THIRD SCENE.
THE MONEY MARKET.

The letter which had been handed to him on board the yacht was from the third partner, Mr. Branca, and was thus expressed:—

"A crisis in the trade. All right, so far—except our business with the small foreign firms. Bills to meet from those quarters (say, forty thousand pounds)—and, I fear, no remittance to cover them. Particulars stated in another letter, addressed to you at post-office, Hlthcombe. I am quite broken down with anxiety, and confined to my bed. Pizzituti is still detained at Smyrna. Come back at once."

The same evening Turlington was at his office in Austin Friars, investigating the state of affairs, with his head clerk to help him.

"This done, there were actually left, between that time and Christmas, liabilities to be met to the extent of forty thousand pounds, without a farthing in hand to pay that formidable debt.

How was the money to be found?
With his position in the City, he had only to go to the famous money-lending and discounting house of Bulpit Brothers—reported to "turn over" millions in their business every year—and to supply himself at once with the necessary funds. Forty thousand pounds was a trifling transaction to Bulpit Brothers.

Knowing where he could procure the loan, he was by no means uncon-fident of being able to find the security on which he could borrow the money. Living up to his income; having no expectations from any living creature; possessing in landed property only some thirty or forty acres in Somersetshire, with a quaint little dwelling, half farm-house, half cottage, attached—he was incapable of providing the personal security from his own personal resources. To appeal to wealthy friends in the City would be to let those friends into the secret of his embarrassments, and to put his credit in peril. He finished his breakfast, and went back to Austin Friars—falling entirely, so far, to see how he was to remove the last obstacle now left in his way.

The doors were open to the public; business had begun. He had not been ten minutes in his room before the shipping clerk knocked at the door and interrupted him, still absorbed in his own anxious thoughts.

"What is it?" he asked irritably.

"Duplicate bills of lading, Sir," answered the clerk, placing the document on his master's table.

Found! There was the security on his writing-desk, staring him in the face! He dismissed the clerk and examined the papers.

Bulpit Brothers, long desirous of having such a name as his on their books, received him with open arms.
The security (covering the amount borrowed) was accepted as a matter of course. The money was lent, for three months, with a stroke of the pen. Turlington stepped out again into the street, and confronted the City of London in the character of the noblest work of mercantile creation—a solvent man.

The Fallen Angel, walking invisible being, in Richard's shadow, flapped his crippled wings in triumph.
From that moment the Fallen Angel had got him.

FOURTH SCENE.
MUSWELL HILL.

The next day Turlington drove to the suburbs, on the chance of finding the Graybrookes at home again.

"Have you lost any money?" Those were the first words uttered by Sir Joseph when he and Richard met again, after the parting on board the yacht.

"Not a farthing. I might have lost seriously, if I had not got back in time to set things straight. Stupidity on the part of my people left in charge—nothing more. It's all right now."

Sir Joseph lifted his eyes, with heartfelt devotion, to the ceiling.

"Thank God, Richard!" he said, in tones of the deepest feeling. He rang the bell. "Tell Miss Graybrooke Mr. Turlington is here." He turned again to Richard. "Lavinia is like me—Lavinia has been so anxious about you." We have both of us passed a sleepless night." Miss Lavinia came in. Sir Joseph hurried to meet her, and took her affectionately by both hands. "My dear! the best of all good news—Richard has not lost a farthing." Miss Lavinia lifted her eyes to the ceiling with heartfelt devotion, and said, "Thank God, Richard!"—like the echo of her brother's voice; a little late, perhaps, for its reputation as an echo, but accurate to half a note in its perfect repetition of sound.

Turlington asked the question which it had been his one object to put in paying his visit to Muswell Hill.

"Have you spoken to Natalie?"

"This morning," replied Sir Joseph. "An opportunity offered its-self after breakfast. I took advantage of it, Richard—you shall hear how."

It had all ended exactly as Richard would have wished it to end. Sir Joseph had said, "My child! this is a matter of experience; love will come when you are married." And Miss Lavinia had added, "Dear Natalie, if you remembered your poor mother as I remember her, you would know that your father's experience is to be relied on." In that way they had put it to her; and she had hung her head, and had given—all that maiden modesty could be expected to give—a silent consent. The wedding-day was fixed for the first week in the New Year. (No Joseph; not January—the New Year.) "And God bless you Richard! and may your married life be a long and happy one."

