Brutal Murder At Goderich.

Goderich, Sept. 25.—(Special.)—On Tuesday last, Elizabeth Anderson, a 16 year old girl, disappeared from her home. This afternoon her mutilated body was found in the cellar of a deserted house on the outskirts of the town. Wesley Anderson, her father, was one of a party who discovered the body. They have been searching for her continuously since her disappearance. Just who is the perpetrator of the grisly deed is a mystery, the only clue being that it is remembered that on the day of her disappearance, she was seen in conversation with a strange man. It was a gruesome sight which greeted the party of searchers, when they entered the open door of the cellar of the deserted house. In one corner lay the nude body of the girl, with the exception of shoes and stockings and one glove. Hat and clothing were scattered about the floor. The body was a terrible sight to look at. The throat was cut from ear to ear. The wound having the appearance of being done with an ax or similar instrument.

The provincial police have been notified and will help the local police in an effort to locate the murderer. They consider the chances of bringing the guilty person to justice very slim.

A C. P. R. despatch states that she was last seen at the exhibition in company with an Italian that works on the Ontario West Shore Railway. Her father lives in the old Lasham Hotel at Salford, and a number of Italians occupy part of the hotel as a boarding house.

Items of Interest.

The abolition of county model schools has resulted in such a scarcity of teachers in rural sections that there are now nearly as many teachers without any professional certificate as formerly held third class certificates. The abolition of the county model schools brought about a condition that is a great injustice to rural sections. The Toronto News claims that the lure of the West is the cause of the scarcity of teachers and not the abolition of model schools. Perhaps the News is right but one thing is certain that the scarcity did not exist when model schools and three Normal Schools were doing the work that 7 Normals are now trying to accomplish.

Jack McConnell, a former Walkerton boy, who writes the clever articles that appear each week over the signature of "Bruce" in the Vancouver Sunset, sagely remarks: "When I hear a man say that if he had stayed in the old town he would never have amounted to anything I think he pays himself a poor compliment. It means that circumstances and conditions have done for him the things he could not have done for himself."

Temperance In Manitoba.

A Winnipeg despatch says: The temperance forces of Manitoba are planning for a vigorous local option campaign, and it would not be a surprise if there were a vote this fall in every rural town in the Province. The plan of the temperance leaders is to bring all of rural Manitoba under local option and then March on the three smaller cities of Brandon, Portage and St. Boniface, winding up with an attack on Winnipeg. An automobile trip of the Province by a band of temperance speakers and singers, led by W. W. Buchanan, attended two hundred and ten of the meetings and delivered that number of addresses in 65 days.

Eedy—Hillhouse.

A very pretty September wedding took place at 1.20 o'clock on Wednesday the 14th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Hillhouse, Clifford, Ont., when their daughter, Miss Lola, was united in marriage to Mr. Chester L. Eedy, of Harriston. The ceremony was performed by the groom's brother-in-law, and Rev. Young, of Clifford. After their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Eedy will take up residence in Harriston.

of his foot caught in his engine while on a very badly twisted ankle, though he might have lost the leg. Dr. Foster attended to the injured member and he is progressing favorably. Young fellows want to get away with a machine. We cannot see what fun there can be in swallowing dirt six days of the week. Yet some will leave a clean job and run after the other. One of the largest if not the largest funerals ever seen at Lakelet was that of Mrs. Wm. Hubbard on Sunday afternoon last. Mrs. Hubbard has been poorly with an affection of the heart since last spring. Her life at many times then was despaired of, but she rallied and at times through the summer she was feeling pretty well and able to go out among her family. However, she took bad recently and neither physicians nor the loving ministrations of her family could stay the inevitable. Mrs. Hubbard with her husband braved the privations and inconveniences incident to pioneer settlement and thro' it all were happy. No woman in this community had endeared herself, not only to her own family, but to others who needed sympathy and assistance in times of illness than the deceased. Her memory will be cherished in loving remembrance by many here who benefited by her self sacrifice. How devoted she was to her family and their children only they can tell. Their welfare always pleased her and their cares distressed her. When anything was wrong with any of them or theirs, mother was always on hand to care for them and nurse them back to convalescence. How prominent such a life stands out when compared with sordid selfish life whose chief aim is to grasp and hoard the vain and passing things of this world. The warm feeling there was in the community for her was manifested in no uncertain way yesterday, when the people came from every corner of the Tp. to pay their last earthly tribute to the memory of their friend and helper. In the absence of the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Fortney, the Rev. Mr. Evans officiated at the house, church and grave. The pall bearers were Messrs. Andrew Montgomery, John Dane, John Hamilton, James Bell, John Ferguson and Wm. Bushfield. A son, Richard, pre-deceased her some eighteen years ago. A husband bereft of his best earthly friend, 5 sons, Chas., Jos. W., Geo., Thos., and Robt., and 4 daughters, Mrs. C. Horton, Mrs. H. Miers, Mrs. W. J. Jacques and Mary at home, are left to mourn the loss of a devoted wife and mother. Unstinted sympathy is extended them by the whole community.

Repays In Five Years.

