The Musland s Motive.

What was Holmes' motive in preventing Mrs. Pitezel and the children from communicating or meeting?—A. To keep the knowledge of her husband's death from Mrs. Pitezel.

Detective Geyer had some difficulty in making clear to some of the jurymen that it would cost Holmes his life if the children and Mrs. Pitezel met and that flis fact constituted the sfrongest possible motive for the murder of the children. The photograph of Halmes, he said, had been positively identified at every hotel where Holmes had stopped, and by Mrs Nudel, from whom the fatal cottage was rented, and that Ryves identified that of Alice as one of the girls he had seen about the house.

While in prison in Philadelphia, Mrs. Pitezel, on May 30, wrote a letter to the Fidelity Insurance Company of Phiadellphia, giving a list of what the service of the stuff of the louse. Mrs. Armbrust also found parts of a burnt waist, made of dark material, in the woodbox, and also a pair of black stockings. The latter she washed and kept to give to some poor child who needed them, and the wood-dark material, in the woodbox, and they were done the house. We had in all probability been put there to prevent show or rain coming down the chimney, so I gave the matter very little consideration, and the things were, I believe, taken away by the scavengers. What I found was a blue print dress and some woolen striped material; some other dark colored goods and a quantity of straw, all partially burned. They were packed tightly in the chimney, which probably prevented them being of shoes and an odd shoe in the wood-box, and they were thrown out with the rest of the stuff. They were girls' buttoned shoes, made of black leather, lightly made and not very much worn. Mrs. Armbrust remarked at the time, show and they were thrown out with the children and that Ryves identified that of Alice as one of the girls have a summer of shoes and an odd shoe in the chimney, which probably prevented t

The Owner of the Cottage.

Mrs. Nudel, owner of the now famous Nudel cottage, followed the corpulent that time kept his own carriage and spen money lavishly. Since the revelation to the lad's mother.