"When shall I see her?" asked Turlington, with Miss Lavinia in tears which did him credit in possession of one of his hands, and Sir Joseph (in tears which did him credit) in possession of the other.

"She will be back to dinner, dear Richard. Stay and dine."

"Thank you. I must go into the City first. I will come back and dine."

With that arrangement in prospect, he left them.

An hour later a telegram arrived from Natalie. She had consented to dine, as well as lunch, in Berkley Square—sleeping there that night and returning next morning. Her father instantly telegraphed back by the messenger, insisting on Natalie's return to Muswell Hill that evening in time to meet Richard Turlington at dinner.

"Quite right, Joseph!" said Miss Lavinia, looking over her brother's shoulder while he wrote the telegram.

"She is showing a disposition to coquet with Richard," rejoined Sir Joseph, with the air of a man who knew female human nature in its re-motest corners. "My telegram, Lavinia, will have its effect."

Sir Joseph was quite right. His telegram had its effect. It not only brought his daughter back to dinner; it produced another result which his prophetic faculty had altogether failed to foresee. The message reached Berkley Square at five o'clock in the afternoon. Let us follow the message.

FIFTH SCENE.

THE SQUARE.

On the day when Richard Turlington paid his visit to Muswell Hill two ladies (with a secret between them) unlocked the gate of the railed garden in Berkley Square. They shut the gate, after entering the enclosure, but carefully forbore to lock it as well, and carefully restricted their walk to the westward side of the garden. One of them was Natalie Graybrooke. The other was Mrs. Sancerre's eldest daughter, recently raised to the position of Lord Winwood's second wife. In person, Lady Winwood was little and fair. In character, she was dashing and resolute—a complete contrast to Natalie, and (on that very account) Natalie's bosom friend.

"My dear, one ambitious marriage in the family is quite enough! I have made up my mind that you shall marry the man you love. Don't tell me your courage is failing you—the excuse is contemptible; I decline to receive it. Natalie! the men have a phrase which exactly describes your character. You want backbone!"

"You are trifling with Mr. Linzie, my dear. Mr. Linzie is a nice fellow. I like him. I won't have that."

"Louisa!"

Mr. Turlington has nothing to recommend him. He is not a well-bred old gentleman of exalted rank. He is only an odious brute who happens to have made money. You shall not marry Mr. Turlington. And you shall marry Laurence Linzie."

"Will you let me speak, Louisa?"

"I will let you answer—nothing more. Didn't you come crying to me this morning? Didn't you say, Louisa, they have pronounced sentence on me! I am to be married in the first week of the New Year. Help me out of it, for Heaven's sake!"

And what did I do when I heard your story?"

"Oh, you were so kind!"

"Kind doesn't half express it. I have committed crimes on your account. I have deceived my husband and my mother. For your sake I got mamma to ask Mr. Linzie to lunch (as my friend!). For your sake I have banished my unoffending husband, not an hour ago, to his club. You wretched girl! who arranged a private conference in the library? Who sent Mr. Linzie off to consult his friend in the Temple on the law of clandestine marriage?"

Who suggested your telegraphing home, and stopping here for the night? Who made an appointment to meet your young man privately in this detestable place in ten minutes' time? I did! I did! I did! All in your interests. All to prevent you from doing what I have done—marrying to please your family instead of to please yourself. Now what do you owe me on your side? You owe it to me at least to know your own mind. You don't know it. You coolly inform me that you don't run the risk after all, and that you can't face the consequences on second thought.
I'll tell you what! You don't deserve that nice fellow who wrings the very ground you tread on. You are a bread-and-butter miss. I don't believe you are fond of him!"

"Not fond of him!" Natalie stopped, and clasped her hands in desperate language sufficient for the occasion. At the same moment the sound of a closing gate caught her ear. She looked round. Laurence had kept his appointment before his time. Laurence was in the garden rapidly approaching them.

"Now for the law of Clandestine Marriage," said Lady Winwood.— "Mr. Linzie, we will take it sitting." She led the way to one of the benches in the garden, and placed Laurence between Natalie and herself.

"Well, Licentiate, have you got the Cliches? No? Does it cost too much? Can I lend you the money?"

To be Continued.

A London merchant advertised for a clerk who could bear confinement." He received an answer from one who had been seven years in jail.

Objects of the Internationalists.

