House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Thursday, June 11, 1925

The House met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I beg to present the third and final report of the select standing committee on Railways and Shipping, and as it is necessary that a motion be made for the printing of it, I would suggest that the reading of the report be dispensed with at this time. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), that the House concur in the recommendation contained in the last paragraph of the said report respecting the printing, as an appendix to the Journals of the House, of the proceedings of and evidence taken by the said committee.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Vercheres): I move, seconded by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Fafard), that the select standing committee on Privileges and Elections be given leave to sit while the House is sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ALLEGED POTATO COMBINE

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): I beg to lay on the table of the House the interim report by the registrar appointed under the Combines Investigation Act, 1923, of his investigation into an alleged combine operating to limit competition in connection with the marketing of the New Brunswick potato crop.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 184, from the Senate, respecting The Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Hudson.

Bill No. 185, from the Senate, for the relief of George William Quibell.—Mr. Stewart (Hamilton).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—NEEBING YARD

Hon. Mr. MANION:

1. How much was spent by the Canadian National Railways on the railway yards, round house, buildings and other works in the township of Neebing, just west of Fort William?
2. When were these works completed?
3. How long have they been made use of?
4. Is it true that they are being closed up at the present time?
5. If so, what are the reasons?
6. If closed now, when will they put back into operation?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. $1,305,053.
2. September 16, 1923.
3. Since September 16, 1923.
4. Partially.
5. No grain moving.
6. With grain movement in the fall.

QUEBEC HARBOUR

Mr. HOEY:

1. What number of ocean steamers loaded or discharged passengers or cargo during the month of May last, in Quebec?
2. What was the average length of stay in port per steamer?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. Seventy-two.
2. Thirty-one hours.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—BROADCASTING

Mr. DOUCET:

1. What number of persons are employed by the Canadian National Railways in connection with their broadcasting stations?
2. How many persons are employed by the Canadian National Railways in connection with the receiving sets operated on trains?
3. How many trains are equipped with receiving sets?
4. Between what points do trains equipped with receiving sets operate?
5. Is the use of such receiving sets limited to passengers travelling by parlor or pullman car?

REVISED EDITION

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Nine.
2. Thirty-six operators.
3. Nine trains, or thirty-seven cars.
4. Montreal and Vancouver; Toronto and Winnipeg; Halifax and St. John; Montreal and Chicago; Montreal and Quebec.
5. Yes.

SCREENINGS—HEAD OF THE LAKES

Hon. Mr. MANION:

What was the price of the different grades of screenings at head of lakes in each of the years 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923 and 1924?

Hon. Mr. LOW:

The board has no information available other than the daily published quotations of the Winnipeg market. A prominent shipper of screenings has furnished the following records of the range of prices of actual purchases:

	Per ton
1920—
Refuse screenings..	$ 2 50 to $28 00
Standard recleaned screenings..	13 00 to 56 00
1921—
Refuse screenings..	1 00 to 5 00
Standard recleaned screenings..	5 50 to 14 50
1922—
Refuse screenings..	Nil to 7 00
Standard recleaned screenings..	6 00 to 14 00
1923—
Refuse screenings..	3 00 to 8 50
Standard recleaned screenings..	10 00 to 16 50
1924—
Refuse screenings..	50 to 10 50
Standard recleaned screenings..	12 00 to 22 00

Hon. Mr. MANION:

1. What was the total amount of screenings from all the elevators at the head of the lakes in the years 1923 and 1924?
2. How many tons of screenings were sold at head of lakes for local feeding of stock?

Hon. Mr. LOW:

1. The total amounts of dockage as set by the chief inspector, on grain unloaded at all elevators at the head of the lakes, after allowing for separations of commercial grain, were:

Crop Year	Tons
1922-23..	179,550
1923-24..	253,956

[Mr. Doucet.]

2. The total quantities shipped from the elevators for local consumption were:

Crop Year 1922-23:	Tons
Standard re-cleaned screenings.. .	39½
Elevator scalpings..	30
Elevator screenings..	2,062½
Total..	2,132

Crop Year 1923-24:	Tons
Standard re-cleaned screenings.. .	4
Elevator screenings..	215
Refuse screenings..	298
Total..	517

The actual quantities used for feed are not shown.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

COLONEL A. H. BORDEN

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

1. Is Colonel A. H. Borden, lately Assistant Officer Commanding at Toronto, now in receipt of pay and and allowances from the Militia department?
2. If not, on what date did he retire?
3. On what grounds was retirement sanctioned?
4. What is the amount of his retiring allowance?

Right Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker. this of all questions on the order paper would be about the shortest to answer; I would think also about the easiest, so far as the material is concerned, to obtain. I do not see why that should be made an order for return; it is conspicuously one that should not be.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Paragraph 3 of the question will involve a long statement. I undertake to bring down the return at once.

EXPENDITURES ON PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. COOTE:

What amount has been expended in each province since confederation on (a) harbours and rivers; (b) dredging; (c) canals; (d) public buildings; and (e) graving docks and dry docks?

TRAINING CAMPS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Are any June or other training camps being held for the militia?
2. If so, where and for what units and length of time?
3. What will be done this year for artillery units as to training?

STE. FLORENCE STATION—FREIGHT

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. How many pounds of freight were shipped from Ste. Florence, Métapédia county, during 1922, 1923 and 1924, respectively?

2. How much of that freight did the National Railways of Canada receive as their share?

3. How many pounds of freight from that station were shipped f.o.b. Ste. Florence, and what share thereof did the National Railways receive?

4. What was the quantity in pounds of freight shipped, and paid on delivery?

5. How many cars were shipped and received at Ste. Florence in each of said years?

6. What was the revenue from sale of passenger tickets in same period?

MINERS AND STEEL WORKERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, can the government give us any information with regard to this Canadian Press despatch from Glace Bay:

Glace Bay, N.S., June 11.—After a pitched battle lasting upwards of fifteen minutes, striking United Mine Workers of America miners recaptured the New Waterford power house station, shortly after noon to-day, and early this afternoon were in complete charge of the plant. One man, William Davis, was killed and another, Gilbert Watson, was shot in the stomach and severely injured. A number of the company's police were injured.

Does not this constitute a state of civil war? And how far must it go before the government will intervene?

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have telegraphic advice indicating that the facts are about as stated by my hon. friend. I assume that the provincial government is closely in touch with the situation, and will indicate, as is its right, if the situation is such that it desires any assistance of this government.

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (West Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that a number of hon. members are very much worried about the situation in Nova Scotia. I would ask the Minister of Labour if he proposes to keep in close touch with the situation so that in the event of the failure of the provincial government to preserve the interests of all concerned, he will then be in a position to take appropriate action?

Mr. MURDOCK: Mr. Speaker, we have been keeping in close touch with the situation, but I think we have a right to assume that the provincial government, having direct authority and control and being immediately interested, is entirely competent to deal therewith. I could not suggest to my hon. friend that in certain eventualities we might change our attitude.

ROUYN RAILWAY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. A. LAPIERRE (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to this article in the Globe of Saturday, June 6:

Hon. G. H. Ferguson's announcement that the Dominion government was not disposed to give approval for the Nipissing Central railway extension into Rouyn came as somewhat of a surprise after the supposedly well-informed buying of Noranda shares on Thursday had carried that stock up to a new high record price.

Has the minister any further information on this subject?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, the situation, I think, has been fairly well stated before. The Nipissing Central Railway Company, owned by the Ontario government, asks the federal government to pass an order in council giving them the right to proceed upon crown lands belonging to the province of Quebec, through which they may build a railway. The province of Quebec takes very strong exception to the right of the federal government to pass any such order in council. The government has decided to refer the matter to the Supreme court to decide what are the rights of the respective parties.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the government not frequently, and indeed as a matter of course, passed those orders at other times?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not under similar circumstances. I am told that on one occasion they did pass an order in council allowing the Canadian Pacific to enter upon crown lands. But the province of Quebec takes the stand very strongly that the cases are not similar.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the difference?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): There was no opposition in the first case. Also, it was many years ago. I associate myself with what my colleague the Minister of Railways has said. The two provinces are taking absolutely opposite positions in the matter. The law authorities of the province of Quebec claim that this government has no right to confer authority on the railway company to take possession of provincial crown lands. On the other hand, the law officers of the province of Ontario claim that not only has this government power to do so, but it has no discretion in the matter, it has no right to withhold consent. In view of these two important provinces taking such different attitudes on a question of law, I think the only reasonable course is for us to submit the question to the Supreme Court of Canada for decision.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was an opinion taken from the law officers of the crown?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The law officers followed the advice of the government to submit the question to the Supreme Court of Canada.

RURAL CREDITS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, some few days ago the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) asked the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) when the government proposed to introduce rural credit legislation. The acting minister answered:

I think I will be able to give my hon. friend a reply this week.

It is now Thursday. I would ask the Acting Minister of Finance if he proposes to introduce rural credit legislation to-morrow.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I recall that I said to my hon. friend from Battle River that I hoped to be able to give him a reply this week. I still hope so. But may I point out to the hon. gentleman that the officer who was particularly interested in this legislation and was working on it for me has been attending the Banking and Commerce committee and other committees, while I have been busy here and have not had time to talk it over with him. I think he has his report ready.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Until to-day the Banking and Commerce committee has not sat for some time.

Mr. ROBB: Other committees have.

ALLEGED POWER MERGER

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I desire to call the government's attention to a press despatch to the effect that a large holding company is being formed of the power interests on the American side of the line and that their application disclosed the fact that their purpose was to anticipate a treaty with the Canadian government by which the amount of water to be diverted from the Niagara for power use would be doubled, and that success was so far anticipated that they had already purchased land rights from Niagara Falls to Lewiston and had also bought out the Great Gorge railway route so as to be ready for development of the new overland power route as soon as the proposed treaty was consummated. I would like to ask whether the negotiations have gone to such a point as to justify these large investments; what the situation is, and whether the draft treaty can be given to the House.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The mention my hon. friend has just made of such a treaty is the first I have ever heard of anything of the kind in contemplation.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): I would like to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce if it is the intention of the government to bring down, or allow to be brought down, before the conclusion of the present session, the Copyright Bill No. 2, which was before the House last year and which has been unanimously reported on by the select standing committee after the taking of a lot of evidence. This is a matter which is of interest to a large section of the people from one end of the country to the other.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government's intention is to proceed with government measures almost exclusively from now on. We will have to decide in the light of developments what may be possible with private measures.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): There is a long list of orders which have passed this House, some of them three or four months ago, and which are not yet complied with. So far as those that were moved by hon. members in the party which I lead are concerned, I propose to call them to the attention of the government all at once and thereby avoid several members rising for the purpose. We are close, at all events comparatively, to the end of the session, and from the length of this list it would appear as if the session is to die without compliance with the orders of the House at all. I hope that is not the case.

One was passed on February 23 on the motion of the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark), regarding the number of acres of land belonging to the Dominion transferred to Ontario and on what date the transfers were made; the consideration paid; the cost to Canada of administering and developing said lands prior to transfer, and so forth. It is an order which it would take some time to prepare, but not the time that has already lapsed.

Another was passed on March 2, asking for the amount of duty paid by American railway companies on American rolling stock used in Canada in the past twenty-six years; the names of such companies, the character of the rolling stock, and amounts; moved by the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton).

Another, on the same date, was moved by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross), for the report of the investigation by David Campbell, K.C., concerning coal supplies; another moved by the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) on the same date, was for a return showing the payment for services of David Campbell and D. R. MacLean during such inquiry; another, moved on March 4 by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross), with regard to the cost of the investigation held by David Campbell into such coal matters affecting military district No. 10; another moved on the same date by the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) asked for a statement of the cost of the coal inquiry at Tuxedo Barracks, Winnipeg; the amount the commissioners received, and whether the government received objection to the amount paid from Winnipeg or elsewhere.

Another moved on March 9, by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black), for the correspondence respecting exemption from payment of income taxes on payments or remuneration, whether paid as salary, living allowance or otherwise, by the government of Canada to officials of the Yukon.

Another moved on the 9th of March by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson) with respect to the number of motor cars purchased by the government since January 1, 1912.

Another moved on the 11th of March by the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. Doucet), as to the tenure of office and names of officers commanding the military districts of Halifax, St. John, Toronto, and other military districts; another moved by the same hon. member, on the same day, for the name, rank, position and pension of each officer on the staff at headquarters at Ottawa, and so on.

Another moved on March 16 by the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. Doucet), for the correspondence between the Department of Marine and others regarding services rendered in saving lives by Tiburce Mallet of Ste. Marie, Shippigan Islands, N.B.

Another by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Grimmer) for a return for the months of May and June, 1924, showing invoiced value of importations into Canada of canning machinery leased by the Customs department.

Another moved on March 30, by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), for a copy of correspondence between the Department of National Defence or the Department of Justice and the Canadian Coal Sales Company, Limited.

Another moved on March 30, by the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs), for a copy of all letters, telegrams, papers and other documents between the government of Canada and the mine workers of Cape Breton.

Another moved on April 22, by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), with respect to the total amount spent by the present government since coming into office for public printing, aside from that done by the Printing Bureau, and other data.

Another moved on April 22, by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Black), for a copy of all correspondence, reports, documents, and so forth, passing between the Department of Justice and any other departments of the government, or ministers, or any other parties whatsoever, within the past six months, relating to the appointment of Inspector of Penitentiaries and the refusal to accept for such appointment Col. Eric W. MacDonald, of Halifax.

Another on the same day, by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), for a copy of all correspondence and documents passed between the governments of Roumania and Greece and the government of Canada, or the High Commissioner, regarding the adjustment of outstanding debts of these countries to Canada.

Another by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie), on April 27, for a return showing the number of civil servants eligible to come under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, 1924—just the number.

Another on April 27, by the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. Doucet), for a copy of all correspondence and other documents in relation to the appointment of the new postmaster at St. Ignace.

Another on May 6, by the same hon. member—I am only going to give those which were passed up to a month ago; I shall not proceed on the assumption that any passed since are grossly in arrears—for all correspondence, statements of investigation, court proceedings, reports, and so forth, in possession of the Departments of Customs and Justice regarding the alleged violation of law in respect to intoxicating liquors in or upon any bonded warehouse at Halifax.

Another by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), May 6, for correspondence from the Department of Public Works with respect to the wharf at Matane.

Another by the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion), for a copy of all reports and memoranda with respect to Wrangel island, passed on May 11.

Another on the same day by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), for an order showing statement made out by Messrs. Wilson & Wilson as auditors covering the operation of No. 1 elevator—I understand that came down to-day.

Another by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Black), with respect to federal money expended by the National or Quebec Battlefields Commission in Quebec and how much in the Maritime provinces.

Another on May 11, by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), respecting the number of grain elevators owned or operated by the Dominion government, by the Harbour Commissioners or by the Canadian National Railway, or sublet from any of the above.

This is a rather formidable list, and it applies only to those moved from this side of the House up to a month ago. I would like some statement as to the cause of so many of them being so far back, and when we may expect them.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The list read by my right hon. friend is a somewhat lengthy one, but it does not compare with the list of returns that have already been brought down. If there has been delay, it is due to the fact that the number of returns asked for this session has been exceedingly large, and some of them have been very heavy. Only to-day the members of the government were discussing this very matter with a view to expediting the bringing down of returns, and the different departments have been asked to make a special effort to have the orders filled as rapidly as possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Will the government state to-day whether they have any more legislation intended to be introduced this session, and if so what?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think everything that is of any importance is on the order paper There is one little measure that the Acting Minister of Finance spoke of to-day with respect to the Battlefields Commission, also one with respect to the Audit Act, very small amendments, I think. Apart from that, I think the legislation is all down at the present time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sure that will be interesting news to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland).

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What about rural credits?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I omitted to say that it is the intention of the government to bring down a measure on rural credits.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I may also have a bill relating to a home for girls in the Maritime provinces, but it will not be controversial.

ANTI-DUMPING—REFUNDS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. L. STANSELL (East Elgin): I notice in a recent issue of the Canadian Countryman the report of an address delivered by Mr. L. E. Taylor, Secretary of the British Columbia Tomato Growers' Association, to members of the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association, in which he states in regard to the dumping of fruits and vegetables, that where fines have been imposed in the usual course, the government has remitted these fines in full. I should like to know if that is the general practice followed in regard to dumping, or is it applied only in the case of products of the farm? His statement is that the fines have been remitted in full in every case of dumping of fruits and vegetables from the United States.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN: The answer to the question is, no.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT, 1917.

REPEAL OF SECTION 25 CONSTITUTING LIEN UPON ASSETS OF TAX PAYER

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 183, to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917.

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): Before this bill is read a third time, I think I should make a statement. When the bill was up for its second reading, I suggested that in view of the fact that the committee on Public Accounts might have under consideration certain other amendments to the Income War Tax Act, it might be advisable to leave the bill over until those other possible amendments could be incorporated with the present bill. Since then I have had some conversation with the Acting Minister of Finance, and I understand that he is quite willing that any recommendations coming from the committee, when it is empowered to consider the matter, will be given sympathetic consideration by the government. I have already given notice of a motion to authorize the committee to consider amendments to the act, but I should like before the third reading of this bill is gone on with to have some assurance from the minister that the motion of which I have given notice will not be opposed by the government, and that the government is prepared to consider sympathetically any suggestions that may come from the committee. I have no opposition to the present bill so far as it goes, and my only reason for asking for delay is that there may be other amendments which we might wish to incorporate in this bill. I would like to have a statement from the Acting Minister of Finance on that.

Mr. ROBB: It is quite true, as the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) says, that he came to me and discussed this matter, and I think I convinced him that it was important that this legislation at least should go through. I would not like to commit myself to saying that the government will support any recommendation that is brought in. My recollection is that I said to my hon. friend that it seemed to me a request for an extension of the reference to the committee on Public Accounts should come from the committee itself, and not from individual members of the committee, and I assured him that I would be prepared to consider that when it was submitted in that way through the chairman of the Public Accounts committee.

Mr. GOOD: The chairman of the committee is here. I understood the motion of which notice was given in the House yesterday, was agreed to by the chairman.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 146, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. CAMPBELL: No copies of this bill have been distributed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh yes. They have been on the files for two weeks.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a Senate bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Interpretation.

Mr. GOOD: There has been some little difficulty in locating this bill, Mr. Chairman. I would ask the Minister of Justice, who is in charge of the bill, whether this is the amendment that was recommended by the Banking and Commerce committee at the close of last session.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not this section.

Mr. GOOD: What section are we on? I cannot hear the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I have just read section 2.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Appointment of interim receiver.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we should have an explanation of this section, it seems to be unnecessary.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to prevent a conflict which has happened on some occasions. When an authorized assignment is made, the official receiver appoints a custodian. Now, nothing prevents a creditor from presenting a petition afterwards to declare the debtor bankrupt, and then under section 5 of the act an interim receiver may be appointed. A contest then develops between the interim receiver and the custodian. Their duties are the same, and there is no necessity or even justification, for appointing an interim receiver when a custodian has been already appointed by the official receiver. This is suggested by Mr. Justice Panneton, a judge in bankruptcy in Montreal, and many others.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I entirely agree with what my hon. friend says. It is the height of ridiculousness to have two officials, and to have duplication and two sets of costs. Suppose the section were to read thus?—

The court may, if it be shown to be necessary for the protection of the estate. . . . appoint an interim receiver.

As my hon. friend points out we are now saying that this is not to be done if there is a custodian there already If there is a custodian there it never could be shown to be necessary This provision seems to me to be flying in the face of common sense. It does seem to me that the House is called upon to say there are some judges so stupid that notwithstanding the fact there is already a court officer appointed for the purpose of looking after the estate they may appoint another one although they have no jurisdiction to make any appointment whatever except in case of necessity. If my hon. friend, as Minister of Justice and the shepherd of the administration of justice in this country, says that such a thing is necessary for our courts why there is an end to it, but it seems to be ridiculous.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It appears that if not necessary it is expedient to have it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I am sorry to know that there is necessity for such expedient.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Administration of insolvent farmers' estates by provincial government officer.

Mr. COOTE: Before the section carries I should like to ask the minister if he would not make some change in subsection (3) of this section which reads:

In case any such provincial officer is appointed custodian and trustee, he shall not be entitled under this act to be paid any remuneration as custodian or trustee nor any of the costs enumerated as costs of custodian in part 3 of the general rules.

As I understand the subsection the provincial officer who becomes trustee under this act will not be allowed to collect any fees whatever for the work he may have in connection with the administration of that estate. It seems to me that would be putting quite a burden upon the provincial government. We all know that the provincial governments in western Canada are hard up. I think however, they would not object to paying a custodian's expenses in such cases, for instance, as those where the estates were not sufficient to cover these costs; but surely they should be entitled to a fee which would cover their office expenses in connection with these estates which they do administer. I do not think there would be any desire on the part of the provincial government to make any money out of this scheme; but I think there should be provision made here to entitle them to such fees as were necessary to pay for the expenses they must incur in the administration of these estates. I should like to ask the minister if he would not make some amendment which would permit that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The justification for this amendment is that it is intended to reach a special case where the farmers referred to in the section have not sufficient property to warrant the administration of their estate in the usual way. The argument advanced was that it would not cost anything and that the provincial officer would be paid by the province. The section has been accepted with that understanding. It is exactly what was recommended by the committee on Banking and Commerce last year. It is also what was suggested by the Canadian Council of Agriculture, and, I think, by my hon. friend himself last year.

Mr. COOTE: I have been in consultation with the Attorney General for the province of Alberta regarding this act, and I think he is very pleased with the amendments that are being brought down, with the exception of this one. The reason that many farmers could not take advantage of the Bankruptcy Act was, that when they went to the trustee they were required by him to place in his hands, as a deposit to guarantee his expenses, possibly $100 and in some cases $150. This amendment would obviate that difficulty. The provincial officer who acts as trustee under the act would now receive that man's application for bankruptcy without requiring any deposit; but after he has administered the man's affairs, and in some cases incurred considerable office expenses, why should the provincial government be required to pay the whole of that and not collect any fees? That is the only change I should like to see in this section.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think there would be any justification for compelling the appointment of that provincial officer if he is not to charge fees as any other trustee would.

Mr. COOTE: There is no compulsion, is there, under this legislation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, yes. It is provided that:

—the official receiver shall, in the case of any assignment by a person engaged solely in farming or the tillage of the soil, appoint such officer as custodian.

Of course, if he is not doing his work properly, under another section of the act the creditors may replace him in the ordinary way, or the court may replace him; but from the start the official receiver has no option —he must pay that provincial officer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In this particular case I am, for at least once, in hearty accord with the minister. I think it would be dangerous at least to do as suggested, although I do not argue that it would be followed necessarily by any unfair practices. I should be glad to see this legislation stand as it is now. I do not want to put in the hands of any provincial government, whether a Farmer government or any other kind of government, the power to make an assignment in order to pay the custodian in cases of the extreme kind for which this legislation is proposed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I find myself thoroughly in agreement with the minister in this case. In Saskatchewan we have an adjustment bureau which is already handling many cases of this kind, and I think the authorities have already intimated that they would handle these cases without cost. I see no particular trouble in Saskatchewan.

Mr. McTAGGART: My understanding is along this line: That the chief difficulty to-day in the way of the farmers being able to take advantage of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act is caused by the fact that their assets must represent fifty per cent of their liabilities; and if their assets do not represent fifty per cent of the liabilities they will not, under the law as it stands to-day, be granted a clearance by the court. Is that right?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The judge has a certain discretion in the matter. Ordinarily the farmer would have to wait two years to get his discharge, if his assets were not fifty per cent of his liabilities, but the judge might shorten that period.

Mr. McTAGGART: Is it not the fact that the assets must represent at least fifty per cent of the liabilities before he will be granted a discharge?

Mr. LAPOINTE: He cannot be granted a discharge immediately unless the assets are fifty per cent of the liabilities; the law provides that he will have to wait two years for his discharge, but if that is the only reason why the discharge cannot be granted immediately, the judge has a discretion in the matter, and may shorten the time.

Mr. McTAGGART: At the expiration of two years may the judge grant the discharge?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. McTAGGART: I am glad to hear the minister say that, but there are not many farmers in western Canada whose assets would amount to fifty per cent of their liabilities. For that reason, if the provisions of the law were to remain as they are, they would not be of very much use to the farmer who desired to take advantage of it.

Mr. COOTE: I cannot oppose this measure, but I think the minister is wrong in contending that the provincial government should bear the expense of putting all these farmers through bankruptcy. I argued this case with my hon. friend's predecessor in office some time ago, when I wished him to appoint an official receiver who would receive assignments from the bankrupt farmer who could not afford to put up the deposit required, and the then Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) said:

> I cannot agree with you that it is a right principle that the government should pay for putting people through bankruptcy.

That is what he is compelling the provincial government to do through this act. If the man has some estate, and goes to this officer and has him act as his trustee in bankruptcy, why should that officer not be entitled to some fee to cover the out-of-pocket expenses in administering the estate of this man? In some cases there is considerable expense and under the act the provincial government has to pay all the expenses which may be incurred in connection with the case. I think that the man's estate, if it is worth anything, should pay the expenses, and I cannot see that there is any need to place it all on the provincial government. I am sure the provincial government will accept it, if that is the best they can get, to help out the bankrupt farmer, but it is putting an unfair burden on the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid I will have to give up any hope of ever having my hon. friend agree with me on anything. I thought I had struck a policy in this case on which my hon. friend would be compelled to side with me, because he has taken a large part in discussing these matters. He knows that last year I was very strong in my acceptance of his suggestion. I have accepted it, and I came here this afternoon absolutely certain that I would have his commendation.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to give my commendation to the minister. I want to congratulate him for bringing down this act. I simply thought that this act was not quite perfect, and I wished to draw his attention to it. I want the act to go through, but I feel that the provincial government is going to have to pay a little more than their share.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is not the Alberta government already handling the estate through the Debt Adjustment Bureau?

Mr. COOTE: They are handling cases in the Debt Adjustment Bureau, but I do not know who pays the expenses.

Mr. SHAW: My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) was associated with me when we prepared for the committee the necessary legislation, which was subsequently approved by the Banking and Commerce committee, and our purpose was to prevent the loading of costs upon the unfortunate individual who required to come under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. At that time I understood that the Attorney General of Alberta was not unwilling to assume whatever obligation there might be in taking care of those cases where the farmers were in a difficult and precarious position. I think the minister's legislation is entirely in order, and I would hate to see him withdraw it now that he has brought it in.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Dealings with undischarged bankrupt.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does this really mean?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This provision really should have been made in 1923. It simply adds the words "or authorized assignor" after the word "bankrupt". The man who has assigned to the official receiver is not in the same position as the man against whom a receiving order has been made.

Section agreed to.

Sections 8 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 11—Power to Minister of Justice to authorize certain judges to exercise powers of the court, etc.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This section has been strongly recommended by many members of the House including my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Boys). The opinion is that in certain districts the county court judge should be authorized to act, and we are taking the power to appoint county court judges when advisable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is a good thing in the first instance to have as far as possible a central clearing house for insolvency matters until such time as the practice is settled, because it would hardly be advisable to have one bankrupt treated in one way and some other bankrupt treated differently. But once the practice has become well established, it seems to me that we could save money by decentralizing the procedure. And I should think that under the act as it now stands the jurisprudence ought to be pretty well understood. I can see the value of the amendment. But how will it work out? Surely the minister will not have to be asked, each time there is an assignment in bankruptcy in any particular county, for leave to take the matter to the county court judge? Should it not be provided by general regulations to leave it to the parties concerned to take their petitions to the county court judge or to the central judge, in Toronto for example? It would hardly be conducive to the quick despatch of business if nothing could be done without a special application on every occasion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As my hon. friend knows, the officer in the department who is specially charged with the duty of administering the act receives every week returns from all districts, and I think we have in the department sufficient information to justify us in appointing county court judges in particular cases.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The question is one of appointing some judge in a district where this is thought necessary. It does not mean an application in every instance?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MORIN: Under this section will the judges of the Superior court in any district in the province of Quebec be eligible?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Who may practise as barristers, etc., in bankruptcy courts.

Mr. RYCKMAN: By this section we are repealing section 87 of the act. What is the reason?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Under section 87 of the act barristers of one province could plead in another province in bankruptcy proceedings. This section was enacted in anticipation of the establishment of new federal courts of bankruptcy, but, instead of that, parliament has conferred jurisdiction upon the provincial courts. This being the case, parliament has no authority to enable barristers in one province to practise in another; that would be ultra vires of our powers.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—Penalty for acting as trustee without bond.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is merely to make a clerical change.

Section agreed to.

Section 14 agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister give us some assurance that the act will come into force fairly soon? The sooner this is done the more effective it will be.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are certain rules under the act which it will be necessary to alter in conformity with the present amendments. I can promise my hon. friend that as soon as the changes are made the proclamation will issue.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I trust the minister will expedite those changes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Certainly.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FRUIT ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (for Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 117, to amend the Fruit Act.

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment entirely. My main reason is that there is no such body as the Horticultural Council of Canada, and I suggest that it is not reasonable to insert a wrong description. There is a body whose name is the Canadian Horticultural Council. I am further opposed to the amendment because it cuts right across the main object of the section, which was to facilitate the creation of grades which are not included in the Fruit Act. To refer this matter to a body such as the Canadian Horticultural Council may result in very considerable delay, as that council is composed of the representatives of the fruit and vegetable interests all over Canada and it is only at the annual meeting that matters such as this are considered. This very matter has been discussed at considerable length in the conventions of the fruit growers' associations in different parts of the Dominion; it has also been discussed at the annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council. Matters such as this are frequently discussed between the fruit interests of America and of Canada. The fruit growers are perfectly satisfied with the clause as originally drawn, and I do not think it would be in their interests that the Horticultural Council of Canada should be brought into consultation, even if the name was correct. But my main reason for opposing the amendment is that it would be inserting in the bill reference to a body which does not exist.

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): Mr. Speaker, we have no copy of the amendment made by the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of yesterday. The amendment is to subsection 3 (a) of section 2: and here is the amendment made by the Senate:

The minister,—

—"after consultation with the Horticultural Council of Canada and" with the approval of the Governor in Council,—

And so on. There is no other amendment.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, after the remarks of my hon. friend from Yale (Mr. Stirling) I think the minister (Mr. Graham) might allow this motion to stand over for the time being. If there is no such body as the Horticultural Council of Canada, it would seem a rather extraordinary amendment. Surely there must be some misunderstanding.

Mr. GOOD: I see the only change is the insertion of the "Horticultural Council of Canada," which is claimed to be the wrong title. It seems to me that if it is merely a clerical error it might be remedied if the motion is allowed to stand for a short time.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) seemed to think that the amendment would not do any serious harm. I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of my hon. friend's contention, and if the Minister of Agriculture were here himself I would suggest rejecting the amendment. But under the circumstances I think it is better to withdraw the motion until the minister himself is present.

Motion withdrawn.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 151 to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

FINANCE DEPARTMENT

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Department of Finance—charges of management—offices of the Assistant Receivers General—salaries, $118,000; contingencies, $15,000.

Mr. HANSON: How many Assistant Receivers General are there, and where are they located?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): There are offices in Toronto, St. John, Winnipeg, Halifax, Victoria, Regina, Calgary, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; and in Montreal the City and District Savings Bank acts as assistant receiver general.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What is the average salary?

Mr. ROBB: Toronto, $3,540; Winnipeg, $3,540; Halifax, $2,610; St. John, $3,060; Victoria, $3,060; Regina, $2,610—

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is sufficient.

Mr. SPENCER: Why is there this difference in the salaries? Is it because of length of service?

Mr. ROBB: I imagine so.

Item agreed to.

Printing Dominion notes, $450,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I notice that under this item there has been a reduction, which is probably something to be approved of. Is this reduction possible because of lesser cost of printing?

Mr. ROBB: The reduction of $15,000 is due to the lower contract rate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was the number of notes printed under this vote in 1924 and in 1923?

Mr. ROBB: I do not know that I can give that, but I can give the estimated number of sheets required: of one-dollar notes, 5,000,000; of two-dollar notes, 875,000; of five-dollar notes, 100,000; of fractionals, 67,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is this work done by tender?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: From whom are tenders asked?

Mr. ROBB: The printing is done now by the Canadian Bank Note Company. In April, 1924, tenders were invited for the five-year period from October 1, 1925. Tenders were received from the Canadian Bank Note Company, Limited, the Dominion Bank Note Company, and the British American Bank Note Company. The first two tendered for the whole work; their tenders were approximately the same. The tender from the British American Bank Note Company covered postal supplies only. The prices quoted were not considered satisfactory by the department and the tenders were refused. After negotiations with the present contractor, the Canadian Bank Note Company, an agreement was entered into providing for a decrease of five per cent from the prices stipulated in the previous contract. This agreement covers five years from April 1, 1925 and gives the government the benefit of a five per cent decrease for the last six months of the old contract, representing a saving of approximately $25,000. Compared with the old contract, the saving effected over the period covering the five years is approximately $250,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it the intention of the government to continue the printing of fractional notes—those for sums less than a dollar?

Mr. ROBB: Yes. They are pretty nearly out of circulation, but they are useful in making remittances and that sort of thing.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: In view of the large profits accruing to the companies printing government notes, has the department ever considered the advantages that might come from having this printing done by the government itself?

Mr. ROBB: I am not sure that they are making a very great profit. They showed us their books, and the profits are not so very large. The work of this company is very satisfactory indeed. I visited the establishment of a concern in London, England, who are large printers and engravers of currencies, and I reached the conclusion that our plant here in Canada was rather superior to what they have overseas. These people in Canada, and through their connections in the United States, print for many of the countries of the world.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: That does not answer the point I raised, whether the department would think it advisable to do their own printing and engraving.

Mr. ROBB: No, I should say from my short experience in the department that we are getting the work done just as cheaply as it could be done by the government itself. I am not sure it is not being done cheaper.

Mr. MANION: Some time ago I heard it stated that large supplies of excise stamps, for instance, were printed a great deal in advance of requirements. Is there any truth in that?

Mr. ROBB: We carry, I think, a six-months' supply, but I should not think the department would be authorized to go beyond at least a year's requirements.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Is it the intention to substitute the new nickel completely in place of the old five cent piece? The new nickel is of such a size that it may become mixed up with the twenty-five cent piece. We have too much small coin. We have the old five cent piece, the new nickel, the ten cent piece and the twenty-five cent piece. There is a greater difference between the old five cent piece and the twenty-five cent piece than there is between the new nickel and the twenty-five cent piece.

Mr. ROBB: This is a matter that comes under the Mint. I have heard some objection to the new coin. I will look into the matter after the session, when I get time.

Mr. GOOD: There will be an opportunity to discuss the question of coinage on another estimate?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, on the estimates for the Mint.

Mr. SPENCER: With regard to the quantities of notes kept ready for the government by the printers, I think the government is very wise to have a supply on hand. I suppose there are government officials in the printing department who check up the various amounts of notes that are printed and in stock?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, we have a very complete method of control. From the evidence reported in the press as having been given yesterday before the Public Accounts committee by the Auditor General, there might be an impression that there is not a complete audit in the system, but there is a very thorough audit within the Finance Department. In order that hon. members may have it before them, I think I had better put on record a complete statement of the methods employed in this connection. The statement is as follows:

Treasury board minutes passed in 1881 and 1910, authorized a certain procedure in connection with the management of Dominion currency and the audit thereof by the Auditor General. Naturally the growth of business in the interval has rendered obsolete many of the provisions of these orders, and as a consequence, a revised departmental procedure and system of verification and check as between the various branches at Ottawa and the offices of the Assistant Receivers General throughout the country came into effect. A complete control is maintained and an internal audit is made by an experienced staff.

I may say here that we audit up every night before the staff leaves. If hon. gentlemen would care to go through the department and observe personally the system that is followed, I should be glad to have someone take them through—though not all at once; we would not like to take more than four or five at a time. The members of the staff are all locked inside there and no one is allowed to leave until a complete balance is made at the end of the day. The statement continues:

The present system was approved of by Messrs. Edwards Morgan and Company, chartered accountants of Toronto, in connection with the audit and supervision of departmental practice which they conducted in 1921 and 1922.

The Treasury board in January 1925, passed a minute, copy attached, outlining in detail the procedure at present followed by the Department of Finance. The following is quoted therefrom:—

"The board are of the opinion that the procedure outlined above is well designed for the protection of the currency and direct that the said procedure be recognized as the one to be followed in the management of the Dominion Currency.

"It appears to the board that down to the point where worn or mutilated notes are received by the department to be destroyed, no further check is required than that provided for as above described, but that before the said worn or mutilated notes are destroyed they should be examined by the Auditor General as prescribed by section 17 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act."

The Auditor General has not made an audit of the note reserves held at Ottawa since some years prior to the commencement of the war, nor has he made any requests to do so. From 1910 to 1913, the Auditor General's department sent officials to our outside offices, at which stores of notes and gold are kept. Men inexperienced in handling securities, unfamiliar with vault combinations, and incapable of assuming the full control necessary to make an effective audit were sent on these inspection trips. The inspection was valueless, and the result was to create a bad impression on the staff of our offices. During the war the audit of outside offices by the Auditor General was discontinued, and no requests had since been made by him for facilities from the Department of Finance in that connection. It is apparent, therefore, that the only audit of currency which the Auditor General has been conducting is that of redeemed notes for destruction, as called for by the Audit Act. This audit has been a casual one—

I would ask the hon. gentleman to observe this:

This audit has been a casual one, so casual that under it a trusted official of the Department of Finance, using it as a cover, was able to manipulate notes in course of destruction, so as to steal some thousands of dollars, for which offence a term of imprisonment was imposed.

After this occurrence, the Auditor General's department still carried on the same casual audit, and after being appealed to on more than one occasion by officials of the Department of Finance to put in a thorough audit, is still following the same procedure to-day.

I would like hon. gentlemen to observe that I am not now referring to the present Auditor General.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In what year did this imprisonment take place?

Mr. ROBB: I think it was between 1919 and 1921. And another man, I think, took his own life.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was this in connection with war bond coupons?

Mr. ROBB: It was in 1922, I am informed. The memorandum continues:

Without the efficient audit which our own officials maintain, it would still be possible for officials of the department, by collusion, to obtain a certificate of destruction from the Auditor General's representatives covering notes which have not actually been destroyed. This is the condition which the department has appealed to the Auditor General to rectify, without result.

Under the test audit as now conducted by the Auditor General's staff of millions of $1, $2 and $5 notes withdrawn from circulation, the amount of notes counted is only one-half of 1 per cent of the total notes destroyed; the balance are left in sealed packages and taken as correct and destroyed.

Hon. gentlemen will note that the amount of notes counted is only one-half of one per cent of the total notes destroyed; the balance being left in sealed packages and taken as correct, and destroyed. I would observe that that is evidence that the Auditor General's department have taken our audit, and our audit is, we claim, pretty correct.

Now I will give an instance of the conditions that make the men who are responsible for the Department of Finance very chary as to who is allowed to go through these locked gates and into these vaults, and I think this will appeal to hon. gentlemen.

Mr. HANSON: You do not let members of parliament in?

Mr. ROBB: Not without a permit. I will now give the instance:

Further, this audit is conducted by a junior clerical staff of the Auditor General's department, inexperienced in currency work. Recently, a junior clerk employed in the transfer of securities and notes from one branch of the department to another, was released from our employ on account of unsatisfactory services. In the course of a few weeks, this man appeared in the Currency branch, as representing the Auditor General, for the purpose of examining and passing on notes prepared for destruction. He was without experience and qualifications to assume such responsibility.

[Mr. Robb.]

I am not saying that this was done at the instance of the Auditor General, the Civil Service Commission may have sent this man to the department; but I say that this man had been dismissed from the Department of Finance for incompetency, and he was sent in to conduct an audit.

Mr. HANSON: You did not have to take him.

Mr. ROBB: We did not take him. To continue:

As a further evidence of the incompletenes of the audit of the Department of Finance carried on by the Auditor General's department, it might be mentioned that to date there has been no audit by that office of expenditures relating to the payment of interest on Dominion bonds, which amounts to about $125,000,000 a year.

In view of the impression which some people appear to have gathered from the press reports of the evidence taken before the Public Accounts committee, I would be very glad indeed if the Public Accounts committee could have a meeting and call in as a witness the Comptroller of the Currency, who has charge of that branch. I am sure he will satisfy hon. gentlemen that there is a very complete audit, one system balancing against the other, and all checked. As I said before, no person is allowed to go out, not even a junior clerk, until everything is balanced at night.

Mr. HANSON: In justice to the officials in his own department, why does not the minister himself ask the Public Accounts committee to take this up?

Mr. ROBB: I am asking them now. I think I should go a little further. I have read a part of the evidence—I did not have time to read it all—and I gathered from the evidence that the Auditor General made it pretty clear that in his judgment there was a satisfactory control, and that the audit was good, but apparently some of the press have allowed another idea to go out, and a reading of the evidence does not justify the viewpoint as I gather it from the press despatches. The Auditor General, I may say, has only been in office now not much more than a year, and I think he is making every effort to complete his staff and surround himself with good and competent officials. I do think that in the Department of Finance and in the Department of the Auditor General the deputy ministers should have considerably more to say than the Civil Service Commission in the selection of the men who go in to audit and look after the finances of Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister in his statement, which I congratulate him upon as being very frank so far as it went, made some reference to the bond coupon defalcations. May I ask the amount, and whether any or all of it was refunded?

Mr. ROBB: It was Dominion notes, I am told. I have not got the amount here. It happened before I came into the department.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Certainly the department should have that information.

Mr. ROBB: I think that information will be available in the department, but I have not got it here.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wonder if the minister would know whether any part of it was refunded, or whether it all vanished.

Mr. ROBB: I understand there was a certain amount of it recovered.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But not all of it?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Were those coupons audited by the Finance department only?

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend had been following me, he would have observed that they were audited by the Auditor General's department.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I thought it was Dominion notes the minister was speaking of then. Were the bond coupons also audited by the Auditor General's department?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GOOD: I was in the committee, and I may say that the Auditor General stated very frankly that the internal audit in the department was in a sense very effective. But I submit to the minister that we should not be satisfied with any kind of an internal audit. I think if the Auditor General is to do effective work in any of the departments he ought to be allowed to go in and make such examination as he thinks fit, no matter how effective he may consider the audit to be. Now, he submitted yesterday, in another connection, that he was not quite sure that he had power to go in and make an examination in one of the other departments.

Mr. ROBB: That is in the Income Tax branch?

Mr. GOOD: Yes. I do not wish to enter into that matter now, but I should like to submit to the minister that in connection with the Finance department, the Dominion notes, and so on, it would be some satisfaction if the Auditor General make a systematic audit, even if it be simply a test audit, of the work being carried out in the department. In that way the country will be given some assurance that we are not depending wholly on an internal audit. One other point: Did I understand the minister rightly to state that in this contract for the printing of Dominion notes stamps were included? If so, what stamps—postage as well as excise stamps?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, but the postage and excise stamps are not in this vote. This just covers the printing of the Dominion notes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are letter of credit cheques issued by the department?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, but not by all the departments. Since my hon. friend has brought that matter up I may say that I purpose, if I get time before the close of the session, to bring in a new act, slightly different from the other, in connection with the Board of Audit Act, which expires July 1 this year. I purpose asking the members of that board to go very carefully into the matter with a view to changing the system of handling the finances of the country. I think we should have a pretty complete control not only over the expenditure but over the revenues. I should like to say, in answer to my hon. friend the member for Brant (Mr. Good), that there is at present a test audit made as I pointed out in the statement I made a few minutes ago. The Department of Finance welcomes a test audit, but if my hon. friend himself were in charge of the department and responsible for its administration he would rather resent the Auditor General sending in a man that he himself had dismissed for incompetency.

Mr. GOOD: Quite so.

Mr. SPENCER: As regards the printing of notes, I surmise that the printing of the smaller notes—one-, two- and five-dollar notes—would cost the same as the larger notes, the $100 notes or even the legals?

Mr. ROBB: I have the figures right here. They are as follows:

	Old Contract	New Contract
Fractional (25 cents) notes per thousand sheets..	$66	$62 70
$1 notes per thousand sheets.. ..	62	58 90
$2 notes per thousand sheets.. ..	62	58 90
$5 notes per thousand sheets.. ..	80	76 00
$500 notes per thousand sheets ..	85	80 75
$1,000 notes per thousand sheets.	85	80 75
Bank specials—
$500 notes per thousand sheets..	65	61 75

The rest are all the same down to the fifty-thousands. I imagine the reason for the difference in cost is the lessened number.

Mr. SPENCER: They average about six cents a piece, then.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, I suppose so. That is for a thousand sheets. There are ten on a sheet of the fractionals, four on a sheet of the dollars, and one on a sheet of the bank specials.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A minute ago the minister made a statement that before the end of the session he proposed to introduce some changes.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend will recall that two or three years ago there was introduced what was known as a Board of Audit. That board was composed of two chartered accountants, the Auditor General, and the Deputy Minister of Finance. The intention was that the Board of Audit should go very carefully into the affairs of the different departments, devise a system to prevent overlapping in each department, and effect economies. They have been doing some work in the different departments, but the work is not yet completed. We are going to extend the term of the act, and I purpose making some changes in it. If I remain in charge of the department I am going to ask the board for their advice—of course it will not be accepted until it is submitted to parliament—as to the adoption of a more effective measure of control by a pre-audit. There are some people who believe we should have a pre-audit before any account is paid.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Controlled by whom?

Mr. ROBB: Controlled by the department that is responsible. There are those who believe that before any account is paid it should be audited. Of course there are difficulties in the way where we do business with foreign countries; but something of that nature could be worked out in order to have more effective control not only of the expenditure but of the revenues of the country.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think the minister is to be heartily congratulated on his decision.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was not in when this discussion started, but there is no question at all in my mind, not as to the advisability, but as to the absolute necessity, of reform in connection with our present methods. I had a bill prepared when I was in the department which I proposed to submit to parliament. That proposition was rudely interrupted by the elections of 1921. I see no reason, and never could see any, why ordinary business methods ought not to be applied in government administration. It is not a question of to-day or yesterday, it is a question of decades practically, since modern business discovered that when you are dealing with large transactions and large corporations the only safe thing to do is to have a running audit, which is generally described as a pre-audit. Our system here in the past has been a system practically of auditing all disbursements. We have a large book called the Auditor General's report which tells us a year afterwards, when the money is all gone, just what has been paid, and shows clearly that the payment has been made. Of course, it is nice to know where your money has gone, but it is really better to know in the first instance whether your money should go at all.

Mr. ROBB: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the idea of the pre-audit. After the defeat of the former administration I spoke to my right hon. friend the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) about it; I thought it was something with which politics had nothing to do. Well, I am afraid that perhaps I am a good deal more radical than my right hon. friend. He saw some difficulties in the way and after awhile—after approaching him more than once and after the lapse of a good deal of time—he suggested to me that possibly the best way of arriving at this matter would be to appoint a board of audit for the purpose of going into the whole question. Personally I think there is only one thing necessary and that is a little action. The question of a pre-audit is nothing new. I at once fell in line with my right hon. friend, as he did not see his way clear to do what I thought should be done, and this board was appointed. The idea that I had—and I may just as well tell the House now because I want to get the earliest expression of opinion that we can get in the matter now that it has been brought up again—was that it was absolutely unnecessary to have separate systems of accountants practically for every department of government service, with separate book-keepers—yes departmental auditors and the like—and then to have a grand battery to come into action when everything is all over in the person of the Auditor General. My idea was that we would apply the ordinary principles of pre-audit. Under that system the whole accounting would be taken over by the Finance department. That department would have a representative in each one of these other departments making his daily entries, and the next day the entries for the previous day would be over to the Eastern block, being checked and audited, not only as to payments but also as to receipts.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Whom would the hon. member have make these appointments

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would not be so much concerned about that. Sometimes the government makes good appointments. Every government makes some good appointments, but sometimes they make terrible appointments, and this government has made many such. I think the appointments of the commission are very much better than those of this government, if the hon. gentleman wants my opinion.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): My hon. friend said that some appointments made by the commission were not at all satisfactory.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, and some appointments made by the government are not at all satisfactory.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not also true that any appointment made by the commission which is unsatisfactory can readily be cancelled?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no difficulty at all. The government need never accept any nominee of the commission. It is very much more difficult when the government makes an appointment which is wrong. In that event the country is saddled with the appointment. My hon. friend knows that in connection with this very matter appointments have been made by the government which he regrets, and instead of there being a whole lot of appointments to be made, as my hon. friend's question would suggest, there are a whole lot of dismissals which should be made.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonavenure): I only wanted the view of the hon. member. Would he recommend that the appointment be made by the minister in charge of the department or by the commission?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would depend on how free a hand the minister would have in connection with those appointments. He may have to deal with patronage. If the matter were entirely in the hands of my hon. friend (Mr. Robb) I have no doubt he would make good appointments. But instead of being appointments there would be dismissals; instead of having duplicate forces all over you would have one central force and you would have books of original entry today in one department, and to-morrow they would be audited in the Finance department. These matters would be audited day by day; you would never have a payment without it being audited; and you would not have the position which we have to-day of departments entering into financial obligations entirely apart from the imprimatur of my hon. friend who is going to supply the money. In our system to-day we have the old letter-of-credit system, under which every department can have so many thousands of dollars to spend just as and when it pleases and the department that has to do with making provision for the funds is left powerless. It is worse than that, we can have large commitments entered into. There is enough money on hand in the department to start the thing. The first thing my hon. friend knows—he will not deny it, because it is one of the things he wants to get free from—he is committed to something which he has to carry on, no matter how big or how heavy it is. There are meetings of the Treasury board,—and my hon. friend will agree with this—where, when a question is asked, the representative of the department will say, "But this has already been paid."

5 p.m.

Mr. ROBB: That is true.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, there is no doubt about it. It is absolutely ridiculous. I want to have the proper system put into effect at once—I see no reason why it should not be put into effect to-day. I admit all these matters present some difficulty, but you can never do anything without running up against a little bit of difficulty here and there. You only overcome those difficulties by meeting them and starting to do something with them. It is quite true, as my hon. friend says, that this is a big business we are carrying on. It is rather difficult to look after a pre-audit system when we are spending some money on the continent. Let us look at that bogey for just a minute. Here we are in Canada spending three or four hundred millions. Our vote for the French office, on the continent, is $42,000. Just think of any official for a moment considering or reporting that there is difficulty in putting in a pre-audit here because it cannot apply with the same force where we are spending $42,000 on the Parisian office! We are spending a few thousand dollars in the Yukon, and undoubtedly the method of procedure would not be exactly the same in the Yukon as at Ottawa. There would be a little further distance to go and greater difficulty in having a pre-audit there than there would be here, so that business could be carried on day by day without that restriction; but on the general issue there is no difficulty whatever about the pre-audit. The bill I have referred to was prepared for me by Mr. Edwards, who is now one of the members of the board. The reason why I went to him is this. One of the greatest successes that the world has ever seen was the manner in which the different forces of industry in Canada were co-related, one with the other, under the Imperial Munitions Board. At one time there were upwards of six hundred factories carrying on different parts of the work, doing the work where it could be done in the cheapest manner, and in the best way. It was all done on the one account. Those people had to get the money regularly and quickly. Nevertheless over all that area, covering these hundreds of plants, involving the expenditure of a tremendous sum of money, the purchases of great masses of raw material, there was such a system of pre-audit put in by Mr. Edwards that by eleven o'clock in the morning the state of business of the day before was known, and by the afternoon of the same day cheques could be issued under the pre-audit system under which every interest was absolutely protected, with the result that costs came down enormously. That is just simply ordinary business management.

Mr. GOOD: Common sense.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Absolutely, common sense and nothing else; there is no mystery about it. When I took office in 1910 as electric light commissioner in Toronto, where there was not a pre-audit system, I know the changes that we made in six months after we had that pre-audit system in, how business was easier and money was saved, and how leaks here and leaks there were checked. I am not only going to submit to my hon. friend to look into it further, but I am going to pray him to stop looking into it and tell Edwards to go ahead and do something. He can do it. There is no difficulty about doing it at all. If we introduce theoretical gentlemen into this thing a whole lot of difficulties can be created and we can have nice refinements drawn here and there involving long reports. Some little thing over in France, some small matter away up in the Yukon, would have to be looked into, and long reports would be prepared and submitted. But it is not necessary to pay much attention to that sort of thing; it is a plain matter of everyday business which is exceedingly simple to anyone accustomed to organizing large ventures. I admit that it is not ordinary auditing; it is a matter of devising a proper system to take care of business on a large scale, and it necessarily must involve considerable abilities in the way of organization. But we want the best and most approved methods of organization to-day in vogue in Canada, and I hope my hon friend will be able to see his way to take some action in the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would this audit be independent?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is absolutely independent in the sense my hon. friend speaks of, but it is an audit within the government. The hon. member will see that in connection with all these matters the systems of auditing practised by large institutions are inter-dependent; but there is a difference between the auditing staff and the spending staff. The auditing staff is entirely apart from the organization of the minister.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the present system?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Under the present system we have separate bookkeeping institutions in the various departments. We have a whole gamut of books, and we have departmental auditors.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I had reference to the Finance department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The Finance department to-day has practically no control; the only thing we have outside of the departmental audit is the general audit, and, as hon. gentlemen know, that is rather late.

Mr. ROBB: We have a complete audit within the department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is within the department itself. I am not saying anything against the audit of the Finance department; so far as I know that was put on a proper basis. At one time however we had trouble there and I instituted certain investigations, which were not pleasant, involving my having to see that a certain gentleman was prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Only one?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There was another one but I forget what happened in his case. However, having regard to the volume of work done, the enormous amount of bonds issued, interest coupons, and so on, the showing was extremely satisfactory. There is nothing I have to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Robb) as to his own department, but the system should be brought up to date. The minister says that the board has been doing useful work and I think the House should have the benefit of any information that is available. I understand that reports have been submitted but I do not know whether they have been tabled. If not, I think they should be tabled for the information of the House. I am not sure, but I have heard that there was a report with regard to Montreal and Quebec harbours, with special recommendations in connection with these, and also with regard to the Vancouver Harbour Board and the Canadian National Railways. The one thing which to my mind is quite essential is a more complete financial control on the part of the country that supplies the money to finance the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. ROBB: I am glad my hon. friend approves of the suggested changes. I have had some reports from the board with regard to the harbours and I have read them all, I believe, with the exception of that on Vancouver harbour; I should like to read that one over. I have no objection to tabling these reports. I would not care to go to the expense of printing them but certainly they should be tabled. Regarding the question of consolidation, hon. members will be glad to know that only recently we have given instructions to all the officers of the different departments in the United Kingdom to the effect that they shall submit financial matters for the approval of the High Commissioner.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) made a statement with reference to certain changes that have taken place in connection with the audit system of the Finance department in comparatively recent years. Could the minister (Mr. Robb) indicate to what extent such changes have occurred? In the short time I have been here I have been rather alarmed at some disclosures which I hesitate to speak about, in connection with the defalcation of war bond coupons in the Control of Currency branch and, I believe, some misappropriation of credit cheques in one of the Militia branches, in consequence of which action was taken by the department. In view of these things it is clear that at one time at any rate there was a rather loose system in the department. I do not want to be unfair, but I hope that the system has been improved, and I should like to know what changes have taken place.

Mr. ROBB: If the Public Accounts committee desire to bring before them the Comptroller of Currency they will find him an interesting and profitable witness. One never knows, of course, but so far as we can judge there is now pretty complete control, and the officials tell me that it is impossible for these irregularities to occur. It may be interesting however to know that not long ago an officer in one of the departments of the public service had to be prosecuted for forgery. We have therefore to be continually on the watch, for you cannot introduce any system that will make men honest.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is true; but where there is only one audit system in such a department as that of Finance—

Mr. ROBB: There is more than one; there is a test audit besides.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How often is the test audit made?

Mr. ROBB: I believe the Auditor General was before the Public Accounts committee yesterday and he said that in his judgment there was a careful audit.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In fairness I ought to say that on the whole the officials of the department are very honourable and trustworthy.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think so myself.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Were most of these officials appointed by the previous government or by the Civil Service Commission?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Most of them were appointed either under the government that preceded the Borden administration or under the Borden administration itself. There is no doubt about that, and I make that statement for the benefit of my hon. friend.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): By whom were the defaulters appointed?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I could give that information but hon. gentlemen would not like it. I do not think that we should go into that. It is always very difficult to get governmental business out of a rut. For instance, in 1920, I had an outside auditor make the first capital audit of the department. At that time the Auditor General was largely engaged in auditing disbursements. But the extraordinary thing is that although that was the first audit, so honestly had things been done that practically nothing wrong was found.

Mr. ROBB: December 1, 1921.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes. That was the first outside audit ever made. It was a thorough audit by a most competent auditor. The changes then put into effect had regard to the interior economy and also to the form of balance sheet for it was then that I had the accounts recast and an ordinary balance sheet prepared. The changes also covered the case my hon. friend refers to in connection with the theft of interest coupons of one of the New York loans. I think he will say it was covered pretty well. There is no longer any likelihood of the slightest danger in the future from that source. Then came the question of some irregularities in the Currency branch. Drastic changes were put into effect there, and at present I think the matter is being pretty well looked after.

Item agreed to.

Commission for payment of interest on public debt, purchase of sinking funds, auditing, $110,000.

The CHAIRMAN: The discussion has really been upon this item.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): To whom is the commission for payment of interest on the public debt paid?

Mr. ROBB: The Bank of Montreal. It is the government's official agent and I think it has an arrangement to pay the other banks whatever expenses they may incur.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the reduction due to?

Mr. ROBB: The amount required for payment to Bank of Montreal for services as financial agents in London at a rate of £150 per million of debt $50,400.22. Amount required for commission to Bank of Montreal, New York, for cashing interest coupons at one-eighth of one per cent. Charges for registration of bonds domiciled in New York, also fee as registrar of the 5 per cent 1942-52 loan in New York, estimated, $25,000. Amount required to pay commission to Bank of Montreal, for purchase of sinking funds, estimated, $10,000. Amount required to pay commission to banks for cashing interest coupons on renewal loans at three-sixteenths of one per cent, estimated, $20,000. Auditing, say, $4,599.78.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought the rate was always one-eighth of one per cent. Where is the three-sixteenths paid?

Mr. ROBB: It is required to pay commission to the bank for cashing interest coupons on renewal loans.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why should not that be one-eighth? It looks to me a little higher rate than we used to pay.

Mr. ROBB: Here is the memorandum I have on that:

When the war loans and victory loans were issued, the commission paid to the banks included charges for their services in connection with flotation of the loans and also for cashing coupons until the loan matured. These charges were as follows:

War Loans	Commission
1915-1925	¼ of 1 per cent
1916-1931	½ of 1 per cent
1917-1937	9/20 of 1 per cent

Victory Loans	Commission
1917	¼ of 1 per cent
1918	¼ of 1 per cent
1919	¼ of 1 per cent

When the victory loans matured in 1922 and 1923, the banks demanded payment for their services in connection with cashing interest coupons of the renewal loans. After negotiations it was agreed that the commission payable should be at the rate of three-sixteenths of 1 per cent.

The Department of Finance held that payment at the rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent would be fair. Commission at this rate is paid the Bank of Montreal, New York, for cashing Dominion of Canada coupons. The banks, however, submitted that, since the work involved redemption at over 4,000 points in Canada instead of at one office, this rate was unduly low and demanded one-quarter of 1 per cent. The agreement of November, 1923, provided for a compromise at three-sixteenths of 1 per cent.

The rates paid the Bank of Montreal, New York and London, for similar services are:

Bank of Montreal, New York—
Cashing Grand Trunk Pacific coupons	¼ of 1 per cent
Cashing Dominion of Canada coupons	1/8 of 1 per cent
Redemption of bonds	1/16 of 1 per cent
Issuing of bonds	1/16 of 1 per cent
Bank of Montreal, London—
Cashing Grand Trunk Pacific coupons	¼ of 1 per cent

Item agreed to.

To provide for temporary clerical work in connection with the transfer and registration of bonds, etc., and the flotation of loans, and authority for these purposes to employ a temporary staff, fix their rates of remuneration and otherwise wholly regulate their services, without reference to and notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act; and also to pay additional remuneration to any employee engaged in connection with the flotation and redemption of loans for work done outside of prescribed hours, at such rates as the Treasury board may approve, $110,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How many employees are paid out of this vote?

Mr. ROBB: There are 116.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are they temporary?

Mr. ROBB: Yes. Of this number 108 are furnished by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are these temporary employees eligible for superannuation?

Mr. ROBB: Oh, no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would they be entitled to any statutory increase?

Mr. ROBB: I would not think so. We have them for from three to five months and sometimes for over a year, depending on the amount of work in connection with loans from time to time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Of course, Mr. Chairman, it is some relief to me to know that 108 of these 116 employees have been secured through the Civil Service Commission, but I look with some suspicion upon the growing custom on the part of the department to introduce into their salary votes some little sentence such as is contained here, "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act," the effect of which is to take from under the control of the commission the appointment of these employees and to virtually restore the patronage principle. I think an opportunity will be provided later on to discuss this question, but I wish now to give notice that I regard with great dissatisfaction and with some suspicion the growing inclination on the part of this government to withdraw these people from the control of the commission. I think at the present time there are some thirteen thousand positions exempt from the commission's control, and the number is increasing every year; this year there is a very large increase. What is the salary of the deputy minister?

Mr. ROBB: It is $10,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was any appointment made this year to the position of secretary of the Treasury board?

Mr. ROBB: No, the deputy minister is the acting secretary of the Treasury board.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it proposed that any other gentleman shall be appointed secretary?

Mr. ROBB: Not now, no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the position of secretary of the Treasury board carry with it an additional salary?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then there is no truth in the rumour that there is an additional salary of $5,000 for the secretary of the Treasury board?

Mr. ROBB: There is an amount voted, but it has never been used.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is not the intention of the minister to use it?

Mr. ROBB: No, not now.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is there an assistant secretary of the Treasury board?

Mr. ROBB: No. The officer before me acts as assistant to the Treasury board. The present deputy Minister of Finance has been in the department about forty years and is a most efficient officer. A man who has been in any department or trade or business for such a long time has grown up with it and knows it. The deputy minister is no longer a young man; he is entitled to retire if he wishes to. A few years ago, through stress of work and perhaps some of the worry we have referred to this afternoon, his health was not of the best. He did want to resign, but he was prevailed upon to remain, and I hope he will remain in the department. When it came to appointing a bank inspector I was told by the Banking and Commerce committee to get the best man I could find and pay him whatever salary he wanted. I tried to get a couple of men, but I did not like to go over the salary of the deputy minister. I could not, however, get a man at the salary of the deputy minister whom I thought to be fit to take the job and who would satisfy the members of the Banking and Commerce committee. I was successful in getting a man of very wide experience, who, I believe, is an excellent officer, and I had to pay him $15,000 a year. We had the same experience when we were looking for an Auditor General. In view of these conditions I asked myself what would happen if the deputy minister persisted in offering his resignation, and I will say frankly to the committee that I put that amount in the estimates in order that the minister, whoever he might be, would be in a position to offer a salary that would attract to the office such a man as I believe should be at the head of the Finance department of Canada, a business handling over $500,000,000 a year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I confess it is with some relief that I learn that there is not to be an increase of $5,000 to the present salary of the deputy minister because of the creation of the office of secretary of the Treasury board, or his appointment to that position. My reason for this is not because I have any serious criticism to offer of the routine work performed by the Deputy Minister. Because of his long service in the department he probably knows more about the details of the administration end of it than any other man would know or could know. There is another question, though, that comes into it, and that is the development of modern finance: I doubt very much whether the Deputy Minister of Finance has had the time to make himself as conversant—I will be as kind as I can—with the recent changes in international as well as national finance that the present development of Canada would require. But my principal reason for raising the question at this time is briefly this: Canada is a young nation with a small population and ever-growing expenses, yet we have an excessive deputy-minister salary roll. I have taken the trouble to make some computations, and I find that there are some thirty-six deputies in Canada, running to a cost of $173,500 per year. The additional list of those officials who hold the rank of deputy adds to that the sum of $104,000, or a total of $277,500. In the United States twenty-one men in the service hold the rank of deputy minister, with a total salary of $157,500, an average of about $7,500 each. In summary, Canada has thirty-six deputies, including those holding the rank of deputy, at a total salary of $277,500, or $30,833 per million of population, while the United States has twenty-one, at a total cost of $157,500, or only $1,432 per million of population, a ratio of about thirty to one in favour of the United States in economy. I will admit that arguments can easily be adduced by the minister and others to explain why that should be, but I simply place these figures on Hansard so that the minister will be in a position to resist any further pressure for an increased salary list of deputy ministers or for advancing any more officials to the rank of deputy.

Mr. GOOD: I would like to discuss the question of the deputy ministership, but I do not know whether or not it comes under this item. It has already been discussed to some extent, and with the minister's permission, I should like to say something more.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): A reference to the subject may be made, but an extended discussion of it would not be in order.

Mr. GOOD: If there is to be another opportunity, I will await until that time.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

To provide for the salary of Walter Duncan at $2,550 per annum, as a special investigating officer under the direction of the Department of Finance, with the power to administer oaths in the performance of his duties, and also to provide for contingent expenses of this service, a further sum of $5,050.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was this gentleman's business last year?

Mr. ROBB: I do not like to refuse my hon. friends anything, but I do refuse to say what this gentleman's business was last year. I may say it was very profitable to the country.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be under order in council, and a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within fifteen days of next session, $60,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is "miscellaneous" enough. Can the minister identify it?

Mr. ROBB: It is the usual vote. There is a reduction of $15,000. Up to February 20, 1925, we spent last year $57,323.48. A statement of details is tabled at the beginning of every session.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister the statement there?

Mr. ROBB: No, but I can get it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minister had better hold the item until we get it.

Mr. ROBB: This vote has been there for many years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know, but each year we get a statement of what it has been applied to. What is it mostly intended to be applied to this year?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend should know there were expenditures under this item during his term of office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I never spent any of it.

Mr. ROBB: Somebody spent $34,801.75, in 1921-22, and $36,150.25 in 1920-21.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is just about half this amount.

Mr. ROBB: I notice it is continually growing. The expenditure has been as follows:

1910-11	$12,629 18
1913-14	14,691 30
1919-20	23,982 24
1920-21	36,150 25
1921-22	34,801 75
1922-23	51,926 26
1923-24	35,515 62

If the information to which my right hon. friend referred has not been tabled, I will see that that is done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The expenditure is certainly growing. That is the reason for more careful inquiry into it. If there was something definite, it would be different.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend must observe that there is a decrease in our total vote of $77,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and I think there should be a lot more. Has the minister no idea at all of what this is for?

Mr. ROBB: It is for unforeseen expenses, such as the entertainment of premiers or representatives of foreign countries who are visiting Canada. also for such an unforeseen event as a catastrophe, for instance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Unemployment associations?

Mr. ROBB: I would not say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because that is the truth.

Mr. GOOD: I do not know that I shall have another opportunity of saying what I wish to say about the department, so I take the opportunity now.

What has impressed me very much since I have been here is the conspicuous difference between the organization in the Department of Finance and the organization in some of the other departments. Take, for instance, the Department of Agriculture, where those in charge of the different branches are specialists in their respective fields. We admit the need of securing the services of experts in these several departments. But in the Department of Finance we have, so far as I can find out, no man who has any general knowledge of economics, who has given any special study to the questions that ought to be well known and thoroughly considered in that department. I am sorry to have to make any personal reflections, but the Deputy Minister of Finance, who, I understand, has been acting as secretary of the Treasury board, has been before the Banking and Commerce committee on two or three occasions, and I have also discussed matters with him privately. As I said, I am sorry to make any personal reflections, but I do consider that he is totally unqualified to advise in regard to the many matters which must come before that department, and the minister himself cannot be expected to have gone into a number of these technical matters such as must necessarily be considered by the department. I want to suggest most emphatically to the minister and to the House that in the Department of Finance there ought to be at least one good economist, one good specialist who has had a thorough training, theoretical and practical, in this particular line, to act in an advisory capacity. I think it is positively shameful that there is nobody apart from the present deputy minister, whose excellent qualifications in other directions I am free to admit, but who has no qualifications in this particular direction; and I want earnestly to appeal to the minister to face the situation and apply the same common sense we have applied in our other departments, where we have the good sense to make use of the services of those who have given years of study to their respective specialties.

Take another department by way of comparison, the Department of the Interior—the Mines branch for instance. What folly would it be to appoint a book-keeper to look after our Mines branch! And yet we have nobody in the Department of Finance, as far as I can find out except those who have knowledge of technical routine, nobody who has the qualifications that are needed. Let me suggest to the minister and to the House the sort of man we need in the Department of Finance. We need a man of the qualifications of our Dominion statistician, and we need him very badly in the Department of Finance. Again I earnestly submit to the minister and to the House that unless there is some reorganization in that department, I foresee that we shall get no further ahead, but we shall still continue to follow in a lot of the foolish old ruts we have been travelling in the past. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) has already mentioned how difficult it is in governmental matters to get out of a rut. If we have got into ruts in any department, we have certainly got into ruts in that particular department. Let me give an example. The question arose in the Banking and Commerce committee last year as to whether or not the advisability of varying the interest rate on the advances under the Finance Act had ever been considered, and the deputy minister admitted it had not. I asked him if he had ever thought of it; he had not—had the matter ever been discussed or thought of by the Treasury board? No. Apparently this question, which is in my judgment a vital matter, had never received any consideration at all. Now, if we had a thoroughly competent economist attached to the department, the country might be saved thousands and thousands, if not millions, of dollars a year, and we might be in a position to make some real progress. It is all the more necessary because we are face to face with a lot of very serious financial problems. Recommendations have been made by some members of this House from time to time during the last few years in regard to what might be called new methods of finance. The Acting Minister (Mr. Robb) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) before him have in general ridiculed these suggestions. I am not going to say now that all of the suggestions are wise and practical, but I do submit to the minister that there ought to be some effort made to study them. We should not simply dismiss them scornfully with a contemptuous wave of the hand, as though they were unworthy of consideration. It is quite possible that we may discover very valuable help and very great assistance in connection with our financing in some of these newer methods, but as I said there is absolutely nobody in the Department of Finance, so far as I can find out, who is at all competent to investigate these particular matters. I appeal, in conclusion, to the minister to consider the propriety of appointing, or attaching to the department in an advisory capacity, a man who has some such qualifications as the present Dominion Statistician.

Mr. ROBB: I should like to say at once that I have no pretensions to having the financial qualifications of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Good), nor am I prepared to discuss the Department of Agriculture with him, because I am told that he is just as good an agriculturist as he is an economist. But I wish to repeat again what I said a few moments ago: From my experience within the department, in my judgment the present Deputy Minister of Finance is an excellent public servant, and I hope he will remain in the service for many years. We have associated with the department many other excellent officers, men of wide experience, who take as keen an interest in the affairs of the country as if they were their own. I recognize the abilities of the Dominion Statistician. I was in that department for some years, and I know that he is a good officer. I have no doubt also that there are many good officers throughout many of the departments, but, looking over the accounts as they come before me and scrutinizing them through the Treasury board, I am bound to say that some of the departments to which my hon. friend has referred I do not look up to as departments of economy.

[Mr. Good.]

Mr. GOOD: The minister really cannot have understood me properly. I do not wish to reflect, and I am not reflecting upon the integrity, ability, or certain other qualifications of the deputy minister, but I submit this: that the minister himself would never ask him to give an opinion on a matter of mineralogy or on a matter of medical or surgical science; he has not studied those matters. I am not blaming him. But in financial matters nowadays, particularly under present conditions in Canada, we need the advice of men of a different type from those we have. I am not saying anything against the deputy minister in his capacity as a faithful executive officer, but I do say that, so far as I can find out, he has not the qualifications that are necessary to give sound advice in many matters of urgent importance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. member describe the kind of man he has in mind that would be needed for the department? I hope he will do so without too plainly referring to himself or myself.

Mr. GOOD: I may say very frankly that I certainly have no ambitions, or qualifications either so far as that is concerned; I never dreamed of anything of that kind. But may I state this to the minister and the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen): a couple of years ago I discussed this matter with two government officials who occupy very prominent positions in the service at the present time, and who, by reason of their previous training, were, I think, competent to give an opinion on this point, and both of them—I do not want to mention their names because their opinions were given to me in confidence—expressed themselves very strongly in regard to this particular situation. As I say they are men of the highest standing in the government service, so I am not relying wholly on my own opinion.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would my hon. friend say what the training of these officials was without giving their names?

Mr. GOOD: That might lead to their identification. I think perhaps I have said enough.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the minister has received by this time some particulars as to where the money was applied last year.

Mr. ROBB: I have not that before me yet but I will get my right hon. friend a statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: For this evening?

Mr. ROBB: I should like to get these votes cleaned up before six o'clock and go on with another department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before eight o'clock then?

Mr. ROBB: I do not think I can; I will give it to my right hon. friend to-morrow.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister have some estimates under which we can discuss this matter?

Mr. ROBB: Of the Finance department? I am not sure, but if not we can discuss it in connection with any other department that I am interested in.

Item agreed to.

Expenses in connection with the negotiation of treaties, $20,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this to pay the expenses of the minister?

Mr. ROBB: This item, to provide for expenses in connection with the negotiation of treaties, was first included in the estimates for 1922-23, and at that time with the cattle embargo conference. The expenditure in 1922-23 was $8,264.83. In 1923-24 there was no expenditure. Up to February 20, 1925, the expenditure was $2,579.06.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What about all those trips round the world in the negotiation of treaties? They cannot be included.

Mr. ROBB: My right hon. friend will find a return of my expenses in the Auditor General's department, I believe they will compare very favourably with his own travelling expenses when he was Prime Minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They will not be any less.

Mr. ROBB: Do not be too sure about that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I guarantee it right now. However, I was not speaking of the amount of the expenses, I was saying that they cannot be included in this item.

Mr. ROBB: They are not in this item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What has this to do with the negotiation of treaties, which has been largely a matter of voyaging?

Mr. ROBB: My right hon. friend will observe that in 1923-24 there was no expenditure. In 1922-23 there was an expenditure of $8,264.83. I have not the details but my right hon. friend will remember that the Minister of Finance in that year negotiated a treaty with France and, I think, with Italy, but I am not sure whether the expenses on that occasion are included in the amount or not. As to the expenditure up to February 20, 1925, of $2,579.06, I do not know what it represents.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should like to know first what portion of the expenses this covers. It does not cover the entertainment of the treaty makers; that is in the one before. What could it cover?

Mr. ROBB: This does not include all but I am told some of this expense was incurred by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) in going down to Washington. I am not very sure—I should not like to be quoted as saying it—whether part of the expenses of the gentleman who went to the West Indies is charged here, but I will get full details for my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I would like to know—what this covers; and what jaunts are in mind this year.

Mr. ROBB: I will get that information for my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Ross is still at sea is he?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, I am told he is likely to land at Sydney on the thirteenth. If he goes by rail, he will be in Melbourne before the sixteenth.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is that the reason why the government are trying to hurry the session —so that there will be no chance of getting the Australian treaty through?

Mr. ROBB: I will be glad to hear that there is any prospect of getting it through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister say the trip of Mr. Ross is included under this item?

Mr. ROBB: I would not think so. He is an officer of the department and his expenses are charged up to the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So are the expenses of the Minister of Justice. For the life of me I do not know what can be included in this item. It is a new item, it was put in by this government.

Mr. ROBB: Yes. It was first included in the estimates for 1922-23.

Mr. CALDWELL: Has the minister had representations from numerous firms in Canada urging that the Australian treaty should be ratified?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have had a number of letters myself from men in New Brunswick who had quite a large trade with Australia and they say that, due to the suspension of this treaty or the uncertainty about it, no one in that dominion will do business with them. They are waiting to know what the terms of the treaty will be, expecting there is a possibility of better terms.

Mr. ROBB: That is good news.

Mr. CALDWELL: Well, it might be better. At the present time they say the business they did have is entirely suspended; that no one will order goods from Canada because they are waiting to get the benefit of this treaty. I think it is urgent that the matter be hastened as much as possible.

Mr. ROBB: I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. CALDWELL: I should not like to accept the idea the leader of the opposition has advanced that this session would be over before anything would be done about it. If that is likely, is it possible for the government to negotiate this treaty during the recess? Or must it be ratified by parliament?

Mr. ROBB: I would not commit myself as to that.

Mr. CALDWELL: Because if not, parliament might give the government whatever authority is necessary to negotiate this treaty.

Mr. ROBB: I have nothing to add to the statement made by the Prime Minister. I do not think it is wise to state anything further.

Mr. CALDWELL: I should like to get information as to the authority of the government to negotiate a treaty when the House is not in session. I think we passed an act two years ago authorizing the government to negotiate a reciprocity agreement with the United States if the opportunity ever offered. I should like to urge the government very strongly, if this Australian treaty is not consummated and ready for ratification before the House prorogues, to bring down a bill and obtain authority to ratify this treaty, such treaty to be submitted to parliament at its next session for confirmation if necessary; at any rate, that the government should have authority to deal with this treaty when the negotiations have been completed by its representative who is now in Australia.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does the hon. member want an assurance that the government will pass and sign the treaty when he does not know what is in it?

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. CALDWELL: I presume that our government would not negotiate a treaty that would be to the disadvantage of Canada. The representations I have from business men in New Brunswick, amongst them the canners of fish are that the terms as proposed would give Canadian business great advantages in Australia.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I cannot find what they are.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have not been able to either. I do not know what these people have in mind. In their letters to me they indicate they did have an idea that it would be of great value to their interests. If there is anything we can do to assist business in Canada by a treaty or otherwise, it is our duty to do it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not as great faith as the apostle of Israel to my left—

Mr. CAHILL: My hon. friend is almost alone in Canada in that respect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I almost have a feeling I would like to be alone when I see the hon. member approaching. The speech of the hon. member to my left (Mr. Caldwell) exemplifies about what everybody in Canada knows about this treaty. Business men seem to be able to make a guess. They are permitted by the government to make a guess with impunity. Australia is permitted to publish what it believes to be the treaty. The United States representatives are permitted to send to their government what they believe to be the treaty. In fact everybody is permitted to do what he likes and to know what he likes about the treaty except the parliament of Canada; but the constitution would crash if this government gave the least intimation to hon. members of the House as to what is in the treaty. Not only have we not the right to know what is in the treaty that this government is about either to execute or abandon but we are not permitted to know what the object of the present mission of Mr. Ross is. We are told, or it is intimated to us at least, that the government is not satisfied with some clause about Australia requiring goods that get the preference from us to be 75 per cent manufactured in Canada. This is as far as anybody will go in the way of letting parliament know what is the reason for the delay or what is the object of the Ross mission. But anyone who reviews the terms of the treaty and the facts of the actual trade of Canada knows that that clause has mighty little significance,—I do not say it has none but it has very little, for the simple reason that the goods we sell are made more than 75 per cent in our own country. Will the minister say now whether there is any other object in Mr. Ross' visit, save to review this one clause and adjust it satisfactorily? Has there been some proposal given Mr. Ross to transmit to Australia, altering the alleged treaty in some other way? Are those terms that are advertised by the plenipotentiaries of other countries as the terms of the treaty really the terms of it? If so, is there some particular besides the one the hon. gentleman has referred to that the government is not satisfied with? If there are any people in this world, I would think, who had the right to know what was in this treaty at this stage, it is surely the representatives of the people of Canada. Are these one-time, sometime apostles of the rights of parliament, of the true underlying principles of democracy, these decriers of autocracy, these people who would restore responsible government,—are these to be those who hide and continue to hide the essential elements of a really important treaty from the parliament of Canada long after the parliaments of other countries have been advised? Is the minister prepared to accept that as the situation and allow parliament to be dissolved and the treaty to be still at sea when we come home after the fourth session?

Mr. ROBB: I do not think any good purpose can be served by discussing this matter. I am sure my right hon. friend is as anxious as I am to have a favourable trade agreement with the sister dominion of Australia. I am satisfied of this, because men with whom he himself was closely associated, made an attempt on two different occasions to make such an agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just one.

Mr. ROBB: Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir George Foster?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was before my time.

Mr. ROBB: I am frank to say this: That there are those in Australia and there are those—well I would not say in Canada, but there are those on this continent—who are not anxious this trade agreement should be consummated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In Canada, did the minister say?

Mr. ROBB: I do not think any good purpose can be served by a discussion of the matter, and I do not wish to be drawn into such a discussion.

Mr. CALDWELL: I received a letter from a certain business man in New Brunswick about a month ago. He said that in conversation with a member of the manufacturers' association, that gentleman said to him that the reason this treaty was not ratified was on account of the opposition of the Progressives in this parliament. In reply to him I said there had been no opposition by anybody, because no treaty had been submitted to the House, and it was pretty hard to say whether we would support it or not until we heard what it was. I wonder just how the member of the manufacturers' association got that impression. The minister said he would hesitate about saying that there were people in Canada who might be opposed to the treaty; and so far as I am personally concerned I wish to disclaim any opposition to the treaty until I know what is in it, and I do not wish to be under the imputation that I am against it, as has been suggested by the member of the manufacturers' association.

Mr. ROBB: I am sorry if I have created the inference that it was representative of the people in the House of Commons that might be opposed to it; that was not what I had in mind at all. But there are certain strong interests, both in Australia and in the continent of America, that are doing the best they can to create divisions, and I do not think any good purpose can be served by a further discussion at this moment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What portion of the continent of America does the minister refer to?

Mr. ROBB: I would rather not go any further.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In Canada?

Mr. ROBB: I am not going to discuss it.

Mr. POWER: Wrangel island?

The CHAIRMAN: Six o'clock—

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is important enough to miss a dinner over it.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, stands.

Item stands.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROBB: Before recess the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) asked for information with reference to certain exenditures between the years 1922 and 1925 in connection with this vote. The following expenditures were made in connection with the negotiation of treaties in 1922-23:

French, Belgian and Italian treaties—
Right Hon. W. S. Fielding..	$4,434 00
J. A. Russell..	1,797 37
R. B. Viets..	2,033 46
	$8,264 83

Mr. Viets acted as private secretary and legal adviser.

In 1923-24 there were no expenditures. In 1924-25 they were as follows:

Trade Arrangement with Spain—
Hon. E. Lapointe..	$1,680 00
Mr. W. McL. Clarke..	2,015 31

Mr. Clarke is our trade agent at Milan, in Italy, and this expenditure was incurred in connection with a trade arrangement which we have been completing with Spain.

Mr. MANION: I understand that before six o'clock we were discussing the Australian treaty. Can the minister tells us what progress has been made in that direction?

Mr. ROBB: I cannot give any information in that regard at present.

Mr. LEADER: What progress has the government made in the matter of treaty negotiations with the United States? I believe there is a standing offer from this government to the United States, made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. ROBB: The United States has not responded as favourably as we desired, but we are not without hope that a more favourable attitude will be assumed in Washington towards Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How favourably have they responded?

Mr. ROBB: Well, not as far as we would wish.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will my hon. friend indicate just what they have done in the way of response?

Mr. ROBB: No, I could not.

[Mr. Meighen].

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not think he could.

Mr. LEADER: Have the government renewed their activities in that regard?

Mr. JACOBS: When we appoint an envoy at Washington he will probably make things go a little more rapidly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would it not be wise on the part of the Acting Minister of Finance or the government to make some gesture in order to satisfy hon. gentlemen to my left? They do not need to make any to satisfy themselves.

Mr. JACOBS: Is not the appointment of an envoy a gesture?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mostly so.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the National Battlefields Commission—
(a) For expenses of administration..	$ 6,000
(b) For maintenance of the National Battlefields Park..	35,000
(c) For maintenance of Martello towers, numbers 2 and 4..	1,000
(d) For new works in the park..

Mr. MANION: What is being done by the commission?

Mr. ROBB: The National Battlefields Commission has been in existence for a number of years. The money is paid over to the commission by way of grants. It was constituted in 1908 by act of parliament. The object was to preserve the battlefields of Quebec. The commissioners were empowered to acquire land and to receive and expend money, whether appropriated by parliament or contributed by individuals. The Minister of Finance was authorized to pay from the consolidated fund the sum of $300,000 for the purpose set forth in the act. This grant, together with amounts received from public subscriptions, was sufficient to meet all charges up to and including the fiscal year, 1911-12. Subsequently it has been necessary to vote and pay over to the commission the following amounts: 1912-13, $116,500; 1913-14, $145,000; 1914-15, $143,000; 1915-16, $118,100; 1916-17, $34,160; 1917-18, $52,100; 1918-19, $39,550; 1919-20, $36,450; 1920-21, $41,450; 1921-22, $51,600; 1922-23, $42,000; 1923-24, $41,600; 1924-25, $47,000. The chairman is Sir George Garneau, the secretary, C. E. Gauvin.

Mr. MANION: Are these moneys spent entirely in the province of Quebec?

Mr. ROBB: On the battlefield of Quebec where Wolfe and Montcalm fought.

Mr. BROWN: Is the vote limited to that one particular battlefield?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, by act of parliament.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What are the Martello towers, Nos. 2 and 4?

Mr. ROBB: They must be somewhere along the ramparts of Quebec. I am not sure whether they are near Wolfe's Cove or not.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It means that the towers are part of the battlefield?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: Was all the appropriation spent last year?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: I am thoroughly in sympathy with the purpose of the vote, but it seems to me a very large sum of money for that one particular place.

Mr. ROBB: It is very much smaller than it used to be.

Item agreed to.

Grant in aid of the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association, $15,000.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister give us some details?

Mr. ROBB: The Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association aids in a general way the objects of the movement in Canada. The officers are: chief scout, Baron Byng of Vimy; chief commissioner, Dr. James W. Robertson; assistant chief commissioner, John A. Stiles; dominion secretary, Gerald Brown; hon. treasurer, D. M. Finnie. From 1914-15 up to 1921-22 they were given $5,000 a year. Since 1922-23 they have received $15,000 a year.

Item agreed to.

Contribution to aid in carrying on the work of the Royal Astronomical Society, $2,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why is this vote? We have our own two observatories.

Mr. ROBB: This vote has been in the estimates since 1910-11. The society is for the purpose of stimulating and encouraging the study of astronomical subjects. The vote is for the publication of the journal and handbook and for public meetings. Revenue is derived from grants by the Dominion and provincial governments and by the city of Toronto and the University of Toronto. There is a further revenue from the fees of members.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the other evening we had votes for the Dominion observatory at Ottawa and the Victoria observatory, and we were given to understand that a large percentage of the money was for the issue of publications. Is there not a possibility of duplication here, if both the observatories and this society are carrying on similiar work? As the right hon. leader of the opposition said, the United States with its large population has only two observatories.

Mr. ROBB: This is a very small vote, and the society receives some assistance from the provincial governments as well as from the city of Toronto and the University of Toronto.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What provincial governments? Do all of them subscribe?

Mr. ROBB: I could not tell my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does it say provincial government or governments?

Mr. ROBB: Provincial governments.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister any account of the accomplishments of the society?

Mr. ROBB: No; there may be in the library.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, with the little information at our disposal at the moment, I am not prepared to suggest the striking out of this vote, but in view of the amount of money which is already being spent by the government on astronomical work, I submit that we are scarcely justified as a committee in going much further without fuller information. What is the nature of the work being performed? And just why is this sum voted? Can any scientific society come to the administration and ask for two or three thousand dollars and get it without giving some reasons? If there are any reasons, what are they?

Mr. ROBB: If we made grants to all the societies that applied to us the supply bill would be much larger than it is. I cannot give my hon. friend any further information.

Item agreed.

Grant to the Royal Society of Canada, $8,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In view of the amendments to the Criminal Code introduced the other evening by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), I presume it might be well to amend this vote by striking out the word "Royal."

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member's information is a little scant. This society was organized with the full approval, both as to name and purpose, of Her Majesty the Queen at that time. I would strongly recommend to the member for Bow River that he attend some of its sessions and not only listen to the addresses, but read its literature. In that I am not intending to pay any compliment to myself.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, $2,500.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is new to me.

Mr. ROBB: It has been in the estimates since 1910-11. The object is to promote interest in the fine arts. The members of the academy give their services gratuitously. Free classes are held at large centres throughout the Dominion. Grants are made to the Toronto and other large exhibitions. The president is G. Horne Russell; vice president, Henry Sproatt; secretary, E. Dyonnett; treasurer, C. W. Simpson.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister know any of them?

Mr. ROBB: No, I have not that pleasure. From 1910-11 to 1912-13 they received $2,000 a year, but in 1913-14 the government of the day increased their grant to $5,000 and this continued until 1916-17. In 1917-18 it was reduced to $2,500 and they were paid that amount until 1920-21. In 1921-22 they were given $7,500 and in 1924-25 the grant was reduced to $2,500.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Inter-parliamentary Union for Peace, $400.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the activities of this organization with respect to peace?

Mr. ROBB: This amount has been voted annually since 1914-15. The secretary is Mr. Charles Lange, with headquarters at Geneva. They have been paid $200 each year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the work they are doing?

Mr. ROBB: They have annual meetings, and so on.

Mr. HOEY: Are they associated with the League of Nations?

Mr. ROBB: I could not say.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why is the amount doubled this year?

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. ROBB: My recollection is that this year they meet in Washington and I think it is expected that they will come to Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: The $200 is to entertain them here, is it?

Mr. ROBB: No, I think there is another grant for that.

Mr. GOOD: It seems rather ridiculous to be spending $400 on organization for peace when we are spending about $12,000,000 on preparations for war, or on so-called defence. If there was anything worth while in this organization I would be prepared to support a much larger grant. We ought to know something more about it.

Item agreed to.

Civil Government—Insurance—salaries, $80,350; contingencies, $61,000.

Mr. MANION: Why the increase?

Mr. ROBB: The increase is due to one promotion, senior actuary to chief actuary, A. D. Watson, $675; one promotion, senior actuarial examiner to chief examiner, W. H. Gilliland, $675; one promotion, statistical clerk to senior statistical clerk, H. A. Urquhart, $360; statutory increases, $2,130; one clerk additional, $960. That accounts for the increase.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is the department where the minister strolls around and goes into nearly every business in the country. I see in the details that the salary of the Superintendent of Insurance is now raised to $10,000 a year.

Mr. ROBB: It has been at that figure for some time. The cost of the administration of this office is paid by the insurance companies.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know, but that means that in the end it is paid by the taxpayers of Canada. The statute under which this department was created provided for a salary of $5,000 for the Superintendent of Insurance, and I believe it still provides for that. The increase must have been made last year. How does the minister justify raising it to $10,000?

Mr. ROBB: My right hon. friend should have raised that question some time ago. I think the increase was made four or five years ago.

Mr. MANION: No it was made last year, I think, or the year before, because I remember receiving circulars opposing it. The increase may not have been from $5,000 to $10,000; at any rate it was made $10,000 at that time. I have nothing to say against Mr. Finlayson in any shape or form, but this does seem a pretty heavy salary in view of the fact that most of our deputies receive $6,000 to $8,000.

Mr. ROBB: My recollection is that the increase was made at the request of the people who pay the expenses, the insurance companies themselves. Mr. Finlayson is a most excellent officer, and when you compare the salaries that are paid to managers of insurance companies with the salary that Mr. Finlayson receives, I think we have him at a very reasonable rate. Mr. Finlayson was not appointed by this government, but by my predecessor Sir Thomas White, and I recall that the last time I met Sir Thomas White he told me he considered Mr. Finlayson one of the best officers in the department.

Mr. MANION: I was not attempting in any way to criticize Mr. Finlayson. I have no reason to have anything else but respect for him. But I notice at page 85 of the Estimates of 1924, that is two years ago, the Superintendent of Insurance was granted $1,000 additional to his salary. Can the minister tell me what Mr. Finlayson's salary was in 1924?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister will look, he will find that two years ago he increased what the statute allowed, from $5,000 to $6,000, by the simple expedient of a vote in the estimates. This last year, not content with that increase, he put through a vote of $5,000, replacing the $1,000 increase, and making the salary $10,000, or twice the amount the statute allowed. That has continued this year. As to Mr. Finlayson's ability I have not the least doubt in the world. He is not only a resourceful man, but he is an exceedingly determined and self-willed man.

Mr. ROBB: Is not that a pretty good type to have in the department?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is, but like everything else it requires restraint.

Mr. ROBB: We all require that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not see it applied very much, though.

Mr. JACOBS: Some require a rope.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A rope would not do much harm here. I am sure I have given the history of it correctly. Now this excuse about the insurance companies wanting him paid this much because they pay it, is just so much air, so much froth and eyewash. Insurance companies, of course, have a large scale of salaries, and the men in that business have not very much difficulty in getting them. It is all passed on. But a little excess passed on to the public is reflected in a pretty big way in the central office. I suppose they like working in with the department, but the fact is that the public has got to pay it. It all comes down ultimately to the public; they have to pay the money. I do not know any reason in the world why a man carrying out the provisions of a statute, even though I think it has been unnecessarily enlarged, in the way of a supervisor, with no duty of making any money, no responsibility of making a real commercial success of it, differing in that way wholly from the responsibility that is centered on the head of an individual business, should get in a class like this and thereby contribute to raising the whole level of salaries in the country, when the country is going back, as it undoubtedly is, one hundred million dollars a year. If there is any method in the world of preventing any further increase in the general scale in any way at all, it ought to be done; it has got to be done. But I do not know when the opposite tendency was more accentuated than it has been this last two or three years. I do not doubt the ministers could point to some importunity to which they have not yielded, but they would have difficulty, I think. One deputy minister after another came in first, under one classification; then they got in under another classification, because there were some left out of the first, until finally the whole of them got in and drew $8,000. Those immediately under them are creeping into close approach, and the superintendent of insurance sets a grand example when he goes up to $10,000. This is all fine for everybody except the taxpayer of Canada.

Mr. BAXTER: I would like to call the minister's attention to the fact that a salary of $10,000 is equal to the salary of any judicial position in Canada with the exception of the salaries on the bench of the Supreme Court of Canada. It is therefore rather extraordinary in the line of salaries. I have a very great admiration for the ability as well as the persistency of the gentleman who is receiving the salary, but I want to emphasize, if I may, the fact that it is the practice of governments throughout the country to think that in some way they escape criticism, or in fact escape responsibility, by devolving upon some groups or associations a part of the public charge. I know in the provinces it is a common thing to say: Oh well, we have imposed such and such a tax upon people in a certain line of business; therefore the public does not bear it, and it is no expenditure on the part of the government. The same thing is being said here. It is not healthy. We cannot expect any charge to be put upon any department of business without having that charge reflected in the cost of that business to the people. If you take insurance, while it is competitive in a sense, we all know the rates are absolutely fixed, and necessarily fixed, by agreement between the companies. Therefore, every penny that you add to the cost of administering the insurance system as a whole must be reflected in the rates charged the people for their insurance. It is not much use to talk about the high cost of living when by one little step after another we do everything in our power to enhance the cost of the different things that go to make up a living.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister received any reports from the Inspector General of Banks this year?

Mr. ROBB: That does not come under this vote, but I may say that I have received a number of reports from him. I receive reports from him every week.

Mr. MANION: In further reference to Mr. Finlayson's salary, just to set the matter right I sent out to the library for the statutes, and I find that by chapter 29 of 7-8 Edward VII:

> The Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be called the Superintendent of Insurance. . . . and such officer shall be paid such salary, not exceeding five thousand dollars per annum, as the Governor in Council, may, from time to time, fix and determine.

That is his original salary was not to exceed $5,000. It does not say it has to be up to $5,000, but it must not exceed that figure. So since 1908 this man's salary has doubled. I would be the last to protest against paying to a decent extent any civil servant, but we must not forget that when we are paying a civil servant a salary of $10,000, that is as good as $15,000 a year to a professional man. Take a doctor, or a lawyer, more particularly, because a lawyer has more expense. He would have to earn $15,000, which is a pretty fair income in Canada for the ordinary lawyer or doctor, to make $10,000 a year net. I only mention this in a general way so far as I am concerned, but I wish to associate myself with the others who have protested against any general increase of salaries at this time, when we should be endeavouring to cut them down instead of increasing them. If in 1908 we could get a man for $5,000 while the cost of living may have risen it has not increased to the extent of justifying the doubling of a man's salary.

Mr. GOOD: In regard to this particular officer, my own feeling is that Mr. Finlayson is entitled to as much salary as the other deputy ministers, but I do deplore very much the increases in the salaries of the deputy ministers that have taken place in the last three years. I do not see any justification for it. I have spoken on this matter in previous years. I think it has been a great mistake to have had such large and rapid increases in the salaries of deputy ministers.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of work in the interest of fire prevention to be carried on by the Department of Insurance, $10,000.

Mr. BAXTER: I should like to know just what is being done in connection with this vote? In some of the provinces it has become the custom now to have a local officer appointed to investigate the causes of fire. It has been done in my own province, and I think the results are good. I should like to know in a general way just how this money is spent, through whom, and the general character of the expenditure?

Mr. ROBB: This vote is for fire prevention purposes. The amount is $10,000 as compared with $12,000 for 1924-25. The vote includes the salary of Mr. J. Grove Smith $4,800 and of Miss B. N. Grafton senior clerk-stenographer, $1,440. The expenditure for 1921-22 was $10,680.51; for 1922-23 $18,287.37; and for 1923-24, $11,380.70. The expenses during the current fiscal year were: salaries $6,164.67, travelling $1,059.09, printing $1,737.55, sundries $463.67; total $9,549.49.

Mr. BAXTER: I wonder if the minister realizes that, listening to him as well as I could, I have got the idea that this vote costs the country a little less than $10,000 this year; that it consisted in salaries to Mr. A., Miss B. and some other people, and some travelling expenses. After that explanation I am left just as much in the dark as ever as to what those people do. I do not doubt that some people got salaries, but I want to know, if I can, and if the minister has the information, in what practical way these people are doing anything that results in any benefit to the country. I assume they are doing something, but I want to know what it is.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. J. Grove Smith is sent about investigating fires, wherever they take place, and giving lectures urging people to do what they can to prevent fires. In a word he is carrying on fire prevention work. I understand that in addition to that the officials have had under consideration for some time—and they claim they will complete the work this year—some experiments in connection with fireproof roofing. The idea is to demonstrate to the people how best to prevent fires; and those who desire it can get information as to the proper construction in order to get the lowest insurance rates.

Mr. BAXTER: I am getting a little more interested. I think I remember now hearing something about the fireproof material last year. It surely cannot take very long to determine the qualities of that material. Some of these investigations remind me a good deal of something that happened down in my home town some years ago. There had been extensive dredging done by Canada. Then some people drove piling into the sloping bank. Then they put a wharf on top of the piling and were preparing to put a warehouse on top of the wharf in the full faith that the laws of nature would be suspended in favour of the port of St. John. They were not, however, and the whole thing toppled over into the water. Then they brought engineers in—very skilled men standing high in their profession. One of them took some mud and put it in a tea cup with some water and stirred it round in order to determine what the cause of the accident was. Any longshoreman, or any person of ordinary observation would have told him the cause of what had happened. I think if some of these Laurier matches that are supplied around this House were properly scratched and applied to a bit of so-called fireproof material, it would resolve the question in a very few seconds as to whether it was fireproof or not. So far as that goes the minister's explanation has really not impressed me to any extent, except with the idea that somebody is getting a salary, or that several people are to do something that I do not see has yet resulted in any particular benefit. Now, lectures are being delivered. Are these lectures delivered to insurance companies or to the general public, and if so, at what points are they given and what is the net result of them? I know what is being done in my own province with the money that is being spent there for fire protection. I know the fire marshal. I know that he holds investigations. I know that he makes reports as to the causes of fire, and I know that he institutes prosecutions. I am only speaking as a member of the public; I have no special source of information apart from the newspapers. But the minister who asks for this vote has not yet told me a single definite thing that is being done by these people. This is a small amount, it is true, but it seems to me it is something someone has started, and in another form is adding to the high cost of living without giving the slightest bit of benefit. I am driven to that conclusion for the want of any better explanation.

Mr. ROBB: I have not the details of all the activities of this gentleman during the year. If my hon. friend would get the report of the Department of Insurance he might find something there; but when he said that I have not yet impressed him I wonder if I can impress him with this talk: this work was started in 1921 and we have reduced the expenditure from $18,287.37 to $9,549.49. I wonder if that impresses my hon. friend?

Mr. HANSON: Why not abolish it altogether?

Mr. ROBB: I suggested that myself.

Mr. HANSON: I would agree with you.

Mr. ROBB: I made inquiry when this question came up before the Treasury board and asked why this expenditure should be made. It was represented to me that this man was doing some good work, and they wanted him kept in office at least until they had completed the investigation into fireproofing material which was under way and which is taken care of by another vote, to be reached in a few minutes.

Mr. HANSON: Is not this officer one of the staff that was shelved from the Conservation Commission?

Mr. ROBB: I could not say.

Mr. HANSON: I think if the minister investigates the history of this official he will find that he was one of the former staff of the Conservation Commission. As far as I can learn nearly every one of those gentlemen has been provided for in some other branch of the service. I think the minister's impulse when he made his inquiry before the Treasury board was a proper one. As far as investigation into fires is concerned, that is being conducted now by the Board of Underwriters in every province. In the province of New Brunswick, as my hon. friend

(Mr. Baxter) pointed out, they have appointed fire marshals, who make a very searching inquiry into every fire that occurs in that province, in many instances there have been prosecutions, and in some cases convictions, following their activities. That I think is the greatest deterrent of fire that we can have in the shape of legislation, and it really is a work that should be done by the provinces, being a matter purely of civil rights. I suggest to the minister to strike out this vote.

Mr. ROBB: I would not like to strike it out now, but I am glad to have this criticism, because it is not far out, from my own observation, when it came before the Treasury board. I do not know Grove Smith. I only met him once in Vancouver just after the great fire in British Columbia. I recall that he had been sent up there to go into that matter and see if he could not stir up enthusiasm to have something done to prevent these fires.

Mr. HANSON: Then probably his work has been of some value. What is the minister's opinion as to the activities of the provincial governments in this matter? With the exception of certain portions of the country, these lands are owned by provincial governments and they are very much alive to the question of fire protection and have spent a good deal of money. I do not think there is the slightest criticism of these expenditures, provided the money is well expended, and I would suggest having this item eliminated.

Mr. ROBB: Not this trip.

Mr. BAXTER: This practice started in 1921, and the suggestion was that it was done by the predecessors of the present government.

Mr. ROBB: Oh, no.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not care about that, because I think they were capable of making mistakes, and I think perhaps this is one. If the present government does not make any more serious mistakes I do not object. But the minister will note every year there are millions of dollars worth of practically irreplaceable material in the natural resources of the country going up in smoke. The provinces that are interested in timber are doing a great deal. They have not been able—and perhaps no one ever will be—to cope successfully with this destruction by fire, but this amount of money is too small to save even the dwelling houses or the timber. It would be far better to turn this money into another channel, put more with it and do something to save our natural resources. In other words if we are spending the money, spend enough to do some good.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of a technical investigation under the supervision of the Department of Insurance into the merits of the various forms of roof coverings from the standpoint of fire protection, $8,000.

Mr. HANSON: I thought the last vote covered this.

Mr. ROBB: No. The last item was to provide for watching this matter for the department. This work is carried on in the laboratory in McGill University under the direction of Professor French, Mr. Mackay and Mr. Johnson. Mr. J. Grove Smith is the link between the department and this work.

Mr. BAXTER: I suppose the first vote we passed was to pay for the man who held the match and scratched it, and this is to pay the man who looked at the result. As a matter of commonsense, can it be contended that it takes more than two successive years to find out about every roof covering we have in this country, and that it costs $8,000 odd to find out what will burn and what will not burn. I sympathize with the minister. He has had this thing loaded upon him. It is part of the precedent, and he can never get rid of it.

9 p.m.

Mr. ROBB: I think this will be the last year.

Mr. BAXTER: I hope it will be.

Mr. ROBB: I am sure it will be.

Mr. HANSON: How many years has this vote been running?

Mr. ROBB: The record I have does not go back any further than the previous year, when the amount was $8,500. It is down to $8,000 now. This is only the second year for this grant.

Item agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Immigration, contingencies and general expenses, including grants to immigration and colonization societies or associations as may be authorized by the Governor in Council, $1,350,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I move that vote 63 for immigration contingencies be reduced by $70,000.

Mr. JACOBS: What is the reason for this untoward action on the part of the government?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Virtue.

Mr. JACOBS: I suppose that is why the Minister of Justice was asked to move it.

Mr. BAXTER: We hear a great deal of talk about immigration. Could we have some brief explanation as to what societies are doing this work, and what results they are producing?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I will come to that under another vote.

Mr. HANSON: I think we should have a general statement from the minister as to the activities of the past year and the prospects for the future. There is a great deal of criticism of this department with regard to its activities and lack of results.

Mr. ROBB: The reduction of $70,000 is the result of a decrease of ninety-six in the number of temporary employees throughout our immigration service, whose salaries have been paid out of this vote for a number of years. In 1924-25 we had 170 temporary employees and for 1925-26 we have reduced this number to seventy-four only, or a decrease of ninety-six. There are 82 positions which will be permanent appointments. This permanent reorganization has been effected with the approval of the Civil Service Commission. To cover the salaries of these eighty-two the amount of $50,000 will be provided for in the supplementary estimates for 1925-26 under the heading of immigration outside service salaries. The net result of this reorganization will therefore be: (a) A net reduction of fourteen in the number of our outside service employees; (b) a net decrease or saving of $20,000 in salaries.

Mr. LEWIS: What was the reason of the $229,000 reduction last year?

Mr. ROBB: We are getting along with less money. That is the reason.

Mr. LEWIS: Is that the only reason you can give?

Mr. BAXTER: How many immigrants were brought in during the last fiscal year?

Mr. ROBB: In 1924-25 there were 111,362 and the year before 148,560.

Mr. HANSON: There is a very marked falling off in immigration into this country. I take it that this total includes not only immigrants from Europe but also those from the United States. We are voting each year a large sum of money for immigration purposes and the results are extremely disappointing. The minister should be prepared to make a general statement covering the whole field of activities of the department when he asks parliament to pass a vote of this kind. The government is asking for a blank cheque of some $1,350,000 to be disposed of by order in council just as it may see fit, and that is rather a large order in these days. The minister therefore owes it to himself as well as to the House and the country to give some more satisfactory explanation than we have so far received. As a matter of fact we have not yet had any explanation. What is the policy of the government?

Mr. ROBB: To be frank, the policy of the government is to secure quality rather than quantity. We are careful in the admission of citizens to bring in such people as we believe will remain in Canada, and we are more particularly interested in the type of people who will settle on the land and stay there. We are also endeavouring as far as possible to bring in families. When you bring in a single man who has no ties he has no anchor to keep him on the land and he is more apt to drift away. This is not so in the case of the family unit, and for this reason we endeavour to bring in families. The difficulties to-day are greater than those that had to be met some years ago. In the first place, Canada has no free lands to offer as she had at that time, when we were prepared to give 160 acres to anyone who would settle. We have not that free land to-day, although land is available at reasonable prices. These are some of the difficulties so far as Canada itself is concerned. And in the United Kingdom and elsewhere on the continent the people have not as much money as they had before and consequently are unable to travel. The conditions are worse in Europe now than they have ever been before, and they are worse than they are in Canada. The governments of those countries are not anxious to part with the agricultural type that we require. Then the cost of transportation is higher; it costs a family of five $580 to come to Canada to-day. This of course is a considerable drain on the capital with which the immigrant starts out. A few years ago the same family could come to Canada for $165. These are some of the difficulties which the department is actively engaged in overcoming. The number of immigrants coming in from the United States is however larger than heretofore; I refer to the agri cultural type. Favourable prices for the products of the farm will do more to induce the people to come into the country than all the missionary lecturers whom you could send abroad could accomplish. The people will go where they see an opportunity to improve their position in life. I am bound to say that there has been a good deal of adverse criticism of this country disseminated by the press of other countries. We are receiving letters every day from Canadians both at home and abroad who want to know why we do not take some steps to stop the propaganda, particularly in the press of the United States, against this country. We are doing all we can to counteract such criticism and we are getting more favourable publicity now. But we may as well admit frankly that Canada has received very unfavourable advertising from "whispers of death" and the lamentations of Jeremiahs out of office published in Canadian newspapers and magazines and reproduced in the press of the Old World. And every member of parliament who gets up in this House and puts on the records of parliament criticism adverse to this country is helping to injure Canada. It is well to criticize a government, but there is a limit. There is a difference between criticizing the government and running down your country, and Canada is suffering from that sort of thing just now. However, I believe that conditions are improving in this respect and there is less of this sort of thing now than two years ago or so. I am not without hopes that if we can secure more reasonable transportation rates there will be a tide of immigration to the land which will produce revenues for the railways; because every man who produces agricultural commodities adds to the business available for the railways. The policy of the government is to have a selective type of immigration, more particularly of people who will go on the land and remain there.

Mr. HANSON: The minister's statement is an absolute confession of failure on the part of the government to put into effect any policy of immigration that would produce results. The figures he has given to-night speak more eloquently than any words I could utter of that failure. We find a decrease of 37,198 as compared with the year before. Let me tell the minister that no one in this corner of the House has been running down the fair name of Canada. We have not decried the country but rather have we tried to stand behind it. What we have said is that the country is cursed with an inefficient government on the treasury benches.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend protests too much.

Mr. HANSON: The minister cannot point to any words of mine that are derogatory of this country. We have simply pointed out that an inefficient government is now in office, and the minister's statement to-night is a sufficient indication that after four years in office the government has absolutely failed in the direction of immigration. The minister speaks of a selected type of immigrant. That might be all right if there was not such a crying need for population in this country. I suggest to the minister that any white man or white woman willing to work ought to be welcome. We need them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What for?

Mr. HANSON: To fill up the vacant spaces, to do the work of this country.

Mr. PARENT: How many jobs can you give them?

Mr. HANSON: The hon member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent) can make his own speech when the time arrives.

Mr. PARENT: I will, right after you finish.

Mr. HANSON: The results so far show an absolute failure on the part of the government to measure up to the requirements of the times. The railways of this country are doing ten times as much as the government in immigration work, and I suspect that there is a tremendous lot of duplication of effort by the railway agencies and the government. The minister ought to co-ordinate the work of these agencies with the activities of his own department so that we may have effective results. Canada is a good country—there are lots of opportunities here for people who are willing to work. The difficulty to-day is that many people do not want to work. That class is not needed here. But it ought not to be difficult for Canada to get immigrants in competition with Australia. From what I can read I gather that the sister dominion is outstripping us at every turn. I am aware that there has been a certain amount of propaganda against Canada. I happened to have the privilege of reading a couple of letters that appeared recently in the Yorkshire Post, written ostensibly from Canada, and I understood that the government was endeavouring to ascertain their authorship. I wonder if they have succeeded in tracing the origin of this propaganda. It seemed to me that the fair name of the Dominion has been defamed, and that it should be the business of the department to trace the propaganda to its source and, if possible, stamp it out.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, when this vote was up about a month ago I was told by the very courteous and fair minister (Mr. Robb) that the House would later on be given an opportunity to discuss the whole question of what I wanted then to discuss—migration within the empire. This is the second if not the first largest problem Canada has to solve, yet during the past four and a half months we have devoted only about two and a half hours to its discussion. What is wrong with Canada? How are we to account for the small growth of our population during the past twenty years? These two questions are on everybody's lips in the Mother Country to-day. Australia is catching up with us and will soon be ahead in this respect. Indeed, it has been predicted by a prominent cabinet minister of Great Britain that within the next seventy-five years Australia will have a population of one hundred million if not surpassing the United States. The trouble with this country is that during probably the last twenty-five years we have followed the policy of laissez faire and let well enough alone in immigration, and the estimates for the current year for immigration are comparatively about the same as they were a quarter of a century ago.

The greatest problem of the British Empire to-day is to redistribute its population. Many returned soldiers among the two and a half million out of work who are to-day receiving doles in England would make the very best class of settlers in the overseas dominions. I agree with the resolution which has been passed by many of the church organizations throughout the country. At the recent synod of the Anglican church of Canada, His Grace the Primate of Canada supported this resolution, which was carried:

> That this council expresses its very strong conviction that at the present juncture a decided preference should be given to immigrants from the British Isles.

I believe that the opinion throughout Canada to-day is that these British immigrants who are our own kith and kin, make the very finest settlers, and I am confident that we would get many more of them if there was less red tape in the administration of the department. On this point the following article in the Empire Magazine for February by Mr. Obed Smith is interesting:

> Then again the system has become overburdened with red-tape. The recruiting sergeant in the field cannot sign on a man without first consulting the war office. I know of a case, a splendid farmer candidate in Scotland who has been kept waiting since September having his case investigated at Ottawa. In the meantime he cannot give notice on the farm he is occupying. He may be lost through delay.
> Is it by accident or design that during the past few years the proportion of British to other immigrants has been roughly about 35 or 45 per cent to 65 or 55?
> If the figures you quote are accurate, I should say it is not by design. The highest years' figure I remember was before the war about 400,000. Of them 150,000 were from Great Britain. At present immigration is declining steadily, 1924 less than 1923, and 1925, so far, less than corresponding months last year. Great apathy is shown. Of the three million pounds set aside by Great Britain for assistance in overseas settlement only four hundred thousand have been claimed by all the Dominions together. That is certainy not getting together in the right spirit to fill the waste spaces.
> Cannot more be done in the way of community settlement? It seems to me that the greatest obstacle to settling people from thickly populated areas in large open spaces is the loneliness of the life.
> I have always contended that the Homesteading Act was wrong in compelling homesteaders to reside on part of their holdings. They would be much happier in small communities on land set apart for that purpose, houses within easy reach, a small store or two, a blacksmith shop, a wireless set and some attempt to bring about a community spirit. It would go a long way to alleviate the trials of the western settler. It was such community co-operation which made the Doukhobor settlements so prosperous.
> Suppose I am an English country-born man, with a family, and have scraped together 50 or 100 pounds, what can I get in Canada for it?
> You must first make application to the London office. Then someone is sent out to interview you and your wife and members of your family. Particulars are sent to Ottawa, and if approved, you are sent to the part of Canada you are deemed most suitable to. You are given a farm for which you must pay in 25 years. You will be found some chickens and a cow perhaps, and will be expected to hire out to get some local knowledge of farming. Your wife and family meantime will exist on the farm allotted to you. You will also be given a loan by the government.
> And if the farm is not consdered suitable by me?
> Then you can go somewhere else, but at your own expense.
> Does not the system seem rather vague and discouraging to the settler, even if he is willing to work?
> You cannot give him too much preference, else you are up against the farmers' sons already settled and wishing to take up land about him.

I want to refer to what has been said by some leaders of thought in this country with regard to this subject. The Prime Minister of Canada recently stated:

> If we cease our efforts to fill those great waste spaces with working and productive units, Canada is destined to lag behind and fail to realize what should be her future.

The late Lord Shaughnessy said:

> That the vital importance of Canada's future lay in a sound, sane immigration policy, to be promulgated immediately and to be carried out with intelligence and vigour.

His successor, my distinguished Canadian friend, Mr. E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, said last January:

> Seasonal or other unemployment should not have a direct influence on such a national question as immigration. One of the surest ways to avoid unemployment would be the presence in the country of more productive units, whose necessities would mean greater consumption, more activity, and therefore more employment.

Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways, said in New York:

We have got to stop talking immigration and do something, if we are ever to get anywhere.

And it is all summed up by the Premier of Alberta, who says:

There is no lack of available immigrants in Britain. It remains only to give them in advance a comparative certainty of success. In other words, less "window dressing".

Let us have less of a policy of laissez faire than we have been following for the last few years. Mr. Obed Smith says:

The Canadian government spends too little on colonisation, that great field of promise for the Dominion. The appropriation has hardly been increased over that of twenty-five years ago, when the newly opened farmers' paradise induced a stream of hundreds of thousands. The vote was 25 years ago one and a half millions and is to-day two millions, with a half million extra for settlement purposes.

Compare the aggregate maintenace expenditure of Canada as represented by the estimates for all Canada, now before the committee, $400,000,000, with the little vote of two or three millions for immigration and colonization, which is about the same as it was twenty-five years ago. It is no wonder that Australia can get into the limelight and is getting to-day the cream of the immigration. In a book by Major E. A. Belcher, a great British soldier, published last month and entitled "Migration Within the Empire," the foolish policy of Canada in bringing only agriculturists into the country is criticized. I quote:

A greater difficulty is in the choice of settlers. Again and again in the history of colonisation it has been shown how a settlement scheme has failed because the settlers were unsuited either to their new homes or to their new occupations, or to both, and from that has arisen a theory—

And I am sorry to say that it is the theory this country has adopted.

—a theory upheld perhaps more strongly during the last ten years than at any other stage of British expansion, that the only opening overseas is for the agricultural classes. The theory is a particularly dangerous one, because it contains half a truth, and like most half-truths, is responsible for very erroneous conclusions. It would be well if all statesmen, both in this country and in the Dominions, would agree that the essential factor in the choice of settlers is the personal characteristics of the settler and not his previous occupation. Shorn of all the glowing features which for two hundred years have been the stock in trade of every emigration agent, a settler's life is a hard one. It calls for qualities of perseverence, courage, cheerfulness and independence, which are much more the characteristics of a race than of a class. If the story of colonial expansion were made the subject of real scientific research, it would be found that the deciding factor in the progress of a settler was the racial and not the occupational characteristics of the settler. Indeed, if it were otherwise, it is hard to see how the empire ever got settled at all. Unless we are to range ourselves with pessimists, who assert in precisely the same gloomy fashion, and curiously enough in almost precisely the same language as their predecessors did thirty, fifty and one hundred years ago, that the race is rapidly deteriorating, we may take comfort in believing that the qualities that go to make a successful settler may be found in the workshop, in the warehouse, and in the streets as well as on the land. A good deal of insistence should be laid on this cardinal point. It can, of course, be exaggerated, but there is little danger of exaggeration while so many people assert that it is only the agricultural labourer who will make a successful settler. The choice of settlers is the first difficulty. The second one is their training and their grouping.

He goes on to refer to New Zealand, Australia and South Africa from the point of view of the standard of teaching and the practical work in immigration, and he refers also to a point brought out by the British statesman whom I quoted when he said that in a few years Australia will have a population of a hundred million, equalling the growth of the United States between 1840 and to-day. Now I do not wish to criticize the present minister (Mr. Robb) because I have found him a very modest and hard-working, polite and efficient minister, and at heart a Britisher. I feel sure that he is a believer in immigration within the Empire and that if he was given a wider sphere of activity and a free hand to work he would be one of the first to promote the application of that principle of immigration within the Empire, for he himself rose from the ranks.

In view of the unemployment in the old land and the extent to which England is losing the balance of trade in coal and steel to Germany, it would seem that some action on our part is necessary, and I believe the present minister, if he had only this department to handle, would be the logical man to solve the problem, if anybody in the present government can do it, for our Empire cannot last unless the doctrine of laissez faire is abolished and unless England redistributes its population. The railway mileage of Canada is sufficient for five times the population we have, yet what are we doing. We are spending on immigration and colonization to-day practically what we spent twenty-five years ago. The next war should be on the foolish immigration policy of laissez faire in Canada for the past twenty-five years, to let well enough alone.

I agree with what Mr. Obed Smith says in the February issue of the Empire magazine and he was a friend of immigration within the empire.

He says:

If the Imperial government "still dwells in the night of laissez faire," are the Dominions oversea living wholly in the daytime? I think not, or their own national and local interests would have long since stimulated greater efforts. Migrants are ordinary people, not different—except in circumstances—from those in other walks of life; they must be dealt with by normal businesslike methods, and not by those applied to the migrant of years ago, who left these shores as a last forlorn hope.

A man stays in some particular business or profession because he desires so to do. There is no obligation on anyone to leave, or to remain in England, Canada or elsewhere, unless he is unfortunately in gaol and he stays where his business is because he sees nothing better, or because the better chance has not been presented in an appealing form. A migrant will not leave home until he finds something that is likely to suit him better; but it has been left to the oversea governments alone to spread their wares before the people of the British Isles.

I also criticized the government of Great Britain because they had spent little money in assisting their population to migrate, only £400,000, all told, spent on empire settlement, which is about equivalent to Canada's $2,000,000. Mr. Obed Smith says further:

Imperial migration must have a live partner oversea; but the Motherland should fire the migrant with the spirit of empire-building, whether it be in trade, in the humbler duties of domestic work, or indeed in any other occupation that is not based entirely on the desire for personal aggrandisement.

I hope my progressive friends to my left will listen to this next paragraph:

The other need in the partnership is that the Dominions themselves shall sacrifice some of their own self-complacency, and not only make ready the welcome their own race deserves, but produce a real effort to give pride of place to the overplus of millions the Motherland can so readily spare. It is not carrying a fair share of the load merely to open the door—and that grudgingly in some cases—as certainly, without the general support of the Imperial government, the Dominions will go off the map so far as ultimate success is concerned. They themselves must come forward with much more real assistance in many ways if the supremacy of the British Empire is to be established beyond doubt as an entity and a unity, instead of a commonwealth tied by a silken thread which ought long since to have grown into a cable.

It is not wealth that makes a nation great, but the happiness of the people; and if some millions of British people would have a better chance for themselves and their children's children oversea, the glad song of our citizenship-union will become vibrant through the governments concerned, once they have given the lead. Advances towards the cost of transportation are not enough.

It is admitted that oversea governments or the people they represent have not done all they might have done. Those who have migrated and succeeded often send for their immediate relations, less frequently for friends or outsiders, and, after the family reunion, they get inside a ring-fence, which keeps others out, or beyond which no note of encouragement is heard by those left without. This statement will be challenged: but those who have been selecting and settling migrants for more than a quarter of a century know something of facts which must be faced and remedied with courage, if the replenishment of the empire is to be a real, continuing and vital thing.

Either the oversea Dominions really want many more British settlers, or they do not. Which is it? The figures of migration within the empire are too paltry to quote in connection with so gigantic a need. Ships are not laden with people full of ambition, going to another part of the empire where vacant spaces await them, and where the other partner in the empire-building enterprise should spend time and money in what would be a profitable undertaking from every point of view. If the volume of movement warranted it, transportation rates would be greatly reduced, whereas lack of business actually compelled their increase quite recently, and a vicious circle comes into the question of migration.

Why do the United States of America put restrictions on the number of migrants to be admitted, unless they are getting too many? Their quotas apply to British-born as well as to aliens. Why do more British people go there than to Canada, save in one recent year, and why do large numbers leave Canada for the land of the Stars and Stripes, unless it be that the larger influence always destroys the smaller, and people think that the states offer opportunities which are not offered in Canada? Yet Canada has more room, vastly greater undeveloped natural resources, more need of British people; but where are those fired with zeal for empire who will give up some of the amenities of life in the old land to do their duty in some of the outposts of empire? It is true that a number go to join relatives in Canada, and Canada says she wants them; but does our public believe her when she says she wants people of British stock? That section of the migration scheme will always take care of itself. It will continue despite restrictions by meticulous detail claimed to be for their protection; but what is the driving force to that other section of the movement, for those without relations there, depending much more upon conditions here and oversea? There lies the weakness.

The policy of settling a huge area like Canada needs wide vision and dauntless courage, foresight, ability, sane judgment and lack of party politics. May I say we want British immigration, our own kith and kin to flow into this country. I hope the hon. minister will not think me unkind. I would recommend hon. members to read this article by Mr. J. Obed Smith in the English Review of February this year. He is a stalwart Britisher. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see a more vigorous, sane, economic immigration policy, free from politics, undertaken by this government, and they are no worse and no better than others. This is not a matter which should be mixed up with politics at all. As a humble citizen of this Empire on which the sun never sets, I say it is a question that relates to the life and death of the British Empire. Unless we redistribute our population we are finished as an Empire. I would also recommend the minister and his deputy to read a text book, "Migration within the Empire" by Major Belcher. He preaches the doctrine that "unless this empire redistributes its population it is going the way that many other great empires have gone. I would like to see the minister bring down a vote of about five million dollars for immigration, instead of two millions for the past twenty-five years, this year and ten millions next year and fifteen millions the next year and twenty millions the next year. In Major Belcher's text book is given the votes and the number of immigrants going to different parts of the empire. It shows how our votes rose by small amounts from $1,300,000 to $1,500,000, $1,800,000 and $2,000,000 last year; and that has been only slightly increased this year. Out of four hundred millions for Canada's government only two millions have been spent on immigration this year. I had intended to speak in the debate a month ago but the minister has very generously given me an opportunity of laying these few facts before the House on this occasion, by one who desires to see our great empire grow and expand. Nearly all of our ancestors came from the British isles.

Mr. ROBB: I like the spirit of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church). I am bound to say I think it would be better for Canada if all the members of parliament, no matter how much they might criticize the government, would lose no opportunity of saying a good word for their own country and point out, as my hon. friend from North Toronto says, that there are opportunities here for those who are willing to work, opportunities equal to any that are to be found in our sister Dominions.

Mr. hon. friend has quoted some figures regarding the migration of Britishers from British Isles to the several overseas Dominions, and has expressed regret that the number going to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa is far beyond the number of those coming to Canada. But let me point out that the conditions are somewhat different. For instance, in the case of married families going to Australia, two-thirds of the passage is paid, one-third by the government of the United Kingdom, and one-third by the government of Australia, and for domestics going to Australia, the whole fare is paid. Those conditions do not apply to Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the conditions here?

Mr. ROBB: We make advances by way of loans, and the money is afterwards refunded?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Did not the British government, under the British Empire Settlement Act advance the total cost of passages for immigrants so far as Canada was concerned?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was the arrangement?

Mr. ROBB: Under the Empire Settlement Act the government of the United Kingdom advanced £300 for each family under the settlement of 3,000 families, but we make a loan to domestics, and they also make certain loans. In the case of passages to Australia two-thirds of the fare is paid by the governments for married families, and all the fare is paid for domestics. Now, I have in my hands the report of the overseas settlement committee of the British government dated April, 1924, and now what are the conditions as to the British dominions that are getting so many more immigrants than Canada? I am bound to admit that in the press of Great Britain there appears to be conducted a better publicity for the other British dominions than for Canada, but there is this to be said for the other dominions: no matter how much public men may criticize each other in connection with governmental policies every man stands up for his country, and says that his country is the best of the lot and the opportunities that it offers are the best. Now, what are the facts? To British South Africa for that year there was a total immigration from the United Kingdom of 7,568; to New Zealand a total of 11,061; to Australia a total of 38,599. Of the last named total 25,000 had their fares paid. It did not cost them a cent, they got free transportation to Australia. How many came to Canada in that year? A total of 63,016, and only 6,000 of those had assisted passages, the balance of the 58,000 paid their own way. So much for that.

A few moments ago a letter that was published in the press by J. Obed Smith was quoted. Mr. J. Obed Smith said that some man had come to him and stated that he had saved up £100, and wanted to know what he could get with that sum of money for his family. Mr. J. Obed Smith was retired from the department because we discovered that letters were sent down to the office from the north of Scotland and it took sometimes thirty days and two months to get replies to them, because Mr. J. Obed Smith was attending teas. This gentleman is now in the employ of the steamship companies and all he has to do today is to say to any man who may ask him such a question as that referred to "we will take you if you can raise another £50 in addition to the amount you already have." I agree with my hon. friend the member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) regarding the necessity of personal qualifications. Money is not everything, the previous employment of an individual is not everything. There may be men who have been working in a city. There may be men who have been working in a store or in an office. They desire to go on a farm and they are men of good personal character. They are good citizens and will make good citizens in Canada. That is the very class we want and have been inviting. We invite especially agriculturists and people likely to make a success by settling on the land; but there is no restriction against any Britisher who wants to come to Canada. If he is willing to go out and work, we welcome him; but we do say, and have given instructions to that effect to our agents over there, that there is no room in this country for the man who is a chronic dole taker.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Why not do something towards getting immigrants on the land when we get them here?

Mr. MANION: The minister has stated that for the year mentioned 63,016 passengers came to Canada and 38,599 went to Australia. Well, I venture to make the assertion that out of the 38,599 that went to Australia a much larger proportion of them will remain in Australia than remained in Canada after they came here.

Mr. JACOBS: Where could those who went to Australia go?

Mr. MANION: That, perhaps, affords a partial explanation; but the difficulty in the case of Canada is to keep the immigrants here after they arrive. I know that in the summer, when I was at home, at different times I was inundated with requests from British born citizens—the very finest type of citizens that a country could have—asking me for certificates of health to permit them to go to the United States.

Mr. HEALY: Was that after your speech on the budget?

Mr. MANION: No, it was not after my speech on the budget. My hon. friend, though, has profited by it. He knows that if he made a speech he would drive them out altogether.

Mr. POWER: They are coming across in thousands now.

Mr. MANION: They are not immigrants, they are only transients.

Mr. JACOBS: They are crossing for irrigation purposes.

Mr. MANION: They do not need to go as far as Windsor for irrigation purposes; they can get irrigation in such sections even as Ottawa I understand. But the point I was trying to make is that we should endeavour, as well as we can, to hold immigrants here when we get them, and I suggest that the government should make greater efforts than in the past to cure the unemployment condition here in order to keep them in the country.

Mr. MURDOCK: Does my hon. friend know—I think this can be verified by the records if we had a little time—that the net increase in population in Australia last year was about 5,000? In other words there was emigration from Australia too which offset the immigration so as to cause a net gain of 5,000. I think I can get the data and figures from my office to prove that statement to my hon. friend.

Mr. MANION: What was the net decrease in Canada?

Mr. MURDOCK: My hon. friends opposite have argued that point to their satisfaction on several occasions, although I think their figures were a little off colour.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not think it will make much difference what any of us has to say on this question of immigration. We have discussed it at some length not only this year but in previous years. I am quite sure that even if I were to offer some advice to the minister he would not take it—

Mr. ROBB: Do not be too sure.

Mr. IRVINE: And if he did take it perhaps it would not solve the immigration problem to his satisfaction. I notice that the government, through the minister, is very anxious to blame every one else but themselves for a result for which they are more responsible than any other person or group of persons in the dominion. I wish to follow the example of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) in repudiating the charge, that I have said anything in this House, or anywhere else against the good name of Canada. I do not think it would make much difference if I did, providing that there were no real grounds for adverse criticism. On the other hand, we are asked by the minister to speak a good word for our country. I think the good things in Canada do not need advertising. That is true of all countries. I think the country about the goodness of which people have to be howling all the time is not a very good country. If we have to stand here and protest our goodness it is unlikely that we shall produce a very great effect on anybody else. Surely the government can distinguish—I am sure the people outside can—between the criticism which we offer against the policy of the government as it affects the economic life of the nation, and criticism of Canada as a nation having regard to the resources of the country and the desirability of this Dominion as a home for immigrants under ordinary circumstances. There is surely a very wide distinction between those two questions, and I do not think the Minister of Immigration can find one single instance on Hansard or anywhere else where I have even suggested that Canada was not indeed a very great country, a very rich country, and a very excellent country in which to live. We all are aware of the extent of our territory. The actual natural wealth of the country is a subject for poetical eloquence, and I notice often hon gentlemen opposite indulge in it. Certainly we have immeasurable wealth; there is no doubt about that; and there is lots of room We are all aware that if we had a family of five on every half section in western Canada we would, by that very fact, very materially improve all public services and reduce their cost. We know perfectly well that if we could increase the population of Canada by another nine millions next year we would cut in half the per capita debt of the country and by increase in traffic be able to reduce freight rates. These would all be desirable things and would probably result were our population so increased. We are all aware of these things, and we know that Canada can accommodate very many more millions of people than we have in the country at present. These are all common facts and everybody knows them. There is no need to state them, but when we have said all that, it is surely a very serious commentary on the administration that we cannot hold nine million of people and keep them well fed in a country so vast, so rich in resources and so good. That is the commentary and I lay it at the door of the Minister of Immigration and his government. That is the criticism I make.

Mr. HEALY: What is the remedy?

Mr. IRVINE: The remedy, and one which my hon. friend would not like to follow, is partly to secure a new government. I told my hon. friend at the outset that if I offered some advice it would not be accepted. But that is part of the advice I would give now —either a new government or else a good deal more wisdom and initiative in the government we have. So far as that is concerned, I am not particular about throwing out this government or any other government. What I want to see is intelligent action, I do not care which government takes such action. I want to point out that we are not getting the best for the money we are expending on immigration, and in making that comment I want it to be clearly understood again that I am not speaking against immigration under all conditions. I am only speaking against immigration under the specific conditions in which we are placed at the present time. I consider that we are not getting the best for the money we are expending on immigration. The first reason for that is that we no sooner bring these people into the country than they go out. Surely that is not a good investment. Will the minister say that these people went out because the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) made a speech in this House? Will he say they went out because some other hon. member made a speech in this House? He will not say that. He will say they went out—if he states what he actually knows in his heart—because this administration failed to find work and sustenance for them after bringing them in. That is why they went out. If the problem of finding work for Canadian citizens is beyond the government, let them say so and we will stop criticizing. If it is outside the sphere of politics, make it known to the people of Canada, but if it can reasonably be done by any government why does this government not do it? These people are going out. Why is the government finding it difficult to keep them in Canada? Let us suppose that 10,000 people who went from Canada to the United States last year, wrote 10,000 letters to their friends in Great Britain and said to them, "We came to Canada; we were there for so many weeks, we got nothing to do, funds became short and we moved into the United States. We have now work to perform, and we would advise you, if you are going to cross the Atlantic, to come this way." That is something like the letters which would be written. Does the minister blame the hon. member for Bow River for that? Is that blame not more befitting the government?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has not blamed the hon. member for Bow River this year; he might do so.

Mr. IRVINE: I had an idea that he had it in his mind that that was the man who ought to be blamed.

Mr. ROBB: That is the most unkindest cut of all.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not know of any hon. member who is more fearlessly honest in his portrayal of western life than the hon. member for Bow River.

I would not blame any hon. member in this connection. Hon. members have simply stated the facts in regard to the situation.

The next reason why we are not getting the best for the money is that apparently the minister is having a difficult task in inducing people from Great Britain to come here, after what they have heard from the people who have gone to the United States. You cannot blame any member of this House or anybody else for that. Does the minister think that hon. members of this House are talking just to hear their voices?—although many of them no doubt like that very much. After about six months we get tired of even that. Those of us who oppose the immigration policy of the government are not so anxious to hear our voices. We really think there is something in what we are saying. I have in my hand, for instance, a poster published by the Unemployed Association of Canada, and this Unemployed Association has sent this all over the British Empire and perhaps, over the entire world for all I know. They state here that they are undertaking to collect certain statistics, and if they secure these statistics and send them out I would not be surprised if nobody came to Canada at all next year. This may be a very unpatriotic thing to do, but they are doing it, and why?

Mr. McBRIDE: Because they are no good.

Mr. IRVINE: The noble Daniel from the western mountains tells us they are no good.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He is the gentleman with the big income tax.

Mr. IRVINE: He has settled the matter. That is very much like what the government does. The government says the people from Great Britain who will not come here at our call are the people we do not want. The people who come here and get tired are people who are no good and do not want to work. Seemingly no people are any good, because we cannot get any of them to come here or to stay.

Mr. JACOBS: I do not want to prick my hon. friend's argument—

Mr. IRVINE: Which one and with what?

Mr. JACOBS: With actual facts.

Mr. IRVINE: Has the hon. member got one fact?

Mr. JACOBS: I want to tell the hon. member that under the laws that exist in the United States no one who comes from Great Britain can go there except under their quota or two per cent law. The only people who are admitted are Canadian born citizens; so that those people who go there are Canadian born and their places are taken by those who come from Europe.

Mr. HANSON: There is an underground railway running strongly all through the country. If my hon. friend doubts me I will have him come down to New Brunswick and I will show him the route.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not think the illuminating argument of the hon. gentleman illuminates anything but the kind of reasoning by which the immigration policy of this country has been fostered. It matters not to me whether it is a Canadian born who goes out or not. Does it improve matters if a Canadian born citizen leaves his bed and home to the incoming immigrant? Taking stock at the finish we find that after spending millions of money, we have just the same or approximately the same population as at the beginning. As many have gone out as have come in. That is not a very profitable policy for us to follow.

But let me just quote this poster to indicate to the Minister of Immigration—I have no doubt he knows it already—that there are some people in this country who are not satisfied, and we may presume at least that they are not altogether lunatics or lazy like my hon. friend from Cariboo insists that they are. They have intelligence and they know what they want. This is what they say:

Manifesto of the Unemployed Workers of Canada re the Press and Immigration

Whereas, in view of the campaign of slander and misrepresentation by the press of the number and position of the workers unable to get employment; which campaign is echoed and supported by many of our public and official men;

And whereas, there are one million unemployed workers in Canada;

Therefore be it resolved that this organization of 900 unemployed workers of the city of Edmonton will, by marking said passages as they appear in the press, and forwarding them to our class-conscious brethren in the old countries from which we came, and by other means do all in our power to prevent immigration to this country, so long as such conditions shall continue to exist;

And further, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the National Council of Unemployed in Toronto, and as many other organizations as possible, requesting action;

And still further, that a correspondence bureau be established between organizations in different parts of Canada, for the purpose of collecting statistics relating to unemployment, assignments, business failures, banking conditions, mortgage foreclosures, tax sales, number of farms abandoned, population statistics, and other vital facts for the benefit of the prospective immigrants and investors;

And further still, that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the press, and public bodies; and that this campaign be not launched unless sympathetic consideration of the problems of the unemployed workers be withheld;

And lastly, that this manifesto be translated into foreign languages and printed.

Mr. ROBB: What is the date of that resolution?

Mr. IRVINE: It bears no date.

Mr. ROBB: I was wondering whether it coincided with the date on which a delegation waited upon Premier Greenfield of Alberta requesting work. He found work for them and only seven or eight would take it, and he told them to get out because there was nothing to keep them in Edmonton if they were not willing to work.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not sure whether the date of this resolution synchronizes with the event to which the minister refers. But in any case the suggestion the minister advances that there is no unemployment is too utterly unreasonable to merit a reply. It is so ridiculous that I refuse to take up the time of the committee discussing it. It is true no doubt that here and there you will find men who, for mental or physical reasons, are unable to work. But that fact does not explain the general unemployment situation. Now, I want to make it clear that this circular is the kind of thing that is preventing the minister's immigration policy from being a success; and the thing to do is not to stop these people from sending resolutions of this sort away but to alter the conditions that make such resolutions necessary. That is where the responsibility falls on the minister and on the government.

I believe that the money which it is proposed to spend this year on immigration could be of far greater service to Canada if it were expended in Nova Scotia. The minister cannot prevent the situation in Nova Scotia from becoming known not only throughout the British Empire but throughout the world at large; nor can the minister blame any individual member of this House for the propaganda which is being broadcast in that connection. That sore has been festering for many years and every member of the House knows the gravity of the situation as it exists to-day. Still nothing is being done. I maintain therefore that if the government would spend this amount or half of it in Nova Scotia to get the industry of that part of the country going and to enable the men to co-operate with their employers in the production of coal and steel, it would be a far better advertisement for this country, in the eyes of people who might be inclined to come here, than sending out some missionary, as the minister says, to Glasgow or London or anywhere else to try to inveigle people into coming here.

I am willing to admit that the economic conditions in Canada to-day are no worse than they are in Great Britain or that obtain in many countries; but granting that does not help the unemployment any. It seems to me rather a shame to allow any family of five poor working people to pay $580 to cross the Atlantic from Glasgow or London when perhaps they have nothing to do when they come here. I should like to know what the initial investment would amount to for a family of five going on the land in Canada. When you take into consideration their fares, the house in which they must live, the price of the land, the price of implements, and provisions for the first year's grub, and what interest is being charged. I do not doubt that these people and their children will be kept busy as long as they live, paying interest to those who lend them the necessary money with which to start. These are the conditions under which immigrants are coming in. I need not weary the committee with a recital of the facts which they already know as well as I do, if not better. In reviewing the situation, looking at our vast natural resources, our plant and equipment, and the capacity for producing wealth, I am reminded of the old superstitious lines of doggerel which declare that "every prospect pleases and only man is vile." I disagree with that as philosophy, but I agree with it as applied to the present administration. I do not mean to suggest of course that the administration is vile in the sense intended in this line; but considering the manner in which it has disregarded its responsibility in this matter the lines are apropos. There are opportunities for the development of our vast natural resources and of building a nation of happy and prosperous citizens, but the government is not taking advantage of these opportunities. I would offer a suggestion to the minister, and I do so only because I believe that he has a spark of genius if only he would allow himself to put it to some use. The very best thing that Canada could do to attract immigrants from any part of the world would be to give full scope to the genius of real statesmanship and to compel a country as rich in resources as this is to yield more than a bare living to nine millions of a population.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Notwithstanding what the minister (Mr. Robb) has said, I believe there are a good many people in this Dominion who still have confidence that there is a bright future in store for Canada. I know that a great many build those hopes on the great natural resources of our country and the expectation of a great influx of immigration from other countries to fill up the vacant spaces and utilize the equipment which we have provided at a great cost for a population much larger than that we now have. But I am afraid that the government itself is not very hopeful so far as the near future is concerned. There is no question that the cost of government in this country, federal, provincial, municipal and otherwise, has increased enormously during the past few years, and it is a grievous burden on the people. There is in connection with immigration a duplication, the aggregate result of which ought to show better results if we were getting anything like value for the money expended. I am not sure what policy the government has in mind. At the last session of parliament a committee of the House was appointed to consider the question of old age pensions, and I have almost come to the conclusion, in view of the fact that there is a reduction of $300,000 in this item, that the government intends to adopt a system of old age pensions in Canada as an inducement to people to come here and in this way hold them here. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company last year, according to their financial statement, spent $758,510 on colonization and immigration work. The Canadian National Railways spent $770,454 for the same purpose. In fact, this other branch of government increased its expenditure by nearly $400,000 over the previous year. Some of the provincial governments are also doing a great deal of work along this line. There must be something absolutely and radically wrong or better results would follow. The fault does not rest with the country, notwithstanding the criticism of the minister. I do not think there is anyone who will not stand up and stoutly maintain that Canada possesses natural resources unequalled, or at least unsurpassed, by any other country in the world.

Mr. ROBB: Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not think the sun shines upon a country that offers greater natural inducements for the willing worker than does this Dominion. But with all our great natural advantages we are labouring under certain artificial handicaps that must be removed before we will have a satisfactory condition of affairs. The minister referred to the efforts put forth to induce immigrants to go on the land and to keep them there. Why all this anxiety about confining them to the land? It would be much better to have these people employed in our own cities than to have them employed in the industrial centres in foreign countries manufacturing goods for our consumption and use. It is well known that the great exodus from our rural districts is chiefly into our towns and cities. And it is quite natural that the people should go where they find the best opportunities. You may talk until you are blind, but you cannot convince those who know better than you do that they are making a mistake. They know what they are doing. Our people are intelligent, and there is no use preaching the doctrine, "Oh, you are foolish, you will do much better on the land than you will in the urban centres." That doctrine has been preached so long that it is now threadbare. I repeat, there is something radically wrong, or conditions such as we now have would not prevail.

Reference has been made to emigration to Australia. Australia is in a different position to Canada. They are not living alongside the most energetic and progressive nation in the world, a nation that has adopted a fiscal policy which is bound to have a tremendous influence upon the course this Dominion is compelled to take. We cannot escape that influence if we wished to, and we might much better realize that now and deal with an imperative necessity as at any other time. In the main our fiscal policy will always be dictated by that of our great neighbours to the south of us. We know full well that many of the best of our people have crossed the line during the past few years, and are now residents of the United States. The greatest loss we have sustained since the Great war has been this exodus of native-born Canadians to the United States.

I admit that it is necessary to establish proper safeguards against the entry of an undesirable class of people, people who congregate in our big cities and who neither know how to work, nor intend to do honest labour. We have altogether too many of that class at present. But a reduction of $300,000 in these estimates is rather significant in view of the fact that it is so seldom that we find a reduction of any consequence in any of the other estimates. Why have not the government applied the pruning knife to a lot of this deadwood that might well be cut out? For two at least of the items that were passed a few minutes ago the minister stated he did not believe there was any justification; yet they were passed.

Mr. ROBB: But my hon. friend will at least give me credit for having reduced the estimates of the Department of Finance by $70,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: On the whole the reductions made are very slight, and I think by the time the supplementary estimates are brought down it will be found that those reductions have been more than offset. Now, we have a system that to my mind is rather disturbing; that is, we have a privileged class which is continually increasing in number. I refer to those engaged in the civil service of this country. I do not intend to cast the slightest reflection upon the ability of those people, because if there is any class in the Dominion which has my heartfelt sympathy it is the civil service. Many young people entertain the idea that if they can only become attached to the civil service they are going to be happy for the rest of their days, and immediately they succeed they find that their initiative is destroyed, there is but little opportunity for expansion, or development, and finally they become reconciled to the situation and say, "Oh, well, what's the use? We may just as well drift along with the crowd." The hours of labour for the civil service have been fixed within certain limits; the rate of wages has also been fixed. Since the Canadian National Railways came under this category there has been an enormous addition to the civil service. An increase of over 100,000 with this result. If you are living in the country and wish to do some business in shipping on a Saturday afternoon, you will find after one o'clock that the freight office is locked up and the agents and clerks are having a holiday while you may be desirous of shipping stock; it may be as is the custom—so it will be on the market early the following week. The fixation of the hours of labour and wages is only one of the difficulties with which we are confronted, difficulties that are having a depressing influence on agriculture. How can our farmers compete with other countries when they are so handicapped? And yet they have to compete against the surplus of the world in the home market. We hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) and others say, "Oh, we must keep up the rate of wages to the high standard at which it has been for a long time." Yet we are expected to compete with other countries where the scale of wages is very low indeed. This naturally necessitates our having some protection against outside competition, and it is the absence of adequate protection under which our manufacturers are labouring at the present time.

But this handicap is not confined to the manufacturers only. To my mind those engaged in agriculture are suffering just as much on this account as any other class. Consequently when the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Robb) states that his government are endeavouring to induce immigrants to go on the land, let me point out that the government ought to do something to enable those people to continue on the land after they settle there. It is only a few days ago in connection with the dumping clause in the tariff that the minister pointed out that, about a year ago, owing to a surplus of butter in the New York market the price dropped very low, and they dumped thirty or forty carloads of that surplus on the Montreal market, with the result that the price immediately went up again in the United States. But did he point out the effect that had on the market in this Dominion? No, he stopped there. To make the story complete, he should have pointed out the depressing influence the export of that surplus from a country with a high protective tariff had on the Canadian market. In order that the price in the United States should be maintained it was disposed of in this country. That is a fair example of a practice which is doing more to injure this Dominion to-day than anything else that can be mentioned. The United States is a highly protected country. They endeavour to maintain and so regulate their markets as to afford a profitable price; if they have a surplus of any kind they get rid of it somewhere, and apparently the easiest way to get rid of it is to ship it to Canada. They are continually doing that; it has been going on for years. Let me give some figures with regard to our imports of some commodities grown on the farm during the years 1920 to 1924 inclusive. In pork products alone during those years we imported 293,292,716 pounds, largely from the United States.

Mr. JACOBS: I rise to a point of order—not because the hon. gentleman is giving the committee pork figures, but because his remarks are out of order on the immigration estimates.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member is discussing the question from the point of view of the agriculturist and is giving reasons why he thinks there is no need for more agriculturists in this country. At least I think that is what he is trying to bring out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I was endeavouring to show the folly of bringing people here and allowing imports to come in under such unfair conditions as to prevent them from making the livelihood that they can make in other countries where such practices are not permitted.

The CHAIRMAN: Of course that does not entitle the hon. member to make a tariff speech. He may—as I think he is trying to do—draw an inference by reference to these facts to show that immigration of a certain class should not be encouraged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I was endeavouring to show the unfair competition with which these people are confronted after they come here, and to emphasize the fact that no effort is being made by this government to see that they are in a position to enable them to conduct their business in such a way that they can carry on profitably.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member desires that there shall be work for all, not only on the farms, but in the towns. Is it not a fact that the pork to which he refers was imported to give work to the bacon factories, and that the bacon manufactured from it was exported?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Not at all. Of these pork products 48,832,000 pounds was lard, and that could hardly have been imported for manufacture and subsequent export. But since the grading of hogs has come into effect in this country there is apparently no lard in a Canadian hog, so they have to bring it in from the United States, and the tariff is so low that that is the source of supply at the present time. But we are also at the same time large exporters of pork products; we exported 666,769,000 pounds, which shows that we are in a position not only to produce enough for home consumption, but to export a large quantity in addition. That being so why not give the Canadian market to the Canadian farmer. The minister two or three years ago went over to Australia to negotiate a treaty with that country, and as a result of his efforts, and the efforts, I presume, of those who succeeded him, a treaty was arranged a year ago. Was any attempt made to safeguard in that treaty the interests of those engaged in agriculture? On the contrary, on fourteen out of sixteen different points, agriculture suffered. It is true the treaty has not been presented to parliament, but the treaty was made and signed and announced by the government of Australia subject to ratification by the parliament of Canada. We exported 71,000,000 pounds of butter during that five-year period and we imported 15,000,000 pounds. I suppose in the main to relieve some protected country the consignment the minister referred to came in in that way; the great bulk of the butter which is imported into this country comes in under those conditions. The same is true with regard to eggs; and by the way, under the Australian treaty the tariff on eggs is reduced to one cent per dozen.

Mr. JACOBS: I must again rise to a point of order, and I hope you will agree with me this time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: No, I think the argument of the hon. member is along the same line as he was pursuing before. As I understand it, he contends that depression in agriculture is caused by certain conditions which could be corrected, and that is the ground for his argument that no more agriculturists should be admitted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I would not be surprised at my hon. friend objecting to the pork industry being referred to, but when it comes to eggs, surely he should not object.

Mr. JACOBS: They are closely associated with ham.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Our imports of eggs were 35,788,000 dozen and our exports were 23,453,955 dozen. You can understand the demoralizing effect of a surplus of eggs and apples coming into this country from the United States, you can understand what the dumping of these commodities into Canada at certain periods of the year means to our people. I suppose the minister would object to the word "dumping" in that case because they do not come under the Dumping Act. Well, it may be legitimate business but it is not allowed in the United States, but the point is the demoralizing effect on this particular industry. Our seasons are from two to six weeks later than in the United States, and we have long, severe winters here which entail excessive cost in the production of butter and cheese as compared with the cost of production in countries like Australia and New Zealand where the cattle run out the year around. But the government say, "Our policy is to reduce the cost of living; we must keep the price of everything down below what it is in some other countries and our working people will get the benefit." This is the encouragement which the minister is offering to agriculturists to come to this country, the inducement he is offering to those who are on the land to stay there. Keep down the cost of living; keep wages up at the peak; put as many in the civil service as you can, establish a short day, ensure them a livelihood, and provide and old age pension for everybody who will not work. What a policy for a government to adopt in this age. Why not combine about three of the present departments of government into one, reduce the staff, and start on a business basis? It would be much more satisfactory than the present system.

But there are even worse features than that. There is a slight protective tariff on the articles I have mentioned, but the effect of the tariff on agricultural products is this: The present tariff was fixed in many instances many years ago, a specific low tariff of so much per pound, instead of an ad valorem tariff and if the price goes up the tariff goes down. You can understand what the effect of that is. With a specific tariff on agricultural products, it works out as follows: If eggs, for instance, were selling at 25 cents a dozen, a tariff of 3 cents per dozen would be 12 per cent; if the price goes up to 50 cents a dozen, the tariff is reduced by one-half as a result, or to 6 per cent.

Now let us take other commodities grown on the farm, for instance, wool. We imported during that same period 71,212,000 pounds of raw wool, and we exported 32,089,000 pounds. And yet we have the Minister of Agriculture with a staff of employees going up and down this country, at a cost of $866,000 a year for travelling expenses alone, advising the farmers of this country what they should do, telling them that they ought to be going into sheep raising and producing wool. Why not give the farmers a chance? Then they will produce all the wool and all the mutton the people of this country require and plenty for export. Just give them a decent fair chance, and see what they can do.

When wool went up a few years ago, the number of sheep in this country went up to nearly three times what it is to-day. There is no animal on the farm which will do more to put agriculture in this country on a sound basis again than sheep if this industry is given encouragement. We hear protests from every quarter about the spread of noxious weeds in this country. Give the sheep industry a fair show and you will soon find that sheep will do much more to eradicate noxious weeds than anything else we can do in this country.

Let the government do something to encourage rather than discourage the farmer. Give people a fair chance when they do go on the farm. How can we expect to prosper when the United States have a tariff of 30 cents per pound on raw wool, and we have comparatively no tariff at all in this country on wool? How can we expect this industry to prosper when you find the woollen mills of this country refusing to use Canadian wool because they say they can get a better quality of wool from Australia and South America? That is what is going on here. The Australian wool is not any better for many purposes, but it enables the manufacturers to mix cotton with it much more satisfactorily without detection than they can do with our own Canadian wool. If the government want the immigrants to go on the farm, give them some inducement to go on the farm. There is no use bringing them out here and saying we will not allow them to go into the cities and stay there. If you want them to go on the land and stay there just remove some of the restrictions which have been placed on agriculture, and some of them have been placed on agriculture during the present session by this government. Why, Mr. Chairman, the people who cleared the land and settled this country demonstrated years ago that they were competent and able to carry on agriculture successfully, and now we have this army of government officials going up and down this country aggravating the farmers, restricting them in their business and exercising an irritating influence that is most depressing, discouraging and humiliating. But when it comes to the time when the product of the farm reaches the factory, these officials lose all control and interest over it.

Take your hog graders, for instance. They are very careful to grade a hog for the packing company, but do they grade the meat in the packing company? Does the Department of Agriculture exercise any check whatever over that? How does it correspond with the grading of live hogs? Notwithstanding the fact that we have these thousands of officials established in all places all over this land, and costing over $800,000 a year for travelling expenses alone, their effect is in the main to discourage rather than encourage the farmer. Just leave the farmers alone for a while. Take off your restrictions, and give them a chance, with the same degree of protection as the American farmer enjoys, and see what they can do. You are not making a success of it as it is. Then why continue along this line with this irritating, pin-pricking, practice which is in effect in this country? Is it to be wondered at that young men growing up on the farm will not stay there under those conditions? They realize that farming is the only industry in this Dominion that has to submit to such humiliating treatment. The department is continually making new restrictions. The latest nuisance is that of the egg graders. Many people have become so disgusted with all these restrictions that they say: Well, there is one thing the government cannot do; they cannot force us to keep the hens to lay the eggs if we do not wish to. The government can penalize people as much as they like, but that is one thing they cannot do without open rebellion. They cannot force those people to remain on the farm under those conditions; so far it has been desertion not rebellion. The minister even brought out a patent balanced hen ration last session that was going to revolutionize the trade.

I have already mentioned wool. We also produce a considerable quantity of hides. We exported 19,842,000 pounds of sheep and lamb skins in that period, and we imported 12,304,000 pounds. Of cattle hides we imported 138,818,000 pounds, and we exported 183,974,000 pounds. Why all this unnecessary transportation cost, sending ours out of the country to find a market, and bringing others in? Why should it be necessary for the farmers of the Dominion of Canada to have to find a market for 183,974,000 pounds of their cattle hides abroad?—ask yourselves the question. I heard evidence not very long ago before a committee of this House in which it was pointed out that low ocean rates could be secured on hides brought into this country. Why not put a tariff on these hides that will protect the farmers of this country, as other branches of industries are protected or desire to be protected? Why not place a tariff there so we will be sure that our own hides have a preference in our own market, instead of having to pay the transportation costs on our hides exported to a foreign country, and bring foreign hides in here? Good common sense would actuate any government to settle this question in a few minutes.

In the same period we imported 19,128,595 pounds of mutton and lamb, and we exported 25,769,000 pounds. Just imagine, with a surplus of 25,000,000 pounds of mutton and lamb for export, we allow 19,000,000 pounds to come into this country! Now the government have arranged a treaty with Australia, which will reduce the present tariff on mutton to one cent a pound, should it come into effect. That is the kind of encouragement this government proposes to give agriculture. That is the immigration policy that is being adopted by the present government. Why not cut out the whole staff of your Immigration department, and turn the whole thing over to the provincial governments, and allow them to look after immigration?

That is what Ontario has been doing for years. The government of that province do not depend on the department here to look after the matter of immigration at all. They know that they have been discriminated against, and they have their own immigration officials. Why not cut out a lot of this duplication? Only two years ago we were told that the government had a great scheme for extending immigration. The Minister of the Interior then pointed out that they hoped to bring in immigrants by the hundreds of thousands, and the sum of $200,000 was given to what was known as the Canada Colonization Company as a starter towards bringing in immigrants. I am surprised that the minister did not refer to that matter in his speech to-night, and tell the House how many settlers were brought in through the instrumentality of that company—less than one hundred, I believe. The Empire Settlement League are getting a substantial grant in connection with immigration; but I am not in favour of increasing this vote under present conditions because I think it absolutely folly to do so.

Mr. ROBB: We are not increasing the vote, we are decreasing it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am not in favour of increasing it under present conditions, as was argued by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church). People are finding fault with this country but the country is all right. It is the government we have in this country to-day that is all wrong.

An hon. MEMBER: Tell that to someone else.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have said this before. I have criticized not only this government but previous governments for their shortcomings in many respects.

Mr. ROBB: I recall that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: But we were never in such desperate straits as we are to-day having to meet a burden in connection with our national debt which is increasing at the rate of something like $100,000,000 per year. There is only one place for us to end up if this continues. If it was a private individual he would be in the hands of the sheriff; but I do not know who would make foreclosure in the case of a government that is pursuing such a reckless policy as this one is. We cannot go on as we are going—that is absolutely certain. It may be that we will require a Mussolini, or some dictator, to take control of matters and put them on a business basis; but just as sure as the sun rises in the morning, this policy cannot continue without absolute ruin overtaking us. We are going behind at the rate of $100,000,000 per year without any serious attempt being made by the government to meet this condition and to curtail expenses. On the contrary there is a most lavish expenditure going on in the various departments of the government which should not be allowed.

Mr. McBRIDE: When the hon. member who has just resumed his seat was speaking, I could not help thinking of an old saying that "so long as a boiler can blow off steam it is safe". But a boiler blowing off steam never does any good; it just makes a noise and nobody pays any heed to it. The hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Irvine) made a remark —I do not know that it is worth taking notice of considering the personality of the gentleman who uttered it—that I was rather lazy in doing my work in the House. I think there is not another hon. member in this House, outside of that hon. gentleman, who would have so little regard for himself as to make a statement of that kind. I have been a member for four years and during those four sessions there have only been five occasions when I have not been in my seat either in the afternoon or in the evening, when the House was opened. I think that is at least an indication that I am attending to my duties and looking after the interests of the people who sent me here.

A great deal has been said about people leaving Canada, but I do not intend to take up much of the time of the House in dealing with this matter. When I pick up a newspaper and read such things and then listen to what is said here, it sets me thinking. The other day I came across a copy of the Vernon News. It has been a Tory paper ever since it was started, and therefore I think we can rely upon what it says. A certain man who had spent six months in California, upon returning to Canada made this statement:

> The lure of the south should be forgotten for it is largely a myth.

He stated that while it is true that wages are fairly high in the country to the south, it is equally true that the cost of living is high also. Many workmen are out of employment, indeed many are in destitute circumstances; and then he advises people who are inclined to go to the south to think seriously before taking that step, and he winds up by saying "Canada is far ahead of California". I turn to another paper and I read that "in Philadelphia last year there were 155 murders and 176 people committed suicide. Is that an indication of prosperity in the States?

Mr. NEILL: It would suggest that the undertakers were prosperous!

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. McBRIDE: That may be. Then I turn to what President Coolidge says. He states that there is eight times as much crime in the United States to-day as there is in Great Britain. And yet we hear a lot about the number of people who are out of employment in the Mother Country. Surely we should pay some attention to what the press of the United States says. Then I turn to another paper—a good Conservative paper too—and it speaks of two spinning mills being started in Vancouver that are going to employ 150 people. I read in the same paper that in the month of May in Vancouver there were 670 permits taken out to build houses at a valuation of $2,929,385. Does that look as if this country is going to ruin? If it does why should they build these houses.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is the same in Montreal.

Mr. McBRIDE: Then I read in the Financial Times that this country is entering upon a wave of prosperity that it has not experienced for years, and I think that that statement is correct. Bearing these facts in mind why should the time of this House be taken up day after day, and week after week, in trying to hold Canada up to ridicule, and to condemn the members of the government and the country for political reasons. That is why this propaganda is being carried on and for no other purposes. Is that why we are sent down here and paid salaries for? Is that what the people of Canada want us to consume the time of the House with? If it is, I do not want to come back.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: You had better speak for yourself.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): I should like to have a statement from the minister regarding the colonization associations which are getting or likely to get grants this year.

Mr. ROBB: There is a grant to the Salvation Army of $25,000, and to the Scottish Emigration Aid Society of $5,000, and under the heading "unforeseen" an amount of $5,000 making a total of $35,000.

Mr. MANION: What is being done for these immigrants on their arrival in the country to endeavour to direct them in the right way towards getting on the land either in the western prairie provinces, in northern Ontario—for example—or in Quebec, or in the Maritime provinces? What efforts are being made by the department to look after them after their arrival in this country?

Mr. ROBB: There is pretty complete direction work carried on now from all parts of Canada, not only by the officers of the department, but outside of them. There are throughout this country interested people in different communities who do everything they can to help the newcomer to get settled. There is excellent cooperation between the department and the citizens already in the country.

Mr. HOEY: Do the officers of the Soldiers Settlement Board help in any way?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, they help very materially.

Mr. MANION: I think one of the troubles has been, not only at the present time but in the past—and I am not particularly offering any criticism of this government in regard ot it, but of all governments—that there has been too much tendency when immigrants came to this country to give them no attention after they got here, but simply to let them look out for themselves, so to speak. I think that in the future we should all, whatever government is in power, make a greater endeavour than in the past to give proper attention to people who are coming here, from foreign lands particularly, but even to people coming from the British Isles. These people are coming to a new country, and it is difficult for them to acclimatize themselves, if they are absolutely neglected by the government. I remember well a letter written some years ago by a good Liberal friend of the present government, Mr. John King—

Mr. ROBB: I know him very well.

Mr. MANION: The minister remembers him. He is a very estimable gentleman.

Mr. ROBB: Indeed he is.

Mr. MANION: He wrote a letter to the Quebec Telegraph in which he suggested a method of looking after the immigrants after their arrival along the lines of lending them small amounts of money to be paid back gradually. After they had cleared a certain number of acres of land they were to be loaned a small amount, and after they had cleared a further quantity of land they were to be loaned a further amount. I do not remember the details but the principle was that some assistance was to be given them by the government of the day to look after them after their arrival in this country. I am not advocating the details of the scheme as proposed by him—in fact I do not remember them well enough—but I believe the principle is right, that we should give greater attention to these people and not depend so much as we have in the past upon voluntary organizations to look after strangers coming to our shores. Indeed, I think it is altogether likely that if in the past we had given more attention to the people on their arrival in Canada we would have held more than we have been able to hold. I think the government should give serious consideration to the question of having their immigrants looked after in that regard, and possibly also in the way advocated by Mr. John King in this country. The minister is familiar with his proposition as he is nodding his head.

Mr. ROBB: I am glad my hon. friend approves of that idea, because the department now is taking every care to welcome the settler, and as far as possible to follow him up and see that he is properly settled. With reference to the policy advocated by Mr. John King of loaning money, and so forth is concerned, I am not prepared to endorse that.

Mr. MANION: I do not believe there is enough effort made—and I have mentioned this in the House before—to settle the bush lands of this country. We have an immense country practically uninhabited between North Bay and the Manitoba boundary. We have a territory 700 miles in length and wide enough to make an area of 300,000 square miles; in fact, large enough to make an area equal to the German Empire and the British Isles combined which have over a hundred million people between them and yet in northern Ontario we have but a population of 150,000. We have some of the finest agricultural land in the world in that district. There are those sections which have been settled, where the people have cut their homes out of the bush, and they have as fine farms as you will find in any section of Ontario or Quebec. I believe the government should do more to encourage immigration to these districts. It has been the policy not only of the government, because they handle the lands in the prairie provinces, but it has been the policy of the different railways, to encourage immigration rather to the prairie provinces, for the reason, from the railway standpoint, that they get a longer haul. It gives them more freight to carry. But for the purpose of bringing freight to the railway, for the purpose of filling in that gap where there is not sufficient traffic for the railway. I think a greater effort should be made by this government, or any other government handling the immigration affairs of the country, to get a type of immigration, as there is a type of immigrant in Europe, anxious to come to bush lands and clear them

Mr. POWER: Where will we get that type of man?

Mr. MANION: We have I believe in Europe certain classes who wish to come to that class of land. For example I am told that some of the northern European people, the Finlanders, are people who wish to go on bush lands and cut their homes out of bush lands. We have many Finlanders in my section of the country who make very excellent settlers, providing they are not that extreme kind of Finlander who are a little inclined to be socialistically red and carry it to the extent of red socialism. But there is a type of Finlander than whom there is no better citizen, and quite a lot of them are up in that section of the country. We have a few of them who go to extremes, but after all I do not know that the Finlanders are in a class by themselves in that regard. Of course since my hon. friend asks that question, we have right here in Canada—I am not speaking of immigration in this case—a class of people who prefer bush lands to any other, coming from the province to which my hon. friend belongs, the good old province of Quebec. When they leave their own province of Quebec they prefer to go to a section where there is bush land rather than to go to a prairie section. That is my understanding and I think I am correct in that. There are other classes of European people who prefer bush lands though I cannot name them. I have read of them. Perhaps it is the Norwegians.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Poles?

Mr. MANION: I cannot answer that, I do not know, but there are some other people in Europe who prefer bush lands, and we should make a greater effort to get more of the people to settle on those lands, especially in Ontario and Quebec and the eastern provinces, rather than to get people to settle in the prairie provinces.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the process followed once an immigrant is landed on Canadian shores?

Mr. ROBB: What type of immigrant does the hon. member refer to—the agriculturist? Generally speaking, the effort has been along the lines advocated by the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River as far as possible, to have them go to the east, in the belief that they will drift westwards. Perhaps the boys will go west. But, when they start out with the idea in their minds that they want to go to Alberta, you cannot make them remain in the east.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the department assure them that they will have work?

Mr. ROBB: We do not allow them to come unless we have an assurance that there is going to be work for them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the minister say that fifty per cent of the farm labourers who came to Canada had jobs provided for them before they came?

Mr. ROBB: I think there was an understanding that they would get work. I think we had an understanding with the transportation companies who asked for permits for certain numbers. If we had a guarantee that they would get work we gave them permits. Sometimes the companies and sometimes individuals asked for these immigrants. Sometimes we are found fault with for following up and refusing permits, but we discovered that there had been a system of trafficking in permits, and that is why we are careful to follow them up and see that there is no trafficking in the permits, and that the permits are genuine.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am glad the minister has not committed himself further than saying, "I think so"; because I have a distinct recollection of many incidents that have come to my attention of immigrants who have come in during recent years who have not been provided with jobs and who were unable to get them.

Mr. ROBB: We do not guarantee jobs.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have a statement in my hand, and I am going to quote this to the minister after his extraordinary outburst this afternoon against those who would say things that were true about Canada, but which according to him should not be said. I cannot understand that attitude of mind. Here we find this statement:

London, March 9.—In the House of Commons tonight, L. C. Amery, secretary for the colonies, assured Sir C. Kinloch-Cooke, Conservative for East Cardiff, that the Canadian government had guaranteed employment to all persons emigrating to the Dominion under the Empire Settlement Act.

Is that true or not?

Mr. ROBB: I do not know whether my hon. friend is quoting from the British Hansard; I have not seen that statement. I think however he will find that the statement he has quoted has reference to the 3,000 British family scheme.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This is a large item and one would naturally expect the minister to outline the policy which the department intends to pursue. The sum of $1,350,000 is a good deal to be disposed of by order in council. This is a comparatively new idea; I think it was first adopted in relation to the $200,000 estimate for the Canada colonization scheme. What associations does the minister intend to have orders in council passed for the purpose of handing over this money to? If the minister does not indicate the policy he intends to adopt I do not think we are justified in voting this money to be expended by order in council. Some people have the idea that the government still have something in the back of their heads which they have not yet given to parliament. One of their officials in Toronto, I noticed in the Globe of yesterday morning, outlined the policy which it is said the government will pursue and pursue to the end. It is not permissible to refer to statements that have been made in committee of this House and so I shall not transgress the rules in that regard; but there are certain things I should like to quote if I were at liberty to do so. Some years ago about $400,000 was paid out by the government of that time to some company for the purpose of bringing people to this country and we never found out who constituted that company until some of the evidence which was submitted to a committee of the House gave a clear idea as to where a great deal of the money went. Is it the government's intention to hand over this money to some colonization concern such as the North Atlantic Trading Company to handle the business? The government has admitted its inability to deal with it and is now asking us to vote $1,350,000 to be disposed of by order in council in some way. Surely we are entitled to know how the money is to be spent.

Mr. ROBB: The only grants we are making are $25,000 to the Salvation Army, $5,000 to the Scottish Immigration Aid Society, and $5,000 for unforeseen expenses, or a total of $35,000. If my hon. friend is referring to vote No. 63 the figure he has given is wrong; the amount is $1,210,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister a moment ago said that if I had looked up the British Hansard I should have found that Colonel Amery, in the statement which I quoted a short while ago, was referring to the British Empire settlement scheme. That may be true, but the fact is that the statement, bald as it is, was scattered throughout the British Isles and undoubtedly misled hundreds of prospective emigrants. I hold in my hand another document, a letter published by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in London, the deliberate purpose of which was to offset the misleading and "vindictive effort", as it is put, to discourage British immigration to Canada. I will quote a part of this letter.

> Recognising the fact that her duty towards the settler does not terminate when he lands on her shores, the Dominion government has made the most careful and complete arrangements for giving new arrivals something much more than a chance to succeed in their new surroundings.

What are these wonderful opportunities?

> The men are given the opportunity for training under competent supervision.

