We are pleased to inform our readers that we have made special arrangements with Hon Judson trenell, of Detroit, Mich, well known to those who are interested in socio-comminica, for a series of letters on. "Industrial Europe through American Eyes." Mr. Grenell is already in England, from whome he will go to Scotland, France, Switzerland, Holland, Germany, and possibly Italy and Austria, making a critical study, yet free from scientific verbiage, of the social and economic autronments of the wealth producers of the old world.

LABOR MAY DAY.

May Day, so frought with trouble last pear, has come and gone this year with out fae inauguration of a single disturbence. Our opponents imagine that this quietness is the forerunner of the destruction of the influence of union ism. This is not the case as we all know.

The ismone learned last spring were not all on the side of labor. The mat all on the side of labor. The most of which is that it is not good to fight with the workers.

The workers were taught that progress means the sticking strictly to good husiness methods. Many other details—the construction of the house, the size of the verandas—passed with—the size of the verandas—passed with the verandas—passed with the verandas—passed with out attracting his notice. Soon, however, he was seated in a great room, an apartment of old fashioued height and breadth. He felt his heart beating fast. How long did he sit there? No fast. How long did he sit there? No inconsiderable period surely. He examined everything carefully without carrying a definite impression of saything to his mind. The large carved mirror, the quaint decoration of walls and friere, the soft colors of the rug that covered the floor, the hundred and one odd little things in the cabinet near the chair where he was seated, trifles in ivery, old silver and china the pictures, a Vandyke, Claude and a few modern masters. After this interminable but confused scruttny of innimate things his heart beat faster still as a tall figure robed in white entered the room.

He rose. They regarded each other He rose. They regarded each other with mutual constraint. Her face had a bit of color, like the tinge of a rose leaf. man to the ends of the world."
"Oh," she said, "to think it was I who made you feel this:"
He took her hand. His grasp hurt her fingers, yet she did not shrink.
"You showed me a new world," he snawered quickly. "Not the world I expected to find, where life would 'old little on the world of little of joy or zest, but a magical world, a heautiful world, yours!" She half hung her head. "But then

"It became a memory, bitter sweet, yet more sweet than bitter!"
"And now?"

The figure of the count, as he had seen him the night before, had shruptly entered his mind. Did she understand? She smiled.

"And now?"

At her question he dignissed gil continued thought of jealousy. Looking into her clear, half laughing eyes, he read of no her entanging allances. Without works from her he understood.

"Nearly noon by the soldier's dial,"

"I heard that you—it was reported you were dead."

"I was wounded; that was all, and "My heat sails in an hour," be con-

"But-you are not-going now?"
