THE LATE PRIME MINISTER PALME

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY ON DEATH BY VIOLENCE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise to mourn the loss of Olof Palme, the Prime Minister of Sweden, whose life was tragically cut short last Friday by an assassin's bullet. Olof Palme was not only a great Prime Minister of Sweden, he was a prince of peace and a champion of justice for all mankind. I had the honour of meeting with him on two occasions. I shall never forget his warmth, his vision and determination. It is thus with a personal sense of loss that I express the shock, the outrage and the grief of all Canadians.

Prime Minister Olof Palme was a rare and precious amalgam of idealism and action. His dreams were never idle. He had a vision of social justice in Sweden. He acted. He worked long and hard to help it come true for his own people. He had visions of international peace and progress, and he acted and worked to help those visions come true for all of the world's people.

[Translation]

Prime Minister Palme dedicated his intellect, his talents and his energies to the cause of social justice. He did so in his own country, where his passion for justice translated into a social system that has attracted the attention of many Canadians. He did so on the international scene, especially in the case of Third World countries, whose tenacious advocate he had become.

The economic and social development of these countries is one cause he championed at all international venues. The arms race was to him devoid of logic, because it deprived the Third World of resources that were absolutely essential to the well-being of so many people who were still deprived of social justice.

[English]

A peacemaker is dead, felled by an act of evil in a land where, until Friday night, a Prime Minister could walk the streets like any private citizen in freedom and complete safety. But though armed cowards have been able to end the life of this great man, they have not been able, and never will be able, to defeat his cause. The shining memory of Olof Palme and the legacy of his love and work will endure to inspire men and women of peace and goodwill throughout the world.

To his injured widow, to his family and to the people of Sweden, we extend our deepest sympathy. We share their grief. Sweden has lost a great Prime Minister. The world has lost a courageous statesman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, I rise to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) in offering words of condolence to the family of Olof Palme, to the Swedish Ambassador who is here in the Chamber, and to the people of Sweden for the tragic and yet unexplained shooting of their Prime Minister.

The world recoils in horror and shock that an eloquent voice for peace and human dignity has been so brutally silenced. It is doubly shocking that such an act could take place in one of the most highly civilized, progressive and peaceful nations on the face of the globe.

Mr. Palme, who I knew before and after he became Prime Minister of Sweden, was a dominant force in Swedish politics for the past two decades. He was also a dominant and leading force in that earnest yearning search for world peace. In fact, he shared the world's stage for a number of years with our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, who was a close friend of Mr. Palme's, in their joint efforts to encourage the superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, to lessen tensions and seek common ground for a real and lasting peace.

I spoke to Mr. Trudeau this morning. He joins with me in sending his condolences to the family of Mr. Palme and to the people of Sweden in their loss. As Mr. Trudeau said, Sweden, under Olof Palme, was a neutral nation. It was non-aligned in the real sense of the word. Mr. Trudeau spoke of Mr. Palme as a "pioneer for peace" and I can only add my heartfelt agreement.

[Translation]

Olof Palme vigourously criticized U.S. intervention in Vietnam and had no hesitation in expressing his views on the subject. However, he also strongly denounced interference by the Soviet Union in various regions of the world, especially the invasion of Czechoslovakia and more recently, when the Soviet Union took part in the hostilities in Afghanistan.

[English]

Olof Palme was also a champion of the world's poor. Very few world leaders felt as passionately as he did that the plight of poor nations is one of the greatest challenges facing us today. In his own country, he led the fight during the last election in September 1985, to preserve and defend the social welfare system which is renowned as being the most advanced and most progressive in the world.

The people of Sweden have lost a highly articulate and sometimes controversial spokesman for social justice. The world has lost a man who devoted himself to peace and to the dignity of the human spirit. His death is a great and tragic loss, not only for the people of Sweden but for every human being who believes in what he stood for. We will mourn his passing and in so doing we will celebrate the ideals for which he stood.

• (1110)

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, Olof Palme, Prime Minister of Sweden, distinguished Vice-President of the Socialist International, was cruelly assassinated on Friday in Stockholm as he was walking after having seen a movie with his wife—so typical of both the man and the nation which he happened to have led. It was so typical that he was simply out walking, that he had just viewed a recently produced Swedish film and that he was unprotected. All of these facts say a lot about the man.

I have known Olof Palme for more than 10 years. I profoundly regret his passing, both as a colleague and as a friend. He was a marvellous, energetic and imaginative citizen of the world.

Olof Palme devoted himself to improving the human condition, not simply in his beloved Sweden but throughout the globe. He came to his social democratic philosophy not by birth but by conviction. Born into the Swedish aristocracy, born affluent, he thought with depth and passion about the future of his nation and about the future of the world. He became a dedicated and imaginative social democrat.

I would like to say something very briefly about his goals because I think they are instructive for us all. He was determined, first, to improve his own society by means of achieving a better distribution of power and income at home. He never ceased saying that a true democracy must extend the same principles of liberty, equality and participation from political institutions to the economy. In my view he was quite correct in seeing this and not state ownership as the fundamental principle of democratic socialism. Therefore, it is not accidental that the Swedes probably have more individual rights than any other industrialized democracy in the world. It is not incidental that they probably have the most equitable distribution of income of any advanced society in the world. Finally, it is not accidental that in Sweden, perhaps more than in any other nation, in the past decade under his immensely creative leadership, more progress has been made in involving ordinary men and women in the decisions which actually affect them in their places of work.

[Translation]

I also would like to mention his concern regarding the effects of rapid technological change. While accepting technological change in a very positive way, he was at the same time determined to provide a clean and healthy environment for his people and to aim for full employment.

More than any other industrialized country, Sweden has been able to achieve goals that a number of countries have wrongly branded as incompatible.

[English]

It is not accidental that one of his most recent acts as Prime Minister was to name the man who has now succeeded him as Minister responsible for the future, a man who would have had responsibilities in his Cabinet for co-ordinating activities of various departments to ensure that future planning would result in the implementation of these goals and philosophies in which he so profoundly believed.

The third aspect of Olof Palme's life which I would like to underline in this world of increasing nationalism—and I speak as a nationalist of one sort, as a man who can see nationalism having very many positive forms—is that he was well aware that much of nationalism, or many types of nationalism, can lead to very unfortunate consequences. He was therefore a determined internationalist.

In this regard he was among world leaders in working incessantly for peace and disarsament. He worked incessantly in the international domain to solve the problems of the Third World and to ensure that those countries, largely in the northern part of the globe, did what they could to redistribute wealth among the people of the globe and, more precisely, to encourage developments in the Third World which would facilitate development in that part of the world to bring about increasing levels of prosperity in the elimination of poverty. To that end Sweden has one of the most distinguished records of all nations in allocating a certain high percentage of its Gross National Product to other poorer countries.

Third, he was determinedly insistent in making his criticisms, as a leader of a small nation, of the two superpowers. He never hesitated to say—and not in a self-righteous way—what was wrong when a decision either by the Soviet Union or by the country to the south of us was taken in a way which violated the rights of others, or potentially threatened the peace of the world.

I will always remember others telling me about Olof's decision many years ago to marry, in a formal way, a young Czechoslovakian girl as an act which would enable that young woman to come to freedom out of her society, which is what she wanted. The marriage was later dissolved. It was not a breach of faith; it was a commitment made in the understanding that that woman would be free in Sweden.

I will always remember that Olof Palme was among the world leaders who condemned the American involvement in Vietnam as totally inappropriate and inconsistent, as he well knew from his American experience, with the best traditions of the United States. He was criticized at the time, but he was right. The same Olof Palme was among the very first to condemn the Soviet Union's brutal invasion of Czechoslovakia. He was a consistent man, consistently believing in freedom and consistently speaking out against the violation of freedom by any other nation in the world.

Our condolences go to Mrs. Palme, their children and the people of Sweden. Sweden has lost a great Prime Minister. The world has lost a determined champion of freedom, equality and peace.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House would want to express its memory and its respect in the usual way.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present yet another petition signed by 84 residents from my riding, all of whom live in the area of Manor Park, which will be most negatively affected by the possible proposal of the National Capital Commission to build an embassy in the Mile Circle.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the workers of the American Canning Company of Hamilton. These petitioners call upon Parliament to rescind the change to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will see pension income being used as earned income.

I have another petition signed by 50 residents of Nova Scotia and one signed by 100 workers of Sackville, Nova Scotia, again calling upon the Government to rescind the regulation which will see pension income being considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a significantly large number of constituents of mine in which they ask the Parliament of Canada to take action to ensure that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

SALMON FLY FISHING QUOTAS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a group of anglers from the Miramichi region which deals with cutbacks in fly salmon fishing in 1985. In the petition, they express concern about the Government's present salmon regulations. They have asked me to convey to the House through this petition their objections to the present quotas. I do so and submit this petition on their behalf.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, February 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 11009).

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity today to speak on the Government's record of job creation and growth, and to address those measures in the Budget that will support this employment growth. Eighteen months ago when this Government was elected, our mandate was very clear. It was to create jobs and we have certainly delivered on that promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Miss MacDonald: But it was also clear that we had to tackle the problems inherited from the previous administration: uncontrolled growth of the deficit, programs that failed to produce results, and employment programs that were only short-term, bandaid solutions.

[English]

We were given a mandate; we were called upon to restore fiscal responsibility, to release the creative spirit and entrepreneurship of Canadians and to create real employment opportunities. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said the other day in this Budget speech, "cutting the deficit is not an end in itself. It is the means to an end. It is the means to achieving lower interest rates, higher growth and more jobs." We are reaching those goals.

In our first Budget of May of last year, we committed ourselves to reducing the deficit to $33.8 billion for fiscal 1985-86. We will meet that target. This year, the deficit is projected to drop to $29.8 billion. By the end of the decade, the deficit will have been reduced to $22 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: The skeptics in the opposition parties said that we could not cut the deficit and produce jobs at one and the same time. Jobs are being created in record numbers and the deficit is coming down.

Since September 1984, 580,000 new jobs have been created. The unemployment rate has fallen below 10 per cent for the first time since 1982. It is important to note that fully 81 per cent of those new jobs are full-time jobs. During the term of the previous administration, only 18 per cent of the new jobs created were full time. What a difference; what a change.

In Canada, we now are creating jobs at twice the rate of the United States. We have created more jobs in the last years than all of the countries of western Europe combined. Across Canada, there is a renewed sense of direction and stability.

Between September 1984 and January 1986, employment has grown in every region of the country. Just look at the results: it has increased by 51,000 new jobs in British Columbia, by 90,000 new jobs in the prairie region, by 239,000 new jobs in Ontario, by 156,000 new jobs in Quebec and by 30,000 new jobs in Atlantic Canada. I would be the first to say that even though we have made progress, that progress is still not enough. While there has been substantial growth—

Mr. Rodriguez: Say it again.

Miss MacDonald: I am pleased to hear that members of the Opposition agree with that. While there has been substantial growth, it is not fully shared all across the country. Clearly more needs to be done in areas like Atlantic Canada and that is why the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) have introduced the Atlantic Enterprise Program, to stimulate private-sector job creation through major loan guarantees.

The steps that we have taken so far show that we are moving in the right direction. Since the Government assumed office, 73,000 more young people have been able to find jobs and 292,000 more women have been able to find jobs. The growth has been stimulated by a number of initiatives outlined in the Economic Statement of the Minister of Finance of November 1984 and in the Budget of May 1985. We have already begun to see the results of the measures outlined in those two economic statements. There is a renewed confidence in the Canadian economy. Investment in manufacturing is up 22 per cent this year over last year. New housing starts are up 37 per cent, to almost 200,000 units. Inflation is at its lowest level in 14 years, and there is a return of consumer spending confidence.

Through the Canadian Jobs Strategy, we have made the connection between job training and real labour market requirements.

Mr. Speaker, the allocation of $800 million to the Canadian Jobs Strategy in 1987-88, as announced in the Budget, will give us the longer term financing we need to plan our activities in terms of future labour market requirements.

[English]

This is the right strategy, It is the first strategy to deal head on with the real needs of the Canadian labour force, a strategy which addresses the needs of young people trying to break into the working world for the first time; the needs of women wanting to re-enter the labour force; the needs of the long-term unemployed, of older workers and of workers who need retraining to be able to cope with technological change; the needs of workers in communities suffering severe economic decline; and the needs of individual Canadians and entrepreneurs with new ideas which promote and develop economic activity. Just as important, the Canadian Jobs Strategy also recognizes the needs of business and industry. In fact, the strategy is a bridge between job training and the skill requirements of the market-place, bringing them together. We have discontinued old, ineffective programs. We have eliminated slush-fund spending, and we have introduced new innovative and effective programs to stimulate long-term job creation and training.

I am pleased to report that to date, in a period of six months, more than 14,000 projects are under way under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, projects from one coast to another. I personally had the opportunity to visit a number of these projects. In Calgary, I saw disadvantaged young people learning a solid trade in the automotive industry. In Thorold, Ontario, I visited workers learning how to cope with and operate new technology so that they could keep their jobs and keep their plant productive and operating. In Peterborough, I watched young people being trained in the latest techniques of robotics. In Sherbrooke, Quebec, I talked with women who were receiving help in assessing their own skills and getting on-site experience in the labour market. The investment we are making in people through the Canadian Jobs Strategy is a very good example of how to "spend smart".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the federal allocation of $100 million for each of the next three years to help social assistance recipients is another example of money well spent. These funds are aimed at enhancing employment opportunities for social assistance recipients through the job development and job entry program that are part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

[English]

It is very much a part of the Government's program and its determination to find solutions to the economically and socially destructive cycle of welfare dependency and to work with the provinces in designing effective solutions to the problems faced by Canadians. It is smart spending because it starts from the premise that the very best assistance we can help provide is a meaningful job.

Money which would have otherwise been used solely for income support can now also be used to open doors into the workforce for people who were formerly or previously dependent solely upon welfare—doors which can lead, for them, to increased personal dignity. We are already experimenting with this kind of approach. These experiments are showing the benefits of such an approach because they are working. For instance, a good example is a job entry project in Saint John, New Brunswick, where the sponsor has committed 10 of the 30 training positions associated with this project to Canadians who were previously social assistance recipients.

In addition to the $100 million being allocated by the federal Government for programs and projects of this nature—$100 million which by the way is over and above the funding for the Canadian Jobs Strategy—we can also look forward to matching provincial dollars. That could double the potential funding available to assist social assistance recipients. This means that in the next three years up to $600 million could be available for 120,000 new opportunities in jobs and training for those who need it most.

I should also like to mention that our commitment to assisting those in greatest need goes further. Other programs or measures have been undertaken in the Budget. We have annonced new programs to help farmers and to help older workers. For farmers caught in the cycle of low prices and an intolerable debt burden, we are offering commodity-based mortgages, debt restructuring, tax breaks on fuel and other support. In addition, in cases where farmers must leave the farm to find other employment, a rural transition program is being put into effect which will provide farmers with job counselling, with retraining and with interim financial assistance. This is the first time that this group will be able to receive such support and be able to enter retraining programs. It means an additional commitment to farmers of some $50 million over the next two years.

We have also introduced an aditional program to address the problems of displaced older workers. Quite often, as we are all aware, older workers are those who are hardest hit by technological change, by industrial adjustment and by resource depletion. However, the usual training, wage subsidies, mobility allowances and other programs are not always available for such individuals, so we have announced a four-year $125 million program for older worker adjustment. With the co-operation of the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), the provinces and the private sector, this new initiative will assist older workers who lose their jobs through major lay-offs or plant closures and who have no immediate prospects of re-employment.

It is clear that we are taking steps in a number of areas to improve the prospects of Canadians who need the most. We are doing this through greater training opportunities under the Canadian Jobs Strategy; through increased support for social assistance recipients in the area of job training; through initiatives to help farmers climb out from under a heavy debt load, and through steps to help older workers remain active in the labour market.

Probably the most important sector of our economy in terms of job creation is small business. For this reason, the Government has taken steps as announced in the Budget to strengthen the small business sector. We know that is where the dynamism is and where the new jobs will be created. Tax rates on small business income will be reduced. Rules providing for allowable business investment losses will be broadened. Total Government guaranteed loans under the Small Business Loans Act will be increased by 250 per cent. We are determined, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, that small business will continue to be the engine of growth and new jobs.

I would say, Sir, that jobs are just not created because people want them. It requires a commitment by the Government to take a new look at how we can identify the problems that exist, find new solutions and tackle the problems head on.

New training programs for social assistance recipients is a difficult issue, but we are tackling it. Special programs for farmers is a difficult issue, but we are tackling it. Older worker displacement is a very difficult issue, but we are tackling it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the measures this Government has taken and is taking in this Budget provide a sound basis for sustained growth for the rest of this decade.

[English]

Canadians can look forward to the future with confidence, Mr. Speaker, a future built on fiscal responsibility, on co-operation and on individual initiative, a future of continued economic growth and prosperity and, most of all, of jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, once again we have had more propaganda from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) with respect to what the Government is doing about unemployment. Sure, 580,000 jobs have been created since September, 1984—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: —which, by the way, is far from being a record. Over 600,000 jobs were created when the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance, and between the period 1978 and 1982 more jobs were created, but that is not the issue. The issue is that the Minister is using those figures over and over again to disregard very serious employment problems. I am not the only one who says so.

I do not know whether the Minister is aware of an article, in which she is referred to, in a recent issue of Maclean's magazine. The magazine quotes Edward Carmichael, Senior Policy Analysit for the C.D. Howe Institute, who is saying exactly the same thing I have been saying, that those encouraging employment statistics also veil some severe inequalities that could have very grave implications for the older workers, the part-time and temporary workers and the fact that we have four times as many people unemployed for more than one year than we did in 1981 and twice as many as we had in 1983.

In a poll published last week, 55 per cent of Canadians said they had little or no faith in the employment policies of the present Government. I quote from an editorial in the St. John's Evening Telegram: "Nothing to cheer about when you still have 1.25 million people unemployed". The Minister is cheering about her job strategy program, but after announcing that program last February in Regina and announcing it again in June, what happened? Because the Minister cannot put the program in place fast enough to do the job, $226 million of her budget has been dropped. She did not even know what she was going to do when she announced the program in June. She has said that it is under way. But let me tell the Minister that 26 projects have been approved in the west end of Montreal and not one is under way at the present time. Not one person is working on a program she announced last June and announced in Regina in February. If the Minister is really serious about unemployment, let us have more than what she has given us.

With respect to part-time work, yes, the trend was recognized under the previous Government. It appointed the Wallace Commission which made recommendations with respect to the problems of part-time work. There is nothing in the Budget and nothing in the Minister's programs to implement the recommendations of the Wallace Commission to provide labour standards for part-time and temporary workers, or to prove pro rata benefits for them so they will be protected like all other workers.

The Canadian public, and it can be seen in the polls, does not appreciate the Minister brushing under the rug real unemployment problems by simply boasting about the total number of jobs created without any reference to the quality, the salaries, benefits and wages associated with those jobs. I would ask the Minister to address those underlying problems in the labour market relating to employment which Canadians want her to address and then I will cheer with her.

I cheer the fact that we have had some jobs created, but it is not enough to ignore those problems by repeating statistics. It will not do any good to the 700,000 young people about which her own Conservative Senator said that something must be done. When she starts giving us answers to those matters, then we will all cheer on all sides of the House.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, throughout the discussion that has taken place with regard to job creation and training, there has been no one who has said more consistently than I that it is not enough. Yes, we are pleased with the fact that 580,000 new jobs have been created in the last 16 months, but it is not enough. That is why we have the Canadian Jobs Strategy and why we are announcing new programs in this Budget, programs for the people who need them most, our older workers and those on social assistance. These initiatives are being taken and I would ask the Hon. Member to study them.

I do want to say that of those 580,000 new jobs, 81 per cent are full time. In the last administration, of the number of jobs created in that four-year period, only 18 per cent were full time. That is a tremendous difference. We are moving in the right direction.

The Hon. Member talks about lapses and not being able to put programs into effect in time. I must tell you, Sir, that lapses are part of the normal Government operation. The Member who was a Minister should recognize that. What he should also recognize is that during the height of the recession, when unemployment was higher in Canada than at any time since the Depression, the Liberal Government lapsed $650 million in the Department of Employment and Immigration.

The Hon. Member also mentioned the long-term unemployed and the fact that their number has increased since 1981. Indeed, I agree with him. It has increased since 1981. But all of that increase took place between 1981 and 1983. The numbers are there for the Hon. Member to see.

Since January 1983, the number of Canadians unemployed for one year or more was then 292,000. In January, 1984, the number was 309,000. In January, 1985, the number dropped to 299,000 and in January, 1986, it again dropped to 245,000. The trend is in the right direction, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I think she has been doing a good job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: I hope we are not going to get into a partisan debate back and forth. We all want many more opportunities for Canadians. I would like our target to be full employment. There has been a considerable improvement in the rate of employment, but in my province of British Columbia the situation is still pretty serious.

This is International Women's Week and I know the Minister is very committed to equal opportunity for women. I would like to ask her two or three questions about the Canada Jobs Strategy. I hope she will answer in a way that will help us learn how we can adapt this program considerably more to the needs of women. Figures from the Canadian Congress on Learning Opportunities for Women indicate that the percentage of women enrolled in Government-sponsored training programs has decreased steadily since 1979 during the Liberal regime. In 1984-85 the figure was only 18 per cent, which is still low. Why can we not have a very positive affirmative action program to achieve a 50 per cent rate of women in training programs?

There is concern because the Canadian Jobs Strategy lumps youth and women together in the job entry and re-entry program, although their situations are different. For example, you must have been out of the labour force for three years in order to qualify. That is not adapted to the needs of women who are phased out of federal programs or who are impacted upon by technological changes and need retraining. Why do we not have a separate focus on the special needs of women?

There is also concern that training allowances are at inadequate, low levels which seem to assume that the women have a provider. The levels are simply not adequate for women who are looking for training in their own right and, in many cases, have children to support. I know there has been some increase in subsidies for child care, but there is still concern that the women will not earn enough to live on while supporting kids.

There is also a concern that there is a trend to providing training money for private colleges. The private colleges are really not able to give the same kind of high quality training, and often their tuition rates are higher. Why are we not focussing on beefing up vocational training in public institutions which have been unfairly cut back on?

Those are the questions I have. Why can we not have a 50 per cent target rate for women? Why can we not design the program to better suit women? Why can we not have better training allowances suited to women, particularly those who are heads of families? Why can we not beef up government-subsidized training programs rather than private training institutions?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her questions. All of those issues deserve to be very seriously addressed. I will first address the question of whether the ratio of women in job creation and training programs can be 50 per cent.

In the programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy there is now an emphasis on the inclusion of women and minority groups such as disabled persons, native people, and visible minorities. We are seeing some improvement over the six-month period. Difficulty arises in that we have had a number of programs, particularly training programs, built into the system. They are not part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, but are part of the on-going community college training through Manpower training programs, and have been primarily dominated by apprenticeship programs.

Only 4 per cent of the people enrolled in the apprenticeship programs are women. It is basic to everything that we begin to turn that around. In a sense, that is one of the biggest obstacles that must be overcome. I think the figures for the first six months of the Canadian Jobs Strategy program will bear out that we are making progress in that area. However, we have a long way to go in the other areas. I am trying to tackle that and I welcome every bit of support I can get. This often relates to fields in which men have predominantly been given the opportunities, particularly the primary resource industries.

The second question was with regard to job entry and re-entry. These are two quite separate programs. One is for young people and the other is for women coming back into the labour force. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are assessing the Canadian Jobs Strategy as we proceed with it. It may be that those two programs should be separated even more than they are presently, with even more distinct criteria. I do not intend to change that until after the end of the fiscal year. Even now we are going through a reassessment to discover where the weaknesses of the new strategy are. This is not locked into place, carved in stone, or anything of that nature. We know that there will have to be adaptations. Again, I would appreciate suggestions from all Members as to how they think it can be improved.

With regard to the allowances, they have been increased in the last year. We have made it possible for people who are on part-time job creation or training programs to qualify for them. Therefore, we are making improvements. It is again a question of financial resources. We have increased both the training allowances and the dependent care payments, but I know that there is more to be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Minister, but we have exceeded the time allotted for questions and comments. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to conclude her answer?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss MacDonald: I would just like to respond to the fourth point which the Hon. Member raised with regard to using private colleges as opposed to public colleges. This issue is now under discussion with the provinces as the time approaches for renewal of the National Training Act agreements which expire at the end of March of this year.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to give the Minister a portion of my time to conclude her remarks because I was hoping to hear something in her remarks that I or other MPs would find useful, or that made some sense. The Minister and the Government claim that they create jobs. In and ad in the evening Telegram in Newfoundland last week the provincial government claimed that it created 8,000 jobs in the past year. Now the federal Government is claiming that it created 6,000 jobs in Newfoundland in the past year. The only problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the unemployment rate has gone up. Canadians are asking where these jobs are that are being created. If all these jobs are being created, surely the number of unemployed would go down. Our birth rate cannot be increasing that much. People cannot be returning to Newfoundland at the rate of 8,000 a year to take all the new jobs that the Government is creating. The Minister says 7,000 in Newfoundland. The Newfoundland Government is claiming credit for 8,000. That is 15,000 jobs.

Mr. Rodriguez: I suspect they are the same jobs.

Mr. Baker: No, no, I would not say that. I trust the word of the federal and provincial Governments. They have created 15,000 jobs. However, nobody knows where the jobs are.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are on paper.

Mr. Baker: I guess they are on paper. That is what is wrong with a lot of the remarks just made by the Minister. She reads things on paper and actually believes what she is reading. She says that her great employment program has done such wonderful things. They are training people for jobs which, in most areas of Canada, do not exist. I wonder if the Minister has actually looked at an application form for her Jobs Strategy Program. I am not talking about POWA, RTP, or these other things, I am talking about the job development program. That is where the majority of the funds go in her employment strategy, as she calls it.

When you look at that program, which I suppose replaced LIP and the Canada Works Programs, you do see a change. The sponsor now has to apply for a program in which he is to train people for jobs which need filling. However, what do you apply for if you are in Gander Bay, New World Island, Joe Batt's Arm or Virgin Arm, Newfoundland? You have had two phases of the water system put under ground by the job development program of the previous Government. Now you have to apply for a project under this program which trains people for jobs which exist but cannot be filled from the general workforce in the general area. How do you do that if you are digging ditches? You cannot. So all of those projects go by the wayside. How do you apply for a project to finish off your wharf if everyone in the community knows how to construct a wharf? How do you apply for a project to build a building if you have an excessive number of carpenters out of work? You cannot do it. So that the legacy of this Government in Newfoundland will be, as I am sure it will be in other areas of Canada, that we have two phases of a water system in place but never to be finished as long as this Government is in power. Obviously those people living in the areas concerned will want to get this Government out of office in order to get their water systems finished, construct their wharves or build community buildings.

The Minister should also look at the hiring criteria. In order to get a referral for one of her famed job development projects you must have been unemployed for 24 of the previous 30 weeks. Here we go again. We are going to have an affirmative action program here, there, and somewhere else, and in the process the majority of people are disqualified. You have to be unemployed for 24 of the previous 30 weeks. That means someone working for seven weeks in the previous seven months cannot go back to work. If someone is coming back into the workforce, they are not allowed to go to work. A student just coming out of school has not been unemployed for 24 of the previous 30 weeks, according to the Minister's definition where you are registered with the manpower office and actively seeking work. A student is not actively seeking work because the student is a student. So when that person gets out of trade school or vocational school they do not qualify under the major part of this Government's so-called job development program.

Suppose you have a project starting in a community which involves some carpentry work. You have a young man or a woman who just came out of a vocational school or trade college trained as a carpenter. They need some work experience. That person is not allowed to be referred to this job development project. Why? Because that person went to a trades college and learned carpentry work. They were not actively looking for work. It is incredible when you look at it. The most discriminatory program ever announced by the federal Government was announced by this Minister.

The Minister spoke about social assistance in such glowing terms a moment ago. She is going to help people presently on social assistance to find employment. Everyone in this Chamber knows what has been going on over the past 10 or 20 years under the Canada Assistance Plan. We all know about the works programs of the provincial Governments across this country and what they do. In the case of Newfoundland, some $24 million has been dedicated this year to putting those people presently on social assistance back to work. Unfortunately, they put them to work only for as long as it takes to qualify for unemployment insurance. The Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson) knows exactly what I am talking about. He is perhaps the only person in the Chamber, apart from myself, who really knows what I am talking about.

Mr. Johnson: You are assuming you do, George.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is a wild assumption.

Mr. Baker: The unfortunate part of what the Minister has announced is that there are rules and regulations governing those sorts of jobs as well. In other words, must have a dependant in order to get any of these jobs. If the Minister were to stand up and say no, that is not correct, we are going to remove the discrimination from the program and you do not need a dependant in order to go to work, she would then have to go to her office and withdraw the statement tomorrow because the provincial Governments would never agree with it. So we can see the discrimination built into all of these programs, yet the Minister says we are going to put people to work who are now on social assistance. That is quite a problem.

People on social assistance have been going on these work programs for years and years and years, training for jobs for years and years and years. Last year in the Newfoundland budget they were going to put 8,000 people to work under social assistance, training them for jobs. This year it is 10,000. Do you know why? Because the 8,000 they put to work before have now run out of their unemployment insurance and they have to put them on another training program. So the numbers go up every single year.

This federal Government turns around and says, "Oh, we are going to spend $100 million now under the Minister's department". Well, all that is doing is taking the money that would have normally been spent under the Canada Assistance Plan, which is 50-50, and putting it under this program, which again is 50-50, $100 million. That is all it is, a direct transfer from the Canada Assistance Plan. The Minister is shaking her head.

I would like to read from the Budget as follows:

> It is expected that this program will be successful in reducing the need for federal and provincial social assistance payments under the Canada Assistance Plan by similar amounts.

There it is. The Minister was not aware of that. Let me point out just one additional thing, and then perhaps I will get on to the Budget. The Minister and the Government are, of course, responsible for the insane program whereby they are trying to cut back on unemployment insurance, so they take pension income as earnings for unemployment insurance purposes.

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Mr. Baker: An incredible scheme. To see somebody on veteran's allowance—I am glad the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is here in the Chamber today. I am sure the Minister for Veterans Affairs has written to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) objecting to this, just like the Minister of Defence (Mr. Nielsen) did. I am sure that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has done that. In fact, I am positive he has done it. Of all of the people that this affects, the veterans of this country—Is the Minister saying the veterans are not? Who does the Minister think she is talking to now? This program covers all pensions for which work was done in getting the pension. In other words, if you served overseas and you are on a pension for serving during the war, it is affected by that measure. I know, because I have the cases.

A fellow phoned me up the other day. He said, "George, I am getting a one dollar cheque in the mail". I said, "What is that for?" "He said that is for unemployment insurance". "I am a veteran. I am 63 years of age and I just got a cheque for one dollar. I was supposed to get $250, but I only got a one dollar cheque".

Mr. Rodriguez: It costs more to print the cheque.

Mr. Baker: Absolutely right, it costs twice as much to even print the cheque.

An Hon. Member: Last time he will go Tory.

Mr. Baker: Then of course the first week that you qualify for UIC you get a week's unemployment insurance in your first cheque. Then the following cheques you get two weeks at a time. The second and third weeks will come along and he will get a $2 cheque. He will keep getting that $2 as it goes along. What an outrageous thing. If he were a millionaire he would still get his UIC, would he not? It is not a pension that he is collecting. This is the Government and the Minister that take that kind of actions and stand up in this Chamber and say, "Oh, look what we have done". I can assure you of one thing, most Members in this House are going to appeal. I am sure they are going to encourage their constituents to appeal these decisions made by employment and immigration on their cheques. In other words, hopefully we will now have hundreds of appeals for people who are getting $1 a week unemployment insurance.

The Minister and the Government probably do not realize how important an unemployment insurance cheque is. That is the size of it. Do you know that in a great many rural areas of Canada the size of your unemployment insurance cheque is a sign of your social worth? The man that can go in and cash an unemployment insurance cheque that is $280 a week, $550, $600 every two weeks can take some pride in that. In most fishing areas it means that that man really fished and really worked hard. He has a big cheque and brings it to the Post Office to change, as they do in some areas, or to the banks or the local store. Can you imagine what it does to a man to walk in now with a $1 cheque? The case of the fellow I mentioned said he was going to wait for his daughter to come out from St. John's and give her the $1 cheque to bring it back and change it because he was too embarrassed to cash it. I have two minutes left. Mr. Speaker, in the two minutes let me say this, getting back to the Budget. The Government claims there is a problem now. After running up a deficit in this year of $34 billion—we only talk here about billions, we don't talk in millions anymore—they claim there is a problem. After overspending more than any serious Government ever did in the first seven months of office, they now say 17 months later, "We have got a problem". The most glaring example of that is, when this Government took over it took $18 billion a year as payment on the national debt. Now it is $26 billion since the Tories took over. They claim now that there is a big problem; the people are responsible, blame the people. They are saying in this Budget, we are going to go further than that, we are going to punish the people of Canada. We are going to increase their taxes, we are going to cut back on services. We are going to cut back on expenditures and increase taxes. Why? Because they claim they have got a problem. This comes from a Government that wasted $2 billion on a bank bail-out that they could not effect properly. A mistake, a blunder, an error costing $2 billion, and they said: "What's a billion, give or take a billion, who cares". This is a Government that sees the Prime Minister's office staff double in size. It is going to cost $6 million this year to run it. The cost of running the Privy Council office increased by another million this year to $11 million. The Minister's staff increased when they took over. The Government turns around and says: "We have a problem and therefore we are going to punish the people of Canada". The people of Canada are not going to put up with this much longer.

Mr. Penner: Bravo!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am compelled to make some comments about the remarks of Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), because I am sure he would not want to leave this House and the people who might be watching on television with false impressions.

I wonder if the ad that I have in my hand is the one that the Hon. Member referred to when he said that the provincial Government of Newfoundland and Labrador was taking claim for all the jobs that were created. If he is, I would say that the Hon. Member should apologize to the people here for leaving a false impression. This ad explicitly states that in 1985 the federal and provincial Governments cost-shared a $38.5 million program under Canadian Jobs Strategy. It goes on to say that in the fall of 1985 the federal and provincial Governments cost-shared a $9.5 million emergency fisheries response program. It concludes by saying: "Co-operative action of both orders of Government". There is nothing at all about one Government, either federal or provincial. It is both levels of Government because that is the way the Conservative Government works. It consults with the provinces and brings in programs in conjunction with them.

I want to refer very briefly to the fact that unemployment dropped in Newfoundland and Labrador in January of this year at a rate unequalled to that of any other province in Canada. Most of us are astounded that the unemployment rate in Newfoundland—where unemployment is still at a high and unacceptable level—could drop at a time of year when fishing is pretty well at a standstill, except for the deep sea trawlers and not much work is taking place in the logging industry. But that is a fact and the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) knows that.

I detect a bitterness in the comments being made in response to the Budget by Hon. Members of the Official Opposition. In 1978, knowing full well they had to do something to curtail deficit spending, they implemented cost cutting programs. In 1979 they were defeated, but they came back in 1980 full of bitterness and began rampant spending from then on. Lots of Canadians did not realize that until the fall of 1984 because of the discussions being carried on with respect to the Constitution. The Liberal Party thought that the National Energy Program would save them but it did not bring in the revenue they expected. All of a sudden the people realized what the Liberal Party was doing with respect to spending and elected a Progressive Conservative Government. We intend to continue our policy to bring down the deficit so that we can have continued economic growth.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what ad the Hon. Member is talking about, but I am sure there must be two ads; one Government claiming credit, another Government claiming credit and now both Governments claiming credit for the 8,000 jobs. What I was referring to in my remarks was the fact that the total number of unemployed people in Newfoundland has not decreased. I am not talking about percentages, I am talking about the total number.

As far as the deficit is concerned, the hon. gentleman who just commented is, I believe, one of the Hon. Members in this Chamber who would hope that there would be an increase in Government spending in his own riding. I would refer him to the fact that 90 per cent of the entire la dette publique, the public debt of Canada—

Mr. Rodriguez: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman did not know I could speak French.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are trilingual, George.

[Translation]

Mr. Baker: What is the problem?

Mr. Rodriguez: In French!

Mr. Baker: The problem is this Government! Canadians are not responsible for the problem. No sir.

Mr. Vincent: No, the Liberals are!

Mr. Baker: The people of Quebec are not responsible for the problem. The people of Manitoba are not responsible for the problem. This Government is responsible for the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Twenty-three per cent of the national debt has been accumulated by this Government in the last sixteen months. That is true. And today, this Government is blaming Canadians. Today, this Government is punishing Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) must have a bad memory. Let me recount events starting in 1975. It took this country 108 years to accumulate a national debt of approximately $20 billion. In nine short years the Party of which the Hon. Member is a part went on a spending orgy and the debt of this country is now around $200 billion. That would be no problem if we did not have to pay interest, but we do. Canadians are finally realizing the gravity of this situation. Almost 40 per cent of what we take in in revenue must now go to service the debt. Myself and all my colleagues in my Party applaud our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for having the intestinal fortitude to bring forth a Budget which is fair and which gets at the reduction of our deficit year by year.

In the year just ending, our total spending will have grown by 3 per cent versus 3.9 per cent as forecast last May. That is a record in itself. If we eliminated the servicing of debt there would be absolutely no increase in spending. That has not happened in 20 years. So we are clearly on the right track under the leadership of our Minister of Finance, and I cannot for the life of me understand why the Hon. Member would turn such a blind eye to the history of which he was an integral part.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I admit that 90 per cent of the total federal debt, the net debt, is about $225 billion. The gross debt, if we add up our guarantees to Crown corporations, and so on, would be another $80 billion or $100 billion. It is interesting to consider when these debts multiplied. Ninety per cent of the total debt was accumulated in the past 10 years. Fifty per cent of the total debt was accumulated in the last four years, and 23 per cent of the total national debt, the net debt, was accumulated since the Tories have been in office. Those are the facts and figures. They are in black and white in the documents of the Minister of Finance. So when I say 23 per cent of the total national debt was accumulated in 17 months of Tory rule I am not wrong, according to the figures of the Minister of Finance. Neither is the hon. gentleman wrong in saying that 90 per cent of the total national debt was accumulated in the past 10 years, and neither is he wrong in saying that half the total national debt was accumulated in the past four years.

Mr. Attewell: Who made the commitment?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about commitment. According to the Budget Papers, the greatest single increase in the national debt was accumulated by the present Tory Government since it came to power. It accumulated more debt in a 16-month period than any previous Government ever accumulated. With one correction, the hon. gentleman was correct in saying in his broad overview that $225 billion is not the total national debt. It is more like $350 billion, since one has to take into account loan guarantees, borrowings by Crown corporations and other matters such as that. I would point out to Hon. Members that expenditures in each one of those four categories in terms of the gross national debt went up by over 30 per cent under the Conservative Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint-Paul (Mr. Chartrand).

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): In many respects, Mr. Speaker, the February 26 Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will long be remembered by Canadians, and it will have a significant impact on the future of our country. Our Government has chosen to steer a new course by resolutely tackling the excessive deficits which had been undermining the Canadian economy for a number of years.

As Member for Verdun-Saint-Paul I am proud to be associated with this spectacular reversal in public finance and Canada's economic climate. Since our Government came into office we have witnessed a series of positive economic indications. All told, 580,000 jobs have been created since September 1984, including 129,000 during last January alone. The unemployment rate dropped from 11.7 per cent when we took over down to 9.8 per cent last January, the lowest it has been in four years. The national growth rate, productivity, housing starts and consumer spending were all rising indicators in the past year, a sure sign that there is renewed confidence in Canada's economic prospects. Private sector investments have increased considerably over the last two years and business circles expect this trend will continue.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, our Opposition colleagues would rather not draw attention to these figures, intent as they are on making people believe that our performance so far has been negative. Unfortunately for them, the results can already be felt and Canadians are quite capable of seeing that for themselves.

One might wonder what prompted such a show of confidence in the economic renewal in Canada. The answer is simple, Mr. Speaker.

Right from the start in November 1984 the Minister of Finance outlined our economic strategy and has stuck to that plan ever since. In his economic statement he stressed that the Government would make a concerted effort towards lower deficits and public expenditures, and that it would take appropriate steps to boost employment. The May 1985 Budget and this one are the outcome of that policy, Mr. Speaker. They are part and parcel of a coherent approach which leaves little doubt that our Government will indeed honour its commitments. Last year's real deficit did not exceed the forecasts, an achievement unheard of under previous Liberal administrations.

A Government which keeps its promises and steers in the right direction, that is what explains renewed confidence in the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, our Government's first priority has been job creation and, in that respect, our achievements over the past 16 months went far beyond anything ever done by our predecessors. We have no intention of resting on our laurels. A few months ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced the Canadian Jobs Strategy program, a novel approach concerning the role of Government in job creation. By advocating ever more direct private sector participation, and particularly by promoting skill investment and training, the Government was finally able to stop allocating huge funds to the ad hoc job creation programs of the Liberal administration whose main objective was mainly to achieve a facticious decline in unemployment levels. When it comes to job creation, Mr. Speaker, our Government has been able to set new trends.

Like the rest of Canadians, the residents of Verdun-Saint-Paul had been asking for a sensible and efficient job-creation program.

Those among my constituents who have the misfortune of being unemployed can now rely on a well designed and functional program to help them find a job. In addition, the Minister of Finance has shown the commitment of our Government to its employment strategy by injecting $800 million more in this program for 1987-88.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the small business sector is the one which creates the most jobs in Canada, and this is especially true in Quebec and my constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul. That is why our Government has taken the necessary action to encourage job creation as much as possible in this vital sector. The Minister of Finance has announced a 2 per cent decrease in the taxation rate for small businesses. The ceiling for loans available to these businesses will increase from $1.5 billion to $2.5 billion. The $500,000 capital gains exemption should also encourage many people to invest in small businesses, which will create new jobs.

The Government is therefore addressing the problems in the small business sector as in many other areas.

One group of Canadian men and women will receive particular attention from our Government, namely that of welfare recipients. We see it as our duty to improve their lot, and it is in this context that the Government recently signed an agreement with the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan. The Government will invest $100 million a year to provide welfare recipients with a valid alternative and the possibility of finding productive employment. Equal amounts will be paid into the program by the provinces, which shows the extent to which harmony between Government levels is possible in a context of national reconciliation.

Another group to which the Government wants to provide special assistance is that of older workers. Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased by this initiative since my constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul includes many such workers. This is a very vulnerable group, because when they lose their jobs, their lack of adequate training makes it very difficult for them to find other employment elsewhere. To remedy the situation, the Government has set up a new Program for Older Worker Adjustment. Once more, Mr. Speaker, this initiative will be made possible under agreements signed with the provinces. The Government will spend up to $125 million under this new program during the next four years. Thanks to the consultations between the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) and the provinces, as well as labour and business representatives, this program will be adapted to the real needs of our older workers faced with a constantly changing labour market.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of all these employment initiatives, the Government has not forgotten its obligations as far as the most disadvantages in our society are concerned. I am thinking for instance about senior citizens and low income families. Already last year, widows and widowers aged between 60 and 64 began to receive the spouse allowance. This is important for these people. The amount involved can often make the difference between financial difficulties and worry-free life. We are proud to have introduced this legislation.

The Government has also shown in this budget its determination to improve the situation of low income families. The child tax credit, which amounts to $384 per child in 1985, will increase to $524 by 1988. In addition, families will receive a prepayment of $300 per child so that they will not have to seek the services of tax discounters. Such measures are important for low income families. There are many such families in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and I am happy to see that, in spite of the sacrifices required from all Canadians this Budget provides mechanisms to help those most in need.

These are not the only initiatives of the Government, far from it. A federal sales tax credit will also be provided for families with a net income under $15,000. For a family with two children, this credit will amount to $150, which will fully compensate the few dollars they will have lost because of the additional taxes collected from all Canadians to reduce the deficit.

Veterans and their surviving spouses have not been forgotten either. Their benefits have been improved and they are now treated more efficiently and generously than before. The Government has also decided to provide further assistance to the handicapped by adding $250 to the existing tax deduction, raising it to $2,860. In doing so it has recognized its responsibility towards the most unfortunate in our society.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians want to maintain this country's social programs which are among the most modern and the most generous in the world. However, the shocking increase in the deficit during the last years of the Liberal government has imperilled the very existence of these programs for future generations. With the national debt that is growing three times as fast as the national economy, it is imperative to put our public finances on a sound basis. We must provide old age security benefits for the elderly in Canada. In fact, it is largely to guarantee the survival of our institutions that the Government has tried to remedy the situation by bringing down a responsible Budget that will go down in history as a Budget that pursued the objectives of this country.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in rising today to join in the Budget debate I would like to state first that I feel that the sins of this Budget that will be visited upon the people of Canada are, in large measure, not sins of commission but sins of omission. I would like to say right off the bat that if ever we saw a Budget in which the benefits were almost all flawed and the flaws almost totally without benefit, it is this Budget that meets those sad and lamentable criteria.

There are measures in this Budget of which I and my Party can approve, but they are measures, almost without exception, that have drawbacks which will greatly blunt their usefulness, not only in pursuing legitimate economic objectives for Canadians but more particularly in the way in which they will affect and in some cases not affect individual Canadian families.

I would like to begin by looking at the sales tax credit the Government has proposed to introduce. I do this because I believe that if one cannot say something good about something, one really should not say anything at all. The sales tax credit is a worth-while idea. After all, it is an idea that has existed in the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and others for some time now, in fact for over a decade in the case of Ontario. I do believe it is right to have some degree of support for those low-income families who, by virtue of taxes which are imposed upon consumption, are paying a far higher proportion of their disposable income on sales taxes than is the case for people who are fortunate enough to have higher revenues.

We see this sales tax credit as being a legitimate measure. We see the gearing of the sales tax credit to family size as being legitimate and indeed even praiseworthy. However, in so saying I must make the comment that others have made, that the cutoff level for the sales tax credit is niggardly and one that does not reflect the realities of poverty in Canada today. It does not reflect the level at which families can be poor in Canada. Such are the costs of living either in large urban centres or in remote northern communities that there are many people who will not benefit from this sales tax credit but who can legitimately and fairly be classified as poor in terms of their incomes and outflows, their lifestyles and their very limited ability to choose the way they spend their incomes.

I would like to read from an excellent local newspaper, The Citizen of Ottawa—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Hah, it's a Grit paper.

Mr. Parry: The article states that this last Budget's implicit presumption, for example, that $15,000 is a poverty cut-off line for a family of four, has some observers deeply worried.

I understand that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) is dissatisfied with the newspaper, perhaps because it is not backing his latest campaign.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Tell the truth. Save the Circle.

Mr. Parry: The article goes on to quote a spokesman for the social policy reform group who says that the Government is setting the poverty line between $15,000 and $18,000 and that that is about 75 per cent of the real poverty line for families with children. That, I think, is a perfectly legitimate criticism of this sales tax credit, and it illustrates the way in which the Government is giving with one hand to those who need it and taking with the other from a large proportion of those who do in fact need it as well.

I think it is a good measure to introduce a prepayment of the child tax credit. We have already, I believe, put a stop to most of the abuses of the income tax system and the delays to which refunds were subjected, but I think this is another measure that is worth while, the increase in the child tax credit similarly so.

I can support the introduction of an investment tax credit for Atlantic Canada, but I would like to ask the Government if it has ever heard of British Columbia, and if it is aware that the unemployment levels in many centres in British Columbia are higher than comparable centres in Atlantic Canada. As well, there are communities in other parts of the country, including the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, where there is localized unemployment, and by localized I mean that there is unemployment in one particular job market in a community from which people cannot travel hundreds of miles on a daily basis to get to work. I would like to ask the Government why it is not tailoring this tax credit to the needs right across the country rather than concentrating on a particular region.

The elimination of minor deferrals of tax such as those on investment tax credits, the elimination of deferrals on salary compensation and the elimination of the rather farcical situation in which it was possible for those who married on December 30 to claim one spouse as a deduction for the entire year, are not measures that I or my Party would criticize. Similarly, the reduction of the small business tax is not something we would criticize. Again, they are not measures worthy of widespread condemnation, but they are indicative of a misunderstanding on the part of the Government of the true objectives of a Budget, and more particularly of what small business in this country needs.

The problem facing small business has been described time and again, and I am surprised the Government, with the great lip service it pays, has not yet gotten the message. The difficulty is in starting small businesses and getting them off the ground. It is not the profitable small businesses that need this sort of incentive or assistance, but those having difficulty getting on a profitable basis. I am surprised the Government does not realize that.

There will be funds for the adjustment of older workers to employment and funds for people to make the very difficult transition, as it often is, particularly for single-parent families headed by women, from the home to the workplace. If these measures are put into effect in a humane and practical way, and not in the kick-them-in-the-rear-end fashion that the unlamented Social Credit Government of British Columbia as it styles itself has tried to use, these could be beneficial, as could be the farm assistance, the Atlantic Enterprises and the housing deductions for people in isolated posts and northern communities.

However, in this area the Government has thrown a cat among the pigeons. Apparently it does not know yet which isolated posts it is talking about, and that is something that needs clarification. Flexibility in Registered Retirement Savings Plans is something that has been requested for a number of years. The cutoff at the age of 71 was not something that was practical or fair.

It may come as a surprise or shock to some of the people who have been travelling around the country over the weekend to hear this, but I am not even going to criticize the publicity strategy the Government is using in relation to the Budget. I think Government Members have the right, if they truly believe in the Budget that has been tabled, to sell it to different parts of the country. I think they even have the right to talk to their local media rather than the national media. I think it is not a bad idea for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to go to Kitchener, Ontario, to talk about his Budget. However, I do not like what I hear after all the advanced preparation, intelligence and application of human and financial resources which went into preparing Government Members so they could go out to sell and defend the Government.

Then a Member comes into the House and reads his speech from beginning to end. That, Mr. Speaker, is a shame. If a Government Member is so convinced that it is a good Budget he should be smart enough to defend it without reading a speech which he has learned by heart and which was probably drafted in the office of the Minister of Finance.

[English]

If they cannot defend it without notes, I wonder what they are doing defending it at all.

I should like to turn to the real objectives of the Budget as I see them. We know that the 1985 Budget was tailored to the satisfaction of the demands of Bay Street. In 1986, the Government added Wall Street to the itinerary and tailored the Budget to the demands of Wall Street and Bay Street. There was a magic number. The Government was aiming to get the deficit down below $30 billion, which has been done on the backs of Canadian people. The Government did not do it by eliminating tax breaks, introducing fairness into the system or by going through expenditures and pruning out those which were inefficient. It did it by blanket cuts, and on the backs of ordinary Canadians. It has done it while preserving almost all tax breaks or incentives. It does not matter what one calls them, they are there and the people who are getting them know what they are. They are breaks designed to help wealthy taxpayers minimize their tax commitment or exposure. Again it does not matter what one calls them. They know that they are being helped by the Budget.

What has been substituted? It is principally a raid on the purses of middle-income groups. We have come up with a figure. Since the Government came to power, the average Canadian family in the middle-income range is paying an extra $1,305 in tax to the Government. It is a telling criticism of the objectives of the Government and the way in which it has pursued them.

[Translation]

So, Mr. Speaker, the question is whether the measures introduced last Friday can indeed be called a Budget. My answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

A Budget must include an over-all economic strategy, not only a tax strategy, and that is all we got from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, a Budget in the 80s must set targets in terms of job creation and in terms of unemployment levels acceptable to the Government, which is more than the forecasts we got. Forecasts are useful of course, but regardless of the Government or Party in office the Budget has to give a clear indication of what the Government is aiming for.

That is exactly what is missing in this Budget, Mr. Speaker. There is no reference to employment or to an economic strategy, and of course there can be no such strategy without public support. Obviously that is another missing element of this Budget.

Mr. Speaker, let us take the British Government as an example.

[English]

The Thatcher Government, which over the years has had the support of business and the financial community, has driven up the level of unemployment in that sadly afflicted country. At the same time it has not met its fiscal projections.

We should be asking why our Government does not have popular support in the Budget. Obviously the Government is loading the burden on the individual. Individual taxes will increase four times faster than corporate taxes this year. By 1990, those taxes will have increased 10 times over the increase in corporate taxes—$2.9 billion compared with $295 million. It is scandalous. The Government is pursuing the Liberal policy of shifting the tax burden from corporations to individuals. In fact, if we include last year's tax changes, individuals will be paying $7 billion more in personal and sales taxes, while corporations will be paying $75 million less.

Another reason the Budget will not have the support of the people is that there are no unemployment rate targets, as I have said. The Government is proud of what it believes is its record, a reduction of .8 per cent in the unemployment rate between 1984 and 1985. Frankly, the Budget shows that the Government is taking advantage of the economic recovery and of job creation in the private sector which have little or nothing to do with the measures taken by it. It is relying on the private sector to create jobs and is cynically cutting back in job creation and the types of measures that would lead to a reduction of 2.5 points in unemployment this year, which is what we in the New Democratic Party believe it should be.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spoke about a developing consensus. Indeed there is a developing consensus. It is that the tax system is unfair, and nine out of ten Canadians said that in the Gallup poll.

[Translation]

So what we have, Mr. Speaker, is indeed a callous Budget. It is a fact that Canadian men and women wanted employment to be a priority. By shifting that responsibility over to the private sector the Government is taking a laissez-faire approach rather than showing leadership. Obviously a 6.5 per cent decrease this year and next year is not good enough. The Budget slashes roughly $200 million from the Canadian Jobs Strategy program, the very program which the Government was bragging about and advocating as being the solution to unemployment in Canada. What a shame, what a let-down, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

What should this great attack on the deficit have done? The deficit was cut in the Budget to $29.5 billion. Why? It was largely because the voices to whom the Government listened demanded that it should be cut.

I should like to spend a moment or two on the matter of the deficit. While I acknowledge that it is indeed a problem, one which has to be controlled in the long term, it is not a problem which should be solved on the backs of the people of Canada. We know that unemployment insurance is putting a heavy drain on the public purse, but we know as well that it is because the strategies which are being used are not tailored to the objectives. Incidentally, the Government's anti-inflation strategy has produced the highest real interest rates in the history of the country. It is missing the mark, and that it why the deficit is going up.

What should have happened if the Government had been correct in the way it was attacking the deficit and if the deficit was really the prime preoccupation? Of course the financial markets should have manifested their confidence in the leadership of the Government of Canada, with the value of the Canadian dollar rising and with interest rates going down. These are the signs of confidence. Instead, the fact is that the dollar has gone down and the interest rates are staying up. That is happening not only because the international financial community and the Canadian financial community realize that the Government has gone overboard, but because the Government is also basing its Budget on false assumptions. That is a very serious charge, and I would not lay it if I did not believe it. It is a charge to which the Government must put up a defence, not send out its Members in massed ranks with pre-canned speeches for simple regurgitation in front of the House, which does no credit to them or to the House of Commons.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Tell the truth.

Mr. Parry: I am telling the truth, and that Hon. Member had better get his place on the list so that he can answer some of these charges. Predicating the oil price $22.50 per barrel when it is presently sitting in the $15-$16 range is misleading the Canadian public. We know that the Budget measures mean that for every dollar the price of oil stays below $22.50, the Government will lose $200 million. This means that there will perhaps be a budgetary shortfall of $1 billion to $1.5 billion which will turn up next year and which the Government will try not to explain. Similarly it is predicated upon the assumption that the interest rate will be at 9.5 per cent, which again is unrealistic at a time when it is 12.5 per cent. What we really have is a degree of fraudulence in the Budget. Canadian people are being misled, not only by the measures which constitute an attack on them, but also by the fact that the Budget predictions and projections are not founded on sound information.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your tolerance, and I thank the House for the time. There is much more I should like to say, and I hope to say it when Hon. Members on the other side rise and question me when the House reconvenes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

STATEMENT MADE BY OFFICIAL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last week I drew your attention to the fact that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) wants to censure his officials in their contacts with the public. The Minister says that in the past officials made public statements outside their area of expertise and caused public confusion.

Today I would like to put fully on record the case where one of Canada's leading experts on toxic chemicals, an employee of Environment Canada, spoke about toxic chemical contamination to which we, as a society, are subjected. The Minister disowned this official.

Shortly after the Minister's remarks, the Royal Society released a report which called the Great Lakes the most contaminated body of water in North America, confirming many of the official's earlier remarks.

The inevitable conclusion is that it is the Minister who is speaking outside his area of expertise. Perhaps he should be muzzled for his own safety.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S WEEK

CRITICISM OF EXTERNAL AID TARGET

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today we begin International Women's Week. I stress the international dimension of this week and the opportunity it affords to assess the condition of women at home and around the world.

The Nairobi Conference, in calling for increased development assistance for women, recognized the key role women play in Third World economies. Canada endorsed the Nairobi recommendations, yet the Government, which had already abandoned the UN goal of 1 per cent of GNP for development assistance, has now abandoned its own goal of 0.7 per cent by 1990 and replaced it with a "well, maybe" 0.6 per cent by 1995.

Cuts to Canada's commetment to development assistance, cuts that will most severely impact on women in the Third World, are nothing short of shameful.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

SUGGESTED MEASURES TO COPE WITH GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, we in the riding of Kent are preparing to fight the highest lake water levels ever this spring.

We are not condemning Departments of Government for the high water, or other members of society, nor are we condemning God for excessive rainfall and low evaporative conditions, but we continue to wonder if the International Joint Commission would implement all the insignificant decisions that are available to man, such as allowing 4,000 cubit feet per second of water to flow normally north into James Bay; and negotiating a temporary increase of another 4,000 cubic feet of water per second into the Chicago sewage diversion. If another 4,000 cubic feet per second were allowed to move over Niagara Falls by lowering the Grass Island Pool, and perhaps another 2,000 or 3,000 cubic feet per second through the Welland Canal, we wonder if this, totalled together, would amount to something significant to give even a little relief during these temporary times of high lake levels.

We must consider every possibility, no matter how insignificant, to attempt to bring Lake Erie levels down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT FORGET COMMISSION BE EMPOWERED TO INVESTIGATE CASES OF FRAUD

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words today about a very troubling aspect of unemployment insurance.

Last week we heard to our astonishment that unemployment insurance investigators had discovered an insurance fraud of $800,000. It is a fact that cases of unemployment insurance fraud are being discovered almost daily. We have been told that more than $3 billion is lost annually in this way.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore ask the Government to give the Forget Commission the authority to investigate fraud—a mandate it does not have at this time—in order to give the Commission the kind of access it needs to get at the very root of this problem. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Commission of Inquiry be given the necessary tools to re-organizate the Unemployment Insurance system—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The 60 seconds are up.

ENERGY

DECLINE IN PRICE OF CRUDE OIL—IMPACT ON EAST COAST PROJECTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has estimated in its Budget that oil prices will be $22.50 In reality, the price of West Texas intermediate crude is now $13.26 U.S. That is the price on which Canadian crude oil prices are based. The Government of Canada was warned when it cancelled the PIP that it was going to destroy exploration and production in the offshore, in the Beaufort Sea, and to some extent, given the current fiscal regime, in the tar sands. That is becoming a reality.

On the weekend a report by Deacon Hodgson of Calgary and Toronto estimated that the industry will lose $9 billion in revenues this year and it will be impossible to find the money in the current fiscal regime for the tar sands or the offshore. I want to bring to the Government's attention the fact that it has destroyed the best chance for regional economic development in Atlantic Canada, by killing Hibernia and destroying the offshore of Nova Scotia. I ask the Government to take immediate and appropriate measures to give these important projects in Atlantic Canada a chance for life.

IMPACT ON AVERAGE FAMILY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has taken exception to NDP estimates of the tax hikes his Budgets have imposed on the average family of four. Mr. Speaker, we used conservative estimates. A 3 per cent increase in federal sales tax adds $450, higher taxes on oil and gas add $250, higher personal taxes add $385, higher UI premiums and lower family allowance payments add $125, and higher taxes on alcohol and cigarettes add $95 over the three Budgets.

I do not know how much the Conservative Budgets have cost hard-drinking, heavy-smoking, coast-to-coast truck drivers. I doubt if there are any left to ask as they have probably all gone bankrupt.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

SUCCESS OF SASKATCHEWAN'S KINSMEN TELEMIRACLE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend Saskatchewan marked its tenth annual Kinsmen Telemiracle. For the second year in a row this 20-hour television extravaganza raised over $2 million for the benefit of disabled residents of Saskatchewan.

Saskatchewan residents have long been recognized for donating more on a per capita basis to support world-wide relief programs, but this latest outpouring gives credence to the old adage that charity begins at home. We have long recognized the important contribution of the Kinsmen association, but I would also like to acknowledge and salute the people of my home province who, in spite of tough economic times, recognize the need for continuing support of this very worth-while project.

ACCEPTANCE IN REGIONS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to listen to what the regions have to say about the latest Budget.

The day after the Budget Speech, local television and radio stations commented as follows and I quote: "The Wilson Budget will not harm the regional economy but will have a positive impact."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, this Budget will have a positive impact on the economy of Abitibi-Témiscamingue, since each economic sector stands to benefit from the concrete and effective measures it contains.

For the mining industry, tax benefits that are essential to investment have been maintained. For the agricultural sector, a financing plan is being introduced that takes into account the income volatility in this sector. Finally, as a result of the tax incentives in this Budget, the small business sector, which plays such an important role in creating jobs, will benefit from increased investment by Canadians and see its tax rate drop from 15 to 13 per cent.

Another factor of particular relevance is that the tax on gas was not increased, a fact much appreciated in remote areas.

Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of reception this Budget received from the regions, which found it to be a balanced and responsible Budget.

EMPLOYMENT

PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKER ADJUSTMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, unemployment tragically affects the lives of far too many Canadians each and every year. Those hit hardest by work shortages are men and women over the age of 40 who have families and loved ones to care for. Fortunately, thanks to the progressive policies of the Government, these people have new hope.

Together with promoting a healthy economy that led to the creation of over 40,000 jobs for older workers last year, the Government announced in last week's Budget a new, innovative program to help older unemployed people find work. The $125 million Program for Older Worker Adjustment will provide immediate assistance to older Canadians who find themselves out of work because of plant closures and lay-offs. The Program for Older Worker Adjustment is further evidence of the Government's commitment to providing caring and responsive social assistance to those who need it most.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEED FOR LARGER WINDSHIELD WASHER RESERVOIR CAPACITY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, no Canadian automobile manufacturer offers a windshield washer reservoir of capacity equal to our winter's combination of slush and salt. The present reservoirs seem designed for winter somewhere between Atlanta and Sacramento. Why can't Canadian manufacturers offer a large reservoir, equipped with a gauge as an option? In normal snowy conditions one cannot drive from Toronto to Montreal without filling up the reservoir at least once.

As well, why does the washer fluid sold in Canada, and marked on the container "good to 40 degrees below zero", freeze into an impenetrable glaze on a cold windshield?

The Canadian consumer is paying up to $3 for a four-litre container of this stuff and it is sometimes even more expensive than even gasoline, if that is possible. Yet it is largely coloured water. How many accidents have been caused by our automobiles being equipped for someone else's winters? Why can't we have standards from the Department of Transport or—

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MINISTER'S MEETING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and provincial Ministers of Culture are meeting today and tomorrow in Montreal on a number of critical questions for Canadian cultural independence. Film production and distribution, and publishing, are the most urgent matters and both require federal-provincial co-operation if Canada is to have a mature and truly distinctive culture.

The provincial Ministers have grudges that Telefilm Canada money is not easily available outside Montreal and Toronto, and access must be assured. However, no amount of increased production of Canadian films will be worth the trouble if Canadians do not get a chance to see them, and distribution is a provincial matter.

I urge the provincial Ministers to act promptly and vigorously on the recommendations of the task force on film distribution. The provincial Departments of Education have a strategic role to play through their purchasing policies as well. They must say no to retreads posing as Canadian content with a few Canadian pages slapped on. The publishers must support real Canadian content, with authors producing their work here. Again I call on the provincial Ministers to be energetic—

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, once again Canadian men and women are being threatened by a strike at Canada Post. The Letter Carriers Union says it has been without a contract for two months and has threatened to go off the job if no agreement is reached on wage conditions and job security.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents are sick and tired of paying for the corporation's bad management. They are sick and tired of paying for abnormally high absenteeism among its employees. My constituents in Saint-Colomban, for instance, fail to understand why they cannot have a decent Post Office, since as taxpayers they are paying the bill for this mismanagement.

In his February Budget, the Minister of Finance clearly demonstrated that the Conservative Government is determined to deal with this problem. Canada Post is to prepare a new operational plan that will increase productivity and efficiency and improve the reliability of its service.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all Canadian taxpayers are prepared to support this Government and not give if there is a strike by the letter carriers, who in any case ought to prove they are efficient before making strike threats.

SUPPORT FOR MEASURES TO RESTRAIN EXPENDITURES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, at last we have a Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who believes it is time to pay our bills and stop borrowing to pay for excessive spending. The country has been awash in red ink for the past decade. Prior to 1975 Canada's fiscal structure was one of the soundest and best managed in the industrial world. Reckless spending by the previous Liberal Government made it one of the weakest. Now we have a Minister of Finance who is implementing financial restraint.

Runaway spending has been brought to an abrupt halt. Total spending for the year ending March 31, 1986, will increase by less than 3 per cent, well below the 3.9 per cent forecast last May. Excluding interest payments, there will have been a zero increase in spending this year, a remarkable achievement. Canadians know the Minister is on the right track, and they will give him unstinting support.

SIZE OF PROGRAM EXPENDITURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday I drew to the attention of the House the substantial cuts made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the regional economic development spending envelope. However, when one looks more closely at the various cuts to the various Departments contained within this envelope, it becomes more disturbing.

Seven programs in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have been cut, and the cuts are somewhat staggering. For the IRDP the cut is 80.74 per cent. Under the heading "Transfers and Contributions" it is 34.3 per cent. Under the Defence Industry Productivity Program it is 5.8 per cent. Under the Shipbuilding Industry Program, it is 17.4 per cent. Under contributions to non-profit and commercial operations in support of tourism there is a 17.6 per cent cut. Native people in this country have received a 48 per cent cut. It is very clear and very evident that the Government is not concerned with regional economic development anywhere in the country, whether it be British Columbia or Atlantic Canada.

OIL PRICE AND INTEREST RATE PROJECTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in the House the Minister of Finance virtually admitted that his assumptions of oil prices and interest rates had been made because of printing requirements and did not reflect reality. My question to him is due to the fact that the projections on oil prices and interest rates are out of date and do not accord with reality. Would he be willing to table in this House more accurate up-to-date projections so that we would have a better grasp of the real deficit and other projections of the Budget in current terms, so that the country would have a more up-to-date picture?

Mr. Broadbent: Don't hold your breath, John.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me advise the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the year has not started. It starts in about four weeks' time. Second, Michel Belanger, the Chairman of the National Bank of Canada, who probably knows quite a bit more about interest rates than the Hon. Member behind the Leader of the Opposition, said in an interview over the weekend:

Short-term interest rates at 9.5 per cent struck me as being realistic.

As far as the oil price assumption is concerned, I commented on that last week. I said that there would be an immediate downward impact on revenues from oil and gas companies, but an upward impact as the effects of this were felt through the economy, and the balance was slightly in favour of increased revenues for the Government of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Nice dream, Michael.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wonder whether the Minister will be able to give us an up-to-date quotation from Mr. Yamani of Saudi Arabia on his oil projections.

DIVISION OF FISCAL BURDEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In his two consecutive Budgets, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has cumulatively increased by 27 per cent the tax load to be carried over the next four years by the average family earning $15,000 a year, whereas over the same four years a family with an annual income of $200,000 will pay only 2 per cent more in taxes. In the opinion of the Minister, is that a fair way to distribute the tax load so as to control the public debt?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the Member's attention to a document that is called Social Justice, A Record of Achievement. This is the record of achievement of this Government in introducing fair social justice measures in this Budget, and in previous Budgets, in order to provide people, particularly low-income Canadians, with some of the assistance they need. There is the change put forward of increasing the child tax credit—

Mr. Orlikow: They don't believe it for a second.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —the acceleration of the child tax credit payment; the refundable sales tax increase that was introduced in this Budget; the direction—

Mr. Orlikow: They know you are not telling the truth.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —of $100 million to help those Canadians who are on social welfare get back into the job force. These are fair measures that have been introduced in this Budget. These are fair measures of which this Government is very proud.

REFUNDABLE SALES TAX CREDIT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I think the House is beginning to take note—and I am sure the country is—that the new style of the Government in responding to any questions in this House is not to respond to the question but to come up with a prepared line having very little relevance to the particular question posed. My final question—that is just a remark, Mr. Speaker, to allow you to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. Just a question, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my third question to the Minister of Finance is this. Why do not all Canadians below the poverty line get the $50 sales tax credit while everybody who is eligible for a capital gain gets a $500,000 exemption, which is a $125,000 lifetime bonus?

● (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear that the refundable sales tax credit is a model on which we wish to build in future Budgets. We have chosen the $15,000 threshold as being a reasonable level which we should introduce and gain some experience from it, and from there build in future Budgets.

Let me comment here from "In search of Robinhood", which states: "Most of Mr. Turner's Budgets did not maintain relative income positions—".

