POETRY.

Our Only Day.

Were this our only day,
Did not our yesterdays and to-morrows give
To hope and memory their interplay,
How should we bear to live?

Not merely what we are,
But what we were and what we are to be,
Make up our life—the far days each a star.

The near days nebulae,
At once would love to forget
Its transient paradise and joy delays of bliss,
And its delicious pangs of fond regret,
Were there no day but this.

And who, to win a friend,
Would tell the secrets of his heart invite
A fellowship that should begin and end
Between a night and night?

Who, too, would pause to prate
Of insult, or remember slight or scorn?
Who would this night lie down to sleep
With late,

Were there to be no more?
Who would take heed to wrong,
To misery's complaint or pity's call,
The long wall of the weak against the strong?

If this one day were all
And what were wealth with chameleons
The vanity of office, pride of caste,
The windy spangle of the bubble fame,
The very sparkle of the bubble fame,
If this day were the last?

Ay, what were all day's worth
Were there no looking backward or before—
If ever human life that drops to earth
Were lost for evermore?

But each day is a link
Of days that pass and never pass away;
For memory and hope—'tis life, to think
Each in our only day.

SELECT STORY.

Wolfe the Ranger.

CHAPTER I.—Continued.

"I propose," he said, "that we leave this place to-night. Why should we remain any longer? No good can come of our stay. The secret which your father has been seeking to learn will never be discovered. He will never see you again."

"Who can convince him of that?" she said, almost to herself.

"It will be difficult, I admit," he responded. "As difficult as to persuade a gambler never to touch a card again; but you—he will do anything for you, Con—Miss Grahame."

He rose as he spoke and drew nearer to the chair into which she had sunk, and stood looking down at her, his gray eyes glowing with admiration and passion, yet tempered with a light of cool calculation.

"I implore you to listen to me. This is no place for you. This wild country, this rough hut! Oh, they are not fit for one so young and lovely, one so fitted to adorn a palace, to shine in the society of the highest and best."

Constance raised her head and looked at him.

"I will tell my father you are here," Mr. Fenton said. His face paled under the rebuff, and as she rose and went to the door of the inner room he followed her.

"Mr. Fenton has returned, father," she said.

"At last!" exclaimed the doctor. "Come in, come in! Have you brought it—the acid? Give it to me."

Fenton passed in, and closed the door after him.

"Where have you been?" demanded the old man, peering over his shoulder at him with angry impatience. "I could have walked there all on my hands and knees, old man as I am, in half the time. Do you think it is a matter to be trifled with? It is one of life or death. Listen, Fenton—stay, no there!"

He clutched the young man's arm and drew him towards the bench, upon which stood the lamp of Jasper. Some liquid had been poured upon it since Constance had entered the room last, and the rock looked scorched and altered in appearance.

Fenton looked down at it with a scarcely concealed smile of contempt and incredulity.

"Do you see?" exclaimed the old man, with a feverish impatience. "Do you see how it is altered? Feel it! Take it up! Press it with your finger! It was as hard as the nether millstone an hour ago! It is now—you see you see!"

Fenton examined the lump of rock, to which the precious gems glittered and scintillated like so many sparks of fire, with careless scorn, and then put it down again with a shrug of his shoulders.

"I'm afraid," he began, but the old man interrupted him.

"You are filled with ignorance and doubt. Give me the acid and leave me to work alone. Your incredulity—and—doubt shall not dishearten me. No, I will persevere to the end. For her, for my girl! Stay!"

Fenton, who had turned to leave the room, stopped, and the doctor took two pieces of paper from the breast of his rough fur cloak.

"You think I have been working by guess. You regard me as a quack, a kind of mad astrologer."

"My dear doctor—"

"Don't deny it; I see it in your face. I have read it there for months. I am not blind. 'She, too—Constance—begins to think that I am mad. You are wrong, both of you.' He stopped a moment to bend over the crumpled paper, and he was in accordance with the hard and fast rules of science. I am not a quack, an astrologer, young man, but a chemist. It is to chemistry I look for the power to soften this hard stone," he struck it with his hand, "and dispense its wealth. You doubt me! See here! Here is the formula. I have written it out twice, in case anything should happen and one were lost. Take this copy, and treasure it as you would the key to a gold mine."

Fenton held out his hand with the same half-concealed sneer, but the old man drew the paper back.

