised." I do not know what he "raised." He must have raised something.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He raised $750.

Mr. AUGER. At page 505 again, the decision in French is one way and in English it is just the contrary. It says in French "L'Orateur décide contre l'objection," and in English, "The Speaker sustains the objection." Now, for this very useful work we are asked to pay $5 a volume. Even if it were well translated what use would it be as a reference here? Would our Speaker take it as an authority? I do not think, Mr. Chairman, you would take it as an authority; you would look higher for authority than the Assembly of the Province of Quebec. The book is full of extracts of the proceedings of the House of Assembly at Quebec, translated in some cases from English and in some cases from the French. I have only looked at a few pages of this book, but if an ignorant farmer like myself finds so many faults in it, I think the Minister would find a great many more of the same class.

Mr. BLAKE. What is going to be done with 150 copies of this wonderful book? Had it not better be burned after what we have heard? Because it would be a disgrace to have it in our Library.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is absurd that it should deal with the decisions of only one Provincial Legislature.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The rulings of the Quebec Assembly of course, must be a little in accord with the rulings of this Parliament. I have not seen the book, but the two Parliaments are supposed to follow the same rules of procedure, and in that case the decisions made by the Speaker in Quebec must be as good as those given here, as he is supposed to follow the same authority. Of course, if the translation is something like what we have heard, it ought to be remedied in some way in a second edition.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend will observe that when he, in his own language, or when some hon. gentlemen less familiar with it than he is, quotes to the Speaker, in French, a decision in favor of an objection, I, reading the English copy of the book, find the decision is against the objection, and in such case the book is likely to create more confusion than it will settle.

Mr. DESJARDINS. It will be for the Speaker to decide in the last resort.

Mr. BLAKE. I believe the true inwardness of this thing to be that Mr. Faucher de St. Maurice is a prominent Conservative and supporter of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and this is a little job to pay him $750.

Mr. LISTER. The House never asked for this book and we don't want it.

Mr. BLAKE. Here is another translation on page 430:

"L'Orateur déclare que le sous-amendement est dans l'ordre" and in English it is "the Speaker ruled that it is not in order." So you find here a decision to suit everybody. If a gentleman on one side of the House wants to find that a particular motion is in order, all he has to do is to look to the left hand page; if on the other hand he wants it find that it is out of order, he looks at the right hand page, and he is provided for. It is an admirable work.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think under these circumstances the Minister would do well to withdraw the item, or let it stand till to morrow.

Mr. McLELAN. Let that item stand.

Mr. BLAKE. I again ask what are we going to do with the copies. If this item is pressed I shall move that we add a provision that the books be burned.

Mr. DESJARDINS. There may be some errors of translation, but it is really a valuable book—and the Ministers who put this item in the Estimates ought to know—it might be useful to the French speaking members of this House.

Item ordered to stand.

Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London..... $50,000 00

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There has been statements made in the press that very unfortunately for this country a large portion of our exhibits did not arrive in time for the opening, and that our exhibit was not completed till a late day. I trust these reports are not correct. The intention of the House last Session was, when it voted money very freely, that the exhibits should be a credit to Canada. It was a great pity that through delay, neglect or mismanagement the Canadian department could not have been complete at the opening. I hope the Minister will be able to dispel doubts that have arisen on this point.

Mr. CARLING. I can assure the hon. gentleman that so far as the Department is concerned there has been no neglect whatever. A very large quantity of goods was sent, some of them were delayed on the railway, which could not be avoided by the Government or the Department. The last shipment left Halifax on 4th May and arrived in London about 16th. It was first announced that the exhibition would be opened on 15th May, and afterwards the date was changed to the 4th; the exhibition was opened sooner than was originally intended. Our information is that the display is very good, that all our exhibits have been shipped and are now in place.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Two weeks late. Does the Minister know what the proportion of the delayed goods was to the total exhibits?

Mr. CARLING. Less than one-third.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Were they in most of the lines?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then we would be imperfect in all our lines, or at least in a great number of them.

Mr. CARLING. There was a large quantity of goods that could not be taken on board of the vessel. Some heavy machinery had to be put on deck and provided for in another way than was originally intended. The hon. gentleman will find that every part of the goods has been satisfactorily delivered, and is now in its place in the exhibition.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am glad the fault has been remedied, but it is a matter for profound regret to every Canadian that after the expenditure of tens of thousands of dollars and an anxious desire manifested by all the members of the House that this country should appear in a most creditable manner, our display should have been marred in this way. I say this without wishing to cast imputation on the Minister. If there was neglect or delay it should be censured. But leaving that apart, it must be a matter of profound regret that it should have occurred.

Mr. CARLING. The exhibition opened on 4th May and will continue till 4th November. The tonnage of the goods sent to this exhibition is four times larger than that sent to any exhibition before. Considering that over three thousand tons of goods of all classes from all parts of the country were sent there, it is not a matter blameworthy if the whole of the goods were in place two weeks after the opening of the exhibition.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I differ entirely with the hon. gentleman. The money was voted a year ago. We made a display at the Antwerp Exhibition, and we were told that while it was creditable it was not in any sense such as we should make at the Colonial Exhibition. It was the desire that Canada should take a foremost position at this exhibition. The money required was freely voted, commissioners were appointed throughout the Dominion and they travelled through the country, and the Dominion should have been at the exhibition with a full display at the opening day. It is a matter, I repeat, of the most profound regret that notwithstanding the expenditure made, our exhibit was not complete on the opening day when thousands of people were present from all countries. I am not prepared to censure anyone, and yet I think censure is due somewhere. If it had been a matter sprung upon us, it would have been different; but we had an abundance of time and the only possible excuse given by the Minister was that the date of the formal opening was made eleven or ten days earlier than was first announced. But did not the Government know that change in time to make an extra effort?

Mr. CARLING. Every precaution was taken by the Department. In shipping a large quantity of goods over railways in winter when snow blockades occur, and when perhaps steamers are not able to take on board so large a quantity of goods as expected, delays could not be prevented by the Department. I repeat that every precaution was taken by the Department and the instructions to all shippers were that the goods were to be ready at a particular time and delivered promptly.

Mr. WATSON. I see by the newspapers that Capt. Clark is going to the Colonial Exhibition to represent Manitoba by a joint arrangement between Manitoba and the Dominion. What is the arrangement?

Mr. CARLING. Capt. Clark was strongly recommended by the Government of Manitoba to go over as a representative of the Province, and he has been sent over to England to represent that Province. He has been sent by the Dominion Government.

Mr. WELDON. Were the Local Government consulted?

Mr. CARLING. No, I do not think they were.

Mr. WELDON. I see that Mr. Paine, one of the editors of the St. John Sun, has been sent as a commissioner for New Brunswick. What pay does he receive?

Mr. CARLING. Five dollars a day, which covers all the expenses.

Pensions..... $10,500 00

Mr. INNES. I would like to ask what provision has been made with respect to those, for instance, who volunteered into the Mounted Police and were killed at Duck Lake. I know that two or three memorials are in the hands of the Government with regard to these cases. One of these cases I am familiar with, because the family of the young man I refer to resides in my riding—Robert Middleton, a volunteer into the Mounted Police, who was killed at Duck Lake. Though the Orders in Council of last year with respect to pensions do not cover such cases, I notice that they may be specially considered by the Governor in Council. This young man was largely the support of his family. His father and mother are living, but his father is very infirm. It is a case which I think claims the special consideration of the Government, and I think that anything they could grant in the way of a gratuity would be generally approved by the House and the country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may say that the Government have decided that, although such cases as the hon. gentleman mentions do not come within the Order in Council, the Government have decided to treat them exactly as militia men were treated. The case to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which he has already brought under my notice, has been referred to another Department. It is one of the cases which will be treated according to the decision arrived at by the Governor in Council under the Order in Council.

Militia..... $22,542 20

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Will the Minister give some explanation of this item with regard to drainage of the citadel, Quebec.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This work was imperatively demanded by the city of Quebec, as the existing drainage was considered dangerous to the city. Several representations were made by the city authorities urging that the work should not be delayed, so an Order in Council was passed empowering me to enter upon those works immediately. They were given out by contract and they are being carried out.

Mr. MULOCK. What portion of the citadel was drained by it? This is a large amount—$16,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As the hon. gentleman has been in Quebec, he knows how difficult and expensive the drainage of the citadel must be on account of the geography of the place, as a long drain is required to connect with the main drain of the city, and a large amount of rock cutting is necessary. The drainage was begun last winter, at what was supposed to be the most favorable time. Still, I believe there are no two opinions about it. It was commenced immediately after these reports had been made to the Department by the municipal authorities; about December or January.

Mr. LANGELIER. I have no fault to find with the Government for having that work done, for I believe it was a work of absolute necessity. I was a member of the board of health when our attention was drawn to the abominable state in which the citadel was, not only endangering the life of the soldiers, but causing such suffering from diphtheria and other diseases in that portion of the city, which is occupied by well-to-do classes, and is one of the healthiest portions of the city. We found that one of the drains of the citadel percolated through the ground and lost itself there. Instead of asking for tenders for the work by advertisements in the papers, which could have been done in a few days, the Government gave contracts to some of their friends who had no experience in that business; each had a small portion of the work, and the prices paid were just double what the city of Quebec had been paying for work of the very same kind, and even for more difficult work. This work is being done 200 or 300 feet from my house, and not more than half of the excavation is done in rock. The city of Quebec has been paying $1 per lineal foot for work much more difficult than that for which the Government have been paying $1.75 and $2 per lineal foot. The pretext of beginning the work was to give the laboring classes employment, but it gave employment only to Tory laborers, and many other laborers were refused employment. The first part of the work was given to a stevedore named Power; I know him very well. Some time afterwards he disturbed a meeting held by the Liberals of Quebec. There is not one man in charge of any part of that job who understands the business. I know all those contractors, and they never would have taken the contracts if they had not obtained them at extravagant prices.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. With regard to not advertising for tenders, the architect of the city of Quebec wrote to say that the work should be commenced immediately, and it could not be delayed. I sent my clerk down to hurry matters as much as possible, and tenders were asked from a number of contractors. The hon. gentleman says that merely Tory laborers were employed. If that had been the case, I would have been following the example set by hon. gentlemen opposite when in power. We all remember that on the work of the fortifications, it was necessary that every man should carry a certificate in order to get employment from the Liberal contractors engaged in that work. But I deny that that system was followed in this case. The hon. gentleman, who must know the population of Quebec, must have forgotten that some of the men employed there were active supporters of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). The hon. gentleman cannot say that any discrimination was made between the men who came to ask for employment. Of course, everybody could not be employed, as only a certain number were required. The hon. gentleman says the prices paid were very much more than the prices paid by the corporation. The hon. gentleman knows that it is impossible to decide from other contracts what is a fair price for work of that kind. I speak from reports which have been made to me when I say that that excavation was one of the most difficult that could have been undertaken in Quebec. Knowing Quebec as I do, I cannot understand how the excavation could be other than rock excavation, from the point at which it starts in the Grande Allée to the citadel, and when it gets into the citadel the hon. gentleman knows that there is nothing but rock there. I have heard men, competent to express an opinion, say that the contracts were let at lower rates than it was possible to make any money from. Tenders were obtained, and the lowest tender was in every case accepted. It is impossible for us to advertise in the newspapers, but we sent around and got several contractors to tender. As to Mr. Power, he may be a stevedore, but he has already carried out several contracts in Quebec, and the fact of his being a stevedore need not prevent a man being useful in other walks in life. In so far as Mr. Power is concerned, he carried out his contract very successfully.

Mr. LANGELIER. It could not have taken more time to advertise in the newspapers than to send letters to those who got the contracts, and the Government, in writing, should have written to contractors who are in the habit of doing that work, and not to people who are not. Three jobbers were engaged. One is a stevedore, who had never, to my knowledge, done work of that kind before. No one would think of entrusting the excavation of rock to a man who is in the habit of loading ships. The other is a carter. Who would apply to a carter, when he has no time to advertise, instead of to a contractor? I am not surprised at all that the work should cost so much. The hon. gentleman said that laborers from Quebec East had been employed on the work, but I can tell him that there was nearly a riot over this. About 100 laborers had collected near the works, and complained that it was an outrage on them that men should have been taken from the hon. gentleman's county, outside the city, to do the work, while people within the city were left without employment. I asked them why they were not employed, and they said they had to get certificates from Mr. Bossé or Mr. McGreevy or somebody else, but not one of them was told to get a certificate from me, although I was the mayor.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend is rather unreasonable. He has not taken into question the circumstance that two operations were engaged in by the Government, two drainage operations, one in the citadel and one in the Treasury.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad this explanation has been made by the hon. Minister. I understood this work was given in order to allay, in some degree, the Riel agitation in Quebec, and I am glad that it was nothing of the kind.

Militia Contingencies..... $6,292 20

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The deputy Adjutant General is Colonel Denison, of Toronto, and the Brigade Major Colonel Milsom. Both officers have been for a long period in the service, and fulfilled their duty with great credit to the country and themselves. They had been engaged for a period of five years, and were not to expect any gratuity on retiring, but they had rendered such good service that we decided to allow them these sums: $2,400 for the Deputy Adjutant General and $2,400 for the Brigade Major.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not object to this item; on the contrary, in my opinion, it is not large enough. Colonel Milsom was an officer in the regulars, who was induced to leave the service and enter ours. I speak now from information I have received from a friend of mine who got it from Mrs. Milsom. I am not acquainted personally with either Colonel or Mrs. Milsom. From enquiries, I find it is correct that Colonel Milsom was in the regular service, and was induced to leave it, I think, by the Province of Nova Scotia; that he entered the Canadian service, and is now sixty-five years of age; that he has not a penny in the world beyond what is proposed to be given him here; that he has a family depending on him, and this proposed gratuity will realise exactly one shilling a day. It would not be to the honor of this country to turn this man out a pauper on the charity of the people. In two years he must starve or go to the poor house. He has no calling or capacity for doing anything. What is to become of him? I presume it is too late to improve this matter now, but I hope that next Session it will be again considered.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry I cannot agree with my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). This officer was appointed on certain conditions, and those conditions he understood and accepted. At the end of the five years he was to have no claim of any kind. Having no claim, the Minister now offers to give him $2,400. I must say I think that is very liberal treatment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is, if the gentleman was appointed for the term of five years, as my hon. friend says; is that the case?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I thought I could make a distinction in this case, because Colonel Milsom entered the service before the Order in Council was passed appointing these men for five years only, and probably looked upon his appointment as permanent when he joined the service, and I also considered the services he has rendered and the long period of time he had served the country.

Mr. MULOCK. How many years has he been in the service?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think some thirty years.

Mr. BLAKE. Was he paid all the time?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. VAIL. He was employed by the Nova Scotia Government for a considerable time, and was a valuable officer, and it was unfortunate for him that he had to be moved to Toronto. Everyone knows it is impossible to support a family of any size upon a small pittance like this. I am sorry his case is a hard one, and would have liked to see the Minister do a little better for him. Perhaps at a future time he will reconsider the case.

Mr. MITCHELL. I object altogether to granting gratuities of this kind to these officers. If there is any law which provides for granting pensions or gratuities to them, they should have them, but if not, these sums of money should not be placed in the estimates in this way, but a law should be brought into Parliament and discussed. There are thousands of people employed by the Government and by private individuals who have served years and years and have only what they have saved out of their earnings to live upon, and the same thing should be applied in the Militia Department.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Does the Minister propose to place the military districts in charge of the commandants of the Military schools where such are located?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do, as much as possible, thus saving the salaries of the adjutant-general and brigade major.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). A difficulty arose recently between the commandant at Toronto and one of the volunteer corps. Those officers who are permanently employed and those who are more of a volunteer character do not generally assimilate together, and I fear other difficulties will arise if this policy is carried out. The saving is not very great when the additional pay and perquisites received by the commandant are taken into consideration.

Canadian Pacific Railway—British Columbia... $200,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that on the Onderdonk contract?

Mr. McLELAN. The rolling stock that was under contract reverted back to the Government. The Government was to take the rolling stock back that might be on the contractors' hands at the completion of the contract. The contract has not been adjusted, I think, as yet.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the amount of Mr. Onderdonk's demand?

Mr. McLELAN. I am told he has not presented an account, and there is no final settlement. This is a statement of the rolling stock, engines, &c. I am told he has not put in any claims.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are the accounts settled yet?

Mr. McLELAN. No, the accounts are not settled. I asked if he had put in a claim, and they told me no. There are twenty-nine locomotives and a number of cars. These have been valued by the mechanical superintendent of two railways and the engineer of construction. The engines are valued at from $3,000 to $9,450. The one at $3,000 is struck out as being unfit, as by the terms of the contract it was only the rolling stock that was considered fit for use.

Mr. MULOCK. They have been used in the construction of the road?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. What was done with these locomotives?

Mr. McLELAN. The Government has them on hand yet.

Mr. BLAKE. $9,450, at the present prices seem to be very high for a second-class locomotive that has been used some years. I think we can get a new locomotive for $7,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It takes a lot of money to get them over there.

Mr. BLAKE. Then we are to pay for transporting them there also, although the contractor took them there to make his contract. Are they in the possession of the Government now?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the Government running the road now?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. If we had the engines here running on a road they would be of more value.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the road is not being run?

Mr. McLELAN. There is an arrangement with Mr. Onderdonk to carry the mails, and I believe that he also carries such passengers and freight as may be presented. A certain portion of the road is being run.

Mr. BLAKE. With this rolling stock?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot say that.

Mr. BLAKE. It is being run now, on account of the Government, by arrangement with Mr. Onderdonk.

Mr. McLELAN. The arrangement with him is to carry the mails, and he also carries freight and passengers.

Mr. BLAKE. The question of whether the road was built according to contract would be one question, and the question how much should be paid to him would be another. Are either of these points settled?

Mr. McLELAN. The report of the chief engineer is that the work is up to the contract.

Mr. BLAKE. Then has the Government accepted that report of the chief engineer and decided to accept the work?

Mr. McLELAN. No, it has not been officially carried through yet.

Mr. BLAKE. Unless the report of the chief engineer is overruled, it may be taken that the work is up to the contract. The story is that Mr. Onderdonk has presented a large claim for extras.

Mr. McLELAN. The work has not yet been passed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not know there is any difference between the Department of Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have not heard of any. I suppose Mr. Onderdonk was here in connection with this matter of rolling stock. The report of the valuator is dated March.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway been asked to accept the road?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made any statement or communication to the Government as to the position of the road relative to what they are entitled to demand under the contract?

Mr. McLELAN. It has not come before the Government; it may have come before the Department of Railways.

Mr. BLAKE. What is delaying the settlement with Mr. Onderdonk?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot say that anything is delaying it.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the Government engineer made a final estimate of what is due to Mr. Onderdonk?

Mr. McLELAN. I know of no final estimate.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the price of the cars?

Mr. McLELAN. From $600 at $700.

Mr. MULOCK. What sort?

Mr. McLELAN. Flat cars, first and second class. There are 64 first class, 38 second class, 55 third class, 240 fourth class. The prices are $730, $725, $720, $700, $690, $695.

Mr. BLAKE. They are second-hand flat cars?

Mr. McLELAN. That is what is on the memorandum.

Mr. MITCHELL. We can get hundreds and thousands from contractors at from $400 at $500 new.

Mr. MULOCK. A new flat can be purchased for under $300.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that the chief engineer's estimate?

Mr. McLELAN. That is the valuator's. The chief engineer has struck out $3,325.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems a most extraordinary estimate for second hand flat cars.

Mr. McLELAN. There is a statement signed by M. J. Haney, W. T. Reid and P. Clark as valuators.

Carillon Canal..... $24,000 00

Mr. CASEY. This item is an instance of the folly of trying to discuss estimates at this hour of the morning. In connection with the Carillon Canal there were undoubted scandals, undoubted improprieties of management and conduct on the part of the Government, which really ought to be discussed. I shall not of course attempt to discuss them at this hour of the morning, but I shall simply enter my protest and reserve my right to say something on this item on concurrence.

Kingston Penitentiary..... $11,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is $3,000 of this for furniture of the warden's house, and the balance is for plumbing, fitting in gas works and a number of small expenses.

Mr. BLAKE. Do we supply the warden with furniture?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. We do in all the penitentiaries.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the warden recently appointed. I do not remember that we furnished the late warden with furniture.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The late warden owned the furniture and took it away with him.

Mr. BLAKE. Exactly. Then this is a new expense. What will be the cost of putting gas into the main structure?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAKE. This is contrary to the usual care with which the hon. gentleman's estimates are prepared.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are a number of small items which I might read to the hon. gentleman, but he cannot expect me now to be able to collect the different amounts relating to gas together and give him the total.

Public Works, chargeable to income—Public buildings, Ontario..... $39,961 17

Mr. CASEY. I see an amount of $2,225 for the St. Thomas post office, Custom house, &c. I thought that was finished last year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a small balance of the work done last year which we had no money for. In the Supplementary Estimates for 1886-87 there is another small sum of $2,400 to complete that.

Public Buildings, Manitoba..... $30,975 50

Mr. CASEY. What will be the total cost of the Winnipeg post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $205,300.

Public Buildings, North-West Territories..... $43,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost of the Regina gaol and lunatic asylum, for which $11,500 is asked, will be $52,000. The additional barrack and stabling accommodation for the Mounted Police force will cost altogether $125,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this all at Regina?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. All at Regina.

Repairs, Furniture, Heating..... $40,575 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of $6,500 is to make good the damages caused by the fire of 22nd February last. It is the intention of the Government to give $200 of this money to the Firemen's Benevolent Society as a reward for the services they rendered on that occasion.

Roads and Bridges—Ottawa City..... $19,174 50

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to cover the expenses of keeping these bridges in order, as well as the approaches and Major's Hill Park. The street in front of the buildings is now under our charge, and the sidewalks also, and will have to be repaired. Then $2,000 is required for the park to keep up the walks, the flower beds and trees, and to water the park.

Department of Indian Affairs—Manitoba and North-West Territories..... $399,617 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood the First Minister wanted to make special explanations about this item.

Mr. McLELAN. He will on concurrence, perhaps.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hum! It would be a pity that he should not, because we were informed in the Senate that he was most anxious to make them.

Mr. McLELAN. So he is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hum!

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Unfortunately his health will not permit him to be here this time of night.

Mr. CASEY. We should not be here at this time of night, either.

North-West Mounted Police..... $154,541 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is Lieutenant Colonel Irvine leaving the force?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, and Colonel Lawrence Herchmer has been appointed his successor.

Committee rose and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That when the House adjourns, it stands adjourned till 11 o'clock to-day.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 4:48 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 2nd June, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RAISING OF DAMS ON MUD CREEK.