Ms. Mitchell: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: Irrelevant. Order.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): "—They benefited highest income families and our lower middle-income—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it seems obvious to me that the economic fallout from the Budget of our Minister is disastrous.

So what is he going to do today, tomorrow and this week to strengthen our dollar which is still very weak, even at 2 o'clock this afternoon?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of commentators from the Canadian private sector who have indicated in a very forthright way the support they have for this Budget, that we are on the right track, we are getting the deficit down, we are setting the stage for lower interest rates. We have a record of performance in the creation of 580,000 jobs which shows that this Government's policy, in its comprehensive form, is doing the job of getting the country out of the doldrums it was in under the previous Government, and moving on to greater heights. That is the direction of this Government and we are going to continue along those lines.

Mr. Johnston: It would be good to get at least one answer this afternoon.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Let me try again, simply, without any preamble. The Minister remembers that he led us to believe that everyone—

Mr. Speaker: Is that not a preamble?

Mr. Johnston: Well, I suppose it might be considered as such. Will the Minister agree with the statement he made in this House just several weeks ago that interest rates would fall immediately after his Budget? And will he assure Canadians who are suffering from these crushing taxes that their suffering will not be compounded by a further increase in interest rates this week, and that we will start to see the fall in interest rates which he promised?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the rhetoric used by the Hon. Member indescribing these taxes as "crushing taxes" is totally inappropriate. Let me read from the Hon. Member's Bible, the Toronto Star: "A key message in Wilson's Budget was that if we want these programs, we're going to have to pay for them. That is not unreasonable". That is the message of this Budget. We have to get back to a little bit of fiscal sanity.

Mr. Gauthier: Come on, Mike. Just table the document.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is something which the previous Government did not understand. It is something we understand, and something which Canadians understand.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I have my doubts about that.

CONFIDENCE INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The average taxpayers do not like the Budget and foreign investors have also turned thumbs down on the Budget. The dollar fell again today.

My question to the Minister is very simple: Would he tell the House of Commons who has condidence in this Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are a wide range of Canadians who have been quoted—could I read, Mr. Speaker, from a number of—

Miss MacDonald: Sure.

Some Hon. Members: No.

An Hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have a large number of Canadians who have been quoted as saying they support this. Yes, there is a tough message. I have never denied that there is a tough message here.

Mr. Broadbent: That's not the question. Deal with the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The message that Canadians understand, and the message which they support, is that this is a necessary Budget. It is a Budget which is necessary to get on top of the problems we have been left with—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It's unfair.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and it is a Budget which is going to get this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The answer is becoming a speech.

OFFSHORE INVESTMENT BY CANADIANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the average Canadian certainly does not like it, and whatever businessmen may be saying to the Minister they are doing something else with their dollars—they are investing them outside the country. The Minister should be aware of that.

Considering that the figures released by Statistics Canada on Friday show that last year there was a net investment abroad by Canadians of $4.9 billion, which is a 20 per cent increase, or a worsening of the situation over the year before, will the Minister acknowledge that these long-range investors are expressing non-confidence in the Government's economic policies?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that creates jobs, that is, investment—investment in new facilities and investment in new equipment. Some 580,000 jobs have been created since September, 1984. The Hon. Member surely understands that the reason these jobs have been created is because of the massive investment that has taken place during this period of time—investment that has been related to the increasing confidence of Canadians in the policies of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

SIZE OF OFFSHORE INVESTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there was a time when the Minister actually answered questions. I wish he would return to that practice.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I just answered the question.

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that there was a 12 per cent increase of investment in Canada in the past year, and an outflow increase of 29 per cent, will the Minister be candid with the House and acknowledge that it is the outflow investment increase of 29 per cent—or $4.9 billion—which is the main structural problem with the Canadian economy? Speculators understand that, which is why they are investing abroad instead of in Canada.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying which states that statistics can lie—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: They're your statistics, your figures, fella!

Mr. Gauthier: You're the expert, Michael.

Mr. Rodriguez: You're really original, Mike!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please? Will the Hon. Minister complete his answer briefly, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member a very brief answer.

The Hon. Member has displayed great adeptness over the months at being able to fiddle around with apples-and-oranges comparisons.

Mr. Broadbent: They're your figures!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He is using my figures, yes. But he is twisting them around in the most distorted way I have ever seen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CRUDE OIL PRICE FORECASTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Finance would be interested in some statistics which do not lie. The price of west Texas intermediate crude, on which Canadian oil prices are based, has dropped to $13,26 U.S. a barrel. Canada earns more than $7 billion selling oil to the U.S. What will be the cost to the Canadian Treasury, and the effect on the Minister's projected deficit, given that the Budget's projection of $22.50 U.S. a barrel is totally and wildly inaccurate?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the fifth time this question has been asked.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The price goes down every day.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The very wise Leader of the Opposition is saying that the price goes down every day. What does that do to the economy, he asks.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What does that do to your projections?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will tell the Hon. Member what it does to the economy. It increases the spending power of Canadians. It increases the competitiveness of Canadian industry. That creates economic growth, which generates a great deal of revenue for the federal Treasury, revenue which will offset the drop in the price of oil. So there is a two-way street here and, as I have said on many occasions, there is a balance which is slightly in favour of the Treasury of Canada as it relates to taxes.

Mr. Speaker: Questions and answers are becoming longer. Just a question, please.

EFFECT ON OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Finance agree with the assessment of Deacon Hodgson that Canada's oil and gas industry will lose $9.1 billion in revenue this year and that financing for tar sands of offshore development will be impossible to acquire under the current fiscal regime? Can the Minister give us an answer for a change, rather than rhetoric?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to answer the questions of the Hon. Member on many occasions. I say to him again: Yes, there are some negatives as a result of the price of oil. I have never denied that. With his very blinkered-like approach to the subject, the Hon. Member ignores the benefits of lower oil prices. Could he answer this question for Canadians who are watching? Why is it that members of his Party have been pressing for lower oil prices? The big reason is because lower oil prices benefit consumers. It will give them more money to spend on other things that will generate economic activity and will generate—

INVESTMENT ABROAD—EFFECT ON EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Does the Minister of Finance deny that the 1985 net outflow of investment capital was $4.9 billion and that this outflow detrimentally affects the value of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have a note here which indicates that net long-term capital outflow is a plus, or an inflow of $400 million, and net short term is plus $1.1 billion. That amounts to $1.5 billion in total inflow.

STATISTICS CANADA FIGURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister to require of his officials that they review the Statistics Canada figures released on Friday last because those figures clearly show a net outflow of investment capital in 1985 of $4.9 billion? When the Minister finds out that we are telling the truth, will he at least accept that our numbers are accurate?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did make a mistake. The net long-term capital inflow was $3.9 billion, the net short-term capital inflow was $700 million, making a net inflow of $4.6 billion, not the $1.5 billion that I thought it was.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

AMOUNT OF LAPSED FUNDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. How can the Minister claim in his Budget that the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program is a great success when the budget of that program has lapsed $226 million? Here is a program which was first announced last February, and then last June. The reason given for the lapses was that component parts of the program were not ready. What kind of success is that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to respond by talking about the success of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. In six months alone, some 14,000 projects are now under way, involving thousands and thousands of Canadians. The Hon. Member asked about lapses. Lapses have occurred over the years, and at the height of the recession, at the very time when unemployment was at its highest since the Great Depression, the Liberal Government lapsed more than $650 million.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question. The reason given by officials in her own Department was that the programs lapsed because they were not ready.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question.

Mr. Allmand: I will be willing to enter into a debate with her about what happened a few years ago, at any time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now, please.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, how can the Miniser rely on a program that is only half finished to help the 700,000 youth unemployed described by the Senate as a new lost generation? My figures indicate that this program has only created 26,000 jobs since last June, and that is no record at all. How can that help those 700,000 young unemployed?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the programs under the Department of Employment and Immigration are particularly directed toward young people. There is the Challenge '86 Program for the summer. There is the Job-Entry Program throughout the year. In total, with all programs from this Department, some $700 million has been directed this year toward programs involving some 218,000 young people, 40 per cent of the total budget of the Department.

EFFECT ON WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who chose to increase economic inequalities for women in the Budget. Does the Minister admit that the Budget will have a disproportionate impact on women who will suffer more from the tax increases because their incomes are lower, and who will also lose more jobs and more services as a result of the very drastic Public Service cuts? Did he not conduct a study of these very serious inequalities that he has imposed on women?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I totally reject that allegation. We have taken a number of major steps forward in the budgetary area that particularly help women. The increase in the child tax credit and the acceleration in the child tax credit payment—

Ms. Mitchell: Only the very poor.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): She says that it is not enough. We would like to do more, Mr. Speaker, but we have done an awful lot more than any Government in recent years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The change in the refundable sales tax credit, and the opening up of pension plans to part-time workers, which is of particular importance to women in the labour force, are major steps forward that the Government has taken.

REFUNDABLE SALES TAX CREDIT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, why will the Minister not admit that his Budget pushes more women and children into poverty, particularly those half million in the $15,000 to $20,000 bracket, and that the refundable tax credit about which he raves is only for the very poor and will not even pay for last year's sales tax increases, much less cover the loss in the indexation of family benefits which the Minister also imposed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the statements of the Hon. Member are totally false, and I listened to what she said—

Ms. Mitchell: They are not false. How can you say that?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): She is being critical of me because I have directed in this Budget—

Ms. Mitchell: Women are being critical of you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to listen and talk at the same time. I think the Hon. Member should listen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Mitchell: You should listen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have said before that Hon. Members who ask questions should allow the answers to be heard. Order, please. The Hon. Minister will finish briefly.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is criticizing me for doing something to help the very poor. I am very proud of doing something to help the very poor. That is what this Government is all about.

GOVERNMENT TAX POLICY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance not agree that, as a result of the last two Budgets, the Conservative Government has, by deliberate tax policy, widened the gap between the rich and poor in society and that, by lowering the benefit levels to $15,000 for the refundable sales tax and the prepayment on the child tax credit, there is now a new Conservative definition of poverty?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I totally reject the allegation of the Hon. Member. We have done two things in this Budget that are helping the people who are below the poverty line, the acceleration of the child tax credit and the introduction of the refundable sales tax credit. I have indicated that these are both initiatives that we want to watch and learn from, and perhaps in a future Budget we will be able to enhance them. Why is it that the Hon. Member cannot congratulate us for these progressive, innovative new changes in budgetary policy?

POVERTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Finance now telling us that his Government has a new definition of poverty which will condemn nearly 300,000 poor families to conditions that are even worse?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the most outrageous distortion of a good policy initiative. There has never been any new—

Mr. Frith: Three hundred thousand families.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is very hard when the Hon. Member asks a question and cannot stop asking it once he takes his seat. We have indicated very clearly that there is no new definition of poverty here. What we have said is that, within the limited resources that the Government has, we have introduced two major new initiatives to help those people in low-income brackets, the low-income sales tax credit and the acceleration of the child tax credit payment, both of which have been—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

YOUTH

DUTIES OF MINISTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the Government took office, some $100 million has been cut from youth expenditures. Now the Minister of State for Youth seems to be in the process of disappearing. Will the Prime Minister tell the House what are the duties of the Minister of State for Youth who has neither program nor budget?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in point of fact, as a result of the initiatives of the Minister of State for Youth—

Some Hon. Members: She is gone.

Mr. Mulroney: —youth unemployment since September, 1984, has declined by almost three full percentage points.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: She has disappeared with them.

Mr. Mulroney: As the Minister mentioned, 580,000 new jobs have been created. The Minister of State for Youth and all Ministers are collaborating to ensure that even further jobs are created.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT TO YOUTH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not think that it might be useful for the youth of the country, much less the House of Commons, if he answered the question? Where is the indication of commitment to youth, seen as necessary as a result of two task forces, in this Government? Is it manifest in the kind of support it gives to the Minister of State for Youth who has neither program nor budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, nothing could better indicate the difference between a socialist and a conservative. When he is talking about programs for youth, he is thinking of a bureaucracy, and we are thinking about jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: That must be an all-time low.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): If you don't need her, why keep her?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL GRAIN PRICES INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. My constituents have expressed concerns regarding the United States Farm Bill and the probable effect it will have on the initial price of wheat. There is a good deal of concern and a cloud of uncertainty hanging over the farm community in western Canada these days. What can the Minister indicate to the House regarding initial grain prices for the 1986-87 crop year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very serious situation. Everyone who understands the U.S. Farm Bill, and particularly what the European Community is doing as far as subsidies are concerned, realizes that we face a very difficult situation. The Hon. Member should know that in Europe, for instance, the subsidy on wheat is over $100 per tonne, and on barley it is something like $130 per tonne. We find that very difficult to compete with. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that we are facing the issue and we will do the very best we can. We expect to be able to announce initial prices at the usual time, which is some time at the end of March or the beginning of April.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DECLARE MONTREAL A DESIGNATED REGION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Government likes to take credit for creating thousands of jobs in Montreal. Is the Minister of Finance ready to recognize that his Government is responsible for the loss of tens of thousands of jobs in Montreal and why did he not declare Montreal, especially East Montreal, a designated zone in his Budget, as many people had asked him to do?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure from where the Hon. Member is getting his statistics. Since September, 1984, 70,000 jobs have been created in the city of Montreal. I believe that that is 13 times greater than the jobs created during the course of the previous Government. As far as Montreal is concerned, the Hon. Member is very much aware of the fact that we have said that we want to discuss the possibility of creating an international banking centre for that city. That is something of which I think he would be very supportive.

CREATION OF JOBS IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance seems to believe that the Banking Centre, which could eventually create 35 jobs in two years, is not the answer, but, and my question is very specific, what concrete action will the Minister take now to help the former workers of Bombardier, Vickers, Lafarge and La Fonderie who, in spite of the figures quoted by the Minister, are now unemployed and waiting for concrete action to be taken so that they may find employment in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must understand that jobs are created by a healthy private sector, a private sector which is investing and growing because it has confidence in the direction of the policies of the Government, as has been demonstrated by the 70,000 jobs created in the Montreal area. That is what will make the number of jobs grow, not a lot of bureaucracy in Ottawa trying to dream up ways which have been proven not to work under the previous Liberal administration.

EFFECT OF GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Tourism. The Canadian Automobile Association survey revealed that most Canadians who vacation by car are shortening or cancelling their trips because of high gas prices. Eighty-six per cent of them say that the price of gas influences their travel plans. Now that the Canadian price is 40 per cent above the U.S. price, comparing Fort Frances, Ontario, with International Falls, Minnesota, half a kilometre away, what will the Minister do to help the tourism industry, and indeed Canadians to see their own country?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the concerns of the Canadian Automobile Association. In fact I met with the Association approximately a week ago. I do not think Canadians are as gloomy as is the Hon. Member. A Gallup poll was just released indicating that one in five Canadians across the country will be going to Expo in Vancouver. Most of them will be driving, so I think Canadians have a lot more faith in the Government and in our economy than has the Hon. Member.

ATTENDANCE OF EASTERNERS AT EXPO 86

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Referring to the same survey to which the Minister in categorizing me as gloomy made reference, it showed that 10 per cent of eastern Canadians would attend Expo. What will the Minister do to increase that percentage?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the most positive thing the Government could do to increase the percentage of Canadians travelling in Canada this year is to keep interest rates down, and that is exactly what we intend to do.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does he agree with the statement reported this weekend, made by his former adviser, Mr. William Mackness, to the effect that our dollar would be stronger if our interest rates were lower and closer to American interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the levels of the dollar and of interest rates are very closely intertwined. We have indicated in the past that, as we achieved a greater degree of stability in the exchange markets, which seems to be coming back this week, we will be able to see lower interest rates.

Mr. Deans: What? Seems to be coming back this week!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am quite confident that the 9.5 per cent interest rate projection in my budget document is a fair projection and, as I indicated, is supported by people in the private sector, including Michael Bélanger, President of the National Bank.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

EFFECT OF BUDGET MEASURES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. He said a moment ago that he was very proud to help the very poor and that that was what his Government was all about. I want to ask him about what he has provided for the handicapped in the Budget. He offers a small increase in a deduction which he says will benefit 185,000 people. Why does The Fiscal Plan show at page 42 that, for its first full year of operation, that deduction will cost the Treasury nothing?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have done a number of things to help disabled people. First, we increased the deduction in the last Budget and in this Budget. Second, we broadened the definition of who qualified for the disabled deduction, and that was a major expansion. Third, we said that we would spend $100 million to help those on social welfare to find jobs. Many of those people are disabled. We are trying to help them become more self-reliant. Those are three major changes in the Budget which are very important improvements for the disabled.

SITUATION OF THE HANDICAPPED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the statistics of the Minister show that the cost is exactly zero.

I would like to ask him why, if he really wants to help the handicapped, he did not introduce a credit instead of a deduction so that more handicapped would benefit more and those who have lower incomes would have the same benefits?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond to the question about why it was not effective in 1986-87. The effects of the change in this tax year will be felt in the next tax year as the tax return comes in. That is a specific answer.

Mr. Kaplan: It refers to 1986-87.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member wishes to ask me another question on it, I would be happy to respond.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood.

HEALTH

EXPOSURE OF WORKERS TO CIGARETTE SMOKE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He will be aware of a report obtained under the Access to Information Act showing that employees in nearly all offices under federal jurisdiction are exposed to smoke pollution at unacceptable levels, causing very high numbers of death from lung cancer. Why is the Minister of Health not working to bring in legislation to give adequate protection to employees under federal jurisdiction? Why is he instead suppressing the information that shows just how high is the level of risk?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First, Mr. Speaker, this Minister is not suppressing the information. The information that was received under Access to Information was in draft form. I have full intention of releasing it. Second, we are looking to publishing it in a scientific journal. That will be done.

I think the Member, if she is fair about it, knows this Government and this Minister have been very active in the area not only of passive smoking but of smoking generally. We want to reduce its incidence.

The report, I think, verifies many of the things that the Hon. Member, I, and others have said. In terms of legislation, possibly the Member should just be a little patient for that.

SMOKE-FREE OFFICES—ECONOMIC SAVINGS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns another study obtained under Access to Information on the effects of smoke. Will the Minister concede the number of millions of dollars which these studies show could be saved by bringing in smoke-free provisions?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I am not quite clear to which study the Hon. Member is now referring. I can tell her that when people look at the revenue Government receives from tobacco taxes, that figure, even though it is high in terms of the Budget, is considerably lower than the loss in revenue in health care and other tangential costs, not to mention productivity costs.

If the Hon. Member has another study in mind, I wish she would be a little more specific about it.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED PRACTICES BY OFFICIAL AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Recent publicity alluding to improper practices by Immigration officers at Toronto International Airport have raised serious concern about the immigration process at the airport. Could the Minister comment on these alleged practices, and assure the House that they will no longer continue?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member says, these comments are alleged. I will treat them as allegations.

I want to assure the House, however, that such practice is not the policy of the Department of Employment and Immigration. If anyone has any evidence to the contrary, I wish they would present me with it and I will ensure that anything of that nature is stopped forthwith.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, officials of the Minister's own Department have admitted to various of the news media that that practice has happened and that management has condoned it.

Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately cause an investigation to be established and, if those practices are occurring at the Malton International Airport and elsewhere, will she see that they are stopped immediately, rather than saying they are simple allegations and expecting that they will go away by themselves?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has any evidence of any wrongdoing of this nature, I wish he would give it to me forthwith and I will see that it is stopped.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION FOR DISAPPEARANCE OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to know why the Minister of State (Youth) learned of the disappearance of all her youth programs in the estimates, without even getting a direct signal from the Prime Minister. Is that another example of the influence of youth, women and Quebecers in the Prime Minister's Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. In those three cases indeed, the Hon. Member is—inadvertedly no doubt—misleading the House. In the three cases she referred to, the answer is altogether different.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF DUTIES OF MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if in that case, there are no programs left under the Minister of State (Youth), I would like to ask the Prime Minister what the responsibilities of the Minister of State (Youth) are now.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, but wait! There is nothing to be lost by waiting. The fact is that our prime responsibility is not to build up a new bureaucracy. Our first obligation towards youth is to keep creating permanent job and this is exactly what we are doing. But have no fear concerning youth. This will be linked in due time not only with other programs, but with very important initiatives that will create more jobs for our young people.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. U.S. Ambassador Niles said last week, referring to the Cruise:

> There was no danger in the tests to anybody. Sometimes they don't work, that's why you test them.

Does the Minister support the impropriety of an American official announcing a resumption of testing over Canadian territory before we have even had a report on why the last missile crashed?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen all the report. I do not know what Ambassador Niles said.

As I indicated in an answer to the Hon. Member's Leader, the Canadian Government has to be satisfied as to the reasons for that crash. Once it is satisfied, the terms and conditions of the agreement entered into by the previous Government will be honoured.

REQUEST THAT MISSILE BE TESTED OVER UNITED STATES TERRITORY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the cause of the second crash appears to be mechanical, pretty fundamentally mechanical, would the Associate Minister of National Defence tell the Americans, that from here on in, they should go back to the drawing board and then test or retest their Cruise missile over their own territory until at least they get the mechanical bugs out of it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to have some information that is not available to me or to the Department of National Defence—

An Hon. Member: It would not be the first time.

Mr. Deans: That is nothing unusual.

Mr. Andre: —in that he seems to know what the reasons for the crash are.

Mr. Broadbent: We assume it was not God's will.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The path for the test was chosen very carefully. There are all kinds of safety mechanisms to ensure Canadians and Canadian property are not damaged and are safeguarded. Those precautions remain in effect. I do not think there is any reason for the Hon. Member to try to scare Canadians in this regard.

INQUIRY IF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS IS RESPONSIBLE FOR CORPORATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada this coming Thursday will be legally in a position to strike. The Minister of Labour has refused to appoint a mediator; this past week-end, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stated in Western Canada that postal employees would go on strike at their own risk, because they were being threatened with privatization. Could the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tell me whether he is still responsible for Canada Post?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that he is a little behind. A mediator, in the person of Mr. Bill Kelly, has been assigned to assist the two parties. Mr. Kelly was assigned at the joint request of Canada Post and the Letter Carriers Union.

POSTMEN—ALLEGED PRIVATIZATION THREAT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): This past week-end, Mr. Speaker, was the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans threatening postal employees with privatization? Was he speaking on behalf of the government?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I learned long ago not to comment on what could be attributed to the press because nine times out of ten the press happens to be lacking in accuracy.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING WITHOUT RIGHT TO STRIKE MADE BY MEMBERS IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Eighty six per cent of all RCMP personnel in Quebec have voted for collective bargaining without right to strike, as suggested by the Association of 17 Divisions. Could the Minister assure RCMP personnel in Quebec that he is not going to oppose this essential request?

LABOUR RELATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Charter of Rights grants all Canadian men and women the freedom of association, and also the fact that the RCMP is the only—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: A question, please. This is a preamble.

[Translation]

Mr. Robinson: —why does the Minister insist on maintaining this parternalistic approach to labour relations?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Hon. Member, who comes from a Party that purports to speak for working people, has not listened to the expressed wish of the majority of members of the RCMP.

The Hon. Member should know that, across the force, the divisional representatives who are elected by the rank and file, oppose unionization.

Instead of showing contempt for the wishes of the vast majority of members of the force, members of the New Democratic Party should be supporting their views.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FUNDING OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will he dispel the confusion that was created last Friday by way of his reply to the Member for Laurier, and admit that the amount of money which he indicates will be available for research and development already exists and is not an addition to the budgets of the research and development community across the nation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be careful about the questions he asks. The budget was clearly reduced by the previous Government. We were left with a bubget which was decreasing for those three granting councils. We have reinstated the amount of money to the previous level and have provided for an additional 6 per cent matching increase if the private sector wishes to support these programs. The way in which we have done this allows for a growing integration of the efforts of both the private and public sectors, which will result in much better research and development.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in a dilemma. I am in receipt of notice of a question of privilege and a point of order which an Hon. Member has indicated he is prepared to present later. The House indicated that it was going to adjourn at this time. Therefore, we are under a House order. We will, therefore, honour that House order and I will recognize the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) at 4.30 on a question of privilege arising out of Question Period.

Pursuant to order made Thursday, February 27, 1986, this sitting is suspended until 4.30 o'clock p.m. at which time the House will proceed to Government Orders, subject to my previous comments.

At 3.02 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 11009).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and a pleasure to have the opportunity to say a few words on the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I was home on the weekend and I contacted a good many of my constituents from all walks of life, including doctors and businessmen. The general consensus was that, although no one likes to pay taxes or have their taxes increased, it was a pretty good Budget. We had been promised a pretty tough Budget and a good many of my constituents were gratified that it was not even more serious.

Canadians realize, and the people in my riding have been saying the same thing, that we have been trying to spend ourselves into prosperity. That is impossible. Most of us are aware that we have to live within our means, that we cut our coat according to our cloth.

Mr. Attewell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt my colleague and friend, but the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) spoke for 20 minutes and I would like the opportunity to reply to some of the statements he made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Speaker has already ruled on this matter and the decision was that if the Member is not present when the House resumes debate, there will be no period for questions and comments.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I was speaking about the great amount of money that we owe and the fact that our deficit is such that something has to be done about it. All Canadians realize that we do not want to become another Mexico or Argentina with huge debts and spiralling inflation. If we are going to do something about it, then we have to bite the bullet. The Minister of Finance has gambled that Canadians will accept the tax increases which are aimed largely at the middle-income taxpayer, as part of this great fight against the deficit.

There has been a great deal said about the load being placed on the middle-income earner. According to the NDP the middle-income earners are going to be a thing of the past. I think that with this Government and this Budget the middle-income people might become a thing of the past by moving one step higher into the lower echelons of the higher-income groups. I also think the great majority of people known as the middle-income earners know that they have to dig down in order to pay this deficit off. The previous Government, which was responsible for the huge deficit we have now, did not tax people as much as it should have and everyone, in whatever income bracket, benefited from that.

One of the things I know a good many people are worried about is the fact that our children and grandchildren should not be saddled with a huge debt which will be a millstone around their necks. It is up to us to see that we share in the attempt to cut that huge deficit.

Prior to the Budget, business leaders, economists and a good many of our news columnists were saying that this Budget must be tough. Some of them went so far as to say they wanted the Minister to announce tax measures and spending cuts totalling as much as $10 billion. While many of us feel that this might be a very sound Budget, it would certainly put a tremendous load on the average taxpayer, which we certainly did not want to do.

It is interesting to note that our total deficit is around $225 billion. That figure has been bandied around by many speakers here today and it is probably well within the range. However, The New York Times, one of the most prestigious newspapers in the world, as well as one of the most quoted, stated the day after the Budget came down that the Canadian deficit for this year would be $225 billion. I am quite sure that this created some shock waves not only in the U.S. but on money markets and with economists around the world. This probably had a detrimental effect on our dollar. It is the U.S. deficit for this year which is around $224 billion, which is about the same as our total debt.

The Minister of Finance is hoping that through the various tax measures and expenditure cuts we will be able to get the biggest bang for the buck. Rarely does a Government commit itself to such clear-cut and long-range plan for handling the coffers of the nation. The Budgets of May, 1985, and February, 1986, are a testament to the constituency of this Government. We have put our cards on the table for all to see, which is yet another anomaly in Government circles. In tune with our philosophy, from the outset this Budget will help to restore fiscal integrity. It will make Government more effective at less cost and will encourage private initiative.

This administration inherited a hodge-podge of problems from the Liberal Government, the most notable of which was blatant financial mismanagement. The deficit and the national debt are soaking up much needed capital to service interest payments on the debt. As we are all aware, it is understood that one dollar in every three dollars collected in taxes goes to service the national debt. Based on the old accounting system the deficit for this fiscal year will be down over $3 billion from the year before to $33.8 billion. From there this Government sees a deficit of $29.8 billion next year and reducing down to $22 billion in the 1990-91 fiscal year. Putting the brakes on our debt is probably the most positive signal that Canada could send from sea to shining sea.

As the world sees our Government program with expenditures reduced to levels prevalent in the 1960s, as a share of the economy, confidence will increase and investment in Canadian goods will follow. Virtually no Government expenditure has been left unscathed from the Finance Minister's frugal rapier. All federal Departments and all non-statutory programs have been implicated in cost-cutting measures. Members of Parliament and Senators will have a $1,000 slice cut from their salaries. I believe that was probably the most popular item in the Budget. I would also have included a lot of the grand mandarins and deputy ministers who make a lot more money than Members of Parliament, and in all probability put in about half as much work time as most Members of Parliament.

While some tax increases have been introduced in a humane and careful fashion, fully 70 per cent of the deficit reduction measures will emanate from reducing expenditures. This Government also intends to shop for suitable buyers of Crown corporations. For instance, Teleglobe, Canadair and Eldorado Nuclear are on the block for perspective purchasers. The $500 million special reduction in non-statutory spending for the 1986-87 fiscal year is equivalent to 2 per cent of the cost of those programs. This will reduce operating costs for all Departments on an ongoing basis, as departmental spending may not exceed 2 per cent per year following 1986 and 1987.

Departments will also be encouraged to increase productivity and realocate funds to absorb increases in their costs. These initiatives will save the taxpayer $850 million next year, and will amount to $2.8 billion in 1990 and 1991.

It is abundantly clear that this administration is planning for the future. It is most refreshing and encouraging to see a Government setting its sights beyond the next election in the best interests of the people it represents. At the same time the Government is showing a considerable amount of courage by facing the economic music. The previously untouchable Canada Post has been ordered to come up with a new plan of attack to reduce its operating deficit to nil while it improves service. This may be an almost impossible task, but certainly it will give it something to shoot at. Let us hope that under the direction of the new President and Chief Executive Officer, Mr. Donald Lander, this will take place, or at least there will be a major step in that direction. I will admit that Post Office bashing has been a very popular Canadian past-time. This Government would rather work with Canada Post in an earnest effort to bring the Crown corporation into line. As a Member of Parliament from a rural area I know that from among the criticisms that come to my desk against certain Government departments those against the Post Office probably lead the way. I will admit that a year or so ago I think it was running a close second to the Department of National Revenue, but that is no longer the case.

Also, in the interest of reducing the red ink in Canada's bank book, we will reduce the amount of foreign aid expenditures. Increases in our foreign aid commitment will be shaved by $1.5 billion over the next five years causing our contribution to grow at a slower rate than is currently the case. Let me emphasize that there will still be an increase in foreign aid each year, but not as great. Those increases are targeted at 8.7 per cent per year, to remain at .5 per cent of the Gross National Product. It is expected that our contribution will climb to .6 per cent by the middle of the 1990s. There will be absolutely no doubt about Canada's willingness to continue playing our role as a team player on the international stage. Growth and defence spending will also be curtailed by 1 per cent in each of the next two years. I would remind budgetary critics that these are not cut-backs, they are smaller increases than have been the case in the past. The Government's decision to reduce the rate of growth in defence spending will save the taxpayer about $285 million.

With the myriad facts and figures inherent in the budget process this Budget is about people. The heart-wrenching plight of low-income Canadians is frequently the focal point for Government planning and decision-making. More assistance for low-income families resulted from the increased child tax credit introduced in the May, 1985 Budget. In the past, the poor have been forced to wait for their credit until their income tax returns have been processed and returned. As a result, many tried to expedite the process by paying tax discounters to give them a partial payment before the tax return was filed. In an effort to prevent this from happening the Government is proposing to pay the child tax credit in advance. The $300 repayment per child will be paid in November of this year to families with a 1985 income of less than $15,000. Need I say more about the fairness of this Government?

The shining success of this administration includes the follow-through on our promise of jobs and more jobs. The turn-around in the rising rate of unemployment has been astounding. There are many people in this place who have played a role in bolstering job creation across the country. The Government is being commended from all sectors for creating 580,000 jobs since the September 1984 election. Eighty-one per cent of those jobs, let me emphasize, are full-time jobs. Some statistician figured out that that came to one job every 90 seconds.

In my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka where employment opportunities drop markedly during the winter months, the situation was improved considerably. This winter there are 500 fewer people drawing unemployment insurance benefits, and some businesses have been able to retain employees normally laid off at this time of year. In my home village of Burks Falls I was speaking to the manager of the oldest company there, Thompson Heyland, and I asked him how things were there. That plant usually has a regular workforce of about 80; they have 100 now and are looking forward to providing summer work for a good many students. That is certainly welcome news. The administration has created an average of 30,000 jobs per month since it came to power, compared with a meagre 7,400 jobs per month created by the Liberals during their heyday. This means we have created, as I see it, a job every 90 seconds. It is notable that 580,000 jobs have come about in a mere 16 months, while it took the former Government about 55 months to create just 406,000 employment opportunities.

Canada's employment rate of 9.8 per cent is the lowest it has been since 1982. The Government is turning all the right screws to get it even lower in the future. It would seem that the sterling job creation abilities of this Government are undeniable. The tragic rate of youth unemployment has also decreased from 18.3 per cent to 15.9 per cent. This is certainly something we do not want to brag about but which is certainly an improvement. The rate is still much too high and steps are being taken to bring the rate down and correct the situation.

There have been 43,000 new jobs opened up since the last election compared with the loss of 283,000 jobs for youth under the Liberals' guidance. University, community, college and high school students stand to benefit from the new Challenge 86 Program this summer. The business I mentioned earlier in my home village will hire 10 students. It is no wonder that employers across Canada are sitting up, taking notice and taking advantage of the summer youth program.

The federal Government has set aside $210 million for the purpose of helping students find work this summer. Last year Challenge 85 was a great success and secured some 101,000 jobs for students. The Challenge 86 Program invites provincial and municipal Governments as well as businesses and non-profit organizations to use the program to their best advantage. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has assured us that Challenge 86 is not just another make-work program to keep students busy. She has clearly delineated the difference between mere activity and wholesome productivity. Her program is designed to create career and learning-related summer jobs which may be of great use in the future. Priority will be given to students to fill the 25,000 jobs available through the 1986 census as well.

While the Government is tackling the problem of high unemployment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I would like to ask him to conclude his speech, please. His time has already expired, but he may conclude.

Mr. Darling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, let me emphasize that this Budget is certainly going to do a great job of putting Canada back on the rails. It is going to cut down the deficit. It is going to provide more jobs. I am certainly pleased to commend the Minister of Finance for the great job he has done.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, first, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) on his comments. I think they are heart-felt. However, when he talks about how this Budget is going to tighten the screws on certain things, I think what he probably means is that it is going to tighten the screws on the low-income earners and those who can least afford to pay.

The Hon. Member mentioned in his speech some concerns he had about the Post Office. I wonder if he could clarify to this House, since we have been recieving a number of mixed messages, what the position is of the Progressive Conservative Party or of the Government on the Post Office? Do they believe in a universally accessible postal system? Do they want to privatize it, or does the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) want to come in like the Canadian Rambo to tell the postal workers how this Government sees things? What is the position of the federal Government on the Post Office?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for that question. I would say that I hope that the Government's position on Canada Post is to have a post office that will deliver the mail within a reasonable time. I am well aware that there are targets and I would think that it is an improbable target to have Canada Post made self-sufficient within two years, so I am not saying that at all. However, the Canadian people feel that they should receive better service from their post office. A good number of years ago, the railways were carrying a lot of the mail. I was in business for a great number of years and I knew that in my own home village of Burks Falls, if I posted a letter by one o'clock in the morning—because I used to put my mail right on the train—it would be delivered in Toronto on that very day. So we are all hoping there will be much better service.

I am aware that it is a necessary service and that it is going to be pretty hard to make it a profitable service without increasing the rates even more than they are now, and they are too high in the view of a lot of people.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked this specific question of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) is that, obviously, he represents not only urban centres but also a number of scattered rural areas which cannot necessarily be guaranteed a mail delivery if we were to move toward a private system. This is my concern and I think one which I would like the Hon. Member to address. If in fact threats made by certain Ministers of the Government about privatization were to be carried out, does the Hon. Member believe that not only Burks Falls but a number of small rural areas in his constituency would receive full delivery service, or would the service be concentrated on the major urban areas like the City of Toronto and the City of Hamilton?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I must agree with the Hon. Member that certainly it would not be a profitable business for private carriers to deliver the mail in rural ridings. In my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka there is only one town in the entire riding which has street delivery of mail. The rest of the mail goes through the post office. I am also aware that the population is scattered, as it is in a great many of my colleagues' ridings. Certain Members of Parliament and, I suppose, prominent Ministers, have made statements that they would like to see the Canada post privatized. We all have certain ideas and dreams. That is not my view, but I believe it is the responsibility of the Government to try to do something to see that we do receive better service.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member about another element of the Budget. I think it is an element about which he has expressed a concern. That is the decision in the Economic Statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of November of 1984 to prevent early retirees from collecting unemployment insurance. I am referring not only to those who work for the Armed Forces, those who fought in some of our wars such as the Korean War, but to those who worked in private companies like Black & Decker, who found themselves sent out to pasture when the company closed down and who now find they are faced with a double whammy because they cannot collect unemployment insurance. Would the Hon. Member tell us whether he was disappointed, as I was, when the Minister of Finance failed to address this important question in his Budget?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, again, in reply to the Minister's question—

Ms. Copps: Thank you.

Mr. Darling: —I should not really have given the Hon. Member a promotion which, I am sure, she will not receive for some little while. I think the Hon. Member made one wrong move—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): She should have stayed in Queen's Park.

Mr. Darling: That is right, because there is no doubt that with her ability, she would have been in the front benches, but she is going to have to wait a long time here before she gets there.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question, there is no doubt that there are a good many Hon. Members on all sides of the House who have grave concerns. The Hon. Member is well aware that there is a task force, the Forget task force, which has been looking into that matter. I would be less than honest if I did not say that I have received probably a couple of dozen letters from constituents who are very disturbed and unhappy about the very situation she has mentioned. As has been mentioned by Members opposite, some prominent members of the Cabinet have voiced their concerns regarding this matter.

The Hon. Member has a valid point when she emphasizes especially those people who served in the Armed Forces. What the Hon. Member did not mention, and what I will mention, is that these people did not retire voluntarily. After 20 to 25 years of service they were given the golden handshake, and that was it. So I certainly share the Hon. Member's concerns with respect to that point.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the Hon. Member thinks about certain Crown corporations, including Canada Post, that allegedly misled early retirement beneficiaries. These are people who took early retirement after being invited to do so by Government corporations that promised they would receive unemployment insurance benefits, although in 1984, the Government's economic message made it quite clear that unemployment insurance benefits for persons other than those who had earned them would cease as of January 5, 1986.

What does the Hon. Member think of Government institutions that misrepresented the facts—there is no other word for it—and urged people to take early retirement while promising them benefits they knew they would not receive?

[English]

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, in reply to my colleague's question, I will repeat what I said before. I have very grave concern for those people who were presented with this misrepresentation. I hope in cases such as this that the industries will take a second look and try to work something out. Again, I would like to repeat that we are hoping that the Forget Commission will come up with an acceptable solution. It will certainly be helpful to those who are feeling the hardship now.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have received notice of two questions of privilege. We will deal with them in the order in which I received them. First, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

ALLEGED SLUR AGAINST MEMBER FOR BOURASSA

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During Oral Question Period this afternoon, when a Liberal Member was asking questions, the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) said to the Speaker: "Question! Question! Question! Question!"

I then said to the Hon. Member in question: "Arrête de niaiser", which means "stop fooling around" in English, and then the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) just behind me said to me: "Cool it, you mafia mafioso!"

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) seems to think this is amusing, but I think it is insulting to people of Italian origin. We do not accept that kind of thing. Mr. Speaker, in this House we respect all ethnic groups. My hon. colleague for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and my hon. colleague from York West (Mr. Marchi) clearly heard what was said.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage I wonder whether these are his personal views or the views of the Hon. Member's party, when he uses the words mafioso and mafia in connection with people of Italian origin.

On this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, we respect all ethnic groups, and I think we should respect each other's origins. I will not stand for anyone using the words mafioso or mafia just because a person has an Italian name. Every ethnic group should be treated with respect.

I therefore ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his words, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the allegation of the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) concerning what he alleges I said during Question Period. If the comments are in the "blues", then I might consider whatever it is he might be requesting. However, if those comments are not in the "blues", then I question what motivation he has in raising this matter. Knowing that he was a former police chief, he may be well versed in the art of intimidation, which is what I consider his question of privilege to be. However, knowing the Chair's concern for civility in the House I will await a decision in this regard.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Order. What is this?

Mr. Rossi: Are you the Speaker?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Are you?

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I will not stand for those remarks about policemen either, because the police corps I belonged to is known as the best police force on the American continent, and I will never stand for any Member of this House using the words mafia or mafioso. Even if it is not reported in the blues, Mr. Speaker, there are three people who heard the Hon. Member back here. And speaking on behalf of people of Italian origin, I will not tolerate anyone calling someone a mafioso.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take the matter into consideration and a ruling will be issued as soon as possible.

The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on a question of privilege.

APOLOGY FOR ABSENCE FROM HOUSE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence and with the indulgence of Hon. Members, I rise on a question of privilege to offer my apologies, particularly to government Members, in that I was not back in my place at 4.30 p.m. when the House reconvened in order to answer questions or receive comments on my speech made with respect to the Budget. This arose because I attended the memorial service for the late T.C. Douglas. I would never wittingly make a speech in this House which I was not prepared to defend. I apologize to Members who sit on the Government side that I was not here to receive any comments or questions which they might have had.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 11009).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the budget debate. What I truly regret is that there is so little to be said that is positive about the Budget. After hearing the reaction to its first Budget, I had hoped that the Government would in this Budget make changes to repair some of the damage done. I would much prefer it if I could congratulate the Government for having closed the gap it created between the haves and the have-nots in our society, or if I could see any evidence of a coherent economic plan showing that the Government has a realistic and workable agenda for economic growth in Canada. Unfortunately, I can do neither.

What we have in the Budget is essentially more of the same—middle and low-income families and individuals are saddled with yet more taxes piled on to the taxes they are now paying from last year's Budget, while the wealthy and corporate sector emerge virtually unscathed. Why did the Government choose to repeat itself in this way? Is it because it sees an easy source of revenue in its tax grabs from middle-income Canadians, a sure-fire source of funds which it is just too tempting not to exploit? This may be part of the reason the Government has turned again to the average taxpayer for two-thirds of the revenue it expects to take in this year.

There is also the appearance, and I trust I am wrong in this regard, of a kind of cynical gamble in what the Government is doing by piling on the taxes and spreading them out among many taxpayers regardless of ability to pay. Does the Government hope for resignation and acceptance of these measures without the emergence of an organized opposition? In this context the sales tax rebate for those who earn less than $15,000 per year, the prepayment of the child tax credit for those in the same category, and the increase in the disability pension will offer some relief. However, these measures will not come close to compensating these groups for what they will lose through higher taxes and deindexation.

We can choose to look at these minor proposals as signs of the underdeveloped Conservative social conscience or as cynical attempts to stifle potential sources of opposition to the Government's discriminatory tax increases.

When we compare the Government's two Budgets, we see that the Government is increasingly dependent on the middle-income taxpayer as a source of tax revenues. Even with the small relieving measures in this Budget, a single parent with a $15,000 income and two children will be paying over $300 more in taxes as a result of the Conservative Budgets. Money such as this out of the pockets of taxpayers will enrich government coffers by nearly $3 billion extra by the end of the decade and at the same time, revenues from corporations will decline to less than $300 million. The kind of fairness there is in a Conservative Budget is $3 billion from individual taxpayers and $300 million from corporations.

As I mentioned earlier, both Budgets were also similar in their disturbing lack of a vision for the future. In the second Budget, there is as well the very clear indication that so far as deficit cutting is concerned, the means justify the end. It is quite all right according to the Government to tax the life and spirit out of the middle class in order to produce the right set of numbers. I would question whether the end justifies the means.

In this Budget there is a reassuring picture of a deficit just below the magic $30 billion figure. It is built on a set of very tenuous assumptions, and if the world does not unfold as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wishes, the picture will be seriously distorted. The Budget assumes that oil prices will be $22.50 per barrel. This appears to be somewhat optimistic as posted prices at this time are well below that. For each $1 per barrel fall in the price of oil, the Government loses $110 million in revenue.

The Budget also assumes an interest rate of 9.5 per cent, again perhaps an overly optimistic forecast. The Budget has so far failed to rally the dollar, and we know that the Minister of Finance is quite willing to induce higher interest rates to defend the dollar. Therefore, there are two scenarios that could scuttle the Government's deficit-cutting picture and jeopardize our economic growth.

The Government should consider the consequences of the action it is taking by leaning so heavily on middle and low-income Canadians. These people know very well that they are bearing the brunt of the Government's war on the deficit. In fact, to many Canadians, it feels more like war on the middle-income family. Just as Government expenditure cuts have an effect on Public Service morale, it is certain that repeated tax increases hitting primarily at middle and low-income taxpayers and bypassing the wealthy and the corporate sector will have a similar effect. We saw some vivid examples of this on The Journal on budget night.

Canadians at middle-income levels from whom the Government is extracting a disproportionate amount of tax revenue are showing signs of despair. They ask why they should keep on trying to make better lives for themselves and their children if the Government is constantly after them, first for a few dollars, then a few dollars more and a few dollars more after that. I am convinced that Canadians are willing to take a share in helping to bring the deficit down, but the Government is unfairly wringing revenue from middle-income Canadians and making little or no demands on others. This is clear for all to see and the Government should not think that it can continue to take unfair advantage without meeting some repercussions.

Also carried over into this Budget from the first Budget are many examples of confusing double-talk and disturbing signals. I have mentioned how the Government seems to have taken the easy way out by relying once again on tax grabs to raise revenue. This is not only unimaginative but it is confusing when at the same time we hear rhetoric about the so-called tough decisions the Government has had to make.

We were told that this Budget will restore vitality to the economy. We would all like to see more growth in the economy but by taxing away more and more of Canadians' disposable income, surely we are more likely to see the opposite. Consumer demand and spending money creates jobs. When people have less to spend, they are more likely to forgo or defer purchases.

The Budget Speech says that Canadians can have confidence, a decidedly odd assertion because by taxing away so much of taxpayers' purchasing power, the Government has said that it has no confidence in taxpayers, or perhaps I should say no confidence in the average taxpayer. After all, the Government has left unchanged the no-strings capital gains tax exemption for the wealthy on the basis that it trusts well-to-do Canadians to make investments benefiting Canada. However, the treatment is not the same for those people as it is for the middle and low-income earners. The middle and low-income earner gives up consumer decision-making power because of tax increases and then is admonished to put his or her confidence in the Government.

The Budget also makes much of the funds it is allocating to certain areas including the $75 million for cultural initiatives and the $300 million over the balance of the decade to the Medical Research Council, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. What is not stated in the Budget is that the agencies involved are in great need of these funds and more because of cuts previously made by the Government since it came into power. In culture and communications, for example, over $122 million was cut. This Budget replaces $75 million of that.

The Budget contains a long rationalization about Canada's role in the world community which was meant to make the $1.4 billion cut in foreign aid sound like an increase. However, the facts are clear and no matter how much travel the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does around the world, it is quite clear that our foreign aid is not being increased.

There are a number of other things in the Budget that are nebulous. For instance, the Minister of Finance has often said that 70 per cent of the reduction of the deficit represents expenditure cuts and 30 per cent comes from tax increases. However, when we look at these expenditure cuts, we see that much of it is in forecasts. For example, looking at the Estimates, we see that about $2 billion will be cut from reserves. Reserve money is money to be used in case of emergency but it is money that the Government really does not plan to spend. Taking that away is not a saving of $2 billion.

There are other smoke-and-mirror tricks that are done by assuming that certain growth and expenditures would happen based on the 1984 figures. When the Government introduced its first set of Estimates last year, they were the highest ever. This year, we have Estimates which are 4 per cent above those of last year. Granted, we were told in the Budget Speech that a further $500 million would be trimmed off those Estimates, but we do not know where. Presumably it will be related to the Nielsen Report which we are expecting on March 11. However, that raises another set of questions. Why has it taken so long to let us have that report?

In the budget papers there was no mention whatever of youth, and the budgetary estimates show no programs in the youth Ministry. Last year, being International Youth Year, there were some moneys but there was much more emphasis on public relations. Apparently the Minister's office and role remain, but there are no programs to be administered. Are we to assume from this that the Government will be conducting some public relations about youth but has no real programs to assist in the area of youth unemployment?

Earlier I mentioned the foreign aid cut. There was some modification to that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced that some outstanding loans would be converted to grants. However, the fact still remains that Canada's commitment to increasing foreign aid has been postponed for several years.

We are now in the third year of recovery from a particularly cruel and harsh world recession. For 18 months of that recovery period, the Conservative Government has been in office. We are now reaching a point where traditionally one might expect some kind of cyclical downturn. Has the Government faced this? I think there is an indication somewhere that the Minister of Finance recognized this as a scenario. If it is, how does he justify the emphasis on tax, tax, tax?

A well-known commentator writing in The Citizen stated that the Finance Minister "does not look like a riverboat gambler, but his Budget is a political and economic gamble more suitable to a double or nothing card shark than to a man who looks like a bank accountant or a Sunday school superintendent. By piling taxes on taxes, it is a fiscal plan which risks touching off a national revolt against rising taxation". I would also add that the gamble in piling on taxes and in reducing consumer demand may indeed assist in touching off a recession. Tax increases at a time of economic slowdown can slice into the ability of the economy to produce revenues and can create problems which are at least as bad if not worse than the problems of the deficit. In spite of all the Minister's brave words about reducing expenditures, he presents us with a Budget which is really based upon tax, tax, tax and spend, spend, spend. It is a gamble which may come off; it is also a gamble which may bring very difficult results.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I just heard the closing remarks. I had taken several notes here to support my comments aimed at the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). But I heard the closing remarks about "spend, spend, spend" and "cents, cents, cents". I wonder whether she recalls another remark that was made by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he said: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". And I think that in French we could use the same words: "Jobs, jobs, jobs", even in France. After the allegations she just made about the Minister of Finance, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Trinity to comment on the fact that since we came to power in 1984, 580,000 jobs have been created in Canada, and the unemployment rate has come down below the 10 per cent mark for the first time since 1982. I would like her to comment on those results when she uses the word "gamble". I would like to hear her comments on those results they are not the product of a "gamble", but are very factual results.

[English]

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we are in the third year of recovery, and of course jobs are being created.

Mr. Lanthier: Bravo.

Miss Nicholson: Jobs are not created by Governments. They are created by the economy, by the free market sector, on which the Hon. Member's party lectures us so much. If this Government were not in power, if it were a Liberal Government in power, I would fully expect that the employment creation rate would have been very much better than what we have.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Nicholson: I do not think that to achieve under 10 per cent in the third year of recovery is anything of which to be proud. An unemployment rate of under 10 per cent translates into a lot of very unhappy people. I see them in my constituency office every day. It is no comfort for them to be told that the Prime Minister says that there are 400,000 new jobs out there. They are having difficulty finding one. To be sure, the unemployment situation is not as cruel as it was in the depths of the recession, but it should not be. We should have made a lot more progress by now.

As we come out of recession, many employers have found that they can manage with fewer people. We are not seeing the same kind of rapid increase in job creation, and the jobs which are being created now are very selective. Highly trained, well educated or highly skilled persons can easily obtain jobs. Unskilled persons and young people are having extremely difficult times. There is no reason for any of us to be complacent about the employment situation. To be sure, it is better than it was during the recession, but there are still many Canadians who badly need someone to be concerned about them and their future employment situation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's speech was niggling on the Budget, but she referred to oil prices in part of her speech. She should know that the Economic Council of Canada conducted a study on oil prices, taking the figure, for example, of $19 U.S. per barrel. It indicated that that was a plus in terms of improvement of national productivity, in terms of wiping out the deficit by at least $5 billion in that reduction by 1990, and in terms of more employment. The fact is that there are more users of energy than there are producers. While we lose some taxes in what we collect from the energy industry, we pick up taxes and investments in jobs, particularly in central Canada.

Speaking to that whole issue, because the real issue is jobs, could the Hon. Member give her Party's forecast on the loss of jobs? In November she will recall that her leader said we would lose 200,000 jobs as a result of the November 1984 Economic Statement, and she will recall the finance critic for her Party saying that we would lose 100,000 jobs as a result of the May Budget. She will also recall that the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) said we would lose 55,000 jobs as a result of the May Budget.

Can the Member give her forecast as to how many jobs this terrible Budget as she calls it will cost the country?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member had two questions, the first one having to do with the effect of oil prices. I would agree with the Hon. Member in the long term, and I believe this is what the Economic Council said, that lower prices for oil stimulate our economy, with all the desirable results that he has mentioned. But in the short term, lower prices for oil will take away a lot of revenue from the Government on which the Government is counting in its Budget.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we are both right. The long-term results of a fall in oil prices are certainly desirable, but in the short term the Government's projection of reducing the deficit based on the figures quoted will not work.

About employment, many jobs were lost as a result of the November Budget. One has to look at the fact that even though new jobs are being created, an awful lot of jobs are being lost. In the Ontario manufacturing sector, for a start, there has been a very high job loss. Some of the new jobs being created are not jobs with the same quality.

For example, in one town heavily dependent upon the steel industry that I know of, hundreds of unionized steel workers who were fairly high earners, lost their jobs. Some have jobs now but they are at $4 an hour. There is a lot of this kind of exchange going on and many part-time jobs are being created.

The other thing one has to remember is that the Statistics Canada method of recording the labour growth, admittedly the same way it is used internationally, does have some problems in it. Anybody who has worked for one hour in the last month is regarded as being in the labour force and employed. People who have not sought work in a certain period, I think it is also a month, are not counted as being in the labour force at all.

Until such time as the international way of keeping employment figures improves, there will be a lot of disguised unemployment, and these raw figures do not indicate the quality or the permanence of jobs. That is a factor that concerns us too.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I know how difficult it is to criticize a Budget like this which is so good, so fair and so equitable, but I was interested in the last remarks of the Hon. Member when she said, in a blanket kind of way, that this Budget is one of tax, tax, tax and spend, spend, spend.

I would invite the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) to look at the figures. She will see that the additional revenues being raised are quite modest considering the debt that has to be repaid, which debt was built up over the Liberal years of Government. There is something like $1.5 billion in new revenues on a base of about $70 billion with only a 2 per cent increase in taxes.

As for the spend, spend, spend part of her remarks, I would invite the Hon. Member to look at the figures. The annual increase in program expenditure growth over the last four or five years for the Government of which she was a supporter averaged between 10 per cent and 20 per cent. This Budget proposes no growth in program expenditures, no growth. In fact, on the non-statutory items a decrease in spending of about 2 per cent is forecast.

How can the Budget be described as tax, tax, tax, spend, spend, spend? Nothing could be further from the truth.

Miss Nicholson: By the Minister's own admission, taxes are rising by $3.4 billion in the coming fiscal year, by $5.2 billion in the year after that and by $8 billion in the 1990 to 1991 fiscal year. There are the taxes.

As for the spending, I repeat, the Estimates tabled by the Government last year were record high. This year's Estimates have a 4 per cent increase on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments? The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) resuming debate.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am always always pleased to rise in the House, especially to comment on the Budget which was tabled last week and on which I had the opportunity to work for over three months.

There is one thing that always amazes me when I listen to the speeches of Members of the Opposition: I look at the November 1984 economic statement, the May 1985 Budget and the February 26 Budget, and I realize that we have been hearing the same speeches three times in a row.

Among other things, they do not even mention the 580,000 jobs created over the past year and a half. Not a word about the fact that for the first time in Canada's history 129,000 new jobs were created in January 1986. They do not say anything about that, Mr. Speaker.

And yet we can still recall their speeches of November 1984 and May 1985 about a bad economic statement and a bad Budget. Well, had the economic statement and the May 1985 Budget been as bad as all that, there is no way we could have created 129,000 jobs in a single month, in January of this year. It was an unprecedented achievement in Canada. Mr. Speaker,

I would suggest that the Opposition come up with new speeches and change their tune.

Mr. Speaker, we do not hear anything either about the 2 per cent drop in interest rates since September 1984, or the inflation rate which has gone down to the 1971 level of 4 per cent, the first time at 4 per cent since 1971. The best way to draw a parallel with 1971 is to read the Fiscal Plan. Here is something for Members of the Opposition to chew on. Page 36 shows that in 1971 personal income tax as a percentage of the GNP was 7.7 per cent, whereas the projection for 1985-86 was 7.2 per cent.

In other words, the personal income tax-to-GNP ratio will be lower in 1985-86 than it was in 1971-72. Not a word about that, Mr. Speaker, yet these are positive factors which are highlighted in the Budget.

The one thing which has the Opposition running around in circles is that for the first time in 20 years we have a Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who rose in the House and stated: "My year-end deficit will be $33.8 billion." He said that in May 1985, Mr. Speaker. Then in February 1986 he rose again to confirm that this year's deficit will indeed amount to $33.8 billion.

But it is not the first time that a Minister of Finance does not err in his estimates. This serves to prove another point: the economic statement of November 1984 was right on, the Budget of May 1985 was perfectly consistent with the 1984 statement, and the 1986 Budget is the confirmation of the good job done over the past 18 months by the Minister of Finance and this Progressive Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker.

We have taken a deficit which was to reach about $39 billion, and we have first reduced it to $36 billion. It is $33 billion this year and the projections are for less than $30 billion for the fiscal year 1986-87, while creating jobs, and reducing both the interest and inflation rates. Mr. Speaker, I understand that Members opposite have nothing to say. The outlook is good. Unfortunately for the Opposition, the economic climate in Canada is good.

Spending cuts and tax increases will account for 70 per cent and 30 per cent respectively of the deficit reduction. Again, Mr. Speaker, these tax increases are consistent with what we have always preached. First of all, a progressive and across the board 3 per cent surtax for all Canadian taxpayers. Those in higher income brackets will pay 3 per cent on a higher amount than those in lower income brackets, which makes it progressive, Mr. Speaker.

As for the federal sales tax, we are implementing a federal sales tax credit. That is a fine initiative. Hon. members opposite have been very quiet about this. That $300 advance which low-income families will get in November—

An Hon. Member: They are not here!

Mr. Robichaud: One of them is here.

Mr. Vincent: There is no Liberal Member present, and those outside cannot hear us. Sit down and listen to the good budgetary measures, then you may speak about them later. They are afraid of the truth, Mr. Speaker.

Last Thursday, I took part in three open lines and I met businessmen in West Island with my hon. colleague Gerry Weiner. I met also other businessmen in the fine riding of Trois-Rivières and I met the representatives of the Association des contracteurs de la Mauricie. All these people are unanimous, Mr. Speaker! This Budget meets exactly the needs of Canada and responds perfectly to the economic situation left by the previous Government. It is indeed the previous administration which was responsible for this $200 billion debt, and Canadians are aware that they must help reduce this deficit which increases by $35 billion annually. They are aware that the previous administration has created a national debt which is out of proportion and with which we cannot live. Out of $100 billion in federal spending in a given year, $50 billion go for social programs, and $25 billion, thanks to the previous Government, which pay interests on the debt created by that government. That means $100 million a day. I can say that the people in the constituency of Trois-Rivières would be happy to have these $100 million to spend on serious programs rather than on wasteful projects as was the case in the past. However, we have to pay the bill, and this is what we are going to do now, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying that I met with people from Trois-Rivières and Montreal and that all are in favour of the Budget. They all accept that there is a small price to pay and that we have to take care of it now because, in one year, or two or three, it will be too late. We can no longer tolerate that 25 per cent of our expenditrues each year go to pay interests on our debt. The situation is impossible! No business could survive if 25 per cent of its yearly expenditures went simply to pay interests on its debts without repaying even part of the principal. Not one business could survive and the federal Government cannot either.

I have taken part in open line programs where people call to give their impressions. The comments were all favourable. Even low income Canadians are happy with the beneficial measures we have proposed for them. Everyone is happy except the Opposition naturally. That is unfortunate.

I went to a conference and a man told me: "I am a Liberal, but I must admit that your Budget is good. I must admit that it is realistic and serious."

An Hon. Member: Was this in Shawinigan?

Mr. Vincent: In the Sait-Maurice riding. I did not dare to name it before, but I shall do so now. People recognize that this Budget is serious and realistic, even in a constituency which will become Conservative in a short while, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being 5:45 p.m., it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 84(6) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question on the subamendment now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Mr. Riis, seconded by Mr. Parry, moved:

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the Government for its brutal, uncaring and unfair tax increases on average income families while at the same time lowering taxes for upper income families and the corporate sector, and for its refusal to undertake an overhaul of the income tax system to bring about tax fairness and to give Canadians a tax system that they can understand."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Riis), which was negatived on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 4, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Tabling of Documents, I gather that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) wishes to raise a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

QUESTION PERIOD—LENGTH OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yes, I do. It is a point of order which flows from yesterday's Question Period. As the Chair well knows events of yesterday made it impossible for me to raise this point immediately at the end of the Question Period. This is the earliest opportunity I have had to do so.

As Your Honour knows, there is an opportunity provided under the Standing Orders of the House of Commons for Members of Parliament and Ministers to make statements on matters they consider to be important. As a result of a recent statement by Your Honour regarding the Question Period, Members are now being restricted in their preambles to their initial question, as the Speaker has quite rightly said, to one carefully drawn sentence.

I want to raise with Your Honour the necessity to require of Ministers that they not abuse the opportunities which are afforded them in answering, as they see fit, since ordinary Members in asking questions are not permitted to put into the preamble of their questions any statement which relates to that which might be reported in newspapers, in other words, in a verbatim sense, to stand up and read into the record testimonials or questions raised through the media which appear in the press. Equally, it should be inappropriate for Ministers to rise during Questions Period and begin to read into the record selective pieces of propaganda.

Therefore, in the spirit of the new rules, given that Members are now being severely restricted, and justifiably so, in the way in which they preface their questions with a preamble, I ask the Chair to consider asking Ministers of the Crown to desist from referring extensively, verbatim, to documents other than those which relate directly to the question being asked.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to make a brief contribution to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). The matter is one with respect to the length of questions and answers. I have no problem with that. Brevity in questions and answers serves the House well.

However, I draw the line if there is any suggestion—and I do not want to presume something if it is not intended—that somehow the quality of the question or answer is a matter for the Chair's consideration. I think Your Honour has addressed yourself with respect to that matter.

Mr. Deans: There is no quality in any of the answers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If an Hon. Member raises a matter in the course of a preamble it is often the case that a particular contention in the preamble has to be addressed in the answer. Therefore, I suggest that the matter of the length of the intervention is something to which Your Honour can give consideration, and I am sure you are doing that.

I subscribe to the statements Your Honour made a week ago yesterday. I think all Members of the House are in support of the rules which you have set down. If the Hon. Member is raising a question with respect to the length of questions and answers, then I support him.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly join in the discussion in order to tell the Chair that, indeed, we are all very pleased with the number of questions we are getting in. I cannot say that we are always pleased with the quality of the answers we receive. I think the point made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is well taken. When a Minister quotes from the Bible, for example, be it the bible he calls The Toronto Star or otherwise, I think he is well advised to use those statements carefully because we can do the same thing on this side. We can quote from all types of papers that condemn—

Mr. Deans: We would not be allowed to do that.

Mr. Gauthier: We are not allowed to quote, as the Hon. Member says. We are not allowed to do that so why would the Minister be allowed to do it?

Mr. Speaker: Oh, this job is fun.

I appreciate the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain and the interventions which Hon. Members have made. I think I should say this. The key issue has been, and will continue to be, length.

I must say to Ministers that in the context of length it is difficult to imagine that an answer which involves the reading of a long statement from a newspaper is as short an answer as is possible. Perhaps it will be understood by Ministers if I put it that way and they will pursue the course of action which they and the whole House believes is appropriate with regard to length thereby.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a list of Governor in Council appointments, pursuant to Standing Order 103(1). EQUALITY RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO REPORT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), in both official languages, Toward Equality, the Government's response to the parliamentary committee report Equality for All.

Some Hon. Members: Bravo!

Mr. Crosbie: I could go on, Mr. Speaker. This document outlines the Government's detailed response to all of the 85 diverse recommendations which were presented in Equality for All. On behalf of the Government, I should first like to commend the subcommittee for the fine work which it did in consulting Canadians on a wide range of different issues. The views expressed by Canadians were very helpful to the Government in the preparation of its response, Toward Equality.

Toward Equality is an important part of the Government's commitment to equality and social justice for all Canadians. The equality initiatives taken by the Government mean new opportunities and greater fairness for all Canadians in their efforts to find a job, the build a future, and to play a full and equal role in society.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, equality and social justice require that persons be treated on the basis of their own qualities, not on the basis of any stereotypes or other false assumptions.

[English]

To translate that, equality and social justice require—

Mr. Deans: That is not necessary.

Mr. Crosbie: —that persons be treated on the basis of their own qualities, not on the basis of any stereotype or other false assumption. I think that is important enough to make the point in both official languages.

Equality and social justice require that individuals be given a fair chance to make their own way in society and that when opportunities are not fairly distributed, positive action must be taken to ensure that they are. This includes eliminating so-called systemic discrimination.

The initiatives proposed in Toward Equality are a reflection of the commitment of the Government to these principles and a recognition of the needs of many Canadians who are still unfairly and unjustly discriminated against. However, meaningful equality cannot be imposed. We have confidence that the people of Canada will make the most of their own opportunities and allow others to do the same on an equal footing, if the Government provides the right leadership. The initiatives contained in the document I have tabled today demonstrate the Government's commitment to providing that leadership.

We have not waited for the courts to make decisions on all difficult issues, nor do we intend to force Canadians to go to court to find fairness and equal treatment under federal laws or in the federally regulated private sector. In fact, in many areas our equality initiatives go beyond a generous interpretation of the charter requirements where we consider this is necessary to achieve full equality and social justice.

I should like to take just a moment to review some of the measures contained in the tabled document. First, the Government agrees that human rights legislation should, in general, have primacy over other laws. Of course the courts have held in that direction as well. Second, the Government has decided to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act to incorporate the concept of reasonable accommodation, which was requested by groups representing the disabled among many others. We have agreed, as part of the review of this Act, to consider amending it so that it states expressly that systemic discrimination is prohibited. Again the courts have indicated that this is so. We believe that systemic discrimination is always encompassed within the charter guarantees.

As Minister of Justice, I am currently re-examining the Canadian Human Rights Act to ensure that it complements the Charter and is an effective instrument to ensure non-discrimination and fairness in the private sector. It is the Act itself which applies to the private sector. The Government will take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination in relation to all areas of federal jurisdiction. The Government believes in equality of opportunity. Our economic policies are putting Canadians back to work by the thousands every month and are creating hope in every region of the country. Our social policies seek to ensure that every Canadian has a full and equal opportunity to be employed and share in Canada's renewed economic prosperity. We propose the abolition of mandatory retirement as an absolute rule.

The Government is fully committed to expanding the role of women in the Armed Forces and will ensure that women will be able to compete for all trades and occupations in a manner consistent with the requirement of the Armed Forces to be operationally effective in the interests of national security.

Ms. Copps: Oh, yeah!

Mr. Crosbie: I repeat, to ensure that women will be able to compete for all trades and occupations. Already the Government has proposed an employment equity program to enhance the level of participation of disadvantaged Canadians in the workplace. We have acted and will continue to act to extend benefits to part-time workers to ensure that they are treated fairly. We have made a commitment to resources for the Human Rights Commission so that it can actively pursue the implementation of equal pay. As a matter of fact, it is an amount of $500,000 for the next fiscal year. Reforms will be made to the Canadian Pension Plan to ensure that its provisions fully comply with the charter equality guarantees. Of course, two-thirds of the provinces having two-thirds of the population of Canada have to agree to changes in the Canada pension Plan. We have made progress and will continue to take initiatives to ensure barrier-free access for disabled individuals. The Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), who is sitting behind me today, announced on December 10 the steps we will take in that connection. The Government will take measures to ensure that the mentally disabled have full voting rights and equal protection and equal benefit under the law.

There are parallel reform processes presently under way. The Department of Justice is engaged in a major review of the Canadian Human Rights Act and in a long-term overhaul of the Criminal Code. Legislation will be arising out of the Badgley and Fraser report shortly. A commission of inquiry is looking at all aspects of unemployment insurance. The National Task Force on Child Care will report in the spring, and a parliamentary task force has been set up. As I mentioned, consultations with the provinces on pension reform announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) continue and agreement has been reached on a number of those proposals. Employment equity is being tackled with the Employment Equity Act which was introduced and passed recently. Women's pensions have been given high priority and attention. Flexible retirement, I am announcing today, is our intention in respect of federal jurisdiction. In all these areas, including immigration, parallel progress is being made with initiatives which will demonstrate leadership in promoting equality, fairness and social justice.

I believe our response is a progressive initiative. It demonstrates the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who is very much interested in the promotion of equality, fairness and social justice. I trust that all Canadians will join us in the spirit and the letter of the law and that all people across the country share our commitment to fairness and equality in this society and will be supportive of the principles that are being announced which will guide the Government in its conduct.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to express my dismay at the Minister's cavalier treatment of such fundamental questions as equality and non-discrimination. It is just incredible, especially today, during women's week, when we were expecting a detailed report here in the House so that Canadians who are listening can make sure their legislators have acted responsibly and have taken the legislative, not the judicial route.