Where are these training schools and where is the competent supervision? They are—

> Safe-guarded in regard to the purchase of farms and stock, loans are being advanced under the most advantageous terms, and yet something that looks exceedingly like an organized campaign is being waged at the present time against emigration to the Dominion.
> These hostile letters and articles almost invariably refer to conditions in the urban centres. That there is unemployment in Canadian cities and towns is admitted, and is a regrettable fact. It is one that has to be faced every winter, just as it has to be in every town and city in the British Islands, but the Canadian government has never encouraged emigration to its centres of population. Its whole effort has been to secure men and women for the land and to keep them from the congested centres. It is nowhere contended that there is unemployment on the farms, and any man willing and physically able to work can obtain employment there.

I may tell the minister that the whole statement is grossly misleading. The last part of it is partly true, and only dangerously so. We can provide employment for a large number of men on the farms in western Canada, but only during a short season, and the rest of the time they must shift for themselves. I have still another document, some of the immigration propaganda of this government. I am informed that it is distributed at the Wembley exhibition. In red and black letters the title appears, "Canada the New Homeland"; and on the very first page there is the following sentence, indicative of the psychology of the men who write this sort of stuff:

> Canada is situated mainly in the north temperate zone, in the latitudes in which the people of the United Kingdom have been born and brought up.

This is absolutely true, every word of it; but it does not give the unfortunate man who reads it any conception of our climatic conditions. It does not say that we are in the same latitude as a part of Siberia. Now, the weather here has not hurt any of us; certainly it is not hurting me, for I rather enjoy it.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is just as well off as he was before he came to Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; but why not tell the truth? Why mislead people? This document goes on to say:

It is a land of homes—the "New Homeland" of the British people—a land where all who are intelligent and industrious may reasonably expect success.

If that is not a gross misstatement of the facts, what is it?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do hon. members sitting on the government side, for political reasons, mean to say that the unfortunate farmers of the west are not industrious or intelligent? Yet after struggling for fifteen years they find themselves under the necessity of asking for amendments to the bankruptcy law.

Mr. JACOBS: They are not any worse off than the farmers in any other part of the world.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is not the point. The point is that these statements are a deliberate misrepresentation on the part of this government of the conditions that exist. And I could go further and quote other statements. These statements are made in government propaganda in spite of what is said by the agents of this government itself. I hold in my hand the report of Dr. Tory on agricultural credit, which is worth reading by any hon. member. He cites there exactly what I have believed and stated in this House for many years. This is what he says:

Much is being said to-day about keeping young men on the farm, retaining them on the land in our own country. The truth is that except for the men of the hardy pioneering type, who are able and willing to venture on the virgin soil of the northern areas in Canada, it is almost impossible for men of limited means to get established as farmers.

That is the government's own agent speaking.

A certain number of course inherit from their fathers, but for the great majority of the young men of this generation it costs more to get established as farmers, in both money and energy, in any of the older settled parts of Canada than to enter upon either industrial or professional careers. Without question eastern Canada to-day is losing some of her best rural human stock, sons and daughters of those who pioneered and made this country what it is, people who brought to the country those simple arts of life which helped them to establish their families and their small communities as social units, because they do not see how they can under present conditions establish themselves in a reasonable time in anything like reasonable comfort.

These are the sons and daughters of our Canadian farmers, not the unacclimatized, inexperienced immigrant labouring under the greatest difficulties. He continues:

It can be stated without fear of successful contradiction that it is not all the lure of the city and the pleasures of town life that attract our young Canadians to the cities and towns. It is, at least in part, because the occupations offered seem to give a more immediate hope of reasonable prosperity.

It is very easy for those living in comparative affluence, like my hon. friend from Cariboo (Mr. McBride), to say that young men should do as their fathers did. The truth is their fathers had no alternative offered of the kind offered by the centres of industry to-day:

What has just been stated applies not only to eastern Canada but to western Canada as well. Land within easy reach of transportation must be paid for some way and it costs money and energy to secure it. To put the above aspect of the matter on no higher basis than that of personal advantage it is in the interest of every business organization, industrial establishment and financial corporation in this country, that a way should be found to offer young people of Canada such a reasonable chance of success in this country that they will desire to establish themselves as farmers.

There is what Dr. Tory says after an investigation made no later than last year. His statement directly and deliberately refutes the propaganda of this government, but the programme continues.

Mr. POWER: Will my hon. friend read that statement and the pamphlet again? I cannot follow his argument. It seems to me Dr. Tory simply says what the pamphlet says.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Of course, you cannot convince a man against his will, and I am not going to try. I have not the time, for I have a lot to say.

Mr. POWER: You always have.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, I have, and I hope that I always try to tell the actual facts. My whole endeavour, Mr. Chairman, ever since I have come to this House has been to try to bring home to this government a realization of the conditions that exist, in the hope that they will take immediate steps to remedy them. I am not one of those who blame the government for the actual conditions that exist. I do not. I will tell the House in a few moments upon whom I blame the conditions that exist in western Canada, and it is not wholly upon the government sitting opposite; my hon. friends to my right must take a very considerable share of responsibility in the matter. But before I conclude this little episode with regard to propaganda, I wish to call the minister's attention to the published statement of Mrs. Harrison Bell, a lady who accompanied Miss Margaret Bondfield in her investigational tour of this country last year, chiefly regarding the condition of juvenile immigrants in the Dominion. Last year Mrs. Bell was speaking in the city of Calgary, and is reported as follows in the Calgary Albertan:

The use of large, vivid, coloured posters, picturing farms in western Canada as a housewives' delight—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, if those hon. members would listen to me I think possibly they would not continue their ridicule.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the quotation from the Calgary Albertan of Mrs. Harrison Bell's speech in the city of Calgary, is as follows:

The use of large, vivid, coloured posters, picturing farms in western Canada as a housewives' delight, complete with electric washing machines, electric irons and vacuum cleaners, electric milkers, butter makers, etc., as an incentive to prospective immigrants, was strongly attacked by Mrs. Harrison Bell, colleague of Miss Margaret Bondfield, and a member of the Overseas Settlement League, now on an inspection tour of Canada, when she addressed a public meeting on immigration problems at the Grand theatre last night.

She goes on to say:

Back home in Great Britain they think that all that is necessary on the farms (in Canada) is to turn a switch, and electricity does the rest, and I confess that I was extremely disappointed when I found out in my investigations this year that this is not so. Why, in some of the farming districts I have visited I found they were still living as in primitive days, and that they were compelled to make their own yeast before they could make a batch of bread.

Mr. MARLER: Do such posters actually exist?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Let me describe one. I have seen them myself even as far back as my own days. We have a highly coloured picture of large size, usually outside some great railway station in Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow or London, and this is what it depicts: in the immediate foreground there is a beautifully fenced roadway running from a beautiful home, and parked on it is a fine six-cylinder motor car; walking towards the motor car will be found the stalwart son, presumably of the owner—the alleged owner—of the farm; he is about to step into the car; in the barnyard there is a beautifully dressed young woman, whom we are to imagine is the wife of the owner; she is usually dressed in a coloured gingham dress, and looks very pretty; she is feeding corn off a platter to the finest looking geese, turkeys and chickens that any human being ever saw, and that only an artist could imagine; off to one side is an enormous hip-rooffed barn of a type rarely seen on the prairies, adjoining it is the everpresent silo —everpresent in the picture only. Many of us would like to have such a silo, but unfortunately we have never been able to afford one.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend deny that that is a true picture of many of our Canadian farms?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If my hon. friend will possess his irritable soul in patience I will come to that in time.

Mr. VIEN: I am irritated only by the false statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): By the false statement?

Mr. VIEN: By your false statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I ask that the hon. gentleman be requested to withdraw his remark. I have never made a false statement in this House, to my knowledge.

Mr. POWER: That you know of.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I ask that you request the hon. gentleman to withdraw his unparliamentary statement.

Mr. VIEN: Mr. Chairman, speaking on the point of order, the hon. gentleman affirmed that the picture which he has described was not a true picture of many of our Canadian farms.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No such statement was ever made by me.

Mr. VIEN: And my hon. friend tells me that he resents my temper because of the tone of my remarks. I told him simply that he himself was not truly picturing the conditions in Canada by the statements that he has made. That is the explanation I have to give in respect of my hon. friend's point of order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I have never made a false statement in this House. The hon. gentleman opposite has accused me of making a false statement. I say that that is an unparliamentary expression and should be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): The hon. member has explained what he meant by "false statement." I think that that explanation should be accepted by the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept that explanation. The hon. member deliberately charged me with making a false statement. It is unparliamentary to do so. I have never done it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I demand that that be withdrawn. It is my right.

Mr. VIEN: The ruling is given.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): I must declare that the ruling has been given.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have no brief for the member for Bow River, but rulings of that sort simply make a farce of parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is a sense of justice in us all. To rule that an hon. member can explain what he meant by "false statement" and not withdraw the expression is merely to make a travesty of the rules of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: Order. I rise to a point of order. Your decisions, Mr. Chairman, are not debatable, and the right hon. leader of the opposition is now debating your decision.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are not speakable.

Mr. CANNON: Not debatable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have never yet suffered from injustice in this House, and I sincerely hope that on this occasion, Mr. Chairman, you will not compel me to suffer. I must ask you to reconsider your decision. The charge made by the hon. member was untrue, unparliamentary. I have never made a false statement. I ask that the honour of the House be sustained.

Mr. VIEN: I have no objection to saying this: Instead of "false statement," let me correct that and say that the statements of my hon. friend are incorrect; they do not truly depict the conditions in Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is also inaccurate, Mr. Chairman. I have never painted a false picture, an incorrect picture of this country. The hon. member said that I made a false statement.

Mr. VIEN: Incorrect statement.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, false statement. The mere substitution of the word "incorrect" does not remove the implication. I must appeal to you, Sir, and ask that the hon. member withdraw that charge. I have never made an incorrect or false statement with respect to the matters that have been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): Would the hon. member for Bow River please explain the point he is taking?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien) stated that I had made a false statement with regard to conditions in this country, or something to that effect. The word "false" was used as applied to me—that I had made a false statement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): And then the hon. member for Lotbinière said that the hon. member had made an incorrect statement; do I understand that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He has just now done so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He did not withdraw it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I contend that the substitution of the word "incorrect" for the word "false" does not remove the implication, and I ask that the unparliamentary words of the hon. member be withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON: There is no unparliamentary expression.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. VIEN: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I stated that I resented false statements in respect to Canada, and the hon. gentleman said, "the false statements that you should resent are those made by the Minister of Immigration."

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Oh, no.

Mr. VIEN: Well, I want to be corrected if my affirmation now is not exact. The hon. member said, "the false statements are those made by the Minister of Immigration," or by this government, or something like that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No.

Mr. VIEN: Well, what did my hon. friend say?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My statement was that the propaganda published by them was shown by the evidence of their agent, Dr. Tory, as false, and on other evidence it is branded as false. The hon. member for Lotbiniere then claims that I made a false statement. It is not a matter as between an ordinary member of this House and the government; the hon. member is personally charging me with making a false statement, and I must ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. CANNON: There has been a ruling, Mr. Chairman. This discussion is altogether out of order. The Chairman has given his decision and that decision is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gordon): There has been a decision already given?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Chairman, I hope you have more respect for your position than to say a decision was given.

The CHAIRMAN: I was just told by the Clerk that a decision had been given.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Vien) was allowed to explain what he meant by "false statement." These words need no explanation. These words are against the rules of the House, and should be withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON: The Chairman gave his decision and the decision is not debatable, notwithstanding what the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) may say or insinuate. According to the rules of the House, this discussion should cease forthwith.

The CHAIRMAN: I regret that for the moment I was out of the chamber, having been called out, and therefore did not hear the remarks in question. There is a dispute as to what actually took place; I am sorry I have not the record before me. I understand that the hon. member for Lotbiniere, to some extent, did dispute what the hon. member for Bow River said and it makes it very difficult for me to reach a conclusion as to what actually passed. If it has been stated that the hon. member for Bow River made a statement on the floor of the House, in this committee, that was false, that is an expression which under the circumstances should be withdrawn, and I trust that the hon. member for Lotbiniere, if that inference can be drawn or taken from his words, will correct that impression before we continue. From the explanations which have been given I am in some confusion as to what actually passed, but I would like to hear from the hon. member for Lotbiniere in explanation of the matter.

Mr. VIEN: Mr. Chairman, I have corrected my statement. I resented the statements made by the hon. member as being an incorrect picture of the conditions in Canada to-day. I asked him whether this literature issued by the Department of Immigration did not truly represent the conditions of some of our farms, of many of our Canadian farms, and I said that if there was any incorrect or false statement made it was the one he had made then. On a point of order being raised, I said I was willing to correct my statement and say that the statement of the hon. member was incorrect; that it did not accurately represent the conditions of Canada to-day. With that explanation I think the committee fully understood that I did not want to charge the hon. member with making a false statement to the committee, which would be unparliamentary, but that I charged him with incorrectly representing the conditions in Canada to-day.

Mr. CANNON: The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) has described the decision given by the Chairman as an unspeakable decision. I do not think this committee should proceed further without an apology from the right hon. gentleman for such a statement.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not hear that.

Mr. CANNON: I could hear it; it was said in the committee. I do not think any member of the House should use such an expression.

The CHAIRMAN: No; I agree that the expression is a highly offensive one.

Mr. CANNON: I have no doubt that the leader of the opposition will immediately apologize.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I accept the statement of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien) so far as it is an expression of opinion on his part. I was describing to the House as graphically as my poor efforts could the poster which I have seen myself. A little away to one side of this farm building was a beautiful hip-roofed barn, with the silo. We had reached that stage. Everything, of course, was beautiful spick and span and newly painted. Behind the fence to the back of the House, and running over a beautiful sweep of park land was a crop standing in the stook, and the stooks were so thick as to make one wonder how the artist could have got enough room to paint them all in. It was the sort of crop that one sees in this country once in perhaps ten or fifteen years. Off to one side was standing a splendidly built man in the stage uniform of Jack Canuck. He had on the broad brimmed sombrero, and the English riding breeches, which are very rarely seen in western Canada. He was wearing an open shirt with the cowboy tie, and to everyone who looked at the picture he was uttering these words, "Monarch of all I survey." Not a word about the mortgage companies, not a word about the banks or his debts to them, not a word about taxes or anything else. The wonderful impression was thrown out upon the minds of all who were unfortunate enough to be receptive, that all they had to do was to come here and within a short space of time, almost as quick as the clicking of your fingers, they would appear like that wonderful gentleman and be the monarch of similar possessions.

That kind of propaganda is condemned by Mrs. Harrison Bell. It is condemned by myself. It is condemned, and must be condemned by every honest-minded man in this country who stands for the good of Canada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This wonderful gentleman who was standing in the middle of this painting, may I ask if he was one of the egg inspectors of the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I say, Mr. Chairman, if the government is really serious in this matter—I cannot believe they are—I think they are just talking for political purposes—but if they are really serious they would censor all the very recent publications of the department. They would censor the publication of this report by Doctor Tory, which makes statements both this year and last which exceed the most extravagant statements ever made by any hon. member on this side of the House. In the opening paragraphs of his report last year, he compares current conditions on the farms of Canada with those existing in Germany in 1875—the most desperate conditions that ever existed in agriculture in Germany, when homes were burned, when much was destroyed, and the countryside was destitute. It is like reading a commentary on conditions here. Doctor Tory's report this year is almost as striking as it was last year.

Then we have the report of the National Conference regarding winter employment in Canada, printed at Ottawa, by F. A. Acland, Printer to the King's Most Excellent Majesty It is not my purpose to quote at length from this report, because that has already been done by my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) and myself in the debate on unemployment and immigration. I say that this report should also be censored if the government is not prepared to face the actual facts and conditions rather than covering them up with statements of the kind I have quoted from "Canada, the New Homeland."

The other day, Mr. Chairman, I had the unfortunate experience of meeting three fine, moderately young Scotchman out of employment. They were three of the poor chaps who had come up here from Cape Breton. Let me tell this House their story.

These three men had come to Canada as a result of the propaganda carried on in Scotland by the British Empire Steel Corporation. They had seen advertisements in the Glasgow Herald, and in local papers, urging experienced miners to come to the Cape Breton coal fields, where they would be assured of a job at from five to six dollars a day, with steady work. These three men came here on the strength of that statement. Two of them happened to be married, one had, I think, seven children, and the other ten. The third man was unmarried. After they had been here some time they were encouraged by the company to bring out their families.

Mr. PARENT: Ten years of age and drawing six dollars a day?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the man talking about, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. PARENT: I wanted to ask the hon. member a question. He said that he had met three young Scotchmen who had come to this country, and who were promised six dollars a day for working in the mines. I am asking the age of these young men. I understood the hon. member to say they were ten years of age.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is really no use in making any comment on that question. I say that one of these married men had seven children, another ten, and the third man was unmarried.

An hon. MEMBER: Was he a Scotchman?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes. The two married men were deliberately encouraged by the company to bring their families out here. The men naturally were glad to accept the encouragement, as all men feel rather lonely and gloomy at times when separated from their families. They took advantage of the company's offer to advance them the money required to pay the passage of their families. These two men brought their families out, and undertook that liability to the company. One of them, the father of the seven children, has not yet succeeded in paying off that liability. He has not had enough work in the two years to enable him to pay off that debt. The other man had two grown sons who went and worked in the mines with him and who subjected themselves to the reduction of $5 from each pay cheque until they were finally able to pay off their debt to the company amounting to over $600. That debt for transportation has only just been paid off after two years, with three members of the family working in the mines.

The strike came on. They endured conditions just as long as they could, and finally decided it was no use staying in that area, and they left it to find work. The reason why they left it they told very graphically. They had gone up to Sydney, and there they saw an advertisement stating that 800 men and women were wanted in the beet fields of Alberta. On that very day they arrived here in Ottawa, the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Irvine) rose in this House and read a telegram from one of the representatives of labour in Calgary to the effect that there was no further employment in the beet fields, that this order was filled long ago. Whatever truth there is in that I am not concerned with now. But it was on the strength of that advertisement that these men started west. How they were going to get west they did not know. They were going to try and get a job on the way perhaps. They went from Moncton to Quebec, and on to Montreal, beating their way, with no money in their pockets. Their experiences on this trip were heartrending to anyone who heard them—suspected by everybody, driven around from one place to another, driven from doorways. Let me give you one illustration.

These men had stopped in the shelter of a railway embankment to cook a billy-can of tea. Dusk was falling, and just as soon as they were ready to partake of their tea, along came one of the railway policemen and ordered them off, using abusive language. They ran up the embankment, and as they ran the policeman struck one of them with his baton three times on the back. When they reached the top of the embankment the policeman fired two shots after them with his revolver. That is the sort of treatment they got—these men who were looking for work.

Here is another experience they had. Going into one of the towns along the way, they noticed the ties were on fire, caused by cinders dropped from the engine. They put the fire out, and approaching the town they met a policeman, and told him what they had done. He said to them in language which I cannot repeat in this House "What is the company to you? Do you think I am going to believe a story of that kind? Do you mean to say you expect me to believe you went and put out that fire? What interest have you got in the company?"

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Did the hon. member hear the other side of the story?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have heard the stories of the three men and each one was corroborated by the other.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Did you not hear the other side?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am telling you the story as I heard it. Hon members can put what interpretation they like on it. These are the facts as I have heard them recited by these men. By the way, they spent one week-end in Montreal trying to find a job; they went everywhere, along the docks, the wharves, and elsewhere. There was no work for them. They told us here that there were many unemployed in that city. They came to Ottawa. The first thing they did here was to apply to the employment agency. They were referred by the employment agency to the place where the Metropolitan building is going up and they were told that they might get a job there. When they went there they were informed by the man in charge that they were just the type he was looking for; they were rock facers capable of doing some of the necessary work. "But", he said, I cannot take you on at this time because there is too much unemployment in the city, and there would be resentment if you were taken on".

Mr. PARENT: How do you know that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I know for this reason when these men came here we secured an interview for them with the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Robb) who sits just below my hon. friend. We also had the Minister of Labour at that interview, and they did their very best to get these men a job. They tried all that day and the next day, and they were to go back at two o'clock. Let me say the only job these men were able to get—after the strongest efforts on the part of the hon. member for South East Grey (Miss Macphail) who happens to have some friends at Navan—was a job at roadwork. This is the story of three hardy Scotchmen whom the Acting Minister of Finance declared after his interview with them to be men sincerely wanting work. I believe they were myself. I hope they will get work; I wish them well. I have given a description of conditions that exist, is this government going to take any steps to remedy them? I am going to give them all the credit that is coming to them. I congratulate them, so far as the farmers are concerned, upon the bankruptcy legislation they have introduced. I think it was an excellent step. We have urged it for three years and it was overdue. With reference to rural credit legislation, let me say to the Acting Minister of Finance there is no more important legislation needed in this country. If any immigration policy is to be justified we need, and we need it immediately, a fair and generous rural credit enactment.

Mr. PARENT: For immigration purposes?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not know what the hon. member is talking about, he is not very intelligent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement. He cannot speak in that way of another hon. member.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is that your ruling, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, that is my ruling.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Very well, I have pleasure in withdrawing the statement. I wish to quote now this statement from a newspaper:

> Montreal, Nov. 29.—Of the 57,367 "visitors" departing from Montreal for a "temporary visit" to the United States during the past five months, 40,197 did not return, according to I. F. Wixcon, United States immigration commissioner, who, in an address here declared that 76 per cent of those crossing the line from this district employed subterfuge to enter and remain in the United States.

That offsets a good many of the statements that have been made.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Does my hon. friend believe every newspaper article he reads?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This statement is made by I. F. Wixcon.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Who is he?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The United States Immigration Commissioner.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Do you know him?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would take him to be a man of some responsibility.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: From what paper are you reading the quotation?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): One of the Montreal papers.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Which one?

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not know which one.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is it from La Minerve?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wonder then if the hon. member will believe this statement. This is a memorandum from the Bureau of Statistics secured by myself on 29th April: the importers of settlers' effects into Canada for the year 1923 reached the total value of $6,205,085. From the United States they amounted to $4,985,266. For the same fiscal year the total exports of immigrants' effects amounted to $7,971,062. Of that amount $6,635,000 worth went to the United States alone. In 1924 the total imports of settlers' effects was $6,114,702, and for the same year the exports of settlers' effects amounted to $10,795,941. Some difference! In the current fiscal year settlers' effects to the amount of $6,342,517 were brought in; the exports of settlers' effects for the same year amounted to $7,862,105. These few figures tell a story—a large heartrending story. The government, I hope, recognizes what is going on, and I tell them, as I have told them for three years now, that if they would turn their attention to the improvement of conditions in Canada, especially the conditions on the farm, instead wasting money on all sorts of foolish structures—elevators at Quebec, elevators at Halifax, elevators at Prince Rupert—

An hon. MEMBER: Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, and I will even join my hon. friends with respect to the Hudson Bay railway. I do not think the time is yet ripe for it. With these things under way and our present outflow of immigrants—due to the lack of proper economic conditions—what is one to think when he reads such a statement as I have given to the House? And I may say that they are not mine alone, but those of officials of this government.

In closing I will give two quotations, one from the Vancouver Sun which certainly cannot be taken as being a very extreme paper:

> The average Canadian home is to-day like a European war home—half the young people are absent: gone to the United States. Here are the official immigration figures of those who are leaving Canada:

An hon. MEMBER: Crepe.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I draw the attention of the hon. member who made that remark to the fact that crepe indicates death. I am not suggesting for a moment, as the hon. gentleman apparently is, that there is any death in Canada. But if hon. gentleman opposite proceed with their present policy death is going to visit agricultural Canada. The following emigration figures are quoted from the Vancouver Sun:

1922..	62,289
1923..	181,973
1924 (for 6 months only)..	96,825

The despatch goes on.

And these people are not the feeble-minded or the old; they are the healthy, the young, the best blood and brain of this Dominion, who have been born, raised and educated at enormous expense to Canada.

How long will this exodus to the United States continue; how long can this country stand the drain of 200,000 or 300,000 per year of its best young people? Why are those young men and women leaving Canada?

The Ottawa Citizen in another editorial not very long ago said this:

The situation for Canada is far more serious than merely that the young men are "leaving their priceless heritage to the keeping of the older generation". They are leaving Canada entirely, to become citizens of another country. Many thousands of the Canadian men who came back from overseas inspired with a greater love for the homeland, and a zeal to serve Canada in peace as in war, have been driven abroad by the pressure of economic circumstances. They found barriers to opportunity raised against them. Entrenched interests have established themselves as toll-gate keepers who take higher toll than young men are prepared to pay for the privilege of living in this country.

I could go on quoting from many sources as to the conditions that exist.

Mr. VIEN: Quote your own case.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not so puffed up with myself as to imagine that my own case is due to any ability on my part. The fact that I have the distinction of being in this House to speak for these people has only been possible because of the contemptible conditions under which many of my own unfortunate people have had to live in recent years. I have been sent down here by them because those conditions were wrong, so that I might tell the House about them and try and get a remedy. I have in my hand a few other dispatches. Here is one dated April 2, 1925, and reads:

To give one an idea of the extent of the exodus of settlers from the south country, it might be mentioned that on last Friday's train there were seven carloads of settlers' effects, and on Monday's train there were eighteen. It is stated that there will be eight or ten more carloads on to-morrow's train.

I was down here when this happened, but when I read this item from a local correspondent I was shocked. Then I found in the Ottawa Journal on the same day the following:

Large party of immigrants on way to Canada.

Thirty families leave Liverpool under overseas settlement plan to work farms in Dominion.

On the one hand you will find people who have struggled to make a living going out by the trainload, and people being brought in by the boat load. They will not stay until economic conditions are improved in this country, until rapid and progressive steps are taken by the administration to see to it that the question of unemployment is solved, and the condition of agriculture is solved, and they can do it if they will turn their attention to it with a will, which I would like to see them do.

Mr. ROBB: Having listened to this hardy annual from my hon. friend, I do not wish to delay my own estimates by making another speech. I am not going to quote any of the figures of the movement of immigration. They have already been placed on Hansard a number of times by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) and I think by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). Listening a moment ago to the figures of my hon. friend as to the movement of carloads of settlers' effects, I observe that the records of March, 1924 coming in from the United States show that there were 158 carloads and in March, 1925 there were 363 carloads. I have here a statement of wealth, cash and effects brought into Canada from the United States and taken from Canada to the United States by settlers during the fiscal years 1912-13 to 1924-25. My hon. friend quoted something like $14,000,000 brought in—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have no figures whatever for 1912-13.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend quoted that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have no figures whatever prior to 1922.

Mr. ROBB: The real figures show that in 1924-25 there were brought in effects to the value of $6,277,122.95.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What year?

Mr. ROBB: In 1924-25. Before taking up the question of the climatic conditions, I may say that my hon. friend quoted from Mrs. Florence N. Harrison Bell an alleged report of a speech she made in Calgary. I hold in my hand a copy of the Manchester Guardian 14th March, 1925, containing an open letter from the Overseas Settlement Office, signed by Florence N. Harrison Bell and George F. Plant, who accompanied her here. Apparently the Manchester Guardian had published a despatch from Toronto similar, I imagine, to some of the despatches that will go from this House to-night, which may be on the wires now, and perhaps will be published in the British papers to-morrow.

I will not tire the House by reading the whole of their letter. This letter in part reads:

In our report we have made certain recommendations with a view to improving the system under which the children migrate to Canada and, in particular, have recommended that no children under school-leaving age should be assisted to proceed to Canada—a recommendation which has been adopted by the Secretary of State for the Colonies and by the Dominion government. At the same time we found that, generally speaking, the existing arrangements were satisfactory, that the children were regularly inspected and well looked after by the societies responsible for bringing them to Canada, and that the prospects for the boys and girls in Canada are better than they would have been had they remained in the United Kingdom.

Here is another clause in the letter:

The selection of the children is, and always has been, vested entirely in the hands of the Dominion government. It is not to be expected that there should not be a number of failures among these children, but the vast majority have undoubtedly become good Canadian citizens.

My hon. friend who speaks annually on the immigration problem is himself an immigrant. On his own statement he came to this country not as well off as he is to-day. It seems to me his presence in this parliament, the clothes that he wears and the company with whom he associates are evidence that he is not doing too badly in Canada. He comes from Alberta and apparently he has done very well. I want to say that the gentlemen surrounding me and the gentlemen sitting opposite me are in a position to speak for the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. For the moment we will let the hon. member for Bow River represent, or misrepresent, Alberta if he wishes in this House. I hold in my hand here some of the records and some of the literature. My hon. friend has found fault with the literature sent out and published by the federal government, and if I understand it he claims that we misrepresented the climate, and that we have not told people of the rigorous climate of Canada, that we have submitted a picture of barns and houses that is altogether misleading. I hold in my hand a document handed out by the province of Alberta for distribution at the Wembley exposition and throughout England. I have not enough copies to pass around the chamber, but hon. gentlemen will notice some of the nice houses and barns which are pictured in this book, and we have a statement headed, "Climate and weather" which reads:

The climate of Alberta is of very attractive quality, and this quality has a very important bearing on the possibilities of development northward and on industrial and more particularly agricultural activities. The climate of the interior provinces of Canada is described as extreme. The winters are subect to low dips of temperatire and the summers are quite hot. Alberta, however, by reason of contiguity to the coast province has a rather moderate climate.

That is an official statement sent out by the province of Alberta. Here is another one telling of the opportunities in Alberta. This booklet says:

Alberta has a greater diversity of surface than the other prairie provinces. The southern part of the province is level prairie, in which the characteristic vegetation is the bunch grass, with cottonwoods, willow, saskatoons and small shrubby vegetation in the river bottoms, but a width of about sixty miles on the west side and in the southern part of the province consists of foothills and mountains.

That description would seem to indicate that it was one of the best provinces in the Dominion. Here is a picture of one of the dairy barns on the government Alberta farms. Look at the splendid herd of cattle and the fine barn. This is issued by Hon. George Hoadley, Minister of Agriculture in the Progressive government of Alberta. Let me read one sentence from this booklet:

The new province gave promise of becoming one of the brightest jewels in the crown of empire. Richly endowed by nature with broad and fertile agricultural lands, a wealth of mineral resources, and surpassing beauty of mountain scenery.

And so on. This is what the government of Alberta has to say about that province: this is the type of advertising it sends overseas.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Does the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) support that government?

Mr. ROBB: I do not know. Now, I have here a copy of The Financial Times of Montreal of May 29, 1925 in which there appears an advertisement over the names of the ministers of the province of Alberta, as follows:

Hon. H. Greenfield, Premier and Minister of Municipal Affairs.
Hon. J. E. Brownlee, Attorney General and Provincial Secretary.
Hon. R. G. Reid, Provincial Treasurer.
Hon. George Hoadley, Minister of Agriculture and Health.
Hon. Alexander Ross, Minister of Public Works.
Hon. V. W. Smith, Minister of Railways and Telephones.
Hon. Perren Baker, Minister of Education.
Hon. Mrs. Irene Parlby, Minister without portfolio.

This advertisement is headed:

Province of Alberta—a land of opportunity for settler and investor.

It gives the total value of agricultural products for the year 1924 as $217,757,120.23, and it shows that Alberta's coal production in 1923 amounted to 6,800,000 tons. I will not tire the committee by reading all the columns devoted to an advertisement of Alberta's resources, but the fact is that this is the statement sent out by that province. Now, does the government of Alberta speak for the province, or does the hon. member for Bow River?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I desire briefly to refer to one particular aspect of this immigration question, namely, that with regard to child immigration. A year ago this question was discussed in the House and there is no reason why I should now go over the ground then covered. However, since that time the subject has been discussed rather fully following a visit from Miss Margaret Bondfield and investigations by the social workers of this country. These investigations throw some light upon this very important question. As I said last year we ought to look at this matter both from the standpoint of the immigrant child and from that of the welfare of this country. We have recorded a very large number of instances where children have been mistreated in Canada and this would seem to show that the supervision is not as good as it should be. On the other hand, we have had so many instances of children being brought into Canada who were not suited for immigration that it would indicate that the selection has not been either careful or wise. As I pointed out last year, we are extremely careful about the character of our grain; we try to get the best seed possible. And we are equally careful in the matter of live stock. But we pay much less attention to the character of the girls and boys, the human stock, whom we are importing from the Old Land. I shall quote briefly from a report which has been sent me by the Social Service Council of Canada, an organization on which are represented a large number of churches and social agencies in this country, and which I heard quoted the other day as an authority by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien):

> Previous to the visit of Miss Margaret Bondfield, M.P. and a delegation of the overseas settlement committee to Toronto, a further effort was made to ascertain the effect upon Toronto of juvenile immigration. By co-operation of local social service agencies specially interested in child life, an investigation was made by trained workers as to the number of persons in Toronto who came to Canada as child immigrants. Two hundred cases were recorded, twenty-four of whom were included in the records already quoted from the Toronto General Hospital.

The minister a little while ago said that certain members on his side were able to speak for the old province of Ontario. Now, I am quoting here figures taken from statistics collected by social workers in Ontario, which province has received a larger proportion of juvenile immigrants than any other section of Canada. At page 41 of this report there appears a statement with regard to these two hundred cases:

> Two hundred immigrants residing in Toronto, having reached Canada as child or juvenile immigrants:
> Mentality—
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Apparently normal | 45 |
> | Below normal | 78 |
> | Mentally defective | 77 |
> | Imbecile from birth (now in Orillia) | 3 |
> Financial circumstances—
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Desirable citizens | 17 |
> | Independent | 65 |
> | Dependent | 137 |
> | Undesirable | 162 |
> | Indifferent | 21 |
> Health and mortality—
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Treated for v.d | 64 |
> | Known immoral | 134 |
> | Married | 64 |
> | Broken homes | 25 |
> | Illegitimate children | 123 |

The pamphlet then goes to analyze these figures:

> What is the significance of these figures? Certainly not, that all juvenile immigrants are immoral, or defective or dependent. These two hundred cases were collected through agencies or persons chiefly concerned with relief or correction or some other aspect of social service. The two hundred represent, therefore, the percentage of the failure of the system through which they were recruited for Canada, rather than its normal product. The reports of the Superintendent of Juvenile Immigration for Canada and the publications of the immigrating homes and agencies, as well as earlier sections of this report, have told the other side of the story. Most of us know desirable citizens of Canada who reached these shores as child immigrants. Nor do we consider that statistics on this subject, collected in Toronto, are likely to be characteristic of conditions in cities in other parts of Canada. As many more than two-thirds (74 per cent in 1923 Year Book) of the juvenile immigrants to Canada settle in Ontario, it is altogether likely that Toronto has more than her fair proportion of the failures among her dependent citizens Granting these considerations, your committee is still of the opinion that conditions prevailing in Toronto justify them in thinking that the success or failure of juvenile immigration should not be judged only by the records of the juvenile immigrants while wards of the immigrating agency. The statistics quoted above show the "dangerous ages" to be just the years when these wards, for the first time, become independent of the home.
> They are supported by the evidence of the social workers who visited places in the province where these boys and girls have been placed on farms or in country homes. Again and again they report employers and neighbours as remarking on the foolish use made by these young people of their accumulated wages and their new-found liberty. Many seem to use their freedom to leave the country and taste the pleasures and temptations of the city. In this way the system of juvenile immigration vitally affects city life; and yet, neither the city nor the province, except in Manitoba, has any say in the placement of immigrant children within their borders.

Reference is here made to the province of Manitoba. I may say that the social workers interested in the placement of children in that province have stated to me that they are very much afraid of the incoming of such large numbers of immigrant children, and that in fact some of the immigration agencies have tried to act quite independently of the provincial authorities in placing these children. This is a very serious state of affairs.

I shall quote a few very brief sentences from the conclusions and recommendations of the Social Service Council of Canada. It seems to me these are very reasonable and should be carefully considered by the government, especially as they are given to the public after the visit of Miss Bondfield and after a great deal of discussion had had taken place about these agencies:

The inspection as now carried out by the federal government and the immigrating agencies is often perfunctory and inadequate. One agency has but one inspector, a man of eighty years of age. More generally, the visits of the inspectors are few and ill-managed, and the inspectors are not always suited to their work.

Again:

The apprentice contract should be standardized for different sexes, ages and types, and be convincingly just for both employer and employee.

Again:

That no immigrant child, even if otherwise satisfactory, should be accepted by the Dominion immigration officials in Britain who has not been subjected to three tests—tuberculin test, Wasserman reaction test, and a psychiatric test.

Again:

That while it is impossible to lay down rigid rules as to the desirable frequency of inspection. (a) No child should be sent to a foster home from an agency until that foster home has been inspected and passed upon by an official duly appointed by the provincial authorities or by the Department of Immigration.

And once again:

That as the demand in Canada is for children to work on farms or in households, only boys and girls of post-school age should be brought to Canada by immigrating agencies.

That last recommendation is, I think, one that was given by Miss Bondfield to the imperial authorities. At this late hour, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to enlarge upon these recommendations, but I do feel that I ought not to allow this opportunity to pass without very definitely placing these facts and suggestions before the committee and urging that they be given serious consideration by the department. I fancy that we ought to look forward to the years to come when the boys and girls from our own homes will be sufficient to gradually spread our population across the Dominion. I hope that the time will come when, for the sake of Canada, we shall not be forced to bring in young girls and boys to work in our homes and on our farms. In the interests of the immigrant children, although in many respects life in Canada may be superior to life in the slums of Great Britain, I urge that we must have a much better system of inspection than we have had in the past.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, in answer to my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) I think I placed on record a moment ago the statement of the Hon. Margaret Bondfield, who visited Canada purposely to look into this question of child immigration. Her report showed that the children had done fairly well in this country, and that, generally speaking, they were well cared for. I am not going into the details of the report issued by the social service workers. One does not like to contradict welfare workers who are animated, no doubt, by a desire to help, but it seems to me that at least before broadcasting such a report they might have consulted the department and received more accurate information. To give my hon. friend an instance of only one inaccuracy, on page four of the report the statement is made, that in the last fifteen years Canada has brought seventy-five thousand juveniles to her shores, and the movement is said to be steadily increasing in volume. The total influx of juvenile children, not including children belonging to parents, for the fifteen years ending March 31, 1924, is not 75,000, but 21,552. The total number of juvenile immigrants brought to Canada since 1868 is just about 80,000. The total of the arrivals for the ten years ending March 31, 1924, is under 10,000, and the total for the previous ten years was almost about 25,000. To get the highest number for any one year, we have to go back to 1905-1906, when 3,264 juvenile immigrants came in, the only time in the history of the movement when it exceeded 3,000 a year.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I ask the minister to comment on the particular statistics which I gave? Does he question those?

Mr. ROBB: I have not looked into them at all, but if they are no more correct than the one I have noticed, I should not like to waste a busy man's time looking into them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, there is just one aspect of the child immigration problem that I think this committee might well take into consideration. In Canada, indeed in Ottawa itself, we have a tremendous number of orphan children—our own Canadian children, born of our own Canadian people—anxious for a home. Ladies who have gone down to visit these places have told me that the children will climb on their knees and hug them, so anxious are they for some affection. Now, it occurs to me that while these orphans all over Canada are left dependent largely upon voluntary charity, it is not a very good policy to be spending taxes on the importation of children from other countries. That is my comment. I think our duty is to our own children first. Instead of looking after them as we should, we leave them largely dependent upon what chance contributions gentle souls throughout the country may be in a position to make.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Does not my hon. friend know that the care of these children in his province is under the direction of the government he supports, led by Premier Greenfield and—not this government?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; and I also know that even in that province we are put to our wits' ends to provide homes for mental defectives, the direct result of the importation of these child immigrants. Now, Mr. Chairman, the minister had a lot of fun out of the few remarks he made after I had finished. I would disabuse his mind of one or two misapprehensions. I agree with him heartily that the propaganda published by the Alberta Department of Agriculture over the name of Mr. Hoadley does no more represent average conditions in Alberta than does his own propaganada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Will my hon. friend permit another question? Could he tell this committee if there is any government in this Dominion or anywhere else that he, with his Irish tendency to be "agin" the government would ever support?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, Mr. Chairman. That is the kind of comment I would expect from the hon. gentleman, and it is all I would expect from him. The minister in his argument attempted to make it look as though Mr. Hoadley was speaking for the province of Alberta, and that of course the member for Bow River, although he was quite willing to let him speak for a portion, could not possibly be speaking for the whole of Alberta.

Mr. ROBB: What about the records of the whole cabinet?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just a moment, now. I have in my hand, as it so happens, two of the resolutions passed by the annual convention of the United Farmers of Alberta, which is the strongest farmers' organization in Canada, and is going to be stronger as a result of this government's action.

Mr. CANNON: Do not be too sure of that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) corrects me; he says; "inaction." Inaction is correct. Now, let me paint this picture very clearly for the committee. Mr. Hoadley spoke to that convention; he spoke to them on immigration. He spoke to the women's section of that convention on immigration. Mrs Parlby spoke to them on immigration. After both these persons, whom my hon. friend has quoted to-night, had spoken, these farmers, gathered together in convention from every section of the province, knowing the actual conditions as they were, passed these two resolutions. Let me read them. This one was adopted by the annual convention of the United Farm Women of Alberta, held January 20 to 23:

Immigration

Whereas, the financial condition of the country is such as to make us feel that more people should not be encouraged to come here until conditions alter, so that we can render more assistance to those who come in and hold out brightest hopes for the future;

Therefore, be it resolved, that the government be urged to discontinue their present expensive immigration policy and direct their efforts more towards bettering conditions so that the people we already have will wish to stay.

I take my mandate from that convention and not from Mr. Hoadley.

Mr. JACOBS: Did the hon. member write that resolution himself?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. JACOBS: Was he present?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): As a matter of fact, many resolutions were sent out from that convention from countless locals on that very matter. Here was a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the United Farmers of Alberta:

Resolved that this convention—

An hon. MEMBER: How many were there?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): So many that my hon. friend would be delighted to have their number at the next election.

Mr. CANNON: As many in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

Resolved that this convention go on record as being absolutely opposed to the government spending any money for bringing in agricultural implements—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Quite right; that is exactly what they are. They come in here to be turned into agricultural implements by the administration or the powers that be.

An hon. MEMBER: Is there any harm in that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If I may go a little further, Mr. Chairman, I will continue the reading of the resolution:

—for bringing agricultural immigrants into Alberta until conditions in the province are such that the average farmer at present in the province can make a decent living on an Alberta farm.

Now, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) has been so delighted with this and has laughed at it so much that he has not heard it all, and the interruptions have been so numerous that I am sure hon. members, or many of them, must have been deprived of the pleasure and profit of hearing just what I said. Permit me, then, to repeat the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is not entitled to repeat the resolution.

Mr. CANNON: No repetitions, for goodness' sake.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not permitted to repeat it?

The CHAIRMAN: No, not permitted to repeat it. Unnecessary repetition is against the rules of the House.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I did not think it was unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN: I rule that it is unnecessary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I appeal to you, then, as Chairman, to preserve a little more order while I am speaking? The order has certainly, in my opinion, been disgraceful; I have not been able to hear even myself at times.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Now, with regard to child immigration, again let me say, with all due respect to the remarks of the Minister of Immigration, that I am not altogether satisfied either with the inspection or with the general policy. I hold in my hand a despatch from Toronto dated May 18 of this year. It reads as follows:

Following the inquest here to-day the inquiry into the death of 18-year old Benjamin Berman, whose body was found in Toronto Bay last Thursday, Chief Coroner Graham referred to the apparent sub-normal mental condition of the boy's family, and declared that it was "a sad commentary on this Canada of ours that we have an immigration department that will permit the introduction into Canada of such a type as we have seen before us this afternoon."

I have another, but I do not want to quote it at length, regarding the suicide of some unfortunate child immigrant, and the following quotation from the Vancouver Sun:

Sixteen-year-old boy came before the Toronto police court this week on a charge of housebreaking. During the course of the trial it developed that the boy's father is an ex-convict and sub-normal in intellect.

One brother is now serving a term in the penitentiary and two others are deaf and dumb.

The five people are probably costing the Dominion of Canada $10,000 or more a year in loss through their depredations, cost of their trials and their keep.

And the sane, healthy people of the Dominion are paying the bill, incurred as it was through the fact that a mentally deficient father was permitted to come into this country.

There are difficulties, I admit, with regard to the checking or ascertaining of the mental condition of adult immigrants who come to Canada, but it is nothing as to the difficulty with regard to these orphan children, these child immigrants. The medical profession—and I am quite sure the hon member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) will bear me out—will inform the House, if it is asked to, that you can examine the life history of any adult, checking up the life history also of father and grandfather, and make resonably sure whether there is any likelihood or any danger of insanity or of the development of any mental defect. Is that not true?

Mr. MANION: Oh, I think so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In the case of these immigrant children, from the very nature of their origin one is justified in suspecting at least that there is mental taint. Where do they come from? Mostly from the orphan homes. In many cases you cannot even trace who their parents were; in many cases their parents are dead—died under extraordinary circumstances. I do not think the best interests of Canada are being served by enfiltrating the whole of our race with the dangerous types which undoubtedly will result from the importation of these child immigrants. The least we can ask is that before they are brought to these shores the strictest possible medical examination be made of every one of them individually. The Minister of Immigration owes at least that much to Canada. I am personally opposed to child immigration. I am not opposed to adult immigration. I would permit any physically and mentally fit man or woman to come to Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Hear, hear.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes. But I would not spend one dollar of the taxpayers' money to bring them here under the present conditions.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): How did you get here?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I got here with my own money. I was not helped over on an assisted passage scheme. I did not have my farm financed. I did not have to take up an abandoned soldier settler's land at revalued prices. I came out here and took my chance at pioneering. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the minister take into serious consideration, more serious than he has indicated to-night, the remarks I have made? I have made them in all sincerity. My only interest is the welfare of Canada. Her welfare is mine. My children have been brought up here. I hope to live here, spend my days here, and die here, and I hope my children will after me, and I resent the ridicule which has come from hon. members on the other side of the House. I frankly object, although I do not think he intended to be discourteous, to the—shall I say?—light manner in which the Minister of Immigration has treated my remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have tried to make them consistent. I have tried to make them a proper picture of average conditions, and I ask that the minister will at least consider them.

Mr. ROBB: I shall not refer to child immigration except to remind my hon. friend that I have already placed on record figures to show that the conditions are not what he has represented them to be, either as to numbers or quality. We have also the statement of Miss Margaret Bondfield, who came here especially to look into the conditions, and who reported that these young people were being looked after very well here in Canada.

With reference to that regrettable incident in Toronto which my hon. friend referred to, the morning I read of it in the newspapers I wired to our agent in Toronto to make a report upon it, and I have that report here. I will admit at once that possibly in past years the medical inspection has been rather lax. There was a period in our history when we allowed people to come in here without a medical examination as strict as it is now, but the medical examination now is as strict as it possibly can be, and in addition to that, we have a very careful civil examination by our officers. In this particular case our records establish that the boy's father, a Russian Hebrew, arrived at Portland, Maine, on March 8, 1913, and was admitted destined to Toronto. In 1921 he returned to Poland on a visit, returning the same year. On May 23, 1923, his daughter, Gitla, aged seventeen, was admitted, and on September 8, 1923, his son, Benjamin, aged fifteen, was admitted. This is the boy whose death is being investigated. He was destined to the father at 138 Elizabeth street, Toronto, and according to our record passed medical inspection. On February 24, 1924, Mrs. Berman, aged forty-seven, together with her daughters, Ryfka and Nycha, aged twelve and nine years, respectively, were admitted, all destined to the husband and father at Toronto. Our record shows that each member of the family passed medical inspection at the port of entry.

Mr. CLARK: Would the minister explain why it is necessary for Canada to spend millions of dollars annually to get immigrants, when the United States has millions offering without spending a cent? In fact, they are spending money to keep them out.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The United States did spend a lot of money when she wanted immigrants.

Mr. ROBB: Canada is spending money to keep them out as well as the United States. We must control immigration. If my hon. friend is willing that we should wipe out all restrictions and allow the steamship companies to dump on our shores anyone they like, of course we would not need to spend the money.

Mr. CLARK: Why should there be good immigration offering plentifully to the United States, but not to Canada?

Mr. ROBB: The immigration must be selected.

Mr. LeSUEUR: One of the questions which is important in immigration, and which I at least do not fully understand, is the extent and the details of co-operation between the federal and provincial immigration authorities; and secondly, after the immigrants have arrived here, what machinery have we got to follow them up and assist them, more or less to protect them in the early stages of their stay here?

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend will look in Hansard to-morrow morning he will discover that I have put on record twice our method of following up immigrants. As regards co-operation with the provincial authorities, we have co-operation, particularly with the province of Ontario. Ontario has a very excellent immigration service overseas, and we co-operate with them fully.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Fortier) was in the chair, he gave a ruling. Although that ruling was not debatable, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) in relation to that decision used the following words:

I have no brief for the member for Bow River, but rulings of that sort simply make a farce of parliament.

The right hon. leader of the opposition said further:

Your decision is merely to make a travesty of the rules of the House.

And the right hon. leader of the opposition ended up by saying:

Your decisions are not speakable.

I would not call your attention, Sir, to the expressions used if they had not been uttered by a member of the House who is, or should be, of such high standing as the leader of the opposition. First I would call your attention to the fact that the right hon. gentleman had no right to debate the decision. Having done so, he had no right to use the language which he did use. According to the decisions given under rule 16, paragraph 193 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules:

Members using unparliamentary language are promptly called to order and generally satisfy the House with an explanation or an apology. If not they will be dealt with under rule 18 or punished as the House may think fit.

Mr. JACOBS: The tower is not ready for occupation yet.

Mr. CANNON: Having quoted the expressions used by the right hon. gentleman, and I do not think he will deny having used them, I suggest that right hon. gentleman should apologize to the Chair, and if he refuses to do it, that he be dealt with according to our rules, and in any case that the remarks used by him should be deleted from Hansard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was not in when the hon. member started this interlude. I did not know that we were revamping the proceedings of an hour or two ago. I came to see why the House was sitting so late. I do not know what the hon. member said when he began, but he referred to a remark I made in regard to a decision that was given by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Fortier) when he was occupying the chair temporarily. A decision had been given, to which I took exception. An hon. member opposite remarked it was not debatable, to which I remarked, it was not speakable. Objection was taken, I presume, on the ground that comment cannot be offered on a decision of the Chair. That is right, and if an hon. member proceeds to speak of something that is not debatable, he can be called to order and made to cease. But he cannot be made to withdraw unless he makes a remark attributing to another hon. member conduct unbecoming a gentleman. The word "unspeakable" is not such a word as has ever been ruled out of order in this House as attributing conduct unbecoming a gentleman.

[Mr. Cannon.]

Mr. CANNON: In fairness to the right hon. gentleman, before he came in I was quoting the expressions he had used, which were to the effect that the ruling given by the Chairman was a farce, secondly that it was a travesty, and thirdly that it was not speakable.

Mr. MANION: I consider, Mr. Chairman, that this whole debate is out of order because according to rule 18 "the Speaker shall decide the point of order," which was the point of order referred to by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) in regard to which certain remarks were made by the right hon. leader of the opposition. Rule 18 says:

The Speaker shall decide the point of order, which decision shall be subject to appeal to the House, but without debate. If there be no appeal, the decision of the Chair shall be final.

You, Sir, about an hour and a half ago gave your decision, and I consider it was final. Under the rule I have cited I do not think the hon. member had any right to open up this subject again.

Mr. CANNON: We are not discussing the point of order decided by the Chairman at that time. I am simply raising the point that the right hon. leader of the opposition, contrary to his habit, has used very strong language, unparliamentary language, and I have no doubt that he will apologize as any hon. member who had done that should.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have used no language which was unparliamentary at all and therefore cannot be made to withdraw.

Mr. CANNON: I do not think the right hon. gentleman can contend rightly that calling a decision of the Chair "a farce, a travesty and something unspeakable" is not unparliamentary.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not use the words the hon. member has quoted. I used the word "unspeakable" or the words "not speakable" it is true. I said that a decision of that kind rendered the rules a farce. That language is not unparliamentary.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry that during my absence for a few moments, and while the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Fortier) was in the chair, this unfortunate incident occurred. I returned to the chamber to find that there was a dispute as to the words that were actually spoken.

Mr. MEIGHEN: By the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Vien).

The CHAIRMAN: I understood the right hon. leader of the opposition had used the expression, with respect to a decision the Chairman (Mr. Fortier) had given, that it was "unspeakable." I commented on the fact, and said I thought it was highly offensive for any such reflection to be cast on the Chair. Having given that ruling I do not feel called upon to repeat it at this late stage. but I do feel that the right hon. gentleman should withdraw the statement in fairness to the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The words that are unparliamentary have been reviewed in the rules over and over again and are to be found in Bourinot? If it could be shown that the word "unspeakable" or the words "not speakable," which I used, can be regarded as unbecoming a gentleman, there would be some point to the objection raised.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to deal with this matter right now. Such a situation having developed, now is the proper time possibly to cite the authority which, apparently, deals with matters of this kind. In "Precedents of Proceedings in the House of Commons" volume 2, at page 234 under the title of "Speaker; his duties in keeping order in the House" I find the following:

> It is impossible to lay down any specific rules upon this point or to declare beforehand what expressions are or are not contrary to order; so much depends upon the tone, and manner, and intention of the person speaking: something upon the person to whom they are addressed whether a minister in a responsible station, or a private member not in office;—whether the words are meant to be applied to his public conduct, or to his private character;—the degree of provocation which the member speaking had received from the person he alludes to: All these considerations must be attended to at the moment, as they are infinitely various and cannot possibly be forseen in such a manner as that precise rules can be adopted with respect to them. When the Speaker observes upon any expression as personal and disorderly and tending to introduce heat and confusion, and this appears to be the general sense of the House, the member offending ought immediately to make an apology and to ask pardon of the House for this breach of their orders, in as large and liberal expressions as possible, so as in such apology to comprehend the person of whom the words were used.

It is very difficult for me, not having been present, to interpret exactly the position that has developed out of this incident. It occurred to me, however, that the expression used is one not ordinarily used, and if not out of order or if not unparliamentary, has nearly reached the point where it constitutes a reflection on the ruling that the hon. member for Labelle, as Chairman gave.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was no reflection on the ruling or the rules of the House, and one cannot be made to withdraw an expression unless it is unparliamentary. The very quotation which you, Mr. Chairman, have made shows that it was not. Nobody would suggest that it had reference to the private character or private conduct of the members, it referred to a public act, and the quotation makes it very clear that I could not possibly be made to withdraw the expression.

The CHAIRMAN: I have not asked the right hon. gentleman to withdraw his statement. I do say, however, that to my mind the expression he used approaches closely to a reflection upon the ruling of the Chair, and no hon. member has any right to reflect upon the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I admit that.

The CHAIRMAN: My right hon. friend, in view of his long parliamentary experience should not have indulged in comment of such a nature with respect to a junior member who was temporarily occupying the Chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I admit that an hon. member can be called to order for improperly commenting on a ruling of the Chair, but it is a very different thing to ask me to withdraw an expression which is neither ungentlemanly nor unparliamentary.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I am not asking the hon. gentleman to do so.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman will you allow me—

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. MANION: Who said "sit down"?

The CHAIRMAN: I want this point of order settled.

Mr. MANION: I certainly object to any hon. gentleman telling me to sit down.

Mr. MARLER: The remark was not nearly as objectionable as the one that was directed at me across the floor the other day.

Mr. MANION: I raised a point of order some time ago. I should like to know under what rule a question of order can be brought up an hour and a half after the decision has been given.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I should like to inform the hon. member that the question before the committee has been disposed of.

Mr. MANION: All right, if it has been disposed of.

Mr. HOEY: I should like to ask if the government has seriously considered the advisability of coordinating the different immigration agencies as suggested by Sir Henry Thornton in his annual report on the Canadian National Railway; it seems to me that the suggestion was well worthy of consideration.

Mr. ROBB: I did not read Sir Henry Thornton's report. I did read his statement as reported in the public press which I imagine was the same thing. I should like to say that insofar as possible we are trying to cooperate with the two railways. We recognize that there is duplication particularly overseas, possibly in some places in the United States, but as far as possible we are trying to reduce expenditure and to adopt cooperative measures to the greatest possible extent.

Mr. HOEY: The minister referred to Mr. Smith's retirement. Has his successor in London been appointed?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Little is now overseas.

Mr. SPENCER: How many private immigration agencies outside the Dominion are bringing in immigrants?

Mr. ROBB: I could not tell my hon. friend that. There are many people who constitute themselves agents. There are many people who come to the department from time to time making representations that they are agents. We have no list of the number of such agencies.

Mr. SPENCER: I refer to such organizations as land companies, railway companies, and colonization associations.

Mr. ROBB: And my hon. friend might add steamship companies, steamship agents and booking agents. We have no record of the number; they are world-wide in their activities.

Mr. GARDINER: To how many agencies do the government contribute in bringing immigrants into Canada?

Mr. ROBB: I have already given that information three or four different times. My hon. friend will find it in Hansard.

Mr. GOOD: Could the minister give us any idea as to the proportion of this vote which is spent for inspection work, that is looking after the qualifications and characteristics of the immigrants who are applying for entrance, and the amount of money that is spent on attracting immigrants?

Mr. ROBB: I can place on record a statement of the newspaper advertising and the lectures given if the hon. gentleman requires that.

Mr. GOOD: I was not asking for anything very detailed, but I should like to have some information as to the respective cost of the inspection service on the one hand, and the lectures and advertising and so-called propaganda on the other. The reason I ask for the information is that I regard the inspection service as essential in any case, and I should like to know how much we are spending on that. The other activity seems to be very ill-advised under the circumstances, but until we know the extent of it, it seems a little difficult to criticize intelligently.

Mr. ROBB: I should have to go through the data very carefully. It would require to be analysed in order to get the full list.

Mr. GOOD: Could the Minister bring that information on a subsequent occasion?

Mr. ROBB: I will try and get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. GOOD: Perhaps the matter could stand over.

Mr. ROBB: We will have to put this vote through to-night. I will get the information for my hon. friend on a later item if he will ask me about it.

Mr. GOOD: In connection with another item of the Immigration department?

Mr. ROBB: Any other immigration item.

Mr. GARDINER: What action is the Department of Immigration taking in the case of the British Empire Steel Corporation who brings people in under contract and do not live up to that contract? Is the minister or the department taking any action to see that the contract is fulfilled?

Mr. ROBB: I overlooked answering something on the same question at an earlier stage of the proceedings. I think my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) made a reference to three very excellent chaps that I saw. Those men represented to us that they came to Canada on the strength of an advertisement inserted in the Glasgow Herald by the British Steel Corporation. The government of Canada has no control over the newspapers in Great Britain, but the government of Great Britain has control, and if that advertisement was inaccurate, they would have recourse through the government of that country.

Mr. GARDINER: I can quite understand that we would have no control over any advertisement put in the papers in the Old Country by the British Empire Steel Corporation, but when immigrants are brought into this country practically to work for such an organization as the British Steel Corporation or any other corporation, I should like to know what action the Department of Immigration would take, in case this corporation did not live up to the spirit of their contract.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is asking rather a broad question, because if by implication the government should follow up all who publish alluring advertisements which are not quite right, and my hon. friend from Bow River is right, then the government of the province of Alberta is equally as culpable as any other body.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has not caught the point of my question which is this: Here is an organization that practically to all intents and purposes makes contracts with men in the Old Country to come and work here. The question is this: What action does the Department of Immigration take with organizations or corporations which bring them into this country practically under contract and do not fulfil that contract?

Mr. ROBB: The department are doing all they can. When men come to us with a contract, we do all we can to see that the parties live up to their contract. I will admit that if they do not live up to their contract this week, then next week we might refuse admission to some person they attempted to bring in, but I do not see how we can go further. As to these three men, on their own statement, apart from not giving them work, the company had not been unkind to them, because they advanced them money, and the men admitted in my office that the company had never pressed them for the return of that money, and they owed the company $580. I said to them, "Have you ever been pressed for this," and they said "No, because we did not have any work."

Mr. IRVINE: You cannot squeeze blood out of a stone.

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr GARDINER: I know of another case where a man had been advanced money to bring his family out here. But that is not the question I desired information about. We may have corporations or individuals who bring people out by advertisements in other countries, but what action does the Department of Immigration take, or can it take any action, to see that these contracts are lived up to?

1 a.m.

Mr. ROBB: No, but generally speaking they are not lived up to?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no redress if they are not lived up to?

Mr. ROBB: Just the general law of the country.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think that is very much protection.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the routine adopted when a person in the Old Country wishes to come to Canada? To whom does he make application and what routine must he go through?

Mr. ROBB: They may go to a booking agent or an immigration agent, but in any event the booking agent has the immigration representative over there pass on him, and he gives him a permit. If our officer determines, that the subjects are not physically fit they are refused a permit to go on the ship.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where is the physical examination made?

Mr. ROBB: The final medical examination is made in Quebec or St. John, the port of landing. There is an advisory examination if it is considered necessary?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In the Old Country?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Suppose the two examinations do not tally?

Mr. ROBB: Our Canadian examination decides it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): At Quebec?

Mr. ROBB: Quebec, St. John or Halifax, the port of landing.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are the booking agents government officials?

Mr. ROBB: No, the booking agent might be the railway agent or the steamship agent that sold the tickets.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to get from the minister the statement that our problem is more of a colonization problem than one of immigration.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, now.

Mr. SPENCER: Particularly if we have 50,000 to 60,000 unemployed in Canada, and I for one refuse to believe that there is any more than a very small percentage of them unemployable. Many have gone off the farm. I have been approached by many of them who are very good farm hands, who have worked on farms for years—family men—but their work is quite uncertain for the entire year, and they have often approached me to see if there was any possible way they could be helped to farm by themselves. Here families are being brought over and started through direct or indirect government aid, they have been very anxious to know if something could not be done for them. These men are altogether better equipped for going farming than those who are being brought here; but on account of their family,—from three to eight of a family in some cases—the work that they have on a farm is very uncertain, and their usual action is to leave the country and go into the towns. I should like to ask the minister if something could not be done for that class of settler who would, if we could keep him, make a very excellent farmer, because they know how to farm, and they have been hired on farms for a good many years?

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend means a system of government advances, I say no.

Mr. SPENCER: Possibly a sympathetic system of rural credits might help.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Could the minister give the names of any societies or associations who may be carrying on with a view of earning grants to be made pursuant to order in council?

Mr. ROBB: I have already put that on record.

Mr. GARDINER: Why is it necessary to give these organizations money?

Mr. ROBB: Both the Salvation Army and the Scottish Society have been doing good work. The Salvation Army gives after-care for four years to those whom it brings in, and if they are not satisfactory it takes them elsewhere without expense to the country.

Mr. CLARK: Is it contemplated to grant moneys to any other society by order in council?

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: I have nothing in mind.

Mr. CLARK: Why make it necessary to have orders in council for granting moneys to these societies? Why not have these amounts in the estimates so that it would be obvious to whom the money was given?

Mr. ROBB: We are simply following the procedure that has been pursued for the last twenty-five or thirty years.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister put on Hansard already the various sums given to these organizations in the last fiscal year?

Mr. ROBB: Last year we paid the Salvation Army $25,000, and we made a payment also to the Scottish Society.

Mr. GARDINER: Was anything paid to any other organization?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the minister aware that the government is really running two immigration departments, one a regular department under the Minister of Immigration, and the other an Immigration and Colonization department in connection with the Canadian National Railway Company, which is of course under the control of the government? Could there not be some co-ordination to eliminate duplication? The cost of immigration in connection with the Canadian National Railways is nearly $800,000 and the vote for immigration and colonization under the department of government at present under review amounts to something over $3,000,000. Is it not possible to harmonize the work by eliminating one of these departments? I am sure there must be some duplication. I have in mind the appointment of Dr. Black, who up to a year or so ago was the deputy minister of this department. He resigned and was immediately appointed to a position in the immigration department of the Canadian National Railways. His salary as Deputy Minister of Immigration was $6,000, but he was such a valuable man that Sir Henry Thornton gobbled him up at $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Ten thousand.

Mr. JACOBS: Well, $10,000. It would have been a simple matter for us to have asked him to continue to hang his hat and coat in this department instead of giving him $4,000 a year for moving.

Mr. POWER: And pay another man to replace him.

Mr. JACOBS: We have an excellent man in the person of Mr. Egan who is one of the most capable civil servants we have. I cannot understand why we should retain this other gentleman at $10,000 when we could have had his services at $6,000. And I do not know whether we want him at all. Do we want two departments of immigration, both striving for the same end? The Canadian National Railways are attempting by every possible means to bring people into the country, but there are in the department over which the minister (Mr. Robb) presides rules that prevent him from encroaching on the work of the other department. So there is a merry war between the two. I should like to see one of them eliminated so that we might know where we were going. Sir Henry Thornton in his annual report made the suggestion that in view of the great importance of immigration to the country the government might very well consider the question of naming a commission to deal with the whole immigration problem. He suggested that the commission should be on somewhat similar lines to the railway commission. I am not prepared to say whether this suggestion should be accepted or not. I suppose the object was that the immigration department of the Canadian National Railways and the Department of Immigration under the minister might bring their differences before the commission to have them settled. Whether that was in the mind of Sir Henry Thornton or not I do not know. But it does seem to me that that we might very well consider the question of appointing a standing committee of this House to deal with immigration problems. As I said on the budget, we have departments dealing with fish and fish culture, with mines, forests and all sorts of things, animate and inanimate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Insects.

Mr. JACOBS: The Minister of Justice, forgetting that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is immediately behind him, suggests insects. We are dealing with these too; we are dealing with bugs, onion maggots and other allied matters through select standing committees. But surely immigration is something that should occupy a sufficiently dignified position to demand from the government similar treatment. If we had had an immigration committee such as I suggest, we should have been deprived of the highly diverting evening we have had to-night, because all these matters could have been referred to that committee. Certainly, the minister would gain a great deal of useful information and assistance through such a committee, and now that his time is so much taken up in the Department of Finance, I am sure we are willing to lend him every assistance possible. I suggest therefore that the government consider the question of appointing next year a select standing committee on Immigration and Colonization. I could say a great deal more on this question. Indeed, I feel somewhat like the poet—I would that my tongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me. The government is fully aware of my attitude on this question, and nothing that has been done since I have spoken on it has caused me to change my views, nor do I think that anything which the government may do in future will bring about such a change.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Would you have the member for Bow River on that committee?

Mr. JACOBS: The member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) would probably do fairly well if he were taken in hand by intelligent people and made to see that after all there is another point of view besides his own. I am free to confess that he impressed me towards the close of his remarks when he said that he had no objection whatever to allowing physically healthy people to come to the country. I must reckon that unto him for righteousness. I did not know that these were his views, and I am willing to overlook many of the things he said in view of that conclusion. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) also said that he would allow every white and healthy person to come to Canada; that would be part of his policy. Now, I find that his leader two or three days ago made a rather different statement in answer to a question put to him by the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth). At page 3806 I find the following:

> Mr. Woodsworth: As long as we have anything like an open door immigration policy, how is the Canadian worker being protected?
> Mr. Meighen: Well, I am not in favour of an open door immigration policy, any more than I am in favour of an open door trade policy.

We cannot, I fear, expect very much from the party immediately opposite me.

Mr. MANION: Surely my hon. friend is not in favour of an open door immigration policy? That would mean admitting everybody—good, bad or indifferent, healthy or ill.

Mr. JACOBS: My policy is known both to the House and to the country. The right hon. gentleman went on to explain himself. He said:

> Certainly you cannot allow everybody into this country; nobody ever suggested it. The cheapest labour of the world we ought to bar entirely, and we do bar it. I would be the last to suggest that any other policy be adopted.

Mr. MANION: He was referring to yellow labour.

Mr. CLARK: My recollection of my leader's speech is that he was referring to oriental labour. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Jacobs) be in favour of an open door immigration from the Orient?

Mr. JACOBS: Absolutely not. I have stated time and again that I am in favour of every healthy white person coming to this country. That is my policy. The leader of the opposition did not speak about oriental labour. Before he was interrupted by the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg he said:

> It is possible to give preference and do so without invading the just rights of the Canadian worker. It must always be a case of Canada first, and until we are ready to stand up and proclaim Canada first, and act Canada first, then we may just as well resign ourselves to this sliding-back process which characterizes our drift to-day.

Mr. CLARK: The leader of the opposition referred to the cheapest labour of the world. And where does that labour come from? It comes from China and Japan.

Mr. JACOBS: We have not that labour now.

Mr. CLARKE: We have it at the coast.

Mr. JACOBS: Now, there seems to be no party at all which is ready to accept my policy, so I will start a party on my own account and look for recruits. And the first one whom I shall recruit into that party is the hon. member for Bow River—on the theory, of any port in a storm. I would start with him as a nucleus and we could secure other equally worthy supporters.

Mr. GRAHAM: In answer to the question whether there are two immigration departments under the government, I would say yes and no. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways each have an immigration department, and the government of Canada must take care not to be allied with either. It would not be fair to do that.

Mr. JACOBS: Why not merge the two departments under the government?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am coming to that. These three immigration departments are endeavouring to get closer together and work in greater harmony than they have done before, and there has been a good deal of co-operation with a view to reducing the expenditures under each of the departments and obviating any duplication.

Mr. HOEY: Has the Canadian National Railway Company an immigration office in London?

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. GRAHAM: It has an immigration ogganization in London which has control of European immigration so far as Canadian National propaganda is concerned. Each department, I can assure the committee, is doing its best to cut out overlapping and reduce expenses.

Mr. GOOD: In view of the lateness of the hour, I would suggest that if this particular item were allowed to pass we might be given the assurance that we should be able to discuss the general policy of the department or some other item.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 64 is reserved for that purpose.

Mr. ROBB: There will be a small item in the supplementaries, and the discussion might take place under that.

Mr. MANION: I am agreeable to the item for $1,350,000 being adopted, but I do not think that the empire settlement scheme has been discussed. If we were sure of being able to discuss these questions we might let the item pass and go home.

Mr. ROBB: We have discussed items 62, and 63 and 64 to a large extent.

The CHAIRMAN: On the understanding that general questions may be discussed on item 64, is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt items 62 and 63?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Items 62 and 63 agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. (Friday.)

Friday, June 12, 1925

The House met at three o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, June 11, 1925.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. F. A. Anglin, acting as the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at 5.45 p.m. on Friday the 12th inst., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,

JAMES F. CROWDY,
Deputy of the Governor General's Secretary.

REPORT

Eighth report of the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.—Mr. McGiverin.

VOTE 298, UNFORESEEN EXPENSES

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during consideration of the supply for the Department of Finance, my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) desired information as to the expenditure under vote 298. I find that a statement of these expenditures was tabled at the beginning of the session, the total then shown being $57,323.45. Since that time there have been the following additional expenses on account of this vote:

Expenses in connection with the visit of the treasurer of the Commonwealth of Australia and party	$1,711 67
Clarkson Gordon and Dilworth, for disbursements and services rendered in connection with the preparation of the report on the affairs of the Home Bank of Canada	1,238 00
Herbert Thompson, to cover loss of stolen boat and damages to a canoe	10 00
Compensation for injury sustained at Elmira, Ont., post office	100 00
Expenditure in connection with entertaining the Japanese training squadron on their visit to Victoria and Vancouver, February, 1925.	831 52

I will send this statement over to my right hon. friend for perusal and return to me, it being my copy.

OCEAN SHIPPING RATES

REPORT ON, AND ACTION CONCERNING, NORTH ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP COMBINE THE PETERSEN CONTRACT

Mr. WILLIAN DUFF (Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) I beg leave to present the sixth report of the special committee appointed to consider the resolution giving the government of Canada control over certain ocean rates.

The report is as follows:

The special committee to whom was referred the resolution of the House of Commons of date March 20, 1925, beg leave to present the following as their sixth and final report.

Your committee have held forty-six meetings, have heard thirty-six witnesses and have had produced before them a large number of documents of which one hundred and two were filed as exhibits.

Mr. Gordon W. Scott, C.A., has examined and reported upon the figures supplied him by the steamship companies and has also made certain test examinations of the books of the Canadian Pacific Railway steamships. The committee have had before them Mr. H. J. Symington, K.C., while the conference lines were represented by Messrs. A. W. Atwater, K.C., G. H. Montgomery, K.C., E. P. Flintoft, and C. Russell McKenzie; while Mr. H. H. Donald appeared on behalf of Sir William Petersen.

Without attempting to fully review the evidence which is produced herewith, it may be noted that the findings of the special committee on Agricultural conditions, which sat during the session of 1923, to the effect that a conference or combine of steamships trading in the north Atlantic existed, and that such conference or combine fixed rates, has been amply borne out in the course of the inquiry held by your committee.

Indeed, on the present occasion the steamship companies admitted the existence of such a rate-fixing conference, coupling their admission with the contention that the conference system was of public advantage, and that the rates charged under it were fair and reasonable to the shipper; indeed, contending that they were at this time too low to give an adequate return to the steamship owners.

Be that as it may, the following facts should be noted:—

Although fairness demands that it be admitted that operating costs of all businesses have greatly increased over pre-war levels, yet the increases which have been brought before us in the transportation costs of certain commodities show certain of these altogether out of line. Thus, although wheat and flour, constituting a preponderating proportion of the exports from Canadian ports, are now carried at rates closely approximating those which prevailed eleven or twelve years ago, although certain other rates show increases of 25 per cent, of 53 per cent, of 76 per cent, and others approximately 100 per cent, others again present increases which are startling. Thus, evaporated apples in boxes have increased 150 per cent; binders, cultivators, mowers, reapers, threshing machines, 249 per cent; hardware, 262 per cent; organs, 400 per cent; while packed meats, bacons, hams, etc., show an increase of 119 per cent; butter in ordinary storage of 170 per cent; butter in refrigerators, 181 per cent; eggs in ordinary storage, 214 per cent. The real reason for such extraordinary differences between the rates charged for grain and flour and those charged for other products above mentioned appears to lie in the fact that tramp competition is an important factor in the fixation of rates by the conference in regard to such products as grain and flour, while in respect to package freight, which as a rule cannot be shipped in entire cargoes, the liners in the conference enjoy a quasi-monopoly. The main object of this quasi-monopoly is to raise the level, or prevent the fall, of rates by united and uniform action, as admitted by the conference lines themselves.

The large shipper of grain or flour may and does employ tramp steamers to take entire ship loads of these commodities from north Atlantic ports to Europe or elsewhere. The shipper, be he large or small, of leather, butter, packed meats or manufactured articles, rarely has the relief which the tramp affords open to him, and therefore must pay the rates exacted by the conference lines, who, it is only fair to state, in return give to the exporter regularity of sailings and dispatch such as the tramp does not afford.

Your committee spent a considerable part of their time in the examination of the question as to whether the rates charged by the conference lines were higher than they should be, as well as into the contention of the steamship companies that the rates at present in force and obtaining for the past two years, did not give them an adequate return on their investment. The auditor of your committee, upon figures supplied him by the steamship companies, presented a statement showing that in the year 1923 the cargo steamers engaged in the North Atlantic trade, before charging lay-up expenses and depreciation, made a loss of $929,963; while their passenger-cargo steamers in the same year, before charging lay-up expenses and depreciation, showed an operating credit balance of almost five and one half millions dollars; while during the next year the operating credit balance on the cargo steamers, before charging lay-up expenses and depreciation, was $168,781; while in respect to the passenger-cargo steamers for that year such balance, before charging lay-up expenses and depreciation, was $2,398,524. Upon the figures submitted, and taking the two years' operations together, the earnings realized would not be sufficient to pay an adequate percentage on the capital invested, together with proper allowances for depreciation. The differences of operating expenses brought out by Mr. Scott in his report (Exhibit No. 87, beginning at page 897 of the printed evidence) were as follows:—Port charges varied from the maximum of 48.98 per cent to a minimum of 33.6 per cent of the total earnings; fuel varied from 28.7 per cent to 8.6 per cent; insurance varied from 10 per cent to 2.5 per cent; repairs varied from 9.2 per cent to 2.7 per cent; management, commission and brokerage, general expenses, etc., varied from 16.9 per cent to 6.8 per cent. These differences may be due in part to different modes of book-keeping pursued by the various conference lines, but may also be due to the presence in the trade of ships differing so widely in cost of operation as to suggest the probability that certain of the ships either through age or otherwise may be unfitted for the trade.

Without questioning in any way the good faith of the lines, it must be remembered that Mr. Scott in arriving at his figures had to depend, to the extent of about 95 per cent, upon figures submitted to him by the lines, without an opportunity of verification, except in respect to the Canadian Pacific steamships in connection with which certain test examinations were made which were found satisfactory. It is of interest to the government and people of Canada to know exactly why such variation should exist in the operating expenses of the various lines serving Canadian ports and further investigation is desirable, if not imperative along these lines.

In the course of the examination of Captain Hocken, Master of the ss. Rio Dorado, one of Sir William Petersen's corrugated ships, and in the evidence of Sir William Petersen himself, strong claims were made as to the efficiency and economy of operation of such ships. It is submitted, however, that one voyage, or rather the result of part of a voyage from Hull to Montreal and thence to Hamburg, cannot be taken as sufficient evidence on which to base a definite conclusion as to the superiority of Sir William Petersen's corrugated ships over vessels of similar size but of usual construction. Apparently expert opinion has as yet not been thoroughly satisfied as to the advantages offered by this mode of construction.

It would appear, therefore, wise to obtain further information as to the earnings of the conference lines and their cost of operation, as well as similar data concerning Sir William Petersen's ships before attempting to pass judgment upon the contract referred to this committee. It would therefore appear advisable that a further investigation be made into the situation in order that there may be presented to the government of Canada a true and exact representation of the situation as regards the earnings and operating expenses of the north Atlantic shipping trade, and that such further investigation should be made as may be necessary to verify the correctness of the claims made on behalf of Sir William Petersen's ships, and for this purpose that their earnings and operating expenses be accurately determined.

Meanwhile your committee feel that the situation demands that something should be done for the relief of shippers who find their trade seriously hampered through unreasonable ocean freight rates. To such persons it is no consolation for them to learn that the conference lines state that they are not making money and that the rates charged by them are said to be due to the desire of the steamship companies to recoup themselves for losses incurred in the carriage of other products below economical rates. High freight rates may be due to entirely different causes such as the expense of operating ships unfitted by age or conversion or otherwise for the trade, as has already been suggested. The fact that the west bound traffic offers cargoes on the whole of less than 25 per cent has, of course, a tendency to raise east bound rates.

Various commissions and committees who have looked into this subject have expressed themselves as being alive to the danger to the public interest which arises through an uncontrolled monopoly.

If the conference system is to be tolerated—and effective action to restore open competition appears only possible by the united action of all the maritime powers of the world—some means of control must be sought.

The question of how such control is to be secured is not easy of solution. The placing of unduly onerous burdens upon ships trading to Canada might drive them to other ports. The legal power of Canada to legislate in respect to ships other than of Canadian registry is at best doubtful. It is to be remembered, however, that the foreign trade of Canada is of large actual, and of very great relative importance. Few nations have greater interest than ourselves in the obtaining of fair and reasonable rates for ocean carriage of our products to the markets of the world. The growth of our country in no small measure depends on our success in this direction and few other than ourselves are more interested in this growth than the steamship companies who now trade to our Canadian ports.

Your committee, therefore, in view of the foregoing and before pronouncing themselves either favourably or unfavourably on the contract would sum up their recommendations as follows:—

I. That the examinations into the books of the conference lines by Mr. Gorden W. Scott, C.A., be continued in Britain and elsewhere in order to determine whether the rates now charged are excessive, to explain discrepancies in operating costs, to verify the figures submitted and in short to prepare an accurate representation of the north Atlantic shipping situation, the conference lines having declared their willingness to submit to such examination.

II. That he also be instructed to make like examinations into the books kept by or in connection with the ships of Sir William Petersen who has declared a like willingness, and that he should report his conclusions to the government on both phases of his enquiry.

III. That Sir William Peterson should be given an opportunity, if he so desires, of substantiating the claims made by him in respect to his ships.

IV. That to this end tests should be made of the actual performance of these ships in the north Atlantic Canadian trade under careful and expert supervision both of the earnings, operating costs, managerial expenses and performance at sea and in port of such ships.

V. Inasmuch as it is in the public interest that these tests should be made, and that they should be effective and fair to all parties, Sir William Petersen should be given the opportunity to demonstrate the economies of his ships under conditions which will ensure freedom of competition in the obtaining of cargo.

VI. That all members of the north Atlantic or other conferences trading to Canadian ports be required to file with the Board of Railway Commissioners all conference agreements, freight rate schedules, and such other information as may be desired, and that the board be constituted a tribunal for the hearing of complaints, and the recommendation of maximum rates.

It is to be noted that publicity is in itself a strong remedial instrument for the correction of injustice and unfairness. Great transportation companies, strenuously competing in respect to service for Canadian overseas trade, cannot afford to flout Canadian public opinon. It cannot be doubted that a great institution almost national in character, such as the Canadian Pacific Railway, should and it is believed would loyally comply with the recommendations of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Such action, coupled with similar action by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine would almost inevitably force the other lines trading to Canadian ports also to comply, and thus a reasonable effective measure of control might be looked for with some considerable degree of confidence.

VII. In order to ensure harmony in the control of shipping throughout the British Empire and that Canadian autonomy in all matters pertaining to shipping within the territorial waters of Canada be preserved beyond peradventure, your committee beg to recommend that the alleged conflict between the Merchants Shipping Act and the British North America Act shall be the subject of conference between the Canadian Government and the British Government at an early date.

VIII. It appeared in the course of your committee's investigation that a ship-owner desiring to obtain British registry for his ship need only present a Lloyd's certificate in order to establish the seaworthiness of his vessel, but that if he desires to obtain Canadian registry the ships must undergo an examination or survey by the Canadian government as well as that conducted by Lloyd's or some similar institution. Thus a very substantial and altogether unnecessary expense is placed upon the ship-owner desiring to obtain Canadian registry for his vessel and your committtee recommend that the Canadian regulations should be amended to remove this disadvantage.

IX. It would also appear that co-operative action among shippers to retain space would effect a substantial reduction in freight rates. This is exemplified in respect to cold storage for butter. The conference lines who charge almost as much to carry butter from Montreal to Liverpool as they do from New Zealand to Liverpool complain that their refrigerator space is made full use of for only a comparatively short part of the season, and that were they assured of adequate demands for their space, they could substantially cut the rate. It would appear that co-operation between shippers who could take firm a large portion of the refrigerated space offered, would obviate the difficulty in which the lines find themselves, and should greatly inure to the benefit of both parties. This solution would appear to be open to the produce exporters of this country, were the necessary faith in each other essential to successful co-operation present.

X. Your committee further recommend that the order of reference, reports, proceedings and the evidence given before the committee, together with a suitable index to be prepared by the clerk of the committee, be printed as an appendix to the Journals of the House of the present session and that 750 copies in the English language and 250 copies in the French language be printed in blue book form for distribution.

Your committee submit herewith for the information of the House a copy of their proceedings, the evidence given before the committee and also certain documents filed with the committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Andrew R. McMaster,
Chairman.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have listened carefully to the report but it does not seem complete; the name of Mr. Preston is not mentioned.

PEIGAN INDIAN BAND

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I desire to present a petition signed by Philip Big Swan and eighty other members of the Peigan Indian Band, praying for the cancellation of a certain lease covering a large part of the Peigan reserve granted to Hon. A. J. McLean against the vote of the Band.

PRIVATE BILL

REFUNDING OF ADDITIONAL CHARGES

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), that in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eighth report of the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills the additional charge made on Bill No. 164, for the relief of Walter Thomas Pratchett, be refunded.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): In the interests of the Department of Finance I must again object to this motion as I did some weeks ago to similar resolutions. It seems to me that we should determine sooner or later to what extent we are to go in refunding these charges to people who come before parliament asking for legislation and, when they are not successful, expect the country to reimburse them.

Hon. H. B. McGIVERIN (Ottawa): These charges are not ordinary fees. A fine is levied even when the petition is a day late in being presented, and the charges are in the nature of fines. The committee felt in two or three cases that they were fully justified in returning the charges to the applicants, and while I do not recall the exact circumstances in relation to this particular case I know that the reasons were sufficient to warrant the recommendation.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS—FURTHER LEGISLATION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after the 16th June instant, until the end of the present session, the House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each sitting day, and that in addition to the unsual intermission at six o'clock p.m. there shall be also an intermission every day from one to three o'clock p.m.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN: (Leader of the Opposition): This is the usual motion and there is no special objection to it, although I really do not see that it is very necessary this year. However, it should not be passed until all government legislation is down, which is not the case. I suggest that the motion stand awaiting the bringing down of all further legislation. If everything is already down I shall have no objection to the motion taking effect on Tuesday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no objection to having it stand. As I intimated yesterday, all legislation is now down, as far as I am aware, with the exception of supplementary estimates and one or two very minor bills.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister is forgetting about that rural credits matter that is on the conscience of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland).

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I am not forgetting it; I spoke of it yesterday. I said, with the exception of the measures I referred to yesterday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the Prime Minister stated there were one or two minor matters to be dealt with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should say there is a small amendment that the Minister of Customs and Excise has—I think to give him power to make regulations under the Smuggling Treaty—and also an amendment to the Customs Act to give him some power in connection with the issuing of tobacco stemming licenses.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the matter of rural credits?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We need to see the rural credits legislation brought down.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should not like to close the door absolutely to some small amendments that may be needed to be introduced and discussed between now and the end of the session; but I think I can safely say that there will be nothing that will be controversial in any sense.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The motion stands in the meantime.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion stands.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

HIS EXCELLENCY UNABLE TO ACCEPT A SECOND TERM

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is now close to the end of this session, and before we meet again the term of the duties of the present Governor General will be close to expiration. There has been a very general feeling on the part of the people of Canada that it would meet with almost universal approbation if this term could, with the approval of His Excellency, be extended. I bring the matter to the attention of the government, and I ask if they are in a position to make any statement to the House on the subject, assuring them that any statement of a favourable nature will be very welcome on this side of the House—I believe on all sides—and by the country in general.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Some little time ago I intimated to His Excellency the Governor General, in much the same terms as the right hon. leader of the opposition has just used, that I was quite sure that irrespective of political affiliations the people of Canada would greatly welcome an announcement of the extension, and preferably the renewal of His Excellency's term, as Governor General of Canada. His Excellency has considered the matter very carefully, but I regret to say has intimated to me that he feels he should not consider having his term extended. In speaking with His Excellency, I mentioned of course, that if he could see his way to remain longer in Canada, the government would like to present to the British government the intimation that it would be most welcome to the people of Canada to have His Excellency's term renewed. Unhappily for reasons which His Excellency regards as paramount, he feels that nothing short of quite exceptional public need should permit him to consider remaining beyond the term for which he has been appointed, which term, I think, expires in August of next year. Perhaps I should say to the House that in expressing his regret at not finding it possible to consider remaining longer in Canada, His Excellency wished me to convey to the members of the government, as I assume he would also wish me to convey to the members of this House, how deeply touched both he and Her Excellency have been by this expression of the favour and good-will of the people of Canada.

MINERS AND STEEL WORKERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): Could the Minister of Labour give us any additional information which he has secured since yesterday concerning the labour disturbance in Cape Breton?

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have no further definite information other than hon. gentlemen would read in the morning papers and as stated to the House yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (East Calgary): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he knows whether troops have been sent to the mining area, and whether they have been sent in order to protect the men against the police of the company, or for what purpose they have been sent?

Mr. MURDOCK: Our understanding is that the troops were asked for by proper authority in the persons, I understand, of justices of the peace ,or judges in Cape Breton, applications being made to the Attorney General of Nova Scotia who requisitioned troops from the garrison at Halifax, and these troops left last evening for the scene of the riots. I do not know that I could give my hon. friend any further information except to assume that troops were requisitioned for the purpose of maintaining peace, order and good government in the mining area. That is the presumed purpose of the requisitioning of troops.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the Minister of Labour tell us who will be called upon to pay the expense of the troops being sent to Cape Breton.

Mr. MURDOCK: My hon. friend having been in the House during the last two or three sessions will recall the change in the law which requires that the province shall, in the case referred to, be required to pay the expense of the troops.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Am I to understand from the minister that the troops of Canada have actually gone to Cape Breton without the government being so much as notified?

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Minister of National Defence): For the information of my hon. friend what has occurred has been that the attorney general requisitioned the district officer commanding in the province of Nova Scotia for the troops under the act which we passed last session. The district officer has communicated with the adjutant-general and has advised him to the effect that he was acting under the orders of the attorney general.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State): In reference to the remarks of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) on the orders of the day yesterday in regard to the delay in bringing down certain returns I have drawn the attention of the officials of the department in charge of this work to his remarks and I am informed that a large number of the returns asked for will be very voluminous and will necessitate a great deal of work. I have asked the different departments to expedite this work as rapidly as possible and I hope before the end of the session they will all be brought down. I would remind my hon. friend that four of the returns he mentioned yesterday as not having been brought down have already been laid on the table.

Mr. MEIGHEN : What ones?

Mr. COPP: The following returns were tabled in the House:

Reference No. 99, Mr. McQuarrie, April 27, 1925, Re: Number of civil servants who are eligible to come under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act 1924. Presented in House of Commons May 29, 1925.

Reference No. 103, Mr. Doucet, April 27, 1925, Re: A copy of all correspondence in connection with the appointment of the new postmaster at St. Ignace, electoral district of Kent, New Brunswick. Presented in House of Commons, May 27, 1925.

Reference No. 117, Mr. Stevens, May 11, 1925, Re: Statement made out by Messrs Wilson and Wilson in October 1924 as auditors for Vancouver Harbour Commissions, etc. Presented in House of Commons June 11, 1925.

Reference No.120 Mr. Black (Halifax) May 18, 1925, Re: How much money has been expended by the National or Quebec Battlefields Commission in monuments and historic sites in Quebec. Presented in House of Commons May 28, 1925.

FRUIT ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 117 to amend the Fruit Act.

He said: The provision the Senate has inserted is simply following the present practice, and although my attention was called to the fact that the official title "Horticultural Council of Canada" is not quite correct, I think it will be all right. I have no objection to accepting the amendment.

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): I should like to repeat what I said yesterday and to state the reason why I objected to the amendment being made. It seems to me a most extraordinary thing that we should be consenting to an amendment in this House which actually refers to an association by a wrong title. It might result in one of two things; either the authorities concerned might ignore the body called The Horticultural Council of Canada because it does not exist or else they might consult that body, describing it by its correct name, and afterwards there might be trouble in connection with it. I suggest that the amendment be not concurred in. My second reason is that it is usual and the minister has in the past consulted both the Fruit Growers' Association and the Canadian Horticultural Council before bringing in such a recommendation. I do not therefore see any necessity for the minister to be formally instructed to again consult that body. It might mean that it would be necessary to call into session that particular body because it really only meets once a year. It is necessary that quick action should be taken, and quick action will not be obtained if this amendment is adopted.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Although I do not claim to be as familiar with the details of these various organizations, as the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), it strikes me as a very peculiar amendment, especially coming from the upper house. That body is distinguished for the care which it takes from a legal aspect, especially in the revision of legislation. But to insert a provision such as this in a statute seems to me most extraordinary. It says, "the minister after consultation with the Horticultural Council of Canada"—something that has not the slightest legal effect. It is especially absurd if the hon. member for Yale is correct in the statement that there is no Horticultural Council of Canada. I think it must have slid through the Senate rather loosely, and I suggest to the minister that he should take it up again. Why should he insert into legislation the provision that the minister should consult the Horticultural Council of Canada? It would have had some meaning if it had said "with the approval of the Horticultural Council of Canada", but as it stands it is absurd. I am sure the House will agree with me in that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All the six bills that went through this House dealing with agriculture have been adopted by the Senate with this one simple amendment, and it would look a little bit pernickity on my part if I began to split hairs as to the name of the body. If we call them the Horticultural Council of Canada, they will surely come. I would not like to suggest an amendment to this amendment. Everybody knows what they are. We always consult them. The Senate has inserted in this bill an amendment which asks that we shall do what we always do. They could not ask for less if they asked anything at all, and I am ready to comply with a reasonable request of that kind, especially when I remember the bills which have been passed in this House and have been slaughtered entirely in the Senate. I feel grateful that this small amendment has been made, but now to begin to cheesepare and to say that this is not exactly the technical name, I think would not serve any useful purpose. If anybody will suggest the right name I will not object to the change. But I approve and concur in the amendment made by the Senate. If anybody thinks they will not come for this name, let them come for the other name. I have not the official name with me. Everybody in Canada will know what the Horticultural Council of Canada is. I think the official name is "Canadian Horticultural Council". Surely we are not in a hurry to finish the session when we can quibble on such differences as this.

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton): I am surprised that the minister is ready to accept this amendment, because I fear it is going to get him into trouble. For instance, when it comes to amending the Root and Vegetable Act I shall insist on a consultation with the New Brunswick Potato Growers' Association before any changes are made—that is, proceeding on the principle which the minister adopts in this amendment. And when it comes to the grading of eggs and any amendments relating thereto, the egg circles of Prince Edward Island would have to be consulted before anything was done. I think it is a ridiculous and impracticable amendment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is practised now.

Mr. CALDWELL: It may be practised. But the minister brought down this bill to get authority to make special grades where no grades existed. It will be an emergency measure, and that is why we passed the bill. When the crop is harvested, if there are any unusual circumstances in connection with it the minister will be able to establish grades that do not now exist under the law. Now, while there is a Canadian Horticultural Council, there is no Horticultural Council of Canada. The name is wrong, but I do not think that is a very material matter. But I believe this association meets only once a year and that the members of it are scattered all over Canada. How would the minister proceed to consult this organization if he needed something done in a hurry? Would the government pay the expenses of calling the members of the council from various sections of Canada to meet at Ottawa in order that he might consult them? Or will he wait until the emergency has passed and the necessity of getting the grades has passed, in order that he may consult them at their regular meeting? If the amendment is not accepted the Senate will surely reconsider their request in this matter. I do not want to hold the bill up, I want to see it go through; but I want it to go through in such a way that the minister will be able to take some action on it. To my mind he might better withdraw the whole thing than submit to this amendment, because it will prevent his doing anything in a case of emergency.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I assure my hon. friend that he will have no trouble in the matter at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is defeating rather than attaining his object. We had understood that there was real necessity for this legislation, namely, in order that action might be taken definitely and quickly when occasion required. I do not personally know anything about the constitution of this society, but if, as the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) has said, this society is represented in different provinces from coast to coast, I do not see how any quick action can be taken.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The secretary lives in Ottawa.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The secretary is not the association. While the secretary may have been consulted by the minister in the past, that is merely a matter of common sense, not a matter of legal requirement. If this amendment is accepted the minister's hands are tied until he calls that meeting.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, the act says so.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am perfectly satisfied with it the way it is.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will address myself then, to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), I think he will agree that according to this amendment, before there is any action the minister must have a consultation or conference with the Horticultural Council of Canada—I do not think there is anything very much in the matter of the name. Suppose an emergency arises and there is real necessity for the legislation; if the minister acts without such conference or consultation with the Canadian Horticultural Council, his action is illegal and void. The secretary is merely the servant of the organization. If the wording was, "after consultation with the secretary," then something could be done at once and without expense, but as it is now the situation is as I have stated it.

4 p.m.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I admit that this is a most extraordinary amendment, for the reasons suggested not only by the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) but also by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) when he pointed out that consultation does not mean approval. It seems almost absurd. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) was of the opinion that he could get along with the amendment as it is, but I would rather suggest that some time be devoted to a consideration of the matter.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Miniser): On other occasions conferences have been held between the two Houses on matters of this kind and an amicable arrangement has been arrived at. I should think that instead of debating the proposed amendment further we might ask for a conference with the other House, and I am sure that a satisfactory arrangement can be made.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Carried.

Mr. Carroll moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

The House resumed from June 9 consideration in committee of Bill No. 147 to amend the criminal code—Hon. Mr. Lapointe—Mr. Gordon in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Sections one, two, three and four have been carried. The section to be considered is number five.

On section 5—Agricultural fairs granted partial exemption from penalty clauses.

Mr. GOOD: Has not this clause been objected to rather strongly by a deputation that interviewed the government some months ago?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, there have been objections to the clause. On the other hand, it has been very strongly urged by the principal agricultural fairs, more particularly those which are subsidized by the Department of Agriculture, and that department has recommended the clause. As my hon. friend will see, the specially objectionable games are excluded.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister explain what those games are?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my ignorance of the punch board or coin table game is just as complete as that of my right hon. friend.

Mr. JACOBS: What is a shell game?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) since he has joined the United Church of Canada may be better qualified than I am to explain the nature of these games.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, I am not very familiar with these objectionable games myself, but I think the essential element in all of them is that by sleight of hand on the part of the operator the innocent victim is pretty badly stung. Religious and charitable organizations are permitted however to raise money by means of wheels of fortune, this being a favourite method of retailing merchandise, the profit realized being about 33⅓ per cent, or about the same as that realized by any retail concern. This used to be the regular method adopted by our exhibitions for raising money, but they were deprived of it by the amendment which went through the House three sessions ago without comment. Evidently the House did not know what was involved in the change, and I am quite sure the Minister of Justice did not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not until I went back home after prorogation and the fair managers protested to me thunderously. They said, "Why didn't you let us know this change was going to be made?" I had to admit that I did not know myself.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will the minister state who sprung this on him two years ago?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know. It may have been a hot day; anyway the section went through without the slightest discussion. I remember that at the time the Minister of Justice had requests for a great many reforms, and apparently he could not grant the majority of them, but this seemed to him a somewhat innocent looking one, and, as I say, it went through the House without comment. Regardless of the ethics of raising money this way, I ask the committee if it was fair to treat our agricultural exhibitions in this manner. I have no compunction whatever in asking that this section be agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will the minister please explain just what methods of gambling will be allowed on agricultural exhibition grounds if this amendment goes through?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The retailing of merchandise by means of wheels of fortune.

Mr. JACOBS: This looks to me like an attempt to legalize crime in the interests of agricultural associations. Is this another concession which the government is making to our friends the farmers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is the regular practice in my hon. friend's own province.

Mr. JACOBS: That does not make it any better.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, I have received representations from gentlemen associated with agricultural exhibitions in New Brunswick pointing out the necessity of this legislation if they are to finance their fairs. It is unfortunate, I think, that they have to have midways and wheels of fortune, but I cannot see that retailing merchandise by means of wheels of fortune is such a shocking form of gambling, as suggested by certain people, that it should be put under the ban. I am going to support this section, because without this concession I think one of the main attractions of the exhibitions we have in our provincial towns will be taken away. The midway attracts as many people as the agricultural exhibition itself. I do not agree with the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) that this form of gambling is simply legalized crime. My view is that, on the contrary, it is a perfectly proper method of retailing merchandise. At least, that is the excuse of the Minister of Agriculture, and I am going to rest my conscience on that excuse.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, when this change was made in the law three years ago, I think I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say that there must have been some reason for introducing the measure.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I knew nothing about it.

Mr. GOOD: I know that in the province of Ontario the midway feature of fairs has been under consideration for many years, and the allegation so frequently made that no fair could finance itself without a midway has been completely disproven. There must be at least a hundred and fifty fall fairs in Ontario that are being carried on very successfully without any midway features at all. I have heard it contended that the midway damages the fairs. I should like to know from the minister what fairs have requested this change.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I can only say that my office was besieged with people when that delegation came last year, claiming to represent all important agricultural fairs from British Columbia to Nova Scotia, and they represented that this provision was necessary to the success of their undertaking.

Mr. GOOD: Could the Minister of Agriculture give us any information on that point?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The representations were made largely by those interested in what are known as the "A" and "B" fairs, numbering between forty and fifty and held all over Canada. These are the most difficult fairs to finance. They find their revenues cut into by $5,000 or $10,000, some of them more, and the practical question is how to replace that money. Is my hon. friend going to help out these fairs by making a contribution from his own pocket? Three years ago we increased the grants to these fairs by $1,250, but even that did not compensate them for the loss. These exhibitions are undoubtedly of great educational value from the point of view of agriculture. If my hon. friend can suggest any better solution of the difficulty, we shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. GOOD: I am not at present taking a definite stand against this legislation; I am seeking information. I have heard—I do not know how correct the information is—that the fairs asking for this legislation are very few in comparison with the total number of fair associations in Canada, and that they are almost entirely those of the large cities. Is it possible that these fairs are, after all, not agricultural fairs primarily—perhaps only secondarily? If the minister takes the position that these fairs must be given the right to finance themselves in this way in order to inveigle people in to see the fine stock—which is, after all, the side issue, the midway being the main fair—I do not believe that is wise policy. It was advocated years ago in Ontario with respect to the smaller fairs, and I think the argument was shown to be a fallacious one. However, if the minister states that there is real difficulty I do not know that I should definitely object to trying the legislation out, although I have grave doubts as to the outcome. Representations were made to me not long ago by the president of the United Farmers of Ontario against this legislation. I do not know whether the organization itself has taken any definite stand in the matter, but I understand that the Social Service Council of Canada has taken a definite stand against the amendment. I rose rather to seek detailed information in order that we might see what was the proper thing to do. I am doubtful of the propriety of passing this legislation.

Mr. McTAGGART: Will the provisions of this section apply to all agricultural fairs, regardless of whether they are in receipt of a grant from either the Dominion or a provincial government?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. LEWIS: I am just a little surprised at the Minister of Agriculture fathering a provision of this kind. I am particularly surprised after his recent return from Toronto.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend suggest that he is not surprised at my approval of the bill, while he is at the approval of my colleague?

Mr. LEWIS: I am not surprised at what any person would do who comes from the province of Quebec, because there they have unrestricted freedom; they do not believe in prohibition of any kind. It is easy, therefore, to understand the psychology of people who come from that province. On the other hand, I do not like to think that the success of our agricultural fairs should depend upon an exemption from certain penalty clauses in the Criminal Code. I think we sometimes go too far in regard to restrictive legislation and that sometimes far worse evils creep in. But I would like to see people so much interested in agriculture and the products of agriculture that it would not be necessary to draw in those who are interested only in the games of chance. The only way agriculture can pay is to have it put on a fair footing; then we will not have to adopt these roundabout methods of inveigling money from the people in order to assist the finances of agricultural fairs. At the same time I do not see why the fairs in our small villages and towns should be seriously handicapped by not having these things, particularly when the people see them at ordinary exhibitions, and for that reason I am not going to vote against the amendment.

Mr. MICHAUD: Does my hon. friend think that the people of Quebec are not as moral as those of any other province? I understood him to say that they were taking a great deal of freedom.

Mr. LEWIS: No, I did not say anything about the morality of any people. I said I was not surprised at the attitude of the Minister of Justice, because in that province they believe in unrestricted freedom and not in prohibition of any kind.

Mr. LEADER: I have had some experience in connection with agricultural exhibitions and I know something of the difficulties they have to labour under. I want it distinctly understood that I am opposed to gambling in every shape or form.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LEADER: But I would not wish to impose my views upon others, and I know there are many people in Canada who do not think as I do with regard to gambling. I wish to support the Minister of Agriculture in this amendment, for this reason, if for no other: that these harmless games are now carried on in any case at every little fair in western Canada, against the law. I would rather see the law complied with than violated; therefore I think we should permit these games at the fairs, with the elimination of those of the most vicious kind. I do not suppose there is an hon. gentleman who would not like to take home a Kewpie doll if he could get it for twenty-five cents. Personally, I attend agricultural fairs because I am interested in the stock; but I realize that for every one, man or woman, who goes to a fair in order to see the stock there are ten who are interested in the other attractions. And as agricultural fairs must depend to a large extent on the gate receipts they must cater of necessity to those who go to be entertained. I should like to see the midway eliminated from our agricultural fairs. I believe that some of the larger fairs in the United States have now abolished it. The state of Iowa for example does not permit such forms of entertainment in connection with their fairs. The only sort of amusement that would appeal to me apart from the exhibits is the old-fashioned game of horse shoe, which is a considerable attraction at fairs in Iowa. I know that more than 1,000 people took part in that game at one fair in the state of Iowa last year and I am sure they went home satisfied with their entertainment.

I want to make sure that the same provision shall apply to the small fairs as well as to class "A" and class "B" fairs. The minister made the statement that the larger fairs must depend to a considerable extent on the concessions they are able to sell; and if this is necessary in connection with these institutions, it is obvious that the smaller fairs that receive no federal grant must depend to a greater extent upon the revenues they can secure in other ways. We have in Manitoba midway entertainments that make the circuit of the different fairs, and if there is to be any distinction between the fairs that receive the Dominion grant and those that do not, it would be impossible for the entertainers to carry on. The games would be allowed at some fairs while they would be prohibited at others, and you can readily understand the difficult position these people would be in. There would be a difference between Carman and Portage la Prairie, Neepawa and Dauphin, Yorkton and Melville; and under any system of this sort it would be impossible to secure a midway on satisfactory terms. I think that the same provision should apply to all fairs big or little without discrimination. I shall therefore support the amendment.

Mr. KNOX: I can hardly think that the minister considers this part of the agricultural fair as educational. Does he really think that it is in the best interests of agriculture to have this provision enacted?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My first desire was to have this apply, as the hon. member (Mr. Leader) has said, to "A" and "B" fairs, so that it might be restricted to such fairs as we give grants to and over which we have supervision. At every one of these fairs the Department of Agriculture has a representative and will continue to have one to see that there are no Smart Alec tricks practised. But I found there was little sympathy in this House with this restriction and that is why the bill is now in its present form. As to whether the provision is good, bad or indifferent, I have not indicated my opinion, nor do I think my hon. friend (Mr. Knox) has told us what he thinks of it from the ethical point of view. I have been looking forward for years and years now to the time when agricultural fairs would be distinctly agricultural, and when the sports in connection with them would be eliminated. Many of the agricultural societies in the country have tried to realize the same wish but they have tried it only once, for they find that it will not go. We are trying gradually to reform society, and when the public conscience will support these fairs on their merits we shall not require devices of this kind. But until that time comes, if you cannot get money without permitting these games, those who object to the practice ought to tell us how we can get along without them. That is the practical question which I, as head for the time being of the Department of Agriculture, must answer. I am not discussing the ethics of the question.

Mr. BRETHEN: Evidently the demand for this legislation comes from that type of fair which is not so much agricultural as it is in the nature of a circus. It seems to me that any fair that must depend for fifty per cent or even two-thirds of its finances, as I understood the minister to suggest, upon the turn of a wheel of fortune or upon some game of chance can hardly be called an agricultural institution, and I do not think there is any justification for such a fair. The people of any community who support an agricultural fair only on condition that these entertainments are allowed do not want a fair at all; what they really want is a circus. I am opposed to this legislation. The minister said that it was not possible to carry on a fair without something of this kind. Let me tell him that I attended a fair in the home town of the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) some years ago and found it purely agricultural. And I know that they carried on for a number of years in that way. I have not been there within the past two or three years and therefore I do not know whether this is still true, but I do know that that fair was a success under those conditions. It was purely agricultural, and there are a great many other fairs in Ontario which have been conducted successfully along the same lines. I am not in sympathy with any fair which is seventy-five per cent circus and twenty-five per cent agricultural.

Mr. THURSTON: I rather resent one remark of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), to the effect that agricultural fairs could not be conducted without the support of midways. There is in my own constituency one little village which has retained the old fashioned agricultural fair, and it is one of the most educative fairs in that part of the country. In the regulations of the board there is one condition which I think the Minister of Agriculture might seriously consider and insist upon; the directors are all agriculturists. We find that in connection with a good many of the agricultural fairs throughout the province of Ontario to-day the idea is to get a big crowd into the town for the occasion, to bring money into the place, while the educational value of the fair is lost sight of. As regards the question of restricting the gambling feature of these fairs, I agree with one or two members who have spoken in this respect, that I am not very much in favour of restrictive legislation of any kind. If people are going to gamble at all they might as well do it openly as behind closed doors, so to speak, and contrary to law. I think however that the Department of Agriculture should insist, so far as those fairs that receive grants are concerned, that the fair shall depend to a greater extent on the support of agricultural people than of those in other walks of life.

Mr. NEILL I wish to associate myself with the attitude of the hon. member for East Peterborough. He has come out flat-footed and has declared himself opposed to gambling which after all is the issue in this section. I have been rather interested to observe the mental evolutions by which hon. members who would hardly care to say that they are in favour of open gambling have brought themselves to support this section. The most frank in that regard was the Minister of Agriculture who tells us candidly that this evil—for I suppose gambling is an evil being generally recognized as such—is essential because the fairs cannot get money in any other way. That is a very frank statement but it is also a very wide one; it can be applied to a great many other conditions in life and lead to the adoption of the policy—"get money, honestly if you can but get money." If it is necessary to get money, no matter how, they might claim to be allowed to go in for a little of what is called bootlegging at these fairs. That would yield more money more quickly. I think the minister used the expression that if anyone is opposed to this section it is up to him to say how the money is to be otherwise provided. I do not think that necessity is imposed upon us. If a man comes and says "I cannot keep my wife and family, I am a cripple, I am old, and the only way I can keep them is by bootlegging" that would not be justifiable. I heard that defence put up in court not long ago, but it was not accepted as being a sufficient defence. There is one phase of this question that nobody has touched upon, and I am serious in saying this: It is calculated to induce young people to see or think they see advantages in gambling. It would be only in a small way I admit, but it is calculated to imbue young people with the idea—which is at the very root of the evil of gambling,—the idea of getting something for nothing. It is asked "Where are we to get the money otherwise?" The money comes out of the pockets of the people and not in a very creditable way. We might increase the vote granted by parliament rather than have the money taken out of the pockets of the people who attend these fairs. In that case we would know what we were doing; we would be calling a spade a spade. I am not particularly keen on this section either way personally, but I cannot accept the view that says: "It is all right to gamble provided it is only to a certain extent." I cannot see that if a thing is wrong the fact that there is partial restriction and is only to be practised at a country fair makes it any better.

Mr. GOOD: It occurs to me that perhaps the minister would be well advised to let this matter stand over for further consideration. I recall that a few years ago in the city of Brantford some midway organization appealed to the municipal council for the right to set up their booths, wheels of fortune, and all kinds of other things on the market place for about two weeks. Well somehow or other they prevailed on the municipal authorities to grant them the right—I do not know just how it was—and we had an awful experience. I think it did incalculable damage to the community. I do not know how much money it took out of the city or how much demoralization it caused among the young people. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has put a question that is quite worth while considering and that is how far any encouragement of this particular type of entertainment is going to lead our young people astray. I have no objection to entertainment features at fairs—they are all right, the more the better so long as they are of a proper kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me that a certain amount of objection to this clause would be eliminatel if the minister left the matter entirely in the hands of the management of the agricultural fair. What I mean by this is, that the wheel of fortune or whatever amusement feature it was would have to be operated directly by the management of the fair. Now, no one can condone the offence of gambling whether it is carried on at a church bazaar, an agricultural fair, or by a private individual. But there is this feature that I wish to point out: Where the gambling system is operated by a private individual it may be crooked; there may be no particular rule in the game. The man operating it is very often a man who comes in from the outside and has no particular standing morally or financially in the community. He is not particularly concerned with anything except getting money, and getting it by any means that he can. Such a man is going to strain a law to the very limit. On the other hand, if it were carried on by a public body or by the management of the agricultural fair, or as we very often see it at a church bazaar —because they indulge in games of chance on such occasions—there is some responsible body back of it, and if there is anything that is obnoxious to public opinion, the people can place the responsibility where it belongs and deal with it accordingly. It seems to me that would be a sufficient safeguard and, perhaps, would leave the matter entirely in the hands of the people of the community. I believe it would, at least partially, meet the approval of those who would otherwise raise objections.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I intend to support the section. My contention is that you cannot make angels by legislation.

Mr. VIEN: Some think they can.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If you are going to restrict every means of amusement for the people to-day they will amuse themselves where you will not be able to see them, and the unseen amusement, in my estimation, is the worst kind of amusement.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not always.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I go to horse races once in a while and bet two dollars. Sometimes I lose, sometimes I win. I do not think I am any worse than anyone else. You find the best people in the country to-day willing to take a little chance. Life itself is a chance. Every farmer that puts wheat into the ground is gambling.

Mr. LAPOINTE: An election is a chance.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Well, I think it is fairly certain.

Mr. BOYS: Sometimes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am very glad that this section is going to apply to fairs, that there is going to be some such provision. If it results in abuse the section can be amended in the future, but I am sure that the directors on the different fair boards will see to it that things are carried on properly.

Mr. LEADER: The previous speaker made the statement that "you cannot make angels by legislation." My opinion is that we can make people better by education. In reference to the suggestion of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) that it be left to the management of the fairs to decide whether the thing should be carried on or not, I think that is the practice now, and that we have proper supervision. The police and the directors of the fair board are careful to see that matters are carried on as they should be. I have gone around with them when they made their tour to see that there were no objectionable features in connection with any of these sideshows and midway entertainments. The police have the power, especially if the sentiment of the community is behind them, to eliminate any of these objectionable features in regard to our fairs. Perhaps in this connection I may be permitted to give an illustration. The pari-mutuel people of Winnipeg came to Portage la Prairie on one occasion when I was a member of the Fair board and they asked the permission of the board to operate the pari-mutuel at our local races. We have very good races at Portage la Prairie, but we do not have the pari-mutuel in operation or any gambling that I know of. We told the pari-mutuel people plainly that we would not allow them to put the system in operation. They threatened to take measures that would spoil our fair but we told them plainly to go to it. In any event we did not allow the pari-mutuel and in taking that action we knew the public sentiment was behind us; the people did not want the pari-mutuel there.

Mr. CAMPBELL: In regard to what the hon. member (Mr. Leader) says I am quite aware that the making of regulations for the control of these entertainments is entirely in the hands of the Fair board. What I wanted to point out, however, was that some man operating the amusements or machines might do certain things that would not be known until the fair was over. They can go on somewhere else and carry this thing on, whereas in this particular case they have all the advantages accruing to the Fair board and the responsibility should be allocated to them. If the moral sensibilities of the people of the district were hurt in any way, they could deal with it. In this particular case it would be impossible to do that, because the man has gone and cannot be found. I am not very dogmatic about it. I only throw out the suggestion, and as a matter of fact I intend to offer no opposition to the section.

Mr. BRETHEN: This section is in the nature of class legislation. If this man with the punch board were operating outside the fair ground he would be taken in charge as a criminal, and I do not see why we should make a distinction because he is inside the fair ground.

Mr. HOEY: This excludes all others.

Mr. BRETHEN: To make my position clear on this, I move that section 5 be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN: It strikes me this amendment is not in order. This section is under consideration. The hon. member can vote against the adoption of the section if he wishes, but not to strike out the whole section.

Mr. BOYS: If my hon. friend is against this section all he has to do is to vote against it, and it is not necessary to move an amendment.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 8—Bailee not producing or delivering any article under lawful seizure by peace or public officer.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I understand the minister had this clause under discussion with some of the attorneys general of the provinces. Perhaps he could tell us what they had to say about it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This clause is drafted by Mr. Newcombe, formerly Deputy Minister of Justice, at present Mr. Justice Newcombe, upon the suggestion of the members of the bar of Alberta, and I really think it is a commendable provision, making it a criminal offence for any one who has been appointed by the sheriff as bailee of anything capable of being stolen, to appropriate the article to his own use personally, or selling or disposing of it, or not returning it at the appointed time when ordered by the court. It has been suggested that such a provision was needed. I told my hon. friends from the west the other day that I proposed the amendment just to fill a need out west, but that if they did not want it I am not going to force it upon them.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not opposing this provision, nor do I understand that the hon. members for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and Battle River (Mr. Spencer) were opposing it the other day, they were simply looking for information. The point I am not clear upon is as to what the position was previous to this law. If any person were left in possession of certain goods and appropriated those goods to his own use, was he not guilty of theft under the common law?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The trouble was that it was difficult to prosecute on a mere charge of theft. This has been attempted in some instances, and sufficient evidence could not be secured to convict the guilty party. Of course this will not work against an individual, and if there is anything to justify his having left the property and gone away, he cannot be convicted. The bailee in most instances is the owner of the property and the sheriff perhaps cannot find any other person except the debtor to act as bailee. If that debtor uses the property left on his hands by the court for his personal advantage, sells it or gives it away, surely it is equivalent to theft and he should be convicted for disposing of it.

Mr. LEWIS: Suppose for instance there is said to be 2,000 bushels of wheat threshed into a granary, and the bailee is in charge of it. Some time after that he is asked to produce that wheat, and when it is taken to the elevator it is found that there are only 1,800 bushels. It may be due to short weight of the threshing machine. Will he be called upon to prove that there were only 1,800 bushels there, or will he be protected if he produces all the wheat that was stored there at the time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The last three lines of the section protect him. They read:

A person accused under this section shall not be convicted if it be proved that the non-production and non-delivery of the thing bailed is not due to any wilful act or omission on the part of the person accused.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

He could not be convicted in the case suggested if the non-delivery is not due to any act or omission on his part.

Mr. LEWIS: The difficulty is that the onus is upon the bailee himself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The same thing happens in the criminal code. A man who is accused of receiving stolen property found in his possession has to show that there has been no wilful act on his part which makes him liable.

Mr. GOOD: It was urged the other day by some hon. members who are not here just now that this clause placed on the man who was charged the onus of proving he was not guilty. Has the minister given full consideration to that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think it can be done otherwise. I think it is identical with the case of receiving stolen goods.

Item agreed to.

On section 11—Use of word "Royal" without authority.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Some of my hon. friends in the committee the other day took exception to this section. The necessity or advisability of this section has been shown in many instances in recent years. Associations were assuming to use that word, and it leads in many cases to serious difficulty. Only a couple of years ago there was an institution in Toronto called the Royal College of Science, and other scientific associations there, especially the college of ophthalmology, took strong objection to it and wrote many letters to His Excellency the Governor General and to the government about it. In other cases I may say that even swindlers have used the word "royal" and have associated it with the rest of their name in order to deceive the people, and it is certainly not paying the care and attention which ought to be paid to this word, so long as we have the respect for it which we have in this country. It was stated that there was nothing of the kind in England. Well, the use of the words "royal" and "imperial" is forbidden in England save with the consent of the Home Office. It is so enacted in many statutes of the United Kingdom. In this country important associations are using that name, but are following the practice of asking leave to do it, and there is no objection to that. What is objectionable is that this name should be used indiscriminately for all sorts of purposes by all sorts of firms and associations without asking leave to do it. Unless this is made an offence, there is no possibility whatever of dealing with a matter of this kind.

This cannot work any injury to anybody, because those who want to use it and who are entitled to use it, will be given leave to do so. I really think, out of respect for the word "royal," we should not allow it to be misused as it is to-day. Only a couple of years ago we prevented, I think by legislation, the use of the term "red cross" except by the Red Cross Society. Some firms had begun to use the term in order to benefit by the popularity of the name in the selling of their goods. The practice here, for instance, is always to refuse to a Dominion company the use of a provincial word. We would not incorporate here any company with the use of the word "Ontario" or "Quebec." On the other hand, Quebec, Ontario and the other provinces do not use the word "Dominion" or "Canadian" in giving charters to any corporation, firm or association. I think those names should be left untouched except by the usual leave.

Mr. LEWIS: I have no objection to this legislation provided that registered trade marks that are already registered in Canada such as "Royal Crown Soap" and that kind of thing are allowed to continue as at the present time. I do not believe in the indiscriminate use of the word "royal" for anything that comes along. For that reason I am going to support the section on condition that all existing registered trade marks are exempted from this.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think that is covered by the clause. There is a proviso:

> Provided that this section shall not apply to any case in which the use of the word "royal" is authorized by or under the provisions of any statute of Canada.

The Trade Marks Act in England which forbids the use of the word "royal" or "imperial" in the same way has also this exception. It does not apply to old firms which have had trade marks with that name.

Mr. GOOD: Is the minister quite sure that all cases where the word "royal" is being now used in Canada are covered by this last proviso? May there not be some cases where the word "royal" has been appropriated and in common use for a long time, and where that use is not sanctioned or approved by statute? What would be done in such cases?

Mr. LAPOINTE: A reasonable hearing would be given to their request, but surely they should apply for leave to use that word.

Mr. GOOD: I do not see any provision in this clause for them to apply for permission to continue the use of the name. Where is that permission given?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would not like to give the assurance that all those who indiscriminately use the word "royal" should be left in possession of it, if really they should not use it.

Mr. GOOD: Nor I, either.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As I have stated, even swindlers have used that word.

Mr. THURSTON: Are they notified to stop using the word before a fine is demanded from them?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Absolutely.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This is the most absurd piece of legislation I have seen passed in this House, or placed before this House, during the last four sessions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a new one every day apparently.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am sorry the minister did not allow his own judgment to prevail instead of being prevailed upon by others. People until now have been permitted to use the name "Royal Yeast Cakes," "Royal Crown Soap," "Royal Household Flour" and a thousand and one other little things that have been household articles for a generation or two. I know of nothing that will lower the dignity and prestige of royalty more than legislation like this. If we are going to be forced by legislation into respecting royalty, our respect for it is not going to last very long. If there is anything that has perpetuated respect for royalty in the British Empire, it is the very fact that it has not been forced upon the people. People do it voluntarily. We respect royalty simply because it is there by the will of the people, not by any political coercion. It seems to me that this is only the thin edge of the wedge in setting up a prejudice against the institution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. member not the wrong angle of the matter? This does not force the royal family on us or off us.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Not entirely, but if the name cannot be used in any other sense—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Legislation provides that we cannot in this country utter language respecting the royal family.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is that not true of any individual? You cannot use certain language against individuals.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is quite different and rightly so. This is the same in every country in the world. The great mass of the people, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand, would never dream of doing it; but it is unseemly, inconsistent with what strikes the great mass of the people as right and decent that the thousandth man should be allowed to do it. This is just conduct of a similar character. It is trafficking in the world "royal." What right has anybody to use the word "royal" indiscriminately and place it before a yeast cake? The value of it consists in the respect in which the Royal family is held. That fact surely is a reason why anybody on earth, whether the purpose is bad or half bad or foolish or something of that character, should not be allowed, just of his own free will, to bandy the word about in every shape and form on every billboard in the country. That is the principle that is behind the matter. I do not think there is a country in the world where this is not law, and it seems to me it is right and proper. Nobody is going to be fined without warning; nobody ever is fined without warning in legislation of this kind; and I fancy a very generous use of the word can still be allowed. This is simply to permit of such restrictions as are consistent with what the ordinary mass of democracy regard as respectable in relation to the Royal family.

Mr. PUTNAM: My hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) asserted that this was the most foolish legislation of the last four sessions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We all dissent from that.

Mr. PUTNAM: As a general supporter of this government I hope he is right. He boldly asserts that the prohibition of the indiscriminate use of the word "royal" tends to disrespect for the Royal family. It is odd that public opinion in England, where they are measurably loyal to the Royal family, has taken the opposite view, and the use of the word is forbidden except in very rare and very conservative instances. In addition to what the right hon. leader of the opposition has said, it does seem to me that part of the policy of this prohibition is to prevent an unfair advantage as between advertisers, because the use of the word "royal" connotes a possible degree of governmental favour towards the advertiser employing the term. Right in my own town, as solicitor, I was engaged in the incorporation of a garage company that had theretofore called itself The Royal Garage Company, but the provincial authorities of Nova Scotia pointed out that it was against the policy of the governments both there and at Ottawa to grant incorporation of any joint stock company under this distinctive word. For my part, I can see a dual reason for this stand, and I am surprised at what I must characterize, with all respect, as the tangent at which the hon. member for Mackenzie has allowed his mind to travel.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, I cannot see any particular advantage to be gained by the use of the word "royal" just so long as it is open to everyone to use it; but the moment you restrict its use there might be an advantage to a firm putting the word on any brand of goods.

Mr. MANION: Is it not just as true that there is no disadvantage if everybody is prevented from using the word? Therefore the amendment really does not matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Then why any necessity for the amendment?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Because some people think differently from my hon. friend.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The logical thing now for the minister to do is to restrict the use of the words, "Canadian," "national," and so on.

Mr. PUTNAM: Who shall be the judge of what is logical? Shall we leave the standard to the hon. member for Mackenzie?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The minister is making himself the judge in this particular case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, no.

Mr. PUTNAM: I think if the hon. gentleman would give reasons rather than conclusions he would be employing his time better.

Mr. SHAW: The member for Colchester (Mr. Putnam) made some reference to there being similar legislation in the Mother Country. Has similar legislation been passed in England?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The use of the words "royal" and "imperial" is forbidden in England, save with the consent of the Home office. Several imperial statutes, particularly the Trade Marks Act 1905 and the trade mark rules 1920, contain such a prohibition.

Mr. SHAW: Why did not the minister include the word "imperial" in his proposed legislation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I admit that in England the use of both words is forbidden.

Mr. BAXTER: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we need take very much time discussing this amendment. I would be inclined to agree that there is not any great necessity for the proposed legislation. There is no tremendous amount of harm being done, I suppose; it is not something that exposes anybody's life or liberty to danger. But really the necessity for this amendment, so far as there is necessity, is evidenced by the remarks that have been made to this committee this afternoon. What we desire to cultivate among the people of Canada is just a bit of gentlemanly manners and good taste. The man who tacks on to a pot of blacking the word "royal," or some similar designation, that brings to mind that its use has the approval of the Royal family, is not acting in good taste; he is not elevating citizenship; he is not setting up the ideal that ought to be set up everywhere throughout the empire that the Royal family, because it is the Royal family by the will of the people, is the highest ideal of the people in our form of government, and therefore ought to be respected. A man should no more desire to use that word indiscriminately in connection with a pot of blacking than he would want to call the sovereign by his christian name. Of course, some people would brag of doing that. There are some parts of Canada where apparently people want to do this sort of thing.

An hon. MEMBER: Is that the Maritime provinces?

Mr. BAXTER: I have not met with any examples of it there, but from the group my hon. friend is a member of I have seen some distinctly un-Canadian exhibitions since I came to this House.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Are you the judge?

Mr. BAXTER: I am not judging. There is considerably more feeling towards the United States of America than there is towards the British crown. It does not apply to all, but to a good many in western Canada.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I have been in the Maritime provinces, and I have heard more talk of that kind there than in western Canada.

Mr. BAXTER: Very well; all I can say is, western Canada is badly represented in this House, because if the electorate could come here they would hear uttered a good many words disloyal to their country and to the empire.

An hon. MEMBER: From whom?

Mr. BAXTER: They come from members who are sitting to my left—from no other part of the House. We do not need the American ideal to be set up before us, and yet every session we have paraded almost everything that takes place across the line, as if the American ideal was far superior to our own. Among other things, we are told that we do not want British immigrants. Take the British flag itself, the man who has the proper spirit of citizenship would not use the Union Jack for a floor decoration and walk upon it; but some people can see no reason in the world why that combination of colours and lines would not make a very pretty pattern for a carpet. These people need a little bit of education. If they are not able to accept education in the ordinary way, sometimes it is necessary to enforce a rule such as this. This law is setting a standard of gentlemanly conduct towards the highest ideal that we know within the empire.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is not too bad, but I question whether the minister is not going to get into serious difficulties working it out. I should like to have some assurance from him that concerns now using the word "royal" without the sanction of any particular statute, are going to be free from penalty. There is no provision here which would enable them to secure notification or warning before they would be subject to prosecution. I do think that from that point of view the amendment would work out very badly. Would not the minister consider some modification of the section? Or would he give some assurance as to what would be the procedure in the case of certain words in common use that are not sanctioned by statute?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The procedure would be to ask for leave to use the word.

Mr. GOOD: From whom?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think application should be made to the Secretary of State, who would transmit it through the Governor General to the Home office, where such permission is granted. My hon. friend may be assured that this has been done by certain institutions. When I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries I remember making application for use of the word "royal" by the Royal Yachting Association of Hamilton, and permission was given. My hon. friend may be certain that nobody would be treated harshly; the very nature of this provision would prevent it. I am sure that the Royal family, the Canadian government or the Home office would not prosecute anybody in the way my hon. friend has suggested. However, I am glad he thinks this proposal is "not too bad after all," in view of his neighbour to his left having said that it was the most foolish thing he had ever heard of.

Mr. BAXTER: I hardly think anything is likely to arise such as the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) fears, but there is the possibility that some man will rush in with a prosecution and no one can tell. I would suggest the addition of these words:

Nor shall any prosecution be commenced under this section except by the order of the Attorney General of Canada or the attorney general of a province.

So that it will not be a private prosecutor.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will that satisfy the hon. member?

Mr. GOOD: That will be a great assistance.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I accept the amendment.

Mr. SHAW: I oppose this particular provision. I want to pay my respects to those in authority. I do not think anybody will be induced to pay any additional respect by reason of any statutory enactment of any kind; but the situation seems to be now well taken care of, because, as the minister himself has said, anyone who wants to use the name "royal" for the purpose of an incorporated company or some similar purpose, must make application to the Dominion Secretary of State or the Provincial Secretary of State, in which case the word "royal" may be and, I have no doubt, often is eliminated from the proposed name of the company. The objection I see to this legislation is that what is now exercised as a civil right becomes, by virtue of this proposed legislation, a criminal law. There is too much of a tendency nowadays to take civil wrongs and convert them into criminal wrongs. More than that, I do not see where this legislation is properly going to stop because, if you are going to make the word "royal" exclusive, you must naturally and logically similarly make provision for the word "imperial," and I do not see any reason why this should not be extended further to the word "majesty," even to the word "king" itself. Surely no one would suggest that the latter word should be eliminated from the surname of a good many people including a number of distinguished people in this country. If any wrong is done, there is ample remedy at the present time. I remember very well a case which arose in our province in which a dilapidated draying outfit, taking advantage of the situation, called themselves the Grand Trunk delivery. The Grand Trunk Railway Company were rather impressed with the dilapidated condition of this delivery rig; they brought action in the courts to restrain the use of the term, and an injunction was promptly granted because the delivery man was taking advantage of a name to which he was not entitled. If any damage is done by the use of these or similar words, there is ample remedy at civil law. There are also protective measures, as the minister has stated, by the Secretary of State using the power which he has in the case of incorporated companies. Consequently, I feel that to make a criminal offence out of what is at most a civil wrong is a very serious entrenchment upon the rights of individuals. I say this with every respect for the Royal family. No one could have more respect for them than I have. I do not believe it will be the wish of the Royal family that the mere use of such terms should impose a criminal penalty upon any individual.

Mr. PUTNAM: Alluding to the remarks of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw), I think he seems to assume that the proposed barrier against the word "royal" corresponds with the line at which the word is allowed or disallowed upon application at present. That is a fallacy, because in hundreds of cases people now of their own volition are assuming to use the word "royal" on all sorts of advertising devices and in connection with little partnerships and companies whether properly incorporated or not. Therefore, the remedy which he would assume as at present in the hands of the authorities is not there.

Mr. SHAW: Does my hon. friend not admit that if any damage is done by the use of this term or any similar term, there is an adequate and complete remedy at civil law my way of injuncton or damage?

Mr. PUTNAM: At the present time there is no penalty at all in scores of cases for the indiscriminate use of the word "royal" where it is being used without even an application for it. I know cases of it right in my province where they use the term "royal" this and "royal" that. While at present a company will not be permitted to incorporate under that name, there is, so far as I know, no law under the firmament to prevent those people in that informal way from using the word "royal." In any case there is no harm in making the law clear upon the point. I do not think the word "imperial" in Canada stands in quite the same position as the word "royal." The word "royal" is far more definite to us than the word "imperial." To say that you are going to sell imperial oil or imperial oats does not infringe, to my mind at least, nearly so closely upon what is denoted by the Royal family itself as the use of the word "royal." The hon. member cited the use of the words "king" and "queen." You may talk about the Queen Shoe Company or the King Tractor Company, and it is obvious on its face that those terms are too ambitious to carry the idea of any governmental favour. But when you use the word "royal," it seems to me that you are allowing that man an unfair advertising advantage, because when you come down through all the grades of intelligence, you will find some and not a few who will actually think that when a man has the right to use the word "royal" in connection with his business, he is a little nearer the throne in some business sense in governmental favour than his competitors. We had a debate which bordered on that by way of analogy when we incorporated the United Church of Canada. Objection was taken to that inasmuch as the newly named church seemed to have under that very term some of the rights of a state church. The objection did not prevail, but at the same time I was not entirely clear that there was not some validity in the objection. I have always held that it has been part of the policy as regards the use of the word "royal" in an advertising sense that it conveys an undue advertising advantage. It is too happy an advertising term.

Section agreed to.

On section 19—Proceedings upon warrant, to enforce attendance of prisoner confined in another province.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I desire to move this amendment to section 19 in order to cover an objection which was made to it by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs):

That section 19 be amended by changing the word "subsection" in line 2 to "subsections" and adding the following subsection:

(6) Where any order is granted under the provisions of the next preceding sub-section, the judge may, by such order or by such further or other order as he may deem requisite, from time to time, give directions as to the manner in which such person shall be kept in custody and returned to prison to serve the remainder of his original sentence, in case he be discharged or acquitted of the offence in respect of which such warrant was issued, or may make such other directions as in the circumstances of the case he may see fit.

This provides that if a prisoner, under the direction of a judge, has been transferred to another province to stand his preliminary trial he shall in case of acquittal be returned to the province from which he came to serve the rest of his term.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 22—Trial by jury in certain cases.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This amendment was suggested by the Attorney General of Quebec but there have been strong objections to it, and as the whole matter of the right of election for speedy trial has to be considered in accordance with the suggestions that have been made by various provinces, I move that this section be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The amendment which I moved the other day to section 412 is in reality the bill which was presented by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham). The amendment reads:

(2) Every one who by himself, his servant, agent or employee—

(a) By means of false or misleading billing, classification or labelling, or any other false or misleading representation or statement of the contents of any car, vessel, package or consignment, or by concealment, or failure to properly bill or disclose the entire contents of any such car, vessel, package or consignment, or by giving, furnishing or using any false address or by any other means or device, whether with or without the consent or connivance of any servant, agent or employee of any railway, steamship or other transportation company (including any railway or steamship line owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the crown), knowingly obtains or attempts to obtain the carriage or transportation by such company of any intoxicating liquor into any country, province, district or other place, whether within or without Canada, where the importation or transportation of such liquor is in the circumstances of the case contrary to law:—

(b) Knowingly aids or assists in any manner whatsoever in the doing of any of the acts, matters or things mentioned in paragraph (a) of this section; is guilty of an offence and shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment without the option of fine for a term not less than thirty days nor exceeding twelve months, with or without hard labour; and all intoxicating liquor with respect to which any conviction has been had under this section and all cases, kegs, barrels, bottles, packages, or receptacles of any kind in which the same is or was contained shall upon conviction be forfeited and shall be disposed of for medical purposes or in such other manner as the court may from time to time order.

These provisions were accepted by the House, but the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) suggested that they should form part of the Criminal Code inasmuch as under the Railway Act this provision would have to apply only to railways that come within the purview of that legislation. To meet that objection I now move this amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There was another amendment suggested by the Department of Labour which I read the other day and which was allowed to stand. That amendment, 347A, is as follows:

347a. Every one who is an agent is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding four thousand dollars and not less than five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for three years who renders a false or deceptive return to his principal with respect to the sale or other disposition of any goods, unless it be proved that there was no intent to deceive.

2. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding four thousand dollars and not less than five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for three years who, being a director, shareholder, manager, officer or employee of any person who being an agent renders a false or deceptive return to his principal with respect to the sale or other disposition of any goods knowingly makes, permits, concurs in or condones the rendering of the said false or deceptive return.

This covers the case of an agent who is charged with the sale of some property and renders a false account to his principal.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the minister think that this is extending the law?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It relates to companies. Companies may act, for example, as brokers in the sale of fruit or other commodities and if they render false accounts to the directors or managers they cannot be got at under the law as it stands.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As I recollect the law—at least, as it was at one time—anyone making any false return was guilty of an offence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They would be prosecuted under the general charge of theft.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, or they could be prosecuted for obtaining money under false pretences or by misrepresentation. I was wondering whether the effect of this would not be to narrow the code as it stands. I think the punishment is less in the present bill than it was under the Criminal Code as it stood before in respect of these questions. Under the Criminal Code there are certain cases of theft in regard to which a penalty of seven years' imprisonment may be inflicted. Would this not be a contraction of that punishment?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The officers of the department have recommended this provision. They point out that under the law as it at present stands companies cannot be got at.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This has reference to the company?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. The memorandum I have reads:

[Mr. Lapointe.]

The proposed section 347a makes it an offence for any person, including a company, to make a false return with reference to the sale or disposition of any goods. The object is to enable the conviction of a company for defrauding a customer by issuing false sales slips; a company cannot be indicted for theft, which would be the remedy in case of such practice by an individual, but if this legislation is enacted can be prosecuted and fined for making a false return to a customer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has my hon. friend ever thought at all in this connection of the matter of the desirability of limiting the present right of appeal so that we might improve the situation which has arisen, especially in some provinces?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was about to move an amendment which will restrict the appeal clearly to questions of law. The amendment is as follows:

Subsection 1 of section 1024, c. 146 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Any person convicted of any indictable offence whose conviction has been affirmed on an appeal taken under section ten hundred and thirteen may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada against the affirmance of such conviction on any question of law on which there has been dissent in the Court of Appeal:

Provided that no such appeal can be taken unless notice of appeal in writing has been served on the attorney general within fifteen (15) days after affirmance or such further time as may be allowed by the Supreme Court of Canada or a judge thereof.

It is the old section with the addition of the words, "on any question of law." The supreme court decided, a few months ago, that they have no jurisdiction on matters of fact in the Davis case of Montreal. The object of the amendment is to make it perfectly clear that this appeal applies only to questions of law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In that connection—my hon. friend will have a more intimate knowledge of the matter than I have—but from what I have seen and the cases I have noted there seems to have been a much wider extension of the practice of appeals than my hon. friend ever thought would take place when he introduced this legislation. I do not know that he introduced it; perhaps it was his predecessor. I do not believe the House ever thought for one minute that the practice of appeals would grow as it has grown. It is not a practice which is a good thing for the enforcement of law. Personally I think the old practice of the stated case gave every prisoner a proper opportunity. Under that practice he had the right to apply to the trial judge to get his stated case for the information of the other court as to misdirection, misreception of evidence, misapplication and the like, in addition to his right to appeal on absolutely technically legal points. As it is now we have a general appeal. I know that for years in the civil courts the doctrine has been more and more pronounced with respect to a court of review, or an appellate court, dealing with findings of fact for which there was evidence in support. The trial court has the opportunity of seeing the witnesses and hearing them, of getting the atmosphere which would enable it to determine whether the witnesses were really telling the truth or not. You cannot reach a decision by reading cold type nearly as well as by hearing a man, seeing him and having the opportunity of considering properly all the circumstances. Still, a method of jurisprudence has grown up to the contrary around several cases which, for some extraordinary reason, has been applied to criminal cases. I know what the opinion of the prosecutors is in Montreal. Has my hon. friend considered as to whether it would be well to make this provision go a little further and to at least restrict somewhat the present omnibus right of appeal which exists?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is much to be said in favour of the contention of my hon. friend, and I do not know whether I would not be inclined to think as he does on this question. I am afraid this House paid too great a compliment to the Senate when, two years ago, it adopted without much consideration the bill establishing the right of appeal in criminal matters which came to us from the upper chamber at the end of the session. The Senate had been investigating this matter during two sessions, as my hon. friend knows. It is really the English law on appeal which has been adopted in this clause, but it did not work with all the success which might have been desired. Indeed the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) alluded the other day to a case which caused considerable comment in his own district, and throughout the province of Alberta, last year. It was a case where a man who had been found guilty of murder and sentenced to death saw the verdict changed into one of manslaughter by a court of appeal, and the sentence changed into imprisonment for five years. In consequence of this action some feeling was aroused among the population of the district. I have nothing to say as to whether the judgment of the court of appeal, which was a majority judgment, was right or wrong, but it caused much comment in the press, and I remember having read a letter from Senator Griesbach, who had been attacked because he had supported the right of appeal in the Senate. He said he was inclined to think that the provision had not worked with as much success as he had anticipated, but it was better to preserve the right for some time longer and have a real experience as to how it worked before attempting to repeal it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not my hon. friend think the trouble that has arisen is due to ignoring this fact—that in England in a criminal appeal they do not interfere on a question of fact if any evidence whatever is produced to support it. I think if the appeal here was limited in the same way we would have no trouble.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I can assure my hon. friend this question is not dead. I am inclined to agree with him that we should try and do something which would remedy the condition complained of.

PRIVATE BILLS

CALGARY AND FERNIE RAILWAY COMPANY

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill No. 184, respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Hudson.

Mr. SHAW: I desire to make some inquiries with regard to this bill, but the hon. gentleman who is the mover is apparently not in his seat. I would ask that the bill stand.

Order stands.

SECOND READINGS

SUPPLY

SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair:

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—capital, $10,000.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister explain this vote?

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): It is used for the replacement of equipment and the purchase of small fixtures. The largest items for replacement of equipment are attended to by the Department of Public Works. This vote covers a very large number of small articles which have been broken or rendered useless. The list is extremely long, probably over a thousand articles are covered by it; ranging from sixty cents to around one hundred dollars. The largest outlay, $1,076.50, was to provide an X-ray equipment for the Christie street hospital Toronto.

Mr. MANION: What was the total used last year?

Mr. BELAND: It was $7,416.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, when the estimates of this department were before the House at a late hour some weeks ago, I was not present, and I notice that the minister made certain references to some remarks of mine when I spoke on the budget. I should like to acknowledge the courtesy with which he referred to my remarks, differing as he did so entirely from my criticism. He was also good enough to say that he had no doubt that I did not wish to mislead the House. That, Mr. Chairman, is most assuredly the case. I should like, therefore, to go a little further into the matter and describe the basis on which I built my criticism.

My criticism is that this department has outlived its usefulness, and that considerable economies could be effected were it abolished. The raison d'être for the creation of this department was to give assistance to the unfit men with the object of helping them in their return to civil life, and it does not appear to me that an examination of the expenses incurred by the department should be confused by the inclusion of expenses connected with pensions. I notice on turning to the Auditor General's reports that the amount included for this department is between $10,000,000 and $10,500,000. There are one or two sums comparatively small—where we are speaking of millions—included in that amount which for the purposes of my argument, I deduct, as the cost of the federal appeal board, $82,715, Public Service Retirement Act, $1,120, salaries and contingencies of the Board of Pension Commissioners, $97,523. After making these deductions I arrive at a total of $10,230,149. That I divide into three categories: salaries, $4,711,549; administration, which covers various payments made on behalf of the unfit men, such as care of patients, vocational expenses, operating expenses and the like, $2,793,541; and payments to the unfit men, $2,725,059.

At that point I make a further adjustment for the reasons I have given, in that I do not consider that the expenses connected with pensions should be included in this investigation. I consider it only fair that we should deduct those expenses. The minister has said that he does not know what they amount to, and that it would be an intricate piece of accountancy to ascertain their total. So I think we must make an approximation of the amount. In the year prior to the amalgamation we know that such expenses amounted to a little over a million and a quarter. I do not think it can be contended that they have increased since that date, it is more probable that they have somewhat decreased, for there have been fewer boards, less travelling, and presumably an increase of efficiency in the routine work. I suggest then, that instead of a million and a quarter dollars, it would be reasonable to make a reduction of $900,000 for those expenses. A portion of that would come under the head of salaries, another portion under the head of payments made for the men. I therefore deduct $500,000 from salaries and the balance, $400,000, from the administrative charges.

Now, the minister takes issue with me for putting all the expenditures, other than the payments to the men, into one category, for I have shown that those payments to the returned men have dropped from 56 per cent in 1920 to 29 per cent in 1924. But had I dissected these percentage figures then as I propose to do now, it would not injure my argument and I do not think it would help the minister, for it will be seen that over the course of the five years those administrative charges have remained just about constant; they varied from 23 per cent of the total in 1920 to 26 per cent in 1924. It follows then that if the payments to the men have dropped and the administrative charges have remained constant, the percentage of salaries must have increased, and they have so increased from 20 per cent in 1920 to 45 per cent in 1924.

The controversy then turns on whether it is a reasonable thing to take out the expenditures for pensions from this set of figures in order to analyse the cost to the department. I think it is, but in that the minister and I do not agree. These costs had been dealt with separately before the amalgamation, and I do not think we should becloud the issue by including them in examining into the percentage costs of the department. The pension costs can certainly not have advanced since the amalgamation, and I contend that if the government had been thrilled with a desire to economize in all directions, very considerable economies could have been effected in this department.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend does not seem to repent of the broad and, as I consider it, unwarranted statement he made on a previous occasion. He refuses to take into consideration the administration of pensions; why he should take this attitude, I do not know. The administration of pensions is a very important activity of the department, relating, as it does, to the payment of small amounts monthly to pensioners and dependents of pensioners. A close check has to be kept upon all amounts paid out and upon all the transactions in connection with the making, repealing or altering of awards, births in the family of a pensioner, remarriages of widows, and so on. My hon. friend a moment ago, in what I am pleased to consider a well meant argument, stated that the administration of pensions at this day should be easier, less complicated or less involved than it was in 1916, 1917, 1918 and 1919. Well, I beg to disagree with him. I think I would be supported by medical men generally in the contention that the further we get from the war the more difficult it becomes to diagnose a case. Claims for pension or increases in pension have been almost innumerable during the last five years, and it stands to reason that the work of the medical officer is all the more difficult as we get further away from the time when the disability was actually incurred. If my hon. friend is fair I am sure he will agree with me in this regard. We are confronted with great difficulty when it comes to determining claims for pension at this time on account of war disability. The work, therefore, is more complicated, more involved, more difficult to-day than it was at that time. My hon. friend quoted a certain figure as representing the direct handing of money from the department to the men—what he is pleased to call cash payments. I do not agree with him on the figure, in the first place. Even leaving aside the pensions, which are paid direct to the pensioner, and which amount to a good deal more than he seems to contend, has my hon. friend taken into consideration the payment of claims under the insurance scheme?

Mr. STIRLING: I have included the following in the third category: Pay and allowance, vocational loans, interest on war service gratuity, unemployment relief, employers' liability compensation, recommendations of Pensions committee, repatriation, and compensation for death or injury re flying.

Mr. BELAND: Whoever prepared that statement for my hon. friend must have done so with the idea of making a case. Why did my hon. friend's informant not include insurance payments?

Mr. STIRLING: Where is that included in the Auditor General's report?

Mr. BELAND: I do not know whether or not it is included in that report, but I know that we pay large amounts in death claims every year. I could give the figures, but I do not think we should delay longer on this subject. Now, in this connection there has been a misrepresentation of the facts. My hon. friend says that services rendered to the men cannot be considered as cash payments.

Strictly speaking we can agree upon that. But if my hon. friend was taken ill on the road in front of my house and I invited him to come in and occupy a room in my house for two months; and if I had my physician administer treatment to him, and furnished him with food during that period, would he not consider, in the absence of any cash payment, that what he had received from me was equivalent to cash?

Mr. STIRLING: Certainly I would. I would put it in the category of those payments which have remained constant during the period we are discussing.

Mr. BELAND: What is the amount under that category?

Mr. STIRLING: $2,793,541.

Mr. BELAND: Again I do not think the statement can be borne out by the facts, because the care of patients alone is almost equal to that amount.

Mr. STIRLING: In the Auditor General's report the total is $2,453,842, in which are included salaries amounting to $172,181.

Mr. BELAND: Does my hon. friend include there the amount which is represented by orthopedic appliances?

Mr. STIRLING: I do not think I can offhand say where the different items were put in. That would appear from the items in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. BELAND: I will quote the amounts paid out in the various services:

Medical treatment in departmental and cutside hospitals for men..	$4,623,221 40
Pension examinations..	206,901 74
Orthopedic appliances..	322,673 62
Transportation of pensioners, funeral expenses, workmen's compensation, etc..	358,027 38

With other minor items, this makes a total of $5,648,188.40. With all due deference to my hon. friend I contend that these services are absolutely equivalent to money paid to the men. Not a cent of it goes for administration purposes. True, the money is paid in salaries; but does my hon. friend think that because public money is paid to the postmaster in his town or city for the service of receiving and delivering mail the public does not get the benefit of it? This I think illustrates my contention. Thousands of postmasters throughout the country render a definite service to hon. gentlemen in this House as well as to other citizens of the country. But does any of the money which is paid to them in the way of salaries reach the public? Not at all. Yet the public benefits directly from that service. The principle is the same in this case. The man who is treated in hospital, who receives the attendance of a doctor paid by the state, the attendance of a nurse also paid by the state; the man who receives drugs which are necessary in his case and which are paid for with public money; the man who receives from the hospital food which is provided by the same means, is benefiting directly although he gets no money. It is all very well to say, "You have paid the money in salaries to nurses, physicians, orderlies, laundry people and power plant men, and your expenditure is therefore made up largely of such disbursements." Well, I admit that it is made up largely of salaries. But you cannot dispense with the services of those to whom these salaries are paid. Let me ask my hon. friend in all sincerity, if he were in my place would he stop any of these services? He would not.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the minister referring to items paid to the hospitals for care of patients as items which I have considered in the category of salaries?

Mr. BELAND: What is the amount paid out in salaries for administration and other purposes as given in the report?

Mr. STIRLING: The salaries amount to $4,711,000 odd.

Mr. BELAND: These amounts are paid in salaries for services rendered to the men, and without those services the work could not possibly be carried on.

Mr. STIRLING: Why does the amount of salaries go on increasing year by year in proportion to the total?

Mr. BELAND: The amount paid in salaries is not increasing; it is decreasing year by year in relation to the total paid out annually. If you paid $24,000,000 five years ago in pensions and to-day you pay $34,000,000 it is obvious that more work is entailed. Indeed, the work is a great deal more difficult now than it was at that time. And the amount paid in salaries, as well as the number of medical men employed, is being reduced.

Mr. STIRLING: I am not contending that it is not. The amounts paid in salaries have decreased but the percentage on the total has increased.

Mr. BELAND: I do not admit that for a moment. The number of employees for administrative purposes has substantially decreased. It has been painful in many instances to make the reductions as rapidly as we have done, because one must bear in mind that the great majority of the men employed in the department are returned men, many of whom, although I do not know exactly what proportion, are disabled.

Both under the late administration and under this government the number has been reduced by something like seven or eight hundred a year, and during the last thirteen months we have decreased the staff of the department by five hundred. On April 1, 1924, we had 2,922 employees and on May 1, 1925 the number was 2,422, or a difference of 500. Some of these employees are girls, but at least half of the staff consists of returned men, and it is neither a simple nor an agreeable task to dispense with their services after they have served the country in the way that our returned men have done. We have made the reductions as fast as we possibly could. I am just as much impressed with the necessity of economy as is my hon. friend, and the presence or the absence of the minister in the department represents only a matter of a few thousand dollars. My hon. friend may be in the House longer than I expect, but if he is here five years from now he will rise in his place and confess that these services are absolutely necessary, unless he wishes to contend that we should stop treating those men who require treatment.

Mr. STIRLING: I want to make it clear that this is not my intention in anything I have said.

Mr. BROWN: Has my hon. friend (Mr. Stirling) included, in that $4,000,000 that he has given, the salaries paid to nurses and doctors?

Mr. STIRLING: The largest item is $4,059,837, which appears as "salaries to staff and salaries at Ottawa."

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps the minister would give us the figures for the second category.

Mr. BELAND: I will hand the statement to Hansard.

Mr. BROWN: Have you the totals?

Mr. BELAND: I have. For the service provided under legislation and order in council—medical treatment in the inside and outside hospitals, the amount is $4,760,585.66. That does not comprise the salaries for administration. It does comprise, of course, the salaries of doctors, nurses, orderlies, those who examine the patients, and so on, but not the administration. For that I have another figure.

Mr. BROWN: Could the minister give us the salaries for administration?

[Mr. Béland.]

Mr. BELAND: The salaries for general administration amount to $1,806,358.88, and for medical administration—not medical attendance—$368,201.16. The amount for general administration expenses such as telephone, telegrams, light, heat and power, transportation and stationery is $59,941; total medical administration $428,142, or a total for administration purposes of $2,485,645.17. That is in the face of a total expenditure during 1923-24 of $51,000,000 odd. What difference would it make if, instead of placing the item for pensions in the estimates on another page, it had been placed under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment on that page of the estimates we have now under our eyes? It would not make any difference at all. Only my hon. friend would be obliged to say "Oh the amount is not $10,000,000, it is $44,000,000."

Mr. MANION: Surely the minister would not contend that $34,000,000 spent for pensions is in the same category, for example, as $34,000,000 spent by the Department of Public Works, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Railways, or any other department? Surely he would not contend that he should have anything like the proportion, or even a fraction of the proportion, of administrative costs in paying out $34,000,000 in pensions as in paying out $34,000,000 in the Department of Public Works?

Mr. BELAND: I agree with my hon. friend there. I do not think the administration charges should be as large for pensions as they would be in the case that he has cited, or as they would be in the case, for instance, of a hospital. Still the clerical work in connection with the administration of pensions is quite large.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister the figures for the clerical assistance in connection with the administration of pensions?

Mr. BELAND: No, I have not the figures separated. My hon. friend knows that the two branches were merged, and the accounts division and the audit division are the same for both.

Mr. MANION: How many employees were taken into the pensions branch?

Mr. BELAND: Eight hundred and eighty.

Mr. MANION: Those were taken from the pensions branch into the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

Mr. STIRLING: Surely the minister must agree that the expense connected with the payment of these pensions has decreased since the amalgamation?

Mr. BELAND: As far as the clerical staff is concerned I am informed it has decreased but I doubt whether in some other respects —like the medical examination of pensioners —it has really decreased or not.

Mr. STIRLING: Have not the medical boards been reduced in number in the last two or three years?

Mr. BELAND: Last year we had less. Well, I do not know exactly how many pension examinations we made a few years ago. Last year we made 40,000 such examinations. I think the number of doctors has decreased. I am not sure whether the number has decreased in the hospitals; it has decreased in the administration branch. As far as the pension examiners are concerned I am not in a position to say. Probably the number has decreased there also. The work is very difficult and very involved, and it is only by experience and by being in the position that I am to-day, that I can vouch for these statements. My hon. friends may be assured of one thing: we are not keeping one physician or one nurse that we do not require. My instructions to the officials are to keep the staff to the very lowest figure compatible with such proper discharge of the duties as the country demands. Those are the instructions and the heads of branches—the head of the medical branch and the head of the administration branch—have done all they could to reduce the staff. In very few instances have I imposed upon them the necessity of retaining someone for special meritorious reasons. They are there to testify that I have not in any way endeavoured to stop them from reducing the staff. And they have reduced it immensely; I think that has been admitted on all sides. Every one would wish that we had only 500 returned men sick and under treatment instead of three or four thousand; everyone would wish that we had less disabled returned men receiving a pension than we have. Unhappily this is a situation over which my hon. friends have no control nor have I. We have to take the situation as it is. This is a result of the war. It is deplorable that the war should have happened, but it has happened, and it has sent back to this country thousands of disabled men. We have actually 44,000 disabled pensioners, and 20,000 dependent pensioners—widows mainly—in this country as a result of the war. That entails a large expenditure. No one would like to have it reduced, if that were possible, more than myself. I find no satisfaction at all in authorizing this expenditure of money nor does the House; the only satisfaction we find is in the conscientious discharge of a public duty. I take this opportunity of saying that the department—generally speaking and in almost every respect—has been conducted above party lines. That generally speaking was true of the late administration and it has been the case with the present one. I think my hon. friends will acknowledge that I have not dismissed a great many men for political reasons in the department. Coming back to this item of capital expenditure I do not think there is any difficulty on that score. The amount spent during the year, which I said was $7,411, was only for ten months: for the complete period it is $9,000 odd.

Mr. MANION: At this late stage of the session I do not wish to occupy very much time in dealing with any question, and I shall only speak briefly on the subject under discussion. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), it appears to me, deserves the gratitude of the House, even the gratitude of the minister himself, for giving his study to these figures, for having pointed out figures which certainly look rather strange when one studies them. There is no desire on the part of the hon. member for Yale, or on the part of any member, to do other than treat the returned soldiers, the pensioners, and all the dependents of those who did not come back, with the finest type of gratitude and generosity. There is no question about that. At the same time any money which can be saved in administration and any money which can be saved in the payment of unnecessary salaries is that much less money which the people of this country generally, including the returned soldiers themselves, have to pay. In regard to the figures given by the minister, I cannot quite agree that there are $34,000,000 paid out in pensions which should be dealt with in the ordinary way, in addition to the $10,000,000 of expenditure for this department. I am now giving rather large figures, I should have said $8,500,000 paid out by this department; because certainly a large proportion of the pensions after this stage of the war would be simply repetition where you would be paying out in an ordinary routine manner pensions which are permanent. For instance, take the man who is blind, the man who has lost an arm or a leg, or any of those men with permanent injuries which are obvious— and there is quite a large proportion of them—they receive their pensions in a routine manner from year to year. The work is nothing but simply sending out cheques. So that to suggest that the spending of the $34,000,000 on pensions is in the same category as spending $34,000,000 on other lines of work would hardly be fair. I think the minister admitted to me that that was hardly on all fours. At the same time he implies that it is nearly so, and certainly it would not appear to me to be in the same category. History shows that in every country after every war new departments have been created, new staffs set up, new groups of men and women given employment, and it is difficult—I agree with the minister in that respect—to cut down the staff, and wipe out services and do away with departments. but in most countries they attempt to do it. I do not believe that in any country they ever come back after the war to the grade of expenses that existed before the war, but we should make it our endeavour, particularly with the heavy burden of taxation under which we suffer, to do our best to get back as far as we can to former conditions, because every economy that may be made is that much less money to be paid by the people generally and by the returned soldiers themselves. Without going more deeply into it, it would appear to me, looking at the figures superficially, that there is, if not too heavy, at least a very heavy proportion of the money paid out by the department in administrative expenses and salaries. I do. not say that the minister has not made an attempt to cut down some of the staff. I know that he has. Many hundreds have been laid off.

Last year I spoke to some of the men around the country in the minister's department, and they told me that in certain branches of the department there was great overstaffing. I do not know that that is true this year, because I have not discussed the matter with them, but the salaries and administrative expenses would appear to be heavy on the face of it for the amount of money paid out, setting aside the pensions. I can hardly agree with the minister when he makes the statement that there have been no appointments or dismissals for political purposes. I do not know that such a proceeding has been general; I doubt if it has been, but I know of at least one case, and I have heard of others. One man in Port Arthur who had served overseas, the president of the Conservative Association, was laid off, to be replaced by a Liberal who had not served overseas, for no reason except that he was of the wrong political colour. I know of other sections where the same conditions prevail. I believe that in the near future we must attempt—and this is not with any intention of criticizing the minister in that respect—to put this department in with another department. I think the time has nearly come when we should do away with that department and put it under the Department of National Defence. It would appear that we have enough administrative powers to carry on the department without loss to the soldiers and without loss to the country, and I repeat that the minister might well be advised by the hon. member for Yale, who brought up the subject, to make greater efforts than he has in the past to cut down the salaries here and there, and from an administrative standpoint to reduce expenses where it can be done without doing injury to the soldiers or their dependents.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I should like to say a word, in regard to the general position which this department occupies. The work of the department, as I said three years ago, in the treatment of the returned soldier, will not be curtailed. I repeat—and I believe you will find it to be correct—that the number of men to be treated, while it has fallen for two or three years after the war, will begin to ascend in number. Never before did we have a war which had such far-reaching effects upon men. As far as the modern army goes, epidemics will never occur again. Scientific methods have removed the danger of an epidemic in the modern army, and if it does occur, it must only occur through the carelessness or negligence of those in charge. If you consider the effect of the late war upon the men who took part in it, by reading the papers every week you will find a record of some veteran who has suddenly passed away; some violent or sudden death will be recorded in nearly every weekly report. These are found to be due to causes of which I believe many of the medical men in charge of the treatment of returned soldiers are not aware. I have found, from constant contact with the men who served, and following them up since, that the effects of the war have not been studied by the medical men of the day as they should be. Referring to the effect on nerves, you can hardly go round any city or town where returned men are located without observing the effect of the war upon these men, and many are treating them as lead slingers, and so on, when they are really suffering from the effects of the war. Then I find that there are a great many men suffering now from the effects of gas. Bronchitis must be very frequent amongst those who were gassed, but due to lack of experience the treatment of these cases there is no great amount of sympathy in regard to them. I know that some of the expert advisers of the department can find no relation between the pulmonary troubles so frequent among those men and the effects of gas which they suffered from, but it should not be very difficult to asscertain whether a man's suffering was due to the effects of gas. It would not be very difficult to find out whether he was really on service in the zone of battle, or if he had served in some unit which was quite removed from that zone. in the same way as, I said some two or three years ago, you have heart cases, kidney cases and tubercular cases. These must be on the increase because they will be progressive in character, and the department, instead of turning these men down as lead slingers, as is done in many cases should sympathetically and sincerely study the case of each man. I know the minister will say: Well, such is done. I cannot agree with the department that it is done, because I have personal experience with many men who are affected in this way as a result of the war.

There is another class of men, of whom the minister spoke last year, and as to whose treatment no action has been taken. That is the case of men who have aged from service. The minister knows as well as I do that there are dozens of those men who require treatment at the present time and who are not getting it. I have repeatedly requested that the government should take some action towards providing a home where these men could go for treatment. There is no use in sending them to general hospitals at the present time. The general hospital of to-day is a highly organized institution with an expert staff who will not consider that these men deserve or require that expert treatment which they should have. There are seasons of the year when this class of men will weaken, go down, and other seasons when they will, perhaps, revive and come up, and the government should provide a home where they can receive treatment as they become debilitated. These men require something in the way of particular nursing for a short time in order to bring them up again, and then they can be sent home. They are men who will never be able to do a full day's work and earn a complete livelihood, and they are not at the present time getting pension or treatment.

The great expense of this department has been brought about by unsympathetic treatment of returned men, and I am not talking now for the sake of votes or anything else from the returned men. It does not affect me whether I get that or not, but I am interested in their welfare. The government have had commission after commission. They have a pension department, a Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and now they have a Federal appeal board. I do not consider these were at all necessary, and I do not think the Federal appeal board amounts to a great deal as far as the men are concerned.

The returned men are not getting the benefit of government work. The Civil Service Commission, I think, are playing fair with returned men, but while government work is being carried on in different places, the returned men are not getting a fair deal in regard to it. We should remember there are many men affected by the war who cannot do a full day's work, and when government work is being carried on, these men should have the first chance.

As regards further expense, the department has made some curtailments, but it should keep in mind that where positions are available, returned men should get advantage of them. If you take up the departments one by one, in some cases a fairly good distribution has been made, but I think the returned men can get a little better treatment than they are getting. In 1923, in the Accounts branch there were 72 employees, 33 of whom were women. To-day there are 51 of whom 23 are women. In the Central Registry, in 1923, there were 138 employees, of whom 61 were women, and in 1924, there were 104 employees, of whom 38 were women, two of these being married women. There are a number of these cases where the minister might explain why married women are being retained. It may be that they are widows or are selected for some particular reason, but there are a number of married women in the different branches. In the pay branch, pension division, in 1923, there were 34 employees, of whom 14 were women. Last year there were 41 employees of whom 10 were women. In the records branch, in 1923, there were 81 employees of whom 44 were women, and in 1924, there were 60 employees, of whom 20 were women, two of them being married women, and so on.

Last year I made a reference—and I think it has brought about some improvement—to the fact that a very frequent occurrence in all branches was that where employees were taken off one branch they were added to another. As a result, when reductions were made through all these branches, the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment was busy building up a very large imperial pay pension department. I pointed out that where we were paying some $34,000,000 in Canadian pensions, about 62 employees were retained, but when it came to the imperial pension pay department, paying out $7,000,- 000, some 122 people were employed. That has been reduced now to 95, which I still think is a little too large. I cannot understand why 95 employees are necessary for paying out,—I think, the amount has now been increased to $10,000,000. Of these 95 employees 22 are women. As a result of the decrease in staff of these branches, we are now building up a very large Federal appeal department, the number of the employees in that department having increased to fifty. It is interesting to draw the attention of the committee to these several departments, and I think a reduction can be made. I am sympathetic with the minister in his endeavour to lead the committee and the country to believe that this department is still a very necessary one. A great work lies before the department, and I think it should undertake a general review of the whole pension field, because the men point out that to-day certain ones are receiving pensions which they never really earned, while others who were affected by active service have to fight every inch for any compensation they may receive. That is something which I think should be reviewed by medical men of the very highest professional standing in this country. I think the minister is effecting a reduction in the staff, but I am pointing out to him that those who disappear off the payroll of one department will be found on the payroll of another department the following year, and this has been complained of frequently this session.

Mr. BELAND: I thank my hon. friends from Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) and Kingston (Mr. Ross), not for their criticism that the department is not perhaps administered as it should be, but for their constructive suggestions. Last year my hon. friend from Kingston made certain suggestions which we have endeavoured to carry out. As regards the decrease in the staff, it is true the Federal appeal board was created some two years ago, and this entailed the appointment of additional employees, but the reduction of five hundred which has been effected during the past twelve or thirteen months takes in also the staff of that board. You cannot expect the process of reduction to go along faster than that. It does not make any difference whether there is a minister or not, the department or the branch, in other words, the service, will remain. Perhaps it is not absolutely necessary that a minister should be directly in charge of it, but some minister will have to have the branch under his charge and the service will have to be maintained. It is perhaps in order that I should say that I do not entirely share my hon. friend's view that the medical men of our service do not stand at the very head of their profession throughout Canada. In all our main cities we have in our service such men.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister permit me to intervene? I agree with him that he has throughout the country men of the highest professional standing, but their reports are reviewed by men of lesser experience and not so prominent in their profession.

Mr. BELAND: I see my hon. friend's point. The Board of Pension Commissioners have at their disposal nine medical advisers, all men of great ability, but of course I do not know whether they stand as high in their profession as some of the medical men in Toronto, Montreal and other cities who make reports to them. But they were in the department when I took charge, and if an appointment had to be made, no minister would undertake to refuse to appoint the medical man whom the board recommended. The board is a judicial body and entitled to a certain amount of authority in the discharge of its duties. It may be that at times reports that are sent in by medical men of the highest professional standing in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, to headquarters, are turned down; undoubtedly in some instances this has happened, but wherever I have tried to ascertain whether this action could be laid at the door of medical officials of the board of lesser knowledge, I have failed to find that such was the case. After all, it is a matter of appreciation of the facts. In some cases, like my hon. friend from Kingston, I have thought that the reports justified the granting of pensions, and had I the same authority as the Minister of Pensions in England, I would have awarded pensions on the strength of those reports. But my judgment is not infallible, and probably the board was right. It must be remembered that out of a thousand cases you will hear a lot from one dissatisfied claimant, but you will never hear a word from the 999 satisfied pensioners. They do not complain. Why should they? My impression is that if a hundred more pensions had been awarded during the past ten years, you would not have heard any complaints. That is a small number out of the 64,000 pensions awarded, but I suppose nobody would undertake to say that those hundred cases were absolutely entitled to pensions. The board may have made some mistakes; I think they are ready to admit that they have; but who does not make mistakes? I am not here to defend the board; they are absolutely independent of me. I would never undertake to recommend to them the awarding of a pension, for it is beyond my function; nor have I ever asked them to cancel a pension, for it is not my duty. I have in thousands of instances brought to their attention cases and asked them to reconsider the circumstances, but without making the slightest intimation to them as to what their decision should be. Let me add that I accept with a good grace all the recommendations that have been made by my predecessor and the hon. member for Kingston, and will give them my very careful consideration.

Mr. SHEARD: Has the department any information regarding two suicides which took place among the returned men in the Westminster hospital, London, Ontario? I am not prepared to say that these cases ever did occur, but I am told that one man, Garnet Ellis, who was formerly an engineer in the gaol farm, Toronto, cut his throat, as did another man, although they were both under observation at the time. Has the minister any knowledge of these cases, or has he heard anything about them?

Mr. BELAND: Personally I have never heard of any such case in the Westminster hospital, which is the main mental hospital of the department, located at London, Ontario. I am informed by the deputy minister that he does not know of any such case. It may have been an accident of which the report was somewhat exaggerated. Of course it is possible that such cases would occur among the mentally deficient.

Mr. MANION: I had a letter some time ago from a patient in which it was stated that tubercular patients—I think it was in the Westminster hospital—were kept in the same section as drug addicts. Is there any truth in that?

Mr. BELAND: There would be drug addicts among the mental cases in Westminster hospital, but unless they were tuberculous I do not think they would be kept in that section.

Mr. MANION: He claimed that in the tubercular ward there were some drug addicts who were not tubercular and who were a nuisance to tubercular patients; moreover, the tubercular patients would naturally be a danger to the drug addicts. If the statement is true, the condition should be corrected. I know nothing whatever of it; I simply put it before the minister for what it is worth.

Mr. BELAND: I shall make inquiry.

Mr. MANION: On May 6th, I asked the minister the following questions:

1. Have any employees of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment been given permanent status by the minister without reference to the Civil Service Commission?

2. If so, what are the names and salaries of such appointees?

3. Under what authority was such permanent status given?

In reply the minister gave a list of some twenty-four officers who had been made permanent, at salaries ranging from $4,000 to $5,000 a year. He stated also:

The Deputy Minister of Justice has advised that the minister is competent to make such appointments under para. (b) of sub-section 2, of section 5, of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act.

And so on. Some of these are doctors and some are not. I do not know these twenty-four men, but why should they be put on the permanent list at this stage? Moreover, the salary would appear to be higher than it should be. A man on temporary work would naturally receive more than a man whose position is permanent, but my understanding is that these men have been put on the permanent staff at the same pay that they were receiving under temporary employment. Why was that change made?

Mr. BELAND: These men are permanent not in the ordinary sense of the word but simply for the purposes of the Superannuation Act. So far as the salary is concerned, they were classified according to the rules adopted by the Civil Service Commission. In the case of those whose positions were likely to last over ten years, for instance, we found that they would be precluded from enjoying the benefits of the Superannuation Act owing to the fact that their employment was of a temporary character, and the Department of Justice gave the opinion that if the minister declared these positions permanent the officers in question could be considered by the Department of Finance as eligible to come under the Superannuation Act.