Mr. BLAKE (for Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT) asked, Whether the raising of the dams upon Mud Creek, at the outlet of Mud Lake, in the township of Bedford, was done by the authority or with the privity of the Government, or of any official of the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am told that it was not.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say a few words in reference to the state of public business. The House will recollect that, at an early hour yesterday, the First Minister, in answer to a question from the other side of the House, stated his expectation that the business of this House might close to-day and that prorogation might take place on Friday. At a later hour in the afternoon or evening, I was informed that His Excellency had been kind enough to say he would attend at any hour this evening, however late, for the purpose of prorogation, if the business of the House could be got through in time. I believed it would conduce to the convenience of hon. members of this House, after their attendance during this long and laborious Session, if that result could be achieved. I felt, however, that it would be impossible to achieve that result unless we had a late sitting of the House yesterday, and at least the usual sitting to-day, and therefore I suggested, through you, Mr. Speaker, that, if we sat late yesterday, and then met at eleven to-day, we would, in that way, get four hours and a half more than if we met at the usual hour, and we might get a full day's work in order to accomplish the result which was desired. No communication was made to me as to the hour at which it was proposed to ask His Excellency to prorogue, and I was taken by surprise when I was told that the hour was as early as half-past five. Still I thought it was right to endeavor to accomplish the result, so far as that could be done consistently with a reasonable discussion of the Estimates, and I am still ready to do my part towards the accomplishment of that result by using, as I have done privately and as I now do publicly, any influence I may have with hon. members to curtail the discussion within the narrowest limits consistent with public duty. But I desire to state that I had no idea, until the public statement was made here, that it was contemplated that prorogation would take place as early as half past five. I shall still do all that is possible to accomplish that result, but it was not the result I contemplated when the arrangement was concurred in. My belief was that we could, by meeting here at eleven, get a usual long day's work done by a reasonable hour of the evening, and that by that means we could get to the same result as far as the business of the House was concerned as was contemplated by the First Minister when he made the announcement in the afternoon. If we can do so earlier, I shall be only too glad. What can be done to accomplish that result shall be done, but, as I am always anxious to observe the most rigorous and absolute good faith in any arrangements to which I am a party, I think it due to myself to make the statement that this was not what I contemplated, though I am not desiring to impute any breach of faith to hon. gentlemen opposite in announcing half-past five. It was done, I suppose, because it was thought that was the meaning of the arrangement, but it was entirely opposed to the view I had entertained. In the course of the communications, the hour of ten o'clock was named to me as an hour up to which prorogation might take place.

THE FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to suggest to the Government that the Franchise Amendment Bill should be printed, as amended, immediately, and sent to the revising officers. It very seriously affects the revising officers in my district.

RAILWAY BETWEEN ANNAPOLIS AND DIGBY.

Mr. VAIL. Yesterday I asked the Government whether an application had been made for the extension of the grant of $3,200 a mile made to the road between Annapolis and Digby. The time would expire on the 1st July of this year. I was told that an answer would be given when the Minister of Railways was in his place.

Mr. POPE. I have no knowledge of any application having been made. If it has been made, I have not seen it. Does the hon. gentleman say there has been an application?

Mr. VAIL. Yes.

Mr. POPE. I have no knowledge of it. This has not been considered by the Government, but I will consider it at the first opportunity. When the hon. gentleman spoke to me yesterday, that was the first I heard of it.

Mr. VAIL. The paper has been before the Government for a fortnight. I understood some time ago that an Act was to be introduced to extend the time, and that is why I asked the question.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the resolution reported from Committee of the Whole yesterday, respecting bounty on pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore, be concurred in.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 150) respecting the bounty on pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, read the third time, on a division, and passed.

AN OBSCENE PUBLICATION.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the adoption of this motion, I desire to say that I have received a communication from the mayor of the city of Toronto asking me to call the attention of the Government to the following matter: He informs me that the New York Police Gazette had been prohibited from entering Canada, and that this prohibition is being evaded by the title of the paper being changed to the Sporting Times; that the same obscene paper under this title is now for sale in the usual places where such papers are sold, and he desired me to bring the matter in this way before the Minister of Customs—I presume it would be —in the hope that the matter would be dealt with.

NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would ask the Premier whether the requirement of the Government in relation to the Beaty Bill has been fulfilled: whether the deposit has been made by Mr. Beaty or not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A deposit has been made in New York, but whether satisfactory or not we cannot yet say.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Maintenance of Gaol and Lunatic Asylum at Regina..... $10,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. This would seem to be the organisation of a lunatic asylum at Regina, and it proposes a lump sum without any scale or arrangement as to the number of officers or the salaries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is for the establishment of a lunatic asylum and hospital at Regina. The expenses of the lunatics in the North-West are very great, and they have to be sent to the penitentiary in Manitoba, where their board and lodging have to be paid for. It is proposed to put up an ordinary building to be used as a lunatic asylum and hospital for the lunatics who are found on the plains, and the serious cases of illness which have now to be sent to the hospital at Winnipeg at an enormous expense. There is no scale fixed for the number of officers or salaries, but that will be done on the most moderate scale.

Mr. BLAKE. The objection is to this bulk vote for salaries, when we have no statement of what the expenses are estimated to be. I trust that, under such circumstances, the salaries to be given will be of the most moderate and unexceptional character, and made in such a manner that Parliament may freely deal with them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By all means.

Legislation..... $100,520 00

Mr. MULOCK. Why is this $100,000 to meet expenses of the Franchise Act different from the item already given?

Mr. McLELAN. It is expected that the expenses will be very much less under the amendments that are made.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman will please give some particulars with respect to the $100,000.

Mr. McLELAN. The money will be expended over all the items, especially the printing.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the first item was passed, further information was promised. The country understands that the Franchise Act will cost a considerable sum. We require information as to payment to be made to the clerks, and with respect to the travelling expenses of the different officials. Our constituents will expect to obtain full particulars, and I am afraid we shall return to them blindfolded in regard to the expenses attending this Act.

Mr. McLELAN. The accounts have not come in, so as to enable the Government to make anything like a correct estimate of the expenditure. I took the accounts for printing of four of the large counties of Nova Scotia, and found they averaged $500, and upon that an estimate for the whole Dominion was based. We have no data on which to make an estimate. It is stated by those competent to judge in regard to printing matters that the expense of printing the lists will be largely reduced.

Mr. VAIL. How is it proposed to pay the revising officers? In some Nova Scotia counties there are 10,000 or 12,000 votes, and in other cases one revising officer has two counties with 20,000 or 22,000 each. Is the same sum to be paid to each officer, or will payment be made in proportion to work done?

Mr. McLELAN. Regard will be had to the quantity of work done.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The Finance Minister has stated that there is no data on which to form a reliable estimate. The Department of the Secretary of State, however, issued a circular to the different revising officers asking them for a statement of the probable cost of working the Franchise Act, omitting the cost of printing and the revising officers' salary. The cost given was between $600 and $700 per constituency. At $600, the total would reach $126,600, omitting the payment to revising officers and the printing of the lists. Consequently the estimate of the Government is entirely too small. There is a manifest determination on the part of the Government that the country shall not obtain full particulars as to the working of the Act. The only justification for a reduction in the amount is that a saving is expected in printing the lists. There is ample ground for a reduction. In one of the western constituencies the printing of the voters' list at the cost of the municipality, containing 4,792 names, was $179.65; the new list, printed under this Act and under the tariff of the Secretary of State, containing 5,126 names, will cost $621.12. One municipality that had its lists printed at the cost of $28 will pay $130 under this Act, and there is a difference of only one in the number of names.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). No doubt the Government have made a mistake in endeavoring to keep the printing under their own control. From a return brought down to the House on 21st May, which contains 1,570 pages, with respect to the Franchise Act, I have been able to cull a few interesting statements, which go to show that the Government are determined that the printing of the voters' lists shall be worked for the benefit of their own newspapers. The Government must have determined that the printing of the voters' lists shall be kept entirely in the hands of their own friends, for I find various telegrams in this correspondence instructing the revising officers that they are to have the work done at certain offices. I will read a few of them to show the House in what way the Government are seeking to control the matter. I entirely agree with the statement of the hon. member for Middlesex that if this printing had been left entirely in the hands of the revising officers, and had been done in the usual way in which it has heretofore been done in the Province of Ontario, one-half the expense would have been saved to this country. There is no doubt the Government intended that their newspapers should make a fat thing of the printing of the voters' lists, and the prices they were allowed, running from 12½ to 16 cents per name, is certainly an extravagant price, as any printer will decide for himself on looking at the list. Here is the first letter I will read:

(Telegram.)

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 2nd January, 1885.

"To His Honor Judge SINCLAIR,
"Hamilton, Ont.

"Arrangements have been made for printing under Franchise Act for your district being done at office of Hamilton Spectator.

(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S."

Now, the Government were not altogether fortunate in their correspondence with Judge Sinclair, the revising officer for Wentworth, as will be seen by the correspondence which follows. Before proceeding with that, however, I will read a letter to the Spectator Printing Company from the Secretary of State:

"OTTAWA, 2nd January, 1886.

"The Proprietor of the Hamilton Spectator.

"SIR,—I am directed to inform you that the revising officer appointed under the Electoral Franchise Act for the electoral district of Wentworth, has been instructed to have such printing as may require to be done under the said Act, for his district, performed at the office of your paper.

"I have, &c.,

(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S."

In reply to the telegram sent to Judge Sinclair, I find the following answer:—

"HAMILTON, 4th January, 1886.

"G. POWELL, Esq.,
"Under Secretary of State, Ottawa.

"SIR,—I have your telegram of the 2nd instant, in these words: 'Arrangements have been made for printing under Franchise Act for your district being done at office of Hamilton Spectator.' In so telegraphing me I think you must have overlooked the provisions of the Franchise Act. The 16th section says in regard to the preliminary list that 'the revising officer shall then forthwith cause to be printed, &c,' and as to the final lists the 24th section says that the revising officer shall cause a sufficient number of copies of each of such lists * * to be printed, &c. You will therefore see that the revising officer is the person delegated by Parliament to have the lists printed He cannot do so without employing some printer; and how I had determined upon in regard to that was this: I proposed to invite tenders for the work, and the lowest tenderer would get the job provided he could do the work properly and with despatch. The money to be paid for it is not yours, mine, or any other officer of Government, but public money, and I had determined to contract for its expenditure according to well-known business rules, so that all parties able to do it should have an equal opportunity to compete for the work. This I considered to be the best course in the public interests to pursue before receiving your telegram, and I am still of that opinion. Until the Statutes declare that I must get the printing done at a particular office, or in some other way prescribes that some other person shall perform the duty of seeing the printing done, I must assume that responsibility myself. It is part of my duty under my commission, and I decline to allow any interference with it. When I fail in such duty in that respect, the Statute affords a remedy. Until then I propose to follow the Act of Parliament in regard to the printing, the same as in other respects, trying so far as my ability and an earnest desire will allow to administer the provisions of this Statute fairly and with equal justice to all.

"Yours truly,

(Signed) "J. S SINCLAIR.
"Revising Officer for the Electoral Districts of North and South Wentworth."

I will just say that it is a pity that more of the revising officers throughout the length of the Dominion have not the backbone which Judge Sinclair displayed in this matter. In answer to that letter of Judge Sinclair, I find the following from the Under Secretary of State:—

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 9th January, 1886.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, relative to telegraphic instructions to you from this Department regarding printing required by you as a revising officer under the Electoral Franchise Act, and to state that the matter will receive consideration.

"I have, &c.,

(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S.

"His Honor JUDGE SINCLAIR,
"Hamilton, Ont."

Then the Spectator Company write this letter;

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant).

"RE FRANCHISE ACT.

"'THE SPECTATOR,'
"HAMILTON, CANADA, 25th January, 1886.

"The Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—The enclosed advertisement, inserted by the revising officer of Wentworth, we cut from the Hamilton Times.

"On referring to yours of the 2nd instant, we find you say that Judge Sinclair has been instructed to give us the printing.

"We will be glad to hear from you on this matter.

"In same letter you speak about tariff, &c. We will be glad to have copies of same at your earliest convenience.

"Yours respectfully,

(Signed) "'SPECTATOR' COMPANY,
"W. CAREY."

Another letter to the Spectator people on the 26th of January by the Under Secretary of State:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 26th January, 1886.

"W. CAREY, Esq., Managing Director The Spectator,
"Hamilton, Ont.

"SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th instant, enclosing, for the information of the Secretary of State, a notice of the revising officer of Wentworth, under the Electoral Franchise Act, in reference to the printing of the voters' lists under that Act, and to state that my letter to Judge Sinclair was merely in the form of a suggestion, as it would not be proper on the part of the Government to dictate to the revising officer as to the discharge of his duties. Two copies of the tariff at which the lists are to be printed are herewith enclosed.

"I have, &c.,

(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S."

I wish to put this on record, so that the revising officers will understand that the Government have no right to dictate to them as to the manner in which they shall discharge their duties under the Franchise Act. Here is a letter from the revising officer of Hamilton addressed to the Secretary of State:

"HAMILTON, CANADA, 6th January, 1886.

"SIR,—I beg to acknowledge receipt to-day of sheets referred to in your favor of 30th ultimo, received by me yesterday.

"Judge Sinclair, Revising Officer for divisions, county Wentworth, informs me that he has been instructed to have printing done at Spectator office. As I have received no instructions, I shall be glad to know whether I am to advertise for tenders or have printing done at Specator Company office without advertising."

"I am, your obedient servant,

(Signed) "WM. BELL,
"Revising Officer for Hamilton."

'Hon. J. A. CHAPLEAU,
"Secretary of State, Ottawa."

Here is another from the Spectator Office:

"RE VOTERS' LISTS.

"'THE SPECTATOR,'
"HAMILTON, CANADA, 21st January, 1886.

"Hon. J. A. CHAPLEAU,
"Secretary of State, Ottawa.''

"DEAR SIR,—We have seen Mr. Bell, the Revising Officer for Hamilton, about printing the voters' lists. He tells us that he has not yet received instructions.

"Please issue your instructions to him to give the Spectator the printing of said lists, &c.

"We would suggest that the work ought to be commenced at an early date as the time is getting short in which it must be done.

"Yours very respectfully,

(Signed) "SPECTATOR COMPANY,
"W. CAREY."

Here is another from the Spectator:

"'THE SPECTATOR,'
"HAMILTON, CANADA, 25th January, 1886.

"The Hon SECRETARY OF STATE, Ottawa."

"DEAR SIR,—We have been informed by Mr. Bell, the Revising Officer for Hamilton, that we are to have the printing for the city.

"Kindly send us a scale of rates by return to be allowed by Government and oblige,

"Yours very truly,
(Signed) "SPECTATOR COMPANY,
"W. CAREY."

This is the same company which in 1883 and 1884 were paid $17,897 for doing work which they should have done for $4,610 for the Agricultural Department. But they were not satisfied with trying to get the printing for Hamilton for the Spectator office, but they also control the Mail job office at Toronto, and here is a letter to the Secretary of State with regard to the printing for that city:

"'MAIL' JOB DEPARTMENT,
"TORONTO, January 9, 1886.

"Secretary, Department Secretary of State, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—I understand that instructions are being issued to the revising barristers respecting the printing required by them. I hope you can use your influence towards securing for the Mail job department a share of the printing for the city of Toronto and the ridings of York. We have every facility, and think we have a claim on the Government for this printing. Please advise us what course we shall adopt in order to secure a portion of this printing, and oblige

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "'MAIL' JOB DEPARTMENT,
"Per W. A. SHEPARD, Manager."

Just to show that this system has been adopted by the Government, I will read another telegram from the Department of the Secretary of State:

(Telegram.)

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 2nd January, 1886.

"To His Honor JUDGE DAVIS, London, Ont.

"Arrangements have been made for printing under Franchise Act, for your district, being done at office of London Free Press.
(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S."

That is a paper which gets from $10,000 to $12,000 worth of pap every year. Here also are the instructions to the proprietor of that paper:

"OTTAWA, January 2nd, 1886.

"The Proprietor of the London Free Press.

"SIR,—I am directed to inform you that the Revising Officer appointed under the 'Electoral Franchise Act' for the Electoral District of Middlesex, has been instructed to have such printing as may require to be done under the said Act, for his district, performed at the office of your paper.

"A tariff regulating the charges to be allowed for printing is now being framed, and upon its adoption a copy of the same will be forwarded to you, for your information. I am also to state that the form of the voters' lists to be printed is under consideration.

"I have, &c.,
(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S."

But here is the most interesting correspondence of all, namely, that between the Department of the Secretary of State and the proprietor of the Chatham Planet newspaper:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 2nd January, 1886.

"To the Proprietor of the Planet newspaper,
"Chatham, Ont.

"SIR,—I am directed to inform you that the revising officer appointed under the Electoral Franchise Act for the Electoral District of Bothwell has been instructed to have such printing as may require to be done under the said Act, for his district, performed at the office of your paper.

"A tariff regulating the charges to be allowed for printing is now being framed, and upon its adoption a copy of the same will be forwarded to you, for your information.

"CHATHAM, ONT., 9th January, 1886.

"G. POWELL, Esq, Under Secretary of State, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—I have to acknowledge yours dated 2nd instant and posted Ottawa 7th re the printing required to be done under 'The Electoral Franchise Act' for the Bothwell District. I shall be pleased to learn if the appointment for this division (West Kent) has been made. Compliments of the season.

"Yours very truly,

"CHATHAM, ONT., 27th January, 1886.

"G. POWELL, Under Secretary of State, Ottawa.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I have just had a consultation with Judge Bell, Revising Officer for East Kent, about the time I might expect the copy for the lists, and was met with the salutation, 'I do not propose giving you the printing, nor do I propose to be dictated to by the Government where it shall be performed.'

"I am in a position to get out both lists and perform it within the time required by the Government, and will furnish bonds for its due performance. My staff consists of nearly forty hands and I have plenty of material on hand. Will you please instruct me at once if the spirit of your letter of the 2nd and the telegram sent to the revising officer about the same time, is to be carried out, that I may lose no time in completing arrangements. I am very sorry to trouble you with a matter I thought was, and yet consider, an absolute certainty, that I am to do the work for this county.

"I have the honor to be,

(Telegram.)

"CHATHAM, January 28th, 1886.

"To J. A. CHAPLEAU, Secretary of State, Ottawa.

"Judge Bell, Revising Barrister, East Kent, says: 'I do not propose giving you the printing, nor do I propose being dictated to by the Government where it shall be performed, in your letter of second instant. He is a stockholder and I think director in the Banner Printing Company, to whom he says he is going to give the work. See my letter to Under Secretary; please send further instructions.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 29th January, 1886.

"SYDNEY STEPHENSON, Esq,

"SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th and of your telegram of the 28th instant with reference to the printing of the voters lists, under the Electoral Franchise Act, for the Electoral District of Bothwell and to state that whatever course his Honor Judge Bell may choose to pursue cannot be helped

"The telegram addressed to Judge Bell was suggestive only, as it would not be proper on the part of the Government to dictate to the revising officer as to the discharge of his duties.

"I have, &c.,
(Signed) "G. POWELL, U.S.S."

Then comes a very interesting letter from Mr. Stephenson:

"CHATHAM, ONT., 1st February, 1886.

"G. POWELL, Esq.,
"Under Secretary of State, Ottawa, Ont.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I have yours of yesterday's date, and regret you cannot see your way clear to insist upon the printing being done at this office. Judge Bell is a most violent partisan, and will not hesitate to thwart the Government if it will be of any advantage to his own party. His connection with the Banner, one of the most rabid papers in the country, a copy of which I send you, should, I think, be a good reason why he should not say where the work should be done; besides, not a word would be heard from him or the Banner, as he would not care to have his connection ventilated through the papers. The Ontario Government, some years ago, threatened the present sheriff with dismissal unless he took the printing, which was being done by Mr. Rufus Stephenson, at this office, to the Banner, where ever since every dollars worth has been done. I have fifteen hundred dollars worth of material on hand, that has been perfectly useless since the Postal Guide was given the Government printers, but which will come in now, thereby placing me in a splendid position to do the work rapidly. Mr. Carling and Mr. Pope promised to give me printing to recoup me for my loss, as Mr. Carling said it was a mistake to have taken the work just at the time the Department did. The present Minister——"

I think this must be a mistake in copying, and should be member.—

"—owes me $1,000 for election printing, which will be a total loss, so that if you can put it in such a light to give me the work I wish you would do so,

"Trusting you will see your way to telegraph or write the returning officer by first mail, and send me a favorable reply,

"I remain, your obedient servant,
(Signed) "S. STEPHENSON."

In reply to this, a letter was sent to Mr. Stephenson, as follows:—

"DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
"OTTAWA, 10th February, 1886.

"To S. STEPHENSON, Esq.,
"Chatham Planet, Chatham, Ont

"SIR,—Adverting to previous correspondence upon this subject, and especially to your letter of the 1st instant, I have the honor to inform you that it is not in the power of the Government to dictate to the revising officer as to whom he shall select to print his lists.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
(Signed) "G. POWELL, U. S. S.

Now, the object I have in reading this correspondence is to let the revising officers all over the Dominion see that the Government has no right to dictate to them in this matter; and if they have a desire to guard the interests of the public they will not consent to be dictated to by the Government. The course pursued by the Government in favoring their friends in the printing of these lists has resulted in doubling the cost of the lists without any doubt whatever; and it is just as well that the revising officers, newspaper men, and the public generally should understand that when an Act of Parliament is placed on the Statute-book of this country, the Government have no right to dictate to the officers appointed to administer that law, either as to the course they should pursue in dispensing the patronage or in any other way. They have the Act of Parliament to guide them, and have no necessity for instructions from the Government. I do not wonder that these newspaper men are so anxious in this matter. They smell boodle on every occasion; and they can see that by manipulating the Department of State they are able to obtain patronage at exorbitant prices, which are much greater than the prices charged under the Ontario Election Act. Under these circumstances, it is time this matter should be brought under the notice of the House. I may say that this Mr. Stephenson is the man who received a gratuity of $2,000 or $3,000 from the Government, three or four years ago, for handling the printing of the Pacific Railway Commission report, never having done any work upon it, but just pocketing the money and giving the work to the Government contractors here. Before I sit down I would propose, not exactly in connection with this, but in connection with the manner in which returns are brought down, that they should be collected in a more connected shape. The return contains 1,670 pages of letters and telegrams, all on the same subject, between the Department and individuals, and they are so mixed up, no system at all being adopted, that it is difficult to find what one wants. When there are so many officials employed, who have but little to do, surely returns ought to be brought down in better shape and in some sort of consecutive order.

Mr. MoMULLEN. I simply rise to say that I cannot allow this item to pass without putting on record my humble protest against the increase of salary of $400 to the Assistant Clerk of the House. We are not in the financial position to warrant these increases.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. What the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) has said is but a rehearsal of what has already appeared in the public press. The hon. gentleman, to make a point, was obliged to make a statement of supposed fact, which he does not know and which is not supported by proof. There is only one point, if any, that could be made, and that is that the demand of the Government that the printing should be done in certain newspaper offices had the effect of costing the country more than the printing otherwise would. The hon. gentleman being weak in his argument, was strong in his assertion. He stated, in substance, that the printing cost twice as much as it would if left to the revising officers to give to whom they chose. That statement is completely inexact. The circular which was sent to the revising officers was sent frankly and openly, and it was to the effect that the Government could have the printing done; and I think the Government should have taken the printing of all the lists into their hands, under the one condition that moderate rates should be fixed. The rates fixed in the circular were considered by Mr. Romaine and the Queen's Printer to be very reasonable, and the proof that they are so lies in the fact that the printers, not only Conservative but Grit printers, who have printed these lists, have tried to induce the Government to give higher prices than those fixed. The Grit papers have been just as eager as the others to get higher prices. Therefore, the point the hon. gentleman tried to make he did not succeed in making. It will be seen, practically, by recriminations of different printers, that the prices, as fixed by the Department, were very reasonable—not too low, but certainly not too high. No complaint has been or will be made in that respect. I do not see why the Government should not have the lists printed. If we had left it to the revising officers, the charges would have been a great deal in excess of the prices we have fixed in the circulars. As to the manner of bringing down the report, the report is well brought down. It is as much connected as possible Of course the correspondence had to be given into several hands, for had we engaged only one officer there would have been great loss of time, and it may happen that there may be some slight want of connection on that account, but, generally speaking, the correspondence has been taken and combined as sent. We have received 161 letters at a time, and they are put in the report by order of date.