The sum of one halfpenny has just been repaid to the Hull Corporation under curious circumstances. Five years ago an old lady from an out-of-the-way part of Yorkshire went to Hull and tendered two halfpennies for fare on a tram car. One of the coins fell and the conductor refused to take another saying he would find the one on the floor. When the old lady returned to her country home the missing halfpenny fell out of her umbrella, and though it was five years before she again visited Hull, her first care was to call and repay the corporation.

In the Boneyard.

Some blamed good fellows lie asleep down yonder where the tall grass waves, but no one ever comes to weep, or plant roscubushes on their graves. They calmly rest in paupers' beds, and wait the judgment, in a row, no shining tombstone o'er their heads, no requiem but the winds that blow. They were the shiftless, trifling lads, upon a weary world turned loose; they never learned to nail the scads, and salt them down for winter use. It's pretty tough that some must sleep in unmarked, bargain counter graves, because their plunks they cannot keep; the honor's for the man who saves. A man whose eyes are wide apart, whose hands are reaching in his jeans, who listens rather to his heart, than to the teachings of his brains, is apt to join the pauper crowd and perish after many knocks, and wear a cheap, old-fashioned shroud, and slumber in a misfit box. Whereas, if he is shrewd and wise, with lips that close up like a hasp, and little space between the eyes, and hands that hang to what they grasp, his death will fill the town with gloom, and mourners will bewail the day, and he will have a corking tomb in which to loaf the years away.—Walt Mason.

"Yes," said Miss Passay, "I found a very nice boarding-house to-day, but the only room they had to offer me had a folding bed in it, and I detest those things."

"Of course," remarked Miss Pert "one can never hope to find a man under a foldinc bed."

Clifford Mills HAZLEWOOD BROS. CLIFFORD.

Harry Hauck, and five-year-old son of Mrs. Harry Hauck here, had his foot trapped on by a horse in the Walker House barn on Monday. The injured lad was conveyed to his home in Ernest's milk wagon.

Mrs. Patrick Quirk of the 6th concession Brant had her head split open on Friday afternoon last while driving to the Walkerton fair with her son William. The horse, it seems, in some manner became frightened and in the runaway which followed Mrs. Quirk was thrown to the road, alighting on her head and splitting open a portion of her skull. A physician, who was hastily summoned, dressed her injuries, and we understand good hopes are entertained for her recovery.

Miss Ida Beechie, who has been keeping house for Joe Sutter in the West Ward, is alleged to have thrown some flowers of speech over the fence at her neighbor, Mary Ernewein, that were anything but complimentary. Chief Ferguson was notified of the affair and on Friday last, Ida was presented with a paper charging her with using grossly insulting language and requesting her to attend a sitting of justice before Magistrate Robb on Monday. The health of the accused lady however gave out and when the time of the trial stole around, she was conspicuous by her absence. An adjournment was consequently made for a week.

Chief Ferguson has appointed Geo. Fields and James Forsyth as dog-catchers in Walkerton, and hereafter any dogs found without a muzzle will be placed in the pound, where their owners may regain them by paying $2.00. The dog-catcher who makes the arrest gets $1 of this and the remaining $1.00 goes to the town. Dogs with muzzles hanging under their chins or otherwise improperly attached, will be impounded the same as unmuzzled ones. A party in Walkerton is incessantly complaining to the authorities in Toronto about the dogs here, and the department threatens to send up a dog-catcher from Toronto at the town's expense if the regulations are not properly enforced here.

Legal Question.

J. B., Hamilton.—Qu.—I hold a note given to me by a tenant farmer for farm stock, which he bought in March last. The note will not be due until November. I find that he is advertising a sale of all his farm stock and implements for October next. The sale takes place one month before my note comes due. I am also told that he intends to leave the country. Can I take any proceedings to prevent the sale of his goods?

Ans.—You should have thought of all that at the time you sold the goods. You voluntarily took his note for the amount. You could have demanded security before giving up possession of the stock and implements which he purchased. You did not do so. You must now wait until the note becomes due before you can take any proceedings. If you took proceedings against him now, his answer might be—"I am making a sale of my goods and chattels in order to pay my debts." He need not make any such answer. He need only say—"The note is not yet due, therefore the holder has no legal right to sue me for the amount. It is none of his business that I am selling my farm stock and implements. It is none of his business that I am going to leave the country. I am a free man. I have a right to leave the country if I choose to do so. When the note comes due I will pay it." On such an answer as this your suit, if you commenced one, would most certainly be dismissed, with costs against you.—Mail & Empire.

Finds Human Remains.

John Ashcroft, reeve of Albemarle, while getting out gravel for the roads the other day, discovered the skeleton of a human being lying on the bottom board of a coffin on the top of a sand-hill. The skull was in several pieces; most of the large bones remain, but many of the smaller ones of the feet and hands have disappeared. The lot is part of the old John Wilmot farm, and Reeve Ashcroft believes that the remains are those of Mr. Wilmot's son, a lad of about 17 years of age. The remains were reinterred in the nearest cemetery.

Fatal Runaway.