[English]

The detailed response just presented to us by the Minister, I believe, should have been written by the Minister responsible for sports because it skates around most of the issues. All it has really done is said: "We agree with the Adam Smith equality perception and the free market should determine what should happen to visible minorities, handicapped, women and the native people". It is true that a number of the issues have been covered. For my part, and on the part of the Liberal Party, it is with much regret that I heard the Minister's response and at 10 a.m. this morning received the ministerial document. I have not had time to really review it in detail, but I hope that my detailed review will give me much more hope that the wishes and needs to protect minority rights is more important than majority will. That is what my hope will be as I go through it clause by clause and recommendation by recommendation.

My quick flip of the material from ten o'clock until now has indicated to me more studies, more questions and very few areas of definitive action. I hope I am wrong, Mr. Minister, and if I find I am wrong I will apologize to you personally. Right now all I know is that we spent just under $1 million to do our study and now there are more studies. You had the Katie Cooke report and now you are going out to do more studies on child care. That is totally inadequate and totally unnecessary.

Mandatory retirement is obviously against the law, but have you legislated in that area? No, you have not. Age being a factor of discrimination is now illegal. We must not substitute that retirement policy for a personnel policy, and rights are not an administrative convenience. Decisions must be based on bona fide occupational requirements, not industry standards.

Mr. Speyer: That's what we said.

Mrs. Finestone: That is fine, but were is the amendment? All the Government said is that it is considering the amendment. I did not see, nor has it been written that you are going to present it. You are only going to study it.

The Canadian Human Rights Act should be amended and you have not gone through that amendment. You are studying how to amend it. You have had 14, 18, 20 months to amend it.

I would like to suggest that the "normal" age of retirement as an argument is no longer valid as a defence of the rule of thumb for anyone anymore. Hon. Members on this side of the House are ready to fight for the right of older people to contribute to our society and our country for as long as they are able to contribute. One cannot judge a person's worth based on the factor of age, and that sort of equality has no place in Canada's work ethics. Certainly, women and youth are not the ones who are going to ask you to be concerned about discriminating on age.

On maternity and parental benefits, again there are delays, considerations, studies and inquiries. The Liberal Party believes that we have had enough of these things. The Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended that the Unemployment Insurance Act be amended to ensure that that portion of maternity leave relating to social adjustment or infant care be available to either parent. I really would like to see the Government enforce that recommendation.

As I went through the documents, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that from my reading, what the Minister has said on sexual orientation is absolutely unacceptable. It leaves it totally up to the courts at this particular moment. Referred to our committee was a Private Members' Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I did not see the Minister take action on that Bill. Every brief we heard from people across this land asked for changes on sexual orientation. There is harassment and discrimination whether it be by the RCMP or, the Department of National Defence or industry. Discrimination exists. To deny that reality by talking about security clearance problems for gays is just to avoid the issue and refusing to face your responsibilities.

With respect to women in combat ready roles, the Minister said he is going to look at it in the "interests of national security". All the Minister had to do was to attend the meetings we had with the Deputy Minister who represents the Department of National Defence and listen to the regressive chauvinistic misogyne attitudes to know that that is absolutely ridiculous. In the interests of national security, you are not going to do very much for women in the Armed Forces. It is my Party's belief that sexual discrimination within the Armed Forces is intolerable. Female participation does not have the potential for adverse social and sexual relationships which were alluded to. There is no justification in keeping women out of a paid workforce such as the Armed Forces. Those beliefs were not valid then and they are not valid now. To deny women who wish to serve their country the right to combat ready roles is to deny them the right of valuable training, education and promotion as equal citizens in this land.

The 65 per cent occupation rate open to women which you have talked about, Mr. Minister, leads me to look—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have not wanted to interrupt because I know the Hon. Member is a relatively new Member of Parliament, but I must caution her about all these references.

Mrs. Finestone: You are right, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you. The 65 per cent rate of occupations which are available to women in the Armed Forces resembles the 64 cent to 65 per cent dollar which women are paid in the market place today. I would suggest to you that that inequity needs to be dealt with.

With respect to employment equity, I know quite well that the Government is very proud of Bill C-62, but that Bill will not meet the intended goal of equal opportunities for the handicapped, visible minorities, native people or women. A law which has no mandatory enforcement mechanism is a law with no teeth. For the Minister to come out with a ministerial citation for excellence instead of mandatory operation and enforcement mechanisms is just a laugh. it is a law with no effective force outside of moral suasion.

It is regrettable that the amendments so carefully proposed and considered by my colleagues fell on the deaf ears of our Tory legislators. The grounds really leave me very despondent and upset. I cannot believe that we are looking at a report of this nature which has not dealt with all of the issues in an open and meaningful way. I sincerely hope that the Government will give it some reconsideration as we go through this report and make our observations. I hope that somewhere along the way the difficult task which our committee had to face in reconciling the monumental difficulties which minority people presented to us, the discrimination under which they have to live, will be rectified sooner rather than later. But it is not with this report that we will realize that.

[Translation]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate my fellow members on the Committee of Equality Rights and emphasize that it was thanks to the efforts of Canadian men and women, of groups and individuals across Canada, that the Committee was able to formulate its unanimous recommendations.

[English]

I should like to emphasize as well that it was Tommy Douglas who in 1947 introduced in Canada the first Bill of Rights. Since then, my colleagues in the CCF and in the New Democratic Party, have fought hard for civil liberties and fundamental human rights. Indeed, in reviewing the response of the Government today, headed toward equality, to the unanimous recommendations of the subcommittee on equality rights, it is in that historical tradition and spirit of seeking full equality for all Canadians, in particular those Canadians who have been denied equality, that we approach these recommendations.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the response I felt in a sense that it was a classic response of a Conservative Party. I was pleasantly surprised by a number of the very progressive responses and by two important recommendations of the committee. In a number of other key areas I was disappointed that the conservative element of the caucus and, indeed, of the Cabinet was triumphant.

It was progressive and it was conservative in the best traditions, as I say, of that Party, a Party that on the one hand, through the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, brought forward the first Canadian Bill of Rights, and on the other hand, a Party which has in too many areas been afraid to move forward on questions of fundamental social justice. I imagine that the debates within the Cabinet committee room were fierce and bloody on many of these issues of fundamental social justice.

I want to say without hesitation that if my reading of the recommendations is accurate—and like my colleague the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) I received the report about only one hour ago—then certainly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself deserves considerable credit in the area of social justice for having moved forward on a number of controversial and key recommendations of our committee.

I note it was the Prime Minister who said that because we are children of liberty it is up to us to protect the cause of human rights and minorities wherever they are challenged. Challenge they are, whether it be in the Cabinet room or in caucus rooms, and I know it must have taken considerable effort, strength and determination on the part of a number of individuals, and I suspect the Prime Minister in the area of several of these more controversial recommendations, in getting that kind of consensus that we were looking for. The dinosaurs in the Tory caucus are not dancing today. The dinosaurs in the Tory caucus are deeply concerned about a number of the recommendations that have been made.

All of us in this House deeply hope there will never be combat, but with respect to women and the Armed Forces it is essential that all women have full access to all trades and occupations within the Armed Forces. Despite the fact that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) appeared before the sub-committee and bitterly resisted those recommendations, I am pleased the Government as a whole has overruled him and apparently, at least, is prepared to open all trades and occupations to women. We welcome that, although we certainly express our concern about some of the qualifications that appear to be there.

With respect to the area of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, certainly the statement made in the report appears to be clear and unequivocal. The Government states it will take whatever measures necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibitive ground of discrimination in relation to all areas of federal jurisdiction.

I assume the Government means what it says there, and what the Government hopefully will do, and do immediately, is to put an end to the discriminatory policies within the RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces which have caused such pain, hardship and oppression to Canadian men and women. If that is the intent of these recommendations, we welcome them.

One of the Conservative dinosaurs says "Don't hold your breath." That is what we are concerned about, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the dinosaurs are still attempting to defeat the will of this Government. "Don't hold your breath", the Member said. There are thousands of Canadians who believe the time has come to put an end to discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. I hope the Government will take immediate action on the recommendations as it indicates it will.

Equality for all must be a reality. In the economic sphere, the response of the Government falls short. Women continue to be denied equality whether it be in the area of pensions, part-time work, equal pay for work of equal value, employment equity or child care. What about the women in the Armed Forces who continue to be denied adequate maternity benefits as a result of the response of the Government? The disabled, visible minorities and native people still are not adequately protected in the area of employment protection under the employment equity provisions. It is not good enough to suggest, as the Government has done in its response, that the reporting requirements of Bill C-62 are sufficient to ensure compliance. That approach has been rejected over and over again by the groups who have been hit hardest.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, while we are happy about a number of recommendations, especially in the social sphere, I find it regrettable that there are still too many studies and not enough action by this Government.

Mr. Speaker, equality must be equality for all, not just for those who can afford it.

Of course, there was a serious confrontation in Cabinet and even in the Caucus. Mr. Speaker, the report fails to grant women equality in the areas I mentioned earlier, and especially with respect to pensions, part-time work and employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, I also may point out that equality rights for visible minorities and the handicapped have yet to be granted.

[English]

Our committee worked together and heeded the views, the voices and the concerns of Canadians across this land calling for equality, calling for an end to discrimination on the grounds set out in Section 15 and on the grounds implicit in that section. We said it was essential that Canadians not be forced into the courts to make that equality a reality. While the steps taken by the Government today represent an important first step in a number of key areas, certainly with respect to the fundamental area of economic justice, the Government still has not moved far enough.

We will look forward in the response of the Minister in the coming days to elaboration of some of the key recommendations. Equality for all, while it has certainly been significantly advanced as a result of the response of this Government, will not be a reality until the recommendations and all of the recommendations of the equality rights sub-committee have been implemented.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A copy of this response was delivered to the official critic for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) at 9 a.m. this morning. If he did not deliver it to the Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Liberal Party today, that is not our fault. A copy was also delivered at the same time to the official critic for the New Democratic party. The hon. lady's beef is with the official justice critic of her Party and not with the Government which delivered the report at 9 a.m.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to the proceeding that took place about 15 minutes ago when a message was submitted not by the Governor General but by the Deputy Governor General. It has always been my understanding that as a matter of courtesy Members of this House would stand when a message was delivered—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is absolutely correct.

I received a message, as the Hon. Member will know, verbally. We were informed that the message was coming from the Governor General. The verbal representation made was that it was from Her Excellency. I am afraid it was not until I got to the bottom of the page that I discovered that it was the Deputy Governor General. It seemed to me that the only honourable thing to do at that time was to carry on. The Hon. Member's point of order is absolutely correct.

Question No. 432—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Were tenders called for the acquisition of telephone equipment for Canadian Broadcasting Corporation offices in (a) Ottawa (b) Quebec (c) Montreal (d) Toronto (e) Vancouver and, if so (i) on what dates (ii) were the tenders public or by invitation (iii) what are the names and addresses of all those who submitted tenders and, in each case, what was the amount (c) what was the name of the company or individual awarded the contract (d) what was the final cost of the contract?

2. Was the deadline for tender submissions less than 30 days from the date tenders were called and (a) if so (i) what are all the reasons for a 30 day limit (ii) what is the name and job designation of the highest official who authorized the deadline (iii) did any of the companies or individuals submitting tenders express concern to CBC officials about the 30 day limit (b) if not, what was the deadline for submissions?

3. Is it CBC policy to issue tenders for major projects, representing an expenditure in excess of $5 million, near the end of the fiscal year and, if so, for what reasons?

4. Were these tenders part of a four phase program to upgrade existing telephone equipment and, if so (a) were all considerations given to utilizing the most advanced technology available and, if not, for what reason (b) on what date will the entire program be completed (c) will additional tenders be called and, if so, for what reason?

5. Is this project part of the Federal Capital Recovery Projects Program and, if so (a) on what date was it approved for funding (b) what is the name and job designation of the highest official authorizing the project (c) how many jobs did it create?

6. Did CBC request information for requirements of telephone equipment for their offices in Ottawa, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver on or about September 21, 1982 and, if so, was any action taken on the submissions received and, if not, for what reasons?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (c) Yes. (d) No. (e) Yes. (i) (a) (b) (c) and (e) January 20, 1984.

(ii) By invitation. To determine potential suppliers for upgrading its telephone systems, the Corporation consulted with in-house specialists, obtained information from outside consultants, and, to ensure a non-biased selection, it also referred to a publication entitled "The Interconnect Industry in Canada" published by ICA Telemanagement Inc. Two Canadian telephone equipment suppliers and seven Canadian suppliers/installers of telephone equipment were invited to submit tenders.

(iii) Of the nine potential equipment suppliers invited to tender, five presented submissions. They are:

CTG Telecommunications Systems Inc. (CTG)
144 Front Street, West
Toronto, Ontario
M2J 2L7
Bell Communications Systems Inc. (BCSI)
240 Catherine Street, Suite 405
K2P 2G8

Telecommunications Terminal Systems (TTS)
171 Front Street, West
M5J 1E9

Telecom Canada (Bell)
410 Laurier Ave., West
8th Floor
K1P 6H5

Eastern Independent Telecom Ltd. (EIT)
Box 1509
101 Water Street
K6V 5V6

With regard to the amounts of their submissions, it has not been customary to require the Corporation to provide such details of its internal administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2530 tabled on November 6, 1975. Moreover, most of the bidders, as is normal practice, requested confidentiality of the information contained in their submissions.

(c) Telecommunications Terminal Systems (TTS).

2. (a) Yes.

(i) An RFP (Request for Proposal) was issued via courier on January 20, 1984 calling for tender submissions at noon on February 13, 1984. However, an earlier warning had been given by telephone to the nine potential suppliers on January 17, 1984, which had the effect of extending the notice period from 23 to 26 days. This length of time was considered sufficient for the purpose.

(ii) With regard to the name and job designation of the CBC official who authorized the deadline, it has not been customary for Parliament to require the Corporation to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the names and titles of those exercising their delegated authority. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2530 tabled on November 6, 1975. However, senior officials of both the engineering and supply and services departments were involved in making this decision.

(iii) Yes, one company. This company did not submit a tender although a spokesman had indicated verbally that they intended to do so.

3. No.

4. Yes. (a) Yes. There were, however, two overriding conditions—the product had to be a proven one and it had to be Canadian. (b) The program was completed by March, 1985. (c) No.

5. Yes. (a) and (b) Effective project approval for the CBC's SRCPP project was given at a meeting of the Treasury Board on November 23, 1983. (c) It is estimated that 2117 person weeks of employment were created by this project.

6. CBC did issue a Request for Information (RFI) for telephone equipment at that time, but the RFI was for Ottawa only. No further action beyond the RFI was taken, however, because of other priorities within available capital funding.

Question No. 513—Mr. Rodriguez:

Is the Canadian National Railway remodelling and dismantling part of the MacDonald Hotel in Edmonton and, if so was the work tendered and (a) if so (i) on what date did the tendering take place (ii) how many tenders were received (iii) which firm or firms won tenders and for what amount (b) if not, what method was used to select the construction firm or firms?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

(a) Yes. Remodelling of Hotel MacDonald. (i) The Construction Management contract was tendered in August, 1985. (ii) Five. (iii) Stuart Olson Construction Ltd. was selected.

Demolition of New Wing of Hotel MacDonald. (i) The demolition of the New Wing was tendered by Stuart Olson as part of the Construction Management Agreement. (ii) Six. (iii) Arrow Demolition International Inc., was selected by Stuart Olson.

Canadian National does not disclose financial details of commercial transactions between itself and persons or firms providing services as such would be contrary to our practice and to the rights of those with whom we contract who expect that the commercial confidentiality of their transactions will be respected.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, March 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is with some trepidation that I enter this debate on yet another Budget of the Conservative Government which, rather than giving the country the change in direction for which so many people voted in September of 1984, is continuing with the same closed, unimaginative approach to our economic problems which will leave many Canadians suffering badly from the economic situation we face. This Budget reminds me of the famous book by Farley Mowat, The Boat that Wouldn't Float, or the book by Jimmy Breslin, The Gang that Couldn't Shoot Straight.

This Budget was meant, above all, to restore international confidence in our dollar. For the first time it is not only the words of the Opposition which must be taken as a measure of the success of the Budget. The Minister, albeit inadvertently I am certain, has set up an objective and clear criterion by which his Budget can and will be judged. As I tuned into Canada AM this morning and saw that the dollar was down yet again, I knew that the failure of this Budget and the incompetence of the Government was once again being demonstrated by the standards set by the Government itself, that is, what happens to the Canadian dollar.

It is perhaps a sign of the inexperience of the Minister that he adopted this approach and gave himself this hostage to fortune, this very clear signal which the Canadian people would be able to watch, which he promised would start to rise. Two weeks ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was saying that he was going to introduce a tough Budget for Canadians which would restore confidence, get the dollar back up again and, consequently, get interest rates down again.

The Minister is a good and decent man but, due to the tremendous credibility problem, he will unfortunately not be able to survive. As the dollar falls and the international financial community continues to exert pressure, the Minister will stand in the House, quote editorials, and read letters from the BCNI, but inexorably, like a clock ticking away time-bomb fashion, his Budget's credibility is being destroyed. The 69-cent dollar which we now face has been brought upon the Government by itself, not only directly by telling the House that the response to the dollar would be the criterion to watch, but by failing to understand the most basic of economic laws which affect our society.

The Government has accepted the reduction of the deficit as some kind of holy grail to be pursued at the expense of economic common sense, fairness, and the tremendous human costs which Canadians are facing today and will continue to face for the next five years as a consequence of this Budget.

It has been about a year and a half since an action group went across this country to hear from Canadians what they felt should be done to put our economy right. It certainly needed putting right after the disasters of the previous regime. We asked them how they assessed this Government's performance on economic matters in its first year in office. I want to save the souls of the poor, tragic, Government back-benchers here today, so I will not quote extensively some of the nasty comments that people pencilled in, in the margins. However, let me point out quite clearly that 94 per cent of Canadians contacted this past year said quite clearly that the Government had either done very poorly, and those were the charitable ones, or it had done extraordinarily poorly, those were the uncharitable ones, with respect to reducing unemployment, regional disparities, inequality between men and women, and reforming the tax system. There were a few good marks on consultation, but even there the vast majority said this Government pretends to consult but it does not listen. In giving fair opportunities to young people, again there is an abject record of failure.

We asked these people what their priorities were, what would they want the Government to put in this Budget. Some 90 per cent of the people who responded said that the key goal has to be the reduction of unemployment. The Government pats itself on the back because it has created, it says, 580,000 jobs. I say the Canadian people have created those 580,000 jobs. We are left with an unemployment rate of 9.8 per cent. I cannot believe there can be a single member of this House who feels that is acceptable. It is better than we were doing but it is just not acceptable. That figure of 9.8 per cent represents lost production, human misery and the virtual destruction of hope for many young people.

However, that was not the objective this Government chose to pursue in its new Budget. Instead, it chose to chase that Holy Grail, the deficit. The responses we got from people said very clearly that, of the six key goals the Government could have gone after, the great majority felt that reducing the deficit was by far the lowest priority. Not because they do not understand that the deficit has to come down. Of course it has to. Not that they do not understand that we have to stop building up massive debts for our children. They understand that. However, they also understand that the way to do that is to get people back to work, get the unemployment rate down to 6 per cent, 5 per cent, or 4 per cent so that we are not wasting billions of dollars to pay people who are not working. That is what we have to do, and we have to do it by a means other than increasing taxes by an average of $400 per family.

I do not know about other Opposition Members, but I know that I spent this past weekend talking to dozens of people in my constituency. I talked to them by phone, through community meetings and at social affairs. Their single response to this Budget was: "They have done it to us again. They have hit middle-income people one more time." A small business person told me that the consequences are that the small business community is not going to have the demand for their products. The woman who expected to get a job as the economy started to improve is not going to succeed because of the cut-backs in consumer demand that this tax grab will cause. This Government promised to get Government off the backs of the people. Instead, it has gotten into the pockets of the people right across this country. The economic consequences are going to be sad. I say that with regret. I did not want to see a Budget that would destroy the economic credibility of the Minister of Finance further. Yet that is what is happening.

In my constituency 31 per cent of the people voted Conservative in the election. At this stage there is not a chance that half that number will do that again. People come up to me on the street continually and say: "We voted Conservative last time. Never again. It's clear that Tory times are taxing times. Tories take money from our pockets when we thought they were going to cut taxes and give us a chance to get the economy moving once more."

What we need in this country is a long-run response to our deficit problems, a response that gets people back to work. When that happens we will get rid of the deficit, and do it far faster than this Government is prepared to. This Government, for all its promises in the last election, will, by the year 1990, be paying a higher percentage of Government revenues to service the public debt than did the Liberals who they attacked so strongly out on the hustings. This Government has not been serious in its talk about reducing the deficit. It has the cart before the horse. You have to get the economy moving before you can get the deficit down. Making that basic error will ultimately cost this Government, not just its majority but its chance to govern after the next election. This is not just a Budget that is mistaken in its goals and faulty in its implementation of those goals, it is a Budget which is, above all, unfair to the people of Canada. We find with the tax probe, which is cutting across the country for the New Democratic Party, that above all Canadians in this country want tax fairness. They want tax reform. That is what this Budget is not giving them.

Instead we have very clear statistics, again in the Budget's own documents, that corporate taxes are going up faster, but not nearly as fast as individual taxes. We have clear evidence that the people in this country who are rich will get a tax decrease next year from the present surtax they pay of 5.5 per cent or 10.5 per cent down to 3 per cent, while the ordinary average middle-income family sees its taxes go up by 3 per cent.

It is a Budget which has disappointed farmers, that group across this country which has been particularly hard hit in the past two years and looked for help from this Government which before the election made it very clear that: "We will eliminate completely the taxes that farmers have to pay on fuel". I ask you, has it happened? The answer clearly is no. The Government can engage in as much rhetoric as it wants. It can send its Ministers across the country to propagandize as much as they wish, but the farmer will know when he goes to the pumps and pays tax on his fuel that on this promise, as on so many others, this Party has failed to come through on its commitments.

It is also a Budget which will have a great human cost. I talked to some of our people this weekend who handle our constituency offices and already the calls are starting to come in from people making do on a family income of $15,000, $16,000 or $17,000. They are saying: "We simply cannot live with increased taxes. It is not a question of being squeezed a little bit, it is a question of just not being able to live". Yet those are the people who will pay the 1 per cent sales tax increase, the 3 per cent income tax increase, the increases on cigarettes and increases on liquor. They are the human beings which this Minister has forgotten. They are the human beings who are our fellow Canadians. We should not, as a House, endorse a Budget which has so badly failed those human beings.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take issue with a number of comments made by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He has used words like destruction, time bomb, disaster. I find that quite incredible if one takes the time to really read that Budget and to talk to average Canadians out there, which he said he did. He also implied that the Government should take no credit whatsoever for some 580,000 new jobs. He knows as an economist that that statement is ridiculous. The Government does have a real role in setting a climate in the country. We can look back on the dismantling of the National Energy Program, which was a disaster in this country. We can look upon the steps that were taken to change FIRA—not just the name—to Investment Canada. It changed the climate of that organization to one which really welcomes new investment. I say we have had a very positive effect as a Government on that job-creation program.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Attewell: Just to recount the steps I personally took to be in touch with people, last Thursday morning I had a breakfast organized to discuss the Budget. It was a non-partisan group, I would underscore, comprised of 163 people. We had the President, John Maplesden of the North York Business Association on the panel. We had Maureen Pappin, a tax partner with Deloitte Haskins & Sells, and we had Jim Crysdale from Nesbitt Thomson, investment dealer. It was an excellent meeting. Not everybody is unhappy with a certain amount of tax increase. Those people had no idea what they were going to say ahead of time. I simply invited them as residents of Don Valley East to speak. While they do not totally embrace the Budget they see the gravity of the situation, and we are willing to be part of the process that is essential.

During the day on Friday I met with several individuals. In the evening I had the honour to be at a special celebration for Dr. Ubale, who is the first Race Relations Commissioner in Ontario. There were some 500 people there from the South Asian community. As we mingled, the general comments were that the Conservative Government is doing what is necessary for the good of Canada.

Saturday morning I did a Rogers cable TV show on the Budget. In the afternoon I wrote to newspaper columnists. That evening I attended the Overseas Chinese Women's Association. It is a type of fashion show, but there were some 500 people there from the Taiwanese community. While mingling with them there was general support that this Government was on the right track. Sunday morning I attended the B'nai B'rith Covenant Breakfast. Again, 400 or 500 people were there. The Lieutenant Governor of Ontario brought greetings. Again, after mingling with dozens and dozens of people I found that they are basically supportive of the proposal put forth by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

We should keep in mind that this Budget is one of three major steps. He announced his economic initiatives in November, 1984. He brought down a Budget in May, 1985, and now we have the Budget of February 26. All three steps are totally consistent with the objective of turning this country around after an abysmal record under the previous Liberal Government.

In closing I would just like to take issue with one other point which I believe the Hon. Member is distorting, and that is in terms of how much of this reduction in the deficit is occuring between expenditure reductions and tax revenues. I would like to say that the combination of rising revenue and falling expenditures reduces the deficit as a percentage of GNP, which is the key way to measure this, by 4.2 percentage points; from 9.1 to 4.9 per cent. Contrary to much public opinion, this considerable reduction in the deficit is accounted for mainly by declining expenditures. There is a 3 percentage point decline in expenditure compared to a revenue increase of only 1.1 per cent, roughly a three to one ratio. That is a pretty good balance, and that is one that Canadians expected and will totally support.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have to start by conceding that I did not attend a Taiwanese fashion show in order to get my responses to the Budget. It is quite possible that Don Mills, with its average level of income very far above the national average, could generate people who felt quite differently about the Budget than is true of people in Essex-Windsor. We organized a community meeting where people could talk about all manner of subjects, including the Budget. I certainly found from the systematic phone calls we made to people across my constituency, from meetings with volunteer ambulance drivers in the southern part of my constituency and from trade union leaders with whom we met on Monday morning that the one universal message we heard is that the Government is hitting them once more, hitting the middle income people in this country again.

Personally, I believe there are two consequences to draw from that reality. When one looks at the Budget figures themselves, they demonstrate that fact quite clearly. The Government's own projection documents for 1987 show a total of $1.2 billion in extra income tax from the group of middle income earners in our country. Furthermore, there is a total of $1.05 billion in sales tax from that group. There are increases with respect to taxes on alcohol and tobacco. While that does not loom large when one considers the over-all tax package, the fact is that there are decreases in taxation on corporations coinciding with increased taxation on middle income Canadians.

Any Canadian who is watching these debates can write to the Minister of Finance or any Member to obtain these statistics and booklets which show quite clearly, for instance, that because the income tax rate is being reduced beginning in 1987, the corporate taxes in this country will have declined by $1.6 billion by 1990. The statistics are clear.

The fact is that constituents told me during the weekend that the country is out of balance because the Government has asked ordinary Canadians and average families to carry far too much of the load. The average family is prepared to carry a part of the load but they feel a sense of tremendous imbalance and unfairness. Frankly, I agree with them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) made a very interesting speech. I am pleased that some comments from this side of the House may have put some balance into the debate.

One of our causes for despair in this place is the kind of semi-sincere and syrupy tones we hear from the New Democratic Party. It is absolutely incredible.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor talked about experience. I have been in this place for seven years and I see the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who has been a distinguished Member in this House for many years. He has served the House, his province and the country in many distinguished ways and I suspect that he could not recall a time when a Finance Minister has been able to present a Budget saying that he has met a deficit goal which he set out to meet the previous year.

We inherited an astounding record of increasing deficits in past years, yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been able to reduce that deficit as a result of a financial statement in November, 1984, a Budget in May, 1985 and another Budget in February, 1986. The Minister should be saluted for the work he has done in successfully meeting the targets which he set out in that statement and those Budgets. Members opposite should give us some credit in order to at least balance the debate. Many of us despair of this House when we see the opposition simply criticize the Government.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, as his Party's critic for regional industrial expansion, holds a major responsibility, and one would have thought he would suggest alternatives or given reasons for his belief that our Budget is wrong. He made no suggestions, but simply talked about failure, incompetence and missed standards.

Let me refer to what his Party's finance critic said of the November 8 statement. He said: "There will be a loss of between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs in the months ahead". Fortunately, the Minister of Finance avoided that prediction. Rather than a loss of 100,000 jobs as predicted by the NDP we have a record 580,000 new jobs in the country. The Hon. Member went on to talk about credibility and described the Minister of Finance, in pious terms, as a decent man whom he hopes survives on his record. Let me advise the Hon. Member that the dollar is trading above 70 cents this morning and interest rates are declining.

Mr. Langdon: It started at 69 cents.

Mr. Mayer: The Member says it is 69 cents.

Mr. Langdon: That is where it started.

Mr. Mayer: The dollar, as I understand it, is trading at above 70 cents. We are not saying that it is acceptable but it points out that he is wrong. I suggest he should give credit where it is due in order to give balance to the debate.

If I had time I would reread the whole Budget speech to the New Democratic Party because they obviously did not understand the message.

The Minister of Finance began his Budget speech by stating, as reported at page 10979 of Hansard:

My message today is a serious one, and in many ways not pleasant. But it must be said. And it must be understood.

Let us review the situation. No politician wants to increase taxes because that is not popular. However, we are accepting a responsible course of action on behalf of our country. It would have been suicidal to continue the policy of the previous administration, one that was supported by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Langdon: That's not true.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member made pious remarks, like the "Holy Grail" of the deficit. However, he did not talk about job creation or the improved pension system. I grew up on a farm in Saskatchewan and the two names we most often heard at the time were Tommy Douglas and John Diefenbaker. I understand the Hon. Member when he talks about pensions. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) grew up in the same area and we understood the concern about pensions and perhaps were more aware about fair treatment for people than others from central Canada. We grew up close to the depression and understood that concern. The Hon. Member should give us credit for taking action to improve the pension system and for introducing a new child tax benefit system to increase assistance to those most in need while reducing overall costs. I suggest the Hon. Member would be much more credible in his criticism of the Budget if he would balance that criticism by mentioning those facts.

He talks about the cost to the average person. This is the cost to the average person of a runaway deficit and sky-rocketing interest rates. Our farmers are now having problems. Why? There are a couple of reasons. We are seeing declining commodity prices, yet everyone talks about the cost-price squeeze. One of the biggest costs farmers face is interest charges. Who put us in that jackpot? The previous Government. We saw interest rates go as high as 25 per cent and 26 per cent when it was in office. We are still trying to recover from that shemozzle. We should be thanking the Minister of Finance for having the courage to tackle this problem.

In listening to the Hon. Member one would think the situation would correct itself by some type of cosmic coincidence which has nothing to do with reality. What is even more incredible is that the Hon. Member, who has a responsible position in his Party as the official spokesman for a major economic responsibility, that is, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, did not say anything about what he would do as far as the Atlantic region is concerned.

Mr. Orlikow: You're cutting funds to the Atlantic region.

Mr. Mayer: Unemployment in that region is high. I did not hear him say anything about what he would do for western Canada where there is concern over the farming economy. One would have thought that in his position he would have addressed some of these issues. Had he done so we would be able to look at the NDP and say that this is what it is proposing and this is what the Minister of Finance is saying, let us make a judgment. He has said that we would be defeated at the polls. I assume by saying that, that he thinks the NDP would pick up some support in our being defeated. Anyone going to the people with that type of platform would be laughed out of the room, and justifiably so.

Mr. Orlikow: We'll see what happens two weeks from today in Manitoba.

Mr. Mayer: Let us consider what happens when interest rates go down. Nobody likes to be in debt. With respect to a mortgage of $50,000, every time the interest rate goes down by 1 per cent a $500 a year saving results. Admittedly, interest rates have risen recently—more than anyone would have liked. No one plans for that type of increase. The over-all plan of the Government is to get its spending in order so that less pressure will be placed on capital markets and so that we can see a reduction in interest rates. Small-businesspeople, farmers and people trying to buy their own home will benefit from such measures. We can see the results when we consider the increase in the number of housing starts.

I would now like to deal with the issue of jobs and social programs. The biggest social measure in the world is a job. That is what we have been successful in creating, jobs. We have created 580,000 jobs. I do not think the Hon. Member heard what the Minister of Finance had to say in his budget speech. In fact, he did not want to hear it.

Mr. Orlikow: There's 9.6 per cent unemployment!

Mr. Mayer: I will read a couple of paragraphs from the Minister's speech. The message must be understood. This is the message in terms of what we have been able to accomplish.

Job creation has been vigorous. The unemployment rate has fallen from 11.7 per cent in September 1984 to 9.8 per cent today—the first time it has been below 10 per cent since April 1982.

That did not happen by accident. The Minister of Finance was absolutely right when he said that individual Canadians have created jobs. We should be giving credit to them. Let me tell Hon. Members what would have happened if unemployment had gone up. The Government would have been blamed if it had. Again, the Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. If he wants to be consistent he should realize that when he makes that type of statement he looks silly in terms of being critical of the Government by not giving us credit when there is some credit due. I am not saying that we are doing everything right. All I am trying to say is let us have a bit of balance in the speeches. In that way we will all be given a great deal more credit in the House. If Hon. Members have some concerns then they should do their homework and lay out some alternatives.

I would like to read more of what the Minister had to say in his speech.

Canadians should understand how remarkable this achievement is. During the past 18 months our rate of job creation has been more than 50 per cent higher than in the United States. Even more remarkable, Canadians have created more jobs, in absolute terms, than all the Western European countries combined—countries which together have 16 times our population.

That tells Hon. Members something about what we are doing as a Government. We have to be doing a few things right or we would not have that type of record in terms of job creation.

As Governments become larger and larger, which is what has happened to almost every country in the world in the last number of years, it becomes more important that what they do they do right, because they account for a bigger percentage of the economy. If Governments, including the federal Government, had not been doing a few things right, and if everything had been so wrong, as we are led to believe by the remarks of the Hon. Member, we would not have that type of record in job creation. That is something which needs to be understood. We need to stand up and show some pride in what we are doing in the country. The more we do that the better it will be for all of us. We have an absolutely tremendous country. We have more natural resources per capita than any country in the world. The future should be ours; it can be ours if we would stop mortgaging our future. That has been the problem in the past. It is a problem which has been aided and abetted by the NDP in support of the Liberals in the past.

I would now like to tell Hon. Members what is even more remarkable about the Minister of Finance. We all know how difficult it is to reduce expenditures once they are in place. When we talk to our constituents they tell us that they know that. They say: "We know that you did something for us in the past but what are you doing for us today?" We are all like that. When considering that type of attitude one begins to realize the many things that make it difficult to reduce expenditures.

I would now like to tell Hon. Members about our expenditure record and what has happened in that regard. I will read more of what the Minister had to say in his budget speech. If I had the time I would reread the whole speech to the Hon. Member opposite and members of his Party. They obviously did not listen to the Minister of Finance a week ago when he tabled his Budget.

Over the last decade, program expenditures had more than doubled. Discretionary spending—spending on non-statutory programs—had grown even faster. In the three years prior to this Government taking office, discretionary spending grew by 43 per cent. Operating costs of Government departments increased by 30 per cent. Personnel costs grew by 20 per cent.

Let me tell Hon. Members what has happened in the 18 months since we have been in office. It will show what one can do if one has some responsibility and is determined to do something on behalf of the country. We have a good Minister of Finance. This is what he had to say.

Total program spending, including all statutory programs such as Old Age Security, family allowances and unemployment insurance, will be held to $86.6 billion—lower than last year's spending.

This is the first absolute decline in total program spending in over 20 years.

That tells Hon. Members something about what can be done if one has some determination. We have done that by improving the pension system and by introducing new child tax benefits to increase assistance.

I would now like to deal with the budgetary process. Hon. Members have talked about keeping commitments. That is exactly what we have done. We have done exactly what we said we would do when we came to office. When we came to office we said that we would prepare a financial statement as quickly as we could and give a public accounting on the nation's finances to the people of the country. That is exactly what the Minister of Finance did. He said he would present a Budget as quickly as he could and then consult before a new budget was tabled. That is exactly what happened. In terms of what we have said we would do we have been entirely consistent. That is very important to understand. What this process does is bring back some ordinary common sense management to the finances of the nation. Above all, the largest responsibility which any Government has is to manage responsibly the fiscal affairs of the country. That is what has happened.

I understand that the Hon. Member opposite has some economic training. He can talk about the percentage of the GNP that is appropriate as far as the size of the deficit is concerned. One can enter into all types of arguments in this regard. Not once in the Hon. Member's speech did he say anything about what he thought the appropriate size of the deficit should be. He talked about the "Holy Grail" of the deficit. I assume by that he meant the Holy Grail of trying to reduce the deficit, as if that is the only thing we think about.

Mr. Orlikow: Isn't it?

Mr. Mayer: We did not hear from the Hon. Member in that regard. We did not hear anything from the Hon. Member with respect to what he thought the appropriate size of the deficit should be. Should it be $30 billion, $50 billion or $100 billion? Depending on what the amount is, how do we get there? I am saying that in front of us we have something which we have demonstrated by clear action in the past 18 months. The Government is committed to a regular process as far as producing Budgets is concerned. We did not hear anybody mention that or give any credit as far as that is concerned.

The Hon. Member talked about the great social cost of the Budget. We will say it and say it again—we need to keep saying it—the best social program anybody in the country can have is a job. Of course 9.8 per cent unemployment is still high. No one finds that figure totally acceptable. But it is a lot better than it was eighteen and a half months ago. We think we should be given a little bit of credit for that.

What I would like to do now is speak about some of the agricultural measures in the Budget, and there were several. Overriding all of these measures, of course, is the extent to which we can manage the affairs of this country properly and get interest rates down. That is a major factor as far as farmers are concerned. Farmers are major users of capital, therefore, they are major borrowers of money and interest rates impact very directly on farmers and on their operations. To the extent that the Minister of Finance can continue along these lines in terms of how he manages the financial affairs of the country, and we see a reduction in interest rates, that will be a major factor as far as the whole farm economy is concerned, from one end of the country to the other.

There is in the Budget what I believe is a new innovation as far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned, that is the provision whereby it will be able to vary the amount of payment the farmer will make on a loan relative to the price of the product or commodity he produces on his farm. I certainly think that is a very worth-while innovation. It takes into consideration some of the wide fluctuations with which farmers have to deal in their commodity prices.

I have heard some concern and criticism expressed that it is too complicated and people cannot understand it. It is true that when we take into account the fluctuation of commodity prices with which farmers deal on a day-to-day basis, by definition it becomes a little more involved than a straightforward mortgage which has fixed payments for the life of the mortgage.

Essentially, what the provision will do is allow the farmer to pick two commodities and have his payment relate, on a 10-year average, to the prices of those two commodities. If the prices go up, he will pay a little more. If the prices go down, he will pay a little less.

There is concern that if prices go up dramatically, a farmer could end up paying substantially more than he would pay if in fact he had not participated in this program. That is a legitimate concern. On the other hand, if the prices go down and the farmer ends up paying a smaller amount as a result of a reduction in commodity prices, then that is something which flows through as a benefit directly to the farmer. To lay it out as best I understand it, there is a cap put in place if commodity prices go up dramatically, which we all hope, they do and that our main problem in the years ahead will be paying income tax. Unfortunately, that is not usually the case with farmers. The cap would mean that the farmer would be limited to paying a maximum of 2 per cent more than he would pay if in fact he had not participated in the program.

There are other things in the Budget which I think are very useful. It extends the fuel tax rebate. There is a system in place which, hopefully, when it is announced, will be widely accepted by the farmers. It will reduce the amount of paper work associated with the farm tax rebate, which is extending the value to farmers and fishermen of something like $120 million. There will be a setting up of some debt review panels. There is also a provision to assist farmers who, for one reason or another, get forced off the land or decide to go elsewhere. It will help to train them to find jobs in other places in the economy.

There is a lot of concern about the plight of the tobacco farmer in southern Ontario. Those farmers have been there a good number of years and the demand for their product is falling. I have had a chance to visit them a couple of times. It is a very serious situation. There are not a large number of farmers involved but, certainly, it is a major crop in that area of Ontario and is certainly extremely important to the farmers involved. So I am very happy to see that some consideration has been given to the tobacco farmers.

In closing, I would like to say that I am very happy to stand in my place today and support the Minister of Finance on what I think is a very well done Budget. I have heard all kinds of words like courageous, predictable, hopeful, reasonable and even-handed from my constituents. I think all of us should congratulate the Minister of Finance for all of the work he has done, and for the proper financial direction in which he is heading this country. Hopefully, we can look forward to at least some grudging support from the Opposition on the Budget, because it certainly deserves the support of every Canadian.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to say to the Minister that I appreciate the seriousness with which he entered into this debate. I must also say that of all the Budgets and Economic Statements that have come down, this is the one for which the Minister is least likely to receive from me even grudging support. This is a Budget which has yet again raised the tax burden on the ordinary person and has done so in a particularly unfair way.

Let me ask some specific questions of the Minister which I think will demonstrate just how poor this Budget is. He has talked about how important it is to see this clear and steady direction. But when we have a 10-ton truck riding straight toward the cliffs, the most constructive role is to say: "Hey, stop. You're heading in the wrong direction". If we do not turn it around, the cost for a lot of people are going to be pretty tragic.

If there is such a commitment to get interest rates down, why has the Government been prepared to push rates up so that the spread between us and the United States is over 3 percentage points, higher than it has ever been historically? Second, if job creation has been of such a concern to this Government, why is it that support for the jobs strategy—and on this I will give some support to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) who has, I think, done a good job in bringing forward her jobs strategy—has been cut back by $1 million in this Budget?

Mr. Orlikow: One hundred million dollars.

Mr. Langdon: This Minister speaks of farm issues. Why is it that he is not prepared to apologize to the farmers of Canada for breaking the Conservative promise of cutting all fuel taxes? Why is the Minister so proud of the white flag of surrender represented by this program to help farmers get out of farming when what farmers want to do is farm? What they looked for in this Budget was assistance to help them farm successfully, not just through a cutting of fuel taxes as promised but through a cut-back of interest rates, not just on FCC loans in special cases, but for all farmers facing all the credit crunches they face.

I would like to pose some of these specific questions. If I get answers, that will not increase my admiration for the Minister of Finance, but it might increase it for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether I want to give the Hon. Member an answer if it is conditional upon his admiration of me. First, the Hon. Member should know that a reduction in Government expenditures has been achieved. I believe, as the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) correctly pointed out, it is about a three to one split; three in the area of reduction in Government expenditures and one as far as an increase in taxes. If the Hon. Member wants to look at the over-all effect since we have taken office, those are the figures he will come up with.

The Hon. Member talks about a 10-ton truck. He is exactly right. The 10-ton truck which is travelling towards the cliff is travelling at the rate at which the previous federal Government was increasing expenditures when we took over. The Minister of Finance has stopped that increase dead in its tracks. We should be thankful that he was able to do so. If the Hon. Member wants to use analogies, some of us as farmers have driven trucks a lot larger than 10 tons. It is more like a 50-ton truck in terms of expenditures which is heading us toward the cliff and taking us over to disaster.

The Hon. Member referred to the federal decrease in tax on farm fuels. Essentially we did what we said we would do. I see the Hon. Member shaking his head. If he looks at our agricultural platform in the last election campaign he will see that we talked about reducing the fuel tax by 21 cents per gallon. We have taken off 3 cents plus 1.8 cents per litre which amounts to over 21 cents per gallon. If we compare the tax being paid by ordinary Canadians at the gas pumps with the tax being paid by farmers, we find that we have taken off 4.8 cents per litre. I do not know how that works out, but it is certainly over 20 cents per gallon. Our policy in the election campaign was to reduce the tax on farm fuels by 21 cents. I see the Hon. Member's colleague from Manitoba in the Chamber. He should talk with him. There is an election going on in that province. He should also talk with the provincial Government in that province and ask it to do what was done by the provincial Governments in Saskatchewan and Alberta; that is, take off the provincial tax on fuels to further assist farmers. In terms of fulfilling our campaign commitment in that regard, we have done it. It has now been extended for an additional year. If the Hon. Member would care to read our campaign platform in the last federal election, he will find that we have lived up to our commitment with regard to the tax on farm fuels.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) mentioned the concern which the Government has shown for the tobacco industry. Of course that is important to my riding in Prince Edward Island where roughly 5 per cent of Canada's total tobacco crop is grown. This is one of the first times a Budget has been specific with regard to a commodity. We certainly appreciate the concern of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for tobacco growers and the involvement of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board on behalf of those producers. Could the Minister give us any further idea of what the Government might be willing to look at? Will the matter be considered further by a standing committee or a subcommittee? What kind of commitments is the Government willing to consider for the tobacco industry?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's intervention. I have visited the Province of Prince Edward Island and now the grave concern of its tobacco growers. Even though the numbers are small, when one is involved, the concern is very real. I am not in a position to give the Hon. Member any information other than to say that I know there are ongoing consultations between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the tobacco growers of respective provinces. The good news is that it was recognized in the Budget. The Hon. Member can be assured that as a result there has been some impetus to ensure that some of those things happen. I know research has been done into alternate crops. For example, there was some consideration of peanuts in Delhi, but I am not sure that it worked out as they potentially thought it would.

In direct answer to the Hon. Member's question, I am not in a position to elaborate any more than I did in my very brief remarks on the fact that the Minister of Finance included special reference in the Budget to the very serious situation faced by tobacco growers across the country, in addition to the ones in his own riding.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, in recent years the need of farmers for credit has been so great that many of them could not obtain loans from the Farm Credit Corporation and had to go to the commercial banks. The policy announced by the Government indicates that the FCC will be able to lend money to farmers at 6 per cent, and I understand that the program is only available to FCC clients. Many farmers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the period allotted for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, much has been said over the course of the past week about the deficit. At times it seems to me, and I am sure to most observers, that this is the only preoccupation of the Government. Also in the past week since the presentation of the Budget, the declining dollar indicates that confidence is lacking in the Government and that it has failed in the one and only area about which it seems to be concerned.

At the turn of the year, Maclean's magazine published a Canadian public opinion poll in which Allan Gregg, the Conservative pollster, talked about the support which the Government had and said that if there was one reason to explain the Conservative Government's drop in the polls, it was that it had failed to provide a goal for Canada and to show Canadians how to reach it. There is not a more startling illustration of that fact than that in the Budget there is not one line about youth.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Budget does not contain a single line on the 750,000 young Canadians who are jobless today. There is only this constant concern about the deficit. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there was something that concerned the youth of this country, and that was the announcement that Katimavik would be cut, one of the few programs in this country that gave our youth a measure of hope and an opportunity to get some training and have the kind of experience that is practically unique in Canada and the rest of the world.

[English]

Perhaps there is no better illustration of the Government's lack of vision and short-sightedness than its record, since coming to office, in the area of education and research. The Government is lucky that Gallup is not running a poll in the universities or in the scientific communities, because the meter would not register anything that far under popularity.

In preparing for my comments today, I had difficulty deciding where to begin to talk about the subjects of education and research. Quite frankly, I am astounded or stupefied by the Government's response to the plans of the three federal research councils which provide funds for research in our universities; the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, more commonly known as NSERC, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and the Medical Research Council. The meagre funding for research provided in the Budget is nothing less than a total rejection of the plans of those councils. The Government has served notice that it has abandoned the goal of substantially increasing spending on research and development. I am astounded that the Government is less than honest about it. It is trying to camouflage its decision and pretend there is an increase in research funding when what we see is a meagre commitment to funding which will not even allow these councils to keep pace with inflation.

The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council submitted its five year plan to the Government last June. It calls for increased spending of $1.4 billion over five years. That may seem to some people like a lot of money to spend on research, on universities and on our youth, but $1.4 billion was the amount over five years and is the amount we spend in one year on frontier oil drilling. It is slightly more than the Government decided to spend in a few minutes to bail out the uninsured depositors of the two banks that failed last September. The Government did not waste much time in trying to rescue its pride in that area.

This plan was not picked out of thin air. It was not developed by a group of people in some ivory tower. This plan was proposed by the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council to the Government in response to the Government's stated objective to double spending on research and development.

The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council is made up of a group of respected scientists from all across the country, and is the most widely praised of Government agencies. It developed a plan to respond to the Government's stated objective to double spending on research and development. It told us what we must do to begin to move in that direction. I say begin to move in that direction, because anyone who has looked at the subject of increasing spending on research, on increasing the use of technology in our country will understand that at present we do not have the trained people. We do not have the scientists. We do not have the young people in our schools who are enrolled in science programs to begin to meet that role.

The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council submitted a plan to the Government and said what it was we must do to begin to move in that direction. The Government's responsed by giving NSERC about 8 per cent of the funds it requested, which will not even allow NSERC to keep pace with inflation. The $126 million it will receive over the next five years is something less than twice the amount that would be necessary to keep pace with inflation. It is only 8 per cent of what would be needed to meet or to begin to meet the Government's objective.

My initial reaction when I saw the Government's response was that this was a joke, that there must be some mistake. Surely this cannot be serious, and the Conservative Government has the gall not to be honest about it. It is trying to pretend that it is coming forward with some major new initiative.

I was at the press conference the other day when the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) announced the Government spending plan. The atmosphere there was funeral for people who were supposedly bringing forward such supposedly good news in jest. But why am I amazed, Mr. Speaker? Because of the Government's promise to double spending on research and development. After the last election it became evident very quickly that we were not going to see anything of the kind. There were cuts at the National Research Council, $70 million from its budget. There was a rationale to it. The Government said we will cut the division of energy. I could not understand the rationale but some people said renewable energy has other sources of funding. That was the Government's argument.

The Science Council had its budget cut in half from $5 million to $2.5 million. We were told that at this time of restraint we cannot afford to have even one single national agency to reflect upon science and its needs or to try to focus the thinking of Canadians and of Canadian Governments in the area of science.

The other shoe dropped this week with the tabling of the Estimates. We see the only department that will increase its spending substantially in the coming year is the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. When it comes to empire building and having public servants in the pay of a Government department to propagate the Government's view of things, there is no shortage of funds.

The funding for the Natural Sciences and Engineering research Council was to be the test of the Government's commitment to increasing spending on research and development. Why do I say the test, Mr. Speaker? The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council is an agency of the federal Government which provides funds for university research. It is the largest single source of funding for university research and research training. It has an annual budget of about $300 million which was to double to some $700 million by 1990 under the plan it submitted to the Government. In all, about 17,000 individuals benefit directly from its programs, including over 6,000 professors and more than 6,000 graduate and undergraduate students and post-graduate fellows. This number was to increase to some 30,000 persons who would have received support from NSREC by 1990 if its plan had been approved.

This was the test of the Government's commitment because training young people for a career in science is the starting point of increased scientific activity in Canada which everyone agrees, even the Government, is essential if we want to be competitive, create jobs and maintain our standard of living. It is impossible to double our spending on research expenditures, to be more innovative or to reduce our huge deficit in high technology goods if we do not have the people to do the job.

This past year, since the NSERC five-year plan was submitted to the Government, has been one of great expectations, given the Government's commitment and words. It has also been a year of impending doom. I have spoken on a number of occasions in this House on the subject of the "brain drain" which has become a concern in Canada. As an example, an article in the Halifax Mail-Star on January 20 was entitled "Dalhousie University Losing Researchers". It indicated that at least some have gone to the United States because of a lack of federal funding for research, and uncertainty over future financial cut-backs. Several months ago the dean of the faculty of mathematics at the University of Waterloo announced that he was going to Tennessee because of the unfavourable research climate in Canada, and because he was frustrated by having to undertake a major battle every time he needed a new piece of equipment.

All Members of Parliament including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), received hundreds, if not thousands, of letters last fall from people all across Canada in support of the plans of the three federal councils which provide funds for university research. One such letter was from the principal of McGill University who argued that adequate, well-planned financing of these research councils is a fully national responsibility which must be met by our federal Government.

In a statement on research and transfer payments, faculty associations from all over western Canada urged the Government to approve the plans of the three councils. The President of the University of Western Ontario wrote that it is critically important that our research capabilities be strengthened with adequate grants. He said that the most effective way is through the research councils.

In addition to having spoken in the House on this subject, I had the opportunity to appear on the CBC show, The Nation's Business, last February 9. At that time I called upon the Government to provide immediately the funding that had been requested by these three councils. I invited viewers to write to me to tell me how they felt about it. I promised to send their letters on to the Prime Minister. I received close to 40 letters, all but one or two of them being supportive. I would like to read to you from one of these letters from Mrs. Renée Demmer mother in Ottawa which reads:

> My son will complete his post doctorate in physical chemistry in Nov/86, and after that, what? He has been inquiring about a job for November this year and everywhere he applies he gets the same reply: "no vacancy due to lack of funds".
> Since he went to the U. of Toronto in Nov/85, three of the young research chemists whom he met there have left Canada for the U.S. If my son cannot get a job here in Ontario or Quebec or in any part of Canada, there is only one other place for him to go, and that would mean both my sons have to live in the U.S. because Canada will not look after her young scientists.

I have a number of other letters of this nature.

To emphasize my point, Mr. Speaker, through this single-minded preoccupation with reducing the deficit the Government has shown that it is not willing to invest in Canada's most precious resource, our people, and particularly our young people. A respected economist, Michael McCracken of Infometrica, stated after the Budget was introduced that some $50 billion to $60 billion is being wasted annually because we are not achieving full employment in the country. Our deficit in high technology today is approximately $12 billion, or the equivalent of 120,000 specialized jobs.

I am waiting for the day when the Government will listen to what the people of the country are saying, understand these elementary facts, and present to the Parliament and the people of Canada a Budget and a policy which has vision and will provide for growth in the country, rather than cutting the guts out of the future of our young people and our economy.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we just heard a very moving appeal by the Member for increased support for scientific research. He has pointed out the results of inadequate funding; the "brain drain" and the loss of potential jobs, with all of which I can agree. However, that is not something which just happened in the past year. For 30 of the last 36 years we had Liberal Governments. In virtually all of those years the scientific community was pointing out to those Liberal Governments that, while other countries in the western world and Japan were spending 2.5 per cent of their GNP or more on scientific research and development, Canada was spending 1.5 per cent or less. The then Official Opposition, the Conservative Party, and my Party, the New Democratic Party, joined in that criticism of the Liberal Government and promised to support the expenditure by Government of 2.5 per cent of GNP for scientific research and development.

We know that because of the present Conservative Government's fixation with reducing the deficit it has not moved toward the expenditure of 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product on scientific research and development. In fact, the $300 million increase which it pledged to the granting councils over the next five years will not even keep up with the increase in inflation.

Where was the Hon. Member when his Party was in Government? What assurances can he give us that if and when we have another Liberal Government it will do any better than it did during the 30 years it was in power when it failed to do that which it is calling upon the Conservatives to do?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and I take his question seriously. I certainly share his concern about the past record. He talks about 30 years ago. Well, 30 years ago I was five years of age, so I have difficulty accepting responsibility for what took place at that time.

However, in NSERC's very detailed five-year plan, which the Member may have read, it is noted that over the course of its first five-year plan from 1979 to 1984 the previous trend of decline in spending on research and development was reversed. There were substantial increases in spending during the course of that first five-year plan which Liberal Governments were responsible for implementing. I know there were delays. On most occasions the spending increases came towards the end of the year and that caused certain problems. Nonetheless, the commitment by the previous Liberal Government was there. I can also say to him that it is probably only in the past five or six years that our society as a whole has become aware of the fact that we are going through a technological revolution and a tremendous investment is required in order to be competitive and keep pace with other countries.

As I said, I think previous Liberal Governments over the last five or six years recognized the necessities and objectives and took steps to start us moving in the right direction.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the need for more innovation and new job opportunities. He also talked about single-mindedness and doom. So far as doom is concerned, that was in the minds of the electorate by 1984, for sure. Job opportunities had diminished. We had record unemployment. Certainly the Liberal Government of which the Hon. Member was a part was single-minded in creating a deficit.

I know the Hon. Member is genuinely interested in this subject so I would point out that there are in my riding a lot of businesses concerned with research. There is a very sincere interest on the part of the private sector to participate in this program involving joint funding from the Government and private sector. The Member mentioned waste under previous Liberal Governments. Spending on these programs went from $27.9 billion in 1974-75 to $86.7 billion in 1984-85. Yet, as the NDP Member mentioned, there was still not the kind of funding that the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) says should be there for research and development.

Taking all that into context, and realizing that the people of Canada know we cannot continue this deficit spending which drives interest rates up and the dollar down, my question is this. Why was it not done then when the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part was in such a tremendous deficit spending situation?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would refer to the goal of obtaining increased spending by the private sector. This is built into the current plans of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. Some fairly credible people have expressed considerable doubt that we can obtain the commitment from the private sector which the Government has set out. Mr. Douglas Wright, President of the University of Waterloo, says that if the Government expects 50 per cent to come from the private sector, this is extremely unlikely. This does not happen even in the U.S., Japan or some western European countries. His university has a reputation for close links with the private sector, yet it gets only 10 per cent of its research funding from the private sector. We will see how this formula works, but in trying to get matching contributions from the private sector there is a danger of diverting money currently spent on research. A corporation could say that rather than spending a dollar with the Ontario Cancer Research Foundation, it will give a dollar to the Medical Research Council of Canada because it gets the Government to spend an extra dollar. I have heard this concern expressed and it has not yet been answered by the Government. We shall see.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak during the budget debate today to try and bring a little perspective to what is happening in Canada. It is assumed that some of this message may get out to the people who are so concerned about this life and death Budget.

To put it in perspective, this Budget is part of a plan to try and face up to a great difficulty which is upsetting financial people around the world. As the House knows, Canada has now moved full centre into the world of financial markets. We are no longer a little ghetto or reservation trying to live on our own. Once you move into this world you have to accept all the economic facts that go with it. One of the economic facts of the last two or three decades has been the rise of a new business in the world, that of gambling on the currency of various countries. Some 25 or 30 years ago this international currency, called Eurodollars, amounted to $200 billion or $300 billion. It is now over $3,000 billion and increasing all the time. There are people who do nothing else but try and figure out what fraction of a cent a given currency is going to move and they gamble on that move. This gambling has turned into a big business. The Chicago Bears played a football game and the gamblers put $2 billion into operation. They gambled that the spread would be at least 10 points and it was. All I am saying is that we are trying to assess a Minister of Finance on his Budget without realizing that he is, willy-nilly, in the middle of the biggest crap game in the world. All Ministers of Finance have to face the reality that they are no longer dealing with just local problems such as those which attract the attention of most MPs.

Keeping that perspective in mind, I think this Budget follows very well from the statement of November, 1984, and the Budget of 1985. These were gentle, neutral Budgets, and we have to keep our elbows up as we go into the question of confidence. Today Governments are in the same position as all big companies such as banks and trust companies are in. We live primarily on one thing, confidence. Because of the economic results which flow from losing confidence in an institution, we all have to learn to stick together. We all have to learn, as Governments, banks and trust companies to stick together. We saw what happened in the United States and Canada last year with the number of banks that went down. All you have to do is start a rumour that a bank is in trouble and there is no bank in the world that can stand up to that. That is why the banks have to learn, as the American banks are beginning to learn, to stick together. We have still to learn that here in Canada.

The danger is that once you go into a credit system all over the world you have to maintain this feeling of confidence regardless of the cost. We witnessed in the House this past week what every Minister of Finance has to do in every country, make public knowledge the Government's Budget plans and try to leave the impression that you are tackling the problems that are facing every country. I would think that the Minister scored fairly well. First all he looks honest. Second, there is a sense that he has a sense of humour. He knows what he has to do. Basically all he did was create a gentle move in the right direction. That is all a Budget is, a sense of direction.

That leads me to the next point. No matter what kind of a Budget you bring in the next step is the dangerous one. The Order in Council, the regulations, and the definitions that come out to put those things into effect are the things that win or lose the battle. Some years ago, in 1979, a Budget was delivered in this House, and I will just read to you the opening sentence from the leading intellectual academic magazine called The Public Interest. I have put this on the record before. Listen to this. It reads as follows:

> On December 13, 1979, the government of Canada fell. For just six months the Conservatives had governed with a parliamentary minority, and they were defeated on a vote of no confidence. The issue was their first budget—a budget that rejected Keynesian economic policies,—

That is enough to scare the academics out of their wits. The article goes on:

> —replacing them with radically different recommendations. Unemployment and slow growth were to be fought not by increasing the federal deficit but by reducing it.

That was the view a year and a half later taken by the leading intellectuals of the English-speaking world. The title of this article, which is a special edition of The Public Interest was "The dissolution of the Keynesian consensus". Keynes was obsolete almost at the end of the War, and in its place nothing has come in the form of a pattern or paradigm to solve all our problems.

The point is that the Conservative Party is different from the opposition Parties, Liberal or NDP. The Opposition Parties can only think of getting out of trouble by spending more money, and they got us into such a tremendous mess in 1979 they were defeated. Then when we tried to reverse that, these boys got a little bit exuberant one night and thought they could beat the Conservative Government because we had one tax increase. That increase was on diesel fuel. The boys got even more exuberant as the night went on and persuaded the NDP to join them, and they defeated that Government. They inherited their own mess. I recall the day in 1981 when the then Prime Minister got up and asked us in the Opposition, "If you have got any ideas that will help us please give them to us. We do not have any ideas of what to do". That was in 1981.

In 1982 the Conservatives, on an Opposition day, brought out a four-point program dealing with interest rates. Every Party in this House supported those four points. Almost every Member, as I recall, on that side of the House had spoken favourably. We amended in 1983 the National Housing Act, the Farm Credit Corporation Act. All Parties agreed that we could provide money for these worth-while productive purposes; the building of homes, the helping of farmers, foresters and the producers by getting interest rates down to a moral level.

For 3,000 years we have known if interest rates go above a certain amount they are criminal; you destroy the individual who borrows, you destroy the farmer, you destroy big business, you destroy small business and you destroy Governments. That was exactly the case. Now we are trying to get out of this mess again. The start has been slow and gentle, trying to pretend it is tough.

I have said this, to put it all into perspective and to lead up to the main point of my remarks. It is the job of Parliamentarians to watch the Orders in Council that come out, the regulations and the definitions. That is how these weasels who draft these things put them in front of a busy Minister, slide them through the cabinet committee and then they are published in the Gazette and become law. When that happens, Parliamentarians never see it and we do not know for a year or so what has happened until we begin hearing complaints. Could I call it 1.30?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It now being 1.27 p.m., we will now adjourn until two o'clock p.m. When we resume Orders of the Day after three o'clock, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) will have the floor.

At 1.27 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ATLANTIC ENTERPRISE PROGRAM

CRITICISM OF PROVISIONS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Enterprise Program announced in last week's Budget is nothing more than a political program. It is not designed to start up a new string of small businesses in Atlantic Canada. It will do nothing but fatten the coffers of banks and big business.

Our friendly Atlantic bankers will soon begin to reject all loan applications unless they are backed by Government guarantees. Why should banks take the risk when the Government is more than willing to do it? How will the marginal business that needs Government assistance be identified? Bankers will simply shift the risk from themselves to the Government. It means that bankers can reduce their losses and increase their profits.

As well, the floor price of the loan guarantee is $250,000. Does the Government need a crash course on the Atlantic region? Small business in my Province of Prince Edward Island does not require that much start-up capital.

If the Government is serious about getting the Atlantic economy back on track, let us see it produce a program that reflects our unique problems.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

FINANCE

OPEN LETTER ON TAXES TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me quote the following letter:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

We have had enough. We are protesting that gasoline prices and taxes are too high. It is discouraging both Canadian and U.S. tourism and damaging our economy and the high price is unfair to those of us who must use their cars to drive to work.

Your Government gave the oil corporations a $2.5 billion annual tax break; the response has been to increase the prices to consumers. What did the federal Government do for working Canadians? On January 1 and subsequently, the federal tax was again increased.

Petro-Canada should be directed to reduce prices to reflect falling world oil costs. We are opposed to taxing gasoline to raise money to service our national debt. Government gasoline tax policies are unfair, inequitable and inflationary and we are adding our voices to the demand that these policies be changed.

This was sent to me by the president of Local 1005, Ray Silenzi, and signed by the secretary, Ed Sutherland, together with the signatures of hundreds of their members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

THE BUDGET

SUPPORT FOR PROVISIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in September, 1984, Canadians wisely decided that they had had enough of Government mismanagement, profligacy with their hard earned tax dollars, and a national debt that was growing three times faster than the economy.

Their faith in the new Conservative Government has not been misplaced. The Budget, without affecting any necessary services, brings spending under control. Efficiency, economy, and wise use are the watch words of a Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who treats the taxpayers' money with the same respect as if it were his own.

With the new measures, by the early 1990s our debt will have stabilized and the budgetary deficit will have been eliminated.

Thanks to the Minister of Finance, our financial house is being put in order.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, contrary to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), economic growth in the Atlantic provinces did receive encouragement from the new budget measures announced last Wednesday.

A new job creation initiative, the Atlantic Enterprise Program, is a major part of the strategy to relieve regional disparity. Under this new program, the federal Government will provide guarantees to private sector investors of loans totalling up to $1 billion, and interest rate buy-downs of up to 6 percentage points for business start-up or expansion.

The program will be supported by a private sector advisory committee made up of representatives from the region. This program will apply to eligible projects in manufacturing and processing, related service sectors, tourism, and primary industries.

In addition to this new program the 20 per cent investment tax credit in the Atlantic region will not only be maintained but will be extended to communities in the Atlantic offshore. These measures signal continuing Government support for sustained economic growth in Atlantic Canada.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

ALLEGED RACIAL SLUR

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it was unfortunate to hear in the House yesterday the Conservative Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) characterize the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), who is of Canadian-Italian extraction, as a mafioso. While this may not have been recorded, it does not condone or diminish the severity of such a racist accusation. This community is getting sick and tired of being continuously labelled in such an unjust manner. As a nation we need to stamp out vigorously these humanly degrading remarks.

It is all the more worrisome that the incident occurred in the very institution which must lead by example. I call upon the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq to show leadership, courage, and integrity, admit that he seriously erred, and to offer an appropriate apology. The Canadian-Italian community needs to hear it. But, more important, Parliament and the country need to hear it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRODUCTION OF CHEMICAL WARFARE AGENTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) categorically stated, as reported at page 10889 of Hansard: "No chemical weapons are being produced in Canada—". Three sources from the Department of National Defence have confirmed that, indeed, some chemical weapons listed in the 1985 Government of Canada handbook which deals with chemical and biological weapons are produced in Canada. In fact, late last week the Minister's own staff contacted me to confirm that Soman, Sarin, Tabun, and VX, all lethal chemical warfare agents which cause death by suffocation, are produced at the Defence Research Establishment at Suffield, Alberta, as well as T-2370 and mustard gas. The first four are listed on page 80 as chemical warfare lethal agents.

It was stressed to me by DND personnel that these chemical weapons are produced in very small quantities. So be it. But they are produced in Canada, and the Minister of National Defence knew it when he made his categorical denial last week.

Let us not forget a bucket of some chemicals, such as dioxin, can kill millions.

STATUS OF WOMEN

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as we approach International Women's Day it is appropriate for us to recall the positive measures undertaken by the Government to improve social justice for women in Canadian society.

Divorce law has been reformed to simplify divorce proceedings. A registry of maintenance orders is being established to ensure that single parents receive the full child support payments to which they are entitled. A parliamentary task force is examining ways to improve child care. The Indian Act has been amended to eliminate discrimination against women who were unfairly denied Indian status.

Today the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) announced major changes to legislation and programs to ensure conformity with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

As we celebrate International Women's Day, it is appropriate that we have also reinforced our commitment to women, to justice, and to equality for all.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on May 23, 1985, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down his first Budget, only a few seconds later, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), seconded by the Leader of the Socialist Party, declared that this Budget would cost us between 200,000 and 300,000 jobs.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the May Budget helped to create 560,000 new jobs, including 156,000 in the province of Quebec.

Obviously, Opposition Members are not used to this kind of performance.

This year, the equation between our estimated and real expenditures has given Canadians confidence. We are in a period of active recovery. Thousands of small businesses, encouraged by the tax measures of our 1986-87 Budget, are hiring more and more Canadian men and women. Our economic recovery is assured and it is continuing.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORT ON GATINEAU RIDING ASSOCIATION CONDEMNED AS FALSE

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, just before Christmas the CBC ran a news item on my riding association which was totally false. The reporter never checked with me or with my riding association. Its sister network, Radio Canada, treated the story correctly, both in its newcast and in a public affairs interview with me. TVA, the commercial network, also ran the correct story on its national newscast. So did Le Droit and local radio stations, as did The Citizen of Ottawa in a remake of its first false story based on the CBC item.

In spite of this the false story surfaces in English language newspapers, most recently in The Gazette. In the House, members of the Opposition use it when they cannot cope with the subject of debate and get personal—which is most of the time.

My riding association asked me to correct the record. We have a riding association. We have always had a riding association. Normal annual elections were held in November and most members of the association were re-elected, but the president was changed. Therein lies the tale.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SURVIVAL OF NATIVE LANGUAGES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, most of the languages of our country's indigenous peoples are in danger of extinction. Out of 53 aboriginal languages in Canada, only three have good chances for survival. Many of the languages are found only in Canada. If they disappear here, they will be lost to the world forever. This perilous situation has been documented in a report prepared for the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) entitled Aboriginal Languages in Canada. I recommend it to all Hon. Members.