"No, not yet. You shall have it when the discovery is complete. Go now," and he thrust the papers in his breast and waved him away.

CHAPTER II.

Fenton went into the next room.

Constance was making up the fire, which would burn throughout the night. He went up and took the light from her hands.

"Let me do this before I go."

"She did not refuse, but drew away from him.

He made up the fire, then arose and took up his cloak. Then he stood looking at her, his gray eyes keen and restless.

"Good night. You will not let me stay, Miss Grahame? I wish you would. These seconds are in our neighborhood, they say, and—"

"No, thank you," she replied, coldly; "I am not afraid."

As she spoke she glanced up at the revolver and rifle which hung on the rack above the fireplace.

His eyes followed her in silence for a moment.

"And you will not listen to what I say? If I could only persuade you to leave this house, this opportunity for leaving which may not occur again for months."

"My father would not consent to go," she replied, quietly. "But that is no reason why you should remain, Mr. Fenton."

He bit his lip as she came nearer to her.

"And do you think I would leave you or desert him?" he said in a low voice.

"We are quite safe," she said, coldly. "We need no protection. Daniel's farm is near, and we have nothing of which we can be robbed."

"And can you think of no reason why I should not leave you?" he said, his voice growing more hurried and losing its usual calmness. "Miss Grahame—Constance—ah, you are a woman! You must have seen, you must have read my heart, and have known how it has been with me long ago. Miss Grahame, I could not leave you, for—I love you!"

Constance shrunk back and turned pale. Then she drew herself upright, as if ashamed of her momentary weakness, and fixed her eyes upon him, fighting against the quick throbbing of his heart, which gazed her breath to come in painful gasps.

"I love you," he repeated, and the words seemed to give him strength and a kind of audacity. "I have said it now! But you know it before, for my eyes have said it for months past. Constance, don't shrink from me; hear me out. The love I offer you is no ordinary love; it is a passion which consumes me," he struck his breast with a sudden wild gesture. "It is a passion which can brook no denial. I ask you here—on my knees, if you will—to be my wife."

He was indeed on his knees as he spoke, and made as if to take her hand; but she stepped back from him, and clinched her hands at her side.

"Get up, if you please, Mr. Fenton," she said, and her voice was like ice, hard and cold as steel. "I—I did not know. If I had guessed—Oh, say no more, please; but go."

He rose, white to the lips, his eyes seeming to glow with the wound of her frigid refusal.

"You—you say this?" he uttered, almost inarticulately; "you—you refuse me?"

She turned from him, but he stepped between her and the door.

"Wait! wait!" he said, and he put his hand to his throat as if he were choking. "Give me a minute—a moment to realize it. You will not accept my love? You will not be my wife? Is that what you mean?"

"I cannot be your wife," she said in a low voice full of pain and repugnance. "I have said it; I can say no more. Let me pass, please."

"One moment," he said, hoarsely. "You have not thought; you are offended with me for speaking so suddenly. But think, for God's sake! I could wait no longer. Have I not waited long enough?"

"If you had waited for years, my answer would be the same," she replied with apparent calm.

"What is there in me that you should hate me so?" he demanded, asking the question which springs to the bosom of every man whose passionate love is repulsed. "What have I done that you should treat me as if I were unfit to speak of love?"

Constance turned her head away. Much as she disliked the man and hated his advances, she was excited by his words.

"I do not hate you, Mr. Fenton. You have done nothing to deserve such—such feeling; but—oh, I can say no more than that what you wish can never be. Please, please go."

"Not yet," he said, doggedly. "I cannot give you up, the one great hope of my life, without a struggle. I know I am unworthy of you; but, before God, I will strive to be less so. I will—I will make you happy. I will take you away from here and place you in your proper sphere. I will win a place fit for you in the world at home. All my plans are unmade. Leave here with your father and me to night and we will return to England. I have friends there who will help me. I am not without talents. If I have you to work for, I will show the world what I can do."

"Oh, stop, stop, please," she said, painfully. "All you can say would make no difference. I—I never could be your wife; never, never."

She made a little gesture with her hands.

"Then—then listen to me," he said. "Such love as mine will take no refusal. Say what you will, I will not give you up. Like you, I say never, never! All my life and strength, every faculty I possess, shall be exerted to win you."