Mr. MANION: These men could be dropped from the service at any time, by my hon. friend or any other minister, if necessary?

Mr. BELAND: Yes, at any time.

Mr. MANION: Is there any likelihood of the minister making another large group of officials permanent in the near future?

Mr. BELAND: I asked the officials of the department to make a very careful review of the staff, but as to the exact number who may come under that category I cannot say. Pensions will run over forty years, and there will be employees in the department forty years from now. Others will not be there that long; some will be employed ten, fifteen or twenty years. Some have already been there seven or eight years. It would seem to be unfair to deny them the opportunity of enjoying the provisions of the Superannuation Act.

Mr. MANION: The matter had been drawn to my attention and I was wondering how it could be done. Personally I did not think the minister had any right to do that; however, he has the authority of the Justice department and of course I do not wish to differ from that; they know much better than I do. But at this stage it would seem that we should rather be trying to undo some positions than to make more permanent positions. I do not say this in any spirit of criticism. So far as my remarks to-night on this or any other subject are concerned I am not in any way attacking my good friend the deputy minister of the department, a gentleman with whom I have had the pleasantest relations and for whom I have the utmost respect. But I am speaking entirely from the standpoint of economy, and it seems strange that these men should be made permanent at this time. It might be quite a lever in the hands of a minister. Of course it would not be in the hands of my hon. friend, but it would be in the hands of a minister who is not so conscientious as he is; it would give him an opportunity to make a great many men permanent just prior to an election. I should not think for a moment that the present minister would consider such a thing. But the life of the present minister is not as permanent as the jobs of some of these men who are being made so, and I would suggest to him that he defer the changing of status of these men from temporary to permanent until after the next election and let some of the rest of us attend to that for him.

Item agreed to.

Care of patients, $2,350,000.

Mr. BELAND: There are at present nine departmental institutions operated by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-etsablishment. They are:

Hospitals Operated by D.S.C.R. January 1st, 1925

Unit	Name	Location	Type of Institution
"A"	Ste. Anne's hospital.	Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Que.	Mental, T.B. and general treatment Hospital.
"B"	Camphill hospital.	Halifax, N.S.	General treatment hospital.
	Lancaster hospital.	St. John, N.B.	General treatment hospital.
"D"	Christie street hospital.	Toronto, Ont.	General treatment hospital.
"F"	Westminster hospital.	London, Ont.	Mental hospital.
"G"	Deer Lodge hospital.	Winnipeg, Man.	General treatment hospital.
"I"	Colonel Belcher hospital.	Calgary, Alta.	General treatment hospital.
	Central Alberta San.	Robertson, Alta.	T.B. Sanatorium.
"J"	Shaughnessy hospital.	Vancouver, B.C.	General treatment hospital.

These are the hospitals which are under our direct administration, and the number has been reduced by two during the year. Two sanatoria were also transferred from the department to the proprietors, one in Kingston and the other in Nova Scotia, which was handed over to the province. As to the number of patients, on January 1, 1924 there were 3,744 and on January 1, 1925 there were 3,704, or a reduction of only forty during the year. This reduction may strike hon. members as being rather small, but I can assure the committee that no man is being treated who does not deserve treatment. This is the total number of patients in the care of the department at the present time, but it does not include the care of men who come for clinical treatment at the departmental clinics in the different units, the number of whom runs into hundreds of thousands in one year. I might make the following classification of these patients:

Class of Patients—	February 21, 1925
Inpatients on pay and allowances..	3,042
General treatment..	1,560
Tubercular..	761
Mental..	721
Outpatients on pay allowances..	79
General treatment..	60
Tubercular..	13
Mental..	6
Total patients on pay and allowances.. ..	3,121
Inpatients not on pay and allowances..	583
General treatment..	233
Tubercular..	58
Mental..	292
Total soldier patients..	3,704
Total civilian patients..	128
Grand total patient strength..	3,832
Number of clinical treatments..	162,989
Weekly average clinical treatments..	2,859

Outside of the departmental institutions there are a large number of patients in hospitals with which we have an arrangement for accommodation.

Mr. HANSON: Where are the tubercular patients in New Brunswick being treated now? Have you given up the sanatorium at River Glade?

Mr. BELAND: River Glade is no longer under the department. I have mentioned only those institutions which are administered by the department directly. In River Glade we have an arrangement with the authorities for the care of patients there.

Mr. HANSON: Are any patients kept in the East St. John Tubercular hospital?

Mr. BELAND: Yes, there are fourteen in one institution and twenty-seven in the other.

Mr. LADNER: The minister referred to pay and allowance, but I see that pay and allowance is included in the general item further down the list. What would be the difference?

Mr. BELAND: Those who are in the hospital for observation and special mental classification do not receive any pay and allowance.

Mr. LADNER: There is a decrease in the item this year of $250,000. Is that in the nature of a reduction in the annual expenditure, or is any capital involved in it?

Mr. BELAND: There is no capital involved in it. It comprises mainly food, fuel, light, power, water rates, medical and surgical supplies, dental equipment, laundry, maintenance of furniture and equipment, hospital and janitor supplies, patients' clothing and comforts, taxes and insurance, freight and express and other charges, and so on. There is a general reduction in food. There is a general reduction in the items I have mentioned, up to the total my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. LADNER: The reduction in food will be only such a reduction as would correspond to the consumption by forty patients.

Mr. BELAND: The cost per patient per day has decreased somewhat. Perhaps it is due to the lower cost of food or to closer supervision and better administration. There certainly is a slight reduction, and there has been year after year, in the cost of food. Then there has been a reduction in outside hospitals where we have a number of patients. The statement includes equally the transportation of patients and pensioners who are called in for examination. When a soldier writes to the department and complains of a war ailment if we have no man in the vicinity, he may be called to the nearest unit and there examined, in which case his transportation charges are defrayed by the department. It also comprises the expenses of escorts, in case a man cannot travel alone, and the burial of patients.

Mr. LADNER: How many tubercular patients are there in British Columbia?

Mr. BELAND: I do not think I am in a position to give the exact number. I am satisfied, however, that a great many tubercular patients who are not in institutions have moved out to British Columbia on account of the better climatic conditions there.

Mr. LADNER: How many institutions are there?

Mr. BELAND: We have only one institution for tubercular patients, and that is at Tranquille, Kamloops, where there are thirty-four patients. We have also under observation a certain number of patients in Shaughnessy hospital.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In connection with the care of patients there are a number of matters I should like to draw to the minister's attention. Earlier in the session I placed a motion on the order paper in regard to the fines imposed on patients in the hospitals of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. Since then some action has been taken in the matter, and the minister has restricted in some way the very frequent fining of patients. I should like to know what action has been taken in this regard? My point is that those who are not directly under the department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment should not have the right of imposing fines upon patients without trial.

Mr. BELAND: Of course disciplinary methods have been adopted in all hospitals. In some cases my hon. friend is of the opinion those measures have been too severely applied. The motion my hon. friend placed on the order paper had reference to these disciplinary measures, and in some instances we have thought that in order to avoid complaints on this account the superintendent of the hospital should not apply such measures without referring the case to the unit office; that in the case of the Kingston hospital, for example, the superintendent should not apply disciplinary measures without referring them for judgment to Ottawa where the head of the unit is established.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want to draw the minister's attention to the fact that in some cases there was a regular trial, but in other units there was no trial whatever: the man was simply brought up before the superintendent or officer in charge and told "You are fined a dollar" or "You are fined a day's pay," and this, that and the other. In such cases the man had no right of appeal whatever. In the army a trial of the fairest character is granted. The accused has the right to say whether his commanding officer shall try him, or whether he shall by tried by court-martial. In any case he has the choice of someone to defend him and the evidence is formally taken. In many of the cases to which I am alluding there has been no trial whatever. In some instances an old veteran has been fined a day's pay, or fined an amount of something over $3, for breaking a clinical thermometer which is never charged up in the general hospital. In other cases a man has been fined $2 or $3 for being twenty minutes late or staying out at night, without being given any trial or the opportunity of defending himself. I think it only needs to bring the matter to the minister's attention to insure that in future such fines will not be imposed on patients without a trial being granted, the evidence recorded in writing and the accused given some chance of defending himself. I know of a tubercular case being fined a day's pay simply because he used good judgment, and instead of travelling during the night stayed over and came on next day. Any sensible person would have said that was only common sense. In another case a man who lived out in Saskatchewan took his leave by going out on a farm, and while he was there on this leave a heavy rain came up which prevented him from returning the next day. He was immediately called up and fined a day's pay without being able to present any defence whatever. Later on it was found that there were legitimate reasons for his action, but no effort was made to refund the fine or to have the punishment wiped from the records. When these cases come up for future treatment and the records are referred to it will be said "You have been twenty minutes late", or "You have been out over night" or "You are a bad and incorrigible case and we cannot consider you any further," or "You have been drunk once" and so on. The record will be there and although the man may have suffered an injustice it has never been looked into. These men were never angels on active service, some of them were accustomed to get drunk occasionally, but we found they were very often the best soldiers and the record of their services at the front will show this. I hope that as a result of drawing the minister's attention to these cases he will see that whenever a fine is imposed in these institutions the man shall be given a fair trial and be afforded an opportunity of making his defence.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. MANION: Will the minister give the committee some figures as to the number of patients who are being treated for tuberculosis and the cost of treating them throughout Canada.

Mr. BELAND: I will give the number of tubercular patients on pay and allowances during the period from 1919 to 1925 inclusive:

1919	1,486
1920	1,096
1921	1,054

On the first of January, 1924, we had 859 and on the 21st February, 1925, we had 761. That is the number of patients on full pay and allowances. We had thirteen out-stations and 58 patients not on pay and allowances on probation, making a total of 800 odd.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister the record in the same way by years of the number of deaths?

Mr. MANION: I would like to get the total figure, not only for the pay and allowances, cost and upkeep and so forth, but the whole cost to the country of these men.

Mr. BELAND: I am afraid I will not be in a position to give it, but I can give some information which will enable my hon. friend to make out the figure for himself very easily. I will take for instance the central Alberta sanatorium, the cost per patient was extremely low, being $2.90, but I must say that in other institutions we paid a good deal more. For instance, in the Tranquille sanatorium we paid $3.50 per day. In the Fort Qu'Appelle sanatorium we paid $3.32 per day, and the King Edward sanatorium at Winnipeg, $3.00. Then in the Ninette sanatorium in Manitoba we paid $2.84. In the Byron sanatorium near London, Ontario, the cost was $3.03 per day. In the Calydor at Gravenhurst, which is an expensive place, we paid $4.59. Those were patients under the supervision of Dr. Parfitt, outstanding specialist in cases of tuberculosis. In the Mountain sanatorium near Hamilton, we paid $3.07. In the Jordon sanatorium, New Brunswick, we paid $3.20, and in the St. John county sanatorium we paid $2.66. At the Kentville sanatorium in Nova Scotia we paid $2.55. I have not the average, but it is about $3.10 per day for tubercular patients. Regarding deaths, I think I have some information which is somewhat interesting. During the year 1924, for instance, we had 170 deaths amongst tubercular patients. In the year 1924 we admitted to hospitals in the department or outside the department, for treatment for tuberculosis, 156. We discharged 1,284. There were some transfers.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): You admitted 1,256.

Mr. BELAND: We discharged 1,284 during that year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And 170 died?

Mr. BELAND: Yes. We were left on the 31st December, 1924, with 793. The figures I have here are of a somewhat later date. The average strength in 1924 of tubercular patients was 839 per month.

10 p.m.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister the figures of the number in each of those different sanatoria where they are being treated?

Mr. BELAND: I think I have the information here. It is as follows:

	Patients
Kentville	67
East St. John	14
River Glade, N.B.	27
Hamilton	63
Gravenhurst	17
London	117
Ninette	40
Winnipeg	4
Fort Qu'Appelle	45
Tranquille	34
Total	428

Mr. MANION: What was the average cost of treating the ordinary patient in the various hospitals?

Mr. BELAND: The average cost of all the patients was $2.94 per head.

Mr. MANION: Does that include tubercular patients?

Mr. BELAND: It does in our own hospitals:

Ste. Anne's	$2 58
Camp Hill	2 95
Lancaster	3 29
Christie st.	3 69
Westminster	2 46
Deer Lodge	2 43
Central Alberta	2 90
Col. Belcher	3 86
Shaughnessy	3 48

Average cost per patient per day, $2.94.
Total patient days for six months 310,681.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the figures disclose an interesting point, because it is well known that the death rate for tuberculosis is falling generally. If the figures are correct there is a mortality rate of 13 per cent among returned men, and I think that should appeal for pretty free and sympathetic treatment of returned men. There is no doubt this is due to reduced vitality, the effects of the war. Does the minister still follow what is a very good policy, in the case of men being dissatisfied during treatment for tuberculosis of having them transferred to other points for treatment or to other institutions? The department was very lenient and very sympathetic in that way. There is no disease which requires a quiet mind and a satisfied condition and contentment, if the patient is to benefit by it, more than tuberculosis, and although the men may become what you may call a nuisance, and so on, yet I think the department should do everything in their power to produce a contented mind in the treatment of this disease, and if a man is dissatisfied in one institution there should be no hesitation in having him removed to another. I consider this is one place where they might disregard the question of economy for the benefit of the returned men.

Mr. BELAND: That is our policy. We have always regard for economy, but when we think a patient may benefit by a change, we do not hesitate to make a change.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What means has the department of knowing when a man is discontented?

Mr. BELAND: We have the report of the superintendent and the report of the man himself. I am in receipt of many letters in this connection.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the department still the practice of inspection of hospitals by some official?

Mr. BELAND: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who are the inspectors at the present time?

Mr. BELAND: We have the regular inspector, that is Dr. McCombe, and, of course, the director of medical services himself. At the present time he is on a tour of inspection of hospitals under his direction.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister in mind at all that, perhaps, he would get a better result if now and again he would call in an outsider and ask him to visit these institutions in order to see that the men were getting fair treatment and were satisfied?

Mr. BELAND: Dr. McCombe is a sort of outsider. Of course, any man that we may ask to make an inspection will have to be paid by the department. I do not think Dr. McCombe, prior to being employed for this special work, was employed by the department. He is a part time man, and he goes two or three times a year over all the hospitals, and makes reports upon conditions prevailing as regards, not only the patients, their treatment, behaviour and mental contentment, but the medical staff and the nursing staff.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have great confidence in Dr. McCombe, but I did not know he was regularly visiting these hospitals now.

Mr. BELAND: Yes. He visits the hospitals about twice a year. I have regular reports from him.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does he make it a point to see each patient in the institution?

Mr. BELAND: I will not say definitely whether he sees every patient individually, but I am sure he inspects all the wards.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would like to see the inspection carried on differently. The inspector should go into an institution, and without being accompanied by any of the staff, he should go around amongst the patients, take up their complaints and see that they are forwarded to the department, because sometimes the officials of an institution have a little bit of awe surrounding them which will keep patients from making complaints.

Item agreed to.

Vocational expense, $5,000.

Mr. BELAND: The number of vocational students is very much reduced now. It is down to 84.

Mr. MANION: How much was spent last year?

Mr. BELAND: For the ten months prior to the 31st January, $3,628.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister a vocational department at Kingston?

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the term used to describe the work that is carried on by the department?

Mr. BELAND: Vetcraft—a sheltered employment workshop which we have in different cities.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where do they work in Kingston?

Mr. BELAND: I have no information.

[Mr. Béland.]

Mr. ROSS: The only work the department provides there is in the post office. I do not think there is any shop.

Mr. BELAND: We have no shop there, but a few that are employed outside.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This is the kind of employment they get. Men who cannot work are allowed so much a month; then they are sent out on different jobs, and whatever they earn is deducted from their allowance. I know of a diabetic case, a poor fellow who can hardly drag his two legs around, who is sent out on collections covering the whole city, and the few cents he earns are deducted from his allowance. That is what is known as the restoration of vetcraft. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction in that respect. If a man gets a few pills, he has to report every day no matter what condition he is in.

Insurance and training	75,000
Hospitals and clinics	1,750,000

Mr. MANION: Would the minister give us an explanation of this item?

Mr. BELAND: The total administrative and clerical staff is 1,034, distributed as follows:

Head office; four administrative officers, seven chief clerks, eight head clerks, eleven principal clerks, forty-six senior clerks, 175 clerk stenographers, 135 junior clerks, nine messengers.

A unit: One administrative officer over $3,600, one chief clerk, two head clerks, eight principal clerks, sixteen senior clerks, thirty-five clerk stenographers, seven junior clerks, two messengers.

B and K units:

That is the Maritime provinces.

One administrative officer, no chief clerk, four head clerks, six principal clerks, eighteen senior clerks, twenty-three clerk stenographers, fourteen junior clerks, two messengers.

C unit:

That is Ottawa outside of headquarters.

No administrative officer over $3,600, one head clerk, three principal clerks, eleven senior clerks, thirteen clerk stenographers, ten junior clerks, three messengers.

D unit, Toronto: Two administrative officers over $3,600, one chief clerk, eight head clerks, twelve principal clerks, thirty-eight senior clerks, 106 clerk stenographers, twenty-five junior clerks, two messengers.

F unit, London:

Now a sub-unit.

No administrative officer, no chief clerk, one head clerk, three principal clerks, seven senior clerks, seventeen clerk stenographers, twenty-four junior clerks, one messenger.

G unit, Winnipeg: one administrative officer over $3,600, one chief clerk, two head clerks, three principal clerks, seven senior clerks, twenty-three clerk stenographers, nine junior clerks, two messengers.

H unit, Regina: no administrative officer over $3,600, one chief clerk, no head clerk, two principal clerks, four senior clerks, fourteen clerk stenographers, four junior clerks, four messengers.

I unit, Calgary: one administrative officer over $3,600, no chief clerk, two head clerks, four principal clerks, sixteen senior clerks, twenty clerk stenographers, eight junior clerks, two messengers.

J unit, Vancouver: one administrative officer over $3,600, no chief clerk, three head clerks, five principal clerks, sixteen senior clerks, thirty clerk stenographers, eleven junior clerks, two messengers.

M unit, London, England: one administrative officer, no chief clerk, two head clerks, one principal clerk, no senior clerk, five clerk stenographers, two junior clerks, two messengers.

That is only the administrative and clerical staff. Then there is the professional and technical staff.

Mr. MANION: That is sufficient.

Mr. BELAND: There are 2,317 temporary and 176 permanent employees, making a total of 2,493 as of February 20, 1925. This total has since been reduced, and is now 2,422.

Mr. MacLAREN: Would the minister inform the committee whether he is further considering the establishment of soldiers' homes rather than continuing the present system of hospitals? I suppose there must be now a very considerable number of patients that do not require active treatment, men who may return to the hospital several times each year. I think it is well worthy of consideration whether the time has not arrived for the establishment of homes to replace some of the military hospitals. I would presume that in this case the expenses of administration and nursing would be considerably reduced.

Mr. BELAND: Yes, this matter has engaged the attention of the department for the last two years. As a matter of fact the parliamentary committee recommended that the establishment of soldiers' homes should engage our attention to provide for those soldiers for whom treatment cannot be of any further benefit, as my hon. friend has said. It is difficult to say what the exact number of these men would be, but in order to meet the situation we have thought we should reserve in some of the hospitals a ward to provide them as an asylum. The department would house, feed and clothe the men, and in most cases they would make their own bed and in other ways attend to themselves. Usually their ward disability is small, but other disabilities prevent them from taking up work of any kind. With that in view, we have adopted an order in council, a copy of which I shall be glad to send to my hon. friend at any time, but he can find it on page 46 of the departmental report. It sets out the conditions under which these patients may avail themselves of this opportunity. So far, I am informed by the director of medical services, we have only seven patients who have been transferred from active treatment to another ward where they do not receive pay and allowances. We started this system two months ago and we are making the selection very carefully. The director of medical services has instructions to review all the hospitals and try to segregate these cases. In the ordinary course these men should be discharged from hospital, but occasionally it is almost impossible to do so, for it would mean putting them on the street. We offer them the option of remaining in the hospital without pay and allowances, they receiving the pensions that the board awards to them. If the pension is large enough we retain a certain amount for their maintenance. I fancy this scheme will be a great relief to such men, for their families are relieved of the obligation of maintaining them, and having become accustomed to the hospital the men find themselves more or less at home. Undoubtedly they will in large numbers avail themselves of this opportunity, and I think the saving in expense will be considerable, as my hon. friend has pointed out.

Mr. MacLAREN: Are there instances now where the work is being carried on by the civil hospitals rather than by the special military hospitals?

Mr. BELAND: We have patients in those institutions. In some cases it is more convenient for the department to treat them in some general hospital, as for instance in the Royal Victoria hospital at Montreal.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does your inspector of medical services also inspect these cases in the general hospitals?

Mr. BELAND: Not unless complaints are made as to the treatment, or there is other special reason for doing so.

Mr. EVANS: It seems to me that the examinations of the men should be made on more sympathetic lines. I do not blame the doctors at all, but I think the examinations should not be carried out on such hard and fast technical lines. I have in mind the case of a man who is trying to make his living as a letter carrier. He has practically lost all feeling in his feet and sometimes has to lay off altogether, yet he cannot receive a pension. Another man who was in fairly good health for a while after discharge died last year and it is plain to everyone that his death resulted from his war experience, yet his wife and two little ones are left without support. In another case a man had to have his leg off nearly two years ago and he has never received any help; I think even his hospital bill is still charged up against him. It may be said that this man brought on the disability through his own recklessness, but even at that, these fellows faced death in the trenches and I do not think we should leave them without means of making a living. These cases should be more sympathetically dealt with.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister give us a short statement with regard to the insurance—how many are insured, what amount is carried, and so on?

Mr. BELAND: With regard to the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Evans) I may say that the department endeavours to take a sympathetic attitude towards cases which come to their attention. The medical examination is generally very carefully made. I do not say in some instances there is not ground for complaint; it is only human nature that some doctors, through pressure of business or otherwise, do not give to a particular case the attention it should have received. If any such cases are brought to my attention I take the necessary steps to rectify them, and if my hon. friend will take these cases up with me I will try to satisfy him. As to the inquiry of my hon. friend (Mr. Manion), up to December 31, 1924, there were 990 claims under the insurance scheme, the amount involved being $2,940,500. Of the 990 there were settled by cash or annuity up to December, 1923, 498, and from January to December, 1924, 183, a total of 681, leaving a balance of 236. Of that number 158 were cancelled up to December, 1923, under section 10 of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, which provides that if the beneficiary be in receipt of pension, only the larger amount shall be paid. Last year 78 more were cancelled for the same reason, making a total of 236. Claims pending settlement on December 31, 1924, numbered 73. Total number of policies in force on January 1, 1925, 27,666, involving a liability of $61,404,500. We have a premium income which for the year ended December 31, 1924, amounted to $1,742,235. We had a balance in the treasury as at December 31, 1923, of $1,696,656 making a total in the treasury on December 31, 1924, of $3,438,892.48. During 1924 the expenditure was $545,045.04, so that on January 1, 1925, there remained a balance of $2,893,847.44. This department so far has been self-sustaining and will be for a number of years, but as the expectation of life diminishes more claims will have to be paid, and it is not in my power to say what will be the outcome. It is possible that in the future the government will have to lay out some money in this connection.

Item agreed to.

Pay and allowances—treatment, $1,750,000; training, $60,000.

Mr. BELAND: This amount is paid in cash to the men under treatment or under training. There will be no difficulty over it, because it goes entirely to them. The pay and allowances are regulated by an order in council passed many years ago. There is so much per day for the man and pay and allowance to his dependents if there are any. There is a decrease in the item of $290,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There are a few men whose cases are very sad. They are receiving compassionate treatment in the hospitals and their position is most critical, as they have no money and are altogether without any means of securing assistance. I know of one man, who has no relations whatever, whose only means of getting even enough money to have his hair cut is fortune-telling. Could not the department extend a little better treatment to these men who to-day are left to the care of the Red Cross and other charitable institutions? Two or three men that I know of are absolutely without any means.

Mr. BELAND: They are receiving the best consideration. My hon. friend says he has two or three cases in mind; I have more than that. I have received a number of communications in regard to men who are apparently not entitled to treatment by the department and who claim that at least they should be treated without pay and allowance. In the case of many of these men we attempt if possible to relate their disability or disease to war service, and in the meantime they are being treated without pay and allowance.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In many cases the condition of these men is, I fancy, due to a difference of opinion among the medical men, one attributing their disability to war service and another differing from this view. I have always understood that wherever there was a doubt the department gave the returned man the benefit of it; and as I say, the condition of some of these men is most pitiful.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I desire to direct the attention of the committee to a state of affairs which, if it is as disclosed by the communications I have received, is one that requires the immediate consideration of the government. Here is a letter I have received from Edmonton:

Enclosed you will find a resolution as passed by the Edmonton branch of the Amputation Association of the Great War. For some time past the association has been urging on the Dominion government the necessity of adopting an artificial leg of much lighter make than the one now in use. And I understand the government have gone as far as to enter into negotiations with DeSouttars of London who manufacture aluminium limbs, but decided the expense would be too great, and they are willing to try a limb of metal in part which is as yet only in the experimental stage, and are not in a position to tell what the expense may be before proving satisfactory, if ever.

At the present time men are still wearing the same old wooden (willow) legs as supplied some eight or nine years ago. I understand the British, South African, Australian and New Zealand governments have all adopted the DeSouttarr legs and are supplying amputation cases with same. The limbs as supplied by the government weigh from seven to nine pounds, while the metal legs weigh from two and one-half to three pounds, complete.

There is a member of our association here who was fortunate in having a DeSouttar leg presented him in 1916 and was wise enough to purchase another privately before leaving London, and consequently has not cost the government one cent for attention or repairs, and so forth.

My private opinion is that if all amputation cases were supplied with these metal limbs the majority of us would never require a renewal during our lives, while up to the present time we have to make frequent visits to the factories for renewals, repairs, and so forth, which means loss of time, to some, with cost of transportation, and so on.

The resolution of the Edmonton branch of the Amputation Association is as follows:

Resolution on Light Metal Artificial Limbs

The satisfaction expressed by the few who have privately equipped themselves with the light metal limb is beyond doubt.

It is felt that the only authority on this subject is the one who has to wear an artificial limb, and we have members in our association who have been wearing the De Souttar Bros. manufactured limb for the last seven years. They find same entirely satisfactory after first trying out the heavy cumbersome leg, which is at the present time supplied to amputation cases throughout Canada.

In emphasizing the absolute necessity of light artificial limbs it is urged that the following points be considered.

1. Where a leg is amputated above the knee, in most cases a short stump of the thigh is left. The muscular power of this stump is strictly limited. When an artificial leg is supplied it is done so in extention to the stump, and consequently has considerable leverage over it, that is to say, the momentum and inertia of the mass of the appliance have a power over the stump which increases as the mass becomes further away. The foot, therefore, has the greatest leverage. Owing to this, any attachment to the stump which possesses weight is a burden.

2. Another most important factor with a light metal limb, is the abolition of the harness and control with which the present issue of heavy limb is equipped. The only attachment to the light metal limb is one shoulder strap and one pelvic band, the latter performing as near as possible all the movements that the natural hip and thigh performs

These are facts we wish to place before the Canadian government and we feel that, in order to preserve the physical condition and attain the maximum exercise of which we have been deprived and which is very essential if we are not to be a greater expense to the government, we feel that our plea is worthy of serious consideration.

Be it therefore resolved by the members of the Edmonton branch of the Amputation Association of Canada, that the government of Canada be requested to supply all amputation cases in Canada with light metal artificial limbs manufactured by De Souttar Bros. of London, England, or, any other manufacture of equal quality.

That is a very plain statement and it must appeal to every one of us. These men who went into the Canadian Expeditionary Force did not stop to count the cost, and now that there has been perfected an artificial limb that gives entire satisfaction, whereas the limbs now supplied are cumbersome and a positive burden to the men who are forced to wear them, I think the government should take steps to equip the men with this improved "limb." This is one instance in which the government, no matter how much they may be inclined to economize, should not stop to count the cost. The whole number of amputation cases in Canada cannot be so large after all, and even if it is I still think that the very best artificial limbs that can be found on the market should be supplied these men.

Mr. BELAND: I listened with interest to the resolution quoted by the hon. gentleman, and I may assure him that as a matter of fact the DeSouttar limb has been engaging the attention of the department for the last two or three years. Personally I have been much interested in it; but whatever may be said in favour of it, even in England it is still in the experimental stage. The British Ministry of Pensions has not adopted the DeSouttar limb definitely. We have purchased a few of these limbs in order to carry on our observations. It is not a question of dollars and cents, and if the DeSouttar limb will benefit the amputation cases to a greater extent than the limb we manufacture here, we are willing to pay the extra cost; there is a difference, I think, of about $70 each in the cost of the two limbs. The DeSouttar limb is somewhat lighter; I am informed it is eight to ten ounces lighter than the limb our men wear. I am also informed that a number of amputation cases like the DeSouttar limb. On the other hand others have said to me that they prefer the Canadian limb. Whether or not we should say to the amputation cases "You are welcome to the DeSouttar limb if you want it" is a matter for consideration and discussion. So far we have not decided to do that. There are other limbs available. It has been represented to me that there are metal limbs that are just as good as the DeSouttar limb. The latter is an expensive appliance; I think it is covered by patent although I am not sure, and it would be costly to make the change. Before we do so we ought to be absolutely secure in our position that the change is warranted by the superior qualities of the DeSouttar limb. That limb is still in the experimental stage, and we need further evidence before reaching a final decision in the matter. There is now in the city a representative of the British Ministry of Pensions. This gentleman arrived in Canada lately, but unfortunately I have not had an opportunity of conversing with him as yet. It was arranged that he should see me this afternoon, but I was detained in the House on account of the possibility of my estimates coming up at any moment. However, I intend to discuss the question further with this representative of the British Ministry of Pensions. In the meantime if my hon. friend (Mr. Black, Yukon) will send me a copy of the resolution which he read I will attach it to my file and it may prove to be useful.

Mr. MacLAREN: The DeSouttar limb has been in use to my knowledge since 1918, and may have been used before that year, but if so only to a very limited extent. I cannot help thinking that the letter read by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) is perhaps unduly favourable to the DeSouttar limb. It is a good limb and particularly suitable in certain cases. On the other hand in some cases there is a disadvantage in having a light limb. It is not true that the lighter the limb the better it is. There is a certain weight of limb which is more suitable than others to some men. In the case of a light limb, if there is a strong wind there is a tendency that the limb will be blown from underneath the user. However I do not wish to disparage the DeSouttar limb; it is a very fine limb in certain cases. I do not think one would go the length of saying that this limb should be supplied in all instances because it is not necessarily the most suitable or the best. The British government has not made general use of the DeSouttar limb, one reason being that the expense rendered that impossible. Furthermore, as I say, in certain cases the DeSouttar limb is not especially suitable. I believe there has been some arrangement made whereby, if an amputation case desires the DeSouttar limb the cost of an ordinary limb is allowed towards its purchase. As regards the artificial limbs that are made in Canada by the department, it is only fair to say—and I make the statement from personal knowledge—they are,—shall I say, in the cases that have come to my notice—highly satisfactory. I am aware of cases where the men, in the hope of obtaining a better limb, or the best limb procurable, have gone to a large centre like New York, but have finally returned home convinced that a more serviceable limb is supplied by the department over which the minister presides than can be obtained elsewhere. As regards the ordinary limb, in many cases the make is very superior and very satisfactory. I think it is only fair to acknowledge the good work that is being done here in that respect. I believe that as time goes on we may be able to secure a still better limb. I believe there is a combination between the metal and the wooden limb which possesses many advantages and can be had for a reasonable price.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I am astonished to hear any hon. member suggest that if an amputation case requires this better type of artificial limb the government should advance him the price of an ordinary wooden leg, and that he should pay the balance. That is a policy that is altogether too economical.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I correct the hon. member. I stated that I was under the impression that the British government had arranged that plan. I did not advocate it or express an opinion about it.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I think my correspondent stated the case in the most convincing way when he said that the only authority on the subject is the man who has to wear the artificial limb. I am very glad indeed that my hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) has never been in that position. I quoted to the House the opinion of a man who has to wear a wooden leg. I happen to have known this man for some twenty years past, and by the way he comes from my hon. friend's constituency St. John and lived there until he moved west. He was a big strapping fellow, but now is a helpless cripple having lost his leg above the knee while on active service in France. I have another letter from the Dominion secretary-treasurer of the Amputation Association of the Great war in which he says:

> The DeSouttar leg is quite popular on the other side, and a great number of them are being issued to the men. We have been trying to get a number of them sent out to this country, but the DeSouttar people refuse to ship a lesser quantity than one hundred, so we understand, and the department will not consider this.

So, apparently, the matter of expense is a big factor in determining this question. I submit that the question of expense should not be considered for a moment in equipping Canada's lame returned men with the best artificial limb that can be found.

Item agreed to.

Vocational loans, $10,000.

Mr. MANION: It is getting pretty late, and we were up until nearly two o'clock this morning. I was going to suggest to the minister that we should pass a couple more items and then report progress. We have done a pretty good evening's work, we have passed nearly $8,000,000, and we do not want to work here so late every night. Will the minister be satisfied with that arrangement?

Mr. BELAND: I would be quite satisfied to let the committee decide what is best to do. If I understand aright, my work was arranged for me for the day, and I was advised that I should present the estimates of the Department of Soldier's Civil Re-establishment and the Department of Health, and I was expected to take the whole day. We had a very extensive discussion on the Health estimates the other day, although they are not very large. My only desire is to advance the work of the session. We have covered a great many points, and the most important points in the Department of Soldier's Civil Re-establishment. The suggestion I make is that we pass all the estimates except one, then we can take up the Health estimates, and they will not take more than half an hour, perhaps only fifteen minutes, because all the particular items have been considered.

Mr. MANION: We have been very considerate in allowing the estimates to go through, because we have already passed about $8,000,000. In discussing the estimates of other departments we very often spend a whole evening on a small item. I was proposing that we pass a couple more items, and my hon friend behind me suggests that a number of these items are important. We have no intention of holding up the estimates, and when they come up later on we can put through a whole lot of them in short order; but it is getting very late and we have allowed a large amount of money to be voted. I was looking at some of the items for the other departments, and in some of the branches about half the items have been passed. The total amount of those estimates was about half a million dollars, but we debated them for days.

Mr. BELAND: They are not important.

Mr. MANION: That is one reason why we ought to take more time with my hon. friend's department. We do not mind the small vocational loans and employer's liability vote and so on, but I think we have to hold up one or two of the items.

Mr. BELAND: Then we will skip the Federal appeal board and pensions.

Mr. MANION: And that will enable us to discuss all other items. I am not doing this to obstruct.

Mr. BELAND: We will reserve the Federal appeal board.

Mr. MANION: Suppose we hold over unemployment relief and the Federal appeal board, on the understanding that we may if we wish—though it is not likely that we will—take up any other subject when these two other items are being discussed; then we can pass the others. I think that will be treating the minister generously.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend will see how generous I am also. I am willing to meet him halfway, and I think he should let me pass this item.

Mr. MANION: We never sit after eleven o'clock Friday night.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend has a holiday to-morrow, but I have not.

Mr. MANION: You have a holiday all the time and nothing else.

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister is generous but he expects a lot. Unemployment relief and the Federal appeal board are new subjects.

Mr. BELAND: We will reserve that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the minister will answer a question or two, I would appreciate it. For instance, what is the item $5,000 for special publicity?

Mr. BELAND: Advertising in the veteran papers about the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and about the delays and when they expire for presenting claims for pensions, and all other claims—all the veteran papers.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What papers are they?

Mr. BELAND: The Khaki Call, The Listening Post, Imperial Veteran, Manitoba Veteran, The Veteran, Canadian Review Company Limited, Labour Leader. This is a very reduced service now.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the operating expense?

Mr. BELAND: The largest amount of the operating expense item is used to provide advances for treatment of imperial pensioners and allied country pensioners who are in Canada, we being the agent of the governments concerned. A large amount of this money that is provided is being reimbursed to the department. The other portion is used generally for:

Telephone, telegrams, postage and car fare.
Transportation and travelling of staff.
Stationery and office supplies.
Insurance and storage.
Light, heat, power and water rates.
Maintenance and repairs to furniture and equipment.
Freight and express.
Royal Commission on Pensions and Re-Establishment.
Other general expenses.
Working capital.
Financing treatment and medical examination of imperial and foreign former soldiers; also miscellaneous expense of Imperial pension office.

All of this is refunded, but it is refunded month by month, and we are generally a large amount behind. We have to provide the money. The main sum in this connection is spent on behalf of Imperial government.

Item 286 agreed to.

Mr. MANION: We are holding over 288 and 292.

Mr. BELAND: The hon. member wants to reserve the Federal appeal board item?

Mr. MANION: Yes, and the unemployment item.

Mr. BELAND: Item 292 stands and 293 is carried. Now we can proceed with the other estimates. There is nothing contentious about them.

Mr. MANION: We agreed we would stop after having passed these estimates; if there is nothing contentious about them the minister will not have any trouble in getting them through later.

Mr. BELAND: I am afraid they will come up late in the session, and you will not have the same opportunity that you would have to-night. I know that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) wants to ask a few questions regarding quarantine.

Mr. MANION: If the minister is so interested in getting this item through, I think we will have to go back and discuss some of the items we have carried.

Mr. BROWN: While the minister is satisfied, the rest of us would like to proceed with some of the business of the House, if that is possible.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Lisgar might have said that before we made the arrangement.

Mr. BROWN: The arrangement was to go on with the Health estimates. It was the Health estimates I was interested in.

Mr. MANION: The minister may take up any item he likes, but he will not get any of them through.

Mr. BELAND: I do not think my hon. friend means that. He enjoys a good reputation in the House and he must not destroy it.

Mr. MANION: I am not afraid of that. I think my hon. friend is not fair. We made the arrangement and now he comes forward with a proposition to pass the Health estimates. That matter was not discussed.

Mr. BELAND: Oh yes.

Mr. MANION: We had an understanding.

Mr. BELAND: I said I would be perfectly willing to reserve one or two items, take the Health items which remain to be adopted and adopt them this evening after proper discussion, and I pointed out in this connection that the Health estimates have already been under consideration quite a long time in the House, and a tremendous amount of information has been supplied to the committee and properly so. The remaining Health department items are not nearly as important as those we have adopted. The only three items left include one very small amount, the quarantine item which we discussed very extensively the other day, but regarding which some information could still be supplied, and the other one is venereal diseases, which is a grant.

Mr. LEWIS: We have been getting along very nicely, and rather than disturb the House at this time, I think the minister would be well advised, if the arrangement was entered into, to let the House adjourn at eleven o'clock. We have put through estimates totalling nearly $8,000,000 to-night, and although I would like to see the Health estimates get through to-night, there is one item, venereal diseases, that might involve a general discussion.

Mr. PUTNAM: Did the hon. gentleman say "if an arrangement was entered into"?

Mr. LEWIS: A few moments ago we allowed about five items to go through without discussion. Possibly that may have been the general understanding, and while that may have been a misunderstanding, it seems to have been the understanding of the hon.

member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion).

Mr. PUTNAM: The hon. member gave very fatherly advice to the minister when he said he would be well advised, if such an arrangement were entered into, to let the House adjourn. Does he understand the import of that particular remark? It was a little too fatherly altogether.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Graham, the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

Monday, June 15, 1925

The House met at three o'clock.

PEIGAN INDIAN BAND

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the petition of Philip Big Swan and others in the Peigan reserve be read.

The Clerk Assistant thereupon read the petition as follows:

Petition to the hon. House of Commons assembled.

The petition of the undersigned humbly sheweth:

That a portion of the Peigan Indian reserve has been leased to the Hon. A. J. McLean, although a large majority of the Indians voted against the lease;

That the Indians were assured by Commissioner Laird, who negotiated the treaty with them in 1877, that their reserves could not be occupied without their consent;

Therefore we the undersigned members of the Peigan band pray that the said lease to Hon. A. J. McLean should be cancelled and the land restored to the Peigan band.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss this petition, but I have had some conversation with the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs (Mr. Stewart), and I understand he would prefer that the discussion should take place on the Indian estimates and that he will arrange that these estimates be discussed at an early date, preferably in the afternoon. If the minister will give me that assurance now, I shall be quite willing to forego discussion of the petition at the present time.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Superintendent General of Indian Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity of having the matter fully ventilated at a reasonable hour, preferably in the afternoon, when the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs are before the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved:

That on and after the 16th June instant, until the end of the present session, the House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each sitting day, and that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall be also an intermission every day from one to three o'clock p.m.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my hon. friend that we have a lot of committees still sitting, and I do not see how the work can very well be advanced if we take up the whole day, unless hon. gentlemen are to absent themselves from perhaps the more important sphere of their labours. Anyhow, I would suggest that we should not commence morning sittings until Wednesday. I know we have some very important business to look after to-morrow morning, and I would ask my hon. friend to consent to the motion being so amended.

Mr. CRERAR: The day after to-morrow?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. CRERAR: We might as well start to-morrow.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It gives us one day's grace.

An hon. MEMBER: Let us get through.

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): Mr. Speaker, an important committee meeting has been called for Wednesday morning, and I think other meetings are in contemplation. It seems to me that it will very seriously interfere with the work of the committees if this motion is put into effect.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I rather agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good). There are several very important committees still sitting, and it seems to me that a great deal of work will not get the attention it should get if we start morning sittings to-morrow, or even on Wednesday. I think the motion should be further postponed.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, the government has no desire to prevent the House of Commons doing its work but is trying to accelerate progress. Some of the committees referred to are sitting while the House is in session; the fact of the House sitting in the forenoon would not make any difference in that respect. However, if Wednesday could be agreed upon it would be perfectly satisfactory to the government. If not, we will let the motion stand until to-morrow.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Wednesday.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Thursday.

Mr. GRAHAM: What do we say?

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, there are several important committees at work, the committee on Agriculture, for instance, that is dealing with the Grain Act. I do not anticipate that they will be through for two or three days yet at any rate, and they were sitting two or three times a day last week. There is also an important measure before the Banking and Commerce committee, and there are other committees still busy. I would suggest that the government might wait two or three days to see how this committee work progresses, and if it is pretty effectively cleaned up we might start morning sittings Thursday.

Mr. GRAHAM: We will let the motion stand until to-morrow.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The motion stands as a notice of motion for to-morrow.

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS AT QUEBEC

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 205 to amend an act respecting the national battlefields at Quebec.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. 206, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

He said: This bill provides that any female person in the Maritime provinces being a Protestant above the age of sixteen who is convicted of an offence punishable by imprisonment for at least two months may be sentenced to imprisonment in the Interprovincial Home for Young Women at Coverdale, in the county of Albert, in the province of New Brunswick.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES SMUGGLING TREATY

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Acting Minister of Customs and Excise) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 207, for carrying into effect a treaty signed 6th June, 1924, between His Majesty in respect of Canada and the United States of America, for the suppression of smuggling operations and for other purposes.

He said: The object of this bill is to give power to the Governor in Council to make regulations in order to put into effect the treaty which has been signed with the United States for the suppression of smuggling.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 195, from the Senate, for the relief of Mary Ella Mackey.—Mr. Ryckman.

Bill No. 196, from the Senate, for the relief of Melvin Grant Cowie.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

NORTHWEST REBELLION—MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

Referring to questions and answers concerning special remuneration of military forces for services in Northwest Rebellion reported in Hansard of June 4, 1925, at page 4004, is it the intention of the government to recompense the Northwest Mounted Police veterans who served in the Northwest Rebellion on the same basis as others who served?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In reply to this question, the situation is that immediately following the circumstances in connection with the Northwest Rebellion, the government of that day provided for compensation by way of pension for those who took part therein, and it is not the intention of the government to-day to reopen this legislation after so many years have elapsed.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN PENITENTIARIES—EMPLOYEES

Mr. DESLAURIERS:

1. How many employees were there on the 1st April, 1925, in each of the Canadian penitentiaries?
2. What was the name, rank, creed and salary of each such employee and the date of first appointment?
3. How many employees were there on the 1st of April, 1915, in each of the Canadian penitentiaries?
4. What was the name, rank and creed of each such employee and the date of first appointment?

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—GRADERS AND INSPECTORS

Mr. SUTHERLAND:

1. How many hog graders are on the pay roll of the Department of Agriculture?
2. What amount has been paid to such graders, respectively, as salaries, wages, and expenses, for the year ending March 31st, 1924?

3. How many veterinary inspectors and lay inspectors, respectively, are employed by the department in the inspection of animals slaughtered, and the carcasses of such animals in abattoirs and packing-houses in Canada, during the year ending March 31st, 1924?
4. What amount has been paid in salaries and wages to such veterinary and lay inspectors, respectively, for the time mentioned above?
5. What number of hogs have been graded by government inspectors during the year referred to?
6. What was the total weight of hogs so graded and the percentage of the whole in each grade or classification made by the government officials?
7. How does the output of said packing-houses correspond as to grade for home consumption or for export, with the classification of live animals made by government graders?
8. Is any classification of the output of packing-houses made by the government in accordance with that made of animals purchased?
9. If not, why is this not done?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DEBT AND REVENUE

Mr. TOBIN:

1. What is the total debt of the Canadian National Railways and all its subsidiaries up to the 31st of March, 1925?
2. What was the total revenue of the said railways for the years ending March 31, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925?
3. What was the deficit or surplus for each year from 1920 up to 1925, inclusive?

CAMP BORDEN—PERSONNEL

Mr. DELISLE:

1. What is the actual personnel of Camp Borden?
2. What is the number of officers?
3. Of that number, how many are French Canadians?
4. What is the number of soldiers?
5. What is the total annual cost of this camp?

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES—SALARIES

Mr. McQUARRIE:

1. How many employees of the government receiving salaries of $3,000 or over have received increases of salary since the beginning of the fiscal year 1923-24, and how many have had their salaries decreased during the same time?
2. What was the original salary in every case, and the amount of increase or decrease?
3. What increases or decreases of the employees of the government receiving $2,000 to $3,000 were made during the same time, giving the same information regarding the number of persons affected with increases or decreases?
4. What were the increases or decreases in salary of employees of the government receiving $2,000 or less, with the same information regarding the number of employees affected, amounts of increases or decreases, and original salary?

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto) moved:

For a return showing the names of depositors of the Home Bank of Canada for sums of $10,000 or over who will benefit by legislation now being considered for the relief of depositors of said bank.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the legislation affecting the Home Bank was before the House, fears were expressed from many quarters of the House that speculators might take advantage of this knowledge. I do not believe it is in the public interest to place all these names in print where they will be available to speculators, but I am prepared to show whatever lists I have to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church), and indeed to any member of the House. Under the circumstances, perhaps my hon. friend would drop the resolution.

Mr. CHURCH: What I want is for the minister to lay on the table the report of the liquidator, Mr. E. R. C. Clarkson, showing how this money is distributed. I think the country is entitled to know that in the case of the larger depositors.

Mr. ROBB: I would be prepared, when the money has been distributed, to table the report, but I wish to avoid this publicity now so that speculators will not have the opportunity of finding out who is going to be paid.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would point out to my hon. friend that he can, of course, resist the motion, but he has hardly given a ground on which to resist it. The period when speculators migh be feared is over. Now that the government has taken action, my hon. friend need not be afraid of anybody being approached by speculators, because the depositors know they will draw their money.

Mr. ROBB: There is something in that, if the measure has passed the Senate, but I am not sure that it has.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think it will be very long before it is dealt with there. That is hardly an objection.

Mr. ROBB: I will not press my objection, on the understanding that the Finance department will decide when this information will be made available.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Dropped.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, the motion is dropped by the mover upon the undertaking of the minister.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

DISMISSAL OF MR. LEVI BLACQUIERE

Mr. DOUCET:

For a copy of all correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and others in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Levi Blacquiere from the position of lighthouse keeper at Rustico, Prince Edward Island, together with a copy of the evidence taken at the investigation and the investigator's report in relation thereto.

BOARD OF AUDIT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider a proposed resolution declaring it expedient to introduce a measure to constitute a Board of Audit.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

WAR REPARATIONS FOR CANADIAN NATIONALS

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider a proposed resolution regarding reparation for losses suffered by Canadian nationals during the late war.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Acting Minister of Customs and Excise) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Excise Act, chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and to provide that a license to stem Canadian raw leaf tobacco may be granted to any person who has complied with the Act and regulations, on payment of the sum of two dollars, whether such license has a full year or part of a year to run from the date when it is granted; and that the minister shall have power to make such regulations as he deems necessary or advisable for carrying out the proposed legislation.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

MR. CHURCH'S MOTION—QUESTION RAISED AS TO WITHDRAWAL—RULE 43

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I desire to refer to the action taken in connection with a certain order for a notice of motion for the production of papers. It is not competent for an hon. member to withdraw his notice of motion. A notice can only be withdrawn, under rule 43, by leave of the House, and even in that case leave must be granted without a negative voice. Leave of the House was not asked for in this case. As matters stand now I would assume that the course would be as intimated by my hon. friend the

[Mr. Doucet.]

Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), and that the return should be made just as soon as the Senate has dealt with this question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think it is too late now to bring this matter up; it was dealt with earlier in the sitting.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I desire to point out that the Chair did not ask the House for leave to withdraw the motion, and no opportunity was given for submitting the point to the Chair. Under rule 43 the Chair, before leave is granted, must ask the House whether the hon. member has leave to withdraw. That was never done. The question is whether the rules of the House should not be observed by the Chair as well as by hon. members.

Mr. CHURCH: I did not withdraw the motion. I asked that it should stand as I understood the minister said he would let me have part of the information.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I draw the hon. member's attention to this fact: I asked the hon. member if he desired to withdraw the motion. He nodded to me and said: "stand." I then asked the House if the mover of the resolution should have leave to withdraw his motion.

Mr. HANSON: Oh no. I appeal to Hansard.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not intend to argue the matter. That is the way it stands at present on the records.

MINERS AND STEEL WORKERS

TROOPS DESPATCHED TO STRIKE AREA IN CAPE BRETON

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (West Calgary): I desire to ask the Minister of National Defence if a requisition has been made to the Adjutant General for military assistance in connection with the Cape Breton situation. If so, what assistance has been asked for, and what is the number and composition of the troops actually furnished and proposed to be furnished?

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou, Minister of National Defence): The situation in regard to the despatch of troops is as follows: General Thacker, who is in command of the district in which the difficulty arises, in response to the requisition of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, sent to the scene of the disturbance in the latter days of last week 260 troops of the permanent force from the city of Halifax. Further requisitions were made by the Attorney General of Nova Scotia upon General Thacker, and by virtue of the power conferred upon him in the statute which was passed last year under which he is sole judge as to the number of troops that are required, he requisitioned the Adjutant General for additional troops. I have not all the telegrams here, but those that I do happen to have I will read: At five minutes after twelve, midnight, the following message was received from General Thacker by the Adjutant General:

Mayor, Sydney Mines, requests military protection to-night Sunday. Feared mob will burn wholesale stores. Mayor of Sydney requested for military protection feared strikers will loot city to-night Sunday. Cannot give protection as no troops available. Urge that further reinforcements in view of widespread area affected at least 500 additional to troops now on their way.

At 4.20 a.m. this further telegram was received from General Thacker:

Mayor of Sydney mines requested military protection twice to-night, Sunday. Mob looting Mutual grocery stores. Mob 300 reported marching from Florence to join mob at Sydney Mines. 23.30 hours: Mayor of Sydney requested military protection. Feared that mob would loot city. Cannot give as no troops available to act State of terror rapidly developing in area. Small mob set fire to petrol stores outside Dominion No. 2. Officials extinguishing hindered by mob which was dispersed by troops. G.O.C. and G.S.O. proceeded Cape Breton by troop train leaving Truro this afternoon, Sunday. Reported rioters are in possession of one machine gun but are without ammunition, also that man left Sydney for purpose of obtaining ammunition.

The result was that in the last two days troops from St. John's, Que., Toronto, and London have been ordered to the scene. I have not got the exact figures with me but I will be very glad to give them later to my hon. friend.

Mr. FORKE: What are the dates of the last two telegrams?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): They were received yesterday and to-day, the last one at four o'clock this morning.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I notice in this morning's papers an announcement to the effect that the Minister of Labour had departed to the scene of the strike on request. I desire to ask this administration by whose request, or by whose authority, has the Minister of Labour now gone to the strike area?

Mr. STEVENS: And has the British North America Act been amended in the meantime?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Acting Prime Minister): Under the act which has been declared ultra vires the Labour Department undertook arbitration through a board. As the act now stands the Labour Department can undertake conciliation. At the present time the troops of the federal government have gone to that area at the request of the Attorney General of the province of Nova Scotia under the statute. That, in a measure, brings the federal authorities into the arena. Some little time ago the men proposed that the Minister of Labour give his consent to act as conciliator, not as arbitrator. That could have been asked of any man in the Dominion of Canada. The president of the company at that time refused. He was asked to come to Ottawa on Saturday, and he consented to Mr. Murdock going down to the area, being on the ground so that we could have first-hand information as to what was going on; and he is to act as a conciliator, as a mediator, between the men and the company with the consent of both. The provincial Minister of Mines is also engaged in the work of attempting to get the warring elements together, and these two will work in harmony, with the hope that peace may be brought out of the disorder.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is not quite clear. Has the Minister of Labour gone there as a representative of this administration or as a citizen of Canada?

Mr. GRAHAM: I should say, as a mediator.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it on behalf of the government?

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not care to draw the line. The Minister of Labour is a member of the government of Canada. That is a fact. He has been asked by the men and by the company to act as a mediator, which he is endeavouring to do.

Mr. IRVINE: Will the Minister of National Defence tell me if any other but military action is being taken by the federal authorities in order to arrive at a reasonable settlement of the dispute in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The statement just made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) covers the question of my hon. friend.

Mr. IRVINE: That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What is the use of splitting hairs in a matter of this kind?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the government, up to date, ordered all permanent force troops from Winnipeg and points east of Winnipeg to proceed to Cape Breton?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No permanent troops have been ordered from Winnipeg. I stated to the House a short time ago the places in central Canada from which troops were ordered.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the Minister of National Defence tell me if the Chief of Staff is in command of the military situation at Cape Breton?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: That has been covered.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, under the statute, the District Officer Commanding, Colonel Thatcher is in command of troops when they are there, in regard to all their actions.

Mr. GOOD: All the troops that are being sent are from central parts of Canada?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): From the military districts.

Mr. HOCKEN: Are there not troops closer to the scene of trouble than Toronto and these other places?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is well aware that the troops that are being used are simply members of the permanent force. There are members of the permanent force in Nova Scotia, but none in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island. The next nearest force is in Quebec where the famous Twenty-second regiment is located. There are a few dragoons in St. John. After you leave Quebec, until you get to Toronto, there are no members of the permanent force available.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Are the troops in Nova Scotia under the federal law or under provincial law?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I would advise my hon. friend to refer to the statute passed last year and he would find exactly what the position of matters was. The troops are at all times under control of the officer or officers who have been nominated by the federal government. They are requisitioned by the Attorney General under the statute in the case of disorder, and the cost of their operations and everything relating to that phase of the matter is provided for by the province who send them out.

Mr. McDONALD (Timiskaming): Will the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Graham) tell me if we can obtain definite information as to how the Minister of Labour comes to be in Nova Scotia, whether it is at the behest of this government or of his own sweet will? I think my question is pretty plain and does not require explanation.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend from Timiskaming informs us that the Minister of Labour has a sweet will. I will inform the hon. member that the minister is there at the request of the men primarily, and at the request of the men and management both now.

Mr. COOTE: Has the government any information as to the number of casualties that have occurred in Nova Scotia up to date?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The information that we have in the department is that there have been no casualties since the first outbreak, when one man was killed. A great number were wounded, both police officers and men. We have had no further information beyond that.

Mr. GARDINER: Have there been any serious disorders in the last twenty-four hours in the Cape Breton area, and if so would the minister indicate what they were?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am afraid my hon. friend did not catch the first answer I made when I was questioned in regard to this matter. I read two despatches, one reaching Ottawa at midnight and one at 4.30 this morning. My hon. friend will find them in Hansard, and it will hardly be necessary to read them again. I think the House has the sense of the messages.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has not caught the purport of my question. I desire to know if these disorders indicate organized leadership on the part of those who are creating the disturbance.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I might draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that in discussing a matter of urgent importance certain questions are permissible on the Orders of the Day, but the rule does not contemplate that inferences can be drawn from a certain state of facts—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I think it is only right that the House should be possessed of all the information on this subject, and I shall be very glad to give information to the fullest extent in my power. I gather that what the hon. member wanted to ascertain was whether the report we received indicated that there was an organized combination on the part of the men. The information we have received—and it is the only information the department has obtained—is from the General Officer Commanding, who reports to the Adjutant General the information which comes to him and what information he has of his own knowledge. In the last despatch which reached here at 4.30 this morning I find the following statement, which the House can interpret for itself:

Reported rioters are in possession of one machine gun but are without ammunition, also that man left Sydney for purpose of obtaining ammunition.

Mr. CLARK: I have not been able to hear what has been said. I should like to know whether any of the troops of the non-permanent militia have been called out, and if so from where. Also whether troops have been called out from Toronto or from other places in the province of Ontario, and if so whether from the permanent force or from the non-permanent force?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is a military man, and if he will refresh his memory he will know that the statute requires that no members of the non-permanent force can be called out until the whole of the permanent forces in Canada are exhausted, and to-day there has been no call made on the non-permanent militia.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Graham) why the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act as amended respecting national emergency have not been carried out. The Nova Scotia case is a clear case of national emergency under the act as amended which received the Royal Assent last Friday, and under the decision of the Privy Council the government can step in at once and adjust this dispute. This is a clear case under the act for drastic action. The government could spend $60,000 on a similar dispute to the Privy Council in Ontario, but can do nothing here. This is a bona fide case for immediate action, a national emergency which under the new act and decision of the Privy Council exists.

Mr. GRAHAM: The new machinery has not had very long to get oiled up. I think I have said everything I possibly can concerning the government's connection with the disturbances in Cape Breton.

Mr. WHITE: How many members of the permanent force have now been placed under orders for Nova Scotia service?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I cannot give my hon. friend the exact figures, but the situation is that no member of the permanent force west of the Great Lakes has been ordered to go to Nova Scotia. The order applies only to members of the permanent force in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. EVANS: Is the government not considering any line of action other than sending forces in there to preserve order?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): When my hon. friend says that the government are sending forces there to preserve order, he knows that under the statute the government cannot do anything else. Under the law to which my hon. friend assented last year, and which was supported by all hon. gentlemen in this House, once the attorney general of a province requisitions the military forces which are maintained by the Dominion under the constitution, they are bound to be sent there. No discretion is left.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto): On the first page of the Montreal Gazette of to-day, there is a news item reading as follows:

Dominion Accused

Charged with stirring up fight on water diversion.

Washington, June 14.—Charges that the Canadian government is stirring up the states bordering on the Great Lakes to make a fight against the diversion of water from lake Michigan into the Illinois river at Chicago are being made by Congress representative William E. Hull of the Peoria, Illinois, district. The Peoria representative is at present making a "protest tour" of the middle west states, and the charges against the Dominion government are made in addresses before chambers of commerce and other commercial bodies.

Mr. Hull declares the Canadian authorities are "greedy for water power" and that if its fight to prevent diversion of the present flow of water from lake Michigan at Chicago succeeds, the United States project for an inland waterway between lake Michigan and the gulf of Mexico will be ruined.

Most of us in Canada had the idea that Chicago was in need of water for drainage purposes in order to keep those helpless people in Chicago alive, but I think this is a clear statement by a member of the United States Congress—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BRISTOL: What I would ask the government is this. What action is being taken by the government in this connection, and has the United States government been informed that the water in the Great Lakes belongs to the United States and Canada, and not to Chicago?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): The Canadian government is very much alive to the diversion of water at Chicago and is taking all precautions necessary to protect our interests. I cannot be responsible, nor do I think the government could be responsible, for the construction placed upon the necessary action we have taken by a representative of the Senate or Congress of the United States.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 147, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 6, to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Inscription.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This bill was very carefully considered in committee and quite a number of amendments were offered. I attended the committee, and the amendments were all agreed to between the officers of our department and the members of the committee. I do not think they are controversial, and they meet the situation.. I regret the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) is not here, because the bill was brought in by him and he is familiar with the amendments. The amendments, however, were passed unanimously by the committee.

Mr. HANSON: Are these amendments agreeable to the hon. member for Yukon?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, I mentioned that fact. The hon. member for Yukon brought in this bill, which is really a private bill, and the amendments were all agreed to by him.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Bristol.]

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT, 1919, AMENDMENT

The House resumed, from May 26, consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution.—Hon. Mr. Robb.—Mr. Gordon in the chair:

That it is expedient to amend the Soldier Settlement Act, 1919, and amending acts, and to provide that notwithstanding anything in the acts, in the case of any settler who has not repaid his indebtedness to the board, or who has not abandoned his land, or whose agreement with the board has not been terminated or rescinded, the board shall credit his account with an amount, in reduction of his indebtedness to the board, determined as follows:—

Forty per centum of the purchase price of all live stock advanced to the settler and purchasced prior to the first day of October, 1920;

Twenty per centum of the purchase price of all live stock advanced to the settler and purchased on or after the first day of October, 1920, and prior to the first day of October, 1921; and

The settler's account shall be credited with the total amount, determined as aforesaid, as on the standard date in 1925.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 208 to amend the Soldier Settlement Act, 1919.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT

The House resumed, from May 25, consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution.—Hon. Mr. Lapointe.—Mr. Gordon in the chair:

That it is expedient to amend the Canada Temperance Act, chapter one hundred and fifty-two of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, by the addition thereto of Part V, to provide for the prohibition of importing, sending, taking or transporting of any intoxicating liquor into any province in which such prohibitions are in force; to further provide penalties for the violation of the proposed legislation, and to provide for the revocations when such have been declared revoked by an order in council of the Lieutenant-Governor of a province affected.

Mr. HANSON: What is the reason for this legislation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The bill which is to be introduced on this resolution is intended to limit the importation of intoxicating liquors in provinces which have not adopted Part 4 of the Canada Temperance Act, but which control the sale of liquor governmentally. Under the present circumstances it will apply only to the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec, if they care to avail themselves of it, because all the other provinces are under Part 4 of the act.

Mr. STEVENS: How will these two provinces come under this bill?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If an order in council is passed requesting that the prohibitions defined in this bill shall be put into force in the province the Governor in Council will have the authority to issue a proclamation to implement that request. This is similar to the bill which was passed two years ago and rejected by the Senate.

Mr. CHURCH: Is the government in favour of this particular class of legislation, especially in view of the recent vote in the province of Ontario and the action of the Ontario legislature. I am opposed to all prohibitory laws of this kind, whether the restriction applies to this question, social questions, race tracks, or anything else, and I do not intend to vote for any sort of prohibitory legislation so long as I am a member of this parliament. We are living in an age when prohibitory legislation has become a fad; everybody wants to discipline his neighbour but he is not so anxious to discipline himself. I do not believe that the people of Ontario are to-day in favour of prohibition in view of the position which they have recently taken so overwhelmingly. With all due respect to the minister, I would remind him that a vote on prohibition was taken in this country by the federal government under the late revered prime minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who declared that if a referendum on prohibition carried by ballot he would put it into effect. Did he do it? No,—apparently a platform that was good enough for the Liberal party to get in on is not good enough for them to stand on.

4 p.m.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry my hon. friend is interjecting politics into this.

Mr. CHURCH: This act and the principle of this legislation was introduced as a war measure, and in view of the vote which has been held in Ontario it must be evident to the government that public sentiment throughout that province has changed considerably in this matter. What does the Ontario government think of it? Who is asking for this legislation? Has the government considered the advisability of it in the light of the vote in Ontario?

Mr. LAPOINTE: To set my hon. friend's mind at rest I hasten to assure him that this will not apply to Ontario. So far as prohibition is concerned, I may tell him that my own views do not differ very much from his. But I differ from the hon. member in this respect, that in my opinion the desire of each province in this matter should prevail. And what this bill proposes is to give effect to the views of the several provinces. It will be easier for hon. gentlemen to discuss the measure when the bill is before the House, and I would therefore suggest that they allow the resolution to pass in the meantime, reserving their opinions until then.

Mr. CLARK: What are the views of British Columbia on the subject? There was considerable difference of opinion when the bill came up two years ago and in the meantime I have had no reason to change my own views. What change has there been generally that has made this legislation necessary, and what requests have been received from British Columbia? The minister might tell us what effect the bill, if passed, will have on that province.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think there has been any great change in British Columbia. The bill which passed this House two years ago as well as the present measure have both met with the approval of the province. Both the Prime Minister of British Columbia, when he was here, and the attorney general, in correspondence, strongly recommended the enactment of it. I may say that hon. members representing British Columbia—not my hon. friend—have also urged very strongly the introduction of a bill along the lines of this resolution. My hon. friend took a prominent part in the discussion of the bill which was presented to the House two years ago, and he will recall that its purpose was to prohibit the importation of liquor except when purchased by the government of the province or by a board of commissioners appointed by the government of the province under the laws of the province. The exceptions were: first, the transportation through the province by means only of a common carrier by water or by railway if during the time it was so carried the package was not opened or broken in the ordinarly way; and, second, the importation by any person duly licensed to carry on the business of a distiller or brewer where the liquor was imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending or flavouring. There was a further exception in favour of export houses, that with the permission of the attorney general of the province they might carry on operations; but while the bill was before the committee this exception was objected to very strongly as giving too much power to the attorney general, therefore the section was withdrawn, and there will now be no exception for export houses.

Mr. CLARK: That is, under the proposed legislation there will be no export or bonded warehouses in British Columbia?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They will not be able to import.

Mr. CLARK: That provision was not in the bill two years ago. That was our main objection.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was in the bill, and Sir Lomer Gouin, who was then Minister of Justice, moved that the section should be eliminated. Thereupon the importation, even by those export houses, was prohibited.

Mr. CLARK: In other words, no one except the provincial government will be able to bring liquor into British Columbia.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Except those who may buy from the government.

Mr. CLARK: Am I correct in saying that no one will legally be able to bring liquor into British Columbia except the government of the province?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Except dealers or brewers for the purpose of blending or flavouring or for transhipment.

Mr. CLARK: In other words, after this legislation passes there can no longer be any bonded warehouses or other concerns in the liquor business for export purposes in British Columbia?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If there are they will not be allowed the right to import. We are dealing only with importation. There will be no exception as to that. They will be unable to import liquor into British Columbia.

Mr. CLARK: Can they bring it through for transhipment to the United States?

Mr. LAPOINTE: "Transit" means that the liquor should not be warehoused in British Columbia for any length of time.

Mr. CLARK: Let me give the minister a concrete example. At the present time we have bonded warehouses in the interior at Greenwood, Rossland and other places several miles from the coast; we also have bonded warehouses in Vancouver and Victoria which are carrying on export business. Some of their ships have been seized by the United States authorities. Will this legislation put those institutions out of business?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think it will.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not rising to oppose the resolution in so far as its principle is concerned. I could not do so very well because my hon. friend is adopting the policy which we laid down years ago, and which he formerly opposed. I am very glad we have got him converted at last to the idea that the provinces should exercise autonomy in this matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend has been dreaming.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I have very vivid recollections of my hon. friend's attitude in the past, and he knows that what I say is correct. However, if he does not think he is converted it is too hot for me to attempt to convince him now. Representations have been made, and I have no doubt they have got so far as my hon. friend, that what ought to be done in connection with the prairie provinces is to prevent importation for beverage purposes except by the provincial governments. It is the evil of drink which is attacked.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This applies only to British Columbia.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The prairie provinces get no relief under this at all?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They are under Part 4 of the Canada Temperance Act. This applies only to British Columbia, and possibly to Quebec if they care to adopt it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about the man who needs alcohol in his manufacturing business, which he never can sell and never wants to sell as a beverage? Is his business to be interfered with; is he to be put in the hands of somebody else to be held up in connection with his supplies?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, my hon. friend need not be disturbed about that. Even under Part 4, which is the strictest part of the Canada Temperance Act, there is an exception for manufacturing purposes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not notice that in this resolution.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think it is already in the act.

Mr. HANSON: Is not the purpose of this legislation to give to the government of British Columbia a monopoly of the liquor traffic in that province?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend may call it a monopoly, but the effect of the proposed legislation is to prevent the importation of liquor except through the government of the province.

Mr. HANSON: That gives them a monopoly.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I may say to my hon friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) that I have taken a note of his suggestion, and if the point is not clearly covered I will add an amendment so that manufacturing concerns will not be disturbed.

Mr. CLARK: Is there not another bill in this connection that the government propose to introduce?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is another bill on the order paper dealing with Part 4 of the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. CLARK: Under the legislation to be introduced on this resolution will the attorney general or the government of British Columbia have power to request the Department of Customs and Excise or the Dominion government to grant to any bonded warehouse in the province a license for export purposes?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The prohibition of importation will apply to all. The act will not apply unless, by order in council, the government of British Columbia asks this government to issue a proclamation to that effect.

Mr. CLARK: The proclamation would not apply, for instance, against private citizens, and except bonded warehouses?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, it would be general in its application.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Lapointe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 209 to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BILLS PROPOSED TO AUTHORIZE THE CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINES SUNNYBRAE-GUYSBOROUGH

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

(1) That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide for the construction or completion prior to the thirty-first day of August, 1928, of a line of railway from Sunneybrae to Guysborough, in the province of Nova Scotia, by the Canadian National Railway Company;

(2) That the company may issue notes, bonds and securities in respect of the said construction, and the Governor in Council may authorize the guarantee thereof;

(3) That provision be made for the issue of certificates as to mileage by the minister, but neither the minister in the issuance of such certificates nor the company in the performance of the work of construction and completion or in the issue of its securities shall, unless by consent of Parliament, exceed the estimated distance, expenditure and average expenditure per mile by more than fifteen per cent; and if upon final survey it appears to the company that the expenditure involved in the completion thereof will exceed the limits of expenditure estimated, the company shall not commence nor proceed with the work without first obtaining the approval of Parliament.

(4) That the nature, terms and forms of securities to be issued and guaranteed shall be such as may be approved by the Governor in Council and signed by the Minister of Finance;

(5) That to enable the work of completion of the said line of railway to proceed forthwith, the Governor in Council, pending the issue and disposal of such guaranteed securities, may authorize advances to be made to the company from the consolidated revenue fund, such advances to be reimbursed to His Majesty from the proceeds of the sale or other disposition of such securities;

(6) That the minister shall annually present to parliament a statement of the work and expenditure, advances and amount of advances reimbursed, and all such other information as he shall require or direct.

SCHEDULE

Location	Mileage already graded	Estimates
		Mileage including existing grading	To be expended	Average expenditure per mile
			$ cts.	$ cts.
From Sunnybrae to Guysborough in the province of Nova Scotia	0	67	3,500,000 00	52,238 00

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would like to get this through if I can and send it on to the Railway committee. I have put a bill in reference to this resolution through the House three times, and this is the fourth attempt. Some years ago, before the Canadian National came into existence, when the Intercolonial was controlled indirectly at least by the Minister of Railways, a bill was put through both Houses of parliament for the construction of this line, but it was not constructed. Last year and the year before, this House passed a bill for the construction of this line, but the bill did not become law. If we could get the resolution passed and sent on to the Railway committee, all the details could be discussed there. It is an old and familiar matter. There is nothing that I can say concerning it that was not said last year. If the committee would acquiesce, I would like to get this put through the committee stage, and sent on to the Railway committee.

Mr. GOOD: Why was construction not proceeded with in the past?

Mr. GRAHAM: The last two years the bill did not become law.

Mr. GOOD: It was killed in the Senate?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. This House passed it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that it is necessary to say over again everything that has been said before on this question. I do not know that my hon. friend really has any change of heart in connection with it. This is a first-rate railway to talk about; it might be a railway to build when you have more money than you know what to do with. My hon. friend got, before, the right to build this railway, but he did not go on with it.

Mr. GRAHAM: He did not have a chance; the government changed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have been having any amount of talk about this railway for I don't know how many years. It goes back, I think, past even my hon. friend's political memory, and that is saying a whole lot. Everybody has taken a whack at it. Of course, it is a popular thing down there, but I am afraid it is not a matter of very good business. I have not changed my opinion at all one way or the other as to the commercial necessity of this line. I do not know what my hon. friend thinks his political necessities are to-day, but under the circumstances I do not think I can usefully take up any time in opposing this bill here.

Mr. HANSON: There is only one thing the minister omitted to say to us this year that he has not said before, and that is the imminence of the provincial elections in the province of Nova Scotia. It is necessary once more to trot out this resolution for this paper railway because in a few days the people of Nova Scotia are going to be called upon to vote for or against a moribund government down there, and it is necessary, in order to carry the county of Guysborough, that this resolution should pass this House, and that the bill founded upon it should be introduced and passed. When that is done and the election is over, that is all we will hear of this railway, because no sane railway man in Canada would ever think of building it.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Graham thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 210 respecting the construction of a line of railway from Sunnybrae to Guysborough, in the province of Nova Scotia, by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—EXPORT OF POWER

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways) moved that the House go into committee of Supply.

Mr. R. V. LeSUEUR (West Lambton) moved in amendment:

That the Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved

That in the opinion of this House export of hydro electric power from Canada should be permitted only on yearly license, and no license should be issued beyond those at present outstanding except for off-peak power.

He said: I am moving this resolution because the question involved is of grave importance to this Dominion; because I feel that it would be unwise to permit the session to close without this House recording definitely and clearly its attitude on this question of the export of power; and because I believe the resolution has merits and is both reasonable and practicable. I will endeavour to be concise in my statement of the matter.

In the first place, allow me to say that we as members of this House, no doubt have in a more or less general way a realization of the important place which hydro-electric energy to-day occupies in our national life; but I doubt whether a clear, ample, and serious appreciation of just how great a factor hydro-electric energy is in our national life to-day or how great a factor it is destined to be in our future development, can be had without a fairly detailed study of the growth and history of hydraulic power, and without a study of the uses to which hydro-electric power is put to-day. Such a knowledge and such an appreciation is possessed by men like Sir Adam Beck and Mr. J. B. Challies, men who have deveoted the greater part of their lives to the study of this question, and whose disinterested and consistent efforts towards the development of our hydro-electric power are well known. I wish to quote a few of the statements of these gentleman and their statements are entitled to much more weight as to this phase of this question than any statements I can personally make. Mr. Challies, in July, 1924, delivered an address at the World Power Conference in London on The Water-Powers of Canada. Mr. Challies was then the Director of the Dominion Water Power and Reclamation Service, and as showing the importance to us of our water-power development, I wish to make a few quotations from his address on that occasion. He said:

During approximately the last decade in Canada, while the population increased 22 per cent, the water power developed increased nearly 100 per cent, the use of water power in industry 245 per cent, and the capital invested in manufacturing industries 175 per cent. . . . . But the water power now developed in Canada amounts to 3,227,414 horse power and represents, including transmission and distribution, a capital investment of $688,000,000. Despite the continuous development that has taken place in the past and the 750,000 horse power of new construction now in hand, the demand constantly exceeds the supply and it is estimated that some $300,000,000 of additional capital will be needed to meet the actual power demand of the next ten years.

Again he says:

The extensive use of hydro-electrical energy is largely dependent upon and evidence of its low cost. Plate No. A-3 illustrates the source and character of the power supply for the industrial centres of the Dominion, and shows that water power not only completely dominates the situation in central Canada, where no native coal is found, but it also controls the market for industrial energy in the maritime provinces and British Columbia where excellent coal is found.

When referring to particular industries he makes some statements which I believe will enable this House to grasp in some detail just how important electrical power is to our industries. He says:

Pulp and paper manufacturing is a typical and important Canadian industry with a prosperous future, the result of two natural advantages,—abundant supply of growing pulpwood and cheap accessible motive power in large quantities. The importance of low cost power lies in the fact that it takes practically 100 horse power to produce one ton of paper per day. It is not surprising, therefore, that motive power used in this industry is almost altogether restricted to hydraulic energy and that Canada's premier advantage and position in the pulp and paper field rests on adequate and abundant water power well distributed among extensive timbered areas.

He refers also to mining as follows:

The mining industry of Canada owes its present rapid development to water power, even coal mines use hydro-electric energy where possible. The metalliferous mines of northern Ontario now utilize in excess of 100,000 horse power of hydro-electric energy and the development of further water power sites is rapidly proceeding in order to overtake the demand for energy. If the mines of Ontario had to depend on imported coal for their power requirements, the greatly increased operating cost would, in a great measure, have throttled their productiveness, making the working of any but the richer deposits unprofitable and seriously reducing both the annual production and profitable life of the properties.

After stating that the total installed horse-power in Canada has grown from 975,000 to 3,227,414 horse-power since 1910, Mr. Challies goes on to say:

There is every reason to believe that this rate of growth will not diminish. New uses for electric current of the greatest import in industrial processes and services are being constantly discovered. Canada's strategic advantage in the location of large reserves of water-power within transmission distance of her centres of population should attract special industries to these centres in increasing numbers. Population follows industry and at once an added market is created for power for domestic and municipal uses. All the modern tendencies in the utilization of cheap power indicate that the rate of growth of hydro-electric development in Canada will increase rather than lessen.

Allow me also to refer to a statement made by Sir Adam Beck in presenting the annual report of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the year ending October 31, 1923. He says:

Industrial conditions throughout the province during the year have been considerably below normal, with a consequent reduction in the demand for power for industrial uses. Notwithstanding this adverse industrial condition, there has been a considerable growth in the demand for power on all systems, and on several systems the commission has reached the limit of the capacity of the existing generating plants. It is, therefore, necessary for the commission, on practically all systems, to make arrangements to secure additional power developments to meet the ever-increasing demand.

Sir, I read these quotations as being the statements of men well versed in the hydro-electric power situation of this country, and as evidencing not only the importance of hydro-electric energy in our present municipal, social and industrial life, but also the prospects for its rapid growth and its dominance of our markets for industrial energy.

Now, then, let me say a few words as to why I consider the resolution which I have moved necessary, and why I believe this House should, before the close of the session, definitely place itself on record on this question of the export of power. Some three weeks ago a file was tabled in this House, and in that file we find a letter which in part reads as follows:

On behalf of the Carillon Industrial Corporation Limited I would like to submit for the consideration of the minister and the department two revised drafts marked A and B respectively, and would be obliged if arrangements could be made to have these drafts reviewed with a view to a final agreement between the parties as to the precise forms of the leases contemplated.

Yours truly,
Carillon Industrial Corporation Limited.

I want to refer very briefly to the draft leases referred to in this letter. I will do so as briefly as I can, because these leases have already been discussed and I do it simply as a step in my argument. The first point which we note in this draft lease is that if it is executed and made binding it would grant to the lessee water-power privileges at Carillon for a period which, with the renewals, would last for about 121 years, or to December 31, 2046. The first three renewals can be demanded as of right by the company, and the last renewal can be denied by the government if the government is prepared to purchase the plant and transmission line from the company. Secondly, this draft lease, if completed, would give to the lessee the right to export all the power which is developed at Carillon falls—and which is estimated, I believe, at some 400,000 horse-power—with the exception of such horse-power as the Canadian consumer might desire to consume, but with the limit that the Canadian consumers can only secure up to 100,000 horse-power. In passing I might say that the amount which the Canadian user would be likely to use is very much limited and curtailed and possibly made impossible by two clauses in the proposed lease, one of which says that no Canadian consumer can take power in less than blocks of 10,000 horse-power. In connection with that, I point out that places like Galt, Stratford, Chatham and so on, take less than 5,000 horse-power, so that it would be a very considerable industrial centre that would take 10,000 horse-power. The Canadian consumer to get horse-power from the company must apply for it within two years from October 31, 1924, and after that period they can only get it through the minister at the end of each five-year period. With those limitations, hon. members can see how small would be the amount of power which the Canadian consumer would actually take of that 100,000 horse-power, which is his limit.

Mr. BRISTOL: Referring to the provisions in this contract, would the purchaser have provided by the contract the usual method of transmission of power to the different parts of Canada where the power was wanted to be used, if such users would have to proceed and erect transmission plants?

Mr. LeSUEUR: There are certain clauses regarding transmission, but I would not care to speak as to details without looking up the clauses.

Mr. BRISTOL: It is very important.

Mr. LeSUEUR: And I would prefer to go on with the points which strike me as especially salient in this contract. The other clauses which I wish to bring to the notice of hon. members in mentioning this lease is clause 37, which reads:

> Nothing in this indenture contained shall prevent the company from supplementing the amount of electrical energy generated at Carillon from other developments or sources in case it finds additional electrical energy is required to fill the needs of its customers.

[Mr. LeSueur.]

That is a most dangerous clause, and in my opinion is capable of the widest and most extreme application. In short, the inner and true object of the proposed lease seems to be to permit the exportation of hydro-electric power in very large quantities to the United States, and that over a very long period of years.

The next point which I wish to discuss in this lease is that, under clause 6, it becomes apparent that part of the plan is that the new company, the Carillon Industrial Corporation Limited, shall acquire the present lease now operative at the Carillon falls, and when we turn to the order in council of November 29, 1924, P.C. 2089, we find that it was ordered as follows:

> The minister, therefore, recommends, on the advice of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, that he be authorized to enter into an agreement with the lessee to amend the said lease by granting a further extension of the time to commence the said works until the 1st of December, 1925.

And the reason for that extension is given as follows:

> That a plan for a more extensive development of water-power at the point in question than that covered by the above mentioned lease is under consideration, and the company request that a further extension of the time be authorized for the commencement of the works covered by the existing lease, observing that large sums of money have been spent for investigations made by engineers and bankers in their studies of the question raised by the new proposition, and that it was obviously inadvisable to commence the construction and erection of the works contemplated under the present lease.

That leaves the situation in this position: The extension of the time to commence certain works under the present lease will without doubt come before the government for consideration on or before the first day of December, 1925; that the time for the commencement of such works under the present lease had already been enlarged on account of these studies and investigations made by engineers under the new general plan; and in the natural course it would follow that a scheme more or less as found in the draft lease which we have discussed, or some other scheme covering the large development at Carillon for power purposes, would be before the cabinet or the government on or before the first day of December, 1925. Under those circumstances I submit that it is most important that this House should distinctly go on record and state its position with regard to the export of power from Canada.

In fairness to the government I wish to say that on May 19, this question of the export of power was discussed, and the government made some observations at that time. But in view of the facts which I have stated, and the reasons which I propose to adduce, I consider that the statements made by the government were not sufficiently direct and clear, and did not go sufficiently far in the circumstances of the case; and that the government, have now had ample time, and should satisfy the House with a very clear, frank and direct statement of their policy in connection with the export of hydro-power, also, in any event, this House should, under the existing circumstances which I have pointed out, place itself on record as to its attitude on the question of the export of power.

Let me now speak very concisely and briefly on the merits of the resolution. I want to deal with this first from a national standpoint and then to some extent from an international standpoint.

In the first place, it is a recognized fact, which we should keep in mind in considering this question, that the benefits which accrue at the point of development of a hydro-power are comparatively small, comparatively nothing, as compared with the developments which accrue at the point of its application. The United States government made a special study of investments and employment at the point of development and the point of application of hydro-power. As the outcome of that study, they found that per 1000 developed horse-power, the investment at the point of development was $250,000 and at the point of application about $1,616,000, or about 13.4 per cent at the point of development and 86.6 per cent at the point of application; that, the number of employees at the point of development was 8.6 and at the point of application 376.4, or about 2.2 per cent at the point of development and 97.8 per cent at the point of application. These facts make it evident that the real and full benefit from hydro-electric energy can be obtained, not by its development within our country, but by its application within our country.

Let us turn to another feature, and that is this. Mr. Challies, who is an authority, states that the available 24-hour horse-power at 80 per cent efficiency, at the ordinary minimum flow, for the Dominion of Canada is 18,255,316. Minimum flow is, I believe, taken as a criterion for the economic utilization. That power, we must remember, covers potential power which is both accessible and inaccessible, some of it being on the rivers of the far north. Sir Adam Beck, speaking of Ontario, states that the figures given by Mr. Challies for Ontario, namely, 4,950,300 horse-power are excessive and he states:

> Taking the international section of the St. Lawrence, the waters now available on the Niagara river, and potentiality of the Ottawa river, there is not more than 2,500,000 horse-power available for economic purposes,—

That is in Ontario.

> —and even if 20,000 second-feet of water additional for Canada should be provided from Niagara waters and all other unused power that may be considered from an economic aspect in Ontario be included, the maximum figure that should be employed in deliberations involving Ontario's water-power would not exceed, say, 3,500,000 horse-power.

Sir Adam Beck in that is looking at it from the practical standpoint of economic utilization. We find also that the full capacity of the Niagara power will be completely utilized in the year 1926. Mr. Challies is authority for the statement that the water-power on the streams leading into lake Ontario is to-day practically fully developed and fully used. We have therefore a situation where the demands of southwestern Ontario, the Ontario peninsula, are growing daily and rapidly, and the situation will soon arise where western Ontario will call for the turning into its channels more and more of the Niagara power and of the eastern section of the present hydro system being supplied more and more from the other falls which are within distributing distance of those places. With that situation occurring, it becomes especially evident that in a very short time the hydro-electric system of Ontario, to speak of it alone, will require to develop more power in the St. Lawrence or the Ottawa river for supplying eastern Ontario, and that their present capacity will be completely utilized in 1926. That is the situation as to Ontario.

Let us look at another phase of the question. The development of hydro-electric energy is no longer a speculation, it is a highly specialized art. In 1921 the investment in hydro-electric development was 68 per cent Canadian, about 6.4 per cent British, about 13.6 per cent American and 12 per cent from other countries. Hydro-electric development is to-day recognized by big financial houses and by the general investors as an established, practical accomplishment. We have in Ontario a Hydro Electric Commission which has a complete organization, which has accomplished wonderful results and which has a surplus to-day of about $40,000,000. Side by side is the province of Quebec where the development of hydro-electric power has been carried on by public utility corporations which supply power under rates regulated by the government. These have also been very successful. They have developed hydro power extensively and are supplying the present needs of that province. The point I wish to make is this, that we have at hand in Canada, ample skill, organization and capital which are ready and willing to develop these powers as fast as they can be developed and the demand of the country calls for such development. Therefore, as regards central Canada, we have this situation, that the development and application of power should both be in Canada if we are to get the greatest benefit; that practically the whole of the power now developed in Ontario is used; that the demand for more is pressing; and that the next point from which that power can be obtained for Ontario and central Canada is the St. Lawrence and the Carillon falls. Further, we have in Canada financial institutions and public utilities which are in a position amply to finance any scheme of power development which this country needs, and the investing public are, I believe, to-day fully acquainted with hydro bonds and fully satisfied that the development of hydro-electric energy is a business and practical proposition. We are therefore not dependent on foreign capital for the development of our hydro powers.

Let us now look for a moment at the international situation. I believe it is a fact that if we export large quantities of hydro-electric energy to the United States, there will grow up around the places to which that hydro-electric energy is forwarded, industries in which will be invested large sums of money as well as their workmen's houses, so that you will have created a large industrial and municipal community situated around the point of application of that hydro-electric energy. In that case, whether your license is yearly or not, a very disturbing situation may arise. We must remember two things: in the first place, it is almost an historic fact that yearly licenses are as a matter of course, renewed from year to year provided the licensee has not defaulted or committed some act contrary to the terms of his license; and, in the second place, hydro-electric power is not like any other commodity. Ordinary goods you can store in large quantities and for a long time, as a rule; and when the usual supply is cut off you can secure purchases in other markets. But hydro-electric energy is a service and is transmitted over an expensive and fixed transmission system; it is developed at fixed points at a large cost; and the cost per horse-power is usually fairly stable and fairly low. Industries that build up their fabric upon hydro-electric energy depend upon these conditions; and these conditions existing, if we attempted to withdraw our hydro energy from any foreign community such action would I think constitute a proper case for diplomatic intervention on the part of any government in the interests of its nationals.

[Mr. LeSueur.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there any danger on the other hand, if we possess power which we might export and would not, of there arising an international bitterness because of such refusal, with possible reprisals? In such an event, might not the United States refuse to send us coal, for instance, for use in Ontario?

Mr. LeSUEUR: I do not think that such a situation could arise if we did not now make it possible. We shall need in the very near future all the power that we can develop at Carillon and on the St. Lawrence generally, and there is no reason why we should permit a situation to arise such as is suggested. Once such a situation did come up, then I think that any withdrawal of power would be very serious and might lead to grave complications. But if we see to it that nothing of the kind shall be possible I do not see how any reprisals can take place. These are my reasons for thinking that this question of the export of power should be very carefully considered. A wise course adopted now might obviate a very embarrassing condition of things in the future, and I do not think that a yearly licensing system, permitting the export of power extensively, would save us from the consequences that I have described.

There will be, I assume, very little question of that portion of the resolution that calls for the export of power on a yearly license only. As to the second part of the resolution, providing that no license shall be issued beyond those at present outstanding, except for off-peak power, I would offer a word of comment. We all know that at certain hours of the day the use of electricity becomes much heavier. Between five and seven o'clock you always get a peak, and after that your graph descends rapidly, showing a smaller amount used. The filling-up of these gaps is what we would call the off-peak power, and a contract for off-peak power is quite a common occurrence, being found very useful both to purchasers and sellers. It is essentially not a permanent contract. I do not think that any new industry would start up or any old industry greatly expand on a contract for off-peak power, but at the same time I believe it serves all the purposes of the present situation and is both reasonable and practical.

For the above reasons I believe that the amendment has merits that should commend it to the House and should receive its approval.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I desire to say just a few words in seconding the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. LeSueur), and in doing so I want to state my adhesion to the principle underlying it. Water-power is both a raw material and an implement; I submit that it is in no sense a finished product. And if we in this country are to take the fullest advantage of that with which nature has so bountifully endowed us, it is our duty to approach with the utmost wisdom the whole question of the utilization of this great natural resource. I can quite understand that in days gone by it was the most natural thing in the world that there should have arisen a business of exporting power. In days when the value of electrical energy was not so high as it is to-day and when the industrial life of the country was scant and meagre in certain communities, especially where nature had endowed the country with undeveloped water-power, the expense of the financing and flotation of hydro electric propositions being also as heavy as it was, it became necessary that an immediate market should be found for the energy thus developed and an immediate income and return should be at the command of those who were pioneers in the movement. Be that as it may, and notwithstanding that the companies which had been financed by bond flotation found it advisable to carry out a policy of exporting power on long-term contracts at a very low rate to ensure the return of an adequate revenue to the promoters and to make the sale of securities safe, that being an important factor in the industry, I still think that nearly all of the promoters of these companies, who had vision enough to go into the business, have found that it has been a great mistake. To-day they find themselves, in the lifetime of their institutions, tied up to long-term, low-priced contracts which prevent them from making the money out of the industry which they otherwise could and should have made.

I have not very much to say concerning the export of power in the past; it is to the future that we should look. We have high hopes of being able to build up our industrial life here, but unfortunately for the central portions of Canada, especially the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, we have no coal which will produce power. But the very same parts of the country which have been treated so scantily by nature in this respect have been abundantly blessed with water-power, being particularly rich in that resource. As has been stated here this afternoon, the available water-powers of this country, estimated by government officials, are no less than eighteen million horse-power. This total includes not only those water-powers which are easily available for exploitation in the immediate future, but also those which are very far afield and of which there is no immediate prospect of development. Of the eighteen million gross horse-power available, something over three million horse-power has already been developed, and I think it has been demonstrated this afternoon that in Ontario the limit will be reached within the next twelve months. The fact should impress itself upon hon. members and upon the people, that while we have a very substantial development in Ontario, the maximum is already in sight, and that with respect to any powers in this or in the adjacent province of Quebec which are undeveloped the greatest care should be exercised as to exportation. An hon. gentleman to my left during the course of the remarks of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. LeSueur) raised the old bogey of reprisals. I do not see how there can be any possibility of reprisals by our neighbours with respect to that which they have never had. I can quite understand the suggestion might apply to the withdrawal of power which they already enjoy. And let me say to hon. members that in any given instance where power has been heretofore exported, it will be found that upon an attempt being made it is practically impossible to discontinue its export, for investments have grown up and the people on the other side have become dependent upon the imported power not only for their industrial but for their community life. In my own province the first hydro-electric development was not a large one, that at the Aroostook falls on a branch of the St. John river, wholly within the Dominion. That development was made years ago by a gentleman living in the adjacent state of Maine. Many of the bonds were sold there, as well as most of the stock, the remainder being held in Canada. For the first ten or fifteen years every horse-power of electrical energy developed was exported to the United States down through the county of Aroostook to a chain of towns that have grown up there during the past forty or fifty years. To-day those communities are wholly dependent on that power for many of their municipal conveniences, and the installation is the only one within reasonable distance of any of them. I would lay it down as being incontrovertible that should the export of power in that particular instance be refused, the feelings of those communities would be outraged, and I have not the slightest doubt that the question would soon pass from the local into the international arena. Conceivably no government in this country could stand by and see those communities rendered helpless by the withdrawal of power. I need not labour the point. It is simply a concrete illustration of a situation that has arisen in my province. In a more marked degree I understand that in other portions of the Dominion along the international boundary a similar situation exists.

With respect to the future, I think the country has every right to know what policy is to be pursued by the government in power. I must say that the statements made by members of the government who have spoken on this particular question recently have had a very disturbing effect. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) was supposed to have stated where he stood on this proposition, but I must confess that he left me in absolute doubt. I think the time has arrived, especially with respect to the Carillon waterpower, when we should know definitely where the government stands, and I am very glad that the hon. member for West Lambton has brought this vital question before the House. As to the principle involved, I do not think that in this quarter of the House there is any division of opinion. We believe that, as stated in the terms of the resolution itself, there should be no further exportation of electric energy over and above that which is already allowed, except as specified, and then only under licenses which the exportees or consumers should understand may be cancelled on the termination of reasonable notice.

Some hon. gentleman has stated that power is something we have to sell. Well, if you view it as a finished product, which I do not, it is a commodity the export of which would bring certain returns to the country. But how disproportionate those returns would be compared with the application of the principle of using the power at home. With regard to the effect of refusing to lend this power to our neighbours in return for what after all is a mere pittance compared with the total to be developed, may I point out that in one section of the province of Quebec during recent years no less than nineteen branch American factories have been established because of the cheap water-power there available. I refer to the Eastern Townships. I have heard hon. gentlemen in certain quarters of this House sneer at the idea of the establishment of branch American factories in this country. Well, I never thought it was a bad thing for us to have outside capital come in. For at least the next half century Canada will be dependent for its development upon the importation of foreign capital, whether it be in the form of direct investments in the industries themselves or in the form of loans, and I think in either form it is something that is wholly to be desired. It may interest hon. gentlemen to have a list of the factories to which I have referred. Heading the list is the Canadian Connecticut Cotton Company Ltd. Hon. gentlemen from the Eastern Townships of Quebec are no doubt familiar with that company. Will any one of them say that the establishment of that branch has not been of immediate material advantage to the community at large? Then there are the Panther Rubber Company, Dominion Hair Felt Company, Kenworthy Brothers Company, Dominion Blank Book Company, Edwin G. Schutz Company, Canadian Manhasset Cotton Company Ltd., Canadian United States Knitting Company, Premier Silk Mills, Ltd., Waterville Veneer & Panel Co., Canadian H. W. Gossard Company Ltd., Butterfly Hosiery Company, Jenckes Canadian Company, Macdonald Wire Goods Company, Dominion Silk Dyeing and Finishing Company, Franco-Canadian Dye Works Ltd., and Paramount International Company of Canada Ltd.

All of these companies, I am credibly informed, have come to Canada not particularly because of the tariff, though incidentally that has had an effect upon the establishment of these branch factories in this country, but they have come to Canada largely because of the availability and to be near the source of cheap power. I therefore from that point of view, the establishment of industries in our country, and that appeals to me very strongly, urge upon the government and the House and the country the very great desirability of adopting such a policy as will keep this great natural asset for the development of industry in our own country. If, however, hon. gentlemen in this House want this country to be merely a country where we shall produce nothing but raw materials for export, if they do not desire anything in the form of industrial life, and I have heard hon. gentlemen give expression to that point of view, then I say one of the best means of limiting the activities of this country to that particular branch of production is to grant the privilege such as is asked for by the Carillon promoters, and allow the practically unlimited export of this implement of production from now on. If, on the other hand, hon. gentlemen have a higher vision as to the destiny of Canada, if it is their desire to promote industry, not confined to the local market at all, but the development of an export trade, and no country I submit, is better situated for export trade than are the Maritime provinces of the Dominion, some heed will have to be paid to the potentialities of our undeveloped water and to legislation and regulations that will surround and properly safeguard the export of hydro-electric energy.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, there is not very much difference between what hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken have urged, and what has always existed in Canada, or for the last few years at least. At the present time the export of power to the United Sates is not so very great. Two organizations export practically all of it. Those are the Cedar Rapids Power Company, exporting to Massena, and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. The Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario has an old contract they took over which dated prior to the passing of the act referring to the export of power. There might be difficulties in the way of recalling that one, but I am not sure the difficulties are paramount in recalling even that power if it was so desired, as well as the other. If I recollect aright, the Cedar Rapids Company recalled their power during the war, for war purposes, or at all events they gave their consent to Canada doing that.

But the question of the export of power is, of course, altogether different at the present time as compared with conditions existing a few years ago. I am not so sure that the time may not come when we shall have to ask for at least some of the power that is being exported to be returned to Canada if the need exists, and it is just as well a discussion of this kind should take place.

The value of power, of course, is not to be minimized, but I think some hon. gentlemen make the mistake of thinking that a larger percentage of the cost of manufacturing is tied up in power than is actually the case. Experts tell us that in the United States, where the power is used in manufacturing, its cost averages only about 2½ per cent of the entire cost of production; but that is an amount of course, not to be despised.

Some person has argued as if an agreement had been made between the government of Canada and some company in reference to the Carillon power. I think it is unfair to keep continually sending out to the public an intimation that such an agreement has been made. That agreement has not even been considered as yet; in fact, I have never yet read the application all through. So we are perfectly free to discuss this matter just as though that application were not in. Just to illustrate, suppose I were to try and borrow $100 from my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. LeSueur), and then went out and said he had loaned me that amount. He would be in a much better position than if he had actually loaned me that amount, and I ought not to make the suggestion that he had loaned me that money simply because I had asked for it. Now that is just the situation with respect to the Carillon pawer.

I am glad to say that our discussions are temperate in this matter. We in Ontario and a portion of Quebec, and in part of the west, depend largely for our coal upon the United States. Our anthracite coal has all to be brought in from the United States, and year after year when there is a scarcity we send our representatives over there to see that we get a square deal, and up to date the United States has given us a square deal in giving us our share of anthracite coal, even though they were pressed very hard on the other side of the line to shut off our supply of anthracite. I might say that I am in hopes, and the government are in hopes, that before long we may be able to evolve a scheme which will relieve the situation to a large extent so far as anthracite coal is concerned, by the use of our own coal both in the east and west for the manufacture of coke. If that can be done, we shall be in a different position from what we are in to-day.

My hon. friend has discussed the off-peak. I am not sure that the off-peak, as we call it, is in a much different position from the other power. I know that my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) argued that out delicately, so as to convince the House that allowing the United States to have power from the off-peak did not mean anything. But this is the real reason, or at all events, one of the main reasons for not allowing our export of power, namely, that the export of our power allows industries on the other side of the line running on Canadian power to compete with industries in Canada. Now they can compete just as well with power from the off-peak load as they can with any other kind of power. It might possibly be that if they were not allowed to get that off-peak power, they would not be able to carry on their business to the same extent they do and compete with us here. So I just call attention to the fact that the off-peak power is almost in the same position as the other power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister say that any industry would ever commence on the basis of a contract merely for off-peak power?

Mr. GRAHAM: Probably not, but they might have to shut down if they did not have off-peak power, which would make quite a difference.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is just the point.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the off-peak power from Canada would enable an industry in some other country to get going and compete with our own industry, and that foreign industry could not compete if they did not have the off-peak power, then I submit that the off-peak power is in the same position as the other.

My leader the other night I think told the House that the government has not any desire and no intention to depart from the regulations now in existence which restrict the term of the export of power to twelve months, the licenses having to be renewed every twelve months. It is the duty of the government every year to ascertain that the power the new license asks for does not deprive Canada of certain power that Canada ought to have, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce now requires an affidavit when an application of this kind is made that the power is not required in this country, before he grants the yearly license. I admit at once that long term licenses might create a very difficult situation; but where there are short licenses, granted since the passage of the act in 1907 with the full knowledge that they might be recalled at any time, there could not be any serious complaint if these licenses were granted from year to year.

Now, let me come to another point, so far as the yearly licenses are concerned, although a great many people say that is a mistaken idea in the case of Canada. Let me illustrate what I have in my mind. I am not saying this is my view at all, but it was placed before me the other day: If the license were extended for a number of years, covering a long period of time, the party to whom the power was exported would amortize the amount of his expenditure and if at the end of say twenty years he had to return all that power to Canada he would then have no investment so far as that expenditure was concerned; the profits from his business would have met all his expenditure. However, I am not going to discuss that question at the present time. That is a phase of the matter I give to the House for what it is worth. It is different in the case of a yearly license. If a license is given for twelve months, as has been the practice since 1907, the party who receives the power—unless something unforseen happens or he gets notice to the contrary in advance—has a certain right to believe that year by year that license will be renewed. That is really what has been done. That is what has to be done if the contract is for 100 years. That has been done for years in the case of the Hydro Electric, and that is being done also in the case of the Cedar Rapids power development. Giving a license year by year leads to the conclusion that, unless something unforseen happens, such yearly license will be granted annually.

Now I want to come to another point and that is the last part of this amendment. It does not say anything about the power that has been exported or is being exported now. I am not sure that I would go so far really with my hon. friend as to absolutely confine export only to new power. There may come a time in Canada—it may even be approaching—when we will have to serve notice—it may be some years in advance—that we are going to gradually take back the power we are already exporting; and in a case of this kind I think we should not commit ourselves as this resolution says to the extent that there should be no exportation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not say that.

Mr. GRAHAM: It intimates that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh no.

Mr. GRAHAM: The resolution says that we are not to export any new power. That means inferentially that we are not to interfere with something that is being exported.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh no.

Mr. GRAHAM: It excludes power that is being exported from any resolution we may pass as to non-exportation. That is a fair way to put it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is right.

Mr. GRAHAM: Now I wish to refer to the attitude of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). He is from New Brunswick. If we pass the last part of that resolution and adhere to it the provincial power development scheme in his own province, now partly accomplished will have to be stopped. In that province the provincial government has been working out the development of a provincially owned power scheme. That scheme, as I understand it, has been referred to the International Joint Commission, and they have given their consent to this particular development in international waters only on the understanding that a certain part of that power will be exported to the United States.

Mr. HANSON: No, they have not done that.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am told they have. My own information to-day is that they have. Further than that I am told—I stand corrected but I would want to see the records—that a portion of this development will have to be used in the state of Maine—

Mr. HANSON: Not of the first development.

Mr. GRAHAM: Wait until I get through—and that if we adopt the resolution in its entirety in this House the province of New Brunswick will have to begin de novo as the lawyers say and ask the International Joint Commission to agree that power be developed without any reference to export. If that is the case the power cannot be developed because being international in character the United States would never agree to any other proposition. I just want to point out to my hon. friend and to the House that we must be careful how far we go with a resolution aimed at the export of power. The general principle may be all right but if we are going so far as to say that it never shall be possible, that it cannot be possible under any circumstances, that any new power developed in this country should be exported, then we may tie up some very laudable enterprises including the development under way in the province of New Brunswick which is not in the hands of a private concern at all but is a provincial enterprise respecting which the province has been trying for a long time to get a proper status so that it could proceed with the necessary construction and development. I think we ought to be very careful as to how we proceed in tying up beyond peradventure the right of some province to export power. The province of New Brunswick is going into the export of power, and the province of Ontario is exporting power under certain conditions. Well, conditions might arise as a result of which the enterprise—I have already indicated the New Brunswick development and I think my information in regard to it is correct—might probably be killed if we tie ourselves down to a resolution like this irrespective of any conditions which might arise in the future. Of course, I can imagine the time might come when it might be the duty of any government then in power, no matter of what party, to consider the situation and to see that the power in Canada is retained to the people of the Dominion to whom it belongs; but to tie ourselves up absolutely and to say that under no circumstances whatever shall power be exported would be an altogether different thing. I think my hon. friend will see himself that it might be a mistake to make this resolution so far-reaching. Personally I have no objection at all to the first part of the resolution, but I think it would be a great mistake to insist that we should never export one single horse-power hereafter except off-peak load.

Mr. CHURCH: Will the minister clear up one point? Will he state what action has been taken touching the proposed development of 800,000 horse-power at Morrisburg? An application is before the Dominion government with respect to that development but I am not aware that any action has been taken in the matter. Will the minister say whether the application has been refused, or what course will be pursued by the government in regard to it?

Mr. GRAHAM: In reply to the hon. gentleman let me say that when the vote in connection with the St. Lawrence waterways project comes up, as it will come up in the miscellaneous estimates, will be the proper time to speak on this question. It will not be a short statement; I will be able to speak half an hour on it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I want in the first instance to deal with the last matter my hon. friend referred to, the New Brunswick situation. That is not a question affecting New Brunswick alone, but it really has to do with the question of the development of international power. I point out to my hon. friend that in so far as the development of international water-powers is concerned, we have only our allocated interest in them. Surely our friends to the south are entitled to their interest in those powers, export act or no export act. We all know that. Suppose New Brunswick carries out an international development on the border of the state of Maine, and the state of Maine is entitled to fifty per cent of the power, it is idle to say she cannot get her own fifty per cent, because we have an act here the purpose of which is to control the business of gentlemen engaged in the production of electric power in Canada for export to American customers. In this case it is theirs; the right is there, and there can be no difficulty about it. If my hon. friend thinks there is a difficulty about it, I am quite sure the mover and seconder of the resolution will be only too happy to accept any amendment that the hon. member may think is necessary in order to give effect to a situation which I am sure is amply covered by things as they stand today.

Mr. GRAHAM: This power is being developed on Canadian territory as I understand it. There could be no power exported unless the Department of Trade and Commerce in Canada gave a license for that export, and if that were to be done I think a special act would have to be passed to allow them to do it for a term of years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not the act before me in answering my hon. friend's question, but I would have thought it elementary that that would refer to our power.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is to be done here in New Brunswick is the development of water-power in which our friends to the south have an absolute interest, and if they have an absolute interest they are entitled to that power as a matter of right, and their rights are not made subject to the stipulation that the government pass upon it as a question of license and refuse export if it pleases. It is a matter of right and contract between the parties. These are in effect treaties, and neither party has the slightest right to attempt to hamper either of the high contracting parties through licenses which are intended to look after traders. International law looks upon nations as just a little above and apart from traders and manufacturers who are covered by cases of this kind. It is not necessary to labour this question. If the government are serious in thinking there is the slightest doubt about it, we will accept any amendment which will make the point absolutely clear.

The next point to which my hon. friend refers is the question of off-peak power. He says it is just as bad to export off-peak power as it is firm power. I can hardly think my hon. friend is really serious in that. He may be able to point one phase of the situation, with his accustomed adroitness, and, not putting all his cards on the table, say to us that there is not any difference; but he knows very well that there are very important considerations of far greater moment than any considerations he has referred to on that point. He knows perfectly well, as we all know, that the real serious thing is the investment of money, the creation of large industry and the like, on the faith of this power exported, and my hon. friend admitted that no investment would be made merely on the basis of off-peak power. But I am anxious—and I think the country is anxious—that we should have no little shadows in connection with this case, and no excuse why a resolution in favour of the retention and protection of one of our greatest assets should be set aside. Therefore we are perfectly content to strike out that off-peak power reference if my hon. friend does not like it, and let it go. If there be any objection to that exception let us remove it. It was put in simply because the attitude at any rate of hon. gentlemen in this corner of the House honestly interested in this question is absolutely reasonable, and in every single case where we can help an American interest without destroying a Canadian interest we want to do it. As we viewed the matter, we were not hurting our Canadian interests, and we were helping the American interests in connection with that off-peak power. What is the off-peak power? It is power which is exported under a special arrangement as a matter of fact with the Hydro Commission and the American interests at Niagara. It is power which is absolutely interruptable at any time. It may be stopped on a day's notice, and the usefulness of it is perfectly plain in connection with the production of electricity at the falls. In connection with the Buffalo situation and in connection with the Niagara and Lockport situation we have composite production. We have very large hydro production and we have also production by steam. At the present time industry in the state of New York is still functioning, so that it requires off-peak power. The situation is such that coal is used in Buffalo for the purpose of producing that off-peak power, and interruptable off-peak power is being exported, for the purpose of saving our American friend's coal supply and is not hurting a single Canadian interest that I know of. But if my hon. friends think that this part of the resolution should be dropped, very well, we are content.

My hon. friend practically argues that this resolution is all right providing we can go on exporting. He argues that we run no risk if we can go on exporting. Suppose we test that situation as to whether we run no risk if we go on exporting. He points out that a license is merely a yearly license and further than that, under the express wording of the act, he can also point out that it may not even run for a year. The statute says the government may at any time terminate it; so that on paper we have even a stronger argument. There is notice under the act to every single contractor in American territory receiving Canadian power, that not only is he dependent upon a yearly license, but that the government can at any time cancel it. Just let us see how that works out. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. LeSueur) this afternoon gave us some very good figures in connection with the relative cost of power installation, how much of it goes into the plant and how much into the distributing plant and the different factories that are run by it. The percentage, as he properly points out, is overwhelmingly weighty in connection with the districts where the power is used. We have had this export act in force since 1907. We have the export, as the Minister of Railways and Canals points out, at Niagara; we have it at Massena and we have that act of 1907 which was passed I believe after the contract with the Ontario Power Company but which certainly antedates the other contract. We have had power shortages from time to time. No man in this House knows better than the Minister of Railways and Canals that there is a power shortage in eastern Ontario. He knows eastern Ontario is industrially starved for lack of electricity. He also knows that through that very territory, in which he naturally is interested and which he desires to help, there runs a line of the Cedar Rapids Company, delivering, if I remember rightly, 80,000 horse-power annually for use in the United States. Is the Minister of Railways and Canals without the slightest concern for his district? Not at all. We all know him to be a gentleman of the kindliest heart and the readiest sympathy; but there he has been sitting for years with the high tension wires of a company exporting electricity under a license which can be cancelled at any time, and seeing his district practically lying dormant because it cannot get electricity in its manufacturing business.

Mr. GRAHAM: The territory around Brockville gets it from the Cedar Rapids Company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the minister satisfied with the quantity of power eastern Ontario is able to get?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not satisfied with the price.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is he satisfied with the quantity?

Mr. GRAHAM: We have all we need at the present time, I think.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has a very poor idea of the requirements of that district. Why, the Ontario commission, with the greatest difficulty in handling, were able to get a miserable 5,000 horse-power from Massena. Is the minister satisfied?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not with the price.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is he satisfied with the price they have to pay or the quantity?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think they get it from Massena. They get it from the Cedar Rapids Company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They get it in connection with the export.

Mr. GRAHAM: From the same company that exports it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: At any rate, what is the minister going to do? Ottawa has already served notice that in a comparatively short time she will require 20,000 more horse-power. Where is it coming from? The real truth is—and every representative from eastern Ontario knows it—that eastern Ontario power demands have never been adequately met. My hon. friend nods his head. Then no further argument is necessary in connection with this question after that affirmation. With the demands of eastern Ontario never having been adequately met in connection with their electrical requirements, with 80,000 horse-power passing through their territory, it is perfectly clear that if my hon. friend thought he could have put the act into effect, stopped the export of that power and looked after his territory, he would have done so. Why has he not done it? He has not done if for the simple and plain reason that just as soon as we allow commitments to be made, just as soon as we have United States municipalities lit, waterworks run and industrial centres becoming dependent upon our power, my hon. friend would hesitate very long and gravely before he would stop the export of that power or any of it. That my submission is absolutely correct stands superabundantly clear because we have here the shortage admitted, we have a situation in eastern Ontario, as my hon. friend himself admits, where their power demands have never yet been properly met, and we also have running through that territory transmission wires carrying 80,000 horse-power out upon a license which, technically, can any day be cancelled.

It is idle to talk about the large water-powers of Canada having regard to our present situation. To-day in central and eastern Ontario we have an absolute power shortage. No man, I think, could speak better on the question than Sir Adam Beck, but I believe the facts are all present in the mind of the Minister of Railways and Canals. If we start to the west it is true that west of the Soo we have plenty of water-power, but coming down from the Soo, the east side of lake Huron, the north side of lake Erie, is there a stream left on which the water-power has not been developed? Perhaps my hon. friend can tell me of one, but I do not know of any river of any size there that has not its development. Let us take, for example the development on lake Erie. There are the developments on the Severn, the Beaver, the Saugeen and the Grand rivers. Does my hon. friend know any others? If we consider the Niagara, we have our development there in such a position that next year it will be exhausted. At least that is the information we get and I do not think my hon. friend will deny it. On coming to lake Ontario, can my hon. friend point to any streams of any size that have not been harnessed? It is true we may have a few more water-powers up the Trent river in connection with the canal, but they do not amount to much, as I think my hon. friend would be one of the first to admit. The real truth is that, with two exceptions, central and eastern Ontario are without potential power supplies. The same also applies to the biggest industrial section of Quebec, namely, the Montreal district. Those two exceptions are the St. Lawrence and the Ottawa, with its tributaries, these and nothing else. Do not let us think we have power to throw away. We have not. As I have said, I do not think anyone can speak more clearly on the question than Sir Adam Beck. This is something he said in connection with his emphatic protest against the export of power, having particular regard to the Carillon proposal:

> On other occasions I have drawn attention to the fact that the citizens of Ontario are now facing a most serious power shortage. Its gravity can scarcely be overstated. Within the short period of fifteen years Ontario will need every horse-power that can be developed from its water powers and the markets will absorb this power as rapidly as it can be produced. The available Niagara power supply is being utilized as rapidly as the necessary equipment can be installed and, under present allotments of water, all available Niagara power will be utilized in 1926.
> In eastern Ontario the need of greater supplies of electrical energy is even more urgent.

He goes on to say:

> It may be recalled how, in 1911, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission sought to relieve this shortage through the contract it made with the New York and Ontario Power Company for the delivery of 15,000 horse-power from the St. Lawrence river. The commission's efforts, however, were blocked through the refusal of the Dominion authorities to grant permission for the necessary transmission lines to cross the government canal. Action by the commission in negotiating with the New York and Ontario Power Company—a company in the state of New York—was not due to insufficiency in the amount of power developed in the district from Canadian water-powers but to the fact that the power locally available was controlled by a foreign company.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Further on he says:

> These transmission lines pass in Canada through territory bordering the St. Lawrence river that, industrially, is starved,—80,000 horse-power could supply a hundred or more of the smaller communities of Ontario.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend but I should like to ask him this question. If the state of New York and the United States had taken the attitude embodied in this resolution would it have been possible for us to have got power from the United States? This power is all across the line.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We were trying to get power, but it would have been only a small moiety of what we are giving. We tried to get it but did not. He continues:

> It was only after very considerable effort and after overcoming many difficulties that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission was able to effect an arrangement with the foreign company controlling the Canadian exported power, whereby the commission could obtain a maximum supply of but 5,000 horse-power of firm power, with an additional 2,500 horse-power under certain optional limitations. Such quantities are insignificant as contrasted with present and future needs. Only recently the commission received an application from the city of Ottawa for an additional supply of 20,000 horse-power of electrical energy to commence in 1928. The logical and only available sources of supply for such demands are the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment I was talking about the electrical power shortage in Ontario, and I had been referring quite extensively to Sir Adam Beck. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I make any references to that gentleman with a great deal of confidence. He has devoted his life and broken down his health in the struggle to insure cheap and plentiful hydro-electric power to the people of his province, and I think that the protest he has made on this particular occasion is but a further evidence of his public spirit. No one can very well doubt Sir Adam Beck's testimony not only having regard to the man himself, but also to the facts. No one can be so foolish as to suggest that there is not a real shortage of power when at the present moment an appropriation of ten million dollars is being made for the purpose of generating power by steam in a province that ought to have access to these powers and the benefit of their full and complete development. Why Mr. Speaker, we have heard statements made by hon. gentlemen particularly interested in the district of Carillon with respect to the necessity of work being provided for the people in the locality. I would point out to the House that last year an application was made by the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission for leave to develop this very Carillon site—not for the purpose of exportation, but for the benefit of Canadian consumers. So far that application simply stands.

In this particular case we have not only a common interest, but a declared common interest between the central provinces—Ontario and Quebec. Their protests against the exportation of this power are united, and are voiced by those best entitled to speak—by the premier of each province and by those interested in the production of electricity, the power companies on the one hand in Quebec and Sir Adam Beck on the other hand in Ontario—all taking a common Canadian stand. Their interests are indeed common. For example, both provinces are directly interested in the production of paper. Neither province can make any success in that production without cheap and plentiful power. In order to turn out one ton of paper every twenty-four hours a supply of 100 horse-power of electricity is needed; and none of us think that the development of our wood pulp resources is at an end. Yes, our interests are common. The metallurgical mines of Ontario require a good deal of electricity in their development. Those well posted say that the mining development of Ontario has only commenced, yet with that commencement to-day we are using 125,000 horse-power. Quebec has similar opportunities, she is expecting to rival Ontario's mining development and will require a great deal of electrical energy for the purpose. Indeed, without electrical power we might just as well abandon any thought of the successful exploitation of our northern mines. To get coal up there on the present scale of costs and freight rates would be absolutely prohibitive and would effectively retard the development of any but the very richest deposits. I repeat, both provinces are united in their protests. Those protests surely are well founded; their interests are in jeopardy. The door should be locked and bolted, and then doubly locked and bolted again to prevent the exportation of this precious Carillon water-power.

There is a great deal behind this Carillon proposition. Early in 1923 the associated industries of New England took up the question of their power resources and the possibility of getting power. A committee was appointed, expert engineers were engaged, and the work put in hand. A very excellent report was got in 1924, a report which covers pretty fully all the water-powers of Quebec and the remaining water-powers of Ontario, because that investigating committee very wisely thought the only water-powers that Ontario had left were the water-powers of the St. Lawrence, and of the Ottawa and its tributaries. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have got within this report our water-powers catalogued up to a distance of some 475 miles. There is a great deal behind this application. If this 400,000 horse-power by any unfortunate action gets across the line, there will be an annual saving in New England territory of approximately $4,500,000. The prize is great, and the efforts are strong, and they are still going on; they are going on notwithstanding everything that took place in the House on this question not so very long ago. Why, it is only last week that the bonds of the old company were purchased, and so far as I can find out, were purchased at a slight premium, at 102, I think, but I am not definite on that point. But the bonds were purchased, and the pressure still goes on. Those behind the movement still think they have such arguments as yet undisclosed as will enable them to force the hand of the government.

I referred to this report. It is an interesting report. It is very interesting in that it shows us what a great asset we have in connection with our water-powers. It shows us again what a tremendously important thing electricity is, what a tremendous development there is for electricity, even in territory like the territory of the New England states, where but a very small percentage of the electricity produced is produced from water, where practically all the electricity is produced by fuel-burning plants.

There is confirmation in this report of what has been said on the question of the water-powers that are still available, those little powers here and there which in the total amount to a tremendous quantity, if you like, but which are non-existent for practical purposes. I commend this report to the very careful study of the government. If they study it, and really appreciate it, there will be no more export of electricity from Canada.

This report points out at page 99 how very small the power is which New England obtains, or can obtain, from her own water-powers, as compared with her demands, which are met by fuel-burning plants, and proceeds as follows:

> The greater part of the undeveloped water power in New England must wait for the growth of local demand for power because in most cases the cost of development would be too great to justify the added cost of transmission to different centres of demand. Even if the local restrictions on the taking of power from Maine were removed,—

I might interject here that Maine has an absolute embargo on the exportation of power from that state to any other state:

—the high cost of development and transmission would prevent the exportation of a large proportion of this power.

That is just exactly the position of a very large number of the water-powers to which reference has been made by hon. gentlemen who were mistaken enough to justify in this House the exportation of Carillon power, powers which they referred to as powers to which Canada can look for her future supply. The New England states are not so foolish as to think that powers of such a character are of any practical and immediate use whatever.

The report, after dealing with their own local powers, proceeds to deal with the Canadian situation, and there is a map in here which I would again draw to the government's attention, map No. 17, which illustrates the Canadian situation. It shows the available water-powers. They show the available water-powers in Ontario, those in the St. Lawrence, and the Ottawa, with its tributaries. They throw the St. Lawrence to one side on account of international difficulties and delays, and Carillon is shown as being the most convenient power for them. Carillon is credited on this map with an available development of 220,000 horse-power, or 440,000 horse-power, at 50 per cent load factor. Eight other power sites on the Ottawa or its tributaries, the Gatineau and the Lievre, are shown up to a distance from Boston of 475 miles as also available, as well a the sites on the St. Frances, the St. Maurice and the Saguenay rivers.

This report, the government will be interested in knowing, recommends the commencement of the utilization of Canadian water-power for the purpose of the New England states, recommends commencing with power derived from the smaller sites on the Ottawa, St. Maurice and Saugenay rivers, that is smaller as compared to the larger sites on the St. Lawrence, which is tied up for the present.

The report also is very interesting in showing just what can be done with power, and where power would go to. It is interesting also as showing how important electricity is, and how much is used notwithstanding the high cost of coal. Why, Mr. Speaker, the delivered cost to the consumers on the average there is 3.4 cents per kilowatt hour.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is electricity developed from coal?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes. my hon. friend will realize that is a very high rate. He will also find from this report that that is produced from coal at $8 per ton.

The report also points out, just as showing the growth and importance of this development, that the output of the central station power plants in the New England states in 1915 was 2,058,220,000 K.W.H., but in 1923 the estimate was 4,200,000,000 K.W.H. There is a great industrial development and a great deal of electrical power used in those states outside the central power stations, and in order to get a true picture we have to add the power produced at the industrial plants to the power produced at the central power plants. Adding those figures the total produced in 1915 was 6,798,000,000 K.W.H. In 1923, the estimated production was 8,000,000,000 K.W.H. The government will find that reference at page 72 of the report. There is another thing that is very significant in connection with the report: It is an industrial report. It is a report by which this investigation is going into the question of seeing—as every true American ought to—just what is the best thing that could be done for his territory, just how he can get the cheapest power, just how he can do everything to retain business in the New England states as against the competition from the southern states with cheaper labour. The report makes a very good survey of the whole situation, and gives the growth of the installed horse-power in different industries. I would refer the government to plate number 5, at page 47, which gives the total reported horse-power installation capacity in the New England textile industries in which so many of our French Canadian friends are now working. In 1900 the installed horse-power was 600,000, and in 1922 it was 1,250,000. There we have the industry doubled, and a little more than doubled, in that time. Hon. gentlemen have an idea that we practically have a monopoly of the production of paper. Well, we might practically have one; but with cheap Canadian raw material the paper mills of the New England states do pretty well. How much better they would do if this attempt to harness Carillon power in their interest had been successful, and they also had cheap Canadian power. As it is, New England's output for 1922 was 6,228 tons of paper, 5,160 tons of pulp, and 1,555 tons of paper board, and so on. Oh yes, cheap Canadian power would be of immense benefit to this particular interest. The figures I have given form its daily output. The requirements of the boot and shoe industry, of rubber goods, leather, and other industries are also set out—all the different activities in which when we are functioning here, our co-patriots from Quebec can work at home, and when they are not functioning here in which they work on the other side of the line. The details of these industries are all set out, and the government will find this information very interesting reading. They will find a very interesting calculation also. They will find that plate 18, page 132, furnishes a very interesting table in connection with population. It is rather an amazing table. If there are any people who cannot fairly be charged with race suicide, one would think it is our people of Quebec attached as they are to home and family. They have one of the best birth rates, if not the best, in the world; their birth rate is infinitely higher than the birth rate of the New England states.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." He is right. But let us look at the sad picture painted, not as has been said from government benches from time to time by a politician out of office, but by an outside observer seeing to serve his own country and telling the truth as he sees it.

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well the figures will be loud enough I should think for anyone having the slightest interest at least in the province of Quebec. With respect to the figures I have to give there is a map made, and the curve is drawn on it. It is plate 18 which compares the growth of population in the province of Quebec with the growth of population in southern industrial New England. It compares Quebec with the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island. By these investigators the population of Quebec in 1855 is given as 1,400,000. These figures are taken from the plate referred to. They may be approximations, but they are practically correct. Hon. gentlemen will understand what I mean by that is, that when you are reading from a map it is rather hard to scale the figures exactly. However, they are approximately correct. In 1920 the population of Quebec is given as approximately 2,325,000, an increase of 66.07 per cent. As against these figures these industrial states—where there is a comparatively low birth rate percentage as compared with Quebec—had in 1885 a population of 3,000,000, and in 1920 a population of over 5,800,000, an increase of 93.33 per cent. Is there any question as to what the building up of the industries immediately to the south of Quebec is doing to that province? Is any hon. gentleman really serious when he suggests that the energy developed from the water-powers of Quebec should be exported for the purpose of strengthening the lure that is already so strong? These figures down to 1920 are bad enough, but the situation which they present is nothing to the situation as it is to-day. Hon. gentlemen know that the exodus which the figures indicate has been multiplied since; our own figures show it. And yet there is a proposition here that something ought to be done which will enable the industry to the south to work still cheaper than the industry to the north and attract still more of our people. Those who support the idea of an exportation of power to-day are not content with seeing our pulpwood and other raw material taken out of this country; they also want to fortify that exportation with the exportation of the one thing in which the Canadian still has an advantage.

Mr. ETHIER: What about the combine?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend talks about combine. Combine has nothing to do with it. An application has been sent to the government, but not acted upon, under which that power would be developed for the benefit of the people in the district of the valley. My hon. friend is against it. He is in favour of this proposition which takes away from the people of this country power which is urgently needed.

Mr. ETHIER: Not at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says not at all. If he had been here this afternoon he would have heard the admission from the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) that eastern Ontario never had a proper supply of power. We all know that eastern Ontario has been beggared in her industrial development. Does my hon. friend rejoice in that fact? We also know that an application for development is on file, and that the Ontario commission will proceed to-morrow, if they get a chance, with the development of the Carillon power, just so that eastern Canada can live, so that the people in eastern Ontario may perhaps, as they ought to, enjoy power as has western Ontario. There is great danger, Mr. Speaker, that irreparable injury may be done to Canada unless in some way or another we are protected. I look upon this resolution as something in the best interests of the government, and I am absolutely sincere when I say that. This campaign is no new thing and it has been going on, not for weeks, but for months. Indeed it is a matter of years and it is ready now. Here is the report and here is the market, and there are the bankers, the great financial house in Boston of Harris, Forbes & Co; interested as they are in maintaining the commercial interests of the industries of the New England states. There is something ahead. There is $4,500,000 to be saved if this thing can be got and taken away at the expense of Canada. It is in the very best interests of the government that this resolution be adopted, and that this pressure should be removed from them. This pressure is all the more dangerous, if the Prime Minister knows nothing about it, although it goes on for a length of time. It has been going on now for a long time—these revised drafts, bearing on their faces the evidence of careful preparation. It is absolutely in the interests of the government and everybody else that the resolution should pass as it stands. It is in the interests of Canada that this question should be settled. I hope the government will take this resolution in the spirit in which it is offered. It is not intended as a want of confidence motion, but they can turn it into that if they so desire. We in Ontario as well as our friends in Quebec are deeply interested in this question. We want to see Canada left with a plentiful supply of electric power for the development of her natural resources, for the development of our paper and pulp industry and for a greater development of the yet unknown Eldorado of the north in both of these provinces, which is only possible with cheap and plentiful power. I therefore support the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PIUS MICHAUD (Restigouche and Madawaska): I have listened attentively to the discussion of this important subject for many hours, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot understand the attitude of my hon. friends to your left. I do not know what shivers have taken hold of them in the past two years. They seem to be embarrassed on account of the extra powers we may develop in this country in connection with our hydro-electric. In all the provinces of the Dominion we have power to develop, and no doubt in many provinces there will be a surplus of power that should be sold somewhere outside of our own country. For instance, we are developing our natural resources in many provinces as well as we possibly can. I ask my hon. friends from the prairie provinces; if they had no market for their produce outside of Canada, what would they do with the extra quantity of wheat that they produce? The same thing applies to the electric power development of this country. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) has spoken very openly and clearly on the subject, and I have listened to him with great attention. He has alluded to the province of New Brunswick as did the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), and I wish to speak in reference to the latter province. In that province we have one of the largest water-powers of the Maritime provinces. Its development is required in order that our province should go ahead. Recently application for the development of the Grand falls was made to the province of New Brunswick, and a meeting was held in Montreal last Friday and Saturday in connection with this matter. I hold in my hand the Gazette, published in Montreal, in which appears a report of the decision at the meeting of the International Joint Commission. The report reads as follows:

The chairman, C. A. Magrath, entrusted to Sir William Hearst the task of issuing a statement.

Here is the statement:

The commission has granted an order of approval of the plans submitted by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of New Brunswick for the development of power at Grand Falls, N.B., subject to a number of terms and conditions with reference to the compensation of all parties—

I might say en passant, that this is in connection with the shore rights along the St. John river. The report proceeds:

—sustaining damages, or whose property has been in any way taken or injured in connection with the development.

The United States claimed at first that they had a sovereign right in connection with this development on account of their international situation. After a long debate and after the argument made by the attorney representing Canada at that last meeting the United States gave up the idea of their sovereign rights, and in order to show that they had no rights at all the Canadian attorney established and proved to the representative of the United States that as soon as the shore rights on the American side were purchased by the New Brunswick Hydro Electric Commission the United States would no longer have any right in connection with this development.

In order to show the House that the Americans have no longer any rights, I may say that they have asked, not as a compensation, not under their sovereign right, but just as a compromise, that the New Brunswick Electric Company should sell them 2,000 horse-power and they would pay for it just the same amount as would be paid by a Canadian consumer. The 2,000 horse-power does not represent the rights of the Americans as far as the international boundary is concerned. The international boundary on each side of the river covers a distance of seventy miles. The Americans are claiming only 2,000 horse-power, whereas we are going to develop between 50,000 and 75,000 horse-power. They do not claim even one-fifth of their rights according to the agreement which I have just read. This water-power is developed on Canadian soil entirely, and according to the engineers the dam that will be built will allow the water to flow back for a distance of only fourteen miles, that is fourteen miles out of a distance of seventy miles as far as the international boundary is concerned. Our American friends are willing and ready to give us what we are entitled to. In order to make this development a success, while a certain quantity of this power will be needed to fill our requirements at home, we feel that we are going to develop more than we need at home, and for that reason we want to have the power, not under the Dominion government, but under our provincial rights, to sell outside the extra power that we shall have on hand.

Therefore, I would suggest that it would be very apropos for the House to arrive at this conclusion, that the export of hydro-electric power from Canada should be permitted only on yearly license, and that hereafter no license for export of power beyond that already granted should be issued except with the concurrence of the province or provinces in which it is proposed to develop such power. That means that no power should be exported out of any province by the Dominion without the consent of the province where the power is developed. Let me appeal to my hon. friends from the west. They are just about to develop their provincial water-powers, and I remember not very long ago in the Railway committee seeing on two occasions moving pictures showing the great water-powers about to be developed in Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia. I ask my hon. friends from the west: When you start to develop your power and you have a surplus after providing for all your industries, farmers, merchants and the rest of your inhabitants, what are you going to do with your surplus? Are you going to be allowed to keep that at home without deriving any revenue from it? Are you going to let the government say: No, we will not allow you to export any of that power? You want to control that privilege. As long as a province has the right to export its own power, there is no danger of its going too far in that direction.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who is giving the provinces this right?

Mr. MICHAUD: They have the right actually to develop their own power.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But to refuse to export it?

Mr. MICHAUD: If the proposition of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. LeSueur) passes in this House, no power will be allowed to be exported according to the laws of the Dominion of Canada. If I understand his proposition rightly, he is going to stop any further exportation of hydro-electric power from this Dominion into the United States or anywhere else. My contention is that we should not allow the Dominion to control our provincial rights in that regard. The little province of New Brunswick is entering upon a large expenditure in order to develop a water-power which is one of the biggest in the Maritime provinces, and it would be unfortunate for us, after having incurred so much expense, if we were to be deprived of our rights. Already we have spent a great deal of money, already we are about to issue bonds, and if this resolution carries New Brunswick will be prevented from going on with this development and from issuing its bonds, because none of our financial companies will dare to advance us any money when the Dominion government is to control our rights and privileges. I hope I have made myself clear. If this proposition goes through, it means that my province will no longer be able to develop this great water-power. It means that all our ambitions, our undertakings, will come to nothing, and I shall be one of those who will be very sorry to know to-night, after this vote, that our provincial rights have been taken away from us at the request of my hon. friends to your left.

Mr. HERBERT MARLER (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, what I have to say apropos of this resolution may be said in a very few words. I regret I was not present to hear all the remarks which the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. LeSueur) made on this subject. I am sure in this case he, in his usual fashion, placed this proposal before the House in an extremely clear and fair manner. I have, however, heard the greater part of the other discussion which has taken place relative to this matter. No one can deny for a moment that our water-powers are one of the great natural resources of Canada. It does not need any very vivid stretch of the imagination to realize that some day we shall likely require for use in Canada substantially all the water-powers which we have developed and undeveloped at the present time. But being one of the great natural resources of this Dominion, those water-powers which are undeveloped now should be utilized either in the development of Canada or for such purposes otherwise in the sole interest of Canada itself. In other words, although I believe the water-powers undeveloped at the present time will eventually be needed for use in Canada alone, and for that reason it seems it would be an extremely unwise thing to export any of that power whatsoever, yet at the same time it does not seem to me entirely wise or in the greatest interest of Canada immediately to shut the door and say that we shall never at any time export any of those water-powers, because the occasion might arise—and we do not know when it might arise; we cannot even say whether it ever will arise—when it might become vitally necessary, in the interest of this country for bargaining purposes or for other reasons, to utilize certain of these water-powers in procuring some other greater advantage for Canada. It seems to me therefore unwise for us in this House to-day to shut the door definitely and absolutely for all time and say that we shall never export water power.

My hon. friend from West York this evening has emphasized the various necessities for the water-powers of the Dominion. He has read extracts from various reports and has placed the situation before the House in a very lucid and fair manner. But I do not think that there are many of us who needed to be told all that that hon. gentleman has told us. We realize all these facts to the full. We realize on this side of the House just as much and indeed more than hon. gentlemen realize opposite the great importance of doing everything possible to develop this country to its very fullest extent; and I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite can point to us and say that we do not desire to preserve for use in the development of the Dominion our water powers or any other natural resources which are in the country. The preservation and use of our natural resources has at all times to this government been a matter of the greatest concern, and I have no reason to believe that this policy will be departed from in any respect so far as our water-powers are concerned. It is true that there are a number of undeveloped water powers in this country and in this vicinity. In the Ottawa valley there is undeveloped water-power to the extent of at least 350,000 horse-power; while on the Rouge river there is power to the extent of over 20,000 horse-power, on the Nation over 20,000 horse-power, on the Lievre over 80,000, and on the Gatineau over 150,000 horse-power, all undeveloped. The casual observer might ask, what is the use in allowing all this water-power to go to waste? I do not follow that theory at all. I have no hesitation in declaring that I am not in favour of the export of water-power except in the case of some actual necessity which is shown to be of distinct benefit and advantage to this country, nor am I in favour on the other hand of absolutely closing the door forever against such export, and taking the stand that we should never under any circumstances permit the export of water-power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If parliament closes the door cannot parliament open it again, should the contingency ever arise?

Mr. MARLER: Parliament is expressing an opinion at the present time, and there is no occasion so far as I can see for parliament to come to any other decision than that our water-powers should be used for the general advantage of the nation. I see no reason why we should at the present time irrevocably decide against the export of water-power at any time should it be deemed advisable but at the same time I say definitely that at the moment I would close the door not only against the export of water-power on a one year lease, as is contemplated by this resolution, but also against the export of off-peak power. There is no reason before the House or the country just now why we should export any power at all, whether it be off-peak or otherwise.

My hon. friend for Restigouche and Madawaska (Mr. Michaud), properly placed before the House very largely the same opinion I had intended stating myself. The export of power, I take it, is governed by the federal laws, while the utilization of that power is governed largely if not entirely by the respective provinces. In other words, the Dominion exercises in this matter, as it does in regard to many other matters, a general supervision, while the provinces exercise a specific supervision over such matters as come particularly witihin their own purview or within their borders.

Mr. HANSON: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the provinces have any constitutional power with respect to the export of water-power?

Mr. MARLER: I am not suggesting that. I shall be glad if the hon. member will correct me; but as I understand the law, the export of water-power is not within the jurisdiction of the provinces, even if in any case that power is entirely within the province, without the consent of the Dominion. That is the law on the subject. I was proceeding to say that while the Dominion exercises a general supervision over the export of power, yet the provinces themselves control the question as to what shall be developed within their own borders—what their specific requirements may be,—whether or not the industries which require development should be assisted, and in the same way whether it is in their interest to develop water-powers, to refuse export or to export.

The views of my own province on this subject are well known in this House, and I adhere to those views. Without any hesitation whatever I say that so far as the province of Quebec is concerned the attitude is that water-power should not be exported; and I am in accord with the government of that province in that regard. But I do not agree with the terms of this resolution, that there should be no export of water-power except as regards off-peak power. I go further than that and say that without the consent of the province, wherein there may be any development, no water-power whatsoever should be exported. I do not think that anything could be clearer than that; I do not think that any opinion could be more honestly expressed in this House than the attitude I have stated on my own account as to whether power should be exported or not. Exportation does not rest with the province as a matter of law, although it may be a question of expediency with the province as to whether or not a certain thing should be done in the interests of that province. A grave question must be faced in connection with many inter-provincial water-powers, and that is as to whether one particular province or another owns a certain water-power. And that urges me to express the view that it is for the provinces to act in co-operation with the government of the Dominion and vice versa with a view to deciding whether it is wise or not in any given case to export water-power. When such a question comes up for consideration, then I think is the proper time for a decision to be reached in a matter of this description.

Hon. J. B. M. BAXTER (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should be sorry if anything in this debate would misrepresent the attitude of the province of New Brunswick with regard to water-power development. It is true, as my hon. friend from Restigouche and Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) was saying, that the province is about to embark upon a very large expenditure for this purpose. I do not think that the people of New Brunswick wish to add very largely to their capital debt merely for the purpose of getting back a bare return upon the outlay by the sale of power to a foreign country for the upbuilding of industries there rather than within the limits of the province itself. I think New Brunswick can be described as a unit in desiring the fullest and most extensive development of water-power within its limits for which a market can be found. Now, what must that market be? The development of our wood resources principally, to a minor extent the application of electricity to farm purposes, and incidentally, of course, the lighting of cities, towns and villages. The export of power from New Brunswick would mean that for every unit exported a precisely similar development would be sustained in the state of Maine in competition with the development of our own natural resources. No New Brunswicker can want that. What we do want is this development within our own territory. It is the one opportunity that we have. I feel that the people of New Brunswick will stand by me in regretting any suggestion that we are simply going into the development of water-power for the purpose of exporting it and building up a foreign country at the expense of our own resources.

Now, I have no fear that this amendment in any way touches the situation of New Brunswick. It does not. As my hon. friend from Restigouche and Madawaska has explained, the International Joint Commission has approved of an arrangement which has been made. They declined, and I am very sorry that they declined, to enter into a discussion and ultimate decision of the question as to whether or not the state of Maine had any right to demand a portion of this power. As a matter of fact it is not really the international boundary that is in question; there are very large areas of the watershed within the state of Maine, without the utilization of which it would be impossible to develop the project at Grand Falls to its ultimate capacity. The province of New Brunswick has no right to go into the state of Maine and demand to be allowed to place dams there and pen back that water; and the state of Maine, in my judgment, has no right to say that the consideration for so doing shall be the sharing of the power. But the action of the International Joint Commission has virtually treated it as such, and I notice that an arrangement has been completed for the export of about 2,000 horse-power to the state of Maine, which has accepted this as an equivalent to what it claims as its proportion. It bases that not at all on the figures given by my hon. friend, but on the view that it would be entitled to one-sixteenth of the power produced, which it estimates at about 50,000 horse-power. An arrangement has been made that a certain concern in the state of Maine shall receive this 2,000 horse-power annually.

The International Joint Commission having approved of that arrangement, we must remember that the commission acts entirely under a treaty to which this country, as part of the empire, is a party. It has the force and effect that all treaties have by section 132 of the British North America Act, which provides that:

> The parliament and government of Canada shall have all powers necessary or proper for performing the obligations of Canada or of any province thereof as part of the British Empire towards foreign countries arising under treaties between the empire and such foreign countries.

Therefore the 2,000 horse-power that will go out under this arrangement from the province of New Brunswick will go out not as an export controllable by this parliament, but as a fulfilment of a decision or as approval by a body which has sovereignty in the matter, that is the International Joint Commission, based upon a treaty, which treaty must be supported by any legislation that is necessary, and that legislation must be enacted by this parliament. We are obligated by the British North America Act to do it. So if legislation to the fullest extent were to be based upon this amendment, it would not affect the arrangement that has been made with regard to New Brunswick, or any other arrangement which would be imposed as part of a bargain approved by the International Joint Commission.

Further than that I do not feel any special interest in the question, except on the general ground that what we can utilize for our own development should be utilized here and not sent out of the country to compete with us. It is no way to build up our own country. Hon. gentlemen may view the matter in any way they like, but it is morally impossible to continue the practice of export over a long series of years and then deny the people who have been getting the benefit of the exported power the right to continue it. It is all very well to say that they understand you will put an end to it. It is not the way that one decent neighbour would act towards another decent neighbour who had done him no harm, and countries must be controlled by the same principles that would apply to citizens. Therefore before any power is exported and rights to it acquired, it is only fair I think for us to say to our neighbour, "Look here, we are going to need all this for ourselves, and we are not going to increase the quantity that you now get." That is the principle we should apply. But every man within hearing of my voice, every man who is interested in the question, knows there is something more immediate, something more insistent than that. We know that it is only by the advocacy of this principle at this time that a willing government is being rendered afraid to take a step which will be disastrous to Canada.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): Mr. Chairman, coming from the province of Ontario, the pioneer province in hydro-electric development, I believe the motion does not go far enough, for I am absolutely opposed to the export of power, as is the Ontario government. As a result of the shortage of power, 375 municipalities of Ontario sent representatives to a meeting in Toronto, and after discussing the matter thoroughly they passed a resolution pointing out the vital necessity of preserving all our water-powers for the development of the Dominion. The most important problem before the people of Canada to-day is the problem of cheap light and power, because this great boon is not intended solely for the benefit of the urban centres, but for the benefit also of the rural districts. The province of Ontario has set an example to the other provinces of what can be done in the development of our water-powers for the benefit of the people. Starting in 1910 with the distribution of one thousand horse-power supplied to a few municipalities, by 1915 the movement had increased to such an extent that 100,000 horse-power was required to meet the demands of the many municipalities that were taking advantage of cheap light and power, five years later the Hydro Electric Commission was generating 350,000 horse-power, and to-day they are maintaining a connected load of 760,000 horse-power. On behalf of these municipalities in Ontario I wish to protest against any policy of the further export of power. To-day we are exporting 156,000 horse-power, which is the equivalent of 1,300,000 tons of black coal, of a commercial value of $8,000,000. This is taking place at a time when power is needed in Ontario especially in the Ottawa valley and central Ontario, and when some of the larger municipalities are suffering from a scarcity of power. I say here now that the export of power should stop at its present figure. No more electrical energy should be exported by the people of this country especially when we shall be needing this power ourselves in the next few years. The rate of increase at which we are using and will use electrical power in the next few years is as follows, according to the report of the Department of Mines of the Dominion government:

> Should the rate of installation since 1910 be maintained at its present rate there will be installed in 1925, 4,000,000 horse-power; in 1930, 5,000,000 horse-power; in 1935, 6,000,000 horse-power; and in 1940, 7,000,000 horse-power. These growth figures are considered conservative as the rate of growth since 1920 has been considerably in excess of the rate over the whole period from 1910. Available reserves are more than ample to take care of these future demands, as outlined, for a long time to come.
> The water-power now developed in Canada represents an investment of over $687,000,000.

For the 387 municipalities in the province of Ontario who are associated in the hydro electric movement in the province there has been purchased in the past twelve years by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario 24 distinct water-powers, 30 hydraulic generating plants, and over 60 electrical distribution systems. There has been expended altogether on this development $178,000,000 of the money of the municipalities. The commission now operates electrical power undertakings which, when fully developed, will have a potentiality of over 1,000,000 horsepower. The length of the high-tension transmission lines alone of the commission's great transmission networks aggregates over 3,500 miles. The Queenston-Chippawa power development, utilizing a head of 305 feet on the Niagara river, is the largest individual hydro-electric plant in the world. The total investment in the hydro-electrical undertaking now aggregates over $250,000,000.

This hydro-electric movement in the province of Ontario has been a great boon to the people of the province. It has enabled them to light their streets, to have commercial lighting for the industries of the provinces, and to have electricity for domestic lighting. The work of the housewife has been turned into a joy as the result of this development. Electric cook stoves, electric lighting in place of gas light and coal oil lamps have lightened the work and brightened thousands of workingmen's homes in the province. Every workman's house in Ontario has electricity to-day, and in Ontario the average bill for electric power is about one dollar per month. It is the working classes as well as the manufacturers and farmers who are getting the benefit of this great development. There has been invested in hydro-electric development in the province of Ontario $250,000,000 of the people's money of that province. That is a sample of what other provinces could do if they would conserve the magnificent heritage which the people of this country have in their water-powers.

Let me emphasize that no citizen of Ontario has been taxed for this great undertaking. They pay no direct tax for this great public boon. You have never seen a cent on your tax bill for this development. The money for capital interest and sinking fund is paid by the direct consumers of power. In Toronto alone it has saved the people during the past twelve or fourteen years $31,000,000. If this movement had been under private ownership that $31,000,000 would have gone in dividends to shareholders. There are no dividends in the hydro-electric movement. Power is supplied at cost to the people, and this great boon of cheap electric light and power, which was brought about under the policy of the late Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck, with the co-operation of the municipalities of the province, has been a revelation; it is without a peer in the world to-day. With the exception of the provincial grants towards the construction of rural distribution systems,—and such grants, like those for good roads, agricultural schools, etc, are made in order to promote agriculture—every portion of the cost is fully met in the bills paid by the consumers of the electrical energy, and by them alone. Those who receive the service are the only ones who pay for it, and such payment is made in conformity with a system of charging that permits an annual adjustment with consumers on the basis of power at cost. Electrical energy, once a luxury, has, in Ontario, been so reduced in cost that it has become a common commodity for the service of all. It is the power of the people made usable for the people by the people.

In addition to that, the hydro electric system in the province of Ontario pays taxes on land and building; it pays business taxes; it pays taxes not only to the provincial government, but to the municipalities of the province. Every plant in the province of Ontario to-day is paying not only municipal and provincial taxes, but taxes to the government of this country. Millions of dollars have been paid out by the system in federal revenue taxes, in custom duties on the materials and equipment which have to be brought in from the United States and other countries.

The reduced municipal street lighting service account is saving the municipalities of the province $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 a year, and that saving is being enjoyed by 387 municipalities in the province which received this service at cost.

In western Ontario in 1924 there was an increase over 1923 in the use of hydro-electric power, notwithstanding the depression in business in Ontario. The connected load increased there by 110,000 horse-power in 1924 over 1923 in western Ontario. I am sorry there are not more of my Progressive friends here to-night, because Sir James Whitney intended this boon of cheap light and power for the farmers of the province as well as for the city and town men—the artisans and mechanics. The advantages were to be reciprocal. Just at a time when the Ontario government are bonusing rural lines, the people are asking for more power. It could be got from the St. Lawrence, at Morrisburg, where 800,000 horse-power is now going out to the ocean every year unused, and from the Ottawa river.

Eastern Ontario has been stagnant in business for many years past, and as I said the other day the people of the Ottawa valley have themselves to blame for that. They stayed out in the cold and refused to join the central and western municipalities of the province in this great hydro-electric movement, with the result that they are suffering to-day worse than any other part of the province. The only place they can get power now is from development on the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers, and no one can tell the exact extent to which industrial development in the cities and towns along the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers has been retarded by this failure to develop and generate cheap electrical hydro-power in eastern Ontario. It is clear that eastern Ontario cannot postpone power development on the St. Lawrence indefinitely.

This afternoon I asked the Minister of Railways what was the policy of the government regarding an application made on behalf of nearly 277 municipalities of Ontario by the Hydro Electric Power Commission for leave to develop power at Morrisburg for the people living in the eastern counties of the province. Many of the cities and towns along the St. Lawrence such as Gananoque and Brockville, are stagnant to-day. The population of some of these municipalities is decreasing, and it is impossible for industries, for want of power, to locate in these places. The same is true of communities in the Ottawa valley. The reason is because no adequate supply of cheap light, heat or power has been developed and made available for them. I believe in a national policy throughout the country not only with respect to hydraulic power but also as regards coal and oil. These magnificent water-powers which Canada possesses, and which are capable of developing all told 18,000,000 horse-power, should be retained by the people of Canada under a national policy which would be directed towards the industrial and agricultural advancement of the country. The power capable of being developed at cost should be under some system of direct public control and should not be exported for any reason whatever. I may say that for four succeeding sessions now I have advocated such a national policy not only for coal and oil, but for water-power, for native raw materials and for the products of the sea, the soil, the forest and the mine as well. I believe that is the only policy that will prove satisfactory to the people and that will be successful in building up this country. The Niagara, Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers provide the only sources of light, heat and power that Ontario has left. The original contract with the Ontario Power Company was for only 1,000 horse-power. The small initial load of less than 1,000 horse-power increased rapidly until in 1914 it was 77,000 horse-power, and by 1915 the commission reached the limit of its contract with the Ontario Power Company for 100,000 horse-power. The commission arranged for an additional power supply from the Canadian Niagara Power Company of 50,000 horse-power and from the Toronto Power Company of over 25,000 horse-power. Subsequently, in August, 1917, it purchased outright the Ontario Power Company with its plant capacity of 160,000 horse-power, which was increased to 180,000 horse-power in 1919, and, in December, 1920, acquired the Toronto Power Company, with its plant of over 125,000 horse-power capacity. In 1920 the load was 356,000 horse-power. The new Queenston-Chippawa development provides for an ultimate development of 600,000 horse-power. There is possible to-day a development of 700,000 horse-power under the plans of the Hydro Electric Commission. At the present time the commission is operating twenty separate developments which have a potentiality of over a million horse-power.

The people of the province of Ontario are watching what is taking place. They are watching the federal government and the provincial government to see what the outcome of their policy is going to be in connection with the development of hydro-electric power. They want to see who it is that has been retarding the development of power not only in eastern Ontario but in the western part of the province as well. Nothing is more calculated to carry out that most desired movement to keep the farmer on the farm than the provision of cheap light, heat and power. In many parts of the province of Ontario the farmer is to-day getting these conveniences owing to the policy which was inaugurated by the late Sir James P. Whitney. This policy is being carried out in the face of considerable opposition. I do not know anybody who did more to retard the growth of this movement in the province of Ontario than did the Hon. E. C. Drury during the four years of his administration, and in this he was aided and abetted by the commission appointed to inquire into the work of the Hydro Electric Commission and in effect to destroy the whole movement. The people got rid of this anti-hydro government.

A large amount of capital has been invested in "hydro" undertakings by the following systems: Niagara, Essex county, Thorold, Severn, Eugenia, Wasdells, Muskoka, St. Lawrence, Rideau, Thunder Bay, Ottawa, Central Ontario and Trent, and Nipissing. A total of $178,960,696, has been invested in the foregoing systems. To this must be added $62,892,504, invested in municipalitie's distributing systems and other assets. The revenue obtained from the consumers during the year 1923 was more than sufficient to meet the full cost of generating and transmitting power, and to provide for all operating expenses and fixed charges of municipal utility plants. The commission collected from the municipal utilities and other customers for power sold a total sum of $15,742,831 which was appropriated to meet the expenses of administration and operation, and to set aside adequate sums in respect of sinking fund, renewals and contingencies, leaving a net balance of $345,588, collected in excess of requirements, which sum was returned to the municipalities and applied to the reduction of their power bills for the year. The total revenue collected by the municipalities amounted to $17,219,044, the cost of power was $8,699,026, the cost of operation, maintenance and administration was $3,901,739, the debenture charges and interest $2,607,741, and depreciation $916,782, this gives $16,125,291 to be deducted from a total revenue of $17,219,044, leaving a surplus for the year of $1,093,753.

Throughout "hydro" municipalities the use of electrical appliances is greatly promoted by the low cost of electricity. In most of these municipalities the average family may take full advantage of the cleanliness, convenience and safety of electric lighting for less than $1 per month; while, for a small additional cost, electric fans, irons, washing machines, vacuum cleaners, toasters and certain light cooking appliances may be utilized. Cooking by electricity is rapidly becoming popular.

The difficulties of electrification of country districts are universally recognized. Generally speaking, from the viewpoint of the central station, this class of consumer is unprofitable. Only a small return can be secured on any capital invested. The operating costs, due to the distances to be covered, are excessive. The load per mile of distribution is small—compare, for example, the number of services connected in a mile of city streets and along a mile of rural line.

In spite of the handicaps inherent in rural distribution of electrical energy, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission has made substantial progress in this department of its activities. Its first rural lines were built late in 1912, but in 1917, the construction of rural lines was suspended, due to the high costs resulting from war conditions.

The Ontario government, having long recognized the benefits of hydro-electrical energy, to the agricultural industry of the province, passed, in 1921, legislation authorizing the bonusing, up to 50 per cent of their cost, of rural primary lines on highways throughout the province; in 1924, further legislation authorizing the similar bonusing of rural secondary lines was enacted. Under existing legislation the government of the province of Ontario now pays 50 per cent of the cost of all construction of rural lines in connection with the distribution of power to rural communities throughout the province.

The total mileage of rural lines at present operated by the commission is 858 miles, giving electrical service to about 14,000 customers. If the farmers of the province of Ontario bestir themselves and do what they can to save these water-powers they can save 60,000 horse-power. Under the Ontario Power Company's contract which the Hydro-Electric assumed when they bought the system some few years ago 60,000 is being exported to the States to-day. It goes over the transmission lines at Lewiston and is handed over to the Niagara and Lockport Company. That company distributes power at points in the Lewiston-Niagara district on the American side through to Tonawanda and on to Lockport, in New York state lighting up the streets of these municipalities. This large quantity of 60,000 horse-power serves for the domestic and commercial lighting of municipalities on the American side. The commission to-day is burdened with that contract of 60,000 horse-power exported at an amount of $12.35 per horse-power and at a loss of $12 per horse-power. That contract has twenty-five years yet to run. It had three twenty-year renewal terms, but that provision has been abrogated by the government of the province. I maintain that we should stop this exportation and go no further; otherwise we shall not have sufficient power to supply our own towns, cities and rural communities in Ontario.

Although the aggregate load distributed to the rural dwellers is, and must always be, but a relatively small proportion of the total energy distributed by the "hydro", its influence upon the economic life of the province of Ontario will doubtless be far-reaching and is already a factor of importance. Agriculture still ranks as the most important of our industries and in these days with farm labour scarce and expensive, anything that takes its place is a great help to the farmer, for, as is universally ackowledged, upon him, in the last analysis, rest the prosperity and welfare of the community. Hitherto the rural resident has thought chiefly of electrical service in connection with lighting, but his greater need is for convenient power. The appliances that are so helpful to the city dweller, such as washing-machines, irons, fans, etc., are of even greater help to the farmer's wife; but, in addition, the farmer can make use of a large number of devices which are even more labour-saving than those used in the city, such, for example, as water-pumps, cream-separators, churns and milking-machines which can be all operated by quite small motors. Where electrical service of larger capacity can economically be installed, additional machinery, such as buzz and drag-saws, choppers, root-pulpers, ensilage-cutting boxes and threshers, for which the farmer usually employs auxiliary power, can also be operated electrically.

I should like to find out from the government what has been done with the Ontario government's application to develop and distribute power on the St. Lawrence at Morrisburg. The application of the hydro has been before the Dominion government for two years. Has it been refused? I may say that this is a very important problem for the people of Ontario, because you have only two sources of power supply left in eastern Ontario, namely, the St. Lawrence and the Ottawa rivers. As far as the eastern portion of the province is concerned there is an abundant supply of potential water-power to be obtained from the river at Morrisburg and the Long Sault rapids. This is an international portion of the St. Lawrence river. The province of Ontario owns 50 per cent interest in that power, amounting to 800,000 horse-power. To sum up: Ontario gave to Adam Beck the chief stewardship of $160,000,000 invested in hydro on behalf of 2,200,000 shares in Hydro properties. The results that Adam Beck achieved by his stewardship of Hydro are set down in the following statement.

1. Every dollar of the $160,000,000 Hydro investment is earning interest and sinking fund.

2. Hydro investment saved Ontario from a coal famine that would have bankrupted the province in war time.

3. Hydro investment saved 2,200,000 shareholders over $75,000,000 in reduced coal, light and power bills.

4. Hydro investment saved Ontario over $100,000,000 on coal prices, which would have gone to $30 per ton in war time but for the Hydro investment that gave Ontario the equivalent of 3,000,000 tons of United States coal per annum.

The force in the national life of Canada that most truly proved itself Liberal in the best sense and Progressive in the best sense of those two much abused words, Liberal and Progressive, is the force represented by the Hydro Conservatives in Ontario. The triumphs achieved by the Hydro Conservatives of Ontario under the leadership of Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck have cut Ontario's coal consumption in half, and cut 75 per cent off Ontario's light and power bills.

They seek to get 300,000 horse-power from this Carillon development and export it to the United States, and once the power is exported to the United States as in the case of the Ontario Power Company and the Niagara Lockport Company it is gone forever. Power once gone is gone for all time to come; once exported it is always exported. That is a principle that is true in hydro development here, and all the world over. In the case of the Niagara Lockport Company the power exported is used by the American municipalities for commercial and domestic lighting of all kinds. Look at the trouble you have got into over the Chicago diversion of water. Water has been taken illegally as not intended by the people of this country. Most of the courts and the press and the people say it has been "stolen." They have taken that water at the rate of 10,000 second-feet, equivalent in horse-power to 35 million dollars a year. That is the equivalent of the electrical energy from the water which has been illegally taken. If you have had international trouble over the water that has been wrongfully taken at Chicago, what kind of trouble will you have if the power derived from these waters is exported forever? Certain legal questions have arisen which no doubt will go to the Privy Council, because all that Canada is interested in is the surface water for navigation purposes, For example, at Port Colborne, the federal government takes all it needs for the purpose of navigation and the water required for the Welland canal. The surplus waters, subject to the rights of navigation belong to the province of Ontario. Half of the Niagara river subject to navigation belongs to the province. The province of Ontario owns the bed of the river halfway out, and the banks and rapids of the Niagara river. That is its physical property and the interest it has in those waters. I think the Privy Council, if a specific case went to it, would so decide, but the question of federal export tax and license is very doubtful, Mr. Speaker.

An international question has arisen, not only from the international standpoint I have referred to, but also from the legal side, as to what international rights the United States and Canada have in those boundary waters, and secondly what rights the provinces have in these navigable waters. Some of the license rights claimed, I contended about a month ago, especially in the Niagara district, are illegal and it is very doubtful if the Dominion has the power, although the Minister of Justice said that his department had given its opinion that the export tax was intra vires.

I will support the amendment because in my opinion the day for the further export of power and any extension of it is gone. I agree with the second clause of the resolution that no license should be issued beyond those which have been issued, but I do not agree with the proviso which says "except for off-peak power."

There is no such thing as cheap power exported as off-peak load power. Any electrical engineer will tell you that. In the case of power exported to Lewiston and Lockport, which is exported and distributed by the Niagara-Lockport Company you cannot turn off the power during peak hours. You cannot shut off the power exported in the industries on the streets of Lockport at peak hours. They require to have that power available for twenty-four hours a day for 365 days in the year. They cannot go behind that contract for 60,000 horse-power which has twenty-five years yet to run at $12.35 per horse-power. The time has come now to hearken to the warning and adopt a proper policy in this connection. It is said they may cut off our coal supplies, but there are two sides to that question. That matter was discussed in this House a short time ago. Great Britain seeks at present a market for her surplus coal. There is an overproduction there and they have an accumulation of 10 million tons of coal which should be brought to Canada, and we should obtain all our coal supplies from countries under the British flag. We need not pay attention when they say they would cut off our coal supply, because there are two sides to it. It is deplorable to go to Lewiston, continue on up the river and see the connected chain of factories from Lewiston all the way to Niagara Falls and to Buffalo. Why are those factories there? That is a concrete example of the futility of the policy of exporting power. All those factories are linked up there and why? Because of the generous, magnanimous and foolish policy of the government in exporting power from Ontario to the Niagara and Lockport district. Starting on the Canadian side from the village of Queenston what have we? Queenston is situated right opposite Lewiston, but you can go to Queenston right up to the falls and on to Fort Erie and hardly see an industry. There is hardly an industry along that river front except at the falls, Chippewa and Bridgebury, all the way up to Fort Erie. Why? The industries are mostly on the other side because of the export policy. Further on, up to the city of Buffalo what have we got, as a result of the policy of exporting hard grain and power. We find twenty-eight elevators have been built in Buffalo and are there to-day, and in the Toronto Globe we will see a reference to one of the largest companies in Canada, the Maple Leaf Milling Company, conducted by Mr. D. A. Campbell, with head offices in the Dominion Bank building. The Globe says:

> It is interesting to note that overtures have been made to induce Maple Leaf to establish a mill at Buffalo.

And why? Because of this foolish policy in Canada of exporting hard grain, power and raw material and because of the foolish policy in many other lines in regard to grain and other matters. I believe there is a great deal of truth in the words of the late President Roosevelt, where a similar situation arose in his own country when he was in power. In regard to the waste of water-power in the United States he predicted that the day was not far distant when the United States would run out of coal, natural resources, particularly petroleum and gas. He said:

> The people of our country are threatened by a monopoly more powerful than has been ever seen, as it affects very closely their domestic and industrial life. Our next generation will witness a shortage of those natural resources, petroleum and gas. The price of coal will be such that hydraulic power turned into electrical energy will, owing to its cost, become the prevailing factor for transport, for manufacturers, for lighting and heating our towns. Our hydraulic power alone, entirely and judiciously employed, would be adequate for the present needs of transport, industries, municipalities and private individuals. The major portion of these powers is not developed and remains the national property. It would be madness to part, without conditions, with one of our greatest resources. If we become guilty of this crime, our children will be bound to pay an annual royalty on a capitalization fixed at the highest price that the trade will stand for. They will see themselves struggling with powerful sweaters entrenched behind the doctrine of discharged rights strengthened by all means of protection that money can buy and the cunning of corporations defended by legal men. These ogres of finance will have succeeded long before then to monopolize those resources so as to be able to dictate to the people the management of their affairs and their way of existence. Public opinion will be their least worry.

In conclusion, I appeal to the government of this country to-night to enable the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, having pointed out the shortage of power, to go on with this Morrisburg development. This shortage was pointed out the other day in a report made by the chairman of that commission, Sir Adam Beck. He is sick and we do not know how much longer he will be with the people of Ontario. Possibly he may not be very much longer with us. He has had to face at times in the past twenty years the opposition of both—federal and provincial governments. His health has broken down in the effort to preserve this magnificent heritage of cheap light and power founded by the Conservative party, because this was brought about by the Conservative party in the province of Ontario. It was a protectionist development in the way of preserving their natural resources for the benefit of the people of Ontario. So I appeal to the government of Canada to-day to give the right answer to the government of Ontario in order to enable them to go on with the Morrisburg development. The application has been in for two years. It will enable the commission to supply electrical energy not only for the cities and the towns and the public utilities, but in addition for the farms of the province.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the arguments presented by hon. gentlemen opposite in support of the amendment which has been moved, they seemed to fall in the main under three heads: First, an argument in support of the conservation of our natural resources; second, an argument against international embarrassment through the export of power which it may be difficult and impossible to withdraw later on, and, third, the undesirability of stimulating through the use of power generated in Canada, industries in the States which come into competition with our industries. These three headings include, in the main, the arguments that have been adduced in support of the amendment that has been proposed. With respect to the motive underlying all three contentions, I believe the House as a whole will find itself in general sympathy. Whether or not the amendment as drafted is necessary in order to have the broad principles underlying these very important considerations recognized is, I think, open to question.

In the first place, with respect to the conservation of our natural resources, if an amendment were needed for that purpose, it would I believe, be speedily given support. The question, however, is not at the moment one of the conservation of our natural resources. The electrical energy available at the present time in the central area of Canada is estimated at something between eight and twelve million horse-power, of which but 1,200,000 odd horse-power has been developed, with a capacity development of, perhaps, 3,000,000 horse-power. Electrical energy in the matter of export is not of the same character as some other natural resources, minerals, for example. Minerals, once extracted and exported, are gone. Electrical energy is of such a nature that what we transmit at the moment will make no difference so far as the future supply is concerned. Rivers continue to flow on, and if the opportunity is lost while it presents itself, it is lost forever, to the loss of all concerned. The argument therefore, as regards the conservation of our resources beyond the point of declaring that at no time should Canada export power that she needs or may need within a limited time, has no great application.

I am sure every hon. member would wish, with respect to the export of power to see that under no condition was power exported which we would likely need in the immediate future, or which we would be unable to recover before the time at which the actual need might arise. With any policy that has that end in view, the government is wholeheartedly in accord. That aim however, is met completely by the first clause in the amendment:

> That in the opinion of this House export of hydro-electric power from Canada should be permitted only on yearly license.

Speaking in this House some nights ago, I intimated, as respects the present administration, that such was the basis on which we had proceeded in the past, that it was the basis on which we were proceeding at the present time; and that it is the basis on which we intend to proceed with respect to the export of electrical energy. We intend to grant licenses for export only for a year at a time, and where electrical energy is being exported under license for that period of time, all parties must understand that one of the purposes of the reservation is that it may be distinctly understood that this country may, at any moment, without giving cause for any right of action or ill-feeling on the part of the country to which energy may be exported, have the right to make use of its own electrical energy as required.

As to the second point, the danger of international embarrassment once power is exported on any scale, and attempt at withdrawal is made where industries as a consequence have been built up in an adjoining country, if I recollect aright the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) stressed that point strongly when speaking in the House not very long ago, and in so doing made a special reference to myself as likely to be in sympathy with him in that regard. I am in entire sympathy with that point of view. I do not think it is the part of furthering good relations with our neighbours to take any course likely to occasion serious embarrassment at a critical juncture, and I believe, if electrical energy were to be exported in great quantities for a period of time without every precaution being taken in the leases made, that kind of embarrassment might arise. It would be most unfortunate if, in this country, we did not foresee that possible danger and take every step that a government in its wisdom should take in avoiding possible embarrassment of that character. These international frontier problems are problems which, particularly in this country with its frontier of 4,000 miles, we cannot safeguard too carefully. The reason, however, which should cause us to be careful in the matter of preventing international embarrassment in the future ought to make us equally careful in not imposing a handicap to international negotiations in the present. We in this country have to rely, to some extent at least, upon our neighbours for certain importations. We have witnessed in Canada during the winter season times when we have been grateful to the United States that she has not seen fit to shut off the supply of coal coming into our country, when she has adopted the broad and neighbourly policy of saying that she would do for Canadian industry and for the Canadian people in the matter of coal supply practically what she was doing for her own industry and her own people. That is an attitude which I submit we should not forget in any line of policy we lay down and which may be directed particularly against our great neighbour to the south. What is true in the matter of the importation of coal is true also in regard to the importation of oil. It may also be true at any time with respect to some other commodity or commodities which we find it necessary to obtain from that country.

In addition to this, we may by going the length of the proposed amendment, be imposing a handicap on some of our own provinces in the development of their resources. Mention has been made in the course of the debate to-day of an application that was made to the United States to permit the exportation of power to Canada at a site near Waddington in which there is a small water development on the American side and which some of our industries wished to take advantage of, as it would have been to their interest to have the use of power generated at that point. It is conceivable that at another point in Ontario power development might take place with advantage to a local industry on the other side, where an exchange could be made with our neighbours to balance our importation from them. Such a reciprocal arrangement would be cut off completely if we adopted any such course as is now suggested, and far from its being to the advantage of either country it would be a distinct loss to both.

The amendment declares that no license should be issued beyond those at present outstanding, except for off-peak power. This simply means that the hands of this and all other administrations would be completely tied in the matter of international negotiations; and I submit that it is not in the interests of Canada to have her hands tied in any particular in international negotiations with the United States. We should be as free as possible in our negotiations with the United States on trade and other matters, and should possess all latitude and powers calculated to be of service in such negotiations. We may not have occasion to use them, but to the extent to which we tie our own hands we help to render impotent the power of our own government when negotiating on any relevant question. I submit that to go the length of denying the administration that power of freedom in negotiation which should be reserved to it is simply to work an injury to the country and to render no good service in return.

In regard to the third point which has been raised, namely, that of building up American industries at the expense of our own, the argument sounds very plausible, but we must not forget that it is also applicable in its force from the other side of the line as well as from our own. We obtain large quantities of coal in this country from the United States for utilization in our industries and for the purpose of running our railways. And our railways and industries are competing with the railways and industries of the United States. Would this House regard as a neighbourly act an expression of opinion from the United States congress at any time that thereafter no further exportation of a commodity which was essential to us in connection with our industries should be permitted on any consideration? I contend that parliaments exist in part to help to maintain international good will, and that the broad interests of the nation rather than any special interests or any party consideration ought to be the controlling principle in matters of this kind. As I have already said, while we can appreciate the force of an argument which would seek to conserve for our own needs, and in a manner that would avoid embarrassment, whatever is essential in the way of electrical power in the country, we should take care in presenting our point of view not to express it in such terms as would place in the hands of our enemy a weapon which could be used against us, and take out of our hand the power which we need for purposes of negotiation. For that reason I wish the mover of the resolution (Mr. LeSueur) could see his way to amend it. I would not ask him to withdraw it entirely, but I think he might amend it in accordance with a suggestion put forward in one or two speeches this evening. The amendment as it stands reads:

> That in the opinion of this House the export of hydro-electric power from Canada should be permitted only on yearly license, and no licenses should be issued beyond those at present outstanding except for off-peak power.

