r life, our life is like a parrow raft Affoat upon the hungry sea; Hereon is but a little space, Hereon is but a little space, And all men, eager for a place, Do thrust each other in the sea; And each man, eager for a place, Does thrust his brother in the sea And so our life is wan with fears, And so the sea is salt with tears. Ah, well is thee, thou art asleep Ah, well is thee, thou art asleep

Ah, well is thee, thou art asleep!
One life, our life is like a curious play,
Where each man hideth from himself.
"Let us be open as the day,"
One mask does to the other say,
When he would deeper hide himself.
"Lat us be open as the day,"
That he may better lide himself.
And so the world goes round and round.

Intil our life with rest is crowned.
Ah, well is thee, thou art asleep!
At the present time the history of the Springhill mines and of the town that has risen about them is of special interest. The time of the first discovery of coal at Springhill dates back a long period of years, but the time when the property was first prospected with a view to the opening of mining operations there is only about 25 or 30 years ago. Previous to that time these mining areas, as well as other mining areas, as well as the town late a verage of the whole gave an advantation of Nava Scotia had. There are few questions upon which opinions differ more materially among feeders of live stock than upon that of the sovereign and gwanniesd remedy for all comparative advantages of raw and cook.

led manager of the mines and who held that important position up to about a year ago, is now mayor of Springhill, now a place of about 5,000 inhabitants. When the St John company took hold they went in for developing the mine on a large scale. A railway siding was soon built out to the Intercolonial railway, a distance of about five miles from the mines, and the Intercolonial soon became one of the company's best customers, taking in some recent years as much as 35,000 or 40,000 tons of their coal for steaming the loco, motives. Mr R. G. Leckie, now manager of the Londonderry Iron Works, conducted the negotiations attending the transfer of the mine from the St John company to the Montreal syndicate, the price paid by the latter for the mines being $800,000.

Under the management of the Spring, bill mining company the development had been steady and the mines had paid large dividends.

No serious necidents had ever occurred in connection with the mines, the burning of the buildings around the east slope being about the only mishap worth mentioning. This prosperous condition of things has continued under the Montreal company, and there has been no serious semigrated.