"Let me pass," she panted.

"If not now, then in the coming time I will win you. I can wait. Work and wait."

He drew aside and she went gasping, but he put out his hand and stopped her.

"One word more. Don't rob me of my hope. Give me the chance that a time will make for me. I love you now as never, I think, man loved before. I will go on loving you while you leave me here; but—she panted and drew a long breath, his eyes fixed on her face—"if you should rob me of that hope, if you should marry"—his hands clinched—"let the man who takes my place beware!"

Constance turned on him, all her spirits roused and on fire.

"Love does not stoop to threaten, Mr. Fenton."

She might as well have struck him. "Threaten! Yes, it is a threat. I know it," he retorted, hoarsely. "Let it stand as such. You have roused all the bad that is in me—beware of it." Then his mood changed, and he was at her feet again.

"Ah, Constance, forgive me. It is my love that drives me mad."

"Yes, you are mad," she said, coldly; and with a look of scorn she drew her skirts beyond the reach of his hand.

"As she did so a cry rose from the inner room, the door was flung open, and the old doctor stood in the aperture, his hands above his head, his face working with emotion.

"Constance! Fenton!" he cried.

"Come quickly."

Constance sprang to his side and caught his arm.

"Father, father. What is it?"

The old man waved his hand in the air, and both saw that he held the piece of rock. Rock no longer, but a soft and shapeless mass.

"I have found it! I have succeeded!" he exclaimed, his voice shrill and broken with excitement. "Constance, my child, my child, go down on your knees and thank God! I have made the great discovery at last! We are rich! Wealth, untold wealth, lies within our grasp. Look! and he extended his claw-like hand and let fall through his fingers a number of crystals and opals.

"They fall, and rolled, a glittering, scintillating shower, upon the rough floor.

Fenton sprang forward and picked up some of them.

"The opals," he exclaimed.

"Yes, the opals!" echoed the old man with an exultant laugh. "You laughed and mocked at me, Fenton. You thought me mad. You too, Constance! What do you say now? We are rich beyond the dreams of avarice. We will go home—to England; you shall have all that money can buy, you shall take the position that is yours by birth. Rich, do I say? There is no wealthier woman in all Australia than Constance Grahame, the doctor's daughter. See here! Come."

He dragged rather than led her into the room. "See!" He took a piece of rock, peered upon it some liquid from the crucible, watched it for a moment or two with dilating eyes, then dashed it in his hand and dropped it. "See!"

excitement, uttered an oath under his breath.

"It is true," he exclaimed.

"The old man laughed triumphantly. "Yes, you believe it now, now that you see it with your own eyes. Rich, rich! Ah, it is not of myself I think, but of you—of you, Constance."

"Father, father, be calm, dear, dear father!" she murmured, trying to soothe him.

"I am calm. Look at my hand. Is it not steady? It shook like a leaf in the wind. It is not for myself I care, but for you. Do you think I have not seen how you have suffered in this solitude, this wild life? Do you think I have been neglectful? No! I have always looked forward to the time when I could take you back to England, to the life you are fitted for. And it has come at last! We are poor no longer. All round us—his waved his hand—the untold gems looked in the rock which has hitherto defied us. It can defy us no longer. I have found the 'Opus Sesame,' Science—science, Fenton, the science at which you sneered, has vanquished nature. Rich, did I say? Ah, and famous too. The world will acknowledge in me the discoverer of the great secret, the chemical which can soften the Jasper. Rich and famous!"

He sunk on to the ottoman empty box which served as a seat, and panted.

Constance saw that he was fainting.

"The brandy," she exclaimed. "Get it. Stay with him while I go."

She ran into the larger room, and Fenton put his arm round the old man and supported him. As he did so the doctor's head sunk. He had swooned, Fenton opened his waistcoat, and in doing so saw a piece of closely written paper.

He took it from the old man's breast pocket and looked at it. It was the formula, the particulars of the process which had transformed Constance Grahame from the daughter of a poor Australian squatter to a wealthy heiress.

He put it in his own pocket and felt in the old man's breast for the second paper, the copy. It was not there.

There was no time to search, there had been scarcely time to secure—to read—the one paper. Constance ran in.

"Don't be alarmed," said Rawson Fenton. "He has only fainted," and he looked up at her with a face almost as white and deathlike as the old man's.