I would suggest that the hon. member amend his resolution by deleting the words "and no licenses should be issued", and so on, and substituting therefor the words:

> —and that hereafter no license for the export of power beyond that already granted should be issued except with the concurrence of the province or provinces in which it is proposed to develop such power.

I believe that if that provision were substituted it would give all the security that is needed. In the first place, it is I think an advantage both to the provinces and to the Dominion that each case involving the export of power should, as it arises, be examined on its merits. There may be a situation in Ontario and Quebec which may be of considerable concern in some directions at a particular moment. But it does not follow that arguments applicable to it apply with equal force with respect, for example, to a situation in the prairies provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is conceivable that in those provinces the moment may come when some export of power may be desired in order to enable the development of power within the provinces themselves.

Mr. HOEY: We have a surplus of power in Manitoba now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That being so, no doubt the province of Manitoba may wish to have the right at any time to export that power, and I think it would be unfair for this government or for the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec to say that Manitoba should not have that right. So doing, on the part of the federal government, might not as respects the export of power be an interference with provincial rights in the general acceptation of that term, but it certainly would be an interference with provincial interests in that matter of the development of their resources; and I submit that the federal government, should always seek to consider the wishes and the needs as well as the rights of the different provinces that go to make up confederation, and should not take a step, by means of a resolution such as this, which might cause embarrassment to even a single province and possibly considerable embarrassment to several. In a word, if this parliament declares that there should be no export of power except by yearly license, it thereby serves notice on its neighbour—because it is only to the United States that any export can take place—that at any time, as the needs of this country demand, that power export may be terminated, without occasioning a grievance or without having established any vested rights of the other side meanwhile. If beyond this it couples with that declaration the provision that all future licenses shall be granted only by concurrence of the province from which the power is to be exported, there should be every reason to feel that we have gone as far as we should in seeking to safeguard our resources. To go further would be possibly to work an injury in the opposite direction.

Now, I do not know whether my hon. friend will accept this suggestion, but if he does not I should find it difficult to appreciate this motion being moved on going into supply for any reason other than in some way to express a want of confidence in the government. I have stated frankly the policy of the administration. It is embodied in what I have just suggested as an amendment to the motion before the House, and in order that it may be perfectly clear to the House I shall read what I should like my hon. friend to move as expressive of the policy by which the government is prepared to stand:

That the export of hydro-electric power from Canada should be permitted only on yearly license, and that hereafter no licenses for export of power beyond that already granted should be issued except with the concurrence of the province or provinces in which it is proposed to develop such power.

If the last part, which is what I suggest, is acceptable to my hon. friend, the government will certainly accept the first part of his resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it the Prime Minister's intention in the suggested amendment that if the power is developed in a particular province, the virtual authority of export should be vested in that province should the province desire to export any part of the power?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, the power to export is vested in the Dominion, and the Dominion will not exercise its power without the concurrence of the province concerned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know, but my point is, will the Dominion grant a license to export if the province asks for it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not necessarily. I think if there is to be concurrence on the part of one there should also be concurrence on the part of the other.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What principle would the government adopt? Because the resolution would be silent on that question entirely if amended in the manner the Prime Minister suggests. What principle would the government adopt in determining to grant a license if the province desired to export?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have said already, I do not think this is a matter on which it is possible to generalize. I think each case would have to be examined and dealt with on its merits. The hon. member for St. John and Albert (Mr. Baxter) quoted a case. He alleges that by by treaty rights the province of New Brunswick can export a certain amount of power regardless of what might be said by the federal authority. There are those who hold that that is not a true interpretation, that as a matter of legal obligation the province is obliged to come to the federal government to get the right to export. I do not think where there is doubt on such a question we should adopt a motion of the kind proposed. As I understand the hon. member for St. John and Albert, he is prepared to have that export of power granted in virtue of the treaty obligation. But if it be a fact that in law that right does not so exist, or if it is open to controversy, we may have in the interval a long legal controversy arising out of the decision by this House on the question of policy. Where there is a legal doubt of the kind, if the course we are proposing is sufficient to secure the country in its main objective, I submit it is better for us to follow that course than take a step which may occasion serious embarrassment to the provinces. As an analogous case, take other boundary waters between the United States and Canada. Along the boundary in any particular province it may be that a municipality may wish to develop its water-power, but that it can only do so by building dams within its own territory. Inasmuch, however, as the water is international, the consent of the country to the south may have to be obtained before that step can be taken. Now, in the case of New Brunswick first cited, the consent of the United States was given to the course there adopted, on the understanding that the United States would be entitled to a certain quantity of the power generated after the installation was completed. That same condition might arise in many of our border municipalities, yet if we adopted this resolution and followed it those municipalities might be prevented from developing water-power which would be of the greatest service to them, simply because it lay beyond the jurisdiction of parliament to grant the necessary license for export under an arrangement which would permit of that power being developed. Therefore the more one considers it the more one feels, I think, that there is every reason why if in a matter of great national importance such as this we are conserving our resources and safeguarding our industries and the future, we should be most careful about taking a step which might create embarrassment in international negotiations.

Mr. STEVENS: Take the case of a water-power which may be located in one province but vitally affects the rights of another province, for instance, the Winnipeg river—I am not citing that specifically, but merely as a general illustration—one province might be willing to consent to the export, but the other province vitally affected by that export, might be opposed, and yet would have no voice in the decision by reason of the amendment suggested by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In what I suggested I used the expression "with the concurrence of the province or provinces in which it is proposed to develop such power."

Mr. STEVENS: Take for instance, Ontario and Manitoba, the development of the power is in Ontario, the use of the power is in Manitoba; that is, the main body of citizens affected by any export that might occur would be those in the latter province, yet the whole development is in Ontario, and therefore under the proposed amendment Manitoba would be helpless.

Mr. HOEY: The development is in Manitoba.

Mr. STEVENS: The development is in part at least in Ontario. I am not limiting myself to this particular case. There might be a case where the development would be wholly within one province, but its export would vitally affect the industrial welfare of the neighbouring province. The Prime Minister, I think, appreciates my point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think what my hon. friend says shows the wisdom of the very course I am suggesting. What my hon. friend wishes the government to do is to be considerate of the interests of the provinces. He wants us not to sacrifice the interests of one province to those of another that might possibly be affected by any export of power. I would say that such would be the point of view from which the government would wish to proceed. We would wish to consider the interests of all the provinces concerned. I do not think it would be wise in stating a general policy at the moment to define it too much, but I would point out to my hon. friend that the amendment which is before the House would absolutely prevent any kind of consideration of the interests of either province in the case he cites, and if there is any merit to be urged for what he has put forward, he should be the first to see the wisdom of following what is here suggested rather than adopting the more restrictive policy which would deny the Dominion any power of discretion in such a case.

I should perhaps add in order to make my position clear, that I assume the House understands that where there is an amendment on going into supply, an amendment to the amendment cannot be moved. Had it been possible to do so, I would have made a motion in that form. I have asked my hon. friend if it is possible for him to accept my suggestion and submit a modified amendment, instead of his own motion as drafted; if he cannot see his way to do that, I have simply to remind the House that the government can take no course other than to regard the motion directed against us as under the circumstances, a vote of want of confidence. I have tried to avoid the necessity of a division by making to my hon. friend what I believe to be a very reasonable suggestion.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if the amendment he now proposes could not be so altered as to require the concurrence of the federal government and the province or provinces affected?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what I am suggesting.

Mr. GOOD: Not I think so far as the concurrence of the federal government is concerned. Is that implied in the resolution as proposed to be amended?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am saying the federal government will not agree to give in future licenses for export except with the concurrence of the provinces. The power to give export licenses resides in the federal government, but I am agreeing that it shall not be exercised except with the concurrence of the province concerned.

Mr. GOOD: So long as that is clear, it is all right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is clear.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): We have often debated subjects in this House before rather crowded numbers that were of infinitely less consequence than what is presented this afternoon, and in years after when much that is good will have been forgotten, the course parliament takes on this question will be remembered as a landmark either to our credit or to our discredit.

The resolution is clear in its terms, to my mind is unobjectionable from every standpoint, but great efforts have been made to find in some remote, imaginary contingency an occasion when the principle that we ask to be adhered to might possibly have to be modified.

Why is it that we should in the first place direct policy against the export of power? I intend to give in very simple words the reason as it appeals to my own mind. I cannot see how the reason will appeal to any of those who follow the doctrines of the free-trader. I cannot see how it will appeal to those who still have faith in maxims that are recited in this House times without number; but I believe the reason will appeal to practical men.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I mean every word. I think the policy of so directing trade currents as to keep at home the raw resources of a nation for the use of that nation itself is one approved by experience, and now all but universally in practice. Different methods are adopted. The protective method is only one, but it is the chief the world over.

Mr. VIEN: The right hon. gentleman cannot conceive of some cases where the development of the natural resources of a province must of necessity entail the export of power if there is not in that province sufficient market for its development?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would answer the question were it appropriate, but inasmuch as it has nothing to do with the argument I am on, I will postpone reference to it until perhaps it will have some relation to what I am saying.

The protective method is one, and it is the most universal. It is perhaps the most effective of all. There are cases to which it cannot apply. The case before us is one where it will not apply. Others would be where a nation had certain resources far too great for immediate development to the finished state, having regard to the then population of that nation. Such cases include our own supply of asbestos and of nickle. These must be provided for some other way, but the case before us is that of power.

Power is the rawest of all resources. Power is much more rudimentary, much more an instrument of further development and production than is any other raw resource whatsoever. Power bears the same relation to the ordinary raw resources of a country that those raw resources bear to the finished products of the country. It is the instrument by which the mineral is delved from the ground; it is the instrument by which the coal is heaved to the surface. It is the most fundamental and rudimentary of all things looking to the expansion of a nation; so that the arguments, which apply in favour of directing trade currents and trade policy so as to keep raw resources for development by the people of a country apply with double force to the case of power. But if they are no good with relation to the development of our raw resources, they are equally worthless with relation to power. If they have no application to the other resources of a country, they cannot be contorted into an argument for the preservation of power, and those who still adhere to the theory that you must follow the natural trade current, that what a man or a country owns or wants he should sell in the dearest and buy in the cheapest market, those who adhere to these things cannot on any account find any ground to stand on if they wish to preserve to a nation the power that is resident within it. But there are few of those.

I think we all agree in this House that it would be nothing but suicidal for Canada to allow the export of these irreplaceable, limited, vitally precious resources from this country. We have done so in the past. Every nation in its early years of development is compelled to permit to some extent—and now I am at the point raised by my hon. friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Vien)—the export of its raw product. We have been compelled to in our earlier years. We have done too much of it. But as a country develops and gets stronger, it is able to take care of these more and more, and directs its trade policy to do so. We permitted the export of power for years. We did not permit the export of a very great quantity relative to what we possessed. But 200,000 horse-power is a large amount, and that now is under license. There is this to be said for our conduct: Not only was it in line with what younger countries are very often compelled to do, but at the time the policy grew up, the value of this great property was not fully understood. The value of coal in early years was not fully understood. It has taken a longer time still to have us realize the tremendous resources that we have in our water-powers. Of far greater value will it be in the long years to come than any other single thing in the way of a material product that we possess. As electricity has advanced, as the knowledge of that science has developed, we come more and more to realize the value of what we have, and consequently we get now to the position where we do not look upon these things as we did in the earlier days.

Now why is it that we say we have reached the stage when we should export no more? Well, I state it in this way: We have reached the stage where already we feel the pinch in certain parts of our country. In large portions we do not, but in the industrial portions of our country we have got to the point where if we permit further export we are going to find ourselves within a comparatively few years bereft of these things essential to our growth. It is said we have some forty million in this country of potential horse-power. Well, I presume we have just in the same way as we have millions of acres in Greenland, millions of acres up in northern Ontario and the Northwest Territories, but in so far as the available horse-power is concerned, we have not nearly the half of that figure; and in so far as that is concerned which is within transmission range of industrial Canada, we have not more than one-third of it; and in the province of Ontario, within transmission range of industrial Ontario, we have not now more than will be overtaken and be in use within a space of not more than fifteen years, and probably not more than ten or twelve years.

In this I quote not only the opinion of engineers as I have them before me in the Engineering Journal, but the considered opinion of Sir Adam Beck who has been closer to the problem than any other man. The situation in Quebec is somewhat different. At the estimated rate of increased consumption they will probably have absorbed all they possess withnn the space of twenty to twenty-five years. Now, it may appear to some the better course to say: Let us get rid of what is going to waste in the meantime, and, in the words of the Prime Minister, do it only by a yearly license, do it with the distinct understanding that we can take it back whenever we like, and then all will be well. To that we on this side of the House are definitely opposed, and we are opposed because of the lessons of experience, and because of the reasoning that applies to our relations at the present time. Power differs from all things else. If we export power to another country that other country gets into the position where it cannot supply what we now supply, where it can obtain it from no other source. Power is not something that is in the world market, that another country can substitute for if a first country withdraws. Power is something which once exported becomes the foundation of a great vested right and the withdrawal of it—however closely, however narrowly and carefully it may have been provided for—becomes a practical impossibility. We found ourselves in the position that when we needed the power badly we could not withdraw it and we found, as well, that although we applied the system of yearly licenses the company undertook to give contracts extending over a period of time and we were bound not only by the rates secured by the industry erected but were also bound, in a measure, by the contract although that contract had no warrant to be entered into. And if we pursue the same course in the future that we have pursued in the past, and go on giving these yearly licenses, we will find ourselves in a very short time in relation to that power just where we do now in relation to the power licenses in the past. We will find industries gathered round us, we will find municipalities dependent upon it, we will find ourselves powerless to withdraw into our own country the resources we have once let go from our midst. I do not think there are any associated with the power industry who have any other opinion. I do not think the Prime Minister has any other opinion. I do not think any member of the government would stand and say that if we give yearly licenses now and new uses are found for new power development in Canada no matter how we may surround the export license with safeguards and guarantees, just as soon as those uses become established and those industries and those municipalities there become dependent upon them, we cannot withdraw it. We may as well face the facts. So, I say we should make a pronouncement against further export.

The reasons urged against it are rather ingenious. I had thought this resolution embodied what appeared to be the all but universal opinion of the people of Canada. If ever the people of Canada came together on any single question, a study of the newspapers of the last month would indicate they had come together on this. Throughout the length and breadth of this country there appears to be little difference of view. It all arose because of certain reports which emanated from Ottawa, respecting the Carillon power, of proposed development and of proposed export. The history of that project I do not need to review. I think the House may consider, in view of the statement of the government to-day that whatever might have been their flirtations with this project, they have now been compelled to give it up, and there is not going to be any export of Carillon power. Because in respect of Carillon power the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are the provinces interested, and as every one knows those provinces as at present governed will not consent to any export at all. So the need of a detailed review of the history of Carillon project has gone. Whatever other results these debates have had, they have had this result—that they put back into limbo the possibility of a tragedy in connection with Carillon power.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I remind my right hon. friend that what I said to-night was just what I said the first time this subject came up; it has been our point of view all the time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I do not think it is precisely the same. I do not say that because I intend to enter into any argument as to the difference. I know the Prime Minister said, as about the last word in the debate, after all along efforts had been made to get an assurance of policy, that the government intended to continue the system of yearly license. That, however, is not sufficient. In the course of that debate—it was on the same subject as this—I asked and asked repeatedly, and I directed my words to the Minister of Railways, that an assurance be given parliament that there would be no license issued in future save on a yearly basis, and no license issued at all for further export if the power was to be used for any new development industrial or municipal over there. One would have thought that assurance would have been easily given if the government had no project in contemplation in relation to Carillon. But I could not get the assurance. I tried one day and I tried the next day, but the government sat silent. So I do not think this House could take from any statement of the government on that occasion that they were opposed to a further export of power. Certainly the country did not so assume and in this connection the country was right.

Now I am coming to some of the reasons urged against the resolution as it stands. It is said by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Marler) that he is opposed to the export of power. He would go even further than the resolution. He would not make any considerable exception of off-peak power. Well, we are prepared to grant the exception, we are prepared to make the elimination. As far as that goes we will go the whole length and prohibit the exportation of off-peak power. But we did not want to have a resolution to which any reasonable objection could be raised, and there is never going to be any serious thing happen from the exportation of off-peak power. No industry in the world is ever going to invest money in a contract on the faith of off-peak power; if the demand is sufficient at home no man would ever invest money or acquire a vested right position in a contract for the importation of off-peak power.

Mr. MARLER: Would my right hon. friend do me the favour of admitting that I said no power should be exported without the consent of the province in which the power lies?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am coming to that; that is another point. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George would go the length of preventing exportation.

Mr. MARLER: Would my right hon. friend be kind enough to couple what I said then with what I formerly said? Both statements should be taken together; I think that is only fair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member's argument against the resolution first of all was this, and it was because of that argument he finally made the addition that he would allow exports only with the concurrence of the province. He said that we might have a contingency where it might pay us to make the sacrifice.

Mr. MARLER: Certainly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He said that some contingency might occur later on but his imagination did not carry him to the extent of trying to picture it to the House.

Mr. MARLER: May I say that—

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member finds it easier to interrupt than he does to make an argument on his feet. Though the principle is sound there might be occasion for exception. For myself I do not know what the contingency would be. I can imagine of course in the event of war, where terms of peace were being settled, it might be easy to give up something in order to get something else; but dear me these are not laws of the Medes and Persians which we are enacting. We are only declaring a principle. The fact of the matter is that indeed the government can act without a statute at all and without coming to parliament.

Mr. MARLER: The right hon. member is enunciating the precise principle which I declared. If there is a necessity that we should export power for the advantage of Canada, then and then only would I consent to the export of power, with the consent of the provinces.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I was enunciating the same principle as the hon. member, he should have been satisfied, but I was not enunciating the same principle.

Mr. MARLER: My right hon. friend is enunciating no principle at all except politics.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A contingency which might arise could be taken care of at the time. Parliament can act as it will. The government would have to come to parliament on every occasion in order to take action. Can anybody imagine any case where the government would want to act in the export of power, if this resolution passes, where it would be embarrassed by coming back to parliament to settle the terms of the arrangement with another country and ask for ratification? All these matters with other countries are ratified now by parliament, but as the law stands to-day, the Export Act is such that the government might enter into a contract of any kind whatever as to the export of power and not be under the necessity of coming back to parliament. All we ask is that a principle be embodied that parliament declare its will, and if any emergency occurs in the future, that few of us could ever imagine—I do not know what it would be—the government could come back and state the case to parliament, and parliament could act if it desired on the recommendation of the government.

Mr. VIEN: The right hon. gentleman does not conceive that that provision would be a serious embarrassment for the government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all. It would be a help to the government. The government would be far better in negotiating with another country to have to say to that country, "We must go to parliament to get this done," and anyway is it not right that parliament lay down a general policy? If the government sees something great can be gained from that policy, it is not prevented from going to parliament and saying "Here is the policy: we ask you to accept that and make a sacrifice in order to accept it;" so that this excuse for voting against the resolution is no excuse at all. It does not amount to anything. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is mumbling in his seat. He surely is not asleep. Why can he not act in parliament like other hon. members, and when he wants to make a speech get up and make it, and not sit in his seat groaning and mumbling?

Mr. MARLER: My hon. friend would not suggest that I should act as he does in parliament. I should be very sorry to do that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the hon. member ever will.

Mr. MARLER: No, indeed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Another hon. member says that if this resolution passes New Brunswick is going to be in a fix, that that province cannot allow 2,000 horse-power to be exported in relation to a development there now impending. I think the argument advanced by the hon. member for St. John and Albert (Mr. Baxter) clears that contention away completely. Certainly anything we have agreed to in the past is covered by licenses outstanding. Anything agreed to by treaty we are going to perform. We agreed in the treaty with the United States that in relation to international waters the jurisdiction should rest with the International Joint Commission, and that commission says that in the disposition of the power of the St. John river at a certain point, owing to certain flowage rights which must obtain in the state of Maine, it is only right that 2,000 horse-power should go there. We granted that right and agreed to it years ago, and it is not covered by the resolution. This is only finding straws in the road; they are not obstacles. It is the principle of the resolution to which we have asked adherence.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the power company developed on the Canadian side, would it not be incumbent on that company to come to the Dominion government to get a license to export it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It may be technically incumbent upon it but the Dominion government has already agreed to give the license.

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it has agreed by treaty to give it. Does the minister say that any discretion rests with this government as to the issue of that license; that the United States of America is in the position still that it is dependent on the discretion of the government of Canada? Absolutely it is not. The issue of the license is a mere matter of course, and would not be prevented or postponed by this resolution for an hour.

Mr. GRAHAM: It might be.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: It will raise a serious question as to the issue of the bonds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should like the minister to try it. The passing of the resolution does not affect anything. The country has already agreed to it. It is only trying to find something in the way, and the government has industriously dug up little things. It is said, "Let us agree upon this, that we as a government will say, 'We will not issue any licenses except yearly licenses'". So far so good; or that parliament may be said to be at one—at least in so far as two groups in the House are concerned, and the other group has been silent up to this time. I do not want to assume to speak for those for whom I have no right to speak. But as to the rest, we cannot agree. We will not give yearly licenses for additional export except for off-peak power. To that we cannot agree, but we will agree that we will not issue licenses for any further export of power unless the province in which the development occurs agrees. I do not like the principle of that as well as I like the principle of this resolution. I do not like to see parliament surrendering its jurisdiction but this distinctly does so. I prefer parliament exercising its own right. I do not like parliament saying, "we have certain responsibilities, but we have not the courage to live up to them." We will not act even within the ambit of our own authority, unless we first get the say-so of the provinces affected by our action. I think we should declare a policy of ourselves on a great matter within our own jurisdiction, but I do not want to be too ambitious in our demands. What the Prime Minister says certainly will not cover the case. There are many powers in this country in which more than one province is interested, and the province interested most is one where the power is not developed, where the province in which the power is developed may have little population and no industrial life, but it may be situated near industrial life in another province, and that other province is the more affected of the two. There are certainly powers in the Winnipeg river in which two provinces are interested. I believe Manitoba—correcting the hon. member behind me—has more actual power sites in the Winnipeg river, more power potentialities within its boundary than Ontario, but Ontario surely is not to be told that it has no interest whatever in powers developed in Manitoba, nor the province of Manitoba to be told that it has no interest in the power developed in Ontario. Similar cases, I am told, even more striking in their relationship to this proposition, exist as between Alberta and British Columbia, and I do not doubt that cases would be found still between Alberta and Saskatchewan. That is why the Dominion has jurisdiction. I do not know that there will be cases where more than two provinces would be affected. Perhaps there would not be.

Though I do not like the principle, in order to show that we are not moving this merely for the sake of a party vote, if the Prime Minister will change his amendment and say that no license will be issued except with the approval of the provinces affected by the development, then I for one would be willing to recommend to my hon. friend that he accept the amendment suggested.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am quite prepared to do that. It is in accord with the spirit of what I have said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That will be satisfactory as far as this side is concerned. Before I sit down, I want to say a word in relation to this question which is continually raised, that if we pursue this course, we are not acting in a neighbourly way to the United States; that we may bring upon our heads retaliation, and that they have not acted towards us in this spirit in the past. I have no sympathy whatever with those words, and I want to say so with the utmost frankness. In the first place, it sounds strange in my ears that properties which are ours, in which no other country can claim an interest at all, are properties the disposition of which must be governed, not by our interest alone, but by the interest in some degree of another land. Are we not to be permitted in this Dominion, in relation to assets which are ours entirely, to pass such laws as best suit the interests of Canada—

Mr. VIEN: Irrespective of reprisals?

Mr. MEIGHEN: —irrespective wholly of reprisals, for fear another country would not like the step we took, thinking it is not in their interest? Will the hon. member tell me of any country that ever acted in that way towards us?

Mr. VIEN: Because, my right hon. friend knows it; we never acted in that way towards them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know of no other country that ever acted in that way towards us. I want to make clear what I say. I do not say that in all water-powers in which we are interested, the United States have no interest. Wherever they have an interest, I would recognize it to the full and I would treat with them in a neighbourly and friendly way, but as respects our own I would dispose of our own water-powers wholly in the interest of Canada. When I say that, I want to ask my hon. friend: Does he think the United States has ever disposed of any resource of that country save with an eye to its own interests? Does he think coal has been sold to the people of the Dominion of Canada just in order to keep us warm?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my right hon. friend not know that during a period of great fuel shortage in this country and in the country to the south, when the United States were being urged by some of their own industries to conserve all the coal for themselves, they took the position that they would treat the people of Canada in the same way as they would their own people?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, that is true, but they did it in their own interest. They knew this country could have got coal elsewhere and that the markets which they have been supplying would have been filled and would have been lost to them. I am not saying this in criticism of their spirit. Their spirit is perfectly right, but their action was dictated by a regard, not for our country, but for their own interests, and that is what dictates the course of any country.

Mr. McMASTER: The right hon. gentleman's argument is that there is no such thing as generosity. That is the inference.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is his criterion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My criterion is this, that the greatest generosity a country can perform to the world is to look after itself.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is selfishness.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, and if we have reached the stage when we are not able to look after ourselves, we had better haul the flag down and no longer claim to be a country acting on its own initiative. The United States does not need our generosity. If it does, I do not know when it got into that position. The people of the United States are able to take care of themselves. They do not ask for our generosity. We are exporting to-day 200,000 horse-power. If we say that we do not intend to export any more, say so frankly and act upon our statement, have the United States any complaint? I do not know what just complaint they would have. I suppose if they acted in a corresponding way, they would say: Well, we will not export any more coal than we are exporting now. I for one would not weep very much if they took that view. I would feel that that was not doing any good to the United States, and it was certainly not doing any harm to us. Certainly let them restrict their export of coal to the coal they are exporting now. Would the hon. gentleman hang his head in fear? It would be the best thing that ever happened to us. The hon. member shakes his head.

Mr. VIEN: Does my right hon. friend contend that if shipments of coal from the United States to Canada ceased to-morrow, that would not play havoc with many industries?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that. I said if they restricted the export to the export that is going on now.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. McMASTER: The right hon. member has not the courage of his own convictions because if he were logical, he would stop the export altogether.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not the stopping of it. They have the stopping of it.

Mr. McMASTER: I know that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then what does the hon. member mean?

Mr. VIEN: Supposing they do stop the shipment of coal to Canada, that would work havoc with our industries.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As soon as the United States feel it is in the interest of the United States to stop the shipment of coal to Canada, they will stop it. It is not in the interests of the United States to-day and they know it is not. I do not think they have ever acted in the spirit of injuring another country to the injury of themselves. That is not the spirit of neighbours. But in disposing of their own ressources to their own advantage, they are behaving only as a nation is bound to do, and they have never pretended to be in favour of any other principle. The United States, if they felt it was in the interest of that country to impose an embargo on the export of coal, would not wait twenty-four hours before the embargo was imposed on the export of coal. The same thing is true of oil. This country would not be helpless in its development. I know there would be very considerable disturbance; I know it would injure us for a time; but I know also it would very seriously injure the United States and I do not fear it. There are, however, other places where we can get coal and other places where we can get oil. This country could rise to the event. This country would be injured less than the country which acted only to hurt another even at the expense of hurting itself. All these ghosts are ghosts and ghosts alone. The United States is not going to prevent the export of coal because it pays the United States to sell coal. It is not going to prevent the export of oil because it pays the United States to sell oil. The United States to-day in more than one state would not let a single horse-power pass out of its borders. They say: Oh well, we might need a little bit of power at Watertown; we might be ready to give you a little bit somewhere else.

Mr. GRAHAM: Waddington.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will not matter much, because we shall not get the power.

Mr. GRAHAM: We were offered it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We were offered it, but on terms we would not accept. Does anybody imagine we are going to suffer because the United States will not sell us a little water-power? We shall get along all right. This is a resource where we have an advantage and which we must have looking to the future development of our country. What we must do is to assert our advantages fearlessly, and we shall not wither one iota in the esteem of the United States. They will think all the more of us and they will be just as good neighbours as they ever were. No country is going to act in a spirit of generosity to us because we raise a sort of white flag and say: It will be in our interest to do this, but we will not do it for fear we shall hurt you. Let Canada get out of that way of thinking, and the sooner we get out of it, the better. We have been in it altogether too long. Consequently, in so far as this argument is concerned, I give it no strength, no weight at all. The only principle to follow is to act as to our property in our best interest. Do not injure ourselves in order to injure another. Act with regard to it only with a view to helping our own people to the utmost of our ability.

I have stated this in order that the House may know how I look upon these matters. I have not stated it because it will have any effect on a division, as I apprehend there will be no division. I accept the amendment in order that we may be united and that the whole world may know how we are travelling in relation to this great question. But I would prefer that governmental responsibility should not be shirked, and I would have preferred that it be declared once and for all that we are against further exportation; but I accept it inasmuch as I believe this amendment in its practical result will reach the same end as the amendment that was moved before, because I do not believe that our provinces will agree to the export at all. That being my opinion, I accept the amendment as now agreed to by the Prime Minister himself.

Mr. McMASTER: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the hon. member addresses the House, I must point out that the amendment cannot be moved by the Prime Minister. The amendment as now amended should be accepted by the mover, and in order that this may be done it is necessary that the leave of the House be obtained, inasmuch as it is not usual for the mover of an amendment to amend his motion except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) were allowed to proceed now, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who moved the amendment in the first instance (Mr. LeSueur) would have the revised motion ready for the House at the conclusion of the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. ANDREW McMASTER (Brome): I would not delay the House were it not that something that should be said in the debate has not so far been said. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) gave expression to an opinion that is perfectly true; he said that his words would not be acceptable to those who believe in the principles of free trade. I can agree most heartily with him in that regard. But the right hon. gentleman also said that they would be agreed to by practical men. Now, who are the practical men? Before the Great war came as a scourge to humanity the practical men had said that armaments would ensure peace, that one tariff against another would increase the prosperity of the nations, and that it was a wise and practical thing for the great imperialist nations of Europe to stake out claims for themselves in Africa and Asia. These were the arguments used by practical men, and the present condition of the world is due to the principles which the practical men carried into effect; it is due to the fact that these practical men would not listen to the idealists, whom they dismissed as stupid, foolish and unwise.

It was Gladstone who said that the longer he lived the more he appreciated the value of the principle of liberty; and the longer I live and have a seat in this House the more I disapprove of the principle of restriction. When I listen to a man of real native ability, such as the leader of the opposition, fulminating in favour of restriction, as he has done for half or three quarters of an hour to-night, I am led to believe that his real idea of national prosperity would envisage himself mournfully sitting on a desert island surrounded by a sea so full of reefs that no ship could possibly inundate that country with waves of foreign goods, and with embargoes against nation. These products of the nation should be exported when there is a profit in exporting them, and those who own these products will have a better understanding of what it is profitable to export than could any government that you might conceive of. This idea, that governments should direct trade channels and trade currents, is one great fallacy that has done as much harm to the progress of humanity as almost any fallacy which has afflicted mankind. Suicide for Canada, the right hon. gentleman says. I say this to him, in all sincerity, that the surest way for the Dominion of Canada to commit suicide is to surround itself with policies of restriction either on goods coming in or on goods or power going out.

Addressing myself more nearly to what the right hon. gentleman said, I want to say just a word or two. He said that in eastern Canada the province of Quebec had perhaps one-third of forty million, or about thirteen million, horse-power, and he added that within twenty years that power would be all used up, because the lines of transmission could not go further than would bring power that could be all used in twenty years. May I tell him that at the present time the city of Montreal does not use up the water-power which is generated within a radius of thirty miles. There is the great power at Lachine and there is the power at Chambly, and I am told that these great powers are not in operation to-day, the water running to waste. The development is there but the water is not being used. One argument is that if we once allow power to be exported we shall not be able to stop that export hereafter. That is a mistake. The United States is not going to be dependent on our power. The amount of power from Canada that could be used by the United States is very small in comparison with all the horse-power generated in that country either by water development or by steam converted into electricity. There is a tremendous amount of power generated in the United States, and the amount that we shall supply at any time in the future will not be so very considerable as to force it to be taken into too great consideration. There is no difficulty in that direction and it is a mistake to harp upon that string. It seems to me that if there is any danger in our dealings with the United States it will be to follow a policy of dog in the manger, because that might excite retaliation. Reference is made to the Fordney tariff. What was responsible for the Fordney tariff? It was excited by the embargo on newsprint and by our foolish rejection of the reciprocity arrangement. The leader of the opposition has preached in this House a doctrine which I think is a somewhat mistaken one; he says that all the nations of the world are ruled and should be ruled by stark national selfishness. They should not think of the other fellow at all. What an extraordinary statement from a man who a few years ago said that Canada was prepared to bankrupt itself for the empire!

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would it not have been in our selfish interest to do that rather than to have been conquered?

Mr. McMASTER: If you put it on the ground of merely selfish interest, that is another argument. But I did not so understand the right hon. gentleman's words.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read what I said and you will see that that is one of the grounds, and a strong one.

Mr. McMASTER: It was a ground that was not urged when my right hon. friend made patriotic statements.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because I was misrepresented for political purposes.

Mr. McMASTER: The first time I had the pleasure of meeting the right hon. gentleman at Morrisburg in the fall of 1915 I know that such a sentiment was utterly absent from anything that he said on that occasion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Your memory is weak.

Mr. McMASTER: If these are the ghosts which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have raised, in connection with the possibility of retaliation from the United States, then I think the right hon. gentleman's own words may be compared to evil angels. On the whole, there is not much in the argument of my learned friend, and as the House is anxious that the question shall come to a vote I will not delay it longer.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. LeSueur, seconded by Mr. Hanson:

That in the opinion of this House the export of hydro-electric power from Canada should be permitted only on yearly license, and that hereafter no license for export of power beyond that already granted should be issued except with the concurrence of the province or provinces in which it is proposed to develop such power and of any other provinces adjacent to such development and interested therein.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment has been agreed to. Therefore I do not now leave the chair unless another motion is made to that effect.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move that Mr. Speaker do leave the chair forthwith for the House to resolve itself into committee of Supply.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, I want to crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments to refer to the interest that prevails in the province of Quebec at the present time with respect to the circulation through the newspapers of news items to the effect that a question which I had the honour to submit to the House during the course of last session had finally been settled. I refer to the inclusion in the Canadian National Railway system of the two Gaspesian railways, the Quebec Oriental and the Atlantic, Quebec and Western. These news items circulated from the capital have evoked considerable interest among the people whom I have the honour to represent, but I regret to say that as yet the question has not been solved in this satisfactory way. We hope, however, that before long a solution will be found. I am glad to be able to state that since the matter was last discussed in the House considerable headway has been effected. The Board of Railway Commissioners has visited the Gaspesian peninsula for the purpose of holding an investigation into the matter, and I had the honour in the month of October last of accompanying Mr. Justice McKeown and Mr. Commissioner Lawrence and their staff during the course of that investigation. The commissioners stopped at every station, listened to the representations of the people interested, and gave them encouragement to think that a solution might be brought about under the Railway Act. A few days after the opening of the present session the Prime Minister and three of his colleagues, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the Minister of Health (Mr. Beland), were kind enough to grant an interview with you Mr. Speaker, with the Premier of Quebec, represented by Hon. Mr. Perrault, His Lordship Bishop Ross of Gaspe and the leading people of that part of the country. The argument made by His Lordship Bishop Ross for the taking over of these railways by the government was that Sir Henry Thornton had come to a decision, based solely upon revenues and expenditures, without taking into account the general considerations which presumably would influence the government. Sir Henry Thornton had in effect made a proposal to the proprietors to take over their railways on certain conditions, which the latter did not think proper to accept. Therefore the deputation asked the Prime Minister and his colleagues if they could not find a solution for this long-standing problem. When these railways were completed in 1911 it was understood that the Laurier administration contemplated taking them over and merging them with the Intercolonial. An effort was made during the Borden regime to have this given effect to. When the late Mr. Cochrane introduced his measure for the inclusion of two hundred miles of branch lines with the Intercolonial railway, practically every line in New Brunswick was taken over, and one or two in Quebec, but these two lines were left to one side. During the war no progress was made in the matter, but when the new administration came into office in 1921 the people of the Gaspe peninsula felt that another effort should be made to secure for themselves some share of the benefits to which they were entitled. It must not be forgotten, Mr. Speaker, that the Gaspe peninsula is the oldest settlement in the Dominion; within a few years four centuries will have elapsed since Jacques Cartier landed at Gaspe. The people of the peninsula have contributed their share to the upbuilding of Canada, including the construction of the railway systems of this country, and they feel that they are entitled to that fair consideration which up to the present has not been extended to them. I am glad to know that through the breaking down of the discussion between Sir Henry Thornton and the proprietors of these two railways, another attempt is being made to try to bring the parties together through the good offices of Mr. Justice McKeown, who has been asked to express an opinion, as a result of the investigation he made of the lines, on what would be a fair and reasonable amount to be paid. The government takes the position that owing to the financial condition of the country it is out of the question for the Canadian National Railway system to buy the two railways, but that if Sir Henry Thornton was prepared to lease them on terms acceptable to the proprietors and the railway commission, probably the government would raise no objection.

I mention these facts, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to take this opportunity on behalf of my constituents of thanking the premier of Quebec and his colleagues for their active interest in the matter; His Eminence Cardinal Begin for the assistance he has given us; His Lordship Bishop Ross for speaking a good word for the peninsula, and the members of the legislature of Quebec, and others representing both sides of politics, and in fact representing the entire population of the peninsula, for the efforts they have made to help bring about a satisfactory settlement of this question. It is a wonder to-day to people visiting the Gaspe peninsula that these two isolated railways have been able to continue in operation so long, and that it has not been possible long ago to merge them with the Canadian National Railway system. These two railways with the limited resources at their disposal have given a much improved service during the last two years, and the railway commission has made a very favourable report on their operating efficiency. But by the mere fact of being isolated, these two railways are unable to give those through rates to the inhabitants that would be possible if they formed part of the Canadian National Railways. They have to contend against water competition during six months of the year, and under the arrangement made at the time the railway subsidies were voted in 1911, they have carried the mails for the past fourteen years every day year in and year out through the long winter months for a distance of 130 miles along the dreary Gaspe coast without receiving one dollar from the government of Canada for the service. Notwithstanding this, the service has been kept up as best it could, but it has never answered the requirements of these two counties, and our industries have left us one after the other. The province of Quebec Lumber Association went over to Dalhousie, and the mills in Bonaventure have crossed over to Bathurst. An effort is now being made by Bishop Ross and the clergy of the province of Quebec to open up new agricultural areas in the Gaspe peninsula for the purpose of keeping the people at home. Our young Canadians there are now migrating to the cities and to the United States. We want them to remain on the homesteads, and be agriculturists as their fathers were before them. This Gaspe peninsula will never be peopled by other than those who inhabit that area or their descendants, for immigrants from Europe would never consider taking up land in the Gaspe peninsula. They would rather go into the more settled part of Canada or to western Canada. So we consider that every family leaving this Gaspe peninsula is a loss to Canada, and while we are spending money abroad for the purpose of bringing immigrants into this country, for want of proper industries, for want of proper facilities, for want of proper communication with the main markets of this country we are allowing these people to go away, and they will never return. The population of this county the first ten years I had the honour of representing it, at the time we had all these industries in Bonaventure, increased by some five thousand, but in the last decade, after these industries had left the county, our population dwindled, and the natural increase was only eight hundred. Now the time has come to bring about a solution of this difficulty. These companies are not anxious to carry on any longer. They are merely complying with the letter of the law, and nothing more.

Sir Henry Thornton has expressed his great optimism for the future of the Gaspe peninsula. He has visited the district himself. He knows the value of its timber limits of 10,000 square miles; he knows the value of its fisheries, he knows the value of its mineral, and he is willing, if an agreement can be brought about with these companies to take over these roads and operate them as part and parcel of the Canadian National system, as they were intended to be operated from their very inception, and as was announced here in 1884 in this House when at the request of Sir Hector Langevin and Sir Charles Tupper monies were voted for the building of a branch line of the Intercolonial from Matapedia to Gaspe, and as Sir Wilfrid Laurier said in 1911, that to make these railways pay they should be linked up with the Intercolonial. This has not been done, but the people of Gaspe have faith in the present administration; they have faith in the Minister of Railways; they have faith in the broadmindedness and patriotism of this House and government, and I hope that in speaking as I do, Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken in vain, but that the Canadian National will see that it is in its interest to take over these 200 miles of railway.

We are not asking for the construction of new railways, as we are obliged to vote new branch lines for the west; we are merely asking that 200 miles of constructed railway to which the Dominion of Canada and the province of Quebec have contributed in land and money subsidies to the extent of four million dollars be so utilized as to give those people fair and untrammelled access at reasonable rates to the central markets of the country. Sir Henry Thornton has declared that if he took over these railroads to-morrow he would have to cut down the railway rates 25 per cent, which is an admission that the people of Bonaventure and Gaspe have been paying rates on their products for many years past 25 per cent above what is paid on the main line of the Canadian National railway.

I shall say no more, but for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I hope that when this report is received from Mr. Justice McKeown, if an agreement can be brought about between Sir Henry Thornton and these two companies, the government of Canada will seize the opportunity for the purpose of bringing about a solution of this long standing trouble.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

For operation and maintenance of inspection boats, $16,000.

Mr. STEVENS: What is that vote?

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): It is the usual item. These boats are maintained and operated for the use of the staff in the engineering districts engaged on inspectional work.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and operation of water storage dams on Ottawa river and tributaries, surveys in connection therewith and settlement of land damages, $35,000.

Mr. STEVENS: This is an old-standing expenditure. Is it a necessary one each year; is it for renewals?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is an old expenditure. It is required for the maintenance and operation and dams and sluiceways at points on the Ottawa river and its tributaries. The object is to store the spring floods and augment the low water flows, thus equalizing the run-off of the Ottawa valley throughout the year. This also necessitates the purchase of lands damaged by maintaining reservoir surfaces at high stage during the summer and autumn. For the maintenance and operation of the Timiskaming dam, $7,000 is required; for the maintenance of Quinze dam, $9,000; for reinforced concrete slab and cut-off wall and rockfill at Timiskaming dam, $13,000; to pay land damages and other claims in connection with the Ottawa river storage, $6,000, making a total of $35,000.

Mr. HANSON: I never could understand why the government of Canada should spend so much money for the assistance of the lumbermen on the Ottawa river.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not for the lumbermen necessarily.

Mr. HANSON: I have understood that all this expenditure for sluiceways and dams on the Ottawa river was for the express purpose of helping to drive the logs on the river. Is there any other river in the whole Dominion where an expenditure of a similar character is made for a similar purpose? On the river St. John, and on the St. Croix, which is an international river, and upon all the other rivers that I know of the lumbermen have to provide these facilities for themselves.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is under a misconception. As a matter of fact, this item is largely for the purpose of maintaining the Timiskaming and Quinze dams. It is rather in the interests of navigation than to assist the lumbermen in their log driving.

Mr. HANSON: I would suggest then, that it is in the interest of the power companies.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): And navigation.

Mr. HANSON: The power companies on the Ottawa river are very wealthy companies. Just recently the Ottawa and Hull company was re-financing bonds to the extent of millions of dollars, from which the proprietors of the old company receive very handsome sums of money. My objection to the whole scheme is that this is not a matter of Dominion concern. Navigation on the lower stretch of the Ottawa river cannot be assisted to any great extent by expenditures of this character. I think it will be found, and I know something of the history of this matter from a former Minister of Public Works in a former government, that the original expenditure was in the interest of the lumbering business. Now it is said to be in the interest of the power company, and I object to the expenditure on that ground.

Item agreed to.

Monument of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, $25,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Has there been a final award yet?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. The final award has been made to Mr. Brunet of Montreal. He is in Paris now, I think, engaged on the model.

Mr. HANSON: Where is it proposed to locate the monument?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At the corner of the terrace of the East Block overlooking Connaught Square.

Item agreed to.

National Gallery of Canada, $75,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this the National Art Gallery?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: I should like to bring to the attention of the minister very briefly, and I must not delay the committee unduly, a complaint that has reached me against the Board of Governors, or whatever they are called, that there is discrimination against artists at outside points, and I am speaking now more particularly of some of the artists in British Columbia, with, I think, almost an international reputation. My hon. friend will recall the names without my making any particular distinction. Some that have won great distinction because of their works of art have been unable to get their paintings included in the National Art Gallery. The point I wish to draw to the minister's attention is this: I quite approve of the general principle of very careful choice in works of art, and I know that requires men of experience, knowledge and technique; but I think the National Gallery should, as far as possible, and without doing violence to this principle, have a representation of all sections of the Dominion. A work of art that might portray, for instance, a Pacific coast scene might be different from some eastern scene, but still it would be a contribution to the art gallery. The same thing might be said of an Indian picture from some distant part of the country. While in itself it might not be quite equal to a picture from the brush of an eastern artist, nevertheless it portrays as the artist sees it the life of that community, crude though it may be, and such pictures should be preserved in the National Gallery. I merely want to suggest to the minister that care should be taken that the administration of the National Art Gallery should be impartial, and that the chief object of portraying the life and scenery of the Dominion should be adhered to as much possible.

Item agreed to.

National monument on Connaught Place, $10,000.

Mr. HANSON: This is a re-vote. What progress has been made with this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have asked for competitive designs and are receiving responses from various artists throughout the empire. I think the competition closed on June 11.

Item agreed to.

Graving docks, $149,600; harbour and river works etc., $59,170; collection of Public Works revenues, $4,000; total..	$212,770
Champlain graving dock..	70,200
Lorne graving dock..	33,400
Esquimalt graving dock..	22,000
New Esquimalt dry dock..	24,000

Mr. HANSON: Where are these docks located?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At Esquimalt, and Levis, and there is the Selkirk repair slip. There are two graving docks at Levis.

Mr. STEVENS: Is there any revenue from these docks to cover this expenditure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In some cases the revenue exceeds the expenditure. Take the Esquimalt graving dock for which we are asking a vote of $22 000. The revenue in 1924 amounted to $33.655, and in 1923 to $21,041. In the case of the Champlain dock at Levis we are asking for a vote of $70,200. The fees collected from this dock amounted to $59,881 in 1924 and $43,491 in 1923. In the case of the Lorne graving dock the fees collected were $22,376, and we are asking for a vote of $33,400. The Esquimalt dock is the one that has probably given us the best returns.

Item agreed to.

Edmundston—public building, $57,000.

Mr. HANSON: I should like to ask the minister about this expenditure. Has not the site been acquired?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Has the contract been let and if so to whom, from whom was it purchased, and who is the contractor for the erection of the structure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was let in November, 1924, to John Flood Sons, St. John, the price being $55,112. An order was passed on 17th August, 1923; a site having a frontage of 66 feet on Canada street by a depth of 110 feet on Church street, was purchased from Mr. L. A. Dugal for the sum of $8,000.

Mr. HANSON: What is the nature of the building? Is it a custom house as well as an immigration office?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: The site from the standpoint of immigration and customs is not a good one. It is a good site for a post office, but it is not near the international bridge, and I think you will have to maintain a station at the end of the bridge as well, unless the government put into effect their new smuggling regulations.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was not possible to secure a site at the bridge for a building of this character, and they have a small building at the bridge for an immigration officer, and he spends his time there.

Mr. HANSON: The site of the post office was not determined especially by public convenience. It was entirely a matter of political expediency. Mr. L. A. Dugal, the big political boss in that city, had a site to sell.

Item agreed to.

Moncton—public building, $50,000.

Mr. HANSON: Has the site for this building been selected?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. HANSON: There is another case where a political boss in the district has a site to sell. Mr. Reid McManus, a member of the legislature and a candidate in the approaching election, is very anxious to sell this site which is not suitable to the business people. Has it been determined to select this site east of the subway? Because that is where the board of trade and business people of Moncton want the post office, not west of the subway.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The whole matter is being carefully considered by the department. A number of sites have been suggested. They vary in price. The matter of it being east or west of the subway would be one for careful consideration, I would think. It is true that the business men in the business section would like to see the post office down there, whereas a large number of residents and citizens of Moncton are of opinion it should be beyond the subway, or west. The whole matter is being canvassed.

Mr. HANSON: Has the board of trade made representations as to a site west of the subway?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know which is east or west.

Mr. HANSON: They have protested against the suggested site have they not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They have protested against the site west of the subway. There are two or three sites west of the subway.

Mr. HANSON: The government owns sites west of the subway which would be preferable to the McManus site.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not very suitable.

Mr. HANSON: It is possible land may be required for railway purposes, but in the expropriation made for the subway itself there is a considerable quantity of land suitable for small buildings, and I have understood, failing to get the office located east of the subway, that would be preferable from the standpoint of the business people, instead of the one which the government is being urged to adopt.

Item agreed to.

Montague—public building—alterations and improvements, $5,000.

Mr. HANSON: How much was spent on this work last year, if any?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year there was an expenditure in the construction of concrete retaining wall, approximately 78 feet in length by 13 feet in height, along the front of the building, under contract with Mr. J. P. Beer, for the sum of $1,675. Alterations on the second floor of the building and in the caretaker's quarters, are under contract with Mr. Garrick for the sum of $3,032. There is a contract with Mr. W. Garrick for the installation of a new hot water boiler for the sum of $465, and a contract for the construction of a sewer, with Mr. R. K. Clements for the sum of $785, making a total of $5,957.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $43,000.

Mr. BAXTER: I wish to ask a question which has really no relation to the item, but perhaps the minister would answer it under this head. What is the intention of the government with regard to closing the breakwater at Partridge island? This was under discussion before and tenders were called for, but so far nothing has been done. I should like to know the policy of the department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That matter is under consideration. We have not placed an item in the estimates for the construction, and the matter is now receiving the consideration of the government. I think that is as far as I can go with my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Loretteville—public building, $27,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, this is under contract. An order in council was passed on the 22nd December 1924, accepting the tender of J. B. Jinchereau et Fils of Quebec at $22,000.

Item agreed to.

Montreal—Bonaventure station—electric tractor, $3,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Why should this item be put in the estimates? Why should it not be paid for by the railway?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We purchase these tractors for the Post Office Department, and they are used for transporting the mail bags from one side of the building to the other.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this done with the Canadian National railway?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is done at the request of the deputy postmaster general for the handling of mail at the Bonaventure station.

Mr. STEVENS: It should be charged to Post Office Department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Montreal—new examining warehouse—improvements and alterations, $12,000.

Mr. WARD: What is this warehouse for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is for the Customs department in the examination of goods.

Item agreed to.

Montreal—postal station in St. Denis division, $50,000

Mr. HANSON: This is a new vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: How many subdivisions of the post office are there in Montreal and where are they located?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are eight or ten. I am not quite certain of the number. This is a new station and this amount is required to complete payment of the building situated on the west side of St. Denis street, purchased from Mr. G. H. Robert for the sum of $24,225, and also to provide for remodelling the building for postal purposes. The figures are as follows:

Purchase of building..	$24,225
Remodelling building..	40,000
Contingencies..	775
Total..	$65,000

The estimate required for this year is $50,000.

Mr. HANSON: Was this purchased at a private sale or was it expropriated? Was it at the request of the Post Office Department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At the resuest of the Post Office Department. It was a private sale.

Mr. HANSON: Did the department have an independent appraisement made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Montreal—Postal station in St. Ann's division, $37,000

Mr. HANSON: Is this a new postal station?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. This amount is required to complete the erection of a public building on Church avenue for postal and customs purposes. It will be a two-storey brick structure with dimensions of fifty feet by sixty feet, and the estimated cost is placed at $47,000. The lowest tender was $37,000.

Item agreed to.

Montreal—towards purchase of Lavut building for postal station "G", $13,900.

Mr. HANSON: Is this another new postal station in Montreal? It seems to me they are expanding there very rapidly.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. This amount is required as a third payment on the purchase price of the Lavut building, situated on Pine street, between Arcade and Guilbault streets in the city of Montreal for the accommodation of postal station "G".

Item agreed to.

Ontario—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, et cetera, $115,000.

Mr. SPENCE: Where is this $115,000 going to be expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required for renewals, improvements and repairs in connection with Dominion public buildings in Ontario, including those in the city of Toronto for which in previous years special appropriations were taken. As regards the repairs for this year, I could not give my hon. friend the list. That will develop as the season advances and as the officials report as to the necessities. The expenditures last year ran to many items varying from as low as forty dollars, to the Hamilton post office, $18,000, London Grand Trunk station mail room, $72, London Chapter House, National Defence, $5,197. It is a long list as my hon. friend will see.

Mr. HANSON: Why are there so many postal substations in Montreal, when I understand there are only five in Toronto? In area the city of Toronto must be nearly commensurate with that of the city of Montreal, and I understand the revenue in Toronto far surpasses that of Montreal. Why are more postal facilities supplied in Montreal than in Toronto? Why this discrimination against Tory Toronto?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are established on the recommendation of the Post Office officials and the advice of the Postmaster General.

Mr. SPENCE: There seems to be very little for Toronto. I see only one for the Department of Agriculture, a building for the Seed branch at Toronto.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I hope this will be sufficient to take care of the needs of Toronto for this year.

Mr. SPENCE: There are items in here for Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and nothing for Toronto. We need public buildings just as badly as they do.

Mr. WARD: Looking down the list, I notice we have Hamilton public building, Kingston public building, Kitchener public building, Napanee public building besides this item for Dominion public buildings. It is somewhat confusing to some of us.

The CHAIRMAN: The first item is Dominion public buildings, improvements and repairs only, not construction.

Mr. WARD: But I was asking the minister why there should be this first item simply of public buildings and then later on we find a number of places with large votes for public buildings. What is the difference?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These are known requirements. We know that at Napanee the heating and plumbing service will require an expenditure this year, and that is placed in the estimates. There may be a development in one of these stations during this summer. The engineer or the architect may report that the heating apparatus is out of condition and should be renewed. This vote would take care of a condition of that kind.

Item agreed to.

Haileybury—to pay to the municipal authorities the amount of fire insurance on armoury for the erection of a community hall.

Mr. HANSON: This vote requires some explanation. I think I remember something about it a year ago. What is the present status of this vote and what is the necessity of it? It seems to me it is intended to make a gift to the community as a result of a fire.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At the time of the fire in Haileybury the government had an armoury building which they had rented to the municipality to be used for recreation purposes. The citizens had insured the building to an amount of $33,500. When the building was destroyed, the insurance fell due and was paid into the consoldiated revenue fund. Naturally, the people of Haileybury were desirous that the government should reconstruct an armoury or a building of that type that would be again useful for their purposes. We took the view that probably what would be more serviceable would be a post office and customs building. We carried the vote, I think, for two years on the understanding that that would be what would be done. The citizens of Haileybury, however, objected very strenuously to that; the matter was considered very carefully, and finally it was agreed that this money which resulted from the insurance obtained on the building, would be placed at their disposal in order that they might erect a community hall or building that would be suitable for their purposes. The government will not have an armoury there, but we shall have an arrangement with the community whereby the local military units will have accommodation in that hall.

Mr. HANSON: Who paid the insurance premium?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They did.

Mr. HANSON: Who will have title to the new community hall?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think they would like the title, but I do not know whether they will get it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I suppose the minister knows that in Ontario there is provincial legislation covering this field. It would be rather a dangerous departure for this government to undertake the construction of community halls, and I do not see that any good ground has been shown for the vote.

Mr. GRAHAM: I happened to be in the Department of National Defence when the transaction took place. The town of Haileybury paid the insurance premiums, insuring the building; and when the money came in I accepted the cheque but was obliged to hand it over to the Receiver General. I doubt whether there is any similar situation anywhere in Ontario. Haileybury is simply asking that the insurance money be used to construct a building which they want. The Dominion does not insure buildings as a general rule; it does so only in exceptional cases. In this case the town paid the premiums itself and it handed over the insurance money, $33,500, rather reluctantly, although there was nothing for it to do but that. At that time I thought that we should be in a position to erect a post office building or something of that kind, but apparently that is not what they want; they want a hall which they can use for the same purposes as they used the drill hall before. I think it is a fair propostion, and I assented to it with the mayor of Haileybury.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I presume that Haileybury paid the insurance in the form of rental for the use of the building, and the hazard was thereby increased. It is not usual for a community to make arrangements for the rental of an armoury or other public building and pay the insurance, because the risk is increased the moment the building is put to private uses. It seems to me that the Dominion should own and control any building which they erect out of the public money, and then if they desired to make an arrangement for the rental of it by the town they could do so.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To construct a building similar to the one they had would cost us considerably more than $33,000. I think it would involve us in an expenditure of $75,000 or thereabouts and the department would not feel justified in spending that amount. The town is not agreeable to having a post office and I do not see any reason why we should force a public building on them. There is no doubt that the town suffered a catastrophe and at the time there was a general feeling to be generous to its inhabitants. I know that the provincial government of Ontario was liberal in its treatment of them; it immediately constructed a new public building in the town and the general desire was to stimulate the people and in that way show them that there was faith in the community. If the new building is located on land owned by the government we shall see to it that the title remains in the crown. Indeed, I fancy that is what will be done; and we should also have some provision made for the accommodation of the local military unit.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Have any plans been drawn up?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The plans have not yet been developed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is the town contributing towards the cost or is the Dominion bearing the whole of it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are simply paying the insurance money.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): How much is the building to cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are not committing ourselves to more than $33,500. If the citizens want to construct a better building they will have to provide the extra money themselves.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does the minister know whether they propose to put up a better building?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know.

Mr. HANSON: I do not understand the mentality of a community that rejects the offer for the erection of a public building in the form of a post office. Is it that they are in hopes of getting the $33,000 and a new building besides?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. HANSON: The minister will find that is what will happen. What post office accommodation is there in that town now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The building is rented.

Mr. HANSON: The minister will find when he parts with this money that there will be a demand in due course for a public building at a cost of probably $100,000. He should insist that the money go into a post office, and then it would be for the greatest good of the greatest number and would save the country considerable expenditures later on.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is it proposed to construct the new building on the site occupied by the one destroyed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I fancy that would be the intention, but they have not submitted their plans to us yet. Considering the whole situation carefully, the government, not desiring to become involved in an expenditure of probably $75,000, and taking into account the fact that the people did not desire a public building, decided that this would be the best way of clearing the matter up.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does the minister say that he does not know whether the money is to be expended in a building to be erected on land owned by the Dominion?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The plans have not been settled definitely yet.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Should not the site be conveyed to the Dominion?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The site belongs to us.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And the minister does not know whether or not they propose to build on that site.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not seen the committee for months. At the time I consulted with them I refused to consider anything but a public building, but later on I decided that in view of all the circumstances the way now proposed was the best means of settling the matter.

Mr. HANSON: This is an unusual vote, as I think the minister will agree, and he will find that he is establishing a rather dangerous precedent; for if this vote carries the government will have to hand out a cheque to the municipality of Haileybury, and there will be no string to it. The money may be diverted to any purpose to which the municipality may see fit to put it.

Mr .KING (Kootenay): There is no fear of that.

Mr. HANSON: The vote as it stands does not safeguard the public interest in that respect. I suppose that in equity, if they diverted the money to some other purpose, the government might perhaps recover from the municipality; but they would have some difficulty in doing so. I would suggest that the minister take mighty good care that none of the money shall be paid out until there is a binding contract with the municipality that it shall be diverted to no other purpose. I want to assure the minister that there are communities in other parts of the country that would like to have similar government assistance, and demands will be made on his department from now on for such a system. He can take fair warning that this is what will happen as a result of this precedent.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What became of the $35,000 voted last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was not expended at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are there no definite plans as to the type of building to be erected, and how it is to be controlled? It does seem rather a remarkable situation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have not developed any plans. As I said before, our original idea was to construct a post office building, but the municipal authorities have requested that the money be voted for the erection of a community hall. Before any payments are made to them they will have to submit plans, and an agreement will have to be entered into. I am trying to guard the Dominion against any further expenditure than $33,500.

Mr. HANSON: Have they made a request that the government shall erect a public building in addition to this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, that has not been discussed with them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me a most anomalous situation. I think it is an admirable thing to erect a community hall—personally I am glad it is to be that instead of an armoury—but I cannot see why Haileybury should have a community hall any more than five hundred other places in this country should have similar accommodation. The reasons which the minister has advanced are by no means convincing. They seem to be based simply on some indefinite claim that Haileybury has to this $33,000. Apparently the only basis for the claim is that they paid the insurance which, as we have been told, was paid apparently as rent. That was over and done with when the building was burned down. It would seem to me that naturally the $33,000 insurance would revert to the Dominion government and should remain in the treasury until such time as it is needed in some particular place. I cannot see any special claim that Haileybury has upon this money simply because there was a temporary arrangement with regard to the former building.

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely the hon. gentleman does not understand the situation here. Fire destroyed the town and everybody came to its aid—provincial and Dominion authorities, the Red Cross and other associations, and the public. It was decided that the least the government could do would be to replace the building burned down and leave the town in its former position. The Minister of Public Works is not going that far. He is merely contributing $33,500 to the erection of a building which, if he undertook to replace the old building, would cost the people of Canada twice as much. We are really saving $40,000 by handing back to Haileybury the insurance which was kept up by the municipality. I think it is most reasonable that in order to encourage the people to rebuild in Haileybury we should at least set them an example.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree with the argument of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), for the reason that I do not think there is any obligation on the Dominion to rebuild.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think so either.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no legal obligation at all.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is proposed to hand this money over to the town of Haileybury to expend on a building which will belong to them, whereas the former building was the property of the Dominion. I submit that the title should remain in the Dominion.

Item agreed to.

Hamilton armouries—local improvement taxes, $3,397.56.

Mr. HANSON: Does the government pay local improvement taxes?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As a matter of grace we do in many cases where the municipality are making improvements.

Mr. HANSON: I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. STEVENS: Or else you do the paving yourself.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Kitchener public building—addition, $30,000.

Mr. HANSON: This is a new vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required for enlarging the existing building. The work was requested by the general superintendent of the postal service in a letter of October 11, 1923:

In regard to additional accommodation at Kitchener, Ontario, I wish to inform you that this office is congested to an almost unworkable degree. The department therefore requests that an item be placed in the estimates for the next fiscal year to cover the cost of the additional accommodation.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—departmental buildings—fittings, etc., $60,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is this the usual vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. This is required for the purchase and installation of metal filing cases, shelving and other fittings in the parliamentary and departmental offices at Ottawa. In 1917-18 the expenditure was $74,000; in 1921-22, $88,000; last year $56,000.

Mr. HANSON: Are these fittings purchased by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: I notice that most of the fittings in this building were purchased from the Office Supply Company. They make very good stuff, but they are very expensive. My experience is that you can do very much better with other concerns. Who supplied the fittings last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The chief manufacturers are the Office Specialty Company and the Steel Equipment Company. They both supplied fittings last year.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—Rideau Hall—alterations and improvements, $14,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Can the minister give us the amount spent on alterations and improvements to Rideau Hall within the last ten years, or if he has not those figures, what has been spent in recent years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the figures for the last ten years. The expenditure this year is required for the construction of a new greenhouse between the palmhouse and the residence, also to pay the balance due on construction of the palmhouse. The estimated cost of the greenhouse is $8,600; heating apparatus, $1,600; benches for flowers in greenhouse, $1,200. The balance due on the palmhouse and improvements to heating system amount to $1,580, and contingencies, $520.

Mr. IRVINE: I understand that the term of the present Governor General is drawing to a close. This might be a good time for us to abolish Government House altogether. I notice that in Alberta they have abolished the Government House, and I think perhaps it is a good thing to do. However, if it is to be maintained, I hope that we shall have the office filled with a Canadian-born Governor General, not that I have any reflection to cast on any Governor General, but if the office is to be maintained, I hope it will be filled by a Canadian.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to let that statement pass unchallenged. I would like to know how it would be possible to select a Canadian Governor General under the present party system of this country, and who would be satisfied with the selection? The "ins" might be satisfied, but the "outs" certainly would not. The main reason however, for continuing this office, is that the Governor General is the one great connecting link between the people of Canada and the Crown of Great Britain, and I hope the present method of selection will never be changed or the office abolished.

Mr. GRAHAM: I feel there ought to be a word said about that myself. The present occupant of the office of Governor General is one—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: One of the real men.

Mr. GRAHAM: I call him a real man, not standing on a pedestal at all, but down among the people. He has visited every part of the Dominion of Canada, and both he and Lady Byng have become of us and with us in a way that is commendable to all the people on this side of the ocean, and on the other side. It is disappointing to a great many of us that they could not see their way clear to remain for another term. His Excellency starts to-morrow on a trip up to the northern hinterland of Canada, and when he goes back to London, he will prove to be one of the greatest advocates of Canada that she has ever had, not from any superficial knowledge of the country, but because of a very intimate knowledge obtained by meeting the people in every part of this great Dominion. He does not meet them in state, but on these trips he meets them in heart to heart talk and in hand in hand conversation. He knows the aspirations of the Canadian people in the lower as well as in the higher walks of life, If they continue to send men to us like the present Governor General, Canada may be proud and more than satisfied at the present mode of selection.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since the Minister of Railways has just made reference to the advisability of consulting the various classes in Canada, I should like to suggest that there are at least some classes in this country who are not highly satisfied with maintaining an office of this kind. I have no word of criticism whatever with regard to the present occupant of that office; I am speaking solely of the office itself, of the effect it has in this country, and of the expenditure that is involved. Although it may help to unite us to Great Britain, and I am not suggesting that we should sever in any way that union, there is not the slightest doubt that it does tend to perpetuate certain class distinctions in this country that are foreign to the essential democracy which had existed here in the earlier years, and which some of us would like to see perpetuated. It is all very well to talk about the Governor General knowing all classes of people, but to no small extent a miniature court is maintained here for the sake of a comparatively small group of people in the city of Ottawa and others who may be able to travel here on special occasions. I think that is being felt throughout Canada by a large number of those people across the country who the Minister of Railways said it is well should be consulted in matters of this kind.

Further than that, in a large number of our papers within the last year or two there have been estimates made as to the expenditure involved in the upkeep of this particular office. It is very difficult to know just what these expenditures are, because they are scattered among so many items in different parts of the estimates. I should say the expenditure is somewhere near $300,000, which is very directly required in connection with the upkeep of this office. In addition to that, we should include interest on the money invested in Rideau Hall, and we then have an expenditure of about $500,000 a year for this one official. Now one might imagine that this little country of Canada, large in geographical area, but very small in population, and very small in resources, ought at this time to pay some little attention to these huge amounts that are being thrown around on every hand. I urge, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when we should begin to economize along those lines that are at least essential to the real welfare of the great masses of the people.

Further, may I say a few words with regard to the selection of a new Governor General. None of us like to speak about the matter when the new Governor General has actually been appointed, but now, when no one is apparently in sight, so far as we are informed, why not consider the type of person to be appointed to that office? I would join with one or two others who have spoken in suggesting that we might very well abolish that office here in Canada. I cannot see why the Chief Justice might not fulfil the formal functions that are now filled by the Governor General. If we must have a Governor General in Canada, why should he not be a Canadian? It seems to me that if we are so reduced by our party squabbles in this country that we cannot manage to unite in selecting some outstanding Canadian who would fitly occupy a position of that kind, then the future of this country is dark indeed. Surely there are individuals in Canada who could adequately fill an office of this kind. I cannot see why if we pride ourselves, as we sometimes do, on being one of the independent members of the commonwealth of British people, we should continue to occupy a position which is essentially one of subserviency to the Mother Country.

Then again, if we are to have a representative from the Old Country, I do not know why we ought always select someone from the nobility, or from the nearest approach to the nobility that we can find. We have had within the past year or so the rise of a new democracy in the Old Land. We have seen for a short time occupying office in the Old Country the Labour party. I do not know whether they are coming back to office in the near future; I think they will at no distant future. But in any case why should we not have a representative of what might be termed the common people, rather than have sent over to us one who represents the aristocracy? We have claimed in this country to belong to the common people. We consist very largely of ordinary business people, farmers and labouring people. Why should we have sent to us individuals who belong to another type, who are the survivors of the feudalism of the Old Land, which we have tried to get rid of on this North American continent? I should like to suggest that when the government is making any suggestions, or however this matter is arranged, these considerations might very well be kept in mind, and thus we might try to bring our institutions a little more into harmony with the ideals that are generally prevalent throughout Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: Much as I would like to take part in a discussion such as we have listened to, I was going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we are far away from the item, and as I have always tried to observe the rules with very great care, I feel it my duty to keep within the bounds of this vote. I want to make a suggestion that I think will help out somewhat. I want to suggest to the government that as the hour is getting late, the committee should rise, I would have no objection personally if the committee would agree to the balance of the items of this one vote passing, and then rising. I understand the Minister of Railways desires to move a private bill, which I think is quite proper. If the committee would agree, I would suggest that we might let the balance of this vote pass and then adjourn. I think we have done a good day's work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That includes all the items for Ontario?

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the other items in this vote shall pass? Carried.

Ottawa—towards purchase of Daly building	$136,000
Ottawa—towards purchase of building for government workshops	14,400
Port Colborne—public building	25,000
Sandwich—public building—improvements to heating	1,100
Toronto—building for Seed branch	45,000

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think before we carry that, this is a fitting time for the minister to give us particulars of what he is doing in the general re-letting of offices in Toronto in connection with the new building.

The CHAIRMAN: That does not come under this vote.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh yes.

The CHAIRMAN: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think we will have much trouble about that.

The CHAIRMAN: There is just the one item for the Seed branch building.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am going to ask in connection with the question as to the Seed branch building whether there are not a lot of other buildings of far more pressing importance. We are not getting our post office according to the newspapers, but the government is going to do a whole lot of renting in the new building. Can the minister tell us all about this new building at the corner of King and Yonge streets? It will not take a minute.

Mr. GRAHAM: I cannot add anything to what I said the other day.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no further progress?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Items agreed to.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

CALGARY AND FERNIE RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. GRAHAM moved that the House revert to the order of private bills.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. A. B. HUDSON (South Winnipeg) moved the second reading of Bill 184, respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (West Calgary): I should like to know by what authority we are reverting to private bills at this time of night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Under rule 36 the order may be read upon the motion of an hon. member, and put by the Chair. I may say that the reason for this procedure is that the select standing committee on railways and canals is meeting on Wednesday and forty-eight hours' notice is required before a bill can go from the House to the committee. Unless the second reading takes place now this bill will not come before the committee on that day, and extra sittings of the committee will be required.

Mr. SHAW: When this bill came up a few nights ago I asked for information in connection with it, but the hon. gentleman who is promoting the measure was not in the House on that occasion. I have received absolutely no notice of this motion at all and consequently I have not before me the documents which I intend to use in opposing this particular measure. I ask therefore that the motion stand.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the hon. gentleman persists in his objection it may mean the killing of the bill.

Mr. SHAW: I think it should be killed.

Mr. GRAHAM: The practice generally is to allow a railway bill to go to the committee where all parties can be heard either in its favour or against it. All we are trying to do with this bill is to advance it a stage so that it can go to the Railway committee which is the forum fixed by parliament for investigating all details in connection with such as measure as this.

Mr. SHAW: If I understand the rules of the House correctly the principle of a bill is approved on the second reading. If the Minister of Railways is prepared to allow this bill to go to the committee on the first reading, then I will raise no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is the second reading. The bill cannot go to the committee on the first reading.

Mr. STEVENS: The bill has already had its first reading.

Mr. SHAW: I know it has had its first reading, but the point is that the principle is approved on the second reading, and I am not prepared to approve it at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Suppose the Minister of Railways consents that my hon. friend's objections can be reserved and that we are not committing ourselves to the principle of the bill at all but just sending it to the committee—would the minister agree to that?

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely. Many a bill goes to the committee that never comes back.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The point of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) is very simple. He says "I have not my papers and I need to be in possession of them when I object to the principle of the bill." The usual practice is to object to the principle on the motion for the second reading, but supposing the hon. member says; "I will be prepared to advance my reasons at the meeting of the Railway committee"—surely my hon. friend will consent to that course being taken.

Mr. SHAW: Surely.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Select standing committee of Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. GRAHAM (for Mr. Hopkins) moved the second reading of Bill No. 187, from the Senate, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee of Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines.

On motion of Mr. Graham the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Tuesday.

Tuesday, June 16, 1925

The House met at three o'clock.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. W. G. RAYMOND (Brantford) presented the report of the special committee appointed to consider the subject of Old Age Pensions.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

PETITION PRESENTED

Mr. ANDREW KNOX (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a petition signed by 125,000 of the people of the province of Saskatchewan praying the parliament of Canada to take such steps as may provide for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway to Port Nelson during the present year; also to provide for the expenditures for the completion of the harbour facilities at Port Nelson. I may say that the forwarder of this petition says in an accompanying letter that approximately 100,000 of the signatures to this petition were obtained at the polls during the Saskatchewan provincial election, and that each signature on the petition is of a duly qualified voter in the province of Saskatchewan. He also says—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion with respect to morning sittings. I am suggesting Thursday, the 18th instant, in view of the discussion that took place yesterday, as a date likely to be acceptable to all sides of the House. I move:

That on and after Thursday, the 18th of June next, until the end of the present session, the House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each sitting day, and that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall be also an intermission every day from one to three o'clock p.m.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, although we have had much else this session in the way of avalanches of money and other votes, we have not had the supplementary estimates. I do not know how close we are to the end of the session, but we are certainly pretty well advanced and near it. Surely we should have had the supplementary estimates before this.

Mr. ROBB: I hope to table the supplementary estimates not later than to-morrow.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Before this motion is put, I desire to point out to the government that there is at the present time before the Agriculture committee that most important act, the Grain Act. I am informed it will be impossible for that act to get out of the committee stage before to-night at the earliest, possibly not until to-morrow. It cannot then be reprinted and disposed of by the House this week. By the time it goes to the Upper House we probably may expect the middle of next week to be reached, and I sincerely trust that in putting this motion the government does not intend that parliament shall prorogue before the Grain Act is disposed of by both Houses.

Mr. JACOBS: May I inquire if this motion will include Saturday sittings?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no mention of Saturday sittings at the moment, but I am asking the whips to ascertain whether it would be agreeable to members of the House to sit this coming Saturday, and if there appears to be agreement in favour of it, I will move that the House sit on Saturday.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

DOMINION CHARTERED CUSTOMS HOUSE BROKERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. ANDREW McMASTER (Brome) moved:

That Bill No. 11, an act to incorporate the Dominion Chartered Customs House Brokers Association, be sent back to the Private Bills committee.

He said: This bill was rejected by the committee when there were only eleven members out of sixty-five present, and on a fairly close division. The bill is now shorn of any objectionable feature, and I think the interests of justice demand that it should be sent back to the committee. I may say that I have not prepared any formal motion in writing, Mr. Speaker, but I trust that the informality may be overlooked.

Mr. SPEAKER: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House that it be adopted?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the motion in order? I do not think it is. A motion of this kind cannot be made without giving due notice.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Mr. McMASTER: There is really no reason why the House should not give unanimous consent. Every objectionable feature in the bill is cut out entirely, and it is now most innocuous.

Mr. SPEAKER: The rule governing a question of this kind reads as follows:

Two days' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for the putting of a question but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the House. Such notice shall be laid on the table before five o'clock p.m., and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

I understand this is a private bill.

Mr. McMASTER: It is a private bill, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

TAX COLLECTIONS

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): I beg leave to move the motion of which I gave notice last Wednesday. It is as follows:

Whereas under an order of reference made on the 23rd of March, 1925, the standing committee on Public Accounts has had under investigation the methods of assessment and collection of business profits and income taxes;

Therefore be it resolved,

That the said committee on Public Accounts be instructed that they have power to consider and recommend to this House such amendments to the Income War Tax Act as may seem to them advisable.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): When this resolution was presented by my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Good) a few days ago, I directed his attention to the fact that what seemed to me the proper method of procedure was that such a motion should come from the Public Accounts committee, either through its chairman or by a majority report of the committee. For these reasons I shall have to oppose the resolution.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN (Cumberland): I may say that after the reference made a few days ago by the Acting Minister of Finance I brought this matter up in the Public Accounts committee, of which I am chairman, and asked them for their instructions. A motion was made to request this House to give the committee power to make the inquiry as desired by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good). The motion was duly put to a vote and defeated, largely on the ground that it was considered too late in the session to enter upon such a very serious consideration, and secondly that there was a question as to whether the Public Accounts committee should not be confined to examining the public accounts and not determining what is public policy.

Mr. GOOD: I took it that this would be the attitude of the government. Under the circumstances, therefore, I feel under an obligation to put myself on record briefly in regard to the need for this motion. I should like, in the first place, to refer to some of the significant and salient facts brought out during the investigation. In the first place the commissioner was formerly the tariff officer of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and was subsequently called upon as Commissioner of Taxation to assess the business profits and income taxes against concerns for whom he had previously been a special agent. In the second place the commissioner assumed full and personal responsibility for all appointments made under the Business Profits War Tax Act, and also for all adjustments or modifications of assessment made under that act. In the third place, among approximately 30,000 taxpayers assessed under the Business Profits War Tax Act not a single appeal was pressed and no board of referees was ever appointed. There was not one among the 30,000 who was not satisfied to such an extent that he did not press his appeal; not one was irreconcilable. In the fourth place no member of parliament, and no committee of parliament, has had the privilege of examining any original assessment or any subsequent modification thereof. All the files are strictly confidential, and all the officials are under a solemn obligation to preserve secrecy. Not only is this obligation imposed upon all officials under the Business Profits War Tax Act and the Income War Tax Act, but in addition, within the last year, all the officials in the Taxation branch at Ottawa have been required to make a sweeping and solemn declaration before the commissioner.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, although I am one of those who supported the hon. gentleman in his contention the other day. The point of order is that there has been no written notice of this motion given to the House previous to its introduction as required, I think, by rule 40.

Mr. SPEAKER: I remember the hon. gentleman (Mr. Good) bringing this same motion forward on the 9th of June. At that time I ruled the motion out of order for the reason that no notice had been given. Now rule 40 says:

> Two days' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for the putting of a question; but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the House. Such notice shall be laid on the table before five o'clock, p.m., and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

Has the hon. gentleman given notice to the Clerk of the House?

Mr. GOOD: May I speak to the point of order? I gave notice on Wednesday at the opening of the proceedings, and was subsequently in communication with the Clerk over the matter. I understood that I had officially given notice on that day. At all events the resolution appears in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. Under the rule quoted by you, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the motion is in order and that I have complied with all the formalities.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. member desire to speak to the point of order?

It is true that on the Votes and Proceedings of the House of June 10, the motion which I have just read appears; the same resolution that was moved on June 9. However, it is simply recorded as one of the questions which came before the House and was debated that day. But to be strictly in order the hon. gentleman should have handed his motion to the Clerk of the House before five o'clock and it would then have been printed under "Notices of Motions and Questions." If the hon. member will refer to the Votes and Proceedings at page 425 he will see certain notices of motion and questions, and his motion does not appear there. Therefore, much as I regret it, I must rule that there was no notice given.

Mr. GOOD: Did you not, Mr. Speaker, accept my notice as a notice of motion on Wednesday?

Mr. SPEAKER: I ruled against the hon. gentlemen moving his resolution as he proposed to do on June 9, and I said to the hon. member that he should give two days' notice of this motion. The hon. gentleman did not avail himself of my advice. The notice does not appear in the votes and proceedings of June 10.

Mr. GOOD: I understood I had given notice.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should have handed his notice of motion to the Clerk, who would have entered it in the journals of the House.

Mr. GOOD: It was an inadvertance on my part, and I shall have to give notice now in the proper way.

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes, by handing the notice of motion to the Clerk.

OCEAN RATES ON CATTLE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. HARRY LEADER (Portage la Prairie): I desire to read the following paragraph, under the caption "Ocean rates on cattle," and to ask a question of the government relative thereto:

> Right upon the heels of the report of the Parliamentary Committee which inquired into ocean rates comes announcement that the steamship companies have heightened the cattle rate to $25 a head to Glasgow and Liverpool.

Is the government aware of this increase, and are they taking steps in protest?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Such a report appeared in the newspapers. Now the newspapers are usually accurate, but sometimes the papers are imposed upon. A telegram was received yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) saying that only one line had increased their rate on cattle, and that that increase had immediately been withdrawn. On reading the item a day or two ago I wired the President of the Canadian National Railways, under whose jurisdiction the Canadian Government Merchant Marine operates, that the rate on cattle must not exceed the rate in force in May.

RURAL CREDITS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Will the Acting Minister of Finance inform me when the House may expect legislation to be brought down with regard to rural credits?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): I think if my hon. friend refers to the votes and proceedings he will find the answer to his question.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Did I understand the Acting Minister of Finance to refer to this motion that is on the order paper in his name as the government's rural credits' policy? If so, I would point out that this is not rural credits at all, as I understand it.

Mr. ROBB: What motion is my right hon. friend referring to?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The $10,000,000 for the land loan.

Mr. ROBB: When we reach it, I shall be in a position to explain to my right hon. friend what it means.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But is it the rural credits' scheme?

Mr. McMASTER: I do object—and I trust I speak not only for myself but for all members in this part of the chamber—to the conversational tone of voice in which the proceedings are being carried on. Either our services should be dispensed with from the chamber, or matters should be discussed in such audible tones that members who are carefully listening will be able to hear what is going on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am prepared for either alternative. I was merely asking if the government represents this motion as its rural credits' policy.

ALBERTA COAL

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I desire to direct the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Argenteuil) to a despatch on the front page of the Calgary Herald of June 12, which has just reached Ottawa. It refers to coal shipments from Alberta to Ontario, and is headed: "Ontario asks for Drumheller coal in vain." The despatch indicates that the operators have been unable to secure any co-operation with the Canadian National Railways in the shipment of coal, and that the Canadian National officials are without authority to accept coal shipments to Ontario at reduced rates. It is a perplexing situation. On a wire to the minister the information was given that the Dominion government was paying one dollar per ton subsidy on the freight rate on coal from Drumheller. That is, Drumheller to Ontario. What steps have been taken to remedy this situation and to make the rates reduced available? Is the statement in this despatch true, that the payment is in the form of a subsidy to the railway of a dollar a ton?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Some difficulty appears to have arisen with the coal shipments, but I am not clear as to what the difficulty is. Negotiations have been carried on between the Alberta government and the coal company. We agreed to provide one dollar per ton for this trial shipment of 25,000 tons to be brought from a centrad point in Alberta to a central point in Ontario, provided, of course, that the rate to be fixed was $7 a ton. I was given to understand that was the rate. That was the rate agreed upon as the initial rate, the railways claiming it cost $9 a ton. Checkers were to be appointed by the railway and by the Alberta government. I think Mr. Hinton was paid by the Alberta government as their representative, but a careful check of the movement was to be kept from an Alberta point to a central point in Ontario. If it developed that the cost was more than $7 this government was to contribute to the extent of $1 per ton, and if it developed that it cost more than $8 per ton the Alberta government was to contribute to the extent of one dollar. That was the arrangement as I understand, and that is the arrangement we are prepared to carry out.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister had not answered the first part of my query. Is the government aware that difficulties have arisen between the Canadian National and the operators in the transportation of this coal, the Canadian National apparently holding the opinion that it has no authority to haul the coal at the reduced rate?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot be held responsible for what is in the newspapers. I am not aware of any difficulty of that kind. I have never heard before that the Canadian National did not have authority to haul coal at the reduced rate.

FRUIT ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT

The House resumed from June 12, the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) for the consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 117, to amend the Fruit Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): This is the bill on which we had a brief discussion the other evening and as regards which we decided to ask for a conference with the Senate. I, therefore, beg to move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees to their amendment to Bill No 117, to amend the Fruit Act, for the following reason;

Because, (a) It refers to an association by a wrong title

(b) The holding of consultations with an association whose membership is recruited from all points in Canada may often be very difficult and even impossible;

(c) The mere fact of consulting such a body would not bring actual results and seems an unnecessary condition.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I support the motion wholeheartedly. May I ask why the Minister of Agriculture is absent?

Mr. GRAHAM: He is attending the committee on Agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BILLS PROPOSED TO AUTHORIZE THE CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINES

SUNNYBRAE-GUYSBOROUGH

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 210, respecting the construction of a Canadian National railway line between Sunnybrae and Guysborough, in the province of Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines.

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES

BILL TO AMEND THE RAILWAY ACT, 1919

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 181, to amend the Railway Act, 1919.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Powers of board continued.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is the freight rates case, and I do not want to take any advantage of hon. gentlemen to pass any of it through without their having an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. FORKE: I think we ought to have this debate on the second reading. It slipped through rather accidentally.

Mr. GRAHAM: We can debate it now just as well. I presume I should make a few comments on the proposition at present before the committee to regulate freight rates and to bring order out of the chaos that now to a large extent exists in the rate structure of the Dominion of Canada. That disorder exists from a series of findings and conditions. If the committee will bear with me, I will give a little history of the situation.

In 1897, what is known as the Crowsnest pass agreement was made by the Dominion of Canada with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Under this agreement the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed to build a line of railway through what is known as the Crowsnest pass to Nelson, B.C. They were given as a subsidy $11,000 a mile, or, in all, $3,404,720. In return, under this agreement it was provided that the Canadian Pacific railway should give a freight rate on grain and flour from points west of Fort William to Fort William and any point east of Fort William three cents per hundred pounds lower than the then existing rate, and certain reductions were to be made on named articles and commodities shipped from the east westward. I might name some of the commodities as part of the history:

Commodity—	Reduction per cent
All green and fresh fruit	33⅓
Coal oil	20
Cordage and binder twine	10
Agricultural implements of all kinds set up or in parts	10
Iron, including bar, band, Canada galvanized sheets, pipe, pipe-fittings, plates, nails, spikes, and horse-shoes	10
All kinds of wire	10
Window glass	10
Paper for building and roofing purposes	10
Roofing felt, box and packing	10
Paints of all kinds and oils	10
Livestock	10
Wooden ware	10
Household furniture	10

I think that this in a broad way, covers the terms of this agreement. This agreement was in force prior to 1918. In 1918, if I remember correctly, under the War Measures Act an order in council was passed giving the Board of Railway Commissioners power to override the Crowsnest pass agreement temporarily. In 1919, with the lapse of wartime orders in council, the suspension of the Crowsnest agreement was provided for in the general Railway Act then under review, and that suspension was definitely limited to a period of three years from July 7, 1919. In July, 1922 the Crowsnest pass agreement, so far as grain and flour were concerned, again became operative, the agreement as respecting westbound rates being extended for a further period of one year, with power under the act for the Governor in Council to extend those provisions for one year further. On July 6, 1924, no legislation having intervened, the Crowsnest pass agreement in its entirety came automatically into force. Except for the period of four years referred to the rate under the Crowsnest pass agreement on grain and flour has been in existence since 1898 when the act came into force. The Crowsnest pass agreement having, as I have said, come automatically into force on July 6, 1924, tariffs were filed with the Board of Railway Commissioners in accordance with the terms of the agreement, with this exception, that the Canadian Pacific Railway restricted the application of those rates to points which were on that system of railway in the year 1897 when the Crowsnest pass agreement was decided upon and the act passed. This of course created considerable confusion. An appeal was made both to the Board of Railway Commissioners and the board gave a ruling to the effect that the general act of 1903, under which the Board of Railway commissioners was constituted, over-rode the special act embodying the Crowsnest pass agreement and the board ordered the withdrawal of the restricted tariffs. An appeal was taken both to the board and to the Governor in Council. The board remitted the appeal to the Supreme court on certain questions of law while so far as the Governor in Council was concerned, the board was directed to restore the Crowsnest rates as applied by the railways pending judgment of the Supreme court. The judgment of the Supreme court—I am speaking in the terms of a layman—was to the effect that the Board of Railway Commissioners had been mistaken in the finding that the act of 1903 superseded the agreement of 1897; the Crowsnest pass agreement, it was held, had really the force of a statute and could not be over-ridden by the act of 1903. On the other question, as to the limited territory to which the Crowsnest pass agreement applied, the court found that the contention of the Canadian Pacific Railway was right and that the terms of the agreement applied, so far as that railway was concerned, only to those points that were in existence at the time of the making of the agreement in 1897.

One can readily see that with these conflicting findings there would be an indescribably chaotic condition in the country in the matter of freight rates. Under the judgment

Crowsnest rates were legally applicable only at points that were in existence on the Canadian Pacific in 1897, while adjacent towns were obliged to pay the higher regular rates. And this condition as to descrimination was true of the west as well as the east. For example, we found Edmonton on a different basis altogether from Calgary. This situation, of course, could not be tolerated, and the legislation we have now before the House is intended to provide some means for the removal of this discrimination and to give the Board of Railway Commissioners a free hand in the equalizing of rates throughout Canada in order that all parts of the country may be equally situated with others.

In substantiation of what I have said regarding this discrimination I would submit for the consideration of the committee the following table showing all-rail rates on Crowsnest commodities from eastern to western Canada, compared with rates on the same commodities from places not affected by the agreement. On agricultural implements from Hamilton, Ontario, to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, a distance of 1,716 miles, the rate is $1.15½ per hundred, while from Brantford, Ontario, to Saskatoon, 1,737 miles, the rate is $1.39½. I will not read the other items but, with the permission of the committee, I will place the statement on Hansard.

The complete statement is as follows:

STATEMENT SHOWING ALL-RAIL RATES ON CROW'S NEST COMMODITIES IN CARLOADS FROM EASTERN TO WESTERN CANADA COMPARED WITH RATES ON SOME COMMODITIES FROM TERRITORY NOT AFFECTED BY THE CROW'S NEST AGREEMENT

Office of the Vice-President,
Canadian National Railways,
Montreal, Que., May 6, 1925.

It can be readily seen that this state of affairs could not continue. Now, there are two things that parliament can do; it can insist on having the Crowsnest agreement remain in force in its entirety or it can remove it altogether from the statute books. But a third and middle course might be taken, and we are asking parliament to remove from the agreement that part relating to westbound traffic, leaving to the prairies and the west for the future all the benefit they have ever received, and more too, I think, on grain and flour.

Now, suppose we said that the best thing to do was to leave the Crowsnest pass agreement in its entirety. I do not think there is a man in this House who in private would, after considering the situation, say that that ought to be done. What does it mean? Speaking as Minister of Railways and adviser of the government on railway matters, I feel a serious responsibility for the condition of our railways at the present time. Not only are we responsible for the great Canadian Pacific Railway, but we are responsible for and proprietors of 22,600 miles of our own railway; and while I am not pleading the cause of the railways, let us all keep in mind that this is the situation to which we cannot close our eyes and which we cannot ignore in discussing the question. As I said, I have a responsibility, but I want to be bold, I want to pass that responsibility, or the share that belongs to him or her, over to every member of this House, because I say without any hesitation that this parliament could break the railways of Canada if it so desired, and any action we take ought to be taken with at least full consideration. Now, what would happen if the Crowsnest pass agreement were maintained in its entirety? On a large list of commodities—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think, fifteen.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, fifteen. On that list of commodities rates were established by the Crowsnest pass agreement which mean a loss to the railways of Canada. There is no getting around that. Now, if that rate basis applied only to those particular commodities between certain points it would not be so bad, but these particular commodities come under certain classifications, and no unjust discrimination being allowed under the Railway Act, there would be nothing for the Board of Railway Commissioners to do but to apply the Crowsnest pass rates as the basis for rates all over the Dominion. The railways of Canada—I say it advisedly—cannot stand that application. Then take the other viewpoint: Should we abolish the Crowsnest pass agreement altogether? I may admit at once that there are a great many men in this House who believe that it is the proper thing to do.

4 p.m.

Mr. CALDWELL: Before the minister proceeds may I put a question to him on the former point? He said that if the Crowsnest pass agreement were put into effect it would mean that the railway commission must make other rates corresponding with the rates under that agreement, for there could not be unjust discrimination. But did not the Supreme court rule that any rates set under such a private act did not constitute unjust discrimination, that therefore there could be very much lower rates under a special act, but that they would not be taken as the basis for fixing rates generally, and would not be considered unjust discrimination?

Mr. GRAHAM: No. In making comparisons with the special act in force it would not be called unjust discrimination; but in building a rate structure, no matter what the judgment of the court might be, you would find that the Board of Railway Commissioners would have to take that special rate as their yardstick. It would have to apply to every town in the Dominion where there was any railway.

Mr. CALDWELL: It never has.

Mr. GRAHAM: To my mind the Crowsnest pass agreement could not possibly be made the permanent basis of our rate structure without bringing our railways into a situation that would be serious for them and more serious for the Dominion.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Why did the Canadian Pacific Railway sign the Crowsnest pass agreement then?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend has lived a good many years since 1897; so have I.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Why did they sign it?

Mr. HOEY: As a matter of fact, would not that mean increased freight rates for eastern Canada?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not my intention to discuss freight rates; but I repeat, if the Crowsnest pass basis of rates is to be made the yardstick for freight rates in the Dominion, you may as well give away your National railways to-morrow, because you will find no government and no Minister of Railways that would be responsible for carrying on the railway system under those conditions.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Have not the Canadian Pacific Railway that in view?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend must excuse me from saying what the Canadian Pacific Railway had in view forty years ago.

Mr. HODGINS: Would not that be the only yardstick for those commodities that are mentioned in the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all. Commodities are classified under various classifications, and no matter how we may endeavour to get around it we cannot have unjust discrimination, and all the rates would have to be brought to the same level as a matter of practice, for the people would demand it, and rightly so.

Are we to do away with the Crowsnest pass agreement altogether? As I pointed out, a great many people think we should. But the Crowsnest pass agreement having been in force, the government decided that, along the lines they are proceeding, they would give a fair chance to the people in every part of the Dominion and thus avoid injustice to those in certain sections. I think I am correct in this, that there is no part of Canada from which anything is taken that is not getting compensation. There are different kinds of rates, they are all interwoven into our rate system, and it is possible to gain something on one rate and lose twice as much on some other rate. We have commodity rates, through rates, export rates, local rates, distributing rates, competitive rates. Now, parts of Canada are gaining more in their commodity rates than they could lose in this grain rate if it were increased by twenty-five per cent. A commodity rate is based on nothing but the desire to give a certain community an opportunity to ship its goods at a rate sufficiently low to enable those goods to reach the market on a competitive basis. The fixing of commodity rates is in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Competitive rates are rates to competitive points and rates competing with water carriage.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Under these circumstances, what does the equalization of rates really mean?

Mr. GRAHAM: The Board of Railway Commissioners will have to decide what equality means.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I understand it, this bill provides for the equalization of rates. Under all these categories of rates, what does equalization really involve?

[Mr. Graham.]

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend will have to excuse me from going into a couple of hours' discussion of a technical point. I am pointing out to him and to the House the different kinds of rates which exist, and this bill has nothing to do with those rates except that it leaves their control entirely with the Board of Railway Commissioners, where it has always been.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me important that, since the bill proposes to grant the railway commission the opportunity of equalizing rates, we should know exactly what that involves.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Chairman, I would advise my hon. friend to discuss this in committee, and allow me to proceed with my statement. Perhaps he is confusing the order in council with the bill. I made the statement that I did not think that anything was being taken from any part of Canada for which compensation was not being given. In the east, and I want to make it clear that the Crowsnest pass agreement gave the east some privileges, privileges to ship their produce to the west at a reduced rate, and that privilege was shared and only shared by the western people who got the benefit, or should have got the benefit of the lower freight rates on those commodities—that was not all for the western people; that was for the eastern producer as well as the western consumer. Now we are taking away from the eastern producer any benefit he may have had under that Crowsnest pass agreement on westbound traffic, but he is getting something which under the present conditions is necessary to clear the way and must make him feel that he is getting a substitute which helps in a measure at least. He is getting rid of an act under which the railways cannot give him good service. Every community knows that under this act it will not be discriminated against in favour of any other community. That is what the east gets in eliminating this portion of the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Now what does the west get?

Mr. FORKE: There's the joker.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no joker in this. The west gets a good deal. The Crowsnest pass agreement at the time it was made—I do not want to be argumentative, I simply want to state facts—gave to the west an agreement respecting 2,951 miles of railway. That is the mileage and the territory covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement west of Fort William. That, according to the Supreme court's decision, was the quid pro quo for the grant of some $3,400,000 odd dollars.

Now, how many miles of the Canadian Pacific will be affected under the present act with respect to grain and flour? Instead of the 2,951 miles at the present time, the prairies are getting the benefit of the Crowsnest pass agreement on 8,084 miles, as against 2,951 miles which they got originally under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. KELLNER: Would that be mileage east of the mountains?

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the mileage from the boundary of British Columbia to the head of the lakes. Take the Canadian Pacific, granted, if you like, that the Crowsnest pass agreement anticipated that all this mileage to be constructed would come under it; take for granted, as parliament always seems to have done, that this decision of the Supreme court is not applicable, then what do we find? The Canadian Pacific lines all told coming under the Crowsnest pass agreement to-day are 8,084 miles. But in addition to that, and surely no one will dispute this, with the Canadian National railway coming under the bill we are now proposing, this new statute definitely gives to the prairie provinces an additional mileage of 9,007. I say that the extra benefit by legislation, not by competition, but by legislation, that comes to the prairie provinces under the act now before this House more than compensates them for anything they lose on the westbound traffic.

Mr. SHAW: Is it not true that we have always had that?

Mr. GRAHAM: If my hon. friend were in court he would have followed my words more closely. I said you will have by statute 9,000 miles more than you ever dreamed you would have.

Mr. SHAW: We had it by a decision of the railway commission once before.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not by statute, because the statute applies only to the Canadian Pacific, and the only way you could get that would be under the clause which provides against unjust discrimination.

Mr. STEVENS: If the minister justifies the bringing of this 9,000 miles of National railway under the same conditions as provided in the Crowsnest agreement, why does he by an amendment to clause 6 prevent the application of it to the transport of wheat and flour westward to the Pacific coast?

Mr. GRAHAM: Because the Crowsnest pass agreement always dealt with eastbound traffic, and under this act we are bringing nothing in; we are simply making an enlargement of the Crowsnest pass agreement to include all mileage in the territory eastward that was covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister is including territory to the northward of the area included in the Crowsnest agreement. What is the difference between including it if it is to the northward or if it is to the westward? Why should not westward be included as well as northward? The geographical area northward is included, but the geographical area westward is arbitrarily excluded.

Mr. GRAHAM: The geographical situation as described by my hon. friend may be approximately accurate, but this act continues to deal with eastbound traffic, and that is in the Crowsnest pass agreement and always has been.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Westbound.

Mr. GRAHAM: I mean on grain and flour, and no division is made in that respect. I am pointing out that no matter what might happen in the years to come under railway commissions, whose decisions sometimes vary, the prairie provinces under this legislation are confirmed by statute—

Mr. HOEY: Which can be changed.

Mr. GRAHAM: Only by parliament. The prairie provinces are confirmed by statute now in a position they never had by statute before, but only under a decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners and on account of the unjust discrimination clause in the act. So to that extent there is, to my mind, a substantial benefit to the prairie provinces.

Mr. HOEY: The minister is talking about the benefit to the prairies. Will he not admit that even under the Crowsnest rates we still pay more, by seven to forty per cent, than we paid on grain and flour in 1917, and for many years previous?

Mr. GRAHAM: If my hon. friend wants to go back to the rates we had so many years ago, he will have to get a cheaper method of transportation.

Mr. HOEY: I would not return to them, but if normal conditions come back, this so-called statutory protection may be meaningless.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is all the protection my hon. friend ever had under the Crowsnest pass agreement. It is maintaining that in its entirety and in every detail.

Now let me go a little further. I want to refer for a moment to the bill itself. My hon. friend has spoken of British Columbia, and the same question might be raised in regard to the Maritime provinces; the same question might be raised in regard to any part of the province of Ontario, and in regard to the province of Quebec. But that would bring us to the point, Mr. Chairman, where this parliament would be undertaking to make a schedule of rates for the whole Dominion by statute, and I submit that that is not in the interests either of the consumers or of the producers of Canada. It would simply bring chaos, and we would have to go back on half our work. Parliament can lay down general principles, but under conditions as we have them to-day parliament is not the proper body to start in making a schedule of rates for the whole Dominion.

Mr. CLARK: In view of the fact that the Supreme Court has given a decision which makes it impossible to operate under the Crowsnest pass agreement, what obligation is there upon the people of Canada to make statutory rates for any part of Canada?

Mr. GRAHAM: This bill does not propose to make statutory rates for any part of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM: This bill rids us of the statutory rates that have already been made. That is all it does.

Mr HANSON: And confirms others.

Mr. LeSUEUR: By statute.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no question about the attitude and the position. I want to make it clear again: This bill does not create any statute for the making of rates. It eliminates a portion of the rates created under the statute of 1897, and leaves the balance as a fair compromise between the different parts of Canada.

Mr. CLARK: May I ask the minister another question?

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely.

Mr. CLARK: Does this act not extend the rates created under the Crowsnest pass agreement to the Canadian National Railways and all other railways?

[Mr. Hoey.]

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely.

Mr. CLARK: And they are statutory rates.

Mr. GRAHAM: Because, as my hon. friend says, they were in reality in force though I understood that—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear, the minister sees where he is cornered.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not cornered at all. I see where the right hon. gentleman has got all his gentlemen friends around him trying to corner me, but he will have to get forty more before he can do it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister not admit that this statute provides for the Canadian National Railways' fixed rates on grain and flour eastward, and that prior to this statute there was no statute that did it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then does not this statute increase the statutory rates?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM: It confirms the rates that are now in force.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not by statute.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are in force.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not by statute.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a fact that in the decision given by the Supreme Court of Canada it was expressly laid down that the Crowsnest rate does not apply to the Canadian National Railways eastward?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not going to argue that matter, it is so evident.

Mr. CLARK: It is not a matter of evidence, it is a matter of judgment.

Mr. GRAHAM: I used the word "evident." My hon. friends are just drawing a red herring across the trail. Here we are, trying to remedy a condition, that is all; and I am pointing out to the prairies that by statute they are getting something which by practice they had before. Now let me take up the bill

Mr. CLARK: Would the minister say what the effect of the Supreme court judgment is?

Mr. GRAHAM: What I say about the Supreme court decision is that in one respect we are overriding it in this bill. Now let me take up the bill as it is:

Chapter 41 of the Statutes of 1922 is hereby repealed.

That was the act. Power was given to the Governor in Council to extend it for another year. That is now out of existence, so it is repealed. Now the next section:

Subsection five of section three hundred and twenty-five of the Railway Act, 1919, is hereby repealed.

That is the section of the act passed in 1919 suspending the Crowsnest rates for three years. Now I come to section three which reads as follows:

Section three hundred and twenty-five of the Railway Act, 1919, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsections:

"(5) Notwithstanding the provisions of section three the powers given to the Board under this Act to fix, determine and enforce just and reasonable rates, and to change and alter rates as changing conditions or cost of transportation may from time to time require, shall not be limited or in any manner affected by the provisions of any act of the parliament of Canada, or by any agreement made or entered into pursuant thereto, whether general in application or special and relating only to any specific railway or railways, and the Board shall not excuse any charge of unjust discrimination, whether practised against shippers, consignees, or localities, or of undue or unreasonable preference, on the ground that such discrimination or preference is justified or required by any agreement made or entered into by the company.

That is practically a section of the act of 1919. The object is to remove the westbound traffic and place it under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I continue reading the section:

Provided that, notwithstanding anything in this subsection contained, rates on grain and flour shall, on and from the date of the passing of this Act, be governed by the provisions of the agreement made pursuant to chapter five of the statutes of Canada, 1897.

The provisions in the act of 1897 have reference to the retention of the rates eastbound on grain and flour.

Mr. HOEY: There is no reference to the westbound rates on grain and flour?

Mr. GRAHAM: There never was. In this bill we are sticking to the terms of the Crowsnest pass agreement. I want to explain again that if we started in to make a wholesale tariff for all the different parts of Canada, which is the business of the Board of Railway Commissioners, I am afraid parliament might not make a very good job of it. Consequently we are sticking to the terms of the Crowsnest pass agreement. We are not making new legislation except in the manner I described a few minutes ago, eliminating that portion of the Crowsnest pass agreement relating to westbound traffic but retaining every item of benefit the prairie provinces have had heretofore on grain and flour. Now let me read the proposed amendment. We have got to the point where all the traffic but the westbound traffic is still under the Crowsnest pass agreement, and the balance is put under the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. FORKE: Before you leave that point. The reduction was three cents to Fort William and points east?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. FORKE: Does that only apply to Fort William?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am going to explain that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is another change.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not a material change though, it does not make any difference. If the rate reduction were a percentage on so much a mile it would mean a great difference, but it was 3 cents per hundred pounds, and under the present act that was to apply to grain and flour shipped from points west of Fort William to Fort William or points east. It did not make any difference whether the grain stopped at Fort William or went east of Fort William, the reduction was three cents per hundred pounds. And that is not changed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the law as it will stand if this legislation passes, could not the rate be raised from Fort William eastward nullifying the effect of the reduction westward, whereas under the previous law that could not have been done?

Mr. GRAHAM: I want to say distinctly that the Crowsnest pass agreement never applied east of Fort William.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: Oh, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: Never. I will explain it to my right hon. friend because there has been a lot of misconception about this. It is a very important point and I want to make it clear. The only condition to get that three cents per hundred pounds was that the goods must be shipped from a point west of Fort William. Whether it stopped at Fort William or whether it went through to Jericho three cents per hundred pounds was all that was taken off the freight rates. If it originated fifty miles west of Fort William and got to Fort William the reduction was three cents per hundred pounds. The same was true if the freight went one hundred miles east of Fort William. I have looked up the Crowsnest pass agreement rates since 1897 so far as I could get them and those rates never were applied to points east of Fort William.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minister has a wrong comprehension of the situation. What he has said up to this last sentence is true. I do not dispute for a moment that all that was necessary—under the act as it stood, and as it was in effect—was that there was to be a reduction of three cents as between western points and Fort William and western points and St. John city or any other city. What will be possible if the present legislation passes is this. The company is only obliged to reduce three cents to Fort William. Now, with the approval of the railway commission—and there is nothing to prevent them giving it, nothing at all—the rate from Fort William farther east could be raised, thereby nullifying the reduction to Fort William from the points of origin.

Mr. GRAHAM: That was always the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because the aggregate rate from the place of origin eastward could never be more than three cents less than it was before. Now it can.

Mr. GRAHAM: I want to make it clear to my right hon. friend that he is absolutely wrong. Let me state that again, and I know he cannot help but see it; that all the shipper could get anyway was a reduction of three cents per hundred pounds. It did not make any difference where he got it, if he got it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is right.

Mr. GRAHAM: But the grain had to go as far east anyway as Fort William to get it. If that had not been in the act at that time, the way the act was drawn, if a man shipped grain from a hundred miles west of Fort William to two miles west of that place he would not have got the reduction of three cents; but they had to make it apply, not only to grain or flour that stopped at Fort William, but grain that went on. All the reduction he could get under any circumstances was three cents a hundred pounds. The through rate from Medicine Hat to St. John was made in this way; by taking the Crowsnest pass agreement rate to Fort William and then the special rate decided upon by the Board of Railway Commissioners from Fort William east; and these two were added together. That condition is not changed one iota under this bill. I have the opinion of some of the best men in this country on that point. The condition is not changed one iota. I am going on with this point. The grain shipped from west of Fort William gets the three cents a hundred pounds off under this bill, just the same as under the old act; and the Crowsnest pass agreement never was applied by the Board of Railway Commissioners to points east of Fort William in any judgment they ever gave or any rate ever filed since the passing of the act in 1897; and the reason is quite clear, that it was intended to apply and be earned before the shipment got to Fort William, because at Fort William the competition with the water rates changes or controls the situation, and the earning of the reduction of three cents per hundred pounds under the old act was accomplished before it got to Fort William, and that is the case under this act; therefore there is no change. The reason of the amendment was to make it quite clear that the territory that was covered by the old act was covered by the new one, and no other territory. That is what every man in this House wanted to do—to retain the features of the Crowsnest pass agreement on all the traffic eastward, and that amendment to my mind was not needed. However, that is the advice I have received. It does not affect the situation but makes it clearer that the territory is not extended at this point, but that the reduction of three cents per hundred pounds that always applied under the Crowsnest pass agreement to any traffic originating west of Fort William applies under this act to the other traffic I have mentioned. There have been desperate efforts to get us to open up that point, to make it clear or to provide that, if grain were shipped from other points east of Fort William, even if there is water competition, the Crowsnest pass agreement should apply, but the government has no intention of doing that, nor has parliament any such intention. The Crowsnest pass agreement was made to give relief to those portions of Canada where there was no water competition. This amendment only makes it clear and does not add one iota to the difficulties of the farmers or millers in getting a reduction of three cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is there any intention of making the Crowsnest pass agreement rate apply to Quebec over the Transcontinental?

Mr. GRAHAM: This is going to be left to the Board of Railway Commissioners. My hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) asks this question, and my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) asks another question. I have been asked a hundred questions. That would mean that we were going to make rates in parliament, and we are trying to get away from that as far as we can.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You have started it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I hope my hon. friend will feel better as I proceed.

Mr. STEVENS: The next clause is more serious still.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is that clause?

Mr. STEVENS: Number six.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is all right.

Mr. STEVENS: If you leave it alone it is all right.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is to make it clear and to conform with the amendment made in the other section.

Mr. FORKE: We have not got clauses five and six.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have got to move these amendments in committee when the time comes.

Mr. FORKE: Has the hon. member the clauses before him?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have them in typewriting. I will read the clause I have just been discussing. At the end of subsection 5 the following is added:

But shall apply to all territory west of Fort William covered by tariffs filed with the board under the terms of said agreement at the date of the passing of this act and to all lines of railway now or hereafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament within such territory.

Now we have clause 6. The only amendment in clause 6 is by inserting after the word "thereto" in the sixth line the words "within the territory." That is to conform to the amendment I have just read, to confine this to the territory.

Now let me take clause 6. This clause is meant and does convey this assurance; that within the territory affected by the Crowsnest pass agreement there must not be any discrimination as between localities under the agreement. Now it was contended that with regard to territory that came under that agreement the clause concerning unjust discrimination might not be applicable; that is, to the different points getting the benefit of the Crowsnest pass agreement; consequently clause 6 is put in to provide that within the territory included in the Crowsnest pass agreement there must be no discrimination as between points that are under this agreement; and I am told by a very high legal authority that that is just what it does convey, and it is not intended to convey anything else; and I think if hon. gentlemen will read it closely when it is printed, they will find that it does convey that meaning.

Mr. STEVENS: The addition of the words in the now proposed amendment "within the territory" as applied to clause 6 limits the application of clause 6 to the territory formerly covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement and eliminates the territory west of the mountains as well as the territory east of them.

Mr. GRAHAM: Because the territory west of the mountains was never under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so, but the present amendment does not accomplish that. The present amendment inserting the words "within the territory" eliminates the territory west of the mountains, as well as the territory east of Fort William.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does not eliminate it at all, because it was never in the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister has not caught the force of my statement.

Mr. GRAHAM: I caught the force of what the hon. member was trying to say.

Mr. McMASTER: Are we not out of order discussing amendments not before the committee?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend has selected an odd moment to suggest that we are out of order. The minister has been out of order for the last hour. We are out of order by consent of the committee, and it is an unfortunate moment to raise this objection. I ask if clause 6 of the bill as it is presented to parliament does not extend to the territory west of the mountains as well as the territory east of Fort William the same privileges as are accorded the prairie provinces or the central section, but that the interjection of the words "within the territory" limits the meaning of this clause to territory between the mountains and Fort William.

Mr. GRAHAM: No, my hon. friend will get no admission on that. Let me read the clause. Perhaps my hon. friend has not read it. I ask hon. members to concentrate their thoughts on this for a minute. This clause reads:

The board shall not excuse any charge of unjust discrimination, whether practised against shippers, consignees, or localities or of undue or unreasonable preference, respecting rates on grain and flour, governed by the provisions of chapter five of the statutes of Canada, 1897.

What is that statute? The Crowsnest pass agreement, and this section without this amendment applies only to the Crowsnest pass agreement and to territory under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. STEVENS: Why does the minister insert the amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not sure that it is absolutely necessary, but some lawyers tell me it is. What I am trying to do, if my hon. friend will allow me, is to close up the gaps which lend themselves to a great deal of litigation, because litigation has been going on for years. If that will be accomplished by adding a word or two to make the matter clearer, then I want to add that word or two.

Mr. CLARKE: The minister says that the addition of this clause does not change the practice that was in operation say prior to 1917 when the War Measures Act was in vogue.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not want to be rude, but I do not know anything about that. I do not know what the practice of 1917 was. I know this amendment that, I have suggested, should be inserted here does not change the meaning of sub-clause (6), but makes it clearer.

Mr. CLARK: I will put it in another way and leave out 1917 altogether. I merely want to get the meaning of sub-clause (6), whether or not it has any significance or effect as regards British Columbia. If so, what is the effect? The impression I am under is that the clause does not change the practice as previously adopted, but it may, as the minister says, be put in to clear up some points of law that were not perfectly clear before.

Mr. GRAHAM: This subclause (6), to begin with, is to make it clear that there cannot be any discrimination within the territory covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. CLARK: Has it any significance as regards British Columbia?

Mr. GRAHAM: The Crowsnest pass agreement never affected British Columbia and this does not affect British Columbia in any way.

[Mr. Graham.]

Let me come to clause 4. I am more surprised than I could imagine about the objections to clause 4. Some people have construed clause 4 to mean that certain people might be shut out from going to the courts at any time under the Crowsnest pass agreement or its application. What clause 4 means and what it says is simply this, that it precludes a great deal of little, petty lawsuits that might be brought against the railways on account of the decision given by the Board of Railway Commissioners as to rates under which certain tolls were collected, which the Supreme court says were wrong. The committee can readily understand that if some people paid fifty cents too much, there may be speculators in different parts of the Dominion who will buy up all these little claims and start suits against the railways. All that clause 4 says and means is that the railways shall not be liable for action for filing and collecting tolls for a few months under the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and it cannot be construed into meaning anything else. Perhaps I have violated all the rules; but as I gave notice of these amendments a few days ago and put them on Hansard, I would not be discussing the principle of the bill in its entirety unless I included the discussion of the bill as it will be when amended. I put these proposed amendments on Hansard some days ago in order that hon. members might have them before them.

The order in council which has been printed and published covers quite a large territory, and it was the final answer to the application made against the ruling of the Board of Railway Commissioners, which finding in its entirety was postponed until after the judgment of the Supreme court. What we need in Canada at the present time on this rate question is a compromise attitude by which we shall get rid of some of the complications and be able to get a more equitable adjustment of freight rates throughout the Dominion. I do not mean by that putting burdens on here and taking burdens off there, but in the west and in the east a certain chaos exists that must be cleared up. Who shall clear it up? We believe the Board of Railway Commissioners has the power and is the best authority to clear that up. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) will note that in the order in council reference was made to the westbound traffic, and while this government feels and while I believe parliament will agree that the simplest and most effective way of clearing up the situation that now exists is to adhere, as is done in the bill to the Crowsnest pass agreement as regards grain and flour, the Board of Railway Commissioners, when it comes to carry out the instructions as contained in the order in council, will have to face this situation, that on the Pacific coast a new condition affecting the prairies has arisen. Last year approximately 50,000,000 bushels of grain went through Vancouver harbour, and a large proportion of the grain that, when the Crowsnest pass agreement went into force, was all intended to come east, is going west. When the board comes to decide the rates to be applied on grain in the prairie provinces, it will have to take into account the new conditions that exist now that did not exist some years ago. It will have to take into account the fact that we have really three transcontinental railways, one running into Prince Rupert and two running into Vancouver. It will have to take into account further the fact that a not inconsiderable portion of the prairies find it more convenient, easier, to ship their grain to the Pacific coast, and any Board of Railway Commissioners will certainly give full consideration to this new condition and see that the Pacific coast trade is treated properly in any decision handed down by that board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does the minister think the same Board of Railway Commissioners would not be just to the prairie provinces?

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend speaks as if there was a condition existing in which there was no Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is none now.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is a portion of it as my right hon. friend knows. I say to him now frankly that if there were no Crowsnest pass agreement, I would never move to have that or any other agreement. But we find ourselves faced with a condition and not a theory, and we are dealing with a condition that is in existence under an agreement made in 1897 between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the government consider itself bound by that agreement?

Mr. GRAHAM: Parliament can do anything it likes with any agreement.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the government consider itself morally and legally or morally or legally bound by that agreement?

Mr. GRAHAM: As I pointed out to my hon. friend—perhaps he was not in—I took his view of it, that they did not want any Crowsnest pass agreement. They would prefer to have none. Many people feel in that way. Other people feel that they would like to have the agreement. We believe this was a middle course that would be fair to all the people of Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the government feel it is bound by the Crowsnest pass agreement of 1897? I am not asking the minister if he is going to take a middle or a right or a left course.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is bound by the Crowsnest pass agreement just as my hon. friend is, until it is changed, and we are proposing to change it now.

Mr. COOTE: Why would the minister expect the Board of Railway Commissioners to take into consideration the new condition existing as regards farmers shipping their grain to Vancouver any more after this legislation passes than they did when the last application was made to them?

Mr. GRAHAM: There may be something in the suggestion that the Governor in Council has asked the Board of Railway Commissioners to make a thorough investigation into the rate structure and to endeavour to make an equality of rates so as to give all the people of Canada a fair chance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister not admit that the railway commission was instructed to do exactly the same thing in 1920?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know; I do not remember.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have the order in council here.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a good thing.

Mr. FORKE: The Crowsnest pass agreement will be the basis for the rate structure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the minister says not.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister has killed that in this bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the cross-examiners are through with the prisoner in the box, he will go on.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will not the preference given under the Crowsnest agreement be retained? Will not the railway commission be obliged to recognize the fact that there is this preference of three cents?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not a preference of three cents per hundred pounds on the present rate but on the rate that existed at the time of the passing of the act, so that this preference will always exist so long as the Crowsnest pass agreement stands.

Now I shall come to the Maritime provinces. The Maritime provinces have a unique situation, one that anybody who has been connected with the Intercolonial railway will know something about.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAHAM: We found it in bad shape under my right hon. friend's management and it has taken some time to get it straightened out. Everyone will agree to that. The Maritime provinces, I say, consider themselves in a unique position, and they are. They contend that under the terms of confederation they were to be given, in compensation for sacrificing the market to the south, access to the central markets of Canada. and a railway was to be built for that purpose and not with any idea of profit in view. And they have always contended, with some force, that this railway, so far as they themselves are concerned, should be run for the benefit of the people of the Maritime provinces, largely to carry out the object conceived and enunciated at confederation, that they should be enabled to place their products in the markets of old Canada, as this part of the Dominion was then called, seeing that they had given up their markets across the line. If that is the case, they are entitled to the fullest consideration. But it will be argued that the road is being run at a loss. I am not going to discuss that question, but I do say that the contention of the Maritime provinces, now that we are endeavouring to clear up the rate situation with a view to placing all parts of the country on a basis of equality, ought to be, as it will be, fully considered. And the order in council refers to that situation.

In 1919 certain rates were raised very materially, and to this increase the Maritime provinces seriously objected. The Governor in Council, very wisely as I think, understanding something of the situation, calls the attention of the Board of Railway Commissioners to the feeling in that part of the country and asks that it be given consideration when the board comes to make its rate structure. I will not dilate further on this matter, but what the government has in view, and all that it has in view, is to bring about in Canada a better feeling among the different sections of the country in relation to this question of transportation. Now, freight rates in Canada are high, but they are lower in this country than they are to the south of us; and we can never expect as low rates here as we had years ago, because the cost of transportation will never come down sufficiently to allow them to be reduced to the point where they were fifteen years ago. But there is a basis of equality that may be found, and we hope that under this legislation, in which the Board of Railway Commissioners, with the restrictions to which I have referred, is given a free hand throughout the Dominion, a better condition will result from the reconstruction of the rate fabric, so that there will be in the future a greater degree of contentment on the part of all the provinces of Canada, who will feel that they have been given a fair show in the fixing of rates for the carrying of their products.

Mr. HUDSON: Has the Canadian Pacific Railway made any specific requests to be relieved of its obligations under the Crowsnest pass agreement in whole or in part?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. HUDSON: It never has?

Mr. GRAHAM: The idea of getting rid of the Crowsnest pass agreement I have already discussed. The Canadian Pacific Railway has never in specific terms asked for relief from the burden, but as I have pointed out, it has indicated quite clearly in our discussions that the conditions have so changed that, in the interests of the entire railway system of Canada as well as of the country generally, a change should be made.

Mr. HUDSON: Does the minister not understand that as a request for relief?

Mr. GRAHAM: I thought my hon. friend was going to ask me to produce correspondence as to any such request. There has been no correspondence of that nature.

Mr. HUDSON: Does not the minister take their contention as a request?

Mr. GRAHAM: I take it as a strong suggestion.

Mr. HUDSON: This amendment proposes to eliminate all agreements outstanding including the Crowsnest agreement. Has the minister taken into consideration the fact that what is known as the Manitoba agreement is now in litigation before the Privy Council?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have considered that fact, and there may be a score of similar agreements. But if we are to have a rate structure that is at all equitable parliament must take a strong stand on these agreements; and it has been held, if not by the courts at least by the Board of Railway Commissioners, that the Manitoba agreement does not hold under the present condition. The Supreme Court of Canada has held that Manitoba is in exactly the same position as other places that are under the Crowsnest pass agreement so far as restricted territory is concerned, although, I believe, that province has appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Undoubtedly, if some legislation is not passed, the other provinces will take the same action on the decision of the Supreme court. They are therefore all practically in the same position.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is not the minister asking the House to legislate away Manitoba's right?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think that Manitoba has any rights particularly in this regard, any more than other provinces.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister is assuming the position of the Privy Council.

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think he is.

Mr. STEVENS: The proposal to put the various sections of Canada in the position to feel that they are receiving reasonable and fair treatment in regard to the very important and complicated question of freight rates has been before parliament for some time. The matter has been before the country for a number of years, and at the opening of this session a few months ago the government informed parliament that they had addressed themselves to the whole situation and purposed introducing a measure which they expected and hoped would solve this all perplexing problem. Let us view the legislation which the minister (Mr. Graham) has now submitted to us. That this legislation solves the freight rates problem, or even that it offers a medium of compromise, I think no one will assert with any very great confidence. The measure before us now may answer, to the satisfaction of the government, a pledge to bring in legislation, but that it will relieve in the slightest degree the consciousness of unfair treatment now permeating certain sections of the country, I think cannot be claimed under any circumstances. Indeed, I believe it will accentuate that feeling.

It is not my intention to delay the committee with a long detailed analysis of this proposed legislation, but I want to make very clear my position in regard to it and to the question of transportation in a broad way. I have argued in this House and before my own constituents and the people of my province for certain principles which I think should underlie and govern the making of a freight rate structure. I have argued that the fixation of rates is such a complicated problem that it should not be pitchforked into parliament, but rather that it should be dealt with by a competent board, that board in my estimation being the Board of Railway Commissioners. All through the years that this matter has been under discussion, indeed in recent years when it has been the most acute problem in my own province, I have adhered very closely to that stand. I believe that if the government had in its proposed legislation stuck strictly to that main principle there would not have been so much to complain of to-day; but they deviate from it in that they extract from a certain agreement, based upon a statute of 1897, one part and seek to perpetuate it in this bill.

Further, I took the stand a year ago when this matter was before the Privy Council on appeal from the railway board, the stand that I have taken on the public platform, that the Crowsnest pass agreement had outlived its usefulness, that it was obsolete and should be abrogated. Among the reasons which I advanced then and repeat now why I think that course should be taken are the following. First, I contend that while the Crowsnest pass agreement was a contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway on the one hand and the people of Canada as represented by parliament and the government on the other hand, if in the lifetime of the contract conditions so change that one or both of the parties consider that its terms should be varied to meet those conditions, such variation can be made with the consent of both contracting parties. Now as a matter of fact, the people of Canada at large and the government are convinced that that contract should be abrogated; and the Canadian Pacific Railway, the other party to the contract, has appealed to the railway board and the committee of the Privy Council for its abrogation. So I contend there is no obstacle to the setting aside of that contract.

Another reason why in my estimation the statute should be repealed is this. The contract was made in 1897 when the control of freight rates was far different from that which obtains to-day. At that time the railways filed their tariffs with the Department of Railways, and the Railway Committee of the Privy Council either approved or disapproved them, as the case might be. But in 1903 parliament, under the leadership of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, erected what is 5 p.m. known as the Board of Railway Commissioners. I pause here to repeat what I have said on other occasions, that of all the public acts of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that was the greatest of his career and one for which he and those who were associated with him deserve the fullest credit. That Board of Railway Commissioners won and held the confidence of the people of Canada for the way in which it administered this highly technical act, and only in the last couple of years has there been any question of the fairness of the board—with that I shall deal in a moment. With this change in conditions the usefulness of the Crowsnest pass agreement passed away; and I remind those who to-day seek to retain the agreement that down to 1916 the ordinary rates allowed by the Board of Railway Commissioners were not above those of the Crowsnest pass agreement, so there was no question of invoking the agreement to protect the public interest.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member is aware how that came about, I suppose? It was owing to the Manitoba agreement having lower rates than the Crowsnest pass agreement—it was to avoid discrimination.

Mr. STEVENS: The rates generally were lower. I am not advancing that in any spirit of criticism, I am merely stating the fact. Now, this is the point I wish to impress upon the House. The war brought about a revolution in the economic structure of this and every other country. In other words, a dollar which previously would purchase a given quantity of goods, or in this case a certain quantity of freight service, shrunk so that it would not buy more than forty per cent and in some cases thirty per cent of what it did in pre-war days—the purchasing power of the dollar was very much reduced. Therefore to-day under these new economic conditions it is not fair that there shall be a constant scale of freight rates. Transportation service must fluctuate in value the same as other services, or on the other hand ruin must come to those who are bound to carry on the transportation of the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is it not a fact that the commodity rates under the Crowsnest pass agreement from eastern to western Canada are still higher than the prevailing rates for the same commodities for similar distances in eastern Canada to-day?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: It may be. I do not desire to enter into a discussion of the whole question of transportation. I am prepared to do so under other circumstances, but to-day it would take up too much time. There are other factors that enter into the question. The factor that we are dealing with now is the retention of a portion of the Crowsnest pass agreement in this bill. But I would say to my hon. friend, so he will see I am not unaware of the point he is suggesting, that there is a very vital factor involved, one that is purely economic—the competition of water carriage.

Now, I state emphatically that I stand for the railway board having supreme control of freight rates throughout the Dominion. Secondly, I am wholly in favour of the complete abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement, or any similar agreement, for the reasons which I have stated.

Mr. McTAGGART: In 1897, at the time the Crowsnest pass act was passed, was it not then contemplated that a Board of Railway Commissioners should be appointed, and were there not contained in the agreement at least two provisions which were not to come under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners when appointed?

Mr. STEVENS: I think my hon. friend is wrong. I do not think the appointment of a Board of Railway Commissioners or a structure such as was subsequently erected under the consolidated Railway Act of 1903 was under contemplation at that time, or even in sight, when that act was passed. Indeed, it was a product of experience; it was a process of evolution. The whole history of the freight-making authority or control in Canada is most interesting, and the appointment of a Board of Railway Commissioners in 1903 was the culmination of our various experiences and efforts.

Now the minister says to us that he purposes by this legislation to give the Board of Railway Commissioners—I quote his own words—an absolutely free hand. He does nothing of the kind. Not only does he not give the Board of Railway Commissioners a free hand, but he deliberately ties their hands, in so far as the fixation of rates is concerned on wheat and flour, which, after all, is a tremendously important part of the freight carried in this country, particularly in western Canada. Not only does he do that, but he says to the Board of Railway Commissioners: You may now take up and study the question of freight rates as it applies to western Canada—and other sections, but I am going to deal with the west first—but, he says, if a prairie farmer or shipper in Alberta or in the extreme western prairies desires to get his grain to the seaboard on the Pacific, the Board of Railway Commissioners must not consider the rates that are charged for the movement of that grain eastward. The minister by this statute deliberately prevents the Board of Railway Commissioners from considering those rates at all.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Where does my hon. friend find that?

Mr. STEVENS: The minister has spent an hour telling us that that was his intention. Where do I find it? I find it in the amendment the minister has introduced since the bill came before us.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh yes; my hon. friend was not in his seat perhaps. But the iniquity of this whole thing is this: The minister introduces this bill, and particularly clause 6, which I interpret, as do many others who are better qualified than I am, as eliminating the contention that the Crowsnest is a contract rate and therefore cannot be pleaded as an excuse for discrimination. That clause does that, and permits the shipment of grain from the prairies westward the same as eastward. The minister has introduced since the bill has been before the committee an amendment whereby he limits the application of clause 6 to the territory previously covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not know where my hon. friend gets the authority for any such interpretation as he puts on the original bill. I venture to say that no legal gentleman would construe the statute in the sense that he is doing it.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister himself did. My hon. friend knows that I do not pose as an authority on law; I never have, although sometimes I have been accused of being a lawyer.

Mr. McMASTER: Complimented.

Mr. STEVENS: No, accused of it, I said. But I have the opinion of those who are much better qualified to judge of the legal merits than I am, and I myself read that into the statute. I say that clause as it originally stood would have permitted the Board of Railway Commissioners to fix a rate westward similar to the rate eastward, other things being equal. Of course, it is possible to plead other reasons for a higher rate westward, or a lower rate for that matter, but so far as the Crowsnest agreement is concerned, it could not have been pleaded as an extenuating circumstance that it was a contract rate and therefore not applicable.

But the point I was making was this: The Board of Railway Commissioners have not a free hand at all. In one respect, and in a very important respect, they go into this investigation of freight rates with their hands tied. Furthermore, I want to point this out, and this is a question I put to the minister when he was elucidating the bill, but he escaped or evaded answering me. Do the government feel themselves bound by the Crowsnest agreement? Do they retain this section of it because they are morally or legally bound to do so? I asked the minister that question, and he would not answer me. I do not think the Prime Minister would care to answer it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Minister of Railways had better reply.

Mr. STEVENS: I compliment the Prime Minister on the skill of his answer. He does not desire to answer. Let me answer it for him. The government know perfectly well they are not bound by the Crowsnest pass agreement. Then why do they retain a portion of it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Does my hon. friend mean to say that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada as to the effect of that agreement is not in effect in the terms laid down by the court?

Mr. STEVENS: I am not desirous of reflecting on the decision of the Supreme court by describing it as a red herring, but the minister is endeavouring to draw a red herring across the trail at this point. What I am discussing is this: If the government argue that they were bound by the Crowsnest pass agreement, then they are bound by the whole agreement. If they are justified in scrapping a portion of that agreement, they are justified in scrapping it all. I want—shall I say?—to take away from the government the excuse that they are legally or morally bound to bring in the statute in the form in which it is. Their hands were absolutely free to bring in any statute that would abrogate the Crow agreement in its entirety, but they have chosen to preserve a section of it, and why? We have not heard from the minister why. I presume the reason is this: They want to curry a little favour with my hon. friends from the prairies. There is no other reason. My hon. friends will not take that in an offensive way; I do not offer it as such, but I am pleading my own cause. If the government are justified in making a fixed and statutory rate for grain and flour for the advantage of certain sections of Canada, then I say they owe it to us in British Columbia to give us equal treatment in that regard, to give us the same rates to the Pacific coast. But I am not asking them to do it. I am asking them to abrogate the whole thing and to let it rest, as the minister intimated he was prepared to do, and give the Board of Railway Commissioners a free hand. I do not ask special privileges, but I do ask for the province of British Columbia the opportunity to plead its cause on a firm and even basis. I ask for the opportunity for my province to come before the board and say: Here are the economic conditions; here are the reasons why we ask you for a freight rate structure of a given standard. But instead of that, the government is saying to the province of British Columbia: If you go before the Board of Railway Commissioners, you go there with one hand tied behind your back. There is no escape from that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): How do you make that out?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend knows it perfectly well. I do not wish to labour the point. As I have already stated twice, the minister by his amendment limits the application of clauses 6 and 5 to the territory previously covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement, and that did not apply to British Columbia.

I have before me a copy of the Vancouver Morning Sun of June 6, 1925, and on the front page I see the photographs of three lions of the Liberal party, Premier Oliver, the Hon. Dr. J. H. King, and Mr. G. G. McGeer. These are the three men to whom credit is due for what they secured for British Columbia at last, the opportunity of pleading its cause, as the Minister of Railways describes it, with a free hand. I wonder what the Minister of Public Works has to say as to the amendment the Minister of Railways has introduced. I wonder what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King, Kootenay) has to say as to the amendment that the Minister of Railways has injected into this bill thus depriving him, depriving his province, and depriving his associates of the possibility of going before the railway board with free hands, literally tying their hands behind their backs. Let me read a passage or two from this eulogy of the minister:

> It is only the first trench in the west's campaign for justice. To relax efforts now would be suicidal.

They look upon this order in council and this bill of the Minister of Railways as a great victory. The Sun has this further to say:

> The Hon. J. H. King, British Columbia's representative in the Mackenzie King government, was radiant with optimism as he commented on the government's order that equalization of freight rates should be taken in hand forthwith.

What a travesty! What a mockery! Here the government come out with an order in council in which they say to the railway board in a sense: "Now go to work and equalize freight rates. Give to British Columbia, give to the Hon. Dr. King"—I am referring here to the Minister of Public Works—"give to the Hon. John Oliver, give to Mr. Jerry McGeer"—the $150,000 advocate of the provincial government—"the right to equalize freight rates," a thing they have been fighting for for years; and then having sent that broadcast over the country, having secured a considerable amount of acclamation from its people of that province, the Minister of Railways brings in this bill which deliberately hangs them after they have been eulogized in this fashion. The Sun goes on to say:

> The railway board is to be unfettered in its investigation except in regard to the eastbound rates on grain and flour. On these the maximum established under the Crownest pass Act is not to be exceeded.

On the interpretation of the order in council, on the interpretation of the bill as the Minister of Railways introduced it, the eastbound minimum rate was to apply to the westbound traffic as well; and the Minister of Public Works knows that. He knows that was expected. He knows that his friends in British Columbia congratulated him on obtaining that. Now the Minister of Railways interjects three little words—"in the territory"—and the whole dream, the whole aspiration, the entire hope is destroyed and proven to be only a delusion and a snare. It is not my intention to labour the point; I simply want to make my own position clear. It is this: that insofar as the transportation problem is concerned I believe it should be left unfettered, and in the true sense unfettered, to the Board of Railway Commissioners.

I did intend to say a word regarding the Board of Railway Commissioners. I have heard some hon. members of this House say that they have not confidence in that board. The Hon. John Oliver, Premier of British Columbia, intimated in an interview which he gave the other day that he had not confidence in the Board of Railway Commissioners. I want to say that this circulating of the spirit of distrust in the Board of Railway Commissioners is one of the most lamentable things that I know of. I think it is unfortunate and wholly inexcusable. The Board of Railway Commissioners ought to have the confidence of the people of Canada, and if they are shackled by the government in going into this problem then they will have great difficulty in escaping the charge of being actuated by influences other than those of equity and justice. And so I say this government should be the last to interfere with the board in the free exercise of their powers and of their wisdom. I plead with this House that we should scrupulously avoid giving out to the public any idea that this court—one of the finest ever established in Canada—is anything but a sound, and a fair, and a just court. Having encouraged the confidence of the public in the Board of Railway Commissioners I believe our duty is to leave the problem with them free and unhampered from any restriction whatsoever.

I repeat again my other point and it is this: The Crowsnest pass agreement as such is obsolete, it has outlived its usefulness. I agree with the minister that it is impossible, but I go further than the minister and say that a thing that is impossible, a thing that is obsolete, should be abrogated in toto, and not one section of it retained to pester and worry the people, and interefere with the harmonious and equitable adjustment of these matters.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): I think we all realize the difficulty of the situation in regard to the railway problem in this Dominion of ours. Canada is a country of vast distances, with a sparse population and railway deficits to be met year after year. We want to keep these facts in mind at all times when discussing railway problems and railway rates. However, we recognize the fact that the railways must operate. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) in his speech this afternoon pictured a condition in which the railways would be unable to operate. Of course, we know that will never happen for the simple reason that the people of this country are interested in the railways and realize that their interests are indissolubly bound up with them. But there is another side to the situation. Agriculture and industry must also function, and we must endeavour to preserve, as far as we possibly can, a proper balance between the operation of our railways and the successful prosecution of agriculture and its allied industries, to say nothing of the industries of the country as a whole. These are things that we must keep in mind.

I hope to convince the House that in speaking as I am I am not expressing any sectional point of view; that while I am speaking in behalf of certain interests and keeping them in mind, I am just as anxious as anyone else to see that the country as a whole shall prosper, that all parts of the Dominion shall get equal opportunities to prosper and progress as we hope they shall in the future. While dealing more particularly with the western prairie provinces anything that I may say will not be said in any sectional spirit, but due regard will be paid to the national interests as a whole.

The order-in-council which preceded the bill we are now discussing admits the principle of maximum rates. To prove the truth of that I shall read an extract from the order-in-council itself to the following effect:

> The committee are further of the opinion that as the production and export of grain and flour forms one of the chief assets of the Dominion, and in order to encourage the further development of the great grain-growing provinces of the west, on which development the future of Canada in large measure depends, it is desirable that the maximum cost of the transportation of these products should be determined and known, and therefore are of opinion that the maximum established for rates on grain and flour, as at present in force under the Crowsnest pass agreement, should not be exceeded.

This is a frank admission that this question is not a local one but is a question of national importance which affects the prosperity of the whole Dominion. In dealing with the question of transportation and the different rates on grain from the west to the east comparisons are sometimes made between the rates on the Canadian side and the rates on the American side. In that connection I should like to read the following extract:

> 2. The spring wheat areas of the northwestern states, Montana and the Dakotas, have the advantage of geographical location in being situated so much nearer lake Superior, and the great bulk of the grain is a comparatively short average haul as against the longer average haul from the prairie provinces to Fort William and Port Arthur.
> 3. It had also, no doubt, in mind that the producers of the western provinces have to compete with the remainder of the world in marketing their wheat and the foremost competitor is the Argentina republic. The average haul from Argentina to the shipping ports is 140 miles. The average haul from the western provinces to lake Superior is between 800 and 900 miles and before the ocean haul begins there is the water haul, Fort William to Montreal, during the season of lake navigation, the average rate for which last year was about 11 cents per bushel.
> 4. These rates on grain and flour from the prairie provinces to lake Superior were, with other rates on various commodities, provided for in the Crowsnest agreement between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1897. Several millions of dollars were paid the railway as a subsidy, as part of the bargain; the rates were thus bought and paid for.

I know that conditions have changed to some extent since that time. At the same time we must bear in mind that many hundreds of thousands of people who went into the prairie provinces knew that the agreement was in force, and were led to believe it was a permanent agreement, and that it had fixed the maximum rates on a permanent basis. However, I am willing to admit that I do not know very much about freight rates. The Minister of Railways also made that admission this afternoon.

Mr. GRAHAM: None of us know very much about the question.

Mr. FORKE: To adapt the words of the Good Book, it "passeth all understanding." I do not think anyone in the House will pretend that he understands the conditions. We hear a great deal about eastern and western rates. I know that many hon. members in the House will tell me that the rates in the west are very much lower than the rates in the east, and again we hear from people in the west that rates are lower in the east; each section seem to think they are paying higher rates than the other. I have a few extracts here which I do not think will be disputed.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. gentleman think it is fair, from the point of view of the prairies, that having established a policy of maximum rates on grain going eastward to the grain market, the government should have refused to grant the same rates, on grain going westward to Vancouver, where so much money is invested in the harbour and elevators?

Mr. FORKE: I should like to see the Crowsnest rates established on westbound traffic just the same as on eastbound traffic. I think that the case will not be so bad after all, because I believe the railway commission will have to take as a basis in fixing rates in the mountains the Crowsnest rates, perhaps plus the extra cost of transportation across the mountains. I trust they will do that. We have no statutory agreement as to that.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. member advocate the mountain differentials in that statement?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know what the mountain differential amounts to, but if it costs more to haul grain over the mountains, than it does to haul it over the prairies, I think the extra cost should be looked after in the rates.

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. McQUARRIE: As a matter of fact, it does not.

Mr. FORKE: If it does not, then the freight should be hauled for the same rates. It is a matter for investigation. If it does not require any more cost to haul the same mileage through the mountains than through the prairies, the rates should be the same.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the hon. member know that the grade on the Canadian National from Vancouver to Edmonton is less than the grade from Calgary or from Edmonton to Fort William.

Mr. FORKE: I think I had better leave that matter alone, because I am not posted on it. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) might be content with my statement that I am willing to give exactly the same treatment on grain being hauled west as on grain being hauled east as long as conditions are the same. I am going to quote a few extracts from a table I have here that I think will be correct. In comparing western rates with eastern I find that the rate from Fort William to Oak Lake, Manitoba, 585 miles, is 99 cents, and the rate from St. Catharines to Quebec, 584 miles, is 68 cents, showing that the western rates are 45 per cent higher. The rate from Fort William to Virden, Manitoba, 600 miles, is $1.02, and the rate from St. Catharines to Sherbrooke, 603 miles, is 65 cents, showing that the western rates are higher by 57 per cent. So that we find that rates are much higher in the west over the same mileage. The rate on binder twine from Fort William to Bagot, Manitoba, 491 miles, is 68 cents, and the rate from Montreal to St. John, New Brunswick, 488 miles, is 52½ cents, showing that the western rates are 30 per cent higher. From Fort William to Pilot Butte, Saskatchewan, 767 miles, the rate is 98 cents, and from Montreal to St. John, New Brunswick, 488 miles, 64 cents, so that western rates are higher by 53 per cent. The rate on agricultural implements from Fort William to Chater, Manitoba, 547 miles, is 62 cents, and from Hamilton to Quebec, 546 miles, is 49 cents; western rates being higher by 26 per cent. I could quote a good many more rates on exactly the same mileage in western Canada, compared with the rates charged in eastern Canada, and I may say it will be found in almost all cases that the rates are higher in the west than in the east, and all of them under the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. EULER: Are all these rates fixed on the same basis in both cases? Are they commodity rates?

Mr. FORKE: Rates on the same article.

Mr. EULER: But are they on a different basis?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know exactly where that comes in.

Mr. EULER: It might make quite a difference.

Mr. FORKE: I am speaking of binder twine which is a commodity, and from Fort William to Bagot, 491 miles, the rate is 68 cents, while the rate from Montreal to St. John, New Brunswick, 488 miles, is 52½ cents. I do not understand why a carload of implements should be any harder to haul from Fort William to Chater than from Hamilton to Quebec.

Mr. EULER: I am not questioning that, but I wanted to find out whether my hon. friend's basis of comparison was absolutely the same in both cases.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think they would be exactly the same, but I think I have stated it sufficiently to show that whatever the conditions are the west is not getting very much lower rates in any case than those they have been getting—not as low. The Minister of Railways went into the question very extensively this afternoon in connection with the establishment of the Crowsnest pass agreement in 1897. Those rates were lower in fact in many cases, owing to the Manitoba agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway. Those rates prevailed until 1917 or 1918. It was also pointed out this afternoon that the amendment now before the House, if it carries, will supersede the Manitoba agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway. The minister assumes, of course, that this agreement is going to be declared null and void. However, he is not taking any chances, and should it happen that the Privy Council should decide in favour of Manitoba, Manitoba will have nothing left but to pay the bill and to go on without getting anything in the way of reduction of rates. They will have to pay the bills in any case for appealing the case to the Privy Council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And Manitoba paid the price for that agreement out of her own treasury.

Mr. McMASTER: As the poet says:

Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member from Brome is waxing poetic. In 1918, under the War Measures Act, the railway commission was given authority to disregard the Crowsnest pass agreement. In 1919, statutory authority was given to the railway commission to abrogate the agreement until July, 1922. In 1922, as most of us are aware, a special committee was appointed by this House to inquire into the whole matter of transportation costs. I happened to be a member of that committee, and I remember a good deal about the proceedings that took place at that time. I recall that President Beatty, President Hanna and other railway freight experts for the two different railways appeared before the committee and, I think, giving evidence upon oath, stated that if the Crowsnest pass rates came into effect on grain and flour, tremendous deficits would occur on their railways. If I remember correctly, President Beatty said that the loss on grain alone on the Canadian Pacific would be $14,000,000, and President Hanna said that the Canadian National Railways would lose $7,000,000. As a matter of fact, in the following year after the Crowsnest pass agreement had come into operation on those commodities the railways I think made more money than they had ever made before. Therefore, the lugubrious prophecies that these gentlemen made at that particular time were entirely wrong. They were many million dollars out. The final report on Crowsnest pass rates on grain and grain products was submitted to this House. I am sorry to say that hon. members to my right opposed that report very strenuously and took exactly same stand as they take to-day. They do not move. They seem just to stay put all the time. Therefore, I am afraid we are not going to get from them very much support along the lines that I would advocate this afternoon.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we were inconsistent, we might be taken for Progressives.

Mr. FORKE: I would point out to the leader of the opposition that the greatest men we read about in history have been men who have advanced with the times. I would refer to the Right Hon. William Gladstone who commenced his career as an extreme Tory and who died almost a Radical. No one to-day will find any fault with his career. There is hope for the leader of the opposition even yet. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) moved an amendment at that time. I will read it just to prove how exactly and solidly they stand in just the same position as they did at that time. It reads:

1. That while the Board of Railway Commissioners remains as it is now a tribunal constituted by parliament to fix railway rates without discrimination and in accordance with changing conditions and to meet the needs of the country as a whole, it should be left free to perform such duty without dictation from this House and subject only to review by the Governor in Council as in the Railway Act provided.

I do not think I will read all the amendment that was moved by the hon. member at that time.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Read the last paragraph. It is interesting.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read it all. It is the best part of the speech.

Mr. FORKE (Reading):

2. That large and general reductions of freight rates particularly on basic commodities are not only obviously demanded in the national interest but are admitted by all concerned to be possible and to have been possible for several months and action to that end by the railway commission has only awaited the decision of the government and of parliament as regards the Crowsnest pass agreement.

3. That to enable the railway commission to carry out its duty as defined above such board should be empowered to suspend the said agreement, such suspension to be followed immediately by submission to the Governor in Council of a new schedule of rates as reduced by the commission, the suspension to be revocable if such schedule is not approved by the Governor in Council but otherwise to continue for one year within which time the will of parliament may be again expressed.

The final report submitted by that committee to the House was that the Crowsnest pass rate on grain and grain products should come into effect; that the rates on other articles mentioned in the Crowsnest pass agreement should be abrogated for one year, and that by order in council the government might suspend it for another year.

Mr. GRAHAM: I want to correct an error that I entertained myself until a few days ago. The Crowsnest pass agreement does not speak of grain and grain products; it refers to grain and flour.

Mr. FORKE: I think I knew that, but I thought I would repeat that phrase as often as I possibly could. It is a better phrase.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was not in the act, though.

Mr. FORKE: That condition of affairs remained until July 6 of last year when the Crowsnest pass agreement came again into full force. It is needless for me to take up any of the time of the committee in discussing what has happened since then. We know that immediately after it came into operation we had railway rate discrimination. I am not very much concerned so far as that goes as to what happens to the bill that is before the House at the present time. I feel prefectly satisfied that in any case neither the government nor the railways could allow this matter of discrimination to continue. I have an idea that it was rather clever strategy on the part of the railways just to bring about the condition of affairs that now exists by putting that into effect, and I do not think that discrimination can or will continue, no matter what happens to the legislation that is now before the House. We had the decision of the railway commission that, instead of remedying the discrimination, wiped the agreement off the slate altogether. My hon. friends to the right say that we should have complete faith in the railway commission. That sort of thing did not tend to give us very great faith in at least some of their decisions. Then we had the decision of the Supreme court, and again we have the Crowsnest pass rates put into effect with the discrimination that has been spoken about this afternoon. Finally we now have the amendment which is before the House.

Why is the west anxious for statutory maximum rates? The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), in his very eloquent speech this afternoon, wonders why the west want any particular legislation in regard to railway rates. The western prairie provinces occupy a postion that cannot be parallelled anywhere else in the civilized world at the present time in regard to agricultural conditions. We have in those three western provinces a great agricultural empire and yet we are in the centre of a continent far removed from the seaports where the products of those prairies must find an outlet. Consequently, they demand more serious attention than any other particular section of the country in regard to transportation costs. Transportation is vital to the prairie provinces. With rates that are unprofitable, rates that are too high to permit the carriage of agricultural products, it means bankruptcy for those provinces. Why are we anxious to have some maximum rates fixed? In the first place, it has been pointed out that the east has competition by lake and river to the sea, whereas in the west no such condition exists. British Columbia, which I am sure has many strong advocates in this House, enjoys ocean communication; it is a maritime province with seaports right at hand. British Columbia therefore is in many respects in a different position from the prairie provinces. The west wants maximum rates fixed, and fixed by an agreement, simply for the purpose of protecting itself from any exorbitant railway rates that it may be called upon to pay at any time. It is all very well to say, why not trust the railway commission? Well, certain things have been promised us by solemn compact and we wish those things fulfilled; certain conditions exist which we want to see continue for our protection. For twenty-seven years we have had a certain agreement and now we are asked to give it up and trust to something else which we are told may prove as satisfactory. We are asked to trust to the railway commission, which would already have entirely wiped out this agreement if it had had the power to do so.

The commission is supposed to fix rates adequate to ensure reasonable dividends. Perhaps that is the first consideration with the railway commission—the fixing of rates to provide adequate dividends to the railways. But there is another point of view which one may take with regard to railway rates, that is, reasonable rates as between the railways and the communities served. That, I take it, should be the proper function of the railway commission. We feel a little uncertainty in giving up something sure which we already have for something else the nature of which we cannot conceive; and consequently I am inclined to stand solidly behind our agreement until we know exactly what we shall get. Maximum rates may occasion some trouble for the railways; but there is a great deal of trouble in this world anyway, and nobody gets a smooth path to travel all the way. The present amendment to the Crowsnest rates is to apply to grain and flour, while the rest of commodities are to go by the board. And what do we get in return? I think the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) said some time ago that the railways had made no request for the abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement. But I think they did in one way, because, if I remember rightly, when they appeared before the transportation committee they made certain propositions in lieu of the Crowsnest agreement. I have them here, taken from Hansard, and I think they are correct. The railways were prepared at that time to make certain reductions in lieu of the Crowsnest pass agreement. There was to be a twenty per cent reduction on grain rates, two-thirds of the way to the Crow rates, when ten per cent would have brought it to the level of those rates. There was to be a reduction of 16.66 on forest products and ten to twenty per cent per ton on coal, so that the average on building material and other basic commodities would have been about 18.3 per cent. And a complete suspension of the agreement was urged, in order that all other matters might be left to the railway board. I am inclined to think that the railway companies in 1922 were making as good an offer as we are getting to-day; they were proposing almost as low rates on grain, and a large reduction on a good many other commodities. If therefore we had accepted their proposition in 1922 we should be in about as good a position to-day as we are in if we accept the bill now before the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Better.

Mr. FORKE: Well, there would not be much difference.

Mr. GRAHAM: Were they to be statutory?

Mr. FORKE: No. Now, there is a great deal of difference between a promise made before a committee and an agreement which is embodied in a statute; and speaking for myself, as I am sure I am speaking for the other members representing the prairie provinces, I may tell the committee that we shall not be content with any mere promise. What we want and what we intend to fight for is some statutory fixing of maximum rates; in fact, we want the Crowsnest pass rates on basic commodities.

Mr. LADNER: The hon. member has intimated his approval of the idea that the same Crowsnest rates provided for in this legislation should also exist for grain going westward. Would he support an amendment to the bill to the effect that there shall be the same maximum rates westward as eastward?

Mr. FORKE: I do not see much objection to the proposal, but I am rather afraid to agree to very much change in the Crowsnest agreement for the simple reason that this might give the government some opportunity to say that as we were changing the thing anyway we might as well go a little further. However, the hon. member makes the suggestion and without thinking it over seriously at the moment I think I would be prepared to support an amendment to that effect if he would support what I ask for.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would the hon. member support an amendment extending the provisions of the act to the farm produce of Ontario?

Mr. FORKE: I want to see some of these amendments before committing myself. I think the government has chosen a very opportune time to introduce this piece of legislation. The elections have just concluded in Saskatchewan and they are looming up in Nova Scotia; and I notice that the Minister of Railways has been making some very nice suggestions to the Maritime provinces.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a great part of the country.

Mr. FORKE: I have a warm place in my heart for the Maritime provinces and I know something of their difficulties; I trust they will get the just treatment they deserve. It occurred to me, however, that this was rather an opportune moment for the government to bring this matter up. I have here an extract taken from the Manitoba Free Press. It is a report of a meeting that took place at Regina and I think it adequately expresses some of the ideas I have regarding the bill now before the House. It states:

1. That maximum statutory freight rates should be fixed on grain and flour not exceeding the rates on these commodities set under the Crowsnest pass agreement and that such rates should be applicable to the whole of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

I put emphasis on the next paragraph:

2. That proper equalization of freight rates throughout Canada is impossible without statutory provisions for maximum rates in those parts of Canada in which freight rates are not controlled by competitive water transportation rates—the principle which is recognized and admitted in connection with grain and flour in the proposed legislation.

I would point out that fact, Mr. Chairman, that the government recognizes the principle of maximum rates in regard to grain and flour. Then why lose sight of it altogether upon other commodities that are very important to the prairie provinces?

3. That the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada should be instructed to equalize rates on grain and flour outward bound from points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in any direction, with those obtaining under the provisions of the Crowsnest pass agreement.

I hope my friend from British Columbia is paying attention—I am afraid he has left the House.

Mr. CLARK: What is my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. FORKE: An extract from the Manitoba Free Press of provisions that were promulgated by a committee in the city of Regina, composed of representatives of the governments of the three prairie provinces.

4. That the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada should be constituted as a truly national body with more equal representation from all parts of Canada in order that there may be proper understanding by the commission of the rate problems of the whole country.

That is "the western bill of rights on freight rates," Mr. Chairman.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

[Mr. Graham.]

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES

BILL TO AMEND THE RAILWAY ACT, 1919

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill 181 to amend the Railway Act, 1919, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FORKE: Continuing the remarks I made before six o'clock, I would like to say that in seeking the advantages we do under the Crowsnest pass agreement the west does not desire any favours at the expense of any other part of Canada. Nor are we animated in any way by a feeling of hostility to the railway companies. I think every one of us recognizes the fact that the railways and the people are inseparably bound together as far as the prosperity of our country is concerned. So that when we seek to have maximum rates fixed by statute it is not with any idea of being hostile to the railway companies. The west, if it should prosper and develop as it ought to do, will in a few years produce a vast amount of freight both outgoing and incoming. Rightly or wrongly we believe that the solution of our railway problems lies very largely in the development of western Canada. There is no hostility towards, and no desire on our part to belittle, any other section or province in the Dominion, but we believe that in the west there is boundless room for expansion, room for a very large increase in population, with the result that the volume of freight both outgoing and incoming will be enormously increased. Consequently the prosperity of the west is indeed vital to this Dominion. Furthermore, it seems to me that this question of transportation rates is so vital that unless a proper solution is arrived at it will mean that the people out there will enjoy but a bare existence, or a degree of prosperity much less than they would under more favourable conditions. If the railways could show by any process of bookkeeping that the west was enjoying a cheaper rate than is enjoyed in eastern Canada, I think we would be quite amenable to reason and would be willing that our rates should be raised. On the other hand, we conscientiously believe that the west is paying its full share of rates at the present time, and that no other part of Canada is being sacrificed at the expense of the prairie provinces through the Crowsnest pass rates being put into operation.

Mr. CLARK: Does the hon. member suggest that British Columbia has not been sacrificed by the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. FORKE: I would not agree to that proposition. At the same time I do not think we are showing any hostility to British Columbia or any other portion of Canada.

Mr. CLARK: Do not misunderstand me. I was asking whether the hon. member thought that some injustice had not been done to British Columbia as a result of the Crowsnest pass agreement and the schedule of rates proposed in this bill.

Mr. FORKE: I hardly think so. I am not very sure, but when the Crowsnest rates agreement came into operation in the western provinces, did the freight rates not come down in British Columbia at the same time?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. FORKE: I thought they did.

Mr. CLARK: They came down some time after.

Mr. FORKE: I cannot enter into an argument on that point. But as I stated, we were quite willing that all freight from the western provinces should have the benefit of the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Another thing we must keep in mind, no matter what difficulties British Columbia may labour under, is that she is a maritime province, has ports on the seashore and derives benefits therefrom which we do not enjoy in the prairie provinces at the present time. We hope that the time is not far distant when we shall have a port to the north of us in the prairie provinces, which will help to reduce freights. I might also mention another fact in connection with the prairie provinces. They are not in the least self-contained. They ship out and ship in. Westbound freight is very important to the prairie provinces for the simple reason that they are not manufacturing to any extent. Most of the goods they require are transported over a thousand miles, so that it is easily seen that westbound freight is very important to the prairie provinces. Perhaps the day is not as far distant as some of us might suppose when the prairie provinces will be to some extent more self-contained than they are at the present time, but it is vital to them that they should get the best rates possible both east and west, and it is perfectly natural, and only just and right, that when we have the agreement, something that has been bought and paid for, we should get the benefit of it, and we are loth to see a law placed upon the statutes of the Dominion that will abrogate any privileges we have enjoyed during the past twenty-seven years.

A good many people in our Dominion, I am afraid, wrongly conclude that they have to pay for the concessions which have been granted under the Crowsnest pass agreement. I do not admit for one moment that the west has not all the time been paying for the privileges which it enjoyed by having railway communication. That there have been deficits on the railway we all know, and we are all anxious that these deficits should be wiped out just as soon as possible, but I can see no future for our railways unless we have a very large expansion in our western provinces. That does not mean that we cannot have expansion in every province of the Dominion, but the conditions and the situation are different in the west, and it is most likely that the expansion will occur in the west in the not distant future.

The Prime Minister made a trip through the western provinces last year and gave some very glowing accounts as to what the government had done in regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement. I am going to read one or two quotations from speeches he made at that time. Speaking at Winnipeg he said:

Having stated that measures for the advantage of western Canada would also be of advantage to eastern Canada—

I want to call attention to that statement.

Premier King said the administration had restored the Crowsnest pass agreement after a careful inquiry by a committee of the House of Commons, and it was now in force as in the old days of the Liberal administration. "The question of discrimination is now before the railway commission," he said. "It would be improper while the matter is sub judice for me to discuss that question or express an opinion one way or another; but I believe that the system which has been adopted of having railway matters referred to a railway commission independent altogether of parliament, acting as fair-minded, honest and straightforward judges, will be found the most effective and most satisfactory manner of dealing with all questions of importance that arise."

Speaking at Saskatoon on October 7, the Prime Minister said:

When I spoke in Northumberland a few weeks ago, I defined policies and I defined them in the manner I will in western Canada. I intend to say the same thing in western Canada that I told them in eastern Canada. I haven't one message for the west and one for the east. I have one message for all Canada. I told the east that we were carrying out our promises made before election. The Crowsnest agreement was made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and we were carrying out his policies. That was the statement I made in eastern Canada. It is the statement of our position in western Canada.

Again at Edmonton on October 11, the Prime Minister said:

On taking office he had sought to carry out the policies of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and hoped that we would obtain representation in the west that would enable him to follow out those policies to their conclusion. He reminded the gathering that it was under Liberal auspices that the Canadian Northern railway which served Vegreville had been built, and also that it was an early Liberal administration which had established the Crowsnest pass agreement; and the present administration which had restored it after it had been suspended by the Tories.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe the Prime Minister was quite sincere, and I almost think that in his heart to-day he would like to see those promises fulfilled.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Does the hon. member realize that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada rendered some few months ago changes the whole situation with regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. FORKE: I understand the situation thoroughly, and I understand the decision that has been given by the Supreme court since the Prime Minister made those statements. But I am perfectly sure that parliament has the same power to-day as it always has had to remove any discrimination, and that in fact it could have removed that discrimination when it took place at the very time the Crowsnest pass agreement came into effect. The idea at that time was to wait until the decision of the railway commission in regard to discrimination was given. We had some dispute with the railway commission. Instead of removing the discrimination, the commission abrogated the Crowsnest pass agreement altogether. I am not blaming the government, but at the same time I know they could have removed the discrimination if they had so desired. I am sure the Prime Minister would like to see those promises fulfilled, and to let us have the Crowsnest pass agreement, or a quid pro quo in western Canada. Conditions have perhaps changed to some extent since 1897, but I want to repeat that the west will not be satisfied unless they have a maximum rate fixed for westbound traffic, just as it has been fixed for eastbound traffic. This is our Magna Charta. We are situated in the centre of the continent, and while hon. gentlemen claim they have tremendous faith in the railway commission, that commission is only human and we do not know what it might do. With respect to other parts of Canada, it would be a serious matter if they had to pay the maximum rates, but in the case of the prairie provinces it would not only be serious, but it would mean bankruptcy to the people of the west. Transportation through the western provinces is of more consequence than it is in any other part of the Dominion of Canada. That is the reason why we feel so strongly on this subject and are so anxious to see that the prairie provinces get a square deal in this matter.

In conclusion, I repeat that I have no thought of hostility towards any part of Canada. I know something about the troubles and difficulties of the Maritime provinces. I am sure we have the warmest feelings towards the people down there and we wish to see them prosperous and happy. The same is true with regard to British Columbia and the far west. We have the warmest feelings towards the people in that part of the country. We want to work hand in hand with every section of this Dominion in order to make it a happy and prosperous country.

Mr. LADNER: This question is of paramount importance to British Columbia. For nearly twenty years the governments, both Conservative and Liberal, have been fighting for fair treatment in regard to freight rates. The commencement of this contest was during the premiership of Sir Richard McBride. To-day that province faces, perhaps, a more delicate situation than it has ever done in the past. The industrial, commercial, shipping and agricultural future of British Columbia stand in the balance. If the scales of justice and fair play weigh out equitable treatment on this important question, our future is assured and our province will prosper. This legislation is rather late in being brought down. I do not know of any question more important to the people of Canada than that of freight rates. It has been under the consideration of parliament for the last three years or more. Evidence in great detail and from men best qualified to give it has been taken before a special committee; hearings have been had before the Board of Railway Commissioners; reports on previous occasions have been made to the House; legislation has been brought down, and at this juncture, on the eve of an election, the government brings forward a policy which is capable of being interpreted as being calculated to remedy the ills or grievances of every particular section of the country. The order in council is of a very general nature. The legislation, however, is specific on one point, and that point seriously and vitally affects the province from which I come. The legislation states in clear terms that maximum rates on grain and flour moving eastward are fixed according to the Crowsnest pass agreement, but the Crowsnest pass agreement, which was limited formerly to certain areas or districts, is now made applicable to both railway systems, and in order that the government may be more specific in its intention, notice has been given by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) that an amendment will be made making it very clear and precise that the advantage of comparatively low rates on grain and flour shall not be given to British Columbia.

In my opinion, that is politically an affront to the people of my province. They have carried on the fight for many years. The merits of the case cannot be and never have been denied. It seems to me that the whole point involved in this discussion, so far as British Columbia is concerned, is this: On what principle or basis of reasoning does the government grant a special right and privilege for grain moving eastward to a certain market and deny that same right and privilege for grain moving westward to the same market, the government having spent many millions of dollars on grain elevators and port development in the city of Vancouver? Has the government an answer to that question? I wonder if there is even a plausible excuse. I wonder if there is any excuse at all, beyond the plain, patent fact that it is an act of political expediency on the eve of an election in order to gain the support of the middle west provinces. I do not think I am overstating the case in putting it in that way. We, in the activities of the House, are well aware of the suggestions and manoeuvring backward and forwards which for many years have gone on in connection with the Crowsnest pass agreement, the rates of which, so far as they affect British Columbia, were simply iniquitous. No one will deny that. Now, when it is seriously the intention of the government to tackle this great question, one that goes to the root of our economic body, of every activity which we have, industrial, commercial and otherwise, instead of taking hold of it in a statesmanlike manner in the interest of the whole nation and giving to an expert body who understand the problem and the complications of the matter, authority to determine the question from one end to the other, they give the Board of Railway Commissioners authority to determine the question on everything but grain and flour moving eastward. I am not saying that the middle provinces have reason to be displeased with the measure of success which they have obtained. The point which I wish to make and which I would ask the minister to answer now if he can, is this: On what basis of reason, policy or fair play, does he determine a course of legislation which fixes definite maximum rates on grain moving eastward to a certain market but denies them on grain moving westward to the same market?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have answered it at least four times this afternoon. The fact is that the Crowsnest pass agreement is allowed to remain on the statute book as regards grain and flour. The Crowsnest pass agreement never affected British Columbia, and there is no clause in the bill or in the amendment which has any reference to British Columbia or that will in any way affect the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners adversely to British Columbia.

Mr. LADNER: I think the minister's explanation is a very weak one.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the hon. member's opinion, of course.

Mr. LADNER: There are two features of his explanation. One is that the Crowsnest pass agreement does not affect British Columbia. The Crowsnest pass agreement vitally affects British Columbia, because since the agreement was made, we have had the Panama canal opened giving a new outlet for grain leaving this country and a new route for goods to come in from Europe and certain portions of eastern Canada. The minister has entirely forgotten that the whole situation in regard to the shipment of grain from the prairie provinces has been changed. As to the other point that the Crowsnest pass agreement is allowed to remain on the statute book, what the government are really doing is to allow the two items of grain and flour to remain there.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is what I said.

Mr. LADNER: They are cancelling eleven other articles of far-reaching effect. Having put the pruning knife on the tree, why not prune it properly and make it look decent and fair? If they are going to change the Crowsnest pass agreement, as they must do in order to cancel the eleven other articles, they might just as well, in order to be consistent and carry the policy of fairplay to the other portions of the country affected, make a little addition and say that this rate will apply, not only to grain and flour moving eastward, but to grain and flour moving westward. The minister is quibbling on the matter. This does not go to the root of the problem. I repeat that laying down a policy on a matter of such overwhelming importance to the country, definitely fixing the rate on grain moving in one direction to a given market, and specifically and intentionally denying it to grain moving westward to the same market, is not only inconsistent; it is farcical. It is pure political expediency and nothing else in view of an expected election this fall. In making these remarks I do not wish to cast any reflection on the Progressive members to my left. They have felt themselves under an injustice in the matter of freight rates and they have fought for the interests of their section of the country; and the government has been weak enough to yield to this sectional demand without proper regard to other portions of Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I hope the hon. member does not imply that members in this section are not as much interested in securing lower rates on grain and flour to Vancouver as are members from British Columbia.

Mr. LADNER: Not a bit. I quite understand that hon. members to my left are in accord with us in the view that the rates should extend to westbound grain, inasmuch as the commodity goes to the same markets and is produced by the same people. So far as British Columbia is concerned, when the order in council appeared it was published in a local newspaper there which had taken a very active and aggressive part in the freight rates question. A report was published spreading right across the paper and a great deal of credit was given to the government on account of the fact, as alleged in the report, that a new era had dawned for British Columbia. On that same day, the 6th of June, editorials appeared in both the leading Vancouver newspapers, and for the information of the committee as well as the members of the government I should like to read one or two short extracts from these articles. The Vancouver Province in its leading editorial of that date says:

> "Equitable treatment" is the thing British Columbia has been fighting for. We have never asked for more. We shall not be content with less. And there is very good reason to believe that with the practically free hand now given the railway commission, we shall achieve our end. Practically since its establishment, the railway commission has devoted itself to the ironing out of unjust discrimination, wherever found, and there are many precedents in its past decisions. The limitation of its powers under the Crowsnest Act brought it to a full stop. Now, it can get under way again.

Further on the editorial has this to say, which I would commend to the attention of the minister:

> Two things British Columbia has been seeking in her freight rates fight: an equitable rate on grain, westbound, which will enable us to reach farther into the prairies for cargoes to fill our ships; and an equitable rate on other commodities moving from the Pacific coast eastward which will enable our manufacturers and wholesalers to get a fair share of the prairie business.

In the Morning Sun of June 9, three days afterwards, that newspaper reconsidered its position and editorially advised the government and the Prime Minister in these words:

> In their order-in-council requesting the railway board to equalize freight rates, Premier Mackenzie King and his colleagues have shown a vague intent to do the west justice.
> That vague intent is not good enough.
> The order-in-council decrees that the Crowsnest maximum rate on eastbound grain shall not be exceeded. It would have been just as easy, instead of generalizing on equalization, to have said plainly and definitely that that maximum Crowsnest rate on grain should not be exceeded eastbound or westbound.
> Nothing less than such a plain definite statement can actually bring British Columbia into the Canadian confederation.
> Nothing less can give the people of British Columbia full Canadian citizenship.
> The task of making British Columbia a Canadian province or an alien province rests with Mackenzie King, not with the Railway Board.

There you have the views of two newspapers, one of no particular political complexion and the other frequently a supporter of the government. But I commend to the government the words of a gentleman well informed on this question and on all its intricacies, an ardent supporter of the present administration, an aggressive, fighting leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia, Premier John Oliver. He has never been known to sympathize with anything that savoured particularly of Conservative policy, nor has he ever been known to support the Conservative cause in any way whatever. Let me read from a signed statement given by Mr. Oliver to the local newspapers, which statement I would urge the government to consider carefully. Mr. Oliver says:

I say, without any reservation, that under the proposed legislation the Board of Railway Commissioners may allow any discriminatory rate against the westbound movement of grain and flour, either for export or home consumption, and while I have no desire or intention to in any way reflect upon the honour of the Board of Railway Commissioners, or of any member thereof, yet I have in mind that the majority of the members of the board are the same men who authorized the discriminatory rates under which we have suffered so long and so grievously.

