FINANCIAL.

There has been quite a scare in United States financial circles during the past week over the gold question and the redemption of United States silver certificates, which has even extended itself to New Brunswick and made itself felt in St. John. The result in St. John was several of the banking institutions there refused to receive the U. S. Silver certificates on any terms, but the Bank of New Brunswick continued to receive them at a discount of 1 per cent as before. The whole trouble arises out of the relation which the value of silver at present bears to that of gold in the market. The market price of silver has been steadily depreciating for the last few years, owing to the increasing supply of that commodity, and the fact that the demand for it did not increase at the same rate. The result of this depreciation, if it were allowed to work its natural course, would be to impoverish the owners of silver mines and the dealers in silver. But the Republican government attempted to create an artificial market for silver, by passing an act known as the Sherman Silver Bill, by which it was provided that the United States government would buy up $40,000,000 worth of silver every month, or $48,000,000 per year which was to be stored in the treasury vaults, and against which the well-known silver certificates were to be issued. These represented either $1 or $2 payable at the treasury department of the U. S. in silver. But the silver dollar in the U. S. is only worth 63 cents at market value; so that if the holders of these certificates were paid in silver, they would lose 37 cents on the dollar. So that if the U. S. government eventually received them in silver, some heavy financial loss must fall on the heavy holders. It was, however, thought that the government would redeem the certificates in gold worth 100 cents to the dollar, provided they had enough of it on hand. There was until recently $100,000,000 in the treasury vaults, held as a reserve to redeem the issue of confederate greenbacks and other currency at the time of the war, but over and above this amount there was no gold available to redeem the silver certificates, and the New York banks have been shipping large quantities of gold to Europe since the first of the year. The scare was caused by the possibility of gold, and the supposed unwillingness of the government to utilize the gold reserve before mentioned for the redemption of the silver certificates. The Montreal banks have been cautioned by their New York correspondents against receiving the silver certificates at all, and it seems that they will be refused by all Canadian banks for the present.

THE COAL CONTRACT.

Yesterday's St. John Telegraph contained an item in reference to the late occurrence in this city which would naturally lead to a feeling of shame on the part of every citizen of the town, and all the more so because the reference alluded to is apparently well deserved. The occurrence spoken of is the recent deal, which took place upon the occasion of the awarding of the yearly contract for 300 tons of coal for the water works, by which it is said that Mr. Frank I. Morrison, one of the tenders, was allowed by the council to lower the amount of his tender, after all the tenders were opened, so as to give him the advantage over Mr. Lively of St. John, who had had word from the superintendent of water works that his tender was accepted, and had prepared to forward the first shipment of 150 tons to Fredericton by the lat of May. The Telegraph refers to this little piece of business as a contemptible trick, and we think that it certainly will not operate to raise the City Council very high in the estimation of business men throughout the province.

THE TARIFF.

Hon. Mr. Foster has been in Montreal, during the past week, and has had the proposed conference with the prominent business and manufacturing delegations there. It appears from the reports which have appeared thus far in the Montreal papers that the consultations so far held, have been solely with the representatives of those manufacturing interests for whose benefit the tariff was in the first place framed. The finance Minister has talked with the wholesale grocers, the druggists and manufacturers of proprietary articles, the manufacturers of cement and drain pipes, and the glass manufacturers, all of whom substantially uphold the continuance of the present tariff duties. If there are any reductions asked for, they are so small as to be almost unnoticeable, and certainly not such as would effect any appreciable change in the present tariff. It was feared from the first that this state of things would at the critical moment resolve themselves into mere councils of war between these ancient allies and enemies of public prosperity, the Tory government and the manufacturing interests, who, it appears, are legislating solely for their own and each others benefit. If the finance minister is really in earnest about the matter, if he wants reliable data whereupon to ground a policy of tariff reform, let him for conscience sake avoid relying on the opinions of the manufacturing industries alone. Let him seek the opinion of external classes, of the farmers, the lumbermen, the professional men and the laborers, from whom a more free and unbiassed expression of judgement may reasonably be expected. Otherwise the people of the country cannot but conclude that the government is doing its best to humbug them.

We sincerely hope this is not the case, but that before the investigation has reached an end, a full enquiry into the conditions existing in every walk of life may be made, and conclusions justly formed from the evidence adduced. If this is done we can have no doubt as to the result.

ST. JOHN SHRIEVALTY.