Wingham Sept. 23—A runaway accident occurred near here to-day, resulting in the death of Joseph Moir, ex-reeve of the Township of Culross. Moir who lived about five miles in the country, was driving into town when his horse took fright at an automobile some little distance ahead. The horse turned suddenly in the road, throwing Moir from the buggy. When picked up he was found to be in a serious condition and was removed to the hospital here, where he died shortly after. He leaves several sons and daughters.

To the Editor of Gazette—Dear Editor.—Kindly allow me a space in your worthy paper. I am a subscriber of your paper, and am very fond of reading about the interests of our former homes, but occasionally I happen to see some items which don't look good to me, such as I have seen in a column written by D. Caldwell of Petrolia which was printed in the Gazette of Sept. 1st. I wish to give a little debate regarding some statements he made about our new country here in the North West.

He either wanted to show your readers what he doesn't know anything about. It seems he was scouting the N. W. Territories, as he said if he would have seen anything he liked better than Ontario he would have stayed there. Well, perhaps he didn't. He is the doctor there. But more than this, he went on and said "Wages are not any higher in the N. West than they are in Ontario for a common laboring man."

Now I want to tell your readers right here, that they are higher out here, for I ought to know, as I have two young men hired from Ontario and pay them $42 per month and they say themselves if a man can earn $95 per month in Ontario, he is a dandy. He also said that living out here is 50% higher than in Ontario, which also is hot air, although a few things are a little higher out here than in Ont. such as booze and the like of that, which he no doubt found out, and such stuff cannot be too highly priced. He also said a young man is much better off to stay in Ontario in some large or small cities than to come out in the western country. I wonder how he makes that out, for anybody knows that a young man is far better off out here in the country, than to be in the big cities and spend more money than they can earn. And finally he had the nerve to say "that if a man is any good at all he is better in Ontario than in the West."

Now I will just reverse this and say if a man is any good at all he should come out to the West and make some use of himself, for we need the young men of Ontario to help us with our heavy crops. But if a man is anything like our Petrolia friend, he had better stay where he is instead of shooting off about this country. Of course we have had our drawbacks this year. First we had no rain, so our crops couldn't come up, then when they were up we had hail storms in some parts and that made our crops very late this year. But where are there no drawbacks? Are they in Ont.? I guess not. Thanking you for your space, I remain your old Alberta subscriber,

C. R. Liesemer, Didsbury, Alta.

Distressing Accident.

Wm. Gateman, teamster of Hanover and son-in-law of Reeve Froom of Brant is hovering between life and death as a result of an accident which occurred near Maple Hill on Thursday last. Gateman, with a number of others, was hauling clay from the clay banks at at Eberth's farm, when the banks caved in and buried him under many tons of earth. Although he was dug out as quickly as possible, he was found, when removed, to be in a very serious condition, his left leg and five ribs being broken, and other internal injuries sustained. At time of going to press he is in a critical state and small hopes are entertained for his recovery. That the mishap might have had an even sadder termination is evidenced by the fact that the whole side of the bank caved in just as the injured man had been taken out. The men, who were assisting in his rescue, had consequently a narrow escape.—Bruce Times.

High Prices.

All my tasks are so many and costly and great,
I must raise more in taxes each year, says the state.
In repairs and in taxes I spend ev'ry cent,
Says the landlord, and so I must needs raise the rent.
Higher rates and expenses, the merchant declares,
I must meet by advancing the price of my wares.
Still it costs more ev'ry month to move freight,
Says the railroad, and hence I must mark up the rate.
Just because we can't raise all they'd have us supply,
Says the farmer and planter, our prices are high.
Dearer grain, wool and cotton, the mill men assert,
Mean that more must be paid for a loaf or a shirt.
Dearer cattle, the tanner and butcher repeat,
Now compel us to charge more for shoes and for meat.
Costs it more to acquire modern training and skill,—
The professional man figures this in bill.
Says the laborer, catching the drift in the age,
Now it costs more to live, I demand higher wage,
The security holder the same tight pinch feels,—
For an increase in dividends loudly appeals.
So, as much as we can of the burden we shift,
So attempt we the price on each other to lift;
As we circle we boast of prosperity's pace,
And the de'il catch the hindmost who lags in the race!

No More Listening on Party Line Telephone.

An invention has been completed for what many people thought to be impossible, namely, an indicator to reveal the number of the phone on the line where the receiver is taken down while a conversation is taking place. Subscribers to rural phones know that on a line there are one or two people who are always interested in other people's business and frequently their presence may be known by the click of their receiver as it is taken from the holder. This invention will not only indicate when a third party comes on the line but also when they go off. The contrivance is not a complicated appliance at all but can be manufactured at a very reasonable figure and can be easily attached to any phone. The inventors of this very useful apparatus, which we believe is destined to revolutionize the rural telephone system in Canada and the United States where new lines are being built daily are Burgener Bros. of Linwood, who have applied for a patent for their invention.

Wildcats in Bruce.