This tragic state of affairs is a result of many factors, such as historic Government policies of assimilation and deliberate suppression of aboriginal languages. In recent years some support has been provided as aboriginal people have taken the lead in trying to preserve their heritage and culture.

Language is critical to cultural survival. Enriched, supportive policies can reverse this alarming trend of language loss among Canada's native peoples.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

ENERGY

EVENTS FOLLOWING ABOLITION OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, anyone in this House who has listened to Conservative Members of Parliament during the last five years knows that to that Party there is a single, universal cause for everything which has gone wrong in Canada. It was all the fault of the National Energy Program. Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have spent several billions of dollars of public revenues to get rid of the national energy policy, we should ask whether we are getting value for our dollars.

Since market forces replaced the NEP, the oil industry has collapsed and another $5 billion in minimum revenues have been lost; three Canadian oil companies, including Sulpetro, need $20 a barrel for oil or debt restructuring or will go bankrupt; two employment generating megaprojects are threatened; and the province of Alberta will suffer a 9 per cent drop in provincial products. I could go on, but I wish to conclude with the observation that the so-called "market forces" are doing a far worse job in giving Canadians a rational, coherent energy policy than the National Energy Program, with all its faults, ever did.

INCOME TAX

ELIMINATION OF TAX LOOPHOLES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, several areas of unfairness and exploitation in our personal and corporate tax rules have been shut down. The abuses of the scientific research tax credit have been stopped. Tax shelters based on investments in yachts and so on, have ended. Income splitting through interest-free loans between family members is no longer possible. Carve-out transactions in the oil and gas sectors have been terminated. The use of trusts to distribute investment income tax free has ended. The use of partnerships in corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions has been shut down. The foreign property investment rules to prevent abuse have been tightened. High income earners will now be required to pay a minimum tax of 25 per cent.

This Government not only talks about tax reform, it takes action to ensure equity and fairness.

CONSEQUENCES OF INVESTMENT IN PRATT & WHITNEY PLANT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in an article in La Presse, under the byline of Gilbert Lavoie, we read that once again, Quebecers have been cheated by this Conservative Government. On February 14, the Conservative Government announced with a great deal of fanfare that $575 million was being invested in the Pratt & Whitney plant. Unfortunately, this was not the whole truth. First of all, the project had already been proved under the previous Liberal Government in 1983. Furthermore, yesterday I met with company management, and they emphatically denied any statements to the effect that the Prime Minister intervened personally to have jobs created in Montreal East. Lastly, the Ministers involved forgot to mention that 40 per cent of the jobs to be created will be outside Quebec. Mr. Speaker, this just goes to show you can never trust the Conservatives.

SITUATION OF FARMERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on behalf of the farmers of the country who are sadly disappointed in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The bits and pieces given to assist the debt-burdened farmer represent the Government's attitude towards farming. So serious is the Government to assist farmers that it is willing to help farmers with retraining. In other words it is telling farmers to go out of business and not to hope for support from the Government.

● (1415)

During the election campaign Ministers promised all sorts of goodies to the agricultural community. Now it is time to deliver; not tomorrow but today. Farmers are in need of help, and it is the duty and responsibility of the Government to provide it.

RECEPTION BY BUSINESS COMMUNITY AND INTERNATIONAL MARKETS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Why is the Minister making this unprecedented effort to try and sell his Budget to businessmen and corporations in the United States? Is it because the Canadian business community and international markets have lost confidence in his Budget and his Government?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Let me just draw to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition that since the Budget was brought in the stock market has gone up every day—Thursday, Friday, Monday, and again today. It is up 42 points over those four days. That is confidence in the Budget.

OFFICIALS' MEETINGS WITH AMERICANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the efforts of the Minister, his Deputy Minister, and his officials to try to persuade the Americans that there is some merit in the Budget are absolutely without precedent. The Minister is on a string. He has become a puppet of Wall Street.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is being coached by the Prime Minister. I do not know whether the coach ought to send the signals into the quarterback; I do not think it will improve it at all.

Mr. Mulroney: Your quarterback is gone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Would the Minister of Finance tell us what his officials are telling Americans in private meetings which he is not telling Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that sort of question is ridiculous. The officials are in the United States, the same as they have been in meetings here with different interested parties, to explain the various elements of the Budget. There is nothing unprecedented about it. It is the same type of information which is being provided to people in Canada and the United States. I am sure the High Commission in London is doing the same thing.

EFFECT ON EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there has never been an effort like this for a Department of Finance and a Minister to sell a Budget abroad. Usually a Minister is content with trying to explain it to Canadians, but the Minister has to sell it around the world in order to maintain strength in our currency. He told us to wait for the Budget to see whether the dollar would be stabilized.

What is he doing for the dollar now that he has presented the Budget? What efforts is he making to sustain the dollar?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the Budget is selling itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I could give the Leader of the Opposition a long list of people who have issued ringing endorsement of the Budget, saying that it is a move to solve the problems of the past.

The Leader of the Opposition is saying that he has spoken with all his friends down on Wall Street and he is saying that we should be fair here. He knows full well, if he has read any of the editorials over the past few days, that it is very clear the Budget was written for Canadians, and it is being well received by Canadians.

CAUSES OF DECLINE IN EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Canadian dollar continues to decline, if the Budget is so well received outside Canada. This week, an influential magazine, Business Week, commented that in the last twelve months there was a net outflow of five billion dollars, in addition to a drop of 2.5 billion in foreign investment in Canada. My question to the Minister of Finance is as follows: How can he blame the drop in value of the Canadian dollar on just a couple of speculators in Chicago, while the facts indicate that since early 1985, there has been a net outflow of capital from Canada to other countries?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have gone over this one before. I just want to draw to the Hon. Member's attention again, for about the fourteenth time, that it is important to understand what is happening in the broad economy. Investment activity in 1985 picked up after four years in the doldrums when investment activity was going down or staying level.

● (1420)

Once investors in the country realized the directions of the Government, and once they saw the policies that we brought in, both in November, 1984, and again in May, 1985, in the Budget, they turned up the jets and increased investment activity. That is why we created 580,000 jobs, and that is going to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LOSS OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance does not read the same statistics as the rest of the people in this country. We lost $2.5 billion worth of foreign investment in Canada in 1985, while Canadians have taken nearly $5 billion in capital out of this country.

How can the Minister of Finance maintain today that the international community still has confidence in his Government?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, investment intentions over-all are the important measure of what is going on in the economy.

Mr. Gauthier: Facts.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am giving the facts to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, who probably does not understand a fact when he sees one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Investment activity last year was up considerably over previous years. I want to draw to the Hon. Member's attention that it is incorrect to pick out one specific figure from the national accounts figures because it ignores the broad effects of the good policies which this Government has brought in over the past 18 months.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In announcing the Government's response to the parliamentary committee on equality rights today, the Minister of Justice said that Bill C-62 was an adequate response to the claim for equality in the workplace of women, the disabled, visible minorities, and native Canadians.

The Prime Minister is responsible for over-all Government policy in this area. Considering that every spokesperson for each group who appeared before the parliamentary committee when it was assessing Bill C-62 said that the Bill was totally inadequate, why, after one year, has the Government not made one iota of progress in terms of improving the Bill and in moving toward equality?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, indeed, we have made progress. We have brought in Bill C-62. It is the first time employment equity has ever been addressed by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: In this case there were a number of discussions and consultations. I can tell the Hon. Member, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, that with this Bill there will be employment equity through the federally regulated private sector and in Crown corporations. It will be enforced through the mechanisms of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, as was recommended as one of the models by Judge Rosalie Abella.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Since every group that appeared before the committee and responded to Bill C-62, whether on behalf of the disabled, women, native people or visible minorities, said the Bill was inadequate, and since the Prime Minister said in a debate before the women of Canada in the election campaign of 1984 that he was earnestly committed to implementing equality, why does the Government not deliver on its promises now?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all sure the Hon. Member has been following all the committee hearings.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: He might take a look at the number of people who have endorsed what the Government is doing. This will show we have an interest in providing equality in Canada. It is a one thing to sit and criticize but it is much better, I can tell the Hon. Member, to be able to do something about it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Precisely, Mr. Speaker, and that is why the Prime Minister asked for a majority. We want him to do something about it now that he has the power.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my last supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I hope he will answer the women of Canada and others. When asked during the election campaign why he should be trusted, he responded by saying that he was earnestly committed to implementing the equality principle. All of the groups which appeared before the committee and discussed Bill C-62 said it was inadequate. Therefore, will the Prime Minister now act on his promise, change Bill C-62, and deliver the equality which he promised in the election campaign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the past 17 months both Budgets have substantially addressed fairness and equity for the disabled and new benefits have been provided. The Government has taken a number of initiatives with regard to women, including Bill C-62. The majority of the 580,000 new jobs which have been created have gone to women. That is an indication of fairness and equity. Job creation is now being helped by small business. Women are now becoming proprietors of the largest number of small businesses, thereby creating jobs. We want women to share in the growth and equality of opportunity in the country.

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF CHANGES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance confirm reports that at the eleventh hour he redesigned his Budget in order to get the deficit under $30 billion in order to reduce interest rates, on the one hand, and stabilize the dollar, on the other?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is probably referring to the article in The Toronto Star today. I suggest he look past the headline. In that article I said that, as we saw interest rates rising, we felt it was very important to maintain the objective of getting the deficit below $30 billion. We are very much committed to that. To reach that objective we introduced the $500 million across-the-board spending cut.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. He goofed, Mr. Speaker. This Budget has created a real mess. Can he assure us that, within a week, he will table supplementary estimates to repair the damage done by his Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess it is necessary to take the Hon. Member through the Budget process, step by step. We increased the interest rate assumption to 9.5 per cent. Because we did that, we increased the spending cuts to offset the increase in the interest rates which we were expecting. I have said on a number of occasions in the House that I stand by that 9.5 per cent interest rate assumption because we expect that interest rates will come down over time.

Mr. Johnston: How above the $22.50?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I stand by the $22.50 as well. The Member is referring to oil prices. This is a third question, Mr. Speaker, and I should be allowed to answer a third question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You don't have to answer if you don't want to.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The $22.50 stands because as the oil prices—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do want to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I know you do, but this is becoming long.

PROMISE OF PROGRAM CONCERNING CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A year ago the Government promised that a so-called contract compliance program would be implemented by last fall. Now the Minister of Justice has just made the same promise. What criteria, what policies, what specific measures does the Government have in mind? Or will this be an annual promise, without any action?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the issue of contract compliance and the implementation go hand in hand with the passage of Bill C-62. I urge members of the Opposition to co-operate with the Government to ensure that that legislation passes quickly so that we will be able to implement contract compliance at the same time.

Mr. Broadbent: It's not in the Bill.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE AMENDED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, contract compliance is not now in Bill C-62. The groups and organizations concerned have asked that this be done. Will the Minister put contract compliance in the Bill, and with real teeth?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Hon. Member does not understand the process. The question of compliance is under contract which itself has the force of law. She should understand that contracts have the force of law. What she should also understand is that the principles of employment equity apply to businesses coming under federal jurisdiction as well as those which do business with the federal Government. The two go hand in hand. We want to introduce implementation at one and the same time. Therefore we are anxious to get the Bill through the House.

WOMEN IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is satisfied with the report Toward Equality, why did he not have the courage to direct the Minister of Justice to amend the Human Rights Act to guarantee that discrimination against women in the Armed Forces and on the basis of sexual orientation be truly prohibited rather than giving us the double-speak we got this morning? Did he not hear the cries for equal opportunity?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is equality.

Mr. Crosbie: You can see I have no prejudice, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: That's right, baby.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the Hon. Member is this. Her Party was in power for 20 years. Twenty years! What steps did they take in all that time to do anything about the status of women in the Armed Forces?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We have now announced the Government's policy that all trades and occupations in the Canadian Armed Forces be open to women. At the present time it is only 65 per cent. There is just one caveat. The policy is to be pursued in a manner consistent with the requirement of the Armed Forces to be operationally effective in the interests of national security. That, of course, has to be observed, and this is a giant step forward for the women of Canada.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the Minister did not understand the implications of Section 15 of the Constitution which we brought home. However, why has he ignored the need to bring in legislative change and, instead, left the whole matter to the courts? We just spent millions of dollars hearing over 1,000 Canadians testify that they need protection through a change in the law. Why can the Minister not understand what this group is requesting?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member continues the confusion she has exhibited ever since eleven o'clock this morning. We have done the exact opposite. She was a member of the committee to whose report we are responding. We have agreed in principle with 46 of the recommendations. We partially agreed with 15. We disagreed with only 10. We deferred 14 because they are under study in other areas or because of the financial shambles left to us we do not have the financial resources with which to act. We have agreed with 61 of the 85 recommendations, and never before has such a committee had such a positive response from a Government in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

POLICY GOVERNING HOMOSEXUALS AND LESBIANS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Current Government policy prohibits the Canadian Armed Forces from hiring gays and lesbians and orders that they be immediately fired. Will the Minister confirm that these policies, which have caused such pain to and oppression of so many Canadians, will immediately be rescinded as unanimously recommended by the subcommittee on equality rights?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The hon. gentleman has heard the reply of the Minister of Justice. In case he has not read the report thoroughly as yet, he will find the response set out in detail on page 25.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask this very specific supplementary question. In the event that a Canadian who happens to be gay or lesbian applies tomorrow to join the Canadian Armed Forces, will this Minister tell them they are not qualified? Or will he say that an end to discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation means that the Armed Forces and the RCMP should be open to all Canadians and there should be no further discrimination against gays and lesbians?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Government's response is fully set forth on page 13.

Mr. Broadbent: Read it, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: Sure. The Leader of the NDP obviously has not read it yet, so let me read it to him:

> The Government believes that one's sexual orientation is irrelevant to whether one can perform a job or use a service or facility.

The Government will take its responsibilities and do whatever is necessary to achieve that principle.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOMOSEXUAL BEHAVIOUR DIRECTIVE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This is an opportunity for him to respond to charges that this report is nothing more than double-speak. Will he announce today that Cabinet Directive 35, which is still in force and which describes homosexual behaviour as a character defect, will be revoked?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Government's response to the report is before the House. The Hon. Member must have seen the response to recommendation 10 which was just read to the House by the Minister of National Defence. Other responses were to mandatory retirement, common law spouses, women in the Armed Forces, and the like. She has seen all of those so she will see that the matter is more than adequately dealt with, including the response to the section dealing with security matters in the area she has raised.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Government is saying it is not prepared—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Ms. Copps: —to take its responsibilities under the Charter. It is going to leave it up to the courts.

REQUEST FOR REVOCATION OF DIRECTIVE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister very directly whether he will or will not revoke Cabinet Directive 35, which refers to illicit sexual behaviour as a character defect, when it concerns admission into the Armed Forces, the RCMP, and other equal employment opportunity employers in the Civil Service? Will the Prime Minister, not the Minister of Justice, answer the question?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I hate to ignore the hon. lady's advice but I really must answer this question because it is too confusing for anyone else to answer who has not been intimately involved with the report. Now, could I—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Now we know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Penner: I think the Prime Minister understands.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. ladies and gentlemen opposite may have nothing but illicit sexual activity on their minds, but the Prime Minister does not. He has other things to think about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Explain.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is more than enough of all of that. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East, order, please. Government Members, order, please. The Minister will please answer the question.

Mr. Crosbie: The answer is—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is on your mind, Brian?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister will answer the question now, briefly, please.

Mr. Crosbie: The answer is on page 14:

Sexual orientation is not a ground for denial of a security clearance. Rather, the criteria applied are loyalty to Canada and reliability.

Those are the criteria applied.

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This morning the Minister of Justice tabled this report, the Toward Equality report, which rejected any changes in Bill C-62, the Bill on employment equity, as called for by women and the three minority groups mentioned in that legislation. Are we to take from this report that the Minister has now closed the door to any possible changes to Bill C-62 as demanded by women's groups in this country, native Canadians, the disabled, and visible minorities? Does this report close the door to any changes?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would not pre-empt what the House of Commons can do. As the Hon. Member knows, Bill C-62 is before the House for report stage, and I will wait to see what the House does with that Bill.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that she and the Conservative Party are not willing to listen to the women of this country, the native Canadians, visible minorities, and the disabled? Is that what she is saying?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had said exactly the opposite. I had told the Hon. Member that I am awaiting report stage and third reading stage. As a seasoned parliamentarian he will know that at that time there will be plenty of opportunity to debate whatever he and other Members would like to raise.

Mr. Benjamin: You're getting too well seasoned.

ECONOMIC PROJECTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. According to the estimates contained in the Minister's Budget, by 1990-91 Government borrowings will fall to $11 billion based on a growth of only 2.75 per cent. I was wondering, inasmuch as every major economic forecaster from the Royal Bank through to Data Resources and Informetrica have all indicated—

YOUTH

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT ANALYSIS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Does the Minister agree with the analysis in the Senate youth report that there are more than 700,000 unemployed youth in Canada who require specially designed employment and apprenticeship programs? Does the Minister agree with that analysis?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I told the Hon. Member yesterday, we agree with the fact that the young people of this country need to have greater job opportunities, need to have more training opportunities. It is for that reason we have introduced the programs which benefit some 218,000 young people in this fiscal year. That will involve some $700 million of expenditure by the federal Government, almost 40 per cent of the total budget of the Department.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister agrees with the findings of the Senate youth report how can she be content with a Budget that has no provisions whatsoever for youth unemployment? I must tell her that under the Jobs Strategy Program not one job is under way in my constituency, and the program was announced last June. Does she realize—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has asked one supplementary now. Was it a preamble, or was it a question? The question has been put.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member does not fall into the youth category, but I would be—

Mr. Benjamin: Neither do you.

Miss MacDonald: —pleased to extend the training programs in the Department to allow him a training course in how Estimates and programs are handled.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since November, 1984, the Government has been chipping away our social programs while at the same time increasing taxes to the average Canadian family by over $1,300. What does the Minister mean on page 12 of the Budget when he says that he intends to introduce measures which will provide universal access to social programs? What does he mean exactly, specifically, precisely, and concisely?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, exactly, precisely, and concisely, since November, 1984, we have created something close to 580,000 jobs.

Mr. Deans: Oh, no. Sit down.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have introduced so many changes in social programs that have been widely approved by Canadians from coast to coast—the acceleration of the child tax credit, the increase in the child tax credit, pension reform, and a wide variety—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): I have a supplementary for the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister intend to eliminate universality for social programs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, precisely and concisely it says on that page in the Budget that we will maintain universal access—very simple and very concise.

EMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As a result of the Minister's May 23, 1985 Budget, 580,000 jobs have been created, including 156,000 in Quebec. Can the Minister say whether the February 26, 1986 Budget will have such a spectacular impact in Quebec?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): A very good question, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that my Budget contains a number of measures designed to encourage small- and medium-sized businesses. I think that small- and medium-sized businesses should be aware of the fact that 20 pages of the Income Tax Act have been deleted to simplify the legislation. This is a positive factor which will encourage small businesses.

INDUSTRY

PRATT & WHITNEY—GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT—EMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. On February 14, you were in Montreal with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to announce with Pratt & Whitney an investment of $575 million. Could the Minister confirm to the House that at the time he neglected to inform members of the press, Montrealers and Quebecers, that 40 per cent of the jobs created by those projects would be outside Quebec?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker, on February 14 we announced that 2,500 new jobs would be created in Montreal. I think the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie should stand up and applaud our initiative and be glad about the new jobs being created throughout the Montreal metropolitan area.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF JOBS TO BE CREATED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we want to know the truth, and they all seem to be suffering from the same disease as the Prime Minister. Could the President of the Treasury Board confirm to the House that 40 per cent of the jobs created by these three projects will be outside Quebec? Perhaps the Minister could stop going off on a tangent and tell us what good this is going to do!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie would care to hear about the history of Montreal, the history of the past twelve months during which we created 60,000 new jobs, when jobs were being created in Quebec thirteen times as fast as they were under the previous Liberal government. We are creating 2,500 jobs in the aerospace and aeronautics industry, and if there are spin-off jobs that go to other provinces, that is a bonus. But we have created 2,500 jobs in Montreal, in addition to what has already been done.

Oral Questions

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF NEW PROGRAMS ANNOUNCED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Katimavik, Challenge '86 and the Canadian Jobs Strategy have all been affected by budget cuts. Furthermore, Canada's youth and its department have been left out of the Budget. Could the Secretary of State describe the new programs the Prime Minister has promised us, which are supposed to prove that our young people will not be treated in as cavalier a fashion as their Minister?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of programs that create jobs for young people. In fact, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has created 5,000 jobs per month more than the average achieved by our hon. friends opposite, who lost 5,000 jobs per year. Canadian young people want jobs and they want training, and that is what we are giving them, and I think you should congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration on the programs she is introducing.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): In giving the boot to the Ministry of State for Youth, is the Government also giving the boot to the National Youth Forum, the Youth Advisory Committee, and any prospect for a coherent youth policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, last year, the Ministry of State (Youth) co-ordinated an exemplary International Youth Year.

In my opinion, the Minister did a tremendous job across this country. She met with thousands of young people. She did what a Minister of State (Youth) who has a co-ordinating role within a Government does, since all our departments have earmarked very substantial funds for young people. That is basically what she is asked to do, and once again, she has done a marvelous job.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW-LEVEL AIR DEFENCE CONTRACT

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It was inferred on Friday by one of the national papers that low-level air defence may not now be going ahead because it had not appeared as a separate line item in the Main Estimates. Could the Minister clarify this, and if the program is to proceed could he give an indication when a contract may be let?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons why it did not appear in the Estimates is because as the Hon. Member knows, there are deadlines within which decisions must be made in order to be included in the Estimates and in the Supplementary Estimates.

The direct answer to his question is that a decision with respect to the winning contender on the short list has not yet been made.

SHIPBUILDING

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that the Canadian shipbuilding industry is in its worst economic slump in 40 years. I appeal to his sense of fairness and ask if he believes it is fair that communities in British Columbia, Atlantic Canada and Quebec must see the subsidy to this sector of the economy reduced by 17.4 per cent as a result of his Budget, when other countries are increasing their subsidies to their shipbuilding industries?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a question that should most appropriately be directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who is responsible for that area. I believe the Minister will be back either tomorrow or the next day.

PURCHASE OF VESSELS BY CN MARINE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will he give an undertaking to the House that CN Marine, in its subsequent purchases of vessels, will ensure that Canadians will build those ships in Canadian shipyards and that it will not go offshore for those vessels?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that probably more than 90 per cent of the activity of the Canadian shipbuilding industry is the result of activity generated by the Department of Transport under CN Marine and the Coastguard Acquisition Program.

I know that the Hon. Member's interest in this matter is very genuine and sincere, and I will certainly take his representations into account when a decision is being made.

REPORTED EXPULSION OF VANCOUVER TENANTS TO ACCOMMODATE TOURISTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister, who is responsible for Expo. Canada is hosting the world in Vancouver, while Expo is forcing the eviction of hundreds of poor people in downtown Vancouver and hotel rents are escalating by up to 400 per cent. Since the province will not act, what action will the Minister take to alleviate this disgraceful situation and restore our reputation as a country that really cares about its poorest citizens?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that question might be more appropriately addressed in the provincial Legislature since this question involves the administration of Expo 86.

I am responsible for the Canada Harbour place Corporation. I am not sure whether I am in a position to do anything precise, but I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration and get back to her later.

HOUSING

NON-PROFIT HOUSING—TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC. Will he reconsider his decision to transfer responsibility for non-profit housing to the uncaring British Columbia Government and immediately increase the allocation of social housing units for downtown Vancouver residents?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the negotiations with all provincial and territorial jurisdictions on the new and improved social housing program will allow the requirements of those Canadians who are in core need to be addressed twice as fast as they had been under the old program. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want the people of British Columbia not to benefit from increased social housing units through co-operation between the federal Government and the provincial Government.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. Does he believe it is fair or right that the Native Economic Development Program should be slashed so dramatically, by 47 per cent, as a cost-cutting measure? Why did he withhold $90 million last year, and why has he refused to respond to the application from the Yukon Indian Development Corporation?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Government is firmly committed to development for native people, and I can assure you that in the past few months, we have approved more than 90 projects representing a budget of over $30 million, and we have created more than 2,000 permanent jobs for native people. So I don't think I have any regrets today about the job I did.

[English]

PROSPECTS FOR PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit to the House that if the Native Economic Development Program is not yet dead, it is certainly terminally ill?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I think the program is still alive and will continue.

COMPLAINTS BY NATIVE GROUPS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since several native groups have complained of lengthy delays and even complete stalling of applications to the Native Economic Development Program, and at least one has now publicly advertised that it has no confidence in the Minister, what steps will he take to make sure that this program is put on an effective and business-like footing?

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Member is aware, the Minister is not here. I will take note of his question and get back to him.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West.

Mr. Parry: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. That is a falsehood. The Minister is here.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED PRACTICES USED BY OFFICIALS AT TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the practice of her departmental officials at the international airport in Toronto using computer terminals to trick immigrants into believing they are lie detector tests.

Given that two officials have said at least six officials are using this type of intimidating practice, will she stop the delay and get on with an investigation so that this repugnant practice can be put to an end?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the Hon. Member yesterday, Immigration management has not been apprised of any of the details. If he has details of these practices which we have said are abhorrent, I wish he or anyone else would provide them to me. We will see that action is taken.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, since her own Ontario Regional Director has refused to deny the reports, will she categorically tell the House that this repugnant practice is not happening? Can she give us that guarantee?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that directions have been placed everywhere not to allow in any way practices such as that to exist. If I find evidence to the contrary, we will certainly take steps to stop them. However, I need to have definite information in order to do that.

GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT GROWTH FORECASTS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Why did he project his Budget consideration to 1991 on the basis of 2.75 per cent growth in the GNP when most economic forecasters are projecting a 3 per cent growth? You see, Don, that is how you ask a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought there was a familiar ring to that question. In fact I think most people will find that the economic assumptions that are used in the Budget are quite conservative.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You are right.

• (1500)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): With the result, I think, that the confidence and the credibility which people have in the numbers are well founded because we have based these assumptions looking at—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Come on!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is three o'clock.

POINTS OF ORDER

DISALLOWANCE OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which arises out of the Question Period. I raise my point of order not to impugn the integrity of the person who rose to respond to my question, because I have every confidence in him, but because of the statement that the Minister was not in the House. My question was directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It concerned the responsibility of the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) and was with regard to the Native Economic Development Program. I would like Your Honour's ruling with respect to whether or not I was legitimately entitled to a supplementary question since an answer was given by someone who bore no responsibility for the matter raised.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member may not realize this. When he puts a question he puts it to the Ministry.

Mr. McCurdy: No!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members may not realize it but questions are actually put to the Government. The Government decides who will answer. If the Chair is faced with a Parliamentary Secretary indicating that the Minister who should answer the question is not present, then the Chair has no choice but to take the Hon. Member's word. Questions are directed to the Ministry, which I think is a point the Hon. Member may not realize.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am sure Your Honour can visualize the problem which will arise if the practice pursued today were to be allowed to continue. It would then be possible for other than the Minister in charge to rise and say that the Minister is not here, even though he or she is sitting in his or her place. That is exactly what happened today. The Minister in charge of the program was sitting in his place when we were informed that he was not present. Surely to God that cannot be allowed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will check that if the Hon. Member likes.

Mr. Deans: That was the answer.

Mr. Speaker: The answer from the Government was that the Minister in charge of responding to the question was not here. That was the answer from the Government.

Mr. Deans: It was wrong.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot be suggesting, surely, that the Chair has any obligation with regard to whether or not a question or answer is relevant or irrelevant, or right or wrong. It is simply not possible for the Chair to be involved in such a discussion. I suggest that Hon. Members know that when a question is taken on notice the Chair's practice, which I think is reasonable, is to say that if that is what is being done then it does not make much sense to allow Supplementary questions. That is all the Chair did in that circumstance.

LANGUAGE USED IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, I realize French is not your first language, and I also realize that occasionally you may not understand exactly what the other French-speaking Members are saying.

This afternoon, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) proved that his language was both unparliamentary and unworthy of all Canadian Francophones. I wish that from now on you would be particularly careful about the kind of comments the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie makes in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have a problem here, because the Hon. Member seems to have a complaint about a speech, but not about a specific word or comment made by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). We have no rules on how something is said, but if the Hon. Member has a complaint concerning . . . Does he mean that something unparliamentary was said?

Mr. Malépart: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Malépart: That is cowardly.

Mr. Chartrand: Mr. Speaker, once again, you were saying whether a word was . . . Well, there you have one! I do not think calling people cowards in the House is very parliamentary and I insist it is not only insulting to the person concerned but also to all Francophones in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Which word?

Mr. Chartrand: The word "lâche".

Mr. Speaker: "Lâche"? What does that mean? It must be a "joual" term or something I am not familiar with. What does it mean?

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has tried to bring to your attention a complaint which has been made to me with respect to certain terminology used in the House in a language which is neither your mother tongue nor mine. I believe my colleague has very properly tried to caution the Chair and suggest to Your Honour that there may be language and terminology being inappropriately used by Members opposite. For that reason his point is general. However, I think it is up to all of us to try to upgrade our language in this Chamber. My colleague has quite rightly brought up this point. No one is suggesting that the Chair is missing it.

Mr. Speaker: He is missing it.

Mr. Lewis: If the Chair agrees that he is missing it, then I will go along with that.

However, I think it is a liberty that may be being taken, and my colleague has quite properly brought it to your attention.

Mr. Speaker: I accept the point the Hon. Member is making. However, he should also know that it is one thing for me to hear a representation on a point of order, if that was what was meant. However, the Member rose, I took it—

I thought he was raising a point of order about the specific language used by a Member.

[English]

If that is what he wants to do, then I have to hear it in terms of specific language and not in terms of a general complaint. I think the Hon. Member knows that that is the case.

Need I say that if a Member believes another Hon. Member's language is inappropriate, that does not correct it? It does not correct it by responding in a way which the Hon. Member himself thinks is improper.

Mr. Gauthier: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: I am just trying to be of help.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1:27 p.m., the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) had the floor. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned for the luncheon recess I was at the point in my remarks where I was giving a general perspective of the Budget Speech of this session as compared to the two previous budget statements. I went on to mention that it was the responsibility of Members of this House to realize that when a budget statement has been made in the form of a ways and means motion, or in any other form, that is only the start. All that that indicates to Hon. Members is the direction which the Government is taking. It takes about a year or so before we fully understand what the announcement means because, in the meantime, there will have been an Order in Council which will have set up the power to make regulations and definitions and place it in the hands of the Department.

It is at this point in time that the greatest danger to Government policy exists. I think there are over 1,000 examples of this before a committee which has been in existence for a good many years. I refer to the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. If Parliament thinks it has done something, then all Parties may agree and it is accepted by the Government and put into practice. We can then find out years later that it has been ignored.

A classic example of this in recent decades goes back to the fact that after 10 years of discussion the House agreed that universality should be maintained with respect to family allowances. This was concluded by the simple reasoning that it would cost us more to put a means test in place than what we would be able to collect, if we were to take back something from those who did not need it. Ever since that legislation came in, orphans have been barred from receiving family allowances. As a Member of Parliament, when I finally found about it, I took it up with the then Minister. He was shocked and referred me to his Department, which told me it could not be done for various thechnical, logical but silly reasons. I have been interested in this subject for nearly 13 years, but not one Government has ever tackled the critical problem of how we control the regulations and definitions which are made after we have done our duty in Parliament. I suggest that Members of Parliament, instead of looking at the centre of attraction, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), spend a little time looking at the regulations on something they are interested in as soon as they come out so they can see where things stand.

I can quote many examples but I will just give one. The Government is very proud of the fact that it gave to the farmers, the foresters, the miners and all of the people in the production industry a 21.6 cents a gallon rebate on fuel used in production. Why is it not then being used by the farmers and those people in various types of industry? The answer is that when they finally see the regulations and the application forms they have to fill out, most of them do not have the time or the will to try to understand them. The regulations state that you should list every vehicle you put on a public highway. If we consider all of the farmers, foresters, miners, fishermen and all of the other people affected by this regulation, we can understand why they do not want to fill out the applications. Instead of the Government receiving credit for having fulfilled its promise in giving the rebate, all we catch is "hail Columbia". It is always blamed on the Minister of Finance. But I blame it on myself, and I can say with some seriousness to the farmers, fishermen, foresters and miners who receive all of these rights, that they have to do some work for themselves. They must let their Member of Parliament know what the problem is.

According to these detailed regulations, if someone has three trucks, three tractors, combines, this, that and the other thing, it must be stated how much each of them was on a public highway. They have five years sometimes to make out these applications, but no farmer is going to remember things like that. A lot of them do not even keep their receipts, and if they do not, they are dead ducks. I am simply suggesting that if we simply watch the regulations and definitions as they come in, we can stop a lot of these things by making some practical suggestions.

This Budget is aimed at getting interest rates down, which is the number one factor in our cost-push inflation of today which is breaking banks, small businesses and everyone else. Once we pay over 6 per cent, we are dead ducks as far as the credit system is concerned. We have a Government that is pledged to address this problem. It announced the small business development bonds in 1985 and has renewed this program in this Budget, but not a loan will go through under this program because they forgot to take out a few little words, and we all know what they are, "only for those in financial difficulty". No right-minded person is going to ask a bank, trust company or other lender to lend money to people in financial difficulties, which means there are no loans at all going out. But who gets all the blame? The Minister of Finance does. I am simply saying that we have a responsibility as Members of Parliament to watch for these things.

We do not have to change the law. All we have to do is to change the definition and I am sure we can all come up with the right words to correct that problem. All we have to do is to define it as "any person who is paying too much interest". That would get around everything. We can then give the loans to farmers, to the homeowners and to the small businessmen, those who are almost guaranteed the right under the legislation of 1983. The legislation is in place. Let us make certain that we back up our Minister of Finance by taking some action on these things, not on the monetary side, not on the gambling side, which goes on all over the world, but on the fiscal side, about which those gamblers do not care.

We care at home. So let us get this Budget through, and get our interest rates down. I would think there would not be a farmer, a small businessman or a big businessman who does not know that once we get interest rates down, we keep the economy moving and we receive the extra revenue in our coffers. I am simply saying that as Members of Parliament we have to help, regardless of our politics, because when it comes to interest rates, we are killing off our enterprising businesses.

We have the legislation in place. Let us clean up the words in the regulations and their forms. That can be done by a simple matter of changing the definitions. If we do these things, if we take advantage of the amendments to the Farm Credit Act in 1983 and the National Housing Act in 1983—which all Parties supported—if we get to where the trouble is, we can force the banks and lending agencies to compete with every other agency we can provide. That means that the banks can sell the agribonds and so can trust companies and government agencies at both federal and provincial levels. Any responsible person can sell them. Then we will get all the money we want to pay these debts and get this country back on a solid basis. If we get this country moving, the taxpayers will not begrudge—and they are not begrudging it now—a $300 or $400 increase in taxes a year. We will get the deficit cleaned up and we will get this country working and going ahead.

Let us watch these gamblers operating around the world, but let us just watch them. We should leave it to the pros. Let the pros win or lose. Let us not get into it because we are not big enough. That is my pitch.

This is a good Budget. It is as good as we can expect. I am only saying that for, gosh sakes, let us not slip back because we are not paying attention to the small print. I would like to congratulate the Minister of Finance for having the patience to take what he has to take day after day. Life and death Budget! Good Lord, it is simply a slow step towards cleaning up a heck of a mess. We are slowly getting out of it. Let us take it step by step and, as Tommy Douglas would say: "We will find our Jerusalem sooner than we think".

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct two questions to the Hon. Member. When he spoke earlier this morning, he quoted approvingly from what he called the most prestigious journal in the United States, "The Public Interest". I would agree with him in the sense that it is the most prestigious journal of neo-conservatism in the United States. The Hon. Member quoted its words of approval of the attempts of the Conservative Government to cut the Budget. Is the Hon. Member not aware of the fact that the idol of that magazine, President Reagan, in the eight years he will be in office will double the public debt? In the 200 years until President Reagan became the President of the United States, the public debt created was $1 trillion. Eight years later in 1988, when President Reagan leaves office, the public debt will be $2 trillion. Was that magazine not saying to us: "Do as we say but don't do as we do"?

The Hon. Member talked about how business and Governments have to gamble in this world of ours. Does the Hon. Member not agree that the biggest gamblers in the country are farmers? They plant their crops, protect them from insects, watch the weather, add fertilizer and eventually harvest the crops and hope for a price which will at least let them break even. How are our farmers supposed to compete with those so-called good friends with whom we are supposed to have free trade when the United States Government is subsidizing the sale of wheat for export? Every bushel sold for export will be subsidized by $3.50. How can Canadian farmers compete with our so-called friends in the United States?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked me two questions. One dealt with what the Hon. Member called Reaganomics. That is the wrong name for that type of economics. The economics which he quoted, supported by neo-Conservatives, are Canadian economics. They are supported by men like the present Minister of Finance and that is why this neo-conservative group supported them. Who started this concept?

The way one decides what to do is to look at the quantitative analysis of the figures. Let us take a look at the Kennedy Budget of 1963 and at the Reagan Budget of 1983 and then take a look at the amount of money which was brought in by reducing taxes. No one ever mentions this in Canadian newspapers. It is not considered news in Canada. It is a policy different from the one to which we are accustomed, the Keynesian concept that spending money is the only thing that is God's truth. The hon. gentleman is widely read. I suggest that he should take a look at all Canadian newspapers and name one newspaper or magazine that has ever printed how much more money was brought in as a result of the Kennedy Budget of 1963. I have not seen reference to that in a single newspaper, and yet I read as much as the Hon. Member. I am simply pointing out that the philosophy of quantitative analysis was started in Canada by a man named Mundell. He went to Chicago and he tried to get into the White House. I am sure that every Party in the House has talked with this gentleman. We all know about it but we do not dare mention it because we would be crossing the type of opinion expressed by the Hon. member, that all we have to do is to look at the quantitative analysis and pour money into the problems to make us all better off.

The Hon. Member's second question concerned farmers. Farmers are gamblers. They gamble on the weather, price and other things. However, I want to make clear that farmers know they are gamblers and they insure themselves against the weather. We are insuring them now on the stabilization of their income, for which they pay. They are bothered by the question of pricing. They hear the stories in the press about the great target price of the Americans. Farmers know that the inducements are sending American Farmers into a trap into which they were sent years ago, that is, taking them out of production and, as a return for going out of production, being given the target price. If the American farmer wants to have his throat cut from ear to ear with the same philosophy of 25 years ago, that is his business. However, as far as Canada is concerned, our job with grain farmers in the United States is not to humiliate them, but to go down there and offer to sell their grain for them too. If there is a policy in Washington that leaves it to private enterprise and the markets of Kansas City and Chicago to sell their grain, it will not be sold. They have also come out with great inducement policies under public law 480, and every other country asked for them. We have found out, as have American farmers, the results of this type of Government interference with world markets and not paying attention to the job of getting out and selling grain.

I should like to take a little time on this because it is a key point. When I first began to negotiate with the Chinese in 1961, and I knew there was a big sale coming up, I went to the American President here in Ottawa and then in Washington and said that we would give half our sales to the Americans if they would not send troops into Vietnam and instead talked with the Chinese. I also said that they should realize that the Americans and the Chinese had a great deal in common and had one common enemy, and Kennedy agreed. All this is on the Congressional record of the United States.

My point is that the farmers and producers of Canada have a tremendous opportunity to market all over the world. If we market all the products which we can produce in the United States and Canada, we do not have to worry much about the Keynesian types who try to run any type of industry. That is my answer. We will survive this. If the Americans do not give the Russians the same deal as they give the Third World countries, the Russians buy from us. We signed an agreement approximately two months ago for up to 350 million bushels per year to one country, and the Americans would have liked to obtain that market. It is the same situation with China and all other countries with which we deal. We deal with them on the basis of mutual advantage to both sides. We live up to our word and have expanded into all sorts of markets by using that principle. We are getting into South America now. There is good co-operation. For any farmer who has hope for the future, it will not be based upon what the Americans do price-wise. It will be based upon whether we can sell all the grain we produce and help Americans to sell all the grain they produce, and the world needs it. Then we are both better off. That is the only way to go ahead.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not aware that Canada's customers for grain, which it had for probably close to 100 years in western Europe, are now no longer our customers and are in fact our competitors for the sale of wheat because the countries in the European Common Market have established very substantial subsidies for their farmers? If the United States Government, in its new agricultural policy, is to subsidize the export of grain by $3.50 per bushel, as was indicated in its new program, how will the Canadian farmer be able to compete? Surely that is not fair market competition.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be harsh but that type of nonsense is really beneath the dignity of this place. The French subsidize their farmers by $9 per bushel and they are exporting; the British do not subsidize their farmers and they are exporting. I simply point out that we are just as smart as the British. If they can raise their productivity up to 148 bushels per acre, so can we.

Mr. Orlikow: By subsidy.

Mr. Hamilton: We can take on the British, the French and the Americans any day of the week and we can whip them any time.

Mr. Benjamin: We cannot, and you know it, Alvin.

Mr. Hamilton: I am not talking to the labour man over there. I am talking about the facts of life. We object very strenuously to the fact that we tie ourselves up to the American price. We do not deal with these other countries purely on price. In the case of grain to China, the Chinese buy our grain because they know that they make more money from buying our grain than they do buying from anybody else. Why is that? It is because we help them sell their products around the world. If the Hon. Member wants to look at this from the Chinese point of view, I would be glad to provide it to him. the Chinese calculate that for every dollar which we made out of the sale of wheat to China over the last 25 years, they have made double as much my selling their food products in world markets. The Hon. Member asks how we can compete against these subsidies. We do it by showing how we sell grain. We sell around 1,200 million bushels per year. When I first started, it was 300 million. The point I am trying to make is that all this nonsense is unworthy of a literate person in the House.

• (1530)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I am willing to take part in the budget debate, but perhaps depressed about it. I want to say to my friend, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), that I will have a word or two to say about what he has just finished saying in a few minutes. I also want to say that I am glad I did not send a memo around telling Hon. Members on all sides that I was speaking today, otherwise there would be nobody here but you and me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: This Budget and the previous one reminded me of some of the Liberal ones I have had to suffer through since 1968. I have concluded that what the French philosopher had to say is sort of reinforced, believed in and supported by these last two Tory Budgets, that is that a rich man has as much right to beg on the streets and sleep under a bridge as a poor man.

I have looked under a few bridges and looked in the line-ups at food banks and at those who panhandle for loose change outside of stores on the streets of Ottawa and I could not find a single rich man. I have looked at the Government's attempts to deindex old age pensions and at its successful attempt to deindex family allowances and whatnot. It reminded me of another old adage of the Conservative bent, "that old age pension just destroys the incentive to work".

I listened carefully today to my friend, the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). He asked us to give him, his Party and his Government some credit for what is in the Budget and for some of the things they have done. He even cried and pleaded for some credit.

I am a magnanimous fellow. I will give the Government some credit. For instance, that drop in unemployment is nice. I will give the Government credit for that drop, although there has not really been a net increase of 580,000 jobs. There might have been an increase of 580,000 jobs in certain areas of the economy but when you substract that from the over-all figures there may have been a net increase in jobs of maybe 150,000—let us say 200,000. That is good. I will give the Government credit for that.

I agree with the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board that if unemployment had gone up, his Government would have got all the blame. We will give the Government credit, all the credit in the world for the drop in unemployment.

I am sure my good friends on the Government side will agree that whether unemployment is 9.8 per cent, 10.8 per cent or 11.8 per cent of the workforce, even if it is down to 9.8 per cent, that percentage is still a bloody national disgrace. I hope there is no disagreement on that score.

The child tax credit refund measure is nice. A starving man will take half of loaf of bread or half a slice any time. I will give the Government credit, but I do not know why the Minister would plead for thanks on something that was so obviously and desperately needed that even the Tories had to recognize and make some modest moves about it. If that is what the Government wants thanks for, we will give it thanks for crumbs.

The hysteria of the Conservatives and the business community, both national and international, about the deficit has hypnotized them. I would have liked to have seen more measures in the Budget not only to create more jobs but to save jobs.

I received a telex today addressed to myself and my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and four colleagues from the Conservative Party: the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy). It is a modest request, Mr. Speaker, which has been made of this Government for the last two years and the previous Government for Lord knows how many years. It has to do with the tariff on steel and steel products from South Korea. They are asking for a measure that deprives South Korea of reduced tariffs on steel afforded that country under the general preferential tariff. Incidentally, this telex shows management and labour co-operation. The telex is from Mr. Phillips, President of the Interprovincial Steel and Pipe Company, and Mr. Stevens, Director, District 3 United Steelworkers. They point out:

> No other major industrial country gives Korea such special treatment on steel because they recognize that Korea has the most modern steel industry in the world.

I do not blame Korea for that. Following the Korean war many countries, including Canada, helped Korea rebuild its entire economy, including the steel industry. The Koreans deserved preferential treatment then, but they certainly do not anymore.

Without the preferential treatment we could save jobs as well as create jobs in Port Moody, Red Deer, Edmonton, Calgary and Regina. There are only 1,400 people working now in the steel industry there and there could be at least 2,400.

This telex is asking, and I am asking on behalf of my colleagues from Regina East and my colleagues from the four Conservative ridings, Conservative for the time being, the Hon. Members for Mission-Port Moody, Edmonton-Strathcona, Red Deer and Calgary East, that the Minister or some other appropriate member of the Government amend the ways and means motion on customs and tariffs to withdraw the general preferential tariff privileges on Korean steel and steel products and revert those items to normal tariff treatment. Because of all the talk we have heard about free trade in this place and outside from the business and corporate community as well as from the Government, the question is not whether it is free trade but whether it is fair trade. That and many other items are not fair trade. I include in that trade with our friends to the south of us.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was questioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), about the United States Government and the European Economic Community and its respective Governments subsidizing grain, dairy and livestock producers. In this instance grain was the question. The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain missed the point entirely, and so did the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) when speaking at meetings of farmers in Western Canada just last weekend.

What the Government of Canada and what this Budget are saying to western grain producers is, in effect, produce more, according to the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. Increase our efficiency and produce more. He knows better than I do that our grain producers have produced more. They have produced themselves into losses. They have become so efficient they have put themselves out of business. There are no grain producers and farmers anywhere in the world who have become more efficient and productive than Canadian farmers. The thanks they got for it was the response of the Minister of Agriculture to grain producers in western Canada last weekend. He said that they do not understand the international market. Our grain producers damn well understand the international market and they are sick and tired of having this Government and the previous Liberal Government telling them that they, on their own, either through the Canadian Wheat Board or by themselves, are expected to compete with the Treasuries of the United States, the European Economic Community, Argentina, and Australia.

It is not proper for a Government of any political stripe to subject our grain producers to the will of the so-called market forces when the Treasuries of other nations subsidize their farmers to the tune of $9, $20, and $24 a tonne. We cannot ask our grain producers to deal with that on their own. That is patently unfair and is patent discrimination against our grain producers. Regardless of free trade and free market forces, the national Treasury must support our primary producers by making the competition equal.

The present Government is hypnotized by the deficit, as was the previous Government. At the end of World War II, in 1985-86 dollars the deficit in Canada was twice as high as it is now, regardless of how you measure it. I was reading an article the other day which indicated that the national deficit in 1933, translated into 1986 dollars, was three times as high as it is now, whether measured on a per capita basis or as a percentage of the Gross National Product.

There are two kinds of deficits, Mr. Speaker. Right now we have a dead weight deficit. It is a continual vicious circle of borrowing money to pay interest on previous borrowings. There is also what is called a constructive deficit, which is self-liquidating. Such a deficit provides for public investment coupled with private and co-operative investment which creates employment. The Government forgets, as did the previous administration, that if you reduce unemployment to 6 per cent, which is not asking a lot, the increased taxes paid by the people who have been put to work and by the companies which hired them would pay off our present deficit within three years.

I would like to quote from a column written by Ruben Bellen, a professor of economics at St. John's College at the University of Manitoba. This article was in The Toronto Star on May 21 last year. He points out that in 1984 the federal Government paid $21 billion in interest on the national debt. Financial experts emphasized the enormity of the amount by a number of additional measurements. It constituted 5 per cent of the Gross National Product. It required nearly one-third of the Government's revenue which amounted to $2,500 per taxpayer.

That is a shocking figure at first blush, but, as he says, the people who so dramatically present that figure forget something. Ninety per cent of the $21 billion which had to be borrowed by the Government of Canada to pay the interest charges on the current debt was paid out to Canadians, as that is the portion of federal Government bonds that are held in Canada by individuals, by corporate and institutional investors and, most important, by the Bank of Canada itself. The Canadian investor who took up borrowings by the Government of Canada got back nearly all of his $2,500 share of the $21 billion worth of borrowings in interest.

There is another slight oversight in the hysteria about the deficit. Our central bank, the Bank of Canada, which is responsible for regulating the national money supply, is the largest single buyer of federal Government bonds. In 1984, of the $21 billion borrowed by the federal Government, $17 billion, which is about 10 per cent of the total outstanding federal government debt, was held by the Bank of Canada.

The Bank of Canada is wholly owned by the federal Government and at the end of each calendar year turns over its net revenue to the Department of National Revenue. It received $1.981 billion in interest payments from the Government of Canada on the bonds that it held. Its operating costs were $129 million. Therefore, of the nearly $2 billion which the Bank of Canada charged the federal Government, it got back $1.852 billion. Therefore, the Government got back about 93 per cent of the money it paid out as bond interest to the Bank of Canada in 1984. That is like buying a $100 suit, getting a $90 rebate, and insisting that it cost you $100. The deficit—baloney!

At the end of World War II the country overcame a deficit twice as high as the one we have now. We had low unemployment, high investment, and consumer spending. We probably had as many taxpayers in the late 1940s and early 1950s as we have now, because many people have now dropped off the tax rolls since they have insufficient income even to pay taxes. This Government plans to do some things over the next four years as indicated in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. In the five most important areas having to do with reducing unemployment, increasing food production, making agricultural producers and farmers more self-sufficient and making them all tax-paying members of our society again, in health and welfare and transportation, the Government plans to reduce investment in our economy through reduced Government spending by $12 billion.

When the Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain wants to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) he should remember that there is $500 million less for the farmers of Canada. If he wants to applaud that, he is welcome to do so, but he should go to the folks in Saskatchewan and tell them that. There will be $500 million less over the next four years. We are spending $3.61 billion less on transportation when we are 20 years behind in the modernization of our transportation system, whether it be urban mass transit, railroads, airports, airlines, shipping or whatever. Spending that money is what I call contributing to a constructive deficit. You put people to work, they pay taxes, you reduce unemployment to 6 per cent and wipe out not only the current deficit but the national debt. We did it before. I am thinking of relatively recent history during World War II, or the Korean War when Mr. St. Laurent was Prime Minister.

In 1969-70, as the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain well knows—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period—

Mr. Benjamin: May I have one minute to conclude?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) says "yes", so I presume there will be unanimous consent for one more minute.

Mr. Benjamin: What we did on the three occasions I mentioned was to slap on foreign exchange controls. That way speculators could not run hundreds of millions of dollars back and forth across the border overnight in order to make one-tenth of 1 per cent more interest. If this country is good enough to make a profit in, it is damn well good enough to invest in. They should not be able to flee from here to tax havens in order to make a fast buck somewhere else when this country desperately needs more investment.

During World War II and the Korean War the Canadian dollar was pegged at 90 cents U.S. When Mr. Diefenbaker pegged it at 87.5 cents the Liberals ran around with what they called the Diefenbuck. He also pegged interest rates. On those three occasions I referred to we did not give a darn what the American dollar or Russian rouble or anything else was worth.

We did our own thing. In spite of some mistakes, in spite of maybe taking longer that we should have, it worked. I am not reciting Party policy but it seems to me that my Party and the other two Parties in this place had better start thinking about that all over again. I hope that this is the kind of constructive attitude we will take about deficits. We should borrow money to put this country back to work and challenge the nation with a declaration of peace as we did with a declaration of war.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member indicated he was going to take a shot at my views because it gives me a chance to remind him that what he has said is exactly the same thing they said here 30 years ago. I recall when all 10 farm organizations on the Prairies forgot their tribal differences and got a petition going. Out of 150,000 farmers they got 300,000 names on that petition. That is close to 100 per cent. The petition asked for a subsidy. All the leading people in the West were saying exactly what the Hon. Member was saying here today just now. I happen to have been the poor devil who went out to oppose that. The Prime Minister asked me to go out and speak on this all over the place. I made some 225 speeches in nine weeks. I took the position that any time you had to subsidize farmers when there were hungry people in the world someone needed a boot in the hind end. I said that I would like to see no get out and sell the stuff and then prices would go up. We should not take a subsidy from a hard-pressed Government in a desperate situation as we thought at that time.

As we all know, the election finally rolled around. I think it is fair to say that when all the dust was settled, out of the 45 or so seats in the West at that time, about 40 of them went with the Conservatives on this policy of getting out and selling our products. I am simply pointing out to the Hon. Member that once you learn a lesson like that, you should not repeat the same mistake of trying to scare the living daylights out of people by saying they cannot exist when all these great things are happening.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what my colleague has said, but with all due respect, the petition in the 1940s, and also the one in 1959, two years after Mr. Diefenbaker was first elected, did not ask for a subsidy. They asked for an increase in the price of grain. All they wanted in 1940 was $1 wheat. They thought that would be reasonable. They got 10 cents a bushel more and $1 wheat. In 1959 I was part of that petition when my hon. friend was the Minister. They did not ask for a subsidy. They asked for an increase in the price of grain. They also asked for protection from the Treasuries of other countries in the international market.

That is the point I think my hon. friend is missing. You cannot expect one sector of the Canadian economy, whether it be grain producers or steelmakers, to compete against the Treasuries of other nations by themselves. That is impossible.

It is economic stupidity. Our grain producers are damn efficient and grow the best quality grain of any country in the world. They do not mind competition on a fair and equitable basis. However, when they are asked to compete against the Treasuries of the U.S. and the EEC countries, then that is the time for the Government to step in. That is the point we are making. If everything is equal, they will not ask for anything.

It is not just I who am frightened. I reflect a heck of a lot of frightened grain producers, as the Hon. Minister of Agriculture found out just a few days ago.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. They asked for 10 cents or 20 cents more a bushel, but who is going to put it up? It was the Government, and that is a subsidy. As well, there is no change in the situation at all today. There are so many people out there who need grain and all sorts of other things that there is no need for us to back into a circle in order to protect ourselves. You have living proof of that in Europe where they subsidize their farmers to the degree that they are the most unhappy farmers in the world. You think we have trouble in western Canada? Go to France and see trucks lining the road with $12-a-bushel wheat. Why are they so unhappy? It is not hard to find out why when you talk to them. You start spending money like mad and your costs go up. Cost input is the biggest problem we have today with farmers. The point that I was trying to make in my main remarks was that our main job is to get at the first element of those costs, which is the interest rates. The interest rates are 10, 20 times more important when you are talking about giving a subsidy to farmers. If you put this fairly to the farmers, who are pretty fair people, I know what the answer will be.

● (1600)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will agree with my hon. friend that input costs have been a major problem, whether it is interest rates, fertilizers, sprays or farm fuels. If the Government wants to be really helpful in this Budget it will abolish all excise and direct and indirect taxes on farm fuels; it will abolish any and all federal taxes on other input costs, whether it is fertilizers or sprays; it will allow the immediate implementation of the sale and dispensing of generic farm chemicals and will cut the price at least in half. If my good friend wants to move some amendments to that effect in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs or in this House in Committee of the Whole, my colleagues and I will be most happy to support him, and, I suspect, so would a lot of other Members on all sides of this House. If he can persuade the Minister of Finance to do the very things he has just been complaining about, boy, you will hear me applauding him and the Minister of Finance—I will be first in line.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. Penner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, since the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) starts, I think I should have recognized first the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), if the Hon. Member has no objections. By unanimous consent may we revert back to the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce and then go on to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker calls the shots.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): With unanimous consent from the House, I now give the floor to the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and my colleague in the Opposition for allowing me to speak at this time. This is a Budget that I am very pleased to speak about. I know that Canadian farmers, indeed all Canadians, have waited anxiously for this Budget. I do not feel we have let them down in any way. It would be most difficult to have a Budget that pleases everyone. We have come a long way to meeting some of the needs and we are endeavouring to meet all of the needs in the future.

I would like to read into the record an article in the London Free Press written about Ontario Treasurer Robert Nixon. The article reads as follows:

Ontario Treasurer Robert Nixon said he supports the aims and objectives outlined in the federal budget but will have to wait and see whether Finance Minister Michael Wilson's various financial moves will achieve the desired results.

"I want to join with him, frankly, in hoping that his announcements are going to achieve what he said they would—that is, bringing down interest rates, reducing unemployment and giving us real growth," Nixon told reporters after listening to Wilson's budget announcements.

He resisted pressure from reporters to describe the budget as good or bad for Ontario, but his initial reaction to Wilson's initiatives was generally supportive.

He was critical of federal Government policies which in recent months allowed interest rates to rise to the 13-per-cent level. He said this had been a "wet blanket" on the provincial economy.

"We're hoping those interest rates will fall in the next few days to the 10-per-cent level," Nixon told reporters.

Despite tax increases year after year both federally and provincially, Nixon said he could make no commitment that his next provincial budget in early May will not also reach deeper into the taxpayers' pockets.

He went on further to say as follows:

Although he shared some of Wilson's objectives, Nixon saw a danger of Ottawa and Ontario developing overlapping programs and duplicating bureaucracies. For example, a new federal program to help tobacco farmers diversify into other crops was "well intentioned" but similar to provincial assistance.

That is an area where we have to be cautious. We do not want to duplicate services already provided by a provincial Government. A situation such as we have in the tobacco industry in Ontario makes it somewhat easier to help them through those problems.

The Budget asked Canadians to understand the need for restraint and deficit reduction. The Budget still goes an extra mile for Canada's farmers. Canada's farmers had some bid setbacks in the last few years. I think what really started a lot of it was high interest costs. Not only farmers but all Canadians have suffered some hardship because of high interest rates.

Unlike others such as homeowners who are caught with a major borrowing, floating interest rates, and no control over their interest costs, farmers owed an acceptable amount of money at a set rate and they knew that they had some cash flow. We all know what happened a few years ago when interest rates started to climb. As a result, it was not very long before farmers could not pay their interest costs. The next thing they had to do was to capitalize those interest costs. They were paying interest on accumulated interest and it just expanded very rapidly. Today many of those producers are unable to meet their interest costs. Some of them still have equity left, but are unable to generate enough cash flow.

We have many, many small communities across Ontario and throughout Canada that depend on agriculture. Because of the hardships and the lack of money in the farming community we have seen a real depressed agri-business sector. We know that in the Province of Ontario many of the farming machinery dealerships have been unable to keep doing business because some farmers would go into receivership of bankruptcy. Next thing you know many of our machine dealers were doing the same thing. Part of the reason for that has been the cost of machinery. As interest rates rose, we saw the price of machinery rise very rapidly. You had to have a pretty good 100-acres farm to pay for a combine or something like that.

What we have found as well is that many farmers have been repairing and rebuilding machinery that would ordinarily have been taken out of service a number of years ago. Because of lack of capital they have had to repair them and make do with what they had. It is not all bad to do those things. It is one way to cut costs. Then when we are out buying new equipment, whether it is a tractor or machinery or whatever it might be, that means employment. It is very important to have a viable agricultural sector because we are going to have job creation as well.

As I said before, all of our small towns and communities which depend on agriculture or agri-business have suffered greatly. I know that in the village of Brussels where I live we have had many of the small businesses close. It is not a manufacturing town. A lot of the towns in my riding do not manufacture goods, they are retirement communities for senior citizens or people who have left the farm to spend their lives in those small towns. The tax burden has been much greater for those people as well because of the lack of business opportunities.

As well as seeing all those costs and problems on that side of it we have also seen falling commodity prices. We experienced declining net farm income last year, and all predictions for this year do not look that much better. Without doubt this is the most difficult time farmers have had in 50 years. No question about that.

I want to talk to you about the special measures for farmers contained in the Budget. Let us put these initiatives within the context of the over-all economy. Beginning with our Economic Statement in November, 1984, this Government set a clear course for economic recovery in Canada. We have every indication that we are on the right track. Inflation has held steady at around 4 per cent since the 1984 election and we have had the most stable price environment since 1971. Economic growth during the past months has been outstanding. We saw the creation of 580,000 jobs.

Business investment finally began to grow in 1985 and consumer spending has been a driving force for economic growth as well. We accomplished this by striking a balance between the need for firm action to reduce the deficit and our goal to create a good climate for development.

Every Canadian has a stake in deficit reduction. Let me give a few reasons why. The cost of paying the interest on our debt has become so great that there is little room for undertaking costly new programs. Lowering the deficit also means lower interest rates, and if we can reduce the Government's demands for borrowed money by bringing down the deficit, interest rates for farmers and all Canadians are bound to come down. Finally, as the Minister put it, cutting the deficit is not an end in itself, it is a means to achieve lower interest rates, higher growth and more jobs.

Let us not kid ourselves about the deficit. It is large and it will not go away overnight. However, the Government has the courage to act. We have trimmed Government expenditures over the past 18 months and we have announced further reductions in this Budget.

For the first time in years, the deficit is declining. By taking firm measures now we are breathing life and hope into Canada's economy.

We know that Canadian farmers have not shared fully in the recovery enjoyed by other sectors of the economy. It always seems in agriculture that whenever the economy declines agricultural commodities are the first to go down and the last to recover. I have farmed all of my life and that has been the story. My father always told me that agriculture was the first to suffer and the last to recover.

The Budget reflects this situation with new measures that build on the initiatives we have taken already to assist the farm community. Furthermore, we have taken initiatives not only with the United States but with other countries in the world to develop more export opportunities.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), mentioned China. I also believe there are opportunities for us in China. For example, as a result of negotiations with China for an animal health agreement and quarantine agreement, we have been able to export live animals and seeds and many other Canadian agricultural products to that country.

The Budget contains a farm financial package worth $195 million over the next two years. This includes the cost of a $700 million commodity-based loan program with interest rates as low as 6 per cent. The program has two components; a full indexing option for Farm Credit Corporation clients with 40 per cent or less equity; and a partial indexing option for clients with up to 55 per cent equity. Under the program, loan payments will be indexed to changes in a particular farmer's commodity prices.

This accomplishes two important goals. It targets our resources where the money is needed most, that is, to farmers in low equity positions who can still be viable if they are given a chance. The program also allows farmers to spend less on financing in years when their cash flow is lower as a result of commodity price declines.

The commodity-based loan program is just part of the farm financing package. The Budget also provides additional funding to the FCC for other purposes.

First, there will be a new injection of capital financing so that the corporation does not have to borrow as much money in order to meet the demand for loans. In this way, the Farm Credit Corporation can continue to hold down interest rates to the lowest level possible.

Second, the Budget provides the Farm Credit Corporation with the money necessary to participate in a new debt review process. With this new funding, the FCC will be able to negotiate debt restructuring or even debt reductions with farmers, through a review process, without asking other Farm Credit Corporation borrowers to absorb the losses through higher interest rates. Previously, when the Farm Credit Corporation made loans and incurred losses, increased interest rates were necessary to reflect those losses.

We also know that the Farm Credit Corporation has primarily dealt with producers who have been unable to raise capital from other regular sources. I am encouraged that the Farm Credit Corporation will have a balanced loan portfolio so that in the future more farmers will be able to avail themselves of the Farm Credit Corporation financing and, therefore, give a balance to its loan portfolio.

That brings me to the next component of the farm finance package, legislation to create debt review panels. This legislation will give farmers facing insolvency a stay of proceedings. During this time they will be fully protected against action by their creditors. At the same time, they have the option of going before an impartial panel in order to work out alternative arrangements with their creditors.

In regard to the debt review panels, Jack Wilkinson, second Vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said: "All we want is a fair third party review of foreclosure actions".

The intent of all these measures is to keep farmers in the business of farming. However, as we all know, some farmers are simply unable to do so. That is why the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is working on a Canadian Rural Transition Program. The Budget contains funding for this program and details will be forthcoming. The aim of the program is to ease the pain of transition by providing counselling services, job retraining and financial assistance.

Another announcement in the Budget of special interest to farmers was the extension of the Farm Tax Rebate Program for an additional year to the beginning of 1988. This will save primary producers about $120 million on input costs.

In addition, we have heard and responded to farmers' complaints about too much red tape in this program. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) will soon be announcing details of a new method of filing for the rebate, particularly in relation to the accounting procedure for on-highway fuel use.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will also be announcing measures to assist tobacco farmers to diversify their production to alternative crops.

These many actions on behalf of Canada's farmers stand as proof of the Government's commitment to agriculture. Our record on agriculture takes a back seat to no one.

When drought took its toll on prairie farmers, we responded with a $150 million drought assistance program. During the last federal election, we made 16 commitments to Canada's farmers and we have taken action on those programs. We promised to abolish capital gains tax on the sale of farm property and we delivered with a $500,000 exemption.

We promised new financing initiatives. They have been delivered in this Budget. We now have an $80 million interest rate conversion program, a shared risk mortgage program, lower FCC interest rates, and the new initiatives included in this Budget.

We promised to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order to trigger earlier pay-outs and we delivered to the tune of $522 million, most of it in the spring, prior to seeding.

We have a long-term dairy policy. It is the first time we have had such a policy since 1980 when, I believe, the former dairy policy expired. The dairy farmers of this country have been working on a year-by-year basis until very recently and we are pleased that the Government was able to introduce a five-year dairy policy that offers security and a future for the dairy industry.

I believe it is an industry in which we can take much pride in this country, not only for the quality of the product but for the development of the Holsteins that are renowned throughout the world. We have been able to provide excellent stock to other countries and that is also opening many doors for us.

We have provided dual labelling on all farm chemicals. The list goes on.

The Government has acted on behalf of Canada's farmers with more than 180 initiatives worth more than $3.8 billion. The Government will continue to act. We will continue to work with the farm community toward achieving better and more prosperous times. I believe the food producers are ready to take up the challenge. We know that food producers supply the most basic of commodities. They produce something which we all need to have and use. I am very proud of our food producers because of the quality of their products and the excellence of production which they have achieved. They do not take the back seat to food producers of other countries in terms of the quality and devotion they put into the production of food. In achieving this end they have also initiated and put into place programs to conserve and preserve their soils for the future. I believe all food producers should be congratulated for the faith and vision which they have. I know that without such a vision we would all perish. I congratulate our farmers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Binns): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig).

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), on his excellent presentation dealing with the Budget and the agricultural policies which are in existence today. He highlighted some of the problems faced by food producers. I think we would all agree that the biggest single factor affecting agricultural producers is high interest costs. That problem is followed closely by issues concerning chemicals, fuel and parts. All input costs have escalated while commodity prices have declined. I was happy to hear the Hon. Member deal with the fuel tax rebate provision which is to be extended for another year. In Saskatchewan we have a similar type of program which became effective on January 1, 1986. In Saskatchewan the rebate is 4.6 cents per litre of fuel used by primary producers. I am told that it was just a coincidence that on the same day the rebate was to take effect all fuel companies, including the small local co-ops, increased their prices by about the same amount or even a little bit more. They increased the price to about five cents a litre. I think this is an area which should be investigated.

The Hon. Member also mentioned in his remarks the simplification of the forms for off-on highway use. The real meat of his remarks dealt with the Farm Credit Corporation commodity mortgage. The Government has taken the lead in dealing with this farm financing problem. The setting up of review boards is the next step in the process. There is a provincial review board in existence in Saskatchewan. I was happy to see that in the Budget special mention was made of measures which would be taken to ease the transition of farmers who must seek alternative forms of employment. I think it is responsible of the Minister to recognize the fact that although we would like to save all agricultural producers we simply cannot do it. We already know that.

What role does the Hon. Member see other financial institutions playing in this scenario? The Farm Credit Corporation is really a small player in the game of farm financing. There is far more involved in farm financing by banks, credit unions and trust companies. What does the Hon. Member see as their role in the process?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his question. The major lending institutions hold a tremendous amount of capital in agriculture at the present time. We must ask them for their co-operation in terms of helping us through the stressful times in which we are at present.

It is my understanding that in discussions which the Minister of Agriculture is having with the major lending institutions he is asking them for their co-operation in this regard. I know that in many cases the financial institutions have given their co-operation. In some cases it has not been to the extent which the borrower would like to have seen. However, I know that in my riding there have been times when co-operation has been given. I know that it really is a matter which must be resolved between the borrower and the lender. We know what happens when there are personality conflicts between the borrower and the lender and communication breaks down. I feel that the review boards will play a meaningful role in bringing everyone back to the bargaining table. They will provide the climate and opportunity for everyone to get together to try to restructure an individual's debt. It does not matter from whom the money is borrowed, each one has to be dealt with on an individual basis. I see us as having good co-operation from the lending institutions. I know they want to work through this program and they will help and assist us in that way. As a Member of Parliament I am often called upon to help facilitate bringing borrowers and lenders together in order to work out programs.

I believe Hon. Members know that the first debt review board was established as a pilot project in the Bruce-Grey area which is part of my riding. It was a successful program. We can build on parts of what happened through that process in order to put a new review board in place.