I do not share Mr. Oliver's view if it reflects upon the Board of Railway Commissioners because I believe that the board is well qualified to handle the matter. He goes on:

Should they in the future authorize a discriminatory rate with the proposed legislation upon the statute book, it would be hopeless to appeal to the Supreme court as a matter of law, and I would have no confidence in appealing to a government which, in the face of the protests that have been made, would persist in placing legislation, as proposed, on the statute books.

This is a Liberal premier in British Columbia advising his Liberal friends in Ottawa. Mr. Oliver continues:

I ask in all sincerity what justification can there possibly be for making such a statutory distinction between the same commodity moving over the same road, but in opposite directions.

We have had the explanation of the Minister of Railways and I intend to mark it and send it to Mr. Oliver for his further consideration. The importance of this matter is something of which the government cannot plead ignorance. Mr. Oliver in his evidence before the special committee on Railway Transportation Rates, on May 29, 1922, made the following statement:

I want to tell this committee that our industrial life in British Columbia is absolutely at stake in this issue before the committee at this moment.

By the chairman:

Q. On the Crowsnest pass agreement?—A. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the Crowsnest agreement involves the whole rate structure and I will give you as my authority Mr. Beatty, who took that stand, and I will give you as that authority Mr. Hanna, who declared that the whole rate structure of the Crowsnest agreement if brought back is all shot to pieces.

In other words, when the government adopts this policy of taking grain and flour at a fixed maximum rate, it has practically settled the rates question and left little for the railway board to deal with. Mr. Oliver goes on to say at page 154 of the evidence:

Now, it will also have the effect of making it impossible for parliament to remedy the discrimination of which we are now complaining, and to give British Columbia the relief to which it is entitled. It will make that impossible except on one condition, and that is that the nation as a whole shall foot the bill for the deficiencies in revenue of the railways if the railways are forced, as Mr. Hanna intimated to the committee, to reduce the rates on other basic commodities in order to bring them on a parity with the rates under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

On June 27, 1924, a number of representatives appeared before the Governor in Council, and among the documents filed for consideration by the government there was a telegram from Mr. John Oliver addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), dated June 25, 1924. In that telegram Mr. Oliver represents to his friends in Ottawa exactly what will happen if the government takes such a step as is now proposed in this legislation. He says:

The responsibility for the existing discriminations as well as those which will be added—

That is, this legislation.

—must lie with the government and parliament of Canada.

Then he continued:

We are not opposing the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates, but we are asking the government and parliament of Canada to place British Columbia in an equitable position similar to that enjoyed by the people of other parts of the Dominion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this late stage of the session it is not my intention to discuss this question further. I do not expect that any words of mine will have the slightest effect in inducing the government to depart from the plans they have laid for the next general election, but I appeal to them—and in appealing to them I am placing the case before the very electors to whom they intend to appeal—I appeal to them to remember that this question is of too great and overwhelming importance to be allowed to be trifled with in an attempt to secure a political advantage, and I warn them that in fixing maximum rates on grain and flour they have ipso facto, denied British Columbia the equitable treatment to which it is rightfully entitled. By taking that course this government will raise the rates on grain moving from the prairie provinces to British Columbia, thus handicapping the future of the port of Vancouver and jeopardizing an investment of millions of dollars in elevators and other equipment. According to the opinions already expressed of the Premier of British Columbia, the press, the Board of Trade of Vancouver and the other public bodies interested, it is their judgment, as I interpret it after a careful investigation of the whole subject, that in such legislation as is proposed the government are taking a course that will prove disastrous to the best interests of British Columbia. It is unfair, it is unjust to the province, and the responsibility is upon the government. If the government cannot see their way clear to remedy this injustice, I hope the electors at the forthcoming general election will express their sense of disapproval in a manner which will fully vindicate what I have said this evening.

Mr. McCREA: Mr. Chairman, the question of freight rates is one of the most important before this House and the country, especially in view of the fact that the government owns the greater part of the railway mileage of the country, and when the Canadian National Railway system does not earn sufficient to pay its bills the people are called upon to meet the deficit. I think it is well that we should know what part of the country's business is paying its way, whether that in the east, the west or the centre; and, furthermore, what part of the country is paying the greater proportion of the taxes. Consequently I shall take up some little time to explain my views.

The Crowsnest pass agreement, which we have heard so much about, was entered into in 1897 between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the one side and the government of Canada representing the people on the other side. Under that agreement it was provided that the rates—now known as the Crowsnest pass rates—should not exceed certain maxima. I presume it never entered into the minds of the parties to the agreement that conditions would ever change. At that time wages, materials, and other costs that enter into the operation of railways were very different to what they are to-day. That arrangement continued for many years, and the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads kept their rates much below the maxima fixed thereunder. Ultimately during the war railway operating costs went so high that the Crowsnest pass agreement had to be suspended for a period of years. At the expiration of that period there was a clamour, especially from the west, for a reversion to the Crowsnest pass rates. Unfortunately the cost of railway operation at that time did not justify the restoration of these rates. In 1922 this House appointed a committee to investigate the freight rate question, and that committee summoned before it not only all the railway magnates of Canada but also many from across the border. Mr. Beatty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, usually acted as spokesman for the railways. He made several propositions, the final one being for a general reduction of 20 per cent in the rates on all basic commodities to all parts of Canada. That committee finally, by a small majority, passed a resolution recommending the acceptance of this proposition. But the western members rebelled and said they must have the Crowsnest pass rates regardless of what any other part of Canada might get. Naturally they might be expected to take this course, but I did not quite agree with the government's yielding to the demand The outcome has been that whilst the prairie provinces have secured the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates, which represent approximately a 35 per cent reduction in the freight rates on grain to the head of the lakes, the rest of Canada got a reduction of only 6 per cent in the rates on basic commodities.

9 p.m.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the hon. gentleman desires to be fair. Therefore he might tell the House that this was only a partial equalization of the rates, that before it was put into effect the rates in western Canada were very much higher than the rates in eastern Canada.

Mr. McCREA: So far as I was able to catch my hon. friend's question, I will show before I get through who is paying the taxes in Canada, and I think that will be a good barometer by which to judge who is paying too high rates and who is paying too low. Surely it was not the intention of the government, when they entered into that agreement in 1897, that one part of Canada should suffer for the benefit of another section, that one section of the country should have practically a 35 per cent reduction in freight rates on basic commodities, and the rest of Canada get only a 6 per cent reduction;—and that applies not only to the government-owned railway but to the Canadian Pacific as well, because if the Canadian Pacific had made a similar reduction of 35 per cent all over Canada on basic commodities they would be in the bankruptcy court or pretty close to it to-day. If the Canadian Pacific are making money at all they are making it where they are getting paying rates.

There is a great deal of talk about that agreement, but there is one phase of it I have not heard mentioned in this House, and that is this: The McAdoo award raised the rates of remuneration on the railways to a very high pitch, and not only the remuneration but also the classification of labour employed on the railways, and that sent the cost of operating a railway up out of all proportion to the rates on the commodities the railways carry. When the McAdoo arrangement which had been formulated and all worked out in Indianapolis, or somewhere else across the line, was proposed to Canada, the Canadian railways were simply advised that on such and such a date this schedule of wages and classification of labour would come into force. The railways of Canada at that time held a conference, at which the question was discussed from all angles, and they finally decided that, whether or not it was possible for the United States to accept this remuneration and classification of labour, so far as Canada was concerned it was absolutely impossible, and they notified the Canadian government that they would not accept the award. The government, of which my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition was a member, then passed an order in council ordering the Canadian railways to accept that schedule of wages and classification of labour. I wonder if it has ever entered the minds of the people of Canada that that action has placed the railways of Canada in practically an impossible position to give us the rates we should have? It tied them up to a remuneration and classification of labour that the present conditions of this country do not justify, and meant an increase in railway rates.

As I have said before in this House, there are three parties to this business: There is the producer. Whether he be a farmer, a lumberman, a miner, or whatever his calling may be, if he is producing goods, he is a producer. Then there are the transportation companies. No matter whether they operate by land or sea, the people who are engaged in carrying the products of this country from the sources of production to the sources of consumption are engaged in transportation. The third element is the distributor. It does not matter whether he is a wholesaler, a jobber or a peddler; he is selling goods, and therefore is a distributor. We have, then, these three classes, and if one of these classes gets more than their fair share, the other classes get less than their share. That is the situation in connection with the railways. The railway employees are getting more money than the business of the country can stand, and that has been brought about to a large extent by the railways, against their will and desire, being forced to accept a schedule of remuneration that was not possible for this country to pay. Whilst this schedule of wages might possibly be worked out in the United States, we must bear in mind that the United States have a population of 437 for each mile of railway, whereas we have just a fraction over 200 people for each mile of railway. That means the United States railways have, or should have, double the passenger and freight traffic for each mile of railway that we have, and consequently they can stand a scale of wages and a classification of labour that we in Canada cannot stand. That is the reason, to my mind, why the government of this country should say to international labour, whether it is railway labour or any other kind: We would be glad if you would stay at home, run your business as you like, and we will attend to our business; we have no objection to our citizens organizing, if they wish, to carry on their work, but we absolutely refuse to allow international labour and international labour organizations across the border to come here and dictate terms to us; we are supplying the money; we are running this railway; we are running the whole country, and we propose to run our business in accordance with our ability to pay, and meet the conditions as we find them in Canada; we are not in a position to meet the conditions that exist across the line, especially in railway matters, where you have more than double the population per mile of railway that we have. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, I will talk much longer on that score. My system does not allow of talking too much.

I remember well, and I think everybody who was in the House at that time will also remember well, that when the late government was taking over the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk, one of the great fears we who then sat on the other side of the House had was that the operation of the government-owned railways might become a political football. We had fears that that might happen, and I hope we will bear that in mind now that we are on this side of the House. In dealing with this matter, I think it would be wisdom on the part of the government simply to pass the legislation necessary to put the fixing of railway rates in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners. They are the people to deal with the fixing of rates, and if we have not got sufficient confidence in their ability to deal with this matter, in their knowledge and integrity, in their desire to deal squarely and honestly with all parts of the country and give everybody a square deal, then let us appoint somebody else to that commission that we have confidence in, and then place in their hands this question of the fixing of railway rates. The members of this House no matter how well disposed they may be have not the necessary knowledge to deal with this question. The members of the railway commission are supposed to be thoroughly conversant with the complicated problem of railway rates, and if they do not at present possess the necessary information they should acquire it from the best possible sources and then fix the rates in a manner that will be fair and equitable to all concerned. But the government allows the commission to deal with everything but grain and flour. In respect of these commodities they say, "Keep your hands off." I suppose that is for the purpose of getting votes or some such purpose. I see no reason why flour and grain should have such a preference. If the producers of grain and flour are located at a great distance from the seaboard and are entitled to any special consideration, the railway commission is the body most competent to deal with the matter. If the west is entitled to lower rates, or if it is not getting that measure of justice which it should receive, the necessary action should be taken by the proper authorities; but even handed justice ought to be meted out and whatever course is taken should be fair and just. That is the only course to follow, in my opinion, if we want to make this country prosperous.

The rate in force at the present time for carrying grain from Edmonton, or points even farther west, to Halifax for export, is fifty-nine cents per hundred pounds, or thirty-five and two-third cents a bushel, and other rates are in proportion. What cheaper rate would anyone want than that? Now, the special crop of New Brunswick is potatoes, and the distance to the market in Montreal is five hundred miles. The freight on a bushel of potatoes is twenty-four cents, as compared with a rate of thirty-five and two-third cents on a bushel of wheat from Edmonton to Halifax, a distance of about 2,800 miles. And when it reaches its destination a bushel of wheat is worth at least two bushels of potatoes. Do these figures indicate that the freight rates are equitable as between the east and the west? I do not think so. Let me cite another instance of inequitable rates. A carload of horses was billed from a point about one hundred and fifty miles west of Regina to Montreal. The man in charge disposed of them to a dealer, who took five horses out of the car and sold them in Montreal, shipping the balance of thirteen to Sherbrooke. In the latter city the horses were sold to a man who wanted them for use on the railway at a point near Moncton. In going to Sherbrooke these horses went twenty-five miles out of the direct route to Moncton. On reaching their destination, after having travelled two thousand miles, the freight paid was less than $17 per head. I should like to ask at what cheaper rate the farmers and producers in the west would like to get their freight transported for such a distance? It seems to me that at present they are not only receiving justice but more than justice.

Let me mention some further facts. Last session before the House adjourned I put a question on the order paper asking for the total revenue of Canada from all sources, each source to be stated separately. I also asked how much of this revenue was contributed by each one of the nine provinces, the respective amounts to be stated separately. I received the answer to this question during the present session. There are quite a number of sources of revenue that do not call for cash contributions. For example there is a revenue of $29,000,000 in connection with the Post Office Department. That is not a cash contribution. The government provides a service and those who use that service have to pay for it. The total cash revenue of Canada in 1924 was $352,952,730.21. In regard to that amount we hear a great deal from the Maritime provinces occasionally. We are told about their rights and their wrongs, and what their rights should be. Starting with Prince Edward Island, the figures are as follows:

Prince Edward Island—
Cash contribution	$ 450,100 64
Subsidy	421,051 98
Net contribution	29,048 66
Population	109,078
Contribution per head of population	26½ cents
Nova Scotia—
Cash contribution	$7,375,545 77
Subsidy	661,866 66
Net contribution	6,713,679 11
Population	523,837
Contribution per head of population	$12 81
New Brunswick—
Cash contribution	$7,363,859 26
Subsidy	666,765 76
Net contribution	6,697,093 50
Population	387,876
Contribution per head of population	$17 26½

Or a little less than two per cent of the total cash contribution. The same thing applies to Nova Scotia. Their cash contribution was a little less than two per cent of the total cash.

Quebec—
Cash contribution	$125,619,285 34
Subsidy	2,256,419 88
Net contribution	123,352,865 46
Population	2,361,199
Contribution per head of population	$52 24

Or 35½ per cent of the total cash contribution.

Ontario—
Cash contribution	$155,936,028 09
Subsidy	2,642,611 68
Net contribution	153,293,416 41
Population	2,933,662
Contribution per head of population	$52 21

Or three cents less than Quebec, or 44¼ per cent of the total contribution.

Manitoba—
Cash contribution	$18,055,330 58
Subsidy	1,485,118 56
Net contribution	16,570,212 02
Population	610,118
Contribution per head of population	$27 15

Or 4¾ per cent of total cash contribution. Then we take Saskatchewan, third largest province of the Dominion, and supposed to be the granary of the world.

Saskatchewan—
Cash contribution	$4,753,158 39
Subsidy	1,901,061 00
Net contribution	2,852,097 39
Population	757,510
Contribution per head of population	$3 76

Or one-eighth of one per cent of the total money required in this country, and still we hear lots of complaints from them.

Alberta—
Cash contribution	$6,757,816 30
Subsidy	1,651,536 60
Net contribution	5,106,279 70
Population	588,454
Contribution per head of population	$8 67¾
British Columbia—
Cash contribution	$26,420,460 93
Subsidy	738,816 66
Net contribution	25,681,644 27
Population	524,582
Contribution per head of population	$48 95½

I might say right here that British Columbia contributes more to the cash contribution support of this country than the three prairie provinces combined. From this it will be seen who is paying the taxes of this Dominion. Quebec and Ontario are paying 79¼ per cent of the total cash contribution of this country.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): How much of that do they pass on to the consumers in the rest of Canada?

Mr. McCREA: I cannot hear the hon. member. I am not disposed to be sarcastic or unreasonable, but my contention is that this country can be prosperous only when the people of the different parts of it make up their minds that they are willing to bear their full share of the responsibilities and the taxation of the Dominion and willing and ready to give the other parts fair play and justice. When we were offered by Mr. Beatty twenty per cent of a general reduction on all basic commodities, and when that committee, which was hearing the evidence and which spent practically the whole session in gathering information, finally passed, by a small majority if you will, a motion that Mr. Beatty's proposition should be accepted, our friends from the west put up such a rebellion, threatening the government—and unfortunately they frightened them—that the outcome was that they got practically a thirty-five per cent reduction on grain and we who bear the great burden of the taxes got a reduction of six per cent. The west is entitled to all sympathy and justice, and for my part and, speaking so far as I know, for my province, we are inclined and disposed to be just, fair and reasonable, but the time has come when we shall have to have a little more justice than the west is disposed to give us on freight rates.

In the particular case before the committee now, there is no reason why this whole matter of fixing freight rates should not be placed in the hands of competent men, selected by the government of this country to deal with railway questions and to fix just and fair rates for all parties. Until we get that, this granting a reduction of thirty-five per cent in one section of the country and a reduction of six per cent in our section when we are paying practically eighty per cent of the taxes, is unjust and unfair, and I trust the government will see to it that this injustice is remedied so that all parties will bear their fair share of the responsibilities and taxes. Let us have our share of both the good and the bad. This country of ours, properly governed, properly managed, is the garden of the earth in my judgment. But it will not do for any one element of this Dominion to think they are the chosen people and that they must have all the plums and the other people all the bills.

Mr. SHAW: There is probably no problem which comes before parliament which is more complicated in its character than that involving a freight rate structure. When one considers the many varieties of rates alone, class rates, commodity rates, transcontinental rates, export rates, one becomes somewhat bewildered. But when there is added to that such terms as constructive mileage, mountain differential and long and short hauls, one can readily understand that the problem is, generally speaking, beyond the judgment of an ordinary cosmopolitan parliament. But if the terminology of the subject were not sufficient in itself, a perusal of the bill would, I am sure, convince anyone that the subject is difficult and involved. Ordinarily, I agree with those who say that the fixation of a freight rate structure is not a matter for parliament. It is primarily a matter for a railway commission. A change in a rate, though unimportant in itself, may seriously affect a whole community. It may seriously impair the progress of an industry, even of our basic industry, agriculture. Therefore, with such an involved and difficult subject, with such far-reaching consequences, it is ordinarily true that it is a matter for a railway commission to consider, for men trained, and experienced in railway matters, with traffic experts always at hand. Is there, however, in connection with this matter anything which puts it outside of the ordinary class, which takes it into the extraordinary class and which merits the consideration of this parliament? I suggest that there is one thing which, above all else, makes the subject in the form of this bill before us primarily one for the attention of parliament, and that is the relation of the Crownsnest pass agreement to the freight rate structure. Why was this Crowsnest pass agreement arranged? Why was it incorporated in the form of a statute as long ago as 1897? There are at least two very distinct reasons for the action that was then taken. First of all, parliament in its wisdom sought to give relief against the excessive freight rates which then existed in western Canada in those early days. An examination of the articles mentioned in this agreement is proof in itself that parliament had in mind to give relief to the primary producers in western Canada. The east-bound commodities mentioned in the agreement were grain and flour, at that time and still the main export production of western Canada. The west-bound products covered were mainly agricultural implements, binder twine, wire, cattle, building material and furniture. These are the commodities which bulk largely in the imports of the primary producer in western Canada and, consequently, the parliament of that day sought to provide statutory rate maxima on these commodities in order that the primary producer of the prairie provinces of Canada might have the advantage of at least, reasonably low rates. Now, the second and perhaps the most important reason will appear to one upon an examination of the map of Canada. Such an examination will show at once that the Prairie provinces have no waterways or transportation system. It is of course well known to everyone that the lowest freight rates are secured on water systems and that the most effective form of competition against railway transportation is by way of water. In the absence of competitive waterways, which would ordinarily keep rates down to a low figure, the parliament of Canada sought to provide by statute a maximum figure beyond which it was intended that the rates should never go. And in this effort, first of all to provide low rates on the primary production of western Canada as well as on the essential imports of that part of the country, and in the second place to provide a maximum rate-controlling safeguard in the absence of water competition, parliament passed and embodied in the law what is known as the Crowsnest pass agreement.

There are many in this House who would leave without question the whole matter of railway freight rates to the railway commission, unfettered and untrammelled. But the question I would address to the committee is this: How can the railway commission be unfettered or untrammelled in this matter when in eastern Canada at least it must take into consideration water-compelled rates? If for example the railway commission could ignore water competition, and if in ignoring such competition that body could place the whole of Canada, so far as railway rates are concerned, on an equality, so that justice would be done to all parts of the country, then few would have any objection. But the fact is that the railway commission in the fixing of rates in the east is not untrammelled and is not unfettered so long as we have our eastern waterways with the lower rates resulting therefrom. If the railway commission seeks to ignore the rates charged on the waterways, and fixes higher freight rates on the railways, then of course the traffic will go by water. and so in a matter of this kind the railway commission cannot be unfettered or untrammelled. And that in my judgment is the justification for placing on the statute books of the country a rate-controlling safeguard in the interests of the prairie provinces of Canada, which by nature are denied the benefits of water competition.

What is the situation to-day in relation to this problem? The recent decision of the Supreme court finds that the Crowsnest pass agreement, although it has persisted through these many years, is legally confined in its operation to those points on the Canadian Pacific railway—one of the contracting parties —which were in existence at the time the contract was entered into. The result of that interpretation has been, and must be if persisted in, a whole series of rate discriminations, and there must follow a general rate chaos. We find for example that Brantford has one rate, say, on agricultural implements to western Canada while its competitors,

Toronto and Hamilton, have a lower rate. Woodstock has one rate, under the Crowsnest agreement, on household furniture, while Kitchener has a much higher rate because it was not on any line of the Canadian Pacific railway in 1897. But these rate discriminations exist not only in the east but in the west as well. Calgary, for instance, enjoys a lower Crowsnest rate than Edmonton. On agricultural implements shipped from Toronto or Hamilton to Calgary the rate is 125½ cents per hundred pounds whereas the rate on the same implements shipped from the same point to Edmonton is 148½. A similar rate discrimination exists between Regina and Saskatoon. These points so favoured in western Canada do not ask that the discrimination shall continue; they have no wish to rely on that discrimination. They seek to have equal and just rates established as between different competitive centres in western Canada, as indeed they desire that the same measure of justice shall be extended to points similarly situated in eastern Canada.

Some remedies have been proposed which I shall discuss very shortly. The first remedy, which has been suggested by not a few in eastern Canada, is to eliminate by statute the Crowsnest pass agreement altogether and to leave the whole matter in the hands of the railway commission, under the powers of the general act, to iron out all existing discriminations. In such case the railway commission would ignore the Crowsnest pass agreement entirely. Now, for the reason I have already indicated, the railway commission cannot ignore the water competitive factors in eastern Canada, and the result necessarily would be that, having to take into consideration these factors in eastern Canada, the only place where deficits could be made up in the operation of the railways would be in the west. And so we should find ourselves in that part of the country loaded up with the deficits, being called upon to bear a much larger portion of the operating costs of the system than is justifiable. To ignore the Crowsnest agreement therefore would work wholly and entirely against western Canadian interests. Not only would the sole safeguard that we possess be taken from us, but we should be entirely disarmed and at the mercy of the railway commission.

Much has been said about the railway commission, and I have no criticism to make of that body. But there has been much public criticism of it. For one reason or another the commission has largely in the past lost the confidence of the people of the west, and I venture the assertion that those people at least would certainly be apprehensive if the matter of freight rates were left entirely in the hands of the railway commission.

The second suggestion which has been advanced is to restore the agreement fully and to bring it into operation, not only with its limited interpretation as given by the Supreme Court of Canada, but in addition to wipe out all existing discriminations which would ensue from the application of the judgment of the Supreme court. The result would be that of necessity the rates on westbound commodities would be greatly reduced. The Minister of Railways tells us, and I believe he is correct, that such action would seriously impair the efficiency of the railway systems in Canada. Certain it is that it would increase the annual deficit of the Canadian National Railways; and it might be that such a cure would be worse than the disease itself. More than that, I am not sure that it is the proper remedy, because I know that the west is not asking for something to which it is not in justice and in equity entitled. It is prepared and willing to bear its fair share of the burden; it does object to bearing more than its fair share. Besides, if the west intends to rely upon this agreement, it must in fairness rely upon the strict interpretation of it, given by the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada. And for the reasons I have already pointed out, such a situation cannot possibly be tolerated. We would not allow it even in western Canada; I am sure it would not be permitted with all its rate discriminations and chaos in eastern Canada.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we have the remedy proposed by the minister in his bill. He desires to perpetuate the grain and flour rates eastbound and to fix maximum rates on these articles pursuant to the terms of the Crowsnest pass agreement. May I say that if the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada is correct with relation to the points on the Canadian Pacific Railway which enjoy the benefits of the westbound Crow rates, then surely the same principle must apply to rates on eastbound Crow commodities, with the result that if the judgment is given its full effect without action by this parliament, we will necessarily have discriminatory rates on eastbound grain and flour. Now, the minister proposes to prevent any such possibility by perpetuating the Crow rates on grain and flour eastbound, and in addition wiping out completely all possible discriminations. With regard to the westbound section of the agreement, the minister proposes that the rights given by the Crowsnest pass statute of 1897 should be wiped out and the railway board left with a free hand to fix such rates as it may deem to be just and reasonable.

Now, I want to suggest what seems to me to be fair and reasonable under all the circumstances. The only objection so far as I know to the minister's proposal is that the people of western Canada feel that they are being disarmed, that their only safeguard on westbound commodities is being taken away from them by this proposed legislation. I approve entirely of the minister's action with regard to the eastbound commodities. But with regard to westbound commodities, my suggestion is that there should be a suspension of that portion of the agreement for a period of, say, three years. I say that first of all because the railway commission in the intervening time will have an opportunity to work out this system of so-called equalization of freight rates. We have had rate equalization cases before; they have not always been satisfactory. It is a high-sounding and pleasant term, but it really does not mean equal freight rates at all, because under the rate equalization cases, as the former chairman of the railway commission (Sir Henry Drayton) well knows, the rates in western Canada were from 15 to 20 per cent higher than those in eastern Canada. There were many other discriminations which I will not take the time to enumerate. So we do not really know what equalization of freight rates is going to result in under actual practice. The lapse of three years will give the railway commission an opportunity to evolve its system of rate equalization, and then we will know whether or not the freight rates imposed are fair and just to western Canada. If it is, if we are not called upon to bear more than our fair share, then we will gladly let the westbound section of the agreement be eliminated forever.

Mr. CLARK: What does the hon. gentleman mean by the westbound section of the agreement? In what way does the Crowsnest pass agreement affect westbound freight at all?

Mr. SHAW: There are some thirteen commodities mentioned in the agreement itself upon which a definite percentage of rate reductions on the then existing rates are effected.

Mr. CLARK: The hon. member is not referring to commodities westbound from the prairie provinces to the Pacific ocean?

[Mr. Shaw.]

Mr. SHAW: Oh no, that is an altogether different question. I think hon. gentlemen to my right are worrying unnecessarily about that problem.

Mr. CLARK: Does my hon. friend not think there is anything in that problem; and if not, will he please give his reasons?

Mr. SHAW: I did not propose to discuss that phase just at the moment. It is a problem different to that involved in the Crowsnest pass agreement. The British Columbia rates westbound from the prairie provinces constitute a subject upon which the railway commission, if I understand the bill correctly, will find themselves wholly untrammelled and unfettered in dealing with. The issue stands on its own feet. May I tell my hon. friend that his greatest anxiety should be to see that the Crowsnest pass agreement is maintained, because with lower rates under that agreement he is assured of lower rates westbound on grain and other commodities from the prairie provinces to the ports of British Columbia. Now, supposing the westbound section of this agreement were suspended for a period of three years. At the expiration of that time the people in the prairie provinces would know exactly what rate equalization meant. If the rates were just and reasonable, if they were not higher than they should be called upon to bear, then I am sure, knowing the people of western Canada as I do, they would cheerfully undertake to bear their share of the burden and would gladly allow the westbound section of this agreement incorporated in the statute to be eliminated forever. On the other hand, if the rate equalization did not work out satisfactorily, then certainly the people of western Canada would not find themselves—as they otherwise would under the minister's bill—wholly disarmed and defenceless; they would have some instrument at least with which to meet the situation for an adjustment of their grievances.

There is another reason why I think we should make haste slowly in depriving western Canada permanently of this statutory safeguard, that is, in so far as it affects either eastbound or westbound commodities. What member in this House can visualize the rate situation five years hence? What member can visualize the rate situation even three years hence? I venture to say that perhaps within a shorter period than five years, before the death of the next parliament, we will have a great railway amalgamation in this country—I hope under national auspices—and its significance will be reflected directly and immediately in our freight rates. So I say that in my judgment it is not wise to eliminate entirely the agreement in relation to westbound products. I would have no objection to its being suspended for a reasonable length of time. In that sense the railway commission would not be hampered at all; it would have a free and unfettered hand to fix westbound rates on Crow commodities and all other commodities. The people of eastern Canada would not be prejudiced and, equally important, the people of western Canada would not find themselves hampered in the future by releasing such rights as they now have under the westbound section of this agreement. That, Mr. Chairman, is the suggestion which I have to offer, and I trust that it may meet with some measure of approval.

10 p.m.

With regard to the question raised so far as British Columbia is concerned, I realize that British Columbia has its problem, but I want to tell hon. gentlemen from British Columbia that when they speak about rate discriminations, if they want to find where the maximum of rate discriminations exists, where the grossest injustices so far as freight rates are concerned exist, they must necessarily betake themselves to the province of Alberta.

Mr. CALDWELL: To the Maritime provinces.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: To Ontario.

Mr. SHAW: No, to the province of Alberta. British Columbia enjoys several freight rate rights and privileges which are denied to the neighbouring province of Alberta. There is, for instance, the transcontinental rate, any advantage of which, of course, is denied to intervening points on the railway. There are, in addition, commodity rates, covering some 75 or 80 per cent of the commodities shipped eastbound from Vancouver. In addition to that, there are sections of construction mileage, not paying on the exact mileage, but on a reduced mileage. These are some of the advantages which British Columbia at present enjoys, and which are largely, if not wholly, denied to the neighbouring province of Alberta. I do think that this problem is a very serious and a very difficult one. It may mean the life or death of more than one province, and I think we should go carefully before we take away from the prairie provinces the rights which they acquired many years ago and to which they have zealously adhered during all the intervening years.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I would like to congratulate my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) on the very fair way in which he has stated his case. He has shown a grip of a very abstruse subject, and has approached the situation with a very clear mind. I do not know that I can congratulate him altogether upon the solution which he proposes, but he is to be commended for the very fair statement of the case which he has made.

Mr. Chairman, it became absolutely and imperatively necessary for this government to come to this House with legislation of this character at this session. We have already heard from some hon. gentlemen as to some phases of the situation which was created as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada some few months ago. The whole freight rate structure of the country, and the whole business interests of the country, were disarranged by the construction which the Supreme court put upon what is known as the Crowsnest pass agreement, when it decided that its operation so far as rates were concerned was confined to those points in the east which were in existence in 1897, and to those points in the west which were in existence at the same period. Anomalies of so serious a nature arose in consequence that I venture to say there was not a representative in this House, from Ontario, at least, who did not receive representations from the business men of his constituency in regard to those anomalies. I need not go over them in detail, but some of them are so striking that I should like to call the attention of the House to one or two, to show the practical nature of the problem that is involved here, not merely from the standpoint of our western friends, but from the standpoint as well of the business people in eastern Canada.

Take, for instance, furniture, which is one of thirteen items coming under the westbound rates in the Crowsnest agreement. Furniture is manufactured in a great many cities and towns through the whole of eastern Canada. Of the Ontario towns engaged in its manufacture there are, from Cornwall west, twenty which do not enjoy the reduced rates, namely, Southampton, Meaford, Strathroy, Kincardine, Tavistock, Kitchener, Waterloo, Neustadt, Guelph, Hanover, Elmira, Hepworth, Hespeler, Lucknow, Stratford, New Hamburg, Orillia, Cobourg, Cornwall, Napanee. Toronto is one of the points which does enjoy these reduced rates, and compare for a moment the rate that Toronto enjoys on furniture with the rate received by these twenty towns I have mentioned. On furniture shipments to Regina Toronto has a rate of $1.27½ per one hundred pounds, whereas the twenty towns named pay $1.85½ per one hundred pounds. There were thus under the Crowsnest pass agreement as it exists to-day these enormous discriminations against the business interests of Ontario and Quebec as well, because, forsooth, these industries are in towns to which the Canadian Pacific did not reach in 1897. Just imagine the position which the business men in these towns in Ontario and Quebec are in, when the rate that is enjoyed by Toronto on an article that is manufactured in the east to be sold in the west is from 50 to 60 per cent lower than the rate enjoyed by the business men in these other towns. How can business be carried on under these conditions?

Take, again the situation in the west. Under the interpretation which the Supreme court put upon the Crowsnest pass agreement, it is applicable only to 35 per cent of the towns in the northwest covered by the Canadian Pacific railway. Sixty-five per cent of the towns in the northwest covered by the Canadian Pacific to-day, if it were not for some such legislation as we are proposing here, would not have the right to send their grain down to Fort William at the low rate that is given under the Crowsnest pass agreement. When hon. gentlemen speak of there being any discrimination against the west in this legislation, I fear they forget that very important fact. It does seem anomalous to me that hon. gentlemen who have studied this question should not realize the very singular position in which the country would be left, particularly Saskatchewan Alberta and Manitoba, with the Crowsnest rates applicable only to a very small proportion of the territory which is covered by the railway.

The rates on the commodities in question have heretofore been regulated and controlled by the board so as to establish a relative basis throughout the whole prairie territory. Since July 7th, however, and this is the situation perpetuated by the decision of the Supreme court, the Crowsnest rates have applied to Fort William and points east thereof to points on the line of the Canadian Pacific railway as in existence in 1897, while to all other territory the higher rate level established since 1897 still governs. This means that approximately 35 per cent of the western lines of the Canadian Pacific have Crowsnest rates, and the balance, or 65 per cent of the mileage, pays higher rates. If it were not for this legislation we propose, do hon. gentlemen who come from those western provinces seriously suggest that 65 per cent of the country should be discriminated against by the perpetuation of the rates as they are to-day?

I could take up other items that enjoy the Crowsnest rates—paint, for instance. Paint is manufactured from Windsor, Ontario, to Montreal, and two of the most important centres of its manufacture are Sarnia and Hamilton. Hamilton enjoys a rate on paint of $1.09 per one hundred pounds to Regina, while from Sarnia the rate is $1.55 per one hundred pounds. In each and every one of these 13 classes of articles contained in the agreement we find discriminations existing to-day, and they would be perpetuated unless we proposed legislation of this character.

Mr. HOEY: When the Crowsnest pass agreement was restored in full in July last year, was it the opinion of the administration then that it would apply to all lines?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It does not make much difference what the opinion of the administration was. The decision had been taken by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. FORKE: Would not a slight amendment to the Railway Act have removed all the discrimination?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): How?

Mr. FORKE: By providing that no special agreement would be taken into account under that clause forbidding discrimination.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friends opposite in attempting to deal with this question of freight rates remind me of an experience I once had when I was at the bar and retained to appear before the railway commission on a question of that character. It is the most abstruse problem that could be given to any individual, whether a public man or a member of the legal profession, to deal with. I apprehend from my knowledge of the matter that in order to get rid of this difficulty which unquestionably exists, the railway commission will have to go through all these schedules and deal with the rates from every particular place according to the mileage. It never could be settled in the easy offhand way that my hon. friend suggests. Here was the situation. The Supreme Court of Canada had given this decision. The railways had intimated that it was their intention to appeal. Leave to appeal was granted by the Privy Council to Manitoba in connection with the agreement with the Canadian Northern, it being intimated, however, in granting that leave, that their lordships anticipated legislation might be passed before the question that had come before them was determined. Well, supposing nothing was done? There we would have litigation still pending in regard to these two important matters which would probably take another year to decide. In the meantime the business community of this country would be in a perfect turmoil. No one would know how to deal with his competitors, and this discrimination of a most anomalous character, both east and west, would exist.

Mr. KELLNER: Where will you be if the Privy Council sustains the Manitoba agreement?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The Privy Council will not sustain the Manitoba agreement because parliament will have removed it, I believe, before that court will have heard the argument.

Mr. GRAHAM: There will not be any argument.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): All the points in nothern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta where there were no Canadian Pacific railway lines existing in 1897, and which would have to pay higher than the Crowsnest pass rates, will be benefited by this legislation. And let me tell hon. gentleman that when this matter came to be considered by the government we had counsel from British Columbia, counsel from the cities of Edmonton and Saskatoon, and counsel from the Maritime provinces, all pointing out the anomalous situation that existed. Counsel from Edmonton and Saskatoon urged that these were two points which, if the present situation was to be perpetuated, would be debarred from the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. COOTE: Could not the discrimination have been easily removed by a slight amendment to the Railway Act stating that no discrimination should be allowed whether caused by special agreement or otherwise?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I like my hon. friend's easy way of dealing with this abstruse question of freight rates. I am bound to say I do not think it could be done that way. I am only pointing out for the information of the House where the real situation exists when this parliament comes to deal with freight rates. My hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) put the situation very well. It is true that these matters refer peculiarly to the Canadian Pacific Railway; but here are these two railways in the western country, and practically whatever rate is fixed by the Canadian Pacific will be fixed by the Canadian National as well. Therefore unless we have a proper rate structure in this country so that this railway, which belongs to the people of Canada, may have its rates dealt with on fair lines with due regard to its operating necessities, as well as the necessities of the business interests of the country, the problem will become so intricate and the danger in connection with it will become so great, that I am sure hon. gentlemen on reflection will agree that the matter is one that requires to be dealt with. My hon. friend from West Calgary—and I am perhaps only restating at a little greater length the point he made—agrees with me to that extent. The only thing he says is, "Let us have suspension." Now, suppose legislation was passed suspending the operation of the rates which will come into existence in consequence of the Supreme court's decision, what rates are going to apply in the meantime? Where are we going to find the rates to take their place in the meantime?

Mr. SHAW: The railway commission could provide for that as they did in October last year.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am not so sure about their doing it so easily; they would have to go into the matter and investigate it very thoroughly. In any event hon. gentlemen in the House who do not admire the railway commission would be entrusting to that body at once the power to deal with the whole problem. These other rates would be suspended and the matter would rest entirely in the hands of the railway commission without the situation being cleaned up in any way.

Mr. HOEY: That would have to be done in any case.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I must say that I am exceedingly surprised that my hon. friends from the west should not have been behind the government in the strongest possible way in this legislation because we are dealing with conditions, not theories, as my hon. friend and colleague (Mr. Graham) said this afternoon. This is the only way, in my opinion, in which this matter can be settled in the interests of the whole of Canada as well as of the west.

Mr. GOOD: The minister stated that the doing away with discrimination, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), would be very difficult in his judgment. How much more difficult would it be than the method prescribed or embodied in the bill? What is the difference?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The policy embodied in the bill is very frank. It entrusts to the railway commission the task of equalizing the rates having regard for the business interests of the country as a whole, and the only limitation that will interfere with their full and absolute power to deal with the whole question is the preservation of the rates on grain and flour.

Mr. GOOD: The minister makes out that this bill provides for the doing away with discrimination in a very easy manner, and when the other suggestion is made he says it is very difficult. I do not see the difficulty.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Not at all. My hon. friend has misapprehended me. I did not say anything of the kind, or if I did such was not my intention. I did not intend to say anything that would indicate that the solution of the government involved any other proposition than that the railway commission should deal with this matter on broad and equitable lines, and that is the only solution you can get. My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) would have to go to the railway commission in the one case just the same as we propose to go to the railway commission in this case, having regard to all the rights and interests affected.

Mr. GOOD: It is just as easy to do so in the one case as in the other.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am not saying that the task is an easy one. I pointed out to my hon. friend that he would have to go to the railway commission and that body would have to deal with these rates generally.

Now, it has been suggested, there are only three ways to deal with this question. First, to leave the Crowsnest pass agreement as it has been interpreted by the Supreme court. Secondly, to wipe it out altogether, do away with the rates on grain and flour, and commit the whole proposition, absolutely untrammelled in every way to the railway commission to be dealt with. The third course is the course we adopt, and which we submit with confidence to the House, believing for the reasons stated in the order in council, of which I do not need to repeat or to amplify, that it is in the public interests of Canada as a whole that our grain and flour products should be guaranteed a maximum rate so that those engaged in those industries should know at all times what the rate was to be.

[Mr. Good.]

Mr. COOTE: In the paragraph in the order in council dealing with that they say:

> The committee are further of the opinion that as the production and export of grain and flour forms one of the chief assets of the Dominion and in order to encourage the further development of the grain growing provinces of the west, on which the development of the future of Canada in large measure depends, it is absolutely desirable—

And these are the words I wish to direct the minister's attention to.

> —that the maximum cost of the transportation of these products should be determined and known, and therefore are of the opinion that the maximum established for rates on grain and flour as at present in force under the Crowsnest pass agreement should not be exceeded.

Will the minister tell me if it is the intention, as I think he has suggested, that these are to be the maximum rates on grain and flour for all time; that is in our present life-time? Why are these words put in, that the maximum cost of the transportation of those products should be determined and known?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That means exactly what it says. Does the hon. gentleman not think it is a desirable thing for those who have grain and flour to export to know what is the limit they can be charged for transporting their produce? That is all it means. We know that for a number of years down to 1918 a lower rate than the Crowsnest rate obtained, and it might come in again. But as a result of this bill if it passes into law, until it is repealed, the producer and shipper of grain and flour will know that this is the maximum rate which can be charged.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister tell me whether grain and flour lose their peculiar characteristics as such when they travel westward to the Pacific coast?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, if my hon. friend will only have faith in the railway commission and in their desire to deal fairly and equitably with all parts of the country, I do not think he will have cause to complain very much about rates. Trade has increased up to 50 millions of bushels for export in that country, and I think my hon. friend can rely on the railway commission dealing with that portion of the country equitably and fairly.

Mr. CALDWELL: Why should the people of British Columbia and of the Maritime provinces be asked to have more faith in the railway commission than any other part of Canada?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Because in this particular case one portion of Canada has had the advantage of an agreement made in regard to rates which has been on the statute book since 1897, and unfortunately neither British Columbia nor the Maritime provinces have had that advantage.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What reason is that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The reason is that when parliament comes to legislate you have to legislate in the light of the statutes in the one case, and in the other case you have not.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is that not an added reason why the rest of Canada should have a chance at the special privilege for a while?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend had better discuss that question with some of his colleagues on his left. It is not necessary to go into it at the moment. I would like to say a word or two with reference to the argument of my genial and clever friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and also his colleague from that city (Mr. Ladner). My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre was very clear in his views this afternoon that the Crowsnest pass agreement should be abolished, and that there should be supreme control in the railway commission. Those were the two important planks of his platform. My hon. friend seemed to be quite unnecessarily disturbed over the amendment which my hon. colleague proposed to make to subsection 6 on the last page of the bill. He seemed to urge the view that the bill as it stood when originally introduced gave some particular rights to British Columbia, and to be also of the opinion that because the minister proposed to amend that section by adding the words "within the territory" some rights of British Columbia were being taken away. It was certainly a wonderful flight of imagination, to put it kindly, for my hon. friend to entertain any such idea as that British Columbia rates were affected one way or the other, either by the section or the amendment.

Mr. LADNER: Why were the words added?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not know whether my hon. friend has ever drawn statutes. He has drawn legal documents, and sometimes he has put in a word or two extra in order to make clear what the actual intent of the party was.

Mr. LADNER: To make what clear?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): To make clear the intent of the parties drawing the bill.

Mr. LADNER: What was the intention?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In the first place, my hon. friend would not venture to argue seriously before any court that there is a single word in subsection 6 as originally in the bill that affected British Columbia one way or the other—not within a hundred miles.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then what part of the bill does affect British Columbia?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No part.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What does the Minister of Public Works say to that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will tell my hon. friend later.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Let us see what the subsection says. It reads:

> The board shall not excuse any charge of unjust discrimination, whether practised against shippers, consignees, or localities, or of undue or unreasonable preference, respecting rates on grain and flour—

Now were these eastern rates or western rates on grain and flour? I think it is very clear they were eastern rates and eastern rates only, because it goes on to say:

> —governed by the provisions of chapter five of the statutes of Canada, 1897, and by the agreement made or entered into pursuant thereto, in the immediately preceding subsection referred to—

That is the Crowsnest pass agreement made in pursuance of the statute.

> —on the ground that such discrimination or preference is justified or required by the said act or by the agreement made or entered into pursuant thereto.

Where by any stretch of the imagination could you torture that language into anything affecting westbound rates?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the clause as the minister interprets it, would or would not the railway commission be bound to give equal rates on flour westward from Portage la Prairie to Medicine Hat as prevailed on flour from Medicine Hat to Portage la Prairie, giving those places by way of illustration?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, you would not be dealing with any western rates in this section, because the rates proposed to be dealt with are those governed by the provisions of chapter five of the statutes of Canada, 1897, and that does not refer to western rates, but rates coming east to Fort William and the purpose of the subsection is to deal with the powers of the board and how they are to exercise them in reference to rates on grain and flour eastbound which are preserved under the terms of this bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says that by virtue of that clause referring to discrimination the board would not be bound to make the rates on flour from Portage la Prairie to Medicine Hat equal to the Crowsnest rates from Medicine Hat to Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The board would exercise discretion when the application came before them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister say they would not be bound?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Suppose application were made by British Columbia to the board to fix rates on westbound grain and flour. The board would hear the application on the merits and the facts in regard to it and would exercise discretion as to what the rate ought to be in fairness to all, having regard to the general rate structure all over the Dominion, but they would not be affected in the slightest degree, directly or indirectly, by any of the provisions of subsection 6, because that relates only to the rates on grain and flour preserved under this bill.

Mr. CLARK: Then what possible ground could British Columbia advance to secure the same rates westward that are in force under this statute eastward?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I understand the province of British Columbia asserts that they have a very good case for a reduction in freight rates, that by virtue of the gradients over the Canadian National the cost af haulage of products west to Vancouver has been materially reduced, and I have heard counsel make that argument more than once before the Privy Council.

Mr. CLARK: Is it the intention to leave it to British Columbia to find out whether they have a case, and if they have to present it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will come in a moment or two to the policy of the government with regard to that, but I want to set at rest clearly if I possibly can the absurdity of the contention that by reason of anything contained in subsection 6 of this bill, or the amendment proposed thereto, the rights of British Columbia were to be prejudiced in the slightest degree whatever.

Mr. CARROLL: Would the Board of Railway Commissioners not take into consideration the general provisions of the act in dealing with British Columbia with reference to fair and equitable rates? Would they not then take into consideration the general rates coming east on grain and flour when considering British Columbia?

[Mr. E. M. Macdonald.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am unable to say what the methods and policy of the Board of Railway Commissioners are in dealing with such matters.

Mr. CARROLL: But they must deal equitably under the Railway Act.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Quite so. The leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke), in dealing with some of these matters this afternoon, read from a resolution that was passed at a conference that took place at Regina. It will be noticed that the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) agrees with all the situation as we have put it and only suggests as an alternative remedy the suspension of rates. Then my hon. friend adopted the suggestion made at Regina:

> That proper equalisation of freight rates throughout Canada is impossible without statutory provisions for maximum rates in those parts of Canada in which freight rates are not controlled by competitive water transportation rates.

Other than that suggestion, together with one that the composition of the railway board might be changed, no suggestion has so far come forth of a constructive character by which anyone could gather that any better solution or one more worthy of consideration than that proposed by the government might be dealt with. It is agreed by everybody on reflection, no matter what arguments may be made in other places, that this parliament is not the proper body to deal with freight rates in particular.

Mr. FORKE: Would the minister read the next clause, No. 2?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I was reading No. 2. No. 1 states that maximum statutory freight rates should be fixed on grain and flour, and No. 2 is the one that proposes that there should be statutory provision for maximum rates in those districts where there is no competition by water. Is that what my hon. friend refers to?

Mr. FORKE: Westbound rates.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): There is also provision for westbound rates. But my hon. friend must realize that this is the situation. The Crowsnest pass agreement as regards grain and flour is preserved, maintained and extended in its operation from thirty-five per cent of the territory to which it originally applied to one hundred per cent. Because there is on the statute book that act which recognises that condition of affairs, when the government comes to deal with this problem and to try to deal with it equitably, I am surprised at the position which my hon. friend adopted this afternoon. He should be most enthusiastic in supporting the action of the government in that particular.

Mr. LADNER: As my hon. friend has commended the policy of his government to extend the territory from thirty-five per cent to one hundred per cent under the Crowsnest pass agreement, why should the extension not continue to the west? On what principle do they differentiate? On what fair treatment can they possibly defend their action?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not know whether my hon. friend is a student of railway freight rates or not, but many questions enter into this matter of freight rate decisions as regards British Columbia. The question is not merely one of grain going west. There are the commodity rates which people in British Columbia enjoy on eastbound traffic. All these problems are committed to the railway commission which he and his friends say is the proper body to deal with them. I am coming to that point in a moment. To follow up the suggestion of the hon. member for Brandon, no matter how extreme our views may be having regard to particular localities, we must realize that, in the last analysis, there must be some body composed of experts to deal with the matter of rate-fixing and all the problems connected therewith if results are to be obtained. How could a committee of this House, for instance, discuss the rate structure of this country and find out what would be equitable? Hence it is that, once this question of grain and flour was dealt with, the government proposed, and we propose now by our order in council, to submit to the railway commission the matter of dealing with rate-fixing in a most equitable way having regard to the situation throughout the country. The order in council states:

> The committee therefore advise that the board be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rate structures of railways and railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure, which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit of the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of the Dominion and the expansion of its trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of its agricultural and other basic industries, and in particular to:
> (a) The claim, asserted on behalf of the Maritime provinces that they are entitled to the restoration of the rate basis which they enjoyed prior to 1919;
> (b) The encouragement of the movement of traffic through Canadian ports;
> (c) The increased traffic westward and eastward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade with the Orient and to the transportation of products through the Panama canal.

What we have done, referring to our British Columbia friends, is this. We have asked the railway commission to approach the solution of this question on the broadest possible basis in order to attain the purposes which are set out in this order in council. We ask them particularly to take into consideration the traffic eastward and westward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade in that part of Canada. Among the changed conditions that have taken place in this country has been the wonderful development of trade in British Columbia as a result of the opening of the Panama canal. It has been a marvellous change which has slipped into the business life of this country quietly, and yet it has created conditions of the greatest possible advantage and holding out the certainty of development in western Canada through that part which is contiguous to the Pacific coast by reason of this new method of water transportation that has been developed. There is also the trade with the Orient and the great consumption of grain and other products that has developed in Japan and China. All these constitute a new business situation that did not exist in 1897, that hardly existed ten years ago. This is a development of the last four or five years. These are special matters which are submitted to the railway commission and which they must have regard to when they come to deal with the question of the equalization of rates.

There is also the situation that has existed in the Maritime provinces and to which my hon. colleague has referred this afternoon. That is a situation which is hardly appreciated by this House. From 1877 down to 1919, for a period of forty-two years, what was known as the Intercolonial railway with various extensions constituted the only publicly-owned and operated railway in Canada, with the exception of the addition which was made later on when the Transcontinental was built to Winnipeg. But the operation of the Intercolonial was carried on under terms and conditions which caused the people of the Maritime provinces to rely upon the federal government to see to it that their interests were properly protected. In the British North America Act the construction of that railway is specially provided for, and no public work is provided for in that act other than that railway. In the pre-confederation conferences which led up to the formation of the Dominion the construction of that railway was recognized as an absolute condition upon the Maritime provinces going into confederation. There would have been no Canada at all had it not been for the assurance given in that respect. And after that railway was constructed it was operated for a period of forty-two years by the federal government in accordance with what the people in that part of Canada understood to be the confederation agreement. It was operated not primarily with a view to making money, although the railway paid its way all through that period; some years there was a substantial surplus while in other years there was a small deficit. As a result of that method of operation of the Intercolonial railway we were able to obtain access to central Canada with a great many of our natural products; and, mark you, the manufacturers of central Canada were able to come down into our markets by virtue of the conditions under which the railway was operated. Under these circumstances there was an enormous exchange of products between the two sections of the Dominion, and as a matter of fact the Maritime provinces are still a great factor in the business of the manufacturers of central Canada. Hon. gentlemen speak about certain rates having existed under the Crowsnest agreement from 1897 to 1919, a period of twenty-two years. Well, this charter of our existence as part of the Dominion of Canada has been in existence almost twice as long, for some forty-two years. Now the government asks the railway commission, when it comes to deal with the whole question of freight rates, to consider the claim made by our people in the Maritime provinces to the right to have maintained the rate basis which they enjoyed prior to 1919.

Mr. GOOD: Under what obligation is the railway commission to follow these recommendations?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The obligation that any reasonable court or commission would recognize having regard to the interests involved and the purpose which the government wishes to see attained, namely, a fair adjustment of the rate structure throughout the country.

Mr. HOEY: Had the railway commission the control formerly of the rates on the Intercolonial?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. HOEY: Who fixed those rates?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Previous to 1919 the Intercolonial railway was operated by the Department of Railways, and throughout that period of forty-two years the rates were fixed by the minister and his officials.

Were it not for the organization of the Canadian National Railway system and the subsequent incorporation of the Intercolonial railway into this vast railway system, with the transfer of control and authority from the Department of Railways to the president of the Canadian National organization, the people of the Maritime provinces would now be in the same position as they held before in the matter of railway transportation. And this vast body, which is costing the country so much money, having brought about the present situation, which our people claim has wrought a great injury to their interests, the government has asked the railway commission to investigate the facts in regard to the abrogation of the rate basis which obtained previous to 1919 and to take that circumstance into consideration in laying down what we hope will be a rate adjustment satisfactory to the whole country. Such an adjustment, we anticipate, will remove the incubus which now weighs down upon business in Canada as a result of the difficulty brought about in connection with the Crowsnest pass agreement as respects westbound freight; and we hope that it will go far towards restoring proper business conditions in the matter of transportation, so that business men east and west alike may look forward with some degree of confidence to reasonable prosperity in the conduct of their affairs.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The minister made reference to the agreement entered into with the Maritime provinces at the time of confederation in regard to the building of the Intercolonial railway. Has the revenue of the railways in the Atlantic region been equal to the cost of operation?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes, all through those years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am referring particularly to the past year, 1924.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I could not tell my hon. friend. It must be remembered that the Intercolonial railway has been to a certain extent dismembered, so that what is known as the Atlantic region does not constitute the whole of that railway as formerly operated. There is no particular advantage to be gained in discussing the operations at present of the Atlantic division, because that is only one half of the Intercolonial railway. The Intercolonial railway ran from Sydney to Montreal, and involved in the cost of its operations was the cost of the Prince Edward Island railway, which had no relation to the Intercolonial.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The Minister of Railways has submitted figures showing that the gross revenue in the Atlantic region during the past year was $20,721,000 odd, while the operating expenses amounted to $24,266,000, or a deficit of $3,545,000. The country therefore has not profited from the operation of the railways in the Atlantic region.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend has forgotten the statement I made, that for ten years previous to 1919—I think I am well within the mark in this regard—that railway did not cost the country a cent.

Mr. CLARK: The Minister of Railways in presenting this bill has stated that there are three courses open to parliament. In the first place, parliament may repeal the Crowsnest pass agreement or secondly, it may allow the agreement to stand in its present form. And there is a third or middle course suggested, such as that taken here. The minister further stated that if the agreement were allowed to remain in full force and effect it would mean that similar rates would have to be given by the railway commission to all parts of Canada, or at least to the entire west, on all the commodities mentioned in the agreement. On that point I emphatically disagree with the minister, and I think I can show him that he is in error in submitting that view to the House. In my opinion the Crowsnest agreement is in full force and effect to-day; but its force and effect is limited to those points which were on the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1897. As the minister has said, the agreement is an impossibility. It is an impossibility if the view he presents is correct, and it is equally an impossibility if my own view is accepted. We are agreed that the Crowsnest agreement is impossible in its present form; but I disagree emphatically with the minister when he states that the railway board would be bound, if the agreement were left as it is now, to give similar rates throughout the country and that the effect would be to wreck the railway companies. If the minister had read the decision of the Supreme court, and if the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) had read it, they would not have made the statements which they made this afternoon and evening in regard to this agreement. Let me read from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada as it appears in the printed pamphlet distributed to us. It states quite clearly that the points affected by the agreement are only those that were on the railway at the time the agreement came into force. Therefore I say the board would not be bound to give similar rates throughout Canada, for this decision goes on to say:

> When such maxima are fixed by special acts, they must be regarded as exceptions intentionally made by parliament from the application of its general policy against discrimination. . . . Discrimination so authorized by parliament itself cannot be regarded as unjust or prohibitive.

In the face of that decision, how can the minister state to this House and the country that the railway commission would be bound to give similar rates to those authorized by the agreement on similar commodities throughout the country? As a matter of fact, the Crowsnest pass agreement under the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada is dead, and should be buried. Why attempt to revive a dead horse? My hon. friends from the west may think that we in British Columbia have very different views on the subject of freight rates to those entertained by them. Not at all. In fact I think that members in this end of the House are in agreement on the point that the basic commodities of this country, more particularly wheat and flour, are entitled to very special consideration, because obviously the west is an inland empire and must be given an outlet at reasonable freight rates for its principal products. But there are different ways of doing it. In view of public opinion not only in the west but throughout Canada, I think the railway board would have great difficulty in refusing to authorize rates that are distinctly favourable on wheat and flour. I further think that the railway board would adjust the matter so that full justice would be done not only to Manitoba and the eastern portion of Saskatchewan, but also to the western portion of Saskatchewan and the whole of Alberta and British Columbia. There would not be any discrimination between grain flowing eastward and grain flowing westward. There would not be the discrimination which this government has seen fit to introduce between the ports of Vancouver and Buffalo and New York. For that is one of the effects of this proposed legislation. Buffalo and New York will reap the harvest flowing from the western provinces by reason of these favoured rates whereas Alberta and the western portion of Saskatchewan will be asked to pay nearly double these rates to get their grain out by Vancouver. That is the sort of discrimination which this government is guilty of in sponsoring this bill.

There is a second very important feature in this measure. Again I take issue with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald). I regret very much that they are both out of their seats, because I believe they have misinterpreted the legal effect of subsection six of section three of this bill. To see the significance of this, we must look at the position of British Columbia and Alberta prior to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. Since the railway board was created British Columbia and Alberta have always had the right to come before it and present a case based on unjust discrimination caused by rates on grain and flour under the Crowsnest pass agreement. In other words, we could come to the railway board and say, "Because parliament has given these favoured rates on grain and flour under the Crowsnest pass agreement, you must grant the same rates to us westward, otherwise there is unjust discrimination." It is true that we have not succeeded in convincing the railway board, because of other arguments that have been advanced against us. But that right to allege unjust discrimination is taken away from Alberta and British Columbia by this legislation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Does my hon. friend really make that statement seriously?

Mr. CLARK: I will prove it by decisions. I quote from page 78 of volume 22 of Canadian Railway Cases, being the judgment of the chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners in re increase in passenger and freight tolls:

> The Crowsnest pass agreement again does not call for lower rates for the whole territory as now operated. The reductions apply merely to the then existing tariffs and, therefore, to operations of the company as carried on at the time that act was passed.
> I am of the opinion that discrimination should be avoided and that the effect of the Crowsnest pass agreement must be extended to the system of the company as to-day operated.
>
> Under present tariffs no distinction is made between stations in the territory covered by the company's tariffs in effect when the agreement was made and those upon its subsequent construction. The board, in my view, ought not to permit any such distinction to be now made. The Crowsnest pass agreement was considered by the late Chief Commissioner Killam in British Columbia Pacific Coast Cities v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company (Vancouver Interior Tolls Case) 7 Canadian Railways Cases 125. His judgment reads:—
> As a result of this act and the agreement made under it, the company made tariffs of reduced rates upon the classes of merchandise referred to, not only from Fort William and points east thereof westward, but also from Winnipeg westward, without similarly reducing rates on the same classes of merchandise from Pacific points eastward. These reductions cannot be considered as having been forced upon the company, but were the result of an agreement which it chose to enter into for the purpose of obtaining a subsidy in aid of the construction of a line of railway. The agreement and the statute did not even deal with rates from Winnipeg at all. When the statute was passed, and when the agreement was made, the law prohibited unjust discrimination between localities, and while parliament did not stipulate for similar reductions over western portions of the company's railway, it should not, in my opinion, be considered as having authorized what would, if done otherwise, have produced unjust discrimination. I think that we are justified in inferring that, in respect of the classes of merchandise to which these tariffs relate, the reductions did result in such discrimination, and that the rates from Vancouver eastward upon similar traffic carried under similar circumstances should be proportionately reduced.

Mr. McMURRAY: Whose judgment is that?

Mr. CLARK: That principle I am referring to was enunciated by the late Chief Commissioner Killam in the early days of the railway board and was followed repeatedly by the Board of Railway Commissioners, and if I am not mistaken, was also enunciated in the most recent case under the Crowsnest pass agreement by the present Board of Railway Commissioners. I refer to the Dominion Law Reports, volume IV, page 657, in which Commissioner Boyce re-enunciates that principle in a few words:

> It is to be observed that the additional subsection did not in any way alter or impair any jurisdiction the board otherwise had to disregard agreements resulting in unjust discrimination in rates. The board had decided that it had such a jurisdiction and had exercised it in a definite and pronounced manner.

Then he cites various cases in which the Board of Railway Commissioners had recognized that British Columbia could advance effectively the plea of unjust discrimination resulting from the Crowsnest pass agreement. Now that plea has been effectively taken away by this legislation. British Columbia and Alberta and Saskatchewan can no longer come before the railway board and argue that they are entitled to more favoured rates than they are now getting because of unjust discrimination caused by this legislation. The Minister of Public Works asks me if I argue that seriously. The reason for it is contained in the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada recently delivered, in these words:

> When such maxima are fixed by special acts they must be regarded as exceptions intentionally made by parliament from the application of its general policy against discrimination. Discrimination so authorized by parliament itself cannot be regarded as unjust or prohibited.

That means this: The Supreme Court of Canada has repealed the legal effect of these various decisions given by the Board of Railway Commissioners over many years past, and now under the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan can no longer go to the Board of Railway Commissioners and allege unjust discrimination as a ground for equalization of freight rates, or for giving us the same basis of rates, or anything approaching the same basis of rates as are given by the Crowsnest pass agreement to the prairie provinces on grain and flour going east.

At first sight I thought that subsection 6 of this bill was designed to put us back in the same position at least that we were in before the Supreme Court of Canada rendered its decision. I thought that the government had at least recognized the justice of giving Alberta and British Columbia the right to allege unjust discrimination as a ground for securing more favoured rates. But not so. Both the Minister of Railways and the Minister of National Defence have declared to-day that there is no such intention, that there is nothing in this act that gives any right to British Columbia. Therefore, as I say, our right to allege unjust discrimination as a ground for remedial action by the Board of Railway Commissioners is taken away if this legislation passes in its present form. It legalizes the discrimination.

Now let us look for a few moments at some of the clauses contained in this order in council. At page 5, paragraph 3, I find this:

> The committee observe that the agreement in question was made at a time when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was the only company having a through line of railway extending through the prairie provinces and British Columbia, and before the creation of the board for the control of railway rates under the provisions of the Railway Act of 1903 and subsequent acts; and further, that the underlying purpose of the rate control inaugurated by the Railway Act of 1903 was to do away as far as possible with all unjust discriminations and undue preferences, and to secure a fair and reasonable rate structure, which, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions would be equal in its application to all persons and localities.

Just fancy the government introducing legislation of this character based on such a declaration, legislation which, in the declaration of the Minister of Railways and the Minister of National Defence, expressly authorizes this discrimination against British Columbia.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Does my hon. friend mean to say that I stated that this legislation expressly authorized discrimination against British Columbia? I said nothing of the kind. I said it does not affect British Columbia one way or the other, not within a hundred miles of it.

Mr. CLARK: I regret the Minister of National Defence was not in when I was explaining my reasons for saying that the rights of British Columbia had been taken away by this legislation. The Minister of National Defence said that British Columbia's rights are not affected one way or the other by this legislation. I say the Minister of National Defence is wrong, and I intend, if necessary, to take up a few more moments of the House in reiterating my argument if the minister will give me his ear.

I have already made it quite clear, and I have given the authority proving without a shadow of doubt that before the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada was given, British Columbia had a right to come before the Board of Railway Commissioners and argue unjust discrimination as a ground for an alteration in their freight schedules in regard to wheat and flour. I say that, because of this section, they no longer have the right to allege unjust discrimination as a ground for any change in the rates on grain and flour from Alberta westward, or from Saskatchewan or any other province westward. The Minister of Railways unfortunately was not here either, and I once more reiterate the expression of the Supreme Court of Canada to prove that statement:

> When such maxima are fixed by special acts they must be regarded as exceptions intentionally made by parliament from the application of its general policy against discrimination. Discrimination so authorized by parliament itself cannot be regarded as unjust or prohibited.

Now before that decision was rendered, the Board of Railway Commissioners, under the authorities I have cited, always recognized the right of British Columbia to come in and allege unjust discrimination as a ground for more favoured freight rates. That decision of the Supreme Court of Canada is not altered or affected by the legislation the minister introduces to-day. I say that that decision stands in full force and effect, that these favoured rates are authorized by special act passed by this parliament, and that no longer because of that decision can British Columbia come before the Board of Railway Commissioners and argue unjust discrimination as a ground for more favoured freight rates.

Mr. McMURRAY: Supposing the Crowsnest agreement stood, would not the board be obliged to follow the law laid down by the Supreme court? Would they not be precisely in the same position?

Mr. CLARK: I would be quite happy to see this government allow the law to stand as it is now because the Crowsnest pass agreement is dead. The only thing that remains to be done is for this country to bury it. The Crowsnest pass agreement, as a result of the judgment of the Supreme court, is, on the Minister of Railway's own admission, inoperative, is an impossibility, and I fully agree with the minister in his conclusion.

Mr. McMURRAY: I understood my hon. friend was arguing that under the old Crowsnest pass agreement he would be in a better position than under the proposed legislation.

Mr. CLARK: Yes, that is quite correct.

Mr. McMURRAY: If the old Crowsnest pass agreement were left would not the Board of Railway Commissioners be bound to follow the law that was laid down there and to make a discrimination as the Supreme court has ruled?

Mr. CLARK: Yes, but fortunately for British Columbia the Supreme court recognized the injustice to this country by an extension of the Crowsnest pass agreement beyond the points that were on the Canadian Pacific Railway at the time the agreement came into effect. Consequently I am satisfied with the Supreme court's decision because it kills the agreement. I say the only thing that is left to be done is to bury it. This government has failed to do the one thing it should have done —an opportunity presented to them that was unparalleled since it came into office in dealing with this question and an opportunity lost. All it had to do was to repeal the agreement and turn the whole thing over to the Board of Railway Commissioners. Now, why did not the government leave this question to the Board of Railway Commissioners for settlement? Was the government afraid that the board would find itself prohibited by the principles of common fairness from doing such a wanton injustice to the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta? The government by laying down the principles enunciated by this legislation has made itself a party to the grossest discrimination possible; and has thereby invited the Board of Railway Commissioners to proceed in their investigation upon the same inequitable principles that they themselves have adopted in laying down this legislation for the guidance of the board. Let us look at one or two other clauses of the order-in-council. I quote as follows:

> The committee are of the opinion that the policy of equalization of freight rates should be recognized to the fullest possible extent as being the only means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada, and as being the method best calculated to facilitate the interchange of commodities between the various portions of the Dominion, as well as the encouragement of industry and agriculture and the development of export trade.

Does the government suggest there is anything new in that? Why is that in this order-in-council? Once more I refer to a decision, this time by the late Chief Commissioner Mabee, in his judgment in the Crowsnest Pass Coal Company versus the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 8, Canadian Railway Cases, page 41. He says:

> The Railway Act requires that under substantially similar conditions the tolls charged shall be equal to all persons, and at the same rate, whether by weight, mileage or otherwise, and any reduction or advance either directly or indirectly is expressly prohibited. No undue or unreasonable preference or advantage can be permitted to any person or company. The object of the legislation is to place every one upon terms of absolute equality, and if agreements were permitted to be entered into for reduction in tolls or for other preferential treatment, the door would be opened wide for the defeat of the Act, and the Board would be called upon to struggle with all sorts of conditions, opinions, and complications in the determination of such cases.

Now here we have the board placed by legislation of this parliament in that very position. The government declare in an order-in-council for equalization, and then they fix rates by statute upon certain specific articles. They legislate for rates on certain specific articles in spite of the fact that the opinion of the board is that if that sort of thing is done they will be called upon "to struggle with all sorts of conditions, opinions, and complications in the determination of such questions".

Let me now quote further from the order in council:

> The committee are further of the opinion that as the production and export of grain and flour forms one of the chief assets of the Dominion, and in order to encourage the further development of the great grain-growing provinces of the west, on which development the future of Canada in large measure depends, it is desirable that the maximum cost of the transportation of these products should be determined and known, and therefore are of opinion that the maximum established for rates on grain and flour, as at present in force under the Crowsnest pass agreement, should not be exceeded.

If it is desirable that these rates should be determined and known, why put them in the act for one portion of the country and not for the other? Does grain or does flour lose its peculiar characteristics simply because it is travelling west? Does it become something else? The minister of course said "Oh, we are only dealing with the Crowsnest pass agreement." But the Crowsnest pass agreement being dead—indisputably dead on his own admission—and unworkable in every sense of the word, does he suggest in the face of that that there is any greater right to any particular point in the country to have special rates on grain and flour going east rather than that there should be the same rates going east and west? Is there any special reason? If there is I fail to see it; and I advance this reason for the consideration of the minister, as well as for the consideration of the Minister of Public Works who is from British Columbia and I know is vitally interested in the subject. In 1911 the electors of British Columbia endorsed a guarantee by the province of the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway. The people of that province incurred a liability of something like $36,000,000 to build the Canadian Northern through the province of British Columbia. They accomplished a feat, a feat that has not been accomplished by any other people on the continent of North America. They built a line with the lowest gradients of any mountain railway on this continent by their own efforts, and they stood behind the enterprise with their credit. Which of these people to-day is entitled to the most favourable consideration? I am not arguing that we should get more favourable consideration than anybody else; we do not want it, we want a fair deal, that is all. But comparing ourselves with those who are interested in grain going east who is in the stronger position? What did the people of the northwest do to entitle them to the favoured rates given by the Crowsnest pass agreement? Who supplied the $3,500,000? Did British Columbia supply its share of that, or was it supplied by the three prairie provinces? The argument is unanswerable. The main portion of it was supplied by the people here in Ontario and Quebec, but we in British Columbia supplied our share. What is there in the Crowsnest pass agreement that gives any portion of Canada an inalienable right to the rates laid down to-day? Why is British Columbia not just as much entitled to favoured rates over the line that it stood behind, the line that it promoted, for which it pledged its credit to build as the prairies provinces, or one section of the people on the prairie provinces for their grain going east? I should not lay so much stress on the people of the prairie provinces, because it is in the interests equally of the ports in the east, the ports of Buffalo and New York, to have the grain going east. The interests of the prairie provinces, particularly the western portions of Saskatchewan and Alberta, are identical with those of British Columbia. They need a favoured or an equitable rate on grain and flour to the nearest seaport more than the people of British Columbia need it. It will work out to their interest to a far greater degree than to our interest, but it is our common interest and the common interest of all the people of Canada that the grain should go to the nearest seaboard, and that the people inland should be able to purchase their requirements from the nearest seaboard. Is it not just as much in the interests of Alberta and Saskatchewan that they should have favoured rates on the lumber coming from the Pacific coast as it is that they should have favoured rates on grain and flour travelling across the continent, thousands of miles by land more than it would need to travel if it were allowed its natural outlet?

I may have been blunt and emphatic in my remarks, but I appeal to the government, if there is to be any spirit of fair play in this matter to look at this proposition from the point of view of a small minority who are not in a position to represent their views in the way that Ontario and Quebec are able to do, or in the way that the combined provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are in a position to do. I say that we, a small minority of a little over 500,000 people out of about 10 million people, are being grossly discriminated against under this legislation. Irrespective of what any member of this government can say, I challenge the government to refer subsection 6 to the Justice department or any independent tribunal, and I feel perfectly certain that they will confirm the interpretation I have given of it and which I say is supported by the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners and the Supreme court of Canada.

Mr. HUGHES: I think this is the proper time for me to present to the minister and committee the views I entertain on one phase of this question. The order in council which refers this matter in large measure to the railway commission contains a paragraph in regard to the Maritime provinces. It is addressed to the railway commission and says that they are:

> To take into consideration and pay particular regard to the claims asserted by the Maritime provinces that they are entitled to the restoration of the rate basis which they enjoyed prior to 1919.

It seems to me a large number of the members of this House, some members of the government, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and I think the hon. member for St. John and Albert (Mr. Baxter) entertain the idea that a reduction of the freight rates to and from the Maritime provinces to central and western Canada, and a reduction going east, would in some way be a comparative advantage or a special advantage to the Maritime provinces. According to my way of looking at the subject, there could be nothing more fallacious. The railway commission, if it gives a reduction on commodities of any description from the Maritime provinces to central Canada, must necessarily give a similar reduction on similar commodities going from central or western Canada to the Maritime provinces. Wherein then, could there be any comparative or special advantage to these provinces by the sea? There might be even a disadvantage; if the local railways rates were not correspondingly reduced there would be a decided disadvantage to the Maritime provinces. I think I can make that clear by one or two illustrations. For instance, there are foundries in Sackville that specialize on stoves. Suppose a rate on that article going into central Canada were reduced, and a similar reduction made on similar articles coming from Hamilton, Toronto and other parts of Ontario where these articles are manufactured, into the Maritime provinces, would that give any advantage to the foundries in Sackville? You can see at a glance that it would not. The foundries in Sackville can hardly be expected to invade the fields supplied by the Ontario manufacturer, and pay the higher freight rates they would necessarily have to pay by travelling a greater distance. The most these factories could be expected to do would be to hold the Maritime province field or a part of it. Then if the long haul rate, from the central provinces into the Maritime provinces was reduced and a short haul, or a local rate in the Maritimes, were not correspondingly reduced, the factories in Sackville would be placed at a disadvantage, and what would apply to those manufacturing industries would apply to every other manufacturing industry in the Maritime provinces.

I will take the article of grain in which the farmers are interested, and I will refer to Prince Edward Island. The competition we have to meet in the Maritime provinces in the articles we produce comes from western and central Canada. I know a company in Prince Edward Island that had to sell two cars of oats within the last two weeks at ten cents a bushel less than they paid the farmers for them, and the price paid the farmers was not excessive. That loss was occasioned because of competition, because oats from central and western Canada could be placed in the Maritime provinces at a price that compels the trader in Prince Edward Island to sell at a loss, in part on account of the low rate for the long haul and the high rate for the short one.

Mr. BANCROFT: Does the hon. member know the rate per bushel from northern Saskatchewan to Prince Edward Island?

Mr. HUGHES: No, but the three central places where grain could be sold in the Maritime provinces would be St. John, Halifax and the Sydneys; the distance from Prince Edward Island to such a central point would be less than one-third of the distance from Toronto to the same point, and the rate from Prince Edward Island is a little more than three-quarters of the rate from Toronto. Apparently a discrimination exists there, and that is one of the things that a layman does not understand and as regards which we have to take the decision of the railway commission or whatever body fixes the railway rates. That difference is apparently too great. The local rates in each province appear to be too large. I know, as a matter of fact, in the province from which I come, traders, men engaged in business, for short hauls, use motor trucks and, in some instances, horse power to move their goods because the local rates are so high. The trains are passing over the route in any case, and it appears to a layman that the rates are so high that they injure the business. I presume this order in council as it stands is an advice to the railway commission that when they are considering the through or long haul rates and when they are reducing the rates, as they will if they comply with the request in this order in council, they will at the same time take into consideration the local rates among the Maritime provinces themselves and the local rates in each of the provinces. I should like to have the attention of the minister to the remarks that I am making. I should like to have the attention of the leader of the opposition and that of the leader of the Conservative party from the province of New Brunswick, a man who is much interested in the welfare of the Maritime provinces, the hon. member for St. John and Albert (Mr. Baxter), because I think these hon. gentlemen entertain the idea that a reduction in freight rates between the Maritime provinces and the central provinces would in some way be, comparatively speaking, a special advantage to the Maritime provinces. That is an idea which, in my opinion, is wholly fallacious.

Mr. BAXTER: How about a reduction on west-bound rates?

Mr. HUGHES: From where to where?

Mr. BAXTER: From the Maritime provinces west.

Mr. HUGHES: West to where?

Mr. BAXTER: West.

Mr. HUGHES: West to Montreal or Toronto?

Mr. BAXTER: Any distance the hon. member likes to go.

Mr. HUGHES: I have just been speaking on that subject, and I think the railway commission that would fix those rates in central or western Canada must necessarily give the same rates on the same commodities from these same points to the Maritime provinces.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They are not doing that now.

Mr. HUGHES: If they do not do that now, to that extent it would be some advantage to the Maritime provinces. But even with a reduction of freight rates I would ask hon. gentlemen on this side or on that side, because I am not talking party politics at all, as I am trying to present the views that I entertain with regard to the Maritime provinces, what commodities could we send into central Canada under lower freight rates that we are not sending there now? We cannot send grain into the central provinces of Canada because they are our competitors in that. We cannot send potatoes into the central provinces.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You have done so.

Mr. HUGHES: We have when there has been a famine, a failure in the crop but under ordinary conditions we send very few potatoes into the Montreal market. We do not send anything else.

Mr. HOEY: Could you not send fish in?

Mr. HUGHES: We send fish in now at a low rate. I will come to that in a moment. We could, of course, send coal into that market if the railway rates were made so low that we could sell coal in the central provinces cheaper than American coal, but who would get the benefit? Would that not benefit the central provinces as much as it would benefit the Maritime provinces? The idea that I wish to impress upon the committee is that lower freight rates to and from the central provinces is of no special or comparative advantage to the Maritime provinces.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about the rate on iron and steel to Montreal?

Mr. HUGHES: With regard to fish, at the present time we are supplying central Canada with fish and it takes just 4½ per cent of our catch.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would the hon. gentleman advocate raising the rates to central Canada?

Mr. HUGHES: No, but I want to impress upon the hon. member for West York and hon. gentlemen who sit near him that when he and they try to give this House or the people of Canada the impression that a reduction of freight rates to and from the Maritime provinces is such an advantage to those provinces that it compensates them for higher customs duties or other taxation that may be imposed upon them, they are making a statement that is not correct. Those rates, if and when reduced, are of no special or comparative advantage to that part of Canada and they may be a distinct disadvantage for the reasons I have already stated if the local rates among the Maritime provinces and in each province are not correspondingly reduced.

Mr. CALDWELL: Why should the local rates not be reduced in comparison with the other?

Mr. HUGHES: That is the very thing I wish to bring to the attention of the railway commission, the Minister of Railways and whoever may have the ear of the railway commission. In 1924, the long haul rates were reduced by 10 per cent and the local rates were not reduced at all. Therefore, I fear that if this went through without the Maritime men calling the attention of the railway commission to this phase of the question, it is just possible that what happened in 1924 might happen again. It is that phase of the question that I wish to bring particularly to the attention of the committee and of the Minister of Railways, so that what took place in 1924 will not under ordinary conditions take place again, and that the Maritime provinces will not be placed under that disadvantage while at the same time the idea goes forth that we are getting an advantage.

Mr. CALDWELL: When this question was before the House in 1922, I supported the Crowsnest pass agreement because I believed that agreement meant just what it said. For instance, on freight moving westward the agreement stated that it applied to freight that originated at all points east of Fort William on the Canadian Pacific railway line, and up until that time it had been applied to all lines owned or operated by or for the Canadian Pacific Railway, although they were not in existence previous to 1897. The decision of the Supreme court last winter, I think we will all agree, threw the Crowsnest pass agreement into an impossible position; and I am somewhat surprised to find the government adopting the proposed method of overcoming the difficulty. For instance, in order to remove the discrimination on westbound freight they cut out all advantages that formerly accrued to the eastern provinces on westbound freight under the Crowsnest agreement, and they removed the discrimination on grain and flour coming to the east by extending the provisions of the Crowsnest agreement to practically three times as much territory as the old act applied to. This does not seem right to me; it does not seem consistent; nor does it seem fair. To wipe out all the advantages the east enjoyed under the Crowsnest rate and to extend the advantages which the west enjoyed under the old act does not strike one as the proper way to go about adjusting matters. Either there should have been an ironing-out of discrimination east and west, or; if it was intended to wipe out any part of the act, the whole thing should have been abrogated so that everyone might have been given an even break on railway rates in Canada.

As regards the order in council referring the matter to the railway commission, I do not take much stock in the pious wish that the commission shall consider the claims of the Maritime provinces to the rates they enjoyed previous to 1919. I appreciate the thought the government had in mind in expressing that wish, but my point is that it will have little if any influence on the commission. I am afraid it will have none. There is another claim made by our western friends, that the rates under the Crowsnest agreement are higher than the eastern rates. I am not in a position either to affirm or to deny this statement, but if it is true I can hardly understand why they should wish to maintain that condition by statute; I do not see why they should not be anxious to have it set aside, if by statute the higher rate is maintained on their commodities than obtains in other parts of Canada.

Mr. LEWIS: They might increase them still higher.

Mr. CALDWELL: An hon. gentleman says they might increase them still higher. Well, another hon. member has said that the western provinces have lost confidence in the railway commission. I do not know whether that lack of confidence is confined solely to the prairie provinces, but if this is the case, the prairie provinces evidently think that the railway commission is good enough for the rest of Canada while it should not apply to themselves. Possibly those of us in other parts of Canada may not have altogether lost confidence in the commission; but when you come to delve into railway rates, as I have endeavoured to do in the past few weeks, to ascertain just where we stand and what our position will be in the future—and that is what I am really more interested in—you will find, as I have found, that there has been no application of logic in the fixing of rates by the commission. I shall quote a few rates before I am through to substantiate this statement. A lumber firm in New Brunswick wrote me some time ago inquiring how it had come about that British Columbia could dump lumber into eastern markets at a cheaper rate than our lumber men could land their product, notwithstanding that the latter were nearer to these markets. My correspondent referred particularly to the Boston and New York markets. It is true that the special rate on the Panama canal enables British Columbia to get into those markets at a cheap rate, and that is a concession which no one would wish to deny British Columbia. But I was somewhat surprised when I came to look up the rail rates on lumber from British Columbia to New Brunswick and vice versa to find that British Columbia had a great advantage over the lumber men of New Brunswick. In this connection I wish to quote the rate on lumber, which is given in dollars and cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. McMASTER: Is not the difference due to water competition?

Mr. CALDWELL: I think I can convince the hon. member that this anomaly is not due to water competition. I asked for the rate between Vancouver and Plaster Rock, New Brunswick, and I purposely took an inland point to avoid any question of export rate. Now, I find that the rate for lumber from Vancouver to Plaster Rock, New Brunswick, a distance of 3,222 miles, is 103½ cents per hundred pounds. Plaster Rock is a point in New Brunswick at which large lumber mills are operating. The rate from Plaster Rock to Vancouver, over the same rails and exactly the same distance, is 142 per hundred.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Make the comparison from St. John to Vernon.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have not the rate from St. John to Vernon but I can quote it from St. John to Vancouver.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is not a fair comparison. You cannot take it from Vancouver to an interior point in New Brunswick and give that as a typical rate. Compare that with the rate from St. John or some other water point in New Brunswick to an interior point in British Columbia and your comparison will be fair.

Mr. CALDWELL: A fair comparison would be between the two ocean ports of Vancouver and St. John, and I am able to give the figures in that regard. From Vancouver to St. John the rate is 103½ cents, the same as from Vancouver to Plaster Rock, while from St. John to Vancouver the rate is 142 per hundred. And they are both ocean ports. I think a worse comparison may be given. Our British Columbia friends have always contended that the mountain rate militates against that province, but I think I can show by comparison that it must be an advantage to British Columbia to ship over the mountains because they can ship from Vancouver over the mountains to Plaster Rock, New Brunswick, at 103½ whereas to ship from Plaster Rock to Calgary or Edmonton —and this does not go over the mountains—we are obliged to pay 126, or 22½ cents per hundred pounds more from our point in New Brunswick to Calgary or Edmonton than the lumber man pays from Vancouver to Plaster Rock. To my mind this is discrimination of the worst kind. I took this matter up with the railway commission some time ago and I shall quote some of the correspondence that passed on the subject. I may say, by the way, that the rates I have given were confirmed by the railway commission. I had obtained these rates but thinking that possibly they were not correct I went to the commission to have them verified and accompanying the statement of rates there was a memorandum setting forth some of the reasons. The memorandum stated:

> So far, therefore, as the comparison of rates proving anomalies or disparities eastbound versus westbound is concerned, in my opinion, it is meaningless, because the movements are not comparable, and, further, if there was any actual movement westbound from some of these shipping points shown, unquestionably the rates would be on a different basis as it is evident the rates shown in the statement are largely "paper rates."

I shall quote a paragraph from my letter in reply to that statement, which I regarded as a most remarkable one. In another place the statement had been made that the only movement of lumber west was hardwood flooring. In reply to this I said:

> With regard to his statement that the westbound movement of lumber is confined largely to hardwood flooring, I think possibly this is correct, as it is possibly the only lumber we have in eastern Canada that would sell dear enough in the western market to stand the present very high freight rate.
> With regard to his other statement, that if there was any actual movement westbound from some of these shipping points shown, unquestionably the rates would be on a different basis. I think in this latter instance he has stated the case backwards. If he had said, if the rates were on a different basis, unquestionably there would have been a movement westbound from some of these shipping points, he would undoubtedly have been right as I have no doubt that there is a good market in the middle western provinces for the spruce lumber of New Brunswick for building purposes, and I hope to take up with your board at your earliest convenience the question of securing a cheaper rate on our lumber from the Maritime province ports to central and western Canada.

To that Mr. Commissioner Boyce replied:

> Speaking for myself, and in accord with the replies that the board has given to similar requests for reductions or equalizations of specific rates, it would appear that until the whole rate structure is dealt with on a definite policy, probably to be decided by the government, it would, I think, be undesirable for the board to deal with specific applications until it has before it the general policy.

That is the policy, Mr. Chairman, which I presume we are now considering. I am not at all satisfied with the policy brought down by the government, because, as I said before, in endeavouring to iron out the discriminations that obtain under the Crowsnest pass agreement since the decision by the Supreme court, they propose to take away all the advantages the east ever enjoyed under that agreement, and to cut out the discrimination on grain and flour coming east by extending the operation of this commodity rate to a very large degree indeed. I think the Minister of Railways said that the old act applied to something less than three thousand miles of railway in the west.

Mr. GRAHAM: When it was first passed.

Mr. CALDWELL: Yes; and that while it had been applied by other roads, they were not compelled to do so. Since the decision by the Supreme court I imagine they will no longer apply those rates in the absence of special legislation. This bill, the minister said, extends the application of those rates to fifteen thousand miles of railway that the old act did not apply to at all.

Mr. LEWIS: Would not the hon. gentleman consider it a benefit to the east to be able to get wheat and flour from the west at a cheap rate?

Mr. CALDWELL: I am glad the hon. member has asked that question, because I got a quotation on wheat for local consumption and for export. By the way, we have mills in New Brunswick that import western wheat and grind it to supply the farmers with feed for their stock and flour for local consumption, because we do not grow enough wheat in eastern Canada to meet our own demands. If we want to ship wheat from Winnipeg to St. John or any other approximate point in New Brunswick we have to pay 69½ cents per hundred pounds; but if it is sent through for export the rate is only 49½ cents per hundred pounds. So for domestic purposes we have to pay 20 cents per hundred pounds more. This is the sort of discrimination we suffer in New Brunswick.

Now, with regard to the increases in the rates on local commodities, I was hardly able to follow my hon. friend from Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes) to-night, although I am usually able to agree with him, especially on tariff matters. He argued that a lowering of freight rates even between the Maritime provinces and central Canada would not be a benefit to the Maritime provinces.

Mr. HUGHES: Comparatively.

Mr. CALDWELL: We do have commodities that we want to ship to the western provinces. For instance, last winter because of a shortage there we shipped potatoes to Calgary.

Mr. HUGHES: Last year potatoes were bringing a price in the Maritime provinces far below what it cost to produce them. That was an exceptional condition.

Mr. CALDWELL: We did get a special concession to Winnipeg and points west, but we could not get any similar concession to other points nearer at hand. We shipped potatoes as far west as Calgary and North Battleford. I traced three of the shipments through, and I found that potatoes for which our farmers got 22 cents a bushel retailed in North Battleford at $1.85 a bushel. If that market is any good to the farmers of the Maritime provinces, they would need a magnifying glass to detect it, because the cost of producing those potatoes was at least 40 cents a bushel.

Mr. LEWIS: What was the rate to Edmonton?

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not recall at the moment. We got two reductions last winter in order to get our potatoes there at all, rather than dump them over the bank. I find that the rate from Andover to Montreal, a distance of 505 miles, was 17 cents per hundred pounds in 1913; in 1919 it was 19 cents per hundred pounds; but to-day it is 32½ cents per hundred pounds, or an increase of nearly 100 per cent over 1913. This is a prohibitive rate for such a short haul. This is what is affecting us very severely in the Maritime provinces, and we want some relief if it is at all possible to get it. As I said, I am afraid the pious wish contained in the order in council will not get us very far. I do not think that the members of this House are qualified to set specific rates in any direction, but I do think this parliament must lay down a policy under which the railway commission will fix the rates. In this proposed legislation there is no policy for Canada as a whole. There is a special provision for a certain section of the Dominion on a specific commodity, and the rest of us will have to take pot luck. I think the railway commission is the logical body to set rates. At the same time, I have not always been satisfied with the rates they have set, due largely, I think, to the fact that they have been interfered with by special legislation, but more often by special pressure brought to bear by different interests in this country. I think the railway commission should be put in just the same position as the Canadian National Railways—it should be absolutely free from political interference in the fixing of rates. I do not think there should even be a pious wish sent to the commission from the government as to what it should do. If the commission do not make just and equitable rates, I think the government should fire the commissioners so fast that we would forget their names. That is what should happen to them if they do not deal out justice to all parts of Canada.

Another matter was drawn to my attention by the lumber company that wrote me about their special rates. This is possibly the second largest lumber company in eastern Canada, and in addition to their lumbering operations they own and operate a number of large farms where they have embarked on the breeding of pure-bred stock to a considerable extent. During the past winter they sent their stock man to Ontario to purchase some pure-bred cattle. He bought two carloads, and they were loaded at a place called Inkerman, about ninety miles west of Montreal. By the way, in writing me about the freight rates on lumber the company incidentally mentioned this shipment of cattle, and said they were not able to get the same rate on them as would have been accorded them on a western shipment. I am interested in the raising of pure-bred cattle myself, and I wrote them for further particulars. Their letter in reply is dated May 23, 1925:

> Your letter of the 16th instant referring to rates on cattle.
> The particulars in regard to this are, that this year, we bought two carloads of pure-bred cattle in Ontario, some ninety miles west of Montreal, and loaded them at Inkerman station, Ontario. Mr. Irvine, Canadian Pacific Railway station agent there, notified our men that there was a cheaper rate on pure-bred cattle, but it only applied to cattle being shipped west and not coming east of Montreal.

Mr. GRAHAM: The cheaper rate west would be under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am not in a position to contradict the minister, but I think he is wrong.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am absolutely right.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have read the Crowsnest Pass Act from start to finish a good number of times, and I fail to find cattle mentioned in it at all anywhere.

Mr. GRAHAM: Cattle come under the agreement.

Mr. CALDWELL: Then my glasses must be poor, because I have never seen cattle mentioned there.

Mr. GRAHAM: They give the Crowsnest rate to cattle whether it is in the agreement or not.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think they do. The agreement might have had a sympathetic effect on the rate on cattle. I thought there must be something wrong, and I took this matter up with the Live Stock department, and I received a letter from the Live Stock Commissioner, dated June 15th, reading as follows:

Following conversation this morning and with reference to letter, herewith returned, addressed to you by the Fraser Lumber Company, I beg to advise that, in shipping a carload of pure-bred cattle as between points in eastern Canada, the shipper cannot do better than ship at the ordinary carload rate.

It is only in cases of less than carloads that the reduced pure-bred rate applies. Furthermore, even in shipping less than carloads of pure-bred live stock, when there are more than say five cattle in the car, it usually works out better even in this case to ship at the carload rate than to ship at the pure-bred rate, which is based on a considerably higher tariff.

The reduced rates in connection with the shipment of carloads of pure-bred live stock, apply only in connection with shipments as between points east and points west. In cases of this kind, the settlers' effects rate applies, which is about 30 per cent less than the ordinary rate.

As I said, in delving into this matter I have not been able to find a case with regard to railway rates where the Maritime provinces seem to be getting an even break with anybody. We seem to be getting it where the chicken got the axe in almost every case.

With regard to rates between the Maritime provinces and other parts of Canada, I do not agree, however, with the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Hughes) that we have not got any reduction in local rates, especially in New Brunswick.

Mr. HUGHES: I did not say that. I say we did not get any reduction in 1924 when the long haul rates were reduced.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think it was in 1923 that I am referring to. We had an export rate on potatoes, and it is more or less a local rate, because it is a short haul to the seaboard. Our rate from Florenceville to St. John, New Brunswick, an average point in the St. John river valley, where we grow a lot of potatoes, was 23½ cents per one hundred pounds, for export.

Mr. HUGHES: I was talking of shipments to the central markets, Montreal, for instance.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was instrumental in calling a meeting of the potato shippers in New Brunswick and getting representatives of the two railroads to meet a committee in Woodstock to discuss this question.

Mr. HUGHES: That was shipments for export?

Mr. CALDWELL: Yes that is where our movement went that year. After putting up our case, the representatives of the railroad companies told us it would be impossible to give us any reduction in rates, and most of those at the meeting were very disappointed. However, I realized that we had taken the matter up wrong. We had had the railway companies send us their traffic men, whose duty it is to go and meet the public, and endeavour to make them believe they are getting a little better deal than anybody else in Canada. I suggested that we should get a small committee to go to Montreal and meet the management of the railroad companies. We did this, and got a reduction of 6 cents per hundred pounds on a rate of 23½ cents, which was a little better than 25 per cent reduction on our potatoes for export, and this did assist materially in the export of our potatoes that year. But this past winter England put an embargo on potatoes, a thing that made me feel as un-British for a few days as anything that has ever happened since I have been a man, especially in view of the preference that we give to British goods coming to Canada, and by the way, I am still in favour of the British preference. Our only outlet then was Cuba. It was not a very paying market. Potatoes were selling very high in the Canadian west, where they were very scarce, and we therefore set about to get a reduction in the rate to that point, which we accomplished. However, the distance is so great that we were simply able to get the potatoes out there, rather than throwing them out in the spring; we did not make anything on them.

That brings me to another point. Our friends speak of the home market. There was a wonderful home market in the Canadian west for Canadian potatoes, but while the consumer there would have to pay this last winter $1.85 a bushel for our potatoes, we were only able to get 20 cents per bushel for them in New Brunswick. A home market of that kind is not of much benefit to producers in Canada.

Mr. LEWIS: Surely it did not cost $1.60 for sixty pounds.

Mr. CALDWELL: That is what it cost to get the potatoes to the consumer's kitchen. I can show the figures, what the shipper got, what the wholesaler got, what the retailer got, what the freight was, and what it cost the consumer. Those potatoes sold in North Battleford for $1.85 a bushel.

If I might digress just at this point, business is being held up in this country by combines in trade, one of which we unearthed in New Brunswick this winter, with the assistance of the Combines Investigation Act. I know my right hon. friend to my right (Mr. Meighen) has sneered at that act more than once, but I hope he will read the interim report of the investigation that has been carried on in New Brunswick during the past winter. I think it will help him to realize that, after all, that act is a pretty good act, and that it is needful we should go after some of these people.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What has happened the combine?

Mr. CALDWELL: Nothing yet. The interim report has only just been published, but if they get their just deserts, they will not ship potatoes next winter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You cannot get any action under that act.

Mr. CALDWELL: Our western friends have told us that their rates are higher than in eastern Canada, but they were very careful not to compare them with the rates in the United States for corresponding distances to the head of the lakes. On looking over this list—I will make only one comparison—I see that from Edmonton, Alberta, to Fort William, a distance of 1,267 miles, the rate on wheat is 36 cents per one hundred pounds, while from Stonehill, Montana, to Duluth, Minnesota, a distance of 1,265 miles, the rate is 52½ cents per one hundred pounds.

In our case in the east we have no advantage over our American cousins in freight rates. We are a little nearer the seaboard than our American cousins in the state of Maine, but we have to quote, when we ship to Cuba, from 15 to 20 cents a bag under our American cousins' price, in order to get into that market at all, and we have to pay our own freight rates, which are heavy enough. We have also been subject to the "middle against both ends" in the potato trade in New Brunswick, but I hope we shall be able to eliminate that if we follow up the report of this investigation and punish the guilty as they should be punished.

I do not wish at this late hour to take up any more time, but I thought in view of the fact that I was not able to support the Crowsnest pass legislation this year, and having regard to the fact that I did support it in 1922, I felt in justice to myself I should give my reasons. I hope I have made it clear both to the House and the country why I have changed my mind on this matter. If the Crowsnest pass agreement applied, as I believed it applied in 1922, I would support it to-day; but I cannot approve of the government's legislation which deprives the east of any benefit it ever had under the Crowsnest pass agreement and extends it more fully to freight coming east.

Mr. LEWIS: The hon. gentleman is not opposed to the Crowsnest pass agreement but to the legislation before us at the present time?

Mr. CALDWELL: I thought I made my position clear, that this legislation deprives us of any benefit we had while it extends it in fuller measure to other parts of Canada.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Wednesday).

DEATH OF MR. T. H. THOMPSON, M.P.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter:

Members of the House of Commons,

Your kind expressions of sympathy are deeply appreciated and gratefully acknowledged.

Mrs. T. H. Thompson and daughter.

REPORTS

Mr. SPEAKER presented the report of the Editor of Debates on the paid circulation of Hansard as affected by the publicity ordered by the House of Commons on recommendation of the committee on Debates as follows:

Ottawa, June 17, 1925.

To His Honour

The Speaker of the House of Commons.

Sir:—We have the honour to report the procedure and results of the effort to increase the paid circulation of Hansard which was ordered by the House.

The command of the House was given by adopting on July 3rd last the report of the Debates Committee submitted by Mr. Boivin, Chairman, on 30th June. The report read in part as follows:—

"Your Committee have had under consideration certain recommendations providing for a wider and more general distribution of the unrevised edition of Debates at the actual cost of the extra printing, paper and mailing, which has been ascertained to be approximately three dollars per session.

"Your committee recommend that the required steps be taken by the proper officers to inform the general public that the said unrevised edition of debates is available to subscribers, and will be mailed to them daily, upon application to the King's Printer, at the said rate of three dollars per session."

Consulting with Your Honour we were instructed that the members of the editorial staff of Debates were the "proper officers" to carry out this duty. We prepared a plan which, when approved by the Chairman of the Debates Committee, was put in execution. The plan was to ask members of the House for lists of names of those in their several constituencies likely to be interested and then to circularize the partie so named.

We append to this report copies of the printed forms used in this work.

Letters to members of Parliament were mailed January 25 to February 1, those most distant from Ottawa being first. In response 52 lists of names were received, the total number of names being 2,121, an average of about 40 per list. Circulars were promptly sent to the parties named.

When this matter was under discussion in the Debates Committee several members expressed the opinion that the press would probably take an interest in the movement and would promote the circulation of Hansard. Acting on this suggestion we communicated with the Canadian Press, the resident members of the Press Gallery, and others. The result was that Hansard as a subscription proposition was mentioned in many papers from coast to coast. Editorial articles recommending the purchase and reading of Hansard were published by some of the foremost newspapers, including those of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

A special notice was published by the U.F.A. advising readers to send for free booklet explanatory of Hansard. About 100 letters were received as a direct result of this article. Copies of the booklet herewith and samples of Hansard, together with return envelopes were sent to the parties who wrote.

In all, letters were sent to about 2,400 prospective subscribers.

In every case the party was asked to send his subscription direct to the King's Printer.

It was not possible to "key" these items of publicity in such a way as to trace results in detail. But it would seem that the movement as a whole was markedly successful. The King's Printer advises us that whereas the paid list of Hansard up to the end of last session was about 700; the present list is 1,245. In judging of this result it is necessary to allow for the fact that of recent years there has been a steady, though slow, growth in the number of Hansard subscribers. The experience with regard to the plan as above would indicate that further publicity would greatly increase the number of Hansard subscribers.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obediant servants,

A. C. CAMPBELL,
Editor of Debates.

GEORGE SIMPSON,
Associate Editor of Debates.

MARCEL GABARD,
Associate Editor of Debates.

Fifth report of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.—Mr. Hughes (for Mr. Cahill).

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi) presented the fifth and sixth reports of the select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization, as follows:

House of Commons, June 17, 1925.

The select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization beg leave to present the fifth report of the said committee, which is as follows:—

Your committee have had under consideration Bill No. 113, An Act Respecting Grain, and have agreed to report the same with amendments.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. F. KAY,
Chairman.

House of Commons, June 17, 1925.

The Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization beg leave to present the sixth Report of the said committee, which is as follows:

Your committee have had under consideration Bill No. 113, An Act respecting Grain, and have unanimously adopted the following resolution relating thereto, namely:

"That the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization strongly recommends to the government, that, in order that the provisions of Bill 113, An Act respecting Grain, may be made applicable to the whole Dominion of Canada without any possible doubt whatever, steps be taken by this government to approach the governments of the several provinces, and more particularly those provinces concerned with the growing of western grain, with the object of having necessary concurrent or enabling legislation passed by such provinces, to place beyond doubt, as far as is possible, the constitutionality of the said act or any of the provisions thereof."

W. F. KAY,
Chairman.

FINANCIAL CREDIT

Mr. THOMAS VIEN (Lotbinière) moved that the fourth report of the select standing committee on Banking and Commerce be concurred in.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. VIEN: The report reads as follows:

In obedience to the order of your honourable house, of the twenty-third day of March last, your committee have had under consideration the question of the basis, function and control of financial credit, and the relation of credit to commerce and industry, and beg leave to present the following as their fourth report:

Whereas commerce and industry suffer greatly by reason of periodic changes in the purchasing power of money and

Whereas it is generally recognized that the best results are likely to follow from co-operative action towards this end on the part of a number of nations;

Therefore be it resolved:

That this committee recommend to the House that the Canadian delegates to the League of Nations be instructed to bring this matter before the league, at the earliest opportunity, in order that the subject may be discussed and, if possible, such concerted action taken by the various nations within the league as shall be best calculated to bring about the desired end.

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): I desire to draw the attention of the House to one phrase in the substantive part of this resolution which I think is rather unfortunate; and in that connection I am going to suggest a slight amendment which I believe will meet with the approval of the House. Hon. members will notice in the latter part of the resolution these words "by the various nations within the league." Now at the present time the United States is without the league. It is very desirable, indeed, I think hon. gentlemen will admit, that the United States should not be excluded from such a conference. There are also some other large and important nations which might be excluded if this phrase were allowed to stand as it is. I submitted the resolution to Professor Irving Fisher, who has taken a very great interest in this matter and is very well informed, and asked him to make any comments that he thought fit to make upon it. He wrote me, under date June 1, suggesting the replacing of these words "within the league" by the words "throughout the world." That would allow the inclusion of the United States or any other nation that might now be for one reason or other outside of the league. It seems to me this minor amendment would make the conference much more effective and ought to be concurred in by the House unanimously. I take it that the hon. member who moved concurrence would be quite agreeable to this change. At all events I recommend its acceptance.

Mr. VIEN: If I am quite in order, in making an explanation, I may state that this matter has been the subject of careful study by the Banking and Commerce committee for five or six days, and as a result of their deliberations the committee reported that our delegates to the League of Nations should first take this matter up with the various nations within the league, for the league, or the council of the league, to take whatever action they saw fit with reference to the other nations that are not within the league, if such action is deemed advisable. Therefore, that is the reason the committee reported that the best we could do at the present moment was to recommend that our delegates be instructed to bring this to the attention of the League of Nations.

Mr. GOOD: My hon. friend misunderstands the point which I brought to the attention of the House. I am not objecting at all to the action which he suggests. If my hon. friend will look at the latter part of the sentence he will see that it says:

]Mr. Vien.]

Such concerted action taken by the various nations within the league.

Now the proposition is to introduce the matter through the league, but this resolution as worded limits subsequent action to those nations now within the league. I think that is unfortunate. I think this particular point was not definitely considered at the meeting to which my hon. friend has referred. It is quite true that the matter was debated in a general way, but this particular amendment was not then considered.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Has the hon. member an amendment to move?

Mr. GOOD: I should like to move that the words "within the league" in the second last line be struck out and that the words "throughout the world" be substituted therefor.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment is out of order. The amendment, if there is any, should ask that instructions be given to the committee that the report be referred back. The amendment cannot be made in the House.

Mr. ROBB: May I suggest that if the resolution as presented to the House with the findings of the Banking and Commerce committee is not satisfactory to all members, we might refer the matter back for further consideration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, we could not.

Mr. GOOD: If my suggestion does not meet with the general approval of the House, I do not wish to press it. It seems to me that it should meet with unanimous approval.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is nothing before the House except the report and concurrence in the report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume it is of importance to know that the report of the committee is satisfactory to the committee itself before we are asked to concur in it, but it is at least of equal importance to know that it is satisfactory to the government. Apparently if this motion is to carry—and I do not see any sign of demurring on the part of the administration—this government is to undertake to bring up a subject before the League of Nations and apparently the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) feels that in order to give it even additional force we ought to take steps to constitute a newer and larger League of Nations.

Mr. GOOD: No, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: For the express purpose.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the right hon. member not think it would be sufficiently shelved if referred to the League of Nations as at present constituted, without dragging in the other nations?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no objection to the government either shelving this report or shelving themselves, but I do not like to be a party to the process of referring it back. If this motion had been seconded by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon), as appears to have been the original intention, I might have been content to let it go, assuming the government had considered the matter, but I notice he hastily and promptly withdrew all responsibility.

Mr. VIEN: My right hon. friend is not correct in that statement. Before the House opened I simply asked my hon. colleague, (Mr. Hammell) who is the seconder of the motion to second it, and I never asked the hon. member for Dorchester to second it, and therefore he did not do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: His name was mentioned.

Mr. VIEN: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Without any enthusiasm on his part.

Mr. GRAHAM: An "honourable mention."

Mr. MEIGHEN: However, he will speak for himself on this as on other subjects. What really is the suggestion? It is that this parliament, on the mere motion on a report of a committee, is asked to be in the position of directing the government to bring the question of the control of credits, involving the curing of theoretic change in the purchasing power of money, before the League of Nations, and apparently the government is ready to accept the direction without ever having considered whether it is any cure, or whether it has the smallest suggestion to make to the League of Nations. I can think of little in the way of absurdity that could be more grotesque. What is parliament for? Are we here simply to be trifled with, in order that hon. members to my left may be appeased? If we have some plan, even though we are a small nation, I suppose it would not be altogether unworthy of us to lay it before the League of Nations; but here is something that has challenged the brains of humanity for all time. We are presumed to pitch it into the cauldron of the League of Nations without any idea whatever of what we want done or how to do it. And surely we, one of the smallest members of the assembly of that league, have gone far enough in the way of accepting motions of more or less trifling consequences without the consideration that parliament ought to give to these things. To my mind it reaches the acme of ridiculousness for parliament to accept a motion of this kind with no statement as to policy or no statement even that there has been consideration on the part of the government itself.

Mr. GOOD: May I ask my right hon. friend, is he not aware that this matter received some consideration at the Genoa conference held under the auspices of the League of Nations?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may be. That is not the point I am arguing at all. Where is the government in the matter? What dc they intend to ask the league to do? I ask the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), who I know has revelled in this subject for months and years, to give the House now the result of his deliberations.

Mr. ROBB: My thought at the moment is that my right hon. friend is casting serious reflection on the members of the Banking and Commerce committee who have been studying this question all winter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was directing my attention to the government, and I would like to get the result of their studies. My efforts still continue. Can I get any information?

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1925-26

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1926, was presented by Hon. J. A. Robb, (Acting Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the committee of Supply.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MR. GASTON

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. Has a Mr. Gaston of New York been engaged by the Canadian National Railways to make an accounting or valuation of the securities and properties of the company, and of its present position?
2. If not, has any other person or firm been engaged for such a purpose?
3. If so, who is the person or firm?
4. When was such appointment made and was it made with the authority of the government?
5. Upon what terms as to payment has such appointment been made?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

Mr. Geo. A. Gaston, of New York, has been engaged by the board, with the approval of the Minister of Railways, to make an investigation of certain features of the Canadian National Railways along the lines referred to by the minister in his recent annual statement to parliament. The position is of a temporary nature, and Mr. Gaston will be paid on a per diem basis.

CANADIAN FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. SPENCER:

1. What was the total revenue to the government from the fishing industry of Canada during each of the years 1923 and 1924?
2. What was the total expenditure to the government for same during each of these years?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN:

1. Total revenue to the Department of Marine and Fisheries during 1923-24, $180,989.59; 1924-25, $146,389.88.

2. Total expenditure by the Department of Marine and Fisheries during 1923-24, $1,430,085.98; 1924-25, $1,390,043.32.

NATIONAL FLAG FOR CANADA

*Mr. CHURCH:

1. Will the government lay on the table of the House the text of a copy of order in council appointing a committee to select a distinctive Canadian flag for use ashore?
2. Who is asking for such a Canadian flag and for such a change, and why?
3. Is the Union Jack not Canada's only official flag, and was it not the one used by the Canadian expeditionary forces overseas in France, and since Canada has been a British possession?
4. Will an opportunity be given to the House to discuss such an unnecessary innovation in view of Canada having no land army and no fleet whatever except the proposed Petersen fleet?
5. Is such a change of policy not for parliament to decide instead of the Governor General in Council?
6. Will any legislation be introduced as to such a proposed change this session?
7. Will the government also introduce legislation or rules to regulate the use of American and other foreign flags in Canada?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No committee has been appointed for the purpose of selecting a Canadian flag. A committee of public servants has been appointed to consider and report upon a suitable design for a Canadian national flag, but the government has taken no action of any kind towards committing either the government or parliament to the adoption of a national flag. I will read to the House the text of the order which it has been requested to have laid on the table:

Certified copy of a minute of a meeting of the committee of the Privy Council approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 23rd April, 1925.

The committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 21st April, 1925, from the Minister of National Defence, stating that a distinctive Canadian flag has been authorized to be used by Canadian government-owned vessels and by other vessels of Canadian registry, and that there is throughout the country a desire that there should also be adopted for use ashore a distinctive flag which shall be recognized as the flag of the Dominion of Canada.

The minister, therefore, recommends that a committee be appointed to consider and report on the most suitable design that should be adopted for a Canadian national flag for use ashore, and that this committee be composed of the following:

G. J. Desbarats, Esq., C.M.G. Deputy Minister of National Defence, Chairman.

Thomas Mulvey, Esq., B.A., K.C., Under Secretary of State.

A. G. Doughty, Esq., C.M.G., LL.D. Dominion Archivist.

Commodore Walter Hose, C.B.E., A.D.C., Director of the Naval Service.

Major General H. A. Panet, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Adjutant General.

Group Captain J. S. Scott, M.C., A.F.C., A.D.C., Acting Director of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.

Hon. members will see that all that has been done has been to refer to this committee of civil servants the question of considering a suitable design for a national flag. Representations have been made to the government from different quarters that there are throughout the country a considerable number of people as well as various organizations who feel that Canada, like Australia, South Africa and other of the self-governing dominions, should have ashore a distinctive Canadian flag as she already has on the high seas. The government has simply referred, and intends to refer to this committee, for purposes of study and report, the different suggestions that have been or may be made in that regard. I might mention, for example, that the Native Sons of Canada, an organization, I understand, having headquarters in British Columbia, has offered a prize for the best suggestion as to a suitable Canadian National flag. A short time ago, during the present session, I had a letter from the Right Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, expressing very strongly the view that Canada should have a flag of her own and accompanying the letter was a flag which Mr. Fielding himself had designed and which he said he would like to have considered when any discussion with respect to the possibility of a Canadian national flag might come up. I think I need only mention Right Hon. Mr. Fielding's name in this connection to indicate clearly that those who have views with respect to a Canadian national flag along lines similar to those adopted by other of the self-governing dominions are not to be assumed as in any way wanting in sympathy with, or loyalty to the Mother Country in the matter of the flag.

Let me make it quite clear that this committee is simply a committee to study and report. The government has no intention of taking any action in this matter without taking parliament fully into its confidence. Any report that is made will be submitted to parliament at a time when this matter may come up for discussion. There is, I think, on the order paper at the present time a resolution in the name of an hon. member suggesting that the House should consider this matter. It may be of advantage to the House to have before it, when a motion of this kind is being debated, the different suggestions that may have been made, and something in the nature of a report on the part of a representative committee such as the one here referred to. That is the sole and only object of the order I have read to the House. I do not hesitate to say that the government would not for a moment consider adopting a national flag other than by resolution of this House and the full sanction of the parliament of Canada. But surely that question can be referred to in a calm manner as one worthy of consideration, without it being assumed, as some of the questions which the hon. member has put to the government in his list of questions would suggest, that there are ulterior motives with respect to any consideration of the question. Speaking for myself, may I say that while I am able to sympathize with the point of view which would have for Canada a distinctive national flag, just as Australia, South Africa and other of the self-governing British dominions have their national flags, I would be proud and happy to have Canada continue in the future as in the past to have the Union Jack recognized as the national flag, moreover, I would not lend my support to any proposal which did not include the Union Jack as the most distinctive feature of any national flag that at any time it might be proposed to adopt.

THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Is the government aware that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario has been elected as a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway?
2. Is it the policy of the government to allow the direct representative of the crown to accept such a directorship?
3. What action will the government take in the matter?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may answer this question by saying that the government has no official information, so far as No. 1 is concerned. As regards Nos. 2 and 3, the government has not yet had an opportunity to give the matter consideration.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

Mr. CHURCH moved:

For a return showing the names of depositors of the Home Bank of Canada for sums of $10,000 or over who will benefit by legislation now being considered for the relief of depositors of said bank.

Mr. ROBB: I want to make it clear to my hon. friend and to the House that it will take some time to get this information and I cannot promise it this session.

Mr. CHURCH: I hope the government will let this pass, as I believe they will. The country is entitled to know how this five and a half millions is being distributed. The liquidator, Mr. E. R. C. Clarkson, has now such a report prepared and the copy can be had at once. All I ask is for those over $10,000. Home Bank officials tell me there has been little or no speculation by or on behalf of these small depositors as to securing payment of their claims.

Motion agreed to.

RURAL CREDITS

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO AGRICULTURE—LONG TERM LOANS TO FARMERS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide:

(a) that the Governor in Council may authorize advances to any one or more of the provincial governments for the purpose of assisting agriculture by enabling the provinces to make long term loans to farmers;

(b) that such advances shall be secured by the issue and delivery to the Dominion of bonds of the provinces;

(c) that the aggregate of advances to be made by the Dominion shall not exceed ten million dollars ($10,000,000).

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OFFICES IN TORONTO

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Can the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) now give the information I have asked for before in regard to the building at the corner of King and Yonge streets in Toronto? The moving seems to be going on and a considerable cost has already been incurred in this matter by the railway system.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): There is no change in the situation. Any bargain in this transaction must be only tentative until the Canadian National Railway board presents to the Minister of Railways a resolution which is approved by the Governor in Council. I have asked for that resolution during the past week but I have not got it yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It will be rather late when it is submitted.

Mr. GRAHAM: I should like to give it to the House, because if the Governor in Council approves of it the bargain will be a good one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Possibly, but not likely.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I asked the minister last week to expedite this matter and he expressed the hope that he would be able to do so. This is now Wednesday and we are near the end of the session, and it certainly will not look well, to say the least, to have the thing concealed until it is too late.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no concealment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is strange that the company is taking action already on a matter in respect of which they have no right to proceed without the approval of the government. Has the company not obtained the approval of the government?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, it is to me a strange proceeding in a matter of such great consequence, involving large sums and considerable property.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a sale of property, not a purchase.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is a sale of property and the government is supplying the money to buy that property.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all. The bargain which has been tentatively made by the board of the Canadian National Railways must be approved by the Governor in Council, and so far as I have heard, the transaction I believe will be a satisfactory one. I am not in a position to give any information to the House until the transaction is completed, and in that I am only following the rule observed by my right hon. friend when he was in power. I am doing my utmost to get the resolution but I have not yet received it.

MINERS AND STEEL WORKERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Saskatoon): I desire to bring to the attention of the government the following telegram I have received:

At a mass meeting of over 1,300 Saskatoon citizens the following resolution was unanimously passed: Resolved that this mass meeting of citizens denounce the actions of the federal government in sending troops into the Nova Scotia mine area and—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In reference to so much of the telegram as the hon. member has read, it should be made clear that the federal government has not sent any troops into Cape Breton. The troops are there not in virtue of any action on the part of this government but in pursuance of the provisions of a statute of parliament which authorizes the Attorney General of the province concerned to take such steps as he may deem necessary to preserve law and order.

Mr. EVANS: In the face of the deplorable conditions down there and the seeming impotence of the Nova Scotia government in the circumstances, will this government take matters in hand?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the House knows that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) is at present in Sydney and is working in conjunction with the Minister of Mines of the province of Nova Scotia. He is hopeful that the mediation in which they are both participators will be beneficial. The Minister of Labour has already had conferences with committees of those who are on strike as well as with representatives of the company, and such information as I have had from him thus far would indicate that while there are many difficult problems to be solved he is not without hope that the mediation will bring an end to the trouble.

ST. JOHN, N.B.—TRIPARTITE AGREEMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): I wish to call the attention of the government to question No. 8 standing in my name on to-day's order paper with reference to the Tripartite agreement, so called, between the Dominion of Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the city of St. John, New Brunswick. This question has been on the order paper since June 8 and as the session, no doubt, will soon come to an end I should like to know whether the answer will be given at an early date.

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): Probably I could answer the question now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the House.

Mr. MacLAREN: My I have the answer in the ordinary form?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very well. I will answer the question to-morrow.

MARINE INSURANCE RATES

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): I should like to have an answer to a question I put a few days ago regarding marine insurance rates. I think the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) stated that he would ascertain whether a second report had been received from the Imperial Shipping committee and would inform the House accordingly.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I was under the impression that I had among my papers to-day a cable from the High Commissioner in London in answer to the query sent him immediately after my hon. friend had asked his question. Mr. Larkin has replied that he expects that the report will be signed this week. There had been some difference with respect to the wording of one clause on which I understand all parties are now substantially agreed. The report will be signed any day this week, and I will promise my hon. friend to lay a copy on the table as soon as it comes. We have at Ottawa the draft report referred to in the cables which have passed.

OCEAN SHIPPING RATES

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the government if this session is to close without any action being taken or recommended to parliament in respect of what is called, in the Speech from the Throne, "transportation by sea"? We have had a report from what should be known as the Petersen committee, but it has lain dormant for some time. Does the government propose to introduce any legislation or ask for any authority from parliament arising from that report, or is the session to end with nothing done?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the circumstances under which the government has thought it inadvisable to proceed with the discussion of the report of the committee must, I think, be in the minds of all present. In view of the sudden death of Sir William Petersen, we have not thought that it would be fitting to bring into this House at this time the discussion of his name in matters relating to his projects. The government, however, intends to consider very carefully the recommendations contained in the report for such action as under the circumstances may be deemed best. I do not think that it would be advisable to contemplate immediate legislation, but I might say speaking generally that the government looks favourably upon the recommendations contained in the report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My only comment is that the death of Sir William Petersen is of course deplorable, and his family and all his friends have our sympathy; but this fact has nothing to do with government policy, and indeed does not affect the validity of the contract in the least; nor was his own evidence to the effect that his death would render the contract inoperative. This appears to be only an excuse to defer action.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I may point out to my right hon. friend that there is no completed contract. The committee's report in reference to the agreement that was referred to it for consideration was that it would be inadvisable to pronounce finally upon it for the period of at least another year, or rather until further information could be obtained for submission to parliament. The committee was apparently unable to get the information that it thought necessary to deal definitely with ocean rates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In other words, it is dead.

VANCOUVER OLD POST OFFICE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the government, and particularly of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King), to what is apparently an official announcement in the Vancouver Province of June 4, reading as follows:

Hon. Dr. J. H. King, Minister of Public Works, announces that in purchasing the Winch building in Vancouver it is the intention of the government to form a federal area within the boundaries of the city block on which the post office stands. All government offices now housed elsewhere in Vancouver will be moved to the Winch building.

This is the part of the despatch to which I wish to direct particular attention:

Funds obtained from the sale of the old post office building at Granville and Pender streets will be applied on the purchase of the Winch building.

Since April 30, four questions have been standing in my name on the order paper with reference to the sale of this old post office building. I cannot conceive why the government is refusing to answer these questions. The information requested is in the public interest. Has the government in the meantime made a secret sale of this property?

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as I stated to the House some days ago, negotiations were in progress at the time for the purchase of this property for government purposes, and it did not seem proper to answer the questions. Since then the negotiations have been concluded, and I will bring down to-morrow the answers to the hon. member's questions.

MANITOBA FLOODS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ARTHUR L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, have the government any information as to the serious floods that have taken place in Manitoba through the White Mouth river and the Birch river overflowing their banks? If so, are they taking any action to help those affected? I understand there is a whole township flooded.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Public Works): Reports have been received of flood conditions in Manitoba, and provision is being made in the supplementary estimates to take care of some of the damage.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I have been urged by telegram to bring to the attention of the government the serious state of affairs at Delta, due to the same cause. I hope the government has the matter before it for attention.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Provision is being made in the supplementary estimates to look after this.

[Mr. George Black.]

EXPORT OF POWER

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Low) what is the reason for the continued delay in bringing down the appropriate order in council in ease of the municipalities from the export tax on electricity?

Hon. T. A. LOW (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am sorry to have to inform my hon. friend that the matter is still under consideration. It will be dealt with in due course.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: "Due course" is a pretty slow course.

ROOT VEGETABLES ACT AMENDMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) whether it is his intention to proceed with the bill to amend the Root Vegetables Act?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think that the bill will be proceeded with this session.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the minister ready to give his reasons for withdrawing it?

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES

BILL TO AMEND THE RAILWAY ACT, 1919

The House resumed from June 16 consideration in committee of Bill No. 181, to amend the Railway Act 1919.—Hon. Mr. Graham.—Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Powers of board continued.

Hon. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg): Mr. Chairman, this bill is of far-reaching importance to Canada as a whole, and to western Canada in particular. It proposes, if not completely to wipe out, at least to so completely change as to be hardly recognizable the statute that has stood for the protection of western Canada in the field of transportation for some twenty-seven years. To fully appreciate what this change means to the people of western Canada, a brief review of the circumstances leading to the passing of the statute incorporating the Crows-nest pass agreement is necessary.

In 1897 the Liberal government, in granting a subsidy of some three million dollars to the Canadian Pacific Railway, provided that certain maximum rates should apply to grain moving eastward and to certain stated commodities moving westward. No doubt the policy of the government was dictated by the conditions prevailing at that time in western Canada, particularly in connection with the railroads. We must remember that at that time there was no Board of Railway Commissioners, and that this agreement was made for the purpose of protecting the people of western Canada against the discrimination that might exist by reason of water competition in eastern Canada. That competition still prevails to-day; we are in identically the same position we were in at that time. Undoubtedly the policy of the government of that day was dictated by the necessity that then existed of giving to the people of western Canada a fair and even opportunity with the other portions of Canada that lay nearer to water transportation. We will remember that the western portion of Canada was at that time being newly opened up. A vigorous and active immigration policy has been inaugurated in the Department of Immigration by Sir Clifford Sifton, and there is no doubt that in working out that policy for the development of that country it was the policy of the government of that day to grant this protection to the people who were coming into that territory.

That contract has stood deliberately unchallenged until just last year. It is true, it was set aside for a brief period as a war measure. But the Liberal government that existed up to 1911 continued that policy of giving the protection of the Crowsnest agreement; that policy was continued by the succeeding Conservative government, and the present government in office here to-day has continued that policy. In 1922, after a committee composed of the different parties in this House had sat upon it, a bill was brought down bringing in the rate exactly as we have it to-day on grain and flour. That undoubtedly was the intention of the government at that time, because it was not then in the mind of any person, it was not in the mind of any party in this House, or even in the mind of the railways themselves that the decision that was handed down by the Supreme court a short time ago would prevail. It never was questioned, so far as I know, that these rates should not apply over the entire system of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We had that in mind when this House passed the bill in 1922. The government, and the House, and the country as a whole, understood that those reductions would apply over the entire railway system of Canada. Furthermore, last year the government allowed the agreement automatically to come into force, as provided by the statutes of 1918. That then was the policy of this government. The policy of this government no later than last year was to put into force the entire contract exactly as it stood in 1897. There is no question about that at all. This government understood, this House and the country understood, on July 6th of last year, when this act automatically came back into force, that the Crowsnest agreement came into force over every bit of Canadian Pacific mileage in this country.

Mr. GRAHAM: West of Fort William.

Mr. McMURRAY: Over every bit of railway mileage as provided in the contract of 1897. This government accepted that on the 6th of July of last year. It accepted as its policy that the Crowsnest agreement would prevail, as they understood it to prevail, without discrimination over the whole of Canada. It was not in the mind of a single member of the government or a single member of the House that anything else but the Crowsnest agreement was coming into force, and that without the discrimination that was afterwards made out by the Board of Railway Commissioners, and confirmed later on by the Supreme court. That was the intention of the government last year. Members of the government last year toured western Canada; the Prime Minister himself came out to western Canada, and he did not deny on a single occasion but that we were following out the railroad policy laid down by the Laurier government and he never left a single intimation in western Canada but that the Crowsnest agreement of 1897 was in full force and effect I am sure that it must have come as a shock to him, as it did to me and the rest of us there, that the Board of Railway Commissioners would set aside, or that they even intended to set aside, at one fell swoop the act of this parliament.

4 p.m.

The Board of Railway Commissioners appear to have acted with wonderful celerity upon that occasion. Speaking moderately, and without any trace of feeling whatever, it does seem to me that the Board of Railway Commissioners proceeded with undue activity in setting aside a contract which had stood as the Magna Charta of western Canada in its transportation difficulties for some twenty-seven years. In setting that contract aside on a fifteen-days' notice, without waiting to go to the Supreme court to see if they were sound upon the matter at all it seems to me they acted with undue and indecent haste. It would have been meet and proper under the circumstances to have waited until they had the law from the Supreme court.

It was, if I might say so, hurrying the culprit to execution almost without the benefit of the judicial clergy.

But we can go further. On the 24th day of December of last year an order in council was passed by this government, with the full knowledge before them of the Supreme court's decision, again reinstating the Crowsnest policy and conpact of 1897, in these words:

> Your committee is of the opinion, however, that Your Excellency in Council has power to grant a stay of proceedings or postpone the operation of the order of the board complained of, pending the outcome of the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada above referred to, and to direct that the said order of the board be varied by providing that the tariffs therein referred to shall again become operative and remain in effect until further order of the board following the decision of the Supreme Court upon the said appeal.

So that for a period of twenty-seven years until practically the present moment, the Crowsnest compact has been the policy of the Liberal party, and incidentally I might add of the Conservative party in the past, too, and it never was set aside at any time except as a war measure.

Now what has occurred in the interval, Mr. Chairman, to change the mind of the government upon this matter? Apparently they were running true to form on the policy of giving equal justice to the people of the central provinces who were far removed from water. What has caused their change of mind? I can conceive of only one thing which the government can advance as a reason, and that is the fact that the Supreme court has found that there is discrimination throughout Canada, that the Board of Railway Commissioners would have the right to set up the discrimination that now exists in western Canada, and to approve of the discrimination that now exists in eastern Canada, and in order to meet an awkward situation the government has decided upon a sort of compromise. Are the government justified in doing that? We must remember what the government's opinions were prior to the decision of the Supreme court. Now, the government have the power, this House has the power, to override that decision and to put into legislation that which the government approved of up until the 24th of December last year. Is western Canada really and properly entitled to some form of guaranteed rate? There can be no argument as to that. Any Board of Railway Commissioners would find themselves placed in such a situation, as a result of the course proposed to be taken, that they would have to put an additional and heavy burden upon the shippers of western Canada. They are bound by the conditions of water transportation in eastern Canada. In eastern Canada the rates cannot be raised by reason of that fact. The railroads must have a certain amount of freight rates to keep their lines in operation. That is an undoubted fact. Talk about the equalization of freight rates! There cannot be such a thing in this country as equalization of freight rates as long as water competition exists in eastern Canada, and western Canada must for many years to come pay a higher freight rate than eastern Canada. We must pay it because the money must be raised. The mountain scale applicable to British Columbia is so high already that it cannot be raised any higher. The conditions of competition in eastern Canada are such that the rates cannot be increased there either. Western Canada, that great reservoir producing the largest proportion of freight in this country, must for many years to come bear a higher burden of freight rates than eastern Canada. We are agreed as to that. In what position then must the Board of Railway Commissioners find themselves? They find themselves in this position, that without a maximum protection in western Canada they are compelled to raise the rates there to meet the necessities of the freight rates question. Without that maximum western Canada would be in the position of a man playing poker with all the cards stacked against him and the other side asking for the sky as the limit.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is it a fact that at the present time the western lines are not paying, and that the central regions are paying?

Mr. McMURRAY: No, I do not think that could be so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is so reported in the papers.

Mr. McMURRAY: There are a great many reports available but they must be read together and studied very carefully in order to grasp the exact meaning of the freight rates question. And I may say that the study of railway rates is more complex and difficult than a Greek grammar.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has already established that he does not understand the question.

Mr. McMURRAY: I do not pretend to understand it thoroughly, but I do claim to have a grasp of some of the salient features so far as the removal of this charter from western Canada is concerned. It is impossible for us in the west to recognize that removal in any shape or form. The government have not gone that far, but under what they propose the Crowsnest pass agreement of 1897 cannot continue. So far as commodities moving from the west to the east are concerned, that agreement is practically nullified. The hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) suggested a suspension. There is little to be gained by that.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend said "from the west to the east." He meant "from the east to the west."

Mr. McMURRAY: Yes, I meant that as regards the movement of commodities from the east to the west it is practically nullified under this legislation. The situation reminds me of the Irishman who during a fire in his house put on his trousers the wrong way to, and falling downstairs, when they picked him up and asked him if he was hurt he said, looking at himself, "I am terribly twisted." The Crowsnest pass agreement as a result of the government's action, seems to be terribly twisted, and I do not think we shall ever be able to get the westbound rates into proper form again. It is not for me to suggest to the government exactly what should be done. They have defined their policy in the order in council of June 5, 1925. In that document I read the following:

> The committee are further of the opinion that as the production and export of grain and flour forms one of the chief assets of the Dominion, and in order to encourage the further development of the great grain-growing provinces of the west, on which development the future of Canada in large measure depends, it is desirable that the maximum cost of the transportation of these products should be determined and known, and therefore are of opinion that the maximum established for rates on grain and flour, as at present enforced under the Crowsnest pass agreement, should not be exceeded.

That defines the philosophy of the government, but they have not made any declaration whether they believe they are bound by any contract of the past solemnly made between Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway on behalf of the people of the prairies. The whole of the people of western Canada, without one dissenting voice, are of opinion that the government should adhere to the policy embodied in the Crowsnest pass agreement instead of embarking on a policy such as that set out in the order in council from which I have just quoted. If the latter is the policy of the government it is not satisfactory to me. As a quid pro quo it does not go far enough. This legislation has had the effect of demonstrating one thing—that the prairies are tied to eastern Canada so far as freight rates and the transportation of grain are concerned. You cannot get away from that at all. If the policy of the government is to assist in the production and export of grain and flour as one of the chief assets of Canada and the development of the great grain-growing districts of the west, why not give these districts the opportunity of getting down to the nearest tidewater, why not give them the opportunity of reaching a port which is open all the year round? Possibly in my province, possibly in my own city, a narrow parochial attitude may be adopted by some; but any true Canadian will express himself in national terms and not in a narrow way representative merely of the sentiment in cities or provinces. If the philosophy of the government is such as they have intimated, I do not understand why they do not afford the producers of the west an opportunity to reach an all-the-year-round port.

My hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Clark) spoke last night on this question, and while I did not agree with his law altogether, much less with the application of it to the present situation, I did agree with him when he stated that the very meaning of this proposition was discrimination against Vancouver and British Columbia in favour of New York, Buffalo and eastern ports. There is no doubt of that at all. Then how are we helped by the bill which is before the House? It is contended by some—and I think by some fairly good lawyers at that—that under the bill as drafted the grain rates on grain moving out to Vancouver must be lowered, because there cannot be discrimination in the rates provided herein. I cannot view it that way. The Supreme court has distinctly stated in its latest decision—and stated in very accurate and I might say succinct language, leaving no doubt as to what their opinion is—that the Board of Railway Commissioners are not obliged to prevent discrimination between rates provided under the special act and ordinary rates. Here is what they say:

> When such maxima—

Referring to the Crowsnest Pass Act of 1897, the Manitoba Act of 1903 and the act of 1908

> When such maxima are fixed by special act they must be regarded as exceptional, intentionally exempted by parliament from its general policy against discrimination.

That was terse and brief and absolutely understandable, that where the special rates are made they are made by parliament for special circumstances, and the Board of Railway Commissioners are not bound to take them into consideration when fixing other rates. That being the case, what would be the position so far as rates are concerned in connection with grain passing from Edmonton down to Vancouver and from Calgary westward? I think if my hon. friend (Mr. Clark) had studied this aspect of the bill before speaking last night, he would have obtained a sufficient amount of data and information for his argument, without going into the question of the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners or the decision of the Supreme court. With reference to that part of the Crowsnest pass contract that is left to the people of western Canada, we find this:

Provided that notwithstanding anything in this subsection contained the rates on grain and flour shall, on and from the date of the passing of this act, be governed by the provisions of the agreement made pursuant to chapter five of the statutes of Canada, 1897.

That brings in a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

But it shall apply to all territory west of Fort William covered by the tariffs filed under the said agreement.

That was on the lines of railway then built.

Or all lines of railway hereinafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament within such territory.

That confines us to the lines of railway in the western provinces. Then we go to the next clause dealing with questions of discrimination, and this is what it says:

The board shall not excuse any charge of unjust discrimination whether practised against shippers, consignees or localities, or of undue or unreasonable preference respecting rates on grain and flour governed by the provisions of chapter five of the statutes of Canada, 1897, and by the agreement made or entered into pursuant thereto within the territory set forth in the last preceding section.

There shall be no discrimination so far as the western lines on the prairies are concerned. The real translation of that is that discrimination is possible between rates down to the coast and the rates provided in this agreement. Under that the proper provision will be a comparison of what the grain rates in western Canada normally are, and then in addition to that the mountain scale be added.

Then comes another question which will receive consideration. We have running down from Edmonton to Vancouver the Canadian National line, a line of low and easy grades, and competing with that we have the Canadian Pacific railway running through Calgary. The cost of operation on the one is very high, and the cost of operation on the other is very low. The rates from Edmonton to the coast on the low grade line will be no higher than the rates on the prairie, but the rates that will require to be set are the rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway where the cost of operation is high.

[Mr. McMurray.]

An hon. MEMBER: The Canadian Pacific would then become the beneficiary.

Mr. McMURRAY: They would undoubtedly become the beneficiary according to my argument, in regard to the rates on these roads running down to the coast. The cost on the Canadian Pacific would be taken as the real standard as to what the cost of operation should be.

I think the standard should be fixed by open competition, and that we should not take the cost of the more expensively constructed and more expensively operated road, and the people of Alberta and western Saskatchewan are either to be forced to pay an added price to carry their product to the coast, or compelled to pay the extra rate to eastern Canada, much of the grain of the west will be forced unnaturally into eastern points. As I said before, it is not for me to work out what the quid pro quo shall be, but in the name of western Canada I protest against this bill, and against the removal of the protection, and I say that if that protection which has been given to them be removed they should be given a proper quid pro quo, and I maintain that what we have here so far as grain and flour is concerned is only what this parliament thought was existing so far as freight rates were concerned, every year up until the decision was given by the Supreme court. Under this bill we are simply giving away a portion of what it was the will of this government to grant to us all along. I make this suggestion to the government and to parliament: that to-day there exists, by reason of the conduct of the Board of Railway Commissioners —though the knowledge of law of the majority of the commissioners was apparently exceedingly elementary—a discrimination, because they assume to set aside, to the astonishment of everybody, the Crowsnest pass agreement, but their finding was disposed of without a moment's hesitation by the decision of the Supreme court. If anything was required to strengthen the unsatisfactory opinion held by the people of this country largely, and by the people of western Canada more particularly, concerning the Board of Railway Commissioners, it was this action of the board in this matter. It is desirable that the west and all portions of Canada should maintain the greatest respect for that body. It was too bad that at a time when the government was dealing with a matter that is exceedingly critical and difficult, hasty action such as that should have lost the confidence of the people of Canada in that board. I do not use my words lightly. I have considered the statements I am making concerning them. That being the case, some change and alteration should be made in the personnel of that board. Western Canada, by reason of its great contribution to freight rates and its vast railroad mileage, should be more strongly represented upon that board, and I suggested some time ago to my good friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) that the Board of Railway Commissioners should have another member from western Canada. We are entitled to that and it is in the interest of the whole country. If that were done, it would inspire more confidence in that board on the part of a large section of the people of Canada. While I am on that matter, I think there should be upon the Board of the Canadian National Railways another representative from western Canada or better still, one from each of the western provinces. I think also, although this is not altogether apropos of the matter, the Supreme Court of Canada, which now has an even number, six judges, an unsatisfactory number in any court where there may be an even division of opinion, should be increased to seven judges, and that western Canada, by reason of its population, area and importance, should have another representative in that court. These things are essential for the continuing of the confidence of the people of western Canada in our various institutions. By the proper division of responsibility, great gain in that regard can be made.

The government in the same order in council utters some pious hopes in connection with what the Board of Railway Commissioners should do with respect to freight rates in Canada:

> The committee therefore advise that the board be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rate structures of railways and railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit of the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of the Dominion and the expansion of its trade, both foreign and domestic.

And the government draws the attention of the board particularly to the claim asserted on behalf of the Maritime provinces, and mentions:

> The encouragement of the movement of traffic through Canadian ports;
> The increased traffic westward and eastward.

That suggestion to the Board of Railway Commissioners would have just about the same effect as the piously expressed wishes of a revivalist to a bunch of back-seat sinners at an old-fashioned revival meeting. The effect might last on them until they got down on the road, but before they got home, they might be swiping some of their neighbour's apples. This may be good politics; it may appeal to different sections of Canada, but as an actual settlement of the problem it is of no use at all. Maximum rates must be maintained as a protection, not only to the people of western Canada, but to the Board of Railway Commissioners themselves. Without that maximum, the railways must raise the amount of revenue in the west. They cannot raise it in the east because of water competition. They cannot raise it in the far west because of the high mountain scale. Therefore, the only protection that we have and that the board has is the proper maintenance of some form of maximum rates in western Canada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Surely the hon. member is not serious in making that statement.

Mr. McMURRAY: I was never more serious in my life.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The return tabled in the House by the minister at the present session shows absolutely the contrary of what the hon. member is arguing. There was a deficit between earnings and operating expenses in the Atlantic region and also in the western region. The only place where there was a surplus of earnings over operating expenses was in the central region, Ontario and Quebec, and on the Canadian National lines in the United States.

Mr. McMURRAY: The hon. member has made a statement. What is his question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member stated that these rates would have to be collected in the west. I am pointing out that there is a surplus of $17,000,000 of earnings over operating expenses in the central region and a deficit of $5,000,000 in the western region and in the eastern Atlantic region.

Mr. McMURRAY: The hon. member's figures are very interesting, but apparently they are inapplicable to the point that I was arguing. I am not arguing where the rates are collected from. Undoubtedly water competition must come in, and if that water competition exists you cannot raise rates any further in eastern Canada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Why is it then that there is a very large surplus of earnings over operating expenses in the central region?

Mr. McMURRAY: Likely because the rate has not got up to water competition, but the minute it goes up to water competition it cannot go any higher. The contention of the railroads is that they have not sufficient revenue. You may be raising more money in Ontario from the railroads than you are in the west, but that has nothing to do with my argument. My hon. friend has missed the point I am making. I say that in eastern Canada you can go only so far in raising railway rates and you will stick there. In British Columbia you cannot go any higher without stifling production in that province. Railway rates can go to a certain height and then they cannot go any higher. The revenues must be raised. Western Canada is the only place where the whip can be laid and, therefore, we must protect that section of the country. If that is the government's policy of building up a great grain producing section of western Canada, following the language used by commissioner Oliver, I would point out to the government that it is possibly defeating itself in holding railway rates too high. I put a resolution on the order paper stating that the only solution of our railroad problem in Canada, so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned, is to people the vacant lands along those roads, to people the western prairies and northern Ontario with good, industrious, hard-working people. I am thorcughly convinced of that and I have argued it several times in this House during the last few years. We should have a genuine colonization scheme that will take care of the people from the British Isles, from our cities, from the United States and, above all, from those European countries where they are naturally agriculturists. The hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) has sounded that note three or four times during this session. A vast hinterland in northern Ontario lies adjacent to those roads. That portion of it that is cultivated grows grain crops, and particularly hay, vegetables and so on, and it is capable of supporting the hardy people of central Europe and the people of Quebec who are naturally pioneers. In that way alone, I believe, these roads can be made to pay. Nothing will be gained by switching money from the Canadian Pacific Railway into the coffers of the Canadian National or vice versa. That sort of thing is only chasing rainbows, and you will never get anywhere in that way.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Would railway consolidation improve the situation?

Mr. McMURRAY: I do not know. I know that the Union government did not do much good and I entertain grave doubts as to whether a union of the railways would be satisfactory. I could not answer that question offhand; it is altogether too large to discuss at the moment. But I do object to this legislation. It seems to me to be a patchwork attempt at compromise and it will meet with nothing but protest from the people of the west. It is not fair to British Columbia, and being unfair to that province it must in consequence be unfair to a large section of the western prairies. Why could not the western section of Canada have been taken into consultation and a quid pro quo worked out along lines satisfactory to everyone? This present legislation is not satisfactory, and I make the statement fully appreciating the difficult position in which the minister finds himself. Indeed, no one appreciates more than I do the difficulties of the Minister of Railways; I doubt if any man has ever held that portfolio in Canada under similar conditions and with problems so serious to solve. I do believe however that the only solution for our railway problems is to have more industrious people living in the country, people of simple habits, people of real thrift, who will settle along the lines of railway, producing those commodities which the world requires.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have a good deal of sympathy with the government in its attempt to solve the intricate and complicated problem of freight rates. The Speech from the Throne at the beginning of the session intimated that we were to have an adjustment of freight rates which would equalize rates between provinces. I maintain that this is exactly what the present bill does not propose to do, although I notice that in the order in council the same intimation was made. This bill does not propose to equalize freight rates as between provinces, and personally that is my sole reason for opposing it. We in the west have been compelled all through the history of the prairie provinces to pay very much higher rates than are collected in eastern Canada, and an equalization between all the provinces would certainly be in our interests, and it would appear to be just and right in the interests of Canada as a whole. It apparently is assumed in eastern Canada, judging by the expressions of opinion that appear in the press and which one hears privately, that the west has some particular boon conferred upon it by the Crowsnest rates. The commodity rates referred to from eastern to western Canada are however still higher than the rates for similar commodities and equal distances in effect in eastern Canada. Why therefore should it be considered that the Crowsnest rates are a boon to that part of the country? In the first place, the Crowsnest rates were not regular rates; they were not rates that were put into effect, but were simply maximum rates. And in the agreement made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Dominion government at that time, statutory maximum rates were fixed above which the regular rates could not at any time go. These rates, for a long period of years, from 1898 to 1918, were still higher than the regular rates charged by the railways, so that in all that period we got no benefit whatever from the Crowsnest agreement; and so soon as we might have received some benefit from it, so soon as the scale of railway rates began to rise in the country, as it did during the war, the Crowsnest pass rates were set aside for a period of three years. The rates on grain and flour were permitted to come into effect again on July 6, 1922, and from that period on we have received some definite benefit. But that is the first time in all the history of the west that we have derived any advantage whatever from the Crowsnest pass rates. The commodity rates from eastern Canada to the prairies became effective on July 7, 1924, and we received some benefit from these rates up to October 29 of the same year, a period of only three months; for after that date these rates were set aside by order of the railway commission. The government over-ruled that order however, to make the rates effective on December 25 last and since that time these rates have been in force and we have been receiving some benefit. But the point I want to make is that in all the twenty-eight years that the Crowsnest rates have been in effect we have benefited only during a few months. The hon. member (Mr. McCrea) speaking last night made the statement that on July 6, 1922 we received reductions amounting to about thirty-five per cent in some of our freight schedules while in eastern Canada they received reductions amounting to only six per cent. But the hon. member did not tell the House that this was only a partial removal of the discrimination which for many years had existed against western Canada. The hon. gentleman went on to quote a few figures and attempted to prove that almost all the taxes were paid by the two central provinces. In that connection he submitted some very interesting figures. For instance, he pointed out that Prince Edward Island contributed only 26½ cents per head of the revenues of the Dominion while Quebec contributed $52.24 and Ontario $52.21. On the other hand, he stated, Manitoba contributed $27, Saskatchewan only $3.76 and Alberta only $8.67.

Mr. DICKIE: What about British Columbia?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have not the figures of that province.

Mr. DICKIE: Its contribution is $45.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. member failed to draw a distinction between those who paid the taxes and the point at which the taxes were paid. To be fair to the Maritime provinces, let me take the case of Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island is a purely rural province, there being nothing worthy of the name of a manufacturing establishment in the whole island; in fact, the majority of the retailers buy their goods from wholesalers resident outside of the province. The wholesaler in St. John or Halifax buying a shipment of goods on which he pays the duty, wholesales these goods to retailers in Prince Edward Island. Now, surely there is no hon. gentleman who would attempt to prove that the duty was all paid either by St. John or Halifax; the duty is passed on to the consumer in Prince Edward Island. And that is the condition in the prairies. We buy tens of millions' worth of goods manufactured in Montreal, Toronto and other eastern industrial centres and we have the duty passed on to us; whatever charges are met, whether it be duty or sales tax or anything else, is passed on to the consumer in that province. So that there is no hon. gentleman so unsophisticated as to accept the figures which my hon. friend gave us last night in the sense in which he intended them to be taken. Let me take the position of Saskatchewan alone. It will be noted that the figures show this province contributing to the national revenue very much less per head than Manitoba. But Manitoba has the city of Winnipeg, which manufactures a considerable amount of goods and is a wholesale distributing point; almost all of our goods are received through Winnipeg. Naturally Winnipeg pays the taxes directly and passes them on to us. So I think we can very well dispose of that.

Mr. DICKIE: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman? The disconcerting feature is that the people of the western provinces do not seem to take kindly to buying Canadian goods. They want the duty taken off so that they can buy imported goods. That is what is worrying us. The west want the Hudson Bay railway completed so they may import goods direct from the Old Country. Unless they buy goods produced in Canada they are not contributing their per capita toward the upkeep of the country. If they buy Canadian goods, then the case is different.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman's interruption is not relevant to the point in discussion. The protective tariff to-day compels us to buy home-manufactured goods whether we like it or not.

Mr. DICKIE: You are opposing the protective tariff.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is not under discussion at the present time. The fact is we do pay those taxes when we buy home-manufactured goods which to-day we are compelled to buy. Throughout almost the entire history of western Canada the people of those provinces have been compelled to pay from 25 to 40, 50 and even 100 per cent more on their freight rates than the people of eastern Canada. That is admitted. If we could have an actual equalization of the freight rate structure, we would have no objection whatsoever to the abrogation of the Crowsnest pass rates. I want to make that plain to hon. gentlemen. Just let the government lay down a policy of equalization of rates, and I think that not an hon. member in this section of the House will object to the complete abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement. The only reason why we are protesting against its partial abrogation is because we know there will be a distinct discrimination against us in any rates that are set by the Board of Railway Commissioners. Let us take the western rates case, which was heard before the railway commission in 1913, and judgment given the same year. In their judgment the Board of Railway Commissioners admitted frankly that there was serious discrimination against western Canada in the freight rate structure, but they justified that discrimination on the ground that the railways must carry goods cheaper in eastern Canada in order to meet water competition. That I may say is the reason, and the only reason, why we in the west are demanding the retention of some statutory protection against the discrimination that we know the Board of Railway Commissioners would inflict on us if they have a free hand. It is possible that Ontario and Quebec and the Maritime provinces may get a square deal, it is possible that the freight rate structure may be equalized in so far as those five provinces are concerned; but we in the prairie provinces know, as do hon. gentlemen from British Columbia—although they may not be quite ready to admit it—that the Board of Railway Commissioners will not give that province or the three prairie provinces a square deal and make any attempt whatsoever to equalize freight rates as between eastern and western Canada.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Why should my hon. friend state "We know the railway commission will not give the prairie provinces a square deal"? That is not a fair statement to make.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Surely, Mr. Chairman, we can judge what the Board of Railway Commissioners are likely to do by their actions in the past. We have their decision laid down in the western rates case, in which they admitted discrimination and justified it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At that time the whole field was covered with restrictions that prevented action on the part of the railway commission. The object of this legislation is to remove those restrictions and give the board an opportunity to equalize the rates.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would point out to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King, Kootenay) what I have already pointed out, that in the Speech from the Throne the government intimated the policy would be the equalization of freight rates. That would be perfectly satisfactory, but this bill does not provide for such equalization.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If my hon. friend will read the bill he will find it does not provide for equalization. Let me refer him to this one clause:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of section three, the powers given to the board under this act to fix, determine and enforce just and reasonable rates, and to change and alter rates as changing conditions or cost of transportation may from time to time require, and so on. That means we will have the rates worked out on the same old basis as before.

Mr. GRAHAM: I know my hon. friend wants to be fair. Let me point out to him that the only restriction on the action of the board is that portion of the Crowsnest pass agreement which is retained. Does he wish that removed?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would be quite satisfied to see every vestige of the Crowsnest pass agreement removed if I knew that in the freight rate structure to be built up the railway commission would equalize freight rates as between provinces—the very thing that was intimated in the Speech from the Throne. If that were done, I think every member in this section of the House would be prepared to see the complete abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If my hon. friend will look at the order in council, he will find everything contained in it that he is complaining about.

Mr. CAMPBELL: But the provisions of the order in council are not carried out in the bill. I am not a lawyer—

Mr. GRAHAM: You ought to offer thanks for that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: —but I fail to observe any particular instructions in this bill to the Board of Railway Commissioners to equalize freight rates as between provinces. That is the whole thing so far as we are concerned.

Mr. GRAHAM: The object of this bill is to remove restrictions so that the Board of Railway Commissioners can carry out the terms of the order in council.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There were very few restrictions on the board in 1913; why did they not do it then? The Crowsnest pass rates were not effective at that time because our grain and these other commodities were carried at rates less than those specified by the Crowsnest pass agreement. The railway commission was not hampered in their work in the least degree in 1913, and yet they admitted the discrimination, and they justified it and perpetuated it.

Now, the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) interjected a remark while the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) was speaking, designed to show that there was a large deficit on the operation of the Canadian National Railways in western Canada. I would remind him that the railway commission have laid down the principle that in figuring rates the Canadian Pacific and not the Canadian National must be taken as the basis. I think every fair-minded member of this House and every fair-minded business man will admit that that is only right and proper. All the political crimes and blunders since confederation are welded together in the Canadian National Railways. Why, we have two thousand miles of duplication on the prairies, two thousand miles of railway that never should have been built. That was not the fault of the people of western Canada. That duplication is always going to involve a loss. We have three transcontinental railways that never were necessary, and a great deal of that unnecessary duplication has been shouldered on to western Canada. But in regard to the figures quoted by the hon. member for South Oxford, I would point out that in what is known as the western section, which covers everything from the head of the lakes—including I believe part of the Transcontinental—to British Columbia, if we study the figures for the Canadian Northern railway previous to its being taken over by the government, and the corresponding figures for the Canadian Pacific Railway, we shall find that their operating ratio has always been a little higher in British Columbia than in the prairie provinces. That is, they had to spend more to earn a dollar in British Columbia. The prairie lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway have always been the most cheaply operated of the whole system; their operating ratio has always been lower than that for the other parts of the system. Now, after 1917 the Canadian Pacific Railway did not keep separate figures for the prairie lines, but included those and the British Columbia lines in the same statement. Therefore any figures that may be quoted either in regard to the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific Railway in that regard are not fair to the prairies because they have to shoulder the very considerable loss or lower profit that should be chargeable to British Columbia.

Mr. MILLAR: There must be a great deal of freight that originates at Fort William. Fort William is on the boundary line between the eastern and western sections. Is freight originating at Fort William credited to the eastern or the western section?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I take it that any freight transported by rail from Fort William would be credited to the western section.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I might tell the hon. member that Fort William is in the western section, and gets the credit.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The officers representing the managements of both roads have pointed out that it is almost impossible to properly separate the earnings of the different sections, so these should not perhaps be taken as arbitrary.

I would like to quote a few figures in regard to the Canadian Pacific—I shall not burden the House with very many. We find that from 1907 to 1911 inclusive, a period of five years, the Canadian Pacific railway produced net earnings, in the eastern section, of $43,500,000, and in the same period had net earnings over all expenses in western Canada of $91,500,000, a very much larger amount; from 1912 to 1916 inclusive, another five-year period, the eastern section produced net earnings of $60,000,000, and the western section, $152,000,000; from 1916 to 1920 inclusive, the eastern section produced $70,000,000, and the western section $144,000,000 of net earnings.

Now let us take the figures that really show what the earnings of the railways are, and that is the operating ratio, or the amount that it is necessary to spend to earn a dollar. I am not going to quote extensively, but in going over these figures I find that right from the beginning of the Canadian Pacific Railway's history the operating ratio on the prairies has been very much lower than it has been in eastern Canada, and I think there is no ground whatever for the contention that the operating costs in western Canada justify higher freight rates. When the contention is made that if the reductions that would be brought about if the Crowsnest rates were allowed to stand—and in this connection the Minister of Railways has pointed out that if those rates were permitted to stand, the discrimination complained of to-day would have to be removed by the railways themselves, and I was very glad to hear him make that statement; he gave it as a reason why the government should set aside the agreement, but that is all the more reason why we in the west want to see the agreement retained, because we never had any doubts in regard to that—if the Crowsnest rates were permitted to go into effect, I maintain that our railways are operated to-day, so far as their passenger service is concerned, in a way that no business man, no manufacturer, no commercial institution in this country would tolerate. The railways are losing millions, and tens of millions, of dollars on their passenger service, and that loss on the passenger service has all to be shouldered by the freight service.

Now, what is the proper thing for us to do? To permit them to charge rates high enough to allow them to continue, and go on losing millions of dollars on the passenger service, or force them to put the passenger service on a paying basis, or as near to that as possible? I say they should be forced to put the passenger service on a paying basis or as near as possible, and in that way pass the saving on to the freight service.

5 p.m.

Now let us take the Canadian National railway. In the year 1922 the freight earnings alone of the Canadian National showed a surplus of $20,000,000.

Mr. McMASTER: Over operating expenses?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes. But the Canadian National in that same year had an operating deficit of $8,500,000 in its passenger service, and therefore, instead of turning in to the government that $20,000,000, or presenting a statement showing a surplus in the freight service of $20,000,000, the railway had to take out of that amount $8,500,000 to pay the deficit in its passenger service. In addition to that, the value of the equipment used in the passenger service is enormous. I have not the figures; I was not able to get them from the department.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not taken into account in the operating expenses.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have given simply the operating figures, not taking into consideration the overhead.

Mr. GRAHAM: The cost of the equipment would not be reflected in the figures as to operating costs. They are not considered in that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I quite understand that. But I am pointing out that in addition to the $8,500,000 loss in the passenger service in 1922, there is an enormous overhead, and great depreciation through wear and tear on the equipment. I say that we are entitled to have that loss in the passenger service done away with, and the benefit passed on to the freight service. It can be done, and should be done.

Mr. GOOD: Is the hon. member of the opinion that if that improvement were made in the passenger service, the railways could afford to give this full reduction in freight rates?

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is precisely my point. I maintain that the railways could afford to give this complete reduction if they tried to operate their passenger service on a paying basis. Is there any business man in Canada who would say that there is any justification, for instance, for eighteen passenger trains a day passing between Ottawa and Montreal? That is one of the most absurd things I have ever known.

Mr. EULER: What would the hon. member suggest as a means to eliminate that competition?

Mr. CAMPBELL: If I were dictator in charge of the situation, I would cut off about sixteen of those trains.

Mr. EULER: What would you do supposing the management of one of the roads refused to cut off their share of the trains? Would you try to compete with them? What would be your method of dealing with that situation?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would not worry about the management refusing to cut off the trains. I would put into effect reductions in freight rates that would compel them to reduce their passenger service.

Mr. EULER: A reduction in passenger rates?

Mr. CAMPBELL: In freight rates. Then they would be compelled to reduce their passenger service to meet the cut in freight rates.

Mr. GOOD: Put more pressure on the railways?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes, and the only way in which you can bring pressure upon them and force them to do it, is to reduce the freight rates. The Canadian Pacific railway, this wonderful institution whose marvellous efficiency we so often hear boasted about, is also losing an enormous sum of money on its passenger service. That is not generally known, but it is so. It has operating losses every year on its passenger service, I believe, not taking into consideration its overhead, and the wear and tear on its equipment; but it is not greatly concerned how much it loses just so long as we in this parliament permit it to charge sufficiently high tolls on the freight traffic. So long as they can meet out of their freight earnings the deficit in their passenger service, they do not need to be concerned at all. There is only one way in which we can force them to reduce the passenger service to a businesslike basis, and that is to reduce the freight rates to a proper basis, and I maintain that that can be done without the railways suffering any loss of revenue.

A few weeks ago I made a trip to Montreal. I went down there purposely to study this situation. About midway between Ottawa and Montreal—I thought it would be fair to take a point about midway between the two cities —I checked up the train and found there were 38 passengers on it, and there was accommodation on that train for 450 people! I could have gone out between the cars and almost thrown a stone over to another train of the Canadian Pacific railway going the same way, competiting for the same business, travelling to the same city. It is one of the most absurd situations imaginable, and yet it exists all over the country. Take the service between Montreal and Toronto, or take the transcontinental service. I can leave Winnipeg by two different trains leaving within fifty minutes or about an hour of each other. There is no necessity for it. There is no reason why there should not be only one transcontinental train a day. The Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National could run a train on alternate days, the Canadian Pacific leaving one day and the Canadian National the next.

Mr. GRAHAM: What answer would my hon. friend give, for taking away the service, to those people who do not live at the extreme ends of the line? In other words, if you take off the Canadian Pacific train on Thursday no person can be accommodated on that day except the man that lives in Winnipeg. All the intermediate and local points would be overlooked and they are of more importance, to my mind, than city points or just as much. That is the difficulty.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would give them precisely the same answer that the Minister of Railways is giving us to-day when we are asking for lower freight rates—it cannot be done. That is a service that is not going to pay as far as local lines are concerned. I would point out though that a gasoline car operated between here and Montreal would have carried all the passengers on the particular train on which I travelled from Montreal a few days ago; there is no necessity for operating a very expensive passenger train for that service at all.

There is one thing that has struck me very forcibly all through this debate, and that is the attitude of our friends in the east. One hon. member asked the other night why the Crowsnest pass rates should not be given to Quebec. Perhaps the hon. member in question was not aware that Quebec to-day has lower rates than the Crowsnest pass rates. But I want to point this out: it seems to be the fight of the prairie provinces, whether the freight moves east or moves west, regardless who has to pay for it. If we get any benefit in the matter of reduced rates on our products going out surely Ontario gets some benefit from its products moving to the prairie provinces. That angle of the question seems to be forgotten by hon. members from the eastern provinces. I want to point this out also: that just as soon as you raise the freight rates on flour, feed, and any of these other products coming east, you are going to raise your own cost of living; you are going to increase the price of bran, shorts, and flour to everyone desirous of using these commodities in eastern Canada. It is a problem for you gentlemen in the east just as much as it is a problem for us; and the solution of that problem would mean as much to you as it does to us. And let me say further in regard to the thirteen commodities on which the rates were reduced when moved west: That reduction made a market for your Ontario products in the western prairies which this legislation will do away with. Surely there can be no question as to that. And yet my hon. friends in Ontario do not seem to realize that it is to their interest as well as ours to maintain reduced rates on all these commodities moving between the east and the west. These consist of apples, fresh fruits, furniture, building material, agricultural implements, fence wire, dairy cattle, and some other items.

Now what about the problem of British Columbia? The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) last night enunciated what I presume is the policy of the official opposition. He pointed out that the proper and logical thing to do was to leave the Board of Railway Commissioners free and unhampered—absolutely free and unhindered by any statutory agreements or limitations—so as to give them a complete and free hand in the building up of a new freight scale. Looking at the question in an abstract way I would be inclined to agree with the hon. member, I would think that from an academic standpoint that would be a right and proper course to take; but there is a human side to this question which we cannot overlook, and while I do not feel like criticizing the personnel of the Board of Railway Commissioners, we know that in the past we have not had a square deal from the board. No one knows this better than my hon. friends from British Columbia. If there is any one province or any one part of the Dominion which is dependent upon another, it is British Columbia with regard to the prairie provinces. Those provinces are the principal market for the fruit, the lumber, the building material, and all the other products of British Columbia. But what has the freight schedule done for that market in the past? Why it has simply been used as a protective tariff; and I draw the attention of my hon. friend for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie), who asked me a question a few moments ago, to the fact that the freight rates to-day operate as a protective tariff at the Rocky Mountains to prevent British Columbia products from entering the prairie provinces, and I believe that it has been deliberately designed with that end in view. Let me quote a few of these discriminatory freight rates. Taking the regular classification I find that from Vancouver to Kamloops, a distance of 250 miles, the first class rate is $1.34.

An hon. MEMBER: On what?

Mr. CAMPBELL: On any first class commodity. From Montreal to Wylie, a distance of 253 miles, about the same mileage, the first class rate is 75½ cents; and I can go all down the scale and show you instance after instance where it looks as if the whole freight rate schedule were intended to keep the manufactured products of British Columbia out of the prairie provinces and leave those provinces as a preserve for the eastern manufacturers. In other words it does the very thing on a limited scale that the protective tariff does in a national way. From Vancouver to Marquette, a distance of 1,437 miles, the first class freight rate is $3.99. From Montreal to Marquette, a distance of 1,446 miles, the first class rate is $2.76. What a discrimination against British Columbia! And yet my hon. friends from that province think that if they give the Board of Railway Commissioners a free and unfettered hand in this matter they would get a square deal. I have more respect for their intelligence than to think that they actually believe that.

Now let us take the rates on sugar. From Vancouver to Morse, Saskatchewan, a distance of 994 miles the rate is $1.41, but from Montreal to Fort William, 996 miles, or about the same mileage, the rate is only seventy-nine cents, just a little over one-half. Now sugar is one of the principal products of British Columbia, and the prairies are its logical market. British Columbia is the source from which we should get most of our sugar, but with a freight rate of such a character we are compelled to get our sugar from the Montreal refiners whether we like it or not. So I say again that this freight schedule operates as a protective tariff, deliberately designed I believe, to keep the products of British Columbia out of the prairie provinces. I find also that from Vancouver to Brandon, a distance of 1,333 miles, the sugar rate is $1.60 a hundred. From Montreal to Rennie, Manitoba, a distance of 1,343 miles, about the same mileage, the rate is $1.11, and so on down the scale. I have a great many figures here but I do not wish to worry the House by quoting them. The same thing is true of lumber. Of course British Columbia supplies most of the lumber to-day, but some of these freight rates were established at an earlier period when lumber was being shipped from the east to the west.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is British Columbia lumber shipped at a commodity rate?

Mr. CAMPBELL: On a commodity rate, but a much higher rate is imposed on lumber shipped into the prairie provinces than on eastern lumber moved for the same distance.

Mr. GRAHAM: In Ontario the shipments are made on a commodity rate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think that lumber is shipped on a commodity rate no matter where it is going, at least from mills of any particular size. Now let me take the case of rice. Vancouver imports rice from the Orient, and I believe that city is the logical distributing point for the whole Dominion. Now, the rate on rice from Vancouver to Calgary is seventy-five cents a hundred; that from Vancouver to Montreal is also seventy-five cents a hundred. In other words that rice is carried by the railway companies from Calgary to Montreal, a distance of about 2,400 miles, absolutely free. For the benefit of whom? For the benefit of the Montreal distributor.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Vancouver distributor.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Not Vancouver, but Montreal.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I want to point out to the minister that the Montreal distributor gets his rice from Vancouver at seventy-five cents a hundred. The distributor at Vancouver should be able to supply the local demands of the prairies. That is the logical place from which to supply those demands. I think there should be no difference of opinion on that point.

Mr. GRAHAM: I was not arguing on that at all. The commodity rates are for this purpose alone; to aid the industry at the point where the commodity is shipped. The commodity rate given to Vancouver, as my hon. friend says, is a very low one, in order that Vancouver might put rice into Montreal. That is the object.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I contend that in this case the rate is given, not to Vancouver at all, but to Montreal, because it does not go through the Vancouver distributor. The Montreal importer can import it direct from the Orient and possibly, deliver it back on the prairies and take the market from the Vancouver distributor.

Mr. McMASTER: It is absurd.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Certainly it is absurd. It means that the railway companies are receiving an exorbitant rate that is almost confiscation for carrying the rice from Vancouver to Calgary, or else they are carrying it at a distinct loss from Calgary to Montreal; either one of those two conditions obtain. There can be no question about it, and just as long as you permit the railways to carry anything at a loss, you must burden something else with the loss, and that is one reason we have high rates and why those rates are being maintained. If there is one part of Canada dependent upon another, it is British Columbia which is dependent on the prairie provinces. As we prosper in the prairies, British Columbia will prosper. As our farmers get into a position to buy your fruit, your lumber, your sugar and all the other products that you are producing, in British Columbia to-day, you will prosper, and you will prosper only in so far as we prosper. There is no mistake about that, and yet I say that in the four years that I have been in this House, on almost every issue that means anything to the prairie provinces, I see the British Columbia members lined up almost to a man against us. Yet I say that the interests of British Columbia are tied up directly with the interests of the prairie provinces.

I have a great deal of sympathy with the Minister of Railways, and I think Canada is fortunate indeed to have a man like the present Minister of Railways in charge of that department. When I hear expressions of opinion of hon. members behind the minister and realize what some hon. gentlemen in his party would do with this great enterprise, then I thank heaven we have such a man at the head of that department. I wish again to make one last appeal to the government to go into the question of passenger service very thoroughly. I find after discussing this matter with business men and newspaper men in Montreal that they see the absurdity of the position; they do not want eighteen trains a day passing between Montreal and Ottawa. It is only a matter of getting together and holding a club over the heads of the railways, and that club would be the reduction of freight rates. If the minister would say to the railways, "You must reduce your freight rates, or show very good reasons why you should be dipping into the receipts from freight in order to bolster up the passenger service that is not paying," it might have a good result. The onus is on the railways to do that. I think the transcontinental passenger service can be cut down, and the use of a few gasoline cars here and there will give just as good service as the people are getting to-day.

Mr. WOODS: The hon. member stated that the province of Ontario should be deeply interested in the Crowsnest pass agreement. What would his proposition be in regard to the discrimination against various points in Ontario? The cities of Brantford and Sarnia, and various towns and places where the Crowsnest pass agreement is not in operation pay a much higher rate than is paid by other cities which come under the Crowsnest pass agreement. There is a gross discrimination against different cities and towns in Ontario. Brantford has a large binder twine manufacturing establishment, and they do not get the benefit of the Crowsnest pass agreement. Undoubtedly they ship a lot of their binder twine to the west, and I see by the reports in the papers that Hamilton—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is the hon. gentleman putting a question?

Mr. WOODS: I wanted to clear up the situation so that we might fully understand it. I understand that the city of Hamilton is going to establish a binder twine industry, and that industry when in operation will get a lower rate going west than is given to Brantford. What would the hon. gentleman do in regard to that situation?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I cannot do better than refer my hon. friend to the minister's words last night, when he pointed out distinctly—and I think everybody agreed with him—that if the present rates were maintained the railway companies would be compelled themselves to remove the discrimination. He gave that as one of the reasons for the abrogation of these rates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Despite the fact that my hon. friends to my left will say that we never change, I will take the same position in regard to railway rates that we took before; and if the absolutely obvious requires the slightest amount of corroboration, with much deference I desire to submit that the illuminating discussion we have had on freight rates proves beyond all question that parliament is not the proper body to consider the question of freight rates, on which the commercial life of this country depends. What do we know about it? What point have we in common after yesterday's discussion and to-day's discussion? What real practical thought have we got about the underlying principles on which freight rates have to be made? We have to do two things, first, to see that our railways can function and continue to function, and, secondly, that in functioning our rates shall be so arranged as to give each and every part of the country opportunity itself to function having again particular regard to the main activities of each part of the country. The solution of the freight rate burden of this country is not to be found in paper freight rates at all. We get no help in considering the freight problem by being referred to freight tariff items, some of which have been spoken of during this discussion. They are in part, rates on which little traffic moves. We are not at all helped by references to the rate on rice from Vancouver, or by my hon. friend's new and illuminating suggestion that Vancouver is given low rates to help Montreal.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I said that Montreal was given low rates, not Vancouver.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend was saying one thing and thinking another. He was speaking of a seventy-five cent rate on rice out of Vancouver.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Out of Vancouver for the benefit of Montreal. The benefit to Vancouver would come from the rates Vancouver got from the prairie provinces.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not see the reason or the pertinence of the interruption. It is exactly what I said. We have that wonderful discovery made here today that a low rate out of Vancouver is a rate for the benefit of Montreal. That is what the hon. gentleman says when it is put nakedly in so many words and one sees how absurd it is, because professedly he is talking about the necessity of lower rates from Vancouver and his idea now is that lower rates from Vancouver are in ease of Montreal and not in ease of Vancouver.