Mr. BLAKE. I entirely dissent from the position taken by the Secretary of State. The statement made by my hon. friend as to the cost of printing is one which the Secretary has not in the least answered. It would be a new thing to find that the reasonableness of prices is to be fixed by the persons who get the job; it is not generally so. My hon. friend gave the example of Ontario, and stated that the rates the Government prescribed would entail double the cost which similar work cost the Ontario Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I deny that statement, and have authority for the denial.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend stated the Government ought to have the right to say where the printing should be done. That may be a question for argument, but it is not the view adopted by the Government last Session. The Government then, by the Franchise Act, gave the power to the revising officer who, they declared, were independent of the Government, to determine where the printing should be done. If the hon. gentleman held the view he now takes, last Session, he failed then to convince his colleagues, and, as a member of the Government which carried the Bill, he participated in and is responsible for the policy which the Government then adopted, and which he now says is not the right one. The Act having declared that the printing should be left altogether in the hands of the revising officer, it was an impudent act on the part of the Government to send them instructions as to the way in which they should discharge their duty, and if but a few of the revising officers were possessed of sufficient firmness and regard for their position, to repudiate the impudent assumption of the Government, so much the worse for the country. A circular was sent the revising officers, saying that the printing had been arranged by the Government to be given to so and so, and when a few repudiated this instruction, the hon. gentleman is obliged to say it was only a suggestion.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. So it was.

Mr. BLAKE. It was an instruction.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was not.

Mr. BLAKE. The language of the letters in which he communicated with the newspaper officers is, that "the revising officer has been instructed to send you the papers." Now the hon. gentleman says they were not instructed, and that the statement is about as accurate as many others the hon. gentleman has made. Most of the revising officers obeyed his instructions, and few repudiated them. When an Act of Parliament is passed, that Act ought to be obeyed by the Government, and the hon. gentleman has no right to take a power or to assume an authority in carrying out an Act which Parliament has not given him, and which he assumes because he thinks that the Act should have provided differently. He has no right to assume to himself an authority which Parliament did not clothe him with. He has no right to arrogate to the Government an authority which Parliament did not clothe them with. He ought to have left this entirely to the control of the revising officers. What he might have done was this: He might have issued a circular to the revising officer saying that he had enquired and had found that such and such rates ought to be maximum rates; he might have issued a circular for their information, suggesting that the principle of tender ought to be applied, but merely as suggestions. Even these would be acts of interference which would be entirely questionable, but of that character that they could be acts of interference in respect of which nobody could say that the Government was animated by anything else than a consideration for the public service. But, when you find that their act of interference is one directed to the support of their own party papers, declaring that the printing is to be given to persons whom they nominate and appoint on considerations of party favoritism, then you find interference which, of any description whatever, would be questionable, but in this case is more than questionable, is grossly improper.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I maintain that the Government had a right to make a suggestion. If the argument of my hon. friend was correct, the revising officers might have told the Government that they had no right whatever to fix a rate for the cost of printing and might have said that the Statute gave them a right to print at a dollar, when we said they should print at fifty cents, and we would have been called impudent for endeavoring to save the public money. This question of patronage which is put as a condemnation against the Government is not an act of patronage or favoritism, inasmuch as the rate was fixed and was to be followed, and what was to be given was not to be given more to one than to another, but was a regular price; and I state again, without fear of being contradicted by the fact, that, in regard to what my hon. friend has stated to be a proof that we have paid more for the printing than should have been paid, that the Ontario lists did not cost so much, if it is with such an argument that he wants to ask the country to go with them and condemn the Government, he is asking the condemnation under a false pretence, because in making the comparison with the lists of Ontario, he is insinuating that these lists are the same, should be printed in the same manner, and could not cost more, list for list, than the others; whereas there is a wide difference, if not of a half certainly of more than a quarter. The comparison is calculated to deceive the public, and I state again, in the face of my hon. friend and of any of the printers on that side of the House, or outside of the House, the Grit printers, that the rates for printing which were given as absolute rates, are low rates for printing such lists.

Mr DUNDAS. I am not going to argue the constitutional principle as to whether the Government is right or not in dispensing the patronage to those papers which support them and approve of their policy. I would only say that they have the precedent of the hon. gentlemen opposite to follow in this matter, if that precedent is of any value. But I beg to take issue at once with the position that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) has taken, that is, that the Government and the members representing the constituencies have all through dictated to the revising barristers as to how they should have the printing done. I know in the constituency which I represent there was no interference of any kind with the revising officer, and the result is that the printing was done by the Reform paper of that town, notwithstanding that there was a paper in the town representing the principles of this Government. There was no interference in any way either by the Government or by the representatives to prevent the revising officer from giving the printing to whom he chose, and he gave it to that paper which is noted for its consistent opposition to the Government.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Because the other could not do it, perhaps.

Mr. DUNDAS. The other paper could do it, and is as respectable a paper as will be found in any town of its size in Ontario. The assertions made by those gentlemen are too sweeping, and I regret taking up the time of the House at this period of the Session in order to give this contradiction, which I am sure could also be done by members representing other constituencies.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). It was stated by the Secretary of State that it was merely a suggestion, and no dictation was intended to the revising officers. I will read a telegram which will throw some light on that point:

"Arrangements have been made for printing, under Franchise Act, in your district, being done at the office of the Hamilton Spectator."

That is not a suggestation; that is a dictation. The same was sent in reference to the London Free Press, the Chatham Planet and other newspapers. In regard to the cost of the printing, I say most emphatically, and I know of what I speak, that the price paid for the printing of these lists was an outrageously high price, and, if the Government had not fixed the rates to be paid, and the revising officers had been allowed the opportunity of asking for tenders for printing these lists, it would have saved the country a great deal of money. It is fair to compare these lists with the Ontario lists, and, if they are compared, it will be found that the Ontario lists do not cost one-half what the Dominion lists cost, as ordered to be done by the Government.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The statements received from the clerks of the municipalities in the west riding of Middlesex show that the total cost to the municipality of the voters' list for 1885 foots up to $179.65. I had these in my possession and have added the figures myself. There were 4,972 names on these lists. I have counted the new voters' list and it contains 5,126 names, which, at 12 cents a name, half a cent less than the amount allowed by the Government, would amount to $621.12. If there is a comparison instituted between the two lists as to the amount and character of the work, the quantity of paper required, and their relative value in other respects, the municipal lists will be said by printers to have been most expensive, because every one of them except one has a four page cover, stating what is contained in the document, and there are other conditions which would make the list much more costly than the one prepared under the Dominion Franchise Act.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). A few figures in opposition to a statement are very valuable. The Secretary of State has taken very high ground and denied positively without furnishing any figures whatever. I have had left with me a statement by an hon. member which he had gathered with reference to the operation in his county. Whereas the municipal lists in one municipality were printed for $30, under the Franchise Act they will cost $60; in another municipality they cost $30, under the Franchise Act, $90.12; in another $20, under the Franchise Act, $72; in another $25, under the Franchise Act, $103; in another $35, under the Franchise Act, $120; in another $20, under the Franchise Act, $72.

Intercolonial Railway $20,000 00

Mr. MITCHELL. With regard to this vote, I moved at an early stage of this Session for a return of papers connected with several claims, those of the Rev. Mr. Bannon, the late Senator Muirhead, the present Judge Wilkinson and a number of others, who had claims arising out of the contractors' claim on section 16. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that these claims have been referred to the Dominion Arbitrators for arbitration, and they have made a very favorable report, which I will not trouble the House with reading. I would ask the Minister when he will take up these claims with a view to having them arranged? I presume this vote is placed here for the purpose of meeting cases such as I have referred to.

Mr. POPE. I will take up the claims very soon, but as to whether this vote is for the purpose of meeting such claims as the hon. gentleman refers to, I do not know. It is put here for the purpose of paying persons who may be proved to have anything due to them. With respect to the claims the hon. gentleman mentions, I will enquire into them, and if they come under this vote, of course they will be dealt with.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wanted to know if this vote is applicable to these claims. A favorable report has already been made, and I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to meet those claims, which are just.

Mr. WELDON. I would mention to the Minister of Militia that there has been some difficulty about giving passes over the Intercolonial Railway to the riflemen who went to the rifle competition in the Maritime Provinces. I hope that such arrangements may be made as that these passes may be continued, otherwise the volunteers of the Maritime Provinces will certainly be deprived of meeting in competition.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that this matter is now under consideration.

Trent River Navigation, &c $160,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. What does this "&c." mean? In this connection the Minister promised to give us what information there was as to the estimated cost of the canal.

Mr. POPE. The "&c." means the unfinished work, and this is considered sufficient to complete. As to the rest, I shall have to apologise to the House, as the chief engineer has given me nothing that I can bring before the House, and I have no other information at present except what would be misleading, and could be of no advantage to the House. As soon as I can get the information I will bring it down.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very sorry that the information the hon. gentleman has in his archives on the subject of this canal, up to this time, would be misleading.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex).

Canals $60,000 00

Mr. KIRK. I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he took into consideration the petition and application made to him for a sum of money to repair the White haven Canal in Guysboro' county. The people have been pressing it upon him for the last two years, and I am sorry the Minister has proposed no vote for that purpose. What is the reason he has not given some attention to that canal?

Mr. POPE. I really cannot, at this moment, give the hon. gentleman any information, but I will enquire into it, and on concurrence will be able to say whether there is anything.

Esquimalt Graving Dock $250,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This sum is to complete that work, to pay the contractors for the work finished, and the Imperial Government will repay the sum by the 1st of January.

Military Works in British Columbia $25,000 00

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This sum has been placed in the Estimates for the purpose of carrying out an understanding between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government. Under this arrangement the Imperial Government undertake to provide all the armament, the guns, a system of marine torpedoes, &c., for the purpose of protecting the harbors of Victoria and Esquimalt, Canada undertaking to build the fortifications, which will be armed with guns sent out from England.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry this arrangement has not been laid on the Table of the House. What are the plans for the military works which the hon. gentleman proposes—I do not know whether this is to complete or whether it is a payment on account. If it is not to complete, what is the general character of the work, and what is the value of the contribution by the Imperal Government by way of armament, as compared with the proposed contribution by Canada?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The plans for the fortifications are not yet completed, and have not yet been received. The intention is to build earth works of as inexpensive a character as possible. The Imperial Government's contribution will be from £25,000 to £30,000 sterling, and the contribution of Canada, without being over positive as to the amount, which can only be ascertained exactly when the plans are ready, will reach between £15,000 and £20,000 sterling.

Mr. BLAKE. Will this scheme involve a permanently increased expenditure for a military fort to defend the works?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Last year and this year a sum has appeared in the Estimates for C School of Gunnery. That school will be on the same principle as A and B Batteries, and will take charge, to a very great extent, of these works. The intention is not to increase the expense by adding to the force, but to organise the militia in British Columbia as in other portions of the Dominion.

Mr. VAIL. I understand that an Imperial engineer is going to British Columbia. Is he being sent there by the Imperial Government or by the Canadian Government?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am under the impression that he is being sent out by the Imperial Government for the purpose of inspecting the Esquimalt graving docks, but I am not able to give any definite information.

Montreal Post Office, Electric lighting..... $2,250 00

Mr. BLAKE. Is this an independent service?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, the next building is the Montreal Gazette office, where there is an engine and we obtain the electricity from that building.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have 150 lamps for $2,750 The contract runs for four or five years, and additional lamps are to be furnished at $7.30 per lamp, per annum.

Mr. BLAKE. What candle power are the lamps?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAKE. How does the cost compare with the cost of gas.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In 1885 the gas cost $4,000, so we save about $700 or $800 per annum.

Public Buildings, Ontario.. ..... $134,477 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is to be the cost of the Napanee post office and custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Between $15,000 and $16,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is it to be put?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not decided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is in redemption of a pledge made four years ago and it is time it should be redeemed. This, I suppose, is for the land only.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, we do not wish to fix the price of the land. We do not want it to be understood that the land will cost that much.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps there may be a gift of the land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, perhaps—if you put it where I want it. But would it not be better to take a vote for the whole amount and proceed with the work. There can be no difficulty in settling about the site.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The object of that is this: After the Session, in June or July, we must procure a piece of land and some one is sent to examine. When we have fixed on a proper site it is purchased and the Order in Council is passed. Then the title must be examined so that it takes some time to get the final title. The plans and specifications will be prepared, and by that time Parliament will be meeting again and we will ask for an additional amount.

Mr. MULOCK. What is this $8,000 for Toronto post office.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Part of it, apparently about $6,500, is to purchase a lot on the west side of the post office on Lombard street. We were afraid it might get into other hands and that we would be prevented from getting light on that side of the property. The balance is to remodel the plumbing and outbuildings.

Mr. MULOCK. How much land has been purchased?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is forty-one feet by ninety-one feet.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the price per foot?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is evidently an error in the figures supplied me, but deducting the amount for repairs from the whole vote the price paid must be about $6,500. The property has not been finally purchased—only provisionally—till Parliament votes the money.

Mr. MULOCK. If $6,500 is the price, it is a most exorbitant price. The place is in the slums of the city. The Post Office bounds extend in the rear to Lombard street, a street that has been abandoned; and I am aware of transactions in property in that street, far better situated than this, in which $50 a foot was considered as the value of the land. If the Government have paid $6,500 for it, they have paid three times its value.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The memorandum I have states that if this lot passed into private hands and was built upon, the light on that side of the post office building would be, to a large extent, shut off. The price is considered by the chief architect to be fair and reasonable.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is the chief architect?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Fuller.

Mr. BLAKE. It is absurd to take Mr. Fuller's estimate of the value of property in Toronto.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He takes evidence.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether he took evidence in this case or not; it is not stated. The proper way to ascertain the value of the property is to take the opinion of those who know the value of property in the city, and my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock), who cannot be far astray, states that we are paying three prices for it.

London Infantry School $30,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the vote of $30,000 for the London Infantry School?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to enable the chief architect to carry on the work of the proposed new barracks. The cost of the barrack building, including furnishing, heating, &c., is estimated at $75,000; then there is $3,600 for the architect and $2,000 for the clerk of works, the total estimated cost being $81,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman received any information as to difficulties in connection with the drainage of the site of the school?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been stated in the papers that there are serious difficulties, and that pile driving will have to be resorted to in order to overcome them.

Mr. CARLING. The architect was in the city yesterday, and he says that the difficulty can be overcome by the construction of a drain

Mr BLAKE. I suppose this is the property as to which the tripartite agreement was made some time ago, under which the city bought some property from the Minister of Agriculture, and the hon. gentleman took that property and gave the city some other property?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the nature of the arrangement?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In 1884, on the recommendation of General Middleton, it was determined to establish an Infantry School at London. The citizens of London were very adverse to the school being established on the Government property, for reasons which they set forth. Upon that recommendation, three sites were offered, the Geary site, the Kent site, and the Carling farm. The matter was submitted to the brigade major of the district, and he recommended the Carling farm as the most suitable. The offer made to the city was $10,000 in cash and a deed of 16 acres of land of Government property and the right to use some 90 acres adjoining for camping purposes for 20 years, for 8 acres of land now used as our military property. This proposition was approved by Order in Council; but it had to be submitted to a vote of the ratepayers of London, who rejected it. Subsequently, however, the city made a new proposition, that they would give a free deed of fifty-five acres of the Carling farm within the city limits, which has been used as a military camp-ground for many years, for eight acres of the Government property referred to in the former proposition. This proposition was again referred to the brigade major, and was referred by him to Mr. George Durand, a well-known architect of London, on the 26th of April, 1885. A valuation of the two properties was sent in by him. The Government property was estimated at $41,355 and the fifty-five acres of the Carling farm were estimated at $46,000. I was not satisfied to take this valuation; I wanted to get more than one, and the proposition was again submitted to the valuation of Mr. McElheran, an auctioneer and valuator, and Mr. William M. Ward, a real estate agent; and these gentlemen reported the value of the Government property at $39,030, and the fifty-five acres of the Carling farm at $44,000. This subsequent offer of exchange was referred to the council and approved, and the exchange has been made, and the contract for the building let, and the work is now going on. I will bring down and lay on the Table all the papers.

Mr. BLAKE. Is Mr. Durand the architect of the building now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been represented outside, from time to time, that this institution, which is to be erected in or near London, is to be analogous to the Kingston College. Of course, that is not the case.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; it is to be analogous to the School of Infantry, Toronto.

Manitoba Penitentiary..... $25,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to go on with certain works. The works when completed will require a very large sum, but we are only doing what is absolutely necessary just now. The total cost will be about $354,000. The amount that we would have required this year might have been $125,000, but we have placed $50,000 in the Estimates, and with these $25,000 we think there will be enough for this year, the labor of the convicts being largely employed.

North-West Mounted Police Barracks..... $75,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to be applied towards the erection of new barracks at different points, and the total cost will be about $1.0,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Where are the main centres to be?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The headquarters of the force will be at Regina, from which point the police will be sent where required. We are to have a regular patrol along the whole frontier as a great deal of trouble arises in connection with horse thieves, raiders crossing to and fro and coming into collision with the inhabitants. We will have a movable force employed from the foot of the Rockies to Emerson. The force has been increased from 300 to 1,000, so that present accommodation is quite inadequate.

Harbors and Rivers in Nova Scotia..... $93,400 00

Mr. VAIL. I see an item here: "Breakwater, Economy, $1,500." Where is the economy?

Mr. MITCHELL. I notice there are quite a number of votes for harbors and rivers in Nova Scotia, but when you come to Nova Scotia there is very little. I moved, at an early stage of the Session, for papers connected with an application for a pier at Nigquac, as my French friends call it, or Nigger Whack, as it is called by my Irish friends. Last year, when I did not express my opinions so freely as to the conduct of the Government, I got some encouragement, but I was disappointed, and I am still more disappointed this Session, because an election will be coming on shortly and I would like to do something there to strengthen my hands. I put the matter before the Minister of Public Works and represented that this was really a vote that would materially assist a certain portion of my constituency that wanted my assistance. They have not yet had any public money expended in their locality there, and they are badly in need of a public landing. I have tried every possible means. I tried coaxing, I tried putting the real merits and justice of the case before the Minister. I then tried a little pressure. Then I tried something a little stronger. Then I gave them an editorial or something of that kind, but the whole thing would not do. He says, my dear Mitchell, while I would be very glad to do anything I could for you, you know how it is yourself; you have been attacking us, and when it comes before the Council I need not tell you how it is, you know all about it. I appealed then to my hon. friend's vanity, and I flattered him a bit. I said, you know, Sir Hector, you can do anything you like with Sir John if you go the right way about it. He said he would try again, but it is a case of try, try again, and nothing has come of it. I find I am excluded from the list. Now, I appeal to the First Minister, and I want to know now if he is going to do anything about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would make a suggestion. Would the hon. gentleman take a senatorship instead?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would make a suggestion also. I know that I had to pay for widow Murphy's cow in order to get through the estimates a few years ago. Give him his pier, for Heaven's sake.

Mr. MITCHELL. I reject the offer of a senatorship with disdain. I would rather have this little pier given to the suffering people of Neguac than a senatorship. I would not take a senatorship. I will tell you what I would take. Sometimes the hon. gentleman's promises are not kept, but, if he will promise that it shall be put in next year, if we are here, I will keep quiet.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend from Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) has made an utterly impossible suggestion to the Government. He has actually suggested to the Government to give to my hon. friend from Northumberland his pier. Where shall we find his peer? The hon. gentleman really ought to adopt, with modifications, his former plan. He offered and succeeded in exchanging a senatorship for another public work. The only thing he has now left to exchange is his seat in the House of Commons. The senatorship is gone. I have something to complain of about the hon. gentleman again to-day. Really, there ought to be a certain amount of decency observed in regard to the method on which we are to vote money and the purposes for which we are to vote it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not belong to your party yet. Don't lecture me.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman did, perhaps I should not make these observations. But I would suggest to him, ought we not, for decency's sake, to avoid saying that the object of an appropriation is to strengthen ourselves with our people, and that that is the object for which these appropriations are scattered through these Estimates?

Mr. MITCHELL. We know it is. I am honest in the matter. I suppose I have the right hon. gentleman's promise for next year?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, if the hon. gentleman is content with that——

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have no peers on this side of the water, but I offered my hon. friend the next thing, a Canadian senatorship.

Mr. VAIL. I do not object to this vote; it may be justifiable; but I am interested in a matter in my county. Previous to Confederation, four-fifths of the amount granted for this purpose were expended in the counties of King's, Annapolis and Digby. Of late, very little money has been expended in those counties. Four years ago, I asked the Minister of Public Works if he would vote some money for a couple of wharves in that county, but nothing has been done except that he sent an engineer there, who has corroborated my statement as to the dangerous condition of the Church Point wharf. Last year the Minister told me he would do something, and this year I expected from what he said that, at all events, a small amount to keep the work from being destroyed would be placed in the Estimates, but there is no mention made of it. Does the Minister intend to make that appropriation, or cannot he take it out of the amount voted for the repairs generally in the Maritime Provinces?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to say to-day, but I will consider it.

Mr. VAIL. I would like information with reference to this grant for Great Village River. I find here is a grant of $3,900.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a revote.

Mr. VAIL. Part of it, I am aware is a revote. Expenditure has been going on for three or four years on that work. In 1884 the first grant was made of $4,250, and in 1885 another grant was made of $850.

Mr. McLELAN. All that has been expended of the public money on that work has been $5,100, and by private subscription, from $14,000 to $17,000.

Mr. VAIL. I think the Minister of Finance ought to expend all his private means on it.

Mr. McLELAN. The Minister of Finance is not expending any of his private means on it.

Mr. VAIL. This is merely to straighten a brook by which his firm is to get an advantage by bringing in a large amount of marsh that will be made valuable. It is spent in the interest of the Minister of Finance and his partner there, and the money is paid to the firm to which the Minister of Finance belongs—or if he is not now he has been up to a recent date a member of that firm. I do not think the hon. gentleman, in his capacity as Minister of Finance, should appropriate the public funds in that way and leave other districts that are much more in want of help, out in the cold.

Mr. McLELAN. There is no district on the whole coast of the Bay of Fundy that more requires this money than Great Village River, for the general navigation of the place. If the hon. gentleman had ever seen it or known anything about the trade of that place, he would not stand up here in Parliament and make such an assertion. I have no special interest in it other than general benefit to the place.

Mr. VAIL. The money has been paid to the partner of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. McLELAN. No, it has not; he is not my partner in any business except in owning ships outside.

Mr. VAIL. I have letters from there explaining fully the position of affairs, which I do not propose to read to-day to show all I know in regard to it.