The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) mentioned the transition of farmers. That is a difficult situation with which to deal. I have never really been in favour of a program which assists someone out of a business. However, sometimes we have to face facts and look at the circumstances as they exist. We must realize that some of these people may wish to leave farming because of what has happened in the past. We should be thankful that there is something in place which can be set aside for this transition program. The Province of Ontario has a transition-type program in place. I would like to see more money targeted to keep people in agriculture rather than help them out of it because of the circumstances.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) a question arising out of a point brought up by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig). We have had some bitter experiences over the years both at the federal and the provincial Government levels. When Governments have removed an excise or sales tax there has never been a legislative requirement put in place which would require a manufacturer, processor, wholesaler or retailer to pass the reduction on to the consumer. Would the Hon. Member support a requirement in law to the effect that any reduction in sales or excise tax on farm fuels, or anything else, be passed on to the consumer? Would he support such a measure even if it were necessary to amend the ways and means motion? If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) were to present another Bill to the House in this regard, would he support it?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, if it would be within the legal limits of the House for the Minister to do so and if it could be passed on to the consumer, then I would support such a measure.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) on his presentation. We have heard a great deal about the problems associated with having a low Canadian dollar. I knowing that the Hon. Member has been involved for many years with the export of white beans in his riding. Has the lower dollar been an advantage in the export market? Would these markets be better with a higher or a lower dollar?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that question. I think we have learned how to live with the 70 cent dollar extremely well. One of the major commodities which is produced in my riding is white beans. We have been successfully exporting that commodity to the European markets. It is one of our main exports to Europe. Certainly, the value of our dollar has assisted us there. Mind you, there is not as there was much difference between our Canadian dollar and the Eurodollar as in the past, but even with the closing of that gap, we are still doing extremely well in exporting to Europe.

I think that with any export markets to China or to any place in the world, our dollar has been on advantage to us and has allowed us to compete probably better and more fairly with the United States. It has certainly helped us in our dealings with the United States, which is one of our major markets for agricultural products.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, since the Budget Speech of last week, I have tried to spend as much time as I can in carefully going over the written text and looking at the accompanying documents, and I have come to three inescapable conclusions about the Budget. I certainly do not want to sound like a crabby, cranky, negative opposition Member because I heard that for long enough in this House of Commons. However, my conclusion is that the Budget we received is, first, a pretentious Budget. I understand there has been a very elaborate communications strategy constructed to help government Members sell the Budget. I would have to say that this is a Budget which needs to be sold. It is certainly not one which can very ably stand on its own merits. The Budget is pretentious and false in many respects.

Second, I have concluded that the Budget is unfair. It places the obvious burden of deficit reduction on the backs of those who are struggling now to make ends meet in their personal and family lives. I am talking about the lower and middle income Canadians.

Third, I have concluded that this is a Budget which is counterproductive in terms of the effect it will have on economic growth. Rather than serving to fortify our economic recovery which is now under way, it applies the brakes to that growth. Instead of surging ahead, as it appeared we were going to do last year, it seems we are now limping along. The Minister himself predicts that we are going to have a decline in our rate of growth, and I will come back to that in a moment.

I want to elaborate on those three points. I have described the Budget as being pretentious because in introducing it, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) laid claim to its considerable merit and great importance. For a good part of his speech, we had to listen to the Minister patting himself on the back for all of his past endeavours. He heaped praise on the Government for its performance during the past 18 months. In a good part of the speech there was considerable political rhetoric and not very convincing Party propaganda. I think there are very few Canadians who are all that impressed with the way in which the Government so far has conducted our national affairs or tried to deal with the economy. I believe this pretentious Budget was designed to try to impress the currency traders in Chicago, London and New York, but it certainly failed to impress them. All we have to do for an indication of that is to look at our poor, sad dollar.

The Budget pretends to come down on Government expenditures. It is true that there are some decreases, some that hurt very badly, but there are also some increases. Over all, this Government plans to spend more than $116 billion, closer to $117 billion. That is a much larger amount of money than any Liberal administration ever dreamed of spending. And we were never pretentious about it. When Government spending increased, Canada was suffering from a world-wide recession.

The previous administration did spend money in order to ward off the worst effects of that economic downturn and, by and large, I believe it succeeded in doing that. Now we are into a moderate recovery, but the Government is still unable to control its spending. There was a last-minute decision to cut $500 million from a spending program which is going to total nearly $117 billion. Would you not agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that that is rather pretentious?

The Government has discovered just how difficult it is to make deep, deep cuts in spending. Politically, it is just not very acceptable. Here in Ottawa there are many powers and forces always at work to prevent any special advantages from being taken away or any significant decreases in spending from occurring. They are called lobbies, pressure groups or influential individuals. They have a way of affecting the decision-making which goes on in those areas. But not the average Canadian, the person who earns a lower or middle income, the person who comes from the less developed regions of this country, not some of our more disadvantaged citizens. They lack influence in Ottawa. They are the ones who, generally speaking, work the hardest. They have precious few benefits, certainly, from the tax system, and they carry most of the tax burden, municipally, provincially and federally.

That leads me to my second point. The stated aim of this Budget is to reduce the deficit. I think there is hardly an Hon. Member who would not say that this is a worthwhile goal. We do have to reduce the deficit. However, the Budget proposes to do so, first, by spending more than has ever been spent before and by taxing much more heavily those citizens who, as I indicated earlier, are not in a position to pay that additional money.

If we take this Budget in conjunction with the Budget of May of last year and combine the two, we have one of the heftiest tax increases of any time in our history since the Second World War. Corporate rates are going to be reduced and at the same time personal taxes are going to go up. That is not fair. This Budget is not fair. The capital gains tax exemption remains in effect but working men and women are going to be hit with a 3 per cent surtax, plus another 1 per cent hike on the federal sales tax. That is the third increase in the sales tax since the election of 1984. When the Liberals left office, the federal sales tax was 9 per cent. It now stands at 12 per cent. This is an unfair Budget.

As a result of this Budget, and the previous Budget, personal taxes, that is, income, sales and excise, will increase by a whopping 61 per cent. That is five times as much as the increase in the corporate taxes. The percentage of revenue which comes to the Government from individual Canadians will go up by an unbelievable 164 per cent while the percentage of revenue which comes in from corporations will actually decline by 22 per cent. Does that not indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is an unfair Budget?

I would like to illustrate to the House just how this Budget is going to affect some of my constituents because I do not want my comments to be just theoretical.

In Cochrane, Ontario, there is a single parent, a woman with two children, who earns a $20,000 income per year. She is not finding life all that easy, financially. Last May the Budget took from her $350. She could not afford it. She did not have it to give. She had no option; it was taken at source. This year the Minister of Finance came back to that same woman and took from her another $70, for a total in less than a year of $420. Is that fair?

In Kapuskasing, Ontario, there is a mill worker, a tradesman, who has four children. His wife does not work outside the home in an income earning capacity. The man earns $40,000 per year and has a take-home pay of just over $2,000 per month. With very careful budgeting—for example, he walks to work rather than using his automobile—at the end of the month this family has somewhere between $175 and $180 in discretionary income which it can do with as it pleases, provided there are no emergencies such as unexpected dental work or provided the refrigerator does not go on the blink and needs to be repaired. Last May the Minister of Finance took $566 out of this man's pocket. That was taken away from him and his family. This year he came back and took another $177, for a grand total or a grand grab of $743. That is about four months of this man's discretionary income. It is not fair. It is too bad the man does not earn $50,000. If he earned that amount, and if we take into account the increased RRSP limits and the capital gains exemption a $50,000 earner may have, he could get away with only paying out an additional $575. That is not fair.

In the same mill there is a general employee, not a tradesman, who is married and has two children. He earns $28,000 per year. Each month, after all his commitments are met, he has left in his pocket $95. Last May the Government came to him and took away from him $505 of his hard-earned dollars. This year it came back and took another $125, for a total of $630. That is more than six months of his discretionary income.

In Geraldton, Ontario, there is an elderly single gentleman with an annual income of $18,500. Last May the Government came to that man and took from him $243 of his spending dollars. It came back again in February, in less than a year, and took away another $57, for a total of $300. He wrote a letter to me in which he said that that was not fair.

In Marathon, Ontario, there is an elderly couple living in a senior citizens' complex. The combined income of these two people is $17,366. Last May the Minister of Finance told them to give up $352. He came back again in the dead of winter and took another $36. It is not fair.

The Budget is also not fair because it savagely attacks the spending envelope for regional development. This affects the regions in which the people I have just described live. The regions have looked to the federal Government for regional development programs, and the envelope has been savegely attacked. The Minister of Finance bragged about the Atlantic Enterprise Program, and I will leave that to my colleagues from Atlantic Canada to judge. I gather that it is somewhat overblown and pretentious, but I will await judgment on it. Do we really want a nation where we have regions which must look continually to a grim future? Do we not really believe, all of us in all political Parties, in regional economic development? We come from all regions of the country. Are we to allow this to happen? It is not fair. One of the reasons I came to the House of Commons was that I saw in the sixties, living in northern Ontario, a need for regional economic development, and there was a promise that there would be new programs. When I got here, they did not come easily. We had to fight for them, but we finally got them. That is a story I will tell another day. Is it fair to try to tackle the deficit by reneging on programs like the Native Economic Development Program which was designed to help people get off social assistance and into entrepreneurial activity to create jobs? Last year there were $90 million in that program, approved by Parliament, which were not spent. This year the program will be slashed by 47 per cent, and it is a program to help native people become self-sufficient. Is that fair?

Finally, the Budget is not only pretentious and unfair; it is also counter-productive in terms of serving as an engine for economic growth. One year ago on CTV Question Period, the Minister of Finance said something with which I agreed. He said: "A general tax increase puts a dampening effect on the economy, and I don't want to see us do that". I watched that program and I cheered. I said: "Good for you, Mr. Wilson". He was right a year ago but he was dead wrong last May in what he did to taxpayers and was dead wrong again in this February Budget.

Many analysts have pointed out that when taxes are raised, consumer spending is reduced and economic growth is slowed down. In his speech the Minister admitted that that would happen. We are to go from 4.5 per cent in 1985, down to 3.7 per cent in 1986 and down to 3 per cent in 1987. It is difficult to deny that the economic recovery we are starting to enjoy is fragile. This is not a time to discourage consumer spending; that is a threat to economic growth. We must remember that a one-half of one per cent reduction in economic growth means the loss of 50,000 jobs. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance really believes that he can reduce the deficit by raising taxes. The so-called new economics about which we hear so much make clear that lower taxes can spur economic growth and thereby generate more, not less, Government revenue. Why do we not see that kind of economics being practised in the country? Tax cuts are one of the most effective ways of creating new jobs and reducing the rate of unemployment. The Budget will retard economic growth. It also recognizes high unemployment rates which are still around 9 per cent. I know they are getting better, but they are still unacceptably high and will stay with us for a very long time. That is discouraging for young people whose rate of unemployment is not 9 per cent but some 15 per cent or 18 per cent depending upon whether one is talking about young men or young women.

I conclude simply by saying that I am sorry, but representing a region and constituents who will be hard hit, I am unable to support the Budget. It is a pretentious, false Budget. It is unfair and will result in slower growth, not better growth. Therefore, I have to oppose it and say that it is not the right Budget for these times.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, we have clearly the impression that we are hearing exactly the same speeches and getting exactly the same reaction from the Official Opposition as last year.

Following our first Budget, we heard exactly the same prophecies of gloom and doom, and got the same negative reaction; yet, one year after our first Budget, hundreds of thousands of new jobs have been created, which means that the Official Opposition has certainly not demonstrated much originality in its reaction. They keep making the same comments. My impression is that the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party are the only two groups which still insist on talking about the Budget. For the first time in 25 years, Canadians generally realize that they can trust a Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who creates the impression, based on facts, that he definitely knows where he is going.

The previous Government would have us believe that an increased deficit would create jobs. If we check the figures since 1970, we realize that there was 300,000 unemployed, and in the 1974-1985 period, the deficit increased from 0 to $38 billion. This did not create one single job, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, the number of unemployed increased fivefold.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition is very careful not to tell Canadian taxpayers where in fact our Government will find the money to create jobs and support small businesses. It will not take it from the poor; it will find it in part in the nearly $900 million which it will collect by eliminating tax shelters. It will get it also from a minimum tax on the affluent. Ours is the first Government which has decided to levy income tax on same people who had never paid any before. That's a fairly progressive measure.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the people who need help most will realize over the next few months that our Government has done something for them. I refer for instance to the $300 per child in tax credit advance payments for families whose income is $15,000 or less. I am sure they will realize that the Government has done something for them.

Mr. Speaker, I think also of the various programs. No other Government has ever invested so much money in them: $4 billion over a two-year period. And this Budget has confirmed our direction by investing an additional $800 million in job creation, and the results are positive, because the 600,000 new jobs created in this country over the first eighteen months is a record.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the negative effects foreseen by the official Opposition will continue to be felt and that we will end up creating between 500,000 and 600,000 new jobs over the forthcoming year.

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) rightly mentioned the subject of regional development, which is extremely important in eastern and northern Ontario. People take a look at Ontario and think that every part of it is rich. We happen to be 250 miles from that golden horseshoe. Like the people in the northern part of this province, we know what it is to be in real need of a regional development program.

The Hon. Member knows that that development program was reduced by 38 per cent. Could he give us some examples of how this will affect some of the resource based industries in northern Ontario, for example?

Second, how does he feel about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and all members of the Tory Government going around the country putting the blame for the national debt on the Liberal Party? Since September, 1984 when the Tory Government took office, to the present time, the cost of servicing the national debt of Canada has increased by $8 billion under a Government that was to be so dynamic and take everything under control.

At the same time, would the Hon. Member comment on the fact that the Government has allowed the national debt to increase by 23 per cent since it took office, 23 per cent of the entire total that it increased from Confederation to September 1984?

Here we have the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and all members of the Government running around Canada blaming everything on everybody else but themselves. The Government does not have its act together. The Government is bringing in heavy taxation on middle and lower income earners who cannot afford the burden.

Would the Hon. Member explain how the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Tory Party can rationalize what they are saying at a time when the facts do not prove it?

An Hon. Member: The facts prove it.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, it is well recognized that the economics of recession are different from the economics of recovery. The last administration, a Liberal administration, had to face a world-wide recession. We did not cause it in Canada. We suffered from it.

Since the advent of 1985, we have moved into a period of economic recovery. Again, it was not caused by the Government in Ottawa. It is a recovery that is going on around the world. It is propaganda either way to say the last administration caused the recession, built up the deficit and increased the national debt. It is equally propaganda and pretentious to say that since the election of 1984 we have had leadership at the federal level that has brought recovery. We know that this is simply not the case. We know these are world-wide effects.

I argued in my speech that the Government and the Minister of Finance are not in tune with the economics of recovery. The Minister is missing the boat by putting the heavy, heavy tax burden on lower and middle-income Canadians.

In terms of regional economic development, I will say very briefly that northern Ontario would be a much poorer region, much less self-sustaining than it is today if it had not been for those regional development programs. It meant that small industries in the forest product sector were able to remain competitive. Small communities like Hearst and Dubreuilville and many others that had encouragement in their main industry or in a subsidiary industry using forest products to make a manufactured product were able to keep going.

I was shocked when I asked a question of the Minister of Finance about regional development and I heard my friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) refer to those programs as hand-outs. We are going to end the hand-outs, he said. Northern Ontario never received a hand-out under any regional development program. What we received was an advance payment to get our economy moving and then we paid back many, many times. What we received in tens, we gave back in hundreds. That is what economic development does. It is not a drain on the national treasury or the national economy, it is a way of adding to it. Regional development spurs the economy in that region and generates new wealth, which contributes to national prosperity. It does not detract from it.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity this afternoon to speak in the Budget debate. I agree with my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) that even after eighteen months experience, it is hard to have to listen to the same redundancies on the part of the official Opposition, which is using the same images of gloom and doom and the same scare tactics as last year.

Mr. Speaker, after last year's predictions when they tried to scare us, today they are still unable to see the very definite advantages and the incredible and unique results of last May's Budget and the economic message of November 1984. They cannot get used to good news. They just cannot get used to it. I wonder why. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you they will have to get used to good news, because we are going to be in power for a long time. Canadians realize that this Government is working very hard, and has been since it came to power, to bring concrete measures before Parliament that will enhance the well-being of the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, as far as agriculture is concerned, this Government has taken some very concrete measures in the past year and a half to deal with certain problems confronting the agricultural industry. We have taken a pragmatic approach, which is quite different from what I was hearing earlier from the Hon. Member for Regina-West (Mr. Benjamin) who managed to use the term: positive deficit. A new expression is born. Deficits can now be bad or good. The Canadian people and Government Members all agree that there is no way a deficit, and the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi said as much a while ago, there is no way that a deficit could have been positive in the past.

For months we have been hearing: Increase Government spending. We know we are spending billions across this country. We know where we are now: we have to pay our debts. If I were in their shoes, I would be ashamed, but they have no shame. They do not know the meaning of the word. They do not like good news, and they are not ashamed of the state in which they left our public finances. Well, we are just going to keep on working and reminding you of what happened and how it happened. We are going to straighten out our public finances, in spite of the mess you made. Don't worry. We will take care of it.

Concrete measures, well the Budget is full of them. Twenty minutes is not enough to talk about all of them, so I will limit my remarks to agriculture, Mr. Speaker. I met with western agricultural producers, and again yesterday I was talking to a number of producers in various localities in my riding, and I can say that theirs is a very positive reaction. They know we have delivered the goods. What have we been doing for the past year? We helped farmers who had sustained crop losses in the east, in Quebec. We also helped western agricultural producers who had experienced difficulties as a result of the severe draught. We helped Ontario grape producers.

The Official Opposition had five years to come up with a long-term dairy policy, but they failed to do anything at all in those five years. It took us only a few months to get all Canadian milk producers around the table and propose a long-term dairy policy under which we will inject $1.5 billion in the agricultural dairy sector. All those people were quite satisfied, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount) (p. 11009).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When we left, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) had the floor.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall resume immediately. A while ago, several of my colleagues told me how impatient they were to hear the rest of my comments. In fact, I am sure that some of the Members opposite are also dying to hear what I have to say.

The initiative announced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in January not only allowed us to stabilize dairy production in Canada since, in Quebec alone, this sector accounts for about half of all farm income, but the injection of $1.5 billion to stabilize this sector is also very important for the rest of the country.

It also shows exactly what you can achieve in a few months if there is agreement among the provinces, the producer federations and the various groups involved, including the Canadian Dairy Commission and the processing industry.

This is what our Government does, Mr. Speaker: we consult, we set objectives and we meet them. That is what it takes. People had forgotten that public affairs could be managed in this way. After 20 years of haphazard management, the people were no longer used to this type of administration, but they are now getting used to it again thanks to things like the Western Accord, the agreement with the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland and agreements providing $1.5 billion for regional development in Quebec. These are practical achievements.

As concerns agriculture, the Government took another initiative last year, and I think that it is important to mention it, Mr. Speaker. All Canadians have been asked to do their share, and especially the agriculture industry, under a cost recovery policy which has impacted on expenditures in all sectors of Government activity. It was an important aspect, perhaps the most important one, that all sectors of the farm industry agreed on how those costs should be recovered, on how the increases in the cost of Government services should be paid by those who used them. That is another aspect, not just cost recovery but agreement by those concerned and consultation to achieve that. That is something again we were not used to, Mr. Speaker.

In November 1985, at the First Ministers' Conference, the Prime Minister and the Premiers of all the Provinces agreed to call as early as possible in January a conference of Ministers of Agriculture, because agriculture was identified as a national priority. Immediately, task forces were established and the conference was indeed held at the end of January, at which time the committees reported on their respective areas. That consultation with provincial Ministers of Agriculture is now an almost ongoing process in Canada. Every day there is a federal-provincial conference, and if you remember those years under the previous Government, people always looked forward to a federal-provincial conference with excitement, for even on the day before it opened and the minute the Ministers put down their briefcases, both federal and provincial, the fight would start. People were looking forward to it as if it were a boxing match or a great hockey game, an exciting event at any rate because we knew there would be people in the penalty box all through the game. Such were to some extent their federal-provincial conferences. Now there have been more of them over the past year and half than during the five previous years, and they were productive. Perhaps they arouse less interest generally because there are fewer brawls, but the results are there.

Mr. Robichaud: The Provinces have never lost that much.

Mr. Blais: The Provinces say they are satisfied, and there is no way they would like to go back to what they experienced during those 20 years of darkness, as you should remember. Besides, Mr. Speaker, consultations have also been held by Members of our party, and I had the privilege of chairing a committee of our party on farming matters that furthered those consultations with hundreds and thousands of farmers all through the year. We made recommendations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), and we are pleased to note that in last week's Budget, Mr. Speaker, concrete proposals were made by the Minister of Finance that very soon will have tangible results. The mortgage introduced by the Farm Credit Corporation, which is based on the price of farm commodities, will have a 6 per cent basic rate. This is what had been advocated by farm producers and by Members of this House, and this is what the Minister proposed in the Budget. This is a very progressive initiative which will allow 5,000 Canadian farmers to get back on their feet and to go on.

Without going into too much detail, these mortgages will be offered to farmers who, while having debt problems, also have satisfactory potential in the long term, which is what we need not only in agriculture, but in all sectors of the Canadian economy. There is also an initiative which was welcomed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), namely the creation of farm debt review panels. This was also requested urgently and unanimously by the provincial Ministers of Agriculture. These panels will make an in-depth and objective review of the financial position of farmers threatened by insolvency. We shall try to facilitate if possible agreements between the farmer and his creditors. We shall be able to provide advisory services to the farmers. These initiatives will allow us to save many Canadian farmers from bankruptcy and keep them in farming.

Mr. Tardif: Especially in the West.

Mr. Blais: Not only in the West, but everywhere in Canada. There is no doubt about it. This is how the previous Government tried to govern the country, by always creating divisions between the West and the East. That time is past. This will no longer take place. We have achieved reconciliation among Canadians. In spite of your attempts, we represent all Canadians, which is something that you were unable to do as a Government and as a political party for 20 years. As for us, we represent all Canadian provinces and we are going to represent them well. I am not worried. Not western Canada more than eastern Canada or central Canada. All parties are now represented at the table and can have their say. We are in a position to meet their expectations, something you were never able to do.

• (1720)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: With respect to other measures, Mr. Speaker, through the Rural Transition Program we will try to implement measures to retrain farmers who are in trouble and cannot make a go of it. That is important as well. Often times we come across farm producers over 40, 50 and even 60 who need retraining to be able to earn a decent living.

Other measures have been announced in the Budget to retrain other middle-aged people, but I will not comment on them. These are all important measures which prove that we are concerned about the future of Canadian society. We simply do not accept your description of this Party as the Party of large corporations, of businessmen. That is not true. We are the Party of everybody and the Government of everybody, which is more than you could ever do. You have been sticking labels on our Party for years. That is over. You can rest assured that those labels will not stick.

We have maintained the fuel tax rebate of three cents a litre and it will be extended until January 1, 1988. This is another measure which will make it possible to save between $100 and $120 million, I believe. Another progressive measure, because we are fully aware that people find it difficult to pay their oil bills. Considering the oil mess in which the previous Government left us it is quite amazing that we were able to manage to come up with concrete measures to enable people to catch their breath. If they had fully assumed their responsibility when they had both the time and resources to do so, a few years ago, we would not be faced now with the need to reduce their deficits.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with a last budgetary item in the agriculture area, namely, the Tobacco Growers Assistance Program. It is of course a delicate issue. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has actively consulted tobacco growers and his provincial counterparts concerning a Tobacco Growers Assistance Program. The Standing Committee on Agriculture will continue to look into this over the next few weeks. Tobacco consumption in Canada has markedly decreased, mostly because Canadians are increasingly aware of the health hazards associated with it.

As the Government, Mr. Speaker, we are constantly faced with a major ethic and social problem. We are aware on the one hand of the health hazards of cigarette smoking and, on the other hand of the importance of the farming community involved in tobacco growing. This is a very difficult dilemma indeed.

The Minister of Agriculture will continue his consultations with the tobacco growers and, together, we will look for ways for tobacco growers to get involved gradually in other areas of agriculture. We will seek various ways to keep these people in agriculture and to diversify our production without any negative effect on tobacco growers.

These are concrete and specific measures to show the Government is determined to help farm producers. I would even go so far as to say that the Government, in the past year and a half, has shown a particular concern for farm producers, because if we look at the Budget, the amount of money invested in the agricultural industry has been increased. We had to cut Government spending, and I think it is fortunate, and I imagine farm producers were very happy to see, that there were no substantial cuts in the agricultural sector in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance a few days ago. I imagine farm producers—I have more than 1,200 in my riding, and I met several on the weekend—realize this and are thankful, and I do not think the kind of twisted comments we have been hearing in the last few days in the House and across Canada from representatives of the official Opposition are going to change their attitude. People have told us: We are sensible enough to realize what can be done and what cannot. They understand about the legacy we were left by the previous Government, and they also understand that we as a Government have acted responsibly. That is what people want.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people will be the judge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I have the following question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. He is no doubt aware, and if he is not, he should be, that the Farm Credit Corporation has a number of operations, and that proportionally, not many of them are in Quebec. In other words, the Farm Credit Corporation is more popular in the other provinces than in Quebec.

The Budget contains a number of interesting measure, and I think one of the few interesting ones was that additional funds will be injected into the Farm Credit Corporation, thus making it possible to offer preferential interest rates.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary give us some indication of how Quebec farmers can expect to obtain their fair share of these measures?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) ask me this question. When this Government came to power in 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation had only about 75 loans outstanding in the entire province of Quebec. I do not think this Government is responsible for the situation. It is all because you never acted responsibly. As soon as we came to power, we proceeded with a complete review of the mandate of the Farm Credit Corporation. The Minister and several Government members travelled across Canada to meet with farm producers and with the people working in the Farm Credit sector in order to—

Mr. Tardif: In Western Canada.

Mr. Blais: You want the answer, or not? Then listen. This is something else you had forgotten during those 20 years: to open your ears, to listen when people are talking. To listen not just here in this House, but when you were in Government. You plugged your ears. You closed the doors and you stopped listening to Canadians. See where you are now. Maybe you should start listening again. That might help you.

Concerning the Farm Credit Corporation, I am not worried about the surveys. Do not worry. You can sleep on both your ears, I am not worried.

We have a constituency that is up for grabs in the Province of Quebec. We are going to get a candidate from our party elected in Saint-Maurice. We will try to recoup Saint-Maurice, and then we will be 59. And if you resign in Richmond-Wolfe, then we will be 60. This is the way we will go on. We have no reason for concern, I am not worried.

Mr. Rossi: In Rivière-des-Prairies, she will not be elected, find something else!

Mr. Blais: You see how the Opposition is reacting, Mr. Speaker? I am asked a question on the Farm Credit Corporation, and that does not even interest him. You know how many people in your constituency have loans with the Farm Credit Corporation? Do you know whether some of your constituents made applications that were either turned down or accepted? Do you know how many farm producers have diffciulty becoming eligible under the existing program? Did you take the trouble to get out of the House of Commons and visit your constituency to see how this initiative could benefit your producers? Did you take the trouble to do so and to find out how many could benefit from the 6 per cent interest rate which farmers have been requesting for years? Did you take the trouble to find out? You should. It is your duty as Members of Parliament. You should start by doing your duty.

Mr. Tardif: Do not worry. I have come through the wave.

Mr. Blais: You are going to see what a wave is. It is your responsibility to go and see your farmers, listen to them and take the trouble to read the press release which gives an outline of the program. I am not going to read it because I think that the time of the House is too precious for that. However, you will see what this program involves and whether people in your constituency will benefit from it. The 5,000 people who will be able to obtain these loans are farm producers, and they will benefit from the progressive policy our Government, and more specifically the Minister of Finance, announced a week ago. This is progress. You are not aware of it. You are even able to quote me a single figure and to answer one of my questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, in my contribution to this debate I would like to report to the House on the spontaneous reaction I received from my constituents in my riding this weekend. People on the street were stopping me to indicate what they thought of the Budget. Individuals calling my office on other matters were asked their opinion of the Budget that was brought down last week.

Frankly, I was somewhat shocked by the language and concern that was expressed.

My comments today are based partially on the reaction of my constituents and partially on my reading of the Budget. My constituents summed up their reaction in two words. Some said quite clearly that the Budget stinks and others went a little further to use a word which my children refer to as the "s" word to describe the actions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). In any event, my constituents felt very strongly in voicing their concerns directly to me about the Budget.

Those who elaborated stated that they were disturbed by the lack of fairness and that they as average Canadians with average families were being asked to pay more than their fair share for deficit reduction. They see the corporate sector getting greater breaks in the long term while they are being forced to pay more and more just to stay where they are today.

The greatest concern felt by these average Canadian families was that they would not be any further ahead as a result of the actions of the Minister of Finance. While they may make some gains in terms of income and greater savings to buy consumer goods, the Minister was taking it away through the imposition of additional sales and income taxes. This action reawakened past memories among my older constituents who reminded me, as they did during the 1984 election, that Tory times are tough times. They wonder why the Conservative Party has not realized that when they impose tough measures on the Canadian people whenever they are elected they are gone from power as quickly as they arrived.

This Budget is an indication of that concern. Let us consider the impact of the Budget on the average Canadian family. The 3 per cent surtax will take another $170 from their pockets. The sales tax increase will amount to another $150, while cigarette and alcohol taxes will increase by $20. The total increase is $340.

The cost to the average family as a result of the previous Budget includes $100 for the elimination of the federal tax reduction; $115 in the modification to indexing; $22.50 for the cut in family allowance payments; the cigarette and alcohol tax increase of $75; $150 for the broadened sales tax base and $50 in the gas tax increase. The total amount taken from the pockets of the average Canadian family as a result of the previous Budget is $512.50. Some people are beginning to see the effects of those changes as they fill out their current tax forms.

The increases as a result of the November 8, 1985 Economic Statement include $200 in increases in oil and gas prices; up to $102 in increased unemployment insurance premiums; and $150 in increased sales tax, for a total of $425.

The total increase to the average Canadian family since the Conservative Party came to power in September, 1984 is $1,304.50. That is not the kind of change they voted for. Those Canadians thought they were getting a better deal and some fairness.

They believed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said that the rich would be made to pay. However, not only is that not happening, on January 1 of next year the surtax on the rich will drop from 5 per cent to 3 per cent while a surtax of up to 3 per cent is applied on all other Canadians. That is not fairness.

Let us look at other cuts contained in the Budget. Not only are Canadians facing increased taxes, those taxes are for services that are being reduced.

For example, the Deparmtent of Regional Industrial Expansion faces a cut of $2.05 billion over the next four years. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is important to an area like northern Ontario which has not received its fair share over the years. The Government is cutting the Department back even further.

Employment and Immigration will face a cut of $1.78 billion over the next four years. One must view these cuts on a year-by-year basis. While the Government will spend $800 million on this Department this year, we must consider that it spent $900 million last year. The year before it was more than that. In fact, it has gone from $1.4 billion to $800 million in a very few years. Jobs cannot be created by reducing the amount of money available.

With respect to Agriculture Canada the figure is $502 million. With respect to the Department of National Health and Welfare some $4.82 billion will be reduced. In terms of the Department of Transportation the figure is $3.61 billion.

One thing Canadians were looking for in the Budget, some in terms of a worry that the Government just might do it and others in the hope that it would provide some type of relief, was with respect to the issue of gasoline prices at the pump. Unfortunately, the fears of a great many Canadians were confirmed when the Minister of Finance added a 0.5 cent a litre increase to the price of gasoline. He did not do this in an upfront way by changing the specific taxes on gasoline but he did it by an across-the-board increase in terms of the sales tax. This at a time when Canadians had been patiently waiting for gasoline prices to fall. The week before the Budget we saw a drop in the price of a litre of gasoline at the pumps of one cent or two cents. What did the Minister of Finance do? He turned around and grabbed some more. He pulled another 0.5 cents out of the pockets of Canadians. Canadians are becoming aware of the realities of the gas industry in Canada. For instance, they know that Canadian companies are selling gasoline to American companies at seven cents to nine cents a litre less than what they are selling it to Canadian gasoline stations. Thus we have a situation in which gasoline stations a quarter of a mile apart, but on different sides of the border, are selling gasoline at seven cents to nine cents a litre less than what it is being sold for in Canada. This gasoline being sold in American gas stations close to the Canadian border is gasoline which is coming from the same Canadian supplier. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are driving across the border to fill up their tanks. That hurts Canadian gasoline retailers through the loss of business.

Last weekend members of my riding association and myself distributed a number of letters to shopping malls in the community of Thunder Bay. Another quantity of letters was mailed to the community of Atikokan. They call upon concerned Canadians to respond in writing in the form of a petition. The letters went out on Friday night and Saturday morning and were designed as a mail-back. Today, which is the first day on which we could expect to receive mail back after a weekend pick-up, we had over 85 replies. That type of volume received that quickly indicates the concerns which Canadians have with respect to this matter, particularly Canadians in the riding of Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

I now wish to turn for a moment to a system which ensures the viability of the community of Thunder Bay, the Port of Thunder Bay and communities throughout eastern Canada. I refer to the St. Lawrence Seaway. At a time when the Welland Canal was involved in an unfortunate accident, which may or may not relate to the quality of maintenance and the structural integrity of the facility, we find that the Government of Canada is reducing the amount of money available to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for the ongoing maintenance of that facility. In 1984-85, the Authority spent $13.5 million. In 1985-86, it spent $13.15 million. What is the Government's plan in terms of spending for 1986-87? It plans to spend $10.657 million—a reduction of over $2 million. When we are so concerned about viability I would have thought that there would have been assurances that the money would be there to ensure that the facility, whether it be for the Welland Canal or other components of it, would remain in a structurally sound condition in order to continue operations. However, the Government does not seem to care about that at all.

One area which I had hoped the Minister of Finance would address was with respect to the need for a major municipal rebuild program. This is a matter I have raised in the House a number of times, as did representatives of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities in meetings which they had with the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). The federation conducted a study about two years ago, the results of which showed that Canadian municipalities are deteroriating at a rapid rate.

The study also showed that in order to protect what exists today $14 billion would have to be invested in our roads, bridges, sewers and waterlines just to protect our investment. The study was conducted in terms of the impact of that type of expenditure. It was found that anywhere from 222,000 to 285,000 jobs would be created as a result of such an investment. It was also found that anywhere from 84,000 to 91,000 jobs would be created in terms of the actual construction of projects and that 42,000 to 73,000 jobs would be created in the manufacturing sector if such an investment were undertaken. These are figures which I feel show quite clearly how one can invest money to create employment and services to protect an investment which is already in place. I suppose the Government was scared off by the $14 billion figure.

The federation conducted a further study. I would ask Hon. Members to keep in mind that such an investment program would be a tri-level program involving federal, provincial and municipal Governments. It would be a program in which everyone would pay their fair share. The federation estimated that of this $14 billion $8 billion would be recovered from the initial expenditures through improved economic activity. Thus the net cost to be shared between the three levels of Government would be $6 billion. An important fact to consider is that the facilities would be in place for years.

We often hear in the House a great concern with respect to the deficit. Conservative Members would like us to believe that their attempts of reducing the deficit are made so that our children do not have to pay for it. The reality is that if we do not move quickly enough to rebuild our cities now, our children will have to pay for that rebuilding. They will have to pay 10 times what it would cost today to provide replacement facilities.

The other topic I wish to touch upon is the area of cost recovery. Following in the footsteps of the previous administration the Government is moving more and more into the area of cost recovery and user-pay. In this respect I refer Hon. Members to page 4 of the Budget Papers where Table 1 is set out. It is entitled "Gross Impact of Expenditure Reduction Measures Undertaken Since the Fall of 1984". The table sets out some interesting figures. For example, between the 1985-86 and 1986-87 budget years cost recovery will increase by 3 per cent. Between the 1986-87 and 1987-88 budget years it will increase by 41 per cent. Between 1987-88 and 1990-91 it will rise by 26 per cent. That is a 245 per cent increase in the amount of money to be collected from users. Some people will say that if they use it then perhaps they should pay for it.

In committee we have been dealing with Bill C-75, which is a Bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act. One of the chief components of the Bill is a cost-recovery scheme for the Coast Guard. In discussions with the marine industry, we found that of the fees paid to the Government by that industry, the net return is 48 cents on the dollar. In other words, its effective tax rate is 52 per cent or 53 per cent. Of every $10 million it pays in fees, $5.2 million is deducted from income tax owing. The net gain to the Government of Canada is $4.8 million, less whatever it costs to collect it. It is going to look great in the books of the Coast guard because it will show up as $10 million, but when it comes to the books of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), it will be a lot less. I would strongly suggest that the Government reconsider this kind of approach because areas like the Seaway are of importance to all of Canada. Whether it is coal moving from British Columbia, grain and potash from the prairies, iron ore from the Great Lakes and Quebec or products moving through Atlantic Canada, everyone benefits from having a viable Seaway. Everyone benefits from low cost for the Coast Guard and for the Seaway.

In conclusion, I will say that the Government had a number of alternatives, but it chose the ones which will hurt the majority of people. For that reason, I suggest, ultimately it will lose.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I want to take some time this afternoon to outline to the House, to my constituents and to the people of Canada why this Budget is easily as bad as the previous efforts of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I would like to place emphasis on three areas which are of particular concern to my constituents and which relate directly to my duties as opposition critic for National Defence. These areas include the support this Government is providing for science and technology, agriculture and national defence.

The Budget attacks those people in our society who are least able to bear the burden of extra taxes and makes virtually no effort to try to ease their plight. The Minister of Finance in the last 18 months has raised the tax burden of the average family in this country by more than $1,300. That may not seem like a lot of money to Hon. Members opposite who support the boys from Bay Street, but to the average family which is struggling to make ends meet, this extra tax bite means very tight planning. My friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), pointed out something which I believe, and that is the fact that the national debt must be curbed and brought under control. However the Conservative Government has chosen to use a lot of rhetoric in that regard instead of producing results. The fact is that the national debt has increased this present fiscal year alone by one sixth of the amount the debt has increased in total from Confederation to 1984, and this was done in a period of 18 months of Conservative Government. That is not a very proud record.

During that 18 month period, the national debt has increased by approximately 23 per cent. The cost of servicing the national debt has increased from $18 billion to $26 billion. Government Members opposite say: "Oh, yes, but that is interest on the national debt". The Minister of Finance admitted in the House that the $1 billion the Government used to pay off the banks when they were in trouble was added to the national debt, and that is on the record of this House of Commons. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance, and hordes of Tories with their packsacks on, are running around the country telling everyone that everything that is happening today is the fault of the previous Liberal Government. As the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior pointed out, thank God this Tory Government was not in power during the recession years of the early 1980s, which was world-wide and had to be contended with by the Government of the day. If this Government had been in power then, the people would not have been looked after as well as they were. The plan should be to help Canadians during periods of world recession when times are tough, and build up revenues when the economy is good.

There is nothing in the Budget for youth. There is nothing in the Budget for forestry. I mention these because I heard all of those promises which were made day after day during the last election campaign. There is an increase in the tax on gasoline for the trucking industry and, of course, for the average consumer. During our agricultural task force hearings around the province of Ontario and across Canada, we heard demands that taxes be removed from farm implements, fertilizers and so on, but none of these things were addressed. The rebate of 3 cents per litre on gasoline was extended for one year, but why was it not done on a permanent basis if the Government was really interested in helping the farming community?

The Minister of Finance on several occasions has attempted to sell his Budget to Canadians as a tough but fair Budget. Well, it might be a tough Budget, but it certainly is not fair. For example, I and two of my colleagues in the Liberal Party met two weeks ago with some of the victims of the unemployment insurance policies of the Government. After our meeting with the Armed Forces Pensioners' Association, we called upon the Government and the Minister of Finance, in the spirit of fairness, to use the Budget as an opportunity to revoke the Order in Council regulations that changed the way in which unemployment insurance eligibility is calculated and which has resulted in thousands of Canadians being denied benefits to which they were entitled—and to which they were forced to contribute, incidentally.

As a result of this measure, many are forced to live below the poverty line. Some are in danger of losing their homes and some have even lost their homes. They can no longer maintain their homes with their severely reduced incomes. A member of the Armed Forces during his years of service has no choice but to pay unemployment insurance premiums. When I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about this on March 31, 1985, she said she knew enough to be sensitive to people in that position. A member of the Armed Forces must retire at a particular age. He or she has no choice. Unemployment insurance benefits to them must be a bridge from the time they leave their job in the Armed Forces—many of them in their forties—until they get a new job.

However, the Minister of Employment and Immigration included their severance pay and pensions as income. As a result, they were taken off the UIC rolls or their payments were reduced to insignificance. That is what the Minister did first. It is as if she burned down her horse stable and then called in the Kingston Fire Department to investigate what happened. She brought in the changes first and then appointed a commission of inquiry to look into unemployment insurance inequities.

I see you looking at the clock, Mr. Speaker. I will call it sic o'clock and continue next day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is very generous of the Hon. Member to call it six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

THE CONSTITUTION—ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to say a few words in connection with a question which I recently asked in the House about the possibility of entrenching property rights in the Constitution. Of course I was very pleased with the response I received that day from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) which gave support and hope for such an opportunity. I have been even more pleased by what I have seen come out of a recent meeting of the Minister of Justice along with his provincial colleagues held in Vancouver earlier this month, in that they are prepared to set up a working group which will look at the various issues involved in the possible entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. Certainly that is a very favourable move forward. Of course I was pleased when our own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last fall wrote to Mr. David Humphreys of the Canadian Real Estate Association stating: "I want to assure Canadians of my Government's support for the inclusion of property rights as an item for discussion at the next round of constitutional discussions with the provinces". I believe things are moving in the right direction.

What are we asking for at this time? As we know at the moment, under Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, three of our four fundamental democratic rights—those of life, liberty and security of persons—are now included and constitutionally protected. However, the right to property has not been so included. It is my position—and I know it is that of many of my colleagues—that we would like to see the enjoyment of property added to Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This is a position which is held very strongly by my home Province of British Columbia. The Ministers of that Government have been working with their colleagues to persuade them that such entrenchment would not bring about some of the concerns which have been raised by some special interest groups. I am pleased that we now have the support of New Brunswick and the Yukon Territory. I recognize that for such a constitutional amendment to go forward, we would need the approval of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population. I hope this will work and will proceed in the near future.

Countries which already have the right of property constitutionally entrenched include the United States, Australia, Italy, West Germany, Sweden and Finland. It is a concept not unknown in western countries. Of course it is a concept which goes back hundreds and hundreds of years, really back to the time of King John and the Magna Carta. When the barons came to see King John and talk about what they wanted in the Magna Carta, one item was that no man should be deprived of his property except by the legal judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

That was the first historic statement of property rights and the right to due process. It is something which we are now asking again to be entrenched in the Constitution. Although it has been a practice in common law, we do not yet have the protection of the Constitution in this respect. It is a point of view that has also been supported by a number of national organizations. The Canadian Bar Association, at its annual meeting in Halifax last year, passed a resolution in support of the entrenchment of property rights. This point of view has also been supported by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, various real estate associations including the National Real Estate Association and a number of municipalities. There is a great deal of support across the country.

There are some specific concerns. While I do not have time today to deal with them all, I did want to touch on several. Some of them come from provinces such as Manitoba and Prince Edward Island which are concerned because they now have laws which restrict the purchase of certain kinds of real estate to persons in those provinces. They are concerned those laws might be considered unconstitutional. We are all aware, we have Section 1 as a safeguard with respect to Section 7. It seems to me Section 1 would provide adequate protection to those provinces as well as to the concerns which are often raised by environmental groups.

Perhaps the most serious concerns, however, have been raised by women's groups. I can assure this House of my great interest and desire to ensure that women's concerns are fully addressed. The concern is somehow the entrenchment of property rights might act negatively against the division of property in matrimonial disputes. Again, my own feeling is that Section 1 could apply in terms of the reasonableness.

I hope that the working group, which the Minister of Justice and his colleagues across the country have set up, can look at that kind of an issue and find the wording or a way that would deal with those concerns. In some respects, the entrenchment of property rights could work to the advantage of women. I really feel that is an issue we can look at and work together on, and I hope we will be successful in the not-too-distant future.

It would be a very significant accomplishment for the Government, hopefully in its first term of office, to be able to support and put through such an important constitutional change, such as one that in opposition we put forward in 1983, so all Canadians could be secure and know their right to property was entrenched in the Constitution.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech. I can tell her that nothing she has said does the Government disagree with. This Party remains committed to the notion of entrenchment into the Constitution on property rights. As she has stated, in Vancouver the Attorneys General of the provinces and the Attorney General of Canada, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) agreed to establish a working group to look at the implications of entrenchment. Whether it be native groups, women or people concerned about the environment, there are certain apprehensions that are legitimate that people care about, and we have to put those matters to rest.

I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that the Government remains committed to the entrenchment of property rights into the Constitution and we hope soon to have a report from the working group established by the Attorneys General.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—NIAGARA RIVER—DIOXIN DISCOVERED IN UNITED STATES CHEMICAL DUMP

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you know, there are some 105 hazardous waste chemical dumps around the shores of the Great Lakes. About 10 of those are located in Canada. All the rest are located on the United States side of the Great Lakes. About five of those chemical dumps are serious, serious problems.

Up until recently, generally speaking, one would think there might only be four serious chemical dump sites along the Niagara River on the American side. Recently, however, another one has been identified, the Necco Park site which is owned by the Dupont Company. The other four which have been identified for some time are the Love Canal site, the S area dump, the Hyde Park site and the 102nd Street dump, all, as I have indicated, on the Amercian side of the Niagara River.

Just about a week ago, dioxin was identified as being located in the 102nd Street dump. That dump contains about 22 acres. It stretches along the Niagara River for about 300 metres, or almost 1,000 feet. It contains, as I understand it, about 123,000 tonnes of hazardous waste chemicals, chemicals put there by the Olin Corporation and the Occidental Chemical Corporation, formerly known as Hooker Chemical. They were dumped at this site between 1948 and 1970. In 1970 the United States Government ordered the dumping to stop at the 102nd Street site because the river bank was starting to erode.

Within the last two weeks it has been discovered that this site contained TCDD dioxin, which is considered to be the deadliest synthetic chemical of all time to date. In the 102nd Street dump, dioxin has been identified at a level of 630 parts per billion. That is just below the level already identified in the Love Canal site. It has been established for some time that at least some of these chemical dumps, including Love Canal and Hyde Park, are oozing chemicals through the soil which are slowly draining down the Niagara gorge into the Niagara River, Lake Ontario, and the St. Lawrence River.

It apparently has not yet been established whether the dioxin from the 102nd Street dump is also leaking into the Niagara River. In response to my question to the Minister on February 24, he denied that any dioxin from the 102nd Street dump was leaking into the Niagara River and Lake Ontario. That may be so, Mr. Speaker, but it is somewhat difficult to comprehend when all of these other dumps are apparently leaking chemicals and, therefore, must be leaking dioxin because dioxin is soluble and carried by solvents. Therefore, it goes without saying that dioxin is following the path of these other chemicals down the gorge into the river and into the lake.

It is said that a mere shovelful of dioxin could destroy the drinking water in Lake Ontario for virtually all time. It would make it unfit for drinking for the 4 million Canadians who draw their drinking water from Lake Ontario. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there was a general proposal made to Canada by the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States for cleaning up all of these dumps along the Niagara River. That proposal was put to the Canadian Government some time prior to the Christmas break. To the best of my knowledge, there has not, as yet, been any public response by the Canadian Government to that proposal. In addition, a specific proposal was made with regard to the Hyde Park dump. There has, as yet, been no public response to that by the Canadian Government.

The Canadian Government has stated several times that it wants, not only to contain the chemicals in those dumps, but to actually destroy them. There are methods used in other countries for doing just that. There is one method used in the Netherlands and another in West Germany. Experiments have been performed at Queens University for destroying chemicals of this nature rather than just containing them in dump sites where they can ooze through the ground and, inevitably, contaminate drinking water.

It is time that we took some action on this. It is time that we at least made public our responses to the general proposals made by the U.S. for a clean-up. It is time we made a response to the specific proposals made to the U.S. courts concerning the Hyde Park clean-up. It seems to me that tonight, at long last, we should be hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary exactly what Environment Canada intends to do with respect to the sites.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a Herculean task to try and respond to those specific questions, but there are some specific answers. As usual, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has his facts correct. His information is excellent concerning what has gone on and the danger which exists.

I would make one point on the dioxin. I think it is important that the general public understand there are different kinds of dioxin. The 2, 3, 7, 8 dioxin isomer which we are talking about here is indeed the most deadly chemical substance we know of. The other dioxins found in drinking water along the St. Clair, for instance, are far less deadly and are not found in concentrations anywhere in waterways which are used for drinking water which would, at least to this point in time, give anyone cause for concern.

The specific point I would like to make regarding the 102nd Street chemical waste landfill site is that there have been some delays in the tests. I was the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers who stopped any further chemical disposal on this site when they built a dike back in the early 1970s. From 1979 on there have been surveys and tests of the soil. In the summer of 1985, dioxin was found in the neighbourhood of 630 parts per billion. Anything over one part per billion is considered by the EPA to be potentially hazardous and remedial action is necessary. Where we are at right now with this dump is that the ongoing tests will determine whether there has been any migration of the chemicals. The Hon. Member is quite right to say it is reasonable to assume this could have happened. We are right now at the stage of determining whether or not this is the case and whether any further remedial action is necessary.

As to the Hyde Park site, we have responded to the American court. We indicated very clearly that our opinion is that the action suggested thus far will not accomplish zero discharge. We suggested technical changes in their approach and we have urged them to take action on what they have before them. We are hopeful they will take into account our suggestions so that we will have at least proof that what they are doing is adequate and we will then be able to determine what further remedial action might be necessary.

SOCIAL SECURITY—CHILD CARE SERVICES—GOVERNMENT AID—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION. (B) GROUPS' REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): On February 12, Mr. Speaker, I raised a very important question concerning child care services. During the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Opposition, responded favourably to two representations from groups working in that field.

First, he promised to appoint a parliamentary committee to look into this matter. That he has done. Second, there is the matter of money, in other words the $300 million for child care services that need immediate assistance.

In answering this request the Prime Minister did not mention a specific amount, but he showed he was aware of problems in that sector and promised financial assistance. But what has he done to live up to that promise? Not even a nickel in the Budget. In answering my question the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) was quite satisfied with having to wait for the report of the parliamentary committee, even though the need is urgent and immediate.

The objective of the committee is to consider a new assistance plan, a restructuration. We should not wait for that report to improve the situation, critical as it is: shortage of affordable places, minimum wages for men and women who work in child care services, unequal access to services throughout the country.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has too much confidence in the study committee—as yet undeserved confidence.

We in the New Democratic Party fear that this committee will simply duplicate the work already done by the task force, that it will be a convenient excuse to put off implementing the recommendations of Mrs. Cooke's task force.

What this committee should do is to begin by considering the recommendations of the task force with a view to setting up the structure of a child care service system.

What do we want to see, what kind of system? We want to see a national system, one that is worked out with the provinces, one that is jointly funded on the same basis as medicare and other social programs. We want to move from a welfare-based program where recipients have to prove need to a system where there are provisions for all. Quality child care is expensive, as are quality schools. We have moved to accepting the burden collectively for the provision of schools. We must do the same for child care. This is what the movement for child care wants, and it is what the NDP has been recommending for many years.

Many parents want to look after their children at home and do not want day care centres. They do not get the assistance they need either. It should be an option. It should be possible for parents to have a shorter work week and for both parents to share the care of children at home as a child care option. We need flexibility so that parents do not have to make the choice of full time at home or full-time child care, so that these tasks can be shared and different possibilities worked out for families as they wish them.

Tax support for child care is inadequate. The deductions do not permit coverage of full costs. The system is regressive, giving the greatest assistance to highest income earners. We have a long way to go to put in place a really good system.

The Cook task force which is reporting this week, cost three-quarters of a million dollars. It commissioned more than 20 studies. It made international comparisons and looked at the tax system. It even had some public meetings before they were called off. A very comprehensive study was made of the system. We are expecting good things in those recommendations. If a new parliamentary committee on child care is to play a useful role, it must start from those recommendations and get right down to working with the provinces to come up with a system that will be acceptable to all those who have jurisdiction in this area. Parents have been waiting a long time for it.

One of the studies for the Cook task force report on the task force on child care shows that Canada ranks number 22 out of 23 for paid maternity leave and parental leave of provisions for child care. I might point out that number 23 was the country of Greece under its previous Conservative Government. It has since improved considerably the provisions for parental leave. I suspect if these figures were redone, we would see that Canada is number 23 out of 23 countries. That is not acceptable. We have a very long way to go before we see that parents get support and that provision is made for parental leave and adequate child care.

The Canadian Child Care Advocacy Association is waiting. They are tired of the excuses and so are we. We need legislation, we need programs and we need the $300 million as an immediate infusion into the existing system.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the Hon. Member's question about the Government's promises and commitment concerning child care.

It is clear that because of changing family needs, child care has become one of the major items on the social agenda. However, a number of questions have yet to be answered about how best to respond to the pressing need for day care services.

That is why, as promised in the Throne Speech, the Government decided to set up a parliamentary task force that will be responsible for defining Canada's future policy in this area.

The task force will play a major role in developing Government policy on child care by inviting the public to participate and by preparing feasible recommendations for future alternatives.

The parliamentary task force will provide a forum for useful and constructive public debate on questions and concerns that are essential to an understanding of our commitment as a society in this respect. To help reach a consensus, we have asked that the public's attention be focussed on child care within the general context of the changing needs of the family. By considering family needs from this perspective, we can try to understand how Canadians perceive the need for providing day care services for all children, not just the children of working parents.

We have also asked that the work of the task force focus on the respective roles of parents, employers, persons in charge of day care services and other parties, in order to determine what role Governments should play and the appropriate fundamental measures they should take.

To fulfil its mandate, the parliamentary task force would have to go beyond philosophical discussion and seek practical solutions to the problem of providing child care. It should remember it is the provinces' responsibility to provide day care services, and it will have to consider the financial capabilities and constraints of all public authorities concerned.

If we let the members of the parliamentary task force have a frank and open approach to the task they have undertaken, I am convinced that the result will be a broad range of valid options for meeting the commitment of Canadians to providing child care. I believe that the discussions and conclusions of the task force will be of vital importance to the Government and its commitment to establishing a Canadian child care policy that will respond to the needs of all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

SITUATION OF SUGAR-BEET PRODUCERS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the sugar-beet producers are in great trouble. Today is March 5 and Canadian farmers are wondering if they will be able to grow a crop this year. This lack of action on the part of the Government is affecting farmers particularly in Alberta, Manitoba, and Quebec, and nothing has yet been done to reassure the hundreds and hundreds of Canadian producers.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec this will have a very definite impact, because if the Government does not announce very shortly the kind of policy it intends to introduce for the benefit of sugar-beet producers, we can expect farmers to stop growing this crop, and then the Government of Quebec will be in a very tough spot with the Saint-Hilaire sugar refinery.

I would therefore ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Conservative Government not to wait until all sugar-beet refineries are shut down to announce the sugar policy they have been promising us for more than ten months.

Mr. Speaker, this is an urgent matter, and action will have to be taken very shortly.

IMMIGRATION

NEEDS OF IMMIGRANT WOMEN

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the needs of immigrant women continue to demand action by the Government. These women often face a series of barriers to meaningful employment. They may be preoccupied with family responsibilities and immersed in the language and culture of their community. They are often unfamiliar with both of the official languages, but can find little language instruction. They have few of the skills being sought in the labour market and face severe competition from those desperate for any job they can find.

• (1405)

To be an immigrant women is often to be a member of the target group of visible minorities as well as women. Such a coincidence does not assure them of action by the Government. The Government aims to spend more on human resource development, but it has not increased funding to organizations which want to assist in improving the employability of such special groups.

Government appears unconcerned about the inadequacies of the employment equity Bill, and the affirmative action staff within Treasury Board faces lay-off. Immigrant women provide—

HOUSING

RURAL AND NATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, the Rural and Native Housing Program is designed to assist low-income people to purchase a home. The program is funded 75 per cent—25 per cent by the federal and provincial Governments respectively.

The administration of the program in the past has left a lot to be desired. At no time has the Minister or his officials sought opinions from local authorities. As a result of this grave lack of sensitivity, many people are now angry, frustrated, and hostile toward the program and the people involved. I can understand this frustration which many hard-working Canadians feel. They pay the full price of a house, including interest rates on conventional mortgage payments, while others receive subsidies for above-average housing.

Such animosity could be avoided if more local consultation and participation were encouraged in the selection process. I urge the Government and the Minister to consult with Members of Parliament and to seek municipal and local opinions before implementing any further projects under the Rural and Native Housing Program.

WOMEN

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, during International Women's Week, let us rejoice in the progress made by Canadian women towards economic equality, since that memorable day when for the first time in North America, New York garment workers rose up against the unfair practices they were subjected to at work.

At the last Conference of Federal and Provincial First Ministers, it was agreed to develop a strategy that would help women achieve economic equality. In this strategy, professional training and development were identified as activities that were particularly important to women.

Across Canada, the Ministers responsible for the status of women have committed themselves to developing an intergovernmental plan with the same objective in mind.

Mr. Speaker, on International Women's Day, I would urge my colleagues to continue to support our efforts to achieve equality and economic security for women.

FISHERIES

CONSTRUCTION OF LABORATORY IN NEW BRUNSWICK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, in 1984, the Government promised to build a new fisheries building in Shippegan, New Brunswick. When the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) was Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, he also made a commitment to have the laboratory built.

In fact, tenders were made and the necessary funding totalling $1.7 million had been released. The Minister had also informed the Chamber of Commerce of Shippegan that the project would start in May 1986.

However, when the Deputy Prime Minister took over the Fisheries Department, he soon put a stop to the project.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister should immediately proceed with construction on this laboratory which is vital to the fisheries industry in New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is just another example of how this Government has decided to ignore the Atlantic region and the fisheries industry.

PEACE

MESSAGE FROM BAHA'I UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on October 24, 1985, the Universal House of Justice, the supreme governing body of the Baha'i faith, addressed a statement to the people of the world on the theme of peace. I have a copy of the message which was presented to me by the Baha'i community of East St. Paul, Manitoba. I recommend it to Hon. Members of the House who are concerned about the peace issues, and I should like to quote from it briefly:

> Whether peace is to be reached only after unimaginable horrors precipitated by humanity's stubborn clinging to old patterns of behaviour, or is to be embraced now by an act of consultative will, is the choice before all who inhabit the earth.

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canada is now the place to do business. The Government is providing greater opportunity to the Atlantic region than at any time since John Diefenbaker. The newly announced Atlantic Enterprise Program will guarantee term loans up to 85 per cent of their value, and will provide an interest write-down of 6 per cent for new and expanding operations. Business ventures in areas such as tourism, manufacturing, and processing, related service sectors, and primary industries, will qualify.

Another new program is the Atlantic Opportunities Program administered through the Department of Supply and Services. It will create 20,000 man-years of employment. It will increase Atlantic purchasing by 40 per cent and spend $600 million over the next four years to achieve this goal.

Regional development incentives also continue. In my riding of Cardigan, 50 per cent investment tax credits are available this year to manufacturers, and will continue at 40 per cent.

It is time to take ideas off the shelf. It is time to put them into action. Atlantic Canada is going to boom again, thanks to the Mulroney Government which is creating a new spirit of enterprise. We now have the program to match the opportunities. I urge the business community to respond to the challenge.

Mr. Speaker: Sixty seconds, please.

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, I want to say I am proud to be on the Conservative team.

Our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and our Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) have recognized the economic potential of the region east of Quebec.

The Atlantic Enterprise Program was received with great enthusiasm by all economic partners in the riding of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, eastern Quebec and the Atlantic region.

Thanks to this program, regional development initiatives which until now had been frozen will finally be able to come to fruition. It is a sensible initiative that was necessary, since this region had been neglected under the Liberal Government. Programs had been set up where the emphasis was on bureaucracy rather than economic impact.

The Atlantic Enterprise Program will provide job opportunities for my constituents in the very near future.

The Conservative Government deserves praise for acting responsibly, and it is certainly a change from the inertia of the previous Liberal Government.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the future of low-income Canadians is of great concern to this Government.

Further to our commitment to direct social programs to those who need it the most, in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the Government is proposing to pay in advance a substantial portion of the child tax credit, to assist Canadian families on low incomes and to reduce the need for tax discounting.

From now on, prepayments amounting to $300 per child will be paid in November 1986 to families with incomes of $15,000 or less in 1985.

This new prepayment system will reduce the waiting period for eligible families by several months. About one million families will benefit from the system.

This measure is in addition to recent changes in legislation which limit the percentage of tax refunds that may be taken by discounters. Now the poor, single mothers and welfare recipients will no longer have to resort to their services.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, International Youth Year is over, and the champagne is flat!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: We know we have about 700,000 unemployed young people in Canada, and Mr. Wilson's Budget contains not a single word about the problems of the young unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) where the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) is at this time? Is she here in the House? Is she in her riding? Is she speaking for youth? Obviously she is not, because we know that her Budget has been at least cut in half. This Government which promised so much to unemployed youth has done nothing about jobs in Canada.

I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to create jobs for young people. I ask the Prime Minister to request the resignation of the Minister of State (Youth), because she is not fighting for our young people. She is only fighting for her limousine and her bureaucracy.

PORNOGRAPHY

CALL FOR IMMEDIATE EXCISE TAX INCREASE ON IMPORTED PUBLICATIONS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, as Members of this House will know, the struggle to impose workable restrictions upon the importation, distribution, and sale of pornographic material in Canada has been a difficult one, not least because of the question of freedom of speech under the Charter of Rights and the absence of acceptable definitions of what is and is not obscene, offensive, and dangerous to the community. Meanwhile, this material continues to pervade our country.

I, therefore, urge the Government of Canada to consider introducing an immediate increase in the federal sales and excise tax applicable to such offensive material to a rate of not less than 2,000 per cent of the average retail price of such publications. If people want or need such forms of stimulation and degradation, they can at least be prepared to pay for them.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

PROJECT GUIDELINES—ELIGIBILITY OF INDIAN BANDS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, a number of Indian bands and native organizations within my riding have expressed concern about the strict and, at times, counter-productive guidelines for job development projects under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Specifically, these guidelines require the project participants must have been jobless for at least 24 of the last 30 weeks. This means that in seasonal and high unemployment economies some well qualified unemployed may be denied the chance to compete for new jobs.

In two cases, the Big Trout Lake training program and the Wawatay television training program, flexibility is a necessity to recruit the best possible candidates for these ventures.

I realize that guidelines offer valuable consistency and fairness to a program, but they should not retard or limit any group's potential for success. I ask the Minister to consider exempting these organizations from guidelines and to review similar concerns as they may be brought to her attention. In the interest of successful job creation, this suggestion is worthy of positive consideration and prompt action.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PROVISIONS IN BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The largest cut in the federal Budget is that of $6 billion in the regional development envelope for 1987. That is the envelope which helps create jobs and opportunities in the less wealthy regions of the country.

Why are the areas of the country with the worst economic problems being asked to bear the majority of the regional burdens imposed by the Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker I hate to point it out again, but the Leader of the Opposition is wrong.

Mr. Crosbie: As usual.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think he should get new researchers if he is not going to do the work himself. In 1985-86 the amount was $12.465 billion. This is on page 31, Mr. Speaker. In 1986-87 the figure will go down to $11.080 billion. I think that is a reduction of about $380 million.

The cause of that reduction is the elimination of unnecessary subsidies to business which are primarily focused on the more well-off regions of the country. We did everything we could possibly do to avoid cutting spending in the worse off areas of the country. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that through the Atlantic Enterprise Program we have put a greater focus on Atlantic Canada because of the high unemployment rates there.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON DISADVANTAGED REGIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the figures I was quoting were the 1984-85 figures of the previous Government which projected $14.7 billion for 1987. That has been reduced by the present Government to $9.8 billion. Those are the facts which I happened to look up myself, Mr. Speaker.

Why must the poorest regions of our country bear the brunt of deficit reduction? If the Minister is unable to treat taxpayers and individuals with fairness, why does he not extend fair treatment at least to the many poor regions of Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the philosophy and policy of the Government are to provide funds to those who are greatest in need. That is the philosophy which flows through the management of our economic and regional development programs. We have removed subsidies which are no longer necessary in the better-off parts of the country and directed the savings to those parts of the country which need them most, such as Atlantic Canada. The Atlantic Enterprise Program is the best example I can give of what we have done in the Budget to reinforce that philosophy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I will have an opportunity to deal with that later in the afternoon.

PRINCIPLE OF REGIONAL EQUALITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Constitution now provides for regional equality as part of the substance of our Confederation. Why is he abandoning the principle of equal opportunity for our regions in the recent Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the Leader of the Opposition was not able to adjust the questions which he prepared before he came into Question Period. The responses to his first two questions clearly indicate that we have done no such thing. We have not abandoned any emphasis on regional development. Far from that, we have increased it through the Atlantic Enterprise Program as well as through the benefits which we are providing to those in northern Canada.

Ms. Mitchell: What about British Columbia?

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF REVENUE AND DEFICIT PROVISIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Since the Budget speech, Mr. Speaker, several facts have contradicted the figures of the Minister of Finance, thus affecting his credibility with respect to revenues and particularly the deficit. Here is my question, Mr. Speaker: How can the Minister of Finance explain that, on pages 27 and 28 of his Budget documents, he expects a real investment growth of 7 per cent, that is plus inflation, 11 per cent, whereas Statistics Canada figures released this morning show that the growth in business investments is forecast at only 2.5 per cent in current dollars? How does he explain this decline from 11 to 2.5 per cent in only a few days?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would just ask the Hon. Member to think back to about a year ago. Investment intentions were about four percentage points below what the actual result will be. Right now the Conference Board is saying that business confidence is 20 percentage points higher than it was last year. That tells me that business investment activity will be at a record high this year.

INQUIRY WHY STATISTICS CANADA FIGURES WERE NOT USED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance has no confidence in Statistics Canada figures, he should abolish the agency. Otherwise, why did he not take into account this survey made among 25,000 businesses which indicate that their investment will grow by only 2.5 per cent in current dollars? Why did he not use those figures which come from a Government agency?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer I gave to the first question is the answer I would give to the second question. Judgment is required.

Mr. Garneau: You are right and StatsCan is wrong.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The StatsCan numbers are from a narrow survey of investment intentions. Last year the same survey underestimated the growth in the economy and I think it is going to happen again.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN EXCHANGE RESERVES—SIZE OF GOVERNMENT BORROWINGS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The average family, knowing that they are going to pay some $1,300 in increased taxes as a result of the present Budget, the previous Budget, and the budget statement in the fall of 1984, are fed up. We learned this morning that because of the Government's incompetence the Minister had to borrow $2.5 billion last month. That was the largest amount borrowed in a month, in the history of this country. Can the Minister tell the average Canadian how much it will cost him or her for this increased borrowing by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows we discussed the $1,300 figure yesterday. I pointed out in three precise areas where his figures were all wet, as they normally are. We will probably talk about that again later today.

As far as the use of exchange reserves is concerned, let me draw to his attention that drawing down reserves in U.S. dollars to buy Canadian dollars just shifts the money from our U.S. dollar account to our Canadian dollar account where it will be used to finance Government purchases of goods and services in Canada. There is no loss of money so far as the Canadian taxpayer is concerned.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the Minister's challenge to the figures later when I speak in debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't empty the House, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: I would simply point out that he blamed Marc Lalonde for the 1 per cent federal sales tax increase. I say to him that he had an option. He did not have to impose that tax. However, I will deal with it later.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Make up your own lines.

COST TO TAXPAYERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister made a decision to build up our reserves by borrowing $2.5 billion in Europe, Japan, and elsewhere. Is he now saying that that borrowing will not cost us a cent?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, funds have to be borrowed to finance a deficit which, fortunately, is going down under this Government but which was built up in previous years to record high levels. Those deficits have to be financed. They can be financed by borrowing U.S. dollars, or yen, as was the case. They are then converted into Canadian dollars which are used to finance the purchase of goods and services by the Government of Canada. There is just a shift of those resources from one account to another, and no loss of money.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, again the Minister did not answer the question. There is a shifting of funds from one account to another but when the Government of Canada, like the people of Canada or anywhere else, borrows money, it has to be paid for, and the people of Canada understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Right!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is right. Finally!

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Question, please.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: I ask the Minister in a straightforward fashion again, considering that since the Budget has come down there has been nothing but negative pressure on the Canadian dollar, and considering that he probably guessed that in advance and he was building up his reserves, will he come clean with the people of Canada and tell them how much it will cost for the $2.5 billion dollars that he borrowed last month, which is the largest increase in the reserves in one month ever in the history of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the basic truth has finally come through to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. When we have a deficit we have to pay, and it costs money to borrow that money. That is a fundamental truth, and that is a fundamental reason why we are trying to get the deficit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He says I did not answer the last question. I did answer the last question and I will explain it to him again, slowly.

Mr. Broadbent: Stick around for the debate.

An Hon. Member: It couldn't get much slower.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Moneys are borrowed in either U.S. dollars, Deutschmarks, Swiss francs, or yen, or Canadian dollars, got that?