I desire, in the first instance, to discuss the genesis of freight rates. I am not going into details, because it would take me at least two days to give hon. gentlemen anything like a fair, underlying idea of all the different things that have honestly to be brought into consideration when you are going over the wide field of a freight rate structure. But I am going to refer to what any freight regulating commission should strive to do, and further, what any intelligent railway traffic executive must strive to do. Is there any doubt about this first proposition, namely, that railways live on their revenue?

Mr. McMASTER: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I get "hear, hear" from one quarter. I am glad at least to have that assent. There is no question about it. Again, is there any doubt that, unless a charitable government is ready at hand to use the money of the ratepayers as a whole for the benefit of some selected ratepayers, if those revenues are not enough to keep the railways going, they will stop just like any other commercial enterprise? Therefore, it becomes necessary that there be railway revenues. Judging from some of the conversations and arguments we have had, I am inclined to think some hon. gentlemen believe that to express a pious wish that railways should have revenues is sufficient. They need them in fact, and they need them out of traffic. While that is a consideration of first moment, it is only the secondary consideration. The real consideration of railway construction is and ought to be the providing of such a vehicle of transportation as will enable the business of the country to function properly, and all railway rates ought to be arranged, bearing that in mind. The hon. member (Mr. Campbell) says that if there is a loss on any railway rate, that is wrong, because somebody else makes it up. Theoretically, he is right. Practically he is wrong. There are certain things that have to be done in connection with public necessities and the like having regard to articles of very low value that in the public interest ought and have to be carried. I see the hon. member for Brome making a face at me.

Mr. McMASTER: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In connection with that face, I want to point out—

Mr. MARLER: That is unparliamentary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, his natural face is very pleasant, but he is looking singularly distressed. I consider, for example, the grain business of great importance to this country, and there is not one ton, but there are many tons of grain carried to-day at an absolute loss to the railways.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Some hon. gentleman says "no." I am going to give him facts. Does my hon. friend think that business should stop? I do not. I recognize the public necessity of that business.

Mr. McMASTER: Then it must be carried at somebody else's expense.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In part, yes, and I am in favour of that. The only thing that I am not in favour of is a situation where we have hon. gentlemen from the district particularly benefited telling us down in the east that our district is the place of railway deficits and theirs that of railway profits; that the figures we have produced here are nonsense. I do not know where they get their information from. I notice that these same gentlemen upstairs in the committee on Railways and Canals seem to think Sir Henry Thornton is honest and is not there to deceive them, and the figures are his as to the losses in western Canada. But I am getting a little ahead of the story.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the hon. member not admit that the figures I quoted from the Canadian Pacific are correct? I pointed out to him that it was not fair to take a conglomeration of failures like the Canadian National Railways and to build up a rate structure on that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will give my hon. friend some Canadian Pacific figures in a few minutes, but in the meantime he is talking about failures. Where do he and his party stand in connection with the National railways? Is that how he describes them? There is no greater load to be carried by the west in connection with the National railways than that which is carried in eastern Canada. We have the National Transcontinental, the whole of that barren bridge in northern Ontario, charged up to us. It is perfect nonsense that these excuses should be put up in a sectional way. We get more sectional talk about this thing, a thing in which everybody is interested, in which Ontario is prepared to pay her shot for the benefit of the west and is prepared to go on doing so, than nearly anything else. We have even a suggestion from the former Solicitor General that we should have an absolutely sectional Board of Railway Commissioners. He does not stop at that. In his opinion we should also have a sectional Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. McMURRAY: I cannot let the hon. member away with that. Did I not say that there should be further representation from the west upon the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What other is that than sectionalism? What we want is the best man, the strongest man, the fairest man and the biggest man available on any job in this country, no matter where he comes from.

Mr. McMURRAY: And the west can produce them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes. The board never had a stronger commissioner than the late Mr. Justice Killam, and I thought the very last thing the west would say was that the west could not produce them.

Mr. McMURRAY: "Can produce them."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I had it a moment ago "could". I wonder if my hon. friend is qualifying for the job.

Mr. McMURRAY: I can relieve my hon. friend of all his wonderings. He may have wandered far in many places, but he is wrong in his wandering in this instance. I am not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know whether that is a good thing or not. It might be worse. But let us get back to the genesis of railway rates. They should be rates which, in the first instance, would render it possible for the country's business to move surely and profitably and, in the second instance, rates which would enable the companies to continue to live. Let me take some of the illustrations which were given by an hon. gentleman who gave us one or two illustrations as to freight rates. You may have a high rate in one section of the country in connection with traffic that it is not very greatly interested in and a low rate in connection with traffic that it is interested in, and you may have a condition where, instead of having one low rate, you have many; or, on the other hand you may have a condition where, instead of having one high rate, you have many, and you may find that traffic is carried in the district in which there are many high rates cheaper than it is in some district with many low rates.

Mr. CRERAR: Is that justifiable? I am asking purely for information.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It entirely depends. What must be kept in view is the desire to enable business to be carried on properly. There ought to be put into force such rates as will enable districts to function and give a first consideration to the primary activities of each district, making that the chief object. If you do that, carrying it right down, you get to the point where of necessity you must charge higher rates on some things to the very great advantage of the district.

Mr. CRERAR: I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend; I think there is a great deal in his argument. But I would point out that it does not square with the theory of equalizing freight rates. I think the idea of absolutely equalizing freight rates is a hazy dream.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is largely right. When you talk about an equalization of freight rates you are faced with an ever-changing proposition, for one thing. The demands of business are not the same everywhere; they are not constant. What is necessary to move certain traffic here to-day may be necessary over there to-morrow. We may go wrong in one of two ways. In the first place, it is wrong to have equality in relation to unequal things, and it is just as wrong to have unequal treatment in dealing with equal things. The one is just as wrong and vicious as the other, and the fact is so obvious that it needs only to be stated in order to be appreciated. After all what is it that the people are interested in? They are not interested in the theoretical amount chargeable in a great long list of freight rates; what they are interested in is the actual cost of moving actual traffic. And all freight rates are reducible to one common factor everywhere, namely, the return to the company per ton mile. How much is the company getting out of it? That is the question. The amount collected from the public is the real thing in which the people are interested.

Mr. McMASTER Suppose there is a district producing a valuable mineral ore as well as a considerable quantity of wheat; would it be fair to carry the wheat out of that district at a charge below cost of carriage because, from the same district, a high enough rate could be imposed on the mineral ore to make the carriage on the whole profitable?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I can answer that frankly. In connection with all freight rates we must consider these three points: first, the question of public necessity; second, the cost of service; and, third, the amount of added value of the property to the owner by reason of transportation. My hon. friend deals now with a valuable ore. Well, that is worth nothing without transportation, whereas, transportation being provided, it is of great value to the owner. In connection with any commodity in relation to which the percentage of cost of transportation to the total value secured in the ultimate market is insignificant, I would say that the railway should charge enough to make it possible to carry that freight covering all possible charges with a profit. On a valuable ore, I should think that the freight ought to be relatively high.

Mr. McMASTER: Does not that mean in effect that the railway board should regulate freight rates in such a way as practically to tax one man's business in order to make another man's profitable? Is that just?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Practically all modern business proceeds along this line, no profits here, good profits there. Let us take the case of a departmental store; here the charges will be high, there they will be low; the profits will be up here while they will be down somewhere else.

Mr. McMASTER: But the whole shop belongs to one man or one company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perfectly true; the illustration I readily admit is not a very good one. One really needs a blackboard to illustrate these questions properly; but suppose we assume that this sheet of paper which I hold in my hand is a blackboard. Suppose we have at the top of the board "100 per cent", representing the sum of money which will enable the railway company to function properly, to pay its costs of maintenance and betterments, its taxes, its interest on bonds, and its overhead charges and fair profit. All that is represented by 100 per cent. We will assume that a line midway down this hypothetical blackboard, marked "50 per cent", represents the actual cost of operation entirely apart from all overhead charges, the cost of operation involved in the actual movement of traffic. Let us assume further that there are fifty people living in the district who by their efforts are producing enough to meet that 100 per cent; and there are five more who come in, newcomers who want to go into the business of growing wheat. Now, they cannot pay any high freight rate on that commodity and it is perfectly obvious that if their rate be below the 50 per cent line they are penalizing the people that are already there. But if instead of taking a rate below the 50 per cent line, we take from the wheat grower enough to give us 60, assuming that the proportion of tonnage of wheat is equal, it is clear that 10 per cent being added to the upper register, as it were, the general burden on the fifty people who were there first falls from 100 to 90. And that is exactly the situation which my hon. friend puts in regard to the ore and the wheat.

Mr. EULER: I am afraid I have not been able to follow entirely the illustration given by my hon. friend. However, I want to ask him a practical question, returning to what my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) brought up. In the case of the transportation of rich ore would not the cost of moving that commodity be a factor in the fixing of rates?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All questions of cost are factors.

Mr. EULER: Would it not be the greatest factor?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not at all.

Mr. EULER: And it should not?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No. The genesis of all freight rates was the old common law yard stick of what the services were worth; and that old yard stick was something that always related to the value of the commodity carried. There were two reasons for it: the value of the service was greater to the owner of the commodity as the value of his commodity increased the more, and the carrier's risk was infinitely greater.

Mr. McMASTER: It seems to me that that is perfectly logical where freight rates are the result of individual bargaining, but where they are imposed by a quasi-judicial body I cannot see the justice of calling upon the carrier to perform the service at less than the cost of carriage, simply because he can recoup himself from other shippers by charging them more than the cost of carriage.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is missing the point. There are two costs of carriage which I am trying to give. There is the cost of carriage proper, which means what proportion that service would represent having regard to the total load—

Mr. McMASTER: The total load should be distributed over all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend will follow me and surely see that he is wrong. That is, if we are going to look after the products that are not so costly as others, we must look after them at lower rates, they cannot afford to pay the general rate, and it does not take five cents from the shippers of the more expensive products, because of these cheaper products would not move at all unless they got a low rate, and because if they earn up to that fifty per cent line of actual cost and get even into the sixty per cent line, as I have pointed out, it is really in ease of the general proposition. I think my hon. friend must see that.

Mr. McMASTER: I can follow perfectly the argument that my learned and hon. friend is making, but it does not square with my sense of justice or fairness. It seems to me of doubtful public utility for society in general to move things which cannot bear the cost of being moved.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, Mr. Chairman, every country in the world recognizes the principle that I have been talking about, whether they have rate-regulating commissions or not. That is the reason we have ten classes of freight and commodity rates without end. If these concessions were not made by the railways in ease of business, we would not have business moving in essential lines; that is simply all there is to it. Of course, that goes right down to the foundation of everything. My hon. friend is correct, this House can make freight rates, it can say that any commodity is going to cost just so much per ton per mile. But he would find himself supporting an absolute impossibility, for his proposal never could be worked out; in a word, he would be attempting to treat similarly things that are not equal. It would involve his treating the movement of a ton of gold—to give an extreme case—in the same way as a ton of grain. It does seem to me that the mere statement of the logical outcome of his proposal will at once induce my hon. friend not to persist in it. Of course, if he is right in thinking that anyone can make freight rates, the business of the country would be absolutely destroyed. Now, when we come to look after freight rates, our first honest endeavour ought to be, as I have said, to make sure that the business of each province shall move. The freight increases have worked against the full realization of that endeavour. But our great effort still ought to be the encouragement of interprovincial trade. Unfortunately to-day we have some rates so high that we are not doing the volume of interprovincial trade that we ought to be doing. I am not going to restate the position we laid down in 1922 beyond remarking that the underlying principles are the same now as they were then. The west, we will say, is interested mainly in grain and flour; British Columbia is chiefly interested in fish and lumber; and in Ontario and Quebec we have a greater diversity of commodities without as much volume in any particular one. Now, some hon. gentlemen have said that they do not like the figures of the government lines. Well, I am going to give them some figures of the Canadian Pacific lines. An hon. gentleman said that there was something wrong in 1913 in connection with the western rates judgment, and I am about to give the Canadian Pacific figures with respect to the only real, honest yardstick by which this question can be measured, namely, the earnings per ton per mile. In 1917 the return on Canadian Pacific eastern lines was .69 cents and on western lines .70 cents per ton per mile. I just take that one year for the purpose of showing how, notwithstanding all the examples that can be cited of paper traffic, traffic that never moves in any volume at all, traffic that no one is interested in—notwithstanding all those absurd illustrations, how close the board came in the adjustments made in the western rates case judgment. If anybody can show a closer approximation of rates in realities, I should like to see it. Those are the exact figures which resulted from the tariffs that were then fixed.

Mr. GOOD: Is there any discrepancy between that statement and the fact referred to by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell), that the Canadian Pacific net earnings in western territory were nearly double their earnings in eastern territory?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think there is any, because if I remember right, at that time the mileage in the west was just about twice that in the east. If you have twice the investment there, if you have two horses at work in one place as against a single horse in the other, you may expect better results.

Mr. FORKE: You may have twice the mileage and not twice the investment.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will not the hon. member admit that the operating ratio was very much less in the west?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am trying to get at what is the exact truth, but hon. gentlemen may not like it.

Mr. FORKE: We love the truth.

Mr. McMASTER: We are all sitting, as it were, at the feet of Gamaliel.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid it is an indifferent audience in some places. I said the return on eastern lines was .69 cents and on western lines .70 cents, or a difference of only one one-hundredth of a cent in the actual per ton mile returns.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the hon. member tell us if the western lines include those in British Columbia?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is a difference there because the British Columbia operating costs are higher.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend from Mackenzie is again betraying his absolute ignorance of the subject. Why, to put in British Columbia, granting what he calls its tremendous high rates, should make that return far higher, but even with British Columbia in it is only .70 cents. He is simply killing his case when he gets that admission.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Not at all. I was pointing out that the operating ratio has always been higher in British Columbia, and that when British Columbia was included with the prairie provinces it naturally raised the operating ratio for the whole four provinces.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend apparently is incapable of understanding the English language. I am not talking about operating ratio, I am talking about per ton per mile returns. Operating ratio has obsolutely nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. McMASTER: That is, gross returns.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly. Those are the returns per ton per mile, and the inclusion of the territory which the hon. member for Mackenzie refers to as "this awfully high territory"—British Columbia—in that should make just that much higher figure if those things were out of line.

Mr. MILLAR: In the comparison the hon. member is making now are passenger receipts included?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So far, Mr. Chairman, we are not moving passengers on a per ton per mile basis! This is freight. We may get down to that basis, but I hope not.

Mr. MILLAR: You are making a comparison of earnings.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no. I want hon. gentlemen to try and get this clear, because, after all, we are trying to understand freight rates. I am not talking about earnings, but about gross receipts. I am talking about all the money that is taken from different sections of the country, and I am showing that in connection with your per ton per mile receipts, which is the only practical yardstick on this question, the Canadian Pacific Railway in the year 1917 took for the carriage of freight in eastern territory, .69 cents, and for the carriage of freight in western territory .70 cents,—the difference is the alarming one of one-hundredth of one cent per ton per mile.

Mr. FORKE: Does the hon. member say that the earnings per ton per mile is the only gauge by which to judge?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no, but let us take one thing at a time. I am answering some of the arguments that have been made —but no arguments have been made yet having anything to do with freight rates whatever. What I am doing now is showing the difficulty we have in attempting to consider freight rates here. That is all I am trying to do, and I am having a great deal of difficulty at the very start.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, when we arose at six o'clock I had been dealing with the railway rates per ton per mile, and I had also referred to the argument made by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) in connection with the tariffs. Now, I want to say, in fairness to that hon. gentleman, that his argument is just as true, just as cogent and just as reasonable as any argument advanced by the late Solicitor General (Mr. McMurray). I am not going to take up the time of the House in going over those arguments, which were based not upon exact figures or facts, but I am going to take the concrete case given by the hon. member for Mackenzie in connection with the rate of seventy-five cents on rice, which rate he said was hurting Vancouver and enabling Montreal to get this commodity in cheaply and distribute it in quantities in territories where Vancouver ought to have the right of distribution. I say in fairness to him that he is absolutely honest in what he says but absolutely mistaken and absolutely wrong. But he is no more mistaken and no more wrong than—

Mr. McMASTER: Did he not say Calgary?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no, Vancouver. The rate of seventy-five cents from Vancouver to Montreal—

Mr. McMASTER: And the same rate to Calgary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:—and the same rate to Calgary. I have taken the trouble to look up the records. This is a case I happen to know something about. In the first instance rice only came into Canada from two sources. Originally it came from the Orient altogether, and the distributing points for the Canadian rice markets were Vancouver in the west, on the one hand, and New Orleans in the south on the other hand. Vancouver desired to be able to go into the rice business in competition with New Orleans. But New Orleans is much nearer the eastern territory than Vancouver. The Canadian Pacific put that rate in. It put in a specially low commodity rate to enable Vancouver to distribute rice to Canadian territory in competition with New Orleans. No one could quarrel with that motive. It was a good thing for Vancouver, it was also a good thing for the country. It gave the country the possibility of having competition in rice, instead of leaving the whole of the eastern part of Canada entirely at the mercy of the distributors in New Orleans. I do not think that any hon. gentleman would seriously complain of that. Now then, how does it work out? The hon. member for Mackenzie says that is something which hurts Vancouver and is there to help Montreal. Well now, it is extraordinary that the Montreal people—

Mr. GOOD: Is not my hon. friend wrong in stating that the hon. member for Mackenzie says it hurts Vancouver? I do not recall that statement at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh yes.

Mr. McMASTER: My recollection is that he also said it hurt Calgary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, he said it hurt Vancouver by enabling rice to be put cheaply into Montreal, and enabling Montreal to send that rice back into territory it otherwise could not reach. There is no question as to what was said. But the Montreal people did not take that view. Montreal got started in the rice business, and desired to get a rate so as to be able to distribute rice upon a proportionate basis, and the Mount Royal Milling and Manufacturing Company, which is the Montreal company, after complaining about this rate for years, made formal application to the Board of Railway Commissioners. They complained as to this special commodity blanket rate of seventy-five cents per hundred pounds, applicable as it is on cleaned rice in car load lots, from Vancouver to practically all points of importance in the prairie provinces and Ontario and Quebec, that it was effective right through the whole of their own local territory, and they asked that the discrimination be removed. And what was the discrimination? Their rate from Montreal to Vancouver was $2.42 as against a rate from Vancouver to Montreal of seventy-five cents. Their rate from Montreal to Calgary was $2, as against a rate from Vancouver to Calgary of seventy-five cents. Their rate to Edmonton was also $2, as against the blanket rate of seventy-five cents. Their rate to Regina was $1.55 as against the seventy-five cent rate. the rate to Saskatoon $1.68; the rate to Brandon $1.23, and the rate to Winnipeg $1.14 from Montreal, as against seventy-five cents from Vancouver. Well, as I say, the hon. gentleman's argument that this rate was a hardship to Vancouver is no worse than other arguments we have heard in connection with this rate situation.

I am not going to waste any more time chasing phantoms in connection with the different points raised in argument by hon. members in regard to this freight business, but I am going back to the question which is the real governing question, which shows just exactly how much money is taken out of a district by a railway, namely the rate per ton per mile. I submit, Mr. Chairman, what I know to be the fact, and it is a result that I am frank to say I take a great deal of pride in; that the work of equalization, not that equalization which aims at making unequal things equal, which is an impossibility, not insuring equal treatment to unequal things, and thereby bringing about direct discrimination in fact, although not on paper; but an equalization which fixes the whole run of the traffic in such a way as to bring about practically the same result in this field of immense diversity and diversion. It is a tremendous task to perform. It is a task that takes years, and I do not for one minute say that it ever can be actually accomplished. Make your loadings and make your rates on the business of this year or that year, and you will be wrong, because with the very best intentions, following the matter up just as closely as it is humanly possible to do, hon. members will find that the percentages of this loading and that loading change from time to time, and inevitably you get differences in your results. You must get them indeed, unless we are going to treat grain just exactly the same way as you treat gold or anything else. But there the happy chance lies. Let us put it that way, that the happy chance made it in that year 1917 so that there was such absolute equality, not in rate tables, which mean nothing, but in the actual amount of money taken out of the people in the different parts of the country per ton per mile, that there is a difference only of one hundredth part of a cent, and I say it is the closest result, so far as I know, that has ever been obtained.

Rates are delicate things and they can do a great deal towards making or breaking the country. I am going to illustrate what I mean by that. Hon. members will pardon me if I have to refer to myself, because I am speaking of my own knowledge, my own action and judgment, but when I went on the railway board in 1912 there was no Drumheller coal in Winnipeg. The American coal had the market. It was actually carried as far west as Saskatoon. As a result of no hit-or-miss jumping at conclusions but as a result of a long, tedious investigation into the question of coal rates, including cost and the like, in the judgment of 1914 the whole basis was changed, and in consequence of that change it was but a short time before not only was there no American coal in Saskatoon, Regina, Moose Jaw and other like places, but the Canadian coal was absolutely controlling the markets there and selling largely in Winnipeg. You cannot get these results by acts of parliament. You can only get them by honest, long, painstaking efforts and endeavour. After 1917 we had different increases. You cannot preserve a proper equality of return when you are in the business of percentage increase. The need was great. Time was important. Grain returns were high and there was no hardship at all. With these increases the parity which I referred hon. gentlemen to, and which was so marked in 1917, disappeared. I am going to show how it reappears, where it is and how it has become greater than ever it was before and where that disparity now is. The earnings per ton mile became:

	Eastern lines	Western lines
1918..	.79	.90½
1919..	.95	1.04

Hon. gentlemen will see at that time that the western lines were paying more than the eastern lines, the difference between .95 and 1.04.

	Eastern lines	Western lines
1920..	1.05	1.03

That is the first year after the war, when western rates were lower than eastern rates. I want hon. gentlemen to remember that these are of course gross figures and have nothing to do with the operating ratio. It is just to show how much the operations, in the composite results, were taking out of the people. That is the point.

	Eastern lines	Western lines
1921..	1.23	1.00

There is a difference against the eastern lines there of almost 25 per cent.

	Eastern lines	Western lines
1922..	1.13	.91
1923..	1.11	.82
1924..	1.173	.87

I just pause there for one moment to point out to hon. gentlemen how without any changes in the rate structure upward, but as a result of changes in the actual traffic moving —because in the two last years I mentioned the changes if any were down and not up—as a result of a larger percentage of freight that was carrying the higher rate, the rate goes up—

Mr. McTAGGART: Does this figure include all classes of freight, packet freight and all?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the whole freight business.

Mr. KELLNER: Did the territory known as the eastern division change in regard to the boundaries at all?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No. There is no change in this at all. I am giving the Canadian Pacific figures because the others were challenged. I was stopping to point out how the charge against the public under the same tariffs, that is, the mile run per ton, had advanced, having no reference whatever to raised tariffs, but simply to the change in the traffic. Another point that I want to make clear to my hon. friends is this, and it is a point which we all should know about. If you have a low operating ratio, traffic which moves in great volume even at a low fixed rate may be very remunerative. Hon. members must realize that at one time, in my opinion, the grain traffic was the most remunerative traffic in this country. That, I know, is a conclusion that many railway men do not agree with, but I do not agree with them.

Mr. HOEY: In what years would that be?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Before costs went up when we had a low operating ratio. Before the rate increases came up, we had in western Canada, a splendid operating ratio, one of the best operating ratios in the world. If you have a low operating ratio, so long as you are always below your low rate, and you have great density of traffic, you have great profits. We had tremendous density of traffic in the grain business. I have been making a little calculation based on a theoretical rate in order to give hon. members some idea of what I mean. For example, supposing you take a low rate structure; supposing you take an average ton-mile rate—and this is not out of the way as compared with what we used to have—of 55, and supposing you have a grain rate such as we have now of .52, that does not appear to be a tremendous difference; but if you were going to move seven billion ton miles if sixty per cent of that business was grain and you made a fair distribution of costs and if you had an operating ratio as high as 70—and the Canadian Pacific used to have in western territory an operating ratio as low as 62—you would have an operating profit of $5,400,000 on this grain traffic even at that low rate. You have your tremendous density and a movement which of itself is comparatively cheap. There is practically no yardage in connection with grain. The railway company is as a rule, at no expense either to load or unload the cars, and although the rate looks small, there was good money in it. Hon. gentlemen, however, must realize that when you are dealing with a business tremendous in its volume, where profits are made in the decimals of cents that I gave to the committee, if that decimal is wrong only a little way, the losses are correspondingly great. One thing that makes anyone who really wants to see business properly carried on in this country feel sad and depressed is the way in which hon. gentlemen here will not look facts in the face and will make statements which, although they may believe in them, are absolutely misleading and which they have only to turn to their own records to know are absolutely misleading. A difference of a few decimal points has worked a tremendous change in our railway situation. While before the grain business was profitable, to-day it is not.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Why is it that in the grain moving season the monthly net profits jump so tremendously?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend will find, as regards the months when the net profits rise, there is really no such thing as a monthly net profit. There are approximations which are put in from time to time, but you do not know what your profits are until the end of the accounting year. He will also find in connection with those self same months there is a movement of high class freight. I am not going into speculation; I want to give the facts, but I want the committee to understand first the reasons for those facts. I want hon. gentlemen to understand this: I have taken the position always consistently that I believe these grain rates and flour rates should be very low. I believe in looking after them; I believe in seeing that the west can properly function; but I believe in everybody knowing what we are doing. I believe in the truth, in looking the truth in the face, and in justifying a rate which will enable the west properly to function. I do not believe we shall ever get a unified country if hon. gentlemen from the west persist in making the claim that they are supporting the railways of Canada. I was pointing out that the difference of a very few decimal points makes a tremendous difference in connection with the results. I have supporting statements for that view.

Mr. CRERAR: Do I understand my hon. friend is arguing that the present grain rates are not profitable to the railways?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I certainly do.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: An hon. gentleman says, "oh, oh". We all like to say "oh, oh", but that does not produce results nor does it produce dividends or anything that enables the country to function. Let me tell hon. gentlemen something else. Although grain rates in western states are much higher than they are in Canada, the states which are supported by the grain movement, the states in which the railways function as a result of the grain movement, have to-day an application before the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are asking for rates, not only higher than our present rates, but far higher than the rates they now have, and they say that unless they get those increases, they will go out of business.

Mr. SHAW: To what states does the hon. member refer?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The states immediately to the south, the Dakotas, and Montana.

Mr. GRAHAM: Sixty-six companies.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The applications are all filed with evidence in support of them. There is the position of the earnings of these companies.

Mr. HOEY: Those railways do not move the volume of freight that our railways do. The minister says there are sixty-six companies.

Mr. GRAHAM: Sixty-six companies asking for an increase.

Mr. WARNER: Does the hon. member know why in Montana the railways are likely to go out of business or become bankrupt?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, and I am going to tell my hon. friend. The trouble is that as a result of the opening of the Panama canal, they are in danger of losing their high class freight which previously they carried east and west. They are put into the position of having to support themselves very largely, not by high class freight, but by grain and flour, and they find it is impossible to do so. Hon. gentlemen need not think the United States do not produce a great deal of wheat. They do.

Mr. SHAW: Would it be fair to compare the rates from Montana to the Great Lakes with the rates from Alberta to the head of the lakes?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not reached that point yet. If my hon. friend is serious and will look into this question he will see that what I say is correct.

Mr. SHAW: I am very serious.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think the hon. member is, having listened to something he said last night. The truth is that if the grain crop of 1923 had moved, over the mileage it did, at American rates, the western grain growers and millers would have had to pay in round figures $34,000,000 more than they actually paid. My hon. friend may say that the longer haul is in the Canadian territory, and that is absolutely correct. There is no doubt that the longer haul being on the Canadian side there would be a gradual tapering in the rate on the mileage scale; but the difference would not have been so vast, and that $34,000,000 would not have been reduced to any enormous extent.

Mr. WARNER: Does the hon. member know that a large percentage—in my judgment about half—of the farmers who were in Montana supporting that railway had paid these high freight rates for so long a time that it put them out of business and compelled them to leave their farms? I travelled through that country and saw many vacant farms which I considered should be producing; but they were not producing anything. And that is what will happen in our own country if the rates are too high.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think anyone will suggest that the Great Northern was very short-sighted in its policy, and I am sure their judgment would suggest still higher rates. Be that as it may, that is the situation.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Did the Great Northern get any such assistance as was given the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think it did. There were railways on the American side that did receive great assistance but I do not think the Great Northern did. The earlier American roads got land grants but this policy was soon stopped, and rightly so. But let us remember that every single cent of the Great Northern is shown there, while in connection with the Canadian Pacific, which is supposed to earn seven per cent on its investment in railways, so much of the favours which they got has been converted into property against which there is no charge that the earnings amount only to about 4.4 or 4.3.

I want to give to the committee the exact results of calculations made not by myself but by the statistical bureau of the Canadian National Railways. In these analyses no reference whatever is made to the operations of the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific railway, so that the results are as far as possible free from any American rate influence. The grain operating ratio for 1923 was 126.14 per cent, resulting in an operating loss of $6,088,499. In 1924 the grain operating ratio was 126.96, the operating loss being $5,812,016. Freight traffic other than grain produced on the other hand in 1923 net earnings amounting to $8,276,195 and in 1924, $10,432,831. Anyone who will take the trouble to go over the figures will be convinced that the statements that are made to the effect that the west is carrying the east are untrue. In 1923, in the western territory, excluding the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific railway, the railway operating revenues amounted to $66,000,000 odd and the expenses to $70,000,000 odd, leaving a net deficit in that year of $2,105,741. Can there be any honest dispute about this, unless on the part of some excited person on the hustings? Analyse these figures and you will get the revenue from passenger and allied services. Now, the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) was perfectly right when he said that passenger service does not pay. I have been saying the same thing day in and day out throughout this parliament when the question was up, and that is one of the reasons why we are absolutely insane in connection with our purchases of rolling stock. It is for instance absolutely ludicrous to buy $44,000,000 worth of rolling stock comprising in large part passenger locomotives and expensive coaches, and that in two years alone.

Mr. McMASTER: Is not the real reason to be found in the fact that trains are run half empty?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. gentleman may try to palliate it as much as he likes, but the fact is that passenger business even in thickly populated centres does not pay, and the United States management regard the thickly populated peopled suburban areas near large centres as the only places where they can make money out of the passenger traffic. There is no mystery about it; every railway man knows that this is the case. And my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) is also partly right. We can reduce the loss in part by running fewer trains and by putting a stop to the expenditure of some $1,200,000 for the purpose of advertising passenger trains. We could get rid of some of that loss if we stopped radio and a few more frills. But still there would be a loss. Each year there has been a substantial deficit on passenger business. Bringing in all these things, we have that deficit as I have stated. In 1924 we had a deficit of $1,240,353 on these lines. Now, hon. gentlemen to my left—so far the ex-Solicitor General (Mr. McMurray) is the only supporter of the government who has joined them—were well represented on the committee that investigated the Canadian National Railway accounts, and every member of the Progressive party on that committee has gone through those accounts, but I have never heard any suggestion from them that the accounts were falsified; if they were, it was their business to show it. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Stewart) has put in a lot of work on these accounts, and he understands them. He has found nothing wrong with them. If we want to be honest with ourselves, we will stop this idle talk that the west is carrying the east, when everyone knows that the fact is absolutely the opposite. We have had large earnings in eastern Canada, as against losses in western Canada and in the Maritimes.

Now, some hon. gentlemen say, "You cannot raise rates in eastern Canada on account of water competition." I just wonder how many of those who indulge in that talk really think there is anything in it except so much nonsense. Has not the cost of water operation gone up? Does not everybody know it? Cannot raise the rates in eastern Canada! Why, the rates on pretty nearly every bit of farm produce grown in eastern Canada were raised from 80 to 83 per cent, and they are still up. Hon. gentlemen from farm constituencies in Ontario and Quebec know the state of their rate situation. The ex-Solicitor General actually says, "You cannot raise rates at all in central Canada because of water competition." Well, I should like him for once to look at a tariff, to take a real interest in this situation, and to go and tell the farmers of Ontario and Quebec that their rates cannot be raised because of water competition. The truth is that the rates of the farmers of central Canada on butter, cheese, eggs—the very things that they are interested in—were raised as high as 83 per cent, and only a thin shaving has been taken off. They are still at that high level, and we might as well tell the truth about it.

Mr. CRERAR: How do those rates at present compare with the rates for similar distances in western Canada?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should just like to give my hon. friend this very good answer to his question: their rate per ton mile table from Ontario and Quebec is 1.73 cents.

Mr. CRERAR: That is on all traffic.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, I am dealing with all traffic. It is the only way I can deal with this question.

Mr. CRERAR: No, I asked my hon. friend a question which he is very skilfully evading, but which I do not propose he shall evade. He made the statement that the rates on dairy products in eastern Canada had been raised 83 per cent. I asked him how those rates compare to-day with rates for the same mileage in western Canada, and he quotes me a figure embracing the whole general freight situation. That is not an answer to my question. I should like my hon. friend to answer it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am quite frank in saying I have not that table in front of me. If my hon. friend will take the trouble to look at the facts, he will find that all the increases in eastern and western Canada, as given by the Board of Railway Commissioners in answer to a question put to them by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster),—I am speaking from recollection, but I think I am practically right—were 40 per cent odd in western Canada as against 70 per cent odd in eastern Canada.

Mr. CRERAR: Is it not true that they simply removed to that extent the differences or discriminations that existed prior to those changes?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, there were no differences and there were no discriminations in the large volume of business done, in the toll taken on the real activities that the west wanted. On the other hand, for every single mile that a car is hauled—and that is the service they get, there is no sidestepping in saying that, it is the fact—for every mile that a car is hauled western Canada pays 87 cents while eastern Canada pays 1.17 per ton of freight. There is where the burden is. If it is not so, how does my hon. friend account for the large surpluses in the one territory and the deficits in the other? Do surpluses mean nothing to him on the one hand and deficits on the other?

Mr. CRERAR: Other factors enter into the calculation that entirely upset my hon. friend's argument.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is not doing himself justice.

Mr. CRERAR: Oh, yes he is.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Unless he is desirous of going back to a rate situation which has changed absolutely as the result of the change in operating ratios, he is doing himself very scant justice. What is there in it except on the one hand receipts and on the other operating ratios? The operating ratio in the west is lower than it is here; it always has been, and I hope always will be; but the operating ratio, lower as it is in western Canada, still produces a surplus in eastern Canada and a deficit in western Canada. There is nothing else for my hon.

friend to consider except receipts and operating ratios, unless he wants to pretend that there is any discrimination in the rate charged to a farmer reaching a market, for example, in Toronto, as against the rate charged to a farmer reaching a market in Vancouver—a condition of affairs where they cannot in the slightest degree come in competition one with the other.

Mr. HOEY: Will the hon. member contend that water rates have no bearing on freight rates in eastern Canada?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly not, Mr. Chairman. I do not contend so for one minute. My hon. friend is perfectly right. The ludicrousness of this whole situation is the statement made by more than one hon. gentleman to the effect that water rates do not go up. Why, they have gone up tremendously, as everybody knows.

Mr. HOEY: Then rail rates could not remain high if water rates came down; is that the position?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No; but as it is to-day there is the situation. The whole fallacy is in the idea that you cannot raise rail rates because water rates are always the same; they are not. Look at what we have here in the ocean rates committee, look at what happens on the Great Lakes.

Mr. GOOD: Did anyone contend that water rates had not gone up?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had this argument made at the time, against the fact of our increases everywhere in eastern Canada, that the freight rates could not be raised in eastern Canada because of water competition. We had that argument made by the ex-Solicitor General.

Mr. McMURRAY: Does the hon. member think he is quoting the ex-Solicitor General fairly? Was not this the argument I made: that water rates are always lower than railway rates, and there must come a time when the water rates in eastern Canada will be lower than the rates in western Canada; that is, naturally there will be an advantage in rates in favour of eastern Canada? That was my argument.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend may have understood it, but he did not say it.

Mr. McMURRAY: I said it, but perhaps you did not understand it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Have it any way you like. But the absurdity of the whole thing is just as I said before, that rates could not be raised in eastern Canada, and they had to be raised in western Canada to make up for deficits in eastern Canada my hon. friend was talking of to-day.

Mr. McMURRAY: No, ultimately.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend can have it any way he likes. We are confronted with a real situation here, not with any theory. We are paying these rates in Ontario and Quebec, and we are paying those deficits to the extent that we have a surplus.

Mr. GOULD: Nobody has paid them yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, $17,000,000 is not so bad to take out of the centre for the purpose of distribution to the extremes.

As I said before, I perfectly recognize the national necessity of low rates on grain and flour. We ought to have them; I have always taken that position. But I also appreciate the national necessity of something like a fair understanding of the situation and of what is being done. I do not know that I should take up any more time in connection with rates as rates.

Mr. WARNER: Where merchandise is shipped from the east to the west, and the freight is charged up in the price of the merchandise, who pays that freight?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have always found that when I got anything I was compelled to pay the freight, no matter where the goods came from. If my hon. friend can get his goods in any other way, he is lucky. I have always had to pay for them, whether it is freight or anything else.

Mr. WARNER: How can the east claim to pay the freight when it is charged up in the price of commodities sold in the west?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I fail to follow my hon. friend's question. I fail to get the sense of it. I want to be fair to him, and to be as polite as possible to him. I wish he would give me the point; I would like to deal with it.

Mr. WARNER: If you were out there and paid the price for the goods, you would get the point.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am beginning to get the drift of my hon. friend's question. Now let us see what there is in it. How many gentlemen in this House think that all the freight from Ontario goes west? I wonder if any of them know how small a proportion of it does go west, and how large a proportion of it goes right into the towns and cities and villages of Ontario? That is where the bulk of it goes. I wonder if hon. gentlemen are really serious in thinking, for example, that the west is paying the burden of the rate on Ontario butter. The only way they can do it is by eating the butter and paying the bill. There is nothing in that suggestion. It is perfectly true that if the west was the only customer Ontario and Quebec had, the west would then be paying its proportion of those rates; there is no question about that at all. But we all know that that is not the fact, and it is idle to talk of it. If it were the case, why is the west kicking about lower rates in the east? The lower they are, the better for the west in that case, because the west would not have to pay so much for the goods they get from the east. If there is anything in that suggestion, my hon. friends from the west should be cheering for lower rates in the east.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend agree that the farmer in the west pays the freight on machinery and binder twine, for example?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Absolutely. My hon. friend is perfectly right. The farmer pays for what he gets just the same as the city man does. It does not matter what province he is in, on anything he buys he always has to pay the freight; and if he is selling, in some circumstances, his price is also affected by the freight in the same way.

Mr. WARNER: He also pays the freight on the products that are sent east, and with which he buys his commodities in the east.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that I would put it in quite that way, because that is not quite the right way of putting it, but we will not get into refinements; we did not have much luck the last time. I think we had better get on.

I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I cannot compliment my hon. friend the Minister of Railways upon his production. I still think, as I started out, that the right solution is to be found in the amendment read by my hon. friend the leader of the Progressive party, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke), the resolution which we proposed from this corner of the House. What is more, I think most gentlemen in this House if they were to give voice to their honest convictions, think exactly the same thing. But be that as it may, there is one thing that is absolutely clear, and that is that the present situation is an intolerable situation. Why, we have had turmoil, more or less, in freight matters ever since 1922. We have had confusion worse confounded because this government have put off and put off taking any stand whatever in connection with this matter until the absurdity of it all has got to be such that the absolute burden of it and the dislocation of business is such that something has to be done, and we have this bill brought down in the dying days of the session. I do not think we are doing the right thing. Personally I think the whole matter should be sent to the railway board for consideration. I quite despair of ever having proper consideration given in any debating association such as parliament to such a business matter as freight rates, and I am quite sure hon. gentlemen in their hearts agree with me. It would have been very much better to send the whole question to the railway board; I would like to see the whole question sent to the railway board, I am going to be absolutely sincere with my hon. friend when I say that, my point is, my point always was on the railway board, that it is a matter of national necessity to have a particularly low rate on grain and flour in the west. It is an absolute national necessity: Owing to the distance from market, owing to the long rail haul, it is absolutely necessary that we should have that, but it is also necessary that the whole question should be looked fairly in the face, and that we should know what we are doing. There is no good in fooling ourselves. But failing to have this matter sent properly to the board, why, let us end the present jumble as much as possible; let us end the present unfairness here, there, and everywhere, practically throughout the country.

I would like to point out just one thing to my hon. friends from the west. We in the east have also advantages under this Crowsnest agreement. The town I come from has special advantages under that agreement. We are in a position to under-sell other towns. It is a matter of importance to us, a matter of just as great importance to people doing business there as a favourable freight rate is to anybody else. They have a long haul to look after, and they are in immediate touch with American competition besides their own local competition. But Toronto does not believe in an unfair, discriminatory rate, although she gains by it. Hon. gentlemen may think what they like, but Toronto does not want discrimination in rates. But we have got it. As a result of the judgment of the Supreme court we have got it right up to the hilt, and we are directly helped by it. But we are not looking for any quid pro quo, we think more of national equity and justice in connection with this question. Therefore, we think this bill is better than nothing. Failing the absolute repeal of the act, and as apparently this is all we can get, at least we can say for it that it is better than the existing situation.

9 p.m.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Public Works): The bill before the House has been under discussion since yesterday, and in introducing it the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) outlined the extent to which it will go. It is proposed by this legislation that the restrictions imposed under the Crowsnest pass agreement of 1897 shall be entirely eliminated, except in the case of grain and flour moving east to Fort William in the territory that was previously considered Crowsnest pass territory. My hon. friend, the member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), who has had great experience and possesses a great knowledge of this matter by reason of his having been formerly chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada, has just indicated to the House that the government have probably not gone as far as they should, but still has suggested that it is good business that special consideration should be given to the rates on grain and flour, commodities produced in the western provinces. In fact he has gone further and said that this would be the practice of the railway board and the railways themselves, and I think in that respect he is correct. I think it has been the policy of the railway commission and the railway companies to give special consideration to these commodities which have so much to do with the prosperity of our friends in western Canada and the prosperity of the province of British Columbia. Now, this matter is one of national importance and it is before this House which represents, or should represent national ideas. It is here that, we should settle what is best in the interests of Canada, and not what is best in the interests merely of one particular section or the other. We should review the whole situation—and the railway situation is a very large and important one—and endeavour to come to a right decision from a national standpoint. We should decide what is best to do for the Canadian people as a whole, not what is best to do for the people of Alberta, or Saskatchewan, or British Columbia, or the Maritimes. Have the government presented a fair proposition in connection with this matter? I think they have. I think it is generally conceded that the Crowsnest agreement entered into in 1897 could not in fairness to the railways or to other parts of the country, be continued in full effect. That must be conceded by all hon. members. As my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) said yesterday, the economic conditions resulting from the war preclude such a course. Therefore at this time it is necessary for us to consider what is best to be done in the interests of Canada.

There are some who say that we should wipe out all restrictions and leave the whole matter to be dealt with by the Board of Railway Commissioners. That would have been a fairly comfortable and easy way out of the situation for the government, and I have little doubt if they had brought down such a policy it would have received the endorsement of the House. However, the government has considered that in the great interior of Canada we have problems that are of interest to the eastern and western portions of the Dominion as well as to the territory directly affected. Consequently special rates have been retained on grain and flour which will be the maximum within the Crowsnest pass territory. The Minister of Railways, when explaining the bill yesterday, said that of necessity these rates should be made applicable not only to lines that were constructed in 1897 but to all lines that are in existence in that area. If the problem is there and has to be met there should be such an extension. We people in British Columbia have some knowledge of the Crowsnest pass agreement. We were told yesterday that the parliament of Canada had voted a subsidy of some $3,000,000 odd for the construction of this road, but that in lieu of that subsidy the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had secured this agreement. But it should not be forgotten that the province of British Columbia was the largest contributor to the construction of this railway. The road was built under what was known as the British Columbia Southern charter, a provincial charter, which gave a very large land grant within the province of British Columbia to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to construct the road. The $3,000,000 that was voted by parliament, a subsidy at the rate of $11,000 a mile was not the primary consideration. However, we in British Columbia have derived benefits from the construction of the line. It opened up a very rich portion of that province, an area rich in timber, minerals, coal and other resources, and the development of that territory brought prosperity to our province. In fact the construction of the line induced a period of great growth and activity in the Kootenay country, and did much to recoup the treasury of the province for the obligations which it had undertaken. We have undoubtedly received benefits from that railway construction but it should not be lost sight of that British Columbia was a large contributor in the first place. When the Crowsnest pass agreement was entered into British Columbia was not an exporting province; it was pretty much self contained. It was only after the construction of this railway, that the northwestern provinces and British Columbia felt the life blood stirring in their veins and began to grow and become important provinces in this Dominion. Whether or not the policy of the government of that day was the stimulant that brought about the large immigration into and settlement of the northwest, I am not prepared to say, but I think we can fairly claim that it was a very important contributing factor. Certainly in British Columbia we have enjoyed, to some extent, that settlement and development. Such being the case we are deeply interested in the further development of the central portion of Canada. Personally, from my own experience and knowledge, I believe that we are more deeply interested even than we were in those early days. The opportunities are there, and it should be the policy of this government or of governments that may follow to try and bring about a proper settlement of that great interior portion of Canada. My hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) made a rather startling statement when he said that there was a group over there who were prepared to cut out entirely any concession given by the Crowsnest pass agreement. If that is so, I wonder if my hon. friend really represents the true thought of that great interior west. If that is true, and if that is the real thought of the interior west, then this problem could be solved very easily as far as this government is concerned.

Mr. GOOD: Did not the hon. member for Mackenzie attach a proviso to that statement?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What was it?

Mr. GOOD: If he could get a square deal from the railway commission.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I corrected my hon. friend on that, and I told him that I thought he was very unfair in making a statement of that kind. If people in Canada and the House of Commons are to take the position that they cannot get a fair deal from our courts or from public bodies, then we are in a very serious condition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. minister made that representation to his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am talking to my hon. friend across the way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would advise the hon. minister to take care of his own household first.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think there is no need to worry in that regard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then he has cured his colleague.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I accepted a suggestion from an hon. member of this House that he and the body behind him were prepared to cut out all privileges to be derived from the Crowsnest pass agreement, and leave the whole matter as it stands, but I understand he qualifies that with the statement that he has no confidence in the railway commission. That is a matter of opinion. The railway commission in Canada has served a very useful purpose, and we are fortunate at this time as a people that we passed the act in 1903, and that from 1903 onward we have had a specially organized body, and that that body, during the course of some twenty odd years, have been developing a knowledge and information that will make them capable of dealing with the situation with which we are faced to-day.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Is the hon. minister aware that the only western representative on the railway commission has been engaged largely in writing dissenting judgments?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is always a privilege of a member of the board.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It tells another story.

Mr. GRAHAM: The minority is not always right.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The minority cannot write judgments and get away with them.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are always sure that their judgments will not come into force.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then why was he put on the board?

Mr. WARNER: The people of the west certainly have more confidence in the western member than they have in the rest of the board.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Well, that would be natural.

Mr. GRAHAM: The east has full confidence in the western member of the board. We will be more generous.

Mr. HUDSON: As long as he gives dissenting judgments.

Mr. GRAHAM: We have confidence that he is honest.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As I have stated already, this legislation will wipe out the Crowsnest Pass Act except the provision applying to grain and flour moving eastward. It was suggested yesterday by some of our British Columbia friends that this would increase or continue the discrimination against British Columbia. I do not agree with that viewpoint. It is true that the people of British Columbia are desirous of seeing grain moved through their territory and through the ports on the Pacific coast. It means increased business through the ports, increased business in the province, and is most desirable. It is of more importance to our friends in Alberta and western Saskatchewan, who are growers of wheat and producers of flour.

Mr. WARNER: Is the hon. member in favour of the same rate being applied to grain and flour carried to the western coast or to Vancouver as is applied to grain coming this way?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend can be assured that I am in favour of that; but I am not sure—and I speak seriously and after great thought and deliberation—that in placing further restrictions upon the board, for the purpose of securing a temporary advantage, I would be serving the best interests of the province of British Columbia. Taking the declaration as made in this bill, the order in council giving directions to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and in addition to that the fact that this great area tributary to the Pacific coast must of necessity adopt the Pacific route, I believe that we in British Columbia and the people of the other provinces will eventually secure that advantage.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the minister not aware that his colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) says that the bill does not affect British Columbia at all?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, he did not say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, four or five times.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of my hon. friends stated yesterday that the bill adversely affected British Columbia, and my colleague stated that it did not affect adversely—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister permit me to read it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have read it.

Mr. CRERAR: I am very sorry indeed to interrupt my hon. friend, but the matter to which he is referring now is one of very great importance. Would he indicate to the committee what section of the bill we are considering, affects grain rates to Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will come to that. If the government in their bill had extended the area of the Crowsnest agreement to include Pacific ports it would have been a temporary advantage to the people of British Columbia, but I am not sure that in doing that we would not have created a condition within the minds of the board that would have been a barrier to what British Columbia has been asking for. Under the Crowsnest pass agreement, or the old agreement, there were other commodities than grain and flour products. We find all green and fresh fruits had 33½ per cent advantage travelling from eastern Canada. We find that cordage and binder twine have an advantage of 10 per cent if manufactured in eastern Canada and shipped west. I may tell this committee that we have a cordage factory and a binder twine factory in British Columbia to-day, and also it is the hope of the British Columbia people, and not a vain hope, that we will be able to manufacture agricultural implements in that province.

Mr. CRERAR: All that has nothing to do with grain rates in Alberta.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister now permit me to read out of Hansard the statement of the minister I referred to a minute ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will give my right hon. friend an opportunity in a moment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I knew my hon. friend would not permit me.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will give my hon. friend an opportunity.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend never will; I knew it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I offered it a minute ago. We have, receiving a preference under the old Crowsnest pass agreement, paper for building and roofing, paints of all kinds, live stock, woodenware, household furniture, going west from the east. Under the present arrangement that inequality is wiped out altogether as regards western Canada. It will now be the business of the railway commission to adjust the rates on those commodities.

Mr. CRERAR: They will go up.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They may go up. That will depend on the revenues necessary to operate the railways.

Mr. GRAHAM: From the east they may go up.

Mr. CRERAR: That is what I mean.

Mr. GRAHAM: But they will not from the west.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): But there will and should be an equalization, and that is what British Columbia has been striving for. It is true if, in this legislation, without the limiting effects which I fear would result if we extended the Crowsnest pass agreement to the Pacific, we could have had that and this, that would be delightful. But I do not think it would have been wise in the interest of British Columbia to make that statutory. The government has limited the area, and in its limitation has set a maximum rate. That in itself should be an indication to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The government, however, has gone further, and in its order it suggests:

The encouragement of the movement of traffic through Canadian ports.

The increased traffic westward and eastward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade with the Orient and to the transportation of products through the Panama canal.

There is a direct reference there to conditions that exist and that are well known to the people of western Canada to-day.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister anticipate that the Board of Railway Commissioners will give the same rate for grain and flour moving westward as is at present provided under this legislation for grain and flour moving eastward?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not within my province to answer that question any more than it is within the province of my hon. friend. We have to depend upon the judgment and good sense of the Board of Railway Commissioners. If my right hon. friend wishes to ask a question I shall be glad if he will do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that I wanted to ask a question. I said that I wanted to correct the minister. The minister said that his colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) had not stated that British Columbia was not affected by this legislation at all. I stated that he had said so more than once. I read from page 4345 of Hansard of last night:

Mr. Macdonald (Pictou): In the first place, my hon. friend would not venture to argue seriously before any court that there is a single word in subsection 6 as originally in the bill that affected British Columbia one way or the other—not within a hundred miles.

Mr. Meighen: Then what part of the bill does affect British Columbia?

Mr. Macdonald (Pictou): No part.

Does that satisfy the minister?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the right hon. member is hardly fair. He is reading one paragraph and drawing conclusions from it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will read the same from another paragraph if that will help.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does not touch the point at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Railways and Canals made an equal mess of it while he was discussing the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am glad my right hon. friend thinks he made a mess of it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was contended by my right hon. friend and his supporters yesterday that this legislation would further discriminate against British Columbia.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is another point altogether. The minister said that British Columbia was not affected at all.

Mr. CRERAR: If I understand the argument of the minister, it is that British Columbia will derive some benefit from the abolition of these westbound rates that have existed heretofore under the Crowsnest pass agreement, in this way that similar industries such as cordage, glass, and so forth in British Columbia will be put upon a more even basis as to the prairies. What effect will all that have on the prairie consumer?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it would be an advantage to the prairie consumer.

Mr. CRERAR: I am glad the minister is so optimistic.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At least it cannot hurt him. It gives him another market to buy in.

Mr. CRERAR: At a higher price.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it is well understood in this House that the old Crowsnest pass agreement could not continue. It is obsolete, out of date and not applicable to present day conditions.

Mr. CRERAR: But the prices that the consumer will pay will be higher.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The prices are all higher and will probably continue to be higher. I do not know that they will be higher on account of British Columbia manufacturers getting into the market. You have a new field and another competitor in the market, so that this should be to the advantage of the purchaser. What I want to make clear and what, I think, in fairness we should make clear is that it is important for the whole of Canada to abolish as far as possible any restriction that will limit the Board of Railway Commissioners in bringing about a readjustment or revision of the railway rates of this country. The government have gone a good way in that regard. My hon. friends opposite think they have gone too far. I do not think so. We have maintained and broadened and fixed in the old Crowsnest area, the broadened area, the maximum on grain and flour. Those are products in which the west is chiefly interested. As I said before, the government deciding upon that policy took into account the importance of that great interior area to the whole of Canada and believed it was in the interest of the whole of Canada to make this concession. Whether we should have gone further or not, I do not know. I think it is a fair concession, and as explained by the Minister of Railways, it should be acceptable to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has the minister justified the discrimination against the west on grain and flour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are trying to do away with discrimination just now.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How is the government doing that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe we are going to do it. If we remove the conditions that have been restricting and preventing the board from receiving the representations not only of British Columbia, but of the Maritimes and other provinces, we clear the field for a readjustment of rates.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How do you remove a discrimination by making it worse?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You do not make it worse. It is easy for one to take the local viewpoint and to develop that for one's own advantage or for the advantage of one's locality. But the problem is too large to be put into that category.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But what is the difference between grain going west and grain going east?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That matter will be left to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and as I have already stated, the importance to the grain growers in Alberta and western Saskatchewan of the nearby Pacific ports and the necessity of their use by them will, in itself, under the directions that the board have received in the order, of necessity cause the board to consider that question.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister suggest that the Board of Railway Commissioners by any possibility will make the rates westward the same as the rates eastward?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is nothing in the legislation, nothing in the order, to prevent them from making them lower if they feel that is justifiable.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister suggest that they will do so?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not within my province to say so nor within the province of my hon. friend.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister knows perfectly well they will not do it, they never can do it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not agree with my hon friend at all. I take a different point of view.

Mr. McQUARRIE: With this legislation, that is impossible.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, this is not limiting in its effect.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does not limit their power one iota.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In fact, it rather sets a standard for them to conform to.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the minister expect the railway commision to do any such thing?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I should have the greatest reason to expect that that would be the effect of this legislation.

Mr. CLARK: How are we going to overcome by this legislation the effect of the words contained in the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada:

> Discrimination so authorized by parliament itself cannot be regarded as unjust or prohibited.

How in the face of that decision and under the legislation as it is now framed can you go before the railway commission and allege a discrimination as a ground for lower rates on grain and flour westward?

Mr. GRAHAM: You can get rates without alleging discrimination.

Mr. CLARK: But that ground is removed.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend advanced the same point yesterday and it was fully met by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou). This legislation does not limit the power of the board in dealing with grain and flour rates, but having fixed a maximum rate it will have a controlling effect generally. That is the only effect it will have. I should think that the parliament of Canada if it adopted this legislation would have indicated to the Board of Railway Commissioners that in its opinion it was in the interests of the people that grain and grain products should have the advantage of the cheapest possible transportation in order that these commodities might be moved to the seaports of Canada for export. That is what is indicated in this legislation and I should think it would be a guiding principle to the commission.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Can the minister justify this legislation in relation to grain and flour going westward?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Let me read for the benefit of the hon. gentleman the following paragraph from the order in council:

> The committee are further of the opinion that as the production and export of grain and flour forms one of the chief assets of the Dominion, and in order to encourage the further development of the great grain-growing provinces of the west, on which development the future of Canada in large measure depends, it is desirable that the maximum cost of the transportation of these products should be determined and known, and therefore are of opinion that the maximum established for rates on grain and flour, as at present in force under the Crowsnest pass agreement, should not be exceeded.

That is a fair declaration of policy, and it is I think important, in the interests of the country, that the movement of these products to the sea board should be facilitated at the lowest possible cost.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. McQUARRIE: From the standpoint of British Columbia, how could the fixing of a maximum rate westward for grain and flour injure that province?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It might not injure British Columbia, but parliament having declared that this should extend into British Columbia it would have a limiting effect on the Board of Railway Commissioners in dealing with traffic which we hope will flow from British Columbia into the prairie provinces. The people of British Columbia, as I have said, are anxious to see the western grain movement facilitated; but we are more anxious to see the elimination of what is known as the mountain scale. I am satisfied that with this legislation, and with the scope of reference to the railway commission cleared up, we may look forward to the day when British Columbia will not be discriminated against as she has been in the past. My hon. friend speaks of the railway commission. Well, he must also remember that there is an appeal from that body. The direction of the government in the order in council is explicit on the matter, and the legislation is also plain and direct. It deals with one phase only of the fixing of rates, and in other respects it removes all limitations that have heretofore been operating against British Columbia, preventing that province from obtaining what it considers its just due.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister say that it removes all the discriminations against which that province has been fighting?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I say that it removes from the field the limitations that heretofore have existed and gives to the railway commission full scope to consider properly the claims of British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But it leaves a serious discrimination against the western movement of grain.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no discrimination; it is left to the Board of Railway Commissioners to fix what they consider a proper and fair rate on grain moving westward.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why not do the same with the grain moving eastward?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For that matter, why not fix a rate on coal moving either eastward or westward? I think our experience yesterday and to-day will show us how utterly absurd such an undertaking would be.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why start it then?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have explained fairly why the government have taken this step. I have read the clause in the order in council showing clearly why we have considered this policy essential to the development not only of western Canada but of the Dominion as a whole. Now, my hon. friend from North Vancouver yesterday referred to the Vancouver Sun of June 6 and intimated that I had said so and so. Let me say in reply that I am no more responsible for what appears in the press than he is himself. I find in the same issue of the Sun that the hon. member is reported as expressing unqualified approval of the government policy. He is also reported as saying:

> The recommendation to the railway commissioners to hold thorough investigation into traffic east and west via the Panama is sound. The whole freight rates structure should be revamped on distribution from both Atlantic and Pacific sea-board inward.

That is what the government has in view.

Mr. CLARK: The minister referred to the member for "North Vancouver." That happens to be in my constituency and I want to say that I gave no such interview as the minister attributes to me.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I meant the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens). But I would refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clark) to his own statement. He said that Saskatchewan and Alberta would pay nearly double the rate under this legislation that they would pay to Buffalo and New York. My hon. friend was not serious when he made that statement. He knows where the dividing line is in Alberta; and under the adjustments that have taken place since 1922 one-fourth of the discrimination has been wiped out, and to-day there are points in Alberta that have a preference and will continue to have a preference to the ports of the Pacific. As the discriminations are removed that line will move further eastward. But my hon. friend could not successfully contend for one moment that wheat moving from Alberta or Saskatchewan to the Pacific coast would pay double the rate applicable to wheat moving to Buffalo or New York, although he made that statement yesterday.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a fact that the rate on wheat from Edmonton to Fort William is practically the same as from Edmonton to Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think there is a difference of three to five cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. CLARK: One cent difference?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, more than that.

Mr. MALCOLM: The difference is two and a half cents—22½ against 25.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a preference there anyway and we can come as far east as Medicine Hat at the present time. This question is not only of interest to British Columbia and to the prairie provinces, but to the whole of Canada, and I believe that under the policy laid down by the government an opportunity will be given the railway board to effect an equalization of freight rates by building up a new rate structure that will enure to the advantage of the whole Dominion.

Mr. McCONICA: Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong this debate, but I should like to say one or two things in reference to some of the statements made yesterday. Some hon. members seem to be under the impression that the government by this legislation is fixing freight rates. Nothing of the kind is taking place. The rates on grain and flour are fixed by the Crowsnest pass agreement—a contract that was entered into almost thirty years ago, a contract that was duly signed and delivered, the consideration for which was fully paid by the people of Canada. That contract was made by the parliament of Canada with the railway company, but parliament acted in a representative capacity, the real party in interest being the people of Canada. The people paid the money, the people acquired the rights—rights that were vested not in the parliament but in the people of Canada. That contract should be regarded as sacred. I spent some fifty years or more of my life in a country where no power could abrogate a contract without the consent of the parties interested. There is no such power vested in the president or in congress or in all the courts of the United States, nor can all these combined annul or modify in the slightest degree the contract rights of the humblest citizen of that republic. Contracts should be regarded as sacred. Now, western Canada and eastern Canada are interested in a contract—a contract that was paid for, a contract that has stood for nearly thirty years—and we in western Canada insist that that contract shall be duly recognized. I believe the people are entitled to that consideration. It is not a proper thing to tear up the contract without the consent of the people, and I submit that no man in this House has any mandate from their electors to destroy the Crowsnest pass agreement. We from the west were instructed to see that it was reinstated, and we thought we had succeeded, but it has been so seriously modified by the Supreme court that it is hardly recognizable.

In the course of this debate yesterday it was said that the parties were willing to rescind this contract. I deny that assertion. The people of the west are not ready to rescind it, and they are the real parties in interest. They are clamouring against a rescision, they are insisting that the contract be carried out and that the railroad company should be held to its agreement. It was suggested yesterday by the member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) that the Board of Railway Commisisoners were handicapped by the water rates and consequently were not able to raise the railway rates indiscriminately in the east. That is true no doubt. They are not only handicapped by that factor, but they are handicapped by another—a contract with the Canadian Pacific railway that the company shall have a 10 per cent dividend. That is one of the things they must insist on—and they seem very willing to insist on it. Now, where is that 10 per cent dividend to come from if freight rates cannot be raised in the east? It will come from the west. For that reason we need some safeguard, we have that safeguard in the Crowsnest pass agreement, and we insist on retaining it.

It is suggested that this arrangement does not give rates on westbound traffic to the Pacific coast. Of course it does not. But it does give to our British Columbia friends the right to ship their wheat to Fort William if they want to, there is no discrimination against them in that regard, and they can ship east under the agreement just as we do. So I say they are not discriminated against. Of course, statutory rates for westbound traffic could be enacted, but such rates are not favoured, and the rates under the Crowsnest pass agreement are not statutory rates. It may be suggested that the agreement has been extended to take in additional territory since the Supreme court decision was rendered. That is true, but it is for the purpose of preventing discrimination. That decision merely extends the Crowsnest pass rates to the territory where they were in force before the agreement was tinkered with by the former government. Its application has been extended only as far as it extended prior to that catastrophe to our Crowsnest pass agreement. But that extension is not a fixing of rates; the agreement fixes the rates; the Supreme court merely fixed the bounds of the extension.

[Mr. McConica.]

Now, what position do we in the west find ourselves in? We are getting some things that we did not have; we are losing some things that we did have. We are losing the westbound rates on various commodities, and we deplore that fact. We insist that parliament has no right to do that thing, we insist that we are entitled to the Crowsnest pass agreement. But we are making a sort of trade it seems—not very willingly on our part. For instance, under the Supreme court decision there is not a point in my constituency that would derive a dollar's benefit from the Crowsnest pass agreement; we would not get it on the westbound nor on the eastbound traffic.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member states that we are trading. Is it true we are trading, or it is not rather that the trade is being tendered to us?

Mr. McCONICA: It is being forced upon us. I repeat, under the Crowsnest pass agreement, as construed by the Supreme court, there is not a point in the Battleford constituency where we will have the benefit of one penny on the rates westbound or eastbound. The new arrangement on wheat and flour will extend to all points in that constituency, so that I am not sure but what we are getting a better trade. But I do not like the principle of it. I do not believe anybody has the right to take that agreement away from us without our consent. I therefore insist that we return to the Crowsnest pass agreement and make it applicable as it was before it was tinkered with by the former government. That is the position I think the government should take, and with that position the west will be entirely satisfied.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): One can usually depend on getting the standard Liberal doctrine and Liberal argument from the hon. member for Battleford (Mr. McConica), but this evening he diverged. I cannot say that he presented anything worse than what the government has presented from the beginning of this debate, but at last he broke his record and swerved a little from the straight and narrow path of the Liberal government. His tenderness for a contract is really pathetic. He never wants a contract broken unless it is in favour of himself, but then he is quite ready to weigh the merits of the change and assume the whole responsibility for it.

The railway rates question is before us again, and we have need to have it before us. I do not think there ever was anything demanding solution more urgently than this question has for many months gone by. It has seemed a very strange thing that while parliament was being served up with all sorts of little tinkering legislation and every manner of bill, occupying the time of the members week after week, the business of the country was allowed to wrestle with a condition of turmoil and chaos, and no remedy at all provided. We had to wait till the very eve of prorogation, till within a few days of the close, to enable the government to come down with this legislation. All the facts for that legislation, all the data, were before them months ago. There was nothing they could possibly have been waiting for. All they were waiting for was a time fit and proper to try to get it through, and in their wisdom they considered the last hurried hours of the session would be the best.

Mr. HOEY: The Saskatchewan election may have been a factor.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And I presume, as well, the synchronism of the Saskatchewan election may have affected their politically-minded policies.

Mr. GRAHAM: Where did I hear that word before?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think it was from the Minister of Railways.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think it was the Minister of Finance in my hon. friend's government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Chairman, this is a piece of floundering and irrational legislation. It had to be so. The government had to bring in something of this kind, or completely swallow the position they took two years ago. It is because they got into the mire two years ago that they have to come to parliament for legislation now, and it is because they are not willing to reverse an unsound step they took two years ago that they have to bring in legislation of this kind

I felt rather sorry for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) in the course of his speech. I do not think he made much of a presentation, but he did the best he could, and I do not know that anybody could have done any better who had been a minister and whose province had been treated by his colleagues the way the Minister of Public Works and his province have been treated in this legislation. I did not expect to see the radiant smile that we were told beamed over his countenance when interviewed by the newspaper reporter after the order in council which preceded this legislation was announced to the public. The radiant smile I knew would not be there. Instead, he reminded me of nothing so much as a man trying to race as fast as he could through a bog, and the speed that he managed to acquire was not very much.

After all, there should not be any great difficulty for this parliament in determining its course as regards the railway rates. The policy of Canada was determined upon in this respect years ago. Always, ever since we have had a parliament, the right, of course, to fix rates, or to determine the principles upon which rates should be fixed, or both, has resided in the parliament of Canada in so far as Dominion railways are concerned. We have always had that. We could do it by legislation or by the creation of a body, a committee of the Privy Council or otherwise. We could do it through any agency we wished, or we could do it by bargain, if we liked, with the railway company. The jurisdiction has always been ours. The bargain with the railway company really meant nothing, for the reason that whether the railway company consented or not, we always had power to enforce it by statute if we wanted. The control has been ours. The problem that faced us has been: How should we exercise it?

First of all, it was exercised through a committee of the Privy Council for many years, enabled to do so by statute of parliament. This was changed in 1903, and a judicial body was created. That judicial body was entrusted, subject to certain underlying principles defined by parliament, to fix all rates in this country. That body, the railway commission, has functioned as a judicial body ever since. It functioned unhampered although there was existing an agreement that had not been removed, but an agreement that was quiescent, ineffective, because its terms had become obsolete and were not necessary for the day. The railway commission operated unhampered until this government came into power. Then pressure was brought to bear from a section of Canada to interfere, to alter the course which had been pursued. Conditions had arisen which brought into being again the bones of that old agreement, conditions which were due to the war—rising rates, rising costs, rising wages all over this country—and the agreement was suspended by the then government. It was a matter the disposal of which could wait, and well wait, more peaceful and quiet times. The suspension terminated in 1922, and then it was this government came upon the scene.

Before I proceed to review what they did, I want to say something as to the wisdom of the plan which had up to then been followed. Parliament had never surrendered, never could surrender even if it tried, its rights to define the underlying principles upon which this court, as any court, should act. The Prime Minister has boasted that parliament would never give up that right. The boast is a very safe one, because parliament never could give up that right, no matter how it tried. We always attempted to define those principles, did the best we could that way. They were defined in the original railway act. That act, as all succeeding acts, contained one principle, that there should be no undue discrimination. Attempts were made repeatedly to have the word "undue" removed. Circumstances rendered it impossible to bring about the state of affairs where the word "undue" could with safety be removed. It never was removed.

10 p.m.

Other principles were laid down. They have been changed from time to time, but very little. It may be that even to-day circumstances arise which would justify parliament in altering those principles in some degree. But the duty of parliament to define them is clear. That is the function of parliament. That, until 1922, was the exclusive function and the exclusive practice of parliament. Now, in 1922, something in the way of diversion was indulged in by this government. In 1922 they decided that the provisions of the old Crowsnest pass agreement should be, in part, retained for two more years—renewed for one year and subject to renewal by order in council for another. This was pressed upon them by representatives of western Canada. Those representatives felt that if they could succeed in their efforts it would mean lower rates for those whom they represented. From one point of view this attitude cannot be complained of. From another point of view I think it can. There is no section of Canada that is not interested in low freight rates. Certainly no one would argue that the lowest possible freight rates are not of benefit to every occupation and every industry. It is axiomatic, it is merely platitudinous to be arguing for low freight rates. We all want that. I do not know anyone probably more anxious than the Minister of Railways; but the Minister of Railways is in power, and has to take a different view from those who are not in power and have no responsibility. Those who have responsibility know that there is a certain distance down that you can go, and you cannot go any farther. It does not matter whether you are animated by a feeling of hostility to the railway system, or a feeling of sympathy. The railways are part of Canada. They will not operate unless there is something in the operation; otherwise the whole structure will crash. When we are faced to-day with the situation where our railway rates in one year, the twelve months gone by, have declined by over $49,000,000 it is worth while for serious minded people to stop and think and, at least, to realize that there is a certain general level towards which you can approximate and below which you cannot go except at the expense of bringing to poverty all those who thought they would be benefited as well as everybody else.

Pressure was brought to bear then to restore a portion of this agreement. Now, the hon. member for Battleford—and in this he does not differ much from many others whom I have had the privilege of listening to—protests that there is an agreement. We are not now and we have not been in the past fixing rates at all in this parliament, we are only paying that reverence to a signed, sealed and delivered contract that all honourable men are bound to pay. It is not that he would ever think of asking parliament to fix special rates for his district. No, he would never dream of that. But there is that agreement, we have got to abide by it. Let us examine that argument. Certainly if two men, or two governments, two corporations, two entities of any kind, make a contract no one of them can relieve themselves of it or any part of it honourably except with the consent of the other. If there are any other law binding contracts—that is contracts of honour or of legal sanction—I do not know what they are. No one of the parties to a contract can subtract from its provisions save with the approval or the consent of the other; but if the other agrees then certainly there is nothing in the world to restrain them, or if the other violates the contract then the second man is free.

Now what is the history of this contract? In 1898 the government of Canada, on behalf of the whole people of the Dominion, agreed with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to give them a certain amount of money for some branch line railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in turn agreed that on certain freights—some going east and some going west—a reduction of fixed percentages would be made and the figures then arrived at would be maximum. Such was the contract. I do not doubt that from that day to this the Canadian Pacific would have been quite ready to have been relieved of all obligations in respect of the rates. Nobody would question that—they are not fools. That they would be quite ready there is no doubt. Therefore there never has been any matter of honour involved at all. We always could recede from that contract if the other party would be quite ready to recede. There has never been any matter of honour involved, any matter of contractual obligation as far as we are concerned at all. Certainly we have always been in a position—the government of Canada and the parliament of Canada—to enforce the provisions against the railway company. For that matter we might have enforced them without any contract at all; we could have legislated those rates in this parliament and never been dependent upon our contract. The point I am on is this: When you are saying that a contract is sacred and you must abide by it, that holds only as long as the other party holds you to it, so far as honour goes. But you say, "There is a question of interest." Of course there is. The people of Canada, the government of Canada and the parliament of Canada should adhere to it just so long as it is in the interest of the people they represent; and once it appears that the adherence is no longer in the interest of the people they represent then I want to affirm it is the duty of the parliament of Canada—there being no holding to the contract on the other side—to change it. Now, if there is anything wrong with this reasoning, if there is a suggestion that I have strayed from the true path in reasoning, I should like to hear what it is. What I am trying to establish is this: That all we have ever had to review or consider has been and is today whether it is in the interests of the Canadian people that the contract be adhered to or that other rates, or another principle of fixing rates be established. So that all this reference to the contract is humbug—humbug and nothing else—simply set up as an excuse to affirm special rights on the part of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. WARNER: Would the right hon. gentleman assume that we have had a mandate from the people of Canada to change this contract?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We have a mandate from the people of Canada to do whatever is in the interests of the Canadian people. I have not started yet to argue whether it is in the interests of the Canadian people or whether it is not; what I say is there has never been any vested right on the part of anyone in this contract the moment it appears that it is not in the interest of the whole people of Canada. That is all I have sought to convince this House of. If there were some other parties to the contract besides Canada on the one hand and the Canadian Pacific on the other—if there was a third party or a fourth party, then they would have rights too, but is there? If so, who is the third party? Canada is one, the Canadian Pacific is the other, who is the third? If any third party was in the contract at all he would have to show first consideration; but there is no third party in it, there is nobody else a party to it at all. If the three western provinces had been in the consideration given then this parliament would have no right to set aside the contract except at the price of compensation to those provinces. But that is not the condition.

Mr. CRERAR: Would the statement or assertion that the right hon. gentleman has made apply for instance to the Manitoba contract regulating rates, that was made with the old Canadian Northern Railway Company by the late Roblin government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No it would not apply; my argument would have no application whatever. Were I standing in the Manitoba legislature and arguing as to the duty of that legislature, I would argue just the same. I would say if the other party is ready to waive it, all you have to consider is the interests of the people of Canada. You can waive it as soon as you feel it is in their interests. But I cannot. I am in the parliament of Canada. The parties to that contract were the Canadian Northern and the government of Manitoba, and this parliament takes a very serious step when it wipes out a contract between other parties and assumes no responsibility for compensation.

Mr. FORKE: This was a bargain that was made between the parliament of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway that was supposed to be in the interests of the three prairie provinces. Does not the hon. leader of the opposition believe that this parliament has some duty to see that these benefits are still conferred upon those provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: This parliament's duty is to the whole of Canada. Our duty is to the three prairie provinces just as much and just as directly as to any other provinces of the country. But the three prairie provinces, while they may have been the special beneficiaries of the original contract, were in no way parties to the contract and had no special rights under it. They were special beneficiaries, perhaps, although the Minister of Public Works in his desire to square himself with British Columbia, argued to-night, rather circuitously, I admit, that British Columbia was a beneficiary too; and indeed the Minister of Railways argued, likely for some similar purpose, that the rest of the country was a beneficiary. Perhaps in a sense everybody was a beneficiary. I frankly admit that the three prairie provinces were the principal beneficiaries. But the fact that this government enters into an arrangement especially beneficial to one party does not give that party a better right than all the rest of the country to review the general merits of the contract. Every part of this country has just the same right to review entirely the general merits from the standpoint of the whole people as have the representatives of the provinces of western Canada, and I am not saying this merely because I am standing now at a considerable distance from the taxpayers of those provinces. I have said this right on the plains, and I do not see for the life of me how any other line of reasoning can be followed.

Such is the position, as I understand it, of the contract itself. We have to consider, as we had to consider two years ago, whether it is in the interests of those for whom we are trustees, the whole people of this Dominion to maintain that contract as an integral and solemn pact. Is there one hon. member in this House who will suggest for one minute that it is? I am in the presence of men who I know would suggest it, if nothing restrained them except bashfulness and timidity. There is nobody who would suggest the enforcement of that contract, as the contract is now interpreted at least, and as the contract was understood by this House three years ago, though perhaps a different interpretation. In every aspect of this question, there is no member of this House who would suggest that you could enforce that contract in the interests of the people of Canada. The hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. Davies) says the contract has been so changed by the Supreme court that you cannot recognize it now at all. Whatever else we may say about the hon. member for North Battleford, we can say for him that he has a mind of his own. He is not a lawyer, but has commonsense. I ask him, did he ever hear in his life of the courts changing a contract? That is not what the courts are for. If the Supreme court changed this contract, I think he had better set to work by some means or other and get rid of the Supreme court. All the Supreme court had any right to do, and all it was asked to do was, to tell us what the contract meant. The Supreme court told us the contract meant such a thing and no more. For the hon. member to argue that we are justified in tinkering with its terms, and shutting this out or taking that in because it has been mutilated by the Supreme court, is to suggest something to this House that does no credit to his recognized intelligence. All we have now as the result of the government's action is a court decision as to what it means. I do not think we needed that decision. I do not think it mattered a whit whether the contract meant what the court said it meant, or whether the contract meant what the majority of the House said it meant two years ago. Taking it either one way or the other, you cannot enforce it in this country. The government, acting in the interests of the people, has to fall away from the contract and is bound to. It fell away two years ago when neither the government nor this House thought the contract had the strict interpretation which the Supreme court thought it had. The fact of the matter is that twenty-five years have so disturbed the current of trade in Canada, and have so altered the whole trend of prices in Canada, that the contract to-day is an absurdity. The contract to-day, instead of contributing to equalization, overthrows every possibility of equalization. It defies every principle on which any rate structure can be based. Is that true or is it an exaggeration? Nobody in the House has claimed otherwise. The Minister of Railways admits it. He expounds it. The Minister of National Defence did the same. I have heard member after member stand up and say the same thing. If that is the case, is it in the interests of the people of Canada that we stand on our rights under the contract? Surely now I am in a position where I can say that parliament is free. Surely I am now in the position where I can say that it is parliament's duty to turn its back upon that contract. The minister says, "Oh, we will keep part of it." Have we any right to keep a part of it and to throw the rest away? If so, where do we get the right? Whoever heard of a contractor assuming to himself the right to do what he liked with part of the contract and put the rest in the wastepaper basket?

Mr. GOULD: Did the right hon. member anticipate this day of debate when he or his government allowed the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement under the War Measures Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, we had no prophetic powers. I do not think we would have even prophesied that hon. members opposite would be in the treasury benches, but if we had so prophesied we would never have thought that they would have done this. We suspended the agreement in order that the whole question could be reviewed at a time when such questions would more appropriately come up.

Mr. WARNER: Is it not a fact that parliament did, as far as they were concerned, abrogate the agreement, and the Senate said no?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not heard of that. If that is history I have never read that portion of our history.

Mr. WARNER: I understood that the Senate was the body that saved the contract and suspended it for three years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may possibly be. It does not matter at all to the argument. That would only mean that the Senate decided there should be a time for review later. If so, it means that still less of the responsibility for the suspension instead of abrogation would rest on me, and to that extent I am grateful to the hon. gentleman from Strathcona for mentioning the matter.

I was dealing with that phase of the question as to our right to pick and choose among the clauses of the contract, and then to justify our conduct to-day in relation to that contract. I appeal to the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), did he ever in his life hear of anything more absurd? It may be the duty of parliament to fix special rates in this House, and I will argue that in a minute. But for goodness' sake, if it is our duty to do so, let us manfully do it and do not let us get behind the shadow of a dead contract, a contract that we proclaim ourselves we cannot possibly adhere to and that the other party to the contract also wants to abandon.

Mr. WARNER: If the people of Canada had been satisfied with the right hon. gentleman's work as regards the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement and other things, would he not be back here as Prime Minister instead of as leader of the opposition?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My mind is much in the same channel as that of the hon. member for Strathcona. That, I think, is also an irremediable disaster. I have come to the point now whether or not there are such circumstances as would make it the part of wisdom for this parliament to vary the course pursued for years and, in respect of certain commodities, to fix a certain rate. It would take, hon. gentlemen will admit, a very strong argument, to justify such a variation. It would take very extraordinary circumstances to justify it. I have tried to listen to those who contend that such is our duty. One says: It is essential for the west; we must have lower rates there in order to function. I know it is very essential for the west to have low rates, but I do not see that it is any more essential for them than it is for the Maritime provinces or for British Columbia to have low rates. It is essential for all of us to have low rates. Others say: Well, in the west we are not sure of low rates, because in the east they have water competition which is a factor in determining rates, and consquently there is likely to be too big a burden put upon us. You can point to similar conditions in all parts of Canada. You can point to many another part of this country where there is no water competition. Is parliament going to assume the duty of legislating rates in this House everywhere except where there is water competition? If we are not, how are we going to justify doing it for one section of the country?

Mr. HOEY: Because of the volume of freight in the west.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it to be assumed that we have a railway commission which will be quite competent to decide the right rate if there is not very much freight to carry, but which is not competent to take into account this question of water competition where there is a large volume of traffic?

Mr. HOEY: But their decision would not be so satisfactory.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Naturally, if the people of one section can get parliament to act towards them in one way and towards the people of the rest of the country in another way, I have no doubt they will be happy. I am surprised to hear this advanced by my hon. friends from the west. Have they not drunk the milk of wisdom from that periodical, the Grain Growers' Guide? Have they not stuck to the bosom of that journal for years and preached from every platform that special privilege must go? How then can they come to this parliament and proclaim in this debate that they are the sworn foes of special privilege in every case except where they are the beneficiaries themselves?

Mr. HOEY: We do not admit that the Crowsnest pass agreement on grain and flour would confer a special privilege on us.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If it does not, if there is nothing special desired, how is it that my hon. friends cannot depend upon the railway commission to give them what is fair along with the rest of Canada?

Mr. WARNER: On what has happened in the past we are basing our judgment as regards the future.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the railway commission is not good enough for the west, how can hon. members say in this House that it is good enough for the Maritime provinces and British Columbia?

Mr. WARNER: We do not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the hon. gentleman here is ready to abolish the railway commission and to fix rates in parliament.

Mr. CRERAR: Where does the special privilege exist under the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If there is none—

Mr. CRERAR: May I interject a remark? My right hon. friend made the assertion that there was a special privilege under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly I did, because nobody in this House would be demanding it if there was not.

Mr. CRERAR: Wherein does the special privilege exist?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because parliament is fixing maximum rates. It is always a special privilege to have maximum rates fixed. I do not say that it is not a good thing; but if it is a good thing for one part of the country, it is a good thing for another, and if one part gets it and another does not, it is a special privilege.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Where does the special privilege arise in view of the repeated statements of the Board of Railway Commissioners that rates in the west have been higher than they were in the east generally? They have made that statement repeatedly and I will read them to the right hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman is still on a worse corn than he was at first if that is the case. If there is no special privilege at all, and if all other rates are put on a parity with Crowsnest pass rates, then why ask for legislation?

[Mr. Hoey.]

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): That is not the point. The right hon. gentleman says that the Crowsnest pass agreement is giving a special privilege.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The railway commission has never held that there is discrimination against the west. The railway commission do not hold any such view, because it is instructed by the law of Canada to remove any discrimination that can be removed. The head of the Canadian National Railways, not two weeks ago and not a hundred yards from this place, declared that grain rates in western Canada were 50 per cent lower than corresponding grain rates in the United States.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): That does not affect the matter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not only that but the head of the other railway said so also. But that is not the point. The point is this, that if the Crowsnest pass rates are only rates of a level that could prevail over the whole country, as the hon. gentleman wants the House to understand, why does he fear that the Crowsnest rates will not be maintained if the railway commission is allowed to deal with them?

Mr. HOEY: For protection, because of the absence of water competition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman do this also for every part that has not water competition?

Mr. HOEY: No, because they are not so vitally concerned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are not? They are just as vitally concerned as any other part. How does the hon. member think he is in a special place of danger?

Mr. HOEY: Will the right hon. member name any territory as vast?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The central part of British Columbia.

Mr. HOEY: There are no people there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There will not be any people if other people are getting all the advantages over them. There are people in the inland parts of Ontario and Quebec that are not affected by water competition in the slightest, larger populations than the whole of the west. Hon. gentlemen have been simply covering themselves with feathers on this matter. They have no case to stand on at all. I do not believe if the people from western Canada let the whole Crowsnest pass rates go and allowed the railway commission a free hand that, in the course of a very short time, there would be any higher rates than there are to-day.

Mr. MORRISON: How is it that the railways are so anxious to get this Crowsnest pass agreement abolished?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Anybody would be anxious to get it abolished.

Mr. MORRISON: So that they would be able to get higher rates. Everybody knows that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The railways cannot give in other parts of Canada the rates which they could give if the railway commission had a free hand.

Mr. WARNER: Does that not mean that the west would pay the difference?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are undoubtedly portions of the west to-day that, in my judgment, are paying under the Crowsnest pass agreement lower rates than they would pay otherwise, but the great part of the west, I believe, are not, and that is shown by the offer of the railways two years ago before the committee. The point is this: If they are not higher than is fair, than the railway commission would fix, why in the world are hon. gentlemen asking for the continuance of this agreement? Is not the railway commission competent to take these matters into consideration? Let me put the position in this way to hon. gentlemen. If some special consideration should be given to the absence of water competition, is it not the right and the proper function of parliament to declare what that consideration should be, to lay down a principle governing the matter, and to direct the railway commission to follow that principle? Is not that the right course for parliament to pursue?

Mr. MORRISON: And what else does the Crowsnest agreement do?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Crowsnest agreement does not fix any principle; it is merely the application of a schedule fixed by parliament. It is a wholly different thing. This parliament might perhaps be moved to give to all portions of Canada which lack water competition some special advantage. Very well; declare that principle and embody it in your law. That is the function of parliament. But when a certain section come to the government and say, "We want you to fix rates along this schedule for us because we will not depend upon the railway commission, believing that the commission has no regard for our interests at all"—then hon. gentlemen cannot ask the representatives of other parts of the country to abide under the jurisdiction of a tribunal in which they have no confidence themselves.

Mr. CRERAR: Would the right hon. gentleman support that suggestion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I would need to see how the law was put into effect. I have never subscribed to the suggestion, but I do say that those who subscribe to it, believing that the inland parts of Canada should have some special advantage, should see to it that this principle is embodied in our law and that the railway commission shall be instructed to apply it. That at any rate is the course they should advocate.

Mr. GOULD: Would the right hon. gentleman argue that the people of the west had no need for concern after the action of the railway commission last fall in abrogating the Crowsnest agreement, in regard to which there was dissension among the members of the board itself?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the west has need for concern because of any action the railway commission may have taken, then the whole of Canada should be concerned. Hon. gentlemen should be equally solicitous for other parts of the country as they are for themselves, and that is the contention I am advancing. Now, what is to be the attitude of hon. gentlemen towards the representatives of British Columbia? And I take British Columbia only by way of illustration. The Maritime provinces have just as insuperable and invincible an attack against the measure as has British Columbia, and I do not see how any member of this House can go to the Maritime provinces and defend before the people there a vote in support of this legislation. Here is British Columbia declaring, "You give our competitors to the east certain rates, while our rates are such and such a percentage higher. We now call upon you to give equal rates to these commodities going westward." And what does the government say in reply? They say, "Well, we have a pious aspiration in an order in council, and we have conveyed the same pious aspiration to the railway commission, that they will do something in the matter." The minister from that province has expressed a rather lively hope to-night that they will. But how is it that the representatives of British Columbia must rest on a mere pious aspiration while the representatives of three other provinces rest on solid law? Is that fair or just? Is that going to contribute to the unity of the country? British Columbia under this legislation is worse off than it was before. When it comes before the railway commission now it is faced among other things with the railway returns, which are affected by this pact. This pact now is extended over the whole northern area, and in the words of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) it is now three times what it was by law in the prairie provinces. By law, under this supposedly sacred contract, it covered only thirty-five per cent of what it does to-day, and therefore the whole earnings are affected. When therefore British Columbia comes before the commission it will be told that any reduction is impossible in view of these earnings.

Mr. WARNER: Is the right hon. gentleman in favour of extending to British Columbia the privileges which we have under the Crowsnest pass agreement?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would extend them to the whole of Canada if we could keep the railways going; and so would the railway commission. It is easy for hon. members to get up and say that they are in favour of lower rates here and lower rates there. Hon. gentlemen are safe in doing so so long as they know they will not be in office. But those who are in office must keep the railways functioning.

Mr. WARNER: If the leader of the opposition looked at the matter fairly, would he not give British Columbia the same treatment as is given to other places?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I am pleading for.

Mr. WARNER: And that is what we are ready to do.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I say, do for British Columbia what you do for any other part of the country. But if you cannot do it for British Columbia, for the Maritime provinces, for Quebec and Ontario, you should not do it for any other section of the Dominion.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the rates in the Maritime provinces are higher than the Crowsnest rates in the west?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I were an expert on freight rates I should be on the railway commission and not here.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Will the hon. gentleman take the word of the railway commission?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will take the word of the railway commission for the facts as they relate to the west as well as to the east. The trouble is that hon. gentlemen are ready to take the railway commission as an authority for every part of Canada but their own. Again I address myself to the position of hon. gentlemen in relation to British Columbia. British Columbia will have to be denied redress; at least the denial will now be more forceful than ever because of the extended effect of this agreement. Yet the minister from British Columbia wore a radiant smile, according to the newspapers, when he thought of the great victory he had achieved because of this legislation. Here is the order in council. It preceded the legislation in order that its publicity would precede the publicity of the legislation; because the order in council has no virtue on earth except from the standpoint of publicity. It has no virtue at all except as propaganda; it is just so much eye-wash, just froth and foam. That is all it is. First of all it is a piece of literature and history; it recites the verdict of the court and all that sort of thing, and the only part that has even the appearance of meaning anything is the last page. I quote from that page the following:

The committee therefore advise that the board be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rate structures of railways and railway companies—

That "rate structures" is the new phrase of this government; it has supplanted all the other favourites that have done duty so long.

—subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure, which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit of the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of the Dominion and the expansion of its trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of its agricultural and other basic industries,—

How novel, how revolutionary that suggestion is.

--and in particular to:

(a) The claim asserted on behalf of the Maritime provinces that they are entitled to the restoration of the rate basis which they enjoyed prior to 1919;

(b) The encouragement of the movement of traffic through Canadian ports;

(c) The increased traffic westward and eastward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade with the Orient and to the transportation of products through the Panama canal.

Do hon. gentlemen get the full effect of that? The government says to the railway commission, "We have tied your hands to a certain section of the Crowsnest pass agreement; we have tied them by an act of parliament.

Now we tell you to go to work and devise a fair and reasonable rate structure; and when you are doing that, you might be good enough to have regard to the claim asserted by those representing the Maritime provinces that they have certain rights." Is there any principle there defined upon which the railway commission can act? None whatever. There is just a dodging of principle, that is all. Having regard to a claim asserted—no expression that there is anything in the claim, not a suggestion of it. Does anybody imagine that they have not had regard to that claim before? What is next?

Having regard to the necessity of encouraging the movement of traffic through Canadian ports.

If there is a member of the commission that has failed to have regard to that in all his work up to date, then the statute should be repealed so that he could be got rid of and another commissioner appointed in his place. The same is true of the last paragraph. Have we had a lot of dullards in the railway commission that they did not know there was a Panama canal, that there was now more traffic westward? It is all right to lay down a principle and tell the railway commission, "Now, go and investigate your rate structure and make it conform to that principle." That as done in 1920. In the judgment of the railway commission of that time they declared they based their decision in part on the necessities of the National railways. We did not tell them to go back and review their decision in the light of the fact that the National Railways were in heavy debt or were built before their time; we told them to go back and review their finding in the light of our declaration that they had to leave the National Railways out altogether. There we declared a principle and took the responsibility ourselves. A reference back on a principle clearly defined means something; but here they define nothing. The railway commission has for twenty years been instructed to investigate the rate structure to make it fair and reasonable and produce equalization as far as possible. And that is all that it is instructed to do here. All this order in council means to the railway commission is simply this: You, the railway commission of Canada, now set to work and do what you have been told to do for the last twenty years. This is supposed to be consolation to British Columbia and to the Maritime provinces. They are told to rejoice and be glad over the empty words of a futile order in council, while in order to get enough votes in parliament the representatives of those districts are told to go back and rely on rates fixed by this House. Now, is this law, it is equity, is it common sense? I appeal again to the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster). There is no answer?

Mr. McMASTER: I am not a member of the railway commission.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, but he is a member of parliament, and he has to come to a decision as to this. How can he as a Liberal —who loves that name at least, whatever he may think of the record—how can he vote for legislation that denies every principle of Liberalism, or so-called Liberalism, that has not a particle of equity in any line of it? If any hon. member thinks there is any consolation for his district, unless he comes from the special one, I should like to find how he is going to establish it. All the rest of Canada is told, "Go back and take what solace you can out of these words of the order in council"—words that have been repeated over and over again for twenty- three years, words that in effect were in the original law, words that to-day are not supplemented by any declaration of principle at all. The whole thing is just a waste of printer's ink in order that a good taste could be put in the mouth of British Columbia and the Maritimes before this inequitable legislation was brought down.

There is only one course parliament should have pursued years ago, it should have met the problem right face forward and acted upon the sound, safe principle of doing the same for every part of Canada. Then there would have been no trouble to-day. Does anybody imagine that this is going to end the problem? It cannot. I do not care whether the railway rates of the Crowsnest pass agreement are lower or higher than the average level of Canada, so far as this argument is concerned, as long as you have to get a maximum fixed by parliament for one section, while the other sections are denied it, you cannot have good feeling in this country, you cannot have the sentiment among the people that they are fairly treated at the hands of parliament. Whether those rates are higher or lower, the people of the Maritimes, being people of the same composition as the rest of us, are bound to believe that they are under a special disadvantage because parliament would not do for them what it has done for the prairies. They are bound to believe it anyway, and you cannot possibly find any fault with them for so believing. I ask hon. members from the prairie provinces, suppose this legislation were for the Maritimes, and were denied to them, would they like to have the members from those provinces stand up and say, "Oh, but we have to have certain rates or we cannot function. These rates are not lower than you are paying out in the west, we assure you they are not." Would hon. members from the west take that for an answer? Not one.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): It will be time enough to raise the maximum when the other rates are up to the general level.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good. If the position were reversed, and we were fixing maximum rates for the Martime provinces, and some member from the Maritime should stand up and tell him, "Oh, we are fixing these maximum rates, but they are not a bit lower than yours," I should like to hear what he would say. He would get up and say, "Very well, go and fix the other rates. If you want to go to the commission, go yourselves." Would not that be his answer?

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Not necessarily.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be "necessarily," unless he were a transformed being from what he is to-day.

Mr. KELLNER: We are not fixing the rates; they were fixed about twenty-seven years ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I got past that argument about three-quarters of an hour ago. Perhaps I had not awakened the hon. member at that time. We are fixing rates in this legislation, and this talk about an agreement is simply concealing ourselves behind an imaginary barrier.

Mr. McMURRAY: Is it not a fact that the Conservative government in 1916 set a special rate on grain from Armstrong to Quebec?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no recollection of the event at all, and I am quite satisfied we did not set any rate. But in war time there are occasions when very quick action is necessary that would not be considered in peace time at all. But I do not think any special rate was fixed by the government at that time.

Mr. McMURRAY: Did I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that his government suggested to the Board of Railway Commissioners that in considering the rates they should have special regard for the condition of the National Railways?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, we said the very contrary. We said, "A great mileage of the Canadian National Railways is premature, a great deal of it was built, not for commercial profit as was the Canadian Pacific railway, but for colonization or other advantages"—that was a euphemism, we did not want to put in the order in council that it was purely for winning elections, so we stated it that way—"and as a consequence it is not fair to the shippers of Canada to-day to load on them the cost of that error; the whole of Canada should bear it. Therefore, come to your decisions wholly without regard to what the necessities of the National Railways may be."

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, my contribution to the discussion will be brief. It is prompted only by the desire to see a solution of this vexed problem that shall be reasonably satisfactory to all concerned. Yesterday the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) reviewed the provisions of the Crowsnest pass agreement and the whole course of events leading up to the present situation, and therefore I shall not take the time of the House by going over the same ground again. The outstanding point, in the present debate is that the decision of the Supreme court has left a condition of discrimination so far as freight rates are concerned which is intolerable, and must be remedied. We have, now, to consider ways and means of removing that discrimination. It seems to me that that can be done in any one of three ways: First, to make the Crowsnest rates on the various commodities applicable on all parts of the railways; second, to restore the general rates and abolish discrimination in that way; and third, to give the railway board of Canada a free hand to make such rates as they think are equitable and in the interests of the whole of Canada.

Before going on to discuss these various methods, I should like to say that I believe that special agreements made in the interest of any particular section of the country or of any class of the people, are bad as a matter of policy. I think possibly that might be modified in some cases by the fact that the national interest might be served by a modification of the principle, especially in such a country as Canada, where we have such a diversification of interests that compromise sometimes is necessary. We have, for example, our friends immediately opposite frequently saying that the tariff is a matter of class legislation, and for that reason should not be tolerated. That is combated by a good many members of this House, who say that it is not class legislation, that the tariff is beneficial to the whole of Canada, and for that reason should be continued. Whether it be class legislation or not, it might be held to be in the public interest. On the other hand, we have now a proposal from our friends opposite, and I think from the government, that we should enact legislation by way of granting the privilege of rural credits, which might be argued to be in the nature of class legislation, but which may be desirable in the public interest.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am sure the hon. member does not wish to mislead the House. Perhaps he is not aware of the fact that the rural credits legislation suggested will place no burden on the taxpayers of the Dominion, but will rest only with the provinces that take advantage of it.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps my illustration was not very good, but I think the House will readily see the point I am trying to make. Admitting therefore, as I do, and as I think all will, that class legislation is bad, that special agreements for the advantage of any one section of the country are bad, and also that the matter of freight rate making should not be given to parliament, we have then to consider, so far as I see the question, how far we should depart in the public interest from the principle I laid down, that rate making should not be given to parliament but should remain vested in the Board of Railway Commissioners.

The hon. leader of the Progressives spoke yesterday of the solemn contract of the Crowsnest agreement, and said that because it was a solemn contract, it should be maintained. Now I must take issue with him, and with my hon. friend from Battleford, who stated that that contract cannot be varied without the consent of the western people, and I think the members of the House will believe me when I say that I do that without any animosity whatever towards the people of western Canada. It should be remembered, and I agree in this with the right hon. leader of the official opposition, that that contract was made between the government of Canada, or the parliament of Canada, if you like, and the Canadian Pacific Railway. The consideration for the contract that was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, something like $3,600,000,—was paid by the people of Canada. I contend that when both parties to an agreement decide and mutually agree to vary or even to abolish a contract entirely, they have a perfectly legal and a moral right so to do. So I do not think this House should be deterred because of the fact that a contract did exist.

Mr. FORKE: Nobody denies those facts.

Mr. EULER: I am of the opinion that he said it was a solemn contract and therefore should not be tampered with, or words to that effect.

Mr. GOULD: Would not the hon. member also argue that the Board of Railway Commissioners should have approached both parties to the contract before they abrogated the Crowsnest rates last fall, instead of just taking the Canadian Pacific side of the case?

Mr. EULER: I do not think it is right to accuse the Board of Railway Commissioners of taking the Canadian Pacific side of it. I am perfectly willing, although perhaps I have not sublime confidence in the board, to give them credit for trying to do what is right, although possibly they may be mistaken in some of their judgments.

Mr. WARNER: Does not the hon. member consider that this agreement was made for the benefit of the western provinces, to guarantee them against paying too high a freight rate?

Mr. EULER: I will say that the people of the western provinces were perhaps the chief beneficiaries under the agreement, but not the sole beneficiaries. They were not specifically parties to this agreement. It was an agreement between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

I would like to refer to the work done by the committee appointed by parliament in 1922, a committee of twenty-five members of this House, who were to make a report to parliament as to whether the Crowsnest agreement should be allowed to come into force or whether its suspension should be continued. I had the honour of being a member of that committee, and that is why I refer to it now. It is no secret to say that I believe the disposition of the majority of the members of that committee was to allow all the rates on the commodities mentioned in the Crowsnest pass agreement, grain included, to be referred to the railway board, and that a new freight rate structure should be framed.

Mr. WARNER: Following up my first question, does not the hon. member think it is only reasonable for the western provinces to want to know what they are going to get before they give up the bargain they have already got?

Mr. EULER: The western provinces have only such a bargain as the parliament of Canada in agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway sees fit to give them. They have what they have only by reason of a contract made between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific.

If I may get back to the work of that committee, there was a feeling in that committee that in theory at least the whole matter of rate making should be vested in 11 p.m. the railway commission, but there were some of us, and I was one of them, who felt that in the interests of harmony, in the interests of the country in general, and in the interests of the western people, we might depart to some extent from that principle, and for that reason we advocated and secured that the freight rates on grain and flour should be allowed to come into force according to the terms of the Crowsnest agreement. I say frankly, Mr. Chairman, that I have sometimes within the last few days almost felt that we made a mistake. I am not going to say that definitely, because I have felt that we were reasonable at that time in what we did. But I do say that the proposal made by the government to allow the Crowsnest rates on grain and flour to remain in force, and to widen tremendously the scope and the application of those rates, is such a concession that our friends opposite should support it unanimously and without any objection. I say frankly that I am disappointed at the attitude taken by some of my very good friends opposite in insisting that the whole list of commodities should be restored so far as the Crowsnest pass rates are concerned. Now some of the members of that committee in 1922 compromised pretty heavily. They declared themselves in favour of retaining the Crowsnest pass rates on grain and flour. Some of us to some extent sacrificed the interests of our own constituencies in so doing; I know there is one member of the committee, I do not see him in the chamber just now, and I am another one—who sacrificed the Crowsnest pass rates on commodities manufactured in his constituency. I refer to furniture. Furniture is one of the commodities mentioned in the Crowsnest pass agreement. We were quite willing to forego the lower rates on furniture and to give to the west the benefits of the lower rates on grain and flour because we felt at the time that the west had difficulties to contend with and that we could stand the reduction a little better than they could. At any rate we did that in what we thought was in the national interest.

Mr. CRERAR: Might I suggest to my hon. friend that that suspension on furniture and other articles was only for two years.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. SHAW: Just for one year.

Mr. EULER: It was only for one year and could be renewed for another year. I may add that at that time we were under the impression that if the Crowsnest pass agreement came into force in its entirety that furniture would get the benefit of the lower rate. However, what we did we did in good faith so far as giving the rates on flour and grain are concerned. Unfortunately in my own case we never got the benefit of the reduced Crowsnest pass rates on furniture.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Who does my hon. friend think pays the freight on a carload of furniture going from his town to any point in the west?

Mr. EULER: That is an old question which I think the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) answered this afternoon. I have no doubt the westerner pays the freight but I will also say this—that every reduction of freight on a commodity surely assists the sale of that commodity if the price is lowered. But we did not anticipate at that time any such decision as was given later, that the Crowsnest pass rates on furniture and other commodities would apply only to such points as were in existence on the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1897. Because of that, my own city—and I may say that in the constituency which I represent we have about twenty-five furniture factories—we do not get the benefit of the Crowsnest pass rates on furniture, and to give you an idea of the discrimination that exists I shall merely quote by way of example, the rate we have to pay in competition with furniture manufacturers in the city of Woodstock, situated about thirty miles from Kitchener. Woodstock got the benefit of the Crowsnest pass rates of 1897 on furniture to Winnipeg of 86½ cents per hundred pounds, whereas from Kitchener to Winnipeg the rate is $1.38 per hundred pounds, an increase over the Woodstock rate of a little over sixty per cent. Our furniture manufacturers, however, are resourceful enough to circumvent that. They bill their goods to the city of Galt, about twelve miles away, and pay that extra rate. Galt was on the Canadian Pacific in 1897 and by shipping from that city they get the benefit of the Crowsnest pass rates. This does not work out so badly, but I assure you our manufacturers consider it is a very great nuisance and an unfair discrimination.

Now, if such a contract as the Crowsnest pass agreement were to be made to-day in the light of the fact that a railway commission exists, one of whose functions is the fixing of rates that are not discriminatory, then I would say that the making of such a compact to-day would be in violation of the principles that I believe in that rates should not be made by parliament but should be made by a properly constituted body.

Mr. KELLNER: Did not the government propose to fix rates under the Petersen contract if it had gone through?

Mr. EULER: Well my answer to that would be that under the report submitted to the House the Petersen contract did not come into force. I would also say further—

Mr. GRAHAM: Would my hon. friend just let me straighten that out.

Mr. EULER: Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM: Under the Petersen contract the government took the power to control the rates through any machinery it liked. That machinery would probably have been the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. EULER: If that explanation is not satisfactory I will add this. I have already admitted, and I say now, that conditions may arise in this country that will make it advisable that we should sometimes vary and depart from any strict principle that may be laid down in matters of this kind. The leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke), gave as the reason why we should go further in the making of rates in this House, the fact that we are continuing rates that were made under the Crowsnest pass agreement. I do not consider that an entirely fair argument. The rates which are now given under the Crowsnest pass agreement on grain and flour are a concession to our western friends, one that I have already justified and can continue to justify under the proposal that is made now. My hon. friends should not take that as a reason why we should decide to go further in the violation of what I consider is a principle.

Mr. CRERAR: Wherein does the concession arise?

Mr. EULER: In that it is a special agreement in which rates are given that are lower than normal rates and beyond which the railway commission is not able to go. They are specially fixed by parliament and are below the regular rates. That is my argument.

Mr. WARNER: If it is a concession given in the case of the eastbound rates on grain and flour, is it not a burden on the western people that by raising the rates on the commodities going west they have to pay more when they come to buy those commodities?

Mr. EULER: If the rates are raised on the other commodities going west—and there is as yet no ground for believing that will be the case, these rates are to go to the railway commission. We do not know that as a consequence they will be; it is not saddling the western people with anything that is not being borne equally by the other citizens of Canada.

Mr. WARNER: The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. If the rates are raised on goods going west and those rates are charged in the price we pay for the goods, is that not a burden on the west?

Mr. EULER: I do not think I am called upon to answer hypothetical questions. I may say, however, that I do not think there is any discrimination in that way. Westerners would simply be placed on the same footing as are all the other citizens of Canada.

We have had a good deal of argument as to whether rates in western Canada are generally higher than they are in the east. I know that when I come to discuss that question I am liable to meet opposition and perhaps enter on debatable ground.

Mr. BIRD: What does the hon. gentleman mean by "concession?"

Mr. EULER: I was hoping I had got away from that phase of the subject.

Mr. BIRD: Does he mean it is an act of pure generosity on the government's part, or does the observation apply to some right we have in the west?

Mr. EULER: Well I would answer that in this way: I believe that the west has no inherent right to receive such a concession, but I also believe that it may be in the public interest, it may be in the general interest of Canada, that western Canada should have some concessions that will enable them to make progress and to prosper and thus benefit the whole of Canada.

Mr. EVANS: Does the hon. gentleman mean by "concession" that we are getting a service which is rendered at less than cost?

Mr. EULER: I was coming to that point in a few minutes. However, I will answer my hon. friend briefly, yes.

I was beginning to discuss the question of rates. It is said the rates in western Canada are higher than in eastern Canada. The leader of the Progressive party yesterday quoted a good many figures to prove that statement. I could, if I so desired, quote figures which would show that on similar distances on internal points in the central provinces rates are higher than for similar distances on internal points in western Canada. I am not going to do that, and I would simply leave it with this observation, that our freight rate structure is such that you would be able to prove almost anything from the rate figures.

Mr. FORKE: If they are higher, they must be very high, because the internal rates in the west are high.

Mr. EULER: I can show the hon. member a statement in regard to it in black and white, but I will not trouble the House with it now. I shall leave that point with the statement that in northern Ontario, for example, rates are a good deal higher in many instances for similar distances within the province from Toronto, say, to some point in northern Ontario, than for similar distances in western Canada. That being the case, would my hon. friend argue that special agreements should be made in the interests of people living in northern Ontario? If we do that, where are we going to end? Because the same sort of thing will crop up in different parts of Canada. If these rates are not equitable, surely we should be able to trust the fixing of rates to the body properly constituted for that purpose. Something has been said about the fixing of rates in Ontario on the basis of water competition. To be quite frank, I have not attached so much importance to that as have some others. There is no doubt water competition has a good deal to do with the fixing of rates in Ontario, but there are many points in Ontario which are not affected by water competition at all. There may be competition along the water front, but in the interior of Ontario that does not apply. I would add this further: Is it reasonable that those who happen to live in such communities as have advantages because of their geographical location must necessarily be expected to give up any of those advantages for the sake of those who happen not to be so advantagecusly situated? I am not sure that it is correct to say that because a certain rate is given, we will say in Ontario, in a thickly populated district, so much per mile or so much per hundred pounds for so many miles, that absolutely the same rate must prevail in another portion of the country where traffic is less dense.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No one suggested that.

Mr. EULER: That suggestion was made by another hon. member. We have an illustration of that in Ontario. As hon. members know, Ontario has gone into the development of Niagara power. The municipalities that are nearest the source of supply get the lowest rates, and the other municipalities more remote from the Niagara district do not think that they should receive as low a rate as is enjoyed by the municipalities close to Niagara falls, because the cost of carrying that power to the municipalities more distant is greater than in the other case. I have heard of one or two complaints during the regime of Hon. Mr. Drury, when the suggestion was made that there should be a flat rate all over Ontario, but that proposition was never entertained.

I would lay down this definite principle, so far as rates are concerned: that we must have rates throughout Canada that will enable the railways to live.

Mr. FORKE: Of course if you provide that the Railway board is the only authority to fix rates we cannot say any more; that settles that part of it, but do you not think the fact that the products of the central provinces have to be transported 1,000 miles either out or in requires some consideration? These provinces are not self-contained in any way. Everything they use has to be taken in, and everything they sell has to be taken out, and these provinces should have some consideration over other provinces differently situated.

Mr. EULER: I am quite willing to agree with my hon. friend as to that. It is a question how far we can go. I would be quite willing to agree that the rates on grain and flour should be according to the Crowsnest pass agreement, and I think that is a very considerable concession, if I may use that word without getting into trouble. But to say that we should carry the making of rates on all the commodities that might be mentioned into parliament, I think would be very inadvisable indeed.

Mr. GOULD: I was going to remark that the hon. member is evidently unaware that the Prime Minister positively stated on his tour in the west last fall that water competition was a factor in the fixing of railway rates.

Mr. EULER: I have not contended that it had no bearing at all. I said I did not believe it had quite the importance that was sometimes attached to it. It has been claimed that western railway business is very profitable, and the inference is that the west is being discriminated against in favour of the east. Now if I may do so without arousing undue antagonism, I should like to say a few words in regard to that. I have not any extensive figures with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I have it on very good authority —almost as good authority as one can get— that so far as the transportation of grain in western Canada by the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, their operating expenses are 98 per cent of their revenues; that they make money on the short haul, but lose money on the long haul. That leaves a margin of only 2 per cent. That margin of 2 per cent does not nearly cover the fixed charges and overhead which must be taken into account when you arrive at the net profit. so that the statement is made that the carrying of grain even by the Canadian Pacific Railway is not profitable.

Coming to the National Railways, the figures have been quoted before and have been questioned, but I have not yet seen them disproved. In the central region, in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the figures show an operating profit last year of $16,433,-446.96. The United States division showed a profit of $5,480,162.25. The western region showed an operating loss of $1,124,353.49, and the Atlantic region showed an operating loss of $3,545,004.24. These are either operating profits or operating losses, without taking into consideration, as I said before in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the overhead or fixed charges. The president of the National Railways, before the committee on National Railways and Shipping not very long ago, made the statement—and hon. members have probably read it in the account of proceedings—that the Canadian National Railways lost money on every bushel of grain shipped eastward. That was an important statement, made by an authority and deserves some consideration. I might add also that something has been said at times with regard to rates in the United States—

Mr. CRERAR: I would like to clear up that point. I understood my hon. friend to say that the chairman of the National Railways said that the railway lost money on every bushel of grain shipped eastward. Was that from Fort William eastward, or from prairie points to Fort William?

Mr. EULER: Shipped eastward from any point in the prairie provinces, I think.

Mr. FORKE: I think the hon. member for North Waterloo saw the statement of President Beatty at New York, that if the Canadian Northern had been content with their prairie lines to Fort William, they would have been the richest men and the richest railway in the world to-day.

Mr. EULER: Did he say that they would make the money out of carrying grain or by selling land?

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member cannot get away from it like that.

Mr. EULER: I do not know. I have not seen the statement.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member was speaking about the deficit on the western lines and, of course, that includes all those fool lines that were built by authority of this parliament and for which the west is not to blame, such as the line running up to Prince Rupert the operation of which must entail great loss and the duplication of lines throughout the west—lines that were never needed.

Mr. McMASTER: The Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. FORKE: No. The Hudson Bay railway paid for itself. You cannot charge that up to the western lines. If you take just the prairie division where they are performing a useful function, they are paying institutions.

Mr. EULER: I am quite willing to accept that observation, but I have never at any time heard that the westerners disapproved any of those lines while they were being built.

Mr. FORKE: This parliament must assume the responsibility for them.

Mr. EULER: Very well. I am coming a little later to figures, which do not include the line running to Prince Rupert—which deal entirely with grain and which figures, I think, are quite authoritative. I was going to quote here some figures which I have with regard to rates in the United States.

Mr. GOULD: If the hon. member's statement is correct—and I am accepting it as correct—that there is a deficit on the National railways at the present time in moving grain eastward, is it not foolish to vote $5,000,000 for the Quebec harbour?

Mr. EULER: I am sure the committee does not expect me to go into a debate on the merits of the Quebec harbour.

Mr. GOULD: The point is there just the same.

Mr. EULER: It is stated by the National railway authorities that if the general rates that now apply on the Great Northern railway in the United States were applied to the National railways in western Canada, the revenues, and consequently, the operating profits, would be $20,473,000 greater than they were.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Is that on the same volume of grain?

Mr. EULER: I have been fairly patient, I think, and I will give the hon. member an opportunity in a moment. It is also stated that if the rates on the Northern Pacific were applied to the National railways—and this applies to general traffic—the revenues and consequently the operating profits would have been $24,608,000 greater than they were, an amount sufficiently large, if added to the operating profits which the National railways actually had last year, to pay the fixed charges to the general public.

Mr. COOTE: Was that in 1924?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: What does the hon. member think would have happened to the men who were paying those rates?

Mr. EULER: A little later I will give hon. gentlemen the reason for my making these remarks. I might say now that I am not giving these citations in order to advocate that rates in western Canada should be increased. That is not my purpose at all.

Mr. COOTE: Has the hon. member the figures showing the quantity moved by the railways in the United States?

Mr. EULER: I have not. I merely have the net results. The revenue in the western region of Canada in 1924 on all commodities other than grain averaged 11.23 mills per ton-mile. If grain were included, then those revenues shrink to the astonishing figure of 7.63 mills per ton-mile as compared with the central region of 11.12 mills per ton-mile for all traffic. Those are official figures, and I think they would tend at least to confirm the view that grain is being carried at a loss. The operating loss on the Nationals, as was given this afternoon, on grain in western Canada was in 1923, $6,000,000. I am giving it just in round numbers. Last year, in 1924, the operating loss on grain was $5,812,000. I would draw attention to this significant fact, because it goes to prove what I have said before, that when less grain was carried—because less was carried in 1924 than in 1923—the loss was slightly less. I am going to leave that rather disagreeable subject, because I admit that I dislike to mention facts that are unpalatable to my western friends.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. EVANS: Was that loss occasioned on the western division or the eastern division, because the hon. gentleman must remember that there are two rates?

Mr. EULER: My information gives that as being a loss sustained on the western division. I am not giving these figures, showing that railway business in western Canada is not profitable, and certainly not so far as grain is concerned to urge an increase of western rates, but I give them to impress, if possible, on my hon. friends opposite that, after all, the proposal which is made in this bill is a very generous one and one which, it seems to me, ought to be accepted without much protest.

Mr. BRISTOL: In reference to the matter that the hon. member is speaking about, has he seen a report that was distributed, I think, to nearly every member of parliament, by the Canadian Pacific, that rates allowed to our western people were nine cents per bushel less to the head of the lakes than rates that are allowed by the United States railways to the American farmers? I have a copy of it.

Mr. EULER: I have not seen that particular statement, but I have seen a similar one which shows that rates in the western states are a good deal higher than they are in Canada.

Mr. CRERAR: We have heard that for years.

Mr. EULER: If my figures are correct, then under the proposal that is at present before the committee the government maintains losing rates on grain in the interest of the producers of western Canada. That means a great deal. It is giving more under the proposal that is now before the committee than was enjoyed by western Canada formerly, because, as has been stated by the Minister of Railways, it extends the scope of the application of those rates two-fold. The application of Crow rates is extended to all lines now in existence, both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National, and as well, I presume, to all lines that will be constructed in the future unless a change is made later on with regard to grain rates.

Mr. COOTE: I think the hon. member said that the president of the National Railways stated that they had lost money on every bushel of grain hauled eastward. Did he make a similar statement with regard to grain hauled westward?

Mr. EULER: He did not. He said that he makes a little money on grain hauled westward.

Mr. COOTE: Would the hon. member be willing to give his opinion whether the farmers of Alberta should not have a similar rate westward to that which they have eastward?

Mr. EULER: I would say this, that I do not like the idea that there should be any discrimination. If it is at all possible—I should like to see the same rates from the prairies to Pacific ports, proportionately speaking, as those that apply on grain going to the east. If these are facts as I have stated them, I want to repeat this, that I think our friends opposite ought to appreciate what is proposed in the legislation now before the House. Discrimination must be removed. I do not believe there is one hon. member in the Progressive party who will say otherwise. We have in Ontario a condition of affairs that is, perhaps, not fully appreciated by our hon. friends from the west, but it cannot be allowed to continue. Who shall remedy it? There is only one unbiased body in this country, a body specially created for that particular work. That body is the Board of Railway Commissioners, and one of its most important functions is the fixing of rates.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): The hon. gentleman suggests that discriminations should be abolished. Does he mean discrimination as between different territories in the west, or does he mean that in so far as it is possible for the railway commission to do so, the general level of rates east and west ought to be the same.

Mr. EULER: I do not know that I can go into any extended argument on that point. I say that there should be no unfair discrimination against any interest or any class of people, or any industry or commodity, east or west, north or south, or in any other direction. I stated at the outset that I believed in the principle that all rates should be fixed by the railway board and not by the parliament of Canada. We are departing to some extent from that principle inasmuch as we are allowing by act of parliament the continuance of the Crowsnest rates on grain and flour. But I am willing to compromise to that extent, and I am doing so for the same reason as influenced me in 1922 as a member of the committee; I feel that reduced rates on grain will be in the interests of harmony as well as in the interests of the country as a whole.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the hon. member is agreeable to having these preferential rates on wheat and flour, why not extend them to live stock, which are grain-fed? Why not extend the principle further if you extend it at all?

Mr. EULER: I am free to admit that I may be open to a charge of inconsistency in violating the principle I have laid down; but it is merely a matter of the degree to which we think it advisable to go in matters of this kind. I do not desire to go any further in violation of that principle than we have already gone in the legislation now pending.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Does the hon. member not think it would be better to have the rates apply to live stock?

Mr. EULER: If it is advisable to make a concession in relation to grain and flour it might be advisable to do the same thing in the case of live stock. But possibly somebody would want the rates applied to building material or agricultural implements or other articles. The varying of the principle cannot be carried too far.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Certainly.

Mr. EULER: There are occasions when it may be in the interests of the country and of good business—I am not going to say good politics, because I do not care much about that—to depart from a too strict adherence to any particular principle.

Mr. FORKE: It shall be counted to you for righteousness.

Mr. EULER: Now, what other remedy can hon. gentlemen offer? My hon. friends opposite, although they have not done so with any great degree of definiteness, have rather advocated that the rates on all these commodities should apply throughout Canada on all railways that are now in existence and not only on those that were in existence before 1897. The objections to that proposal are apparent. In the first place, it deliberately extends what I do not like to see extended, the principle of rate-making by parliament; and there is a second objection to it. If the commodities now in the Crowsnest agreement are all given the Crowsnest rates, the shippers of similar commodities in the same class will demand the same rate. And why should they not have it? For instance, in the Crowsnest list of commodities we have farm implements. The Crow rate on implements is 68½ cents from Toronto to Winnipeg. Now, there are other articles of machinery which perhaps are as important even to the farmer himself as agricultural implements, and certainly they are important to many residents of western Canada. Yet other machinery, which ordinarily is in the same rate classification as agricultural implements, carries a rate of about $1.08 per hundred pounds from Toronto to Winnipeg. The manufacturers—or rather the consumers, we will say, because it is argued that the consumers pay the freight—might very well say, "Why should we be discriminated against in favour of the users of agricultural implements? That is only one instance. Coal oil is another. The Crow rate from Toronto to Winnipeg is 65½ cents, but coal oil ordinarily is in the same rate classification as all other oils; yet all other oils are required to pay a rate of $1.14. Would that not constitute discrimination?

Mr. COOTE: How could it be discrimination when these articles are covered by special agreement made in 1897?

Mr. EULER: We are not recognising the agreement of 1897 now; henceforward the conditions will be different. But suppose we consider the suggestion that these articles that are now in the Crowsnest agreement should all be restored and the Crowsnest rates made applicable all along the line, on all lines of railway. What would happen? You would immediately have requests from those shipping similar articles and who were being charged a higher rate, for equal treatment and you could not fairly refuse them the same rates. So that the whole situation bristles with difficulties that may not be at present apparent to hon. members.

The railway board is charged with the duty of making rates fair and equitable to all. We have set up the board to do that work. Why then not let the board perform that duty? They are infinitely better qualified to make these rates than are members of parliament. If parliament has no confidence in the railway board—and that sentiment has been expressed by some hon. members—then the remedy is not to throw the business of rate-making into this House; the remedy is so to constitute your board that you will have confidence in it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Why not give the board full control over the whole matter, if that is the hon. member's opinion?

Mr. EULER: I have answered that question already.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: But you are approving of this bill.

Mr. EULER: Yes, and I have already stated my reason for so doing. In conclusion, I would appeal to my hon. friends opposite, for whose needs we on this side of the House have the greatest sympathy, to accept the proposal which is now made in this legislation. It may seem to them to be a yielding of some advantage which I think is more fancied than real, because in the present proposal they are receiving a great deal more than they now have under the law as it is construed by the courts. If they can accept this measure it will show that they appreciate the fact that sometimes it is necessary to make some compromise; and if they do this I believe they will find it in the end in the general interests of the country.

Mr. JELLIFF: Will the hon. member explain how the railway commission fixes rates, in other words, who are the chief architects of these so-called rate structures?

Mr. EULER: It is regrettable that the hon. member was not in the House this afternoon when the member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) was speaking. As ex-chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners that hon. gentleman is much better qualified to go into the intricacies of rate-making than I am. I have a suspicion however that railway rates in the past have been fixed on the basis of what the traffic will bear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, the ground has been well covered, but as a representative of Winnipeg I feel I must join with other western members in protesting against the proposal contained in the bill now before us. Urgent appeals have been made that we should view this from a national standpoint. I submit that any truly national policy is dependent upon its meeting the needs of every section of the community. The people of the west feel that this measure will not meet their needs. I believe that measures of this kind are the sledge hammer blows that are driving the wedges that are separating the various parts of Canada. I cannot but utter a warning to the government from another angle altogether to that taken by the leader of the opposition—if measures of this kind are persisted in you cannot expect to maintain a united Canada. We all plead for unity, but that unity is possible only under certain conditions. The existence of the west is dependent almost entirely upon proper transportation. Those who have lived all their lives in the east perhaps can hardly realize how different the west is in this regard. Here for a hundred years communities have lived more or less self-contained, their markets to a considerable extent close at hand. But without transportation the west would still be in the control of the Indians; and if we do not give suitable transportation rates the west might as well revert to the Indians. Make freight rates prohibitive and you strangle our agriculture. The markets of the west are not local markets. We are told again and again that it is well that we should build up industries in order that we might have local markets. Suppose we should attempt to do that in the west where would the east be under those circumstances? The people of the east are dependent upon the west, to a certain extent at least, for their markets, but those markets are available only so long as we are able to ship large quantities of foodstuffs overseas. I repeat, our western markets are not local, and that should be taken into consideration

This bill deprives the west, as has been repeated again and again, of certain statutory guarantees. And this is the main objection —it offers no satisfactory guarantees in return. It leaves the west to the tender mercies of the railway commission. Now, we may as well frankly recognize that the west has to a considerable extent lost confidence in that commission as now constituted. It is not merely a question of personnel. It is based on the fact that the commission is very largely working on principles which cannot continue to be applied if the west is to prosper. The commission is located more or less in the east, it is subject to the principles and ideals pertaining to this part of the country—principles and ideals which no doubt are held by the majority in Canada—and thus it cannot be expected to formulate policies that will meet the needs of the west.

Mr. McMASTER: Are the principles and ideals of the west essentially different from those of the east?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, in some very important points.

Mr. HOEY: Free trade.

Mr. COOTE: Ten per cent dividends; we think five per cent good enough.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: One or two of these points I should like to mention. We all appeal to general principles, and no one is more fond of doing so than my good friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster). The trouble is that people who hold the most diverse views and advocate the most adverse policies may appeal to the same general principles. The whole matter is one of the application of those principles. For instance, at the present time we hear a good deal about equalization. We all say, if we could only have equalization—whatever that means—we would all be happy. But what do we mean by equalization? As soon as we begin to define it we are all at sixes and sevens again. As I have heard this word repeated so often, I have thought of the little story that is familiar to many of us of the old Scotch lady, who returned from church greatly edified. On being asked the cause of her elation, she answered, "Oh, it was the sough of that blessed word Mesopotamia." I am inclined to believe that the government is trying to lull the country into a sense of false security by repeating frequently enough that remarkable word—equalization.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) has pointed out to-day that this bill makes no provision whatever for equalization of rates as between provinces. I submit we might very well go further than the demand of the hon. member for Mackenzie. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) hardly likes to admit that geographical location ought to have any very great weight in the determining of freight rates. I submit that it is not an unheard of principle that geographical location should very decidedly determine rate policies. Let me give a very simple illustration. We are all supposed to be here on equal terms. When I come from Winnipeg my fare is paid by the government; the fare of the member for Skeena (Mr. Stork) is also paid by the government; but his fare is very different from mine, and mine is very different from that of a member from Montreal. However, the arrangements are made in such a way as, approximately at least, to equalize the position of all of us. I wonder if that principle were applied to the western farmer where we would be. Supposing we tried to place the western farmer in as good a position in regard to the world markets as is the eastern farmer? The member for Brome asked me a little while ago wherein our principles differ. I should like to put that proposition to him. Will he admit its soundness? Its application would mean the elimination of freight rates entirely as far as payment by the west is concerned.

Mr. McMASTER: And it would mean that the western farmer would pay a very great deal more for his land.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It might. But I imagine some eastern people would be very loath to admit a principle of that kind. To a very considerable extent we have admitted that principle in dealing with our postal rates, and I can send a letter three thousand miles for exactly the same charge as I can send another letter a mile. I am not going to urge that this principle should be applied in this particular case, because there are a great many other factors entering into it—for instance, some people think we have better land in the west—but I would urge that this question of geographical location cannot be ignored, and that behind the plea that is frequently made, "In the east you have water competition," there lies this further geographical fact, that the industry of the west is almost entirely built up on our transportation system, and that unless we have that transportation system arranged on such a basis that it is possible for the west to produce at a reasonable cost, the west will be unable to carry on.

The right hon. leader of the opposition spoke against special privilege. He suggested that the west claimed special privileges. Again let me refer to my illustration of the payment of the transportation expenses of the members of this House. Would anyone seriously claim that because the member for Skeena is paid say $100 for his transportation expenses and the member for, say George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) $5, that there is a case of gross discrimination, a case of special privilege? I think not. The fact is that by paying one member much more than the other we are simply bringing about a measure of equality. These are some of the principles that underlie this very complicated question that we have before us. We have heard the appeal made again and again in this House that the freight rates must permit the railways to live. I should like to place side by side with that, this plea, that the freight rates must permit the west to live. This is all we ask. Let me say that I do not think that the majority of the members of this House, even although we have been trying to make out our case here during the last four years, yet realize the serious situation that exists in the west.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How does the hon. member justify paying the members of this House outside the 400-mile limit 10 cents a mile, whereas those within 390 miles of Ottawa get nothing?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know that I would attempt to justify that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is what you have been attempting to justify.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Oh no, something very different indeed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is the regulation to which you have been referring.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My reference was simply by way of illustration. I am attempting to put forward the principle which I think should not be lost sight of in considering this question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: My hon. friend will admit that the members of this House outside the 400-mile limit have a free pass, and they collect 10 cents per mile additional coming and going, and those within the 400-mile limit do not receive anything.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sure the hon. member does not intend me to go into that matter. I understand that the amount paid the members is by way of allowance for travelling expenses, not for transportation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is for transportation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let me review very briefly the situation as it appeals to some of us who make no claim whatever to being experts in this field.

The Crowsnest agreement we regard as a contract. I think that is admitted. The underlying principle is that of safeguarding the west by maximum rates. The courts have decided that the agreement stands, but have robbed it of value. It is the duty of the highest court, the parliament of Canada, to give effect to the underlying principle. I do not know that I need to enlarge upon that statement. We are not insisting upon the agreement, according to strict legal interpretation, being maintained. We recognize that the situation is absolutely anomalous, that there must be changes, but we do say that parliament, as the highest court of this country, ought to give effect to the underlying principle, that of safeguarding the west by maximum rates. I quite agree that parliament is not the body to erect a freight rate structure. Any of us who has even glanced over the schedules realizes the difficulties, and these have been pointed out at length to this House, but I would urge that it is the duty of parliament to decide on basic principles.

The proposed legislation concedes part of the agreement. Why not the whole? It is all very well for the member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) to admit generously that he is not quite consistent in conceding a part, but I submit that underneath that admission, there is more or less a recognition of the real difficulties which are inherent in the situation, and the concession is in reality a concession to certain rights that ought to be recognized. The only reason given by the Minister of Railways for the rejection of the recognition of the whole principle is that the revenues of the railroad would not stand it. He offers no figures in substantiation, and, more serious still, he offers no alternative.

I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that there are alternatives. Sooner or later we must change the entire basis on which the revenues of the railways are collected. We all know something of the political jobbery, the incompetence and graft that have characterized the history of the construction of railways in Canada. I do not intend to go into this matter, but merely by way of illustration let me call attention to one or two facts as given us in the Drayton-Acworth report back in 1917:

> The property investment of the Canadian Northern Railway system is stated in the balance sheet of June 30, 1916, at $494,112,489.34. This figure admittedly has been written up to include $100,000,000 of capital stock. And this stock, as we have already said, was issued without any cash consideration. We have endeavoured to ascertain the actual cost of the system. From the company's official reports and special statement supplied to us, we have ascertained that the maximum cash investment that can have been made in the property is $383,302,451.33.

Thus fictitious capital stock is made a charge upon production. One other statement with regard to the Canadian Pacific railway. Here is a summary of the government aid that has been granted to the Canadian Pacific railway:

Completed road and surveys cost the government	$37,785,320
Cash subsidies	66,905,481
Lands sold	123,810,124
Total public assistance	228,500,925
Company's valuation put on unsold lands	119,259,000
	$347,759,925

The public has very largely paid for the road, and then private enterprise demands dividends on government grants. It is possible, I urge, quite possible, that instead of saying that we will allow the railways to live, that is, to pay dividends on these huge sums, we might alter the whole basis on which we compute these dividends.

One other suggestion that I would offer in closing has been put forward on several occasions during this session of the House, and that is the amalgamation of the railways into one system. That, it would seem, is the only ultimate solution that lies before us. It is inevitable sooner or later; why not face it? We are informed that during the first four months of this year the gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific railway dropped $6,000,000 as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The gross earnings of the Canadian National Railway dropped a similar amount, $6,000,000, over the gross earnings of the corresponding period of last year. How long can this state of affairs continue? It is being kept going at the present time very largely at the expense of the producer of this country. The labour people are being taxed, the employees of the railroads are being taxed, but worse still they are being laid off in large numbers in order that the railroads may make any showing at all. I need not speak for the farmers and the business men. I repeat how long can this state of affairs continue. We propose by this bill to penalize still further the producers of the west and not only the primary producers but a large number of people engaged in the distributional system. In our city of Winnipeg we are a long way from the seaboard. We are—

12 m.

Mr. CANNON: Did the hon. member know it when he got there?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not catch the bearing of the question.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member seems to think we ought to bring the ocean nearer to him.

Mr. CAMPBELL: You can do it by building the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. CANNON: I am talking to the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg; one at a time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would say simply that we recognize that Winnipeg and the west are located a long way from the seaboard and therefore labour under certain disadvantages. We recognize that the completion of the Panama Canal and the shipment of the grain westward, which is quite inevitable, will undoubtedly mean some very great changes in the situation. We ask that in the consideration of these freight rates due regard should be paid to the welfare of all sections of the community. We think that is the only basis on which we can maintain our present relations as provinces in one federation. I do not plead for the maintenance of the Crowsnest pass agreement as it is to-day—I can see as everybody must that it should be revised—but I should like to plead for the recognition of the underlying principle, that is the maintenance of certain maximum rates, and I do so on the ground of the peculiar geographical position of western Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM: Some of the older members on both sides of the House, outside of ourselves, think it is about time to adjourn as we have to meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. I had hoped to have this bill reported in its entirety from the committee to-day, but it looks as if we would have to take an hour or so to-morrow forenoon. But I do want to say seriously that I think the majority of the House will agree with me that this bill must be finished to-morrow, and as early as possible. So without the forty-minute rule being in I would suggest to the members that they arrive at that conclusion unanimously in order that there will be no disagreeable feeling when we put the bill through to-morrow. What I want to do is make a little advancement after a whole day's conversation and to get—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the House to take that as an intimation that the government proposes to put on closure to-morrow?

Mr. GRAHAM: No, the good sense of the members of the House themselves will operate as a closure, I think, to-morrow.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What does the minister mean by "finishing the bill"? We are ready to finish it now.

Mr. GRAHAM: Putting on the finishing touches would, perhaps, be more appropriate. So that we may make a little progress I should like to have the committee consent that we pass sections one and two which merely repeal the act of 1922 and that of 1919, in order that I may move an amendment to the next clause. It will then go on Hansard, and be in the hands of hon. gentlemen to-morrow. Then I will ask the committee to rise and report progress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It appears to me that we have adopted a rather unusual procedure during the present session, and that is of adopting the second reading of bills without any discussion in order that full discussion may take place in the committee of the Whole. This bill did not receive any consideration in the second reading. On the contrary we immediately went into committee of the Whole and then the minister outlined the objects of the bill. The discussion which has been going on since, used to take place on the motion for the second reading. Bearing in mind the fact that this bill is one of the most important measures that could possibly come before parliament it seems to me that it is a most unusual course to follow, and I question the wisdom of even passing one or two sections of the bill at this stage.

Sections one and two agreed to.

[Mr. Graham.]

On section three—Power to fix rates and to enforce fair and reasonable rate structure.

Mr. GRAHAM moved to add at the end of subsection five the following:

But shall apply to all the territory west of Fort William covered by tariffs filed with the board under the terms of said agreement at the date of the passing of this act, and to all lines of railways now or hereafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament within such territory.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to ask the minister one question, I did not quite catch his explanation. It is not understood that by allowing this amendment to be read we concur in it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): How could that happen?

Mr. GRAHAM: The reason for moving the amendment is that hon. members may have it in Hansard before them in the morning.

Progress reported.

FRUIT ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been receive from the Senate informing this House that the Senate doth not insist upon their amendment made to Bill No. 117, an Act to amend the Fruit Act, to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTINGS OF COMMITTEES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That as in accordance with the resolution adopted on the 16th instant the House will be meeting at 11 o'clock for the remainder of the session, the standing committees of the House be given leave to sit while the House is in session.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion requires unanimous consent, of course.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not feel like giving consent to this. I had not heard of it before. I do not know how many committees now have authority to sit while the House is in session, but if many of the committees meet in the morning the attendance in the House of Commons will be even more meagre than usual. I suggest that the motion stand over until to-morrow.

Mr. GRAHAM: The trouble is that the committees sit at 11 o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will not hurt to-morrow.

Motion stands.

OCEAN SHIPPING RATES

MOTION TO PRINT EVIDENCE OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the report and proceedings of and evidence taken by the special committee appointed to consider a resolution to give the government of Canada control over certain ocean rates be printed as an appendix to the journals of the House of the present session.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I cannot consent to that resolution. I think it should stand over until to-morrow.

Motion stands.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. Thursday.

Thursday, June 18, 1925

The House met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Vercheres) presented the first report of the select standing committee on Privileges and Elections as follows:

Your committee have considered Bill No. 148, an act to amend the Dominion Elections Act and beg to report the same with amendments.

He said: The bill as amended by the committee has been reprinted.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. W. G. RAYMOND (Brantford) moved:

That the recommendations contained in the report of the Old Age Pensions committee be concurred in.

He said: I may say for the information of those members who have not had time to look into this matter that the committee has given the most careful attention to the replies received from the premiers of the various provinces, and has found that the provinces of the Dominion were not inclined to enter into the proposition as outlined in the report. Some suggested that it was a matter entirely for the federal government and not for the provincial governments at all. As hon. members will find by referring to the report, the matter was referred to the Department of Justice, which department forwarded a very clear and concise opinion, in which it was stated that it was rather a matter for the provinces than for the federal government; but that the federal government might contribute to the funds required if they saw fit to do so. We thought it better to make the recommendation contained in our report, rather than to take the matter up alone at the present time, as it would involve too much expense. It would necessitate an annual expenditure of a large amount of money, and we have therefore recommended in the report that the government arrange for a meeting with the premiers of the various provinces during the recess, with a view to arriving at a scheme for a co-operative old age pension; and secondly, that the chairman and one other member be invited to attend this conference; and thirdly that this report be sent to the premiers of each province. Hon. gentlemen will observe that the recommendation involves no expenditure and no responsibility further than the continuance of the idea of establishing in Canada an old age pension system, which the committee think is very desirable, and would like to see it proceeded with. Therefore the committee has made this recommendation as the most feasible manner of dealing with the matter.

I do not think it is necessary now to go into the general question of old age pensions. I think we have arrived at that degree of advancement and civilization in this country when it is generally conceded that we are lacking in this matter, and that we should have an old age pension scheme in Canada. This government has taken the initial step and we hope the matter will be proceeded with and prosecuted until it arrives at a successful conclusion in a co-operative movement between the federal government and the provincial governments.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (East Calgary): I wish to express my personal disapproval of the report of the committee and to give briefly my reasons for disapproving. I think this committee has been working on a wrong line. It has been endeavouring to arrive at some scheme of old age pensions that would embrace the voluntary co-operation of the provinces. We have been instructed by the Justice department that we cannot constitutionally pass legislation that would be obligatory on the provinces. Still the committee persists in its course. I presume that if all the provinces of Canada voluntarily accepted the committee's proposal we might possibly obtain an old age pension scheme along the line of the committee's report, but I do not think that any member of this House will anticipate that all the provinces of Canada will agree to such a scheme anywhere this side of the next thousand years. I do not think there is the slightest possibility of getting an old age pension scheme along the lines of the proposal of the committee. I do not say of course that the committee has not been perfectly sincere in its quest and in its recommendations, but if hon. members will go over the replies which have come to us from the premiers of the various provinces it will be found that nearly all consider old age pensions entirely a federal matter and will have nothing to do with it. The provincial governments point out the injustice which would come to the provinces which would not come into the scheme, and consequently, if we are to pay any attention at all to the advice of the provinces, we will abandon the scheme suggested by the committee, and proceed at once with a scheme which would be entirely federal, leaving the responsibility on the federal government. We have been told by the chairman of the committee (Mr. Raymond), that the committee does not consider that Canada can stand the financial pressure involved in raising the moneys required to carry out this old age pension scheme; the committee, however, think it could be done if the provinces came in. It is surely clear that it would take the same amount of money whether the provinces came in or not, and the taxpayers of Canada are not so foolish as to imagine they pay any less if they pay part of it through the municipalities, part of it through the provincial government and part of it through the federal government. They know perfectly well that if they pay so much in taxes, they pay the same amount no matter how often you divide it. On the other hand to say that we cannot afford it is a confession which I, as a member of this House, do not wish to concur in. I believe we can afford it; but if it be so that we cannot afford it, let us frankly say so and not continue making a pretence that we are on the way to obtaining old age pension legislation by referring the whole question to a conference.

I think the report of the committee recommends that at a meeting to be held this summer; when the provincial premiers are in conference with the federal government in respect to constitutional amendments, this matter is to be brought up. And a report is to be given at the next session of parliament. I do not think instructions given by this session of parliament will be considered binding by another session of parliament. Further, the conference that will be held this summer will have all they can deal with without attempting to deal with this matter at all. If they deal with it, it will be in a very cursory fashion which will not be satisfactory. Without discussing this matter further I beg to move:

[Mr. Irvine.]

That this report be referred back to the committee with instructions to consider and report on a purely federal scheme.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): I regret very much that while we can afford to spend money on material works—millions, for instance, for wharves and branch lines—we cannot afford to take care of the aged and infirm in our cities and towns who are a charge on the municipalities. There are thousands of good old citizens in the city from which I come who need care. That city contributes $100,000,000 of revenue and should receive some assistance from the federal government as the cities do in England by way of pensions for the old. When the British North America Act was passed in 1867 the Fathers of Confederation could not foresee everything, such as the modern social problems, problems which, I am sorry to say, are being solved everywhere but in Canada. The Old Mother Country leads. I am sorry that a country like Canada should not be a practical country, that we should not be a practical people and this a practical parliament. We have money for branch lines and breakwaters, some of them quite unnecessary; but apparently we are unable to take care of our aged people who are driven to the wall. This is a federal, not provincial, matter. We have the power to act. But still we do nothing even in this necessary and charitable work for the good of those of our people who are no longer able to provide for themselves.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the remarks of the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Irvine) when he says that the Justice department reported that it would be impossible for the Dominion to co-operate with the provinces in this matter.

Mr. IRVINE: I did not say that.

Mr. NEILL: That is what I gathered from the hon. gentleman's remarks. Perhaps he will correct his statement.

Mr. IRVINE: I pointed out that the Justice department advised us that it was outside of the jurisdiction of the federal parliament to proceed with a scheme such as is proposed by the committee. The hon. member should read the report.

Mr. NEILL: I take exception to that. That, to my mind, is not the report of the Justice department. What the Justice department reported was that under the British North America Act the duty of functioning an old age pension scheme devolved primarily on the provinces, but it said that it did not preclude any assistance which this Dominion might extend by way of voluntary grant, but that it would not be possible for it to establish and operate a scheme under its own auspices if it involved any measure of compulsion. That is to say, if it required the provinces to pay so much or if it required the individual to pay so much, then we would be exceeding our jurisdiction. It, however, expressly left the door open for any assistance by the Dominion to a co-operative scheme formulated by the provinces. The hon. member for East Calgary says that he anticipates that this co-operative scheme must essentially be a failure and never come to anything because it will be a long time, if ever, before the whole nine provinces will agree to it. The scheme recommended by the committee last year and again endorsed this year did not contemplate that there should be unanimous action by the provinces; it suggested assistance by the Dominion government to any province, and all provinces, if and when they decided to avail themselves of it. I remember the same remark was made—"You will never get the provinces to come in,"—when this government a number of years ago proposed to vote, I think, $20,000,000 for the encouragement of good roads in the different provinces. It was said that the scheme would be unworkable; that the different provinces would not come in. The matter, however, was left optional; those that wished to come in could come in, and those that decided to stay out could do so. In the final result, I believe they have all come in and taken advantage of the assistance offered by the Dominion government.

I am aware that in the replies received from the different provinces, the tendency was to "pass the buck" to the Dominion government. They all suggested that they did not want to do the work and they did want the Dominion government to do it. But there are two features which will, perhaps, somewhat modify their views now. At that time they were not in possession of the report of the Department of Justice which says that is not our business to assume entirely the burden of any scheme of that kind and which places the responsibility directly and finally upon the provinces. Perhaps, had they been informed of that decision they would not have taken the position they did, and when they are informed of it they may see fit to change their point of view. That is why the committee recommended that the matter be taken up at the conference which is to be held this fall. The provinces may be given full information of that advice of the Justice department; and when the other features of the matter have been explained to them, they may be led to assume their responsibilities in this regard. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) says, that Britain pays its old age pensions out of the federal treasury. Certainly, but the British government has control of all the taxable resources of the British nation. We do not occupy the same position in Canada. We only control part of the revenues of Canada and the provinces control a very large part. It is true, as the hon. member for East Calgary says, that the expense will be the same, whether the money comes, half out of the Dominion and half out of the provinces, or entirely out of the federal resources. But that is only begging the question, because we are here as guardians of the federal resources, and it is not our function to spend the public money with which we are entrusted in order to succour the finances of provinces whose duty it is to assume that responsibility. While the total cost will be the same, it is not our duty to pay out money for the benefit of the provinces when the British North America Act has decreed that they are to do so. If we once give way on that point, then we shall be asked to assume other obligations—education, for instance—of the different provinces. We must assume some responsibility in dealing with the public money of Canada as compared with that of the provinces.

My hon. friend (Mr. Irvine) takes exception to the fact that this conference has been called primarily for another purpose, that is, to deal with Senate reform. He suggests that there should be a separate conference. But it is very unreasonable, I think, to ask that representatives of the provinces should be called from such vast distances as we have in Canada, specially for the purpose of considering this one subject, when the provinces are meeting together in any case for another purpose. Would it make any difference if they were called a week later, or a day after the conference on the other subject? Surely the same representatives could stay a day or two longer and hold a conference on this question. The suggestion that they cannot discuss it this fall is, I think, an untenable one.

There is no member of this House to whom I would yield in the desire to see an old age pensions scheme gone ahead with. I come from a district comprising workers almost entirely, and I know that such a scheme would be favoured there. At the same time, however, I must recognize my responsibility as a member of parliament to the whole of Canada, and I am not prepared to stand here and, for the sake of a little cheap applause in my constituency, ask the Dominion of Canada to saddle itself with a liability running into twenty-three or twenty-four million dollars a year. It is an object devoutly to be wished in the future; but at the present time and under our present taxation and financial conditions we are not entitled to ask the government to go into such a large annual expenditure especially in view of the ruling of the Justice department that it is a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN (Cumberland): As a member of the committee which has been considering the bill I have endeavoured to give it my best attention. I am a firm believer in old age pensions; I believe it is one of the great questions before the people of the country to-day. I do not admit that we cannot afford to put such a scheme into effect even if we had to do it federally alone. Australia, which is not as rich a country as this, is able to carry old age pensions, and the same is true of other parts of the Empire and of the civilized world generally. I do not agree therefore that, even as a federal government alone, we could not carry on an old age pension scheme. But I want to see results. To-day the poor are being taken care of by the provincial and municipal authorities and we have suggested a scheme whereby $20 a month will be paid to old people. The committee has recommended that this government provide one-half of the amount, or $10, the provinces to contribute the other half. The proposal has been referred to the provinces and I am bound to say that in my opinion they have replied without having given the matter serious consideration, because I contend that it is in their interests, from the financial point of view alone, altogether apart from sentimental reasons, to accept the proposal. Under our scheme they would contribute $10 towards the maintenance of every poor person in the province, whereas under present conditions it is costing them at least $20 a month. The provinces therefore would stand to gain rather than lose if this scheme which we propose were put into effect. I am inclined to think that when the reference was made to the provinces they felt that this was a matter altogether within the scope of the federal authority, and they replied to this effect without giving the proposal due consideration. For that reason I think it is desirable that a conference should be called. And in this connection I would point out that the committee in its recommendation does not ask that the matter be referred to the conference which it is proposed to hold on any other subjects; the suggestion is that a special conference be called to consider this particular matter. I believe that if the premiers of the different provinces came together we could convince them that altogether apart from the sentimental reason, the provinces would stand to gain financially if they adopted this scheme; and I have no doubt that on that ground we could put it through. My hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Irvine) thinks that we should go ahead at the present time without reference to the provinces at all. That is more easily said than done. It sounds very well; but it is not practical at the present time. The day will come when such a course will be advisable if the provinces refuse to contribute. But I submit that the provinces have the necessary machinery for carrying on this work, and in our report we recommend that they should distribute the pensions; and as they are nearer to the people to be benefited than the federal government could possibly be, I believe it would be the proper thing to call a special conference between this government and the authorities of the provinces to consider this very important matter and if possible to come to a satisfactory conclusion. I would vote against the amendment of the hon. member for East Calgary for another reason; at this stage of the session, within a very few days of prorogation, it is no time for the committee seriously to take up anew any consideration of this problem. I think it is better to obtain results in a practical way than to vote for motions that are simply illusory, for this is merely throwing dust in the eyes of the people of Canada. What we want is action; we want to put money into the pockets of the needy old men and women of the country. I think a conference with the provinces would surely work out some satisfactory solution of the question and I trust that the result will be the institution of a joint old age pensions scheme.

I am afraid we do not pay sufficient attention to the question of old age pensions. In my humble opinion the prospect that men must face in the twilight of life, without sufficient means to carry on for the rest of their days, is responsible for more pain and anguish than possibly we imagine, and I do think that one of the greatest duties we owe the country, as a federal parliament is to provide for these old people some means of living decently after they have properly contributed their share to the state.

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (West Calgary): I want to indicate briefly my reasons for voting for the amendment and against the proposal of the committee. The committee has had this matter under consideration a great many months, not only during this session but in the preceding session as well; and last session, after communications had been received from the provincial governments, the conclusion was reached that nothing like unanimity could be secured from the provincial authorities in regard to this scheme. This year apparently, for what reason I do not know, the committee seems to have followed the same path, having tried to secure the consent of the provinces. And again it has failed. I think we all agree as to the necessity for an old age pensions scheme in Canada. There is no one who would not approve of a proposal of that character, carried out in accordance with constitutional necessity. Speaking for myself, while I favour this scheme, I am not going to be a party to loving the proposal to death by referring it to any conference to be called some time in the future. What hope is there of securing anything like unanimity by means of a conference? The committee so far has not secured that unanimity; is there any hope that the conference will secure it?

Mr. GOOD: Is unanimity necessary?

Mr. SHAW: I do not think it is; I am coming to that point. Now, just to illustrate what I mean, I want to refer to the summarized answers of the various provinces in Canada to the proposal made by the committee:

New Brunswick. This government does not disapprove the principle of old age pensions. It would be impossible, however, to commit the province to any action in this matter at the present moment, as it is now considering the establishment of "widows'" pensions.

What hope is there of securing any consent from New Brunswick?

Quebec. Considering the obligations actually imposed upon the province, there could be no question of adopting a law which would take care of old age pensions at the present time.

That is the attitude of the province of Quebec. Is there any reason for thinking that if a conference were called in the next few months they are going to change their attitude at the request of the chairman of the committee and of some other members of the committee who may then be present?

Nova Scotia. Without a further and better understanding of the subject matter, and without an opportunity to fully discuss the matter with the committee, no action would be taken upon the matter at present.

Prince Edward Island. This province, having no municipal government, furnishes directly all assistance to indigent aged persons. The premier states that the proposal will be considered.

Manitoba. Under date of February 25, 1925, the attorney general wrote that he would take up the matter with the Premier and the Minister of Public Welfare at the earliest opportunity.

Saskatchewan. This government is of opinion that the scheme can best be adopted by the federal government alone. It points out the difficulty of providing any scheme that would be suitable to all the nine provinces. It also points out that, "if any number of the provinces were to remain out, it would be almost impossible to adopt any scheme that would not subject those provinces within the arrangement to considerable expense that should rightfully be borne by those outside the scheme."

Alberta. This government approves of the general principle of old age pensions, but is not prepared to accept the recommendations of the committee. It points out: (1) that the federal government should assume a larger share of the financing of the scheme as it is more a federal obligation, it states, than a provincial one; (2) it is not satisfied that a non-contributing scheme is the best one; and (3) that there is no guarantee that the federal government would continue for a definite time to carry out the mutual arrangements with respect to its financing.

British Columbia. This government writes that the matter of old age pensions has been carefully considered by the government and also by the provincial legislature, and the consensus of opinion was that the matter is one entirely in the sphere of the federal parliament, and that it did not concur in the suggestion made by the committee that a portion of the cost of such pensions should be borne by the province.

Ontario. Under date of November 24, 1924, the Premier wrote: "I shall be glad to consider this matter."

That is the situation at the present time. Some of the provinces feel that the obligation is on the federal government alone, some are prepared to consider the matter, and some are not. I see no hope of securing unanimity by referring the matter to any conference convened in the future.

Now, the Justice department indicate very clearly the legal position in this matter, according to the report of the committee. The department advises:

The subject of old age pension does not fall specifically within any of the enumerated subjects given to the Dominion under section ninety-one of the British North America Act, but does fall within the subject of "property and civil rights in the province" committed to the provinces under section ninety-two.

The Deputy Minister of Justice adds:

I am of opinion therefore that the subject matter of pensions has been entrusted to the provincial legislatures rather than to parliament. I do not mean to suggest that parliament has not the power to legislate upon the subject so as to assist the provinces or to establish an independent, voluntary scheme, provided that in either case the legislation does not trench upon the subject matter of property and civil rights in the province, as for example by obligating any province or person to contribute to the scheme.

If I understand the situation aright, Mr. Speaker, this parliament has no power under the British North America Act to pass any legislation that would impose an obligation upon the provincial governments with respect to old age pensions.

Mr. LOGAN: Would the hon. member mind reading the balance of the deputy minister's opinion?

Mr. SHAW: I shall be glad to.

The enactment of such legislation would, however, involve the assumption by the Dominion of obligations involving heavy expenditures with regard to a matter which does not fall specifically within the Dominion field of legislation.

This is, of course, the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, but I have no doubt the scheme would involve a considerable obligation. Now, what can we do, if we want to do anything? The only course we can take is to pass legislation appropriating certain sums of money and saying in effect to the provincial governments, one and all: If you pass an old age pensions scheme along certain lines, we are prepared to contribute of our resources up to a specified extent. That is the situation as I understand it: it must be an entirely voluntary scheme in order to keep within the provisions of the British North America Act. But this is not the only matter in the same position. Parliament has not hesitated to provide large sums of money by way of a housing scheme and for highway purposes, and the legislation under which the money was appropriated stands in exactly the same category as the legislation proposed in this case. To my mind it is far more important, and far more imperative, that we should pass legislation for old age pensions that that we should place upon the statute books federal legislation in aid of highways and housing.

Mr. VIEN: Does not the hon. member recall that we have done away with the subsidies in respect of highways and housing?

Mr. SHAW: The hon. gentleman may be right in regard to the housing legislation, but this session we have expressly extended the period within which the provinces can secure the benefit of the appropriation for highway purposes.

Mr. VIEN: But only for the unexpended portion of the vote.

Mr. SHAW: Well, if it was wrong, why did not my hon. friend object to any vote at all for the purpose?

Mr. VIEN: I did object.

Mr. SHAW: The matter of old age pensions is in exactly the same category from a constitutional point of view. In my opinion, it is far more vital, it is far more imperative, that parliament should declare itself on this important matter now. As I said before, I am not going to be a party to postponing forever much-needed legislation of this character. I agree with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) that action should be taken, and I do not think anything will be gained by delaying it further. If necessary, I am prepared to stay here for another month, and I am sure a large number of members are prepared to do the same, in order to see that such legislation as meets with the approval of parliament is passed to put into effect an old age pension scheme.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that there will be very great difficulties in securing a fair and reasonable working out of any scheme such as is proposed by the committee in their report. We will assume, for instance, that under this scheme the province of Ontario accepted the federal government's proposal and put it into operation, but that the province of Quebec refused to do so. Immediately there would be a hardship on the taxpayers of Quebec because they would thus be compelled to contribute their share towards the operation of the scheme in Ontario without securing any of its benefits themselves. But let me point out how it would operate in regard to individuals. An old couple might have lived perhaps all their lives in the province of Quebec and then in their declining years, moved to the province of Ontario. Probably under the regulations governing old age pensions they would be required to prove ten years' residence in Ontario before they would be eligible for pensions. In that case Ontario would be supporting them although they had lived fifty or sixty years in the neighbouring province. On the other hand, a couple might have lived in Ontario all their lives and then moved to one of the other provinces for, say, one year, afterwards returning to their original home, and this break might render them ineligible for pension benefits in Ontario. It seems to me therefore that it is impossible to secure a fair and equitable working out of such a scheme of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces.

Mr. W. G. RAYMOND (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the amendment, may I say a word in defence of the report? I thought the correspondence between the premiers of the provinces and the committee which appears in our report would have been read by the members of the House, and therefore was a matter of general knowledge, but I was very glad to hear the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) read that correspondence, and I think in it we find the reason for the report of the committee. That is to say, the provincial premiers pointed out that they want to look into this matter further, and the report of the committee, by suggesting a meeting with the premiers, gives them an opportunity for discussing the scheme fully.

Now, let me point out the position before the House in adopting either the report of the amendment. The report will carry on further the work that was taken up by the committee. The amendment will stop it by referring the matter back to the committee, whose functions end with this parliament, and therefore such action will absolutely squelch the scheme. We wish to see the work carried on and discussed in conference with the premiers of the provinces. If it is discussed, I am sure that an amicable arrangement can be come to. In the correspondence the premier of British Columbia says in his last letter that he has seen a different light on the question to what he had when the resolution was moved in the legislature of his province, which resolution was forwarded to the committee by the lieutenant governor. The amendment to the report proposes the alternative of an annual expenditure of $23,000,000, not merely a vote of this sum, and the majority of the members of the committee did not feel prepared to take the responsibility of recommending such a large annual outlay.

Further, I may state that in the discussions of the committee there were those who wished that instead of $20 a month the amount should be $40. That would make the sum involved $46,000,000 instead of $22,000,000, and the age would be reduced according to the ideas of these members from 70 to 65 which would have added forty or fifty per cent further to the necessary annual expense to carry out such a scheme as seems to be their objective. It appears to me that it is what may be described as the "freedom of irresponsibility" that gives members the liberty to recommend such a large annual expenditure to this House, and I feel confident that such an act never would pass. But the scheme proposed by the committee is one which approaches nearer the end and object of the committee and which will carry out their purpose. I do not wish to go over the evidence that was presented to the committee, it is all in the report for the benefit of those that are interested. But I say, and I say it with the greatest respect that the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) and the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) who have spoken on the subject, have shown by the remarks they have made that they have not read or considered the committee's report. I would therefore, Mr. Speaker, urge the House to adopt the report of the committee with a view to the furthering of this very desirable scheme of old age pensions.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): This question has been before the House, according to the committee's own report of last year, since the year 1907. The adoption of the report simply means that action will be deferred indefinitely. I would point out that the adoption of the amendment means that this question goes back immediately to the committee, and might be reported on to the House to-morrow. Information has been assembled by the committee during the past two years, the outlines of the scheme are already there; and the House can immediately set up a scheme either of carrying out old age pensions directly or of carrying them out in those provinces that were willing to co-operate according to the original scheme of the committee. So that there is really no reason why immediate action may not be taken.

By the report of the committee we are recommended to send the whole question to another conference. I would urge that these conferences, as we have had them year after year on different subjects, have proved themselves to be absolutely futile; it is simply another way of stalling the matter. We have already met with the provinces. What could we secure more than we did a year ago on the question of unemployment? We get these representatives together, they say what they want—it is what they have already said—a good deal of publicity is given to the matter, the government has made a show of doing something, and the question is stood over once more. We have had this exhibition again and again, it seems to be the favourite tactics of the government to work along these lines. Here we have only another example of it. Why should we not take action on this matter that has been before the country for nearly twenty years?

Mr. GOOD: What would happen if the report were referred back and the committee did not report this session?

Mr. IRVINE: Why should they not report?

Mr. GOOD: They might not.

Mr. IRVINE: They ought to.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is quite a possibility that they might not report and that only suggests to those interested throughout the country the extent of the sincerity and earnestness of the government in this matter. Proposals affecting the welfare of large numbers of our fellow citizens, can be shoved into the last dying moments of the session and then we are told we cannot do anything. A similar course has been followed before. This is but another illustration of the trouble that exists as between the Dominion and the provinces, and again the British North America Act is quoted. A year ago on the very last day of the session we had a similar situation with regard to the eight-hour day proposal. On that occasion the report of the committee was not even recommended to the House until it was forced by hon. gentlemen on this side. Then the final result of considerable investigation by the committee was a reference of the whole matter to the Supreme court for decision. Then in the argument in the Supreme court on that matter we had the very curious spectacle of at least one of the provinces pleading that the responsibility was altogether on the Dominion government with regard to the eight-hour day, and the Dominion government trying to shoulder it on the provinces. I take it that the original idea of the British North America Act was to safeguard the rights of the provinces, but that act is being used to evade responsibility, with the result that we get nowhere and in the meantime people suffer.

Mr. NEILL: Does the hon. gentleman seriously suggest that the Department of Justice is privy to a scheme to let the government evade responsibility?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My statement was that the British North America Act would seem to have been designed to protect the rights of the provinces and yet that act is being used—

Mr. NEILL: By whom?

Mr. WOODSWORTH:—is being used to enable either the provincial or the federal government to evade responsibility.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the hon. member, does he think that in the event of this amendment not being carried and little coming out of the conference next year, it would be wise for the government to refer it to the League of Nations?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The League of Nations? I do not know why that should be injected, except this: The social rights of the workers of this country are practically guaranteed by the League of Nations, and the Dominion government was a signatory to the peace treaty of Versailles. The Dominion government had its representatives at Washington where the conventions were ratified. Yet notwithstanding the reaffirmation of the conventions dealing with a number of questions like this, we have inactivity throughout all these years. I do not want to delay the House this morning to discuss the necessity of legislation of this character, but I should like to point out what is involved in the scheme as brought forward a year ago. The recommendation then was:

> That an old age pension system be established at the earliest possible date for deserving indigent persons of seventy years of age and upwards.
> That applicants for pensions must be British subjects of at least twenty years' residence in Canada or naturalized subjects of at least fifteen years' naturalization and twenty-five years' residence.
> That the maximum rate of pension be twenty dollars per month, which would be lessened by private income or partial ability to earn.

Let me say that there are few civilized countries in the world to-day that have not legislation of this character. Australia, we are told, has legislation. May I suggest that Australia is getting immigrants. We appeal for immigrants, and we make very little provision for our own citizens or for those who may come to us. Is it an extreme demand that we should take care of indigent persons of seventy years of age? Why, we do not even propose that. We limit that by saying "deserving" indigent persons of seventy years of age. Surely if men or women have worked in this country for the upbuilding of Canada, it ought to be possible that the Canadian people are strong enough and wealthy enough to take care of them after they are seventy years of age. Is that too much to ask? But we do not ask even that. We say that it is only British subjects that are to be taken care of, or subjects who have been naturalized within the last fifteen years and have had twenty-five years residence in this country. We limit the scope of the provisions very narrowly. Further than that, we do not propose to take good care of our aged; we are going to give them only $20 a month with deductions if they have other resources. We find ourselves, in this Canada of ours with all its boasted wealth, incapable, apparently, of taking care of this comparatively small group of persons.

I notice that we have in the supplementary estimates a vote of a very considerable sum of money as a pension for one of the outstanding members of this House. Some of us hardly know how to vote on a matter of that character. We quite agree that there has been service rendered; we quite agree that there has been eminent service rendered; we quite agree that the gentleman concerned has not attempted to graft out of the country. But why should one Canadian be picked out and given an annuity of $10,000 a year when other Canadians, who according to their ability and station in life, have served just as faithfully, should be denied $20 a month? I say it is not fair, and as representing one group of those who are called the common people of this country, I want to protest against the apathy and inaction of parliament in dealing with this important matter.

Mr. SPENCE: As one member of the Old Age Pension committee, I may say that we have given this matter a great deal of consideration, and I hope that at this late hour of the session we shall not take up too much time discussing it. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Raymond) has given the House the effect of the recommendations of the committee, and may I say that the recommendations we have made will get somewhere? But the amendment moved by the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Irvine), and supported by the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth), is simply playing to the gallery. We had no intention of stalling this old age pension question; that was not our desire at all. We have made a recommendation, not to the effect that a special conference should be called, but I understand that a conference is going to be held this fall of the premiers of this Dominion, and at this conference this matter can be taken up. We cannot hope to go into this scheme at all.

Mr. IRVINE: Why not?

Mr. SPENCE: The cost is entirely too high. At the present time this country cannot bear it.

Mr. IRVINE: Then why not have the courage to say so, to tell the people the truth?

Mr. SPENCE: We are.

Mr. IRVINE: You are not.

Mr. SPENCE: We feel that the administration by the provinces would be much cheaper. The overhead would not be so large. We have given this matter all the consideration that is necessary, and I hope the House will pay absolutely no attention to the amendment that has been moved to the committee's recommendations.

12 noon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The Votes and Proceedings of yesterday, I notice, contains a copy of the committee's report, and in looking over it I see that the advice of the Deputy Minister of Justice was asked for by the committee in regard to this matter. My reading of the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice is that this is entirely a provincial matter, unless it is on a voluntary basis which does not affect property rights. The report of the committee would indicate that they are taking action in this matter, whereas, according to the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, this is purely a provincial matter and should be left to the provinces to deal with, if dealt with at all. I think it is absolutely a waste of time to discuss this matter at this stage, or at any other stage.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Irvine), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. HUGHES: I was paired with the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer). When going to Montreal he asked me to consult the Whip of the party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. HUGHES: I am asking permission to make an explanation. I instructed the whip that I was paired with the hon. member and the whip said he did not know how the hon. member would vote on the motion if he were here. Therefore, I voted against the amendment.

Main motion (Mr. Raymond) agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 214, from the Senate, the relief of Ella May Stacey.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 215, from the Senate, the relief of Jessie Harriett MacKay.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 216, from the Senate, the relief of Edna Fox.—Sir Henry Drayton.

Bill No. 217, from the Senate, the relief of James Jackson.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 218, from the Senate, the relief of William Frederick Hamilton Strangway.—Mr. Duff.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. E. N. HOPKINS (Moose Jaw) moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the fifth report of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, the additional charge of $200 levied and paid, under rule 89 subsections 3 (c) and 8, on Bill No. 187, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, be refunded.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. SHAW: Does the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) approve this action?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I admit complete ignorance of this matter, and I should like to ask an explanation from the mover. I do not see why we are asked to refund this $200 for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of all companies in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say that the motion reads that it is in conformity with the recommendation of the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. A. J. LEWIS (Swift Current): I was in the committee. The matter was fully discussed by the committee and it was recommended. Of course the motion is in conformity with the recommendation of the committee.

Motion agreed to on division.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTINGS OF COMMITTEES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): There are one or two motions which I wish to make, but I did not care to make them when the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) was not in the House. I move:

That as in accordance with the resolution adopted on the 16th instant, the House will be meeting at eleven o'clock for the remainder of the session, the standing committees of the House be given leave to sit while the House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Saturday, the 20th June instant, the House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning, and that, in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall be also an intermission from one to three o'clock p.m., and that the order of business and procedure on that day shall be the same as on Fridays.

May I say in connection with this motion that, while the government would like the House to sit on Saturday morning and afternoon, it is not the intention to sit on Saturday evening.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

VANCOUVER OLD POST OFFICE SITE

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Having reference to the old post office site, corner Pender and Granville streets, Vancouver, British Columbia, (a) has the government advertised this property for sale; (b) when were bids due; (c) how many offers were received and from whom; (d) what was the highest tender, if any?

2. Before advertising the said property, did the government secure estimate of value by individual appraisal; if so, by whom was the property valued and what was the amount of the said appraisal?

3. Has the government secured information of the value of property similarly located which has been sold?

4. Is the government aware that there has been considerable movement of property in Vancouver in this neighbourhood, with the prospect of steadily increasing values in the near future?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. (a) Yes.
(b) April 30, 1925.
(c) and (d) Richards, Ackroyd and Gall—$300,000 subject to purchase of Winch building, for $700,000. The British Columbia Estates Ltd., $247,000.

2. Resident architect estimated site $200,000, building $60,000, total $260,000. Assistant resident architect stated from the assessment it would appear the old post office site would be worth from $340,000 to $360,000. In November, 1924, H. V. Sharples considered value of property to be $300,000.

3. Yes. Property adjoining old post office on Granville Street, lot 45 x 130, sold to A. J. Buttimer for $165,000. Property southwest corner Granville and Dunsuir, lot 50 x 120, sold to Quagliotti for $215,000.

4. No; with the exception of the two properties mentioned in No. 3.

EDMONTON—SOLDIER SETTLEMENT

Mr. KELLNER:

1. Did the government recently rent additional office space for the Soldier Settlement Board in Edmonton, Alberta?

2. If so, are there any other governmental offices housed in the same building?

3. How much rent is the government paying for this building?

4. What is the term of the lease?

5. Who is the owner of the building?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. No additional office space is being rented but it is proposed to transfer the Soldier Settlement board from the Williamson block to the Blowey-Henry building.

2. Yes. The Customs examining warehouse and the Dominion Lands branch of the Department of the Interior. It is proposed also to house in this building the superintendent of western land agencies, income tax, fisheries office, food inspector, medical health office and forestry branch.

3. The amount of rent paid prior to above transfer, $13,775. Proposed amount to be paid for additional space, $7,150.

4. New lease to be effective from the date occupied and to terminate concurrently with existing lease namely August 1, 1929.

5. Blowey-Henry Company.

PRISON REFORM

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Is it the intention of the government to so readjust and add to the number of trades or industrial output of penal institutions so that all inmates may find work and thus enable the families, wives, children and dependents of inmates to receive pay? If not, why?