Harbors and Rivers, Quebec..... $98,325 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is very much to be regretted that a number of items involving this large sum, the most of which the Minister must have known would be required, were not put in the original estimates instead of being brought down now. I cannot pretend to go through these at present, but I desire to know what number of these items are a commencement of works which may involve much larger sums.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Montmagny, $2,000; I do not think anything else will be required. Rimouski River, $1,000 will complete. River Saguenay, $5,000; this will not complete, but it is a work that has been going on for some time. The next item of $5,000 for the River Saguenay will not complete, and we will require $2,000 or $3,000 more. Chicoutimi, $3,425 are for repairs. Rivière Verte, $1,000; this is to take out the boulders. St. Laurent, St. Jean and Ste. Famille, $3,000; this is for repairs. Rivière Ste. Anne de Beaupré, $2,000 is to complete a wing dam. Doucet's Landing, $2,000 is for dredging; nothing else will be required. Longueuil, $10,000; this is a new work, and will require more money later on, but this amount will make a complete work by itself. Longueuil is a harbor having two railways and having a large trade with Montreal, but having no accommodation for vessels. Cascades, $3,000; we will require $2,500 to complete. Rivière du Lièvre, $1,000; that is for a look at the lower portion of the river. Bay St. Paul, $5,000; that completes the work. Kamouraska, $3,000; I think that amount will complete. Rivière St. Nicholas, $1,200; that is to clear the river of boulders. St. Placide, $5,000; I think that will complete.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... $59,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the arrangement with Belleville? Does the $20,000 that were to be expended, complete the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A great deal of damage was caused there by the flood, and the people of the town have sent deputations asking the Government to come to their relief. An arrangement was made that if we would give $10,000 they would pay the same amount, or if we gave $20,000 they would give $20,000 on their side, because the work was partly of a local nature. This work will be in my Department.

Roads and Bridges..... $18,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the policy of the Government going to be with respect to roads and bridges in the North-West. We seem to be entering on a policy which may involve very heavy outlays. I am aware that when the Dominion own the land we may be called upon to contribute larger sums than we could otherwise be called upon to grant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are doing as little as possible. The Bow River is a very fine and rapid river, and is in the centre of the ranching country, and the structures will be more expensive than the few inhabitants there could undertake to build.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot venture to make any suggestions at this moment, but I hope that next Session the Government will announce some policy with respect to constructing bridges in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right.

Telegraphs..... $20,400 00.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give some information?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have been building telegraph lines in the North-West for a number of years. We have been extending the line from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the north, as far as Prince Albert on one side and St. Albert on the other, by way of Edmonton. This line is absolutely necessary if we want to have communication with the upper country. When the troubles of last year occurred, I do not know what would have happened but for having this telegraph line. Of course, it might be handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it is a question whether we should allow all our telegraph lines to pass into the hands of that company.

Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions..... $33,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought we had dropped the item of $24,000 for steam communication between Canada and Germany.

Mr. McLELAN. A company had an agreement for this service for three or five years, and was very unfortunate in losing a number of ships. It was supposed that the company had abandoned the route, but they have asked to be allowed to complete their contract. With respect to the $7,500 for subsidy for steamers from a port in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to Great Britain or continental ports, I may say that this item was dropped from the ordinary Estimates. There was some objection raised on the part of New Brunswick that the grant merely aided the shipment of the lumber of a particular firm. Information was obtained from Prince Edward Island that a large number of farmers had been making preparations to export cattle, and it was decided to continue the grant so that they should not be disappointed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I can add a little to the information furnished. The hon. gentleman will perhaps tell us why the amount was dropped as regards the port of Miramichi. He can continue the service for the Bay of Fundy, all round the Halifax coast and in connection with Prince Edward Island; but I can inform him that taking away the subsidy for the Miramichi route is practically rendering useless the island subsidy, as a vessel cannot run on that route on one subsidy. The vessel was of great use to the Port of Miramichi, and although it filled up with deals, it carried fish, cattle or tanning extract of which a large quantity is manufactured. Why the subsidy is dropped, is because I am not a subservient follower of the Administration. I should like to know by what right the hon. Finance Minister struck out the subsidy.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not think it is right for the hon. gentleman to charge me with having struck it out. If he supposed that it was done at my dictation, he should have sent me some communication calling attention to it, but I have not heard from him on the question. I have heard from a great many people on the north shore that the only result of granting the subsidy was that a certain firm was able to ship deals at less cost than their neighbors. And for that reason it was dropped—knowing the differences of opinion among the various shippers and manufacturers of lumber along the coast, as well as the feelings of some of the parties in Prince Edward Island in respect to the class of boats used last year—a class that cost a very high insurance—it was dropped from the main Estimates. Representations were made from the island that it was desirable to have encouragement to some boat to call there. If the steamers that run to Miramichi are of the proper class, arrangements may be made with them as far as this $1,500 will go, and we think it will be sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman says that if I had desired this I should have communicated with him Well, my experience in communicating with him has not been of a very satisfactory character. I have frequently addressed him with but little result; so much so that I have ceased to address him. But what I did do was to get several of the representatives, both of our Province and the island, who are interested in the matter, to speak to the hon. gentleman on the subject. I know that a representative was sent from the firm who owned these steamers to have an interview with the hon. gentleman on this subject, and he called on me to see what I would advise, and he asked me to go with him. I said there is no use; I will only do you harm with the Finance Minister, and I had better stay away. The hon. gentleman speaks about the island being served, and about the island calling on him for a subsidy. Why, Sir, the ground on which the double subsidy was given last year was that it required both subsidies to get the firm to put on vessels that were suitable, and I think he has treated that section of the country very unfairly. The hon. gentleman knows very well that if I had thought that my requesting it would be of any service I would have written him a ream of paper on the subject, but I had written him so much and so little attention was paid to it that I thought it was of no use to communicate with him.

Mr. McLELAN. I have only known two instances in which the hon. gentleman has addressed me on public matters, on which his representations have not been met, and in those instances I did not think that it was in the public interest that his views should be met.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will refer to the records of his department.

Mr. McLELAN. One was on the question of an increase of salary to his brother, and the other was the superannuation of a lighthouse keeper and the appointment of an older man than the one he wished to have superannuated.

Mr. MITCHELL Since the hon. gentleman has referred to it, I will state the kind of justice I have received from him. It is true that I did ask that my brother should be restored, as a number of other officers had been restored to the same positions, in point of salary, which they had occupied before the Mackenzie Government came in, that Government having reduced their salaries. I found that out of some twelve officers whose salaries had been reduced by Mr. Mackenzie, every one of them but my brother was restored to their old positions. I had correspondence with the hon. gentleman, and had frequent interviews with him, and he repeatedly admitted that it was a great hardship that he should be treated differently from the others. I pointed out numerous instances in his own Province and in mine, and I said that I did not care for the amount of money but that it was a slur on a good officer that he should not be restored to his old position, as the others had been. Those are the facts of the case, and the hon. gentleman knows them to be the facts of the case, and he knows it to be an act of injustice, and that he repeatedly promised to have the matter rectified and never kept his promise.

Mr. McLELAN. No, I never promised.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then he says that I wanted one man superannuated and another put in his place who was older than the man whom I wished superannuated. I say that is not true.

Mr. McLELAN. Then you put what is untrue on the records yourself.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has the records there in the Department and I challenge him to bring them here. I will tell the House the facts. There are three lighthouses in the Bay of Miramichi, at the angles of a triangle so to speak—one of them being occupied by this Mr. Savoy. I wanted Mr. Savoy, who is 63 years of age, superannuated and another person, a younger man put in, and I wanted the others shifted so that the arrangement would be more convenient to the people there. I wanted old Mr. Savoy superannuated and his nephew, a young man, put in his place. The hon. gentleman does not remember the incidents as well as I do. But he would not do it, and a little feeling arose and the injustice which the hon. gentleman perpetrated in connection with my brother's case induced me to feel that it was not worth my while to send communications to him.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman says that injustice was done him in the case of his brother, that I promised to remedy that injustice. When the hon. gentleman went out of office he increased the salary of his brother, who was an inspector of lights, from $1,200 to $1,600. I said that I could not restore him to his old salary because if I did I should have to do so in the case of the other inspectors. With respect to the superannuation of the light-house keeper, the hon. gentleman said here is a point where a vessel has been wrecked, and the man is too old; you should have a younger and more active man; I want that man superannuated; I want his nephew appointed; I want another man brought to that place where it is dangerous. But when he gave me the name of the man, and when I looked at the record which he himself placed on the records of the Department, I found that the man that he wished to put in the place was older than the man he wanted to superannuate by a year. Further, I found that his own brother, the inspector, had made a report on the case of this man who was located at the dangerous point, and that his report stated that the man did all that possibly could be done, in the case of the shipwreck, that he kept his lights well, and I said to the hon. gentleman how can I superannuate that man in the face of your brother's report.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman now refers to another feature of the matter. The charge was brought against Savoy by his political opponents that he was unfit for his position, that a shipwreck had occurred there, that he was unable to help the people and that four persons were drowned in sight of the lighthouse. I asked that the officer should be changed and one brought from the Portage Island lighthouse to that point. This man, though he was a year older was a vigorous and able man—very much the superior of the other in physical ability. It is true, he sent my brother down to investigate and report on the matter as to whether Mr. Savoy had neglected his duty to save those people. It was proved that he was an old man and that he could not go out, and four persons were drowned within sight of the lighthouse.

Mr. McLELAN. It was not that he had neglected to do anything, but the circumstances were such that no man could do anything.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was that he had neglected his duty, and you sent your inspector to go and enquire into the matter, and he reported that a young man had better be appointed there.

To provide for the cost of the Police Vessels to be employed in the Protection of the Fisheries. $50,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the First Minister any information to give to the House with respect to negotiations with the British or American Government in relation to the protection of the fisheries?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. An active correspondence is going both with Washington and England every day. We are not in a position to lay before the House just now this correspondence, which I hope will terminate satisfactorily.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe a statement in the papers that the Bill which has passed both Houses at Washington has been reserved. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to give any information on that subject?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is stated.

For the encouragement of the production of Cod Liver Oil and Fish Guano..... $4,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to encourage the production in our own country of cod liver oil for medicinal purposes. There is plenty of material for it, it commands a very remunerative price, and it is thought that by this encouragement some method may be adopted so that it may become a paying and profitable industry.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended to subsidise one or more manufacturers?

Mr. FOSTER. The Department has not matured any distinct plan by which it shall be done. This is simply a trial vote, and after the House has passed the vote, some plan will be adopted by which the object sought may be gained.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a perfectly absurd way of asking Parliament to vote money. The hon. gentleman says the Government have not decided on any plan whatever of accomplishing this object. It seems to me this vote is proposed without the slightest regard to what the relative duties and rights of the Executive and Parliament are.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think in all conscience the Government before asking for $4,000, ought to have some sort of idea of what is to be done with it. The Minister does not state whether he is going to subsidise a manufactory or what on earth he is going to do with this money, and for aught we can tell, it may be handed over without the public interest being served. I would rather give him $4,000 for secret service at once, because then we would know where we stood.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not to be so used. Some attention has been given to this subject, and information has been received from the Maritime Provinces. It is proposed to divide this sum among the four Maritime Provinces, giving them $1,000 each. It will probably be given in the way of a bounty. The maximum production will be fixed, and the medicinal oil will be subject to inspection.

Mr. BLAKE. Have any applications been made by any individuals?

Mr. FOSTER. Applications have been made, and a very large and influential deputation waited on me, composed of members of this House from the Maritime Provinces. They brought to the attention of the Department what was being done in Norway in this industry, and pressed very strongly that something ought to be done to encourage it here. I have no doubt some efficient plan will be adopted by which that will be done.

Mr. GILLMOR. I represent a large fishing population, and I know nothing about that deputation. I know that the demand for guano is greater than the supply. It has been manufactured in my county for many years, and the industry is a profitable one. It brings from $6 to $12 a ton, and there is always a demand for all that is made. With regard to cod liver oil, I do not know that there has been any made there for medicinal purposes.

Mr. MILLS. The Government ought to abandon this vote. They might as well ask a vote for the raising of wheat. Where is the difference? These men are engaged in the manufacture of a particular product, which has been manufactured in parts of this country for years back, and for which there is always a demand. Why, therefore, should persons engaged in other branches of industry be taxed for the purpose of inducing people in particular localities to engage in this branch?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If this were merely a vote for the encouragement of the manufacture of guano, I could see why it should not be voted, but its object is the encouragement of the manufacture of cod liver oil for medicinal purposes. What we produce is merely the crude oil which is exported and comes back refined into medicinal oil at an enormously enhanced price. Whether from the want of enterprise or other circumstances, noboby has gone into that enterprise. The difference between the value of the crude oil and the oil for medicinal purposes is enormous, and the object of this vote is to encourage the manufacture of this medicinal product. It is to try and start that industry. Guano is merely the refuse after the production of the oil.

Mr. MULOCK. It is satisfactory to hear the explanation of the First Minister, which has made more impression on my mind than that of the Minister in charge of that Department. I would like to ask whether any persons have offered to undertake that industry?

Mr. McLELAN. A deputation, with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, waited upon us in respect of this matter, the deputation being composed of members of this House representing fishing districts. They stated there was a large waste of offal in districts in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, and that the crude did not sell for more than 40 or 50 cents a gallon, while the imported article for medicinal purposes sold for $2 a gallon. They stated further there was a waste in the want of conversion of the crude oil into medicinal oil of hundreds of thousands of dollars. There were no instances in which guano had been manufactured in their districts. No individual outside made representation that he wanted to go into it, but they said there was a waste and there ought to be some steps taken to remedy it.

Mr. WILSON. This proposition is very unreasonable, when we consider that in the country there is as good oil manufactured as can be got abroad. Does the hon. gentleman expect by this vote, that he is going to foster the industry so far as to make it self-sustaining? If there is a market for oil, the demand would cause the supply to be produced, and the waste would not take place. To say that cod liver oil manufactured in Canada is not good for medicinal purposes is an absurdity. I find it superior to much of the stuff we get from abroad. Canadian manufactured cod liver oil is as beneficial, from a medicinal point of view, as any we can get. There must be something behind this vote we cannot divine.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman acknowledged that the vote should not be taken if it was for the encouragement of guano only; but he said the guano was taken from the product which is the result of converting the crude oil into refined. We know that the liver of the cod is the most valuable part of the fish; it is that which is always saved, and from which the oil is taken, so that in taking out the raw oil you will get the guano at any rate. There is therefore no necessity to refine it to get the guano; besides the work of manufacturing medicinal oil has been going on for at least twenty years in Quebec, as my hon. friend (Mr. Langelier) has said. The hon. gentleman said there was a great waste of the fish offal because we did not make the guano.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know of any part in which we do.

Mr. BLAKE. It is made in Charlottetown.

Mr. McLELAN. Except Charlottetown.

Mr. KIRK. It is made in the Gut of Canso.

Mr. BLAKE. It is made in various parts; and it is proposed that in those parts in which it is not yet made, the public money should be used in order to induce the people to enter into this business. One of the uses to which the fish is put is the conversion of the offal into guano. That is done in some parts and not in others, and in those in which it is not done it is proposed public money should be given to people who will undertake to do it.

Mr. MILLS. The hon gentleman knows that the market for refined cod liver oil is limited in this country, that oil being used mainly for pulmonary diseases. Does the hon. gentleman propose to encourage consumption? Is he endeavoring to create a market for the oil in this way? I do not understand why he should wish to encourage the production of an article which we are already supplied with. If a larger proportion of unrefined oil is used than refined oil, that is simply because there is a larger market for it than for the refined. If he thinks there should be a larger number of victims to pulmonary disease, I can understand why the Government should take the course. They must first create the market before they can derive much advantage from the supply. The common sense course for the Government is to strike this item out, which has been put into the estimates without sufficient consideration, and ought not to be retained.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the way to deal with a matter of this kind. The hon. gentleman jokes about the encouragement of pulmonary consumption. What we want is to encourage the consumption of refined cod liver oil. We have no market for it now. The Norwegians supply England to a great extent, and there is no reason why we should not. We believe, that by-and-bye it will be an important article of export to England. There is no reason why we cannot supply England for medicinal purposes as well as Norway.

Mr. MILLS. And pay part of the price to induce them to buy?

Mr. PAINT. Newfoundland has manufactured cod liver oil for fifty years, and supplies England with a great deal of it. Every 100 quintals of fish produces about 100 gallons of oil.

Mr. GILLMOR. Nonsense.

Mr. PAINT. By encouraging this industry, it will raise the price from 50 cents to $2 and $3 per gallon, and, if it should not increase it to that value, still it will be worth $1 and $1.50 a gallon, in proportion to the condition to which it is refined. This vote, small as it is, will enable the Government to place these refineries at four different points in the four different Provinces, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. That is what was recommended by the delegation.

Mr. LANGELIER. The manufacture of cod liver oil has been in existence in Quebec for many years. The nuns of the Hôtel Dieu have been supplying the physicians of Quebec with the best kind of cod liver oil for medicinal purposes. I have heard it stated by physicians that there is no better oil than that made in that establishment, and I am sure those ladies never asked for any encouragement from the Government to go into that industry.

Mr. VAIL. We have plenty of refined cod oil made in Halifax. With regard to guano, if this is to be extended to those factories that have been in operation for some time, I shall not object, because I have one in my own county. I do not think it is worth while to encourage the commencement of any more to interfere with those that are already at work.

Indians, Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces.....	$10,537 50

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It will be remembered that a motion was made, when the First Minister was not here owing to illness, by my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron), and certain facts were brought out at that time which seemed to point to a great deal of carelessness and mismanagement on the part of officials in the North-West. On that occasion, I brought before the House certain information which was contained in a return brought down by the Department, in which it was shown clearly that flour that was unfit for human food had in some cases been supplied, and the medical attendant has testified that that had led to the sickness and death of some of the Indians. The report which I now wish to bring before you had not then been submitted, and it is confirmatory of this, showing that there must be negligence and incapacity on the part of the officials in the North-West. I desire, in as brief a manner as possible, to show how the Indians were dealt with. The first thing that I will refer to is a report of Lieutenant Colonel Irvine, dated Fort Walsh, 23rd September, 1882:

"Sir,—I have the honor to enclose herewith copy of a telegram this day sent to the Department. The messages from the Indians, as regards their annuity and reservations, I promised to send to you and the Department's reply thereto the Indians now await. I have also to inform you that on my return from Qu'Appelle, I found some 2,000 Indians here. They are all in a starving and wretched condition for want of clothing. These Indians say that this is their country and they intend to remain here. They ask that they receive aid by the issue of provisions. Will you be good enough to impart to me in the form of instructions what your wishes are? In the present starving condition of the Indians, I fear, if no food is given them, that they may hereafter commit depredations, which will bring them in collision with the force. Of course, in case of any depredations the offenders must and will be arrested and punished. It is always possible that such punishment might be accompanied with bloodshed. The actual power of the Indians now here, in view of future hostility, is certainly not great, but, as it is superfluous to point out to you, an outbreak of any kind would be disastrous and create universal alarm throughout the country. As you will observe from my telegram, the supplies of your Department will not last more than three weeks, even for that time the issues will have to be made sparingly. I trust you will be good enough to reply to this by return of mail."

Then we find another letter from the same place, Fort Walsh, of the 2nd October, from another party:

"Sir,—I have the honor to enclose herewith a statement showing the amount of provisions in store here on the 30th September, just past. These issues have not been made on my own responsibility, but by orders I have received from the officers commanding the post and of Lieutenant Colonel A. G. Irvine, Commissioner of Police. No regular issue of rations has been made, the amount of provisions issued being very barely sufficient to sustain life. There are at present 300 lodges of Indians camped here, these lodges average eight souls, making a total of about 2,000 souls. They are in an utter state of destitution, and are merely existing in a semi-starving state. You will perceive that were regular issues to be made to those Indians, the supply on hand of flour would last about to the end of the present month, and that of meat about twenty days.

"I have, &c., &c,
(Signed) "FRANK NORMAN."

That is from a second person discussing the same. Then on 9th October the following telegram is sent from Fort Walsh to the Hon. E. Dewdney by Mr. Fred. White:—

"Over 200 Indians here almost naked and verged on starvation. Weather cold and snow now on ground. Have been among them for two days. Am satisfied many will perish unless early assistance rendered. Please instruct agent McDonnell to come here at once to make payments. I will arrange to have money here in readiness.

"(Signed)
"FRED. WHITE."

Now, here are reports with reference to the starving condition of these Indians from three different Government officers, one dated 23rd September, one 2nd October, a more pressing one 19th October. That letter of 23rd September, of Lieutenant Colonel Irvine, asks particularly that there should be answer at once, pointing out the dangers of hostility from the Indians on account of insufficiency of food. That was not answered by Mr. Dewdney until the 27th October. Over a month elapsed before any attention was paid to that. I do not find after he had answered it that anything was done to furnish supplies to these Indians. On the 1st February we find a despatch from Fort Walsh as follows:—

"I have the honor to enclose a memorandum I am in receipt of from Surgeon Robert Miller at this place, with reference to the condition of the Indians

"I have informed Surgeon Miller that it is not in my power to increase quantity of food to the Indians, as my instructions from the Indian commissioner are to keep the Indians at Fort Walsh on starvation allowances.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
(Signed) "FRANK NORMAN."

Now, we have not got that letter of Surgeon Robert Miller, but it must have stated that that which was imminent to the Indians five months before was upon them now, and it was undoubtedly a strong letter, so strong that Frank Norman thinks it necessary to report to the commissioner that he had not power to listen to the request of the surgeon. Now, on 25th February, as near as I can make out, the first action was taken by the commissionner in reference to the relief of the Indians. His telegram is dated from Ottawa, 26th February—the commissioner is at Ottawa. There is a pressing telegram to the commissioner from Robert Miller, dated 1st February, and it is twenty-five days after that before the commissioner gives any instructions at all, and the reason is apparent—instead of being there at the post of duty, he is here in Ottawa, what does he say?

"Yours 1st February received; increase ration supply slightly; purchase 200 pounds tea, fifty pounds tobacco and distribute judiciously and where most needed."

That was to be distributed amongst 2,000 Indians. Now, Sir, I think that reveals clearly a state of carelessness and of negligence on the part of the commissioner that deserves some explanation. Lieutenant Colonel Irvine says they are starving, that the peace of the country is in danger; Frank Norman reports the same thing a few days after, and still a stronger telegram comes from Fred. White two weeks after that; and although all these despatches were received in September and October, we find no action is taken until February. Mr. Dewdney seems to give as his reason that these Indians ought not to be at Fort Walsh, and the policy was adopted of driving them away and throwing the responsibility upon Colonel Irvine if hostilities did break out. Now, I come to the year 1884, and I am dealing with the Indians on their reserves. On 7th February we have a report by the Government medical officer, with reference to Piapot's and the Assiniboine reserves, on which the Indians are living. This medical officer reports a great deal of disease among them. I have not time to read it all, but among other things he enumerates:

"And starvation, if the last can be recorded as a disease. I find that in the last three months, thirteen deaths have taken place in each reserve, in all twenty-six, a very heavy death rate, and from all I can gather, death has been accelerated, if not immediately caused by the scant supply of food served out to these Indians. At the present time, this condition of starvation is more evident among the Assiniboines, as the Crees have lately obtained supplies by cutting wood. I saw several children in the Assiniboine camp worn and wasted, and unless properly fed, must die in a few days. The old medicine man asked me if I could give him some medicine to have by him, that would be helpful when the Indians fainted, as from their scanty and insufficient rations, a number of them suffer in that way. It may not come within my province to report this condition of starvation, but I am well satisfied that if they were sufficiently fed, there would be less tendency to illness among them. I may also add, that from the way they have been allowed to starve, a firm determination was expressed by both Piapot and Jack, that as soon as they could travel they would forsake the reserve and go west again."