There are at least two wildcats in the vicinity of Red Bay, their cries being frequently heard. On Monday night Robert Troutt's summer cottage was visited. Mrs. Troutt keeps meat and butter in a box in the rear of the cottage, and the animal's keen scent soon brought it to the spot. In the morning the box was empty. A visitor at the cottage also saw the animal on the veranda, where its eyes shown like balls of fire. The slayer of the wildcats will have the blessing of frightened women. At present the men are too busy to spend time in hunting.

Her Lover's Prowess;

Or, A Little Matrimonial Dream

"Sir Phillip has, I believe, promised to exert his influence in my behalf," he said slowly at last "and of course he has weight with all sorts of people. Men of his age always have."

"When they have made a name," retorted Maude somewhat significantly. "Don't you think, Charlie, there will be a necessity for a little exertion on your part? You're a wee bit lazy, you know."

"Not at all," replied Charlie, as he threw himself once more into an easy chair. "Most energetic fellows ever seen. I wish you'd tea, I'm awfully thirsty."

"Is anything that aggravating, it's being thrown out of town off, you mean," retorted Maude wickedly; "and might I inquire if you intend that your wife shall always ring the bell?"

"I beg your pardon," cried Charlie springing hastily from his seat. "No, of course not. I really quite forgot for the moment."

"That we had not been married ten years," cried Maude, laughing. "Thanks," she continued as he rang, "now you shall have some tea."

"You don't think I was intentional, surely?"

"No, I acquit you of that, but you're not quite so candid to us as you ought to be. Here comes the tea, and Sir Phillip with it."

As she spoke, the baronet followed the servant with the tea-service into the room. He had thrown off his hunting trunks, and was now attired in a dark double-breasted shooting-coat, dress boots, and trousers.

"Well, did you kill?" cried Charlie. "Like my luck, wasn't it? The run of the season, of course."

"Yes, so far," replied Sir Phillip, "and we killed. If you hadn't been quite so hard on old Champion, you would have been there to see, but you young ones always will ride a little jealous."

"What an insufferable old cock," muttered Charlie to himself. "You couldn't suppose, Sir Phillip," he retorted, "that I was going to be beaten by a cad like Barkby, if I could help it?"

"Well, you were. The old story, riding against another man instead of riding to hounds."

"And you saw the finish, Sir Phillip?" inquired the young lady. "Yes, I was so fortunate; there is always a certain amount of luck in being one of the select few at the end of such a run as to-day's."

"Not many fellows up at the finish, eh?" inquired Charlie. "Only two, I think, besides myself and the huntman," replied the baronet lazily. "Your bete noir, young Barkby, by the way, one of the pair. He rides well, that fellow."

"He was capitally mounted and had luck," returned Charlie sullenly. "He was just in my position a few days ago; came to grief early."

Sir Phillip, however, had evidently no inclination to prolong the discussion, for turning to Maude, he asked how she and her aunt had spent their day.

Charlie Williamson paid slight attention to their conversation; his whole thoughts were still absorbed in the grievous fact that he, who considered he had made some reputation on his first appearance with Ashby Crawler's hounds, had literally been nowhere in the first notable run of the season. He sat silently contemplating his well-splashed boots and dangling his mud-encrusted spurs on his fingers for some little time. Suddenly it flashed across him, what did Sir Phillip's change of dress mean? How, if he also had come to grief, and this discarding of his hunting-gear was simply to conceal the fact! Regarding their sporting feats men do lie consumedly, and that there are men whose deeds, over their claret, scarce correspond with those witnessed in the field, Mr. Williamson was well aware. Again he glanced at the baronet's neatly-cased extremities, and then mentally ejaculating, "The blessed old hound; I really must show him up," exclaimed, laughing—

"Ha, Sir Phillip, now I come to think of it, you've had a ducking. From the way hounds were running when I last saw them, you must have crossed Hanningley Brook. You have got rid of your hunting things with most suspicious celerity. Confess now, you got in."

"Not at all," returned the baronet dryly; then turning to Maude he added, "A little bit of the old-fashioned courtesy of my day. We had a dirty boots quite the same."

Maude, however, was not so easily satisfied. "You're a little bit of the old-fashioned courtesy of my day. We had a dirty boots quite the same."

Maude, however, was not so easily satisfied. "You're a little bit of the old-fashioned courtesy of my day. We had a dirty boots quite the same."

temples, and it was with a somewhat forced laugh he replied "Really that is carrying the thing rather far; especially too after hunting, when the ladies are all so anxious to hear what sport there has been."

"I'm sure the ladies have no cause to be anxious," chimed in Maude with a ringing silvery laugh. "If they don't hear more than enough of the day's doings before bed-time, they are singularly fortunate. The men of Sir Phillip's time, Charlie evidently understood courtesy better than you and your conferees."

"I don't know that, Maude," replied the baronet smiling; "other times, other manners. I happened to begin life before the era of slang and short pipes, that is all. Excuse me if I still adhere to the traditions of my youth."

Charlie Williamson bit his lips somewhat at this retort. His brow clouded, and Maude saw at once that the air was charged with electricity. Whatever her real feelings with regard to her cousin might be, and of those it is probable she herself at this time was hardly aware, she was much too fond of him not to tremble at the idea of a quarrel between him and her guardian.