The race between Messrs. H. Lawrence Strudde and Henry J. Thorne for appointment to the office of Sheriff of St. John, made vacant by the death of Sheriff Harding, has been quite an absorbing topic of conversation in the commercial metropolis during the past week, but has not been effectually decided by the appointment of Mr. Strudde, announced in Thursday morning's Telegraph. There was really very little to choose between the two men, as far as ability and qualifications went, and the present appointment has been made almost wholly on the grounds that the government politicians in St. John favoured Mr. Strudde's candidature, and that he had the promise of appointment to the first vacancy of any account happening in St. John. Had it not been for these facts, there is very little doubt that Mr. Thorne would have outstripped Mr. Strudde in the race, as he is a staunch friend of the present administration, a persona grata to Mr. Blair, and is much more popular in St. John than Mr. Strudde can ever hope to be.

GREAT NAVAL PARADE.

A Beautiful Spectacle in New York Bay. On MONDAY, R. I. April 26. The phantom ships which sailed in the mists of the sea yesterday were bright and majestic realities in the glorious sunshine this morning. The clear skies and bracing breezes gave setting to a panoramic scene whose beauty and suggestiveness has never been surpassed. In the sharp clear light of the early morning every distinctive feature of the great warships stood out in bold relief as anchored in two great columns that stretched out over the whole surface of the bay. The most striking feature of the scene was the absolute silence that prevailed during the early hours of the day. But it did not last long. As the morning wore on and preparations for weighing anchors began the scene changed to one of brisk animation and life.

The bay became alive with pleasure craft of every description, and patrol boats had a difficult task to keep the anchorage grounds clear of intruders, and to permit the formation of the columns in which the stately procession of vessels were to pass through the Narrows into the upper bay and to move up Hudson River to their assigned stations and there await to-morrow's review.

Shortly after 10 o'clock Admiral Cervera's flag ship gave the preliminary signal to weigh anchor and fall into line. The starboard or right hand column looking toward the bows of the vessels was commanded by the British Admiral, Sir John Hopkin; the port or left hand column was commanded by Admiral Cervera and consisted of the American fleet, to some of the visitors thrown in to balance.

A start was made promptly at 9.45. Thousands of people were gathered along the various points of vantage to witness the spectacle. Steaming neck and neck the two admirals and their flagships led the way at the rate of between eight and nine knots an hour. Three hundred yards separated each ship from the other and this distance was maintained with absolute precision.

The time occupied in passing the forts was exactly half an hour. After the naval ships had passed the Narrows and entered the upper bay, the British and American steamers, yachts and big boats fell in and became a volunteer escort. The scene then became one of combined grace, animation and order.

The various exercises attending the arrival of the American and foreign naval officers in port were commenced today by the unrolling in Battery Park of a statue of John Ericsson, the inventor, whose genius revolutionized marine architecture and improved the world.

An interesting programme was carried out.

Edward Damon, nephew of Capt. Damon, made a short visit here last week. The young Rev. W. R. Reed yesterday baptised eight persons and received them into the fellowship of the church.

Now that navigation is open and the steamers are again on the river, business around here has assumed its wonted activity. Steam building is being pushed vigorously, and in a short time three screws will be ready to launch.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.
A Young Man Escaped from Death. In the Montreal Police Court the other morning, Moses Murphy, an inmate of St. Bridget's Home, was charged with attempted suicide. He was taken to No. 7 Police Station by a friend who told Sergeant Clarke that Murphy had swallowed a quantity of paraffin. The officer was energetic, and at once sent for Dr. Burke, who came hastily, and as he was in a corner of a room he was placed in a cell to answer to the initial charge against him. He said that he was tired of life and had decided to kill himself. For some time he had pondered over the mode of death, and at last he decided that to take poison would be the most painful way of shuffling off this mortal coil. Two weeks ago he called at L. O.'s drug store and, under the pretence that he wanted it for vermin, succeeded in obtaining a package of Paraffin. This he stored away in a leather pouch, which he carried around with him, without arousing up his courage to the point of committing the deed until yesterday afternoon. Then he said he just tasted the poison, but it was not palatable, so he decided to take no more of it. As it is thought that his mind is somewhat unbalanced, Judge Lucas remanded him for a week pending medical examination. Murphy is a young man only twenty-five years of age.

A Very Interesting Case.

It is rumored that Mr. Fred Quarterman, whose wife it appears, did not receive very gentle treatment Monday night from the policemen who were after a prisoner who had escaped them, and who had sought shelter in her home, proposes taking action against the city for damages. The case pending in the front room had been locked by Mrs. Quarterman who refused to open it, and who claims that she was used in a brutal manner by the officers. It is understood, should some action be taken, that Messrs. C. F. and A. J. Gregory will be retained by Mr. Quarterman. Nothing definite is yet known.