Constance put her arm round her father and stared some brandy through his lips. He recovered slowly and painfully, and as he did so the sound of a sharp and rapid knocking at the outer door broke the silence.

Constance motioned to Fenton, and he went into the larger room and, with his hand upon his revolver, said:

"Who is there?"

"It is me, Fenton—Dan."

Fenton unlocked and unbarred the

Ayer's Pills

"I was troubled a long time with sick headache. It was usually accompanied with severe pain in the temples, a sense of fullness and tenderness in one eye, a bad taste in my mouth, tongue coated, hands and feet cold, and sickness at the stomach. I tried a good many remedies recommended for this complaint, but was not until I door, and a middle-aged man, with the unmistakable appearance of a squatter, entered. It was the owner of the nearest farm, the man to whom Fenton had gone for the acid.

"What is the matter, Dan?" said the man, looking round cautiously, then drew near to Fenton and said in a low, agitated voice:

"Can Miss Grahame hear us?"

Fenton shook his head.

"No; she is in the next room with the doctor; he is ill. What is the matter?"

"The rangers!" whispered Dan. "They're close at hand. One of our men got scent of their intentions. They mean mischief to-night. My place is to be attacked, and then the doctor's. We're prepared for them, but knowing how weak they are here, and there being a lady, I thought I'd run down and bring Miss Constance and the doctor up to my place. We'll take care of 'em, and you can bear a hand in the scuffle, if you like."

Fenton's face paled.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., NOV. 29, 1895.

Mothers' Meetings.

It is the custom of the W. C. T. U. to hold, once in two months, a Mothers' Meeting. Such a meeting was held on Thursday, the 21st inst. Mrs. Hemmison presided, announcing as the subject for the afternoon "The conversion of our families." After singing, prayer and scripture reading, Mrs. Hemmison spoke at some length in a most interesting and touching manner, emphasizing the influence of the mother upon the spiritual life of the child.

These meetings are not confined to the members of the Union, and all women interested in the welfare and training of the young are earnestly invited to be present. Due notice is given from the pulpits of the town, and anyone wishing to attend will be most cordially welcomed.

Order in a Town.

Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness may be said to be the right of every one—and because some people do not recognize these rights as belonging to others we require government with the power of enforcing the observance of these fundamental principles. So in a town where there are lawless men there must be regulations for police protection. It is the interest of all to have such provision and the duty of all to support the arrangements for securing the good order on which the welfare of each depends.

If the arrangements are not satisfactory; if the officers are not competent constitutional means should be taken to replace them with men who are competent. But while they are in office they have a right to the moral support of the people who appoint them. Order must be observed if society is to exist.

But just what should be meant by order is not so clearly understood or agreed upon. Some persons seem to think it is in good order for large groups to stop the traffic and block the sidewalks and crowd the platforms of Railways where the room they take is needed by the travelling public who pay for the use of the property the loafers monopolize. On the other hand some seem to think that if half a dozen walk in a group and are not as silent as they would be at a funeral, that order has been outraged and to such an extent that some one must be forthwith arrested and deprived of liberty and the pursuit of happiness, even if it be left to exist in a town where the Salvation Army makes day and night hideous, with its noise, and blocks the streets, night after night, when the views of order are so different some collisions may be expected. The extremists will probably have unpleasant meetings.

It may be said, with reason, we think that the authorities should interfere no more than is necessary to secure order. Their interference is a necessary evil and should be limited to necessary occasions. The presumption is that men have a right to their liberty, and a reason with some weight is required to justify the authorities in taking it away. To deprive men of their freedom without ground for the action is not in the interest of law and order; it is decidedly against good order. Such action breaks down respect for law very fast. It promotes anything but a law-abiding spirit. Care should be taken not to arrest innocent men. If there is a disturbance it would require to be very serious to justify the arrest of persons who are not seen or known to have responsibility for it. To seize the first man visible without knowing anything of his action would seem to make it very doubtful if the disturbance is serious enough to warrant any arrest. If the most culpable man in the opinion of the officers is one who is shown to have nothing to do with the trouble it is evident no great outrage has been committed. To deprive a respectable citizen of his liberty is a serious matter. If one citizen can be thus treated another can be imprisoned, and government instead of being for the protection of the people is an instrument of oppression. The good sense of a town suffers sometimes far more by the incompetency or over zeal of its officers than it does by some slight action of boys that might need a warning. And no officer, high or low, should exhibit a desire to get an occasion for inflicting pains and penalties on any class of citizens. Order should be maintained at whatever cost and therefore those in charge of a town's affairs should be careful to see that its administration does not tend to promote disorder.