Sir Phillip was capable of being of immense assistance to Charlie in his start in life. It would be very painful to her should those two come to bitter words. The lightning was aboard; it was imperative to save the outbreak of the storm if possible.

"Come, Charlie," she said, "it's nearly time to dress for dinner, and I want somebody to help to carry all this embroidery work upstairs for me while I take Aunt Margaret's tea to her." Her little ruse was successful, and she carried her offended cousin off in triumph; Sir Phillip subsiding into a book, as if all unconscious of the ire he had raised.

CHAPTER V.

The more Sir Phillip saw of Charlie Williamson, the more he was confirmed in his belief in the instability of his character. Though rather conceited and selfish, the baronet thought him a nice gentleman-like young fellow. The first of these failings he looked upon when Charlie had some slight experience of the world, would be quickly knocked out of him, the latter was a more serious fault. It might be that if he really loved his cousin, such love would purify this earthliness in his disposition, but still Sir Phillip mused somewhat moodily over this point.

In his wholesome sound love did much to cure a man of this vice, yet it was sadly apt to crop out again after a little and cling to him through all his time. He had seen too many instances of wives whose course had been one of bitter sacrifice to their husband's sin in this respect; he had known men whose career had been quietly ruined by women of similar stamp. He shrank from the thought that his bonnie Maude should make such a fate for herself. Did she love her cousin? It was difficult to solve that problem.

He cross-examined Mrs. Rainham insistently and assiduously, and she good lady, was openness itself as far as her lights went. She could not say. Sometimes she thought there was an understanding between the cousins, sometimes she thought there was a positive engagement, and sometimes she came to the conclusion that there was nothing but pure brotherly and sisterly feeling between them. She had questioned them both, but admitted she could make nothing of it. A more transparent cross-examiner it was scarce possible to conceive. A mere child could have seen the drift of guileless Aunt Margaret when she commenced her questioning and the cousins had agreed that she was not to be at present in their confidence.

It was Maude, I think, who had made this stipulation. She knew that Aunt Margaret never had kept anything to herself, and it was scarce likely she would be found more reticent on this point than any other. As for Charlie, he from sheer mischievousness had bewildered Mrs. Rainham exceedingly. He delighted when Maude was not present to talk to his aunt as if that engagement was quite an advertised affair; and when Mrs. Rainham settled down to a thoroughly womanly gossip concerning their future, to affect the most extreme astonishment, winding up by leaving her in that "it may be and it may not be" state from which the dear lady had just conceived she had at last emerged.

Careless, pleasure-seeking Charlie Williamson little dreamed how keenly he was being studied; that eyes, accustomed for years to read men, were looking through him and reading him as if he were a printed book.

"I'm quite ready to help him," mused Sir Phillip, "but he displays a most marvellous indifference towards helping himself. The more I talk to him, the more undecided he appears to be as to what line of life he would like to adopt. He's just the boy will be utterly lost without he has something to do. Let him and Maude marry without that, and though they would make up a moderate income, two-thirds of which, by the way, would be contributed by her, they will be an unhappy couple. I can't have that; I must see my trust fairly out, and my bright-eyed Maude happily married, before I go to 'soldier it out,' as they say. With luck I ought to get something at home. I have interest and claims, but it is the old parable, 'Wondrous many are the mouths, and few are the loaves and fishes.'"

As for Charlie, he concerned himself little regarding the future. Was he not getting, thanks to Sir Phillip's liberality with his horses, a good three days a week to hounds? Of course he meant to do something some day, but it would be quite time enough to talk over that at the end of the hunting season. What a bore the baronet was, always harping on that one string, "What did he think of doing, and when did he think of beginning to do it?" "Such nonsense, Maude, you know, as if a fellow could do half-a-dozen things at a time or was in business. Of course now I'm hunting like all other fellows; when that's over I shall make up my mind."

Maude laughed and shook her head; she began to think that unless she chose a profession for Charlie it would remain unchosen. He was so terribly facile; army, bar, navy! Yes, they would all do as long as it wasn't business; that he considered low, though no man alive could have had less conception of what that most indefinite term might mean.

Sir Phillip, alive quite to the spirit of the age, thought that if Charlie showed no particular desire to enter the army, it might be better for him to devote himself to business of some description. The baronet's interest lay in these two directions. They might listen to him at the Horse Guards. He had also several old friends who had devoted themselves to the turmoil and vicissitudes of a city career. In either direction he was prepared to do his best for young Williamson, but there was no getting Charlie to make an election. He pleaded for more time to make up his mind, and at twenty-two this did not seem altogether unreasonable, that is, as far as a few months went, though if he were engaged to, and anxious to marry, his cousin, one would suppose the paramount object of his life would be to obtain a start of some sort as speedily as possible. Whether this were the case, and whether Maude were seriously interested in that engagement, was the problem Sir Phillip set himself to solve.

As the baronet paced the garden smoking a number one Manilla and meditating gravely over this point, there was a conversation going on in the drawing-room that would have enlightened him considerably could he but have heard it.