Prof. Hume, a prominent Internationalist, delivered a lecture in New York Thursday evening on the objects and aims of the organization to which he belongs. He asserted, firstly, that the Internationalists were fighting to abolish all class privileges; secondly, to compel social and political equality for both sexes, and equal payment for equal labor to man and woman; thirdly, the nationalization of land, the freedom of land and its productions, and also freedom of the means of transit; fourthly, the reduction of the hours of labor, so as to give the laborer more time for improvement and recreation, intemperance and ignorance being, in Mr. Hume's opinion, the result of so much manual labor as ten hours a day; fifthly, education, to be undertaken by the State, to be obligatory, gratuitous and secular, sixthly, religion to be ignored, as being a speculative subject, concerning individuals only—no religious creed to be recognized; seventhly, by the substitution of a direct system of taxation passed upon property, instead of the present indirect system, such taxation to be progressive; eighthly, the abolition of standing armies, as being a provocative to war; ninthly, the adoption of the principle of associated production, instead of that of capitalist production. Mr. Hume spoke strongly in defence of the foregoing propositions, and took occasion to justify most of the acts of the Commune hesitating only when he touched on the murder of Archbishop Darboy, and the priests. In conclusion he said: "The war is coming, and we should all know what we have to do when it does come. The present systems all need alteration, and the time has come when they must be altered."

A day or two since a ruralist from Anson or thereabouts visited the city on business, and in the course of his peregrinations purchased a package of Roman candles for the purpose of amusing his progeny on his return. His fireworks were carefully deposited in a rare pocket, and a short time thereafter he scolded his way to the depot to take the evening train. While loitering in the waiting-room admiring the sacks of ginger-bread, hard-boiled eggs and doughnuts temptingly displayed on the lunch-counter, he carelessly whisked his left coat tail against the red-hot stove, and trouble immediately ensued. The first rocket narrowly missed the face of a native who was in a half comatose condition, caused by much extract of ops, and, without waiting to inquire into particulars, he made the door in two gigantic leaps. All the occupants of the room immediately endeavored to follow his example, and with a worthy determination not to be distanced, the proprietor of the candles forced himself into the midst of the throng endeavoring frantically to escape. In the meantime the candles fizzed and popped, giving strength to the evident impression that the party was being bombarded with some sort of infernal machine and, strange as it may seem, the innocent cause of all the trouble was the worst frightened man in the lot.
Not until fearful holes had been burned in the broad portion of his nether garments, and the epidemics looked as though a strong mustard plaster had been pulled off violently, did he discover the cause of the panic.
Order was finally restored, though the effects on that man's coat-tails were disastrous; and we are also informed that his unmentionables required immediately half-soling.
The victim was willing to testify that not one of the candles missed fire.—Halifax Journal.

WOMEN IN COLLEGE.—The University of Edinburgh has been opened to women on equal terms with male students. That is just what we are all coming to, "brother" collegians.
There are now at least 250 female students in American colleges (with the best of this State, and double that number in collegiate institutions of lower grade, open to both sexes. The fact is, that if women want to come into our colleges (and they do) they will come, and the wisest of our colleges presidents and boards of government are not deterred by any bigbear of "woman's rights" or "strong-mindedness" from declaring that whatever may be their opinions as to woman's right or capacity to vote, hold offices of administrative, legislative, or judicial functions, they will not deny to them the best in the way of education that the times and country can afford, and will welcome them as soon as to wise and practicable in each college in their charge, not only to special courses therein, but to full membership. The tide is setting in strong, and old prejudices cannot broom it back.

Drainage in England.

Some very interesting facts in the noted English journal Land and Water on drainage in England, and its results, are worthy of momentary consideration.
Nothing, it seems, has so affected the English climate as the drainage which the agricultural population originally found necessary. The "rainy skies" of which the ancient chronicles tell us—the unparalleled fogs, which were so excessive dreary to a stranger, have disappeared. In the country, November is the only really foggy season; and in the cities the dull obscuring clouds are not attributed entirely to atmospheric causes. The humidity of the climate throughout England has greatly modified within two centuries. The increasing dryness of climate is attributed by many to the fact that the Gulf Stream has borne more directly to the English shores during the last century than before; but the larger class believe that agricultural energy has done much more than have any geographical alterations.