New York has 7,300 liquor saloons, one to every 224 inhabitants; Chicago has 7,000, one to every 242 inhabitants; Boston has 1,030, one to every 600 inhabitants; Philadelphia has 1,255, one to every 541 inhabitants; Halifax has 129, one to every 350 inhabitants. In Philadelphia the number of licenses has decreased by 3,000 since the price of them was put up to $1,000 each. Boston charges $1,500 a year for retail licenses; Philadelphia, $1,000; Chicago, $500; New York, $200; Halifax, $100 to $150. A man who could buy a license in Halifax and sell it in Boston could drink champagne.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the ACADIAN.

GENTLEMEN,—As Dr. G. E. DeWitt has published in the Acadian Orchardist of Nov. 5th a letter professing to explain certain transactions between me and "The Wolfville Fruit Land Improvement Company Limited" and himself, which letter is incorrect in several particulars; in justice to myself and in the interest of Truth I ask you to kindly publish in your paper the following truthful narration of facts.

On the 4th Aug., 1893, I entered into a written agreement with the said Company to purchase the lots mentioned in my advertisement for the sum of $300.00 (paying $50.00 down). Subsequently it was agreed that a Deed of said lots be sent me upon receipt from me of a further payment of $244.00 (being the balance due on original agreement less 7 1/2 per cent. discount for cash). On the 25th Oct., 1893, I mailed a Bank draft for the said sum of $244.00 to the (then) Secretary of the said Company, expecting to receive my Deed forthwith; but I never received any Deed until July, 1894. Last September I visited Wolfville, having the said Deed (still unregistered) with me; when through the kindness of Dr. DeWitt I was shown my lots and the said Company's lands. Expressing to the Doctor my inability to see the desired beauty in my lots he generously offered me other lots in exchange for mine, provided I would give him in addition certain sums of money then named by him. I took time to consider and before leaving Wolfville I again called upon Dr. DeWitt and informed him that I purposed putting no more money into lots in Wolfville, and that I wanted to sell my lots, and that my price was $100.00 for the two lots; and I then offered to surrender unto him as President of the said Company (the Grantor therein named) my Deed (which I showed him) provided he would pay me $100.00. He declined the offer. I then informed him that I intended to advertise my property in a local paper of the town, for sale for $100.00, and that I would state in the advertisement, in full and in plain English, the terms of the offer which I had made to the Doctor, and that I would give him in an even exchange. The Doctor then said (in substance) that there was to be a meeting of the stock holders of the Company on the following week and that he would lay the matter before them and notify me as to the result. I then said I would lay it again, and departed. All of the remaining transactions with him are in Letters and Post Cards, and as he has stated. Next I received from the Doctor a letter of which the following is a true copy:

Sept. 12, 1895.
DEAR SIR,—In accord with my promise I now report to you concerning the exchange of lots. We have decided to convey to you lot No. 2 in Block B on University Avenue. You will see that the lot is in the best locality, the second lot south of Highland Park. You will please write a Deed having in it the restrictions the Company require, and if satisfactory to the Company on receipt of your Deed cancelling the lots mentioned therein, I will have executed the Deed and return to you.

Yours truly,
(signed) G. E. DeWitt.
Upon receipt of the above letter I concluded to accept his offer of this lot, not thinking that the Company would be unreasonable in their restrictions, but still not knowing exactly what restrictions they would require as I had never seen two of their Deeds or Documents exactly alike in this respect. Consequently I wrote the Doctor a Card to the effect that I would accept the offer as contained in his letter (above copied). On the 23rd Sept. inst. finding some leisure time I commenced to write the Deed to me from the Company of the lot referred to in the Doctor's letter, when the first thought that came to me was that I had better find out about the restrictions required in the Deed before writing it, so I at once wrote the Doctor a letter of which the following is an exact copy:

Fredericton, N. B., Sept. 23rd, 1895.
Dr. G. E. DeWitt, Pres. and Manager of The Wolfville F. L. Im. Co., Ltd.
Dear Sir,—Before writing the Deed of the Lot to you I would request you to let me know what the Restrictions are that the Co. require in the Deed. This old Deed in my possession has this clause in it: "The Company nevertheless reserves to itself the right to prohibit the erection of fences around said lot and reserving the right of approval of the Architecture and location of all buildings on said Lot." Under the foregoing clause the Co. have defined nothing so that the purchaser is solely dependent upon their Will or Whims. If a purchaser should hold his lot for a few years before building he would then have to ask the Co. to define by a Writing under Seal what their Will and pleasure might be as to his intended building operations. We cannot tell who may then be the leading spirit in the Co. But if it suits the purpose of the letter at that time to keep this lot vacant so as to have an unobstructed view or other privileges sometimes obtained from unoccupied lots the Co. might then make such demands as to location and Architecture as to virtually prohibit any buildings being built. If the above clause is inserted for an honest purpose it must be merely to prevent buildings going up too near the street and to protect the grounds from the objectionable appearance of shacks. I herewith submit a clause which will meet the latter case and at the same time keep the Company within reasonable limits. The clause is this: "The Company nevertheless reserves to itself the right to prohibit the erection of fences around said lot and reserving the right to prohibit the erection of buildings on said lot nearer to University Avenue than ten feet or to goods than $700.00 when such buildings are completed." If the Company are not willing to define their restrictions in some such way as this they may as well keep the land; for if a man buys land and pays for it he expects to have some vested rights in it other than the right to pay taxes on it and the right to ask a Corporation (which some Authorities say has no such authority) to build a house on it. I want to build a house on the house he shall be obliged to locate it 5 feet or 100 feet from the street. Trusting that I have made my meaning plain I shall await your reply.

Yours truly,
(signed) G. E. DeWitt.
I received the Blank Deed referred to and looked at it and saw that it contained a clause similar to the one objected to by me in my previous letter and I at once mailed the letter of which the following is a copy:
Fredericton, N. B., Sept. 27th, 1895.
Dr. G. E. DeWitt, Wolfville.

Dear Sir,—For reasons stated in my letter to you of the 23rd inst., I decline to accept any Deed containing such an indefinite clause, as the Blank just received from you contains and I shall adhere to my original intention of advertising the lot for sale as by reference to your paper fully appears.

In the Doctor's letter in the Acadian Orchardist (above referred to) is the following sentence: "Mr. Coy suggested that the word 'Architecture' and the sentence referring to prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors be left out." The clause which induced the good Doctor to publish such a false statement; as to say that I suggested to leave out any sentence referring to prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, I leave for the better of your readers (who know him better than I do) to seek.

I notice a letter of the Doctor's in the Acadian of the 8th inst. containing a clause which suggests to my mind the most charitable solution of this mystery. It is the clause in which he intimates that he has been reading between the lines of my advertisement. I suppose he has been reading between the lines of my letters instead of reading the lines themselves. If the doctor ever again publishes an attempted analysis of business letters which I have sent him, I would thank him if he would first carefully read the lines of said letters and never again publish any non-existent statement that he would wish to see between the lines thereof. Thanking you for the valuable space allotted to me, I am, Gentlemen, Yours truly,
HARVELOCK COY.
Dated at Fredericton, Nov. 12th, 1895.

Much of late has been said and written about Wolfville and its beautiful scenery, but the scenery of perhaps the prettiest town in Nova Scotia, has never been made known. This little town is Hunterport, which was once one of the most prosperous towns in Nova Scotia. Back of the town rise four high hills, from the top of the highest one may get a magnificent view of the Basin of Minas, Blomidon, Parrsboro and Five Islands. The harbor at Hunterport is said to be very fine, the Avon River is large and deep enough to hold all the navies on earth, also the beach is said by men who know, to be the best in Canada for repairing ships.

AMICUS OPINIO.
We are pleased to learn from Principal Oakes that Horton Collegiate Academy is enjoying more than ordinary prosper. It is by this term. Seventy-two students are enrolled against 56 at the same date last year, and the term's income will be about $1,000 larger than that of the corresponding term of '94. Every room in Chipman Hall and the Academy Home is occupied. The students are contented and the order is of the best. The advantages which the Academy offers to students preparing for college are greater, Mr. Oakes believes, than can be secured in the public schools.