THREE GREAT MYSTERIES

GREAT CASES COME AGAIN BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

Tichborne Case Revived—Death of Archduke Johann—Dauphin of France.

Three cases of mystery, the accepted solutions of which never satisfied many persons, have been oddly revived at the same time. The famous Tichborne case, which occupied the public mind to an extraordinary degree in the early '70s, has just been recalled by the death of Sir Henry Tichborne; the disappearance of the Austrian Archduke Johann Salvator, otherwise known as "Johann Orth," has received a fresh interest from the application of his nephew, Archduke Joseph Ferdinand, for a confirmation of the death and permission to deal with the estate of his uncle, and the question of the lost Dauphin of France has been revived by the case of the brothers Naundorff or De Bourbon being brought before a commission of the French Senate.

It is a question if the present interest in these cases will lead to the production of any substantial proofs. It is believed that Emperor Francis Joseph has positive proofs of the fate of Archduke Johann Salvator, and it is said that in the archives of the Russian and German courts are all the records relating to the supposed death of the Dauphin.

One of the curious things about the Tichborne case, it has been said, was the readiness with which people who might have been expected to know better supported the claim of Arthur Orton, the impostor. He found believers of his story in some brother officers of Roger Tichborne in Guilford Onslow, who gave the claimant about $75,000 to "fight for his rights," and above all in the Dowager Lady Tichborne, who accepted him as a son.

There are two schemes as a memorial in Scotland to King Edward, the improvement of Holyrood Palace and the restoration of Linlithgow Palace. The former seems to find most favor, possibly because of the idea that with Holyrood thoroughly habitable the King and Queen might use the ancient palace for a brief period each year says the Court Journal.

Holyrood is in a fair state of preservation, whereas Linlithgow Palace, on the shore of the beautiful sheet of water of that name, is in ruins, and this being the case perhaps the better plan would be the restoration of Linlithgow. The palace, which is somewhat square and heavy looking, was the birthplace of Mary Queen of Scots; in Linlithgow Church James IV. of Scotland was forewarned by an apparition of the coming disaster at Flodden Field; in its streets the Regent Murray was shot; close by the town Edward I. had two ribs broken by his horse the night before Falkirk, and on its loch a Chancellor of the Exchequer, bent on economy, issued instructions that the royal swans should be kept down to a dozen.

Though a building with little to attract the eye, Linlithgow Palace is a most interesting place and many people would like to see it carefully and judiciously restored. The oldest parts, the east and west sides, were built in the fifteenth century; the newest, the north side, in 1620. The original entrance was by a drawbridge on the east, where is an archway surmounted by the royal arms and three towers, remains of an older building.

On entering by the present doorway on the south side the guard room is on the right, where the Regent Murray died; in the centre of the quadrangle is a fountain erected by James V., of which that in front of Holyrood is a copy. The kitchens have a fireplace as big as a railway arch and the parliament hall is 100 feet long, with a noteworthy chimneypiece restored. It had a minstrel's gallery, and a long passage from it leads to the chapel. The room in which Queen Mary was born is a great contrast in point of size to that which witnessed her son's birth in Edinburgh Castle. At the northwest corner a spiral staircase leads up to Queen Margaret's bower, the most perfect little room in the palace, square within, hexagonal without. There is a fine lookout, and here the Queen is said to have watched for the return of her husband, James IV., from Flodden. There are also those adjuncts of the mediaeval fortress, dungeons and a torture chamber.

Why should sober minded citizens who are in their homes and safe in bed by 10 o'clock at night pay lighting taxes for others who, being of a jovial turn of mind, prefer to stay in cafes, clubs or bars until midnight and do not return home until the early hours of the morning? Manifestly it is unfair, but in Germany this question has now been answered in a way which will please the earnest taxpayers, and probably prove a terror to the late night birds, writes a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette. To the village of Zarkau, near Glogau, in Silesia, must be given the honor of installing a system of automatic electric lighting for the streets. The electric lights burn every night through the village of Zarkau, a distance of about a kilometer, until 10 o'clock at a mutual cost to the community in general. Then they are switched out.

At each end of this kilometer stretch, on an iron pillar, stands a small iron cupboard lighted by a tiny electric light. Those persons who are out after 10 o'clock wishing to have their way lighted must insert a ten pennig piece into a slot in the side of the iron cupboard. Then the nine lamps placed along this stretch burst forth into a twelve minute life, thus enabling the passenger to find his way in lightness to his or her house.

The scheme is working in a satisfactory way, and it seems quite probable that other German villages and towns will follow the example of Zarkau and install the automatic lighting system to be put into operation after 10 o'clock.

STRANGE PEOPLE OF JAPAN.
Aboriginal Ainu One of Strange Sights at Anglo-Jap Fair.

At the Anglo-Japanese Exposition at London Japanese landscape gardeners have turned large tracts into flower gardens dotted with quaint Japanese houses, and there is a magnificent exhibit of the arts, crafts and industries of Japan.