Mr. Broadbent: That's very good; one B, very good.

REQUEST FOR NEW PROJECTIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has put the dollar on a life-support system because the Budget is wrong on oil prices, it is wrong on interest rates, and we learned this morning that it is also wrong on investment intentions. Will he agree, that being the case, that his growth number is wrong, his revenue numbers have to be wrong, his deficit projection has to be wrong? Will he bring us realistic projections based on the real world and not on the world as he would like it to be?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess the Liberal Party must know quite a bit about life-support systems.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have discussed these questions about estimates that are in the Budget, and projections. My hon. colleague from Mississauga South tried to get the question out yesterday, but it was quite clear from his question that the projections that we are using in this Budget are conservative projections. The 9.5 per cent level of interest rates I think is going to be proven to be right on the mark. I do point out to the Hon. Member that, as I indicated, the dollar has been strong these last couple of days.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is getting too long.

CRUDE OIL PRICE PROJECTION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am going to have to go elsewhere for some answers. I want to go to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for my supplementary question. She knows West Texas oil has slipped below $12 a barrel. Would she rise in her place and tell us whether she has advised the Minister of Finance that his $22.50 price is nuts, and that, in fact, oil prices are going to be much lower and his revenues may be reduced as much as $1 billion?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have the Conference Board of Canada indicating that its projections of oil prices are not that far off our projections. I have talked to a number of oil companies which have also indicated their projections for the price of oil are not that far off ours.

Mr. Riis: Name them!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As I indicated, the bottom line that he is referring to is the impact on the deficit. The impact on the deficit of lower oil prices is balanced by a healthier economy because of lower interest rates, lower inflation, better growth in the country, and better growth in our trading partners. The net effect and the bottom line are slightly positive to the federal Government.

IMPACT OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. The Minister refuses to deal with the cost to the Canadian public of the borrowing that has just taken place in the last month. He said that the $1,305 figure is wrong. Will he produce for the House the figures showing the impact of not only the income tax increase but three sales taxes, three gasoline taxes, two alcohol and tobacco taxes, UI premium increases, and sundry other taxes and fee increases which have taken place since he took office in September of 1984?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have told the Hon. Member that it is important that we share the load of these tax increases so that the load of reducing the deficit is not borne just by those Canadians who are disadvantaged, or by those Canadians who live in the less advantaged regions of the country.

However, I would point out to him that personal disposable income in 1985 rose by 8 per cent, and it is forecast to rise by 6.3 per cent in 1986, and again by 5 per cent in 1987.

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): All of these include the impact of those taxes.

IMPACT ON AVERAGE FAMILY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me try to put the question to the Minister as simply as I can. I will do it slowly. Is it possible for the Minister to produce for the House the impact figures of all the tax increases on the average Canadian family, introduced by the Government since it took office, in order to show that our figure of $1,305 is somehow in error?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I can share a phone conversation that I had with the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you tell me the number?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —he has included in his $1,300 figure the effects of the sales tax increase brought about by the Liberal Party in the 1983 Budget, I believe.

Mr. Deans: Which you implemented.

Mr. Broadbent: You brought it in. What are you talking about?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As well, there are the unemployment insurance premiums which, by legislation, we are bound to bring in, plus the petroleum compensation charge which we have eliminated but was required under the legislation.

Mr. Broadbent: No, it was not.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is the reason why I believe about $450 of that figure of the NDP was fictitious.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

CRUDE OIL PRICE PROJECTIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his Budget document entitled Towards a Sustained Expansion: Canada's Economic Prospects, 1986-1991, he says on page 23 that his budget forecasts are based on a crude price for 1986 of $22.50 a barrel, yet in the same document at page 20 at table 4, he says that the 1986 price for crude oil will be $23.88 a barrel. Why is there this discrepancy in the Minister's own budget documents?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I would agree with those figures because the Party that the Hon. Member represents sometimes misuses figures. I will check the figures and give the Hon. Member a response.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, there is a definite contradiction and the Minister does not know what figure he is using. In any event, both of them are out of line. Will the Minister admit this and acknowledge that it is time to get back to the drawing board?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the drawing board has produced a masterpiece.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can see from the look on their faces that the Members opposite agree. I have answered that question before.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Why will the Minister of Finance simply not come clean with the Canadian people and table in the House the total impact of the tax increases he has imposed on the Canadian people since his Government was elected?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these figures are set out clearly in the various documents that have been presented in the House and I encourage the Hon. Member to read them himself.

CALCULATION OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Finance agree with the calculations made by my Party that the total tax impact of the Minister's three Budgets on the Canadian people is $1,300 for the average Canadian family?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, for the third time, I believe. There are three parts of that calculation with which I do not agree. You can lay them on the back of the previous Government or you can attribute them to the fact that legislation required them, but do not blame them on me—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —because legislation dictates what we must do.

I have said that there are increases in taxation of some $800, which I make no bones about. Those increases are there for a specific reason, so that those parts of the country that can least afford it do not get hit by higher spending cuts—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that British Columbia, Atlantic Canada, and parts of Quebec and Ontario have exceptionally high levels of unemployment. Will he explain to the House the fairness in gutting the regional economic development envelope, thereby depriving Canadians in those regions of jobs, industry of assistance, and communities of some sense of stability and optimism? Why has he taken this ruthless action toward the poor regions of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be very pleased with the Atlantic Enterprise Program which is an initiative in this Budget.

However, I have answered the precise question which the Hon. Member asks. We have not done what he has said. We have weeded out from the regional economic development budget those subsidies to business which are no longer effective or doing the job that was originally intended for them. We are trying to clean up the mess that was left in place by the previous Government.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CUT-BACKS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not realize that cuts of 12.4 per cent for DRIE, 9.8 per cent for Transport, 11 per cent for Fisheries and Oceans, and 42 per cent in Energy, Mines and Resources will be such a devastating blow to many of those poorer regions of the country that they will fall even farther below the poverty line? Will he explain those cut-backs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, employment has gone up in Atlantic Canada and it will go up further. Surely the Hon. Member is not saying that he wants the Government to keep pumping money into southwestern Ontario, where we have practically full employment, at the same time as we are running up interest rates to the extent that all parts of the country will suffer. We are following a fiscal and industrial policy that makes sense, and that is a nice change.

POLL COMMISSIONED BY DEPARTMENT—DISCLOSURE OF RECIPIENTS' NAMES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am holding a copy of a questionnaire and manual that was used in a poll of unemployment insurance recipients by the private firm of Peat Marwick. This is a poll commissioned by the Minister's Department at a cost of $187,000. Will the Minister admit in the House that she did not authorize her officials to give Peat Marwick the names and telephone numbers of 1985 U.I. recipients? Will she also apologize to those recipients whose names were disclosed in violation of Section 114 of the Unemployment Insurance Act dealing with confidential information?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I was not aware of the precise design of that particular survey. However, I want him to know that research work goes on in the Department all the time. Surveys of unemployment insurance exhaustees were done in 1982 and 1984. I am, nevertheless, concerned about whether or not there is any breach of privacy and I have immediately asked that this matter be investigated. In that regard I will certainly take the advice of the Privacy Commissioner.

REQUEST FOR CONFIDENTIALITY ASSURANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, since this is a clear violation of Section 114 of the Act, being without the authorization of the Minister, will she give us and, more important, U.I. recipients, the assurance that this kind of breach of confidentiality will never occur again in that Department?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have informed the Hon. Member, I am indeed determining whether or not there has been a breach of confidentiality. I do not want to see that happen any more than he does. That is why I have said I will accept the advice of the Privacy Commissioner in this regard. As soon as I have that advice, I will get back to him and other Members.

COLLECTION OF BENEFITS BY BRICKLAYERS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Reports in recent days have indicated that some 1,400 Metro-Toronto bricklayers are collecting unemployment insurance benefits while builders have set up an emergency manpower committee to help find qualified bricklayers to meet the demands of the current housing boom. Are these reports true and, if so, what action does the Minister intend to take to ensure that the unemployment insurance system is not abused and that only those who are genuinely unable to find work receive benefits?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I believe that if there is work available and if people can find work in their field, then they should not be drawing unemployment insurance benefits. However, I also want to advise the Hon. Member that we do have agreements with hiring halls. They advise us whether or not there are people who are unemployed in a particular field.

Regarding the Toronto situation, I have asked departmental officials to find out immediately whether or not contractors are giving work to the hiring halls, whether or not the hiring halls are referring that work to bricklayers, and whether or not the bricklayers are accepting the work offers that are made. As soon as I have that information, I will be able to take appropriate action.

DEPARTMENT'S ARRANGEMENTS WITH HIRING HALLS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Regarding the hiring halls, can the Minister tell the House why the bricklayers' and other hiring halls have these special privileges to by-pass the unemployment centres in reporting, and just how many unions or organizations have these special privileges?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it has long been a practice of the Department of Employment and Immigration in working with the labour force to have arrangements with hiring halls across the country. That has been in effect for some time. We have found it to be of very beneficial assistance in making sure that proper flows of work are channelled through the hiring halls. I would hope to see that practice continue.

ELIMINATION OF MANDATORY RETIREMENT AGE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As a result of the new equality law, the Minister has announced the elimination of mandatory age of retirement for public servants but not for the tens of thousands of workers in the federally regulated private sector. Could the Minister tell us why these workers do not benefit right now from non-discrimination based on age?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Hon. Member simply refuses to read the details of this report. In the report we indicate that the same rules are going to apply to the private sector, but to give it time to adjust its affairs and labour contracts and to make arrangements, there will be a transitional period. Exactly the same principle will apply. The Public Service can act more quickly because the President of the Treasury Board has already been taking steps that can be put into immediate effect. The private sector has not had that advantage. If the hon. lady will read on, she will discover just what is going on.

INDUSTRY STANDARD

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Minister that I know exactly how to read his document and that his document is certainly not clear. I would like to know what kind of fairness and equality can bank clerks, airline stewardesses, and rail workers expect from the Government when decisions for retirement are not going to be based on their performance ability but on their age, and normal age of retirement is an industry standard.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I refer to page 9 of this historic document tabled yesterday which indicates the following:

> However, since abolishing mandatory retirement will have an impact on labour relations in the private sector, the Government will consult with private sector employers and employee organizations before taking any action,—

The previous Government did not consult with anyone about anything. We consult first, and then we act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPOSITION OF TAXES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great care and much amazement to the answers given by the Minister of Finance today with respect to the oil compensation fund tax and the sales tax increase that came into effect in October, 1984. My question is very simple. Who was it who put these taxes into effect, the Minister or Darth Vader?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Darth Vader from Star Wars. He's the guy who has taken over from them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He's working for you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Do you have to think about it, Michael?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): He is a Member of the New Democratic Party. Mr. Speaker, Marc Lalonde put in a sales tax increase. I believe it was Allan MacEachen who put in the petroleum compensation charge, and the unemployment insurance premiums have been around for a long, long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, clearly it might have been R2D2 who reached out beyond the grave here.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): I have a serious question to ask the Minister. In view of the attacks on every assumption on which the Budget was based, is the Minister now prepared to withdraw this Budget and start all over again?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess the Hon. Member is out in that other world with Darth Vader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The simple answer—

An Hon. Member: He's spaced out.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, he is spaced out. The simple answer is that I stand by the bottom line of those projections. The 9.5 per cent interest rate will, I think, prove to be quite realistic. The bottom line on the oil price assumptions, as I have said I think seven times already, is that as the oil price goes down there are two offsetting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. I think the Minister has had enough time to answer that.

WOMEN

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PROGRAM CONCERNING PROMOTION OF WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Last week's Budget provided for cuts in departmental spending. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would give us the assurance that the Women's Program in the Department of the Secretary of State will not be abolished, as some people fear will be the case.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, at the present time we are analyzing the Budget cuts and when this has been done, we will be able to inform the House and Canadians how my Department's budgets have been able to respond to these cuts.

REDUCTION OF BUDGET FOR PROMOTION OF WOMEN PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has cut at least twelve per cent from the Women's Program for 1986-87, allowing for inflation.

Could the Minister inform the House how far he is prepared to go? How much is he prepared to concede to the Minister of Finance, to reduce the budget for the Women's Program even further?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member no assurance other than the fact that usually I am not the one who concedes anything to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance makes the concessions.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—EFFECT ON FOOD PRICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Low and middle-income families are paying very dearly for the lack of confidence in the Government's economic policies. Is it fair that an average family will pay an extra $100 for food as a result of the falling dollar and this will be put on top of the extra tax burden as well as slashes to services for these same families?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a well know fact that, if the NDP policies had been followed by the Government, the falling dollar would have been dropping through the floor. That is why we have taken action in the Budget to steady the dollar.

I would say to the Hon. Member that low-income families are benefiting from the increase in the child tax credit, the acceleration of the payment of the child tax credit, the low-income refundable sales tax credit, and the $100 million that we are redirecting to help those Canadians who are on welfare find work and become more accustomed to the workforce. These are things that are real benefits—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the Minister can be briefer than that.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the extra burden of higher taxes which the Minister is imposing upon families, the higher food costs resulting from his economic policies—and of course these are increasing the cost of living for all families with children—will the Minister take steps to reindex the family allowance and the child tax credit to the real cost of family living?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has never really understood what we were doing with the changes in the family benefits. There are three elements of the family benefits package. The child tax exemption, which is a benefit to upper-income Canadians, was reduced. The child tax credit, which is a benefit to lower-income Canadians, was increased. We have also modified the indexation of the family benefit. However, the net effect of those three changes is to help low-income Canadians and to take that money away from upper-income Canadians. Surely that is good social policy.

FORESTRY

SAWMILLS—IMPACT OF FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Forestry).

The experts say that the lumber industry had a very good year in 1985, the result of an impressive 18.5 per cent increase in construction starts.

Could the Minister inform the House whether the Opposition is right when it sees negotiations to improve our trade with the United States as a threat to the industry?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the continued interest and concern of the Hon. Member, and indeed of other Hon. Members, in the forest products trade issue. Of course the fact of the matter is that lumber presently trades freely between Canada and the United States, to the extent where we have now captured about a third of its market. Naturally that might be expected to create and spur protectionist sentiments, which it has, despite the fact that Canada has not provided any subsidies. That has been proven by two United States studies. It is my view that freer enhanced trade with the United States will serve to offset or ameliorate these—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. From the 1986-87 Environment Canada Estimates we learn with shock that the Minister has changed the policy on acid rain. Until now the Government wanted to reduce acid rain causing emissions. In this year's Estimates, instead, we learn that the Government wants to reduce the effects of acid rain on the environment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is several statements. A question, please.

Mr. Caccia: Why has this backward step been taken on the eve of the summit meeting in Washington between the Prime Minister and President Reagan?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member for Davenport, he does not know what he is talking about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: Read your own Estimates.

Mr. McMillan: This Government has done more on the acid rain issue in 18 months in office than the Liberal Party did in 18 years in Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MAPLE TREES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, rather than this junk, perhaps the Minister of the Environment will give us a serious answer. As a result of the policy change in his own Estimates, does he intend to equip every maple tree in the country with an acid rain umbrella?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not aware of the fact that the Government has set aside $300 million for acid rain abatement, $150 million of which will be directly related to the abatement of acid rain through companies? Does he not realize that we have signed a general agreement with all eastern Canadian provinces to reduce by 50 per cent acid rain causing emissions by 1994, based upon 1980 figures? Does he not realize that I am about to sign individual agreements with Ontario, Quebec, and other relevant provinces? During the time when he was Minister of the Environment, he was not able to get one agreement, let alone seven.

LOCATIONS OF UNITED STATES RADIOACTIVE DUMP SITES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It also concerns the summit. The Prime Minister will be aware of the concern of the Manitoba Government that the question of potential radioactive dump sites near the Canada-U.S. border be on the agenda of the meeting between him and the President of the United States. Could he tell us whether he has been successful in getting that on the agenda and will be raising it with President Reagan?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we shall be discussing all subjects of mutual interest, including that one.

[English]

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has he also made attempts, as he indicated some weeks ago, to have the whole question of the Niagara River clean-up put on the agenda of the summit?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that we were going to discuss all important matters with a bilateral dimension, and that of course includes the matter raised by my hon. friend.

INCOME TAX

TAXES PAID BY INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Financial Post of this week illustrates how changes in his new Budget hurt small businesses and middle-class families. Could he explain why a taxpayer with a $40,000 income will pay $812 more in 1987, and a taxpayer with a $150,000 income will pay $5,470 less in 1987?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have a press release from John Bulloch who speaks for many small-businessmen across the country. He says that there are very profound long-term changes in the Budget of which he is very supportive. Also he says that the Government's fiscal plan has been working and will pay dividends, and is leading to Canada being the leader in growth and job creation in the industrialized world. He goes on to say that the changes we are seeing in the tax system from the last two Budgets are rewarding small business rather than established large businesses. We stand for small business in this Party.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT REDUCED TAXES ON LARGE CORPORATIONS AND IMPOSED SURTAX ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Minister of Finance reduce taxes on large corporations and levy a surtax of three per cent on small business?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has neglected to point out that we have eliminated the 12.5 per cent dividend distributions tax for small businesses, which will save them money as well as a major amount of tax complexity. It is a very major step forward as far as the Government is concerned, as part of its broad program, to help small businesses from coast to coast.

FORTHCOMING ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will recall that some time ago in the House he suggested that Canadians applaud U.S. farm policy, even as it was driving down the price of grain to Canadian farmers. Will the Government in the next few days announce lower initial prices for grain sold by Canadian farmers, even as the Minister of Finance is increasing the taxes on farm input costs?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to set the record straight. In no way, at no time, did I ever applaud the U.S. farm policy. I had a comment on the U.S. Farm Bill; indeed, I had a comment in respect of two or three aspects of it.

Turning to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is absent today on official business. I will take notice of the question, and I am sure the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board will get back to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

PARITY PRICING

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in order to alleviate the lower prices for farm commodities, will the Minister and his colleagues introduce legislation similar to that on parity pricing and the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, and bring it into the House so that we will have some security for farm prices in the future?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by my colleague that indeed the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board responded at least in part to the question. The Hon. Member should know that the Government did not stonewall and disregard the issue of parity prices. Indeed, we accepted the motion put forward by his colleague, and it has now been referred to the standing committee. Personally, I much prefer the motion which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RELEASE OF RECIPIENTS' NAMES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In answer to an earlier question the Minister did not say whether she or anyone in her office authorized the release of that confidential information about unemployment insurance recipients to Peat Marwick. Will she clearly answer that question?

● (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that the Department carries out surveys all the time, as it did when the former Government was in office. Certainly my office is aware that surveys are carried out. It did not know the particular research design of this survey.

Mr. Gauthier: Did you authorize it?

ROLE AND KNOWLEDGE OF OFFICIALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, did the officials know that the law states clearly that that type of release must be made only by the Minister? Did the officials in her Department know that? Does the Minister not have any control over the people in her Department?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, I am having this whole matter investigated. I will be pleased to give the information to that Member and to other Members when the investigation is completed.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a notice of question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk).

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, this question of privilege concerns the question of privilege raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi). Sometimes extracurricular language used in the heat of debate is not appropriate and later regretted by all sides. Representing a homogeneous cultural group which is, nonetheless, a minority in Canada, I am well aware of this special problem.

I would be the last person to do or say anything intentionally that could be interpreted in any way detrimental to other groups. I regret that the time of the House has been taken up by this incident, and as far as I am concerned this matter is closed. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is rising on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) raises the same question of privilege?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, from what I heard the Member say, I heard no clear apology or a withdrawal of the remark.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): To be acceptable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. The matter has been raised on a question of privilege, which is not a matter of privilege, by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi). Clearly I can say to the Member now that it was not a question of privilege. I took it, and I think the Deputy Speaker at the time took it, as a question of order relating to language and has reserved on the matter. I have yet to come back on the matter.

It is difficult for the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) to argue before the Chair has ruled in any way whether an action by another Member is required.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why let him speak then?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Because the Hon. Member rose on a question of privilege as did the Member for Bourassa. The Chair cannot tell in advance until he has heard something whether there is a question of privilege here. I, therefore, can say to the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) that he has not raised a question of privilege with the Chair. Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: Can I defend myself, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No. Order, please. Order, please.

The Hon. Member for Bourassa raised a question of privilege. I am saying to him now, as I am saying to the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq, that neither of them have questions of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Bourassa, if he wishes to check the record, will find that the Deputy Speaker gave him substantially more time on this matter than was just given the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq.

Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bourassa may want to check the "blues". Therefore, the Chair still has a question on which it will be coming back to the House.

Petitions

POINT OF ORDER

FIRE IN SOUTH BLOCK—SAFETY OF STAFF

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that, as a result of a fire, which took place this morning in the South Block, staff and Members who occupy those premises have been evacuated and that the building is not being occupied largely as a result of residue from asbestos being in the air.

Would you be kind enough, Mr. Speaker, to check with the appropriate persons to determine whether it is true that the security guards are being required to remain in that building without adequate breathing protection? If that be the case, could you ensure that protection be sought for them immediately, or see that they are removed to the outside of the building?

Mr. Speaker: May I say to the Hon. Member that my understanding of the facts is at variance with his. I can assure him that nothing would be done which would put any of our employees in jeopardy. My understanding is that the issue is smoke, not asbestos, but I will check the matter.

I may say to all our Members, since the matter has been raised, that arrangements have been made so that all committees may carry on this afternoon even though that building is not available.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: May I again advise the House that I require of all Members who are rising that they are prepared to certify to me today that the petitions they are presenting have been certified. Yesterday when I made that point, the Hon. Member who rose immediately presented a petition which had not been certified. The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker I am pleased to present the attached 675 signatures which were collected by the United Electrical Radio and Machine Shop Workers of America in Peterborough. The petitioners in the federal riding of Peterborough urge the Government to take the necessary steps to cause gasoline prices in Canada to fall in line with the drop in the world price of crude oil.

Mr. Speaker: That is certified.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. Maybe I could ask for some direction here. Many members of the Liberal Party have come to me with petitions that people signed prior to the new rule coming in. They have asked me how they can proceed with these petitions that do not meet the requirements of the new rules. I would like to have your assistance in helping to answer these questions because I have several dozen.

Mr. Speaker: Let me simply say that some Members have come to me with that matter. The Chair is a little hamstrung on the matter since the Chair must live with the rules as they exist. I suggest the Hon. Member may have a matter he wishes to raise with his House Leader and through his House Leader with other House Leaders.

If the Hon. Member wishes to seek something by unanimous consent, he is free to do so, but he is asking what freedom the Chair has on the matter. The Chair, as far as I can tell, having examined the rules, does not have any flexibility or freedom in the matter.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. Can I suggest, as I indicated a minute ago, that the proper procedure is that this be treated as a matter between House Leaders.

Mr. Prud'homme: Not necessarily, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I usually do take your direction as an indication of what we should do. Members sometimes sort out problems even before the House Leaders meet. If unanimous consent could be given right away today, that matter would be solved and we would dispose of all these old petitions and we could start applying the new rules.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is seeking the unanimous consent of the House for what? That is my dilemma. I think Hon. Members know that. I think the way to leave this is for discussion among House Leaders. The Chair needs an Order of the House to know what to do.

MORGENTALER CLINIC—ALLEGED RESTRICTIONS ON POLICE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions here from residents in my constituency. Both of these petitions have been certified as being in order. The operative words here are that these petitioners call upon Parliament to require the Government of the Province of Ontario to remove any restrictions which may have been placed on the police force of Metropolitan Toronto in regard to the laying of charges under Section 251 of the Criminal Code against the operators of the premises known as the Morgantaler Clinic.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will indicate to you that these petitions have been signed as appropriate. I am pleased to present four petitions today. The first is signed by 82 persons, the second by 53, the third by 69 and the fourth by 57, all of whom live within my riding, some within the national capital region. They are very much opposed to the National Capital Commission's proposal to turn the Mile Circle into an embassy row.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I certify that this petition has been found acceptable. It is my duty to present a petition on behalf of constituents who are of the opinion that the operation within the City of Toronto of the Morgentaler clinic is an affront to law-abiding citizens. They call on the Parliament of Canada to require the Government of Ontario to remove any restrictions which may have been placed on the police force of Metropolitan Toronto in dealing with this.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-264 an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I will be introducing several Bills today. This first one, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone is quite self-explanatory in its title alone.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-265, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (sale of liquor).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Introduction of Bills

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduced my first Private Member's Bill today. It is, as you said, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act repealing Section 67 which prohibits the sale of alcoholic beverages during federal elections and federal by-elections. Canada's Chief Electoral Officer, the Canadian Restaurant and Food Association, and many small businesses will be very pleased as this will have a positive effect as well on our tourism industry. At the same time, it will expand the federal Treasury. I call upon the House to ensure that this Bill is agreed to by all sides quickly.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-266 an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important Bill and I am sure all Members of the House will want to have it passed very quickly in light of the problems we are facing with many of our drinking water systems across the country. The title is quite clear and I urge all Members to read the Bill. As you will see, Mr. Speaker, it is a nice short one.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-267 an Act respecting political freedom for federal Government employees.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the title of the Bill indicates my intent in introducing it. I hope all Members of the House will support this Bill in the very near future as I think public servants in Canada should long ago had this kind of political freedom.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Introduction of Bills

NUCLEAR LIABILITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-268 an Act to amend the Nuclear Liability Act (limitation period).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the title of the Bill is again somewhat self-explanatory. It is very important that the present limitations with regard to nuclear liability be dramatically changed. As we are observing in both Canada and the United States, the nuclear industry is slipping downhill pretty quickly. The entire issue of liability and the long-term storage of nuclear waste and how it is transported to the repositories should be dealt with by Parliament in the very near future.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-269 an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am quite confident that most Members of the House will soon be supporting this very wise piece of legislation which was overlooked by both the Liberals and the Conservatives, and perhaps even by a few New Democrats. There are some very serious problems with regard to search and seizure without warrant and also the accessibility of fire arm acquisition certificates in rural Canada. These are major oversights of which I am sure you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, which need to be remedied very soon for safe, honest gun handlers in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL LAND BOUNDARY ACT (CANADA-ALASKA)

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-270 an Act respecting the International Land Boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I will try to keep my remarks very brief on this very important issue. I am sure you are aware that President Reagan and George Shultz have appointed Edward Derwinski as the chief negotiator on the Alaska-B.C. boundary. This goes back to 1903. I will not bore you with all of the details, other than to say that we lost an enormous chunk of our country in 1903, no thanks to the Brits who appointed Lord Alberton. Of course, the Americans took a very strong position on this.

It is important that we get this Bill passed very quickly. I am sure you have not forgotten that only 18 months ago the United States offered a piece of British Columbia for sale through the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member should know that the length of time taken to read the summary should not exceed the length of time it would take to read the Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-271, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (priority of claims).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to ensure that when an employer goes bankrupt, the employees are placed first on the priority list to protect their salaries and pensions up to $9,000 in preference to all other creditors.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-272, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

● (1520)

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to present this Bill for first reading. The Bill amends the Criminal Code regarding capital punishment. The Bill will be debated at the appropriate time, but its purpose is to impose the death penalty in all cases of first degree murder and, for the first time, incorporates acts of terrorism such as sabotage, hijacking and hostage taking, effectively making them subject to capital punishment as well.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Order Paper Questions

TASK FORCE ON CANADIAN MOTOR VEHICLE AND AUTOMOTIVE PARTS INDUSTRY

Question No. 494—Mr. Dingwall:

1. Did the 1983 task force on the Canadian motor vehicle and automotive parts industry recommend to the Government to pursue a trade policy that would require all vehicle manufacturers in the Canadian market to make binding commitments comparable to those now made by the vehicle manufacturers operating under the Canada/U.S. automotive trade agreement and, if so (a) was this done and (i) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reasons?

2. Did the Government introduce a technology licensing program in the automotive parts industry and, if so (a) on what date (b) what does it cover?

3. Does the Government provide incentives to encourage joint ventures that transfer foreign technological capabilities to Canadian automotive parts manufacturers and, if so (a) what are they (b) how do they work?

4. Have incentives been created to encourage the development and expansion of the number of technological personnel in the independent Canadian parts industry and, if so (a) what are they (b) how do they work (c) on what date were they implemented?

5. Did the Government, with or without the co-operation of the industry, conduct an analysis of the opportunities for expanded auto parts production in Canada and was a report made and, if so (a) what was the title of the report (b) on what date was it released?

6. Did the Government follow the recommendations to shift the federal sales tax to the wholesale level and, if so, on what date?

7. Did the Government reduce the general rate of tax to 8 per cent from 9 per cent as recommended by the task force and, if so, on what date?

8. Has the preferential tariff rates extended to developing countries been limited to two-thirds of the most favoured nation tariff rate for automotive goods and, if so, on what date?

9. Was the Industry, Labour Adjustment Program expanded and extended to the automotive sector for a period of five years and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for how long?

10. Did the Government undertake to determine human resource aspects of changing conditions in the automotive industry and was a report made and, if so (a) what was the title of the report (b) on what date was or will it be released?

11. Did the Government establish an automotive council and, if so (a) on what date (b) who are its members (c) what are their names, addresses and remunerations (d) how often has it met?

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. Yes. (a) No. (b) The Government prefers to continue to encourage companies to voluntarily invest in Canada and work towards the achievement of auto pact status rather than impose a mandatory Canadian content regime.

2. Since the publication of the task force report the Government has pursued, in collaboration with Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association, a vigorous action program to seek joint venture and licensing opportunities with foreign producers. High level business missions have been dispatched to West Germany (September 1984), France (July, 1985), Japan (June, 1983, October, 1983, November, 1985), and Korea (November, 1985). So far, the results of these missions have been most encouraging and a number of joint venture and technology transfer agreements have been established.

3. Yes. Under the Promotional Projects Program (PPP), incentives are provided to encourage Canadian companies to pursue industrial co-operation opportunities with foreign manufacturers. Canadian companies can also apply under the Industrial and Regional Development Program (IRDP) for capital and R&D assistance. Most Canadians parts companies are aware of these programs and are taking advantage of them.

4. On September 5, 1985, the Canadian Government implemented two labour training programs, the Skill Shortage Program and the Skill Investment Program, for the manufacturing sector at large. The Canadian parts industry has already started to take advantage of these programs. Details of the program are available from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

5. The Government is presently conducting a review of opportunities for expanded parts production in Canada.

6. In the February, 1984 federal Budget, the Government followed the recommendation of the task force and shifted the application of the manufacturers sales tax to the wholesale level, effective March 1, 1984.

7. No.

8. Yes, effective May, 1985 for automotive parts and January 1, 1987 for motor vehicles.

9. The Industry and Labour Adjustment Program (ILAP) was not extended beyond its legislated March, 1984 termination date, but additional support for the parts sector was announced in January, 1984 when $15 million was added to the ILAP budget, bringing total funding for the sector to almost $40 million.

10. In conjunction with the motor vehicle and automotive parts industries, the United Automotive Workers, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission carried out a human resource study to evaluate the impacts of market changes and technological development on the human resource dimension of the automotive industry. The study was submitted to CEIC on January 13, 1986 and will be made public in February, 1986.

11. This recommendation was accepted in principle. The constitution of the automotive council is currently under review.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 11006).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) as well as representatives from all Parties for taking the necessary steps to enable me to speak at this particular time. That is an example of the civilized behaviour we can all indulge in from time to time, and it is singularly appropriate in this House.

Having said that, I would now like to speak about the Budget, a very uncivilized act as Canadians have well understood since it was announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last week. I want to begin by making the point that in my judgment Canadians are neither altruistic nor selfish. The ordinary people of this land, much as the ordinary people of any country in the world, have a sense of decency and fairness about them. Certainly it is the case in Canada that, in approaching an annual Budget, the average Canadian does not expect charity. The average person does not expect a handout. However, the average person does expect a sense of fairness. There is no question about that at all.

We in the NDP, under the chairmanship of our finance critic, had a task force on taxation travel to most parts of this country in recent weeks. We heard the voice of Canadians, men and women from all over the land. If there was one thing that came through loud and clear it was that the Budget ought to be fair. This same opinion was clearly to be seen in a Gallup poll question answered in recent weeks, when well in excess of 80 per cent of Canadians expressed their view that the prevailing characteristic of a Budget, and I repeat, should not be charity or something special for them either as individuals or for their region of Canada, but they overwhelmingly felt that a sense of fairness should prevail.

In particular, we know Canadians, wherever they may live, saw the Budget as being anything but fair and they hoped that the Minister and his cabinet colleagues would have seen the light and brought in a Budget last week to redress the unfairness of the past. Well, that Budget has to be seen as one of the most unfair Budgets with which this Parliament has ever had to deal. The Conservatives imposed a tax increase on Canadians in the fall of 1984. They imposed another big tax increase on the average family in the spring of 1985. Again in the winter of 1986 the Conservatives zapped the average Canadian. It is time this Government got off the backs of the ordinary people of this country.

I will not take a lot of time in enunciating the details, but the NDP, consistent with the social democratic traditions of this country, or indeed anywhere else, has taken the view that you not only criticize but you provide an alternative. Before the Minister brought in his Budget, the NDP finance critic, on behalf of my colleagues, outlined in considerable detail an alternative approach which ought to have been taken in 1986. It was an approach which would have dealt with the deficit and with maintaining essential programs, but overwhelmingly in its impact it would have dealt with Canadians' desire for fairness.

In the letter our finance critic sent to the Minister he specially showed how certain personal tax exemptions were not only unfair but counter-productive economically and ought to be removed. After analysis of a number of tax expenditures which provide not millions but millions of dollars to corporations, some of which are counter-productive economically, he proposed the removal of a number of them. Finally, he made certain suggestions about regulatory change. I want to underline that the net effect, had he listened to what we had to say, was an alternative way of raising $3.2 billion.

I am underlining, before I deal with the Government's approach to the question of fairness, our seriousness about providing an alternative and our recognition that there are certain serious structural problems to be faced by the Government of Canada. We offered an option to the Minister but did he listen to these proposals? Did he listen to the concerns expressed by the people of Canada since the last Budget? Not at all. Instead of closing key loopholes for the rich in Canada, instead of taking certain action to remove some of the tax expenditure programs made available for 15 years, the Minister went ahead and zapped the average family with another $350 tax increase. That brings the total to an amount in excess of $1,300 in tax increases since the Conservatives came to office in the fall of 1984. This is the largest tax grab in the history of Canada since World War II from a Government which promised to move in the other direction. It promised to give ordinary Canadians a break and I say it is time it started to live up to its promises.

We in the NDP have, since the Budget came down, attempted to make the case for fairness. We have tried to point out just how unfair and unreasonable this $1,300 burden is. Along with my colleagues, I detailed a complete list of how we reached the $1,300 figure. When I was away from the House last Friday the Minister challenged our figures. He said they were wrong. I came back on Monday and sent him another detailed breakdown. I received no comment in the first 24 hours so I sent a note asking him if they are wrong what is wrong. I got back the note that I have before me. It was followed by a telephone conversation as well with the Minister of Finance. I want to share this information with the House and with the people of Canada.

The bottom line from the Minister of Finance is not that he is challenging our figures of $1,305, the bottom line is he is saying the Liberals made him do it. I want to say to the Minister of Finance, he had an option. Neither the Liberals nor the Devil made him do it, he had a choice and he should have given the fairness the people of Canada wanted.

The first point the Minister of Finance made about challenging our figures is that he said the petroleum compensation fund charge was one he had to bring in. I have checked and there is no statutory requirement for that at all. There is nothing in the legislation that says that the Minister of Finance had to increase the price of petroleum in line with the legislation he inherited. It was a Government decision, it was a policy decision. Had he wanted additional revenue, and that was not even a requirement, he could have done it by a fairer method than levying a flat tax with an increase. He could have done it out of general revenue. That, at least, would have been fairer. The key point I want to make is that he was not required by law to do it. He did it and it was a Conservative choice.

The second point the Minister made in reply, confirmed in a telephone conservation last night, and I quote: "The UI change was less than what people expected". Would you please note that? That was his first point. The change they made in increasing charges on ordinary Canadians, unemployment insurance costs, was less than people expected. He elaborated on that by saying "based in part on statute". I agree with the Minister in what he says there. About half the unemployment insurance increases since the Conservatives came to power were the result of automatic changes built into the unemployment insurance legislation. That was a small part of it. In addition, they jacked up the rates paid by men and women working all across Canada well beyond what was required.

The third point is the gem, and that concerns the very regressive federal sales tax increase. The first one was enforced when the Conservatives came to power in the fall of 1984. Canadians will recall, and I am sure all the Conservatives in the House will recall very vividly the election campaign when not only the Minister of Finance, then in opposition, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Opposition, said that this tax that Marc Lalonde had announced when he was Minister of Finance, scheduled to come in the fall of 1984, was a regressive tax. It was unfair to ordinary Canadians, and it would be a stab in the back of the economy. It would have a recessionary impact. They said all that before the election. They said it was bad and they campaigned against it. When they came into office, in fact about the first financial decision they made was to zap Canadians with this federal sales tax increase which they had campaigned against.

The Minister of Finance said to me in this note: "The 1 per cent sales tax charge was proposed by Marc Lalonde". Well, isn't that touching? Canadians will be reassured to know that. All that Marc Lalonde has to do is propose something to be done and the Minister of Finance will do it. The Liberals made him do it. He promised the Canadian people in the campaign he would not do it and after he got the majority he should have kept that promise instead of implementing a regressive Liberal measure.

There is the sum total of the Minister of Finance's reply. The people of Canada should note he has not challenged our figures. He has not said that $1,305 is wrong. In fact, we left out some taxes of which we have since become aware. The real tax bill is in excess of $1,305. All the Minister of Finance is trying to do is to pass the buck elsewhere. I say to the Minister what he said on budget night, stealing from Harry Truman, in this case the buck stops on his desk. He is the responsible Minister.

Mr. Speaker, we must also consider the impact of the Budget on poor people, middle-income Canadians and the rich. The 3 per cent surtax applies to one and all, rich or poor. It is an unfair treatment because taxpayers' incomes vary widely and each one should contribute according to his or her ability to pay.

The compensation measures are inadequate. For instance, the sales tax credit refund does not compensate at all for the huge tax increase which low and average income Canadians must pay. In 1987, the tax load of the average family will be heavier still, whereas a rich family—with a $100,000 income for example—will benefit from a reduction of more than $300. That is the kind of justice we get from the Government of Brian Mulroney and Michael Wilson. It is the exact opposite of justice.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives go even further. According to an article that appeared in the Montreal Gazette last Saturday, the Government has prepared a strategy for eliminating the surtax on the income of the average taxpayer in 1988.

Why should average Canadian men and women have to wait until 1988 for a reduction, when the rich can get rid of their surtax in 1987?

The Conservatives are going to wait for an election year to give the average taxpayer a present and butter him up. If the Conservatives can afford to eliminate the surtax on the rich in 1987, why not eliminate the surtax for everyone?

Mr. Speaker, that is Conservative justice: benefits for the rich first, and maybe later for the rest of us. That is what is happening.

Mr. Parry: Right on!

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: The third aspect of the question of fairness that I want to discuss in my comments this afternoon is the division of responsibility for taxes in Canada that exists, or ought to exist, between corporations in our land and individuals. In the New Democratic Party we believe in a strong and viable creative private sector. We want corporations to provide jobs for men and women. We want them to be innovative and expanding in terms of markets around the world. In the New Democratic Party we say that when corporations are making money and profits they have the same obligation to pay their share of taxes as all other Canadians. That is the fundamental point.

If you look at what has happened in our country since 1950 the statistics are alarming in their signifigance. In 1950, just five years after the Second World War, there was a distribution of fifty-fifty between individuals in Canada and corporations in terms of the tax burden. In the last 35 years the share of the tax burden paid by individuals, ordinary families all over our land, has been continually going up and the share paid by corporations, which are making profits, has been continually going down. Before this Budget was brought in the last statistics that we had showed that the share of taxes paid by corporations in our country had dropped to 20 per cent and that paid by individuals had increased to 80 per cent. That, in anyone's terms, ought to be seen as an unfair distribution of tax burden.

During virtually the whole period since he has had the responsibility as Minister, the Minister of Finance has said in reply to questions from many of my colleagues that he would be looking at the corporate tax structure. During last year he would nod his head, smile and tell Hon. Members that they had interesting suggestions to which he would give serious consideration. I remember when he said: "The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) will be happy when he sees the Budget. He will see the reforms he is talking about and the corporations will begin to pay their share". What is the reality? We cannot be facetious about it because there are many millions living in poverty in this rich land of ours. We also know that many families living in poverty continue to pay taxes.

I believe Members on all sides of the House know that if we had a sense of fairness and a serious desire for reform of the personal and corporate tax system, no person living in poverty should be paying taxes at all in Canada. This can be accomplished. It has been done in Scandinavia and many other countries in the world. It is time that it took place in Canada as well.

The question of sharing the tax burden does not involve simple cold, analytical and technical points, it is a subject that has a direct bearing on the life and experience of our citizens.

Many of us hoped to see progress when we listened to the Minister of Finance talk about serious corporate tax reform during the past year. Instead, we saw some trickery, a slight upward shift of the tax burden on corporations for the coming year. Furthermore, in 1987, individuals will pay $5.5 billion more in fiscal year 1987-88 while corporations will actually get a tax reduction. The net effect is that for the first time in Canadian history, individuals in Canada will be paying more than 81 per cent of the tax burden while corporations will drop below 20 per cent. That is unfair, it is a shame and a disgrace. The people of Canada will not put up with it much longer.

Having regard to the effect of the Budget on unemployment, the projections show virtually no change at all for the next two years. There will still be a million unemployed. As to the effect of the Budget on farmers, some of our Members have already indicated that they get nothing from the Budget except a fund to encourage them to move off the farm. Regarding the effects of this on youth, we see the abolition of a Department which ought to be doing something for youth.

When one considers the effects of the Budget on the average family, no matter from what part of the country, there is only one conclusion that can be reached. It is that the Conservative Party has no sense of fairness. Those in need are forgotten, while those who have get more, and the majority in the middle will have to pay the bill. That is the sum of Conservative justice which just is the opposite to the idea of justice and fairness held by ordinary Canadians.

I want to serve notice on the Government that the New Democratic Party shares the sense of shock and dismay of the ordinary family about this Budget. I see that a Conservative Member is laughing. I hope he goes back to his riding to sit down with an average family there and explain why they should be paying $1,300 more while the rich person pays less and corporations get a tax break.

While Conservatives may laugh about the most horrendous tax increase in modern history, and while they may remain indifferent in their concern for the average family, we are not indifferent and we will be travelling throughout the country in the next week to speak to Canadians in different parts of our land to deliver the message that there is one Party in the House of Commons that cares about their concerns in tax matters, the New Democratic Party, and we will do everything we can to stop these regressive tax measures from becoming law.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey).

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, we cannot leave unchallenged an intervention such as this.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) should normally convey truth and objectivity. I suggest we have just seen the best evidence of . . . and if we were to give awards for raving and demagoguery, he would certainly be our first choice.

They will take every opportunity to rave about fundamental principles and start rhetorical debates. They will try to bring us back to the eternal conflict between the haves and the have-nots. Thank Heaven, Mr. Speaker, with our second Budget, we will be able to raise between $3 and $4 billion over the next two years to finance our most progressive programs, especially in the area of employment. We are not going to get this money from the poor or the disadvantaged; for the first time, we are going to get it from the affluent who can most afford it. It is the first time that the federal Government levies a minimum tax on the rich. It is also the first time that a federal government tries to close some tax loopholes.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party are the only two groups in Canada which are still interested in this debate. What really matters and what interests Canadians is the Government's will to achieve national reconciliation and encourage the economic recovery. That is what Canadians are interested in.

I have no question to direct to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, for as far as I am concerned, this debate has come to a close and I think everything is fine, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to discuss the Budget presented by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I certainly cannot let the allegations of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) go unchallenged.

He commenced his remarks by speaking of the need for a civilized Budget. The word "civilized" also means responsibility. This Government has been responsible.

The Hon. Member also stated in the House that every Canadian knows that when you borrow money you have to pay for it. Canadians and the Government recognize that the debt in this country has been rising at 20 per cent to 25 per cent per year for the last decade and that we must pay for that debt. We have always told the Canadian taxpayers that everyone would have to help clear this burden of debt. We have asked Canadians for their help as we accept our responsibility in clearing this debt.

The Hon. Member suggests that our Budget builds up a burden on the backs of ordinary Canadians. We did not place the burden on the backs of ordinary Canadians, we are trying to remove that burden which was placed there by the former Government. We have talked openly with Canadians about how we should do that and we have asked Canadians to pay some of the share of that. However, we have done it in a way that is fair and balanced and in a way that by the end of this decade will mean that Canada is a better place to live for ordinary Canadians and their children.

Members of the NDP make much of fairness. My colleague, the Minister of Finance and the Government have contributed more to fairness than any Government in my lifetime. Let me talk about some of the things we have done.

First, we have closed a lot of tax loopholes. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, has mentioned that many times in the House, but I believe that Members on the other side are not listening and are failing to applaud us for measures that we have introduced which they obviously think are good ideas. We are closing those loopholes, eliminating the special scientific and research tax credit, closing the loophole for limited partnerships, closing the loophole for income splitting in high-income families, imposing the minimum tax and cutting the dividend tax credit and the carve-outs. We have taken all those measures consistently over the last year and a half through two Budgets and an economic statement. All those measures are fairness measures. They are measures that Canadians applaud and measures that help ordinary Canadians. There is no question about that.

Let us go on to some of the specific things we have done in this Budget in the way of fairness. Yes, we did raise the federal sales tax but the Minister has taken the initiative in the Budget for a review of that tax in what we have always agreed is a less than perfect system. In the meantime, we have introduced an offset for low-income Canadians which is a new measure in this tax field, an indication that we want to help the people who are most in need. If Canadians are fair, and I believe they are, that is another measure that we think they will applaud.

In the last Budget my hon. colleague introduced the child tax credit, something else that helps low-income Canadians, and this year he has made that tax credit for children and families refundable earlier in the year so that Canadians do not have to wait until income tax time to claim that credit. That means that Canadians do not have to turn to discounters in the way they did before. In addition, we have tightened up the rules on discounters to the benefit of ordinary Canadians.

Let me just tell the House what some of these things mean to the ordinary Canadians to whom the Hon. Member was referring. A woman in Vancouver, talking about the prepayment of the child tax credit, said that for her it means she can buy her child some Christmas presents instead of just a snowsuit or a pair of boots. She said she could buy her some toys or some books. The Executive Director of the Canadian Council on Social Development said about the refundable sales tax credit that it is an important initiative. The President of the Union of Senior Citizens of Ontario said that from the point of view of a senior he could not be anything but pleased. I know a lot of ordinary Canadians and those are the kinds of comments on this Budget that I am hearing. Those are the kinds of comments that are encouraging us in our view that balance and fairness is enormously important and that we have met that objective in our Budget.

Let us deal for a moment with the Hon. Member's suggestion that taxes have increased $1,300 per year for an ordinary family. I am somewhat bemused by this calculation that members of the NDP have been waving around in the House today. In order to be paying that increase in taxes one would have to be making $50,000 to $70,000 per year. I would be very interested in knowing if that is the view of Members of the NDP of the average income in Canada. They have also ignored a number of things in making that calculation. They have ignored the fact that the surtax in 1986 is only on for half a year. They have over-estimated the sales tax increase. They have ignored the April starting date of the last sales tax increase. They have ignored the broadening of the sales tax base. They have assumed that the $200 increase in oil costs results totally and exclusively from the Budget. The effect of the normal wage growth on unemployment insurance premiums has been counted as a tax increase.

I know a little bit about numbers and how to make them say an awful lot of things. What I know is that this Government has told Canadians the truth. We have not tried to manipulate the numbers in a way that would mislead average and ordinary Canadians. Our objective is to make this country a better place for ordinary Canadians. We want people to be able to buy houses, to rent houses and to have jobs. Those are the measures that have been incorporated in our economic agenda and in two Budgets.

Let me throw in some other numbers if we are talking about numbers. Taxes in this Budget are up by perhaps 50 cents per day for average Canadians. Let us make an adjustment. Let us suppose they are a little higher than that. The purpose of a balanced Budget is to bring down interest rates. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. This is the Ottawa winter cold. I have been aggressively spreading it all over the country.

Mr. Keeper: It's those tax increases.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Choking on the Budget.

Mrs. McDougall: Those tax increases are going to help us bring down interest rates. Let us talk about the ability to buy a house and about mortgage rates. Mortgage rates on a five-year mortgage have already come down during our administration by two and a quarter points. That means on a $50,000 mortgage a saving to the average family of $3 per day. That is before taking into account the very real possibility that by getting control of our deficit this year and reducing our debt burden again, we will be able to bring down interest and mortgage rates even further. That is what we are talking about when we talk about fiscal responsibility, when we talk about civilized behaviour, when we talk about fairness and when we talk about balance. Those are the things that Canadians care about. Those are the things that we are introducing.

Corporate tax revenues have been spread across a broader base. By closing all those loopholes, corporations will be paying more tax, not less. Corporate taxes, as Canadians know, go up and down with profits. They are a little hard to predict, but I can tell the House that as a result of this Budget corporations will be paying more tax, not less. There is a balance between corporate and personal tax revenues.

I do not believe that this Budget or our economic policy can be described as a disaster as the Hon. Member suggested. There are 580,000 people working in Canada who were not working in September 1984. That is the best help we can give to Canadians. That is what we want to do for Canadians and their children. We want them to be able to work, to buy homes, to educate their children and to have a secure old age. If that is not a fair Budget, I do not know what is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no questions or comments, we shall continue debate.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister is suffering from a cold, but even if she had been in better voice and better health, she would have undoubtedly choked on that Budget before she finished the speech.

I am pleased to take part in this debate on the second Budget put forward by this Government. Our Party has already put forward excellent speakers including our critic, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), and the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). They made excellent contributions, and I congratulate them sincerely.

I suspect that we will not hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak in the House on this Budget, for the second time in a row. He will be out trying to sell a lousy product across the country. I cannot remember a Prime Minister not participating in a budget speech.

• (1600)

Mr. Friesen: Oh, come on, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I cannot remember a Prime Minister not participating in a budget speech. Although I appreciate the courtesy of a few Ministers being here, I want to say that I had the honour of bringing down five successive Budgets in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: And they were successful Budgets, too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will deal with that subject in a minute, but I remained in the House every minute of the budget debate to listen to what Hon. Members on all sides of the House had to say about it. We are living in an electronic age, but there has to be some courtesy in this place. We are elected by the people of Canada. There is nothing more important for Parliament than the spending of money and the raising of money. The Minister should be here, and we should have a fuller House and a fuller Minister to listen to what we have to say. They were very few Members present to listen to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and there are very few Members and Ministers here to listen to the Leader of the Opposition respond to the Budget.

The Prime Minister will be travelling the country with the Minister attempting to convince Canadians that the Budget is fair. He will find, as most Canadians are coming to realize, that the Budget is not fair. We will take this Budget as the second phase of the Budget last May. Phase one was the Budget of last May and phase two is the Budget of February. Together those two Budgets constitute the greatest, cumulative, hidden, regressive tax increase in Canadian history. They attack the average Canadian family earning between $15,000 and $40,000 in a brutal fashion. We have reached the stage, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount put it, where the person between 35 years and 55 years old finds himself or herself in a position, with the added burden of tax slapped upon him or her, that it is impossible to improve one's state of life or that it is impossible to maintain a standard of living because the cash flow available to the average Canadian has been absolutely crippled under the two Budgets taken together.

Yes, the public debt is important, but the numbers given and ordained for the Budget—and the figure arrived at was $29.8 billion or $29.5 billion, depending upon which part of the Minister's document one reads—were not determined by the Minister. Those numbers were determined by Wall Street. They were determined by the international market. They were determined by his business friends here, in the United States and abroad who had lost confidence in the Prime Minister and the Government.

My colleagues and I put questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when the dollar started to fall three or four weeks ago. We asked the following questions: What will the Minister do? What is the Minister's policy? What is the Government's policy? Is it to sustain the dollar at the expense of interest rates, or is it to allow the dollar to follow market forces? The Minister would not tell us, and day after day the confusion on the markets compounded. It was not a bunch of speculators in Chicago; it was people across the country and around the world who could not determine the direction of the Government. The Minister was finally forced to say in response to one of my questions about a week or so before the Budget: "Hold on, wait for the Budget. Everything is going to be all right. We will stabilize the dollar when the Budget is brought down".

This was a Budget determined by outside, external forces. It is the first time in the history of the country that a Minister of Finance has been forced to tailor the economic structure and to fashion the fiscal stance of the country by forces over which he had no control. The Government delivered a Budget to Canadians which was not prepared for Canadians; it was supposed to please foreign masters.

Despite the tough talk of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, despite the two Budgets which attacked lower and middle-income Canadians, the Government really cannot show that it has reduced the deficit at all. The Canadian Press, in a story published today in many Canadian newspapers, showed what I tried to demonstrate in the House on several occasions. The deficit inherited by the Government was $32 billion. The deficit is now 29.5 billion. We rather doubt those figures because we do not believe the assumptions upon which the revenues and expenditures are projected. It was $32 billion 18 months ago and it is $29.5 billion now. That is not much of a record, that is not much of an achievement, but, as I said, the numbers were determined by forces outside the Minister's control. This is not a Budget for Main Street, Canada; this is a Budget for Wall Street, U.S.A.

The Minister has undertaken an unprecedented selling job around the world. I can remember the days when the Minister of Finance would rise in the House, table his Budget, table the ways and means motions and basically allow for the Budget to speak for itself. We have become more public relations oriented since those days. I suppose I started the practice of the morning breakfast after the Budget with the financial correspondents and then the lunch with members of the Press Gallery, but I did not feel I had to traipse across the country to sell the Budget. My God, I did not have to send my Deputy Minister to Los Angeles, to Chicago or to New York. The Minister will probably be sending his Deputy Minister first class, with a bunch of officials, to Europe next week to see what they can do to calm down the markets.

Mr. Gustafson: You didn't dare.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I heard the interjection of the Hon. Member opposite. We did not have to worry about a dollar hovering on the brink of 69-70 cents. We had a dollar at $1.02, $1.03 and $1.04, and nobody told us what type of Budget to bring down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As I said in the House yesterday, the Minister is on a string, being manipulated; a puppet, a marionette—

—a puppet, Mr. Speaker, a puppet of the international markets. This is not a Budget for Canadians. This is a Budget to please international finance and international business. And even international business is not satisfied. Since the Budget, the dollar has fallen again, and the Minister has failed to gain the confidence of the markets. Businessmen look at the figures and they feel that the Minister's figures and projections are not valid.

[English]

They looked at the numbers carefully in Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal and Edmonton; they looked at the numbers in New York; they looked at the numbers in London, England and they found that the numbers were not realistic. For example, the world price for oil was projected to be $22.50 U.S. per barrel this year, and the price this morning is under $12 U.S. per barrel. Maybe the Minister has some inside information from Shiek Yamani or from Saudi Arabia about which we know nothing. My colleagues tried to elicit information from the Minister of Finance this afternoon and from his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). The difference between $12 U.S. and $22.50 U.S. per barrel in terms of revenue projections is over $1 billion. On that assumption alone the Budget is out by $1 billion.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Syndneys (Mr. MacLellan) pointed out very carefully this afternoon in Question Period that it would be bad enough if the Minister's projections were merely wrong, but the Minister's own document disagrees with itself. On page 20 of Towards A Sustained Expansion: Canada's Economic Prospects 1986-1991 released with the Budget, the Saudi Arabian price for light crude oil is given for calendar year 1986 as $23.88 U.S. If we turn ahead three pages in the same document, we see that the price will be $22.50 U.S. over the remainder of 1986. The Minister has repeatedly stated in the House that the $22.50 projection is for fiscal 1986-87 which has not yet started.

Yesterday he said that he would stick by the $22.50. Will he also stick by the $23.88? Is one the calendar year and one the fiscal year? How does he reconcile them? Whom do we believe? Do we believe the Minister or his own budget document? It is small wonder that when the Canadian business community looks at the budget documents it wonders.

Let me talk about another projection, Mr. Speaker. Interest rate projections are not realistic either. It is 9.5 per cent against today's rate of 12 per cent or 13 per cent depending upon what term of obligations you are looking at. For every 1 per cent difference in the interest rates there is an expenditure increase of $1 billion. For every percentage variation of 1 per cent there is a projected error of $1 billion.

The cuts in expenditures are an illusion. The numbers for the deficit reduction are not credible. Wall Street is not satisfied because the Minister, instead of cutting expenditures, is raising taxes. The business community has come to this conclusion here and abroad. The deficit was not reduced by cuts in spending but by putting the burden primarily on the backs of ordinary Canadians with higher and higher taxes. The story in the February Budget is the same as what we heard in May.

The Minister even gets low marks from President Reagan's advisor on Government spending cuts. Peter Grace was in Toronto the other day and said he was surprised that the Budget goes at the deficit through tax hikes and not through expenditure reductions.

The pressure on the Canadian dollar continues. There has been a massive intervention by the Bank of Canada. The Department of Finance figures released earlier today show that a record $2.6 was borrowed last month to add to its dollar defence funds to build up international reserves. Of that money, $1.3 billion was paid by the Bank of Canada in purchasing Canadian dollars to defend the level of the dollar. That is the largest borrowing in a single month in Canadian history and the largest intervention in a single month in Canadian history.

The debt of the Canadian Reserve Fund has now been pushed to $4.265 billion, almost as much as the money held in the fund. I can remember when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated to Mr. Lalonde when he was Minister of Finance that we had a dangerous situation when borrowing against the fund was only half the level of the fund. Now we have total borrowing on our reserve equal to the amount of the reserves. That is a very fragile, vulnerable situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if you add the figures for increases in personal income tax from the May Budget to the figures released on February 26, we see that in less than nine months, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have managed to saddle us with an additional tax burden of $12.5 billion in personal income tax alone. For the next three years, the Minister of Finance has increased direct and indirect taxes by $24 billion. During the same period, corporations will be subject to an increase of only $1 billion. Over the next three years, the individual taxpayer pays $24 billion and corporations only $1 billion. Is that justice?

The average family will suffer, and those who are rich enough to have money to invest will be eligible for the capital gains tax exemption. They will receive a lifetime exemption of $500,000, which means $125,000 in cash. The tax burden is not fairly distributed. The rich continue to benefit from the capital gains tax exemption, while low and middle income families remain the favorite prey of the Conservatives.

[English]

We have gone through the cumulative effect of both budgets, the May Budget and the February Budget, over four years, based on the Department of Finance documents of the personal tax increases, the sales tax increases and the capital gains exemptions; in other words, the works.

If you have a family of four, one income earner, earning $15,000 a year your percentage cumulative tax increase in four years is 23 per cent. If you earn $35,000 your four year cumulative tax increase is 13 per cent. If you earn $50,000 a year that total four year tax increase is 8 per cent. What about a person earning $100,000 a year? That person has a 1 per cent increase. What about a person earning $200,000 a year? That person has a 1 per cent increase. So if you earn $15,000 a year, your total increase is 23 per cent out of those two Budgets while a person earning $200,000 has only a 1 per cent increase. Everybody in this Parliament—everybody—should know that that is not fairness, that it will not sell. Canadians do not like it. That is not the way to share the burden of the public debt. You do not do it like that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let me give you more figures for the record, Mr. Speaker. We want to illustrate why this Budget is not fair.

A single parent with two children earning $15,000 a year will pay $248 more in taxes in 1986 as a result of both budgets. The same single parent earning $20,000 a year will pay $418 more in 1986. A retired single person, most of whom are women, earning $10,000 will pay $160 more in taxes in 1986. The same person earning $20,000 a year will pay $336 more in 1986.

Yesterday's issue of The Financial Post, March 4, 1986, includes some best case investment income assumptions.

Mr. Malone: Read the whole paper.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): An individual with an income of $40,000, based on a salary of $35,000 plus $4,000 in dividends, plus interest of $1,000, faces a tax increase from 1985 to 1987 of 9.4 per cent. An individual with an income of $150,000, that is to say based on a salary of $100,000, $15,000 in dividends, $5,000 in interest and $30,000 in capital gains in the same period has an over-all tax decrease of 1.4 per cent.

What if you earn $40,000? you are up there with a 9.4 per cent increase. But what if you earn $150,000 a year? You have a decrease of 1.4 per cent. That is equity? That is justice? That is fairness, Mr. Speaker?

There is one rule of salesmanship; if you are going to sell something, get yourself a good product. This Budget is a lousy product. It is an unfair product. It will not sell. I do not care whether the Prime Minister gets on a bicycle and rides from one end of this country to the other, it will not sell.

Take the application of the federal surtax, Sir. If you earn $40,000 a year, the surtax goes up 89 per cent. It goes from $103 in 1986 to $195 in 1987. That is an increase of $92 or 89 per cent. But let us take a look at the person who earns $150,000 a year. His surtax goes down 62 per cent, from $2,451 in 1986 to $941 tax in 1987. The person with an income of $150,000 by reason of the re-organization of that surtax, gets an additional cash flow of $1,500. that is not going to sell, Mr. Speaker, not when people understand what is really in the Budget, not if the people of Canada listen to what is being said about the Budget and examine it.

Let us take a look at the sales tax. My colleague in the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, dealt quite fully with the sales tax earlier this afternoon. It has gone up 3 percentage points since the Conservatives took power, from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. In the last Budget the Government broadened the base of the sales tax to include anything that moves. Health care products, medicine, soap, shampoo, candy and pet food were included. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, every increase in the sales tax with that broadened base is worth $1 billion; a hit against the Canadian taxpayer. That is the most regressive tax of all. It hits hardest on the low-income families. it is a consumption tax. Those with less disposable income bear the burden of that tax.

The $50 sales tax rebate is practically a gimmick. It is meant to try to convince low-income Canadians that the Government is excluding them from this tax. But it does not come close to being a reimbursement for the increase in the gasoline tax, cigarette tax, alcohol tax, the tax on refrigerators and televisions, the increase in the sales tax on those commodities which are necessary to furnish a home. The bottom line is that low-income Canadians pay more, and a lot more.

It does not take a genius to raise taxes. But it sure takes guts to get at the expenditure side, to make hard choices and to eliminate some of the programs which go to help the rich and powerful. It sure takes a little more courage than what is being shown by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance in this Budget. They have been touring the country telling Canadians that there is fairness enshrined in these two Budgets. I think I have illustrated here in the House of Commons that the figures show that this is not a budget of equity. It is not a Budget of fairness.

The Budget is not fair. The burden placed on Canadian taxpayers is not an equitable one.

Mr. Speaker, here in the House I have often spoken about the crisis situation in which our young people find themselves. We are about to lose half a generation. When the last Budget was brought down in May, we on this side of the House protected our pensioners. Now, in the Opposition we have a duty to protect our families and the entire middle class. I am talking about people between the ages of 35 and 55, earning between $15,000 and $40,000 a year. These families are being hammered and they are being ignored, Mr. Speaker. It has become almost impossible to maintain a reasonable standard of living. It is impossible to improve the quality of one's life.

It does not take a genius to increase taxes, and the Conservatives have proved this once again.

[English]

We were obliged to protect our senior citizens from the last Budget. We are going to have to fight to protect the average Canadian family from this Budget. People between the ages of 35 years and 55 years who earn between $15,000 and $40,000 are the ones who will be hit right between the eyes. It is becoming impossible for the average Canadian family to maintain a reasonable standard of living. It is becoming impossible to improve one's quality of life in the face of this attack by the Government.

For the second time in two Budgets—and I raised these questions earlier in the House—the Conservative Government has abandoned the philosophy of regional equality. Spending in the economic and regional development envelope will be cut from a level of $14.7 billion, determined in 1984-85, to a level of $9.8 billion by 1987-88. That is a reduction of 38 per cent. This is from a Prime Minister who said he was in favour of regional equality. The Government brought in a new wave of deception when it announced the Atlantic Enterprise Program. It pretended to encourage the launching and expansion of businesses in Atlantic Canada and the Gaspé with Government loan guarantees, but let us look at the fine print. Only big corporations will be eligible because the minimum eligible loan is $250,000. The Program neglects those who really need the help. Only rich friends of the Tory Government need apply.

[Translation]

And speaking of the people of the Gaspé, why aren't the people on the North Shore eligible, or the people in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area? Or the people from Abitibi? There is something wrong here.

[English]

We took the time to examine several areas of our economy in several important communities which have not even been mentioned in the Budget. With respect to fishermen, in November of 1984 the Minister of Finance cut $40 million from the Fisheries Budget. In May of 1985 another $25 million was cut from the Fisheries Budget. We now have increased fees on weather reports and dockage, and of course in this Budget the sales tax has been increased again. The price of fuel for fishermen has increased once more. There was not a word about mining or forestry. There was not a word about the major industries in my province of British Columbia.

Except for minor fine tuning on flow-through shares, the Budget virtually ignores the resource sector. Where are those promised tax changes to encourage exploration and development in the mining sector? Where is the proposed increase in funding for the Canada Wildlife Service? Where is the forestry internship program which was promised by the Government?

I see the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) here. I have known him a long time. He represents the centre of the interior forest industry in British Columbia. He must feel sick. He must feel at the least very disturbed. I think if I were he I would say to my constituents: "I'm busy learning my new portfolio here", and I would stay away from Prince George for a while until after the Budget settles down.

There is no reference in the Budget to the oil and gas industry. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knows—she is sitting here and I am grateful for that—that the price this morning was $12 U.S. per barrel. She knows that a lot of projects will now be halted and a lot of development will be curtailed, abandoned, suspended. A lot of the supporting industries—the drilling industry, for example—will be in real trouble. Even more, she knows that our objective for self-sufficiency is being put in peril and jeopardy. I would hope that before long she will rise in this House and give us her recent thinking as to how the oil and gas industry should meet—in terms of those jobs she promised us—the current situation of $12 a barrel U.S.

We had commodity board loans introduced in the Budget. That is an interesting concept. The problem is that very few farmers will qualify. First, they must already have a Farm Credit Corporation mortgage and, second, they must be judged to be in trouble. It does not help if their loan is at a bank. But the Minister says he will give farmers help if they want to get out of farming. For the second Budget in a row, the only farmers who really get a break are those who want to sell out. If they want to stay on the land, neither Budget is of much help to them. The new Budget gives them resettlement expenses, job training. It has the same effect as the capital gains exemption. In other words: "Get off the farm and we will give you a little help, but if you stay on the farm, you are in real trouble".

Cuts to agriculture total $502 million from 1985-86 to 1990-91. The farmers are also hit by another 1 per cent tax increase in farm fuels. We are still waiting for those agribonds. The Prime Minister was involved in the Prince Albert Charter. I still do not think he knows what an agri-bond is, but he said he was going to give a long term, low interest bond to farmers. That was going to be a dandy.

We are still waiting for a sugar policy. The sugar-beet producers right now are meeting Members of Parliament because that industry in Alberta, in Manitoba and Quebec will not survive unless the Government comes up with a national sugar policy.

The Edmonton Journal calls this Budget an anti-Alberta Budget because of the neglect of the Minister of Finance for agriculture and energy.

I regret that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) should be absent, for he is the new hero who will defend our cultural identity.

Of course he must be proud about the $75 million promised for culture. And apparently all the artists, all the authors, and all the men and women who contribute to give us a genuine Canadian culture are satisfied. But they have a very short memory. Did our artists forget? Did our authors forget?

If we can rely on the Minister's November 1984 statement—$121 million—the cut-back now amounts to a difference of $50 million.

So our artists are still $50 million short.

[English]

Given the ideological bent of this Government, one might say that its left hand giveth and its right hand taketh away, with a vengeance unseen since Biblical times. The Government announced $300 million for Research and Development but has drastically cut Research Council budgets, as was pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint Henri-Westmount. We have the spectre of a value-added tax. The Minister and the Government are still contemplating what they call a business transfer tax or a value-added tax. There will be constitutional difficulties.

The Minister said he was looking for ways to increase the revenue base. Then he was politically cynical enough to say to journalists at, I guess, the off-the-record post-budget briefing, that, yes, he contemplated enlarging the tax base, converting it into a business transfer tax, probably the widest net that could ever be cast against Canadian taxpayers, and then a year before the election he could remove the personal surtax of 3 per cent and look good to Canadian taxpayers. He would give them a secret, invisible, slow-moving business transfer tax but immediately remove the 3 per cent surtax. If I ever saw political cynicism, that is it. We will be looking at the discussion paper very carefully indeed when the Minister brings it forward.

With regard to social problems, on page 12 of the Budget Speech the Minister says that in his next Budget he intends to propose further measures to reform our system of social expenditures and related tax provisions.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, oh! We are going to be watching that one carefully. Here is the sacred trust up for grabs again.

The next issue is foreign aid. Canada's partnership in the development of many of the less-developed nations is placed in jeopardy in this Budget. In an astounding about-face from previous commitments, the Minister has cut the aid budget by $1.5 billion over five years. The target date of 1990 to reach .06 per cent of the GNP in foreign aid has been put back five years to 1995. I believe this is a serious betrayal of Canadians who feel we have a moral duty to come to the aid of those countries where people are starving. We have a duty to share, even under the pressure of budget control, with the less-favoured nations of the world who need food and clothing. Frankly, there are thousands and thousands of Canadians who are revolted by the fact that the Government has turned its back on some of the less-favoured areas of the world.