Parliament will meet on the second day of January next.

Local and Provincial.

The denominational prayer meeting of the Methodist church is now held on Thursday evening instead of on Wednesday evening.

The Christian Endeavor Society in connection with St. Andrew's church now meets on Tuesday evening. Visitors are always welcome.

A reception was given by the young ladies of the Seminary on Friday evening last. The uninitiated found the topic innovation quite an improvement.

Quite a number of Wolfvillians went to Halifax on Thursday evening last, to see "Faust," which was put on at the Academy of Music by Lewis Morrison. All were delighted with the performance.

New lines in Stationery just opened at the Wolfville Bookstore.

A Bean Supper and Fancy Sale is to be given in the Evangelical Hall, Lower Horton, on Wednesday next, Dec. 4th, when a good time is promised to all who attend. Doors open at 4 p. m. Don't miss it.

Rev. Wm. Brown, of Grand Pre, who occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church in this town on Sunday evening last, preached an able and stirring sermon, which was much enjoyed by those in attendance.

The death of Miss Yaux, after an illness of only a week, has caused much sorrow to all who were acquainted with her. Only last week we recorded the death of Mrs. Yaux. The ACADIAN extends sympathy to the bereaved ones.

The ship, Jennie Porter sailed from Kingsport on Monday night for Havana, carrying a cargo of 2555 barrels of potatoes. They were shipped by Mr. James Stewart, of Lakeville, and others. Mr. Stewart went along to look after the sale of the cargo.

The Acadia Electric Light Co., intend adding two new dynamos to their plant very shortly. This will give them power sufficient for carrying about five hundred more lights. At present they are unable to supply the demand. We are glad to note that this progressive Company is meeting with the success which its enterprise deserves.

We understand the Athenaeum Society have arranged for a lecture under its auspices on Monday evening next by Hon. L. H. Davies, M. P., of Charlottetown, P. E. I. Mr. Davies is the foremost Liberal politician of the Maritime Provinces, and is said to be an eloquent and forcible speaker. Many will no doubt avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing him.

Work on Mr. Herbin's building is being pushed forward rapidly and it will soon be ready for use. The first floor will contain an excellent store which will be devoted to Mr. Herbin's business. Mr. R. H. Tweedell, manufacturing jeweller, will also have a room here. The second story will be fitted very conveniently as a dwelling. The building when completed will make a valuable addition to the town.

The friends of the ACADIAN will be glad to learn that our subscription list is growing longer each week, and that the new names being added are the names of our best people. This week, among others, we are pleased to add the name of W. L. Berra, Esq., of Halifax. Mr. Berra will please accept our best thanks for his kind words concerning the ACADIAN. We shall endeavor to make the paper continue to merit his good opinion.

Temperance Sunday.

Last Sunday was observed as Temperance Sunday by many of the churches and Sunday-school throughout our Province.

The text preached from by Rev. Mr. Hale in the Methodist church on Sunday morning was from Acts six: 28—"Great is Diana of the Ephesians." The sermon was on Temperance. Diana of the Ephesians was great in its vested interests; so the Diana of the liquor interest is great in its financial strength and in the number of its devotees, great in its social influence. Diana of the liquor interest is great in its political power, great in its demoralizing and destructive tendency. The speaker closed by hoping that the time would soon come when the temple of Bacchus would be like that of Diana—completely demolished, and its devotees would be warshipping at the shrine of Temperance.

In the evening, in the Baptist church, Rev. Mr. Trotter spoke from the words: "Whoever shall offend one of these little ones, which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were cast into the depth of the sea." The speaker referred to the responsibility resting upon parents and those having the training of the young, in making them acquainted with the terrible evils of intemperance. He also referred to danger of moderate drinking and the sin of thrusting temptation in the way of a brother by offering him the wine-cup. The sermon was an excellent one and received the closest attention from the large audience assembled.

Temperance Sunday.

Last Sunday was observed as Temperance Sunday by many of the churches and Sunday-school throughout our Province.