Now, I say if there be any justification for keeping the Indians on starvation allowance at Fort Walsh, because the Government did not want them there, it cannot be applied to this band located on their reserve; but they are in such a state that they threaten, as soon as they can travel, to go where they can find some food. Sir, there must be feelings in the breast of the red man when he gazes upon these children, as described by the medical officer, worn and wasted with starvation, and then compelled to remain on their reserves; and I can readily understand that there would be a feeling of great uneasiness among them when the poor old medicine man has to ask: Have you anything by you that will strengthen men who faint for the simple necessaries of life? The medical officer of the Government says that it may not be in his line, perhaps, to report this, but he considers that it is essential for the keeping of the Indians on their reserve, and in the public interest that he should report it. Then, some few days after that, a letter to the superintendent follows; and it must be said, with reference to the deputy of the hon. gentleman, that when these cases are brought before him, there is, at any rate, evinced by him strong feelings of humanity. I need not read his letter. One clause says:

"If the condition of matters on the reserve be such as stated by the doctor, prompt and remedial measures should be called for."

It appears an agent was sent to examine and report upon the condition of affairs which I will not read, but I will read a short letter from page 35, which says:

"OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
"NORTH-WEST TERRITORY, REGINA, 27th February, 1884.

"SIR,—Again referring to my letter of the 7th inst., No. 6,930, and your reply of the 15th, No. 11,175, I have the honor to state, that Mr. Agent McDonald was forwarding a report of his tour of inspection of the Indian Head reserves made subsequently to the visit of the doctor, a copy of which is herewith enclosed. By it will be seen that the destitution mentioned as existing by Dr. Edwards, was, to a certain extent, exaggerated."

By reading the report hon. members will see that there was only too much force in what the doctor reported. The committee will agree with me that there are evidences that the Department has a humane desire to have grievances attended to, but blame lies at the door of the Government so long as they maintain officials in office whose duty is to attend to grievances and fail to do so, though reported upon by their own officials in the public interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I regret very much I was not able to be here when the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), made a long and elaborate attack on the Indian Department in regard to its North-West management. I do not know that I would have gained much information by it, because the speech was an elaborately prepared one, in which the hon. member went into a number of details which could not be answered on the spot. So soon as I was aware of the speech made by the hon. gentleman I obtained a copy of it and transmitted it to the North-West. I asked for a report not only as regards the Indians but in regard to all the matters referred to, and I gave instructions that every charge should be brought up, every statement should be examined into and verified or refuted. In order to do that a great extent of country had to be traversed. Each charge consisted of a distinct allegation of wrong-doing, a sin of omission or commission. The evidence to meet each charge had to be collected and thoroughly investigated. Only within the last two or three days I have received additional evidence. I had intended, if my strength had allowed me, to have gone into the whole question, but it would have taken a much longer time to have read the evidence in rebuttal than it occupied to make the charges, and the House would not have listened to me. The speech of the hon. member has been published under the auspices of hon. gentlemen opposite and widely distributed. I shall take care that the answer will be distributed equally widely. I will let the country see from the evidence that, from the beginning to the end, the speech of the hon. gentleman is characterised by the same want of accuracy as has characterised all the speeches and attacks on everybody and everything made by the hon. gentleman in the House this Session. I shall be able to show that to the satisfaction of the country. As regards the charges against Governor Dewdney, I would not be worthy of my place if I did not rise in support of my officers when I know they do their duty. That gentlemen has a very severe and unpopular duty to perform, and there have been a set of influences brought against him which at one time brought undeserved unpopularity upon him. That he has surmounted, and the country and the North-West are rising to express views as to his merits just as strongly as originally they were prejudiced against him. I believe he is a good officer, a faithful officer. When the hon. gentleman states he was in Ottawa instead of being at his post, I may say that he was here because I summoned him myself for the purpose of going into the whole matter connected with arrangements in the North-West. It would be very easy for Governor Dewdney to throw away the money of the country upon Indians hanging round the various posts begging for food. It would be very easy to give them flour, beef and bacon, that would cause him no trouble and might give popularity. But he was told to husband the funds and the food placed at his disposal. With respect to the Indians that were camping in and about Fort Walsh, he was specially instructed by me to act as he did. Those Indians had left their reserves. They were told to go back to their reserves and to cultivate the land, and that they should have food if they did so. We had agricultural implements, cattle, seed grain and food for them there, but they would not go. They were near Fort Walsh, and almost immediately adjoining the boundary between the United States and Canada. There was then great danger of improper communications being had between the Indians of the two countries. They were, therefore, told that if they remained there they would not get any food. They were also told that if they would go to their reserves they would be fully supplied in every way, but they would not go. They were reduced from full rations to half rations, and then to quarter rations, but with the obstinacy of Indians they would not go, and they were told that if they refused they must take the consequences. It is only by using those means that you can get the Indians to work. There are police stations, scattered settlements, land agencies, all those are nuclei for white settlers, and their food is stored. The Indians hang round all those posts. So long as they can get the white men to feed them they will stay there. The mass of the white population in the North-West is composed of young men, and the Indians hang round the posts because they want to stay there, and their women want to stay there, and because the Indians sell their women, and the greatest amount of demoralisation goes on in consequence of the degraded habits of the Indians, the barbarous and savage habits of the Indians. It is the policy, and it will be the policy of the Government so long as I have anything to do with this Department, to see that the Indians go on their reserves and work there, and the Government will then fulfil the treaty obligations and even more. By strictly carrying out that policy it has been in a degree successful. The Indians are going on their reserves, and this year the accounts are much more favorable as to the number of Indians on the reserves, the quantity of land broken and the quantity of roots and grain put in. The Indian will allow himself to run almost to death's door rather than move from the place where he is. It was only because with Christian feelings we could not see them starve that they were given quarter rations. That is the policy of the Government, and it is the correct policy. The committee must remember that the Government are under no obligations to furnish food to the Indians. He has got his hand and his head; he has the capacity for work if he chooses. The white immigrant goes there and he must "root hog or die"; he must work or starve.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We shut him up on a certain reserve?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reserves are enormous.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We shut them up on reserves, and the reports of the hon. gentleman's own agents show that they have lost their crops through frost.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Indians, by the strict, stern rule, are settling on their reserves. Why, Sir, before the buffalo disappeared we gave no food to the Indians. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in power, did not give food to the Indians. There were treaty obligations; a certain number of cattle and implements; a certain amount of seed grain and so on, were all given under treaty obligations, and that was all required to be given and all that was given until the sudden disappearance of the buffalo.

Canada, or the Canadian Government, or the Canadian people, was under no obligation to feed these Indians, but as Christian men they could not allow them to starve; they supplied them with food, and every vote we asked for the purpose of feeding these Indians was opposed by hon. gentlemen on the other side, and especially by the hon. member for Bothwell, who said we were pauperising the Indians, and that they should work as well as the white men. Votes were taken year after year to feed the poor Indians while they were changing their habits of life, and changing their modes of acquiring their food. The buffalo was gone, and we fed them—sparingly, but sufficiently—until, by degrees, they could be got to go upon their reserves. I state distinctly that there has been a great amount of benevolence with prodigality or profusion; there has been great tenderness to the Indians. Although the Indian will keep himself in a starving condition, there has been the greatest tenderness on the part of Parliament to put money at the disposal of the Government, and there has been a careful and judicious disposition of the vote to the Indian, without letting him feel that he had enough for himself and his family without working. The great trouble is to get the Indians to work, for they can work and they are now working. But if they are told by pseudo-philanthropists, by men who are led more by their hearts than by their heads, that they are suffering, that it is the duty of the Government not to allow them to starve, then they never will work. It would be impossible for me to go into an answer to all the charges made against the Department. I shall see, Sir, that the vindication of the Department shall be widely disseminated in all parts of the Dominion, because it will not do that the Government or any Government should lie under the charges which were brought against them—altogether unfounded as most of them are—sometimes from drawing improper inferences, and sometimes from the utter want of accuracy upon which the hon. gentleman relied. More than that, I accept the challenge thrown out from the other side, and it is the intention of the Government to issue a commission—and I pledge myself it will be an impartial commission—to look into the whole question of the management of the Indians in the North-West, as well as the charges which have been brought, or may be brought, against the Department, and I am quite satisfied, on the part of the Department, to abide by the result.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is certainly a great misfortune that the hon. gentleman has not been able, from whatever cause, to have stated publicly in the House what he has to say in reply to the attacks from the hon. member for West Huron and the hon. member for Brant. Any statement of that kind, coming from the Government, ought I think to be made in the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware the hon. gentleman's state of health may have afforded a reasonable ground for not doing it. However, my object was not on the present occasion to enter into this discussion, which cannot be possibly carried on to-day, but I want to call attention to this point with regard to Mr. Edgar Dewdney, whom the hon. gentleman has repeatedly declared to be a very excellent officer, and who may be so in some respects, for anything I can say to the contrary. It is a fact that Mr. Dewdney—it has I believe been repeatedly admitted by the hon. gentleman himself—has been largely engaged in various speculative transactions in the North West. The hon. gentleman said yesterday, and I was glad to hear it, that he himself, in the whole term of his office, had never bought an acre of land in the North-West or elsewhere, and he claimed credit for it.

JHON A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I think he can, because I think that the position of a Minister or a Lieutenant Governor is such that he ought not to speculate, and ought to keep himself clear from speculation. With regard to members of the House it is different, and unless they avail themselves of their position to claim undue advantages it is another affair. But there are strong reasons why a Minister of the Crown, and more particularly the Minister of the Interior, or a Minister specially concerned in North-West affairs, or the Lieutenant Governors of the distant Provinces, should keep themselves perfectly clear from being mixed up with a number of persons in real estate transactions of that kind. No doubt there is a great temptation, but they are officers of this estate; they occupy a semi-judicial position in which their private interests might warp their minds unintentionally. Now the statement made and repeated in the papers, and, as I understand, admitted on the part of Mr. Dewdney and the hon. gentleman himself, is to the effect that Mr. Dewdney has been largely engaged in speculative transactions. Now, as a matter of public policy—and the hon. gentleman knows that I am only laying down the rule which has been laid down again and again by the English Government as to their officers—no man in his position should engage in such transactions. I shall not wait to point out the innumerable evils which arise from that state of things, but I say if he has done so he has seriously erred and has laid himself open to an immense amount of misconstruction. Any gentleman holding his position I maintain should keep himself aloof from all sorts of speculation or speculative proceedings. That is my doctrine, and I should be sorry to hear the Minister disavow it. I ask him to state what he thinks on this subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says I admitted that Mr. Dewdney had been engaged in large speculative transactions. Well, I am not aware that I made such an admission. What I stated was that he told me that when the Hudson Bay Company put up some seven or eight sections at sale, some years ago, he had bought them with some others. I have not been informed of any other speculations; he may have engaged in them or he may not have done so; he did not inform me. Mr. Dewdney has written to me again and again, both during last summer and the year before, that he would like very much to have an enquiry made into the charges made against him, and I shall make it now. Whether he has bought any property or not I do not know. We know that Mr. Cauchon, the late Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, bought largely, and altogether hon. gentlemen opposite knew he was engaged seriously in speculation, although like everbody else up there he unfortunately ruined himself; yet I do not think hon. gentlemen objected to his speculations. Mr. Aikins is the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, and I am not aware whether he has bought a lot or not; but it is a question whether he could not buy if he liked, not land under the control of the Government; but I take it that the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, or Quebec, or Manitoba or British Columbia or the North-West, is not to be prevented from buying from private individuals. I think Mr. Dewdney would be exercising a wise discretion in not buying any land directly or indirectly from the Government; I agree with the hon. gentleman so far. But the hon. gentleman says that in consequence of these speculations Mr. Dewdney's unpopularity arose. His unpopularity arose from this one cause—his refusal to give permits to bring intoxicating liquors into the North-West. The law imposed on him the duty of issuing those permits; it was an unpleasant duty, from which he has asked to be relieved; but some one must do it, and so long as the present system of excluding intoxicating liquors from the North-West continues, I think the responsibility of issuing permits is thrown very properly upon the representative of the Dominion Government there. No doubt he has occasionally issued permits to the wrong men, and he has received great abuse for the permits he did grant. But I remember perfectly well when the first attacks against him were made. They came from Prince Albert, and one of the persons who attacked him told him he would drive him out of the North-West because he refused a permit to a club at Prince Albert, where there might be unlimited drinking of intoxicating liquors. That is how his unpopularity arose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there is a difference between what may be permitted to an officer in new territories and responsible to us as Mr. Dewdney is, and what may be permitted to officers in a settled province. These officers, except on rare occasion, ought to be more wholly independent of us, and their relation to us bears no sort of analogy to the relation of an officer like Mr. Dewdney.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there is any comparison between the two kinds of officers. My own views may be rigid, but I think a person in the exalted position of a Lieutenant Governor, would be much better, even in a Province, to keep out of land speculations. I entirely agree that the position of Lieutenant Governor of a Province is entirely different from that of the Lieutenant Governor of Territories which are directly under our control, the lands of which are Crown lands, and in which questions affecting those lands are disposed of largely on his advice. I only repeat what has been currently stated for a long time, that Mr. Dewdney was charged with the selection of the town site of Regina, and that he had personal interest in lands which were very materially affected by the selection of that site. That shows the inconvenience of placing himself in a position of a landholder. Even though he may not have bought an acre of land from the Government, but from the Hudson Bay Company or private persons, he had the opportunity of influencing the decision of questions which would make those lands very valuable. Therefore, I think his position is entirely different from that of Lieutenant Governors in settled Provinces.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is very much in what the hon. gentleman says. On a previous occasion I stated that Regina was selected by the joint judgment of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government. The company had laid out a plan for building a railway northward from this point to Prince Albert, and southward to the Turtle Hills to the south-western branch; they published a map with that purpose indicated, and we agreed that that would be the proper place to have a town. But Mr. Dewdney had certainly nothing to do with the selection of the place. After the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had selected this place as the crossing of the two roads Mr. Dewdney said he thought also that it would be a good place for a town; but at the same time I know, because he told me, that two miles off there was a Hudson Bay lot which he and his friends had bought.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With reference to the main question, it is to be regretted that the First Minister was not in his place when this subject was brought before the House. It is also to be regretted that he finds it necessary to announce, without making a speech openly before the House and the people, where his statements can be scrutinised and criticised, that he will issue something like a manifesto with reference to the management of his Department. He says that is necessary because the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) was inaccurate in his statements. I suppose he applies the same remark to those I made. All I can say is that they were based on records brought down from the hon. gentleman's own Department, and I made them in the presence of the Government in order to be set right, if on any point I was wrong. But if the hon. gentleman is to go through the papers of the Department and select such as he sees fit without giving us any opportunity of scrutinising them, we should like to know it. Whatever may be said of the statements made by the hon. member for West Huron or by myself, they were made in Parliament. In the presence of the Government, surrounded by their supporters, and here is the place where the answer should have been given. The First Minister has based his statements on the fact of the Indians about Fort Walsh being on their reserve; but he has not touched on the report of the medical officer with reference to the Piapot Indians who were just where he wanted them to be, and who were reported to be starving on their reserve.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman issue this document over his own signature, or does he propose to make use of the officers of his Department? Because I can see that rather serious inconveniences will arise if gentlemen at the head of Departments call upon their officers to issue what is to all intents and purposes a political pamphlet. I do not object to the hon. gentleman making any speech or using any declarations when he sees fit, but I do not think his officers should do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will take my own course about that; and it will be under my responsibility it will be issued. The hon. gentleman says the answer ought to be made here. It could not be given here, because we had to trace up the facts and the evidence of the statements of sundry agents which the hon. member for West Huron quoted. We had to see those agents and ask them what they meant. For instance, there was a statement respecting Mr. Lawrence Clarke, whom everybody knows. He says that the whole statement in the speech of the hon. member for West Huron is false; he used very strong language in that regard. Sundry clergymen have also stated that they have been quite misled. One of the charges brought was that a certain person had made a certain statement respecting frauds in the Department. On being asked why he made that statement, he said the only fraud he knew of was a fraud committed by Mr. Pope Nixon, an officer of the late Government, and that was what he referred to, and not to any recent irregularities. The evidence will show there never was a greater tissue of false statements. I would have been very glad to have laid the evidence before the House, but it was only the day before yesterday that I received it from the far North-West. It will, however, be published and distributed.

Mr. BLAKE. We will all be anxious to receive the exculpatory or explanatory statement of the hon. gentleman, but why should he not lay the material now on the Table before publishing it, since he has the material? The hon. gentleman had the right to make, from the evidence that reached him, what charges he chose, but on examining it we find the evidence altogether fallacious.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must analyse it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Let us analyse it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must classify it under the different charges. You shall get the whole of the evidence I can assure you of that. I shall have it carefully prepared in narrative form and distribute copies to every member, besides furnishing copies to the constituencies.

British Columbia—Indians $600 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is the salary of the agent, Meason, increased $200? The amount of money in British Columbia which goes to salaries is perfectly unprecedented. Out of the sum we vote for the Indians, about $4,000 reaches them and the balance goes in salaries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Indians in British Columbia are not the same people at all as the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains. They are self-sustaining, but they require agents to look after them. The salaries are large, especially on the mainland, where food is exceedingly scarce, and the cost of transport enormous. You cannot get agents for smaller salaries than those we now give. The Indians are in large bands, the agents are not numerous, and you must pay them well if you are to have them at all.

Miscellaneous Printing..... $8,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. This is in consequence of a report of the joint committee. This should come under the head of legislation.

L. S. Crow, for services in connection with the seizure of the premises and plant of the Acadian Steel Works..... $100 00

Mr. McLELAN. This is for the services of the sheriff of the county who had the whole plant and stock of that company under seizure for three or four months. They were subjected to a good deal of annoyance, trouble and expense, in consequence of the railway people, the parties who had brought the suit, insisting upon taking part of the stock away at times, and the sheriff had to follow it. The sheriff rendered his accounts and charged for this extra service. The Department said they had no legal authority to allow him the amount, although he was entitled to it, and therefore this vote is brought.

Mr. BLAKE. What was this bountied and favored institution under seizure for—at the instance of the Government?

Mr. McLELAN. The Railway Department claim they were in arrears for the freight, and when the company went into liquidation they seized the whole property, and, in adjusting certain accounts, it turned out that the balance was in favor of the company for material supplied otherwise.

Customs—Outside Detective Service.....$5,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. I see there is a provision for the pay of officers. Is it proposed to appoint permanent officers, and at how much pay?

Mr. McLELAN. It will be necessary to have officers to test the sugars, and the question arises whether it would not be necessary to have parties in Montreal and Halifax, as well as here, for this work. It is hoped that the whole thing can be run satisfactorily with one office here.

Legislation, Miscellaneous..... $3,676 78

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In reference to the item of $750 for 150 copies of Mr. Faucher de St. Maurice's work on Parliamentary Procedure, which was allowed to stand, I have been looking over the errors which are found in that volume very carefully, according to the list supplied to me by my hon. friend from Shefford (Mr. Auger). These are matters of errors in the proof-reading and translation. I dare say that the book as originally written in French is correct. In the titles of six or seven decisions, the English translation is exactly a contradiction of the French text. This occurred in three or four cases. In others, an explanation is given in English whereas in the French title it is simply stated what the decision is. Out of eighteen or twenty errors that have been mentioned, six or seven are certainly of a character which must absolutely be corrected, the others being only due to a faulty translation. This of course does not alter the quoting of the decisions themselves, because those are generally rendered without error. I had seen the book, I had seen it recommended by men whose authority I could take as to its value as a piece of interest more than a piece of instruction. It is a collection of decisions which might not be very instructive as a whole for the points that have been raised and decided, but it is interesting as a matter of study and history of the Parliament of Quebec. I shall make it my duty to write to the author of the book and ask him to publish in such a manner as may be useful to those who may have bought the book another page of errata, to correct as much as possible—because I admit it is not a sufficient correction—those faults.

Mr. BLAKE. Many of the errors that were pointed out to us were obviously mistranslations, and they occur in the head notes which give the clue of the decision itself. I have not had the opportunity of studying the volume, I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has studied the text, and found it more accurately translated than the head notes. The errors may not be so plain or so outrageous in the text as they are in the head notes, in which black is made white and white made black.——

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In three or four cases, it is exactly that.

Mr. BLAKE. But, when you find such errors in the head notes, what are you to expect in the text, and of what value can the work be? What is proposed to be done with the 150 volumes? They are not for distribution amongst members of this House. There are not enough to go around the Senate and ourselves. Are they to be sent abroad, because if they are I doubt if they will be very creditable to us in anyway.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. About fifty copies were required for exchanges. The Departments have taken each four copies, which is the limit, and a few copies were left to be distributed amongst the chief officers of both Houses. I have read the text of all the decisions in the headings of which errors were pointed out, and the translation of the text appears to be correct.

Mr. BLAKE. What in the world do thirteen Departments want with four copies each of this book of precedents? It is a mere machinery for subsidising the book. I can understand the exchanges, though, as I have said, I do not think it will be very creditable to us if we are to disseminate this work in fifty different libraries, but the four copies for each Department are quite useless. That would be fifty, and there are fifty for the exchanges, and there are fifty more for which there appears to be no particular use at all.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I stated that they were for the officers of both Houses.

Mr. BLAKE. It will be very dangerous to distribute the book among the officers. It will mislead them so.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is a valuable collection and it is unfortunate that these errors occur. I think the book has a real value.

Mr. MULOCK. The Secretary of State mentioned that he had not examined this book critically himself, but that he had based his recommendation upon advice given him by others. Would he tell us who the parties are on whose opinion he acted?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said the book was recommended to me by persons who were acquainted with it. I read nearly the whole of the French, and it appears that the French is correct. It is the translation and proof-reading that are defective.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we ought to take special care that this book is not used by any person engaged in parliamentary practice as legislators, as the reading of it might do them a great deal of harm.

To repay amount of forged bond $4,988 32

Mr. McLELAN. It was found that a forged coupon was sent to London some years ago, and this is to repay the amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that in ordinary cases the Dominion can undertake to pay clever forgeries upon it, but in this case, there are certain circumstances that make it exceptional, though I should regret it as a precedent to be followed hereafter. It is the business, I think, of the parties who may happen to take them, unless we ourselves in some way were responsible by carelessness on the part of the officials of the Government for the forgery having been committed.

Mr. McLELAN. It appears there was some carelessness on the part of our officer, and it was represented on the other side that it would be better for us to pay it rather than have suspicion thrown upon our bonds. At present our agents are responsible for the bonds issued on the other side.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who applies for this?

Mr. McLELAN. It was transferred to brokers in Toronto by F. Lewis, formerly a clerk in the Finance Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the parties to whom this is to be paid?

Mr. McLELAN. They have not given me the names.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the Government ought to take a distinct attitude on this question. Were the coupons, or a number of them, paid before the forgery was detected?

Mr. McLELAN. It passed into some person's hands and went to London for payment, and it was there discovered to be a forgery. There had been, I think, an extra number of bonds which got into the hands of this person, and he made use of one of them. Our agents in London informed us that the same thing had occurred in one of the other colonies, and that the colony had paid it to preserve its credit above suspicion.

Mr. MULOCK. Had some of the forged coupons been paid?

Mr. McLELAN. I have no recollection of that.

Mr. MULOCK. What practice has been adopted so that the thing may not occur again?

Mr. McLELAN. The usual practice of checks, and counting in and out.