What has the Government done about job creation for youth? The word "youth" or the words "young people" were not even used in the Budget. They were not even mentioned, not a single time.

[Translation]

And in the estimates, the next day, the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) was eliminated, the Minister of State (Youth) is now invisible, silent, anonymous, a ghost Minister, a Minister striken right off the estimates—

Mr. Gauthier: That's it! No budget!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is the new way to reshuffle the Cabinet, Mr. Speaker. Sensational! There is no need to sack the Minister, she gets no money! That is very subtle indeed, and I must warn my friends in the departments, the other Ministers, to be very careful! Perhaps there will be supplementary estimates, and I say this to my friend from Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) whom I know very well. Beware lest you wake up one morning with no money, no office, no civil servants, no limousine! A ghost Minister, the Minister of State (Youth)!

[English]

Yet the Senate study, endorsed by Senators of both Parties unanimously, reminded us that there are 700,000 unemployed youth. This is potentially a lost generation. What has the Government's response been? Cutting education transfers to the provinces. Denying young people the opportunity for training. Cancelling our First Chance Program. Transferring the problem to provincial Governments. Another broken promise, another dream denied. We are all going to pay a very heavy price for that.

Rather than take positive action about unemployment, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) loves to boast about job creation. He says 580,000 jobs have been created since his Government took power. Obviously he sent the script to all his Ministers because you can ask a question about the price of coconuts and still get the answer: 580,000 new jobs. They get up and all you hear is the whirring and flapping of the flippers from the trained seals. Boy, do they read out the script.

Mr. Siddon: You don't like the message.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not blame the Prime Minister for not being here to try to defend the Budget. He is spending most of the time on the road trying to rake over old coals and attack my record as Minister of Finance and me personally.

Miss Carney: That is not hard to do.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not think too many people will buy it. I would love to entice the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) into a little debate, but the truth is that this Government has not yet matched my record from 1972 to 1974.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hate to have to put this on the record but the sleazy attacks of the Prime Minister force me to do it. In that period of time, when I was Minister of Finance under Mr. Trudeau, we produced 631,000 jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We can all play this game. That was done from a smaller labour force base. The unemployment rate averaged about 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Regional unemployment was substantially lower. The Prime Minister likes to give the impression that unemployment problems are solved. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his document, abandoned the target of 7 per cent to 7.5 per cent as full employment. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), has pointed out, the target is now 9 per cent. All that litany we have had recited day after day in this House overlooks the fact that regional unemployment is high. In Quebec it is 11.5 per cent; in British Columbia, 12.9 per cent; in the Atlantic provinces, 15.4 per cent. As the Hon. Member pointed out, too many new jobs are now part-time jobs. Too many people are unemployed for longer and longer periods. The number of people unemployed for more than one year and no longer eligible for unemployment insurance has doubled since the end of the recession. Unemployment among our young people hovers around 15.9 per cent.

I rejoice with the Prime Minister that many Canadians have found new jobs, but surely he has to realize, as do all Canadians, that we have a long way to go. We have a long way to go to bring those figures down and reach a stage where anyone in this country who wants to work and is legitimately seeking work can find a job, that is full-time employment, and we should not be boasting about anything short of it.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has almost enticed me to go at another one of the Prime Minister's statements.

Miss Carney: Go ahead.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would like to correct another impression. The Prime Minister said in Kitchener that I inherited a surplus and left the deficit. I want to tell him that

I inherited a deficit, brought in the last two surpluses in Canadian history, and subsequently, yes indeed, I left a deficit and I am going to give you the figures. In 1972, the deficit was $556 million. In 1973, the surplus was $387 million. These are the national account figures and even the Minister of Finance will be able to find those. In 1974, the surplus was $1.109 billion. In 1975, the deficit was $3.805 billion. Take those four years and average them out—

Mr. Siddon: Take the last year.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will explain the last year in a minute. The average deficit when I was Minister of Finance was $725 million. Boy, I bet the Minister of Finance would just drool for those numbers.

Miss Carney: Shameful. What about the other Liberal Ministers?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hear the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), I guess it is. It is a kind of rotating Ministry and it is pretty hard to keep up.

Mr. Penner: Not much going on in fisheries anyway.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The oil crisis came upon us in 1974-75. I was Minister of Finance under Mr. Trudeau at the time. When I stood up on budget night I said we were making a deliberate move on the side of preserving employment and growth and the inflationary aspect of the oil crisis had to be combatted. That is why we moved the deficit forward. We were the only country in the world who maintained an employment record in the midst of that crisis.

Mr. Siddon: And the deficit never stopped moving forward.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to give the House another figure. During my period in office as Minister of Finance the public debt of Canada finished up at $25 billion. The percentage of the public debt as related to the Gross National Product went down from 21.6 per cent to 17.5 per cent during my tenure as Minister of Finance. At the moment the percentage of debt as related to to the Gross National Product is 47.3 per cent, and the Minister of Finance predicts that by 1990-91 it is going to rise to 56 per cent of GNP. I left it at 17.5 per cent.

We can play all sorts of games and the Prime Minister can have fun in Kitchener, but I would like him to come into the House and play those sorts of games against us. The Prime Minister said in Halifax that he is going to slap a paternity suit on me for being the father of the deficit. I want to tell him that the paternity suit will not fly because the facts fly in the face of it, and the facts do not bear it out. The Prime Minister is led by his new communication advisers and his pollsters, because this is a Government by Fox and a Government by Gregg. Fox and Gregg ought to be sitting in here because they are the ones who are really pulling the strings. What the Prime Minister has been told is to repeat something long enough and often enough and he may convince some people.

An Hon. Member: The big lie.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have to stand up here in the forum of the nation before you, Mr. Speaker, although it is distasteful for me to have to blow my own horn to a certain extent in comparison with this Minister. I am obliged to do so to bring the Prime Minister back to some semblance of truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister says that the buck stops here. Well, he did not know about Darth Vader. The Prime Minister leaned over to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and said: "Who is Darth?"

The Prime Minister does not know who originated the phrase "The buck stops here". It was Harry Truman. Harry Truman had a plaque on his desk which said: "The buck stops here". As President of the United States, he said: "I take responsibility for what I am doing". He did not go around the country blaming the problems of the world on Herbert Hoover or Franklin D. Roosevelt. He took responsibility for what he was doing. This Minister of Finance and this Prime Minister go wallowing across the country, go slithering across the country, cry-babies, blaming former administrations for the way they are handling the affairs of the country. The buck stops here. They are trying to pass the buck. As a matter of fact, talking about the buck, we do not know where it is going to go from day to day. It is just hovering at 70 cents. They cannot get hold of it.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), came up with some very interesting analysis based on the Minister of Finance's own figures. With these figures he shows us that the net public debt in 1986-87 will be $262.8 billion dollars, up $63.7 billion over 1984-85. My hon. colleague says that that means that 24 per cent of the total public debt of the country has been incurred by this Government in the 16 or 17 months for which it has had control of the country. It has already attributed to us 25 per cent of the total public debt.

Mr. Penner: How do you explain that, Tom? God, I'd be ashamed of myself.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The day after the Budget the dollar started to float a bit. We have not seen those figures because, fortunately for the Minister, the month of February ended and we have only the February figures on the intervention, but we can imagine what the Governor of the Bank had to be saying: "Has anybody got a dime? Can we get a little more leverage in our reserves? Can we intervene a little more?" The Minister was so disturbed by the initial reaction to his Budget that he had to call up his friends on the Business Council on National Issues and say: "Can you write me a letter? I need somebody who agrees with this Budget and I had a bad night". On budget night when he was on television he said to those average Canadian families: "Boy, I need some friends". The Business Council on National Issues is made up of the presidents and chief executive officers of the largest corporations of this country. I do not know how it worked, but Tom D'Aquino might have said: "Mike, why don't you draft a letter and I will sign it?" So they got their letter. The Minister loves to get up and read letters of support from the big-hitters, because the big-hitters started to get worried that the dollar was going down and the Budget had not been favourably received, and they had to support the Minister of Finance.

Before I wind up, there are some other quotations I would like to read to the House. Frank Garritty of the Canadian Teachers Federation said of the Budget——will inhibit sustained economic growth and hit hardest at the average wage earner—

Marjorie Cohen of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women said the Budget indicates that——an unacceptably high level of unemployment is considered normal.

Jim McCambly, President of Canadian Federation of Labour, said:

—some tax loopholes for the rich were reduced a tiny bit, but the working stiffs still get it right through the nose.

Sally Hall, President of the Consumers Association of Canada, said:

This is the exact opposite of what the Government should be doing to get consumer spending going again.

Patrick Johnston of the National Anti-Poverty Organization said:

I am not convinced that simply because there were no major cuts in social programs (in this Budget) we will not be faced with them a year from now.

Allan Sinclair of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia had this to say about the Budget:

For our industry, the net impact is negative.

Ontario Treasurer, Robert Nixon, said:

The increase in consumer taxes is bound to have a bad effect in the province.

Even the Chamber of Commerce—wouldn't you believe these boys could give the Government a passing grade?

Mr. Marchi: He did not write a letter.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He did not write a letter, that is for sure. The Chamber of Commerce was lukewarm. Here is what its Director, Tony Amery, said:

He is looking at a tax solution as opposed to an expenditure solution and that is something that concerns us.

There is one other quote I would like to read: It says:

We have no intention of raising income taxes . . . we have to reduce government spending.

Who was that, Mr. Speaker? That was the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Penner: That's Mike.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is the Minister of Finance during the election campaign on City-TV, August 28, 1984 at 11 p.m.

I had better quote the Prime Minister. He would feel left out.

Mr. Gauthier: He's never here anyway.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Maybe somebody will point it out to him tomorrow morning. I would also like to remind the House of a commitment made by the Prime Minister when he was the Leader of the Opposition. In a speech in Vancouver on August 24, 1984 he said:

We will reform the personal income tax system to make it more fair, more progressive and more productive . . . We are committed to the goal of fair taxation.

A goal of fair taxation—what a definition of fairness! The rich get their capital gains exemption. The corporate sector gets a reduced percentage of total taxation. The average Canadian family really gets it in the teeth. Now the Prime Minister, his Ministers and all of them over there, they are on the road and they have a prepared text. We have to work for our stuff, don't we? We have to do our own work and our own research, but they have it all wrapped up beautifully, all marked for them. Their chiefs of staff—these commissars that the Prime Minister puts in every Minister's office—mark the notes for them so the Minister sees the key spots. That Kitchener meeting was a dandy, that Halifax meeting was a dandy, but if they get out there with the real people, they are going to find that no matter how hard they try they are not going to be able to sell a lousy product.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to those few members of the Ministry here for their attention. I do not believe this Government is seriously attacking the deficit. If it were, it would have a strategy. The only strategy for getting at the public debt of this country is fairness. Raising revenues must be done in a fair way. Cutting expenditures must be done in a fair way, because over the long run the public debt of the country will not be brought under control unless Canadians from every walk of life, no matter where they live in the country, what income range or what opportunities they have, believe that the burden of cutting the deficit and gaining control over the public expenditures of this country is being shared fairly. If the process is not seen to be fair—on the basis of the figures I have brought before Your Honour, it is shockingly unfair—there will be more resistance by taxpayers. Some newspapers suggest a tax revolt, but there certainly will be resistance. There will be a growing underground economy because people who are not being treated fairly and do not feel they are being treated fairly will not respond to the urgings of the Government.

The Budget, taken together with the last Budget, is in fact counterproductive because of its unfairness. People will not co-operate in trying to make it work because they do not believe the burden is being shared fairly.

Good fiscal management means understanding, and in order to bring the public purse under control it is necessary to be fair at every stage of the process.

Our argument to the House, the Minister, the Prime Minister and the country is that the Budget is not fair and Canadians will not accept it. We in the Liberal Party do not accept it. It is an enormous betrayal of trust of Canadians, and I undertake to Canadians that we will fight this measure and the Budget at every step, in every legitimate way the House of Commons permits us, even under the reformed rules.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that rather than hiding behind the rules which prohibit the asking of questions and making of comments at this time, the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues would certainly consent to giving unanimous consent to the House for questions and comments at this time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will come and do the same thing for us, we will accept.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Redway: It sounds like unanimous consent.

Mr. Gauthier: If you get the Prime Minister here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) on debate.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to join the debate on the 1986 Budget. Naturally, I am tempted to engage with the right hon. gentleman who just spoke in the intellectual acrobatics which we have just witnessed. He referred to me as a friend a couple of times in his speech and I return the compliment. I have known him for some time and he is not a bad guy when one meets him in private.

As a matter of fact, he and I were once stranded at a fishing hole and he fell in.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If it had not been for my fish and my box of matches—

Mr. Oberle: It would have been a close call, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to him: "John, you just fell in again". The Right Hon. Member stated this afternoon that: "We play all kinds of games around here".

Let me suggest to him that we on this side of the House are finished playing games with the lives of Canadians.

I could talk about the record of the right hon. gentleman when he was Minister of Finance for 43 months, I believe. He increased the public debt from $18 billion to $36 billion.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is wrong, Frank. You have the wrong numbers.

Mr. Oberle: He is the architect and father of the legacy that this Government inherited in September, 1984.

Let me spend some time dealing with the Budget and the Government's policy on science and technology. The Budget introduced a wide ranging agenda for economic growth, economic renewal and job creation. It pointed out that research and development and the advancement of science may be one of the keys that we will need to unlock the future for Canadians and achieve the goals that we have set for ourselves.

In fact, Canada's role in the 21st century may well be determined by what we do today and in the next five to ten years in the area of science and research and development.

There are serious obstacles in our way. We have a $225 billion debt today on which we are paying interest every year. Just as we are confronted with an urgent need to catch up with other nations that have gained an edge on us in some very important strategic technologies, we are strapped to a legacy of the past that has compelled us to impose upon ourselves a fiscal discipline to which we are committed.

Canadians can be proud of our past record of achievement. We have never spent as much as some of the more advanced industrial nations in research and development because of other priorities, yet we excelled in some select areas. It is a source of pride for Canadians to have been the third nation to enter into space and to be the first nation to have its own communication satellite. That was a priority for us because it was answering a need for Canadians to communicated with each other. Those of us who represent ridings in the North were shut out from the mainstream life in Canada and its culture because television came to the North 10 years after its introduction in the south. The Anik satellites brought the North into the Canadian mainstream.

Our aerospace industry, communications industry and nuclear industry have excelled. Our nuclear reactors are a source of pride to Canadians because they are still among the most efficient in the world. We have excelled in those areas where our efforts were directed toward our needs and built on our natural strenghts.

However, we have fallen behind in those areas where we have ignored our natural strenghts. In the year that the former Government was in power, we developed a trade deficit in high-tech goods of $12 billion. In those areas where we developed a lead, 75 per cent of all the high-tech components manufactured in this country are exported in highly competitive markets. In fact, we are getting a better return on our high-tech trade than any other country in the world. However, at the same time we are importing 75 per cent of all high-tech components that go into our traditional industries, our resource industries. We are, Sir, the biggest wood-converting country in the world. We have the strongest mining sector and the finest agricultural sector in the world. Yet, 75 per cent of all the high tech components which go into these industries are imported from Sweden, the United States, Finland and Germany. We import whole sawmill systems from Germany, a country which has about as much timber as we have on Lyell Island. It has a fraction of the timber that we have in our national parks. We have a $12 billion deficit in trade because we have neglected to focus on our natural strength.

I suspect one of the reasons for this is that we did not have a national science policy. We had no leadership. We were competing with Japan and Germany, the countries which took the lead. Just as the former Government was preoccupied with developing a new, artificial culture for Canada, so was it obsessed with a new industrial image. Forestry, mining, and agriculture had become unsophisticated rural occupations which a country in search of a modern industrial image should move away from. Instead of building on our natural strength, the Government led it ebb away. As a result, our resource industries are in serious difficulties.

There are 350 cities and towns in Canada, most of which are in the mid Canada corridor and in the north, which depend entirely on either the mining sector or the forestry sector, or both of these industries. Ninety-five per cent of all the freight that is hauled on our railways is made up of wheat, lumber, forest products, and minerals.

It is not that the former Government was not aware of these problems, but it had other priorities which kept intervening. In fact, from time to time it did attempt solutions. I must give credit for that. These solutions were usually attempted about a year and a half or two years before an election. The thing about science and technology is that it does not pay dividends in three years. Results are not achieved, particularly in basic research, between two elections. To be committed to science and technology you must have a vision and you must plan into the next century. These people could never do that and, instead, introduced artificial solutions for the backlog that had been created.

One such policy was the infamous scientific research tax credit. There was a tax expenditure through that program of about $3.5 billion. Estimates which I have indicate that between $1.5 billion and $2 billion was not used for research and development at all. It went into innovative bookkeeping and innovative tax manipulation rather than industrial innovation. I would like you to imagine for just a moment what I, as the Minister of Science and Technology, could do today with $2 billion.

The previous Government had another obsession. It thought it could advance the cause of science in the country by building world-class buildings across the country. There is a building in the City of Montreal which cost in excess of $60 million. It is a fascinating building which takes up two city blocks. The architect should get a world-class prize. However, no one developed a program to go into the building. They built the building and called it a world-class buyer technology building. The National Research Council is taking possession of the building in June and no one has given any thought to how one operates a world-class buyer technology centre. As important as that strategic technology is, there has been no plan formulated. Now I must design a plan to fit the building, and I will do so, and it will become a world-class buyer technology centre.

There is another building in Winnipeg, the spiral staircase in which costs more than the mechanical room. That is a $30 million building, another world-class effort. However, it has done very little to address the urgent need in Winnipeg for the development of an industrial technology centre. I now have a building and must develop a program to fit it, which I will do. I recently announced it in Winnipeg, and I am receiving enthusiastic response because people were becoming a little confused about the policy of the former Government. The cause of science and technology is not advanced with brick and mortar. It is advanced with people and knowledge, and that has been ignored.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: We must first learn to spend smarter, because we do not have the resources in the first year to correct all the sins of 20 years of deliberate neglect in this area. We must set new goals which will inspire young Canadians particularly, and Canadian scientists generally, which will take us into the 21st century. It became clear to me when I assumed my portfolio that the Government will not be able to do this alone. We find ourselves in an urgent crisis which will require the combined efforts of Government, industry, universities, and the science community. I want to enable the cutting torch genius, the welder, and the farmer who is not connected to any of these institutions, but has an idea, to get his idea across and have his prototype built.

We must modify our in-house effort. We do quite a bit of in-house research and development. The National Research Council is an instrument of excellent work and progress, but we must modify our in-house efforts, at least in the short term, to ensure that the technology which is sitting on the shelf in government labs is quickly diffused, transferred to the marketplace, and will end up in marketable products. We must extend the safety net for the people who work there and, perhaps, second some of the brilliant people to industry.

I want to speak a little about what we have done as our first effort to bring about a change and set us off in a new direction. In connection with the Budget I announced a new five-year program to deal with the area of university research which makes up 18 to 20 per cent of our total effort. We are increasing funding for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council, and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council by $1.054 billion over a five-year period. The spending levels will increase by $311 billion by 1990-91 over the 1985-86 level. That is precisely the amount we are spending this year in the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. It will receive additional funds of $555 million.

My critics tell me that that program will not work and that it will not catch up with inflation. I wonder where they learned their arithmetic. They are playing games, and we are sick and tired of it. We will no longer play games with the Canadian people. We will be judged on our record. The targets which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) predicted when we came to power in September of 1984 have all been met. The targets we have set in this Budget will again be met next year when we bring in another Budget. The targets I have set for research and development will be met and scientists will once again be inspired. There is now stability in spending. One may sign a five-year contract with a researcher at a university and he will know that he will have the funds to work with for five years. The skeptics will be proven wrong once again. With our efforts in research and development, Canada will once again be strong.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have been very impressed with the commitment of the Budget and the Minister to research and development and the $1 billion that has been committed to research and development at the universities over the next five years. The Minister is aware, however, as are all of us, that no matter how much we spend on research and development and even if we spend our entire Gross National Product on it, we could only produce a very small part of the total technology that is developed around the world. It seems to me that it is important as well to develop a policy of ensuring that our industries utilize the technology that has been developed, whether it has been developed here in Canada or in other parts of the world.

I wonder if the Minister would care to comment on what plans and policies the Government may have designed to ensure that there is this technology transfer and that our industries utilize technology and innovations that are developed not only here but right around the world to the benefit of Canadians so that we will increase our productivity and will be able to increase the standard of living of all Canadians.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, there are a number of very serious obstacles which stand in the way of industry doing what we all know it must do. There are a number of things that we can do about this. For instance, one of these obstacles is the Patent Act. There will be no development of new intellectual capital if there is not at least some protection in the Patent Act. We have inherited an antiquated Act and we will in a very short time correct that.

Industry in Canada spends roughly one-third of what industry in other industrial nations spends on research and development. There again, Government is at fault. I have already talked about one obstacle. We have never given industry the proper incentives. We now have several very mature industrial sectors in Canada and they have to learn to do more research and development. Accordingly, we have designed our incentives structure, and federal and provincial agreements have very heavy science and technology components to them. The university funding program that I have announced contains a matching formula. There are $700 million in incremental funds that will go into R and D over the next five years. Half of that will have to come from the private sector. In other words, the university researcher will sell his talents and skills to a private company and if he gets a dollar, as he will from the private sector, that dollar will be matched.

Things are not all bad. I see that my critic is present in the House. He says that industry will do it. It would not do it for the former Government, and I do not blame it. I come from industry and I know how difficult it was for a company to plan ahead with the budgetary acrobatics that were going on for the last 20 years.

Industry in Canada spends roughly $2.5 billion on research and development right now. The $350 million that I am asking it to spend over the next five years is roughly 5 per cent of what it is spending now. I am saying that industry will respond with great generosity. In fact, it will exceed by far what we are attempting here.

In the first year, I am asking industry to spend 1.4 per cent of the $2.5 billion which it already spent on university research. The skeptics will be proven wrong. Industry will respond with great enthusiasm, and I think that through these kinds of measures we will be able to turn the ship around and set it off in the right direction.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I am just astounded that this Minister and members of the Conservative Party can propagate the myth that they are doing some great thing here and that they can claim that they are spending $1 billion when they have just put up $300 million for the three granting councils.

I have here a news release from the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada which take issue with the claim that the Government is increasing funding to the three federal research councils by $300 million over the next five years. They say that funding levels will in fact decline in real terms. Even Gordon McNabb, quite a respected individual and President of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, says that when we start to dissect the Budget in terms of spending power, it is modest.

I suppose the first question I would ask the Minister is why is he not at least being honest about this. Why is he not saying that he has broken his commitment or that, because of the financial situation in Canada, the Government has decided that it cannot afford to keep the commitment at the present time? Why is he trying to pretend that there is a substantial increase there when that is not indeed the case?

As well, there are tremendous problems with his proposal to match funds that are contributed from the private sector. There is a danger of diverting funds that are currently being spent by industry with universities or with other research agencies. For example, in medical research, it is possible that a company that currently gives money to the Ontario Cancer Institute, for argument's sake, might decide to spend the money on the Medical Research Council so that the Government will pay another dollar for every dollar it pays. There is a danger that funds will be diverted through this Government formula which may distort current spending. In that respect, I would say that even Douglas Wright, President of the University of Waterloo, has had reservations about this matching formula. He feels that this money should not have been channelled through the council. He says that it is unnecessary to have Government and bureaucratic interference in university-industry contacts, that it should be a bilateral relationship.

I would ask the Minister if he knows or if his Department has taken a look at the experience of the Quebec Government. Several years ago, that Government tried to institute the same kind of formula. It set up and office and tried to get matching grants from industry. That office closed down after a year and a half because it found that this formula just did not work.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech the Hon. Member made yesterday. He laments the fact that we should be spending three times our present levels of funding. We have to start somewhere. The funding levels that we inherited for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council were roughly $288 million. If that was a third of what we should have spent, I agree with the Hon. Member, but that is the legacy we inherited. We had to start from that level. As Mr. McNabb would be the first to admit, even if we had $2 billion, we do not have the highly qualified personnel to do the research, nor do the universities have the money to provide the infrastructure or the overhead. It will take time to correct the sins of that Party which the Hon. Member supports.

I should like to refer to the comments of Mr. McNabb when he said: "I have to express a considerable degree of satisfaction given the circumstances surrounding this Budget". I also have a quotation from Dr. Wright, a renowned person in the country. Incidentally, he is the head of a university which gets most of its funding from the private sector because it knows that that is where the future lies. He said: "R and D was singled out for an increase in resources when others were cut. The Government should be complimented for heeding the call from universities and others". The Liberals are playing selective games. We are finished with playing games. In his speech the Hon. Member said: "I know there were delays on most occasions. The spending increases came toward the end of the year and that caused certain problems". I guess it caused certain problems. Has the Hon. Member ever run anything—a business, a Government or a Department? How can we encourage scientists to remain in Canada when we say that they can have $3,000 but that the funds might run out in July, September or February? How can they plan? The money I have announced in connection with the Budget is all in the Budget; it is all there. I can now call in a professor or a president of a university and say: "This is the money you will have to spend over the next five years".

I am not ruling out that some of the assumptions in the Budget in terms of economic growth may well be exceeded. I am not ruling out that I may want to select certain priorities and call in the president of the council and give him another $50 million for this year or $150 million for next year. What we have put in the Budget will be spent. It is there for everyone to see and for everyone to plan. The critical element which we introduced in 1979 was the five-year concept which the previous administration destroyed. We are re-establishing stability, but we had to start from where the Liberals left off. It was not very good, I am the first to admit, but it will increase very dramatically.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter into the debate because the budget proposals before us are very important to all Canadians, particularly Canadian families. To get right down to it, the Budget is unfair to ordinary Canadian families. In the time available to me, I intend to outline exactly why I feel that this is the case.

The Budget hits hard at ordinary Canadians. The Government does not seem to have learned from the last Budget. In the present Budget it has increased the taxes of an average family by about $350 per year as a result of the increases in personal income taxes and in sales taxes including the tax on gasoline. The Government promised Canadians that they would have lower gas prices. Instead, we are getting increased gas taxes at a time when those prices should be coming down dramatically. The increase in taxes, which amounts to $350 per year, is on top of a $1,000 increase in taxes with which Canadian families were hit in 1985 as a result of the Budget and the Economic Statement of the same Government. It is tragic that the Government feels that it has the revenue to continue the once in a lifetime capital gains exemption but at the same time feels compelled to increase the taxes of ordinary Canadians by $350 on top of the $1,000 to which I already referred, for a total increase of $1,350. That is a heavy burden for ordinary Canadians. Earlier today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tried to explain it away. For example, he said that the sales tax increase when the Conservatives first came into power was proposed by Marc Lalonde, the former Liberal Minister of Finance. Of course the Conservative Minister of Finance had the option of refusing to implement that sales tax increase, but he chose to increase it, so it is his responsibility.

It is not only in the area of taxes that Canadian families are being hit. Let us look at the services delivered by the federal Government. The Budget cuts services which are important to those same ordinary Canadian families and communities across the country. There is a cut of some $2.05 billion from regional industrial expansion, a reduction in money going to the poor areas in order to promote their economic development so that they can share in our wealth production. I think of the northern areas of Manitoba which are dependent upon federal dollars to stimulate economic activity. The Budget hits hard at those areas. Since the Government is cutting back on regional industrial expansion moneys, it will not be in a position to take any new initiatives in terms of economic development in areas which are in desperate need. For example, I am thinking of our inner cities. Part of my riding of Winnipeg North Centre is an area which has a very low-income population and a very high unemployment rate in comparison with the rest of the community. Inner cities could benefit from regional industrial expansion activities. We should recognize that the core areas of cities are in need of economic activity and development which would add to the quality of life and provide employment. When the Government is cutting back on activity in this area, there is no way that it would be in a position to recognize the needs of people in the core areas of our cities.

Also the Government had the gall to cut back on employment funds. The cuts in the Budget aimed at employment amount to $1.78 billion. The Government promised jobs, jobs, jobs. On a daily basis it stands in the House and claims credit for the creation of employment. At a time when there are well over a million people unemployed—and the long-term projections indicate that unemployment will remain high—how can the Government cut back on employment creation efforts? Our young people are in desperate need of jobs. Yet this Budget has the impact of continuing to deny young people the opportunity to contribute to society by cutting back in the area of employment. It is ironic that a Government which claims concern about our young people has done away with the Department which had the responsibility for taking action in this area.

The Government has cut in other areas as well. It cut $502 million from agriculture. For most people in urban ridings, that may not sound very relevant, but a good portion of our economy is tied up in the agricultural sector. People in agriculture need the assistance of their federal Government in order to be able to keep their farms going in order to produce the food which we all need. So this cut-back is going to hurt the agricultural industry and our farm families.

The Government has also cut back in the area of health and welfare to the extent of 4.82 billion. That is an enormous sum of money. At the same time, we have heard over the last few weeks reports by Canadians on the need for day care. It is time we recognized that day care must be made available to all Canadian families. It is time we recognized that our present system, which only allows the poorest in our society to receive a subsidy, is inadequate. It is time we altered that system and made day care available to all families on the basis that it is a service to which all Canadians are entitled. Since increasing numbers of families have both parents working, it is necessary that we provide for adequate service for the children. We must invest in our children so they can turn out to be the kind of responsible adults we all expect them to be. But how can we take any initiative in this area? How can we respond to appeals for more action in the area of day care when the Government is cutting back on expenditures in the health and welfare area?

The Government has also cut back on the transport area. That is quite ironic because when the Conservatives ran for office, they made it clear that they were going to re-establish certain rail passenger lines which VIA, under the Liberal Government, had cut back. This Government now, after having re-established some of those lines, is in the process of cutting back in that same area. Members of the Conservative Party used this concern as part of their election platform, but now they are in office they themselves have begun the process which will undermine the passenger rail service. The Government has cut back transport by $3.61 billion. It has not only moved to raise taxes on ordinary Canadians but it has also cut back on essential services in regional industrial expansion, employment, agriculture, health and welfare and transport.

The Conservatives do not seem to recognize the unfairness of the tax system. I would like to illustrate that briefly. As a result of this Budget, individual taxes will increase almost four times faster than corporate taxes in 1986. That is, individual taxes will rise by $1.1 billion while corporate taxes will rise by only $380 million. It is clearly unfair for the Conservatives to continue the same pattern which has existed over the last 20 years, which is to shift the burden of taxation from corporations to individuals, and to do it in such a way that the taxes on individuals will not only rise faster than those of corporations but throughout this year taxes will rise four times faster for individuals than for corporations. To illustrate this further, by the year 1990, individual taxes will increase more than ten times faster than corporate taxes. That is, the increase in taxes for individuals will be $2.9 billion as compared to an increase in taxes on corporations of $295 million.

Clearly, the tax system which is being imposed on Canadians by the Government is not only heavy and burdensome but is also unfair. The Budget has failed to addressed the most crucial issues facing Canadians today, and that is, the question of jobs. The Government has set targets for the reduction of the deficit up to the year 1990 but it has chosen not to set targets when it comes to unemployment. If the Government considered unemployment to be a serious problem, we would expect it to set targets. It would tell us how it was going to bring down unemployment and by how much each year, just as it has done with the deficit. But it has chosen not to do this. I has chosen not to take unemployment seriously. Even where it does forecast unemployment rates, it projects a very modest decline of .6 per cent in unemployment for this year and next. This is on top of the fact that it has cut the job-creation budget by $200 million. The Government has very little, if any, concern in the area of employment. At the same time it has chosen to raise the taxes for ordinary Canadians in a way that is clearly unfair, while cutting their services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Budget has raised personal income tax. This Budget has increased the tax load or ordinary average income families. This Budget has boosted the tax rate of average families by $350 a year, and this comes on top of the $1,000 increase imposed by the Government last year. So the Conservative Government's total additional tax grab from the average family amounts to $1,350 a year. It is a huge tax increase, a very heavy tax burden for the average family.

Mr. Speaker, this tax increase was announced while at the same time the Government did maintain the lifetime capital gains tax exemption. The conclusion is that the Government made the tax load of ordinary families still heavier and handed a gift to high income people. Mr. Speaker, in one fell swoop the Government increased the tax load of ordinary families and reduced services which affect all Canadians.

The Government has slashed off more than $2 billion from regional industrial expansion services. The Government cut down employment expenditures by $1.78 billion, yet more than one million Canadians are without work.

Mr. Parry: What a shame!

Mr. Keeper: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, what a shame, as my colleague just said.

Mr. Speaker, not satisfied with cut-backs in employment services, the Government also reduced services in agriculture, health and social welfare.

Mr. Speaker, this $4.82 billion cut in the Health and Welfare budget is particularly significant. At a time when we need to improve day care services in Canada, the Government is reducing its spending in a sector that is supposed to cover those services.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has also reduced its spending on transportation. Here cuts will total $3.61 billion. It is rather strange, because a Government that promised to boost passenger transportation services is now heading off in another direction by asking for cuts in this area.

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker, I intend to prove that this Conservative Budget is unfair. The Budget has added to the inequity in our tax system. For instance, this year personal income tax will increase almost four times as much as corporate taxes. Taxes for individual Canadians will increase $1.1 billion, compared this with an increase of $380 million for corporations. And between now and 1990, personal income taxes will increase ten times as fast as corporate taxes.

Mr. Speaker, these statistics show that the tax system introduced by this Government is unfair and that the new tax increases have compounded the inequities of the tax system.

Another thing I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government did not have the courage to come to grips with a critical problem affecting the whole country, and I mean unemployment. The Government set its sight on the deficit reduction, but apparently a reduction in the unemployment rate is simply out of range.

At the same time the Government cut about $200 million off the budget allocated to the Canadian Jobs Strategy program.

Mr. Speaker, the Government did make a forecast concerning the employment level, but it also indicated that the decrease in the number of jobless would be minimal.

Mr. Speaker, this Budget is unfair because it increases the tax load of ordinary families while at the same time granting tax exemptions to big companies.

An Hon. Member: Some exemptions!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, how can the Government increase the tax load of ordinary families and still maintain the lifetime capital gains tax exemption? How can the Government boost personal income taxes ten times faster than corporate taxes?

Mr. Speaker, it is unfair and the Government must withdraw the Budget and take a new approach to set our economy back on track. Time has come to have a fair tax system in this country, and that must be the priority of the Government.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 84(7), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House.

Accordingly, the question is on the amendment. Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

this House condemns the Government for presenting a Budget that imposes outrageous and unfair tax increases for ordinary Canadians that deliberately widen the gap between them and the rich and poor and between the 'have' and 'have not' regions of this country.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Johnston) which was negatived on the following division:

The House adjourned at 6.13 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 6, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members to indicate that their petitions are certified.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the petition I wish to present is definitely certified. Again it concerns the issue of the proposal of the NCC to build an embassy enclave in the Mile Circle parkland in my riding. The 83 persons who have signed this particular petition are all very much opposed to the proposal and come from all the cities within the National Capital Region.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PROSTITUTION

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-273, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, this amendment would increase the maximum imprisonment for six months to five years when an accused is found guilty of participating in an act of prostitution with a person under the age of 18 years. It will be no defence that the accused believed the prostitute to be age 18 years old or over.

Canadians are greatly concerned about the increasing sexual abuse of young people. This Bill will provide a strong and effective deterrent to customers of juvenile prostitutes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I either did not hear Your Honour call for the presentation of reports from committees or it was missed. I wonder whether I could present the twenty-first report of the standing committee with unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Of course there is one other possibility with regard to what happened. I am sure the House is perfectly willing to consent to returning to the presentation of committee reports.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Twenty-First Report of the Striking Committee.

PATENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GENERIC FARM CHEMICALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-274, an Act to amend the Patent Act (generic farm chemicals).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, this particular Bill would amend the Patent Act regarding farm chemicals. It will reduce the exclusive right farm chemical companies have on a patent from 17 years to 4 years and in effect establish generic farm chemicals. It is very similar to what the country did many years ago with generic pharmaceuticals.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Order Paper Questions

AMENDMENT RESPECTING OPEN COMPETITION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-275, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (open competition).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present my first Private Member's Bill to amend the Public Service Employment Act. This Bill would open competition in the Public Service Commission to all qualified Canadians.

Motion agreed, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Questions Nos. 447 and 457 will be answered today.

CIDA—BUILDING OF SAWMILL IN UGANDA

Question No. 447—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Did the Canadian International Development Agency help finance, through a grant, the construction of an agricultural sawmill co-operative at Ucua, northeast of Luanda in Angola?

2. Was the sawmill, in fact, built with the money supplied and did an employee of the Government actually see the sawmill being built and operated?

3. Does the sawmill now exist?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): 1. For many years the Government of Canada through the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) has had programs which contribute financially to the international development activities overseas of Canadian church groups, unions, co-operatives, universities and colleges, non-governmental organizations and other organizations.

In August, 1980, in response to a request, CIDA provided funding worth $44,145 to the Canadian Council for International Co-operation (CCIC) for materials to assist with the rehabilitation of the Ucua agricultural/sawmill co-operative.

This project was jointly sponsored by the Anglican Church, SUCO, OXFAM, and the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace (CCODP). It was co-ordinated by the Canadian Council for International Co-operation (CCIC) and administered by CUSO.

2. The sawmill had been in existence for about 50 years at the time of project approval in 1980. The materials were to provide forestry and agricultural support to the Ucua agricultural/sawmill co-operative to encourage and increase food production, furniture making, etc.

CIDA has never had a bilateral program with Angola. Officials of the Government of Canada have not, to our knowledge, visited the project. However, CUSO and OXFAM do have photographs of the sawmill taken in 1982 and 1983.

3. Canada does not have a resident mission in Angola and we understand that there are security problems relating to visits to the area.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Speaker: Prior to going to Orders of the Day I am in receipt of a notice of a desire by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) to raise a point of order.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I do so as the Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I want to draw to the attention of the House a failure by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to comply with Standing Order 70(16). I will do so in two sentences.

Our committee tabled its fourth report on October 17, 1985. The Standing Order to which I just referred provides for the Government to table a comprehensive response to the report within 120 days of the report being tabled. That 120 day period expired on February 14. The Minister of Transport, since that day, has been in default of his responsibility to table a comprehensive reply.

Our report is an important one, and I want to draw to the attention of the Speaker this breach of the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member and I take his point. I am not entirely sure what I can say or do, but I think the House knows the point which the Hon. Member is making and I will certainly look into the matter.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on February 26, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down a Budget designed to restore fiscal stability to the country.

Through the most far-reaching program of expenditure control ever undertaken by a Government in Canada, the Budget took yet another deliberate step in the implementation of the Government's November, 1984 agenda for economic renewal. It is a step that enables us to foresee government program spending falling by the end of the decade to the same share of the economy as at the beginning of the 1960s. It is a step that promotes economic renewal by smarter spending.

You will recall that two weeks earlier, as a part of our plan for economic renewal, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) announced the Government's decision to launch a major regulatory reform strategy. By improving the Government's regulatory performance, we intend to reduce impediments to economic growth, cut down inhibitions to job creation and eliminate unnecessary incursions on personal freedom. In other words, we want to promote economic renewal through better regulation.

In my new capacity as Minister responsible for regulation, I would like to inform the House of two components of the federal reform strategy: the introduction of the Citizens' Code of Regulatory Fairness and a regulatory program improvement package.

First of all, I would like to comment on the subject of regulation and the need for regulatory reform.

[English]

As a lawyer and a former member of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, I am no stranger to Government regulations. Last year I was appointed Chairman of the Special Committee on Council. That is the cabinet committee responsible for approving all regulatory initiatives. The concern about regulation that I had developed while in the Opposition was only reinforced when looking at it from the Government's point of view. You have to see it to believe just how many regulatory initiatives go through the committee week in and week out, very much like chickens on a processor's conveyer belt, Mr. Speaker.

We all know how extensive federal regulations are and how considerable the cost is to the public purse and the economy. If we consider these costs, the very limited information available to the Ministers who establish new regulations and the limited input by Parliament and the public into the system, the importance of regulatory reform and the need for it are obvious.

[English]

As Hon. Members know, regulatory reform is a term that has been in more or less common use for about 10 years. It is frequently associated or confused with the more dramatic but usually less accurate term, deregulation.

To me, deregulation is only one of several options open to the regulatory reformer. The key objective for proponents of regulatory reform is to improve regulation, that is, to make it rational and efficient, to limit its growth but not necessarily to dismantle it.

Although regulatory reform has been talked about a lot in Canada, very little has actually been done about it. A lot of people probably saw it as a short term political fad deserving lip service and nothing more. Others may have found it a hard issue to take seriously because regulatory matters sometimes seem too technical for mere mortals. Still others may have been put off by the subject by identifying it with ideological movements in other countries.

In my opinion, we have to move beyond these preconceptions and we have to do it soon. The fast movement of technology and the growing integration of the world economy are challenging and, in some cases, rapidly outpacing our traditional approaches to regulation.

Twentieth century economic realities need to be matched by twentieth century regulatory approaches. This is a matter not of ideology but of good, sensible and pragmatic government. I know I have good company in this House with these views.

In the debate following the Deputy Prime Minister's announcement of the regulatory reform strategy, I was gratified to see that the opposition representatives gave the strategy their approval, qualified perhaps, but fundamental approval nonetheless.

I am hoping that, as the details of the strategy are announced, any lingering doubts among my opposition colleagues will disappear. I am most serious in expressing this hope because I think regulatory reform is one of those issues on which bipartisan support and co-operation will make a great deal of difference in improving government efficiency, promoting economic growth and, most important, getting Government off the backs of Canadians. Indeed, I will go further, Mr. Speaker. I think it is the kind of issue on which Canadians would want their Members of Parliament of all stripes to work together.

With these general reflections on my new regulatory responsibilities, I would like now to announce details of two new initiatives which form an important part of the Government's regulatory reform strategy.

First, I am proud to announce and introduce The Citizens' Code of Regulatory Fairness. It is a unique initiative based on the principle that Canadians are entitled to know in as much detail as possible exactly how much government regulators are carrying out their responsibilities. Citizens have a right to know the rules of the game and to know they will be fair. The code response to concerns expressed to the ministerial task force on program review that the federal regulatory system is almost inaccessible to ordinary Canadians, that regulation at all levels has become too much the preserve of public servants, specialized lawyers and lobby groups. The code's purpose is to provide a set of high standards for ensuring regulatory fair play. The code also provides an explicit basis for judging the performance of regulators. In this way the code is intended to regulate the regulators.

Copies of the code are being distributed to all federal officials with regulatory responsibilities. Mr. Speaker, not only will they be expected to comply with the letter and spirit of the standards, but adherence will be a prerequisite—possibly I could refer to it as the ticket of entry—for approval of new regulatory proposals by the Special Committee of Council. The code consists of 15 points and copies of it are being circulated to all Members' offices, so I will not read them in detail at this time. However, I think it would be of interest to the House and the people of Canada to know some of the highlights of this new Citizens' Code of Regulatory Fairness.

Canadians are going to have a fuller opportunity, henceforth, to be consulted on regulatory initiatives. Second, they are going to have adequate early notice. Third, regulatory decision-making is going to become more prompt and efficient. The Government is going to tell Canadians in clear language what the regulatory requirements are and why they have been adopted. Regulatory officials are going to be held more clearly accountable for their actions and advice. Disproportionate regulatory burdens on small and medium-sized business are going to be avoided from this point forward. Regulations will have to pass cost-benefit tests, and sanctions and enforcement powers are going to fit the seriousness of violations. Finally, the public will have an on-going role in evaluating and criticizing ineffective or inefficient regulatory programs.

The report of the Macdonald Royal Commission affirmed the view that, in this day and age, big Government requires more democracy, not less. In its thought-provoking first chapter the report says:

> The extension of democracy which is required by big government is not one of war fragmented participation, but one which addresses Canadians as citizens and seeks our involvement in common tasks.

I see The Citizens' Code of Regulatory Fairness as encouraging the democratization of federal regulatory activity. That is a goal which I am sure we all endorse.

My second announcement, Mr. Speaker, is that I am today releasing a major regulatory program improvement package. It provides a long list of regulatory reform initiatives which are now under way in 16 Departments and 7 regulatory agencies to address specific problems identified by the ministerial task force on program review.

[Translation]

These measures are in addition to the many regulatory reform initiatives already implemented or about to be implemented under the direction of Ministers with a central responsibility for regulation. These Ministers will provide details on their reform activities as work progresses. Although I am responsible for developing and implementing the overall strategy of regulatory reform, I think I should stress the crucial role played by the Ministers in this process within their respective responsibility sectors.

[English]

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it should be clear that we are not talking about a one-shot crack at regulatory reform. Rather, we are launching an across-the-board series of initiatives which we expect will pick up increasing momentum and become one of the Government's most substantial achievements.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Government's regulatory policy makes clear that the Government is committed to a program of pragmatic and balanced regulatory reform. Its aim is to make federal regulations smarter in terms of efficiency, and fairer in terms of public access and participation. The regulatory program improvement package being released today reflects this pragmatic and balanced approach to regulatory reform.

While time does not permit me to go into all 43 of the items included in this package, perhaps I can give you some of the flavour by referring to a few of the specific items. The ministerial task force found that there are a number of federal, as well as provincial, regulatory programs touching on different aspects of hazardous products. It queried whether the net protection provided to Canadians by these programs is adequate. In response, the Government has decided to evaluate a re-ordering of priorities and the possible elimination of fragmented responsibilities in these areas.

Several of the items in the package call for increased privatization, cost recovery, or increased self-regulation as means of reducing unnecessary Government intervention or regulatory costs. As an example, an action plan is to be prepared for the phased and full devolution over six years to the private sector of electricity and gas verification.

The package identifies a number of statutes, such as the Bankruptcy Act and Copyright Act, which are seriously out of date and deficient. These laws provide the crucial regulatory framework within which our economy operates. If these laws are flawed, our economy suffers a serious disadvantage. The Government intends to give priority to reforming these laws. Several of the items in the package relate to areas of parrallel, and sometimes overlapping, federal-provincial regulatory activity. An example of this is the item calling for early action to arrive at more satisfactory compliance and enforcement policies for Section 33 of the Fisheries Act governing water and fish habitat.

Finally, Hon. Members will no doubt be interested to note that the reform package includes a number of improvements affecting food regulation and inspection. The decision in this respect are typical of the Government's general approach to regulatory reform with the emphasis on making things work better in the interests of economic development, job creation, public protection, and more efficient Government. In keeping with these priorities we are introducing today several practical reforms intended to strengthen still further Canada's worldwide reputation for excellence in food production. The reforms represent a major advantage in the efficiency and effectiveness of our regulation of food products. They boil down to four main thrusts.

First, we are going to strengthen the protection of Canadians by reaffirming the absolute primacy of the Department of National Health and Welfare on all matters affecting the health, safety, or nutritional dimensions of the food industry. Second, we are going to eliminate duplication and inconsistency among regulations dealing with health and safety issues on the one hand, and quality and grading issues on the other. Third, we are going to try to intensify efforts to co-operate with the provinces to bring about common health and safety standards across the country. Fourth, the Government is going to adopt a policy of no ministerial discretion with regard to individual inspection judgments.

I have gone into some detail on the food regulation reforms contained in the program improvement package because I think they are an excellent illustration of how the Government intends to proceed with regulatory reform in general. We have no intention of throwing the baby out with the bath water, but confronted by a need for regulatory improvement we intend to take firm, forthright, and effective action. With these food regulation reforms we have preserved the good while confronting the problems and, I trust, overcoming them.

The February 26 Budget makes it clear that the Government intends to face up to the problems of fiscal instability with statemanship and determination. In the same way, the regulatory reform strategy is directed at getting the country's regulatory affairs in order. By responsible spending and a strategy for fair and better regulation, the Government has already begun the monumental process of turning the country's economy away from pessimism and decline and toward energetic renewal and prosperity for the future.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wondered whether I was listening to the budget debate because, within the latitude permitted, the Minister spent much time talking about ministerial responsibilities outside the Budget. Is it because he is not prepared to defend the Budget that he spent so much of his time trying to divert the attention of the Canadian people from all of the things that are wrong with it? As a result of his silence on this subject, can we expect that the Government is proposing to take our advice and make some of the changes in the Budget that we have been asking for?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am the last one to indulge in partisan repartee across the aisle, especially in connection with observations made by my distinguished friend from York Centre. However, if the co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments does not understand the importance of regulatory reform as it concerns good management and efficient delivery of Government services, then I am a little leery about the paucity of understanding on the part of the Official Opposition with respect to any economic issue. I can say nothing further except that we would be only too happy to give serious consideration to suggestions on the part of the Official Opposition concerning this Budget if they have any.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not share the same concern that my friend across the way had with respect to the budget policies of the Government. I do not think anyone really does. However, I want to ask my colleague, the Government House Leader, to elaborate on one point. We brought in a Budget which was almost bang on with what a committee suggested a Budget should be in the early part of the year. The Estimates were linked very closely with the Budget; I think they came down the day after. Hand in hand with our efforts to tie down the deficit left to us by the previous Liberal Government, there was an effort to make sure that we regulate smarter. Part of the cost of Government is the number of people we have examining regulations, putting them into effect and enforcing them. Perhaps my colleague could comment on the cost to the Canadian taxpayer of regulations which may be inappropriate or out of date as Canada moves toward the end of the 20th century.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my Parliamentary Secretary makes a very valid observation with respect to the juxtaposition of regulatory reform in connection with the total fiscal and economic policy of this Government. A task force dealt with regulatory reform and looked at the wide ranging implications of regulations for Canada. It was pointed out by way of example—and this was the most conservative assertion possible on the basis of advice we received from experts in the field—that regulations impact on Canadians to the extent of some $30 billion. Consider that in the regulatory process there are some 35,000 public servants involved directly and, I suppose, indirectly. This means that a very large part of Government is involved in law-making behind the scenes. This has a very serious and wide-ranging effect on the daily lives of Canadians. Regulations cover food inspection, hazardous products, transportation, shipping and fisheries, to name a few, not to mention agriculture which is a matter of substantial importance to me, being from the Province of Saskatchewan. This gives you an idea of the wide range of activities affected by regulations which are not made on the floor of the House of Commons. They are created behind the scenes and promulgated in a conveyer belt process, as I said, by Cabinet.

What we are doing now is trying to bring some light to the process. It is absolutely essential, for example, that we enter into a process where all new regulations are measured against their social cost and cost efficiency so that a judgment can be made by the people involved in the political life of our country, including Members of Parliament, as to their validity.

I say this in all seriousness to the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). He has had some experience with regulations, as have I, in sitting for many years on that committee. If the people of Canada had an opportunity to look at this, they would be astounded and amazed just how much law and constraint on their activities is effected outside of this Chamber. There is a phenomenal amount of regulation of people taking place.

For example, the committee has been doing excellent work in examining whether or not officials are arbitrary; whether or not our freedoms are negatively affected by regulations; whether or not principles of natural justice are observed in the drawing up of regulations. These laws, and that is what they are, are drawn up in the bureaucracy without the same sort of scrutiny that laws in the statute books receive on the floor of this House. There are certainly no television cameras watching and no public discussion. It is done by people who have a responsibility but also a kind of self-interest with respect to the nature and form of regulations. In my view, the Parliamentary Secretary has highlighted the significance of this problem and the necessity for the Government to enter into a new regime of measuring what is being done regarding the economic welfare of Canadians.

I do not want to take any more time but I do want to reiterate that under this new regime Canadians are going to become, so far as the federal level is concerned, world leaders in regulatory reform. This is a very, very progressive initiative we are taking. I am very proud to be associated with it because I know the long history of this issue. I say this is a non-partisan sense. There has been a desire by all Parties to come to grips with the growing volume of regulation and make sure there is some rationale to the regulations which affect the daily lives of our fellow citizens so very much.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

[English]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to what the Government House Leader had to say about the initiatives he is taking in regulatory reform. I have remarks I want to make on the Budget, of course, but I welcome very much, and I think all Canadians should as well, what is being proposed by the Government House Leader concerning regulatory reform. We may be—and I say "may be" because I want to see what happens before I congratulate the Government—seeing a real breakthrough here in the way in which delegated legislation and other statutory instruments are handled. As chairman of the committee concerned, I appreciate his remarks about the nature of our work. It is dull, it does not get public attention even when egregious wrongdoing is found in the way in which regulations are processed, simply because they affect the rights of Canadians indirectly, not directly. However, that is important, too, and I appreciate a Government which indicates it intends to give priority to this issue.

Maybe we will see the same type of breakthrough here as we have seen in the new rules of this House. This Government can claim the credit for a substantial breakthrough in humanizing the rules of this House. I do not want to let members of the Government get away with taking that totally as a compliment because I think an element of enlightened opposition has been responsible for House reform. I do not think that in the last Parliament the Opposition was prepared to give the kind of co-operation which this Opposition is prepared to give.

Be that as it may, we have a lot to look forward to as Members of Parliament, and a lot to tell our constituents about ways in which their rights, direct and indirect, are being enhanced by reforms that may be under way in the House of Commons now. That does not take away the fact that the Minister, during the budget debate, did not spend any of his time talking about the Budget. I am entitled to draw from that the conclusion that I suggested in my question, which is that he is not prepared to defend a Budget which I want to put into the context in which it is seen by the people of York Centre and York North. They have watched a trend, since this Government took office, through two Budgets of tending to stratify the Canadian people ever more between those who are better off and those who are worse off. There is a developing sense in our country that it is a country of rich and poor, and not one where most people are in the middle class. It is interesting that 20 years ago when surveys were done most Canadians said they felt they were in the middle class in Canada. We had in our society a certain social cohesion. That social cohesion is being undermined now by two Budgets in a row, which have heightened the disparity between the rich and the poor and given Canadians the sense that the Government is fostering that type of disparity.

I want to put statistics on the record that show exactly that, that the impact of these two Budgets has been to make middle and lower-income Canadians worse off and to make well-to-do Canadians better off. I know that this is a concern of the Conservative Party because their chief statistician and analyst, Allan Gregg, has mentioned in interviews that he has given to the press that the Conservatives are worried that they are being seen as a Party which is devoted to enhancing the incomes of those better off, even if it means making the rest of the Canadian people, those in the middle and at the bottom, that much worse off.

Knowing that the Government has been given that advice by its chief strategist, I would have thought that this would be a Budget in which it would try to undo the damage that was done in the first Budget. For example, in that Budget it introduced an amazing tax relief in the area of capital gains. Those in a society who get capital gains do not have to pay taxes any more on the first $500,000 of capital gains. Capital gains are enjoyed by those who are better off. People in the middle and at the bottom do not get capital gains, except maybe on their house, which is already exempt under the existing tax laws. That was a clear benefit for people in this society who are better off. With the warning that they got as a Party about the impact that their fiscal policies was having on the class structure of Canadian society I thought they would retract that.

We found in this Budget that they added additional measures to help the rich and to make the poor worse off, because the Government's theory is, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said it in so many words, that there are not enough rich people in Canada. I took it from that that, if the Budgets were designed to make more rich people in Canada, they would be achieving what the Conservatives wanted to achieve through this mandate.

I want to deal with two concrete cases. A family which was earning, in 1984, $100,000 a year paid in tax $35,236. Now, under the Budget proposals, which we are debating now, combined with the Government's first Budget that was brought in in 1985, that $100,000-a-year family will be paying $34,450 in taxes by the year 1988. That family's tax load will decrease by $1,000 over the next three years. However, a family earning $20,000 a year—that is a family at the bottom or close to the middle—will find in the same period that its tax bill will have increased from $1,388 to $1,409 in the same period of time. In other words, the $100,000-a-year family under this Conservative Government gets its taxes cut; the $20,000-a-year family gets its taxes increased.

Let me look again at the two combined Budgets and their effect on a family of four with one wage earner earning $20,000 a year. As a result of those two Budgets that family's income tax will go up by $225, and the wage earner will pay an additional $300 in sales tax in addition to the income tax increase. I suggest that that kind of social result is unacceptable in the Budget. I know that a lot of members of the Conservative Party regard President Reagan in the United States as their great guru. Let me say this about President Reagan, he has a plan to attack the deficit, but his plan has never included tax increases at all, tax increases on the rich or tax increases on the poor. He is popular in the United States with his approach. In Canada you can understand the public reaction to the Conservative Government whose plan is to increase taxes but not to increase them on those who are better off but, rather to increase them on those in the middle and on those who are worse off.

I want to deal at length in the balance of my remarks with the question of gasoline prices. Gasoline prices are a very important item to the average Canadian family. People used to think that the price of gasoline was rather like a luxury, let us say like cigarettes, and that, if the federal or provincial Governments needed more money, gasoline was one of the discretionary spending areas where you could go—let people drive less. We have smartened up now in our understanding of the impact of gasoline prices on the living standard of Canadians and on inflation in general. For most people—and I am not talking here only about those in our great cities, I am talking about most people in most places in Canada—we find the car is an essential vehicle, even in our big cities. Mass transit in Canada is less transit in buses and subways than transit by car. Mass transportation in Canada is the automobile, because that is the way most people do travel. So we cannot look at gasoline prices as being a luxury item. In addition, gasoline is the fuel for most of the transportation of goods in Canadian society. When gasoline prices go up through tax increases, it is inevitable that food prices will go up, the cost of shelter will go up because of the transportation factor and its production, and all of these industries in the middle are part of the cost of living of the Canadian people. Gasoline prices have to be a matter of concern of the Government and of this Parliament because of that.

Finally, gasoline prices matter a lot because tourism is an important industry in this country. If gasoline prices are high, as they are now, when they are falling in other places in the world, that is a factor against one of the most important industries in our country, the tourism industry.

So having shown you how important gasoline prices are and how important it is that it be Government policy to moderate gasoline prices, I want to look at the record and examine what it is that is happening in gasoline prices, and what, in the submission of the Liberal Party and of our caucus here, should be happening.

Since this Government came to office, it increased the taxes on a litre of gasoline by 66 per cent. That is a very big increase, because the taxes are a high proportion of the price charged for gasoline. In 1984, federal and excise taxes on gasoline were 4.3 cents a litre. After this Budget, they are 7.12 cents a litre. That is a 66 per cent increase. While there was no increase in the excise tax in the last Budget, the general sales tax was increased by 1 per cent, and that applies to gasoline as well. That Budget, alone, saw a 0.3 cent a litre increase in the price of gasoline, which amounts to 1.3 cents a gallon.

In spite of the importance of gasoline to tourism, which I believe the Government acknowledges, it has looked to gasoline and targeted the price of gasoline as an area where taxes can be levied but not noticed by Canadians.

However, Canadians do notice these increases in a very interesting context. They are noticing it in the context of world prices that have fallen by more than 50 per cent since last December.

Last December, the international price of a barrel of oil was $22.50 U.S. The price of a barrel of oil has fallen to below $14 U.S. which is a decrease that is having an enormous impact on the energy sector. I will talk about the problems of that sector in a moment. Members of our Party have pointed out what must be done to keep the energy industry healthy and to ensure job increases and economic activity in Alberta and elsewhere.

Before dealing with the impact of falling oil prices on the energy sector, let me talk about its impact on my constituents who fill their gas tanks at the pump. The price decreases as a result of a 50 per cent drop in the world oil price has been so small that it is almost scandalous. Gasoline prices in Canada are not falling to reflect that drop in world oil prices although we see in the United States that the price of gasoline at the pump is falling rapidly.

The prices have not decreased partly because the Government is applying a substantial increase in taxes, but even when one takes that into account, there should be a decrease similar to what is taking place in the United States.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) tells us that we only need to wait for that drop in price to take place. She says that it takes 75 days for a decline in world oil prices to work its way through the storage tanks, through the vessels carrying the oil, through the refineries and through the consumer storage depots in our cities to get to the gas pumps. Therefore, it should also take 75 days in the United States for those price decreases to take effect. Why must my constituents wait for 75 days when these benefits are being realized much more quickly in the United States?

The answer is that in the United States there is a much higher degree of competition among gas retailers. Many of us have visited the United States as tourists and witnessed the competition that does not exist in Canada. For instance, gas stations charge lower prices to those who are prepared to pay cash and accept many different credit cards. There is much greater evidence of interest in the consumer and competition in the United States than in Canada.

I am not suggesting that the gasoline companies in Canada that run the majority of gas stations in this country are breaking the law or in a conspiracy. I do not have proof of that, but an investigation was conducted by the former Government and a report published explaining that this is not an industry in which competition works. The major oil companies are powerful and watch each other closely. Price leadership occurs, and when the reduction of 2 cents a litre took place a couple of weeks ago we saw how the other companies followed the lead of Imperial Oil.

The report to which I refer warned Canadians that steps needed to be taken to make the Canadian industry more competitive so that Canadians would benefit immediately from any breaks without any stalling by the companies. The former Government's solution to increased competition in Canada was the establishment of Petro-Canada. We wanted it to make money and operate much like an ordinary company except that it would be publicly owned. When the public interest requires it, we expect Petro-Canada to show some leadership in that industry.

In this environment of falling world oil prices when the Seven Sisters are trying to make as much money from this situation as possible by keeping prices high for as long as possible, Petro-Canada's role is obvious. It should begin to lower prices as a result of what is happening in the world.

Instead, we learn that Petro-Canada is being used as an instrument of the energy industry to keep prices high and rationalize the industry through non-competitive means so that the consumer will get as little and as late as possible. That is unacceptable.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was correct when he said that the Government has imposed sharp increases in taxes on Canadians.

His Party formed the Government of Canada for 30 of the last 36 years, from 1950 to 1986. In 1950, corporate taxes and personal incomes taxes brought in the same percentage of revenue to the Government. The Government has exacerbated this discrepancy.

Now, corporate taxes are about one-quarter of personal income taxes in Government revenue. This has not happened only since the Conservative Government but because corporation tax breaks got larger every year while the Liberals were in power. Where was he when his Government was allowing this?

I also point out to the Hon. Member that it was during his term of office that 250 people with incomes of more than $200,000 in the last year, for which we have records, did not pay a cent in personal income tax. It was his Government that permitted and encouraged this kind of unfair discrepancy. Where was he during those years?

The Hon. Member talked about lack of competition in the oil industry, which is reflected in the price that consumers pay at the pump. We have had reports about that lack of competition taking place for years while the Liberals were in power. He is correct that Petro-Canada should set an example, but there are other ways in which the oil companies could have been brought to task. They should have been charged and prosecuted under the competition laws, but the Liberal Government did not do it. Why?

Mr. Kaplan: Let me deal with the last point, Mr. Speaker, although I thought I had covered it in my remarks. I did not read that in that report for which the former Government asked and which it obtained. It showed the true nature of the gas retailing industry and the impact it had against the interests of consumers, but I did not read that report as outlining crimes for which the players in the gasoline retailing industry could be called to account. However, what it told us was that, without necessarily breaking the law, a situation had been produced in which there was a lot less competition. I know what the New Democratic Party would have done. It would have nationalized Imperial Oil or a whole bunch of the other players. That is the easy socialist solution, but it is not what the Liberals wanted to do.

Mr. Orlikow: You didn't do anything.

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member says we did not do anything, but we established a vehicle as a major player which was meant to keep the game honest. It was meant to be there, sticking up for us, the Canadian people who paid the taxes, which allowed that company to acquire all of its assets, Petrofina, a lot of these Gulf stations and a lot of other facilities across the country. We are the ones who put the money up for the company to do that.

What do we find now that we recognize a very specific situation where lack of competitiveness is hurting Canadian consumers? We find that Petro-Canada is on the other side and the Minister is proud to come to the House and tell us she told Petro-Canada to act like the other ones, not to try to do anything special to help its shareholders, who are the Canadian people. She told it to get together with the industry and act like the rest of them. Well, that is a perversion of the intention of Petro-Canada and it has left the Canadian people at the mercy of the energy players in a very non-competitive situation.

I know I do not have very much time but I do want to deal with the observation with respect to corporations contributing proportionately less and individuals contributing proportionately more over the years to the tax system. The fallacy of the New Democratic Party in making this criticism,—in viewing it as a criticism—is to think of the rich corporations as if they were rich people.

Mr. Orlikow: Should they not pay some taxes?

Mr. Kaplan: The corporations in society are not people, rich and poor, with needs and with wealth. The corporations belong to people.

Mr. Hovdebo: The courts treat them as people.

Mr. Orlikow: Why don't the banks pay taxes?

Mr. Kaplan: Well, I would like to answer that and the Hon. Member can certainly ask another question, but I want to try to enlighten—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member will be allowed a supplementary question, if he wishes. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: I am trying to explain the rationalization of the tax system which was recommended by a great hero of the NDP, the Carter Commission, that is, to try to place the burden of taxes on people with the ability to pay it. Behind those corporations are their owners and to the extent that taxes were shifted from corporations to individuals, the tax burden was shifted through the corporations of the rich people who own the valuable corporations. I think if the Hon. Member would look at the way in which the burden of tax was laid on individual taxpayers during that period, he will find that, contrary to what has happened since the last election, the shift has been that those with less ability to pay taxes are paying less and those with more ability to pay taxes are paying more.

I know there are a few individuals with large incomes who manage to work the system so they do not have to pay any taxes. We agree with the idea of the minimum tax so that the tax system cannot be played that way. I am a former tax lawyer. I know about the limits to which we can assist people with very high incomes to get away without having to pay any tax at all. It is not that easy and it was getting harder and harder each year until this election. Starting with the current election—and I put the figures on the record that show this—the purpose of the Government was not to try to place a heavier burden on those more able to pay. It was the reverse. It was to try to help the rich people in Canada get richer faster by paying less taxes and to ask those at the middle and at the bottom—contrary to what had been done by former Liberal Governments—to pay more of the tax burden.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member still has a couple of minutes for questions or comments.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) will pass along his concerns to the Liberal Government of Quebec about the high price of gas, because it puts some very high new taxes on gas. That is why the price of gas is so high in Ottawa. It is not going to be lowered here, because even if it is higher here than in other parts of Canada, people from Quebec still come here to buy gasoline.

I do not know why the Hon. Member did not mention the Liberal promise in the 1980 election that it was going to give the Canadian people cheap gas. After the Liberals and the NDP got together to support the National Energy Program, gas went up by $1.25 a gallon. The Canadian people had to fork out $1.1 billion to buy Petrofina, which was one of the poorest deals which has ever been forced upon the Canadian people. That deal is still under investigation by the Auditor General. And $1 million in legal fees went to some law firm in Switzerland that handled the Petrofina deal.

It is very interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who is so worried about high taxes. We have an NDP Government in Manitoba, a province which has the highest taxes in the country, but I do not hear any Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party talking about the high taxes in Manitoba.

Mr. Parry: That is rubbish.

Mr. McKenzie: Listen to them squeal and holler. Perhaps they will bring up the subject of high taxes in Manitoba some day. The reason we have high taxes in Canada is that we have to pay for all of our social programs which, between the provinces and the federal Government, amount to $62 billion a year. The United States has cheap gas but it does not have a cheap medical program. It has cheap alcohol and cheap tobacco because it does not have the social programs we do.

The 60 days is just about over for the oil companies. If the price of gas does not come down pretty quickly, you can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Members on this side will be up on their feet complaining and raising the very dickens with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) about the high cost of gas.

Mr. Parry: You haven't done it yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will give the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) an opportunity to rebut.

Mr. Kaplan: I know, and I believe the Canadian people know, that we do not get social programs for free. We have medicare here. They do not have that in the United States. We get to send our kids to university for much lower fees than people do in the United States. We know we do not get those things for free. The people in this country know they have to pay some taxes. My complaint is not about that, but about the way in which the burden is shared, the fact that the Government is letting rich people off the hook for these taxes and is asking people at the middle and at the bottom to pay more.

With respect to the 1980 promise of cheap gas—I am glad I have the opportunity to say a word about that—it is true that when the National Energy Program came into effect the price of gas jumped at the pumps. However, in the world market it jumped even more. When the Western Accord came in, the creature of this new Government, prices jumped, but when they fell in the United States, they continued to remain high here.

Mr. McKenzie: A lot of people went back to work in Alberta.

Mr. Kaplan: We can argue about $1 million fees, and so on, but it is undeniable that when the National Energy Program was on, Americans would come to our country to fill their tanks. They would come to Windsor and Vancouver to fill their tanks, and gas stations were growing in number. Now that we have the Western Accord—and this is also undeniable—Canadians are going to the United States to fil their tanks with gas. So much for who is being fair with the consumers.

In our day, Americans wanted to take advantage of the Canadian system. In this day, the Conservative day, Canadians are escaping to the United States to get a tank full of gas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated.

• (1210)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to say a few words with respect to the Budget. Since it has to be but a few words I will zero-in on its effects on agriculture.

The problems facing agriculture are well defined. I am sure there is not one person in the House or in the agricultural community who does not recognize what the problems are and even has some idea with respect to possible solutions. We know what is wrong with agriculture. I am sure that even farmer Wilson, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), knows what the problems facing agriculture are. The solution is fairly obvious. If we were to pay enough for commodities produced by farmers then we would not have the problems with which farmers are now concerned. This would make it possible for farmers to pay their debts. Unfortunately, in the Budget, or in any other approach to the problems facing farmers, the Government has not considered the issue of commodity prices.