A party of Ainu, the people often called the oldest race in the world, who live in the northern part of Japan, are also attracting much attention. There are but few of them left, though at one time they doubtless held a great part of Japan. Their faces bear but little resemblance to those of the Japanese and it is thought that their race will soon be extinct.

several languages with a German or Austrian accent and bore a striking resemblance to the pictures of the missing Archduke. When shown the recently published portraits of Johann Orth he pronounced them "incontestably those of the man with whom I spent several days in the winter of 1899." That would be nine years after the Santa Margherita was lost at sea.

Other persons living in South America claim also to have seen him and a French writer asserts that he spent several days as his guest on an Argentina farm. It is said that the late Dr. Helfert, the Austrian historian, was in communication with the missing man and the papers that he left will be carefully examined. Others who, it is said, heard from him regularly were Dr. von Harbeler, his attorney, and Baron von Abaco, who retired some years ago to German New Guinea.

These stories and many others of a similar nature will be brought before the Austrian court, but it seems quite safe to say that whatever may be the decision there will always be a large number of persons who will insist that Johann Orth was not wrecked off the South American coast and that he lived for many years after the time of the reported sinking of the Santa Margherita. In cases of death under unusual circumstances there are invariably some people who are willing to believe stories of possible even if improbable escapes.

LINLITHGOW CASTLE.
May be Restored as Scotch Memorial to King Edward.

There are two schemes as a memorial in Scotland to King Edward, the improvement of Holyrood Palace and the restoration of Linlithgow Palace. The former seems to find most favor, possibly because of the idea that with Holyrood thoroughly habitable the King and Queen might use the ancient palace for a brief period each year says the Court Journal.

Holyrood is in a fair state of preservation, whereas Linlithgow Palace, on the shore of the beautiful sheet of water of that name, is in ruins, and this being the case perhaps the better plan would be the restoration of Linlithgow. The palace, which is somewhat square and heavy looking, was the birthplace of Mary Queen of Scots; in Linlithgow Church James IV. of Scotland was forewarned by an apparition of the coming disaster at Flodden Field; in its streets the Regent Murray was shot; close by the town Edward I. had two ribs broken by his horse the night before Falkirk, and on its loch a Chancellor of the Exchequer, bent on economy, issued instructions that the royal swans should be kept down to a dozen.

Though a building with little to attract the eye, Linlithgow Palace is a most interesting place and many people would like to see it carefully and judiciously restored. The oldest parts, the east and west sides, were built in the fifteenth century; the newest, the north side, in 1620. The original entrance was by a drawbridge on the east, where is an archway surmounted by the royal arms and three towers, remains of an older building.

On entering by the present doorway on the south side the guard room is on the right, where the Regent Murray died; in the centre of the quadrangle is a fountain erected by James V., of which that in front of Holyrood is a copy. The kitchens have a fireplace as big as a railway arch and the parliament hall is 100 feet long, with a noteworthy chimneypiece restored. It had a minstrel's gallery, and a long passage from it leads to the chapel. The room in which Queen Mary was born is a great contrast in point of size to that which witnessed her son's birth in Edinburgh Castle. At the northwest corner a spiral staircase leads up to Queen Margaret's bower, the most perfect little room in the palace, square within, hexagonal without. There is a fine lookout, and here the Queen is said to have watched for the return of her husband, James IV., from Flodden. There are also those adjuncts of the mediaeval fortress, dungeons and a torture chamber.

Why should sober minded citizens who are in their homes and safe in bed by 10 o'clock at night pay lighting taxes for others who, being of a jovial turn of mind, prefer to stay in cafes, clubs or bars until midnight and do not return home until the early hours of the morning? Manifestly it is unfair, but in Germany this question has now been answered in a way which will please the earnest taxpayers, and probably prove a terror to the late night birds, writes a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette. The price of potatoes was abnormally low last year. This was due to the unusually large crop in the United States. It does not look as if prices will be as low this year. For one thing the American potato crop is somewhat less in area than it was in 1909 and the condition shows a still greater reduction, the condition of the crop on September 1st being placed by the American Agriculturist as less than 72 as against a shade over 79 on Sept. 1st of last year.

live stock at the City Yards, consisting of 1474 cattle, 901 hogs, 1418 sheep and lambs, 103 calves and 1 horse.

The quality of fat cattle on sale was better than usual at this market; that is, there were several loads of fairly good steers and heifers that brought good prices. The bulk, however, was of the common and medium classes.

Trade was slow, but nearly all the offerings were cleaned up at about steady prices, excepting the eastern mongrels which were hard to cash at still lower quotations.

Butchers—Best loads of butchers sold at $5.50 to $5.75; medium, $5.25 to $5.50; common to medium cattle, $4.75 to $5.15, inferior eastern, $3.25 to $4.25; cows, $3 to $4.75; canners, $1.50 to $2.75.

Feeders & Stockers—Common, rough light steers were 15c to 20c per cwt. easier, the demand being for the better classes. Steers, 900 to 1050 lbs. each, sold at from $5.25 to $5.60; steers, 800 to 900 lbs. each, $4.75 to $5.25; stockers ranged at from $4 to $4.75.

Milkers and Springers—Not many on sale, with prices unchanged, at $40 to $75 each.