MILITARY FUNERAL.

Dr. T. Clowes Brown Buried With Military Honors—A Large Procession.

Dr. T. Clowes Brown, the well known and popular physician, and Surgeon of the Canadian Regiment of Infantry stationed in this city, was at about 10:30 a. m., Tuesday, given the community a terrible shock. He was at the morning service in St. Ann's church, and it was while there, that he complained of the illness which terminated fatally. He was able to walk home from church, but was not out of his home afterwards. On Monday morning he was stricken with paralysis of the right side, and an apoplectic fit followed. He lost consciousness, and never afterwards spoke or recognized even his wife. Tuesday morning all hope of his recovery was abandoned. Dr. McLeary, his physician, and the patient sank rapidly, expiring at about 4:15 in the afternoon.

The funeral which took place Thursday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, was one of the largest seen in this city for some years. The Canadian Regiment of Infantry, commanded by Lieut. Hemming led the procession; the band coming next with the brass band. The array of floral tributes was very beautiful, the top of the hearse being literally covered. The pall-bearers were: Major Logan, Rockwell, Boone, Copley, and Lieut. Hawthorne and Fisher. After the mourners came Lieut. Col. Mansell, Lieut. Col. Marsh, Major Armstrong of St. John, and other officers of the Infantry school. These were followed by the physicians of the city, they in turn being followed by hundreds of our citizens. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Canon Roberts assisted by Rev. Mr. Montgomery, St. Ann's church. In the city the remains were taken to Forest Hill cemetery, where they were interred with all the military honors. The bereaved have the GLOBE'S sincere sympathy in their sad affliction.

A large number of subscriptions are now due, and a prompt renewal of the same will be fully appreciated by the proprietor, as he frequently finds himself financially embarrassed. If all would renew their subscriptions promptly it would save him considerable worry and enable him to give more attention to making improvements in the paper. Please bear this in mind.

Canterbury does not know whether to feel pleased or displeased over the fact that the government has located a customs office there for the first time, and is like feeling some to persuade the municipal council, who is a native of Fredericton, and who will have to abandon the pleasure of city life for the sweets of rural civilization. Whether this is a brilliant scheme on the part of the York merchant, or a piece of political opportunism, we have not heard, but there are some people unkind enough to talk that way.—Beacon.

The National league ball season opened Thursday. Jack Priest well known in this province is coaching the Maine State College team. The Colybs got in some good practice on their campus Monday afternoon, Billy Donovan commencing his work with them as trainer at that time. The C. E. I. made a very poor showing while attending the funeral of Dr. T. Clowes Brown. The marching was really bad, every man stepping to a time of his own. The school should immediately receive instruction, and considerable of it—with regard to slow marching.

SEIZURE OF A YOUNG MINISTER.

Teak Peterson Because He Intended Break.

COLUMBIA, O., April 25.—A most sensational suicide developed last evening. Claude Wilson, an eloquent young divine of the Methodist Episcopal church, died of a dose of rough on rats. Wilson had a charge at Shawnee, where he showed a high gift of eloquence, but his eyes failed him and he had to return to the house of his father, John Wilson, a prominent citizen. The young man was in love with Miss Carrie Kingston and the two quarrelling over the matter she broke the engagement. Sunday Wilson called on her and said if she did not marry him at 10 o'clock yesterday morning he would kill himself. He put in appearance and was ordered away by the young woman's brother Frank. The preacher drew a revolver but was promptly knocked down. Wilson crawled to the porch, arose and dramatically swallowed the poison. He died last night.

One hundred and sixty guards at the Columbian Exposition have struck for an advance of wages.

The Marquis of Salisbury gave a reception at Hatfield House Monday to the delegates from Ulster, who went to London to take part in the public protest against the establishment of Home Rule in Ireland. The Duke of Devonshire and a host of Irish people opposed to Home Rule were present.

Chicago, April 24.—The losses to lake shipping in the gale of Wednesday night and Thursday of last week exceeded those of any previous storm in April that has ever been experienced on the lakes. The last of the wrecks has probably now been reported, as a number of boats, about which there was some anxiety, have all been heard from. The money loss aggregates about $250,000, with an insurance of $325,000.

Home Rule Bill.