2. Will anything be done this session, or an opportunity given of continuing the adjourned debate on this question before the House prorogues?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE: 1 and 2. Under consideration.

ST. JOHN, N.B., TRIPARTITE AGREEMENT

Mr. MacLAREN:

Is it the intention of the government to carry out the Tripartite agreement (so called) made between the Dominion of Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the City of Saint John, New Brunswick, for the purpose of developing terminal transportation facilities on the west side of the harbour?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

IMMIGRATION DISBURSEMENTS

Mr. DOUCET:

What was the total disbursement of the Department of Immigration and Colonization for the years 1921-1922, 1922-1923, 1923-1924, 1924-1925?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1921-22	$2,213,327 93
1922-23	2,354,975 34
1923-24	3,482,986 90
1924-25	3,160,525 04

The total for 1923-24 includes the sum of $649,881.97, spent on account of the British Empire Exhibition, while the total for 1924-25 includes $599,796.86 spent on the same account.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

Mr. DOUCET:

What was the total number of immigrants admitted into Canada during the years 1921-1922, 1922-23, 1923-1924, 1924-1925?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1921-22	89,999
1922-23	72,887
1923-24	148,560
1924-25	111,362

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

RETURNED SOLDIERS IN PENITENTIARIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many returned soldiers of the great war are detained in the penitentiaries of Canada, and where?
2. What inspection is there of these institutions, by whom, when, and are government officials the only inspectors?
3. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation this session to empower grand juries, sitting at the assizes or general sessions of the peace holden in the municipality where these institutions are or the nearest municipality, regularly to visit and inspect these institutions, similar to the law of England and all the oversea Dominions (Canada excepted) and in the same way that juries now visit provincial prisons?
4. If not, why not?

JUVENILES IN PENITENTIARIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many juveniles under 18 are now detained in the penitentiaries of Canada, where, and how many are 16 or under, 17, 18 and 19 years of age?
2. Is it the intention of the Government to give effect to the recommendations for years of grand juries and public bodies to provide separate institutions for these cases? If not, why?
3. Is it the intention of the Government to so readjust the rules of these institutions so that juveniles and first offenders will have preferential rules and also a better classification consideration to those of repeaters?
4. Is it the intention of the Government in the recess of Parliament to appoint a Royal Commission or Committee of the House to go into the whole question of prison reform in Canada as suggested in the debates in Hansard, 1922? If not, why not?

SENATE REFORM

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): The government opened parliament with a promise that they would get authority from parliament to call a provincial conference with a view to securing the agreement of the provinces to amend the British North America Act so as to curtail the powers of the Senate. We are now approaching the end of the session, and we are reminded of the anniversary of the same threat of a year ago. I think we should not close this session until we know about what time this conference is going to be called and what proposals the government intends to submit to it.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): With respect to the proposals, I might say the government has not as yet had time to consider the agenda, but any conclusions the conference may come to will be presented to parliament for discussion when parliament reassembles.

The government will commit parliament to nothing. As my right hon. friend knows, during the session the government's time is very much occupied with the business that is transpiring from day to day and a conference of this character will require careful consideration before being entered upon. I am not at the moment in a position to say what the agenda will be. The government will seek to bring before the conference the representations that have been made from different quarters with respect to changes that are believed to be in the public interest and which should be discussed. The conference will not be confined to matters relating to the Senate but will take up possibly such a question as the one discussed this morning with reference to old age pensions, and other matters which it may be deemed advisable to confer upon with the provinces generally.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): And the right to amend our own constitution, as proposed by myself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is another matter that might well be considered. The interjection of the hon. member for South York is sufficient to indicate that the government would wish to prepare its agenda with care before announcing it to the public. As to the date of the conference, we would wish to be guided by what appeared to suit the convenience not only of our government but of the provincial governments as well. Beyond stating that an announcement will be made in plenty of time to enable all parties who wish to be represented to be here, I cannot assign any definite date.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the Prime Minister mean to imply that the proposal on which he was very definite a year ago is now in an indefinite form, or that the government will submit that proposal with its approval to the conference?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have already intimated that the government will endeavour to bring together the various proposals that have been discussed and have been receiving consideration throughout the country, and will present them to the conference. As to just how the government will present matters to the conference, whether it will be in the form of recommendations from the government itself, or whether the conference will proceed by way of general discussion with a view to arriving at certain propositions, is a matter still to be considered.

Mr. MEIGHEN: For my part, I now bid good-bye to all prospects.

WAR IMPRISONMENT OF DR. BELAND

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): May I ask when we may expect the return, which was ordered on May 25, of correspondence relating to the imprisonment of one Dr. Beland during the war? Will that correspondence be brought down before the end of the session?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): There have been some communications with the home government with reference to the correspondence in question but I am unable to say at the moment whether final reply has been received as to its willingness to have the correspondence submitted. However, I will inquire into the matter.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): In view of the fact that there is some question of jurisdiction involved as between the federal and the provincial authorities, would the government undertake during the recess of parliament to submit a stated case for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada on the question of old age pensions?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I should have to confer with the Minister of Justice on that question.

EXPORT OF POWER

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Low) again whether that order in council has yet been passed for the relief of certain municipalities from the export tax on electricity? Will he undertake to table the order in council before the close of the session?

Hon. T. A. LOW (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have nothing to add to my answer of yesterday.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was no answer.

TRANSFER OF NATURAL RESOURCES OF THE PROVINCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Burrard): Is the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Argenteuil) in a position to-day to state when the return will be made to the question I put on February 23 last, and to which I referred yesterday, on the question of the natural resources of the provinces?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Minister of the Interior): I must confess to neglect in this matter. I promised the hon. member yesterday that I would bring it to the attention of the officials and I completely forgot. However, I will make a note of it now and see that the return is made to-morrow.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are a great many other orders outstanding, and I may warn the government that they will be recited to-morrow. I hope some of them will be brought down.

YUKON GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS—INCOME TAX EXEMPTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): On March 9 last an order was passed for the return of correspondence and documents relating to exemption or partial exemption from payment of income tax by Yukon officials. The resolution was moved by myself and I waited until May 19, when I ventured to inquire whether the return would be brought down. On that occasion the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) promised to look into the matter, and the next day, without any intervention on my part, he said:

> The secretary of the department has communicated with Mr. Breadner, who expects to have the return ready early next week, if not sooner. It may be ready to-morrow.

Again, on May 27, I asked whether the return might not be brought down and I was assured that it would be down in a few days. On June 5 the Prime Minister was kind enough to say that he would call the matter to the attention of the minister and request that it be attended to. Now, I happen to know that the information has been prepared, and I cannot understand why the formality of presenting it to the House has been so long delayed. I hope the return will be brought down.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): The documents are ready to be forwarded to the Secretary of State's department for the preparation of the return.

BY-PRODUCT COKE OVENS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (West Calgary): Will the Minister of Mines be good enough to inform the House when he intends to move the resolution now on the order paper with respect to by-product coke ovens?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Minister of Mines): As soon as the freight rates question is out of the way we shall be ready to discuss the matter.

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES

BILL TO AMEND THE RAILWAY ACT, 1919

The House resumed, from June 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. 181, to amend the Railway Act, 1919—Hon. Mr. Graham—Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 3—Power to fix rates and enforce fair and reasonable rate structure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The criticism that has been directed by hon. gentlemen opposite against the government with respect to the legislation before the House has come from diametrically opposite and antagonistic points of view. Gentlemen immediately opposite have criticized the government on the ground that in the effort to have a policy of equalization of freight rates adopted throughout the country we have not done away entirely with any security to the middle west with respect to the maximum rates on grain and flour, which were a part of the security afforded by the Crowsnest pass agreement. On the other hand, gentlemen of the Progressive party further to the right have criticized the government, not because we have not done away with this measure of security, but for the reason that we have not restored the Crowsnest pass agreement in its entirety—and, if I gather correctly, not only the Crowsnest pass agreement as interpreted in its application by the courts, but the Crowsnest pass agreement in its application, as assumed before judicial decision had been given by the Supreme court.

I may point out that this again amounts to criticism of the administration for not going in opposite directions at the same time. It is not dissimilar to the criticism that was made at the time tariff matters were under discussion, when hon. gentlemen immediately opposite criticized us because we had not raised the tariff higher, and the members of the Progressive party criticized us because our tariff proposals were not lower. The nature of the criticism coming from the other side of the House simply helps to emphasize the very difficult position of any government which attempts to deal with a problem that affects all parts of Canada, and to deal with it in a manner calculated to bring in effect the application of one great governing principle that will be just and equitable to all parts concerned.

As to retaining the rates on grain and flour, the government has felt that it is dealing with a condition, not with a theory. Theoretically, I do not believe it can be disputed that the only basis on which freight rates can properly be fixed is that of allowing to the railway commission an absolutely free hand. That is unquestionably the sound, theoretical position. On the other hand, in the endeavour to make effective that policy the government, as I have said, is confronted with an existing condition—that at the present time and for many years past the middle west has had a certain degree of protection in its maximum rates guaranteed by the Crowsnest pass agreement under an act of parliament passed many years ago. That agreement still continues and is now in force as interpreted by the Supreme court in its recent decision. In the present form it is satisfactory to no one. The government has had to consider the circumstances under which that agreement came into being, the position of western Canada today as contrasted with the time when the agreement was entered into, and also what would be the effect at this moment, having regard to the sentiment of the middle west and to other considerations, of the complete removal of any security to the middle west respecting maximum rates on the important commodities of grain and flour. When the agreement was entered into twenty-seven years ago the western provinces were virtually unsettled—as a matter of fact all three had not been created at the time—the government of the day was striving to induce immigrants to colonize and settle there. Moreover, there was at the time but one railway company operating throughout western Canada, a railroad monopoly, and there was no prospect of competing lines being constructed within the near future. There was also at that time no rate-regulating body such as later was appointed by parliament—the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Now, the change that has come about since that time must be apparent to all. A very considerable development has taken place in the middle west, provincial governments have come into being helping to safeguard the interests of their provinces. There have been constructed two competing railway systems, now merged into one and forming part of our great Canadian National Railway System. This of itself has raised a question which was not then present—this great nationally owned railway system has to be considered. And here again we are confronted not with a theory but with a condition, that whatever is done in the way of fixation of rates as respects one line to which this agreement may apply, must also be done to apply equally, through the forces of competition, to a competing system—a system which is occasioning all parts of Canada financial embarrassment of a very considerable magnitude. I hope, therefore, our friends from western Canada will appreciate the change which has taken place in the situation since the Crowsnest pass agreement was entered into, and discern wherein the government in the course it has taken has sought to go just as far as circumstances will permit in enabling the larger policy of equalization of freight rates to be worked out in a manner which will help to maintain and further to the fullest possible extent a sentiment of mutual interest and national unity throughout the Dominion.

I have been looking over some of the speeches which I made in western Canada last fall, and which were quoted, in part I think, by the hon. leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) in his remarks the other evening. I notice in speaking on the prairies I intimated very clearly that my view was that the railway commission was the right body to fix freight rates and should be given a free hand in the matter, but that I felt it should expect to receive directions from the government on matters of national policy. When speaking in Vancouver and Victoria I made similar statements, and I added that one of the great national considerations of which account should be taken by the railway commission was the position of the three prairie provinces in particular with respect to the two commodities upon the production and export of which the prosperity of this country largely depends, and that some consideration also should be given to the circumstance that other parts of Canada were to a very large extent protected with regard to maximum rates through water competition, a protection which the middle west did not have, and that it was only the part of national wisdom and justice that this particular factor should be taken into account. The position I took on the prairies and in British Columbia was an identical one and is exactly the position which the government is taking in this legislation, namely, to endeavour to bring about a policy of equalization of freight rates between all parts of the Dominion, and in doing so to recognize with respect to the middle west the existence past and present of the application of the Crowsnest pass agreement, and that evolution rather than revolution is the proper method of procedure in every effort to further national unity by the application of a general principle; that this course demands that some special consideration be given the west at the moment without thereby working injury to the other parts of the Dominion.

In regard to allowing the maximum rates on grain and flour to remain, I would point out to my friends from British Columbia that the government is not adding restrictions to the railway commission but is rather subtracting from the limitations which the Crowsnest pass agreement had imposed in the protection afforded the middle west. In other words, it is allowing part of that agreement to remain, but it is taking away part. To that extent some sacrifice is being required of the middle west, but inasmuch as the railway commission is not given a free hand to equalize rates all over Canada regardless of the maximum rates that are being fixed for the middle west, to that extent also some sacrifice is being required of other parts of Canada. I ask, is it possible to gain support for any policy which demands a sacrifice only at one point and not at other points?

In the interests of national unity, in the desire to bring about a policy of equalization of rates, the government realizes that some sacrifice must perchance be temporarily borne by each of the provinces. We have sought to make that sacrifice as equal as we can as respects all parts of the country.

Now while we are taking away a part of the Crowsnest pass agreement under this arrangement, the government is extending the security with respect to flour and grain to an area much beyond that which was fixed in the original agreement. The mileage of the railways over which the arrangement will apply to-day is considerably greater than the mileage secured by the original agreement. Moreover it extends not to one railway only but to all railways in existence, and it extends also to all the railways that may be constructed during the time that this application may remain as it is. So I say to gentlemen from the middle west—

Mr. CRERAR: I am very interested in the statement the Prime Minister has just made because I think there are a good many people who have a doubt as to the effect of the legislation. Now, do I understand from the Prime Minister that the intention of the government is that the grain and flour rates under the Crowsnest pass scale shall apply to all sections of western Canada that ship their grain eastward?

Mr. GRAHAM: Without doubt.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Without doubt; I think I may re-echo what the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) says.

Mr. CRERAR: Then I shall have an observation or two to make on the amendment which the minister moved last night.

Mr. GRAHAM: I may get in ahead of my hon. friend and make a statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I supplement what I have said with special reference to hon. gentlemen from the middle West by a word more particularly to the members from the province of British Columbia. The right hon. leader of the opposition in his remarks last night made the somewhat surprising statement that the order-in-council was so much "eye-wash" or "foam"—I think he used both expressions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At any rate my right hon. friend now says "hear, hear." I suppose the right hon. gentleman means to suggest that it should be regarded as "a scrap of paper." Well, if that is the view of my right hon. friend, it is not the view of this government; and I would say to the House and the country that if this government remains in office it will not take the view of the order-in-council which my right hon. friend takes, but will regard that order-in-council as a direction to the railway commission as to how it expects this policy to be worked out, and will see that the policy is worked out in accordance with the terms of the order-in-council. The order-in-council sets out the government policy. It is a direction to the railway commission to equalize rates. That direction indicates how this government expects this policy of equalization to be worked out. And I would remind hon. members that there remains, as the commission itself well knows, an appeal from the commission to the governor-in-council with respect to matters of railway rates. This government has stated what its policy is with respect to the equalization of rates, and unless that policy is carried out in accordance with its intention—if this government is in office when the question comes up—and I have not the least doubt it will be—it will take care to see that the policy is carried out in the spirit and intent of the letter as expressed in the order-in-council itself.

Mr. LADNER: May I ask the Prime Minister, as I asked the Minister of Railways, this question: If the government's intention is so strong with regard to western freight rates why did it not give the same privileges and rates on grain going westward to Vancouver to the markets of the world as it gives to grain going eastward to the markets of the world? Why did the government fix definitely the rates on these products going eastward and refuse to fix them so far as grain and flour going west are concerned?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the Minister of Railways has already made that point clear, and I will repeat what he said: The government had to consider, in presenting its policy to the railway commission and to parliament; whether it would do so with reference to legislation that is already on the statutes or whether it would seek to create by fresh enactment new agreements or undertakings thereby making an innovation in one direction which would create a demand for like innovations in other directions. We concluded that the proper method to proceed was to recognize the legislation that is on the statutes at the present time, and leave as much of it as would serve to meet the purpose which the government had in view with respect to fixing maximum rates on grain and flour, and expect the railway commission in developing the policy of equalization of rates, to follow a course which would be in accord with the direction given both by statute and by order in council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why did the government extend the statutory rates and multiply them three times? The statement has been made, and correctly made, that whereas previously they applied to 35 per cent of what they do now, they now apply to all—that is to say the statutory rates to the Crowsnest pass and the west are now made three times as great. What my hon. friend wants to know is when that was done why did not the government go further and extend the rates to the coast?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In answer to the first question asked, the practice has been just what the government is at present indicating. There has been no departure in that regard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister is quite wrong. I have shipped grain myself, and I know it has not been the practice.

Mr. GRAHAM: Shipped grain west?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, east.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to read to the House a carefully prepared statement which I have made in reply to different gentlemen from western Canada who have asked what exactly was the government's view with respect to the rates on grain and flour going west, and the effect of the legislation we are introducing in relation thereto. I imagine that no one in British Columbia, has paid more attention to the freight rates question than the Hon. John Oliver, Premier of the province, and one of the first communications I had after the order in council had been published was from Mr. Oliver asking for a specific statement in view of certain representations that had been made in the press with regard to the government's policy. I drafted an answer, but before sending it I took care to submit it to my colleagues in council in order that no question might arise later over any difference of view as to the significance of what that reply contained; this is the substance of, in fact it is, the statement given to Premier Oliver, and the statement which I have given also to other gentlemen in western Canada:

"The statutory enactment regarding grain and flour must be read in light of general policy as set forth in order in council that equalization of freight rates should be recognized to the fullest possible extent as being the only means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada, and also that the board be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rate structures of railways and railway companies with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, having due regard and in particular to the increased traffic westward and eastward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade with the Orient and to the transportation of products through the Panama canal."

Later I sent another communication—

Mr. LADNER: Would the Prime Minister give us the date of the communication he has just read?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The date has no significance. I am not quoting the telegrams, I am quoting a statement which I made and which sets forth the government's position. I later after making mention of the circumstance that the government's interpretation of the effect of the order and proposed statute was as indicated in the statement I have just made, made the further statement that the right to appeal from the board's decision to the Governor in Council being reserved should constitute a sufficient guarantee that the government's policy on equalization of freight rates will be carried out as intended.

Mr. NEILL: Will the Prime Minister clear up a point that has worried some of the British Columbia representatives? We will suppose the decision of the railway board is not satisfactory to the government of British Columbia, and they take an appeal to the Governor in Council. Will the government's expressed determination, or practically so, to have an equalization of rates on wheat going both east and west not be prohibited by reason of the recent Supreme court decision which says that a specific statutory enactment of a rate prevents its being used as a basis for equalization, or reduction of another rate?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government's policy, as stated over and over again is a policy of equalization of rates. That does not necessarily mean, as I understand it, that as between provinces exactly the same rate per unit, per ton, per mile, shall prevail in regard to all commodities. Enough general knowledge exists of the difficulties of framing rate structures to have every hon. member realize clearly that matters of the kind are technical points that no assembly such as this could begin to pronounce upon. But there is an axiom of Euclid which says that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another, and my conception of the policy of equalization of rates is that the railway commission in dealing with a great problem such as this, would see to it, so far as British Columbia is concerned, so far as the prairie provinces and the maritime provinces and Ontario and Quebec are concerned, that a rate structure should be worked out which as respects the different provinces would help to make equal those things in their relation to each other, and help thereby to promote national unity and prosperity in trade and industry throughout Canada.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not sure whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had finished speaking or not, but while we are waiting I want to tell the House that we have been endeavouring to meet a suggestion which has been made that the wording of the amendment to section 5 might be made clearer. The amendment to section 5 which was proposed reads as follows:

—but shall apply to all the territory west of Fort William covered by tariffs filed with the board under the terms of said agreement at the date of the passing of this act and to all lines of railway now or hereafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament within such territory.

I want to make it clear that the gentleman who advised me still insists that it is perfectly plain. But there has been a conference among several legal men, and they have evolved this amendment to make the situation clearer. The point raised was that in using the words "such territory" in the last line, reference could only be made to the territory west of Fort William covered by tariffs filed with the board under the terms of said agreement. As a matter of fact there is a great deal of mileage and different tariffs filed that in many cases were the same tariffs as those under the Crowsnest pass agreement, but they were not filed under that agreement because the lines were not under that agreement. It is a very technical point, but it is said it might raise a difficulty in the court. This is the section that has been agreed upon:

But such rates shall apply to all such traffic moving from all points on all lines of railway west of Fort William to Fort William or Port Arthur, over all lines of railway now or hereafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament.

That new description I think is clearer. Then an amendment in subsection 6 would be necessary because the words "within the territory," would apply to the territory as described in the new amendment. Then another amendment is suggested to section 4, although my legal officers tell me it is not at all necessary. In order that there may be no question, it is suggested that in line 4, before the word "shall" the words "are and" shall be inserted, so that it will read "are and shall be deemed to be lawful tolls," and after the word "tolls" insert the words "until revised by tariffs filed with the board pursuant to this act." These words I am now suggesting make no difference in the principle of the amendment, but the legal gentlemen who have been conferring think that possibly it makes clearer what the intent was.

Mr. LADNER: Do I understand the Prime Minister is not going to answer the question which I submitted to him before adjournment?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not saying anything about that. He is not here. The question can be put again.

Mr. CRERAR: Will the minister read the amendment again. It is rather difficult to see the picture clearly with the multiplicity of amendments we have had in this bill, and the conclusion that results from it. The amendment is not distributed and we have to depend simply on hearing it read by the minister. It is quite a vital section.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GOOD: Read it with the amendments put in.

Mr. GRAHAM: After the figures "1897," in subsection 5 of section 3 this will be the amendment:

But such rates shall apply to all such traffic moving from all points on all lines of railway west of Fort William to Fort William or Port Arthur over all lines of railway now or hereafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament.

Then in subsection 6 the amendment that I suggested last night, after the word "thereto," the words "within the territory" should still be inserted, because the territory to which reference is made is now described by the new amendment. Then in section 4, in the fourth line, before the word "shall" insert "are and" so that it will read:

Are and shall be deemed lawful tolls—

Then another addition—

Until revised by tariffs filed with the board pursuant to this act.

Mr. CRERAR: That is really independent of the other amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. CRERAR: We can discuss it when we come to it.

Mr. MANION: Do I understand that both amendments combined cover all grain and flour going east from the three prairie provinces to the head of the lakes?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to refer very briefly to one or two points, as I think they should be mentioned to the House. The Minister of Railways in introducing the bill stated that, with the exception of the special provision regarding wheat and flour, the railway commission would have a free hand in working out a system of rates, with a view to obtaining equalization throughout the country. I do not refer to what the Prime Minister has stated that they have issued instructions to the railway commission regarding both the Maritime provinces and British Columbia, because I think those two statements are somewhat contradictory; but I refer to the statement of the Minister of Railways who says that the railway commission have a free hand with that exception. I take exception to that statement, because I shall mention two further exceptions to it. First, I would draw the attention of hon. members to the Railway Act of 1903, section 42, the Railway Act of 1911, section 13, and the Railway Act of 1914, section 6, paragraph (a). All three contain these words:

The through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall not be greater via Canadian ports than it would be via United States ports

Therefore, I take the ground that, as regards through rates to Canadian ports, there is a restriction on the railway commission, and they are not at liberty to put a higher rate on through export traffic than obtains at a similar time through United States ports. I submit with all due deference to the committee that that is a further limitation placed upon the railway commission in fixing rates. The second one is in reference to the Intercolonial railway. I think I am correct in stating that although the Intercolonial railway, so-called, is operated under the Canadian National railway system and under the same management, it is not, I maintain, a part of the Canadian National railway system. It was owned by the government. It is still owned by the government. It has never been transferred. Nothing less than an act of parliament will transfer the Intercolonial railway to the Canadian National railway system. That has not been done. What follows? While the railway commission may fix rates, they are all subject to protest, and, I believe, successful protest if necessary. I do not suggest for a moment that the Intercolonial railway cannot have full confidence in the railway commission, I am prepared to suggest that it can, but I wish at the same time to make what I may call my claim of right as regards these two points. I have brought this before the House and I bring it forward again in order to establish a position which, I think, is right.

I regret that I have not an opportunity of discussing the features of the bill itself. A great deal of time has been spent on it, and I will not encroach upon the time of the committee in this particular. I merely take this further opportunity of expressing my opposition to the bill. I do not think it is framed on principle. I do not think the procedure is logical. It fetters the hands of the railway commission. It will please no section of the country. I can come to only one conclusion, and that is that it has been framed on the ground of political expediency.

Mr. GRAHAM: I want to answer the charge of my hon. friend as to political expediency only by saying that he is altogether mistaken.

Mr. MacLAREN: Which point does the minister refer to? I made three or four.

Mr. GRAHAM: The last was not a point. I did not refer to it as a point. It was pointless.

Mr. MacLAREN: It was a demonstration.

Mr. GRAHAM: No, it was a filibuster for political purposes and not for freight rates. As a matter of fact, the Board of Railway Commissioners have given the same rates to St. John and Halifax as to Portland. That covers the first point. The second point is as to the rates on the Intercolonial not being subject to the Board of Railway Commissioners. Months ago an order in council was passed placing the Intercolonial railway under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MacLAREN: The minister has not met my points at all. I have been maintaining that the Intercolonial was not a part of the Canadian National. The minister agrees with me on that point.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not say so. Let me make it clearer if I can. It is immaterial to him whether the Intercolonial belongs to the Canadian National or not, so long as they get the rates.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is quite an important point.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not an important point as regards rates. Months ago the Intercolonial was placed by order in council under the Board of Railway Commissioners for the control of rates. That was never done before. It was held in the hon. gentleman's province, and rightly held, and in Nova Scotia also, that although the Intercolonial had submitted to control of rates by the Board of Railway Commissioners, no authority had ever been given before by order in council to bring that about. But since that time an order in council has been passed placing the Intercolonial specifically under the Board of Railway Commissioners for the control of rates.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand; this really is a government by order in council.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all. My hon. friend seems to be objecting to the fact that the things he wants are being granted.

Mr. MacLAREN: I am sorry the minister is annoyed again.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not annoyed at all.

Mr. MacLAREN: My point was that the Intercolonial was not an integral portion of the Canadian National.

Mr. GRAHAM: That does not make much difference.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): The various amendments that have been made to this bill since it was first introduced go to show that it is a rather regrettable fact that it was brought down so late in the session. Possibly the budget debate might have been cut in two if we had had this bill before the budget was introduced, or even if the bill had been introduced while the budget debate was in progress.

Mr. GRAHAM: The budget debate being down, you might cut this in two.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): I do not think, however, in view of the fact that the bill has been amended two or three times since it was introduced, it is giving members the fairest opportunity to deal with the matter and to understand it. It is a very intricate affair and, therefore, I must say again it is regrettable that it was not dealt with earlier in the session. I have had some considerable difficulty in reconciling the order in council with the bill. I suppose the central theme of the order in council is the question of equalization. "Equalization" and "discrimination" are two words that are used to a great extent in connection with railway rate questions. Whether rates were referred to in the Speech from the Throne or elsewhere, during the last few months you find this word "equalization" but in this order in council there is a very severe qualification to equalization. The order reads:

> To do away as far as possible with all unjust discriminations and undue preferences, and to secure a fair and reasonable rate structure, which, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions would be equal in its application to all persons and localities.

While the policy of the government may be equalization, with that qualification you can justify any kind of discrimination. The discrimination between east and west has been justified in days gone by through the use of the word "unjust"—there must be no "unjust" discrimination. I think it has been generally recognized that in the prairie provinces the cost of construction and operation has not been as high as in eastern Canada; and yet the water competition in the east has been a factor in preventing what we might call a general equalization of rates as between east and west. In British Columbia, again, we find a different situation. But though there has been a very severe discrimination there in some cases, if I understand the matter at all, it would be possible to continue this discrimination under the clause that refers to circumstances being substantially similar. The order in council, after reciting the judgment of the Supreme court, goes on to say that the application of the Crowsnest rates again would disrupt the rate structure.

It seems to me that a serious side of the question has not yet been touched upon. There is no doubt as to what the understanding of parliament was in regard to the application of the grain rates in 1922 and again in 1924 regarding the whole agreement. The opinion of parliament was not very well expressed in legislation, but surely the intention was that the rates should be applied generally. The years of practice of railway rate-making in western and eastern Canada ever since 1903 must show that this was the general opinion held by parliament and possibly by the railways themselves. In 1924 when the railways were asked by parliament to apply the Crowsnest rates again on other commodities, they established these discriminatory rates; and it appears to me that if they can do anything like that once without any question they can do it again. The purpose of the two railways in doing that was to create a difference between Calgary and Saskatoon, Brantford and Hamilton, Kitchener and some other point, and, to bring about the situation we have to-day; and I am afraid that the government is not very well advised in seeking to remedy the trouble in the way now proposed. There can be no question about the fact that the intention of parliament in days gone by was to apply the rates generally without discrimination, and if that was the intention of parliament we should not, because of the circumstances of the past few months and because the Supreme court has decided that the law on the matter is other than we thought it was, accept the new situation and change the legislation. We should not make such a change because of the discriminatory rates set up by the railways in the application of the agreement. I do not think that the Canadian National Railways have taken the step which is in the best interests of the system itself. One of the clauses in the order in council practically admits that the conditions which we have as a result of the application of the rates up to the present time cannot continue and that the Canadian National Railways would be compelled to make similar reductions at competitive points. That apparently indicates that even in the mind of the government the discrimination so far as the railways are concerned was only temporary; and in view of that fact it would seem that, even though no legislation were passed at all affecting westbound commodities or the grain rates either, this condition should not be allowed to continue.

In my judgment this legislation is in some respects a step backward. Notwithstanding the admitted discrimination between east and west in railway rates there has been a tendency over a period of years to bring them more closely together. In 1918 we had a fifteen per cent general increase in the month of March, and in August of that same year there was an increase of twenty-five per cent. That twenty-five per cent in eastern Canada was in addition to the fifteen per cent, while in western Canada the fifteen per cent was included in it. Apparently the board was anxious to put the eastern and western rates more on an equality. This does not mean, of course, that the rates are the same east and west; I am perfectly willing to admit that inasmuch as you have one sort of traffic in the west and another in the east the problem is rather difficult. Notwithstanding that fact, however, the railway commission by that decision did acknowledge that there was a discrimination and they tried to bring the two classes of rates nearer together. But in addition to that, in September, 1920, we had another decision of the railway commission. This is a very important decision on this question of discrimination as between east and west. The question is gone into at considerable length and we find the board declaring that, notwithstanding the difference in the application of the fifteen per cent and twenty-five per cent increases of 1918, there still is a considerable disparity between the rates in eastern and western Canada. They review the rates prevailing in the two territories on certain commodities mentioned, such as live stock, agricultural implements, lumber and so forth. I will not read the whole of it—any hon. member can see the judgment for himself—but I will quote from it briefly:

> Allowing for the undoubted fact that a very large proportion of the traffic both east and west is on the commodity basis, I am still forced to the conclusion that the rates in western Canada average considerably greater than those in the east, possibly around 15 or 18 per cent. In coming to this conclusion I am stating nothing new, as this fact has always been recognized, particularly by Sir Henry Drayton, the then chief commissioner, in the eastern rates case, so-called, in re Eastern Tolls, 22 Canadian Railway Cases, at page 41, where the following statement appears:
> "While as has been set out at greater length in the Western Rates Case, differences of conditions do exist between eastern and western Canada, and while western freight rates have already been materially reduced, the general schedule there obtaining is still higher, notwithstanding the fact that certain western rates that may be instanced are lower. There is no doubt but what the act requires, and the general public interest of the country as a whole demands, that, if practicable, eastern rates should be advanced so that the different schedules may more nearly approach a parity."
> This principle should be followed, giving weight to the conditions set out in re Western Tolls as affecting the regular level of tolls east and west of Fort William, and also bearing in mind changes in conditions which have taken place, I am of opinion that it is justifiable to allow a reasonably less percentage of increase on freight tolls west of Fort William than east thereof. Consequently, I have concluded that an increase in rates should be granted along the following lines, with the exception of the items hereinafter specially referred to. Until December 31, 1920, I would give a general increase of 40 per cent in eastern freight rates and 35 per cent in western freight rates, with 20 per cent both east and west in passenger fares.

There was an increase of 35 per cent in the west, and 40 per cent in the east, leaving still a difference, I suppose, after the application of these rates in September, 1920, of from ten to thirteen per cent. The Board of Railway Commissioners there approved the general principle that eastern and western rates should be equalized as nearly as possible. In 1921 the government of the day had something to say about it also. An appeal was taken to the Governor in Council shortly after the promulgation of general order 308 of this board, which I have just read. Various bodies, among them the government of Manitoba, appealed to the Privy Council, asking that the order be rescinded for various reasons set forth by the appellants. The matter was heard by the Privy Council, and on October 6, 1920, under order P.C. 2434, His Excellency in Council dismissed the appeal, and in doing so stated as follows:

> What constitutes a fair and reasonable rate should not be arrived at without reference to the requirements of the Canadian National system, and your committee recommends that the order in this case be referred back to the board to be corrected in its findings in such manner as to determine what are fair and reasonable rates without taking into account at all for the time the order shall be in effect the requirements of the Canadian National system.
> Very strong representations were made in the course of the argument to the effect that the order continued, and indeed intensified an unjust discrimination in rates, it being claimed that higher freight rates prevailed generally in western Canada, that is west of Fort William, than prevailed in eastern Canada, that is east of Fort William. It was strongly urged that the reasons whatever they may have been, for this differential no longer exist, and that as a matter of public policy the principle of equalization of rates east and west should now be recognized. On the other hand, it was urged that the competition arising out of lake and river transportation as well as out of lower competitive rates on eastern United States lines, compelled the somewhat lower scale in eastern Canada than in western Canada. Whether or not these reasons now obtain in any substantial degree is a question which requires minute and expert investigation such as can best be conducted by the railway commission itself and not by Your Excellency's advisers. But your committee is strongly impressed with the very great desirability of bringing about with the least possible delay equalization of eastern and western rates.

So we have the Board of Railway Commissioners, the government of 1920, and now this government, all saying in effect that we should have equalization of freight rates all over the country. But I am afraid this bill does not bring us any nearer equalization of our rate structure. It is true that we are going to get equalization in grain rates in a specified territory—under section six, if I understand it aright, it will not be possible for the Canadian National Railways to charge higher rates than the Canadian Pacific on grain and flour moving eastward, and it will not be possible for the Canadian Pacific to charge higher rates to one portion of the territory and lower rates to another portion where the conditions are much the same. But what will it do with respect to the other commodities moving westward? Does it not mean that we will have the discrimination intensified there? Not between the different parts of the prairie provinces, but between the east and the west? The minute this bill is passed, if I understand the situation, the Crowsnest pass rates on the commodities enumerated in that agreement will go up to where the other rates are, so that in general the rates which the westerner will have to pay on manufactured products from the east will be higher than even the average of all the rates to-day.

Mr. GRAHAM: The bill gives the Board of Railway Commissioners full power to say what the rates shall be.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But did not the minister intimate that increases would be necessary as a result of the condition of the railway companies?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think we ought to interfere.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): That may be all very well after the Board of Railway Commissioners have completed their investigation, but the imediate effect will be that the rates will go up to the level of the rates quoted by the minister the other day as between the Crowsnest pass agreement points and the other points in eastern and western Canada.

As to British Columbia, I understand the bill means this: while there can be no discrimination on their rates going eastward, they will have no right under this legislation to argue against discrimination that may exist on westbound shipments as opposed to eastbound. That is what I understand to be the meaning of section six. Possibly we shall hear more about it in detail when the Minister of Railways addresses the House again, and if I am wrong in my understanding I hope he will put me right.

Now, throughout this argument, and especially throughout the country during the last year or two, a very strong effort has been made to convince the people, both east and west, that under the Crowsnest pass rates some special favours are being handed to western Canada. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) told us last night that he had a record of some rates that would show that the rates were higher in eastern Canada than they were in the west. But that is not generally the case. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) filed a statement here showing the difference between the rates from Hamilton to Saskatoon, from Woodstock to Regina, and so on. But the minister did not file any comparison between the rates from eastern Canada to the west, as against, one point in Ontario to another point in the same province. He was asked by Mr. Hoey:

As a matter of fact, would not that mean increased freight rates for eastern Canada?

That was the general application of the Crowsnest pass rates. The minister replied:

It is not my intention to discuss freight rates; but I repeat, if the Crowsnest pass basis of rates is to be made a yardstick for freight rates in the Dominion, you may as well give away your national railways to-morrow—

What the minister filed was a statement dealing with the discriminations on the westbound shipments; but I think, that between eastern Canada and western Canada, as a matter of record, as a matter of understanding between the people of the east and west, we should learn whether or not in the case of these commodities—because we are dealing with specific commodities—the rates in the east are higher or lower. We should get the true comparison between the rates east and the rates west. I claim—and I want to take a little time to put some statements on Hansard—that the rates in the east generally are lower than the rates in the west. When you take into consideration the territory that is recognized as Crowsnest pass territory in the prairies, the rates are much higher in the west; and even as between the Crowsnest pass rates in the west the rates in general are higher in that part of Canada. I am not arguing in the meantime that is unjust, but I do say this: It is absolutely unfair to the west—yes and to the west of Canada—that such statements should go unchallenged, that there should be in any part of Canada a misunderstanding of the situation, and that the people should not have a chance, at least, of getting in touch with the facts conveniently. I have here a comparative statement, dated June 7, 1924, of the present rates per hundred pounds, I may say I took this from an exhibit filed before the Privy Council:

Comparative statement of the PRESENT RATES in cents per 100 lbs. on various commodities, eastern and western Canada.

The stations and rates in eastern Canada are from the memorandum presented by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways to the Dominion Government requesting the suspension of the westbound commodity rates guaranteed under the Crowsnest agreement. The mileages are from the official distance tables of the companies.

The rates in western Canada are from Fort William to various stations in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, Canadian Pacific Railway Tariff No. W4965, C. R. C. No. W2655. The distances are from the official distance table of the company.

In only five cases are the rates lower in western Canada than in eastern Canada. In all the other cases (24) the rates in eastern Canada will be lower than the rates in western Canada when the Crowsnest rates come into effect.

I have another statement here dealing with carload rates. I am going to ask the privilege of putting this statement on Hansard also but I think it ought to appear beside the statement of the Minister of Railways or very near it. This is exhibit 59, a comparison of the Crowsnest pass rates from Fort William with the rates for similar distances from various points in eastern Canada:

Comparisons of the Crowsnest rates from Fort William with the rates for similar distances from various stations in eastern Canada, Schedules A to M, carload rates in cents per 100 lbs.

Schedule A. Green and fresh fruits

East				West
Miles	From	To	Rate	Miles	Fort William to	Rate
584	St. Catharines	Quebec	63	565	Oak Lake, Man.	66
603	"	Sherbrooke	65	600	Virden, Man.	68

Schedule B. Green Apples

The rates to points in eastern Canada are for distances 116 to 406 miles. The only comparisons obtainable are those from Fort William to stations east of Winnipeg and the rates are the same as to Winnipeg under the Crowsnest tariff.

Schedule C. Coal oil

	Miles	Rate		Miles	Rate
Sarnia to Quebec	673	55½	Fort William to Percival, Sask.	676	65
Sarnia to St. John	980	68	Fort William to Tompkins	978	85

Schedule D. Binder twine

The rates from Welland to various stations, short hauls, are lower than from Fort William for similar distances; Welland to Windsor 212 miles, 34½ cents; Fort William to Dryden 211 miles, 40½ cents; Ontario Government experimental farm at Dryden.

Schedule E. Agricultural implements

The rates from Hamilton to eastern points are all lower than from Fort William for similar distances Hamilton to Halifax 1,129 miles, rate 63. Fort William to Tilley, Alta., same distance, rate 90½ cents, 44 per cent higher.

Schedule F. Iron commodities

The rates from Hamilton to eastern points are all lower than from Fort William for similar distances:

	Miles	Cents
Hamilton to Quebec	546	47½
Fort William to Chater	547	59½
Hamilton to St. John	850	57
Fort William to Parkbeg	852	84½	(nearly 50% higher)

Schedule G. Wire

The rates from Windsor, Ontario to Eastern points are all lower than from Fort William for similar distances. The longest distances are:—

	Miles	Cents
Windsor to Megantic	727	59½
Fort William to Wolseley	714	75½	(about 25% higher)

Schedule H. Paper, Building and Roofing, also Roofing Felt

The rates from Portneuf to Eastern points are all lower than from Fort William for similar distances. The longest distances are:—

	Miles	Cents
Portneuf, Que. to Hamilton	522	38
Fort William to Carberry	525	56½	(nearly 50% higher)
Portneuf, Que. to St. John, N.B	626	39½
Fort William to Kirkella	623	65	(62% higher)

Schedule J. Window Glass

With the exception of the rate for 365 miles, which is 5 cents per 100 lbs. lower, the rates from Montreal are lower.

Schedule K. Paints and Oils

Montreal to St. John	488	52½
Fort William to Burnside	483	48

This is one of the very few cases where the Eastern rate is higher.

Schedule L. Woodenware

The short haul rates are lower in the East.

	Miles	Cents
From Ottawa to St. John	488	55½
From Fort William to Portage La Prairie	475	53

This is another of the very few cases where the Eastern rate is higher.

Schedule M. Furniture

With one exception, a difference of one cent per 100 lbs. all the Eastern rates are lower.

	Miles	Cents
Kitchener to Halifax	1,142	88
Fort William to Brooks, Alta	1,142	149	(70% higher)

The application of the remainder of the Crowsnest rates will remove some of the disparity which at present exists in the rates which the Prairie Provinces have to pay.

I said a little while ago, Mr. Chairman, that there might be considerable difficulty in estimating whether or not the rates between the east and the west were on a parity, but I have read some of the judgments of the Board of Railway Commissioners on that question, and I think they are fairly clear. It would be unfair, I suppose, to base an opinion with regard to the general freight rate structure on a few individual rates such as I have quoted, but when in conjunction with those you take the judgments of the Board of Railway Commissioners, I think I am not far out when I say that we have still higher rates, in the west, and we will have a still more intense discrimination between the east and the west, even with the discrimination between grain and flour removed, if the Crowsnest pass agreement is suspended in respect of the other commodities that are covered by that agreement.

It would seem to me, however, that if eastern and western Canada can pay the operating charges on the railways, situated in eastern and western territory, and take care of their own fixed charges over and above that, they are doing fairly well. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) gave us some figures yesterday to show that they are not doing that. I have looked over his statement, and for the life of me I cannot see how he can justify that statement with the figures he submitted to the House. It would seem to me that if we take the gross earnings, and subtract the operating costs and the fixed charges, and if we have any idea at all about the investment in the east and in the west, then we ought to know whether or not the east and the west are paying their share of operating costs and fixed charges for the service they are getting. I want to qualify that statement, however, with this further statement: I do not believe it is the duty of the people who are producing revenue tonnage in Canada to pay rates that will pay for all the railways in Canada, regardless of the wisdom of their location and regardless of the lack of economy with which they have been constructed. The Canadian Pacific has been taken as the index railway for setting rates east and west. I maintain that that is not a fair basis, and I will tell the House why. We have three main lines of railway, running from Winnipeg right through to Edmonton, and I think one main line of railway would handle all that business. Certain portions of the Canadian Pacific railway between Winnipeg and Edmonton can hardly be considered worth one hundred cents on the dollar, if the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern alongside cannot be considered worth one hundred cents on the dollar. And we cannot under present conditions produce the traffic to make all three roads pay because of their location and because of the money that has gone into them. If we had spread over that territory one expensive main line and a lot of cheaper branch lines, we would then have a system on which the producers of revenue tonnage might be expected to pay rates that would take care of operating expenses and fixed charges, but because the Canadian Pacific has mileage extending over hundreds of miles that runs alongside and twists around the Grand Trunk Pacific almost like the strands of a rope—and at other places the two railways look like one line with a double track—I maintain that under these conditions the present valuation of the Canadian Pacific railway must be revised to some extent in connection with the consideration of this matter. That seems to be a fair deduction.

4 p.m.

The hon. member for West York gave us figures yesterday showing the difference between the east and the west per ton mile gross earnings—in 1918, 79 on the eastern lines and 90½ on the western lines and so on. Now for the life of me I cannot see the significance of the per ton per mile figure. I can see where it would have a bearing if you take it in conjunction with a lot of other factors, the gross earnings per mile, the operating ratio, the gross and net return, and so forth, but when these factors are all ruled out, as has apparently been done in this case, I cannot see how the per ton per mile figure alone can be taken as a basis for comparison at all. We have two new railways in the west that are not fully established yet, the Pacific and Great Eastern in British Columbia, and the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia. At present the rates there are higher than on the other lines. Would that not mean that the ton mile rate on all traffic moving over those lines would be higher than the ton mile on traffic moving over the line where there is a lower rate? But that figure alone pays no attention at all to the volume of traffic, and the volume of traffic has a tremendous deal to do with the question whether the railway is going to pay or whether the rate is just or not. I believe that the figures of the ex-Minister of Finance, the ex-Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, will have to be ruled out so far as I am concerned, until I get some further information. After giving those figures the hon. member went on to refer to the grain rates in the olden days, and told us how profitable the business was, but in order to do that he referred back to the very favourable operating ratio. For the life of me I cannot see why this should be used in the one case and ruled out in the other. In exhibit 60 before the Privy Council of June 7th, 1924, the operating ratio of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for five year periods; line east; lines west except British Columbia; all western lines; and, all lines; the figures are given as follows:

	Lines East per cent	Western lines except B.C. per cent	All western lines per cent	All lines per cent
1907-1911..	72	56	60	65
1912-1916..	73.3	54.5	57	63.3
1916-1920..	80.95	....	67.30	73.52

The operating ratio in eastern Canada is a good deal higher than the all line ratio. It is still higher than the British Columbia and prairie ratio and it is nearly fifty per cent higher in some instances than the ratio on the prairie provinces. In exhibit 60 I find, operating revenue, operating expenses, net earnings, with percentages, Canadian Pacific Railway, for five year periods to December 31, 1920, as follows:

	Operating revenue		Operating Expenses		Net earnings
	1907-1911
	Millions	Per cent	Millions	Per cent	Millions	Per cent
East..	$160	40.92	$116	45.49	$43½	32.30
West..	231	59.08	139	54.51	91½	67.70

I am not going into the figures any further, because I wish to get through; but if we take the earnings in the east and west over these periods and up to 1922 you will find those figures will be borne out pretty well. We will find that the net earnings in the west run nearly 100 per cent higher than the other. I think Mr. Lanigan before the committee on Railway Transportation Costs said the reason for that was that we had 62 per cent more mileage in the west than in the east, but I do not think that tells the whole story or anything like it. We know that the cost of railway construction in the east is just about twice what it is in the prairie provinces, and as high as it is generally in British Columbia. In the eastern rates case the Board of Railway Commissioners tell us what the cost of various railways in the east was.

The Glentay-Agincourt branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway cost around $70,000 per mile; the Grand Trunk line cost $130,000 per mile, but in the east we know that the prairie lines have been built for $13,000, $20,000, and possibly up to $30,000 or $35,000 a mile. Last year Alberta built two stretches of thirteen miles in the Peace river country for about $22,000 per mile. So that even if we have sixty per cent more mileage in the west, the actual investment in the east will be just about equal, on a rough calculation, to the investment in the west. In view of that fact, where our net earnings in the west have been for years almost twice the net earnings in the east on the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is a fair conclusion that we have been in general paying more than our expenses and our share of interest charges. Therefore I feel that I have not any right, as a representative of the prairie provinces, to admit that the principle of this bill is sound when it takes away from us a maximum that does not now fix rates lower in western Canada than in eastern Canada. When I know that the opinion of parliament has been in the past that the rates should apply generally, and I think that should be followed in the rates at the present time. So far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, I stand where I stood some months ago on this question, when I spoke from my place in this chamber. I believe we ought to have these rates west, and because of that I believe we have another complaint that this bill is not satisfactory in its present terms. The Prime Minister this afternoon took the position that has been taken so often in this chamber by members on the government side of the House. The government stands between the two extremes of the House—the Conservatives who want one thing and the Progressives who want another. I do not think that is a very strong position after all.

Mr. McMASTER: The golden mean.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): The question is what is right, and not whether you are in the centre or in the radical group, or Conservative group. The position has been taken with regard to the tariff, and it has been taken this afternoon with regard to rates, if it can be shown that the rates in eastern Canada should go up beyond the rates set in the Crowsnest pass agreement, that under those conditions we were not paying our share of fixed charges in addition to the operating costs on lines properly built and laid out in the west—

Mr. McMASTER: And properly managed.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): And properly managed. If that can be shown, then I say there would be some justice in the legislation. But there has been no attempt to justify it. We had the statement from the leader of the opposition that the railways dropped something like $40,000,000 in the revenue last year, but that was not the net loss, as compared with 1923. The net loss was about $3,000,000.

An hon. MEMBER: A small western crop.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): One reason given is the small crop in western Canada. There are certain people who would like to get a share of this $2 wheat. I would not object to that, if, when wheat happens to come down to $1, the rates would follow, but they have not been doing that very generally. I am glad that the rates are fixed on wheat and flour to the extent they are, but I would like to see the rates fixed going westward to the Pacific, as well as going eastward.

Mr. CHURCH: The question at present before the committee is the most intricate one that parliament has had to deal with. I sympathize with the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) in his task because, after three days debate we have had nothing but sectional appeals from British Columbia, the three prairie provinces and the Maritime provinces. We would have a nice rate structure in Canada if all those class, sectional and provincial appeals were to be listened to by the minister. We would have a rate structure the like of which has never been seen before. It would resemble the tower of Babel. I am not going to make any sectional appeal for Ontario because although central Canada, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. McCrea) the other night, is paying not only about 80 per cent of the taxes of the country, but in the same proportion to build railways out to the coast and for capital and maintenance charges, we are not complaining in Ontario. We admit that the west has grievances. We admit that British Columbia has grievances and we admit that the Maritime provinces have grievances, but Ontario says nothing and has more at stake than any other port of the country. All Ontario wants is a fair show and equality of treatment. While the Maritime provinces, incited by the example of British Columbia and the prairie provinces, are making sectional appeals, an examination of freight schedules shows that their rates to northwest points are substantially lower than those for equivalent distances from points in Ontario and Quebec, while their freight tolls to eastern destinations are the same as Ontario and Quebec pay for similar service. Last session political pressure was brought to bear for the construction of additional railway mileage in the shape of branch lines, in spite of the fact that Canada's railway problem is the result of over-construction. I do not intend to make any appeal for the province of Ontario along those lines, because the main question before the committee is how to secure equality of treatment and to eliminate the evils of duplication in roads and unjust and undue discrimination.

The railways have a commodity to sell, namely, transportation. Instead of being able to sell it like any other commodity in accordance with the law of supply and demand, this transportation is hemmed in with all kinds of laws, human and divine regulations and legislative restrictions, sectional interests and protective measures for various sections of the country. Transportation is not a free commodity. There is discrimination in the sale of it, and both sectional and provincial interests are concerned. According to speeches that have been delivered, political considerations seem to prevail instead of economic considerations in settling the question of rates. Freight rates from the standpoint of the railways and their bondholders should serve four purposes, namely, to provide:

1. Operating expenses.
2. Money for sinking fund and fixed charges.
3. A reasonable dividend on the investment.
4. If possible, some money for betterments and extensions.

We have never had a proper economic rate structure in Canada. We have always had a political rate structure. A proper rate structure is based, not on sectional considerations, not on giving certain districts certain rates on basic products to the discrimination of the rest of Canada, which discrimination the rest of the country must make up for in the deficits, but is based on some economic law and principle, on the principle of equal rights to all sections of the country and special privileges to none. Otherwise, there is no way of preventing unjust, undue and unfair discrimination. This debate in my opinion, illustrates the weakness of the group system of government which seeks selfish things for its class. This is one of the most important features of the group system of government. This weakness has been illustrated by the sectional appeals which have been made by hon. gentlemen to my left at the expense of the rest of Canada. They do not care who make up the deficit. They believe out west in free trade, yet to-day in their railway rates, they have the most acute form of protection there is in the world. Further, if branch lines were built according to the law of supply and demand, many branch lines would be eliminated. You could not find a private corporation that would build them. Each group or section wants to get what it can for its district irrespective of the general interest of the rest of the country, and the undue and unjust discrimination that must result therefrom. In the present legislation, while I sympathize with the task the government have, yet I do not admire the way they are carrying it out. I think, on the whole, they are doing exactly what the railways want. First, they have repealed the Crowsnest pass agreement which is the basis of the whole rate structure of this country, except as to grain and flour. They do not care where the grain and flour goes. It goes by rail to the head of the lakes. A lot of it goes by Buffalo where there have been erected twenty-eight elevators, getting Canadian grain from Canada. Buffalo will benefit thus at the expense of Vancouver. With the exception of grain and flour under the Crowsnest agreement, the whole question of the adjustment of railway rates is left to the railway commission, and they are amending the Railway Act to bring this about. This is treating two certain agreements like scraps of paper, first the Crowsnest pass agreement and then the Manitoba Rate Act. The government are fixing rates by legislation on certain products, grain and flour eastbound, favouring certain products in certain localities at the expense of others. They are favouring eastbound traffic at the expense of north and westbound traffic. This is a mistake. Freight rates for the city and town man in Canada are high enough, dear knows, and yet the farmers enjoy fairly low charges on their products as compared with those on other commodities. The grain growers of the west have favourable and preferential rates, and as a result all other classes pay much higher rates in order to make low rates to the western farmers possible. Why this unjust and unfair discrimination against central Canada? The Drayton-Acworth report states:

> Railway policy is a sealed book to the ordinary citizen. Why tariffs should be fixed as they are, why the train service should not be arranged so as better to suit his individual requirements, why cars cannot always be available for everybody everywhere, he cannot understand. The normal attitude of the public towards the railway management whether in the hands of a company or a government, is one of mistrust, if not of active hostility. It is a good thing both for the railway itself and for its patrons to bring the management out into the open; to have the reasons why such and such conditions exist, why certain concessions demanded cannot reasonably be granted, frankly explained in public.

The public have just cause for such a belief, the way parliament has fixed rates by legislation. The abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement except as to grain and flour eastbound is in the nature of a subsidy to the three prairie provinces at the expense of the other provinces. What east or north or south or west has to do with economic rate regulation, I cannot understand. You have to see the ancestry of this bill in order to understand the rate structure this country has had from time immemorial. The basis of the whole rate structure is the Crowsnest pass agreement. I wish to see the west get everything it can out of the Crowsnest pass agreement, because if it is to be made a scrap of paper, those who will benefit by that will be the Canadian Pacific. They should be taken into the Exchequer court and an accounting made, and they should give back to the people with interest the $3,500,000 they got by way of a subsidy. British Columbia gave them 3,500,000 acres of the richest mining lands in the west and they made a fortune out of it. Yet the railway commission has scrapped this Crowsnest pass agreement. There is no country in the world except Russia that has been scrapping agreements and signed contracts in the way the railway commission has been doing in Canada. First, the railway commission has treated the Crowsnest pass agreement as a scrap of paper. The Canadian Pacific Railway wants to repudiate its agreement, and it is upheld by the railway commission.

Now, let us consider some of the privileges which have accrued to this railway system from the Crowsnest pass agreement. By order in council passed at the time the Crowsnest agreement was entered into the Canadian Pacific Railway received the following privileges. They were granted $11,000 per mile for 330 miles of the Crowsnest pass section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or a total subsidy of $3,630,000. They were also given a British Columbia subsidy, including 3,500,000 acres of land, and the land grants included the whole area of the Crowsnest pass coal sections. The Canadian Pacific had to hand a portion of these coal lands over to a syndicate of eminent Toronto Liberals who capitalized their rake-off in coal lands at $10,000,000. Of that $10,000,000, $6,000,000 was issued and largely sold. And the obligations of the Crowsnest pass agreement were undertaken by the Canadian Pacific Railway as a sacred contract, to which the railway put its hand and seal. The Canadian Pacific Railway, it must be observed, guaranteed that freight rates on certain specified commodities shipped over its line should never exceed a fixed minimum stated in the contract. Canada's railway commissioners, Messrs. Oliver and McLean dissenting, last fall crowned the Canadian Pacific Railway campaign of repudiation with the laurels of legal victory. The weapon of the Canadian Pacific Railway's warfare for the repudiation of the Crowsnest pass agreement was the one word "discrimination." But Canadian Liberalism was not entirely for the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1897. Sir William Mulock at that time fought the Crowsnest pass deal almost to the point of resignation; and Mr. J. F. Lister, then member of parliament for West Lambton, attacked the Laurier-Sifton proposals for the construction of the Crowsnest pass railway. They opposed it in the Liberal caucus at Ottawa, and Mr. Lister actually carried the Liberal caucus against Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who then exercised his authority as Prime Minister and informed the caucus that the Crowsnest pass deal would have to go through or the government would go out. The Toronto Globe spelt the doom of honest Liberal resistance to the Crowsnest pass folly. Sir John Willison, for weeks and months, carried the slogan across the page of that newspaper, "Concessions for Concessions," representing the maximum rates proposed in the Crowsnest pass contract as then, in 1897, and forever applicable to shipments from every point on the Canadian Pacific system in Canada. Ontario and British Columbia Liberalism, however, generally resisted the corporationizing of their party. Sir William Mulock and Mr. J. F. Lister would have beaten the Crowsnest pass proposals to death if parliament had ever understood that the Canadian Pacific Railway had the right to apply Crowsnest rates to shipments from certain points while refusing those rates to shipments from other points.

Now, what is the use of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Board of Railway Commissioners writing into the contract something that was never in the minds of the parties to that contract, something that was altogether foreign to the original intention? I have here extracts from speeches delivered in parliament in 1897, and while I will not weary the committee by reading them, I may mention for the information of hon. members the pages of Hansard of that year at which the views of these several gentlemen may be found. For example, at page 5347 of Hansard of 1897 the Minister of Railways and Canals of that day, the late Mr. Blair, expresses himself in strong terms in relation to the agreement. At page 4581 of Hansard of the same year Mr. McInnes said in regard to the concessions:

> But even if they were of enormous nominal value, you will admit that they are, so far, mere paper concessions and that the real value of them will depend on their administration.

But although he qualified himself to that extent he did not think that the deal was at all advisable. He was opposed to it. At page 5182 Mr. Wallace declared that in his opinion that part of the bargain providing that the Crowsnest pass railway should come under the General Railway Act was not worth five cents to the country; nor, in his opinion, were the concessions given by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Again, at page 5344 of Hansard of the same year, we have the views of Mr. Lister on the subject. Time will not permit me to quote the opinions of these gentlemen, but hon. members will find them interesting reading. Now, if the Mulock Liberals and the Lister Liberals had defeated the Crowsnest pass deal they would have saved this country, it is estimated, some $400,000,000. The surrender to the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Crowsnest pass fight was the beginning of this country's railway misfortunes. These mistakes and follies were the source of all Canada's railway troubles, and the cash cost of these troubles now totals nearly $500,000,000. The $55,000,000 deficit on the year's operations of the Canadian National Railways had its origin in the Crowsnest pass iniquity and is a yearly burden which we can attribute primarily to that source. The directorate of the Canadian Pacific Railway have conceived and disseminated this propaganda of "the iniquity of discrimination" as a means of empowering that company to repudiate the Crowsnest pass contract. In my opinion Canada's railway commission should have abolished this discrimination by deciding that the Crowsnest rates should stand; they could have abolished the discrimination by the simple expedient of maintaining the Crowsnest pass contract. But Canada's railway commission chose to bring about this end by the appalling decision that authorized the friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as the Soviet government does in similar circumstances, to repudiate its contracts. Why should the Canadian Pacific Railway be permitted to keep the Crowsnest pass cash and coal land subsidies as well as other valuable considerations which they received, while they are allowed to disregard entirely the agreement by means of which they secured these considerations? A Crowsnest pass contract that is no longer a contract but merely a scrap of paper, as regards reduced freight rates which the Canadian Pacific covenanted to give, should certainly not be considered a contract in regard to the enormous subsidy which this country not only undertook to deliver but actually did deliver to that company. I would make the Canadian Pacific Railway carry out its contract. I believe if part of the Crowsnest pass contract is scrapped as now in this act, the whole of it should be scrapped, and the Canadian Pacific Railway should be taken into the Exchequer court and forced to give back all the subsidies and other valuable considerations and privileges which it received under the contract from the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba.

With all respect to the railway commission, I regret to say, Mr. Chairman, that it has no longer the confidence of the people of Canada. The municipalities of Ontario in the past few years have had about a dozen cases before the board regarding telephone, express, freight and passenger rates, and in every case the board accepted the figures submitted by the public service corporations and granted their applications for increased rates. In fact, the railway commission is really a political commission, for its orders are subject to appeal to and revision by the Governor in Council, and in that way its activities are not removed from the realm of politics. On the contrary, the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States is absolutely free from political interference and its decisions are based on economic principles and are just and equitable. According to the Railway Act the Board of Railway Commissioners are supposed to deal with rates of their own volition on the principle of equality of treatment for the whole Dominion, but the board has never been known of its own volition and for the protection of the public to go out and fight and check up freight, telephone, express and passenger rates from coast to coast. In my opinion the railway commission should be reconstituted, reorganized and placed then in a position to deal with the adjustment of rates absolutely without any right of appeal from its decisions to the Privy Council of Canada. Then it would be able to determine these matters, not on sectional but on national lines, basing every decision on the principle of equality of treatment. If we had had chief commissioners like the late Mr. Justice Mabee and the ablest chairman the board ever had, the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), we would not have these troubles to-day. They never fixed rates that were not just and equitable to everybody concerned and they had public confidence. In 1909 the Bell Telephone Company were charging $80 to $100 per telephone per annum in the Deer Park district, while just across the road where their regular tolls were in effect the rate was $32. We took the case to the railway commission, and Mr. Justice Mabee wielded the big stick on the telephone company. He said that it did not cost a consumer any more for his electric light, his water, or his gas because he was further away from the source of supply than some of his neighbours, and the same principle should be applied with respect to the telephone. So he brought to time that company which had been paying eight per cent for thirty-two years and ordained a flat rate for the whole city of $32. If we had more men of the type of the late Mr. Justice Mabee and his successor the hon. member for West York, the municipalities would have more confidence in the commission. They never fixed rates on any sectional principle, but always on the principle of equality and justice and fair dealing, and therefore their decisions were always just and equitable.

It is all very well for the government to give eastbound grain and flour the benefit of the Crowsnest pass agreement, but what about other sections of the country and their products? The people in eastern and central Canada will have to pay for the piece-meal abrogation of the Crowsnest pass agreement. All along the railway commission has failed to protect central Canada. The east paid the biggest part of the cost of constructing western lines, and it should not be discriminated against by such class legislation as this. The railway commission should do its part or be removed; it should see that any order it issues does not rob Peter to pay Paul, as has been the practice in the past. It is unfortunate that while we are united in many ways, owing to our rate structure being built largely on sectional and political lines, on transportation matters we are rent asunder instead of working together for the good of the Dominion. I sympathize with British Columbia, with the prairie provinces and with the Maritime provinces, but while they are contemplating their various ills, I would ask them not to forget old central Canada which has borne the heaviest burden of the national debt, which is paying the largest proportion of the taxes and does not object to continue doing so, but simply asks for just treatment—fair rates based on economic and not sectional principles and, in short, a square deal all round—equal rights to all, special privileges to none.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Mr. Chairman, at this late stage of the debate one can hardly hope to exercise much influence on the government or the House, for presumably the government at last has made up its mind in regard to this question. Our railway problem is to my mind the greatest that we have to face in Canada to-day. So much depends upon transportation that anything that can be done to free the people from inequality of freight rates should merit the careful consideration and approval of the government. I believe that our burdens of taxation and railway costs of transportation are crushing industry to the ground, and are responsible for many of our natural resources remaining dormant and undeveloped. The mad, drunken spree of railway construction extravagance that this country indulged in a few decades ago appeared to be a nightmare to many of us for a long time, but we are beginning to realize that it is a very uncomfortable reality, and we are now paying the price. The consequences of that folly cannot be evaded. The railway problem must be faced by the people as a national unit, rather than in a selfish sectional spirit, one section endeavouring to obtain an advantage regardless of its effect on the other parts of the Dominion. From the expressions of opinion which we have had on this bill, it is absolutely hopeless to expect freight rates to be satisfactorily adjusted by parliament. I believe that the Board of Railway Commissioners is the proper tribunal to deal with this matter. If that board is not properly constituted to deal with the problem then men with a thorough training and experience along these lines should be appointed to that body. I am not criticizing the present board, but I do contend that the railway commission is the proper body to adjust railway rates. There is such a great need for expert knowledge in connection with this question that it is absolutely hopeless for a member of this House, with his other duties, to become seized of the facts and arrive at a proper decision as to what the scale of rates should be. I am at a loss to understand, in view of the old Crowsnest pass agreement which has been a disturbing factor in this country for many years, why the government do not give the railway commission absolute power to deal with this question. Why have they obtruded this phase of the matter in such a way as to tie the hands of the commission, and prevent an adjustment of rates that would result in an equality in all parts of the Dominion? Hon. gentlemen to my left are apparently very suspicious that western Canada would suffer as a result. Well, if that is the opinion of people in some provinces what is the use of having a railway commission at all? What is the use of such a board if we are not going to place confidence in it, if we are not going to give it full power to deal with this matter? Everyone admits that it is impossible for us to handle the situation as it should be handled in parliament. Apparently the government have no views on the question themselves. In the session of 1922, on May 4, they appointed a select committee to deal with the question of the Crowsnest pass rates and to report to parliament. We also had last night the views of an ex-minister of the present government (Mr. McMurray), a gentleman who resigned from the cabinet a few weeks ago, and he informed the House that it was always the intention of the government to have the Crowsnest pass rates go into effect again. I have heard no satisfactory explanation—in fact I have heard no explanation at all—as to why the government are going to introduce this fragment of the Crowsnest pass agreement into the railway rates structure. The Prime Minister waxed eloquent shortly before the House rose at one o'clock as to the government's desire to have equality of rates in Canada, and yet we have the most positive evidence in this legislation that the government do not propose or intend to allow anything of the kind. On the contrary the bill we are now considering will render it impossible for the railway commission to do its duty as it was supposed to be anxious to do.

The conditions in Canada to-day are not the same as they were when this agreement went into effect; they are entirely different from the conditions which prevailed at that time. The Crowsnest pass agreement is something that the people of this country knew little or nothing about until the last few years. It was one of the first acts of a new government in 1897. They tried their prentice hands on railway legislation and the Crowsnest pass agreement was the product of their efforts. It remained in abeyance for a long time. In 1903 legislation was passed creating the Board of Railway Commissioners, and they have been administering the railway rates, and questions arising in connection therewith ever since. But during the war time there was another condition which has apparently been overlooked, but which was referred to by the chairman of the railway commission in 1921 when the board made a thorough inspection of railway conditions in western Canada. I should like to direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to some of the remarks made by the chairman of that body at that time. They will be found in the Canadian Annual Review for 1921. I quote from that publication as follows:

> The railway board visited the western centres in the spring of 1921, and heard various appeals and statements as to freight rates; outside of the commission sittings, Mr. Carvell continued his outspoken utterances. Speaking to the Canadian Club at Brandon on April 22, he described the railway problem as more important than the tariff or any other question before the people.

I quite agree with him. I believe that railway transportation is the most important question in this country at the present time. He went on to say:

> It cost $40,000,000 more to run the Canadian National railways last year than was brought in and that is no reflection on the people at the head of the railways or on the government.

I quote a little further on from this publication as follows:

At Victoria (April 11) he told the Canadian Club that freight rates on Canadian railways were too high; that in many cases they were having an adverse effect upon business; that under existing circumstances and the McAdoo and Chicago wage awards this could not be helped; that to force the railways to meet increased costs of operation without the privilege of raising rates or power of lowering wages would be to force the roads against the wall; that the financial stability of the Canadian Pacific Railway was as important to the country as good government. He declared that the root of the trouble was in payrolls forced upon this country by political agitation and labour efforts in the United States; that "the action of American labour men in putting a pistol to the head of the Canadian railway companies and demanding that the new American wage scale, fixed under the Chicago award, be made effective in Canada, placed the railway companies in a most humiliating position".

As to the future: "no matter what happens, railway labour must be re-born and an honest day's labour for an honest day's pay must be the first principle observed. Canadian labour is not responsible for the McAdoo award, but it is responsible if it is not prepared to give honest service."

Let me quote further:

His view of the labour situation was important because it could not but affect the policy and decisions of the board: "there are engineers and conductors today who are making $4,000, $5,000, and even $6,000 a year as the result of the McAdoo award; I am beginning to be sceptical of the advisability of having Canadian unions controlled in the United States.

Dealing with this question in the Canadian House of Commons in the session of 1920 the Minister of Railways of that time referred to the affect of the McAdoo and Chicago awards which had been forced upon the government, and pointed out:

The wage bill for the year exceeded seventy-three millions, having, owing largely to the McAdoo series of advances, jumped from fifty-four millions in 1918. In other words, out of every one dollar of revenue you earn, seventy-eight cents passed directly, by way of wages, to the employees.

Now, these are conditions that did not exist when the Crowsnest pass agreement went into effect and we might as well realize that now as any other time, and why the government want to interject part of the old Crowsnest pass agreement into this legislation under present conditions is beyond my understanding. The rates in the bill in question are the rates on grain and flour, not rates on the by-products, not the rates on live stock; there is no inducement offered to the people in the district affected to convert the products of the farm into a finished product and ship it out in that way. No preference of that kind is given now on mill feed. The policy of the government seems to be: Ship out the raw material in as crude a state as possible; exploit the resources of the country. Every inducement is being offered along these lines. If it is the intention of the government to afford aid to facilitate the production of these commodities why not adopt some other means.

and leave it out of the Railway Act altogether? If it is a form of protection that is going to be adopted for certain classes in certain sections, let us frankly admit it, but keep it out of the railway rates structure, and allow the railway commission to adopt a rate schedule that will apply without prejudice in all parts of the country.

When this matter was taken up by the government in 1922 everybody knew—in fact the Prime Minister himself made the statement—that the railway commission and the boards which were operating the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National railways were waiting to see what action the government was going to take in regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement before reducing rates on the railways. They were waiting as far back as 1922. I say that the railway commission has not been treated fairly in that the government have not been honest with them, have not let them know what their policy was with regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement until this late day. Early in the present session we had a decision given by the Supreme court with regard to the validity of the act, which was found to apply to certain sections of the country and not to others. It was shown to have been a piece of freak legislation at the outset, and it is entirely inapplicable to conditions in this country today. We may well feel anxious as to the future of our country. We have had during the present session, which is considered by some to be the last session of this parliament, all the evidences of a government that had absolutely no regard for the financial situation which confronts the country. Political expediency apparently is the impelling influence back of the government, they are evidently now trying to make an arrangement with the Progressive group to my left to secure their support. My hon. friends to my left are protesting that they are not getting enough in this measure; they want also to have a cheaper rate on goods shipped from the east, into the prairie provinces as well as on commodities going out. That is the only thing that will satisfy them. It is only a few weeks ago that they insisted upon the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, and yet they are complaining about the duplication of railways in western Canada. Well, duplication is not confined to western Canada. We have the same thing in Ontario and in other parts of the country. The old Intercolonial has even been duplicated by the Transcontinental. It was absolutely unfair to the people and uncalled for, but because of the extravagance of the government during the early part of this century we have now to pay the penalty for all this duplication, and that is the main reason why it is impossible to get people to go on the land and continue on the land in this country.

It is all very well to say, give the board that is administering the Canadian National railways, a free hand, and allow them to carry on just as they see fit, regardless of the deficits that may result in the operation of the railway; so long as the people of this country will come forward and make up the deficit, in connection with operation, that is what is being done. We are going backwards. We are slipping back at the rate of about $100,000,000 a year in our operation of government railways, and where we are going to land is quite apparent to anyone who has watched the proceedings of this parliament during the present session. I consider the conduct of the government in providing for lavish expenditures during the present session, nothing more or less than a crime against the country. And while this is going on there are people in this country by the hundreds, yes by the thousands, who are packing their bags and looking to some other country in which to make a home. It is a serious matter to these people when they have to abandon the country in which they were born, and in which all their interests have been centred during a lifetime. These are the conditions with which we are confronted at this time. What are we doing to meet them?

On this question of railway freight rates the government have dilly-dallied from the outset. The Prime Minister admitted when that committee was appointed, in 1922 5 p.m. that the government was holding up this question of the adjustment of rates until they saw what the findings of that committee would be, and now here we are in the last days of this session in 1925 considering this question. As far as the convenience of the members of this House is concerned, I do not think it matters much whether we get through here in a few days or have to stay here the whole year, now that we have made such a bungle of the country's business. But the government are responsible, and they cannot evade the responsibility. They cannot place it upon this House. The government must accept the responsibility for crippling the railway commission, for interjecting this disturbing element into the railway rate situation in this country. The government must accept the responsibility, and the sooner the people have to decide this matter between the government and themselves the better it will be for all concerned.

I had no desire to participate in this debate, but I have taken the stand from the very outset when this matter was up three years ago that the government should deal with it, and not pretend that they were having a committee of the House appointed to deal with it. In the Speech from the Throne at the opening of this session the question of railway rates and the question of ocean freight rates were two of the chief features dealt with as they also were of the debate on the Address, yet the government sat here day after day during that debate, dumb as oysters, and they would not declare what the government policy was with regard to these questions which had been featured in the Speech from the Throne. We now know the reason why. It was because they wished to bring in this matter at the tail-end of the session in the form of a bill such as we have before us to-day with the hope of getting it through. I believe the predominating influence with this government has been none other than political expediency, bargaining and bartering with certain influences in this country rather than carrying out the view which I am sure the Minister of Railways must entertain with regard to the question.

I do not intend to say anything further with regard to the matter. I am absolutely opposed to this legislation, which interferes with the railway board, which ought to be enabled to deal with the question of railway rates in this country, and also with an adjustment of the scale of wages paid to the employees of the railways, and other privileges extended to them under the awards which have gone into effect in years gone by, with an absolutely free hand.

Mr. HUMPHREY: The hon. gentleman read certain statements, one from the late chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners and another from the ex-Minister of Railways, casting certain reflections with reference to the wages paid to railway employees. May I ask if the hon. member is not aware that since 1920 the railway employees have contributed to the Dominion of Canada $45,000,000 per year in reductions in wages?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not know what my hon. friend means when he says they have contributed $45,000,000 to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HUMPHREY: That is the admitted reduction in wages.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Undoubtedly there have been some reductions made, but there is in effect to-day a scale or classification in regard to wages, and as to time, that I think is sadly in need of adjustment. I quoted statements made by the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners at that time. I could give further statements, if I thought it would be of any interest. I might point out that there has been an evident attempt on the part of interested parties to make the railway question a political question. I have before me the main editorial in the Toronto Globe of December 12, 1921, which says:

There were cries of "treachery" when the two leading Conservative papers of Montreal, a few days before the polls opened, ceased to support and began to criticize the Meighen government.

Further on I find the following:

In effect, putting the matter bluntly, the Montreal Star and Gazette, and the powerful group of financiers for which they speak, ceased to help their friends of the Conservative party because Mr. Meighen and his supporters stood to their guns on the question of public ownership and operation of the National Railways.

I am not going to refer to any more editorials, further than to point out that there are certain influences in this country which are determined to have their own way regardless of the general effect on the whole country, and to my mind the only possible way we can deal with this matter is to have a railway commission who are competent, who will exercise their judgment to the best of their ability and who will deal with this matter free of influence from the government or any other source. They must deal with this matter. They are the only people who can deal with it. We have interested parties who are continually using their influence to promote their own ends. We see the result in the stagnation of business. We find our country so badly crippled to-day that we are doubtful as to the future. This matter should be in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and consequently I am absolutely opposed to the bill.

Mr. LADNER: I asked the Prime Minister, when he made his statement this morning, a very short question of considerable importance to British Columbia. He did not cover it in his statement, and I have written out the question. The Prime Minister referred to the policy of acquisition, and created the impression that it was a policy extending to British Columbia in which we are vitally interested, and I desire to get an answer to my question, which is as follows:

Will the government say now as its definite policy that if British Columbia appealed to the Governor in Council from an adverse ruling of the Board of Railway Commissioners, the government would set aside any ruling of the board which would increase the rates to Vancouver beyond the present rate of 22½ cents?

Would the Governor in Council on appeal, so far as the government policy is concerned, fix the rate on grain moving from the prairie provinces to Pacific coast ports at a rate equal to the present Crowsnest rate on grain going eastward so that the present 22½ cent rate from Calgary would become 18 cents?

On the word of the Prime Minister favouring equalization, I do not see how the government could honourably refuse to do so. Does the Prime Minister not think British Columbia is entitled to that definite assurance by the government now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend is not accustomed to the proper reply to give to a hypothetical question, I will say to him that I should not wish at this moment to answer it. If an appeal were made to the Governor in Council on any matter it would be dealt with in accordance with what I have said to-day with regard to the government's policy.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the first amendment, and I understand there will be no objection to this amendment carrying, in order to get on to the next section which is general.

The section as proposed to be amended by Hon. Mr. Graham would read as follows:

But such rates shall apply to all such traffic moving from all points on all lines of railway west of Fort William to Fort William or Port Arthur, over all lines of railway now or hereafter constructed by any company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: The second amendment is to insert, after the word "thereto," in the sixth line, in order to follow the amendment in paragraph 3, the words "within the territory."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CRERAR: Before we pass to section 4, I wish to move an amendment, to add a new subsection to section 3. I beg to move:

That section 3 be amended by adding as subsection 7 the following:

"In any rates or tariff of rates fixed or approved by the board, rates in the territory lying west of Fort William in the province of Ontario, and east of the Rocky mountains, shall not exceed by more than ten per cent the rates or tariff of rates fixed or approved for the same commodities in the territory lying east of Sudbury in the province of Ontario, but nothing herein contained shall be taken to imply that rates in one territory are to be higher than rates in any other territory."

In order to give the committee the reasons that have induced me to move this amendment, it is necessary to traverse the history of the Crowsnest agreement, and I shall do so as briefly as possible. This Crowsnest pass agreement, as every member of the committee is aware, was placed on the statute books of Canada in 1897. It remained there undisturbed until conditions produced by the war made necessary a suspension of the application of the rates under that agreement, and I am free to say, sir—and I think I am well within the judgment of every member of the committee—that if the war had not occurred, we would have had no discussion as far as abrogation of the Crowsnest agreement and its application to western rates is concerned. The agreement was in the nature of a contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. A good deal has been heard in the discussion whcih has taken place in the chamber in the last few days upon the sanctity of contracts. I do not wish to deal with that phase of the question at any length.

I may, however, be permitted to observe that when the Canadian Pacific Railway was issued a charter in 1881, it had a definite contract, for instance, with the Canadian government, and the Canadian people through the government, in respect of the matter of taxation, and that contract was consistently lived up to by the Canadian people, although in western Canada it imposed serious hardships and burdens upon many sections of the community. I do not wish, however, to argue on the matter of the contract. The purpose of the contract was not alone to give a subsidy for the building of the Crowsnest pass railway. That opportunity was taken by the government of the day to establish a principle in respect of western rates. The reason for the establishment of that principle is clearly evident. The whole question of freight rates in Canada is complicated and made difficult by the geographical character of the country. We have really in Canada, in the main, two separate communities. We have an eastern community, the eastern section of the country that lies east of the Great Lakes, and the western section of Canada lying west of those Great Lakes. Separating the two is a thousand miles of wilderness which, as I have stated before on other occasions, is the most significant political fact in Canada to-day. I may interject here that, in my judgment, the greatest task of statesmanship in Canada at this time is to reconcile the diverging interests of those two sections of our country.

The principle that was sought to be established when the Crowsnest pass agreement was given effect to was to afford a measure of protection to western Canada in the matter of freight rates. In eastern Canada freight rates are governed by water competition. They are at times governed by American rail competition. An instance of this is the grain rates from bay ports to Montreal and St. John. These rates naturally are influenced by the corresponding rates from Buffalo to ports like Philadelphia and New York. Consequently, American rail competition does, within certain limits, affect Canadian eastern rates. But the big factor governing railway rates in eastern Canada, as I stated a moment ago, is water competition. That fact is not denied, and it has not been denied in this debate. In fact, it was admitted in judgments of the railway commission several years ago, particularly in the case that, if my memory serves me aright, was known as the Eastern Rates case. What does this mean? It means a definite limitation on the rail rates that may be established in eastern Canada. That fact, let me repeat for the information of the committee, has governed the railway commission at all times in its consideration of rates.

With that fact I want the committee to couple the next fact which is this. It has been admitted, and it has not been challenged so far in this debate, that the railways must be permitted rates that will enable them to operate. No one will quarrel with that assertion. I may say however, in passing, that even that statement requires some qualification. It requires qualification in this respect that the country cannot afford to establish rates that will give the railways the necessary returns unless those railways are efficiently and economically managed. Consequently, the factor of economy and efficiency in management enters into the consideration of the question. But, by and large, the position has been taken by successive chairmen of the Board of Railway Commissioners and indeed, by the commission throughout in its various hearings, and it has been generally recognized amongst the public and not been questioned, that the railways must be permitted rates that will enable them to function and that will give them a reasonable return on their investment.

Hitherto, in all the rate cases that have been heard in Canada in the last twenty-five years, and particularly in the last ten years, the Canadian Pacific railway has been taken as the basis upon which rates should be fixed, for a very good reason. Everyone recognizes that if rates were established on a basis to enable the Canadian National Railways, or the various railways that enter into the Canadian National railway system to pay all their operating costs and to look after their fixed charges, those rates would have to be made very much higher than they are to-day, and such rates would enable the Canadian Pacific to earn far and away beyond what it is justly entitled to earn. Therefore, the Canadian Pacific has been taken as the basis for the establishment of rates. Right here, I wish to dissent from the argument advanced in this discussion by some members of the committee that it is necessary to establish rates to enable the Canadian National Railways to pay. The argument has been advanced that rates must be established to reduce the deficits on the Canadian National Railways. I submit that on the present capitalisation of the Canadian National Railways, that cannot be done; that is to say, rates cannot be established for the National Railways to-day, that will enable it to pay operating costs and fixed charges as well. That argument is not a sound argument, and it has never been recognized as a sound position by the railway commission in any cases that have been heard before them.

What then is the bearing of all this on western Canada? The prairie provinces have no natural competition in rates. I have pointed out to the committee the competition that exists and the control exercised over rates in eastern Canada by virtue of water competition. There is no water competition in western Canada. Consequently, rates in western Canada from the very day western Canada was opened up, have been higher and, in many cases, much higher than they have been in eastern Canada, and they are much higher to-day. The Crowsnest pass agreement specifies rates on certain commodities westbound. If you take those rates to-day on all those commodities, even the Crowsnest pass rates, they are higher in almost all similar instances than rates in eastern Canada. Where then is the argument that the Crowsnest pass agreement constitutes a discrimination against eastern Canada in favour of western Canada? It does not exist. I do not need to give the figures because they have already been placed on Hansard by some hon. members around me who have preceded me in this discussion. But I repeat, that situation obtains to-day. No matter what may be said in respect of the cancellation of this portion of the agreement that applies to westbound rates, any man in his senses in this House or out of it knows there will be only one result, and that is that rates on those commodities westbound will be increased. The traditional policy of the Liberal party for over twenty-five years in Canada was formulated in the Crowsnest pass agreement and the purpose of that agreement was to give a governing control over those rates in western Canada through establishing statutory maxima that could not be exceeded. It was the policy of the Conservative party when they were in power in this country subsequently to the establishment of those rates under the agreement of 1897. I repeat, that would be the policy of Canada to-day, were we not in a position where the railways admittedly are in difficulty in securing the necessary revenues to keep them going and, consequently, are seeking relief through the abrogation of those westbound rates; and the abrogation of those rates under this legislation will result almost immediately in an increase in them to western Canada.

Now, let me say in all fairness that the position of western Canada is not understood in the east. Let me ask hon. members to go with me for a moment to the prairies; take the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. And what I am about to say is even more true of these two provinces than of Alberta. What is our situation geographically? We are 3,000 miles from the ocean if we travel eastward; and we are almost a thousand miles, indeed, parts of Manitoba are considerably more than a thousand miles from the Pacific ocean. We are producing commodities that must find their outlet to the markets of the world through either one of these oceans. Everything that we buy we import from outside, most of it from eastern Canada, and consequently the question of freight rates is one of vital importance to the people of these provinces. There has been much criticism in eastern Canada of the desire of the prairie provinces, of Manitoba and Saskatchewan particularly, for the building of the Hudson Bay railway. The Hudson Bay railway may be a dream; the Hudson Bay railway might not function if it were built. I am not going to discuss that question at the moment. But I wish to draw to the attention of the committee this fact, that the pressure of opinion behind the Hudson Bay railway is simply a manifestation of the aspiration of the people of these provinces to have a ready and quick outlet to the sea. That is the idea behind the Hudson Bay railway project, and surely you cannot quarrel with the position taken by these provinces in that regard, and even by the province of Alberta, further west. The position taken by the railway commission repeatedly has been that the railways must be given sufficient revenues in order to function. How does the situation appear to the western Canadian? And I ask my hon. friends from Quebec and the Maritime provinces to transplant themselves for a moment to the prairies of western Canada. I am addressing myself particularly to my good friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), for whom I have the highest esteem. Let him picture himself on a farm out in Saskatchewan or practising law in a Saskatchewan town, or carrying on business in any enterprise whatever; and let him endeavour to look at the question through those spectacles. It is not denied that eastern rates are governed by water competition. Now, if the costs of railway operation go up, as they have been going up, where are the railways to get the necesary revenues to function? The leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) the other day enunciated a new policy for Canada, and that policy would certainly mean higher costs of living to railway working men. If the policy advocated in some quarters on both sides of the House is adopted in respect of the importation of coal and steel it will increase the cost of operation to the railways and sooner or later we shall be faced with the demand for a further increase in rates. Where are the railways going to get that increase in rates? If the prairie provinces are left without any protecting maximum in rates, the railways will make up the increase in those provinces, because there is nowhere else to get it. Whether that is right or wrong, let me in all earnestness say to the committee that that is the view of nine out of ten men in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to-day, I care not what may be their religion or their politics or their calling.

We have no controlling maximum when this legislation is passed except in regard to grain and flour; and I want to say something respecting grain and flour. The impression has been left on the committee that these rates are not profitable. Now, I have as great an esteem for my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) as I have for anyone in this House; but the hon. gentleman last night quoted figures which he said had been supplied by the statistical department of the Canadian National Railways and which I positively and absolutely decline to accept. And let me tell you why. In rate cases the Canadian National Railways, so far as I know, have never presented figures showing costs of operation, and income received from their western lines, but the Canadian Pacific Railway has supplied such figures. My hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) stated last night in the debate that the grain rates even on the Canadian Pacific railway to-day were not profitable. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. In the statements furnished by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the rates case of 1923 there was given a table showing the net earnings east and west, this statement being supplied at the request of counsel for the prairie provinces. I would ask the committee to bear with me while I read it, and to bear in mind that the crop movement in western Canada takes place in the months of August, September, October, November and December. During these months the greater bulk of the grain goes to market. The net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the year 1922, I believe, on lines both west and east, that is to say, east of Fort William, were as follows:

Month	Lines East	Lines West
January	$ 620,784 94	$ 466,164 37
February	898,498 96	372,504 36
March	1,766,989 35	1,094,105 12
April	1,415,683 77	1,669,001 77
May	1,796,690 39	1,980,023 02

You will notice there that the earnings in the west in the last two months exceeded those in eastern Canada. Why? Because, after the opening of navigation, the remaining crop was moving to the head of the lakes.

Mr. EULER: Are those operating earnings?

Mr. CRERAR: They are net earnings. I would direct the attention of the committee particularly to the later months, from August on. I want the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to note this, because it must have escaped his attention.

Mr. GRAHAM: It has no bearing on the amendment.

Mr. CRERAR: It has, as I will show.

Mr. MANION. Whose figures are those?

Mr. CRERAR: They were furnished by the Canadian Pacific Railway at the request of counsel for the western provinces, given under oath; and are as follows:

Month	Lines East	Lines West
June	$1,450,143 92	$1,953,112 60
July	530,249 46	1,792,659 61
August	787,620 07	2,504,033 40
September	1,013,552 56	3,734,968 01
October	822,931 95	6,339,980 52
November	4,403 91	5,048,111 03
December	566,652 41	3,170,787 84

Those are the actual figures supplied by the Canadian Pacific Railway on this occasion.

Mr. FORKE: Have you the total figures?

Mr. CRERAR: The total earnings on eastern lines were $11,674,000; on western lines, $30,026,000. It will be observed that the months in which those heavy earnings took place were the months when the grain moved most freely from the prairies to the head of the lakes. In the face of that, for my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton), or even my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), to state that these rates are not profitable is to me impossible to understand. But I will quote other evidence. Surely the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway has as good an understanding of this matter as any hon. member in this House. In the annual report to the shareholders of his company recently distributed, he attributes the decrease in their earnings to the shortage in the grain crop. He says:

> The decrease in freight earnings is largely accounted for by the much smaller movement of grain and flour, particularly the former, owing to the smaller crop in western Canada.

Now, if they were hauling this grain at a loss, how could the president of the Canadian Pacific insert such a statement in the annual report of his company? In other words, if the grain was hauled at a loss, he should rather be congratulating himself that the crop was smaller and his loss thus reduced. But in speaking at the annual meeting of the company, as reported in the Montreal Gazette of May 7, 1925, Mr. Beatty, in forecasting the prospects for the present year, used these words:

> If a good crop is garnered in this year, particularly in western Canada, we have cause for confidence that the result of the year's operations will be reasonably satisfactory.

Those are Mr. Beatty's words to his shareholders. The conditions of operation of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National railways in western Canada are so similar that for the reasons I have given I decline to accept the figures provided by the statistical department of the Canadian National Railways. Reference has been made to the fact that our grain rates in western Canada are much lower than those in the United States. That is true; no one denies it. The basis of rates in the United States is different from what it is in Canada, because the United States law governing the Interstate Commerce Commission permits differentials. Under our law such differentials are not supposed to exist unless there is undue competition. But there is another factor. The grain haulage in the states contiguous to the Canadian boundary is probably considerably less than half the distance of the grain haulage in western Canada. And I would direct the attention of the committee to this fact, that there is no freight moved with so little expense to the railways as is grain in bulk. All the railway company do is to put a car to an elevator—indeed very often they do not fix up the car—the car is loaded with grain by the elevator company, the railway agent seals the doors, the car starts on its journey to the terminals, and when it gets there the switchman shunts it to the elevator.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): And it goes back empty.

Mr. CRERAR: That is true. I would point out to my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence that all these cars went back empty when the Canadian Pacific were earning the profits on grain haulage that I mentioned a moment ago. Furthermore, those full trainloads of grain are made up at prairie points and carried through without any switching at sidings, or anything else. Consequently from the very nature of the traffic, grain is a commodity that moves cheaply, and the present rates that are fixed in this bill are, I submit, profitable rates, to the railway companies.

Now, I do think that the government in providing that the Crowsnest pass rates on grain shall not be exceeded have done a very wise piece of work. I admit the difficulties of the government's position. I know the government must be responsible to public opinion throughout the country. I know that public opinion in eastern Canada—I think wrongly, but I do not wish to be unjust—has held the view that the west were securing favours under this agreement, and that it should be wiped out. I repeat, I appreciate the difficulties of the government,—and also the difficulties of my hon. friends to my right—in dealing with the prevailing view of public opinion in this part of the Dominion. But, on the other hand, you have just as strong a public opinion in the prairie provinces that the Crowsnest pass rates are fair rates as you have in eastern Canada that they are unfair, and we poor mortals in this House of Commons have somehow to compromise those conflicting views and arrive at something that is fairly satisfactory to all concerned.

I agree in considerable measure with the argument advanced by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) yesterday in respect to the contractual obligation under the Crowsnest pass arrangement. It is true that that agreement was in the nature of a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no one in this House or out of it who, in his senses, would deny that the two parties to that agreement can abrogate or change it when they mutually agree to do so. No one can quarrel with that position, it is beyond question. But I do think my right hon. friend overlooked this point—although in a later part of his speech he seemed to be cognizant of its importance—that the Crowsnest pass agreement was not solely in the nature of a contract conferring a favour. In fact, no special privilege was conferred by it at all. It was a form of protection with respect to freight rates to an area of country that had no other protection whatsoever. Consequently it cannot be designated as something in the nature of special privilege; it gave nothing to that section at the expense of any other portion of Canada. But I admit the difficulties of the situation. The government have announced their policy in the order in council which they promulgated a short time ago containing the instructions given to the railway commission to investigate the whole rate problem in Canada and suggest a rate structure that will be fair and equal to all; in other words, the principle of equalization is to apply in the creation of those tariffs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the statement that rates will or can be equalized is misleading. You cannot have a complete equalization of rates in a country constituted geographically as Canada is; but you can approximate to an equal scale of rates, and that is what I desire to see embodied in the law by the amendment that I have proposed. I am willing to agree with the position taken yesterday by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition in his criticism of the agreement if he goes further, as he intimated he might, and takes into consideration a statutory limitation to the railway commission in the fixing of rates. It is not the function of parliament to fix freight rates. I agree with that at once. If we started to create a rate structure, and undertook to finish our job, there would not be any general election this year. There is nothing surer than that. But it is a thoroughly sound practice—and I agree entirely with my hon. friend who leads the opposition in this respect,—that parliament can lay down the principle upon which the rates shall be based. That is what I seek to do in the amendment which I have submitted to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. gentleman's amendment cover the territory of British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: No it does not, and if my hon. and good friend will have a moment's patience I will explain why. The purpose of the amendment is to embody in the statutes the broad principle of equalization which the Prime Minister has announced as the policy of the government, and which I accept because I do not wish now to question the good faith of the government or any member of it in that particular for a moment; it is the principle which has animated the government in the instructions given to the railway commission in the order in council. It is also the principle which my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) yesterday afternoon stated was a principle that could be admitted, at any rate for discussion. Now, I seek by the amendment to incorporate in the law that principle. And what is it? Not that generally speaking the rates in the prairie provinces shall be equal to those in eastern Canada, but that they shall not exceed by more than ten per cent the tariffs of rates fixed for the same commodities in the territory lying east of Sudbury.

An hon. MEMBER: East of where?

Mr. CRERAR: East of Sudbury, because I might add, I do not think it is denied by those who have studied the question, that rail rates from Sudbury right down to the Atlantic are governed by water competition. Let me repeat: the amendment seeks to establish the principle that in the prairie provinces lying west of Fort William the rates shall not exceed by more than ten per cent the rates in eastern Canada for a similar commodity.

Mr. LADNER: Why not apply it to British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR My hon. friend is very impatient. That I submit is a reasonable proposition. It is not throwing on parliament the burden of fixing railway rates; it takes the whole thing out of the realm of parliament except insofar as the grain rates are concerned, and the grain rates should stand because beyond question they are among the most profitable rates the railways have. Let me repeat: It takes the matter of freight rates out of the hands of parliament, and deals with the issue in a broad way with instructions to the railway commission to guide them in their consideration of the matter.

My hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) asks "Why is British Columbia not included"? Because the conditions of operation in British Columbia are wholly different from what they are on the prairies.

Mr. LADNER: In what respect?

Mr. CRERAR: The costs of operation in British Columbia are higher than they are on the prairies.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CRERAR: Well I am possibly getting at cross purposes with some of my British Columbia friends. I grant the objection may apply as far as the Canadian National railway down to Vancouver is concerned.

Mr. LADNER: Would that interfere with the principle of fixing the maximum rates? Even if you enter into the question of the cost of operation the principle would still remain.

Mr. CRERAR: The haulage of goods, for instance over the Canadian Pacific main line from Calgary to Vancouver is vastly a more costly operation than it is on the prairies.

Mr. LADNER: But how would that interfere with the principle of fixing maximum rates.

Mr. CRERAR: If you adopted a maximum of ten per cent and applied it to British Columbia the railways might be compelled to operate at a loss and I do not wish them to do that. It would not be fair to the prairies to put the prairie operation on a parity with mountain operation for the reason that the former is admitted to be the cheapest operation there is in Canada. That is a view which has never been assailed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If parliament should remove the physical disability of lake or water competition, should not parliament also remove the physical disability on an ordinary road?

Mr. CRERAR: I do not know that I quite get the point of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member says that because the west has no water competition parliament should come to its rescue and remove that physical disability by fixing rates, say, on grain and flour. If we remove a physical disability for the prairies why should we not remove the corresponding one over the mountain section going into British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: I do not wish to get into a discussion of the rates of British Columbia. Let me say, however, that those rates are governed in a measure by rail transportation and water competition. For instance, it is a fact, which my British Columbia friends will admit, that to-day goods are going from eastern Canada to Vancouver through the Panama canal. I am told that goods have been moved from Toronto and Hamilton to New York by rail, there loaded on a vessel, carried around through the Panama canal, and delivered in Vancouver, and that fact exercises an influence on the rail rate from Toronto and Hamilton to Vancouver.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just Vancouver?

Mr. CRERAR: I said Vancouver.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What about the Yale valley?

Mr. CRERAR: However, I am submitting this amendment as containing a definite principle which I think should be applied.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. member be willing that this principle should apply to grain and flour as well as anything else?

Mr. CRERAR: No I would not. I anticipated that question from my right hon. friend, and I say that I would not because the rates established to-day on grain and flour, under the legislation which the House is considering, are profitable rates. Now, out in that western country you have the farmer three thousand miles from the Atlantic ocean. He must transport his products over that immense distance, and must sell his grain and live stock in open competition with the world. My right hon. friend wishes to put further shackles upon him by tariff increases and raise the cost of everything he requires in order to carry on that production. Then on top of that, I presume, he would give him further encouragement by increasing the rates on grain and flour. However, that is aside from the question. I submit that the principle embodied in this amendment is a sound principle, and I commend it to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. LADNER: I asked why not extend the principle of maximum rates on grain and flour to the port of Vancouver, and through that route, as well as to eastward points? Will the hon. gentleman deal with that question.

Mr. CRERAR: I did not understand my hon. friend to ask that question, but I am wholly with him on that. At the same time I admit the difficulties which exist in incorporating in a statute many special agreements in respect to rates. I am not a lawyer but if I understand correctly the amendment was passed immediately prior to the one I am moving, it gives the people of Alberta and the people of British Columbia a case upon which to ask for a reduction in western rates on grain and flour.

Mr. LADNER: Ask the board?

Mr. CRERAR: Surely, and they are obliged to act without discrimination.

Mr. LADNER: Why not include that in the hon. gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CRERAR: Because my amendment is dealing with a separate thing altogether. I trust my hon. friend will see that.

I do not wish to take up further the time of the committee. Everyone who sits down seriously and honestly to face the question of freight rates in Canada recognizes the difficulties which surround us. I think I understand and I appreciate the opinion that exists in eastern Canada. I think it is a mistaken impression—and I am afraid widespread—that the rates which we have enjoyed under the Crowsnest pass agreement were discriminatory rates in favour of western Canada. I repeat they were not discriminatory rates in favour of western Canada. They simply, for a long period of years lessened the disability in the shape of the existing freight rates under which western Canada grew up and developed. Let me remind the committee again that the very tenacious adhesion in western Canada to the Crowsnest pass agreement is not based on a desire for special favours from this parliament. It rests upon the fear that if these controlling maxima are removed, when the railway companies require an increase in rates to meet their costs of operation, western Canada will have to pay the shot. That is the reason for the intense feeling that prevails to-day in the western provinces in regard to this matter. I am here as a member of this House; I want to take an all-Canadian view of this question. I want to try and work out something that will be mutually satisfactory to east and west, for heaven knows the problems of this country are great enough and difficult enough without having sectional strife engendered through matters of this kind, and for that reason I submit to the committee and to the government the wisdom of adopting the amendment that I have moved.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has succeeded in doing one thing, doubtless to his own satisfaction. He has succeeded in showing there is absolutely no reason for the continuance of the Crowsnest pass agreement. The only object and reason that there can be urged for the maintenance of the Crowsnest pass agreement is that if that agreement is taken away rates will go up. He has shown to his satisfaction that, on the contrary, grain and flour rates are highly productive. My hon. friend, if he believes in his figures, will turn around now and say: We do not need the Crowsnest Pass Act.

Mr. CRERAR: By what stretch of the imagination can my hon. friend reason like that?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am simply reasoning on commonsense. I am for the moment taking my hon. friend as stating something he believes in. Everybody knows that remunerative rates cannot be raised. Rates have to be maintained at a just and reasonable level, and if there be the millions in this grain business that my hon. friend says, he is quite safe in letting the Crowsnest pass agreement go. But he knows very well that the fact is not as he says. Why, Mr. Chairman, I can take the figures of the National railways and I can make just the same sort of showing with them that my hon. friend makes in connection with the Canadian Pacific. Those figures over those months, as anyone that knows anything about the business knows are illusory. What happens in connection with the grain movement?—and I will take the Canadian Pacific net figures per mile in eastern Canada and in western Canada. What happens? We will take the evidence of Sir Henry Thornton given before the Railway committee this year, and not only this year but in other years. We will take the evidence submitted in case after case. Now what has got to be done? We have in connection with the western grain crop movement a tremendous volume, for which very, very great preparations have to be made. We also have something as a result of that movement which my hon. friend ought to know; his counsel that drafted that resolution ought to have been fair enough to tell him that as a result of the weight of that movement, practically all the cost of maintenance, betterments and all that sort of thing, has to be met in western Canada before that movement commences. It is all done beforehand. Why, in connection with the autumn months of the year in western Canada it is practically all net outside of the exact cost of transportation. The road work is finished; it has to be, for there is an intense active movement which will not permit of road work going on at the same time.

Mr. CRERAR: That does not affect the totals of the net earnings I gave east and west.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not going to quarrel about earnings east and west, because there is no issue about that. Goodness gracious, when you have a far greater mileage in the west, you must have far greater earnings.

Mr. McMASTER: Or far greater losses.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Or far greater losses, as the case might be; the hon. gentleman is quite right. But what my hon. friend has argued is that these grain and flour rates are highly remunerative. I will admit this at once: The bulk of the tonnage on the Canadian Pacific Railway moves from a territory which is more contiguous to Fort William than the bulk of the tonnage on the Canadian National. The result, of course, is simply this: Every hon. gentleman that comes from the west and takes a real interest in this question, and not merely a political interest which leads him to talk about the west being shackled and other kinds of nonsense, knows this, that as we go to the longer mileage the rate comes down. We have the tapering going on, and while you can taper rates to advantage with greater profits to the company, provided your original base rate is right, if your base rate is too low, if you taper it too far, there is loss instead of profit. As a matter of fact—I am speaking now from memory—while the average rate of grain on the National is .52 per ton per mile approximately, the average rate on the Canadian Pacific is more like .58 per ton per mile owing to the shorter distance and to the fact that the scaling down has not been made. Under those circumstances the Canadian Pacific can make, and do make, a better showing than can the National in connection with grain and flour.

Now the next point which anyone who is at all fair in connection with this matter must consider is what the cost of the grain movement is, and I considered that when I gave the answer I did the other day. When I talk about a profitable movement I mean a movement yielding a real profit. One of the great factors of cost in connection with the grain movement is the collection and assemblage and carriage of an immense number of empty freight cars from all over the continent to western Canada. Those cars are carried sometimes from the Maritimes, as far as that; I have made them carry them for that length myself in order to see that the western grain crop was moved. I wonder if hon. gentlemen have any idea what that cost means. I wonder if they have ever considered it. Those figures given by my hon. friend pay absolutely no attention to that cost at all, not the slightest. The whole of the cost of getting ready for that grain movement, and it amounts to a tremendous sum of money, through eastern territory is all charged up to eastern territory, and the east practically does not get one single sou out of it. One of the reasons for a higher operating cost in eastern territory is that the eastern territory has to look after supplying all these cars for the west.

Mr. BANCROFT: How do these cars come to be there? Would they not be full cars when they go there, and would not that be credited to eastern territory?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In the first instance, the very great volume of western business is grain and flour. That does not last very many months in the year. Freight cars are worth something. If they are allowed to stand idle the investment is entirely idle. They have to be moved where there is business to be done, and they are taken to where there is business to do. When that business is done, they have to be taken back.

Mr. FORKE: Has the hon. member ever seen an empty freight car going east? I never heard of one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is wrong about that. There are some that go east.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was discussing the movement of empty freight cars, and I think the hon. member for Brandon was about to ask me a question. Perhaps he will repeat it.

Mr. FORKE: I only asked the ex-Minister of Finance if he ever saw a train load or half a train load of empty cars going east?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In what territory?

Mr. FORKE: From the west.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend means in western territory. There is no question that his point is perfectly well taken. The burden of the empty car movement is not on the west but on the east. My hon. friend is quite right when he says he does not see any empty cars going from western Canada. Why, the waste of money occurs in getting cars from eastern Canada out west. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar) in giving his figures did not take into consideration any of these important factors. I was not in the House when my hon. friend gave his figures, but I have been told that he took the year 1923. He used Canadian Pacific Railway figures, and I may say that in 1923 there was collected in eastern territory, Ontario, Quebec and even the Maritime provinces, 23,000 cars for the purpose of looking after the western business. Of course that is something which has to be done by the east entirely at its own expense.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): Admitting my hon. friend is right in his figures that there is a movement of empty cars westward, will he not agree that the higher the freight rate on the commodities moving to the west, the more empty cars will go that way?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The best way of remedying empty car movement would be a higher tariff on importations from the south, which my hon. friends to my left are so fond of engaging in, instead of using their railways. As it stands at present the figures are 23,000 cars for the year 1923.

Mr. CRERAR: At what season of the year are they moved west?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In time to look after the crop. When I was on the railway board I used to start prodding up the railway companies early in May for the purpose of making sure that the empty cars would be moved west in time to look after the grain crop. Using round figures, in 1923 23,000 cars were moved from eastern territory, and the cost of moving every single one of those cars was charged to the east.

Mr. CRERAR: How did those cars get to eastern Canada? They carried freight of course.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is rather incorrect in his assumption. In connection with the movement of that grain crop looked after by these cars, which my hon. friend ought to know something about, approximately only six per cent is moved by railway cars in eastern territory. That may be news to him, but it is the sad fact that anybody who has anything to do with railway rates in eastern territory knows. In other words, eastern territory pays the whole cost of getting those cars there, and only enjoys six per cent of a haul out of that whole movement, and yet it is all charged to the east. Has my hon. friend any idea about overheads in business? Is it possible to get him to understand that? I wonder if it is possible to get him to realize that in connection with the overhead of a business which goes on for twelve months in the year, you have a twelfth of the overhead to be looked after month by month, and if you have a business that is practically all peak and a business which is confined to a comparatively short period, the overheads are infinitely greater. Does my hon. friend understand that? He loses all sight of that, and pays not the slightest attention to it, any more than he pays attention to the amount of money that is spent in preparation for that movement before the movement commences, but which is just as chargeable in expense to that movement as is the coal used in the engine itself. Of course these considerations have to be lost sight of when we can get hold of a few characteristic figures, really meaning nothing, but making first rate material for a political speech.

Mr. FORKE: A great piece of bluff.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I did not quite catch what my hon. friend said. I want to do him justice. Would he repeat it.

Mr. FORKE: I said it was a great piece of bluff.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid I cannot pay much tribute to my hon. friend from Brandon.

Mr. FORKE: To his intelligence?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would not say to his intelligence, but to his capacity to deal fairly with a question which really requires fair treatment and which should not be treated from a sectional point of view. I should like to know whether he thinks, for example, that it is unfair to say that overhead has something to do with the length of time that is occupied. Would he say that? I do not think that is a point which I have been making. Would he say that it is unfair to charge the work necesary to be done for a given movement months before that movement takes place, to that movement? If he does, that just indicates the extent to which my hon. friend is prepared to go in looking at this question from a sectional standpoint. We have also, in connection with the grain movement, the peak that I speak of and, besides that, we have in western territory something which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) conveniently forgets about. We have at the same time the peak in the coal movement in that territory. Of course, it is all put down to wheat and flour when that is convenient; but the fact is that in western Canada we have two peaks occurring at the same time, and peaks, as any hon. gentleman knows who has any business experience, mean expense. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canadian National Railways have to have on hand enough rolling stock to look after those peaks. The complete total of rolling stock in this country is by no means used all the year round. I would give the hon. member for Marquette credit for knowing that fact, but he does not give any appreciation to it in connection with the use which he makes of these figures. We have locomotives greased up during certain portions of the year.

Mr. HOEY: I think the hon. member is attempting to be fair. Will he comment just for a moment or two on President Beatty's statement with respect to the western crop as quoted by the hon. member for Marquette? President Beatty said:

> If a good crop is garnered this year, particularly in western Canada, we have cause for confidence that the results of the year's operations will be reasonably satisfactory.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I agree with my hon. friend absolutely. Until we had the figures from my hon. friend and the deductions from them, I was saying, what I still believe, that the most important thing in connection with public business in this country and our economic welfare is the movement of our grain crop.

Mr. HOEY: Then the railways are not carrying the grain at a loss.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is a little rash in jumping too early to that conclusion. Activities in any line upon any part of the system, which add to the buying power of the prairies, which create the buying power of the prairies, make and mean business all along the line. As I pointed out before, the position of the Canadian Pacific as a result of the shorter mileage is certainly very much better than that of the Canadian National Railways. There is no question about that. I pointed out that the average grain earnings per ton mile on the Canadian Pacific are more like .58 as against .52 on the Canadian National and that, of course, means a great deal more money for the Canadian Pacific.

Let us see what the proposition is that my hon. friend wants. Irrespective of volume, irrespective of public necessity, irrespective of all business conditions, yes, irrespective of the very life of the districts themselves, he wants to apply an arbitrary rule giving a variation of 10 per cent. I suppose what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If at the same time grain and flour rates in the west were brought up to a point within 10 per cent of grain and flour rates in the east, and that was put into effect and the western people knew it was put into effect as a result of the agitation of my hon. friend, the west would not be a safe place for him a year after that was done. It would be an absolutely dangerous place for him, because if anything could be done to ruin the west, it would be simply the adoption of what my hon. friend was pleading for this afternoon, applying it honestly and fairly over the whole situation.

Mr. CRERAR: I excepted flour and grain rates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Just take notice of the wonderful fairness of my hon. friend. He excepts the one thing which western Canada is entirely interested in and dependent upon.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is not going to misrepresent me. I will tell him that right now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Go ahead and let us see where it is wrong.

Mr. CRERAR: I stated that bulk grain rates to-day in western Canada are amongst the most profitable rates the railway companies have, and the evidence proves that. That is the case on the existing scale of rates and it should not be increased.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is interrupting now for the sake of interruption. He has said absolutely nothing which contradicts a single word I said. The grain movement is the heavy movement in western Canada. It is the one movement in which the rates are low and he says: Of course, I except that, but in connection with all other movements we want to come to your rate with the exception of 10 per cent. I am going to deal with the question of business and its percentages in regard to the different territories. It is exceedingly difficult fairly to segregate the result of any section of the railways, because all parts are interdependent and interrelated one on the other. But the traffic can be segregated. I will take the figures again for 1923 which are as follows:

	Western lines tonnage per cent	Eastern lines tonnage per cent
Grain movement..	55.9	17.4
Forest products..	8.7	10.05
Coal..	11.4	11.8
Ores..	2.5	1.0
Manufactured goods.. ..	20.0	56.4

In other words, the situation is this. In western territory practically eighty per cent of the traffic of western lines is carried at low class commodity rates. That is why the west is getting off so much more cheaply than the east in connection with what it is actually paying. In other words, the freight schedule to-day that my hon. friend is attacking is a freight schedule which is looking after eighty per cent of western activities and looking after it so well that much less money is being taken out of the west than is being taken out of the east for the actual service rendered. As against that eighty per cent in the western territory, in the eastern territory the same class of traffic amounts to 43.6 per cent. This is a pretty good illustration of the underlying necessity of railway rates, that is to look after our real business at low rates, the business that the district is actually interested in. Eighty per cent of the whole business of the west is carried on at a low rate, as the figures show. But my hon. friend, in connection with some paper traffic, does not hesitate to imperil the whole freight structure and the economic future of Canadian railways to the great injury of his own province.

Mr. CRERAR: Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to state his case over again? I must confess that to me it is about as intelligible as Einstein's theory of relativity.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would expect that from my hon. friend; I see he does not know anything about the subject.

Mr. CRERAR: Perhaps my hon. friend, who knows all about it, will explain why the net earnings of the system in western Canada came to $30,000,000 while in eastern Canada they totalled only $11,600,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We shall come to that point.

Mr. CRERAR: I was afraid you would get away from it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is nothing in this that we want to get away from. Now, I desire to point out again, not to my hon. friend, because he would not understand it, but to the committee, the great degree in which there is a peak in western territory while the tonnage movement on the eastern lines varies but little from month to month. In the last four months of the year, when the grain crop is carried, 54.97 of the western traffic of 1923 was moved. I do not know whether my hon. friend thinks that the rates per ton per mile have anything to do with the Einstein theory that he cannot understand them, but I have already given the figures and if he wants any further light on the point I shall be glad to help him. But I take it that he does understand something about the matter. Now I will come to what my hon. friend has in mind, namely, the total earnings; and I shall give them for two years. In 1923 the Canadian Pacific Railway operated in eastern territory 4,827 miles. And here I may explain that these are the results of the whole year when the costs are properly charged; they are not the first impression monthly statements at all. In western territory the Canadian Pacific Railway in the same year operated 8,259 miles. The earnings per mile of railway in the east were $17,893 as against $12,589 in the west. The expenses per mile of operation in the east in that year were $14,346 and in the west they were $9,069. The net per mile—the operating net and of course having nothing to do with fixed charges—was in the east $3,547 and in the west $3,520. These are the actual figures after the proper final calculations are made. If my hon. friend is not content to take the usual yardstick of ton per mile, I should like to know what his complaint is. Does he honestly think that he could get it any closer than a net per mile of $3,547 in eastern Canada and $3,520 in western Canada?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is allowance made there for the charges in the east in connection with the empty car collections?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No allowance is made for that. In 1924 the mileage operated in the east was somewhat greater, 4,896 miles, while in the west it was also greater, 8,465. The earnings per mile in the east in that year were $16,632 per mile and in the west $11,312. The expenses per mile in the east were $13,197 and in the west $8,085. Hon. gentlemen will remember that I told them when we were first discussing the matter, that we always had lower expenses in the west, and this demonstrates the truth of that statement. The net per mile in 1924 was $3,435 in the east and $3,227 in the west. These are the actual concrete results on the final auditing of the respective mileages of the system.

Mr. HOEY: When you speak of the west you include British Columbia?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, that is right. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Crerar) is not to blame for the figures he presented to the House; counsel in that particular case had his own axe to grind and he prepared a particular statement which means very little. I was perfectly fair in pointing out that if my hon. friend really believes in his own figures he does not need any Crowsnest pass agreement at all. Rates that are remunerative cannot be raised because that would be unfair and unjust. But there is not a single western member in the House who does not know that the Canadian wheat and flour rates are the lowest in the world.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is not the hon. gentleman aware that the rate on the Canadian Pacific Railway from Goderich to Maritime ports is considerably lower than the Crowsnest rate?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that at all; I do know that so far as rates are concerned, the rate per ton per mile in the west is considerably lower than any I know of. If my hon. friend is able to find any considerable tonnage that moves in eastern territory at lower rates then he will quarrel seriously with the rate per ton figures showing the actual results as I have given them to the committee already, as being in eastern territory 1.173 as against .87 in western territory. All hon. members to my left who are members of the Railway committee know how the accounts are kept in the Canadian National and they know what the results are. If there is any truth whatever in this range of figures, why is it that the territory, the east, which it is said has such low rates is carrying the territory that has the high rates? The heavy tonnage was in the west all right. If there is the slightest economic truth behind the figures used by my hon. friend from Marquette why is it that in a year when central Canada produces a surplus of $22,000,000, the territory where we are told the rates are so high and the tonnage so great shows a loss of $2,200,000?

Mr. FORKE: You refer to the whole western territory right through to Prince Rupert, I suppose?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly.

Mr. FORKE: Is it fair to do so?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have thought so. Why not? We are told the rates are even more out of line in British Columbia. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to my left to say, "We have to carry the Grand Trunk Pacific to Prince Rupert." But we have to carry the same sort of stuff in the "long bridge" and the Transcontinental. Do not think you have any monopoly of these burdens. In that western territory where, according to my hon. friend (Mr. Crerar), the rates are so high and the tonnage so great, in that particular year there is a deficit in connection with the National Railways of $2,200,000, while in central Canada we produced a surplus of $22,000,000. Mr. Chairman, the thing is ridiculous. And, what is more, it is entirely against the interest of that western territory that such statements should be made. The worst thing that can happen to the western territory is to have its 80 per cent of traffic treated in the same way that it is treated in eastern Canada. Just see the fairness of this loaded proposition. Special rates for the heavy movement of western Canada; no special rate for the heavy movement of central Canada They are to have their special privileges, but in so far as the rates are concerned where the tonnage is heavy in central Canada, where there are commodity rates, notwithstanding the fact that they are not much interested in that business and very little moves under it, they are to come within 10 per cent of the same basis.

Are these grain rates high? Very profitable? Just let us see, Mr. Chairman. I made reference to the application by the railway carriers in United States grain territory on the prairies to the south for an increase in rates. I want the House to realize what rates these railways seek to have so substantially increased. First let us take the short distances. For 420 miles out of Fort William the rates in Canada are 14 cents per hundred pounds; for 417 miles in the American territory they are 20½ cents. Portage la Prairie with its mileage of 475 has a rate of 15 cents; a similar mileage in American territory has a rate of 23 cents. Carberry with its mileage of 525 has a rate of 16 cents; for the comparative mileage in United States territory the rate is 23½ cents. I take these small mileages because the density of movement in the shorter hauls is greater in the States than it is with us. If we take the longer mileages in which we are so much interested, we find the Lethbridge rate is 25 cents, as against 48 cents for a similar mileage in the United States. That is the class of rates that these companies are seeking to have increased. Let us take another feature of rate structures. The average rate in western territory was .87 cents on all traffic carried by the Canadian Pacific. The American companies are appealing to the Interstate Commerce Commission because they say they cannot get along with an average per ton revenue as high as 12.09 mills. Why, in 1921, one of their lean years, their revenue was 14.22 mills—nearly 1½ cents—as against .87 cents. Yet they are saying they cannot get along with that revenue. Why? Because it is impossible to borrow money, their earnings being insufficient to attract investors. They are quarrelling with earnings which yield them a trifle under 4 per cent on their investment. They want to get 5¾ per cent on the actual cash investment in their property. Here, as I pointed out the other day, we have the Canadian Pacific on the actual cash invested in their property earning a little over 4.3 or 4.4 per cent. I am pointing out, Mr. Chairman, that this is a pretty good confirmation of the figures of the National Railways.

Now, I should like hon. gentlemen to my left to again consider this grain business. I gave an illustration the other day as to how quickly things can change in this connection. The statistics worked out by the statistical department which I gave to the House are much more refined than what I am now going to give, they are more correct because they eliminate charges which, in part, cannot fairly be charged to the grain movement less yardage and the like; those are deducted in connection with the five and six million dollar odd loss I gave to the House. I should like hon. gentlemen to do a little figuring on this themselves, and as apparently they did not quite understand them I want to give the figures again. These figures nearly approximate what we are doing ourselves on the National system. Take a total freight traffic of seven billion ton miles, with an average rate per ton per mile of .55 cents. Let us assume that the grain traffic is 60 per cent of that, and in round numbers let us take it again, as I took it the other day, at four billion ton miles. Now, we have an average rate on our grain of .52 cents. Let us assume an operating ratio of 70 per cent. Then the average cost per ton mile is 70 multiplied by 55 divided by 100; that gives your average rate per ton per mile. Your operating ratio is 70 per cent of those receipts. that would give you for your cost .385 cents per ton mile. I think that is clear because there is nothing of an Einstein character about this at all. It is perfectly clear to everybody who wants to understand it and who really ought to understand it. That would give a net operating profit on grain of .52 cents which is the grain rate, less the .385 cents which is the average cost per ton mile, yielding a profit of .135 cents per ton mile. Now hon. gentlemen might think that was a very small thing, but it is a big thing. That was one of the reasons why I have always attributed much more money to this business than many railroaders did. That little decimal .135 of but one cent on a traffic of 4,000,000,000 ton miles gives a profit of $5,400,000. Now, just see how easy that is changed? Supposing we take the figures which we had last year, the same 7,000,000,000 ton miles of traffic with an average rate per ton mile of .763 cents. The general average rate has been raised, But we will take the round figures for the grain traffic of sixty per cent at 4,000,000,000 miles. The grain rate did not go up with the others; the grain rate still stands at .52 cents although the average goes up to .763 cents. Now, supposing we take the operating ratio which obtained, that is 91.08 per cent, make the same calculation and you have a cost per ton mile of .694 cents, resulting in an operating loss of the difference between that cost .694 and .52 cents or .172 cents, bringing about an actual loss of $6,880,000.

I do not think I should further delay the committee except to point out that my hon. friend wants the same rates as in the east. We would welcome that if it were not for one thing—we want to see the west function. My hon. friend wants the same paper rates as in the east, which will not help anybody except some newspaper editors, or some politician who wants to create a grievance here and a grievance there. I would have no objection if it were not for one thing. That is we all want to see the west continue to grow and prosper. If that is what my hon. friend wants let us in all fairness refer the whole matter, without any limitation, to the railway board. If it is my hon. friend's wish he can have the whole matter referred there; but it will not do to try and load the dice in two directions at the same time.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not going to delay the committee more than a minute or two. My chief utterance will be that the government cannot accept this amendment, for the simple reason that if an amendment is to be accepted to give special treatment to a particular territory, even in addition to the special treatment in the extended territories covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement, on grain and flour, then let us throw the matter wide open and give the same treatment to all parts of Canada. The government has endeavoured, and hon. members have shown on all sides a wish, to meet the desires of the west, but our kind-heartedness does not seem to have been appreciated. If this additional advantage is to be given to the prairies extending to the Rocky mountains, then I say ignore the Rocky mountains and go through to British Columbia. If this additional advantage is going to be given to the prairies then open it up to the province of Ontario, give it to Quebec, give it to the Maritime provinces, and allow your railways to go to the demnition bow-wows.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister had better go right on now and deal with the whole problem.

Mr. GRAHAM: Well, as I pointed out in the House before, we are endeavouring to meet the views of a part of Canada that has had the Crowsnest pass rate for a long time. We are endeavouring to meet that situation, not so much for the people themselves as to meet the psychology of the situation so that the people of the prairie provinces will have no opportunity to feel that they have not been treated generously, I would say, in comparison with the other parts of Canada. I think I need not make any further explanation. I think my hon. friends will see that the government and parliament could not accept that amendment to give still further preferential treatment to the prairies over every other part of Canada.

Mr. BIRD: I will not detain the committee for any length of time except to say a word or two in support of the amendment which I think to be a very generous one from the standpoint of western Canada. The government in putting forward their proposition made two or three claims with which I want to deal. In the first place they claimed they were delivering the country from the confusion in which it found itself at the present time with regard to freight rates. I want to ask who produced the confusion, and why? One of the parties to the agreement is responsible for producing the confusion, and the reason for producing confusion was to defeat the declared will of parliament, to dispossess the west, and to fool the people of Canada. That is why confusion was produced, one of the most astounding pieces of psychological trickery this country has known. It reminds me of the trick of the pickpocket who will cause a disturbance in a crowd in order that his colleagues may get away with the jewelry. That was the cause of this confusion that has been projected into the minds of the people of Canada. This is the very thing that inspired Aesop's fable about the wolf and the lamb. You remember how the wolf stirred up the mud in the stream in order to have an excuse to devour the lamb. The railways of this country have precipitated the situation which is poisoning the mind of Canada, and if the public mind had not been poisoned the government could not have got away with this bill to-night. Now, the government by their passive attitude were responsible for allowing that poison to work in the public mind. A psychological situation has been created by the supineness of the government. They are responsible for it indirectly, and yet to-day they are bragging because this bill is going to cure the situation that they themselves helped to create. It is like a physician exposing a man to contagion, and then bragging because he has helped to cure him. That is the situation the government are in. Since last July they have condoned the action of the railways, one of the parties concerned in the agreement, in poisoning the public mind of Canada, and to-night they are taking advantage of that state of public mind. I challenge the government to say whether they could have got away with this if the ground had not been very carefully prepared for them.

Mr. GRAHAM: May I answer that question? If the government did not stand as the buffer, the whole Crowsnest agreement would have been wiped out at this session by an enormous majority. The government has been trying to protect my hon. friend so far as it could, and now it gets abuse for doing so.

Mr. BIRD: Why would the Crowsnest pass agreement have been wiped out at this session? Because the public mind of Canada had been prepared for wiping it out, and the government has been a party to that.

Mr. STORKE: We can do it yet if you go too strong.

Mr. BIRD: The real situation this last few days has not been the confused state of the freight rates in Canada; it has been the confused state of the public mind into which the freight rate situation has brought it. During this debate the government has not been free from the attempt to put upon us the onus, as though we were trying to defend an indefensible position, a position that is bringing Canada into a state of utter confusion in regard to its freight rates. The thing to be discriminated in the public mind —it may be too late—but what we want to discriminate in our minds is between the Crowsnest pass agreement as it stands to-night and as it will stand until this bill is carried, and the Crowsnest pass agreement as we knew it prior to 1917. We are not standing for the Crowsnest pass agreement as it stands to-night; we want the Crowsnest pass agreement as it stood prior to 1917.

The CHAIRMAN: I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that this debate has been limited by the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). There is another general clause of the bill dealing with rates.

Mr. BIRD: If I get my remarks over all at once, Mr. Chairman, it will relieve me of the necessity of speaking later.

Mr. GRAHAM: Get it all out and you will feel better.

Mr. BIRD: The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) in presenting his case said that there were only three alternatives—to destroy the Crowsnest pass agreement, to continue it as it is, or to accept his own intermediary proposition. Now we on this side do not admit that there are only three alternatives. There was another alternative, and that was to restore the Crowsnest pass agreement as we understood it prior to 1917, and I might say, after listening to the case of the Solicitor General, prior to the decision of the Supreme court itself, because even the government itself according to his generous interpretation, stood for the old Crowsnest pass agreement until that date.

The Minister of Railways said that this bill was necessary in order to save the railways. He might as well have said that at first. I believe that that is the motive of the whole bill, to save the railways. These are the words he used. He said: "Parliament can ruin the railways." Now I think that is the gist of his whole position. Parliament can ruin the railways. The attitude we take expresses itself oppositely from that. We believe that the railways can ruin the people whom parliament is supposed to represent, and we believe that the railways will ruin the people if they do not wake up. We have abundant evidence to show that it is the people who need protection against the railways. We have come to the point, as one writer says, where we no longer ride on the railways, but the railways ride upon us, and they would ride upon us still more if the people themselves did not have some degree of say in this House. Parliament can ruin the railways indeed but this parliament, as it is presently constituted, has not much chance of ruining the railways. The railways have too many stout defenders in this House for parliament ever to ruin them. We have listened to some extremely good briefs during this debate on behalf of the railways. We have not heard any similar brief on behalf of the people of western Canada. We have had one or two good speeches on behalf of the west, but we have had nothing equal to some of the lawyer-like statements made on behalf of the railways in this debate. No, Mr. Chairman, there is not much chance of this parliament ruining the railways if it continues to be constituted as it is at the present time. The Crowsnest pass agreement, when it was first instituted, was meant to safeguard the people.

9 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN: I must again draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that there is a limitation to this debate. This is not a general rate debate by reason of the admendment that has been introduced by the hon. member for Marquette.

Mr. BIRD: I would ask the Chairman to have a little more patience with me while I develop my argument.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot, because this debate is limited by reason of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Marquette.

Mr. BIRD: I am sorry. I will endeavour to shape my remarks to meet with your views, Mr. Chairman. I was proceeding to say that the Crowsnest pass agreement in its first intention was meant to safeguard the rights of the people. That is the distinction between the original agreement and this bill. This bill is framed to safeguard the railways. The original agreement that we are asked to give up for this was meant to safeguard the people. That is the distinction between the old and the new, and that is the way it will work out so far as I can see.

The Minister of Railways complained that the yardstick, as he called it, as laid down by the Crowsnest pass agreement, was too short for modern conditions. He gave no proof of it, and I do not think there is any proof of it. I think the hon. member for Marquette proved conclusively that the yardstick laid down by the Crowsnest pass agreement is abundantly long enough even for present conditions. But supposing it was not long enough, supposing the yardstick had shrunk relatively, supposing it was no longer adapted; is the proposition of this bill before us the right one? This is to do away with the yardstick altogether. Is that the right proposition? I believe that the amendment is the right one, because it introduces what this bill alone abolishes; it reintroduces the yardstick, as the minister calls it. It lays down a standard by which rates in western Canada as they have been in the past will be determined in relation to rates in the east, where special factors enter into the situation, and will guarantee to western shippers a measure of justice.

Mr. McTAGGART: Would the hon. gentleman be agreeable to laying down the yardstick for other parts of the Dominion?

Mr. BIRD: I think what I have just said implied that a yardstick was necessary for the west in the sense that it was necessary for the east, because the east, as has been said over and over again in this debate, has its controlling factors, not only in the water competition but in the American railways. We regret that these extraordinary pecautions should be necessary, but we cannot help the situation in which we find ourselves and if the Crowsnest pass agreement with its yardstick was necessary twenty-five years ago, it is necessary now. That is one thing that no person has dealt with in this debate. There was a reason for the institution of the Crowsnest pass agreement and that reason was the exposed position of the western shipper as compared with the eastern shipper. The Crowsnest pass agreement was not instituted for nothing. It was not a freak. There was a reason for it, namely to give some assurance to the western farmer and the western shipper that he would not be imposed upon in fixing rates. We are not contending for the former rates, but for a principle. It is all very well to say, "Trust the board", as our hon. friends to our right have stated. It is like asking Esau to trust Jacob.

The CHAIRMAN: I must call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that his remarks are not relevant to the amendment, and are therefore out of order.

Mr. BIRD: The Chairman's ideas of what is in order and my own ideas seem to clash at every point.

The CHAIRMAN: Sections 2 and 3 dealt with the general question of rates, and an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) limiting the debate to a certain rate from Sudbury east and from Fort William west. There is a further clause dealing generally with rates, under which my hon. friend might discuss the question of rates. But the limitation of this amendment is so clearly defined that I submit there cannot be a general debate.

Mr. BIRD: The object of this amendment is to substitute something which is lacking in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: No, not to substitute anything. It is adding a subsection to it.

Mr. BIRD: It is to supply something that is lacking under the bill. By inference I feel I have a perfect right to refer to these matters.

The CHAIRMAN: I rule the hon. member must debate the amendment. He can discuss the general question of rates under section 4, but he cannot do it on this amendment.

Mr. BIRD: We have heard quite a bit about equalization in this debate. The last speaker dealt very fully with the question of equalization. Now the socialistic belief of the ex-Minister of Finance in regard to the impossibility of equalizing unequal things is a little difficult to grasp in this connection. It seems to me that he suggests a remedy for this situation which amounts to robbing Peter to pay Paul, or cutting a little bit off the top of the blanket and adding it to the bottom. His profound treatment of the subject amounts to nothing more than that, and this profound remedy, this obscure and abstruse remedy has to be left in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Now I am treading on dangerous ground again, but I do not see how I can go ahead with my argument without bringing in the railway commission.

Mr. FORKE: The ex-Minister of Finance did nothing but talk about rates.

Mr. BIRD: I cannot talk about rates unless I bring in the railway commission. It seems to me to be a new conception of British government that we should relegate the most vital things in matters of government to commissions. Here we have something more important than taxation so far as the west is concerned. No proper conception of the British constitution would tolerate for a moment the relegation of taxation to a commission which had no responsibility to anyone, which represented nobody; and yet that is what our friends to my right would have us do. They would have us commit something which is more vital than taxation in this country to a body of men who are not responsible, with only some vague appeal from that body to the Governor in Council. That is a thing that cannot be tolerated for one moment on broader principles than we are considering to-night; and as we are situated in the west, we cannot subscribe to a theory of that kind, not only from the standpoint of theory but because of the lessons of experience. The railway commission, whatever their intentions may have been, have played into the hands of the railway corporations of this country as against the western shipper. That is what the western shipper believes, and he believes it because of the experience he has had, and yet we are asked to forego all the safeguards we have ever had and place our fortunes in the hands of a commission of that kind.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend say that he thinks the railway commission should disregard altogether the interests of the railway companies of this country, including the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. BIRD: Not at all; I am not contending that the railway commission should have a free hand in any direction.

Mr. VIEN: You said just now that the railway commission had played into the hands of the railway companies of this country.

Mr. BIRD: Yes.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend say that the Board of Railway Commissioners should ignore the interests of the railway companies which carry on the business of railway transportation in this country, including the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. BIRD: No, I did not say that. I think the railway commission should have regard for this parliament which represents the people, and carry out the policies laid down in parliament.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. gentleman has been criticizing the railway commission which is a judicial body. I raise a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friends may laugh, but they had better read the rules of the House first.

Mr. BIRD: I have as much regard for the sanctity of the railway commission as my hon. friend, only I do not see as much sanctity in it as he does. If this theory of an all-powerful railway commission is to be carried out—and to all intents and purposes the government are at one—

Mr. CANNON: I do not like to interfere with the hon. gentleman's speech, but I raise a point of order and I should like to have a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order raised by the hon. gentleman is the well recognized rule that judicial officers or bodies must not have wrong motives imputed to them in their hearing of cases or in their judgments. I did not understand that the hon. member was imputing wrong motives in what he said, but an hon. member cannot impute dishonest or any other kind of sinister motives to any judicial officer or body.

Mr. CANNON: If I understood the hon. member aright—and if I did not, I stand to be corrected—he said that he had no confidence in that board. Any hon. gentleman who says that he has no confidence in a judicial body certainly should be called to order.

Mr. BIRD: I was referring to the board, not as persons but as a system for regulating freight rates in Canada, and I have no confidence in the railway board as a system for fixing railway rates in Canada, because I believe it will work out to the detriment of the people of western Canada.

Mr. CANNON: Why so, may I ask?

Mr. BIRD: That is the point at issue.

Mr. CANNON: Would the hon. member not have any confidence in the decisions of that board?

Mr. BIRD: No, because I believe it is an arbitrary body far removed from the will of the people.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell).

Mr. BIRD: If the railway commission were all composed of autocrats, Mussolinis, I would not trust them as a means of regulating rates in Canada. I will not trust any body that is not responsible to the people.

Mr. RINFRET: What about other courts of justice? If my hon. friend had a suit coming before a court, would he not have confidence in the decision of the judge?

Mr. BIRD: Judges deal with matters of fact, not with matters of policy. There is, however, something to be said about courts of justice being more representative than they are at the present time. The point I was coming to was this, that without some such provision as this amendment supplies, the west is going to be, as was so well put by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), eternally squeezed between the tariff and high freight rates. There is no doubt about that in my mind. The tariff compels us to buy our goods from the east, and this bill is going to compel us to pay increasing freight rates upon those tariff-burdened goods. I can see that the people in the north whom I represent, every time they eat at their breakfast table, will have the consciousness that they are helping to save the railways of Canada from ruination. They are going to pay more on the fruit they eat, on the things that enter into their houses. I would like hon. members to see some of the houses which the people of the west have to live in by reason of the high cost of building material. Every time a man tries to make his farm house a little more comfortable, he will have the consciousness that he is helping to save the railways of Canada from ruination.

The minister says that there are compensations. I do not think there is any compensation for taking away our safeguard in regard to westbound traffic. This amendment has in view the assurance of that safeguard. We do not want compensations. We want the thing that we have always had and rejoiced in—a sense of security as against the Board of Railway Commissioners. What is the use of talking to us about compensations? To-night I suppose we are standing at the open grave of the Crowsnest pass agreement, and the minister comes and talks to us of compensations. That does not comfort us in the least because, so far as we are concerned, the Crowsnest pass agreement is dead forever. It may remain on the statute book, but it is of no further use to us as a rate-controlling factor. Compensation means an equivalent. Are they giving us an equivalent? Why, they have taken a dollar from us, and they are giving us fifty cents back and telling us that is compensation. That is the situation. We started with a dollar and now we have fifty cents.

An hon. MEMBER: You are lucky.

Mr. BIRD: Yes. The man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho was lucky too. In the midst of the confusion that has been created by the railways themselves—and I have literature at hand which shows how carefully, how elaborately, public opinion of Canada has been cultivated for a year now—they are trying to persuade us that we are being compensated. The minister has tried to persuade this House that we are getting something that we have not had before. We are not getting a thing that we have not had. Everything in this bill we had prior to 1917. But there is something lacking in this bill that we had prior to 1917. Something that we enjoyed in 1917 has been shorn from the Crowsnest pass agreement. So it is of no use for the minister to come along and say that we have been compensated. The Crowsnest pass agreement has been torn in two. Half of it has been thrown into the wastepaper basket, and the other half has been handed to us with a flourish. But we could not accept it in that spirit, because the soul of it has been destroyed. What compensation is there for the loss of a principle? "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul," the Scripture says, and the provision in the Crowsnest pass agreement whereby the west had an assurance in regard to rate fixing, was the soul of that agreement?

Mr. CANNON: How can the hon. gentleman reconcile the soul with anything material?

[Mr. Bird.]

Mr. BIRD: I have no desire to seek a bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth. I think I am interpreting the view of western Canada aright, especially that of the northern parts of the western provinces, when I say that, as generous as this bill is made out to be, while there are in it some things that we shall be prepared to accept if we cannot get what we want, it will be with regret and protest because we believe we are losing the principle of the whole thing. We believe that all the advantages we get in the provision made for eastbound freights will be absorbed by throwing the westbound rates wide open. That is our opinion and for that reason we regret to say that we cannot thank the government as warmly as we should like. Someone has said that if we knew all we would forgive all. Perhaps if we knew all the difficulties with which the government has to contend we would forgive all and probably think ourselves lucky, as some hon. member on the opposite side has significantly observed, in getting as much as we are getting to-night. Probably if we knew all that the Minister of Railways has to put up with we should be glad to get the remnant that is now handed to us. But that is only a tempered kind of gladness, and if this bill passes to-night, as no doubt it will, we in the west shall feel that we have lost the protection we have enjoyed for twenty years.

Mr. CANNON: I thought you were a free trader.

Mr. BIRD: Our friends to the right have as usual spoken of special privilege and patriotism; they have talked about doing things for the good of Canada. That nebulous object is always strutted out whenever some practical concern is to the front in this House relating to the life of the people. This idea of doing good to Canada as a whole does not commend itself to me as it is put forward in this House because it is always put forward as a screen to prevent us from getting concrete good. It comes badly from hon. gentlemen to the right as well as from our friends opposite to talk about narrow-eyed sectionalism. We always hear that plea put forward, at least we have heard it in the last four years, whenever anything vital to the west has been considered. I say this feelingly, because on all other matters we have heard the same plea; and to-night the Crowsnest agreement is going the way of the Hudson Bay railway. And their going is none the more graceful for the paeans of praise that come from the other side. These two things have gone and their going dates from the same time, 1917, which was so fatal a year for western Canada. What western Canada has lost in the interval she has not made up and from all appearances to-night there will be no chance of her making it up. There is a dead set against the west in this House to-night; one can feel it in the atmosphere. It is no use denying this, for it is all too patent to anyone who has his eyes open. I therefore as energetically and earnestly as I can make my protest against the passing of this bill.

Mr. GOOD: The amendment proposes a restriction on the freedom of action of the railway commission, and the question arises as to why the railway commission should be restricted in any way. Our friends to the right argue that the commission should not be restricted at all, but I think it must be apparent to everyone in this House that there is at least a large section of the Canadian people who have lost confidence in the board. For one reason or another which I do not intend discussing, the Board of Railway Commissioners, on whom I make no reflection, have lost the confidence of a section of the Canadian people; and that being the case it would seem necessary that some kind of restriction should logically be imposed on the board. Even if we all had confidence in the board I think that it is only a fair proposition that some sort of basis of action should be specifically laid down by this House for the board to take; there should be some fixed principle to be applied. I do not see that up to the present time any such principle has been in force. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) has argued, very well I think, that the board ought to be provided with certain principles upon which to act, just as our courts are given laws to interpret and apply. But so far there has been nothing adequate of that kind provided the board. If the Minister of Railways now or sometime in a subsequent parliament would lay down some definite principles of equalization or otherwise for the board to interpret and apply, I do not think we should be in the position we now find ourselves in, and in which we have been for the past few years. I would suggest that until a sufficient body of principles is laid down in our Railway Act in the matter of freight rates it is perfectly logical and necessary, and not at all to be disparaged, that this parliament, representing the people, should tie the hands of the railway board in some way to prevent either discriminatory or, shall I say, unpatriotic action. There is a disposition here to regard as unwarranted any attempt at restricting the action of the board. But I submit that it is perfectly logical and desirable that until such time arrives as we have established certain adequate principles for the board to apply, some restriction of the kind should be adopted, limiting the freedom of action of the board.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 38; Nays, 109.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Tolls in tariffs filed prior to act to be deemed lawful.

The CHAIRMAN: By way of amendment the Minister of Railways proposes to substitute the following section:

4. To remove doubts the tolls specified in tariffs filed at any time prior to the passing of this act with the board in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Act 1919, are and shall be deemed lawful tolls until varied by tariffs filed with the board pursuant to this act, notwithstanding the provisions of any act or any agreement and notwithstanding any judgments or orders made at any time prior to the passing of this act with regard thereto.

The question is on clause four.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Mr. Chairman. I have listened very closely to the debate during the course of which the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) said that the Crowsnest pass agreement had not only shot holes into the whole tariff structure, but especially was it injurious to the Canadian Pacific, and still more so to the National Railways. Well, if that is the case, something ought to be done to cure the resultant situation, and I am going to take a few minutes to suggest what I think parliament ought to do to solve the problem now before the people of Canada caused by the overbuilding of railroads, and still more by the changed conditions due to the opening of the Panama canal. What has happened? Not only are our railroads encountering a keener competition every day, but as time goes on it will become more and more serious. The outstanding feature of the railway situation before the people of Canada to-day is the competition that is steadily growing by the operation of the Panama canal and the creation of great seaports on the Pacific ocean, thus diverting traffic from our two railway systems. Not only is that competition steadily growing in volume, but the outlook for the future of our railroads is ominous indeed when we reflect that by the joint action of the United States and Canada the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterways will make Toronto, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Duluth and other interior lake ports virtual seaports. That will happen in less than ten years, and will take away a tremendous amount of business from our railways. The consequence will be that instead of the two great railway systems biting their heads off by needless duplication of transcontinental and branch lines, they will find there is not enough traffic left in the whole country to support one of them, or even the consolidated system which I suggested when the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Mr. Mackenzie King) introduced his scheme for getting control of ocean freight rates. On that occasion I said that the country had been railroaded to death, and that to-day there was not enough traffic to support the wild race of duplication now taking place all over the country. I quoted good authority for the opinion that by the consolidation of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific a hundred million dollars would be saved annually to the country, and this money would be sufficient to pay a five per cent dividend on the three hundred million dollar stock of the Canadian Pacific, ten million dollars to an amortization fund to discharge the whole debt, and 4 per cent on a billion of dollars investment in our National railways. At once our railways would be on a paying basis, for there would be none of this senseless competition, none of this wild duplication, but instead a wise economy.

We have heard a lot in the course of this debate about freight rate structures, and some hon. gentlemen appear to use this term with great satisfaction, but it simple means a bill of freight rates. "Freight rate structures" is a phrase which rolls off the tongue as smoothly as the word "relativity,"—in fact we are hearing a good deal about the theory of relativity in connection with rate making. But the real cure for all the grievances that hon, members from the west have presented to the House is to be found in stopping this wild riot of extravagance in connection with our railroads. The people know that this is the cure, and they want it applied now. The government have attempted to find a cure in the two propositions which they have brought before the House this session. The Prime Minister introduced a measure known as the Petersen deal for the control of freight rates. It was presented to this House and was received with great applause from his followers.

Mr. GRAHAM: Order.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am in order. The Minister of Railways does not like to hear this because of the "fall down" which happened to that contract. And here and now another deal is presented to the House in the form of a reference of the railway problems to the railway commission instead of dealing with them here. These are the facts and on these facts I am going back to my constituency to try and seek re-election. I hope to go there in the month of September or October and that is what I am going to talk about. I am not going to discuss the Petersen deal. That has been one of the greatest failures ever witnessed in connection with any policy attempted in this country. The Minister of Railways says the Crowsnest pass agreement has been a failure, has been a fraud. In other words he has treated the people of Canada to a dish of crow and everybody is being called upon to partake of that dish. Down in the other end of the chamber a caw-caw party has been decided upon and hon. members there are in the same business. These are the two proposals made for dealing with the great railroad problem in this country: It is a dish of crow in the one case, and a caw-caw party down the line for the cure of our railroad problems. That is not the cure. We have got to begin in this House. We have to fight it out on the platform during the coming election and settle what we shall do about this mad system of railway duplication, of radio equipment and —those little baby parlors, on trains where they get "brer-rabbit" and all those things supplied to-day. That is not what parliament ought to be engaged in doing. Parliament ought to be engaged in curing the railroad problem of the country. That can only be accomplished by consolidating the two railroad systems. That will not only save the $100,000,000 to which I have referred but it will do something else. It will pave the way towards meeting the increasing competition that is coming from ocean and lake. Yet the only two solutions that have been suggested to us are the Petersen deal, and feeding out crow to the public. These remedies will not cure the evil at all. On their stand on this question the Prime Minister and his government, including the Minister of Railways, will be tried by the people of Canada in the coming election. That will be the issue unless somebody in this House has a better cure, something like the one which I have suggested. What I propose is that we should stop this mad rivalry of two railroad systems running in competition with each other. How many times have I gone up to Toronto and seen one train with a few passengers, and the other train half filled—a mad competition—with the passengers leaning out of the windows and laughing. The same thing is true in the case of the transcontinental service, a mad race across the whole country, and even in the case of branch lines this race is going on. The only remedy that is suggested for all this is a dish of crow or a caw-caw party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): My hon. friends may see something to laugh at but I do not take it as a joke. Never was the position of this country so serious as it to-day. Never did the people suffer under such taxation as they do to-day; and never was there such extravagence in spending millions of the people's money in a mad race to maintain two competing systems of railways where one would be sufficient and give better service.

Mr. VIEN: Would my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Yes, two.

Mr. VIEN: Does he forget the mad extravagence of seven or eight years ago?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): It has been going on for twenty years. It began, probably, with the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and has been aggravated by the policy of those who preceded the last government and the present government in office.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What about the purchase of the Canadian Northern?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): That was a bad thing.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What about the purchase of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): That was a bad thing too. But if these were bad things why aggravate the situation by continuing it? Why not try to stop it? I challenge the Prime Minister to come into my riding, I will go into his if he invites me—and I challenge the Minister of Railways to get up on the public platform and suggest some real remedy and not talk about "rate structure." To them "rate structure" is a fine term.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Did not my hon. friend vote for the purchase of the Canadian Northern?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): If I did I am sorry, and I have repented.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Did my hon. friend vote for the Grand Trunk Railway purchase also?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I think so, yes, and I am sorry for it. Where is my hon. friend on the question? Let him tell me now where he is.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I voted against it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Well, he is up a tree all the same because he is continuing the policy now.

Mr. GRAHAM: We are all sorry but that does not remedy the situation.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The railway problem is before the government and the only cures suggested are the cures I have mentioned. Parliament is washing its hands of responsibility in connection with railroading in this country and is putting the responsibility on the railway commission. That will not do. We cannot unload this mess on the Board of Railway Commissioners. Parliament must clean it up. The Prime Minister and his colleagues have had that duty imposed upon them, and instead of discharging it we have the Minister of Railways with his two aides in the new King café going round serving the public and taking their orders for crow.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is some bird.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): In all seriousness I address myself to the House, and I address myself particularly to the Progressives down the line there. I say to them "You are talking about something that is a real question to you and I sympathize largely with you. But what you have suggested is not the cure; it cannot be brought about in that way." The only way it can be brought about is to stop this mad competition now going on between the two railroads that have two headquarters, two systems of publicity, two systems of express, and two systems of telegraph, whereas one only would do. The country demands but one and its view must be met. If this parliament refuses to amalgamate these two systems in view of the terrible competition that is coming to these two railroads by reason of the Panama canal, which will be very much aggravated by the building of the St. Lawrence waterways system, the responsibility is upon it. In regard to the St. Lawrence waterways the congress of the United States is voting millions of money, and if we got in touch with them and said we were ready to assume our share of the deepening of the waterways, we would be able to give employment all through the St. Lawrence territory, and we would create thriving sea ports on all our inland waterways.

Now I want to tell the Minister of Railways how far this water competition is likely to go, and I am going to quote his predecessor John Haggart, with whom I sat in this House and many a time discussed this question of water competition. He used to say to me: "Maclean, I have had engineers, the most eminent in the world, come to me and say they are ready to canalize the country from lake Superior to the foot of the Rocky mountains, and if you did that there would be hardly any traffic left for the railroads." That is where water competition is coming in this country. It is coming; it is knocking at the door. It has come in the United States on the Pacific coast, and will come to us here in Canada in less than eight years, if the programme of the government of the United States gets started, and it will be a lightning programme. The work will be divided up into sections and will be done in less than eight years. If that comes about, are we still to go on with this mad competition, maintaining these two unnecessary systems of railroads? The opinion of Montreal is that instead of two systems of railways there ought to be only one; the whole story in the Montreal Star last night, was that the two-railroad system was a mistake, with all the squandering on railroad construction that has gone on in this country resulting in the deficits we have on the Canadian National to-day. My proposal to this House for ending that deficit is to consolidate the two roads, and to stop the mad duplication, the wasteful competition, save the money, and get ready for this water competition that is coming to our railroads. Why, if this competition goes on, as it is likely to do, there will not be enough freight traffic coming in to support the two roads. My friend the late chairman of the railway commission has told us that the railways have to earn enough money to carry them on. I say these two railways cannot earn enough money to carry them on, and we shall have to make up the deficits in one way or another on both these roads, year after year, unless we stop this mad competition, and if we do not stop it, the people of this country will stop sending us to this House to represent them, and will find other men who will deal with the situation.

I am not going to take up any more of the time of the House. I have had the attention of the House. I do not know whether I shall have the attention of the country or not. I would like to speak a little about what chance anybody has of getting the ear of the country these days, when we have—I do not want to say what condition of affairs—but I hope the newspaper situation will improve and that once more we shall have some newspapers that are not afraid to tell the people what the real conditions are, and especially with regard to this mad duplication in railroad construction. What we do want in these hard times is to induce the American government to start at once, with our co-operation, the development of the St. Lawrence waterway, the creation of seaports on the lakes, and if necessary, even to canalize the country from lake Superior to the foot of the Rocky mountains. Why, John Haggart used to say: You might see a seaport on lake Winnipeg, and he had good reasons for saying that. I have only two things to say to-night, and I have only two things to say when I go to the country, and I hope to go. I will tell the people that this mad dance, this wild frolic, this crazy carnival that is now going on, with two railways, two headquarters staffs, two sets of lawyers, two propaganda and publicity departments, two systems of express, two systems of telegraphs—

Mr. CAMPBELL: And two immigration systems.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): —and two immigation systems, duplication in every direction—all this must stop. You would think we were over-stocked with money. The money craze that was caused by the war and war profiteering has been carried into the business of this country down to the lowest branches. What we want is economy. We do not want extravagance, but economy, and it has got to come, or something is going to be wrecked. We have the predictions of the Minister of Railways, and the opinions that have been read to the House especially by my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), and if this sort of thing goes on in the railways, those predictions will come true, and there will be railroads wrecked and people too.

The west is crying for relief from the present railway situation, and so is British Columbia, and so are the Maritime provinces; it is what we want here in the east, and yet we are not dealing with that problem. We are sidestepping it by such proposals as the Petersen deal, and we know what that means. There never was such a fine lot of promises as were made in this House in the second month of this session when I rose and congratulated the government, and especially the Prime Minister, upon their attempt to solve the ocean freight problem, but I said: You are not going the right way about it. Instead of subsidizing a new line, put the Canadian Pacific in with the Canadian National, and use their line of passenger steamers and freight boats with the ships of the merchant marine, and then you will start to solve the ocean freight rate problem. You would not only get a solution of the ocean freight rates problem, but you would get a real consolidation of the two railroads with all the economies that would be derived therefrom. If you do that, you will start the country on a new wave of prosperity, and especially will you start the country on a new wave of prosperity by developing the waterways and establishing seaports, planting them right up to Duluth and perhaps up to the foot of the Rocky mountains. I am not giving you any pipe dream. I am presenting the cold-blooded facts as they present themselves to me. I am talking now as one of the elder members of this House. I have been in this House a long time—

Mr. VIEN: Does the hon. member propose to sell the Canadian National to the Canadian Pacific, or to purchase the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would take over the Canadian Pacific and merge it with the Canadian National. The Canadian National is owned by the people of Canada, but God knows who owns the Canadian Pacific. Two-thirds of it is owned in New York and London, and we have not any control of it. but we have control of the Canadian

10 p.m. National, and the Canadian Pacific will be glad to come to us the minute we say we are ready to deal with them. They cannot take over the Canadian National, nor would the people of this country stand for it for one minute. The Canadian Pacific tomorrow might pass into the hands of the New York Central or the Pennsylvania, or any of the other great systems in the United States, and then they would be masters of this country. I am an absolute believer in the Canadian Pacific. I am one of the few men in this House who knew George Stephen. I am not boasting at all, but I have often talked with him and Lord Strathcona. I knew the two of them to be great friends of the National Policy in the old days. They were very simple men, and they had a great railroad scheme for this country, and it has been achieved so far as their ideas went. The Canadian Pacific is a great railroad to-day, but the Canadian National is a greater one, and it is owned by the people of Canada. But these two railroads are being extravagantly run and a way has got to be found of bringing the two together into one system, and of using the ships of the two systems also to solve our problem of ocean transportation. If we do that we will make our railways pay within one year after consolidation takes place. The real merit of the consolidation of the two systems is in the economies that will be effected, but the greatest economy that will result from the consolidation will be the re-routing that is allowed by such consolidation. We will take the best parts of either system, whether it be in reference to grades, bridge crossings or entrance, into the towns, and we will put these two lines together, re-route them, and take the best features of both. We will double track them, and out of the two systems we will make a great transcontinental line. I hope that the transcontinental business will require a four-track system, and some branch lines may need double track equipment. If we do that, we will effect real economy, and it will not cost much.

This country wants us to stop this mad policy of duplication and immense deficits in connection with two unnecessary systems, and to get down to the real problem of dealing with the St. Lawrence waterways, and bringing ocean steamers from the Atlantic right up to the head of lake Superior. If we accomplish that object we will witness improvement in our affairs, the farmers will be in better shape and the freight rates will be reduced. There is an enormous expenditure on the two systems. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) is very well posted on all these questions, but I am sorry he has not quite seized this idea. After all his experience he has not yet told the country something which I am sure he absolutely believes, namely, that the duplicate system is worn out, and the time has come for a single system.

People ask, "What would happen if we had one system of railways? Would we not be ridden by labour unions or things of that kind?" I do not believe it. Ontario has a publicly-owned railway and it is well run. We have a publicly-owned railway in Canada and it is well run. Ontario has a splendid system of distribution of electrical energy which is well run. My own city has a splendid system of transportation publicly-owned. I think I know what is going on in the United States, and I tell the House that the United States is advancing in this line. In the United States they have in mind the consolidation of the transportation system and have ordered its consolidation. The railways over there have been consolidated into eight regional divisions, and now they are going to get the number of divisions down to five. In a short time you will see these divisions consolidated, and the day after they are consolidated the American people will take them over and run them as the railway system of the United States. That is the line on which the world is moving. The people of Canada are beginning to realize the position and desire to see consolidation, and that is why the demand is now made in this House. I am suggesting the proposition with my own feeble voice, and I am going out to the country to talk in the same way. I will make this problem one of the main issues, and associate with it, perhaps, the tariff issue in my district. I know of no other two issues equal to the railway policy and the question of a sound, sane fiscal policy, based on economy as well as protection of native industry. I leave the question where the responsibility lies, at the doors of this government and of this parliament, and I will ask them to state their policy to the country on the issues that I present here to-night. If they fail to provide a remedy for the present condition the responsibility is on them. I hope to see men come back to this House who will deal with the question from the point of view I present to-night.

Mr. FORKE moved:

That there be added to section 4 the following:

Provided that nothing herein or in this act contained shall in any way affect the pending litigation between the government of Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway Company arising out of the agreement between the said province and the said company dated 11th February, 1901, confirmed by chapter 39 of the Statutes of Manitoba, 1901, or any right or obligation of the parties thereto, or either of them, expressed in the said agreement and the said statutes.

He said: I will say a few words in explanation of this amendment.

Mr. STEVENS: Does my hon. friend intend this as an amendment to the amendment of the minister?

Mr. FORKE: It might be put as an addition.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As another clause.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, it would be another clause added to section 4. In explanation I might say that in the year 1903 the provincial government of Manitoba made a contract with the Canadian Northern Railway. That government guaranteed the bonds of the railway company to the extent of $20,000 per mile for 290 miles from the Manitoba boundary to Fort William and Port Arthur. They also gave guarantees to the extent of $10,000 per mile for other lines within the province, and an option to purchase what was then known as the Northern Pacific system in Manitoba. The railway gave a covenant in return for this guarantee that the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba should have the right to fix rates on the company's line in Manitoba to Fort William and Port Arthur, and from all points in the province to other points in the province. The company covenanted not to charge passenger or freight rates higher than the rates so fixed. The Manitoba government discharged its obligations. This legislation was transmitted to the Secretary of State at Ottawa. As is well known, perhaps, it has been argued that this agreement was abrogated at a later date by Dominion legislation. This has been contested by the province of Manitoba, and, as perhaps the House is aware, the decision of the Supreme court was given against the province recently. The province has now appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. That action is still pending. The decision has not yet been given, and according to the way in which section 4 is worded, if this amendment is not carried, even suppose the decision of the Privy Council were in favour of the province, they would not be able to reap any benefit from that decision. They would not be able to have the advantage of those rates. All they would be able to get would be that they would have to pay the bill of expenses. If this amendment is added to this clause and it so turns out that the decision is in favour of the province of Manitoba, then they will have the advantage for which they have paid in the years gone by. This does not otherwise injure the bill in any way. It is simply a proviso added to this clause of the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: The leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) has forsaken the Crowsnest pass agreement, and he is now going to rely upon a Manitoba agreement in place of it.

Mr. FORKE: You are wiping out the agreements.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all. So far as the Canadian Northern was concerned in the Manitoba agreement, that was to assist the movement of grain, flour, and so forth. The committee will, I think, realize with me that one of the objects of this bill is to wipe out, not litigation, but a judgment of the Supreme court which was given restricting the territory which comes under the Crowsnest pass agreement to points on the Canadian Pacific line in existence in 1897. The Supreme court on a question submitted to them in connection with the rates question a few weeks ago, decided that that territory was restricted to the limits existing in 1897. In order to protect the western people in what we think are their rights, we are not only interfering with litigation, but wiping out a judgment of the Supreme court given only a few weeks ago. By doing that, we are taking away from the railways the right to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which appeal they were prepared to make had it not been for this legislation. We are interfering, not only with litigation, but with judgments, and that being the case, I submit that this committee, if this amendment is carried, would really be going back on the whole intent of this bill, which is to straighten out all these difficulties and make plain sailing for an equalization of rates. The question of the Manitoba agreement was brought before the Board of Railway Commissioners and it was decided against that province. An appeal which was made on a matter of law to the Supreme court, was decided against the province of Manitoba in that court. I think I speak advisedly when I say that there are very few legal men in the Dominion of Canada who have any idea that Manitoba can hope to succeed before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. FORKE: Why take away the opportunity?

Mr. GRAHAM: Because this legislation is to take out of litigation this whole freight rate question and to place it on a basis where it can be handled by the Board of Railway Commissioners. As the object of the bill is to get rid of litigation and, further, to override a decision of the Supreme court, I am sure hon. gentlemen will not expect the government to accept an amendment which overrides the whole principle of the bill.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would ask my hon. friend to reconsider that question, looking at it from this standpoint. I am familiar with the agreement. The matter came before me when I was on the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the application of the agreement was considered by that board. I did not give effect to it, and at that time I believe I gave leave to appeal to the Supreme court. I should like my hon. friend to consider the question in this way which seems to me to be the fair way. We are not parties to that agreement. I do not know that I insist anything we are doing in this legislation is going to change that agreement—

Mr. FORKE: I do not see it does.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —but I think the committee ought to consider carefully whether, in connection with a bill which, on its face, deals merely with difficulties arising under the Crowsnest pass agreement, we should take away any right which may exist to the province of Manitoba as a result of their own agreements. It might be that if the province got what it wanted, it would be like the boy that got hold of a bear, but the people of that province do not think so. They think they have a legal right. Our usual practice is not to interfere with rights subject to litigation. This litigation is actually going on, and I would submit to my hon. friend that the litigation might just as well go on and the usual rule be applied, that is that parliament, in its legislation, does not interfere with pending litigation.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not see the matter in that way at all. This bill is a bold piece of legislation in order to get rid, not only of the Crowsnest pass agreement, but of a score of agreements of more or less importance. Now, we are asked to pick out one special agreement, which my hon. friend, as chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, has ruled against, and as regards which the Supreme court has upheld him in his judgment, and we are asked to suspend that because an appeal has been made to the judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If we do that, then I do not think we have any right to take away from the railways their right to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and we are doing that definitely in this bill. Why not let us get the rate situation cleared away and not surround the Board of Railway Commissioners with any more restrictions than we can avoid? If we do what the hon. member suggests, the case can be dangled before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for two or three years, and equalization of railway rates in Canada cannot start until that litigation is over.

Mr. FORKE: Does the minister think it would not be worth fighting for, supposing the Privy Council decided in favour of Manitoba?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think so. I still maintain that if we do this we are making a great mistake; we are nullifying our whole action of the past three days in trying to get rid of a number of agreements—and we have a number of agreements on the Intercolonial, some of small importance, some of greater importance—in order to give the Board of Railway Commissioners a fair chance. It is not right to allow litigation in one case to go on and by legislation to prevent other litigants from appealing their case. I never dreamed for a moment that any person would take this stand. Otherwise, this legislation would have been framed altogether differently.

Amendment (Mr. Forke) negatived on division.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the third reading of Bill No. 181 to amend the Railway Act, 1919.

Motion agreed to on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BILL TO AUTHORIZE THE CONSTRUCTION OF SUNNYBRAE-GUYSBOROUGH BRANCH LINE

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 210, respecting the construction of a Canadian National railway line between Sunnybrae and Guysborough, in the province of Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Power to construct and complete line described in schedule.

Mr. STEVENS: This bill has been before parliament on and off for about twenty years and I cannot think that the minister is serious in wanting to put it through.

Mr. GRAHAM: The resolution went through the House the other day and the bill was referred to the railway committee and unanimously reported.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this one of the bills which the minister expects to have crucified in the Senate? Honestly, I think we ought to stop this farce of sending a bill to the Senate for the express purpose of having it killed there. I have looked over this bill year after year and I must say that I am opposed to it; I regard it as unnecessary and as a mere added expense to the country. I do not think it should be accepted.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Mr. GARDINER: Next sitting.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Graham moves, seconded by Mr. King (Kootenay), that the bill do now pass and that the title be as on the order paper. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. STEVENS: On division.

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the motion carried on division.

Mr. GARDINER: There was a protest from this corner of the House, Mr. Speaker, to the bill being read at this time.

Mr. SPEAKER: If agreeable to the House, it shall be read at the next sitting. The consent must be unanimous.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, when there is no amendment I submit that the third reading may be asked for.

Mr. SPEAKER: There being no unanimous consent, I reverse my decision. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Public works—Manitoba, $59,146.26.

Mr. CALDWELL: I see that in some of the items in this vote provision is made for local improvement taxes. What does this mean?

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): We pay local improvement taxes in connection with the paving of sidewalks and improvements of that character.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister might file with Hansard the usual information as to appropriations not required.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will get that information.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms—replacements, repairs, improvements, etc., $150,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I move that this item be reduced by $50,000.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER: Why is the reduction made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is really a clerical error in the item. We think $100,000 is sufficient for replacements and improvements. The $50,000 for new construction will reappear in the supplementaries.

Item agreed to.

London, England, Canadian office—maintenance, $33,000

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: With our new big building there do we want to spent any more on maintenance?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for the caretaker service.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is about the rental of the other place.

Item agreed to.

Military buildings—repairs, fittings, alterations and additions, $50,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How much of this vote was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $34,821.95. The amounts vary from $131, or even less, up to $14,626.

Mr. SPENCER: Why does the minister think he will need $50,000 this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are requested by the Deputy Minister of National Defence, in a communication dated October 19, 1924, to provide for various items amounting to $71,000.

Item agreed to.

Military hospitals—repairs and improvements, $50,000.

Mr. GOOD: What is the explanation for the increase of $25,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required for repairs and improvements to various military hospital buildings at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Halifax, Toronto, London (Ont.), Winnipeg, Calgary, and Vancouver. These buildings are more or less of a temporary nature and are likely to require more repairs each year. I had the privilege of visiting the Christie street hospital in Toronto, and there is no doubt that extensive repairs are required to keep the buildings habitable.

Mr. GOOD: Will these hospital buildings need more and more repairs each year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are not permanent buildings and their upkeep will be more or less expensive.

Mr. GOOD:: How long will these hospitals be needed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If I remember rightly, the minister (Mr. Beland) advised the House that the use of these hospitals would continue for a number of years yet.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa public buildings and grounds—water, $53,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Why this increase of $8,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The water is metred and we pay so much per thousand gallons. Each year there is an adjustment of the account. Last year we overran the appropriation.

Mr. CALDWELL: It looks as if we were increasing our payments to the city of Ottawa in all directions. I would think that with the advent of 4.4 there would not be so much water used in the public buildings.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is not allowed in the public service.

Mr. CALDWELL: Possibly 4.4 induces a greater thirst. Anyway, I think we are dealing pretty liberally with the city.

Item agreed to.

Elevator attendants, $72,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: How many elevator attendants have we, and how many of them are on full time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Sixty-nine.

Mr. CALDWELL: How many elevators do they operate, and does this item include the House of Commons elevator service?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About thirty in all. This does not include the sessional service.

Mr. CALDWELL: How many hours a day do these attendants work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Eight hours.

Item agreed to.

Lighting, including roads and bridges, $82,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Where is this lighting done? In what part of the city?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): All the buildings in Ottawa, the grounds and a certain number of the streets.

Mr. CALDWELL: Are your lights paid for on the meter system?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. LEADER: Why are the lights on in the day time? We often come up here in the day time and find them on.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For testing purposes.

Mr. GARDINER: For the lighting of what streets do we pay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For Wellington street, the bridges on Laurier avenue and Connaught place and Major Hill park.

Mr. COOTE: Is Wellington street the property of the government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. From Connaught place down to the old Perley home is under the control of the government.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to suggest to the minister that he place some police on Wellington street so that it would not be so dangerous to cross there. I think it is the most dangerous street to cross in the city of Ottawa. I had the matter brought to my attention by different parties in the city, and from personal experience I would rather cross any other street in Ottawa than Wellington street. We have so many policemen around this building and the grounds here that surely we could have an officer placed on Wellington street in front of the parliament buildings to direct the traffic there and make it safe for people to cross the street without incurring the danger of being run down every time they cross.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am making inquiries now into the matter. I think the situation is due to the fact that cars are parked on both sides of the street. I think that next year we should make a regulation,—I have the matter in mind,—that during the session at least there should be no cars parked in front of the parliament buildings.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was just going to raise that question. I have gone out very often when there was just room to get between the cars. The driver of a car coming along the street will not see a person coming out of the grounds, and a person coming out of the grounds will not see the cars approaching. It is a very dangerous situation.

Mr. COOTE: Before the item carries I should like to say that I think we need more protection than has been suggested. I think we need a policeman there to regulate the speed at which these cars go by. There are no cross streets intersecting Wellington street in front of the parliament buildings, and lots of these cars go by at the rate of thirty miles an hour. They pay no respect to the centre line of the street, they take any side at all, and persons crossing Wellington street to get to the parliament buildings really endanger their own lives. I think this government could easily afford to place one of our mounted policemen on this street and if necessary stop these cars once in a while in order to enable people to cross in safety.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will be very glad to give consideration to what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. CALDWELL: Either that or have a few trenches dug across so that the cars would not be able to go so fast.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the government responsible for the paving of that part of the street also?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $380,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: This is for the heating of the government buildings in Ottawa I presume.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, and for the salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen in Ottawa.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is the heating of the government buildings in Ottawa done from a central plant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, not all.

Mr. CALDWELL: If not, has the government ever considered the advisability of heating all the government buildings from a central heating plant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I doubt if that would be economical considering where the buildings are located and the fact that some of them are across the canal. The heating plant we have serves this building, the east and west block, the Langevin block, the Post office, the Supreme court and the Census building.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Does this item include the cost of the coal used?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What class of coal is used? Is it the ordinary American coal?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, we are using Canadian coal, run of mine and slack.

Mr. COOTE: At what price per ton?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It varies. This year the price is about $6.40 for slack.

Mr. COOTE: Is the coal purchased by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, by tender.

Mr. GARDINER: Where did we get our supplies from this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have not made a contract as yet. Last year the coal was supplied from Minto Mines in New Brunswick.

Mr. GARDINER: What do we pay for run of mine coal?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Seven dollars.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that laid down in Ottawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Departments generally—char service including $100 to E. Snowdon for firing noon gun, $385,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is this noon gun fired all the year round?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: On Sundays also?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Mr. GARDINER: What does it cost per charge of powder to fire the gun?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that information.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to get it.