The over-cast of the farming population to get rid of the superfluous water in former times, has resulted in some little detriment of the interests of their own class. To such a perfection has drainage been carried, that the whole country sheds rain like the roof of a house. The water does not have time to sink into its natural reservoirs, but is hastened away in pipes and drains, to the river channels, overflows them, and destroys crops. A general dryness has been fostered by this artificial system of channels. The rainfall is not so copious as in former times, on account of the nature of the land. The water is hurried out of the country into the sea too rapidly; the more gradual methods should be adopted. The English are now anxiously seeking some manner of economising their rain supply. Water was formerly an obstruction to cultivation there; lack of it now bids fair to offer them a dangerous obstacle.

The story is told of Professor Agassiz that he was a poor Swiss lad, who, refusing to learn how to turn a penny by his father's trade, began alone and unaided to spell out the alphabet of Nature in rocks, birds, and beasts. The knowledge did not promise to help him on one whit against his neighbors. At last put shoes on his feet, or salt in his porridge, a comfortable home, a successful business waited for him, but he chose to go wandering through the Alps, hatched in hand, and often but a son in pocket, "a sum so little," he said, "when my hunger was so big!" So, hungry and half-frozen, he followed for years the half-faded signs of this unknown language, which he fancied God had spoken an not men, as a child might trace the footsteps of a lost mother. At last he made his way to London, to Sir Roderick Murchison, who, he thought could help him. "Well, sir, what do you know?" demanded the great naturalist, noting his barehead chin and ruddy cheeks. "I know," hesi-tated the lad, "a little about fishes." That night, at a meeting of the Royal Society, Sir Roderick held up a covered package. "I have here," he said, "a fish which existed in such an era"—some time long before Adam was born, and proceeded to state the exact conditions and position in which it was found. "Can our young friend, who knows something about fishes, tell us anything about it?" Whereupon the Swiss boy promptly drew upon the black board a skeleton monster, of which the real one, when uncovered, proved to be the exact duplicate, and then the old gardener present recognized him as one of themselves. "Well, I give him space very much as the King in Hades rose to receive Sisyphus." leon.

An elderly gentleman was recently "confident" on a train running into Keokuk, by sharpers, who induced him to buy a draft (worth) on Buffalo for $5.40, he paying them two $100 bills, and they paying $12.00 as change. The conductor on the train took the first opportunity to quietly suggest to the innocent old gentleman that he was afraid the draft was a fraud. "Well," was the bland response of the impervious grey-suff, "it is a bigger fraud than my two one hundred notes were, then I am not forty-three dollars ahead—which I think I am. I am not in the habit of dealing in counterfeit currency, but I always keep a little of that sort of stuff about me for the benefit of that sort of customer."

Nearly half of the internal revenue of Great Britain is derived from inland duties on malt and spirituous liquors and licenses for their sale.
For the year 1869 the amount of revenue obtained from these sources was nine million sterling, or ninety-five millions of dollars.

OUTLINE.—A good story is told of two prominent candidates for county positions. One of them, Mr. W., owns some corn fields in a certain locality, and the other day, having occasion to visit them, he invited a certain well-known politician of the locality to ride with him. On arriving at the spot it is said that W. drove up on a hill overlooking a splendid field of growing wheat which belonged to him. After bragging about it for some time he turned to his political companion and said: "You see what a splendid field of wheat this is. Now, if you will exert your influence in my behalf, I will give you the best acre of it in the field." His political companion turned abruptly around, and viewed him for a few seconds with mute astonishment. He then warmly exclaimed: "You must be a stupid! I—has agreed to give me the flour in the sack!"

A farmer near Nashua, N. H., recently bargained his farm to another for $2,000, but when the day and purchaser arrived, informed him that his wife was in hysterics about the trade, and guessed he would be would back out. "But," said the purchaser, "I have come a long distance, want the farm, and must have it. How much more would induce you to sell it?" "Well," replied the agriculturist, "give me $250 more and let her cry."

To the Electors of the County of Westmorland.

GENTLEMEN.—At the request of several friends and electors in the Parishes of Botford and Westmorland, I shall come forward as a Candidate for your suffrage at the approaching election to fill the vacancy in the Local Legislature, caused by the death of your representative, the Hon. Joseph L. Moore.

I shall, if elected, use my best exertions to advance the interests of this County and the Province generally.

I would endeavor to have a law passed empowering any two Magistrates in any locality in this Province to collect a debt to the amount of sixty or eighty dollars; I am in favor of abolishing the Legislative Council, and of having the New Court House built in a more central place in this County, together with any other changes which might be for the good of the whole Province.