The scene in the House of Commons on Saturday morning, at the carrying of the second reading of the Home Rule Bill, was dramatic. Overland in the lobby, behind which members disappeared, sat the Prince of Wales, watching with eager interest. At his side sat Lord Carrington, himself thoroughly in touch with the bill, earnestly talking to the Prince about it. The Peers gallery was filled with men of noble names seldom seen with so late in the House.

The ladies' gallery was full. Mrs. Gladstone bent forward to hear her husband's speech. Miss Cleveland, sister of the President of the United States, sat next her, almost as interested and in sympathy with the movement. Princess Victoria of Teck looked on with amused expression. Lady Gage and Churchill, Miss Balgair and others filled the rest of the seats allotted to ladies and sat for hours. When Mr. Gladstone walked into the House from the division lobby all the Home Rule members arose in their places and cheered and shouted, waving their hats, while the premier took the right and left as he went towards his seat. There was only one break in all this enthusiasm. While it was at its height John Redmond jumped up and shouted to His Grace, "Paradise should not be forgotten here to-night!"

There was a moment's silence, and then the cheering broke out again, and as the speaker walked to the end of the division bench he was loudly applauded. Just as soon as the vote was announced, at an early hour of the morning, a score of the Opposition men were handed in nearly by one o'clock, and this is the only beginning. There will be 10,000 more, Mr. Balfour says. Of course there will be a large number of abstentions, and what the Ministers will do Notice will be given by the Government that on a stated day, probably within a fortnight, the real fight will be on, and the bill will be put and voted upon without further discussion. That will be an extreme measure, but the Unionists have not warning that it will be carried out rather than submit to further obstruction.

LONDON, April 25.—More incendiary fires were started in Hull yesterday at a timber dock, and in the morning, four persons were killed and fifteen injured.

Jennings & Co. dry goods merchants of Simcoe have failed; $25,000 liabilities.

The license commissioners of London, Ont., are making bare close at ten o'clock and will grant no further licenses in excess of forty.

A fatal panic occurred at Naples, Sunday evening in the church of Torre Annunziata. During the services, which were attended by a very large number of persons, part of the draperies about the altar was blown against a lighted candle.

The flames spread with great rapidity, and the congregation made place yesterday for the doors. The wildest excitement prevailed, and women and children were thrown to the floor and trampled upon.

The fire was quickly extinguished, and when some semblance of order was restored it was found that eight women and children had been crushed to death while hundreds of others had been more or less seriously injured.

Regulation 41, page 118 of the school law of New Brunswick, which says, "no pupil shall be enrolled (except by transfer) for admission to standard 1 later than two weeks after the opening of the school in any term," is now law, but will not be strictly enforced until after the beginning of the next term.

Observation.

It is highly important that every student should cultivate his powers of observation to the highest possible degree of excellence. A person with a perfect memory, if such a thing can be conceived, would still be lacking in much that goes to make up a thorough student. It is his power of observation that is inferior or poor. The student who is not a keen observer finds his conclusions absurd and irrelevant unless arrived at by careful observation. To the person with literary aspirations it is also especially important to observe accurately, and many distinguished authors owe their eminence to reaching the goal of mature by this power of observation, and nothing in which habits of conscientiousness are quicker to observe. There is nothing that will show the results of training more readily than the power of observation, and nothing in which habits of conscientiousness are quicker to observe. Let the eye grasp every object as far as possible in detail. Practice this rightly until it becomes habit, and the thing accomplished by leading physicians on both sides of the border; and they present to everyone at moderate cost the most efficient means of regaining perfect health. They revitalize the blood, stimulate the digestive organs to regular and perfect action, restore to the nerves that force and strength which they have lost, and remove from the system all traces and effects of debility. No time should be lost in hesitation or in making a choice between remedies; for there is no other agency so sure and so effective as Hawker's Liver Pills.

They are within the reach of all classes, and now is the time to secure the boon of restored health which they place within easy grasp.

The funeral of Mr. Hammond which took place at Kingsclere, Thursday was largely attended. A number drove up from the city. Mr. Hammond was an old resident of York county, and well and favorably known. He was in his 90th year.

Boys' Fall!

What is really wanted is to light up the spirit that which a boy in some sense and in some essential degree, there is in every boy the material of good work in the world; in every boy, not only in those who are quick, but in those who are slow, and even in those who are dull.—Gladstone.

When you set out to do anything never let anything disturb you from doing that one thing. This power of putting the thought on one particular thing, and keeping it there for long time, is the power of genius; and it is long time to get into the habit.—Thomas A. Edison.