Veal Calves—Over 100 veal calves were on the market and sold readily at $3.50 to $7.50 for the bulk; and $8 to $8.50, and even $9 per cwt. was reported for two or three extra quality.

Sheep and Lambs—Sheep, ewes, sold at $4.50 to $4.85; rams, $3 to $3.50; lambs, $5.85 to $6.20 per cwt.

Hogs—Selects, fed and watered at the market, sold at $9 to $9.10, and $9.75 to drovers, for hogs, f.o.b. cars at country points.

A National Newspaper.

The Globe has tried during all its history not to lose sight of the fact that a newspaper can play an important part in nation and empire building. One way in which this has been effectively practised is by keeping trained members of its staff constantly "on the wing" in search of useful and interesting information. Wherever important national work or world events in which Canadians were concerned were taking place, or where pioneer development was in progress, there The Globe's commissioners have been reporting with intelligent discernment for the benefit of this country.

This policy has rarely, if ever, been more generally practised than at present. To-day the Managing Editor of The Globe, Dr. J. A. Macdonald, is in Mexico, where a three weeks' celebration of the centenary of republican government is being held, and upon his return he will contribute a series of sketches on that interesting country—a country whose relations to Canada are becoming very close.

The Globe is trying to live up to its record in the matter of keeping its readers posted, aside altogether from the ordinary sources of local and telegraphic news.

in the store here at the bottom of the Editor we asked of Tom... "Yes that... "A fine fellow... he has been trying to get a sale for six months and managed at last."

You struck it not so bad for weather for your show on Tuesday afternoon, though the forenoon was anything but promising. There were many went from here. We hear Joe Wood got the red ticket with his two year old filly. She is fine one.

Two of the old pioneers passed to their reward since we last wrote. Mrs. Wm. Hubbard died a week ago Friday and was buried here on Sunday. On the following Monday about noon Mr. Robert McConnell a resident of the burg for many years, passed away after a lingering illness at the age of 80 years. He was at one time a soldier in the British army, having taken an active part in the Crimean war. The remains were interred in the Harriston cemetery on Wednesday.

Some of the parties to the south, are taking action against the proprietor of the chopping mill, Fred Gadke and a number of farmers who are interested in award drains emptying into the outlet from the lake. C. B. Ruttan, Geo. Burnett, Joe Wood, Wm. Finley, W. Pomeroy, J. Underwood, Geo. Hubbard C. Binkley, R. G. Nay, Jos. Wright and Chris. Gadke are among the defendants as well as the township council. The contention by the plaintiffs is that the water of the outlet from the lake does not get away when it gets to their property, and are seeking redress. A year ago we had a big suit at Goderich, owing to the water being dammed back, thereby inundating lands, now others are squealing. The proprietor of the mill has his own time. He won out last fall and surely if the government gave him a mill right here he will be allowed to let the water off to run it, and he should win again.

The Rev. Mr. Fortney the new Methodist minister here, is destined to become quite popular as he is a fine speaker and a good reasoner. The Methodists here have been very fortunate in past appointments by the conference. They always get good men.

NEUSTADT.

Mr. T. Toner of Buffalo visited his daughter Mrs. J. J. Weinert.

Mr. J. A. Rettinger of Berlin is in town on Tuesday.

C. W. Helwig has made extensive repairs in the mill here, and the work is a good deal easier.

Mrs. James of Winnipeg, with her family visited with her sister Mrs. John Schilling.

The weather has taken a turn for colder weather, and overcoats are much in evidence.

The Annual Fall exhibition was held last Thursday and Friday. Thursday being such a splendid day, many exhibits were brought here. The fair this year eclipsed all other fairs here. The merchants here had their goods displayed, and it gave the town an inviting appearance. The horses shown here was a treat to see, and nearly all other exhibits were well represented, and the band furnished good music and lots of it. On the whole the society has no doubt strengthened its treasury considerable.

Baby for a Pig.

An incident that occurred a few days ago a few miles north of Winnipeg, has, says the Tribune of that city, aroused indignation on the part of the neighbors of a heartless wretch of a man. He comes from a benighted section of a somewhat misgoverned European country. The other day his wife gave birth to twins. He was greatly offended at the dual arrival, and without the consent of his wife, arranged with a fellow countryman to make a trade giving one of the babies for a young pig. The deal was actually consummated, to the great distress of the mother. A man of authority stepped in, restored the child to its mother, and administered a lecture to the brutal husband, whose dense perceptions of what constitutes ordinary humanity were apparently but slightly aroused. The case would almost seem to be one calling for the offices of the deportation officials. This is one of the unfortunate instances says the Tribune where the strict divorce laws of the land prevent a decent woman separating herself legally from something resembling in appearance a human being.

A mortgage on the Vendome Hotel at Teeswater has been foreclosed and the building is to be sold by auction on Oct. 15th.

South Wellington Conservatives have chosen Mr. R. Howett, a young lawyer of Guelph to succeed Mr. J. P. Downey in the Legislature.

Hunters will not be allowed to take their dogs up north until after Dec. 7, on account of the muzzling order, which prohibits transportation of dogs.