Mr. CALDWELL: Has this man, Snowdon, ever appealed to the government for a raise in pay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not heard of it.

Mr. CALDWELL: He is certainly very modest.

Item agreed to.

Repairs, improvements, additions and maintenance, $650,000.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister give us some particulars as to how he intends to spend this amount? Is there anything included in it for the tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount of $650,000 is required for the following purposes:

1. Carrying out works of repairs, alterations, additions and improvements, and procuring furniture, fittings and other supplies, in connection with the maintenance of Ottawa public buildings.

2. The removal of snow and ice from sidewalks and roads around the department blocks, parliament house and repairing and maintaining and cleaning during summer months, the pavements and sidewalks on "Wellington street and government area" to the north, the Plaza, Laurier avenue bridge, St. Patrick street in front of Printing Bureau, McKenzie avenue, sidewalks on Laurier avenue west and Elgin street fronting Cartier square, and all laneways, yards, and areas adjoining properties rented, or owned and occupied by the Dominion government.

3. Keeping the grounds surrounding the Dominion buildings in Ottawa in proper condition.

Mr. GARDINER: How much is there included in this vote for the purposes of the tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This has no reference to the tower. The vote for the tower will be in the capital expenditure.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How many buildings are now utilized by the government in this city?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will come to that very shortly, under "rents and repairs". At present I have not the details in front of me.

Item agreed to.

Telephone service, $95,000.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry and Stormont): What is the reason for the increase here?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required for the payment in the fiscal year 1925-26 of the rental of the Bell Telephone Company's connections throughout the several departments of the government in the city of Ottawa. The increase of $2,000 is due to the following: An increase of 74 in the number of telephones at a cost of $1,894.20; and, an increase in the cost of P.B.X. equipment, $262.68, making a total of $2,000.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): We had a discussion of this last year or the year before, and I understood that on account of the introduction of a new block system there was going to be quite an economy effected. Has there been any saving?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, these phones would have cost us more if we had not put in that equipment.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): What was it costing us two years ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We had not the same number of phones two years ago. This has caused an increased expenditure.

Mr. CALDWELL: Was that the improvement that has been effected?

Mr. GARDINER: On what basis do we pay for this telephone service, so much per phone?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. Under the old arrangement it would have cost us $55 per phone per year, and under the P.B.X system is costs us $15 per phone per year.

Item agreed to.

Dominion immigration buildings—repairs, improvements, additions, furniture, etc., $25,000.

Mr. KELLNER: How does the minister get that vote in for immigration buildings? We have already passed an item for repairs for nearly every place that has an immigration shed or building.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have immigration buildings all over the Dominion, and this is for their maintenance and repair. We had an item a few moments ago with respect to the immigration building in Winnipeg. That was an unknown quantity, and the architect placed that amount in the estimates to be voted directly by parliament. The present vote is like our harbours and rivers vote. It is a general vote to take care of any repairs that may be required during the year.

Item agreed to.

Fittings, general supplies and furniture, $125,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: There is an increase of $25,000 here. Why is that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This appropriation is $25,000 more than for 1924-1925 because it was found that the amount of $100,000 was insufficient to meet the demands. This appropriation was exhausted at the end of December, 1924, with the result that the requirements for the last three months have been unprovided for. In 1914-15, $160,000 was voted under this item, and $90,000 expended. The amount runs from that up to as high as $145,000 per year.

Mr. GARDINER: What system is used in buying these supplies? Is it by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, by tender.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): What has happened to the Purchasing Commission that used to buy all the supplies for the government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Department of Public Works have a staff who do their purchasing. There is a secretary of the commission who reports to council through the responsible minister, and keeps track of these purchases.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): It is done through the department only?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. CALDWELL: Is any departmental furniture made in the penitentiaries?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have bought some tables and chairs and brooms from the penitentiaries.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does not the government think it would be a good plan to have all the furniture for the departments made in the penitentiaries?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that question has been under consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think it has been suggested from time immemorial that the inmates of the penitentiaries should be given more work, that they should be self-sustaining, that that would help towards defraying the big expenditure on account of the penitentiaries. I think sufficient work should be given to enable the inmates to be kept busy. Furniture making is an occupation that a man can learn pretty quickly. It is not very technical, and I think the government would be well advised to have all the furniture for all the departments made in the penitentiaries.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Penitentiaries branch have an agent who is in and out of the departments all the time, and we do buy a certain amount from the penitentiaries, but not exclusively from them.

Mr. CALDWELL: The penitentiaries make furniture, and why do not the departments get all their furniture supplies from them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is an old question. It has been discussed many times, but there are difficulties in the way.

Mr. POWER: Why don't they grow potatoes and wheat to?

Mr. CALDWELL: There is nothing to prevent them growing potatoes, although I might say that the more potatoes they grew within the last year or two, the further they would be in debt. I would rather see them working at something there was money in.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are buying more than we used to from the penitentiaries.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am convinced that it is through pressure from firms who are manufacturing furniture that the government do not buy more furniture from the penitentiaries.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are some styles of furniture they can make in the penitentiaries, but generally speaking they could not fill many of the requirements of the government.

Mr. CALDWELL: What percentage of the government's furniture is manufactured in the penitentiaries?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that information, but I know there has been a tendency in recent years to give more of this work to the penitentiaries.

Mr. BROWN: I think the policy should be pursued of making all these institutions as nearly self-supporting as possible. The hon. gentleman across the way asked, why do these institutions not grow potatoes and wheat. I can only say they do.

Mr. POWER: For themselves.

Mr. BROWN: Not only for themselves. The asylum at Brandon I know has a very expert hog raiser in charge, and he takes car after car of hogs and sells them on the Winnipeg market in competition with the farmers' hogs. I am not objecting to that. Nobody is complaining about it, but when the question is put up to us, why don't they grow potatoes and wheat, I simply say they do. These institutions should all grow as much as possible of the vegetables and the food that they need. I think it is only a matter of sound public policy that that should be done. These institutions are necessary for taking care of various classes in the community, some who are insane, some who are morally derelict and have to be taken under the law, and this is a burden which the country necessarily has to bear, but the support of these institutions should not be made an occasion for furnishing other people with the opportunity to sell their supplies. I think these institutions as much as possible might be used not only to provide for themselves but to provide for the needs of the government. I know there are objections, but personally I have none to allowing the output of these institutions to be put on the market under fair competition, not cut-throat competition, with the products of free labour. There is no reason why, because men have had to be taken care of by the state they should be deprived of the opportunity of earning something—

Mr. POWER: How could my hon. friend establish fair competition in the matter of wages?

Mr. BROWN: By selling at even prices with the products of free labour. I think we can pursue much further than we have done the policy of making all these institutions self-supporting.

Mr. CALDWELL: The fact that the institution called the penitentiary is making supplies for the government is not on a par with a case where an institution is manufacturing for sale in the open market. This is simply one department under government control. It is one of the government institutions and I do not see any good reason why the manufacturer of any article should object to the government having one department under their care manufacturing goods which they need in some of their departments. That is not manufacturing articles to be placed in the open market in competition with the products of other manufacturers. If the goods were to be placed in the open market some objection might legitimately be made. I do not think they have a strong case—in fact I do not think they have any case at all—when they object to the penitentiaries manufacturing anything they can produce for the government's own use. That is common sense, sound policy and fair and right to everybody. I do not think it is fair to the taxpayers to make them pay taxes to maintain an institution that can maintain itself by manufacturing goods needed in some other department of the government.

Item agreed to.

Heating, $420,000.

Mr. COOTE: Does this cover the heating for all Dominion public buildings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, outside of Ottawa.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister explain this item to us? I have been looking at the next item, which is heating. The bill for lighting seems to be very excessive.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think not. This amount is required for the purchase of fuel. It costs more to heat a home or a house than to light it, and I think this is probably just about right. Our coal supplies are bought carefully by tender, and I think the charges are reasonable.

Mr. COOTE: Coal is all bought by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: If I had any criticism to offer to the lighting bill, I would say that it was excessive as compared with the cost of heating. I should not imagine it would cost fifty per cent as much to light the building as to heat it, especially in the cold weather, where you have to heat your buildings all day. In the summer you require very little light, especially when we have daylight saving. We do not need nearly so much light now as in the winter. That is probably one of the excuses in favour of daylight saving.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is in addition to electric current. Lighting would also cover the cost of lamps used throughout the service.

Mr. CALDWELL: I suppose the heating covers cost of repairs to furnaces and so on.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does it include janitors?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, not the janitors.

Mr. CALDWELL: What does it include besides coal?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There were 36,500 tons of coal required and purchased. Wood is also required for various buildings. Then we have the removal of ashes, the supply of heating gas, steam heating and fuel oil.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does it include the firemen?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is for the purchase of fuel of various kinds and the removal of ashes.

Mr. CALDWELL: Under what head do the firemen of buildings come?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Next item, salaries of caretakers, engineers, firemen and so on.

Mr. CALDWELL: This item would indicate that it included all the cost of heating. Evidently this does not. This should be called cost of fuel, instead of heating.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, fuel or heating.

Item agreed to.

Light, $207,000.

Mr. COOTE: This is the item I was drawing the minister's attention to. It seems to me this amount is excessive compared to the cost of heating the buildings. Take the buildings in Ottawa; the lighting is less than one-fourth of the amount of the heating. Possibly the minister has some explanation of the high cost of lighting.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to provide for the lighting of public buildings throughout the Dominion which are under the control of the Dominion government exclusive of those in the city of Ottawa. Besides paying for the lighting of these buildings, this vote provides for the purchase of lamps, and so forth, that may be required in the various buildings, inclusive of all buildings occupied by the Department of National Defence with the exception of military barracks occupied by soldiers.

This estimate of lighting requirements for 1925-26 shows an increase of $7,000 over the appropriation voted for the year 1924-25. Lighting accounts amounting to $4,901 accrued during the year 1923-24 had to be paid out of the appropriation for the year 1924-25 as the amount voted for 1923-24 was not sufficient. These accounts were paid out of the appropriation for 1924-25 not through their being received too late last year, but on account of the appropriation becoming exhausted prior to March 31, 1924, they had to be held over.

Mr. COOTE: How many buildings are there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are four hundred and sixty-three.

Mr. GARDINER: Are they all outside of Ottawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. COOTE: It must cost $700 on an average for each building.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The cost varies very much.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me a very excessive charge for lighting.

Mr. FORKE: The trouble with a lot of public buildings is that they require to have light night and day. The Brandon asylum is a magnificent building in many respects. At one time an expert came over from the United States to inspect the buildings up there, and he found this building was quite adequate in every way, except in regard to lighting. He said the building should not have required as much electric lighting as it was found necessary to consume there. In a great many corridors they burn the light twenty-four hours a day.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true in most of the city buildings.

Mr. FORKE: I am no architect, but it seems to me the great weakness in many public buildings is that they are not adequately lighted from the outside.

Mr. COOTE: I would suggest that in many cases they pull up the blinds and let in the light.

Mr. BOYS: Is the light supplied by meter?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BOYS: Is there anyone who supervises the buildings and sees that the lights are turned out in the day time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Oh yes.

Mr. BOYS: I have seen the lights burning in the parliament buildings all day.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not all day.

Mr. BOYS: For very many hours in the morning, in broad daylight, the lights are burning. Of course the minister is not to blame for that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I noticed it the other morning myself. The same complaint was brought to my attention early in the session, but they tell me that at certain times of the day the electrician, in charge of what they call the white way makes his test, turns on the lights and goes over the circuit. They do the same thing in other places.

Mr. BOYS: My apartment is right in front of the buildings and I observe the situation with great regularity. It is a common thing for all these lights to blaze away in broad daylight. Whoever has the supervision of this matter should exercise more care, particularly when we are paying for lights by meter. There are hundreds of lights which there is no occasion to burn.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter has recently been brought to the attention of the department.

Mr. LEADER: I have inquired why the lights were burning in the day time. I have noticed them lighted in the morning. They were burning at three o'clock this afternoon.

Item agreed to.

Power for running elevators, stamp cancelling machines et cetera, $80,000.

Mr. COOTE: What is the reason for the increase in this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The increase of $4,000 in this appropriation is due to provision having to be made in 1925-26 for the following buildings which previously had not to be provided for:

Montreal post office, station "G", (Lavut building).
Grain inspector's office, Montreal.
Hamilton post office, station "C".
Winnipeg post office, station "A".
Calgary Southam building.
Ottawa new workshop building.
Kentville, N.S., experimental farm.
Fredericton, N.B., experimental farm.
Lennoxville, Quebec, experimental farm.
Swift Current, Sask., experimental farm.
Lacombe Alberta, experimental farm.
Sydney B.C., experimental farm.

Mr. COOTE: Is there not some overlapping here between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Public Works, if the latter department has to supply power on these farms?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have charge of their buildings in that regard. There is no overlapping.

Mr. COOTE: Would this item be for power supplied by municipalities to the farms?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We would make the contracts for the power.

Mr. COOTE: The bills would be paid through the Department of Public Works.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): From this vote.

Mr. COOTE: They would not appear then in the vote for experimental farms.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Item agreed to.

Rents, $1,410,000.

Mr. BOYS: This is a very large item, and I think we ought to have some explanation When is the day going to arrive when we shall use the lands that have been purchased along the river front and get rid of all these rented buildings? Would the minister give us a list of the buildings and the rentals paid for each in the city of Ottawa, that is those the rent of which exceeds $20,000 a year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are as follows:

Post Office and Interior, Union Bank building	66,000
Transportation building	42,000
Jackson building, Immigration	32,000
Customs and Health, Elgin annex	31,000
Canadian Woods building	97,000
Labelle building	24,000
Norlite Building, Interior department	30,000
Central Station, Railway Commission	21,356

Those are all the larger items over $20,000.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister give us a little information regarding the property which the government owns on Wellington street, how far it extends and the depth of the property?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): West of the West block, the property extends on the north side of the street down to the end of what is known as the Perley house, that is practically the turn, and then north to the river, about four blocks.

Mr. COOTE: Has the government any intention of putting up some buildings on that property this year for the government service?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department have in the office plans prepared and the lay-out developed. It is a question when it will be advisable to come to parliament and ask for money. Prior to the present time the government have not felt they would be justified in undertaking a large building project.

Mr. COOTE: Approximately what amount would be involved to put up the buildings?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About $15,000,000. That is to develop what they have in mind. That would mean six or seven departmental buildings. That is the project that is proposed. It is not proposed just now.

Mr. FORKE: Does the minister not think $1,410,000 of rental would go a long way towards covering the capitalization?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is the capital investment and the maintenance. As a matter of fact, I do not think any money would be saved in that way. It will cost you more to own your own buildings.

Mr. FORKE: These rented buildings are heated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. That varies. Some of them we heat. It depends on the contract we make.

Mr. BANCROFT: I hope the minister will have the Hudson Bay railway finished before he commences erecting those buildings.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): How are the rents calculated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On the floor space. The rentals vary here from forty cents to $1.05 a square foot.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Do they vary according to the party from whom the property is rented?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. According to location, use and character of the building.

Mr. BOYS: The minister has mentioned a complete programme of providing buildings for several departments on the river front involving an expenditure of some $15,000,000. The rental paid now is about five per cent on $30,000,000. If that be so, I do not quite see why the minister thinks it is proper economy to continue renting. It would seem to me to be economy to use the land we have in that way. Are these long-term leases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. BOYS: Have the leases a clause by which they may be terminated in case the government desired to use the water front?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are no very long-term leases. They vary from one, three to five years.

Mr. BOYS: Without any right to terminate before that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. BOYS: Would it not be wise, in connection with leases that are being put through, to have a clause enabling the government to terminate them in case the government wanted to carry out this project?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There would be no great difficulty in that regard. If the government decided on a building project, it would take from two to three years probably to carry it out, and during that time the leases could be so arranged that they would fall due about the time the building was completed. The leases are not for long terms, and they are falling due at irregular intervals.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How is it that with rents going down in the city and very considerable areas in office buildings vacant, the rent the government is paying is going up?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think it is going up. Generally speaking, there has been a reduction in rentals.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is he reducing them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote shows a reduction of $40,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may be because there are departments that are closing up. Will the minister mention one block of considerable size in Ottawa where the rents are reduced?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Rents are very low in Ottawa. There have been no increases that I know of.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister was not here when we were attacked fore and aft for paying too high rents; but this government has increased them while rents generally have been diminishing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Where did we increase them?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the city; I have in mind a block which I need not mention.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know of any increases.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have been so advised, and I think the minister will find that it is a fact.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our rentals in Ottawa are low in comparison with those of other places.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And they were low before; but they have been raised in one or two instances while in no case have they been reduced.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is this just for buildings in Ottawa or does it include buildings throughout the country?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Throughout the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister might make a statement as to where certain valuable paintings are now housed, and how they are being taken care of. I refer particularly to those very precious records of the war in the way of paintings which have been donated to this country. What arrangement has been made as respects these, and how does the government propose to place them for the admiration of the Canadian people, as they should be placed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The paintings referred to are being cared for at the National Museum. It is hoped that some day we shall have a suitable building in which to display them, but so far the government has not thought it advisable to construct a building especially for that purpose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think anything should be done in the matter of placing them except with the approval of the donor. It has occurred however to me that possibly some of them might properly hang for a time in this magnificent building itself. It seems most unfortunate that they are not being enjoyed by the public of Canada as they should be. Has the minister considered the possibility of so displaying them that the publice may derive the fullest benefit from them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are many places in this building where the paintings might be hung to advantage. I shall look into this matter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am thankful for the way in which the minister has received the suggestion. In this connection I desire to make a brief statement as to the history of these paintings. I do not think that the fact is as well appreciated as it should be that these paintings now in the possession of this Dominion are due first of all to the resourceful initiative, the intense ardour for this country, and the generosity of Lord Beaverbrook. Lord Beaverbrook, as we all know, is a Canadian not only by birth but in heart as well; and though I cannot claim any friendship or, indeed, any intimacy with him whatever, I do feel that we owe him a great debt of gratitude for the thoughtfulness he displayed in preserving the records of the war in various forms to be the property and the pride of this Dominion for years to come.

The conflict had not much more than started when he conceived the idea of seeing that an adequate record was kept of the activities and the achievements of the Canadian forces in the field; and with characteristic initiative he set about to make himself responsible that this should be done. The eye-witness service owed its origin to him solely, and that service, distinct as it was from the rather dry and formal official records, is today the material, very complete, vivid and reliable, from which the history of the war is being written so far as Canada is concerned. The initial organization was expanded until it embraced all the Canadian units, and it certainly is not too much to say that no army in the field of all the allied armies was so served in this respect as was Canada.

But what I rose to mention chiefly was the gift of these paintings. They are considered the best of any of the paintings of the war and I understand that they are of a value approximating one million dollars, and possibly much more than that. Undoubtedly in the future they will be of far greater value. The idea and the execution of it are solely Lord Beaverbrook's. From beginning to end it was simply a work for Canada, and I regret exceedingly that in our time as in the time since its value has not been adequately recognized, nor have the pictures themselves been so placed and used as to give the Canadian people the results which Lord Beaverbrook had a right to expect they would receive. I know that owing to their character there must be a building suited for their display, and I earnestly trust that we shall be in a position soon to provide that building for the practical purposes of demonstration to show to the people of Canada the records of the war in this particular form. I attribute some laxity in this respect to the late government. I sincerely hope, however, that in this regard the present administration will far excel what we did in relation to these pictures. I make reference to the subject only because I believe that the Canadian people should not lose sight of the real service that was rendered this country by one of her sons, and that he will always feel that that service has been appreciated as it should be by us all.

Item agreed to.

Yukon public buildings—rents, repairs, fuel, light, water service and caretakers' salaries, $35,000.

Mr. KELLNER: What buildings do these rents cover? From the size of the item one would fancy that there was a good deal of governmental ownership in the Yukon. I think the population is now between seven and eight hundred.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for carrying out improvements in connection with public buildings erected in the Yukon territory, also to provide for fuel, lighting and water during the fiscal year 1925-26. These are the requirements:

Dawson—Administration building—maintenance	$18,861
Dawson—Post Office—maintenance..	836
Dawson—Government House—maintenance.. ..	736
Dawson—Warehouse and carpenter shop maintenance..	75
Dawson—Indian agent's office—maintenance..	300
Mayo—Mining recorder's office—maintenance.	1,000
Mayo—Post office—maintenance..	1,000
Mayo—Salaries of agent and accountant.. ..	600
Whitehorse and Carcross—post office..	2,815
Dawson—administration building—repairs to foundation..	7,700
Contingencies..	1,077
Total..	$35,000

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—land and cable telegraph lines, lower St. Lawrence and Maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels required for cable service, $218,000.

Mr. COOTE: What is this item for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is required for the fiscal year ending March 31 for the working expenses of the land and cable telegraph lines on the seacoast and islands of the lower river, the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Maritime provinces, including the working expenses of vessels required for cable service.

Mr. CALDWELL: How does the revenue compare with the expenditure for cable services?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not very favourably. These services are in the outlying districts of the St. Lawrence and in parts of Cape Breton and on some islands in the gulf where the population is very small.

Mr. CALDWELL: What is the amount of the revenue?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total revenue for the telegraph service in 1920-21 was $330,000; in 1924-25, $293,924.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. GARDINER: Is that for the whole Dominion?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the income in regard to this particular item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am sorry I have not that segregated. I will see that my hon. friend gets the information.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the government maintain telephone services throughout any sections of the Maritime provinces?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, more particularly in Cape Breton.

Mr. CALDWELL: In the section of New Brunswick where I live we had to form a farmers' telephone company and supply our own line. Later the larger company crowded us out and we had practically to give our line to them. Evidently we are behind the times in our section, or we would have applied to the government for assistance.

Item agreed to.

Saskatchewan, $45,000.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): There has been a good deal of complaint about the slowness in removing from cultivated land the unused poles of the old telegraph line from Qu'Appelle to Edmonton. How is the work of dismantling progressing?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As a rule it would cost probably more to take the poles down than their salvage value.

Mr. FORKE: Can the farmers get them for firewood?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Alberta, $100,000.

Mr. FORKE: What is this item for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For the working expenses of telephone and telegraph lines in Alberta during 1925-26. The lines in Alberta consist of 1158½ miles of land line, having forty-three offices, of which twenty-one are on salary basis and twenty-two on commission basis. These lines are: Edmonton-Hudson's Hope line, 774 miles; Onion lake Elk point line 61½ miles; Athabaska-Fort McMurray line, 323 miles.

Mr. FORKE: Is the money required for deficits or capital expenditure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For line men, operators' salaries and repairs generally.

Mr. BROWN: These services generally speaking are not profitable?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. CALDWELL: How did the government come to establish telephone systems in some of the provinces?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You have the history of the Dawson line with the opening up of the Yukon territory. In Cape Breton for many years there has been a service in the sparsely settled districts.

Mr. CALDWELL: I can understand the establishment of a line in the Yukon, but not in the settled provinces. When I came here first and began to scan these estimates it was news to me to find this state of affairs. Is there some way of passing these lines over to the local authorities?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They have been passed over for the most part, but in the case of Alberta the lines are in the northern sections.

Mr. KELLNER: Is any portion of it in the Northwest Territories anyway?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the government ever considered the possibility of supplying the needs here by radio? There is a sparse population scattered over a wide area, and it has just occurred to me that an extension of the radio service by the department would do away with the necessity for these expensive lines.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will understand that radio will give you a service between two points, but you would get no local service through Hudson's Hope. All through this country the settlements are small, and you could not maintain a series of radio stations through these communities to give such a service. That would be out of the question. Nevertheless in the northern sections of Alberta and Saskatchewan the government are charged with the administration, and some means of communication is needed in there so that we may know what is going on in the country.

Mr. COOTE: What is the farthest point north to which this telegraph line goes?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the line farthest north is that from Athabaska to Fort McMurray.

Mr. COOTE: I think the minister mentioned Hudson's Hope. Does the line run there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, from Edmonton.

Mr. COOTE: Where is Hudson's Hope situated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In British Columbia just over the border, I think.

Mr. McTAGGART: The government attempted to establish a radio station at Herschell island a year or two ago. Has that experiment been a success?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That vote is not under the Department of Public Works, it comes through the Department of the Interior. The construction is done and the operation is carried on by the Department of National Defence. The equipment was shipped from the coast last year, I think from Victoria or Vancouver upon the Hudson's Bay steamer which was lost. This year the supplies are going down the Mackenzie river and the post, in all possibility, will be established before the year closes.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am rather interested in this vote although it is not in my own province. I do not want to seem to be opposing it at all, but I am asking for information because of the conditions in New Brunswick. There if a subscriber lives more than ten miles from a telephone central he pays one dollar per mile extra for every mile over ten, so that it can be seen what an item it amounts to when that distance is exceeded to any extent. The minister need not be surprised if I come to him next year and ask for a grant to enable the people who live at a long distance from telephone centres to obtain telephone communication with the outside world, because the absence of these facilities has tended to discourage colonization. We have whole settlements which have been abandoned. As I said if the settler lives more than ten miles from a telephone central he pays one dollar per mile extra for every mile over ten, and in case he needs medical attendance he pays one dollar per mile for doctor's travel.

Mr. POWER: In Quebec we built the line ourselves.

Mr. CALDWELL: We do that in New Brunswick where there are enough in a community. I have helped to build two telephone lines, we got these services by putting our money and energy into the building of them.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I should like to call the minister's attention to the fact that this item of $244,500 for the Yukon system —Ashcroft-Dawson—is a misnomer. Not over $40,000 has anything to do with the Yukon. Formerly it had because the land line of British Columbia was used to connect up with the Yukon. Now that has been disconnected and all telegraphic communication with the Yukon is by wireless. It connects with the wireless station at Dawson and the local line within the territory is used. The annual upkeep of that line is not over $40,000 so this $200,000 should be under the British Columbia system. There is no reason why it should be called "Yukon system" at all.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe the system has been known as the Ashcroft-Dawson line for many years and under this title the money has been voted by parliament. If there is a misnomer, I do not think it is serious. It is well understood by all where the line goes and what it means. The line was built to serve that section of the country, it has been carried in the estimates in that form, and I cannot see that there is any objection to it.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I should like to make it clear to the minister that I am not objecting to the vote. What I am objecting to is the name. I admit that the expense of administering the government of the Yukon in proportion to the population is very large and the items that have necessarily to be spent for that purpose are very large also; but where we see an item of $200,000 charged to the Yukon system which has really nothing to do with the Yukon, it seems necessary to call attention to it. The minister says it is well understood that it does not mean "Yukon" but I venture to say that no one in the House except himself, myself, and the deputy minister understands that. I am sure the general public do not know anything about it. They are only concerned with the idea that it costs such a very large amount of money to administer the Yukon.

Grant to the Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company towards construction of bridge over the second narrows of Burrard inlet, B.C. being revote of portion of subsidy authorized by statute, chap. 46, sec. 3, 1913. Revote—$100,000—$270,000.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister explain why he is going to contribute to the cost of this bridge and give us some information about the proposed expenditure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for the construction of a bridge across the second narrows of Burrard inlet. In 1913, I think, parliament made a grant, under the Railway Act, of some $350,000 to a private enterprise to assist in the construction of this bridge. That project did not succeed. Later on the municipalities of Vancouver city, North Vancouver city, and the district of North Vancouver and West Vancouver organized themselves into what is known as the Burrard National Tunnel and Bridge Company and have subscribed to this undertaking. They properly, I think, came to the Dominion government and asked if we would assist in the construction of this bridge. We at that time, in 1922, voted $100,000. That vote was repeated in 1924. The province of British Columbia also contributed $120,000 to this undertaking. So it is a municipal, provincial and Dominion government undertaking. When I was west last summer, I was met by a large delegation of men using the channel for the towing of logs and the running of their boats in various lines of trade, and they complained of the fact that a cheap kind of bridge was being built, that it was obstructing the natural outlet through the narrows and would cause adverse currents to navigation. The matter seemed to be of a more or less serious nature, and as the undertaking was one in which the smaller municipalities were involved to the extent of their credit, I thought it wise that the matter should be cleared up rather than have the undertaking gone on with and cause probably some damage to the passage way that we require at certain sections of the bridge, and thus lead to a difficult situation. I had a board of engineers go into the whole matter, and they reported that to relieve and improve conditions there should be a further expenditure of $170,000, which would provide for the adding of two spans, 150 feet, north of pier No. 1; to raise the existing piers five feet and approaches, $78,000; dredging, $88,000; and diversion at Seymour creek $33,000. These matters were all taken into consideration and I asked council that we place in the estimates this year $270,000 for this undertaking. The bridge is an important one. It will give the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific access to the north shore of Burrard inlet, and will permit of industrial and other development on that shore, giving them the advantage of railway traffic. It will also accommodate pedestrian and vehicular traffic in and out of Vancouver and on to the north shore. The bridge is an important one, as I have already said, and has been endorsed by this parliament to the extent of a grant of $100,000, and by previous parliaments to the extent of $350,000, when it was a private undertaking.

Mr. STEVENS: This item of $270,000 is really a revote of the subsidy that was passed some years ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. LEWIS: What is the cost of the bridge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the cost of the bridge is $1,820,000.

Mr. LEWIS: What part of that amount is the Dominion government liable for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We will have $270,000 in the structure if this vote is passed.

Mr. COOTE: Has any money been paid to the company before this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, we have not paid anything.

Mr. COOTE: Just on what principle is the Dominion government called upon to contribute to this bridge? Is it not a municipal affair?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is more than a municipal affair. It is of great interest to the Canadian National Railway, and is of interest to the harbour commission in Vancouver. It will give them a larger area and better terminals than they now have.

Mr. COOTE: What other bridges in Canada do we contribute to the building of?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We contribute to all the bridges over canals, and to interprovincial bridges in the provinces.

Mr. CALDWELL: To interprovincial bridges?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, to the two bridges across the Ottawa river, for instance, and other bridges in Ontario and Quebec and other provinces. We also contribute to international bridges. For instance, the international bridges in New Brunswick, between Edmundston and Van Buren, which was constructed by the state of Maine and the federal government.

Mr. COOTE: But this is neither an interprovincial nor an international bridge, and I was trying to find out why the Dominion government should be putting $270,000 into it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The first commitment was made under the Railway Act as a railway proposition. The bridge company now are providing for a railway service, and will make it possible for the Canadian National—and this is our direct interest—and other railways entering Vancouver to have access to the north shore.

Mr. GARDINER: Are the railway companies contributing to the cost of construction?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. GARDINER: Yet they are going to have the use of it. Will they pay any tolls?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, there will be a rental charge.

Mr. GARDINER: Who will be the ultimate owners of this bridge, the municipalities or the Dominion government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The municipalities.

Mr. COOTE: We will have nothing to say about it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. COOTE: Will the tolls collected on this bridge be sufficient to take care of its maintenance?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is difficult to say. There will be a very considerable sum of money collected in tolls. There is a tremendous traffic, motor traffic particularly, to the north shore especially in the summer season. It leads up into a section that is very popular, and I have no doubt the tolls will amount to a very considerable sum. The bridge company are of the opinion that the tolls will take care not only of the maintenance, but will assist in wiping out the principal expenditure.

12 m.

Mr. KELLNER: What obligation is the government of the day committed to under that clause in the Railway Act which the minister mentioned a moment ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The commitment was made by parliament under the Railway Act. It was decided to subsidize a bridge of this character under railway charter. The railway was known as the Westminster-Yukon railway, and the subsidy granted at that time was $350,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to get this clearly if I can. The federal government undertakes to contribute to the construction of that bridge a certain amount. When the construction is completed the bridge is then turned over to the municipalities. The municipalities will then have the right to assess the tolls. Is that correct?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But no revenue from those tolls will come back to the Dominion government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then we are making an absolute gift.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is purely a subsidy.

Mr. GARDINER: When this item was first placed in the estimates, was it for the purpose of subsidizing the railway at that time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was a bridge to be built by the railway company.

Mr. GARDINER: What company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The New Westminster and Yukon Railway, I think is the name.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and then on the renewal of the subsidy, under the chapter in the statutes which is referred to here, it was granted to the Burrard Inlet Bridge and Tunnel Company, which is an incorporated body made up of the municipalities of North Vancouver, Barnet and Vancouver, which own all the stock and the whole of the Burrard Inlet Bridge and Tunnel Company.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will probably assist me in regard to the name of the railway that received the first subsidy. I think it was the Westminster-Yukon.

Mr. STEVENS: The old charter was to the Westminster-Yukon Railway. They never got any distance. That does not affect this vote, nor does it affect the charter referred to in the estimates.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the present company have to buy the charter of the former company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the federal government ever contributed to the building of bridges over the northern Saskatchewan river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not to my knowledge. They contributed to the bridge across the river at Edmonton in Alberta. We built one bridge entirely and contributed to another.

Mr. COOTE: Would the chief benefit in this case be to owners of real estate in North Vancouver?

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, the reeves of the municipalities being on the board of directors, would be interested. If anyone is familiar with the situation in Vancouver he will realize the necessity of connecting the north and south shore of Burrard inlet.

Progress reported

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Friday).

Friday, June 19, 1925

The House met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

Mr. A. J. LEWIS (Swift Current) presented the ninth report of the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFUNDING OF ADDITIONAL CHARGES

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eighth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, the additional charge paid on Bill No. 98, for the relief of Cecil Hunter, be refunded.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. W. F. GARLAND (Carleton) moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eighth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, the additional charge paid on Bill No. 98, for the relief of Jacob Edward Thuna, be refunded.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. HERBERT MARLER (St. Lawrence-St. George) moved:

That whereas it appears by the Votes and Proceedings of March 17 last that the second reading of Bill No. 19, respecting a patent of The Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada, Limited, was passed in the negative, the fees and charges paid thereon be refunded, less cost of printing and translation.

Mr. ROBB: I offer the same objection as I have made to similar motions.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. T. J. STEWART (West Hamilton) moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the ninth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, the additional charge levied and paid under rule 89 ss. 3 (c) and 8 on Bill No. 185 (Letter A5 of the Senate), intituled: "An Act for the relief of George William Quibell," be refunded.

He said: The committee recommended the refund of this money only this morning, and I have just received the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: On that understanding, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Mr. SPEAKER: In order to save time, if the House does not object, we could give these bills a first and second reading now.

Bill No. 219, from the Senate, respecting certain patents of Accounting and Tabulating Machine Corporation.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 222, from the Senate, for the relief of Walter Roderick Lewis.—Mr. Duff.

Bill No. 223, from the Senate, for the relief of Irene Muriel Corelli.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 224, from the Senate, for the relief of Wilfred Clarence Byron.—Mr. Ross (Kingston).

Bill No. 225, from the Senate, for the relief of Jessie Irene Yates.—Sir Henry Drayton.

Bill No. 226, from the Senate, for the relief of Mary Ann Tattersall.—Mr. Preston.

Bill No. 227, from the Senate, for the relief of Walter Lewis Hawkins.—Mr. Stewart (Leeds).

UNSATISFACTORY AUDIT CLERK

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance): At the request of the Auditor General, I lay on the table copy of a letter which he has written me respecting certain matters referred to in the discussion which took place on Thursday last when the estimates of the Department of Finance were under consideration. I also submit copy of my reply. In the memorandum which I read to the House at the time, an instance was cited of a clerk sent by the Auditor General's department to assist in audit work in the Department of Finance who had previously been in our employ in the identical branch concerned and had been found to be unsatisfactory. No name was mentioned and I do not think it is advisable or necessary to do so as, after all, the clerk referred to is a young man in the making with his future before him. The Auditor General included with his letter copies of certificates from the Civil Service Commission which give the name of the employee; but, for the reasons given above, I have thought it well not to include the same with the correspondence tabled.

TAX COLLECTIONS

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): I presume, Mr. Speaker, that I have now complied with the rules of the House in having given regular notice of the motion which I undertook to move on Tuesday last. I desire now to move:

> Whereas under an order of reference made on the 23rd of March, 1925, the standing committee on Public Accounts has had under investigation the methods of assessment and collection of business profits and income taxes;
>
> Therefore be it resolved,
> That the said committee on Public Accounts be instructed that they have power to consider and recommend to this House such amendments to the Income War Tax Act as may seem to them advisable.

When I was ruled out of order on the previous occasion I had submitted to the House in support of the motion, first, that the Commissioner of Taxation was formerly a tariff officer of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association; secondly, that he had assumed full responsibility for all the assessments made under the Business Profits War Tax Act; and, in the third place, that not a single one of some 30,000 assessments had been pressed in appeal. The fourth point I submitted was that no member of parliament nor any committee of parliament had had the privilege of examining any original assessment or any modifications thereof. I submitted that all the files were strictly confidential and that all the officials were under a solemn obligation to preserve secrecy in regard to those files. Not only was this the case, but I stated that recently the department had required of all officials at Ottawa a sweeping and solemn declaration before a commissioner to the effect that they had not, in writing or otherwise, directly or indirectly, disclosed or caused to be disclosed, or made available, any such confidential information; and that they were not aware of any person or persons, if any, to whom there had been such disclosures. And so forth.

Now I proceed to the submission of further facts and arguments in support of this motion. I would point out, further, that if there are any alleged irregularities or discriminations, no one, in view of the facts I have just cited, can make any investigation to determine whether or not the allegations are well founded. The officials are bound to secrecy under heavy penalties and the Public Accounts committee is not permitted to investigate even in camera. Indeed, the Auditor General is in doubt as to whether he has the power to institute an investigation. When he was before the committee that question was put to him very definitely and he admitted that there was some doubt as to whether even he had the power to inquire into these matters.

In the fifth place, I submit that all the officials in the Taxation branch, not only in Ottawa but throughout the whole of Canada, are outside the Civil Service Commission and that even the practice of advertising for applications is not followed. Therefore, the commissioner or perhaps technically, the minister, "hires and fires" at pleasure.

In the sixth place, there is very considerable dissatisfaction with the administration in this branch, particularly in the case of appeals. I should like in that connection to refer to a couple of letters which have come to me in the course of the investigation, one from Mr. F. W. Gerrish, of Montreal, who is a chartered accountant and a graduate of Cambridge university. I quote in part from his letter:

> In my opinion the income tax is by no means a most desirable form of taxation, but if it is retained, I consider that returns should be sent in annually by the end of January and all assessments should be made by the end of June, in order to avoid waste of time to tax-payers and the government. A proper judicial system of assessment is far preferable to arguments between tax-payers and inspectors examining books at the offices of tax-payers, as such arguments may often be carried on without regard to elementary principles of law, fact, accounting, and admissibility of evidence. I see no logical reason why such appeals should not be heard publicly.
> Under the present system large firms have office organizations and professional advisers to protect them. The small tax-payer through ignorance is often liable to pay an arbitrary assessment in excess of his real income.

Mr. Gerrish encloses with his letter to me a letter which he wrote to the Montreal Herald and which was published in its issue of January 21, 1922. That letter deals with the policy and administration in the Taxation branch and makes certain criticisms and complaints, particularly in regard to the absence of a body of case law which should be built up as a guidance for taxpayers as well as for the department. I do not wish to burden the House with a long quotation from the letter at this moment, but I refer to it because it appeared publicly in one of the Montreal papers.

I want to refer now to some other letters which I have had from a firm of accountants in western Ontario. In the matter of appeals, I quote the following:

> During the last four years there have been possibly twenty or thirty of our clients who have requested a hearing before the Board of Referees as provided in the act as originally drawn, and in not a single case has the request been treated otherwise than with unmitigated contempt.
>
> We have been informed that under pressure from the public for hearing before the Board of Referees, Mr. Breadner made representations to the government to have the board abolished. This he succeeded in doing and had substituted therefor reference to the Exchequer Court of Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada, procedure, which, on account of the expense involved, is utterly prohibitive to any but taxpayers of very large means.
> From this office alone there are at present pending in the commissioner's office many appeals from assessments, some of which have been lying undisposed of for as long as two or three years. Throughout the country there must be thousands of such cases which have been appealed and remain in the commissioner's files undisposed of.

Mr. ROBB: What firm is that?

Mr. GOOD: This is from Falls, Scott & Co., of Windsor, Ontario. With this letter was enclosed also an editorial from the Canadian Chartered Accountant of this year. I will read a few sentences from this editorial which bear upon the administration of this branch:

> At each successive annual meeting of the Dominion association for some years past, the unsatisfactory conditions which prevail in and about the collection of the federal income tax have been the subject of complaint. There are very many uncertainties as to the exact state of the law at the present time, due to the fact that amendments to the act from time to time have been dictated by the exigencies of special cases which have arisen rather than by an appreciation of the necessity for a fundamentally sound and equitable system of taxation of this particular kind. Every year, a few days before the close of the parliamentary session, when legislators are tired and perspiring, a batch of minor amendments appears in the form of a bill, and these go through—as is doubtless the intention—without time being allowed for examination by those most concerned, namely—The suffering public. The matters thus dealt with, being somewhat technical, their significance is not apparent, the House takes little interest and the law becomes still further complicated.

That is a statement of facts which anybody, who looks over the amendments to the act that have been made almost every year since it was first passed in 1917 can verify. I do not need to refer further to these letters, but I have received other letters complaining of various matters in conection with the administration. In that connection I should like to refer briefly to the provisions in the amendment to the act of 1923 in regard to appeals. Section 7 of the amendment passed in that year reads as follows:

> Sections 12 to 21 of the said act both inclusive are repealed, and the following are substituted therefor.

Then follow new clauses providing an entire and revolutionary change in the method of appeal. Instead of having a board of referees available for appeals, the appeal in the first instance is to the Commissioner of Taxation ostensibly the department, and if no adjustment is arrived at the taxpayer may if he wishes carry the appeal to the Exchequer court. But hon. members will note this:

> The party appealing shall thereupon give security to the satisfaction of the minister in a sum not less than four hundred dollars for the security of the costs of the appeal. Unless such security is furnished by the party appealing within one month after the mailing of the notice of dissatisfaction the appeal and all proceedings thereunder shall become null and void.

Mr. IRVINE: Before the hon. member concludes, would he turn around and face this way, tell us on what subject he is speaking and what he wants us to do? Because we have not the slightest idea.

Mr. GOOD: I am sorry if I have not made myself heard by my hon. friend behind me. I cannot face all directions at once. If I turn round and face in his direction, I am afraid a majority of the members of the House would not be able to hear me at all.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, to you and to the House, that the present provisions for appeals are entirely unsatisfactory. I have already read an extract from a letter written by a responsible party in the province of Ontario complaining that for years when the board of referees was apparently available appeals have been made, but these appeals have been disregarded and ignored; and that subsequently, in 1923, the whole system of appealing to boards of referees was done away with, and the appeal provided to the Exchequer Court. He states—and I think it will be obvious to everyone—that the appeal to the Exchequer Court is only possible for and only likely to be made by the very large taxpayers who can afford to run the risk and to incur the expense necessarily involved.

Seventhly, I submit, from the evidence which was laid before the committee, that although the Business Profits War Tax Act does not apply to accounting periods subsequent to 1920, assessments and collections under that act have not yet been cleaned up in this year 1925. The commissioner has admitted delay possibly measured in years, both in the sending out of the preliminary letter of advice to taxpayers, and in the sending out of the final notice of assessment. The commissioner has also admitted and defended deliberate delay in issuing the final notice of assessment, in some cases where firms were in financial difficulties. By reason of such delays in making assessments and collections, there have been unknown and indeterminable losses of revenue, —either by loss of interest or due to intervening bankruptcies.

These are the facts and conditions in the department that have been brought out by the inquiry. What then is the conclusion to which we are driven? I submit that it is this: The Commissioner of Taxation possesses quite extraordinary powers, and virtually complete immunity from investigation and criticism. There is every opportunity and temptation to exercise discrimination in the administration of law. No official should be placed in this position. No man should possess such tremendous and such arbitrary power. What therefore should be done? I suggest the following as remedial measures.

First, there should be an amendment to section 11 of the Income War Tax Act dealing with secrecy, to make it clear beyond question that the Auditor General has full power to make investigation of all matters pertaining to assessment and collection of income taxes. I understand it is the intention of the Acting Minister of Finance to recommend that the Auditor General be empowered to audit the revenue of the Dominion. The latter has stated that there is some doubt as to whether or not he is permitted under the law to audit this particular department, and I submit to the minister, to the House and to the government, that such amendment ought to be made immediately so that the Auditor General would be in a position beyond any doubt or controversy to investigate these matters. I should like personally to turn over to the Auditor General, since I have been unable to secure action on the part of the committee, a number of specific allegations of irregularity that have come to me privately, and I should like to have him investigate these matters. If this amendment to the act be not passed, he may come back next year and state that he has been unable or has not been permitted to make this very necessary investigation.

In the second place I think there should be such amendments to the Act as will enable taxpayers to carry their appeals to local courts, thus taking away from the Commissioner of Taxation the opportunity for exercising discrimination in the secret adjustment of appeals; also making appeals much less expensive than they are now to the Exchequer court. I desire, without making any personal reflections, to point out to the House and to the minister that there is under the present system every opportunity for a secret arrangement between the commissioner and any taxpayer, an arrangement which if it is irregular or unwise is not possible of discovery later on.

In the third place—and although this deals with a somewhat different matter, it is a matter which ought to be considered and acted upon, I think, by this House in the near future; I refer to the assessment of income taxes—

Mr. STEVENS: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member (Mr. Good) has just made a statement which reflects very seriously upon the honesty, honour and integrity of an old and long-tried public servant, under circumstances of the privilege of parliament, where such public servant has no opportunity to reply. I submit as my point of order that this whole subject was fully discussed before the Public Accounts committee during this session; that the said public servant was before the Public Accounts committee—I refer to the Commissioner of Taxation;—that the hon. member now making this charge under these unfair conditions had ample opportunity to examine the said public servant; that he did not succeed in securing the support of the said parliamentary committee; and that therefore his charge is out of order, is wholly unfair, and in no case in harmony with either the rules or the ethics of parliament.

Mr. GOOD: Speaking to the point of order, I wish to state that I have not made a charge against the Commissioner of Taxation. I have merely stated that the evidence submitted to the committee makes it quite clear that the commissioner has every opportunity for the exercise of favoritism and is practically beyond investigation. That is the only statement I made. I think the system is wrong; the law puts it in the hands of any man who is Commissioner of Taxation under the present system—

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member is not discussing the point of order at all; he is simply insisting upon making this unfair charge. I repeat that this matter has already been discussed, as his own words demonstrate, before the Public Accounts committee, and that the Public Accounts committee found against my hon. friend. Indeed, I am tempted to follow the hon. member's example and depart from the rules of the House myself in a statement of what I think of his action.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the committee reported to the House?

Mr. MANION: I was one of the members of that committee. The hon. member (Mr. Good) brought up this matter before the committee, and the committee voted it down, so that I think the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) is well taken—that an hon. member may not bring before the House a suggestion which has been regarded as unsatisfactory by a committee of the House, after due consideration by that committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do any other hon. members wish to speak to the point of order.

Mr. GOOD: In regard to the point just raised by the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion), I may say that the motion I made in the committee to empower the committee to investigate these matters was turned down. That is one reason why I am now submitting my case to the House and to the country. I find it is necessary to do that. I do not wish to transgress the rules of the House, and I do not know that I am doing so. If I am, I shall be glad to be corrected and to confine myself within the rules. I am simply submitting to the House my reasons for the motion which I have made, that is, that the Public Accounts committee should be empowered by this House to consider and make recommendations as to amendments to the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am informed by the chairman of the Public Accounts committee that no report has been submitted by that committee to the House with respect to the proceedings referred to. First of all, it is not permissible for any hon. member to reflect on the witnesses who appeared before a committee and second the proceedings of a committee can not be debated until a report of that committee is before the House. With regard to the reference made by the hon. member to the subject of the evidence given by Mr. Breadner, I will quote from paragraph 246 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

All references to judges and courts of justice and to personages of high official station—

I consider Mr. Breadner, the Commissioner of Taxation, as one of high official station.

—of the nature of personal attack and censure have always been considered unparliamentary.

I therefore rule, first, that no invidious reference be made as against that official, who is not here to defend himself. Besides, I gather from members of the committee who have spoken that his evidence was considered satisfactory by the majority of the members of the committee. Second, I would judge that the motion made by the hon. member (Mr. Good) is not in order, because I now learn that the report of the committee is not before the House. When that report is before the House and the House is in possession of the facts, the hon. member may move for a reference of the report back to the committee with instructions as contained in his motion. The hon. member is anticipating action which should be taken only when the report is before the House.

Mr. GOOD: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that you accepted the motion as being in order, and I spoke to it on the understanding that it was in order?

Mr. SPEAKER: I could only pass judgment after hearing the statements made by the hon. member. When the report is before the House the hon. member can move his motion.

Mr. GOOD: Will you permit me, Mr. Speaker, to make this explanation? I brought the motion in, feeling that I would never have another opportunity of presenting this matter to the House and to the country.

Mr. SPEAKER: I accept the explanation of the hon. member, but I am bound by the rules. The motion would be in order if the report was before the House, but as the report is not before the House the motion cannot be entertained.

Mr. GOOD: I shall await the report, then, if it ever comes in.

Mr. COOTE: May I ask that the motion of the hon. member be read? I am of the opinion there is nothing in it which refers to the report of the committee.

An hon. MEMBER: The ruling is given.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will read the motion again, out of courtesy to the hon. member (Mr. Coote):

Whereas under an order of reference made on the 23rd of March, 1925, the standing committee on Public Accounts has had under investigation the methods of assessment and collection of business profits and income taxes;

Therefore be it resolved,

That the said committee on Public Accounts be instructed that they have power to consider and recommend to this House such amendments to the Income War Tax Act as may seem to them advisable.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat in doubt about the point of order, but I would like to make a very few remarks in connection with this matter. The hon. member for Brant has thrown out some rather serious insinuations. The difficulty with my hon. friend from Brant is that he does not seem to understand the difference between making insinuations and making charges.

Mr. LEWIS: Mr. Speaker, I understand that you have ruled this motion out of order and therefore it is not debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon member speaking on a question of privilege?

Mr. LOGAN: I am speaking on a question of privilege, regarding an attack made on a committee of which I am chairman. I desire in the very fewest words—

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the question is now disposed of. I have ruled against the motion and against any invidious references being made against a high official of the Dominion government. Unless, therefore, the hon. gentleman rises now to speak on a question of personal privilege, I think we must proceed with the orders of the day.

Mr. LOGAN: My point is this: The hon. member for Brant has seen fit to reflect upon the committee of Public Accounts, and to state that he had certain evidence of being shut out. I desire as chairman of that committee to press the question of privilege and read to the House a statement showing the latitude the hon. member for Brant has been allowed before that committee, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read this statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not a personal attack. Therefore, we must proceed with the business of the House.

Mr. LOGAN: It is a personal attack upon the rulings of the chairman of that committee.

Mr. GOOD: No, Mr. Speaker, I object. I never made any attack or cast any reflections on the rulings of the chairman.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Let the hon. gentleman state his case.

Mr. LOGAN: I say an attack was made on the chairman of the committee for rulings he has made before that committee. I only desire to put on Hansard a short statement showing the leeway that has been allowed the hon. member for Brant in the investigation of this question, and if I may be allowed to make this statement I promise the House I will sit down inside of two or three minutes.

We have had in the Public Accounts committee the following meetings at which time has been devoted by the hon. member for Brant in discussion of the question of business profits and income war taxation as follows:

Date of meeting	Time used by Mr. Good	No. of pages of Evidence
March 17 (1st meeting)	Full time of meeting.. ..	5
April 2	Full time of meeting.. ..	56
April 16	Full time of meeting.. ..	61
April 17	Full time of meeting.. ..	56
April 24	Full time of meeting.. ..	59
May 7	Part time of meeting.. ..	24
May 13	Part time of meeting.. ..	42
May 15	Whole time of meeting.. ..	63
		366

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I expected the hon. gentleman to speak to a question of privilege. Instead, he has given the time table of the committee. I hope the incident is closed. We are nearing the end of the session and all this is lost time.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Before this matter is finally disposed of, I think we have a right to say a word. You have ruled, Mr. Speaker, against any invidious reference against any high official. I should like to be clear with regard to your ruling, before we pass on to anything further. Does that imply that the hon. member who spoke a little while ago has made such invidious references and is hereby reproved?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman will read my ruling in Hansard, and draw his own conclusions.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) made the statement just a few moments ago, that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) had questioned his rulings as chairman of the Public Accounts committee. I have listened very carefully to all that the hon. member for Brant has said this morning, and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Brant did not use the name of the chairman of the Public Accounts committee in anything he said this morning. I think that the definite statement made by the hon. member for Cumberland in that respect should be withdrawn.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to add a word to that, and to state that I did not this morning object to the rulings of the chairman of the committee, and I am glad now to bear testimony to his fairness during the meetings of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN: I desire to thank the hon. member for Brant for saying that.

Mr. GARDINER: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the chairman of the committee of Public Accounts should be withdrawn in all fairness to the hon. member for Brant. I think it is the only fair thing to do.

Mr. SPEAKER: The incident is closed.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not correct. I rise to a point of order and ask that his statement be withdrawn.

Mr. LOGAN: Speaking to the point of order, as the hon. member for Brant said that he had not been allowed to ask certain questions in the Public Accounts committee—

Mr. GOOD: No.

Mr. LOGAN: Hansard will bear me out,—and as the chairman of the committee is the only person who can say whether or not he shall be allowed to ask certain questions in the committee, I took his remark as a reflection on myself. Under the circumstances, however, and with the explanation of the hon. member for Brant, I will withdraw the statement which I made, and I hope the incident is closed, because we have had very interesting sessions of the Public Accounts committee.

JOHN E. RUSSELL COMPANY PATENTS

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT (for Mr. Chevrier) moved the first reading of Bill No. 220, from the Senate, respecting a patent owned by the John E. Russell Company.

Motion agreed to.

On the motion for the second reading:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN: (Leader of the Opposition): I really do not know anything about this bill, and I do not think that anybody else does. I do not want to delay the bill but when there is nobody here to explain it I do not think it should be read a second time without the slightest consideration, especially when it relates to patents.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT (for Mr. Chevrier) moved that Bill No. 221, from the Senate, respecting a patent owned by the John E. Russell Company be read a first time.

Motion agreed to.

COKE FROM CANADIAN COAL

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, (1) That it is important in the national interest that the cost of fuel to consumers be reduced; that this country be made as much as possible independent of the rest of the world in respect of fuel; that fuel famines should be avoided and the consumption of Canadian coal should be encouraged, and that the construction of works for the production of coke from Canadian Coal would largely contribute to these results.

(2) That it is expedient to bring in a measure to encourage the construction of works for the production of domestic fuel from coal mined in Canada.

(3) That " minister " in these resolutions shall mean the Minister of Mines, and " works " shall mean " by-product coke ovens."

(4) That the Governor in Council may, as an aid to the construction of works for the production of coke from coal mined in Canada, authorize the payment out of any unappropriated money forming part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, of assistance in accordance with the provisions of the proposed legislation, to any incorporated company approved by the governor in council as having the ability to perform the work, which shall enter into an agreement with His Majesty to construct, under the provisions of the proposed legislation, works for the production of domestic coke and by-products from coal mined in Canada, with all necessary equipment, machinery and plant requisite for such purpose, but no such aid shall be granted unless the governor in council is satisfied upon the report of the minister that the construction of the proposed works is in the public interest.

(5) That any company which seeks to enter into an agreement with His Majesty to construct works for the production of domestic coke from coal mined in Canada, under the proposed legislation, as part of its application therefor, shall present detailed working plans and specifications of the proposed works accompanied by estimates of the cost thereof, including estimates of all necessary equipment, machinery, plant and site (provided as to the site the company is obliged to pay therefor and does not obtain or has not obtained it by way of bonus or gift), and such estimates of cost shall be in such detail as shall enable the engineer appointed by the minister to verify the same for the purpose of the report to be made by him.

(6) (1) That the amount payable in respect of works for the production of domestic coke from coal mined in Canada which have been constructed under the proposed legislation shall be an annual sum not exceeding three per cent of the cost of the work as fixed and determined under subsection 2 of this resolution, each year during a period not exceeding fifteen years from the time the governor in council has determined under the proposed legislation that the work has been completed.

(6) 2) The cost on which the amount payable shall be calculated shall be fixed and determined by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the minister based upon a report of an engineer appointed by the minister for the purpose, accompanied by plans and specifications of the proposed works, and such costs shall include the cost of all necessary equipment, machinery and plant, and any sum bona fide expended or to be expended by the company in the purchase of a site for the production of domestic coke and of any existing equipment, machinery and plant that may be utilized for the purpose of works to be constructed under the proposed legislation, but shall not include the value of any site received or to be received by the company by way of bonus or gift; and the amount of the payment shall be so fixed and determined before the agreement for payment is entered into.

(7) That the construction of the works shall be under the supervision of the Department of Mines, and they shall be completed within the time limited by the agreement unless the time is extended by the Governor in Council, and the amount to be paid shall be payable during the period agreed to by the Governor in Council as specified in the preceding resolution, from the time the Governor in Council upon a report of the minister determines that the work required by the agreement has been completed, and the production of domestic coke as contemplated by this legislation may forthwith be proceeded with.

8. That the agreement, in addition to such other provisions as the Governor in Council may determine, shall contain covenants on the part of the company:—

(a) To use in the manufacture of coke only coal mined in Canada, and in the event of other coal being so used to pay His Majesty as liquidated damages the sum of one dollar per ton for each ton of coke produced from coal other than coal mined in Canada;

(b) To sell the coke produced in works constructed under the proposed legislation at fair and reasonable prices, and such prices shall be subject to control by the Dominion Fuel Board or by such other authority or person that the Governor in Council may determine;

(c) To maintain and operate the works for the production of domestic coke, within the limits of the capacity thereof in such manner as to meet the reasonable requirements of the public; and,

(d) Provisions for investigation and report in the event that the minister is of opinion that the company has failed to comply with the proposed provisions or covenants, and in case of differences, for arbitration, and for making the decision of the board of arbitration a rule, order or decree of the Exchequer court, (e) for the keeping in repair of said works by the company, (f) for the taking possession of the works in the event of the company failing to operate the same or keep them in repair.

9. That no bonds, debentures or other securities shall be issued as a charge upon said works until it has been established to the satisfaction of the minister that not less than fifteen per cent of the cost of the works as fixed and determined has been spent on the work and material therefor, and that there are no outstanding and unsettled liens, encumbrances or claims upon or in respect of such works, but thereafter the minister may permit the issue of bonds, debentures or other securities, and any amounts to be paid may, with the approval of the minister, be assigned to a trustee for the holder of such bonds, debentures or other securities, and the subsidy shall, in that event, notwithstanding any liability incurred by the company under the foregoing provisions be payable directly to such trustee, but until the works have been completed to the satisfaction of the minister, the total amount of the bonds, debentures or other securities issued shall not at any time exceed seventy-five per cent of the amount actually expended for the work and the materials for said works, and in no case shall any bonds, debentures or other securities be issued without the consent of the minister in writing.

10. The company before receiving the first payment under these provisions, and annually thereafter, shall file in the office of the minister a verified statement as to the financial state of the company and details of the business.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. ANDREW McMASTER (Brome): I believe that I am going to follow a somewhat unusual course in objecting to this procedure, but the proposed legislation is, in my opinion, so inadvisable, and the time of the House at this period of the session so precious, that I think it would be best for me to say what I have to say in connection with the matter now, in the hope that wiser considerations will prevail with those responsible for this legislation, and that it will not be proceeded with further.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is only a notice of motion. The resolution itself is not to be considered until to-morrow.

Mr. McMASTER: I understand that, Mr. Speaker, and I am not perfectly certain that I am in order, but if there is any object in bringing this resolution before the House surely an opportunity should be given to those who are very much opposed to the legislation to direct the attention of those responsible to it and to the inadvisability of the action, in order that greater time may not be lost. I, of course, always bow respectfully to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I do point out that there is a motion before the House, and that being the case it seems logical that the House should have an opportunity of debating it.

Mr. BOIVIN: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. McMASTER: I presume that—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The motion is certainly debatable under Rule 17A which says:

Every motion heretofore debatable made upon routine proceedings (except adjournment motions)— and so on:

—shall be debatable.

Therefore this motion is debatable. The motion is that to-morrow the House will consider the merits of the motion.

What is debatable now is the opportunity of the House to resolve itself into a committee of the Whole to-morrow. The margin allowed to the hon. gentleman is not very wide and he must not go to the kernel of the question.

Mr. McMASTER: If I am to take your remarks as a warning, Mr. Speaker, I should not be in order in discussing the subject matter of the motion at this moment.

Mr. SPEAKER: Exactly.

Mr. McMASTER: Then I will yield to what I think must be the desire of the Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart) and reserve my remarks until another day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no concern personally as to whether the hon. member goes on to-day or to-morrow, but I think I should put myself on record as to the propriety of debating the merits of the motion itself. The Minister of Mines following his customary practice, said "to-morrow I will move," and so on. The real form should be "I move that to-morrow the House go into committee of the Whole". Although it appears as a notice of motion, it is a motion—a motion is that to-morrow the House go into committee of the Whole; and when the motion is put at this time it is debatable. I feel that up to this time I am in line with Mr. Speaker's ruling; I am not in direct conflict with it anyway. The Speaker has ruled that the motion is debatable—that is to say the motion that the House go to-morrow into committee. The intimation is that it is only the merits of the motion to go into committee that are debatable. Very well, but included in the merits of that motion are the merits of the subject that the House will go into committee on. It is my judgment, whatever meaning hon. members seek to attach to the motion, that the merits of the whole motion are debatable.

Motion agreed to.

AUSTRALIAN TREATY

TIME OF PRESENTING RESOLUTION IN RELATION TO BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider a certain resolution respecting trade between the Commonwealth of Australia and the Dominion of Canada.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the House. Shall I dispense with reading the resolution? It is rather a lengthy one.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dispense.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I do not wish to impose upon you, Sir, the duty of reading this proposed resolution. But if I am out of order, I would suggest to the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that there are on the order paper several resolutions which, I think, are more important, and it is hardly fair that they should take a second place to this resolution for which the minister is now asking the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion will appear on the order paper in full to-morrow. This is by leave of the House. I do not object to reading the whole resolution, but it is very long.

Mr. COOTE: I do not wish to ask you to read the resolution, but simply to suggest to the minister that there are on the order paper several resolutions which, I think, should be dealt with before the one he is now proposing.

Mr. GRAHAM: We have to start this one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This does not give any priority to this resolution. It merely brings it on the order paper.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising to object to the unanimous acceptance by the House of this otherwise unusual and improper procedure. The notice is only on the Votes and Proceedings to-day and not until to-morrow can the motion be made except by unanimous consent. As regards the hurrying of the matter, I make no objection. But I rise to protest against the conduct of the government and its treatment of the House in relation to this measure. My remarks, while they will apply particularly to this measure, have reference to others as well. The House has been treated in a manner unprecedented even by the government itself in respect of the only consequential measures of this session. We have been treated, prior to now, to a plethora of small, trifling, worthless legislation, accompanied by a torrent of divorce bills. And in the last dying hours of the session more legislation is thrown upon us, in the course of what at most must be a few days, if not hours, than has been introduced or brought to our notice during the whole of the rest of the session. In fact, this legislation alone is of more consequence than all that has been disposed of prior to this time. Within these few hours we have had, as well, the Railway Rates bill which now is half way through parliament after a very hurried discussion, and which is certainly as important, if it does not exceed in consequence, this item itself. The Grain Act also was left until very close to the eve of the close of the session. And we have thrown at us by notice to-day another most important measure introduced by the Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart),—notice of this was given but a few minutes ago. These together simply overshadow all that we have had presented to us in all the rest of this session. It is true, governments have to have time to prepare; but what reason there could have been that the motion of which we have just had notice as respects coke could not have been before us months ago, I do not know. It seems utterly out of reason that it should not have accompanied the budget presentation. What reason can possibly exist why the Grain Act could not have been before us at least weeks before it was. I do not know. The report was down many weeks before the Grain Act was. What reason there could have been that this Railway Rates bill could not have been before us at least two months ago, nobody knows. Every circumstance was known, two, if not three months prior to the House being favoured with any knowledge whatever of government policy. Now we are told that we have to consider the terms of an involved treaty with Australia, certainly an important treaty, too, a subject most controversial, a treaty affecting perhaps sometimes adversely, sometimes in places favourably, large interests in this country, and it is thrown in the face of parliament just as we are about to prorogue. We have begged for weeks to be favoured with the general terms of the treaty in order that we might know and study them and be ready. We were denied that. We could get no information whatever of what was in the treaty. The government sat still and silent, and all appeals were unheeded to lay on the table any intimation of what the treaty was to contain if ever it came down. It was absolutely unnecessary that this should have been the case, and no member of the House could ever be convinced that it was necessary. For some reason the government endeavoured to delay, by one device or another, until they would get the last precipitate moment in which to bring the measure in. Not only is this the case, but the House has been advised that the measure would not come in. It has been so advised, not in express terms but by inevitable inference. On June 11, on the Orders of the Day, I spoke as follows, and the answers were as I shall read:—

> Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King (Prime Minister): I think everything that is of any importance is on the order paper. There is one little measure that the Acting Minister of Finance spoke of to-day with respect to the Battlefields Commission, also one with respect to the Audit Act, very small amendments, I think. Apart from that, I think the legislation is all down at the present time.

I took pains to check the Prime Minister for fear he was wrong:

> Mr. Meighen: I am sure that will be interesting news to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland).
>
> Mr. Garland (Bow River): What about rural credits?
>
> Mr. Mackenzie King: I omitted to say that it is the intention of the government to bring down a measure on rural credits.
> Hon. Ernest Lapointe (Minister of Justice): I may also have a bill relating to a home for girls in the Maritime provinces, but it will not be controversial.

There the matter ends. This is wholly inconsistent, utterly incompatible, with anything except the fact that there was no treaty of this consequence to come down, indeed, no measure even of the importance of that foreshadowed in the motion of the Minister of the Interior to-day. Then again, on June 12, the following took place in this House:

Business of the House

Morning Sittings—Further Legislation

Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King (Prime Minister): moved:

That on and after the 16th June instant, until the end of the present session, the House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each sitting day, and that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m. there shall be also an intermission every day from one to three o'clock p.m.

Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Leader of the Opposition): This is the usual motion and there is no special objection to it, although I really do not see that it is very necessary this year. However, it should not be passed until all government legislation is down, which is not the case. I suggest that the motion stand awaiting the bringing down of all further legislation. If everything is already down I shall have no objection to the motion taking effect on Tuesday.

That was the time the motion was to take effect according to its terms.

Mr. Mackenzie King: There is no objection to having it stand. As I intimated yesterday all legislation is now down, as far I am aware, with the exception of supplementary estimates and one or two very minor bills.

Mr. Meighen: The Prime Minister is forgetting about that rural credits matter that is on the conscience of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland).

Mr. Mackenzie King: No, I am not forgetting it; I spoke of it yesterday. I said, with the exception of the measures I referred to yesterday.

Mr. Meighen: I think the Prime Minister stated there were one or two minor matters to be dealt with.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I should say there is a small amendment that the Minister of Customs and Excise has—I think to give him power to make regulations under the Smuggling Treaty—and also an amendment to the Customs Act to give him some power in connection with the issuing of tobacco stemming licenses.

Mr. Meighen: And the matter of rural credits?

Mr. Mackenzie King: Yes.

Mr. Meighen: We need to see the rural credits legislation brought down.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I should not like to close the door absolutely to some small amendments that may be needed to be introduced and discussed between now and the end of the session; but I think I can safely say that there will be nothing that will be controversial in any sense.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Meighen: The motion stands in the meantime.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

Then the government having brought down what was foreshadowed in this conversation, the motion passed, I believe, on Friday last. Now, in the face of what has taken place the government, with some notification which came I believe about midnight last night after I had gone from the House, brings in to-day what I consider, and what I think the House generally will consider, the most important measure of this session. I would ask the Prime Minister and hon. members whether this is treating parliament with decorum.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I could not take exception for a moment to what my right hon. friend has said as to the lateness at which this legislation is brought down and with regard to what he has quoted from my own remarks, had it not been understood from the outset, as every hon. member knows, that negotiations were taking place between Australia and Canada with the hope of their being successfully concluded before the close of the present session. My right hon. friend, each time the subject was mentioned, indicated that the main purpose of the negotiations was to avoid going on with this matter altogether, and that the object was to drop the Australian treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I indicated nothing of the kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my right hon. friend's remarks will be so understood.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I simply asked for the details of the treaty in order that the House might have an opportunity to consider them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as that is concerned, no one knows better than my right hon. friend that when negotiations are pending between two governments no more improper proceeding could be resorted to than to bring into the arena of popular discussion the matters that form the subject of confidential correspondence between them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not ask for anything of the kind. I requested so much information in regard to the Australian treaty as, for example, had been furnished the parliament of Australia months ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As for that, my hon. friend had only to go to the library and consult the records of the Australian parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I asked that the details be submitted in this House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government has been most anxious to have the treaty with Australia concluded before the end of the session but it has not been possible to conclude negotiations sooner. It was necessary to send a trade commissioner to Australia for the purpose, and he has been successful in his negotiations. The moment we received from the Australian government information that they were agreeable to proceed with their part of the undertaking provided our parliament enacted what is now proposed, notice was given in this House that the legislation would be brought down. It was not possible for the government to give that notice until word had been received that the negotiations had been satisfactorily concluded. I am sure that all members of the government regret that it has not been possible to bring in this legislation sooner, but I do submit that there has been no desire in any way to treat the House otherwise than with the greatest courtesy and the fullest consideration in every respect. We can take whatever time parliament wishes to discuss this treaty, although, I repeat, I regret, with my right hon. friend and all hon. members, that it has not been possible to bring down the legislation earlier.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does not the Prime Minister think that he ought to have referred to it when the matter was brought to his attention on two occasions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have already pointed out, I was not in a position to say whether or not the negotiations would be concluded before the session was over; had I been sure of that I would certainly have said that we would bring down the treaty before prorogation. I did not wish to be open to the reproach from my right hon. friend that I had said we would bring down the treaty, when I might find later on that it was not possible to do so. Hon. members will bear me out when I say that it was understood all along that the government intended as soon as the matter was concluded to give to the House the full particulars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I understood until now. But on this matter being brought twice to the attention of the government it was undoubtedly the duty of the Prime Minister, if it had been intended all along to proceed with the treaty, to have said that in the event of negotiations being completed with Australia the treaty would be brought down. Such an intimation was omitted and the House was misled.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not altogether sure that I share the opinion of the leader of the opposition as to the supreme importance of this legislation. I have no doubt it is important, but not having the details of it before me I cannot very well criticize it on that ground except to say that if it follows the lines of legislation forecast during the summer then it looks to me as though it were of the greatest interest to a small group of auto repair manufacturers and of some interest to the rest of the country as imposing indirect taxation. But may I say that in my opinion this legislation is not so important that it should precede the bringing down and passing through this House of both the Grain Act and the rural credits legislation; I think it is the duty of the government to see that both these measures come before parliament before this most contentious Australian treaty is placed before us for discussion.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—ALTERNATIVE VOTE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): There is another matter that has not been referred to. I think the single transferable vote legislation was before the House. Has the government forgotten to do anything more with regard to that measure?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): We hope to bring in this afternoon the legislation respecting the Dominion Elections Act. I think I told the House that that matter would have to be considered before we could go on with the single transferable vote. I may say to my hon. friends that I think it is somewhat doubtful whether the House is prepared to consider the single transferable vote. However, the government is giving the matter further consideration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Surely the right hon. Prime Minister, the leader of the government, is not going to break his promise to parliament? Surely we will have this legislation brought down?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The legislation has been brought down. I do not think I ever promised it would be carried through the House. I could not have made that promise.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the inference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not the inference.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the good of bringing down legislation if we are not going to put it through?

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

TRANSFER OF LANDS

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Burrard): I call attention to a return to the order of the House dated February 23, which has been tabled in the House. I asked for a return as follows:

1. Since Confederation, how many acres of land belonging to the Dominion of Canada have been transferred to the Province of Ontario and on what date transfers were made.

2. Consideration paid by said Province of Ontario for said transfers.

There are two similar questions with regard to Quebec.

Question 2 asks the consideration paid by the province. The answer is, "no information in Department of the Interior." And no other answer is given.

I draw attention to another order of the House, dated February 23, of which this question forms part:

What portion of the Northwest Territories and Rupert's Land is still owned by the Dominion of Canada?

The obvious intention of that question is shown by the questions which preceded it—to what portion of the Northwest Territories is title held by the Dominion of Canada? Portions of them have been transferred to the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The answer says:

The whole of the original Northwest Territories and Rupert's Land are included within the Dominion, large areas thereof being included within the boundaries of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Northern Ontario and Northern Quebec.

The answer given is in my opinion absurd—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CLARK: —because it says that the whole of the original Northwest Territories are included within the Dominion. That is quite obvious; a schoolboy would know that. And the answers to the remaining questions, 4, 5 and 6 are quite unintelligible and useless, in consequence of the misinterpretation of these questions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the Minister of the Interior should make an explanation.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Minister of the Interior): I confess I would require to have an opportunity of discussing with the hon. gentleman the exact information he wants. I could only hear very imperfectly what he was saying, but I think the information he wants is the definite acreage held by the crown in these provinces, and I understand him to say that the answer does not give that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I looked over the returns. There is absolutely nothing answered. The questions are simply dodged.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I regret I did not examine the returns. I will undertake to see the hon. member gets a definite answer, and I will be glad to discuss the matter with him.

[Mr. Clark.]

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS AT QUEBEC

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 205, to amend an Act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Rents, dues, etc.:

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the effect of these provisions, especially clause 1.

Mr. ROBB: The explanatory notes are on the opposite page.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are very, very brief.

Mr. ROBB: It is the only reference I have here. I will read a memorandum in regard to it:

By chapter 46 of the Statutes of 1914 it was provided that no lands or immovable property should be purchased or acquired by the commission except with the previous approval of parliament.

By chapter 58 of the Statutes of 1908 the commission was given authority to buy certain lands. These are included among those set out in this bill.

I understand that they must have the permission of parliament to buy these lands, and it involves no additional expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How can they buy the lands without expending money?

Mr. ROBB: They have the money.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They have to spend it.

Mr. ROBB: They have to come before parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The money is provided by parliament.

Mr. ROBB: It is provided by contribution.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The amount is made up largely by subscriptions from bodies all over the empire. This bill has been asked for by the commission, the members of which are citizens from all over the Dominion of Canada. These properties are part of the national battlefields and must be included in the bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is part of the battlefield of the Plains of Abraham?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PRISON AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 206, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—interprovincial home for women at Moncton.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This bill, in the clash and terror of the last hours of the session, has no explanations at all. We will have to depend a lot on the minister here.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Last year the chapter which is repealed by section 1 was enacted for this same institution, but the bill placed the institution in the same class as the Maritime home for girls at Truro. It happens that the latter institution is for girls under sixteen, whereas the institution dealt with here, which is properly known as the Interprovincial Home for Young Women at Coverdale in the county of Albert, New Brunswick, is for girls over sixteen.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand that section 162 of the Prisons and Reformatories Act, which applies to the Truro school, was made to apply to this school, and that is now to be repealed. Does the rest of the bill make regulations for this school?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, the same provisions as those which apply to other similar institutions throughout Canada.

Mr. CHURCH: While this bill applies only to one province and to one institution, still, the principle involved in it is Dominion-wide. Why are juveniles from sixteen to eighteen years of age kept in these federal institutions? It is no place for them. Could not the minister in the recess of parliament take this matter up with a view to providing separate institutions, either alone or jointly with the provinces? The figures show a large number of children housed in these places. Can not some better plan be adopted?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It will be seen by a reference to the Prisons and Reformatories Act, chapter 148 of the revised statutes, that there are similar institutions in Ontario. I think the one similar to this would be the Andrew Mercer Ontario Reformatory for Females. The same provisions apply to this institution as to the one we are dealing with.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Protestant women over sixteen years may be sentenced to extended or substituted imprisonment in Interprovincial Home at Coverdale, N.B.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This merely provides for the power of sentence to be applicable to this home in place of a penitentiary?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why should we provide the home? Do we do that in all the provinces?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We are not providing the home; the provinces do that. We are simply giving the authority to send prisoners there.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think the funds are provided not by the provincial governments, but by different churches in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I believe that is right. The amounts may be contributed by private subscriptions or by the efforts of associations or organizations, but the institutions are under the supervision of the provinces. I know the various protestant churches have been very anxious to have this legislation put through before the session is over. I have been receiving telegrams and representations from almost every member from New Brunswick in this parliament.

CANADA-UNITED STATES SMUGGLING TREATY

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Acting Minister of Customs and Excise) moved the second reading of Bill No. 207 for carrying into effect a treaty signed 6th June, 1924, between His Majesty in respect of Canada and the United States of America, for the suppression of smuggling operations and for other purposes.

On section 1—Governor in Council may carry out provisions of treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is another bill without any explanation. Here is a bill which the government had in mind at the opening of the session; in fact, it is one of about only three named in the Speech from the Throne. How is it this has been kept under the minister's hat till just now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This bill could not have come in until after the treaty was signed. The treaty was signed on the 6th of June.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is referred to in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The speech referred to the treaty that was being negotiated with respect to smuggling, and this bill is to give power to carry out the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. CARDIN: The only object of this bill is to give power to the Governor in Council to make regulations to put the treaty into effect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The only thing in the act is the recitement. Where is the treaty itself?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The House passed the treaty, and I suppose copies of it are available. The treaty has been approved and ratified by both His Majesty's government and that of the United States.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is just the treaty referring to the smuggling of narcotics and liquors, not the smuggling of other goods?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The smuggling of narcotics and liquors.

Section agreed to.

BOARD OF AUDIT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Acting Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to constitute a Board of Audit composed of not less than three nor more than five persons, one of whom may be appointed by the Governor in Council to be the chairman; that each member of the board except a member who is an officer of the public service be paid compensation for his services at a rate not exceeding three thousand dollars per annum, and that a further allowance at a rate not exceeding one thousand dollars per annum may be paid to the chairman of the board; that the board, on the approval of the treasury board, may engage skilled assistance and clerical assistance; and that the necessary expenditures be paid out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is certainly "some" resolution. We are told that we ought to appoint a Board of Audit; what we ought to pay them; how much more we ought to pay the chairman; and that the board ought to be allowed to spend money;—and that is all we are allowed to know about the board. What in the world is it to do? Would not the resolution mean something if it stated what the purpose of the Board of Audit was? It is only a farce bringing in a resolution asking parliament to appoint a Board of Audit without the slightest intimation of what are to be their powers and duties. We passed a Board of Audit Act some years ago, at the instance of this government; in the days of its early enthusiasm, when it was going to regenerate this Dominion, especially the public service. There was going to be a man brought in who was going to be a sort of General Foch and Lord Kitchener rolled into one. Then the government thought he could best be helped by a Board of Audit, and the Board of Audit was appointed; and they were given powers,—and their powers included the universe, the heavens above and the waters beneath.

Mr. ROBB: The Board of Audit was appointed prior to the appointment of the new Auditor General.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was a Board of Audit Act, and a board appointed under that act. They were to re-audit and reconstruct the whole bookkeeping system of Canada. Not only that, they were to go into the Canadian National Railways, into all commissions and everything else in the public service, past or present, and put everything in order. As far as I have ever heard they have never done a tap, not a single thing. The whole thing was a misconception. There was nothing subtracted from the duties of anybody else, so when they came into existence, as far as I have ever learned, they were told simply to sit still, keep quiet, and look nice. They have never done anything,—I suppose they have drawn their salaries. What is the reason that one of these pantomimes is not enough without another?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is correct in saying that a Board of Audit was appointed under the act of 1923, but that board was appointed prior to the appointment of the present Auditor General. The act, however, provided that the Auditor General was to be the chairman of the Board of Audit, and that the board should cease to function on the 1st of July, 1925.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What has the board ever done?

Mr. ROBB: This act is to continue the audit board with some minor changes. The act of 1923 provided that the board should consist of four members, the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister of Finance being two. The other two were to be chartered accountants. The bill now submitted provides that the membership shall be not less than three and not more than five. One of the members must be a chartered accountant. There is no reason why they should not all be chartered accountants, but at least one must be.

The new board shall act as advisers to the Treasury board, and on its instructions shall investigate:

(a) the sufficiency of the methods of accounting and of the procedure in other respects employed in the conduct of the public business of Canada or of any department or detail thereof;

(b) the economies which may be effected in any of the public services or in the conduct of the public business;

(c) the financial affairs of the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, and any other undertaking owned or carried on by the Government of Canada;

(d) the financial affairs of any commission or other public body the operations of which are carried on by appropriations from the Treasury of Canada, or which are aided by grants or loans from the said treasury.

The members shall hold office for a term not exceeding five years, but they shall be eligible for re-appointment.

When the bill is submitted, hon. gentlemen will observe that the change in this bill as compared with the bill of 1923 is that neither the name of the Auditor General nor that of the Deputy Minister of Finance is mentioned in this bill. Under the old act one was the chairman and the other was the vice-chairman; under this bill it is provided that the chairman shall be appointed either by the board itself or by the Governor General in Council. It is clearly understood under the Audit Act that the Auditor General is to audit. These officers are advisers to the Treasury board and are to determine methods of economy and uniformity in the financial system of the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All this sounds very fine, but I fancy the minister has not given us the principal clause in the bill. I have never seen it but I am going to hazard a guess: You will find a clause in this bill providing that "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act contained" the Governor in Council shall appoint these men. We will wait and see if that is not in it. Does the minister say it is not going to be there?

Mr. ROBB: I should think my right hon. friend will agree at once that if he were in power he would want the right of appointing this audit board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought that would be there.

Mr. ROBB: That was in the old act. There is no change in that respect at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In that respect there is. This government brings in as a principal clause that they shall appoint the men. I knew that was coming, all right. Now, then, what is this audit board to do? The scope of its duties is wide enough, but just in proportion to the width and infinitude of the scope given will be the paucity of its performance. When the minister tells us that he has an audit board he should give some evidence that it is going to do anything but draw its salary. The first audit board was to have power to audit and supervise the whole bookkeeping of the country, every single detail. But in addition, for fear it would be idle, it was to go into the National railways and fix things up all through that system. Now, is it not a fact that it never puts its nose in any of them, that the National Railways now, at the close of four years nearly, have got a big auditing genius down in New York and are paying him a hundred thousand or two hundred thousand dollars to come up and tell them what they owe and what the state of their books is? Is not the sum and substance of what this audit board did in the National railways literally nothing? I do remember that they fussed a little at the time of the revision of the salaries in connection with the postal employees. I read the record there. I saw that they stepped in on unholy ground and got kicked out, and were only a nuisance. Beyond that I have not heard of one single activity on the part of that audit board.

Mr. ROBB: I admit the kicking out. May I remind my right hon. friend—possibly he was not in the House at the time—that I did make a statement that the board had investigated and audited the accounts of the Canadian National Railways and they are now working on the copy of a report of their activities to be tabled?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Board of Audit investigated the accounts?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, of the National railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They did nothing of the sort, and the minister knows it.

Mr. ROBB: They looked into the expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no, they did not.

Mr. ROBB: And if my right hon. friend wishes I will give him a copy of the report, when it is finished. There is only one report; I am having another prepared to be tabled.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Report of what?

Mr. ROBB: They looked into the accounts of the Vancouver harbour board and they looked into the accounts of the Quebec harbour board. Speaking from memory I think they looked into the accounts of the Montreal harbour board also, but I am not sure about that. I know they did in the case of these other cities and a report is now being prepared to lay upon the table.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would like to see these reports. All the consequence I have ever heard is larger and larger votes for these various harbour boards. What did they find, what was the result of all this "looking into"? We have had before our system of audit looking into the National railways and which produced to this House a statement that the same system was followed as was followed before, of keeping direct and indirect liabilities apart. Any child five years old would know that. Then they gave the system of certificate. And that is considered here as "looking into" the National railway accounts. It is not looking into it at all. Parliament has never been advised of one single achievement of that audit board except the furnishing of an illusory certificate to the minister to fool the people of Canada.

Mr. ROBB: We might as well clean that up at once—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROBB: The certificate given this year was the identical certificate that they gave to my right hon. friend's Finance minister in 1922.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You never had them.

Mr. ROBB: But we did have them. You had Mr. Morgan who was on this audit board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We did not have any audit board.

Mr. ROBB: Not Morgan, but the Edwards-Morgan Company; and you had from the Edwards-Morgan Company exactly the same certificate in 1922 that was tabled in 1924.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The one that was read in the House in the budget this year?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, sir.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all. Why, pshaw! We did not have any audit board at all.

Mr. ROBB: Not any audit board?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly not.

Mr. ROBB: My right hon. friend is wrong. Not any audit board? You called in the Edwards-Morgan Company, or rather Mr. George Edwards of the Edwards-Morgan Co., who is on this audit board. You were not satisfied with the conditions in the Auditor General's office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, very well.

Mr. ROBB: And you called in Mr. George Edwards to make an audit. He made an audit and his certificate is in the records of the department. The certificate which was filed with parliament is printed in the public accounts tabled in this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good. If we were not satisfied with the audit work being done in that special place we would get a man to go into it, review it, and make a report. That is all right. We did that and made a report of that audit. But what comparison is there between that report and the certificate the minister put on Hansard in his budget speech that the direct and indirect liabilities had been kept separate this year the same as others? That is the report I am referring to. That is apparently the whole use made of this audit board. I have no objection to this government, if they are dissatisfied or suspicious of the auditing, getting a special audit made—I not only do not oppose it, I strongly support it. But that is not the case of the audit board here, appointed on salary, with an array of duties when there really are no duties at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to suggest that the remarks which have just been made distinctly smack of a reflection upon persons in high office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No office.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They were persons who might have been described as filling high office.

Mr. ROBB: Will my hon. friend make himself a little clearer and let us know just to whom he is referring? because the reference a few moments ago to the conditions of the Auditor General's office was a reference to gentlemen who are now no longer in the sphere of office.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Possibly they are holding higher office than ever. At least, I sincerely trust that that is the case. To a considerable extent I followed the reasoning of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen)—

The CHAIRMAN: Will the hon. member be able to finish shortly, or does he desire to make any extended remarks?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not any extended remarks to make.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 233 to constitute a Board of Audit.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think we may let the second reading stand until to-morrow, so that we may have a little more amusement then.

WAR REPARATIONS FOR CANADIAN NATIONALS

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to make provision for the payment of claims for reparation for losses suffered by Canadian nationals during the late War, and to provide,—

(1) That the report of the commissioner appointed to enquire into and report upon the claims for reparation of Canadian nationals, upon approval by the Governor in Council, shall be deposited with the Secretary of State of Canada in his capacity as Custodian of Enemy Property;

(2) That from time to time, as sums are received on account of reparation under the Agreement of London between the Allied and Associated Powers and Germany, bringing into force what is commonly known as the Dawes plan, the amount thereof shall be paid by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to the Secretary of State as Custodian, until such time as the aggregate of such payments is equal to the total amount of the claims for reparation as determined by the report of the said commissioner and approved by the Governor in Council;

(3) That the Secretary of State shall, on receipt of such payments, from time to time distribute the same to persons found entitled to claims for reparation in the commissioner's report, by way of pro rata dividend;

(4) That the Secretary of State shall annually lay before parliament, within fifteen days after the meeting thereof, a report of the receipts and expenditures under the proposed legislation.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): This is undoubtedly a measure of some consequence, the full purport of which should be made very clear before the resolution is adopted. The opening sentence is rather threatening, that it is expedient to bring in a measure "to make provision for the payment of claims." And paragraph (3) provides for payment. Does the minister propose that on the report of the late Hon. William Pugsley he is to be permitted to distribute assets amounting to millions of dollars in cash among those whom Mr. Pugsley thought the money ought to go to?

Mr. COPP: My right hon. friend will remember that as far back as 1918 an order in council was passed calling upon those Canadians who claimed reparation for pecuniary damages sustained during the war to file their claims with the Department of the Secretary of State for consideration. Such claims were subsequently filed and a large number of them were passed, amounting roughly to $58,000,000. After the signing of the Treaty of Versailles no reparations were paid by Germany. Subsequently at the Spa conference, consideration of this matter was taken up. Finally, in 1924 all previous action was superseded by the Dawes investigation and report, and since the Dawes plan has been submitted the German government has been paying reparations. An arrangement had been entered into at the Imperial conference in 1920 or 1921 whereby it was tentatively agreed that Germany should make certain payments to the allied powers, and of the total twenty-two per cent was allotted to the British Empire. Afterwards it was arranged that 4.35 per cent of that 22 per cent should go to Canada for reparations to Canadians. Nothing was done until, I think, some time in February, when a payment of reparations was made by Germany to the British Empire, of which Canada received her share.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was that?

Mr. COPP: I think it was about £135,000. Another payment is now about due. Under this resolution we are taking no power whatever with regard to the payments of claims, except to pay to the Canadian nationals pro rata from the amount we receive from Germany for reparations. That is the whole purpose of the bill. We feel that as these reparations were being made a number of the claimants were entitled to be paid pro rata as their claims had been assessed and passed upon, as fast as we received money from Germany.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Can the minister tell me whether it is the practice in Great Britain to distribute these reparations to the individuals making claims?

Mr. COPP: I do not know what definite arrangements have been made, except this: Some years ago the British government passed a special vote of five millions to pay to necessitous cases. What reparations they received from Germany I do not know.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has been stated that when these claims were filed the purpose of the department was to secure some sort of an estimate as to the amount upon which a claim by Canada could be based, and that it was not originally the idea that these particular claimants should receive anything. That is, that the amounts should go to the government of Canada, remain with the government and not be passed out to the individuals who had filed claims for reparations. Am I right in my understanding that that was the original idea at the time the claims were filed?

Mr. COPP: My hon. friend is absolutely right; the claimants had no legal claim upon the government of Canada for the payment of any of these reparations. These moneys are due to Canada as a whole; but we felt that as there were so many poor people, fishermen and others among the citizens of Canada who made claims, and as reparations to a certain extent were being paid by Germany, claims of those who suffered loss or damage should be paid.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If that is the case, it seems to me this motion involves a decision upon a very important point. As I understand from the minister, in Great Britain only the necessitous cases are looked after.

Mr. COPP: Not merely those; but those that were looked after some years ago.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But the minister can give us no assurance that the reparations secured under the Dawes plan are being applied generally. As regards Canada, it may be true there are certain necessitous cases here of fishermen and so on which are deserving of consideration, but there are other claims that come from people who are not in need. We have not the statement before us, but I imagine the greater part of the claims come from people who claim to have suffered loss but who have abundant means. It would seem as if, when we consider the war with its disastrous effects upon the whole community, there is no reason why one particular group of the community, and perhaps not the most needy or those who have suffered the most, should immediately have their claims paid. I cannot see why the funds should not remain with the government of Canada, and if certain parties are in need because of trouble arising directly out of the war, their claims should be dealt with individually on their merits. But it would seem to me a very serious thing at this stage that we should be asked to pay, so far as we can in full, a particular group that suffered directly in one particular way in the war, and make no provision for a large number of Canadians who suffered a little less directly but perhaps none the less severely.

Mr. SPENCER: Who is standing the expense of collecting and disbursing the funds?

Mr. COPP: The commission which has been doing the work will be paid out of the credit of the Finance department. The money received from Germany will be paid to the High Commissioner's office and any expenses that are paid out of the reparations fund are being paid by Germany.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the cost of the commission come out of anything except the treasury of Canada?

Mr. COPP: Oh no, I did not say that.

Mr. SPENCER: That is what I wanted to know. I do not see why the taxpayers of Canada should be taxed to collect debts for individuals, when the whole people of Canada in many ways lose so heavily from the war.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the Secretary of State how much money was brought into the treasury of Canada by the confiscation of German property? A great deal was confiscated. Has it been sold, and how much has been realized?

Mr. COPP: I could not say. A great deal of it has been sold. All the property belonging to German nationals which has been sold is property held by Canada as custodian. This provides for the money paid now by Germany under reparations and it has nothing whatever to do with the German property we are holding and dealing with as custodians.

Mr. MANION: What are we going to do with the money we get from the German property?

Mr. COPP: I do not know. It is a matter of policy. This belongs to the German nationals, and we are only dealing with that collecting and paying debts, and so on, as provided by the treaty. We as custodians must give an account of the fund. With reference to our policy in regard to any balance there may be left belonging to German nationals, whether that should be applied to reparations is a question to be decided hereafter.

Mr. COOTE: What is the total amount of claims which the commission has allowed up to this time?

Mr. COPP: I have not the exact amount, because there are a number of cases in which evidence was taken by the late Dr. Pugsley that have not been actually decided. The claims amount to about $58,000,000. A large number of claims were heard and I think decisions have been given in reference to claims amounting to seven or eight million dollars. A number of claims are still outstanding and have yet to be heard and decided.

Mr. COOTE: Who is acting as commissioner now?

Mr. COPP: A successor to Dr. Pugsley has not yet been appointed.

Mr. COOTE: Nothing is being done with regard to the claims at the present time?

Mr. COPP: A successor will be appointed who will continue the work.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister think there is such a thing as a successor to Dr. Pugsley?

Mr. STEVENS: I wanted to ask the minister a question, but I apprehend it will be out of order to ask questions until we go into committee of the Whole. I will wait.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the motion is adopted it will be in the face of my protest. This is merely requesting the government for authority to pay out millions of money as a first charge on reparations, on the mere say-so of him who, unfortunately, now has passed away, but who was for many years a close associate of the government themselves. It is a measure of far-reaching consequence, and that it should be brought in at this stage of the session and sought to be precipitated through along with many others seems to me a disgrace to this House. I for one lodge my protest, and lodge it now. Under what rule of equity, or reason, or fidelity to the public interest, are millions of money to be paid out merely on the dictum of a commissioner? Possibly he had some practical duty to perform in investigating certain facts and saving the time of a duly constituted court; but here was a commissioner acting under the authority of, subject to the will of, dismissible on the whim of, the government in office, —and we are asked to act now on the assumption that he was a final judge in appeal as between the treasury of this country and certain claimants to vast sums of money. Is it right? I know of no other country that has done any such thing. I do not know what the nature of these claims is. I do not doubt some of them are good. I am not going to speak arbitrarily on the priority right of these claimants. It may be they have it; I doubt it I want to say now, I doubt very much if special claims for damages due to the war are in priority to the state itself—the damage of the state. Reparations are not paid in respect of the special damage of the individuals of a country; they are paid in respect of the damage of the nation itself. Now this government asks us to take the dictum of the late Hon. William Pugsley, grant the priority of claims that he has allowed, pay the money out—money paid to Canada as reparations of the war—to these claimants, and lose the whole of it so far as the general taxpayer is concerned. These vast sums are all to be paid to individuals. And more—because no doubt these seven or eight millions are just a beginning—we are called upon to decide to-day what course we are going to take as to the whole career of this thing. As for me, I am firmly against it from the beginning. I will protest against its passing, this session in particular.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, from the little information which we have been given I feel I should oppose the principle which is involved in this resolution. I do not think this House is justified in paying out all the money they may receive from reparations to individuals whose claims have been allowed by this commissioner. At this late stage of the session I do not think there is any use wasting a great many words over it, but there is a question of principle here which should be decided, and speaking for myself I am very much opposed to the principle set forth in the resolution.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it certainly does seem strange that the money we get in our first reparations should be paid out to individuals, no matter who they may be. I must confess that I had the impression that German property which we held in this country was to be used for that purpose. It is absolutely new to me that the reparations which we get for the calamity of the war, for the catastrophe through which we have passed and the suffering which we have sustained, should be handed out to any individuals, be they ever so deserving. It would seem that the money we get in reparations is for the benefit of the taxpayer generally in this country. I say it subject to further thought, because I must say I had not read this resolution until to-day, but it seems to me we should use that money for the benefit of the general taxpayer rather than for any individuals who may have suffered losses and yet who may have been able to stand them a great deal better than those who lost their limbs or were otherwise disabled and perhaps are getting a very small pension, to say nothing of those who lost their lives. I believe the government would be well advised, in a matter of this importance, while accepting the money, of course, to hold it until parliament has had further time to discuss the whole question.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Have all claims been put in?

Mr. COPP: We have not received any new claims for some time.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Would further claims be accepted if now put in?

Mr. COPP: Oh yes, we would accept them any time.

Mr. BOYS: Has the minister a list of the claimants with the amounts actually adjudicated upon?

Mr. COPP: Not here, but I have it in my office.

Mr. BOYS: Does not the minister think we should have that before passing upon the resolution?

Mr. COPP: I shall be very glad to get that. I thought, however, we could get into committee and report progress. The information can be furnished.

Mr. BRISTOL: Are there any German assets here now? Or have we returned any to the Germans?

Mr. COPP: No, we have not returned any to the Germans.

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I think the objections urged against this resolution are unanswerable, but there is another which now occurs to me, namely, that there should be no distribution of this fund until all claims are adjudicated upon. The effect of any distribution in the meantime would be to give some an advantage over others. We ought to know the particulars of all the claims and the full amount of each, we ought to know the full amount involved in all these claims, before any distribution is made or before deciding what should be done with the money.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): There are, I think, two major principles in this bill to which I object. The first is that the parliament of Canada is not to be consulted at all as to the payments which shall be made, to whom made and upon what grounds made. The second objection I have is that the reparations received by the Dominion of Canada are to be paid over, without consulting parliament, to private individuals, without those individuals having been called upon to pay their share of the cost of administration. Both these principles are unsound, in my opinion. I submit that the minister would be well advised to withdraw this resolution for the time, or at least to let it stand until he takes the matter into more mature consideration. I submit, first, that none of this money received on reparations should be paid to any of these individuals who have not suffered extreme hardship as the result of the war; secondly, that it should only be voted after parliament has adjudicated upon it. thirdly, as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) has said, that there should be a full settlement before the courts, or, shall I say, better still, that all cases should be adjudicated upon and found just, before any of the money is voted.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the first instance to protest against the introduction of this legislation at this stage of the session. Some days ago notice was given that we should hear something about the receipt of this money in respect of reparations, but I did not hear anything said about its disbursement. Now we are suddenly called upon, at a time when we cannot give proper consideration to the matter, to decide the payment of millions—because we do not know how many millions we shall be called upon ultimately to authorize the payment of. Further, we have absolutely no idea as to the principle under which the money will be paid out—not the slightest idea. What is the reason for this rush? What is the reason for the sudden adoption of an absolutely new policy, so far as this House is concerned, in connection with this question of reparations? It is new. We have the admission of the minister in reply to a question put to him that this is entirely different from the original idea of expenditure in connection with reparations. There may be particular cases where the individual, as an individual, should be looked after, but the principle should be established. How far are we to go in this sort of an endeavour? Has the state no rights? Is all our machinery simply for the purpose of collecting private debts? We have got machinery and we are paying for it; we are paying for everything that is being done in connection with the different methods under which the amount of this money is arrived at and collected. We are also paying for the services of the commissioners, and there was more than one. And the whole thing is to be left to the ipse dixit of these commissioners free from all principle settled by this parliament for their guidance.

The armistice took place in 1918. The settlement of the reparations has been going on with more or less activity all these years; and we are now asked to pass upon the novel feature embodied in this bill in the dying days of the session. It is something that no house of parliament should be asked to do at such a time. It is something, I think, which is entirely unheard of. I point out to my hon. friends that they are in no difficulty at all as matters stand. They do not want this legislation unless they have discovered some immediate necessity to pay money to somebody. They have the right to receive moneys and they have received moneys. Just think of any government coming down here and saying that they required legislation for the purpose of receiving moneys! Just think that they require legislation for the purpose of saying that the report of the commissioner upon the claims for reparations, shall be deposited with the Secretary of State. What a tremendously important legislative enactment that is! The whole thing is ridiculous. It is just so much—well I do not know what to call it. It is suggested that I may call it "eyewash," but I do not know that I like the term. It is merely window dressing and nothing else. Where else would the report go except to the office under which the commissioners work? What is the necessity for having an act of parliament to say that instead of the moneys being held by the treasury in the ordinary way they shall be held by the Secretary of State? It is just so much window dressing, and even if there was any real change contemplated, it would not make any difference. There is only one object in the whole of this legislation and that is to be found in subsection 3, which as I say gives the opportunity to the government to pay somebody who is making some demand for money at this particular time. I do not want to delay the House, but I submit that in all reasonableness the government ought to withdraw this resolution. No harm can result to anybody from its withdrawal. The existing rules will stand just as they are. But if the resolution be withdrawn, and if before this legislation is re-introduced a final report is brought in from the different commissioners showing the facts on which special claims are sought to be established, the House will then be in a position to at least lay down some principle, and to say under what conditions the moneys of the people shall be taken from them.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I thought at first that I would wait until we got into committee before asking the minister some questions, but so many have been asked that I think I have now pretty well the light I have been looking for in connection with this resolution. I want in a very brief manner to express my views and my opposition to the measure passing at this time. In the first place it is a resolution to make provision for the paying out of these reparations. It is making such provision before any decision in a complete form has been arrived at as to what the claims are and to what degree they are justified. That is my first objection. My second objection is that it is authorizing the transfer of very large sums of money, occasionally as they come to hand, from the Dawes Commission to the Canadian government, and the transfer of these moneys from the Receiver General and the Minister of Finance to the Secretary of State. I ask myself the question, and I think it is a pertinent one, whether or not the payment of these moneys by the Receiver General to the Secretary of State will not answer all the necessities of the Audit Act and the Auditor General will have nothing more to say about any further distribution of these funds. That appears to me to be the effect of one clause. In other words, the distribution of these funds will be removed from the scrutiny and control of the Auditor General. Then the third section of the resolution authorizes the Secretary of State to proceed to disburse these funds. I think that ought to be done only after a report to parliament on the claims and a careful consideration of them. Then I object to the inclusion of the word "expenditures" in the last clause. I have no objection to the Secretary of State reporting annually to the House, as to the minister, but I do object to the word "expenditures." I therefore desire to place myself on record as being opposed to the principle of this resolution. I contend that there is no need for such legislation at this session; that the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General are now authorized to receive these moneys, and can receive them without any order from this parliament. The Secretary of State under previous legislation, has all the powers that he requires to investigate these claims and until the claims are fully investigated and brought before parliament I do not think we are justified in authorizing the distribution of the funds.

Mr. A. J. LEWIS (Swift Current): I rise in protest against this resolution at this particular time. It does seem to me that we have not the proper opportunity of studying the situation within a week of when we may expect the session to close. Moreover, we have not been given definite information in regard to those who claim moneys which are proposed to be paid out of this fund. It does seem to me that not only shipowners have the right to claim money under this resolution, but what about those people like the soldiers and their dependents? They have lost homes and their loved ones in the war, and it does seem to me that humanity is of more importance than the material wealth of shipowners or of anybody else who has lost money or other material possessions. What about the nation's cost of the war? Are we as a nation going to put in our claim, and have damages distributed pro rata under this agreement? I think before we pass on this resolution we should first have definite information as to what the government intends to do. I think we should also have a list of all the claims so that we may know among whom this money is going to be distributed. For these reasons, if this comes to a vote, I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (East Calgary): I think it is unfortunate that at this stage the minister should waste the time of the House by refusing to withdraw this resolution, after he has been apprised of the difficulties that he is bringing upon the administration, both present and to come. I think that he has been sufficiently advised already to have warranted his very speedy withdrawal of the resolution. I trust that if he has not come to that conclusion, he will do so before I am done.

I wonder if the minister would care to answer me a question as to the amount which this government have already received from the reparations fund. Has the government received any amount from that fund? Perhaps the minister does not know, or may not wish to answer. Personally I doubt whether we will be very much troubled with any large amounts. Some hon. members have expressed the opinion that we may be called upon to disburse many millions. If we have to depend on receiving reparations from the countries of Europe, I do not think we will be overburdened with moneys to distribute. But even if we were, it does not affect the principle at all; I do not think it is possible for any body of men to arrive at a sure and just decision as to who should be reimbursed for losses during the war. If there are millions to come under the Dawes provision, I think that money should go against the national debt.

[Mr. Stevens.]

If it does not fit in there, there is another place where it would fit in admirably; it should go to augment the pensions of the wounded soldiers and war widows. That, I think, is a much more reasonable and a much more deserving cause than simply to ask a politician to hand out hundreds of thousands of dollars to individuals who may be needing money or may be able to establish some claim that they ought to get something. I think most of us could establish a claim if we wanted to make the effort. I therefore associate myself with the hon. gentlemen who have expressed so unmistakably their objections to this resolution, and I trust that the minister will withdraw the resolution so as to save the time of the House.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou, Minister of National Defence): Unfortunately I was not in at the beginning of this discussion, but from what I have heard from hon. gentlemen in regard to this resolution, apparently the real facts in connection with this matter are not understood.

The moneys which come from the Dawes commission, so called, are payable under the terms of the treaty of Versailles for certain definite purposes. They cannot be put into the treasury of the country and appropriated for other purposes than those for which they are paid. The compensation is paid in connection with the following list of cases:

1. Damages to injured persons and to surviving dependents by personal injury to or death of civilians caused by acts of war, including bombardments or other attacks on land, on sea, or from the air, and all the direct consequences thereof, and of all operations of war by the two groups of belligerents wherever arising.

2. Damage cause by Germany or her allies to civilian victims of acts of cruelty, violence or maltreatment (including injuries to life or health as a consequence of imprisonment, deportation, interment, or evacuation, of exposure at sea, or of being forced to labour), wherever arising, and to the surviving dependents of such victims.

3. Damage caused by Germany or her allies in their own territory or in occupied or invaded territory to civilian victims of all acts injurious to health or capacity to work, or to honour, as well as to the surviving dependents of such victims.

4. Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

5. The cost of assistance by the governments of the allied and associated powers to prisoners of war and to their families and dependents.

6. Damage caused to civilians by being forced by Germany or her allies to labour without just remuneration.

7. Damage in respect of all property wherever situated belonging to any of the allied or associated states or their nationals, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies, on land, or sea, or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war.

8. Damage in the form of levies, fines and other similar exactions imposed by Germany or her allies upon the civilian population.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister say what he is reading from, and then read the portion immediately before those enumerated classes of damages?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is a memorandum from the Under-Secretary of State, and it sets out the clause from the treaty of Versailles which provides the lines upon which compensation can be obtained from Germany and the amount of money that is payable to this country as a result of what is known as the Dawes report, on account of damages arising in these various categories.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, but is it not true that the Under-Secretary of State definitely asserts that while this is the basis upon which the reparations are to be collected, there is nothing whatever in the provisions of the treaty to say that these amounts should be turned over to the individual men and women who have had losses?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): He does not say so. My hon. friend I think misapprehends the situation. As a matter of common law, moneys received by expropriation or otherwise are not payable directly to the individuals for damages they have received. The British government appropriated some £5,000,000 for this purpose, pending the receipt of moneys from Germany by way of compensation. The late government in this country appointed Sir Douglas Hazen as a commissioner to investigate claims in this country. Sir Douglas Hazen decided to resign, and Hon. Doctor Pugsley was appointed in his place. He proceeded to hold hearings throughout the country and to ascertain what portion of the claims that had been filed, and filed under the previous government, I presume, as well as under this, came in these various categories. He held a great number of hearings, and has made his report on practically two-thirds of all the claims that were made; and the principles which he settled in the cases which he decided would probably apply, I understand, to the easy determination of all the other claims.

Now the question is whether the country should say that we will not give compensation to those who suffered, to the relatives of those Canadians, for instance, who went down in the Lusitania. I have in mind the case of a lady from my constituency who now lives in Vancouver, who had a claim filed with the late Dr. Pugsley, for the loss she suffered on account of her husband having gone down with the Lusitania. I have heard and know of about a dozen small schooners that were sunk off the coast of Nova Scotia by German submarines and that belonged to poor people who lost everything they had in the world by reason of their destruction. Where we have cases such as these, and where money is paid to this country on account of these grounds as set out in the treaty of Versailles, it seems to me—and I understand this was the policy of the late government as well—that we should recognize the rights of our citizens to receive some compensation when it comes from the country which caused those injuries and when it is paid to us on account of them. That is the whole point.

Mr. STEVENS: Do I take it that the minister intends to convey to the House the idea that the sums of money turned over to the government under the Dawes plan on account of reparations, and referred to by the Secretary of State, were determined or fixed on the basis of claims that were being considered and reported upon by the late Mr. Pugsley?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No. This is the position—

Mr. STEVENS: Then, how can the minister argue that we must consider this fund as sacred to these claims?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The money is being paid to Canada by Germany on account of Germany having done these things which are set out in the treaty of Versailles and which she ought not to have done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And many more things. I was present myself when the computation was made. We had to compare our losses with those of Australia, Great Britain and other countries, and we based our comparison on many elements. One was liability for pensions. That is the state's claim and it has nothing to do with these individual claims.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Does my right hon. friend mean pensions paid to all injured soldiers?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not the exact number of dollars we were paying in pensions. If I remember rightly, the pensions as respects all the dominions were taken on the French scale —it did not matter what scale they were on, so long as they were all on the same scale; the French scale was adopted in order to see how one country compared with another in pension liability. Many more elements entered into the estimate of what the war loss was with a view to each getting his proper share of the reparations. It seems to me astounding that we should now go on the say-so of a commissioner or of anybody else, even of a court, and authorize priority to individuals over the position of the state.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The proportion of which my right hon. friend speaks fixed Canada's share in the 22 per cent which was apportioned to the British Empire, at 4.35 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and Australia the same.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Do I understand my right hon. friend to take the position that Canadian subjects who suffered by reason of acts of Germany and who are in the class mentioned by myself, should not receive any portion of this money?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say so. I should not like to say finally and definitely that they should not have some priority, even priority as is set forth in this resolution, until I see what is done by other countries. But there is nothing to put them ahead of the state's claim for pensions, and this resolution, if it passes, gives them the first place all round. Until their claims are fully satisfied, all else has to stand aside.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Then the upshot of the right hon. gentleman's position is, that he does not think Canadians who were injured by those improper acts of Germany should receive their money.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not say so.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): If that is not his position, I do not know what it is, because he says that everybody else must be paid and the state must be paid first.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Great Britain has recognized the fact that individuals who have suffered should be compensated, for the British parliament has appropriated £5,000,000 for that purpose.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there any evidence to show that Great Britain is distributing one cent in this way?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): She is anticipating by appropriating in parliament two years ago £5,000,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the minister suggest that this amount of £5,000,000 anything like compensates all the people of the United Kingdom who have suffered injury on account of the war?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No; but you cannot do everything at once, and they dealt with necessitous cases by voting that money. No money had been coming from Germany in the meantime.

Mr. MANION: Would the hon. member consider for example that the mother of a couple of boys who went over there and were killed, who is barely living on a pension, having a difficult time getting along at all, whereas before the boys went over there she was in good circumstances, has not a better right to get something of this than a shipowner who lost a cargo of grain, who did not happen to have it insured, and who has a claim against Germany? There are thousands of such cases in this country.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That sounds very nice; but the situation is simply this. The country has fixed the pension amount that has to be paid in sad cases of the kind described and I assume that it is dealing with them in a proper way. This matter is a very complicated one, and I can 4 p.m. quite see that hon. gentlemen would require a great deal of information which it is rather difficult to give as this could not have been anticipated. In order that the matter might be fully considered, I would suggest to my hon. colleague that he withdraw the motion.

Mr. COPP: I regret very much that my hon. friends, particularly the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) have risen in righteous indignation because this bit of legislation is brought down in the interest of those who have suffered during the war. If they had the full information that I have and knew the very large numbers of poor people, fishermen particularly, on the different coasts of this Dominion who have suffered—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is a pity the minister would not give us the information.

Mr. COPP: I asked that the resolution be allowed to go into committee when I would give the information to hon. gentlemen opposite. As regards the government and myself, we had no motive whatever in bringing down this legislation other than to do justice to a number of our citizens who have claims for German reparations filed in the department of the Secretary of State for the past seven years. We believed it was in the interest of the country that we should take this opportunity of giving some little consideration to those who suffered damage during the war. Germany is now going to pay under the Dawes plan, but we have not asked this country to pay one single cent by way of taxation for this purpose. I regret that hon. gentlemen on both sides opposite have raised objection to this measure. It is said that we should not on the say-so of some commissioner take the action which is now proposed. But surely hon. gentlemen know that this is the only reasonable way in which a matter of this kind can be investigated and any sound decision reached. Personally I have no desire at this stage of the session to force upon the House any proposal to which hon. gentlemen are so strenuously opposed. It never occurred to me for a moment that there would be any opposition to this resolution. I am sure that if hon. gentlemen were acquainted with all the facts they would not object to extending to citizens in various parts of the Dominion such treatment as they are undoubtedly entitled to. However, in view of the decided temper of the House against the resolution, I beg for leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Acting Minister of Customs and Excise) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Excise Act, chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and to provide that a license to stem Canadian raw leaf tobacco may be granted to any person who has complied with the act and regulations, on payment of the sum of two dollars, whether such license has a full year or part of a year to run from the date when it is granted; and that the minister shall have power to make such regulations as he deems necessary or advisable for carrying out the proposed legislation.

He said: As the law stands at present, no raw leaf tobacco may be stemmed except under a manufacturer's license.

Mr. FORKE: What is the process of stemming such tobacco?

Mr. CARDIN: It is simply to remove the stem from the raw leaf. As I say, only under a manufacturer's license may such tobacco be stemmed at present, and we wish to extend the license to growers of tobacco at a lower fee. That is the only object of the legislation.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So far as our revenues are concerned, this is an exceedingly sensitive business. I remember telling the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), when we went out of office that if he raised the rates he would get less revenue. The right hon. gentleman was naturally anxious to get as much revenue as possible, but he thought I did not know what I was talking about. He raised the rates and got less revenue. We must bear in mind the difference between the man who can be policed and so looked after and the man who cannot. The purpose of the law has been so far to safeguard the national revenues in this matter. Are we going to lose revenue by this new proposal? We have the growers on the one hand and the manufacturers on the other, and if anything can be done to increase the profits of the grower of tobacco it is unquestionably a good thing so long as the state does not suffer unduly. But this legislation is not confined to growers and manufacturers; it is not intended to further the interests of the grower as such. We are now proposing to give the license to anybody at all. Is that what the minister intends to do?. Does he mean that anyone who is neither a grower nor a manufacturer may handle tobacco, which is subject to excise rates, without proper supervision on the part of the government? In other words, I want to know whether any third person is to be taken care of under this legislation. I notice that the minister requires regulations to be made to put this law into effect. What is the nature of those regulations?

Mr. CARDIN: The object of the regulations to be made will fully protect the interests of the department. This legislation has been requested by the tobacco growers. At the present time they are unable to stem raw tobacco without securing a manufacturer's license at a cost of $50, and we are asking parliament to provide for a license of $2. My information is that this legislation will not materially reduce the revenues of the country. The export of stemmed tobacco has increased rapidly within a few years. In 1923-24 we exported 2,055,000 pounds and in 1924-25, 3,531,422 pounds. The value of the export in 1923-24 was $375,000 and in 1924-25 $733,000. This industry is developing and we want to facilitate the operations of the tobacco growers without putting them to too much expense.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will this legislation be confined to the growers or may anyone get the license?

Mr. CARDIN: As the resolution stands, it will cover everybody.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not the minister intend it to apply only to the growers? If so, the resolution should be framed accordingly.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think that matters would be seriously affected if the legislation were passed as it stands. At all events we can, by regulations which will be made, safeguard the position of the board and make regulations to protect the board.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister indicate clearly whether he intends to have more than two classes, the growers and the manufacturers proper?

Mr. GRAHAM: The ex--Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) referred to Inland Revenue. Up till about two years ago I think there was an amount of five cents per pound imposed on the growers. That has been removed. The tobacco growing business in Canada expects to take on new life on account of the preference given to it by the British government, and at the present Wembley exposition special attention is being paid to the tobacco exhibits, which are in charge of practical tobacco men. This situation has arisen. In the tobacco growing centres there are certain manufacturers who have their local agencies, and the selling at present is done by manufacturers who have to take out a large license at a large fee. The market that is opening up for the raw leaf for export has brought about a condition in which the growers feel that they ought to be permitted themselves to take out any license they like, to stem out their own tobacco and ship it out for export.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No objection to that.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the object.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It says "persons," not "growers."

Mr. GRAHAM: Suppose we have a combination of growers—and we have co-operative societies—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They are growers still.

Mr. GRAHAM: Suppose they select a man to carry on their selling and he has a license—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He would be doing it as an agent for the grower.

Mr. GRAHAM: It ought to be confined to a grower or the representative of a grower, because there would be nothing to be gained by doing it in any other way. I am very familiar with the tobacco interests, as the riding I represent is a great centre for tobacco growing, and all the latitude required ought to be given to the growers to get in touch with the dealers in raw tobacco in the Old Country, and this measure is intended to give the growers the full power to prepare their tobacco by stemming it for the best export market.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister explain why it is necessary to forbid stemming without a license? Why does the government want to control this?

Mr. CARDIN: The idea is to control the establishment in which the stemming is done, or to know who is doing the stemming.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It really is more than that. I have had to do with looking after the business end of it. What we are anxious to do here is to provide that we get all the taxes we can out of the tobacco. As a tobacco user, and a constant one, I am a tremendous contributor to the revenue. In some places they send out inspectors to count the leaves on a plant, and every movement is followed. In France every leaf is counted and a check is kept on them.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are very strict there.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 234 to amend the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second times and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—License to stemmers of tobacco.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose we might take the whole bill together, as there is just the one point in it. Are the ministers serious in saying that they are not erecting a new third class?

Mr. GRAHAM: No: Oh no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And this is only for the grower?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The bill does not say that. It is improperly worded, and I say they cannot by regulation restrict the plain straight wording of the act and cannot say how it is to be carried out. They can surround it with safeguards in their regulations, but they cannot limit the definition of those particular words, and cannot by regulation say that any person is only a grower. I do not want to delay things at all, but I know there is going to be a good deal of trouble in connection with the revenue unless this point is looked after. There will be a whole lot of difficulty if some favourite individuals who are neither growers nor manufacturers are allowed to get licenses for a nominal price, while others have to pay the full price before going into the business.

Mr. CARDIN: I would not object to changing the word "person" to the word "grower" or "representative".

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Or "grower's agent". We want to make it so that it will be clear the country is not going to lose a lot of money on this thing.

Mr. FANSHER: Will this make it possible for one agent to act for a number of growers under this license?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think it would. Suppose there were half a dozen growers, neighbours, and they want to stem their own tobacco and ship it direct, or sell it stemmed to an agent here; they could select a man who would take a license—in effect they would stem their own tobacco.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Because he was agent for one would not prevent his being agent for another?

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not think so.

The CHAIRMAN: The clause as amended will read as follows:

A license to stem Canadian raw leaf tobacco may be granted to any grower or his representative who has complied with the provisions of this act and regulations thereunder.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Acting Minister of Customs and Excise) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 145, to amend the Customs Act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. CARDIN: In the bill we passed it is provided that if any person smuggles goods, being of a value under $200, or makes or passes or attempts to pass any false or forged invoices of any goods of whatever value, or in any other way attempts to defraud the revenue by avoidance of the payment of duty, such goods if found shall be seized and forfeited without power of remission. The Senate has struck out the words, "without power of remission," to keep the power of remission in the hands of the minister in cases of that sort. But the amendment goes further than that; it states that such forfeiture of goods shall be made without power of remission in the case of offences under paragraph (a) of this subsection. Paragraph (a) deals with smuggling.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Public Works—chargeable to capital—public buildings —Ottawa parliament building, $330,000.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Is this all for the tower?

Hon. J. H. KING (Kootenay, Minister of Public Works): Of this $250,000 is a revote. I think this will see the end of the construction work that has been going on over a period of years.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Will the minister give the particulars as to the tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Bronze dials for the clock, $8,461; glass for dials, $700; clock, four dials, and carillon of fifty-three bells, $63,930; automatic player for carillon, $6,000; work in connection with installation of clock and carillon, $12,000; sheet metal work in tower, $8,437; steel flag pole, $1,400; slate louvres, $2,123; short rise elevator, $4,900; total, $107,591.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): How are the bells to be got into the tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Provision is being made for that without restaging. They will be taken in at the back and lifted up.

Mr. LOVIE: Will this entirely complete the tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. The masonry, carving and so forth in the memorial chamber —$121,000 is for that part of the tower. The other expenditures are miscellaneous, such as post office fittings; pointing stone work in entrance hall and tower, special lighting fixtures; asphalt roads; grading and sodding, architect's fees, and contingencies. Special lighting fixtures will amount to $30,000. We may make some improvements here and there and get along with what we have this year without undertaking to complete the lighting plans. However, the estimate is there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if the minister would not consider the withdrawal of most of these items.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: At the present time what possible justification is there for us spending $63,930 in bells?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think there is every justification in the world for it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend thinks there is no use in my appeal at all, if regardless of our finances he thinks he has to have rings on his fingers and bells—well, we will not go on with the rest. The sheet metal work has to be put in the tower but—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have an excellent tower that lends itself to bells of that character, and if they are not installed now it will cost a great deal more later on. The stage and everything is arranged, and the installation can be made much more cheaply at the present time than in three or four or five years from now.

Mr. LUCAS: When does the minister expect to have this installation completed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay) In June or July next year.

Mr. LUCAS: I understand this will complete all the building. Can the minister give us the total cost of the building to date?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Approximately $12,027,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What will be the total cost of the tower when completed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not that separately, but it could be worked out in the department, if necessary.

Mr. COOTE: How much was spent on the building last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year, $338,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I remember we passed a vote of something like $600,000 for that purpose last year. Was not the balance used?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are revoting $250,000 of the unexpended amount last year.

Mr. COOTE: Will the main entrance be fenced off next year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I hope not.

Mr. COOTE: How many bells are to be put in the tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Fifty-three.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): What is the size of the largest one?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Eight tons.

Mr. KENNEDY: How much of this vote is for the memorial tower?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): One hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. COOTE: Who is going to ring the bells? Have you a man here who is qualified?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not yet.

Mr. GRAHAM: It depends on what government is in.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the estimated cost of a bell ringer to run the carillon?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About $2,000 a year.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps you could use Carillon power for that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We would then be using at least some of that power locally; we would have it here anyway. Seriously, I think the government should reconsider some of these items. They are purely gold paint and luxuries. Diamonds are a first-rate thing if you can afford them, but we cannot, the country simply cannot stand it, more particularly in view of the votes that have been pushed through this House. The country simply cannot stand further expenditures that do not mean anything to us in return one way or the other. Just take, for example, that one item in this vote which we had up before, for ornamental lighting. Special lighting is to cost us $30,000. Cannot we get along with the lighting as it is now? We have lighting far better here than most of the ratepayers in this country have anywhere. Are not the ratepayers paying pretty nearly enough as it is now for comforts and luxuries around here without this further expenditure? The government are making great claims outside about economy and the like, and here they are spending $30,000 more just under the head of special lighting. I seriously appeal to the government to reduce this vote.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to second that appeal. We surely ought to be able to do without any extra lights here for another year. If we are going to have money enough to take care of all these items and those contained in the supplementaries, we shall have to save a little here and there as we go along. I really think the government might cut out this extra amount for lighting, and also cut out the amount which the minister has here for carvings. I think there is too much money being spent on carving stone around the parliament buildings. We can get along just as well without it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think probably my hon. friend is unnecessarily worried. This is the national building of Canada, and it would be a disgrace if the people of Canada did not complete this building. Canada is not in such a shape that we cannot complete our own national building. It is a handsome building, and it is going to be a great credit to the people of Canada. Why do my hon. friends suggest that we should not go on with the carving and masonry work in the memorial chamber? I am sure if my hon. friend would go down to the shop where this carving is being done and see the nature of the work, and what is going to come out of the work when it is placed in the memorial chamber, he would hold up both hands for the completion, because it is going to be of great interest to him and to the people of Canada, as well as to visitors who come to this country.

In regard to the lighting, we have not hurried in the matter, but this building is nearing completion. I do not propose to put in extravagant lighting, but I think in fairness we should have the estimate voted, leaving it to our judgment as to what should be gone on with. In the Senate there are only temporary fixtures at the present time. There is an important chamber of this parliament, and are we to say that we are not going to light that chamber properly, but let it use lights such as one would probably use in his home? I do not think that is the way to look at it. We are here representing the people of Canada, and I think we should vote this amount and complete the building.

Mr. MILLAR: Is the work of carving proceeding now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MILLAR: Has it just started?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is a considerable amount done. I think my hon. friend would be very much interested if he went and saw what is being done.

Mr. LEWIS: In regard to the carving, I can readily understand that as far as the memorial chamber is concerned, it might be advisable to complete that, but anyone who looks anywhere around this building will notice stones that are still in the rough. There are at least forty of them around this chamber.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are not carving them now.

Mr. LEWIS: You are just carving now those for the memorial chamber?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I agree that there are many years of work yet. Even around this chamber there is work to be done, but I would not suggest that that should be done now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not want to delay the committee, but I do want to earnestly protest against this vote.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Has the question of keeping down the temperature in this chamber during the hot weather ever been investigated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The condition my hon. friend complains of is probably due to the humidity. The system we have of controlling the temperature is supposed to be thoroughly up-to-date. The air is brought in over a refrigerating plant and is not admitted to the chamber until it has been washed and dried. I think if my hon. friend would enquire into the system he would probably be satisfied that everything possible is being done in that regard.

Mr. LEWIS: The heated condition of the chamber is possibly due to the humidity, and I suggest that the dropping of cold water on the air before it is admitted may increase that humidity and add to the oppressiveness.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The whole trouble, as the minister knows very well, is that the air admitted to the chamber is drawn from the courtyard adjoining and consequently we are doing the best we can to artificially cook ourselves. The air brought into the old chamber was drawn from a conduit pipe on the bank of the river. That conduit pipe still exists, and if we just expend a small fraction of the money we throw away on ornate structures, bells, and the like in bringing cool air through this pipe, there would be a remarkable difference in the air of this chamber. But apparently that is not the idea; it is preferable to have the present expensive arrangement which results in such effective cooking.

Mr. GRAHAM: I submit that no matter how cold the supply of air would be it would be soon warmed up when it gets into the chamber.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The point is not well taken.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): I am not complaining about the temperature at present which is reasonably moderate. But during the hot weather it is a disgrace that after spending $12,000,000 on this building we should be exposed to such a temperature, and the only relief we can get is to take off our coats. I should like to ask the minister whether he will not have this condition investigated.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a good government, but we cannot control the weather altogether.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): I would urge the minister to see whether something cannot be done so that we may discharge our duties with some degree of comfort in hot weather.

Mr. COOTE: This question should not be treated as a joke. I think it is unfortunate that after having spent $12,000,000 on this building we have a chamber that is very hard to hear in. I think we might very well spend a few thousand dollars in seeing whether something cannot be done to improve its acoustic properties. A couple of years ago there were complaints in regard to that matter, and curtains were placed under the side galleries. But those curtains shut off the air, there is no question about it. My own seat is located at the back and some nights when it was extremely hot I took the trouble to move the curtains back, and I could notice an immediate improvement in the temperature at the spot where I was sitting. I think that something could be done to improve the acoustic properties of this chamber, without interfering with the system of ventilation. Certainly it would be simple common sense to spend a little less money on ornamental lighting and spend something to make the chamber serve the purpose better than it does at present. Personally I think that if necessary the side galleries might be moved out altogether. It is a very common thing for members at the extreme end of the chamber to rise and protest that they cannot hear what is going on. Very often those of us who are sitting in this quarter have the same experience, and we cannot transact our business properly if we cannot hear what is said. I would be quite willing to vote for the bells and everything else the minister wants if he would give us some assurance that a real effort would be made to improve the acoustic properties of the chamber and the ventilating system. What the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has said seems very reasonable. If the air were brought in from the bank of the river, especially in the evenings, it would certainly be much cooler than the air drawn from the courtyard behind the chamber.

[Mr. D. M. Kennedy.]

Mr. McBRIDE It seems to me the chamber would be all right if some hon. members would do less talking and would speak up better when they are on their feet.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We are accustomed to taking stock of our business every year; at least some people are who have any wish to continue in business. But the stock-taking, with respect to our country which the government has been carrying on has not been very satisfactory or very encouraging; we are going back annually to a very large amount. It is all very well to have ornate buildings and elegant fittings if we can afford them. It is certainly a credit to the country, at any rate, to have parliament buildings that command the admiration of all who see them. But that is not a cause of very much satisfaction to people who cannot earn a living in this country and who have to emigrate to another land in order to do so. I think we could cut out a lot of these frills and bells and pare down our estimates. They are doing that in other countries. Look at what they are doing in the United States. They are reducing their expenditure there by hundreds of millions of dollars. But there is no disposition on the part of the Canadian government to pare down the estimates in any particular. The grossest extravagance is going on here as though the country were prosperous and everything satisfactory. I protest against the reckless extravagance which is going on. If it continues it can only have one result, and the sooner we realize that the better.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In reply to my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) I may say that two years ago we did endeavour to improve the acoustic properties of the chamber. We employed Dr. Saunders, of Harvard University, who is considered probably the best American authority on acoustics. He came here, spent some days with the chief architect and the deputy minister, and made some suggestions which we carried out. We carpeted the floor, placed curtains around the sides of the chamber, and followed the ideas he suggested. Undoubtedly an improvement followed. To remove the curtains back of the galleries, would, I think, be a decided disadvantage. The chamber is a large one, with a very high ceiling, and yet the acoustics are not as perfect as one would like. However, I do not think the Minister of Public Works or the government can be blamed for that. Two Canadian architects of repute were employed in connection with the rebuilding of the parliament buildings and they designed this chamber. While the acoustics are not, perhaps, as good as they might be, generally speaking the building is a good one and we have reason to be proud of it.

Mr. COOTE: I may inform the minister that I can hardly hear what he is saying now. I suggest that he look into this matter and see if some further improvement cannot be made.

Mr. BOYS: Perhaps a rearrangement of the seats might work an improvement The Speaker's chair might be placed in the middle of the chamber, and the seats arranged in a semi-circular manner as they are in the chamber of deputies in Paris. Has that plan ever been considered?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, that is being considered. The estimated cost of that plan was over $50,000, and I thought we had better back away from it, for the present anyway.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would that not be cheaper than the bells?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will be proud of those bells.

Mr. KELLNER: I would suggest to the minister that he have this work done around the building when the House is not in session. Quite frequently there is in the House a speech which hon. members feel it is impossible to listen to, and when they go to their rooms, very often they find under their window half a dozen men working.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is nearly as bad as the speech.

Mr. KELLNER: Sometimes it is even worse.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member says that the speeches are sometimes impossible to listen to.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member will realize that during a period of construction such as this, there will be confusion, but I believe this will clear the matter up and after this there will be no further disturbance.

Mr. WARD: In the railway committee room the echo of the disturbance that takes place is something that should not be tolerated. It is the largest room in this building outside of this chamber, and in it nearly all the important committees are held. Therefore, I think the minister might consider doing something to improve the acoustics.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I quite agree with my hon. friend and that matter will be looked into.

Item agreed to.

London, England, Canadian office, $250,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Last year the vote we passed was to cover everything. What went wrong with the calculations?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a revote.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is not shown as a revote. It looks as if somebody had slipped to the extent of $250,000 on this one job. We spent a long time on it before and we were told, as I recollect, that was the whole bill.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My notes state that this is a revote and, as a matter of fact, it is, although that is not shown in the estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The trouble is that we are not mind readers.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I know that, and I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to the matter so that we may make the correction. The work did not progress as rapidly as we expected and this will complete the undertaking of last year. The amount is made up as follows:

To complete contract for alterations.. ..	$191,739 17
Architect's fees..	19,422 54
Clerk of works' salary..	583 99
Moving expenses..	3,649 95
Furniture and fittings..	28,000 00
Storage and cartage of furniture in London	1,000 00
Freight, both railways and ocean, including insurance on furniture..	4,000 00
Contingencies and incidentals..	1,604 35
Total..	$250,000 00

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much have we spent altogether?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total cost with this estimate will be $1,536,072.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What were the carrying charges last year? Last year we had the taxes and that sort of thing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They were $18,-639.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would not include interest?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. Interest charge of five per cent would amount to $76,803. The sinking fund is not in the first charge, and it would amount to $16,148.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I understand my hon. friend wants to get over in time to open the building.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That will be pleasant.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We do not want to delay him. It will be nice that the building will be put to some immediate use, after all the expense it has involved.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to capital—harbours and rivers. Esquimalt, B.C.—drydock under construction, $1,600,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete the contract for the drydock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the total cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The estimated total cost is $5,981,849.

Mr. GARDINER: How much has been spent up to date?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount is $4,800,000.

Mr. COOTE: Is this work being done by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. COOTE: What size of vessels will this drydock accommodate when it is finished?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The largest in the world, I think,—1,100 feet long.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Are there any other drydocks on the Pacific coast?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is one at Prince Rupert owned and controlled by the Canadian National Railways, and one at Vancouver subsidized by the government.

Mr. MILLAR: What is the size of the one at Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a floating dock. It will accommodate vessels up to 16,000 or 18,000 tons.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): What draught?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Twenty-five, thirty feet.

Mr. COOTE: Does the minister think this Esquimalt drydock will be used when it is finished?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. LEADER: When was this work commenced?

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the contract was let in 1919. The work commenced in 1920 or 1921.

Mr. LUCAS: Is Vancouver not the best place for a drydock?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Esquimalt is an important point. The British fleet, when they were patrolling the Pacific, made Esquimalt their base on the Pacific, and for many years there had been under consideration the question of a larger dock at Esquimalt. I think that was confirmed by the admiralty.

Mr. COOTE: What business is being done at Esquimalt?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A good many ships are repaired there.

Mr. COOTE: How many vessels would visit Esquimalt in a year?

Mr. DICKIE: Perhaps I can inform the hon. gentleman. The Yarrow shipbuilding works are on the Esquimalt drydock. Scores of vessels are repaired there every year. It is a very busy port. More shipping passes by the doors of Esquimalt than any other port of America, I presume. All the shipping that goes to Vancouver, all the shipping that goes up the sound, goes past the Esquimalt drydock. We had a small drydock there, and owing to its smallness the warship Kent had to be sent to Seattle to be docked there and repaired, at a great loss to our country. I do not know just what it cost. Many other large ships were unable to dock in British Columbia until it was finished. The dock, we think, will pay. The Yarrow shipbuilding works were established there on the distinct understanding that this dock would be constructed. Of course, there was always opposition on the part of Vancouver, and it is quite reasonable to expect that. They are, however, entitled to a drydock there. I may say that on Puget sound there are sixteen drydocks. Our shipping is growing by leaps and bounds. This is the age of the Pacific, and this drydock, whether at the time it was started it might be considered by some people as unjustifiable, is undoubtedly at the present time regarded by everybody in the west as having been fully justified. At least, this is the feeling unless anyone is prejudiced because of the fact that the dock is on Vancouver island instead of in some other part of the country. As the minister has said, it was recommended by the admiralty, and we absolutely pledged ourselves to Yarrows to have it built. We must not forget that Esquimalt is a very busy ship repairing and building port at the present time.

5 p.m.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Thirty ships docked there last year ranging in tonnage from 3,400 tons odd to 10,000 tons.

Mr. MILLAR: Most ocean going vessels are loaded and unloaded at Vancouver. If one of these ships went past Esquimalt with a cargo and she required repairs, would it be necessary for her to go to Vancouver and unload, return to this place and be repaired, and then go back to Vancouver and load again?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That would be a matter for the steamship company to decide. There will be two docks, one at Esquimalt and one at Vancouver, in competition with each other. We do not operate the docks. Yarrows and another shipbuilding firm at Esquimalt will use the government dock, paying tolls to the department, and they will be in competition with the firms at Vancouver for the business.

Mr. MILLAR: I was referring to the larger ships which could not be accommodated at Vancouver.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe the Vancouver dock will accommodate any ship in the merchant service. I do not doubt that ships of the Canadian Pacific company could make use of it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry and Stormont): Is it expected that the tolls charged will pay interest on the investment?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year we collected at Esquimalt $28,248 while the expenditures amounted to $22,000.

Mr. COOTE: Is the drydock at Prince Rupert under the Public Works department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. It was built under subsidy by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and when the railways were consolidated it came under the control of the Canadian National Railways.

Item agreed to.

Port Arthur and Fort William—harbour improvements, $129,000.

Mr. COOTE: What is this for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete a contract entered into two years ago.

Item agreed to.

Quebec harbour—Champlain dock—to complete, $68,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why is this work not done by the harbour commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This dock was built by the department in 1913, and the vote has been carried from time to time to complete certain works that were not finished.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it charged to the harbour commissioners?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; it is not under the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. LEWIS: How much are we spending on this institution? We have $60,000 in one place, $5,000,000 in another part of the estimates, and other votes elsewhere. Why not put all these sums under one item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This dock has nothing to do with the harbour commission; it is on the opposite side at Levis.

Mr. LEWIS: I notice that the hon. member (Mr. Sutherland) has made the statement that money is being spent everywhere indiscriminately. I want to tell him that no reckless expenditures are being made in the three prairie provinces.

Mr. COOTE: I want to refer to the vote for Fort William which was carried so precipitately a moment ago. I think the hon. member representing that part of the country (Mr. Manion) made the statement that he was agreeable to withdrawing that vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think so.

Mr. GRAHAM: Are you sure you heard him right?

Mr. COOTE: I am not positive but I am under the impression that he made that suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the hon. member said that he was satisfied to have the vote withdrawn if other votes would be withdrawn as well.

Mr. POWER: Can't you see a joke?

Item agreed to.

St. John harbour—improvements, $500,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount of $500,000 is required for improvements in St. John harbour. It is intended to complete the dredging of a channel from the main channel in St. John harbour to the basin in front of the drydock, a distance of about 7,200 feet in length by 500 feet wide, to a uniform depth of 22 feet and to complete the dredging of the basin in front of the drydock to a depth of 32 feet, as well as dredging a channel 250 feet wide from the basin to the drydock. It is also required to complete a contract with Messrs. Boone & Macdonald for the construction of a conveyer gallery 1,100 feet long, with necessary equipment at berth 16; for general maintenance of harbour, repairs to sheds, wharves, conveyers, and so on. At West St. John it is intended to protect concrete exposed to sea action and at Partridge island to repair the wharf. There is also dredging in shoal areas in the main channel to a depth of 32 feet, and dredging the deep water berths. These constitute the main undertakings.

Mr. LUCAS: I understand that Courtenay bay at St. John is a new harbour. How much has been spent on the work there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A breakwater has been constructed and we have been dredging the entrance to the harbour. This is to complete the dredging programme. This is all preliminary to the work to be done in connection with the piers and the facilities that will be required to make the harbour a proper terminus.

Mr. CALDWELL: This is not for Courtenay bay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No; it is for dredging outside the bay. The estimated cost at Courtenay bay is $5,184,600, and the total cost to date is $4,771,000, extending over a period of years between 1918-19 and 1924-25.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister the figures showing the total amount spent on St. John harbour up to date? I think it will be interesting to the committee to see how much these harbours cost.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There has been a total expenditure of $19,000,000 on St. John harbour dating back from 1874 to the present time.

Mr. LUCAS: That does not include the dry-dock?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: What was the cost of the dry-dock?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About $5,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Has the minister any figures regarding the total tonnage through St. John? Is there any revenue collected from the harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, there are some revenues collected by the Marine department who are administering the wharves. The city collect revenue; they have some property there as well.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. COOTE: I am not interested in the city. What does the government collect?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the totals here.

Mr. COOTE: Does the minister not think it would be wise to have a harbour commission, or some way of collecting dues at St. John?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The regular port dues are charged there and collected.

Mr. MILLAR: Are they expected to pay on the basis of the interest on the loans made to them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, the regular port charges collected in other ports such as St. John are collected there. It is not a regular harbour commission. The Marine and Fisheries department have their agent there who collects the dues on the tonnage of the ships as they come to and go from the harbour. In addition to that the city collects revenue from their property.

Mr. COOTE: We would have to find out from the Department of Marine what revenue is collected there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, they would have that information.

Mr. CALDWELL: The dues charged and collected at St. John harbour have been rather exorbitant in the view of the shipping people. Last year the city fathers decided to cut down their tolls because they were driving ships to the United States ports down along the eastern coast. I think possibly the Marine department charges were correspondingly high. Is it the intention of the department to do anything on the Negro point breakwater this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That whole situation is being very carefully canvassed now with the transportation companies, the city and the engineering department. The question of further development in St. John I think requires very careful consideration, and the whole matter is being carefully gone into.

Mr. COOTE: Will this vote complete the harbour work at St. John and Courtenay bay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. COOTE: What will be required to complete it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It depends on the plan adopted. If the Courtenay bay scheme were proceeded with to the full extent it would mean a large expenditure. If there should be developments which we are trying to arrange I think a very large sum could be saved, and that matter is under consideration now with a view to saving money if we can.

Mr. LEWIS: Does the government not think it advisable to look over the situation and call a halt in the matter of great expenditures and future developments? I do not think the commerce of the country would suffer one iota if we cut out seven-tenths of the expenditure which we have been making; we would be in a much better position financially, and it would give a great deal of hope to the Canadian people who are under a burden at the present time.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any congestion at the port of St. John at the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not at this season of the year. It is a winter port, and in the winter time they suffer from congestion. In regard to the tonnage last year, 14,000 head of cattle were shipped and I think eight or nine million bushels of wheat passed through. In addition to that there was a great deal of produce and other merchandise.

Mr. LUCAS: I think under present conditions the government should go very slowly in regard to spending a large amount of money on ports in the east. We have to provide duplicate facilities in the east to handle our business, and I think they could very well put up with a little congestion at times in order to cut down expenses, especially when we are up against the conditions which exist at the present time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have that in mind.

Mr. LUCAS: I was in St. John a year ago, and Courtenay bay looked to me like a new project that was being undertaken. If you are going to develop that into a new port it is going to take an immense amount of money and will only be used a few months in the year. Then we have to go up to Montreal and Quebec and provide another set of facilities in those places. I think the government would be well advised if they would proceed very slowly in commencing any projects of this nature.

Item agreed to.

Toronto harbour—improvements, $281,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete the western breakwater; to dredge the eastern and western channels, and for the reconstruction of 400 feet of the west pier of the eastern channel.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any need at all for this kind of thing in Toronto? I was there about a week ago, and went all around the harbour, and it would keep me guessing to see any ship at all. It will be all right when the deep waterway scheme gets under way, but at present the harbour is hardly used at all.

An hon. MEMBER: Where is Toronto?

Mr. MILLAR: I feel like making stronger objection to this vote than to the former vote. The eastern provinces are passing through a hard time. Last year I find that an enormous sum of money was granted to the Toronto harbour on which they were not paying one cent of interest, and I was under the impression that they were doing so little business that they had not issued an annual report for some years. Perhaps the minister would give us some information on those two points. Have they issued any annual report? How much money have they received? How long since they paid any interest? Possibly the minister might prophesy whether they will pay any interest.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think they publish a report every year.

Mr. MILLAR: Has the minister got the report?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MILLAR: Has the minister seen the report in the last three years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think they publish a report annually.

Mr. MILLAR: My information is that they have not done so.

Mr. CHURCH: The Toronto harbour commission publish an annual report, and we will send hon. members copies. The Toronto harbour board is not like the Quebec harbour board. The Toronto board pay all their fixed and other charges, and all we can get from the government is a little pin money. We cannot get money for a post office or a customs house. The revenue received from Toronto is a hundred million dollars. The new vote is for the reconstruction of the breakwater, which is in bad condition, and the present government and previous governments are responsible for this. The Canadian National Railway runs as close to the breakwater as from here to the opposite wall. I may tell hon. gentlemen that the sum total received by the Toronto harbour since confederation is about seven millions, and the revenue received from the Toronto harbour is over a hundred million dollars. We cannot get any vote for our harbour. We had a contract with the government for work to be performed on Toronto island which has been standing for fourteen years, but they will not carry out the contract with us.

Mr. MILLAR: If Montreal can pay interest on the sums it receives, Toronto should be expected to do the same thing, especially where there is a revenue of $100,000,000.

Mr. COOTE: Is the new land which has been made along the waterfront of Toronto the property of the harbour commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. SPENCE: Paid for entirely by the city.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 147, page 36. All the items in this estimate have been passed except two, Escuminac and Mill's point. Mr. Kellner moves that the vote for Escuminac, harbour improvements, $50,000, be reduced by $49,500. The question is on the amendment of Mr. Kellner.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a new structure required in the interests of a large fishing community, to give them the protection which they need in their occupation. I trust that the hon. member will withdraw his amendment. I do not think he wants the people of this community to be deprived of that which is necessary to enable them to earn their livelihood.

Mr. COOTE: How much will be ultimately required for this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not any more than this.

Mr. LEWIS: I understand from one who lives down there that there are only about twenty-five families in the whole neighbourhood. We can spend $50,000 for about twenty-five families, but we have over three-quarters of a million people in Saskatchewan and we get $17,000. There is something wrong. Talk about putting nails in the coffin of confederation; I think you are doing it at a good rate.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The value of the salmon fisheries there is $90,000, employing forty to fifty boats. As to what my hon. friend has said about the population, I would point out that the many boats operating there indicate a very fair population. Salmon, herring and lobster fishing is carried on by some seventy boats drawing three and a half feet of water, and fifty dories. The population is 1,780.

Mr. EVANS: Throughout all the estimates of this kind this year there has been a tremendous discrimination as between different provinces. When you think of $21,000 being spent for public works in the whole of Saskatchewan you cannot blame the mover of the amendment (Mr. Kellner) for his feeling in the matter. I am surprised that when the Prime Minister visited that part of the country last year the significance of this condition did not strike him rather forcibly. For many years we have had at Saskatoon a half-finished building, the completion of which would save $22,000 annually in rent. We are paying to-day in rent an amount which, capitalized would provide accommodation in our own building, and it would be a credit to the city. The minister eulogizes the beauty of things east, particularly around this city, but all these matters should bear some relation to each other, and at present I cannot see that they do. I do not wonder that there is discontent in the west, and some of the legislation that has lately been put through this parliament is not calculated to allay it.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think our western friends hardly realize that such expenditures as these are to communities in the Maritime provinces what branch line railway construction is to the west. If a comparison is made between the amount spent in railway building, repairs to wharves, harbour works, and so on, in the west and in the Maritime provinces, the large expenditure would not be found to be in the Maritime provinces. My riding does not touch the coast at any point, but I know a good deal about the conditions at such places as this. Communities such as this situated along the coast of the Maritime provinces have only one method of communication largely, and that is by boat, and if they do not have wharves and harbours in to which they can put for shelter in a storm, they are in great danger of loss of life and of property in the way of boats and gear. I think it comes with a pretty poor grace from our western friends, who are so keen for branch line construction, to oppose a small vote of this kind which is to provide communication for people who live in sections where the people have less opportunity to make a living than almost in any other part of Canada, and where they are more out of touch with the outside world. I am going to vote against the amendment to cut this vote. I think there are votes that should be cut out, but I do not think this is one of them.

Mr. SNOWBALL: I am glad to have the support of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) in conection with this vote. I do not think the people of the west fully appreciate what the fishermen along the eastern coast have to put up with and the hardships they endure. They have no railway communication at this point, being forty to forty-five miles away from a railway, and after making their catch the fish has to be transported by steamers and motor boats and motor trucks for that distance to put into freezers or shipped by rail. It is a very hazardous coast. Miramichi bay is accessible and fairly safe for large craft, but when a storm comes up, these drifters, of which there are a large number going out every day when the weather is favourable have to put in, and they are very chary about venturing out whenever they see signs of a storm approaching. Two years ago, I remember, there was a great deal of excitement on acount of the boats being out during a storm. I think I mentioned that when this vote was up before, and since then I have received a letter from home saying that one young man lost his life during that storm, and the other boy was able to stick to the boat and was picked up later and brought to shore. The boat equipment is worth $3,000, and every boat carries almost a mile of nets, and instead of these boats going out three or four miles, as I said before, they go out fifteen or sixteen miles from point Escuminac. Hon. members will readily realize the hazardous nature of this calling. I believe that this extra expenditure will increase the trade at this point. Last year their catch of fish amounted to $400,000.

Some statement was made when this vote was up before to the effect that this kind of fishing had been carried on for a great many years and that it could be done with comparative safety, but the fact is that fishing in these drifters has been carried on only during the last eight years; I have that from fishermen in the district. About 400 men are employed at Escuminac, going out fishing for lobsters and salmon, and there are men who come up from the north shore and fish there along with the others. These men also require a safe port to put into. People also come up there from the coast of Prince Edward Island and up north into Gloucester county, and at the present time they would have to run to Shippigan or Prince Edward Island if a storm came up. One boat has foundered during a very severe storm with all hands, since the last debate we had on this vote.

I know you people from the west will appreciate the difficulties we have in the Maritime provinces. We have a feeling down there that certain portions of Canada are opposing any appropriations that would help us build up our trade, and this is one of the appropriations that we feel would very materially assist us in the Maritime provinces, and especially at that point in New Brunswick, to develop our fishing trade to a far greater extent than at present. Every fish that we take out of the Atlantic is of advantage to the Canadian people, so I hope that when this vote comes before you, you will unanimously pass this item of $50,000 for a breakwater at Escuminac, and that the hon. member will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think any member of this House would oppose a vote for this purpose if he really thought this work was absolutely necessary for the protection of the fishermen. It is a large amount of money, but at the same time I do not feel like voting against the appropriation. I am perfectly sure that those who have supported this amendment are quite serious, believing that the money should not be spent, but I cannot see my way at this time to support the amendment.

Mr. KELLNER: It is very hard to hear of so many fatalities down in that district, but I want to point out that if people persist in going on the water there will always be a certain number get wet and a few others get drowned. When this vote came up in the House before, there was not one argument given in support of the need of this particular work. The whole statement as presented in the House was that it was to pay for a by-election. That is what was presented to the House. I know absolutely nothing about the situation myself. I do not know whether this work is necessary or not, but if that charge was not correct, I think it was up to the hon. member to have got up at that time and defended the vote.

Mr. SNOWBALL: I want to take exception to my hon. friend's statement. I did defend the vote, as he will see if he reads my remarks in Hansard.

Mr. KELLNER: Not until I had moved the amendment. I moved the amendment to test this House, to see if they had the courage of their convictions, as several had spoken against the vote, and they claimed it was not required at all. I have no information about the district myself. I do not know whether this work is needed or not, and we have not been given any reason for it.

Mr. WARD: I objected to this vote when it was up before, and I intend to do so again. I had a talk with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Snowball) following the last debate, and he failed to convince me that this large vote was required, or was in keeping with the economy talk we have heard so much of in this House. I made the statement on the last occasion this vote was up that there was a greater coast line in the constituency I represent than in any constituency in the Maritime provinces—200 miles and more; and that we produced more fish in that constituency than in any constituency in the Maritime provinces. Since then I have looked up the records to verify my statement, and I find I could have doubled that statement. I can safely say that there is more fish produced in the constituency I represent than in any two constituencies in the Maritime provinces, and the records of the department will prove that; yet in my constituency there has been spent only $9,700 on public wharves in the last thirty years, and we are producing fish by the hundreds of carloads.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Are there any deep sea fisheries in your constituency?

Mr. WARD: There are deep lake fisheries; we have very large lakes, but, of course, we do not have so many by-elections out there. I have made some private investigations regarding this matter, and I find there are about twenty-five families in the immediate vicinity of Escuminac—I have been told this on what I take to be excellent authority—who will be served directly by this work. I understand also that it is more of an experiment, that later on there will be another $150,000 expended on this work. I state again, I do not think it is dignified for this House to launch out on an expenditure of $50,000 to satisfy the obsession of a few people. Speaking on this question before, I remarked that it was hereditary with the people of the Maritime provinces—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WARD: Why the point of order? In what I said there was nothing derogatory of the people of the Maritime provinces. It is my intention to oppose this vote.

[Mr. Kellner.]

Mr. FORKE: I do not want to vote a sum of $50,000 unless we know what we are doing.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is $200,000 altogether.

An hon. MEMBER: You can vote against it.

Mr. FORKE: I shall do what I think is right no matter what advice is given to me by other hon. members. I should like some information as to the necessity for this particular expenditure. It is all very well for the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) to compare lake shores with the Atlantic ocean, but the two are not comparable. I think I have complained about votes for harbours on the Atlantic as much as anyone, and in the present case I should like to know the extent to which this particular community will be benefited by this expenditure.

Mr. SNOWBALL: I have a letter from W. S. Loggie & Company in which they say "this breakwater is absolutely necessary." This firm is one of the largest producers of fish in that section.

Mr. MILLAR: How much fish is produced there?

Mr. SNOWBALL: Fish to the amount of $400,000 was produced in the locality last year.

Mr. FORKE: Is there any possibility that more fishing will be done if this improvement is carried out?

Mr. SNOWBALL: Yes, more fishing will be done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not heard the discussion, but I think anyone who accepts an assurance on the information we have from the minister—I heard the previous discussion and I do not presume there is any more information now—is very easily satisfied. Does anybody imagine this House is justified in launching on a $200,000 expenditure—for that is what it is, with another dock nearby and all the dredging that has to be provided for under another vote besides the $200,000 we are embarking upon now—and that in relation to a parish where in 1921 the whole population to be served by both works, was some 1,700—probably less now than more—and where only a few of these people will be engaged in fishing? I do not doubt there is some purpose behind this, but is that purpose sufficient to launch us upon an expenditure which will probably involve $400,000 by the time the dredging is taken care of and the two docks built? Is it conceivable? I think it is inconceivable. The fact of the matter is that it is an affront to the House to ask us to discuss it.

Amendment (Mr. Kellner) negatived: Yeas 32, Nays 77.

Item agreed to on division.

Mill's Point—wharf enlargement and repairs, $25,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is a supplementary by-election item in the same county? This is at a point that nobody has ever heard of and cannot find on the map. Is not this in Northumberland county too?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is for the reconstruction of a wharf. The expenditure is a proper one, there is no question about it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it in the same county?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item carried on division.

Mr. STEVENS: That pays for the by-election.

Progress reported.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State) moved that the House go into committee on Bill 148, to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—urban polling divisions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister state shortly what we are really doing?

Mr. COPP: This is to increase the population of an urban polling division. When the act was first passed the population was placed at 1,000. In 1921 an amendment was passed making it 2,500. The present amendment fixes the number at 5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the reason for the change?

Mr. COPP: My hon. friend will find it in the marginal note which reads:

As originally passed in 1920 the act required urban registration in all places having a population of 1,000 or more. At the next following session it was amended by increasing the lower limit to 2,500 the effect being thus to reduce from 440 to about 185 the number of places in which personal registration was required. Neither the public interest or the convenience of candidates would seem likely to be in any way prejudiced if this limit were still further raised. On the other hand its being so would relieve some voters of a burden and would effect a substantial economy since the number of revising officers would be reduced and the printing of some lists would be dispensed with.

It tends to economy and improved administration of the act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This really means, I suppose, that the rural machinery, for example, as to swearing yourself in and that sort of thing on the list, applies to a greater number than before.

Mr. COPP: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is supposed to be the economy in that? What is the difference?

Mr. COPP: The number of revising officers will be one thing and the printing of the lists another. The urban lists have to be printed and the rural lists do not. The explanatory note by the Chief Electoral Officer gives the reasons why the changes are made. He gives the illustration:

If, for example, the lower limit was increased to 5,000, the number of places in which urban registration was essential would be reduced by over 55 per cent, viz: from about 185 to 80. There are some few places with populations between 2,500 and 5,000 which, as is presently true of some places under 2,500, would still require urban registration. For example, the population of St. Lambert, West Toronto, and like municipalities adjacent to large cities, and of some towns in Western Canada, are too flued to permit the intimacy upon which the effectiveness of rural registration ultimately depends. Urban registration would have to be directed in these in the same way as it is now directed in Oak Bay near Victoria, in South Vancouver, and in St. James near Winnipeg, but a population of 5,000 is, in general, quite low enough to make urban registration essential.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How is it decided when you rely on your 5,000 and when you are going to do something else?

Mr. COPP: Under the act it is left entirely to the Chief Electoral Officer to do that at the time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What principle is to guide the officer in determining whether we are to be rural or urban in the absence of a declaration of parliament?

Mr. COPP: No principle is definitely laid down by statute. Under the act it is left entirely to the Chief Electoral Officer to decide those questions as they arise during the election.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Is the object to be attained chiefly the saving of expense?

Mr. COPP: Yes, and to relieve the necessity for registration.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Is there not a little danger in throwing too wide open this swearing in on polling day?

Mr. COPP: It will add only a few more. They would have the same opportunity of doing it now, but it would make a larger number of rural constituencies and there would be an opportunity to swear in if necessary. It is a matter which has been decided upon after careful consideration and after the Chief Electoral Officer has had the experience of administration under the old act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am very apprehensive of this clause. It means, as far as I can see its practical effect, that the places where heretofore a person could go in and swear his name on and vote on election day are multiplied several times. Heretofore, a voter, without going on a list or coming before a judge, without the slightest precaution being taken as respects him, in a town of 2,500 or under could walk in and swear that he had a right to vote, and if he got outside of the door, you would never hear of him any more. It is very difficult to do that illegally and fraudulently in small places, because everybody there knows everybody else. But when you get a place with a population of over 2,500 and up to 5,000, the difficulty of detection is multiplied, and in my judgment this is just opening the door to wholesale fraud and to swearing in of voters on election day who come from no man knows where. Why do we not do this in the large cities? Just because it would mean a torrent of "telegraphers" and every other kind of thug coming in and swearing in their votes. A whole army could not watch them. If we are going to open the door up to towns with a population of 5,000, to my mind it is going to degrade the whole election of our country, and that is pretty hard to do. It is getting now, especially in our cities, something unspeakable. I have the gravest suspicion of a bill of this kind and especially of this subclause (1). It is all very well to talk about saving a little expense, but what is this going to amount to? It will multiply the places where this swearing can be done, and that means throwing open the widest possible door to fraud. This does not usually occur in the small places although it has been taken advantage of there. You will usually find the whole voters' list taken up by somebody even in a small place. But in a place with a population of over 2,500, it is impossible to check this thing and, in my judgment, the legislation is vicious.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

[Mr. Copp.]

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE ESSEX TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY

The House in commitee on Bill No. 120, respecting the Essex Terminal Railway Company—Mr. Healy—Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time for construction.

Mr. SHAW: Perhaps the hon. member responsible for this bill will explain it.

Mr. GARDINER: May we have the bill distributed?

The CHAIRMAN: It is one of the first bills distributed this session. The bill was reported in the Senate on May 13. It is letter F of the Senate and will be found among the Senate bills.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for West Calgary has asked for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER: Who is the sponsor of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN: The name of the sponsor appears on the order paper.

Mr. CANNON: The bill was fully discussed in committee and all information given.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, then, let us have some explanation of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would seem that the member responsible for the bill had decided to abandon it.

Mr. POWER: When the bill was before the committee the other day the hon. member was there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He may have changed his mind. Possibly he would be offended if we put this through over his dead body.

Mr. SHAW: I move that progress be reported.

Motion agreed to on division: Yeas, 28. Nays, 14.

Progress reported.

THE CALGARY AND FERNIE RAILWAY COMPANY BILL

The House in committee on Bill No. 184, respecting The Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Hudson—Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time.

Mr. SHAW: There will be considerable discussion on this measure, and I would suggest, in order that the bills following should not be delayed—I understand they are not contentious—that this bill be deferred and the other orders taken up.

The CHAIRMAN: I am taking the bills as they appear on the order paper.

Mr. SHAW: I move that we proceed with order 64, Bill No. 187, and the following orders.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not know of any rule under which that can be done in committee. If the hon. member can show me any authority I will be glad to act on it.

Mr. SHAW: I do not think the House would object. I think it might be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the committee consent to take up Bill No. 187 and postpone consideration of Bill No. 184? Bill No. 187 is the act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No. no.

The CHAIRMAN: Then we will take up the bills in the order in which they appear on the order paper.

Mr. IRVINE: Who is the sponsor for this bill?

Mr. HUDSON: It is in my name.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like the hon. gentleman to tell us how many years this company has held a charter to build this line?

Mr. HUDSON: I can tell the committee in a very few words all I know about this matter. The company got a charter from parliament some years ago and obtained a renewal of that charter, but I cannot give the particulars, I understand the whole matter was threshed out in the Railway committee.

Mr. CANNON: Yesterday morning.

Mr. HUDSON: I am not a member of that committee and I was not present, therefore I cannot state the facts which were placed before the committee. All the information I can give the committee is that contained in a telegram which has been placed in my hands by the solicitors who are acting for the promotors of the bill, and which I understand was procured in consequence of certain questions which were asked by some hon. members in committee yesterday. The message is from a firm of solicitors in Winnipeg, Hough, Campbell & Ferguson, a firm of the very highest repute. The telegram reads as follows:

> Present directors Calgary and Fernie Railway J. S. Hough, A. C. Ferguson, Franklin Crandell, J. D. Sinclair, A. B. Alexander. Persons largely interested in railway and in large holdings of coal and timber in Elk valley and the chief promoters D. A. Robertson, San Francisco, and F. E. Kenaston Minneapolis. Unless changes made recently following are directors of Grain Belt Construction and Development Company in England, Rowland Burdon, M. P. George Lloyd Courthope, M.P., Herbert Goring, Robert Basil Hoare, Ernest Summers, Homewood Bernard, Spring Rice. The English company have already expended over one hundred thousand dollars in surveys, road building and other expenses. Robertsons Coal Company have expended nearly similar amount in developing coal mine in Elk valley. No one prejudiced by renewal of charter.

That is the extent of my knowledge.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the hon. member tell us how many miles of railway have been built?

Mr. HUDSON: I have no further knowledge than I have given to the committee.

Mr. SPENCER: How many times has the charter been renewed?

Mr. HUDSON: I cannot say.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the hon. member know if there are any conditions applying to the charter?

Mr. HUDSON: I do not.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. gentleman knows, why does he not say so?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We are not sponsors for the bill.

Mr. POWER: You are here to give information to the people of Canada.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the charter to build this railway carry with it any subsidy from the Dominion government?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CALDWELL: I notice the section we are repealing is section 1 of chapter 75 of the statutes of 1923. What is that section?

Mr. CANNON: That section provides that if the work is not undertaken within a certain period the charter will lapse, and that is the reason why the bill is presented this year.

Mr. CALDWELL: That act was passed when the charter was renewed in 1923?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: This bill has been accepted by the Railway committee, and I see no reason why the committee should not pass the bill inasmuch as it does not carry a subsidy.

Mr. CANNON: This matter was discussed in the committee, and the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Irvine) opposed the bill.

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not know anything about the terms of the charter or the conditions of the railway, but I think we should be very careful before cutting off the rights of the company. If the company has spent sums of money in preliminary work and surveys, we should not cut off the charter without good reason.

Mr. SPENCER: When the bill went through the Railway committee there was a good deal of discussion, and the information asked for could not be given. It was somewhat similar to the information we have had in the House to-night. The hon. gentleman who is responsible for the bill cannot tell us how many years ago the first charter was granted, and how many times it has been renewed.

Mr. CANNON: It appears in the bill.

Mr. SPENCER: I think the committee should have further particulars before proceeding with the bill.

Mr. CANNON: The information the hon. member seeks is very easy to obtain. It appears in the bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The bill does not state how much of the line has been constructed.

Mr. CANNON: Naturally it would not. We would not expect the bill to give that information.

Mr. HEALY: I was in the Railway committee when the bill was under consideration, and what happened a few moments ago while I was out of the House is a result of what happened in the Railway committee the other day. The bill for the Essex Terminal Railway went through the committee unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN: We are dealing now with another bill. The bill the hon. gentleman refers to will come up again to-morrow night. The committee was instructed to report progress.

Mr. HEALY: I was telling this committee what took place in the committee the other day.

[Mr. Cannon.]

The CHAIRMAN: I am not concerned with that. This is the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company bill.

Mr. HEALY: This bill was discussed in committee the other day and there was a decided difference of opinion. The hon. member for East Calgary took one view and I happened to take the other view.

Mr. CALDWELL: Were there just the two of you?

Mr. HEALY: And the committee passed the bill. They found there was no opposition by any organized railway company. The only evidence in existence was a letter in the possession of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Shaw) from the city council of Calgary. No good reason was shown why this charter was against the public interest. Considering all these things the Railway committee passed the bill, and I think it would not be proper for this committee or this House to cut off the rights of these people who may have failed to renew their charter, but who now claim they are just on the verge of financing this railway, which will tap the timber limits which they own in that district. Now, if the public interest will not be harmed, why should we fail to renew their charter when they have gone so far as they have?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When was the original charter granted?

Mr. BOIVIN: In 1906.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Chairman, I would remind the House of a long-settled practice, that where a private bill has been considered by a special committee, the report of that committee is sustained by the House unless some good reason is given to the contrary. Special committees are supposed to consider very carefully the bills submitted to them and to go into all details concerning those bills before they arrive at the conclusions which they recommend the House to adopt. I know nothing whatever of the particulars of this case—

Mr. IRVINE: Nor does anybody else.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): —but I am free to say that I think if the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) were in his seat he would support the view which I am asserting, that this House would make a great mistake if on the ipse dixit of any member it should disregard the report of a special committee.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. gentleman sponsoring this bill sure that the directors whose names he read are still alive? I have been given to understand that it is nineteen years since the company first got its charter, and that in the interval all the original directors have died.

Mr. HUDSON: The only information I have is that which I gave from the telegram. Mr. Hough is one of the prominent barristers and solicitors of Winnipeg and a man of the highest reputation. If he is dead, he has died within the last day or two. The telegram is signed by his firm, Hough, Campbell & Ferguson, and I am quite sure that any statement contained in it is true, because that firm would not lend its name to anything that was not true.

Mr. IRVINE: As we have not heard from these gentlemen for nineteen years, is it not to be presumed that they are dead?

Mr. CANNON: They cannot be dead if they present a petition to parliament.

Mr. SHAW: Mr. Chairman, I opposed this bill before the special committee, and I am opposing it here. If we must abide by the decision of a special committee, as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) suggests—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is not correct. I simply said that the usual practice was for the House to accept the report of a special committee that has investigated any bill unless some special circumstances were shown to the contrary.

Mr. SHAW: If the hon. gentleman is correct, then the question naturally occurs to me, what is the use of parliament? Let us have matters considered entirely by special committees and save our time in the House. For example, if the hon. gentleman's view is correct, the Church Union Bill should not have been discussed in the House at all because the special committee which considered it came to a very decided conclusion in the matter. Despite what he says, I think it is the right of this House to examine very carefully every application which seeks to renew the charter of any corporation which has not carried out the conditions on which its charter was granted. Now, this charter was granted in 1906—exactly nineteen years ago —and has been renewed every two years. It has been said that plans have been filed and that certain work has been undertaken in connection with the building of a road on that portion of the line extending up the Elk valley from Fernie. The line is proposed to be built from Calgary southward, crossing the Rocky mountains by the Kananaskis pass, and then down the Elk valley to the city of Fernie, B.C., a distance approximately of 150 miles. It is true that preliminary location plans have been filed with the Department of Railways and Canals. Hon. gentlemen will understand that these are not the final plans on which a railway company builds. I do not know how it was done, but the map filed, with all its contours and so on, looks to me as if it had been prepared by the Interior department, the route having merely been drawn in to indicate the approximate course of the proposed railway line. Several extensions of the charter having been granted, in 1912 the railway company made application to be granted a subsidy by the Dominion government under the provisions of the Subsidies Act, which act received the royal assent on April 1, 1912. Hon. gentlemen will recall that under that legislation a double subsidy was provided for, dependent upon the cost. The initial subsidy was $3,200 per mile, and under certain conditions that amount might be increased to a maximum of $6,400. The Calgary and Fernie company came under the provisions of that act, and I am going to read to the House part of the discussion in connection with the subsidy as reported in Hansard of 1911-12 at page 6323, volume 4:

43. To the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point at or near the city of Calgary, in the province of Alberta, in a southerly direction via Kananaskis pass and the head waters of the Elk river to or towards the city of Fernie, in the province of British Columbia; not exceeding one hundred miles.

Hon. gentlemen will recall my mentioning that the line was supposed to be 150 miles in length, but apparently the subsidy was granted only to the extent of 100 miles. Then the following discussion took place between Mr. Oliver—the Hon. Frank Oliver, former Minister of the Interior, now a member of the railway commission—and Mr. Cochrane, then Minister of Railways:

Mr. Oliver: What is the total distance from Calgary to Fernie?

Mr. Cochrane: The total length of the line will be 150 miles. I do not know whether that takes in the whole distance or not.

Mr. Oliver: Is this Calgary and Fernie Railway Company a subsidiary company of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. Cochrane: I never heard that.

Mr. Oliver: Has the company a federal charter?

Mr. Cochrane: Yes.

Mr. Oliver: How long has the company had a charter?

Mr. Cochrane: Since 1906.

Mr. Oliver: How many renewals have they had?

Mr. Cochrane: The company has given us the assurance that they will start right in on construction.

I desire to remind members that this is a discussion which took place in the House of Commons on March 27, 1912, and I would emphasize that statement made by Mr. Cochrane: "The company has given us the assurance that they will start right in on construction."

Mr. Oliver: Might I ask what is to be the policy of the minister in granting these subsidies? We are glad to see subsidies granted, and we want the roads constructed, but when a subsidy is granted on the assurance of the company that it is going on to do the work, will that subsidy itself be withdrawn and the rights of the company cancelled if they do not proceed with the work, and the way thereby cleared for some other company to go on with the construction?

Mr. Cochrane: There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says. The matter has been discussed across the floor of the House between the ex-Minister of Railways and myself, and while, perhaps, in every case, it should not be done, I think as a general policy it is a good thing. It will shut off charter speculation.

Mr. Oliver: Up to the present time this has been clearly a purely speculative charter.

That is the observation of the Hon. Frank Oliver to the then Minister of Railways, and that statement was made thirteen years ago.

Mr. HEALY: There has been a war since then.

Mr. SHAW: I am glad to have the assurance of the hon. gentleman in that regard. To continue:

Mr. Cochrane: We will give them this chance, and if they do not go on and construct we will say good-bye to them.

Mr. STORK: Question!