Sundry expenditure in connection with the rebellion in the North-West Territories $1,014,309 67

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount of claims likely to be preferred with respect to losses arising out of the rebellion? The losses have been stated at an enormous sum, and if we are to make them good, I fancy that the sum of $67,000 will prove utterly below the requirements of the case.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This amount is simply to pay the settlers in the neighborhood of Battleford, on the first report of those who went out in the spring to investigate the losses. I have telegraphed Mr. Ouimet in the hope of getting an approximate estimate of what will be required, but I have not been able to get an answer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have not the Hudson Bay Company, for instance, preferred a claim ranging up to $1,000,000 and odd?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, but the Government do not at all recognise that claim.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it has been preferred?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They have preferred a very large claim. Mr. Ouimet is instructed to take evidence without prejudice to any person.

Mr. McLELAN.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I wish to draw attention to some facts which have come into my possession on the question of the losses resulting from the rebellion. I will preface the reading of a letter which I received by the statement that, to my knowledge, it is from a gentleman whose word can in every sense be accepted; and I think the internal evidence of the letter itself will corroborate my statement. He writes as follows:—

"I have witnessed in connection with the Mounted Police a state of things hardly credible. Usually swindling is made difficult to detect; here since the rebellion it has been practiced all around, openly and in broad daylight. Nobody ignores what is going on; many have a hand in it, all directly or indirectly benefit by it. The moral sense of the public has become so blunted that no expression of wonder or condemnation is to be heard; all this is accepted as a matter of course. A man is considered lucky and holding a good berth in proportion to the chances he has to swindle the Government. This state of affairs, bad enough before, has been aggravated by the rebellion or more properly the management of the commissariat. Teamsters had no check put upon them. They were loaded at the railway station without any record of how their loads were being made up; they could deliver half their loads or less without any possibility of detecting their frauds. Instead of having special teamsters loaded with oats and provisions to supply the other teamsters along the road each teamster was his own master and could supply himself and horses with the contents of his own load. The inevitable consequence has been that the teamsters being able to steal without detection out of their loads as much as they pleased being interested besides to carry as light a load as they could, to spare their horses, did not deliver one-fourth of their loads. They either made 'caches' or wantonly threw away or spoiled part of it. Boxes, sacks of oats could be seen everywhere along the road. Soft places were often bridged with sacks of oats and left there A great many instances were freely reported by men relating their own doings or experience when but 100 or 200 lbs. only were delivered out of a load of 2,000 lbs.

"Now, as no quantities were recorded at the place of delivery the consequence has been that officers and men of the North-West Mounted Police have been selling these goods by the waggon load at very low figures all along since the rebellion, pocketing the proceeds. It was done so openly that to my knowledge any man, known or not, by going to the barracks at a specific hour, 7 a.m. in winter, was sure to come back with a load of oats, sometimes a bag of flour or bacon at a conventional price, usually one half the real value. Many officers and men pay all their bills with provisions from the barracks. In one instance 18,000 lbs of beef were paid as delivered when no delivery was ever made, the sale being a sham one to divide proceeds.

"If I was to relate all the facts within my knowlege my story would be a long one. The story has been the same all along the North-West, you may take it as a certainty that far from exaggerating the facts, I remain with the feeling that this letter will fail to convey to you an adequate idea of their real extent.

"I know of facts of a similar nature in connection with the Indian Department here, but they are of minor importance in comparison and only implicate subordinates. Mr. Rae, a former agent of Battleford, is generally reported as having taken advantage of his position in the same way. What I do know is that he always fed the Indians as little as he could; that he never inspected the cattle or farming of the Indians, never visited them in their houses, treated them brutally, putting them out of his office forcibly, always speaking of them with contempt, &c. The Indians do not make a secret that it was their intention to kill him at the time of the outbreak. When he was agent at Duck Lake his Indians were dissatisfied. En resumé, he is the worst agent I have known, mostly because I consider it to be the worst feature of an agent to be harsh and inhuman as he is. He was removed to Prince Albert last fall. Orde, a former agent at Battleford, was also a poor one, but mostly on one point, namely: his unsettled mind and want of firmness.

"Reed, who is now Indian commissioner, succeeded Orde, and was considered a very superior agent. Mr. Wright, the present agent, is the most painstaking and best liked by the Indians. Lately, however, he has been arrested for embezzlement, supposed to have been committed while at the Winnipeg office. It appears that he was short of $1,700 in his bank account, but as he had for many years the handling of very large sums it is not supposed here that he is guilty of more than irregularity or neglect. He had so won the confidence of the Indians that his presence here was considered a safeguard against troubles and his departure was regretted accordingly.

"Payne and Quinn, the instructors who were killed, were both inhuman characters. Payne was killed by an Indian whom he had just violently put out of his house.

"Moosomin and all his band refused to join Poundmaker; half of Red Pheasant's band did the same. In both cases the instructors Applegarth and Clink had won the sympathy of the Indians under their charge by their considerate and humane treatment. Kind dealing is the most essential thing; Indians are just as much influenced by it as white men are. As a proof of this the present agent, Mr. Wright, had been visiting them from house to house enquiring kindly of the sick and their wants, &c. In less than two months he had won their affection and confidence to such an extent that when arrested they were highly indignant, and expressed the idea that this was done only because he was too kind-hearted for them. Of course if guilty he must be punished, but the whole population have expressed their appreciation of his services by their petitions. Their interference in favor of a man accused of such an offence may seem out of place, but when you consider that the peace, tranquility and prosperity of a settlement are all in the hands of one man, their interference cannot be said to be quite misplaced. Good agents mean good instructors, so that to a great extent the Indian problem would be solved with half a dozen good agents through the North-West Mr. Clink, the instructor who by his kind dealing towards the Indians under his care succeeded in keeping them loyal, wanted to go back to his reserve when the troubles were over, but as he thought himself entitled to an increase of salary and asked for it he was discharged."

Now, I propose to show by the documents submitted to the House——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman has read a letter; will he state the name of the writer?

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Does the hon. gentleman demand the name of the writer, with his Commission sitting in the North-West to enquire into these things, and the First Minister stating——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. I do not propose anything; I merely ask if he is going to give the name.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The gentleman making that statement is a responsible individual; he speaks from knowledge of the facts; and I take the responsibility of saying here that every statement he makes is entitled to credence. Let us see how far his statements are borne out. Much of the suspicion that has existed in reference to the affairs of the North-West has arisen from documentary evidence submitted to this House; and much that has been stated outside must have been concealed, and purposely concealed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that these Estimates are being put through with a rapidity never before attempted in Parliament, and it is utterly impossible, if disorder prevails, that progress can be made. We desire to help hon. gentlemen opposite on this occasion; but you cannot pass 200 items of estimates through without discussion at all. There is but one way we can get on, and that is by hon. gentlemen listening quietly, and the quieter hon. gentlemen opposite are the shorter my hon. friend will be.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I desire to confine myself largely to statements of fact, and I desire to be brief. Now, I desire to place before the committee in a condensed form the statements, financial and otherwise, that have been submitted to the House very recently. An individual who is known to the Department of Militia as Major Bell appears before the public in a variety of characters in connection with North-West tranactions. I find, for instance, that W. R. Bell, the manager of the Qu'Appelle Farming Company, as he himself states in his evidence before the Commission, presents himself to Major Bell of the force and suggests that he be given a contract for the supply of hay. W. R. Bell says to Major Bell: "I have so many thousand tons to sell; how much will you give for it?" And the reply is: "I will give $22 a ton," and Major Bell as the officer of the Department of Militia closes the contract with W. R. Bell. I find in addition that Major Bell makes a purchase from the Hudson Bay Company of a number of carts and horses, and with these makes a contract with himself for the transport of a quantity of supplies, hires out his own horses to himself, and draws the sums I mentioned. Up to the 30th of June, 1885, Major Bell, as the senior partner of the firm of Bell & Lewis, drew $52,774 for teaming, and up to the 15th of March, 1886 drew in addition $53,911. As manager of the Qu'Appelle Farming Company, he drew up to the 30th of June, 1885, $44,547, and $12,174 in addition up to the 15th of March, 1886. As W. R. Bell, on a special contract made between himself as representing the Department and himself as a purchaser from the farmers of the North-West Territories, of hay and other supplies, he drew $6,152 at the same time that he draws, as Major Bell, an officer of the North-West field forces, something like $1,000 in salary. Up to the 15th of March last, he drew a total of $171,059. There is this, however, to be said, that the Commission that subsequently met overhauled Major Bell's account and in a communication that was sent to the firm of Bell & Lewis he is asked to refund to the Department of Militia the over amount of $1,890. I am sure the committee and the country will appreciate the great care of that Commission in demanding from Major Bell, who has had these very discreditable transactions with the Department, a refund of $1,890 which he had been overpaid in these immense transactions, representing the enormous sum of $171,000. Now, I proceed still further to examine the peculiar characteristics of the contract which this man made. The following is from the evidence of Stewart before the Commission, page 209:—

"Q. Have you anything about a memorandum of agreement between you and Major Bell, and also give your reasons for signing that?—A. On the 20th I went to Qu'Appelle to take possession of the Qu'Appelle route. I found Mr. Jones there, Mr. Bell's clerk, and I could not very well take possession that night of the route, and I waited until night. Major Bell arrived from Winnipeg on the night of the 20th of May. The following day I went to his office and told him that I had the contract, and wished to take charge of the work. He told me that he had a contract himself covering Qu'Appelle, Moose Jaw, Swift Current and Calgary, and that he had made arrangements in Winnipeg with J. L. Lewis and Mr. Whitehead as partners to handle all the freight, and wished me to go further west. I did not wish to do so, and he told me that Laurie had no right to give a contract, that he was a 'damn fool,' and that he would have him dismissed before a week. * * * He told me that J. L. Lewis and he and Whitehead were going to work together and that he would give me an interest in the contract at $212 a ton."

Let us see for how much Stewart, the contractor, agreed to perform that service. Colonel Forrest asks Stewart at page 217:—

"Q. With regard to these negotiations between you and Bell, in the result your prices were effected by these propositions, now where there has been collusion to make up two prices, have they profited by your collusion?—A. That is easily answered. I worked on the price of $110 per ton, I didn't go in collusion, I didn't acquiesce one hour with Major Bell, it sounded too much like a penitentiary job for me. My contract was for $110 per ton, but that contract Major Bell wished me to acquiesce in was for $212 per ton. Had I acquiesced in this arrangement, the Government would have been wronged to the extent of over $100,000—$102 per ton at Moose Jaw and something in the neighborhood of $60 per ton at Qu'Appelle, and a like amount at Saskatchewan Landing—the aggregate I know would amount to over $100,000. Further, they followed my advice in changing the plan of transportation, making each teamster responsible for his load and charging him with any loss the Government sustained."

There this contractor bears evidence to the statement made in the letter I have read, that every teamster dumped his load where he pleased, and made a makeshift for a load, and drew his pay at the end of the journey. He further says:

"My contract was about one-fifth of the amount that I understand it was costing the Government to carry supplies from Qu'Appelle to Clarke's Crossing. I received the knowledge from Mr. Rigby who was handling the pay rolls and making out the cheques for the Hudson Bay Company, in the same office with the paymaster, Mr. Crawford. He advised me that it was costing from $500 to $700 a ton from Qu'Appelle to Clarke's Crossing."

Now, it may be said that Mr. Stewart was making this statement on his own responsibility entirely, but he produces a letter from Mr. Bell, dated Moose Jaw, 27th May, to this effect:

"MY DEAR STEWART,—I have made a very satisfactory arrangement to me. I have quite cleared myself with the General and satisfied Ross entirely. Now I have laid a foundation for a good thing for you, and I want you to fall in with my arrangements, and I trust all will come out to our mutual satisfaction.

"Yours in haste,
"BELL."

Stewart was suspicious of Bell, doubted his honesty, feared his intent was really to deprive him of the contract instead of sharing it with him, and asked him for a written engagement, and on page 217 of the report will be found this engagement:

"Copy of agreement signed by W. R. Bell and John Stewart, dated May 21st, 1885.

"This memo. of agreement between W. R Bell and John Stewart is made in good faith and on the honor of each, that out of the contract now existing in the name of John Stewart for transport, W. R. Bell to have one-half profits or losses; that out of the contract now existing in the name of Bell & Lewis for same work, but at an increased price, J. Stewart to have one-quarter interest in profits.

"W. R. BELL.
"JOHN STEWART."

"May 21st, 1885.

"I, Thomas Henry Gilmour, of the city of Winnipeg, notary public do hereby certify that the above written copy of agreement is a true, and exact copy of the original memorandum of agreement of which it purports to be a copy, and that the above was copied by me from the original memo. of agreement on the 24th day of August, A.D. 1885.

"T. H. GILMOUR,
[SEAL.] "Notary Public for Manitoba."

That is the connection of this W. R. Bell with the transport service of the North-West; but there is this peculiarity in this case, that the undertaking of the Government with the Hudson Bay Company was of that loose kind, that until the 21st May, any certificate of whatever character which represented that company, from any men of the force whatever, was accepted and the account paid; and the result is, that while the Commission state in their report that they have examined something like $3,000,000 worth of accounts, the larger portion of that amount appears already, in the statement submitted to the House, as paid, and other sums, equal to that demanded from Bell, are demanded from other parties by the Commission on the re-examination of the accounts. What use is there in making those demands, when the money is paid? The arrangement made with the Hudson Bay Company shows the entire incapacity of the Militia Department for undertaking a service which the whole country was led to believe had been undertaken with the greatest exactitude, precision and satisfaction to all concerned, and was going to cover the Militia Department in particular with a halo of glory. In reference to the waste of supplies, Mr. James Anderson, who appears himself to be drawing pay as a commissariat officer makes this statement that "he went up to the front and on return reported to Captain Swinford at the base that everything was going to rack and ruin; hay wasted; in fact in some of the stations you could walk over your boots in oats." I stated the other day that the amount of supplies which had been furnished to the forces in the North-West during the rebellion was out of proportion to what the men could reasonably consume. I stated that the quantity of tea supplies equalled the allowance for between 41,000 and 42,000 men for ninety days, and I base my statement on the accounts submitted for payment which amounted to 59,728 lbs. This is at the usual allowance, as appeared in "General Orders", namely one quarter of one ounce of tea per man per diem. Yet there were only 4,756 men under arms in the North-West. The same result is apparent with regard to the sugar supply, the meat supply and the bread supply. I have a statement of these supplies, which I extracted from the Public Accounts and have gone over them with a good deal of care, in order to satisfy myself thoroughly in reference to them. Not only was the supply excessive but the prices in many instances were ridiculously large for the kind of supplies furnished. The arrangements with the Hudson Bay Company, under the blanket agreement with the Government, was that they the company, should supply the provisions at ordinary wholesale prices, but even in Winnipeg they charge the exorbitant price of 2 cents a lb. for salt. For rice at Edmonton 20 cents per lb. were paid, and for bacon 25 cents per lb. Other supplies are charged in proportion. I find besides the most surprising fact that there was supplied to the force something like 800 lbs. of baking powder at a cost of $750. I find the entire amount drawn in these ways, to the 30th June, 1885, by the Hudson Bay Company for all supplies, was $291,238, and to the 15th March, 1886, in addition, $114,823, or a total expenditure on supplies furnished by the Hudson Bay Company alone of $406,000. The Government also paid to the Hudson Bay Company, on accounts contracted by the force while on service, $1,311,303, and a commission on those last named of $65,654, a total to Hudson Bay Company of $1,788,525. These were paid, in the way I stated, on the blanket agreement between the Hudson Bay Company and the Government. This resulted in all sorts of accounts appearing as having been passed by that company, accounts that are entirely against the rules and regulations that govern the Militia Department. We have no justification whatever for paying those accounts further than that certain individuals went to the company and purchased supplies. What right had the major general commanding the forces, for instance, any more than anyone under him, to purchase supplies on his own account and charge them to the Government? If special supplies were wanted by a private in the force he had to pay for them himself. He was furnished with a kit, and had to be satisfied with that, but the major general and the staff officers could procure, at the expense of the Government, whatever they could find in the neighborhood in which they happened to be which they thought it would suit them to purchase. I find that Major T. Charles Watson, who, I believe, is a temporary clerk in one of the Departments, was sent to Yorktown in the North-West Territories, and given a commission to form a company there; and, in addition to drawing a very handsome allowance as pay, has had paid for him an allowance nearly equal to one-half the entire amount that every other subordinate in the Yorktown volunteer company received for his services. He received a forage cap $2, a pair of trowsers $6, a pair of boots $6, and an overcoat $5. This is a man who at the same period, as a temporary clerk, has drawn $2.50 a day. I find that the Minister himself has added to the immense charge for cab-hire in his Department $271 in connection with the North-West rebellion, and $470 for travelling expenses. I hope that was not the least efficient means resorted to in order to suppress the rebellion. There was a report current in regard to looting in the North-West. I only give such information as I have, but there was a rumor that a good many supplies that were seized were, under the instruction of the major general and some of the officers serving under him, taken to the eastern Provinces, and I question very much if some of the losses embraced in this vote are not losses that were sustained in that way. The Ten Commandments will not budge in a case like this, and stealing will continue stealing whether by a major general or by any of his forces or any one else; and this country ought not to be called upon to pay losses until it is ascertained how they occurred. It is a matter of current rumor that horses came back from that country in a most mysterious way, and, if the First Minister is going to make enquiry into the condition of the Indians, it is only due to the people that enquiries of an equally drastic character should be made in this matter. There are some of the details which I have given that admit of no question. There is no doubt that there was waste and extravagance and carelessness there, and I submit that I am justified in having brought this matter to the attention of the committee, even at this late hour of the Session.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I propose for a few moments to say a few words with reference to the transactions to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and I do so on my personal responsibility and a personal witness, and not on a statement made by an anonymous writer. For nearly three months I was on the principal route of transport between the railway and the Saskatchewan, a route on which 1,300 teams were passing continually up and down. It was my official duty, and I made it my business as a member of this House, to make note of everything that went on; and, so far as the conduct of the teamsters, the loading of the teams, the management of the transport service between Troy and the Saskatchewan are concerned, I say on my personal responsibility that the statements made by the hon. gentleman in reference to that are absolutely without foundation. For four weeks at Fort Qu'Appelle, and for some little time at Troy, I had personal knowledge of the way in which Major Bell conducted the transport. Whether Major Bell was guilty of jobbery or not, I am not going to say, I know nothing about it. So far as he had control of that transport, he managed it most thoroughly and efficiently. No team left Troy that was not fairly and properly loaded. I saw the way in which the service was conducted between Troy and Clarke's Crossing, and the statement that these teamsters acted in the way alleged in that letter is absolutely without foundation, and I say that from my personal knowledge of the facts. The transport service was well and efficiently conducted in every possible respect. Of course, the teamsters would sometimes be careless. That could not be prevented by anybody, but to say that there was the waste described by the hon. gentleman is a pure fabrication. The statement which has been made by the hon. gentleman, in reference to General Middleton, was made a long time ago, shortly after the transactions occurred, and I say the charges made against General Middleton and his staff are the most cruel, the most unjust and the most unjustifiable fabrication. I have it on the best authority—I do not know why I should not state it—I have it from the lips of General Middleton himself, that, so far from his having received those so-called luxuries that he is reported to have had, he and his staff never even drew their rations, but paid for every mouthful they had. They never drew a single ration from the time they left Winnipeg till they came back again. They paid for everything they got, even for the bread and meat, the ordinary rations which they were entitled to draw as well as the rest of us. Those items which were put in the account as charged to General Middleton were things which were got bonâ fide for the hospital, and which were used for the hospital. He never got any of them, and, if the thing was investigated, I think the charges in reference to the looting would be found as devoid of foundation as these with reference to the rations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think we can possibly go into this discussion at length, but I would call the attention of the Minister of Militia to this, that the hon. gentleman behind me has stated that 60,000 pounds of tea had been issued for 4,000 or 5,000 men for three or four months. A good ration of tea is generally supposed to be a quarter of an ounce, and that total amount ought to have sufficed to supply 40,000 men for that period. That is a fact which, for the Minister's own sake, ought to be explained, if it be a fact. I have not verified it, but I assume it from the hon. gentleman's statement. The other statement which my hon. friend made, and which he is responsible for and not I, is that our horses that were employed in that outbreak required 250 pounds of forage per day, according to the returns of what was paid, and, of course, that shows a very culpable waste, if it be so. I mention this, because I think it is fair that the Minister of Militia should be able to give an explanation, if there is one. My own opinion is that we must allow for very considerable waste under such circumstances. I am not going to quarrel with the hon. gentleman because waste is shown; but there is a difference between waste and downright flinging away, which would be the case if 60,000 lbs. of tea were paid for our forces. I would call attention to the last item in this vote, "pay for extra services as secretary to the surgeon general," whom I take to be the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin). That gentleman may have rendered very valuable services to the country; I am not in a position to say whether he did or not, but I think, when an hon. gentleman is here serving in Parliament and drawing his indemnity, it is an exceedingly vicious practice, unless no other person can be got to do the duty, to assign to him a large extra salary. He drew his $1,500 like the rest of us last year, and he got $1,840 besides for services rendered simultaneously with those he rendered as member of Parliament, and he was promoted to full colonel besides. Here is a gentleman who stays at home, incurs no sort of inconvenience, and is paid three times as much as my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), and the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Orton), who went out and did good service in the field. I think he only got $400. I would rather have reversed it, and given the surgeon-general $400, and the hon. member for Wellington $1,800. I must say that I think it is not creditable to us, that a gentleman who stayed here and who was drawing his indemnity, should receive four or five times as much as those gentlemen who saw service in the field. I say nothing about the value of the advice the hon. gentleman gave the Minister, but I do not think he had had any experience as to what was wanted for troops in the field. From what little I know of the service, from the books I have read, I think the advice and the report which he made are largely extracted from the usual regulations in Her Majesty's service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has very properly called my attention to the extraordinary statement made by the hon. member for Middlesex about the quantity of tea which was purchased for the use of the troops in the North West. If that hon. member had taken the trouble to read up about some of the campaigns that have taken place in the world, he would have known, instead of giving his time to counting the ounces of tea, butter and sugar, of which he has made a list, that in an ordinary campaign it is impossible to purchase the exact quantity of provisions that may be required, the same as a family is able to do from week to week. After the troubles are all over the hon. gentleman is very wise, and criticises the manner of the campaign very freely; but I say it was impossible for anyone to know how long that campaign was going to last, nor did we know whether it would be necessary to provide for 5,000 troops, or a much larger or lesser number. But the hon. gentleman does not seem to have taken the trouble to ascertain whether these provisions had been given away or consumed. Sir, I have here a return showing that most of these stores, the tea, sugar, coffee, hay, horses, oats, and everything else, were disposed of, some at auction, and others were transferred to the Indian Department or to the Mounted Police, and we got rid of all these stores without the country losing anything. The hon. gentleman says there was extravagance. Well, I remember that when the $4,000,000 were voted by Parliament, an hon. gentleman on the left of the Speaker stated that it was merely a preliminary vote, that it was well understood it would not cover the necessary expenditure. To-day we know that $4,700,000 covers all the claims, including that of the Hudson Bay Company, all the expenditure, and yet the Globe and other organs of hon. gentlemen opposite stated that the rebellion was going to cost some $10,000,000. Now, disappointed at the smallness of the expenditure, the hon. member for Middlesex stands up and attempts to cast slurs at the administration of the Department, and even finding fault with the rations which were given to our volunteers who went up there to fight the battles of their country. Sir, as Minister of Militia, I am ready to stand by that report. I am ready to submit to an investigation, because I am certain that if all the facts could be known, it would be found that the Department did its duty, and that the men who were employed by the Department in various functions, did their duty. Now, one word about the surgeon general. All I can say is that that gentleman rendered invaluable services to the country. I do not know whether he prepared himself for the important duties which he performed, but I can inform the House that Dr. Boyd, who was sent out by the Princess Louise, to look after the hospital stores which she sent out to the North-West, stated that during his vast experience during the several campaigns he had passed through, he had never seen any hospital or medical service more perfectly organised than the one which was organised by the surgeon general. I certainly consider that for these services which he rendered, sitting up night after night, and working from early morning until night, he was entitled to the pay which we gave him.