The key to success in any department of life is self-denial. Idleness, laziness, wastefulness, come from lack of self-denial, and a successful career are the result of it.—Neal Dow.

the poison of a mad dog had been sent into it.

Turning the strange creature was gone. The night was one long to be remembered.

In the eastern sky the round moon, walking in glory, lent her silvery light to the world below, and myriads of twinkling stars, mysterious lanterns of the night, were hung about to assist, in a feeble way her brave effort.

Through openings in the branches above, the moon peeped down, casting long silver spears to the ground that seemed to vibrate as the night air rustled the leaves overhead.

The air was melodious with the summer chorus of the night, as heard on the Potomac.

There were mosquitoes, crickets, katydids, tree-frogs, and innumerable insects that lent their noise to swell the chorus that seemed to rise and fall like the billows of the great deep, now advancing, now retreating, but never silent.

thing to me! How dare you, I say? Are you not content with breaking my heart, that you must needs think to write my name with shame? Oh, Roger! and she broke down with sobs.

He would have come to her again, but she motioned him away impatiently. Do not touch me, Roger! I will not allow it. Remember that hereafter we can be nothing to each other. Nora Warner stands between us. Lost to us are all dreams of happiness. We must face the future bravely and fight the battle of life. You must never even see me again.

Great heavens, Carol, you do not mean it. You love me even as I love you. Nay I will say it in spite of you. Why then, should this terrible specter of the past haunt us? Let the dead past bury its dead; we live for the present and the future. Once more, Carol, my one and only love, will you come to me? For heaven's sake, do not turn away so coldly; you will kill me!

Roger, she was calm now, apparently, though Heaven only knew the state her poor-lacerated heart was in. Roger, you are still when you insult me in that way, but I forgive you, for I do not think you realize what you are saying. You were wiser to remain here, to seek my love when you saw that I was beginning to care for you, but I cannot blame you for that. Here we must part.

Part? he cried, with anguish in his voice. Is it, then, so soon? Oh, Carol, my life, my life, are you to be lost to me forever? Am I to live on in the future without the slightest life of the past, but one full of regrets, of pain so intense that death itself would be a mercy? Do you doom me to this living grave, beloved? You do not mean that, do you, Roger. In the time to come you will see that my course was the right one. I bear with you because of my love, and for the reason that you are my man. I could hardly wait to see you. The very seconds seemed hours, and I thought I should lose my senses.

Where and from whom did you hear about—Nora Warner? he asked.

From a gypsy girl who seemed to know—Barbara Merrilee.

Barbara Merrilee?

He repeated the name after her, and she knew not whether it was fear or hatred that made his voice vibrate like a cord tensely strung.

You do know her, then? she asked.

I have good reason to. Why, you shall see. I am not a man to be trifled with. I will tell you with our present trouble, though she seems to have a hand in all the pain that comes to me, and there have been times when she has even—

You are a perfect liberty to say as many as you choose, sir, replied Roger.

He had no idea who this man was or what he meant, and in his present condition it was a matter of small importance to him. Captain Grant did not realize that a volcano he was arousing—perhaps he did not care, being such a freer himself.

My words shall be brief and to the point. That lady you were speaking to was Miss Richmond.

The words were in the form of a question, and though the Virginian had started at first, he drew his form up proudly.

Taking it for granted that your conjecture is the truth, what business is it of yours, may I enquire? he said with some show of warmth, for there was an egotism in the voice of the gallant Captain that had given Roger a start he knew not why, for it seemed to him they two had met before, but under what circumstances he could not say.

You are impatient, Roger Darrel. It is my business in so far that Miss Richmond is my promised wife, and I know a man to see that her honor is not tarnished by clandestine meetings such as the one I have just witnessed, said the Captain in a stern voice.

What you say I brand as an infamous falsehood, sir, whoever you may be, and the Virginian could hardly restrain himself from doing the best before him, personal injury, such as he tried to which his anger had arisen.

For that I will call you to account, Roger Darrel, in the meantime I wish to ask you a question in regard to this meeting. Was it a voluntary one on the part of Miss Richmond, or did you force her into making the assignment?

Roger hesitated.

He readily comprehended what the object of the Captain's question was, and was most willing to shoulder all the blame.

I am the cause of the meeting. Does that satisfy you, sir? Whatever blame there may be, put it upon me, he replied calmly.

I accept the apology returned the Captain quickly, and with remarkable good faith that Roger was taken completely by surprise.