The text preached from by Rev. Mr. Hale in the Methodist church on Sunday morning was from Acts six: 28—"Great is Diana of the Ephesians." The sermon was on Temperance. Diana of the Ephesians was great in its vested interests; so the Diana of the liquor interest is great in its financial strength and in the number of its devotees, great in its social influence. Diana of the liquor interest is great in its political power, great in its demoralizing and destructive tendency. The speaker closed by hoping that the time would soon come when the temple of Bacchus would be like that of Diana—completely demolished, and its devotees would be warshipping at the shrine of Temperance.

In the evening, in the Baptist church, Rev. Mr. Trotter spoke from the words: "Whoever shall offend one of these little ones, which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were cast into the depth of the sea." The speaker referred to the responsibility resting upon parents and those having the training of the young, in making them acquainted with the terrible evils of intemperance. He also referred to danger of moderate drinking and the sin of thrusting temptation in the way of a brother by offering him the wine-cup. The sermon was an excellent one and received the closest attention from the large audience assembled.

The New Woman's Way. While the exploited "New Woman" is largely a myth, the woman of to-day is trying new ways of dealing with serious problems.

The "New Woman" does things in a new way. Miss Summers graduated from an eastern college in 1881 and went to a western city as teacher in public schools.

Tommy—Paw, why is it the good die young? Mr. Figg—They don't die young because they are good, but they stay good because they die young.

Alphonse—You never heard of women cashiers running off with their employer's money.

Henri—Not often; but when it does happen they take the employer too.

For Spasmodic Coughs—MINARDS HONEY BALSAM.

Bride (on shipboard at sea)—I feel so sick, my dear, and if I should die and they bury me here you'll sometimes come and plant flowers on my grave won't you?

Hall's Hair Restorer cures dandruff and scalp affections; also all cases of baldness where the glands which feed the roots of the hair are not closed up.

Chollye—Youah laughah has consented to marry me and—er—I'd like to know if there is any insanity in youah family?

Old gentleman (emphatically)—There must be.

Judge—And how my good man, what made you kiss the lady? Canning Culprit—Kiss Honor, my indebted love of beauty.

Miss Pease—Judge—er—I do not think I'll present any further.

If you do not know how good remedy Garfield Tea really is for constipation and sick headaches, send a postal card to D. Denmore & Co., 271 Queen Street, West, Toronto.

Harold, she gasped. I have just been told there is a price on your head. Her foreign suitor drew her to his breast.

No, darling, he whispered, I have never quoted any prices for a broken set. The bad goes with the rest.

Across the faculties, stimulate the circulation, purify the blood, with Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Between intervals of sobbing the Boston dentist remarked: "Little girl, just evacuate in this receptacle the fluid contents from your oral cavity."

Mamma! wailed the child, "what does he want me to do! And with an unusual smile the woman replied: "Spit."

Yes, wailed the inventor, I think I see millions of it, if I can only get the thing to work.

No, dearie, said the deabing thing. What have you in mind now? A scheme for confining cyclones in bicycle tires, say? There is your ideal motor, at merely the cost of a cap.

For Croupy Children—MINARDS HONEY BALSAM.

I reiterate it. It was an emancipated woman who spoke, and her earnest tone betrayed her depth of feeling.

I reiterate it, I say! A woman who will beat her husband, the timid, tender darling she has vowed to protect and cherish, does not deserve to have one.

Prisoner—What, that man is going to defend me? Why, he couldn't bring an innocent man through!

I cannot vote, she wailed. Neither can the baby, said he, but that does not alter the fact that he is boss.

For Biliousness—MINARDS FAMILY PILLS.

Watts—Do you think a man can be a Christian on a dollar a day? I don't know how he can afford to be anything else.

Husband—I suppose you'll be asleep when I come home. Wife—You mean you suppose you'll come home when I'm asleep.

Wallace—How did you feel the first time you got into a barber's chair for a shave? Perry—To tell the truth about it I felt like a bare faced fraud.

Dyspepsia, the root of innumerable evils, is readily cured by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

James—I Miss Snowball a graduate of Yassar? William—She's. I thought she was. I heard her ask if the muzzle of a gun was to keep it from going off.

Elbows—Did you hear about the duel between DePue and Old Soak? They fought with pistols. Slobbs—Were they loaded? Elbows—No, not the pistols.

For Worms in Children—CHERRY VERMIFUGE.

Tommy—Paw, why is it the good die young? Mr. Figg—They don't die young because they are good, but they stay good because they die young.

Alphonse—You never heard of women cashiers running off with their employer's money.