Mr. BLAKE. The point is this: That Lieutenant Colonel Bergin occupied a relation to this House and the country of such a character as did not justify the Department in selecting him for this appointment, when scores of men all through the country, quite as competent to discharge those duties, did not occupy such a relation. I consider it is a direct interference with, and an evasion, if it be not a breach, of the Independence of Parliament Act. I do not depreciate nor discount his services in any way, yet I consider that the Government were not justified, under all the circumstances, in conferring this appointment upon him.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I wish to deny the charge of the hon. gentleman that I objected to the rations that were issued to the force. My objection was altogether to the effect that the country had paid a great sum for rations that the force did not get. I wish the committee to recollect that I am dealing largely with the report of the Commission appointed by hon. gentlemen to examine into the accounts in connection with the rebellion, and in dealing with the claim of Major Bell the report says:

"It is admitted W. E. Jones, chief clerk of transport under Bell, went to Saskatchewan Landing, and shipped about ninety tons for Battleford. Bell swears this was to protect the Government, and to prevent a stoppage in the forwarding of supplies, pending the acceptance of tenders for freighting, by the tonnage system. Jones swears he went there and engaged the teams at $70 per ton, expecting he was to have the contract, which Bell had promised to get for him if possible in recognition of his services as clerk, and there is no reason to doubt Bell knew the stores could be hauled for $70 per ton as arranged by Jones, when he offered the contract to Thomas Howard at $125 per ton, less $10 for feed for teams."

The Commission, after making that statement, submits the following as its finding:—

"The telegrams and correspondence (Exhibits A to R, John Stewart's evidence), particularly a note written by Bell at Moose Jaw, 27th May, addressed to 'My Dear Stewart,' in which he says he 'has quite cleared himself with the general, and laid a foundation for a good thing,' shows Bell was trying to manipulate the various contracts for his own benefit."

Such is the evidence on which I base the charge that this man employed by the Department was using his position to benefit himself under the name of W. R. Bell, Bell & Lewis, and the Qu'Appelle Farming Company. As to the major general's accounts, I have taken the published statements submitted by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Militia. At page 465 of the Auditor General's report there is charged for mess supplies for General Middleton, $396. I am bound to take those published statements. As to the defence of the transaction made by the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that the general never received any supplies, I ask then where they have gone? If General Middleton did not receive them he owes it to the House and to the country to demand an investigation.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If I send a requisition for certain stores for the use of my regiment, that requisition will appear in my name. No doubt the General sent requisitions for stores for the hospital, and they appear in his name and were charged against him.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). There is a separate account for hospital supplies on which there was a very large expenditure, which is likewise open to criticism.

St. Catharines Milling Company—Law costs..... $11,500 00

Mr. LISTER. This is a somewhat peculiar item. It seems strange that this Government should undertake to pay the costs of the St. Catharines Milling Company in defending a suit brought by the Ontario Government against the company for trespassing on the Government's lands. Many years ago an award was made between Ontario and the Dominion by which the territory known as the disputed territory was awarded to Ontario. The First Minister of this Government refused to confirm that award. He treated that award as a nullity and the land as if it belonged to the Dominion. It has been stated over and over again and never contradicted, because it cannot be contradicted, that the land in the disputed territory has been portioned out by this Government to its followers—thousands and thousands of miles of Ontario land have been given to the political followers of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Among those gentlemen are the St. Catharines Milling Company, comprising a relative of the Minister of the Interior and other gentlemen who support this Government. When Ontario attempted to enforce its rights, to prevent those trespassers committing further trespasses and keep them from taking away the timber, the Dominion Government stepped in and assumed the reponsibility of the costs incurred by these parties in defending that suit. The Dominion Government not only refused to give the Province what belonged to her, but when she began to assert her rights, the Dominion Government undertook to pay the costs in defending trespassers. The return brought down is a somewhat peculiar one. The member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is a member of the firm that is defending this suit, and the return shows that that gentlemen, through his firm, has had correspondence with the Government, and what influence has been brought to bear on the Government to lead them to undertake the liability of defending the suit is more than I can understand. All the letters which have passed between the Government and this legal firm and the St. Catharines Milling Company have not been brought down, and it is evident there are other letters which are of importance. The Department of Indian Affairs requested this legal firm of which the hon. member for North Simcoe is a member, and that hon. gentleman is the counsel who has argued this case in the courts of Ontario and proposes to argue it in the courts of England, to send in an estimate of the amount required to carry on this litigation. We find by the return that they have submitted an estimate of costs amounting to $20,000. They ask the Parliament of Canada to vote them $20,000 of the people's money for the purpose of defending the St. Catharines Milling Company for the trespasses which they have committed on the lands of the Province of Ontario, and the House and country will be struck by the liberality with which those gentlemen propose to pay themselves out of the public Treasury. This Bill is headed, "The Queen against St. Catharines Milling Company—Estimated costs." Costs already incurred, $3,500. Those were the costs up to the Court of Appeal of Ontario. In the court of first resort, judgment was given against hon. gentlemen here. The Privy Council of England has decided that the land belongs to the Province of Ontario. The First Minister has carried out the threat he made in 1879, the threat that although the land might belong to Ontario yet not a stick of timber or a pound of lead should she have. It is now proposed to take the case to the Supreme Court of Canada. It has been in the Court of Chancery, in the Court of Appeal, and their judgment has been given in favor of the Province; and these lawyers, who propose to pay themselves with such prodigality and liberality, propose now to take it to the Supreme Court. The bill reads: Deposit as security for respondent's costs, $500; estimated cost of appellants, solicitors, agents, &c., $300; preparing factum, 250 pages, $500. That, in fact, was prepared from that used in the Court of Appeal, and the work could be performed by any clerk. Printing, say 300 pages, $450; senior counsel, $1,000. The hon. member for North Simcoe charges $1,000 to argue the case in the Supreme Court, and the junior counsel charges $500, making $2,950 more. Then they expect to be defeated in the Supreme Court of Canada, and they are making provision to carry it on to the Privy Council, and let us see what that will cost. Deposit on the respondent's case $1,500; solicitors' and English agents' fees, $1,500; printing, $1,000; senior counsel from Canada and expenses, $5,000. It is needless to say that the senior counsel for Canada will be the hon. member for North Simcoe, and there is to be a junior counsel who charges an additional $1,000. That makes $6,000 in all for fees. Then, in case the bill is not large enough, they put in an item for contingencies, $2,850, making a total cost of $20,000. Now, this bill was so enormous that the Minister of Justice in his correspondence stated that $11,500 ought to be sufficient and according to his recommendation, the estimate this Session is for that amount. But next Session, if hon. gentlemen opposite are present, no doubt this estimate will be supplemented by another item, in which further sums will be asked to pay the hon. member for North Simcoe and his friends the amount of money which they claim. Well it is a nice thing to farm out these things, and to go to England in the month of July, and to go before the Privy Council for the sum of $5,000. Many people would like the chance of doing that merely on a little advice to the First Minister as appears to have been the case in this instance. I state that the Government have not brought down the correspondence in this case, I state that there has been correspondence between Mr. McCarthy and the Government, which is material, and which has not been brought down, and I prove that by the memorandum prepared by Mr. Burgess, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, in which he says:

"Directions as to the action to be taken in this case were conveyed to me by the right hon. the First Minister during your absence in the North-West. Sir John Macdonald has also noted on the back of the letter from Mr. Dalton McCarthy, Q.C., dated 28th September last, that the Department will indemnify the company for the costs of the appeal."

Now, Sir, it was not only that company alone who were applying to the Government to pay their costs, as would appear by these papers brought down, because these papers appear—with the exception of one in which an estimate of the costs is made—to have been written by the president of the milling company. But somebody is behind all that, and that somebody is the firm of McCarthy, Osler & Creelman. Mr. McCarthy appears to have written the First Minister, not as a member of the firm, but as Mr. McCarthy, according to the memorandum I have read. Now, I say it is a disgrace and a shame, after what we know has taken place with regard to this territory, that the Province of Ontario should be forced to contend for its rights in the courts of Ontario, and that this Parliament, with representatives of that Province, should undertake this litigation against the Province of Ontario, and that the costs should be paid by the people of Canada. I can well understand from this item and others in the Supplementary Estimates why the Government delays to the last moment in bringing down the Estimates. The reason is perfectly clear. The object of the Government is to stifle the shady transactions. I do not believe that the people of this country would submit to allow this Government to take out of the public Treasury money for the purpose of defeating, delaying and embarrassing any single Province of the Dominion. The conduct of the Government has been an outrage on the Province from which I come, and I believe that, when the time comes, the people of the country will show unmistakably that they consider it to be so.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any other liability against the Government in respect to this lease?

Mr. McLELAN. I know of none.

Mr. DAWSON. I understand that the full papers in this case are not yet printed so as to enable the hon. gentleman to judge of the merits of the case.

Mr. LISTER. Here are the papers. The case has been before the country for the last ten years.

Mr. DAWSON. Those are not all. However confident the hon. gentleman may be in his own opinion, the fact is that the papers which would throw light upon this matter are now being printed. This is a mere item in the Estimates, upon which the hon. gentleman takes occasion to bring up, in a great measure, the whole question. But this is no time to discuss it. It is a pity that the motion, of which the hon. member for Bothwell has given notice, was not proceeded with, but I think when the hon. gentleman mentions in his resolution the extreme west and north, he might also have taken in the extreme east, which has also been decided upon by that judgment of the Privy Council. The lines as determined by that decision clash, and it put the eastern boundary at a line drawn due north from the confluence of the Mississippi and the Ohio. The Government of Ontario suggested that an Act should be passed to amend the decision of the highest court of the realm, but I have always maintained that it was better to send the report back for amendment. The case is not at all in the position in which the hon. member for Lambton represents it to be.

Mr. MULOCK. I think there is a principle involved in this matter. We find the Government entering into an agreement to indemnify this milling company in respect of certain costs, and the money the Government pays in this case, goes into the pocket of a member of this House. Here is a letter from the firm McCarthy & Co., to Mr. Vankoughnet, the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, dated the 9th of October, 1885:

"THE QUEEN vs. THE ST. CATHARINES MILLING AND LUMBERING COMPANY.

"DEAR SIR,—Captain Murray, president of the defendant company informs us that he has to day sent to you a request to forward to us as solicitors for the company, a cheque for $1,500 to cover deposit with court as security for costs and other disbursements in connection with the appeal herein. We hope to have the pleasure of receiving this cheque early next week, as the required expenditure must be made without delay."

One cannot read these papers without coming to but one conclusion, that is, that this is a suit carried on in the name of the St. Catharines' Milling Company, but really by this Government, and the Government are in an indirect way placing the money in the hands of one of their own supporters who is a member of this House. Of course the Government have a right to defend those who have claims upon them for protection, and to employ such counsel as may be necessary to do so. But this is another illustration of the charge made against the Government, that directly or indirectly their supporters in this House are using the public Exchequer to put money into their own pockets, and in that respect I attack this transaction, if in no other. I asked the Minister a little while ago if there was no other liability attaching to the Crown in connection with this transaction. One shook his head, and another stated that he knew nothing; but if we assume that we are liable to defend this company in its litigation, and if that litigation fails, we shall have to go further, we shall have to meet a bill of damages for breach of contract. If this company have any legal or moral right to compel the people of Canada to pay the costs of prosecuting their claim, they will have an equal right to call on the people of Canada to indemnify them. It has been stated that compensation has been given in various indirect ways to persons interested in this company, by reason of their not getting what they claim—that they have received advantages in the way of leases or other advantages. I object to this item in toto. In the first place, no legal liability can be established. In the next place, it cannot be said that there is any moral liability, because these lessees knew that they were buying a doubtful title. This question had been fought out at the polls for years. Everyone in Canada knows that there was a grave doubt whether this Government had any interest in that disputed territory or not. The award of 1878 was against them, and that award has been confirmed by the highest tribunal to which Canadians can appeal. Yet these defendants, in the face of that, chose to enter into this speculative transaction, and to take from this Government the right to cut timber in that territory when they knew perfectly well that that right would be contested in the courts. On what principle, then, are we asked to indemify them? It is a monstrous thing that the Government should retain one of their own supporters in this House to defend this company, and thus violate substantially the Independence of Parliament Act. This is a transaction which is a disgrace to everyone concerned in it.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that the First Minister is contesting the right of Ontario to this territory, not because he is disputing the boundary of Ontario, but because he claims that the Indians have a paramount title, which the Crown here alone could acquire. I put a question to him the other day as to whether he maintained the same view with regard to the waste territories of the Province of Quebec. If he is right in his contention as to Ontario, I do not see why it should not apply to every other territory in British North America where the Indians have not surrendered their right. I would like to know on what theory the hon. gentleman proposes still further to test this question, and to say that the rights of the Indians on the western side of the boundary between Ontario and Quebec are paramount, while on the eastern side of that boundary they are not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know as it would be of any use for us to discuss an abstract question; but as the hon. gentleman asks me the question, I have no objection to giving him my opinion, that the original title of the Indians is the same in one part of British North America as in another. With respect to this case, I would merely say that the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has done the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) a great injustice. He has not been employed by the Government, and has nothing to do with the Government.

Mr. MULOCK. He has got the money.

Sir JOHN A MACDONALD. The case stands thus, a suit was brought against this capital stock company on behalf of the Government of Ontario. The company employed Mr. McCarthy's firm; neither Mr. McCarthy nor his firm had anything to do with the Government. He simply acted as counsel and as partner of his firm and solicitor for this company. There is nothing wrong in that. The question arose in the courts whether the title of the company was valid or not. They had their title from the Dominion Government, and that question arose over the Indian title. It was very important that question should be settled at once, and as this suit was going on, the Government consider that the most convenient and economical way of settling the question was by making this suit a test case. The Crown supported the Indian title, and helped the company to carry on the suit until the final decision was arrived at as to the validity of that title. Mr. McCarthy, being the counsel of the St. Catharines company, continued to be so. The arrangement was not made with Mr. McCarthy, but with the company, that their case should be made a test case. This would save the bringing of many actions, as the whole thing would be settled finally in this one case. The Government, therefore, on my advice, said we would make it our own case, and have the question setted for once and forever.

Mr. MILLS. Supposing the Supreme Court or the Privy Council sustain the view taken by the First Minister on this question, are we to understand he will act on that principle in all the Provinces?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the Privy Council decide in favor of the view which the Dominion Government take, that of course will be the law, and it will be the law with respect to the Indian title in all parts of British North America.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I understood the Government intended to make this their own case, and would consequently have something to do with the lawyers conducting it.

Mr. DAWSON. I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will admit that the title of the Indians is not the same in all the Provinces. The title of the Indians which was affirmed by the Imperial proclamation of 1763, is a little different from the claim of the Indians of the Province of Quebec.

Pensions payable on account of Rebellion of 1885.. $20,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Militia was good enough to hand me a statement showing the way in which these pensions are distributed. Looking over this statement—and I think it ought to have been printed—I see that apparently—though there may be reasons for it—there is an enormous discrepancy in the awards made under what seem to be similar circumstances, and I will give two or three instances which will enable the hon. gentleman to state what sort of principle has been laid down about awarding these. I see a sum assigned to a Mr. Swinford, father of Lieutenant Charles Swinford, of the 90th Battalion, wounded at Fish Creek and died afterwards, of $730 a year. That is a very liberal allowance in itself, and an allowance which, with every desire to deal liberally with the families of volunteers, seems to me to require explanation; but it requires explanation more, I think, on this ground, that, I believe in precisely similar cases, a much smaller pension has been allowed. Here I find Mrs. Elizabeth Lydia Brown, mother of Captain Brown, an officer of higher rank, in Boulton's mounted infantry, killed at Batoche, receives a pension of $259.15. Now, primâ facie, there is no reason why $730 should be assigned to the father of a lieutenant and only $259 to the mother of a captain, unless there are some reasons which call for very remarkable discrimination. Then, I see an allowance to Mr. Moore, father of Private Thomas Moore, killed at Batoche, of $500. This is in the nature of a gratuity, and not a pension. John A. Hughes, father of Private Isaac Hughes, who seems to have died after an injury received at Batoche, gets $1,825. Those two instances will answer my purpose as well as all the rest. There is an apparent enormous discrepancy. There are others in this which require attention, but probably the hon. gentleman, by explaining those two, will give the House and myself a better idea of the principle upon which this has been arranged than if I went into the smaller items which require explanation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The first step to be taken in all these cases of gratuities and pensions, is to have the report of the medical examiners upon them. In the case of death we consider the circumstances of the parents, or those who are to receive the money. As in the case of Swinford, the father and mother may be altogether dependent upon their son for their livelihood, and this explains the difference in the awards. Of course the regulations concerning gratuities and pensions apply to all cases alike but we always take into consideration the special circumstances of each case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must observe that $730 a year to the father of a deceased officer is a very large allowance, although it may be justified, and it is doubly large when you only allow one-third of that sum to the mother of a deceased officer of a superior rank.

Mr. WATSON. I had the pleasure of knowing both these young men. The families are similarly situated, but I believe that the father of Swinford has a position from which he draws a fair living. I think the discrimination that has been made between them is not justifiable. So far as bravery is concerned Captain Brown was one of Boulton's best scouts, and it is strange that his mother should only receive $250 pension while the other should receive $730.

Militia—Military Properties, Contingencies, &c...$32,142 20

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In order to remove any doubt I desire to ask the Minister of Militia if I understood his statement correctly on the position of the officers. There are two classes of officers in the service: One appointed after a certain five years rule, said to have been established a few years ago; the other class was appointed before, I believe. The House on both sides recognised that when a certain age, to be determined by the Government, and which I believe is sixty-three years, is reached then the propriety of retirement is recognised. What I want distinctly understood is this: Do hon. gentlemen intend, at the expiration of these term of five years, to dispense with the services of the officers who were appointed prior to the introduction of the five years' rule, and who are not yet sixty-three years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have already explained to the hon. gentleman that the policy followed by the Department is, that those appointments are made for five years only. As to the cases of Colonel Denison and Colonel Milsom: Although this change of policy applied to them, it was considered from the fact that when they were appointed no such rule was in existence, there should be a difference made in their favor. The officers who occupy a similar position will have a precedent in that case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I understand the position is this: that with respect to officers who were appointed prior to the five years' rule spoken of, that until they have attained sixty-three years, the Government do not intend to apply this rule of removing them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Ocean and River Service.....$18,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister was to state whether the contract with the Allan Line Steamship Company had been completed.

Mr. McLELAN. The old contract required one year's notice to terminate it, and that has been given.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what the Government propose to do. Do they propose to invite public tenders or renew the contract on certain conditions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have given notice of termination of contract with the Allan Steamship Company, in order to be able to obtain an improved service on the St. Lawrence.

Canals—Maintenance and Repairs.....$497,024 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I beg leave now to ask the question of which I gave notice, but which was not reached, that is, Whether the raising of the dams upon Mud Creek, at the outlet of Mud Lake, in the township of Bedford, was done by the authority or with the privity of the Government, or of any official of the Government?

Mr. POPE. No, it was not.