That it was not meant for an apology you would, is well known to you and I prove it thus.

There was an agile spring, and with his open palm he slapped the captain in the face.

After that it was war to the death.

You will hear from me, sir, and this hour will be the bitterest of your life, returned the Captain, taking out his pocket-handkerchief and rubbing his cheek as if it had been contaminated.

Roger uttered an exclamation.

The man with the Black Glove, he muttered.

Some years before, while traveling in Europe, he had met in the company with which he was making the tour, a strange, mysterious man, of whose antecedents no one knew.

The individual was full of boasting stories of his adventures and deeds, and was looked on with profound respect by all who knew him.

A cup of coffee in the circumstance attached to his presence was the fact that no matter where seen he invariably wore upon his left hand a black kid glove.

most father, unless by accident, and then it will be as strangers. The hand of fate has turned our lives apart, and through Nora Warner he has come to me.

Nora Warner! That girl still alive! Then she has done me one good turn at last.

Carol could not but start when she heard these words for they told her that her father had known this mad woman in the years gone by, although it was evident that he was not acquainted with her history from the time she had come to know Roger Darrel.

This Captain Grant, who has made his appearance upon the stage of our story, was also connected with this strange and dramatic past, in what manner the reader will soon see.

That he was a bold and hard man, the young girl had been already warned by her keen sense of perception, yet the soldier had a dashy aspect, and it was only the gleam of his eye and the sneer of his face that had warned Carol against him. What influence he had over her father she could not even guess, but without a doubt the master of Richmond Terrace feared him.

Captain Grant knew his power well, and it had been his intention in coming to the Terrace to use it to the best advantage. Perhaps this had something to do with the manner in which Lawrence Richmond cherished the spark of hatred for the Darrels in his breast, in order that he might have a just cause for separating the lovers.

Parted though the emotions of Carol Richmond must have been, they could not of course, equal those that filled the mind and heart of Roger Darrel, as he stood there looking after his lost love, and realizing that fate had again taken a hand in the game, surrendering the bears to the man who had so strangely brought her together.

Why did we ever meet? Was it because Heaven wished to punish a Darrel for that sin? If that be so, then the light has indeed fallen upon me, but I pray that all the bitter pain and anguish may come to me also; let not a single shadowy regret touch her bright hair.

While he stood thus, his thoughts busy, there came the sound of footfalls, not light and full of grace like Carol's, but heavy and firm—the tread of a man. He could turn, some one tapped him on the shoulder.

A word with you, sir.

Wheeling, he found himself face to face with a striking-looking man. The moon's rays fell upon his figure, but the broad-brimmed hat shaded his face, so that only a general view could be obtained.

You are a perfect liberty to say as many as you choose, sir, replied Roger.

He had no idea who this man was or what he meant, and in his present condition it was a matter of small importance to him. Captain Grant did not realize that a volcano he was arousing—perhaps he did not care, being such a freer himself.

The words were in the form of a question, and though the Virginian had started at first, he drew his form up proudly.

Taking it for granted that your conjecture is the truth, what business is it of yours, may I enquire? he said with some show of warmth, for there was an egotism in the voice of the gallant Captain that had given Roger a start he knew not why, for it seemed to him they two had met before, but under what circumstances he could not say.

You are impatient, Roger Darrel. It is my business in so far that Miss Richmond is my promised wife, and I know a man to see that her honor is not tarnished by clandestine meetings such as the one I have just witnessed, said the Captain in a stern voice.

What you say I brand as an infamous falsehood, sir, whoever you may be, and the Virginian could hardly restrain himself from doing the best before him, personal injury, such as he tried to which his anger had arisen.

For that I will call you to account, Roger Darrel, in the meantime I wish to ask you a question in regard to this meeting. Was it a voluntary one on the part of Miss Richmond, or did you force her into making the assignment?

Roger hesitated.

He readily comprehended what the object of the Captain's question was, and was most willing to shoulder all the blame.

I am the cause of the meeting. Does that satisfy you, sir? Whatever blame there may be, put it upon me, he replied calmly.

I accept the apology returned the Captain quickly, and with remarkable good faith that Roger was taken completely by surprise.

That it was not meant for an apology you would, is well known to you and I prove it thus.

There was an agile spring, and with his open palm he slapped the captain in the face.

After that it was war to the death.

You will hear from me, sir, and this hour will be the bitterest of your life, returned the Captain, taking out his pocket-handkerchief and rubbing his cheek as if it had been contaminated.