Militia—Permanent Corps, &c.....$135,700 00

Mr. MULOCK. I had the honor to present a petition to this House a short time ago from a gentleman named Browning, and I desire briefly to state what it set forth. It alleges that Mr. Browning was appointed provisionally as lieutenant, and served in the North-West. It was intended that he should obtain a certificate from the military school at Quebec, but whilst the rebellion was in progress he could not attend there. Of course I am now only speaking of what appears in the petition. It appears that he discharged his duties in the North-West satisfactorily, and when the rebellion was over he accompanied the troop to Quebec, and there entered upon the course of study to which the law entitled him. At that time the school was in an unsettled state, in consequence of the rebellion, and it is stated that no squad was formed whereby he could receive such instructions as the law entitled him to, until the 15th of October, although he had been in attendance for a long time. The petition goes on to state that in the month of November he was making enquiry at the school with a view of taking advantage of the privileges to which he was entitled of having a horse kept in the school. He says that he then learned for the first time that the commandant of the school had been drawing rations for his horse, charging them against Browning without his knowledge or consent. The petition states that the commandant thereupon conceived the advisability of getting rid of the petitioner, and that day he received an order from the commandant to present himself for examination on the 6th of November. He thereupon replied by letter, stating that it was not reasonable to ask him to present himself for examination on the 6th of November, inasmuch as he had not had the instruction to which the law entitled him. The law entitled him to a course of twelve weeks' instruction at the school, and during that time to thirty-six lectures in all, distributed over the period, or an average of three a week. It also entitles him to certain practical work in command of the troop. It appears that on the day he was notified to present himself for examination, he had not had up to that moment any opportunity of command of a troop, although according to the course of instruction he was required to pass an examination in that branch of the service. The reply he received from the commandant was to the effect that he must either obey the order and present himself for examination on the 6th of November, or accept his transport, which meant, of course, to leave the school. He replied that to force an examination under such an alternative was simply to summon him up to be rejected, and accordingly he intimated that if that were the final decision of the commandant, he might accept the latter alternative at once, and he at once took his transport. Thereupon the commandant, instead of adhering to his first decision, informed him that the examination would not take place, but that he must await further orders. He accordingly remained at the school, and after getting the command of a troop, to which he was entitled, on the 12th of November, he was called up for examination, and the examination being only in a small portion of the work, he was rejected. He was forced to the examination after having been only five or six weeks out of school. It is urged that he was there for months; but the petition alleges that the school was not organised until the 15th of October. The petition alleges further that when called up for examination, he was not given the opportunity of being examined in all the subjects, but he was so unfairly tested that, even had he obtained full marks in the subjects in which he was examined, he would not have obtained sufficient to entitle him to pass. Further, from the facts set forth in that petition, it does not appear that he failed in respect of one subject by which he could be rejected. It is therefore evident that he did not receive that fair examination that the law entitled him to. It appears that he was forced to his examination, when he should not in justice have been forced to it. A motive for the conduct of the commandant was supplied by the alleged fact of his having committed the offence charged. The gravity of that offence is sufficient to make me hesitate to assert anything more than the petition states. Thereafter, the commandant reported to the proper authorities, where Mr. Browning is stationed—and I may say he is a resident of Toronto and an officer in the Governor General's Body Guard; and the communication from the commandant passed through the various channels, and ultimately reached Mr. Browning. That communication asserted that Mr. Browning had failed in his examination, had been guilty of insubordination, and had given the commandant an infinitude of trouble during the time he was at the school. Mr. Browning felt that that was a charge which demanded investigation, and he asked for particulars in respectful and proper language, but they were never furnished to him. The conclusion I have arrived at from a perusal of the Queen's regulations and the English law applicable to the case, is that when an officer complains against his superior officer, it is not competent for the commander of Her Majesty's forces in Canada to deliver final judgment. But that is what was done in this case. Mr. Browning presented his letter for an investigation of the charge against him by Commandant Turnbull. The application of Lieutenant Browning for an investigation was submitted to the Minister of Militia. The Minister felt that he had not the power to interfere, and he did not interfere, although I submit that his duty, under the circumstances, was to have obtained the report of the officer commanding, and to have submitted that report to the Government, as nothing short of the Government can adjudicate upon such a case. I am sure there are members of this House who can testify to the capacity of Lieutenant Browning as an officer. There are those who met him on the field; and he was desirous of further serving his country in the way I have indicated. He writes that he has been unjustly deprived of his position in the service, and that an attempt is now being made to drive him therefrom in disgrace. That is a state of affairs that the honor of this country cannot permit. If he is deserving of dismissal, he at least has the right of a soldier to a fair enquiry, and I think the papers will show that he has not received that consideration in this respect which every officer and every private is entitled to. To illustrate the mistake that has been made. I may say that when Lieutenant Browning's letter asking for an investigation, setting forth the facts and casting reflections upon the honor of Colonel Turnbull was sent through the various channels to Major General Middleton, that gentleman forwarded that communication to Colonel Turnbull for his report in regard to the grave charge made therein against him; and Colonel Turnbull neither confessed nor denied it, but simply made a marginal note that he had nothing to say in regard to it. That is stated in the city of Toronto by the officers. Now, it is due to Colonel Turnbull that his conduct should be investigated, and it is due to Lieutenant Browning, if there has been any denial of justice to him, that the pending order against him should be cancelled and he should be reinstated in his position, and allowed to take that full course of instruction to which the law entitles him. It is also due to him that he should have a fair enquiry into the alleged case of insubordination. Had time permitted, I would have gone fully into this matter, but, under the circumstances, I leave it as it is, expecting that the Department will, in view of the matter set forth in this petition, deal with this case as justice demands. I may further say that a perusal of the petition laid upon the Table shows that, as a last resort, before appealing to this House, Lieutenant Browning personally attended before the Minister of Militia and argued his own case. I do not know, of course, what occurred, but the petition alleges that the Minister of Militia, in giving final judgment, said he had investigated the case with a great deal of care, and that if he could give Lieutenant Browning relief, more especially as he had been informed by Lieutenant Browning's friends, who had written him on the subject, that Lieutenant Browning was a good Conservative, he would do so I do not deny to a Conservative the justice he is entitled to, but it will be a fatal day to the Militia of Canada when the politics of any officer should have the slightest weight with the authorities.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has shown that the course which I have invariably followed has been not to allow politics to interfere in the management of the Militia Department. The hon. gentleman has just stated that Lieutenant Browning told him that, in investigating the matter, I had told Lieutenant Browning that however much he was reported to me as being a strong Conservative I did not consider that I could interfere. My reason is obvious. This is a matter of military discipline which came under the major general commanding. He made a report, and my excuse for not going into the case is really what the hon. gentleman gives himself, that time does not permit. I looked into every report that was made, the report of the major general and the report of Colonel Turnbull. The latter gentleman is an officer well known who has made of the Cavalry School of Quebec a great success. We have never had any charge against him, and in his report he contradicts every statement made by Lieutenant Browning. However I told Mr. Browning's friends that if he chose to make charges against the Cavalry School, I was willing to have a court of investigation appointed. With reference to the charge made against Colonel Turnbull, in so far as drawing rations in the name of Mr. Browning is concerned, this is the practice followed in the school. In many cases, the cadet comes in bringing his own horse, and is allowed $1 per day for his time, and his rations are served out. In other cases, where a cadet does not bring in his horse, one is told off to him and rations drawn in his name, so that his time at school counts from the time he comes in until the time he goes out. The horse is essential to him, and rations are drawn in his name. There is, therefore, nothing at all in the charge made against Colonel Turnbull. The hon. gentleman must know that in the General Orders, under paragraph 106, if an officer after a short course in any school of instruction fails to pass the examination he may be retired; and the major general, if he has sinned at all, has sinned in this case on the side of leniency. Lieutenant Browning was reported as being insubordinate. The major general did not choose to courtmartial him, but fell back on the General Orders and retired him. However, I am ready to grant a court of enquiry and into the statements made, which are supported by the two officers, Lieutenant Hewitt, well known in Toronto, and Lieutenant Lessard, who formed the staff of the Cavalry School of Quebec.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the officer demands it, of course, he is entitled to a courtmartial when charges are made against him, otherwise serious oppression might be perpetrated on gentlemen entering our service. They have their rights; and in the case, especially of a man who has served in the North-West, it would be proper, if he chose to demand a court martial it should be accorded him.

Indians—Grant to supplement Indian Fund..... $34,638 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take this opportunity of calling again the attention of the First Minister who is specially charged with it, to the fact that the salarirs of Indian agents are altogether out of proportion to the relief afforded the Indians. Out of about $5,000 in New Brunswick $2,000 are for salaries, so that only $3,000 may be said to reach the Indians. It did not appear, on the explanations given, that there was just ground for this great discrepancy that exists in the salaries, between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The Indians are just as much scattered and there are just as many agents in the one Province as the other. Forty per cent. of salary on the pittance paid these people is an enormous commission.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The agents have other duties to do besides the disbursement of money. The salaries are not paid out of the moneys distributed to the Indians, but out of the Indian Management Fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of the salaries in this identical vote. You have charged New Brunswick $1,876 for salaries and the total distributed is $3,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to explain the real reason why the salaries in one Province are greater than in another. The salaries are small, from $25 to $200, I suppose the bands are more scattered, but I cannot at this moment explain the details.

Commercial Agencies..... $10,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here also I wanted some sort of general idea of what you are going to do under this rather comprehensive title of commercial agencies. The sum asked from one aspect is rather small, but it is altogether too large to throw away.

Mr. McLELAN. It is proposed to select certain points at which we may appoint agents or pay parties residing there or familiar with the trade of that country, and employ them in endeavoring to work up a trade with the Dominion of Canada. Two or three points have been spoken of and commend themselves rather favorably to myself and to my colleagues. For instance, Australia has been named. There is a gentleman with whom I have had several interviews, Mr. Woods, who has a firm in Australia, and who is familiar with the manufactures of this country, and his brother has been resident in Australia for a long period and is thoroughly familiar with the trade in that country. Mr. Woods has persuaded me that a considerable amount of benefit can be done to the Dominion by the appointment of himself or some other person to work up a trade with the Dominion of Canada. It has been also proposed to employ a man during the Colonial Exhibition in London, to see the representatives of the various colonies there, and endeavor to effect sales or open trade with the various colonies. It has also been spoken of that we should send to some of the points in South America where there is a probability of trade being opened with the Dominion. I propose, as soon as Parliament is prorogued and I have got a little rest, to take this matter up and make a selection from the different points and the parties who have been represented as good for this business. Of course a great deal depends on the character of the man.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose no figure was named?

Mr. McLELAN. No. Mr. Woods talked as if it was not so much salary as some small compensation which would enable them to devote some of their time to it. I did not commit myself to taking him, but I was favorably impressed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We must judge by results. There is a good deal to be said pro, and there is a good deal to be said con. If it is merely in order to allow a few gentlemen to draw salaries my opinion is that our sister colonies are a good deal in the same position as ourselves. They are producers of raw materials. Possibly in regard to Australia exchanges may be effected with profit, but it is a long way off. I had occasion, when I was Finance Minister, just before leaving office, to make some enquiry into this subject, and I make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman. I am inclined to think that, particularly from the Maritime Provinces, there is a profitable trade awaiting us in connection with the Mediterranean, which has never been exploited as the French say, and I suggest that some attention might be paid to the Mediterranean trade.

Charges of Management..... $184,224 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon gentleman agreed to give some definite information as to the very important question, what the Government are going to do about the very large amounts that are now being received. All the information I have received tends to show that this question has to be looked into, and, in the Maritime Provinces to which the hon. gentleman belongs, that it is a very important question, that the deposits in the banks which form, to a great extent, the trading material, the wage fund of the people employing labor, have been seriously depleted by the high rate paid by Government largely in excess of the current value of money. On two occasions the hon. gentleman promised to announce what the Government were going to do in that respect.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not sure that I said I would be able to announce what we were going to do, but I said it was under the consideration of the Government. There seemed to be perhaps well-founded complaints that the savings banks were being used by some parties, in the Lower Provinces more particularly, for the purposes of banking transactions. The amount is now limited to $1,000 to be received from any one person. When these banks were instituted in 1871, depositors were allowed to deposit any amount, up to 1877. They were then limited by Order in Council to $10,000. This continued up to the 25th November, 1880, when another Order in Council was passed limiting the amount to $3,000. The large amounts which have been received and are held from individuals, in the Lower Provinces more particularly, of $10,000, $ 2,000 and $15,000, were received as to the largest amounts previous to the first Order in Council, passed in 1877, restricting it to $10,000. Up to 1880, various sums had been deposited up to $10,000. Since 25th November of that year, they have been restricted to $3,000. The question is under the consideration of the Government whether we shall further restrict them and place them on the same footing as the post office saving banks. What most requires attention, I think, is what the banks complain of, that the savings banks in the Lower Provinces are used for the purposes of exchange, to the detriment of the banking institutions. That is a question that will receive immediate attention, and it is perhaps desirable that that practice should be first dealt with, and then comes the question whether we should put them on the same footing as the post office savings banks as to restricting the amounts to be received from one individual in one year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman knows that, in England, the amount received is small. I think the total is £60. That is not used by Government, but invested, and under such circumstances but little risk can arise. We are receiving enormous sums, and paying certainly 33, probably 50, per cent. more than would be given for money at all anywhere else. I do not object to the Government continuing an allowance, even more than the money is worth, perhaps, to that particular class of depositors who may fairly come under the head of comparatively poor depositors—call them poor men if you like—I mean workingmen. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman restricts to a moderate sum the amounts that can be received hereafter, and he will go far to ward off a considerable danger, but he will run a danger, I think, if he persists in receiving moneys at rates much in excess of those which the banks can afford to pay. Now, in the post office savings bank department, although most of these deposits were made some time ago, sums as high as $16,000 and even $19,000 have been received, largely, no doubt, from some public or private institutions. In the case of private persons we know how easy it is for a man to make a deposit in the name of some friend of a sum equal to the maximum amount that may be received. Therefore, I suggest that the hon. gentleman would do well for future deposits to affix a strict rule, and in those cases where the sums exceed the limit, not allow more than the current bank rates.

Canadian Pacific Railway—British Columbia.. $200,000 00

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. Minister of Finance promised to give us a copy of the reports of the arbitrators with reference to this rolling stock.

Mr. BLAKE. We want a copy of that document concerning the rolling stock which was in use.

Mr. POPE. I have a copy of the rolling stock as it was appraised by Messrs. Heney, Reed & Clark, all of them mechanical engineers. The amount was $199,535.

Mr. MULOCK. When was that matter referred to the arbitrators?

Mr. POPE. They appraised this when the work was completed, on the 1st July last. They went to British Columbia and inspected the stock. I cannot state exactly when the award was sent in.

Mr. MULOCK. The award values the property at about three times its value.

Mr. POPE. No, not as high as that, but I think they did put it pretty high. My impression is that it is more than we can get for it, but still, you must remember that it cost a great deal to get that stock into that country.

Mr. BLAKE. As well as I can judge from the enquiries I have made since this paper was laid upon the Table, and from what little knowledge I obtained before, I should say that this was a high valuation for these articles when they were new, and it is worth somewhere about three times their present value. I would like to know when these three gentlemen went to that country, and when they made this award.

Mr. POPE. It was during last season that they went to that country, in the autumn, if I remember rightly.

Mr. BLAKE. Was it this year that the award was made?

Mr. POPE. Yes, during the present year.

Mr. BLAKE. Did any Order in Council for payment of the award pass?

Mr. POPE. The amount has not been paid.

Mr. McLELAN.

Mr. BLAKE. Did any Order in Council pass for the payment?

Mr. POPE. I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. About what time?

Mr. POPE. I could not say.

Mr. BLAKE. Were there any negotiations with Mr. Onderdonk for the purpose of arriving at an amicable settlement without obtaining an award?

Mr. POPE. I had some talk with Mr. Onderdonk, and I found he thought the rolling stock so much more valuable than I did that I considered we could not go any further.

Mr. BLAKE. Surely Mr. Onderdonk presented a claim of what he thought the rolling stock worth before you went on to appraise the value.

Mr. POPE. I do not think he presented any figures.

Mr. BLAKE. But you thought from his conversation that his figures were too high. Were they much more than this sum?

Mr. POPE. A good deal more.

Mr. BLAKE. Probably a quarter of a million.

Mr. POPE. About $300,000.

Mr. BLAKE. And the Minister thought that he would do well in getting off for $200,000?

Mr. POPE. I think the figure is a high one; but the matter was left to those gentlemen who made the award, and I had no alternative in the matter.

Mr. MULOCK. Did they distinguish the value of the rolling stock and the cost of placing it where it then was?

Mr. POPE. They gave the award.

Payment to Father Lacombe $1,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman place the documents on the Table of the House?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This payment is for the special services which Father Lacombe rendered with the Blackfeet and Piegan Indians. He has great influence with those Indians, and he was specially asked by the Government to devote himself to this service, a service then of considerable danger even to himself. We were only too glad to obtain his services. His services were very valuable, as will be understood from the orderly character of those warlike tribes during the rebellion.

Railways and Canals $31,850 49

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With reference to this refund to Mr. John Heney of canal tolls and wharfage, I understand that this was a rebate for goods which were delivered under contract which he obtained by tender.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that it is indefensible, after a number of parties tender for a contract on which they all suppose that the tolls and wharfage would have to be paid, for one man to get a sum of nearly $4,000 after a considerable lapse of time. On what ground was it paid?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The ground upon which this claim was preferred against the present as well as the late Government was, that in 1873 an Order in Council was passed to refund the amounts paid in tolls or wharfage. Some $8,000 or $9,000 was paid under that Order in Council.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What date?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was in 1873, but I could not say what month.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could you say whether it was in October?

Mr. COSTIGAN. My impression is that it was after the change of Government. The objections which may be raised against Mr. Heney in this, on the ground of his being a tenderer for the work, applies just as well in the former cases dealt with under the Order in Council. Parties tendered for these works on the canal when their materials and vessels were chargeable for certain amounts. It was held that inasmuch as the work was being done for the Government, they should not be called on to pay these tolls, and in every case from 1873 to this time they were repaid. Mr. Heney in transporting his barges had to pay tolls, but when transporting material he had not to do so at all. His contract called for a certain quantity of wood for the Parliament buildings. The officer in charge compelled Mr. Heney, for convenience sake, I presume, so as not to crowd up the ground, to land the wood on the wharves, so that he might draw it here as it should be required. Therefore, it seems pretty hard to charge him wharfage on wood which really belonged to the Government.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McLELAN moved:

1. Resolved That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1886, the sum of $3,501,921.23 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1887, the sum of $21,562,021,41 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Committee rose and reported resolutions, which were read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) for granting to Her Majesty certain moneys required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1886, and the 30th June, 1887, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the first, the second, and the third times, and passed.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a letter from the Secretary of His Excellency the Governor, as follows:—

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY,
OTTAWA, 31st May, 1886.

SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor-General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament on Wednesday, the 2nd June, at 8.15 o'clock p.m.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

HENRY STRATFIELD, Captain,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honorable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is just possible that we may not all have an opportunity of returning to this House next year, if an election takes place; and I want to say that if that event does take place, I hope that men will come here, not with the party chains tied around their legs, but that, whether Liberals or Conservatives, they will come with freedom of conscience and independence of judgment, prepared to decide questions of public policy on their merits. I do not know what course the gentlemen leading the two great political parties may adopt, but many of the members of this House sympathise with me in the views I express, although they vote the other way. I may say that a large majority of the gentlemen on this side of the House express the views I express; but they are like a gentleman whom I have in my eye, who says in his own eloquent way, while my opinions are mine, and they are in sympathy with yours, my votes are my party's. On the other side of the House, there are men who come here pledged to support the leader of the Opposition; they vote with him, although they often feel that the views I express are right; but they cannot afford to depart from party lines. When I have stated on one or two occasions that this House has ceased to be a deliberative body——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I am out of order, I apologise, but these are my opinions at all events; and I hope when we have a general election—I do not hope for much until we do—that gentlemen, when they go on the hustings, will go there, whether Liberals or Conservatives, I do not care which—I am neither—I am an independent man—will go there prepared, if elected to this House, to come here, free and unfettered, ready to vote, not as the party dictates, but as their conscience tells them is right and in the interest of the country. These sentiments I feel it my duty to take this opportunity to express at the close of this Legislature. If I have said anything to any hon. members during this Parliament that might be thought offensive or out of place, I hope they will forgive me. I have adopted the course I have pursued in this House from an intense conviction that if we a want to elevate this country, we have to break away from those absolute party ties which control men on both sides of this House, and assume a more independent attitude prepared to exercise the right of private judgment, and vote as our consciences and hearts direct us.

Mr. TASSÉ. I do not rise to discuss the merits of the greater party, which is so well and ably represented by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, but I am sure that all the Conservative members of this House will be only too glad to accept the apology which has been made to us by that hon. gentleman. My intention in rising is to draw the attention of the Government and the House to a great event which is about to take place; I refer to the completion and inauguration of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That work is assuredly one of the great works of this century, a greater work than the Suez Canal, a greater work than the Union and Central Pacific Railway, and a greater work than the Northern Pacific Railway, and I think that such an event in Canadian history should not pass unnoticed. As all the supplies are voted, I do not rise with the object of asking the Government to propose to vote any money for the proper celebration of that great event, but it seems to me that the Government should call the people of this country to celebrate that event in a proper and dignified manner. I think the inauguration of that railway should be the occasion of a general holiday for the people of Canada, for that great work is certainly the work of the people of Canada, directed as they have been so well by the Government which has so ably conducted the destinies of this country for so many years. I have noticed with pleasure that the great city of Montreal has already taken steps to celebrate the departure of the first train which will leave Montreal for the Pacific coast, and I think the whole people should be called upon to follow the example of the commercial metropolis of Canada and celebrate that in a proper manner. I was informed from good sources that the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway were disposed to offer to members of Parliament a grand excursion over the road on that occasion and to invite all the members, even those who have voted against the Pacific Railway, and I believe the greater party, which is so well represented by the hon. gentleman who spoke before me, and I may say that those who cannot take part in that grand excursion will be afforded an opportunity to visit the Pacific coast during the year at no cost to themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL. I forgot to thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I do so now, for the amount of forbearance you have always shown me, and the manner in which you have presided over the deliberations of this House.

Mr. TROW. I rise with considerable diffidence to say a few words. I had no intention of doing so, because I thought my respected leader would close this sitting. I presume he is busy, so it devolves upon some one to say a few words, of mutual congratulation I suppose, as is usual on these occasions. I congratulate the Government, as did the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé), as to the great success of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have travelled along that line, and, having been a close observer of things by the way, I was highly delighted with my trip. It is almost a world wonder, the magnitude of that work, the difficulties they had to encounter, and the rapid progress they have made. We have had rather an interesting Session, rather unusually so. The debates have been exceedingly lively, and unusual subjects have been undertaken by members of the House. For instance, at the outset we undertook the Riel discussion. That was certainly a real discussion. There was nothing assumed about that. I had intended on one occasion to say a few words myself, but my extreme modesty prevented me. My reason for intending to do so was that I knew something about the circumstances of the case, I was well acquainted with the principal parties who took an interest in that war, I was acquainted with Gabriel Dumont, and I must say that I presume I am the only gentleman in this House who had a private interview with Mr. Riel, four days before his execution. I had the honor, through Colonel Richardson and the Lieutenant Governor, of having an interview of over half an hour or three quarters of an hour with Riel, four days before his execution, and therefore I felt an interest in explaining my views in that discussion. Other lively discussions have taken place. We have had Home Rule, and we have had also a few scandals. I am sorry sometimes that we have to listen to old exploded notions, that should be exploded at all events and buried in oblivion. I wish that hon. members were confined to a certain political portion of our history, and only referred back to subjects for a few years. We are in the habit of going back too far, even prior to Confederation. I think there is ample for discussion and intelligible debate that has taken place in the country politically during the last few years, and I think it would be advisable that our members on both sides of the House would curtail their speeches and make them not only more brief but more to the point. However, I presume that any deliberative body sometimes exaggerates and gets a little astray on both sides. I regret very much the illness of the Premier, that he was confined to his house for so long a time and was unable to take part in the discussions of this House. We found the loss of his presence for various reasons. One was that he seems to have the command and control of men probably better than any other individual in the Dominion. I noticed one evening here that the majority was reduced to about twenty, and I was very much elated, but the next morning the Premier made his appearance quite early. If we had brought it down to ten, probably he would have been here before breakfast. Other members of the Cabinet have been afflicted. It is something remarkable, whether it is the onerous duties these gentlemen have to perform or the great responsibilities they have to undertake, or the confinement, or the excessive labor, at all events some unaccountable thing seems to injure their health. My advice to these gentlemen, in the event of a general election or otherwise, would be to take their positions over here. As a rule we are all healthy.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And hungry.

Mr. TROW. We are not by any means fond of opposition, and I believe it would be a relief to hon. gentlemen, judging from their state of health, that it would be better for them, better for the country and for all around if we changed positions, and I have no doubt, if a general election takes place, that will be the result. There seems to be a rumor afloat that an election will take place. I have a little inclination to go to the old country, and I hope it will take place before I start. My hope is that the members of the Executive may improve in health. We would like to see them here again, but on this side of the House. Before I take my seat I wish to give credit to the hon. Minister of Public Works, who is the most indefatigable worker I know of, and who both day and night has shown a wonderful amount of vitality, push, pluck and determination. In fact, we have all done our duty. No man has worked harder than the leader of the Opposition, and no man in this Dominion is better prepared to analyse and perfect the measures of the Government. The country is under a deep debt of gratitude to the Hon. Edward Blake for his determination to see that everything is done in a proper and legitimate manner.

Then the Honorable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1886, and the 30th June, 1887, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Fourth Session of the Fifth Parliament of the Dominion with the following Speech:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the earnestness and assiduity with which you have performed your important duties.

The legislation of the Session has been of an eminently practical character, and cannot fail to aid in the promotion of the material progress of the country.

The grant of representation in the House of Commons to the North-West Territories will, if sanctioned by the Imperial Parliament (of which there is no reason to doubt), give the people of that vast region an interest and voice in the affairs of the Dominion, and enable them to lay the wants and requirements of their young country, with authority, before the great council of the nation.

You have at the same time conferred upon them the boons of an efficient judicial system and a speedy and inexpensive mode for the transfer of property in land.

The measure for the establishment of a central experimental farm, with auxiliary stations for the Provinces, will be greatly appreciated by our agricultural population.

I congratulate you heartily on the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway and on the repayment in money and land of the advances made in its aid from the public Treasury.

The future prosperity of this great enterprise and the consequent advantage to the best interests of the Dominion I now consider as fully assured.

The appropriations in aid of various railways will tend largely to increase the trade and develop the resources of the districts traversed by them, and I am especially pleased to know that by the provision made for the construction of a railway through Cape Breton, that historical Island will at last be brought into connection with the railway system of Canada.

Among the many useful measures you have passed may especially be noticed the amendments of the Franchise Act, rendering its working more simple and less expensive; the consolidation of the Statutes; the arrangement for the organisation of a better and more economical system of parliamentary and departmental printing; and the amendment of the Dominion Lands Act.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you in Her Majesty's name for the supplies you have granted for the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen:

In bidding you farewell until next year, I rejoice to be able to congratulate you on the general prosperity of the country and the good promise of a plentiful harvest.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued until Monday, the twelfth day of July next.