Many people in the country would be willing to pay more for the products they use which they purchase from Canadian farmers, if they could be assured that the extra amount of money would go directly to farmers in order to assist in the survival of the family farm and the agricultural industry as a whole. We have investigated this suggestion. The National Farmers Union conducted a survey in food stores in Ottawa and found that most people buying groceries would be willing to pay more for those groceries if they knew that the extra money would go directly to the farmer.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), introduced a parity price Bill which would be a start to this end. What it suggests is that the people of Canada should pay at least the cost of production for products which come off Canadian farms. We recognize that it is impossible to demand prices which are above world prices from Japan, Algeria or Russia. That does not mean to say that we could not require the people of Canada to make some type of contribution to the farms of our country. What we are considering today is what the Budget has done for the farmer in support of agriculture.

The flagship of the agricultural aid program in the Budget is a commodity-based mortgage program. In that regard it is stated in the Budget Papers:

> The federal Government has directed the Farm Credit Corporation (FCC) to establish a $700 million loan program to make commodity-based mortgages available to existing FCC clients in need.

That is a very misleading statement. It sounds as if the Government has gone out and found another $700 million to put into agricultural support. That is not the case at all. What the Government will do is to take $700 million worth of loans which are already in place—money which farmers have already borrowed—and rewrite those loans at lower interest rates. That is of real value to those farmers who will receive such assistance. However, it will cost less than is suggested. In fact, it will cost much less than $700 million since it is not new money. It is money which is already in place. Farmers have already borrowed that amount of money. They will now be re-borrowing it at a lower rate of interest, that is, 6 per cent instead of 12⅜ per cent. However, there is a catch in that it is stated "Farm Credit Corporation clients in need".

Representatives of the Farm Credit Corporation tell us that is has approximately 26,500 clients in need who fall into three categories.

The first category is comprised of those farmers who have less than 15 per cent equity in their farms. There are 5,500 farmers in this category alone. They are technically insolvent. The Farm Credit Corporation will not do a thing for those farmers. The policy of the Corporation is not to throw good money after bad. Perhaps it is right in this regard.

The second group of farmers is comprised of those who have from 15 per cent to 40 per cent equity in their farms and who have a debt to asset ratio of approximately 67 per cent. This is the group at which the commodity-based mortgages is aimed. In this group there are 10,000 farmers who are clients of the FCC. Of those 10,000 farmers, approximately 6,000, or maybe even fewer, will receive some assistance. This is so because the FCC is targeting the next highest group which has less than 55 per cent equity.

The third group, which is also considered to be in financial difficulty, is that group composed of farmers who have between 40 per cent and 55 per cent equity. They will not likely receive a particularly large amount of assistance.

Apart from all that, the commodity-based mortgage is turning out to be a bit of a lottery. If a farmer decides he wants to enter this particular mortgage structure, what he will be doing is betting that if he pays 2 per cent more the prices of the commodities he selects will go up. On a $100,000 mortgage, that amounts to $20,000 which may be cut from the farmer's final payment. He is betting that against the fact that if commodity prices go down the FCC will pick up on some of his inability to pay.

I am not downgrading the experiment. I think it is a good idea to look at it and try to see how it will work. What it emphasizes is the fact that the Government is overlooking nine out of ten farmers who are in financial difficulty. There are some 60,000 farmers in Canada who face financial difficulties. This program might help 6,000 of them. In the process it will create an unfairness which will come back on the Farm Credit Corporation and discredit it much more than we would like to see as it is a very good structure.

The National Farmers Union issued a release in which it stated that the Budget's proposal to establish commodity-based mortgages at 6 per cent interest is a most useful proposal but is available only to Farm Credit Corporation clients in need and totally ignores farmers in trouble with other farm lending agencies. The union states that that confirms its suspicion that the Government really has no equitable national policy approach to deal with the most serious farm financial crisis to confront the country in 50 years.

That is a concern of farmers out there who are looking for some help. A very small portion of those farmers in trouble, those who are within a certain category because they are clients of the Farm Credit Corporation, are being given assistance, but those who borrowed money from other financial institutions are being ignored entirely. Although it is a good idea, it does not deal with the entire problem. The total farm debt at the moment is $21 billion. Of that amount, the FCC has about $4 billion out in long-term loans, and it is to rewrite $700 million, a very small portion of the total debt.

The second attempt by the Government to appease the farm crisis is the establishment of a farm debt review panel. On several occasions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that when the Government deals with the debt crisis faced by farmers, it would provide legislation with teeth. Instead, we are told that the panel will establish whether arrangements between farmers and their creditors are feasible and will aim to facilitate a voluntary arrangement between them. That has no teeth; in fact it is nothing but an opportunity for farmers to talk with their bankers and to have someone else present. That will not contribute to the solution of the debt problem.

Third, in the assistance to farmers there is the world transition program to help them get out of farming. Like the $500,000 capital gains exemption, it is assistance for them to get out of farming. There is nothing wrong with that, but one wonders how much value there would have been in assisting them to survive as farmers. The Minister of Education for Saskatchewan said recently in Regina that the Department of Agriculture recognized that some farmers would not be able to remain as farmers. I suppose we all recognize that, but the Government is gradually convincing the Canadian population that it does not need as many farms as there are at present. Before becoming Premier, the Premier of Saskatchewan said that one in three farmers had to disappear because they were uneconomic. Canadians do not want that number of farms to be reduced. The farm family life is a way of life. We want the Government to help us keep that way of life. The approach of the Government goes almost in exactly the opposite direction. It says that farms must be put on a basis where they can survive and, if they cannot survive, they must go. We do not pay them for the commodities they produce. We do not give them debt servicing which will help them survive.

I should like to refer to a couple of other items in the Budget. Some money will be given to tobacco farmers to remain in farming but to become involved in other crops. It is a very commendable program.

The final agricultural issue in the Budget is the fuel tax rebate. It is a very disappointing situation because Government Members have admitted, as have farmers across the country, that fuel has become a major cost. Any reduction in their input costs—fertilizers, chemicals, interest rates or fuel—could assist in their survival. The prairie pools, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, the National Farmers Union and others have pleaded with the Government to take some action to eliminate entirely the taxes on fuels used in the primary industries, particularly agriculture. Those taxes should be taken off and the cost of fuel should be reduced so that that cost will have a lesser impact upon the profits of farmers. "Profits" is an unusual word in the agricultural industry these days because very few farmers are making profits. They are trying to survive; that is what they are trying to do.

I should like to turn to what is not covered in the Budget. Rather than assisting the farm community, the Government is attacking it. There are small things such as the elimination of postal rural routes. Farmers in rural areas have had these routes for many years. Not only are these routes being eliminated, but when they go to town to pick up their mail they will now have to pay for their postal boxes. Instead of free farm delivery, they will have to drive 35 miles or 45 miles to town to pick up their mail and of course will have to pay a rental on their postal boxes. Let us compare that with the service provided to urban dwellers. They receive their mail at the door and they do not have to pay any rental for postal boxes.

The Government took some limited action to reduce interest rates, but it could have done more. It could have reduced unrealistic input costs, but it took no action at all in that area. It could have done something about low commodity prices, but it took no action at all. It could have eliminated the taxes on fuel. It has taken limited action in that it will continue to pay the three-cent rebate, but it has been increased much more than three cents in the same period of time. It could have increased the amount of money for research.

Turning to research, it is very surprising that the Minister and other Government Members suggested that research funds for agriculture were being increased. We on the Prairies have been told that at least 35 employees must be dropped and that there is a 4 per cent cut in the Budget. The total effect will be a reduction of several programs which we hoped would continue. We got negative action in the area of research, maybe at a time when we need more research in the farm community.

We got a little bit of action on farmers being able to get away from the farm. That, as I say, admits defeat to some extent, but I commend the Government for putting that effort in place. It is a humane approach to an inhumane operation on the part of financial institutions.

I could spend considerably more time on this topic, Mr. Speaker, but you have indicated that my time is almost up. If we had the time it would be interesting to see how the $225 billion in national debt was put in place. It was not done by the farmers. I know the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) would back that up. Farmers have contributed very little to the national debt.

The national debt came as a result of corporations not farmers. Yet the farmers are being asked to pay for it along with you and I and every other person in the country.

I would hope that all of this effort by ourselves and by the Government will lead to a more realistic look at what we can do with the deficit, how we can get rid of it and how we can get the economy back on track, making it possible for farmers to survive.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with one or two of the points made by the Hon. Member by way of comment and then ask the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) a question.

The Hon. Member seemed to indicate that the Progressive Conservative Government Canada is opposed to the family farm. That is completely wrong. There has been no Government in Ottawa that more strongly supports the family farm and realizes the necessity of keeping the family farm.

Second, there has been no Government that has tried to tackle the basic problem, the bottom line, of what is hurting our farmers today. If our farmers could secure a price for their product including the cost of production plus a reasonable profit there would be no need for any hand-outs or subsidies. The difficulty is that farming is the only industry that is unable to get its costs of production plus a reasonable profit.

When farmers have to sell below the price of production, obviously they will get into trouble. That is the root of the problem. That is why the Government is now searching for ways and means to provide the farmer with the opportunity of getting his cost of production plus a reasonable product.

The parity price program introduced by one of the Member's own colleagues never saw the light of day until our Government came into office. Now that program is being pursued. I believe there is some hope in parity prices for our farmers. That is only one thing we are doing.

I was astounded when the Hon. Member said that the capital gains exemption was an instrument to get people off the farm. That is not the purpose of the capital gains exemption at all. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert must recognize, and surely recognizes, that the land is the only nest-egg a farmer has. When a farmer spends 35, 40 or 45 years on the farm with his wife and family, part of his life is in that farm. When he wants to retire, unless he is able to get something for the nest-egg he has built up over a period of 35, 40 or 45 years, he is simply subjected to welfare.

The Government has seen the light. It has said that a farmer can now sell his land, get sufficient money for it, and that it will not take a big chunk from the proceeds, as the previous Government did. The farmer can sell his land and have the money on which to live for the rest of his life with his wife and family and also keep a reasonable standard of living.

The capital gains exemption is not to get people off the land. It is to treat those who have spent their lives in farming in a fair and honest way. Ours is the first Government that has recognized that point.

Let me come now to the issue of natural gas. The price of oil is coming down. I have not heard anyone in the Opposition mention the need to reduce the cost of fertilizer for farmers, yet natural gas is one of the major components of fertilizer. As gas comes down, we expect the fertilizer price to come down also, which will be a great help to the farmer because fertilizer is necessary for him.

I ask the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, who has a good knowledge of farming, why he says consistently that capital gains exemption is to get people off the land, when its real purpose is to reward those who have spend their lives farming the land.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I could not expect the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) to know it but the policy of a capital gains exemption for farmers and small business people has been part of New Democratic Party Policy for many years. We support it entirely in that sense for those people and for the same reasons as the Hon. Member for Bow River suggested.

My disappointment with the Government is that it picked those areas to give help allowing people to get off the farm rather than allowing people to survive on the farm. I have no question about the validity and support of his arguments.

I want to comment on a number of other things the Hon. Member said. Unfortunately, over the years, and I do not only put this Government in the category, Governments generally have given lip service to the family farm. I can criticize my own Governments in the provinces as well. Getting money to survive as a Government and not making money available for the family farm to survive seems to take precedence. Governments do not support family farms as well as they could.

I am glad to hear the Hon. Member for Bow River support the parity price idea. As he said, farming is becoming quite quickly the only part of the industry, the producer part of the agricultural industry, which is on a straight market system. Farmers put the product on the table and ask how much they will be given. We have to do something about that.

A fellow who builds a car finds out how much it will cost to build the car and then adds 100 per cent and says that this is how much he will charge for the car, and he gets away with it. We have the same thing with the oil companies, although now they are hurting a little bit. OPEC and Britain have decided to compete. Maybe that is the first sign of a true market system in the oil industry that we have had for many years. Britain and some of the other producers are being forced to compete with OPEC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter) have a short question or comment? The time for questions and comments has just about expired.

Mr. Porter: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a short comment in response to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I respect the views which he has expressed. His background in agriculture stands him in good stead. It is unfortunate that, in many cases, those who make the rules in this business do not have to play the game.

The Member made a number of comments with regard to the Budget and the changes which were implemented. The gas pricing which was to have expired has been extended. I realize the cost is still high, but a benefit of approximately $120 million for Canadian farmers is being continued. It has been indicated from time to time in the House that the capital gains tax exemption is a break for rich people who will receive all the benefits. I remind those who served in the former Government that when that tax was brought in it increased the price of farm land. When farm land was sold its price was increased by the amount of the capital gains tax. This resulted in the increased cost of farm land which we are paying today. We are paying for the high interest rates of the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Almost $1 of every $4 of agricultural income has come from one level of Government or another. While there has been limited action taken on the situation that the Government inherited, there were some steps taken in the Budget. With regard to input costs, commodity pricing, and research, more initiatives have been announced in the past 18 months than were in the previous 10 years of Government.

I would like to know in what areas the Hon. Member would have increased spending, by how much, and where those funds should have come from. Any money that is spent today must be taken from other programs.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, there are two areas in which it will not cost the Government to help farmers survive. The first is that of parity pricing. We could ask the people of Canada to pay a little more for Canadian products. The second area is the cost of inputs, which are out of hand. The Saskatchewan Conservative Government is looking into the costs of inputs. I know from my own experience that products such as the chemical treflan are selling for $140 in the United States and $210 in Canada. The patent on treflan expired three years ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. This is a great debate, but we will have to carry on.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I doubt that I can complete my 20-minute speech in the remaining 15 or 16 minutes, but I will commence. It is with great pleasure that I rise today in the House to participate in the budget debate. For the record, I heartily congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for staying the course toward cutting our deficit and bringing about economic prosperity in the country.

I have been travelling across the country, as I am sure many Members of Parliament have done since the introduction of the Budget. I returned to the House of Commons with a strong feeling of determination. The majority of the people across the country are saying that the Budget is tough medicine but it is long overdue. Many people do not really want to pay more taxes, but feel that if we do not do something about these problems now we will have a very tough future.

As a new Member of Parliament in the 33rd Parliament I learned that my constituents in Saskatoon East wanted more jobs, and that is one of the things which we continue to hear a lot about. I am pleased that we have made some headway in that direction, and indications are that we will continue to make excellent progress. My constituents wanted the Government to be managed more like they manage their households. People have a certain amount of money with which to budget in their households or small businesses, and they want the Government in Ottawa to manage within those same restraints. My constituents were looking for leadership, for someone who would set the course and stay on it. People want to have a goal set and then to move toward it. I will say a little more about that in a few minutes.

People wanted accountability to those who are paying the bills. They were tired of the blank-cheque approach taken by Ottawa. They wanted fair and honest consultation with the provinces, particularly on budgetary affairs, rather than a hidden agenda. They also wanted value for tax money collected. The recent decrease in expenditures by 70 per cent is a strong response to that. Finally, they wanted a Government which respected the people who elected it, truth about our finances, and respect for the tax dollar.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada did not want to have the wool pulled over their eyes. I suggest that this Budget is a continuation of that process which was started in November of 1984 and continued through the May Budget of 1985. The Government is calling things as they are in the country and facing up to the facts.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said last weekend that most people do not like the Budget. I would like to return to the House of Commons after the next election, not on a record of throwing money away, as has been done in the past, but on a record of responsible fiscal management of our money, the public service, and all the Crown agencies for which we have responsibility.

I would like to give you an historical perspective as to why Canada has this massive deficit. The red flags did not appear only a couple of years ago. They were there long before the present Government took power. The Glassco Royal Commission in the early 1960s began ringing the alarms about financial management by the federal Government. The commission reached inescapable conclusions of Government waste and inefficiency in the federal Government.

In 1976 the Auditor General, J. J. Macdonell, stated in his annual report that the Government had lost or was close to losing control of the public purse. Warnings were everywhere that a financial crisis was developing. While the Lambert Commission resulted in some reforms, the political will to quit spending taxpayers' money as if there was no tomorrow was still missing. In fact, every new idea was dealt with by spending millions of dollars. You name it, and the previous Government bought it or made it into a Crown corporation. I must say that that was great for those people who got on the bandwagon, but it was an unbearable burden for the taxpayers of Canada who had to pay the bills and face the mounting debt.

I would like to touch on the issue of Government control, particularly of Crown corporations. I think the previous Government threw too much money at problems which arose in those days. Twenty years ago there were only 28 Crown corporations in the country, and by 1984 the Liberals had created over 300 additional Crown interests. That means 300 bureaucracies, hundreds of personnel and accounting functions, communication staff, administrators and so on.

Back in the 1970s loan guarantees became the order of the day, for example, those given to de Havilland, Canadair, some trucking companies, hotels, bicycle and computer companies. What happened to those loan guarantees? We inherited them. We are now in the position of having to deal with them, and I will talk a little later about the disposal of some of those Crown corporations which are no longer performing a worthwhile function in this Government. As the Auditor-General stated in 1976, it was a Government out of control.

I happen to be Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. It is a non-partisan committee and we review many of the examples of mismanagement over the last five or ten years, many of which are still with us. One of the objectives of this Government, and I am sure it was an objective of the last Government, was to try harder to make the senior public servants manage smarter and much more efficiently.

What are some of the questions most commonly asked by Canadians today? This is very relevant to the Budget. First, they ask if they can trust the Government in what it is going to say and do. There is a lot of cynicism out there and there is good reason for it. Let me give you a couple of examples. The MacEachen Budget of 1981 forecast a deficit of about $10.5 billion. It ended up being $19 billion, more than $8.5 billion over the projected amount. The Lalonde Budget of 1983-84 projected a deficit of $29.6 billion. It ended up at $33.5 billion, about $4 billion over. Yes, it was getting better but it was still out of control.

Last week my friend, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), made an interesting point. He said that since the new Conservative Government came to Ottawa it created 23 per cent of the total deficit. A lot of the programs we inherited were statutory programs and they account for about 75 per cent to 80 per cent of this Government's expenditures. You can do nothing about those expenditures, they are fixed. However, if that is the way the Hon. Member wants to call it, I will gladly take responsibility, as I am sure this Government would, for the 23 per cent that we created, but they can be accountable for the other 77 per cent. Last year we said we were going to bring in a Budget with a deficit of $33.8 billion. That is precisely what it came in at. This is the beginning of setting a plan and sticking to the course.

Will this new Government give the country some consideration and leadership, particularly in its management and spending? In other words, people are saying we have to show them how we are different from the previous Liberal Government. I would like to give some examples which I think point this out very well. In 1984 the Government established a blueprint to get its house in order. There were three main points: Making Government more efficient; encouraging private initiatives; restoring private confidence. The Budget brought down a few days ago is not something new. It is all part of the game plan developed in November, 1984 and followed up in May of 1985. There is consistency and it goes back to what we said we were going to do when we came here in 1984.

Let me give you some examples of what I think makes us different from the previous Government. First of all, we have the Nielsen task force which has been doing a lot of work with public and private sector individuals. As you know, we will be receiving a report next Tuesday. I, for one, am very anxious to see what it is going to tell us. I suspect we will see an awful lot of overlapping in those programs. As my colleague, the Government House Leader, mentioned this morning, there will be regulatory reform and, in many cases, less regulation. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said that for the first time in the history of this country there would be incentives for senior public servants to manage prudently the taxpayers' dollars. A freeze on hiring and spending was announced a couple of weeks ago by the President of the Treasury Board. That will cut down on that last minute flood of spending which has been going on for years and years. There is a potential saving there of $6 billion. I would say that even the previous Government would be doing the same thing if it had the chance. We have seen the biggest cut in Government spending in the last 20 years announced in this Budget. Believe me, that is a major difference between us and the previous Government. Borrowing requirements are down by 25 per cent. That means we are seeing an economic recovery and we do not need to borrow as much money. Finally, there will be reduction in the Public Service of 15,000 person-years by 1990. That will be achieved through attrition wherever possible.

Can the deficit be reduced, Mr. Speaker, and is it being done fairly? We have been consistent in our belief that the deficit needs to be reduced and we need to get Government spending under control. Believe me, it took three very important ingredients. One was a lot of courage. Another was a lot of political will which we certainly have not seen much of here for many, many years. Finally, it took a lot of leadership. This Government has come to grips with the financial crisis which has been developing for the last 10 or 12 years. As a person said to me on a plane the other day, it is just about time we faced up to these issues.

Some measures to control the deficit in addition to the ones I mentioned previously have to do with the disposal of Crown corporations. De Havilland is the best example. Then we have a cost recovery program. As well, we have to hold our operating budget to a growth of 2 per cent, which is less than inflation. Going back to my conversation on the plane the other day, this person made a very interesting point. He said one of the reasons we are enjoying the high standards we have today is the fact that our grandparents and parents did not hand down to us a horrendous debt. As another lady said on Cross Country Check-up this past Sunday, her daughter is expecting a baby sometime in May. She said the minute her grandchild is born it will have a debt of about $8,200 hanging over its head. That was the thing she did not like and that is why she likes this particular Budget. It faces up to reality.

I see there are only a couple of minutes left before one o'clock. I would just like to say that for those people who are concerned about social programs, and certainly—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, may I say that the Hon. Member will have seven minutes plus question and comments when Orders of the Day are called.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, once again the President of the United States is spreading blatant lies about Nicaragua, and, in fact, has declared war on this small, struggling Central American country.

The American President does not want peace or democracy in Central America. He has refused to support the draft Contadora peace treaty. While the President labels the Sandanista Government a communist plot to subvert and attack its neighbours, not one of those neighbours agrees with him. The eight Contadora and support countries from Latin America have asked the President to stop funding the Contras and to support Contadora. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) goes to Washington on March 17, will he tell President Reagan to get his troops out of Central America and to put in some development money?

TAXES PAID BY WOMEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this Saturday, March 8, marks International Women's Day—an event which stems from the tragic death of women in sweat shops in New York City's garment district in 1908. As we enter the year following the United Nation's International Women's Decade, I think about families in Canada, about working women in Canada, single women who are supporting children, and elderly women living on fixed incomes.

As a result of the Government's Budgets, single women in Canada will need financial help because it is going to be tougher to get along. A single parent with two children earning $15,000 a year will pay $248 more in taxes in 1986. A retired single woman with an income of $10,000 will pay $160 more this year in taxes because of these Budgets. I do not believe this is a good start for women and families in Canada as we honour International Women's Day.

The Liberal party has implemented a number of measures for the benefit of Canadian women: family allowances; old age security pensions; the child tax credit; affirmative action programs; appointment of women to positions including that of Governor General and Justice of the Supreme Court, giving women access to training—

SITUATION OF ONTARIO FARMERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, never have so many been so disappointed as have Ontario farmers with the latest Conservative Budget. Their crisis is very real. As the Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation told the agricultural committee this week, the number of farm families in severe financial distress rose from 33,000 in 1984 to 39,000 as of last fall.

These farmers hoped desperately for three clear moves—the end of all farm fuel taxes, a significant cut in interest rates for farmers, and moves toward parity pricing. Yet the Budget failed these hard working producers. Only 6,000 will get some interest relief through the new FCC mortgage system.

The Government made no new move on farm fuel taxes. In 1984 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to end excise taxes on farm fuel.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

EMPLOYMENT PLANNING STRATEGY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, in 1984, the Conservative Government promised to create jobs. Last November, it tabled a strategy for economic renewal and job creation, and during the past fifteen months, the Government has followed its plan very closely.

Part of this strategy was to create programs that would provide workers with the training they need according to current and future labour market requirements. The Canadian Jobs Strategy was designed with this training and career concept in mind, as opposed to the previous emphasis on programs for temporary jobs.

We are starting to see the results, since 580,000 jobs have been created up to now. The unemployment rate has dropped from 11.7 per cent in September 1984 to the current 9.8 per cent. It is the first time in four years that unemployment has been less than 10 per cent.

In addition to creating new jobs, the Conservative Government has also controlled—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds!

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention before the House how pleased I am with the increased disability deduction for persons with severe cardio-respiratory failure, mental retardation, profound bilateral deafness and other serious disabilities. The 1986 Budget has increased the deduction by $250, thus bringing the total deduction to its new level of $2,860.

As a result of this Budget, a number of disabled Canadians will also be able to take advantage of the refundable federal sales tax credit, while items especially designed for guide dogs for the blind may now be imported duty free.

These measures will benefit more than 185,000 disabled Canadians and reflect the compassion shown by the Mulroney Government for the least fortunate in our society.

FAVOURABLE REACTION AND PUBLIC CONCERN ABOUT SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House today that the reaction to the Budget from my riding has been most favourable. My constituents realize that the Budget is a tough one but they are prepared, as are all Canadians, to share the responsibility for reducing the public debt.

They recognize that great progress has been made in the past 18 months toward the reduction of the deficit and the creation of new jobs.

Although unemployment is still a problem, my constituents appreciate the Government's continued support and encouragement for small business to create more new jobs.

However, at a public meeting held in my riding on Saturday, serious concern was expressed about the effectiveness of the Small Businesses Loans Act. They applaud the program and our initiative to expand the amount of the loan guarantees, but they also note that some bankers are not making these loans available to their customers. Access to financing at the bank's prime rate plus 1 per cent should be available to all qualifying small businesses so they can maximize their potential for growth and, at the same time, create new jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Sixty seconds.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

CONTRACT AWARDED TO UNITED STATES GOLD COIN CONSULTANT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, once again the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has displayed the business like manner in which it handles taxpayers' money, which we saw previously in the Habitat flip.

This time it is its handling of a consulting contract to a gold expert in the United States on how to market the Maple Leaf coin. The Royal Canadian Mint paid Mr. Morrie Sandler of Stanford, Connecticut, a consulting fee of $250,000 U.S., $50,000 U.S. in expenses, and an open-ended incentive bonus based on sales. When all of this is worked out, this gentleman received $480,000 Canadian in 1984, and $2.73 million Canadian in 1985. All of this was for part-time work.

This led a Canadian authority on gold bullion to exclaim: "How many people in the stock and bullion business have a $250,000 contract plus $50,000 in expenses and a guaranteed incentive? I know of very few".

A New York trader said: "The 1985 figures are shocking".

We on this side of the House are also shocked. The Government should hang its head in shame, considering what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF FEDERAL, PROVINCIAL, AND TERRITORIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, at a federal, provincial, and territorial meeting on March 3 and 4, the Ministers responsible for culture and historical resources met in the spirit of co-operation that has been the hallmark of the Government since September, 1984. Solutions relating to the present difficulties experienced by the Canadian film and book publishing sector were proposed, which make allowances for regional differences and diversities as well as provincial policies.

The conference, under the co-direction of our Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and Quebec's Deputy Premier and Cultural Affairs Minister, Lise Bacon, agreed to take steps to ensure that Canadian cultural products have better access to domestic markets and to reinforce the Canadian presence in the production, distribution, and marketing sectors.

To the doom and gloom merchants of the two Opposition Parties who accused the Government of selling our cultural sovereignty, I say that, on the contrary, we are strengthening our sovereignty over our cultural industries and will continue to do so.

APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN TO KEY JOBS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, during this special week for women, I would like to comment on the Government's record with respect to appointing women to key positions.

As far as principles go, Conservatives are sometimes hard to beat, but when it comes to action, the record is less than impressive. As an example, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a press release my office received yesterday morning: "The Minister of State (Physical Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Jelinek) announced that ten Canadian businessmen had agreed to sit on the Board of Directors of a new agency created by the Minister to increase financial support from the private sector for amateur sport."

You heard me correctly: ten businessmen and not a single woman!

Need I remind the Conservative Government that women are fed up with hollow promises? What we want, Mr. Speaker, is this: half of everything!

USE OF CERTAIN EPITHETS IN CHAMBER

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, further to yesterday's incident which affected more particularly my compatriot and political adversary, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), I want to say that as a member of the Italian community, I am opposed to such discriminatory remarks being addressed to Italian Canadians.

Nevertheless, I am sure that my colleagues and my party do not believe that all Italian sounding names mean the bearers of those names should be qualified as "mafiosos".

As was remarked recently in the House, I am positive that the comments of my hon. friend from Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) hardly reflected his thinking. We occasionally hear comments of this kind which have often become a conditioned reflex among the public, based on the number of social prejudices fed by false mythology and film fiction, and I am thinking here of "The Godfather". I am sure the incident is now closed.

INCOME TAX ACT

PART-TIME FARMERS—CALL FOR REPEAL OF SECTION 31

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign one of the major commitments made by the Conservatives was that Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, at the very least, would be reformed. This Section of the Act applies to those who are part time farmers, those who must work off the farm in order to sustain themselves financially. After a year and a half of the Conservatives being in office, nothing has been done. This was another promise made and another promise broken.

When the chief source of income is derived from farming, all business losses are deductible. When the chief source of income is not from farming, the restrictions of Section 31 apply which allow only a maximum deduction of some $5,000.

Given the enormous number of family farms in desperate financial condition and the low price many farmers receive for the commodities they produce, Section 31 becomes an additional penalty for many who have had to seek off-farm employment just to survive. If the Government has any interest in preserving family farms, especially in these current hard economic times, it will abolish Section 31.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the Budget is so good that even Jean Chrétien is going into private business. No doubt, others will follow. After the next federal election it is more than likely that Canadian voters will give all members of the Opposition the opportunity of joining Mr. Chrétien and becoming entrepreneurs.

Whether it likes it or not, the Opposition cannot change the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has presented a Budget which eases the burden on lower-income Canadians, while providing them with the benefit of an economy that is, after 20 years of neglect, once again starting to live up to its potential. Most important, small-businessmen in Canada finally have a solid financial footing which will allow their enterprises to grow, prosper, and create jobs. This is the kind of Budget that helps all Canadians, even opposition Members.

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government announced two very important programs for Atlantic Canada. The special $1 billion Atlantic Enterprise Program announced in the Budget will help companies in the Atlantic regions to lower their borrowing costs and provide them with special loan insurance.

The Atlantic Opportunities Program, announced by the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), will increase the amount of goods and services purchased from Atlantic Canada firms, identify and pursue opportunities for purchasing and subcontracting from Atlantic Canada which arise from large-scale procurements, and develop Atlantic Canada firms to respond competitively to federal purchasing needs.

The goal is to increase federal purchases from Atlantic Canada by $600 million over the next four years to a total of $2.2 billion. This increase will generate over 20,000 person-years of new employment, or an average of 5,000 jobs a year. And that is good news for Atlantic Canada.

APOLOGY FOR USE OF TERM "WELCHING"

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on February 26 I was exploring whether I had committed a racial slur when I accused the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) of "welching" on the people of Canada. I indicated that the Oxford Dictionary did not regard the expression "welch" as a pejorative but that Webster's Dictionary suggested that it was.

I would like now to refer to a very important authority, William Safire, who, in a recent article in The New York Times on February 23, took Webster's position. I, therefore, want to apologize to the House and to the Welsh-Canadian community for using that expression.

FORWARD-LOOKING STRATEGIES FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WOMEN

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to Canadian women during this International Women's Week. This is a time to look ahead at new challenges. All Hon. Members of this House recently received a copy of the Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the document adopted at the World Conference held last summer to mark the end of the UN Decade For Women.

This is a comprehensive and path-finding document. It includes practical guidelines to advance the status of women in all aspects of life, social, economic, legal, and cultural. Canada played a key role in seeing this document come into being and in ensuring its adoption by consensus. It is up to us all in this House to ensure that Canada leads the way in implementing these forward-looking strategies.

LEVEL OF TAXES PAID BY FAMILIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance, who are desperately trying to rescue a very weak Budget—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I hope she has recovered from her pulmonary problem of yesterday.

Why is it that a family with total revenues of $15,000 will pay 23 per cent more in taxes in the next four years, on the basis of forecasts and documents from the Department of Finance, while a family with total revenues of $200,000 will pay an increase of only 1 per cent more? Is that the Minister's interpretation of the Prime Minister's definition of fairness?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the fairness in the Budget is self-evident. The measures we have introduced for lower-income families are more than any Government has introduced for a long time. The sales tax refund, the child tax credit, and the child tax credit early payment direct our fairness measures exactly to where they are needed.

TAXES PAYABLE BY WIDOW WITH ANNUAL INCOME OF $10,000

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance why it is that the total taxes for an elderly widow living on $10,000 a year will rise by $160 this year. Does the Minister feel that this widow can find the money to pay that tax from her old age pension?

Mr. Gauthier: Is that fair?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, under this Government the taxes paid by people in low-income brackets have actually gone down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I suggest that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition take another look.

DIVISION OF FISCAL BURDEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, after this frankly incredible answer. A widow, living alone on $10,000 per year, will have to pay $160 more, while according to the Financial Post, an individual earning $150,000 a year will pay $3,500 less in taxes next year than he did in 1984. Is that fair, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): The whole Budget is fair, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

In our continuing package, including the economic statement and two Budgets, we have closed more tax loopholes for the rich, tax loopholes which were created by the former Government. People in high-income brackets are the ones who will pay the tax on the dividend tax credit. They will pay the tax because we have done away with income splitting.

CHILD TAX CREDIT—SITUATION OF CERTAIN FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Referring to the fairness of the Budget, she bragged about the merits of the child tax credit prepayment. Can the Minister explain the fact that her Government has completely ignored the 538,000 families which get the full child tax credit and will not be eligible for the $300 prepayment? How is it that her own Government has chosen to ignore them, the majority being single-parent families headed by women?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am truly amazed by the comments made by members of the Opposition with respect to our Budget. Yesterday they said: "Freeze spending". They said: "Don't raise taxes. Spend more on foreign aid, regional development, and research councils". At the same time the interest payment on their debt is up by $2 billion. Where would they like us to increase the fairness in the Budget? Do they want us to cut social programs? Is that what they are looking for?

INQUIRY WHY FAMILY WITH INCOME OF $16,000 IS PENALIZED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know how the Minister can claim that the Budget is fair, yet a family of four with an income of $16,000 will be penalized—being uneligible for the prepayment—and will be forced to deal with tax discounters. How come a family with a $16,000 income is penalized?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am truly amazed. I point out to the Hon. Member that last year under this Government disposable income, the amount of money which Canadian families have in their pockets to spend after taxes, went up substantially.

PROPOSED BUSINESS TRANSFER TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. She will know that, as a result of her Government's policies since assuming office, it has cost the average Canadian family $1,305 in additional taxes and charges. Today we learn that the Government plans to introduce a value added tax, or a business transfer tax. If the Government plans to introduce one of these two forms of new tax, which will result in a new tax system or a new bureaucracy, will the Minister guarantee the people of Canada that it is not a sneaky way to impose more taxes on an already over-taxed Canadian public?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know which is worse—hypocrisy or hysteria. In his budget address to the House, the Minister of Finance said that he would be reviewing the basis of the federal sales tax by way of a discussion paper on what I believe he referred to as a business transfer tax. There is nothing hidden about it. He says there will be a paper out there, and we will be listening to everyone who wants to comment on it at the appropriate time.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister whether this new form of taxation would result in additional taxes on top of the $1,305. Will the Minister guarantee that this will be a revenue neutral tax, that it will be a broadening of the tax system or a new system, but that she will not impose new taxes on top of existing tax bases?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the sales tax system which we have now has presented some difficulties. Lord knows, he has pointed them out often enough. We have said that we will try to improve the system with a discussion paper which will be issued later in the year. I suggest the Hon. Member make his comments on it at that time.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I will certainly make comments at the time. My question is a very critical one, when there is a concern that people are now overtaxed. Will the Minister not rise in her place and tell the people of Canada and Members of the House that the Government does not plan to add more and more taxes as a result of a value added tax or a business transfer tax?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, what we are telling the Canadian people is that our tax system is going to be fair, as it is now.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mrs. McDougall: We have introduced more fairness measures than any other Government. We are getting control of the deficit. That will bring down interest rates for ordinary Canadians. We will continue to review and improve the tax system as we have done already.

ENERGY

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister's market sensitive system is a disaster. Consumers have received practically no benefit from falling world oil prices. The industry is in such a state of uncertainty that it is going to ask the Government to scrap deregulation and to step in and save it from collapse. When will the Government step in?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised that the Hon. Member would ask that question. The last time the Government stepped in, it created the National Energy Program which devastated the western economy.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, to use the Minister's own words, she said that such low prices would be "catastrophic" for the industry. What is she planning to do about the catastrophe facing the industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite important that the Hon. Member not add to the hysteria which his Party is generating at this time. If he is referring to the volatility in oil prices, may I point out, as Premier Getty and others have pointed out, that this is a price war. Prices are very volatile, and we do not know where they will stabilize.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Supplemental to that last question, Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister not required the 10 cent per litre reduction at the pump which ought to have flowed through because Canadian crude oil has decreased from $37 a barrel since December to today's price in Canadian funds of $18 a barrel? Why has the Minister not required that 10 cent a litre reduction at the pumps?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I noted with great interest that my hon. friend across the way was on television last night advocating that we should be increasing prices to producers and reducing prices to consumers. If that is the kind of fantasy land the Member is living in, I wish him well.

Mr. Crosbie: Fantasy Island.

ADMINISTERED PRICE SUGGESTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister agree that it is possible to give the motorist a real break also to save the jobs in the industry by considering an administrated price for oil?

Why is the Minister sitting over there fiddling when both the motorist and the Province of Alberta right now are burning?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member feels that the industry would prefer a choice between his policies and our policies, he should know that the policies that would be chosen are ours.

Mr. Waddell: That is not what we hear these days.

Mr. Deans: We will see all those oil rigs leaving Canada again.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are not going to go to Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, Members and House Leaders.

REDUCTION IN OIL PRICES—ATTITUDE OF MULTINATIONAL OIL COMPANIES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question as well is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Oil prices have gone down 60 per cent in the past four months, from $30 to $12 U.S. a barrel. Consumers in the United States have long since been benefiting from this reduction, yet in Canada the decrease has been a mere 2 cents a litre.

Here is my question to the Minister: Can she explain why the multinationals have passed the lower international prices on to American consumers, yet those same companies do not appear anxious to pass the same savings on to Canadian drivers?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand where the Hon. Member gets his figures. He said the drop had occurred in the last four months, let us say back to November.

The figures I have for the official crude oil price, average Canadian posted, for November are $27.95 U.S., and for January 28 $20 U.S.

I think, as I have explained to the Member before, that part of that decrease which occurred really toward the end of January has already been passed through, and we expect the rest of it to be passed through in a few weeks time.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, as they say in boxing, keep an eye on the referee, somebody is throwing punches somewhere.

All newspapers report that the international price of a barrel of oil is down to $12, television, the media—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Thank you.

Mr. Garneau: Here is my question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Is it the policy of the Tory Government to have the Canadian consumer pay a higher price for gas and oil than the international price? Is this the policy of the Government?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think what I really should do for the benefit of Hon. Members is to give more information about the way the international oil market works.

The price of the Hon. Member is using of $12 is the spot Brent price in the North Sea, which is offered but not necessarily accepted for future delivery. That price which the Member talks about is for some load of oil that will be delivered weeks or months in the future, which then has to be transported, refined, processed, stored, distributed, and sent to the pumps.

The price that Canadians oil is currently posted at is around the $22, $21 range U.S. That is the price to which he should be referring.

SHIPBUILDING

PLACEMENT OF CN MARINE FERRY ORDER

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In November 1984 the Minister of Transport stood in his place in the House and promised that CN Marine would place orders for several vessels, including a second state-of-the-art ferry, with Canadian yards. Will the Minister rise in his place in the House today and assure 700 angry workers, who feel left out in the cold by the Government, that CN Marine will forthwith place orders for this second state-of-the-art ferry with their yard?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has indicated, the shipbuilding industry in Canada is presently going through a very difficult time. We know that the yard to which he referred has perhaps been impacted upon more than other yards. However, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member and other Members of the House that the Government has been in the past, and continues to be, the main purchasing agent for work at shipyards. Government procurement is the main source of activity in Canadian shipyards, and we intend to continue that type of sourcing.

LAUZON SHIPYARD

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister promise the contract to the angry workers at Lauzon?

Mr. Malépart: Yes or no.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned the workers at Lauzon to whom the Hon. Member refers—

Mr. Malépart: Yes or no?

Mr. Stevens: The Hon. Member says "yes or no". He obviously did not understand the nature of the question. This is quite a complicated matter. I suggest that that shows how the Opposition deals very frivolously with a very serious question.

PUBLIC WORKS

PREFERENCE TO FINANCIAL BACKERS OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY IN AWARDING GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the contract policies of the Department of Public Works and is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Prime Minister.

I have here a letter from the office of the Hon. Member for Québec East about a policy for giving preferential treatment to financial backers of the Conservative Party when letting Government contracts, a matter involving one million dollars per year.

Why does the Government let taxpayer's money be used to promote, assist and even reward the friends of the Conservatives?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government is doing nothing of the kind. I am aware of the media reports with respect to the letter referred to by the hon. gentleman. Upon his return from being out of the country, the Hon. Member for Quebec East immediately sent an apology to the Prime Minister for the erroneous information which went out of his office in his absence. Further, he sent to each and every—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How long a trip was it?

Mr. Nielsen: Further, he has sent—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When is he coming back?

Mr. Nielsen: Further, he has sent, to each and every recipient of the original letter, an apology for the erroneous information therein contained. He has, in addition, set forth the correct procedure for the letting of contracts by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the deathbed repentance letter which was sent.

ROBERGE COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): According to reports, the Member for Quebec East is not only a member of that caucus, but a member of the Roberge committee on patronage—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member made two statements in his first question. Will he come immediately to the question?

Mr. Boudria: Why is the Government sanctioning this kind of activity by allowing this Member to sit on the Roberge patronage committee?

[Translation]

And why didn't the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister immediately demand the resignation of the Hon. Member for Quebec East?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. gentleman has said is totally misleading and incorrect. He has admitted that he is aware of the apology which was extended by the Member for Quebec East acknowledging the mistake he had made and setting out the correct procedure to all of those who received the original letter. All of us make mistakes, Mr. Speaker, even the Hon. Member who put the question.

ELIMINATION OF INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT—EFFECT ON FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As everyone knows, this Budget means taxes, taxes, taxes. We have just discovered in the Budget Papers a hidden tax on the farm families of the country.

Is the Minister of Agriculture aware that the elimination of the investment tax credit for farmers means that Canadian farmers will have to pay an extra $150 million per year, of which Saskatchewan farmers will have to pay an extra $50 million per year? What influence did he have with the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Deans: None, I assume.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was very cautious not to acknowledge the fact that in the Budget, in addition to the long list of special measures which the Government has directed to the agricultural industry, the Minister of Finance has provided additional support exceeding $400 million over the next two years. The Member very carefully avoided asking that question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want an answer. Is the Minister of Agriculture aware that by eliminating the investment tax credit for farmers there will be a 50 per cent increase in federal tax payable by the farmers of the country? Is he aware of that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the Hon. Member's interpretation of the Budget that he has not recognized the changes which took place in Canadian agriculture from 1981 until 1985. He is not looking into the future to 1986.

Mr. Rodriguez: Answer the question.

Mr. Wise: The investment tax credit certainly had a purpose when it was in place. However, I have talked to farmers across the country, and to accountants working for farmers. The message I receive from them is loud and clear—

Mr. Speaker: This is becoming long. Order, please.

Mr. Deans: The more you talk, the less convincing you are.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT AWARDED TO UNITED STATES CITIZEN

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Yesterday's Citizen reported that a two-year contract had been signed in February 1984 by the previous Government with an American who was paid exorbitant fees for his services in marketing a Canadian gold coin. Does the Minister intend to investigate the matter, since this person is under contract to other Governments and since according to a Canadian bank, experts were available in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this particular individual is a New York broker who is working for other Governments as well as that of Canada. He signed a contract with the Canadian Government on February 1, 1984. There have been some media reports that he has done very well by the contract. We have to acknowledge that he has done so. In hindsight, we probably would not have signed the same contract today, but giving him all the credit to which he is entitled, he has done very well. He has increased the share of Canadian gold bullion from 22 per cent of the market to 64 per cent.

LETTING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is with regard to the letter from the Member for Quebec East which the Deputy Prime Minister asks us to believe was a mistake which was corrected. As long ago as the fall of 1984 the Prime Minister admitted that the Roberge group exists, that the Member for Quebec East is a part of it, and that he, the Prime Minister, consults that group from time to time.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to let a committee of this place review the work of the Roberge commission, which advises the Government after its weekly meetings, in order to learn how it operates, what recommendations it has made, how they have been made, and what the real role of that letter is?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to inform the Hon. Member and the House that contracts under $30,000 are let under Treasury Board guidelines established by the previous administration. I suggest that the present administration is just as pure, or maybe a little more so, than that of the last 16 years.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary. Very short. Immediately.

INQUIRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Attorney General. Has he reviewed this letter and the practice of this committee in light of Section 110 of the Criminal Code which deals with shakedowns by officials of the business community?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's first question was very lengthy. That is why I asked him to be very brief with this one.

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I heard the explanation of the Deputy Prime Minister. I am quite satisfied with it and I do not understand why the hon. gentleman would not be.

Mr. Henderson: You have to be, John.

SITUATION OF FARM WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Government's lack of effective economic assistance for farmers has forced farm women to carry an unbearable triple workload. What has the Government done in the Budget to relieve farm women from having to be a full-time farmer, home maker, and off-the-farm worker in order to make ends meet?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. This Minister and this Government certainly recognize the tremendous contribution made to the agri-food industry by the women of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: I hope the Hon. Member would give us credit for establishing, for the first time, the Family Farm Focus Program. I am meeting with the leaders of farming women's groups very shortly to establish a program of this kind. I hope the Hon. Member would recognize that this Budget, in co-operation with my colleague—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

CHILD CARE INQUIRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is meeting with farm women will he ask them what their feelings are about child care? Will he explain to them why the Government has nothing in the Budget for child care which is desperately needed by farm men and women?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member recognizes there are certain special needs. Facilities now available in urban areas are not universally present in rural Canada at the moment. That will be a high priority item in the meetings I expect to have with these leaders across the country very shortly.

PORNOGRAPHY

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE'S DEFINITION OF OBSCENE AND PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs made a number of recommendations in its report in 1978, as did the Badgley Committee Report on sexual abuse of children, and the Fraser Committee Report on pornography and prostitution. When will the Minister take the courageous step, which previous Liberal Governments failed to take, and introduce important legislation which will respond to those recommendations, and amend Section 159 of the Criminal Code to define what is deemed to be obscene and pornographic?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the failure to act in previous years was deplorable. I am sure we will have considerable support from the Official Opposition to make up for that failure when we introduce proposals, which will certainly be in the House during the month of April, to tackle this very important issue. This area of the laws of Canada needs to be reformed and tightened up.

FUTURE OF QUEBEC SHIPBUILDING YARDS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister knows perfectly well that hundreds of workers are out in the cold. They have come from Lauzon at Versatile Davie to get an answer they have been waiting for months, and the question is whether their shipyard will benefit from the contract for building a second ferry for CN Marine. I would like to ask the Minister whether he can give the House the assurance he is going to do everything he can to ensure these people receive justice.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I hope there is no question that I will do everything possible to ensure these workers receive what he calls justice. I personally have met with representatives of the companies, unions, and provincial authorities concerning this matter. Hopefully we are all going to be able to come up with a solution so as to ensure the continued viability of shipyards in Canada, in particular the Davie shipyard. That is our objective.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S ANSWER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted the Minister is so forthcoming. I would therefore ask him to clarify his answer and explain whether giving them justice means that they will have a shipbuilding contract or whether it simply means they will be taken for a ride.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the contract he refers to is, of course, one way of trying to relieve the situation in that shipyard. However, I would emphasize once again that this Government has managed to keep our shipyards working to date by procuring virtually 90 per cent of the ships constructed in Canadian shipyards. Surely that is a tremendous contribution on the part of the people and Government of Canada to ensure continued jobs for those workers.

Mr. Garneau: You did not answer the question, though.

PLIGHT OF FARMERS IN FINANCIAL DIFFICULTY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The centrepiece in the Budget for farmers is the commodity-based loan program. The Minister knows there are about 60,000 Canadian farmers in financial difficulty. The Government loan lottery will help about 6,000 of those farmers. What does the Minister propose in the way of help for the other 55,000 farmers who are in financial difficulty?

Mr. Fulton: Higher taxes.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing concern for the financial plight of farmers. However, I think he has to recognize that this Government, to this point in time, has taken over 195 initiatives which have provided over $4 billion for farmers. That is a pretty significant contribution. This Budget, as I indicated earlier, takes additional measures which provide over $400 million. Indeed, there are other components which will, for the first time, recognize the reality of the situation.

DEBT REVIEW LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Minister is abandoning those farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hovdebo: Can he tell us what happened to his promise to the farmers to bring forward debt review legislation with real teeth to deal with farm creditors?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, nothing has happened to it. If he listened to the Minister of Finance the night he presented his Budget, he would know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be bringing forward debt review legislation.

Mr. Hovdebo: With no teeth.

Mr. Wise: There will be teeth in it, just wait and see.

Mr. Rodriguez: Stop gumming around.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CHILDREN

PASSPORT ORDER TO HELP PREVENT ABDUCTIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday there was a news report to the effect that he was going to make some changes in the passport rules to help prevent child abduction by separated and divorced parents. Was that report correct and, if so, what changes does he intend to make?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there are no changes necessary at present because since 1981 the Canadian Passport Order has been in effect. Unfortunately, a good percentage of the cases where children are abducted involve estranged parents where the child is used as a weapon. As a result, the Government passed the Canadian Passport Order which requires that, in cases where there is a court order affecting movement of children, no passport will be issued in contravention of that order. As well, where custody has been awarded to one parent or where visiting rights are affected, that parent must sign off on any attempt to include the child on the other parent's passport.

Does the Minister believe that the Government's policy on youth should include support for the political efforts of the youth organizations of the Progressive Conservative Party, and that this should be one of the Government's priorities for its election platform?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): This Government's policy is to create jobs for young people, to ensure they will have a future, to ensure they will have a say in how things are run and a place in society. And that is what we have done. We created over 5,000 jobs a month since we came

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): I have no idea to which letter the Hon. Member is referring. I would very much like to see it. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RELEASE OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. I have examined her answers yesterday with respect to the invasion of privacy by Peat Marwick and I want to ask her the following question. Is she admitting that her personal staff were not familiar with Section 114 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which expressly forbids the release of confidential information without her consent? Is that the level of competence in her office?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising this question again. I want to tell him and the House that I have now received a preliminary response to the investigation that I requested. I find that proper procedures were not followed and, therefore, I have taken the following action. I have recalled all the information from Peat Marwick; I have undertaken and directed the Department that this not happen again, and I have directed the Deputy Minister to put in place procedures to ensure that it will not happen again.

ROLE PLAYED BY MINISTERIAL STAFF

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister has taken that action. I would like to ask her whether the investigation that was conducted also examined the role played in this matter by the people in her office and herself, the diligence which they applied, and their familiarity with the provisions in the Act. Were they investigated as well?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is a full investigation going on. I have given a preliminary report. I said yesterday that I did not know of the details of this survey or, indeed, of a number of surveys which are carried out. I may say that applies to my staff as well. I would say to the Hon. Member that the reason I am looking at this in detail is to look at where it has been in past years, what has happened under previous administrations, and how we come to grips with something that has not been carried out properly.

FORESTRY

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. As the Minister is aware there was a great deal of fanfare in the U.S. Senate about Canadian softwood lumber exports last week. Thanks to the efforts of our forest industry and workers, the arguments on subsidy and stumpage seem to be waning. However, the determination on quotas and reducing Canadian penetration of the U.S. market is rising dangerously. Does the Minister feel that the talks presently being held between the Canadian and U.S. Governments are moving toward an acceptable conclusion on lumber?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we share the concern of all Hon. Members in this House and the industry in general about the protectionist sentiments that are so rampant in the United States. We have worked very closely with industry, very closely with the provinces, in terms of dealing with the sectors there that would normally be supportive of Canadian interests, and with their own Congressmen to make sure our story is told. We will continue to do that. In fact there are presently ongoing negotiations with the interests in the States. They have visited our sites here. We feel, and of course this is concurred in by the ITC, that there are no undue subsidies at all given by the Canadian Government or any Government.

UNITED STATES SENATOR'S LETTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we know there have been a lot of bold threats and blackmail regarding the lumber issue, but I would like to ask the Minister what he thinks Senator McClure meant when he wrote to me last week and said:

> Talks between your government and mine on this issue do not appear to be moving toward any acceptable conclusion.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, it is reasonable to assume that some of those people, the Congressmen who have forest products industries in their own ridings and who are up for re-election, would undertake to protect them against what they perceive to be injustices. Naturally, they are entitled to their own opinion. It is the opinion of the industry in this country and of the Government that we are not providing any undue assistance to our forest products industries.

EFFECT OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS ON SINGLE-PARENT FAMILIES HEADED BY WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Finance). Forty-five per cent of Canadian single-parent families headed by women live below the threshold of poverty. I wish the Minister would explain to us why they put a ceiling of $15,000 with respect to measures aimed at the most destitute families, yet that ceiling happens to be below the threshold of poverty for many families, and women are particularly affected by this?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is always a difficult decision, as I am sure the Hon. Member knows, to discover what is precisely the right point at which to create or cut off a payment. The Government has been targeting our policies to those most in need. We would always like to be able to do more, but given the state of our economy at the moment we are very pleased that we have been able to help people at the bottom end of the scale, which we feel is where it is most deserved.

FUTURE OUTLOOK

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The families that most need it now are necessarily single-parent families, so I would like the Minister to tell us what other bad news the Government has in store for single-parent families concerning the reform of social expenditures which the Minister of Finance mentioned in his Budget.

[English]

An Hon. Member: That is a good question.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a bit of a hypothetical question. This Government has a good record for fairness and a good record for compassion for people with real needs. The people of Canada will see that continue.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The Rural and Native Housing Program has created several problems in the constituency that I represent. In light of the recent agreement that has been signed with the Province of Ontario, can the Minister assure this House and my constituents that there will be consultation and participation by Members of Parliament, as well as municipal and local representatives, before implementing any further rural and native housing programs?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, through the consultation process consultations were held with several groups. I recognize the contribution made by the Hon. Member in pointing out some of the difficulties with the Rural and Native Housing Program. I have had discussions with the Native Council of Canada, with OMNSIA, and I can inform the Hon. Member that there will be consultation between the federal agency, CMHC, the municipalities, and the groups to which rural and native housing provides a much needed program.

YOUTH

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. How can youth and the public have any trust in this Minister in face and the sad scenario that was highlighted in the Senate report on youth, which underscored the serious mental state of this growing lost generation, with suicide as the second highest cause of death? In light of this, how could the Minister cut down on the budget to the youth Department and literally cut out the voice of youth at the cabinet table in this way?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it has always been the practice in Main Estimates to include the expenses for activities within the Ministry that fall under the Ministry of State under the Department in which that has been placed. So there has been no cut there.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I find that a totally unacceptable answer.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. In the face of that travesty how can the Minister, who says she cares about youth, perpetuate this tragedy by staying in the Cabinet with no responsibility and no budget? How can you stay there?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, for a Liberal, perhaps having something to say in Cabinet means having money, but in this Government it does not.

We in this Government are creating jobs and giving hope for the future to young Canadians who had no hope whatsoever under that Government. We are continuing this, and if the Opposition are serious about getting on with the business of building Canada for young Canadians, they should get together and vote for the Budget and Main Estimates today so that we can get on with the business of building Canada for the young people of Canada.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED SLUR AGAINST MEMBER FOR BOURASSA—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Last Monday, March 3, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) raised a question of privilege concerning certain remarks allegedly made by the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) during Question Period.

I checked the official report since then and was unable to find that any such remarks could be attributed to either Hon. Members.

[English]

First, I must say that there is no prima facie question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi); there might have been, at the time of the alleged incident, a matter of order but as the alleged remarks are not in any way that I can find a part of the public record and would therefore appear to be a private conversation not heard by the Chair and the House as a whole, one can hardly claim that disorder occurred in the House as a result of the said remarks.

The basic principle behind a question of privilege or a point of order is that it must be related to a proceeding in the House of Commons. It would be difficult to find that a private conversation—Members know that hundreds occur here every day—of which the House is unaware constitutes a proceeding under the rules.

Mr. Rossi: He still said it.

POINT OF ORDER

ERROR IN BILL INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, one of the Bills which I introduced yesterday has an error in law and the Law Clerk is drafting a replacement for it. I just wanted to give you notice.

I will be unavailable to reintroduce the Bill for a couple of days but at the appropriate moment I will provide the proper drafting for the Bill regarding political rights for public employees.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the Hon. Member is saying that his Bill appears to be out of order.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: My dilemma is that I must know whether it is, in his view or the Law Clerk's view, a substantive matter or typographical matter. Perhaps he could advise me later.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED SLUR AGAINST MEMBER FOR BOURASSA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, following your decision on the question of privilege, I simply want to remind you of some incidents which can occur and do occur in the House occasionally when the media overhears conversations. I am thinking of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the day a Minister made a comment which was not heard by you or recorded by Hansard but was heard by the press and it became a question of privilege about slandering a Member of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He said it in the public, in the press.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has indicated, as best it can, what the Chair has been able to find as evidence.

Mr. Gauthier: On record.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has ruled. If the Hon. Member wishes the Chair to consider some other matter or some other way of coping with this matter, it welcomes his representatino for future application.

Mr. Rossi: He still said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rossi: We won't stand for that. The Italian community won't stand for that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) will come to order immediately. Let it be clear that the Chair in no way condones unparliamentary language but it must deal with these matters on the basis of what it has before it. That is all the Chair can do.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is rising to continue his point of order—order, please.

Mr. Rossi: I am just trying to say something to Joe.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa will please, with respect, come to order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rossi: My origins have been attacked and he is joking about it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) will stay in order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I stayed in order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena is attempting to continue a point of order. I cannot allow that. I suggest that he may want to consult the Chair about his procedural remedies. The Hon. Member for Skeena could simply deal with this elsewhere because there is a way in which to deal with it.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I understand that you have made a ruling and I will not comment on it. However, it is also the duty of the Chair to ask Members to refrain from pursuing a debate even though they now know they can attack each other and that it will not be reported. The ongoing conversation that we heard here should also be brought to your attention—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is attempting to comment on a ruling. He may wish to check Erskine May about the difference between private proceedings and the proceedings of the House. He may also wish to check Erskine May and its precedents with regard to matters and remedies that are—

Mr. Prud'homme: I know.

Mr. Speaker: If he knows that, what is he doing?

Mr. Prud'homme: But you should ask them to refrain.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis come to order? The Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) will come to order as well.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is exactly what we want.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis will stay in order or he will push the Chair beyond its limits.

Mr. Prud'homme: But—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis button up?

Mr. Prud'homme: No, that is not the way to talk. Now I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis—

Mr. Prud'homme: You are making the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a situation that is difficult for everyone, including the Chair. I repeat to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis that he and other Members may wish to read Erskine May on this matter with respect to the rules and references for Members with regard to private proceedings. That is what I suggest other Hon. Members may wish to do.

Mr. Prud'homme: A question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is asking that the Chair apologize to him for saying "button up", I apologize.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is fine.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, in the past I heard that kind of remarks here

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: At least you should have asked if he said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As far as the record shows, nothing was said that the House can—

Mr. Rossi: Ask him.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has ruled on the matter.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the business question?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I want to ask the business question but I also want to ask whether, if such a situation arises in the future, you will be able to take judicial notice of the fact that the Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) made a statement in the House and a Conservative Member made a statement as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) resume his seat? The Hon. Member knows, particularly as House Leader, that continuing to comment on a Speaker's ruling is improper. Therefore, I recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West on the business question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Government House Leader about the business of the House. I am asking the Speaker how we may look on a similar matter in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Even if it were in order to comment on the ruling, it could not be in order to put a hypothetical question because the Speaker could not answer it. The Hon. Member knows that. Does the Hon. Member have a business question?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): He already asked it.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition for the usual question. I indicated last week that the debate on the Budget would continue to its termination tomorrow. Next week it is my intention—as I have already advised the Opposition House Leaders—to call inter alia, as we say in Saskatoon, Bill C-87, the Bill respecting Canadian Arsenals Limited, Bill C-99, with respect to the authority of the Government to borrow a record low amount of money to service economic objectives, and Bill C-91, the Bill with respect to the Competition Tribunal, for second reading. In the usual way, I would like to indicate that we will be monitoring the debate and after consultations with the Opposition House Leaders, and if there are any changes to be made, I will advise the House, but that will be my intention for the business of the House into Monday and Tuesday.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) had the floor at one o'clock. Resuming debate.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I will try to make this last seven minutes of my remarks uncontroversial. I will talk about the deficit for a moment. This morning I focused on the reduction of the deficit and Government spending. I just want to spend a moment on the whole question of deficit reduction because there are people in the Opposition, the press and the business community who are asking if the deficit is really being reduced and if it can be reduced in the future. As I said earlier in my presentation, last year we targeted for a deficit of $33.8 billion, sad as that may sound, but that was the state of the economy we inherited. I think the important thing is that what we targeted for we met. We achieved that target. What we are now forecasting is that the deficit will be at a level of $22 billion by the year 1990-91.

There are people who will probably ask how we can really achieve that. I believe the important thing is that we are saying publicly that that is our target for 1990-91. It is probably a first in recent Canadian history that a Government has come right out and said: "This is what we are shooting for", and providing there are no unforeseen circumstances, I have every reason to believe that we will achieve that particular level of $22 billion and that is just a matter of three or four years away.

With respect to the question of whether debt management is being done fairly, I believe there are some critics who are saying that the cuts have not been deep enough and others who are saying that taxes are too high. I would like to say as a Member of Parliament—and I guess all of us sitting in the House would agree—that on the day of the Budget it cost us all personally, in addition to the tax cuts, $1,000.

Mr. Redway: Tax increases.

Mr. Ravis: In addition to the tax increases, as my seatmate reminds me, it cost each one of us $1,000 in a salary cut. So, personally, I am saying, yes, I think we have gone far enough in terms of cuts.

I would like to refer to the Budget which indicated a 70 per cent deficit reduction, by commitment, to expenditures and a 30 per cent reduction coming from extra taxes. What that really boils down to is that for every tax dollar the Government will receive, it has cut $3 in spending. That is another first in the history of the Canadian Government, I am sure. Cutting that deficit that severely is certainly a first. The Government is coming to grips with the excessive spending which had been going on.

Another key element is that the Government has shown not only leadership but, in particular, has shown by example its determination to come to grips with these problems. If there was one criticism we all heard during the election campaign, I am sure it was to the effect: "When will Ottawa start to demonstrate to the rest of the country that it is prepared to tighten its belt and share some of the burden?" If I heard that once, Mr. Speaker, I heard it 500 times at the door. Canadians were getting tired of not only high taxes but the lack of any example being set by Ottawa, and not just in Ottawa, but with respect to money spent by the federal Government right across the country.

In conclusion I would like to touch on a few points. First, I am proud and, as I said earlier, am more determined than ever, that the Budget is staying on course towards economic prosperity and employment for Canadians. Second, our new Government is putting a stop to the financial mismanagement which was threatening the future of our nation. This mismanagement was causing our country to become a laughing stock, not only domestically but internationally. The Nielsen task force, to which I alluded earlier, and the report of which will be revealed next Tuesday, March 11, and the regulatory reform to which the Government House Leader referred this morning, are just two examples of how the Government is prepared to come to grips with some of the mismanagement.

Our record of more efficient Government, I believe, speaks for itself. The accomplishments of the Government are only a beginning. There are people out there saying it is not enough. They want more jobs. That is understandable, but I believe we can be very proud of our record and I am satisfied and confident that there is a lot more to come. Certainly, the business community, which has created so many of those jobs feels the same way. Of the 580,000 new jobs, approximately 80 per cent were created by the private sector. I believe that is a reflection of the new confidence in the federal Government.

I believe another thing Canadians are happy with—I know I certainly am—is that the Government is being honest with Canadians. It is restoring the trust which the previous Government certainly lost. The game plan of November, 1984 is still the same game plan we are using today and which was in the Budget delivered last week. It takes a lot of courage, a lot of political will and a lot of example in leadership to come up with the kind of Budget which comes to grips with those serious problems. That is the solution to the real economic recovery we are looking for down the road.

One lady said to me during the election campaign about a year and a half ago that she fully agreed with many of the problems the country faced, but, she said: "After all these years, how can you possibly take it away?". I think that very well sums up the problem this Government is facing.

I trust Hon. Members of the Opposition will join with us—seeing that an election is probably two or three years away—in some of the positive things which are happening in this country today and will not harp on so many of the negative and critical things they seem to find in any Budget which is given.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), then the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James), and then I will see how much time we have left.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) who spent his time—not surprisingly as a Government Member—in lauding this Budget. How can he defend this Budget as being fair based on the current issue of the Financial Post—not a very radical journal—which gives three examples of what happens to taxpayers? In case one, the gross income is $40,000. The income tax in 1984 will be $9,145. In 1987, it will be $9,957, an increase in round figures of $800. With respect to case number two involving a gross income of $60,000, the income tax paid in 1984 would have been $14,909. In 1987, as a result of the Budget, it will be $13,708, a reduction of $1,201. With respect to case number three involving an income of $150,000, the income tax paid in 1984 would have been $53,448. In 1987, as a result of the Budget, it will be $47,978, a decrease in round figures of $5,400.

Does the Hon. Member think it is fair to reduce the taxes of people in the top income brackets while increasing the taxes of people in middle and lower-income brackets? Is that his idea of fairness?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is playing some games with numbers here.

Mr. Orlikow: Not me, it's The Financial Post.

Mr. Ravis: I finished off my presentation by saying that we would probably hear some negative comments from members of the Opposition. That is exactly what I expected.

When it comes to fairness—and I certainly stressed this in my presentation—I do not like the fact that I will be paying more taxes. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) does not want to have to pay more taxes. However, we have but two options. The first is that we can let the printing presses run. We can stick our heads in the sand and pretend these problems do not exist. The second option we have to face up to is, as the lady said the other day on Cross Country Check-up: "I don't want my grandchild who will be born in May to have an $8,200 debt on its head". Unfortunately, whether we like it or not, it will have an $8,200 debt on its head.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments made by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). He spoke about the 70-30 split. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), read from a newspaper article. Rather than take issue with his figures I would like to point out what was written by Bruce Little in The Globe and Mail. He wrote the following:

> According to the fiscal plan, federal revenue in 1984-85—the year the Tories took over—amounted to 16.8 per cent of the gross national product. Spending was 25.9 per cent of GNP and the deficit—the difference between the two—was 9.1 per cent of GNP.

He went on to state:

> If the economy turns in a middling performance over the next five years, Mr. Wilson's fiscal policy moves will change those figures dramatically.
> By 1990-91, the deficit would be down 5.6 percentage points to 3.5 per cent of GNP. Spending would have fallen to 21.4 per cent, a decline of 4.5 percentage points, while revenue would have increased by only 1.1 percentage points to 17.9 per cent of GNP.
> That means that spending cuts would account for fully 80 per cent of the decline in the deficit and tax increases only 20 per cent, an even better split—

No matter whether one talks about a 70-30 split or a 80-20 split, we have brought about an excellent record.

As Vice-Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, and in connection with what the Hon. Member has talked about, can he provide examples of waste and mismanagement which he has seen and which the restraint processes in the Budget will see eliminated?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Public Accounts Committee, I wish my colleagues in the House of Commons would read a little more about us and come to some of our meetings in order to see the type of work that is being done. I can give the Hon. Member some examples of matters which we have identified. One has to remember that it is a non-partisan committee which looks at good management of the bureaucracy of Government. One of the things we identified was the scientific research tax credit which involved a bit of political policy, political decision-making. There are certainly some indications that the senior bureaucrats were not giving good advice to the Government of the day. Unfortunately, that measure will cost the Government something in the order of $3.4 billion, which will have to be absorbed by the taxpayers. We also identified a great deal of real estate space which the previous Government had acquired. I refer to literally thousands of square feet of real estate space. That space has been disposed of along with a number of public buildings which were no longer required by the federal Government. Certainly in the area of cash management there will be savings in this neighbourhood of well over $100 million. Those are just three examples which I can give to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make an intervention at this time and to congratulate the very useful contribution made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis).

I noted that in his remarks he referred to the continuing thrust of this Government toward job creation led by the private sector, which was initiated in the November, 1984 Economic Statement and continued through the May Budget and the most recent Budget. I wonder if my colleague's constituents have noted with amusement the antics of front-bench members of the opposition Parties who, back in November, 1984, felt that the idea of the private sector being able to lead the way in job creation would be rather amusing. I realize that the concept is foreign to them. Indeed, back in November of 1984 those who sat on the front benches of the Opposition were wondering whether it would be a matter of 60,000, 100,000 or 200,000 jobs lost as a result of the policies enunciated. At that time one opposition front-bencher said: "Last night, the Minister produced a program which gave Canadians tax increases and cut-backs which will destroy thousands of jobs". The fact is, on the contrary, far from losing 50,000, 100,000 or 200,000 jobs, the Government has created 580,000 new jobs. Furthermore, most of these jobs are permanent, durable and lasting jobs, unlike the few which were created by our predecessors which were jobs of short duration. These were jobs in the area of painting fences, cleaning up cemetaries and the like, after which the workers would be laid off and back on unemployment insurance.

I am wondering if the Hon. Member's constituents have noted with amusement the about-face of members of the Opposition who back in November of 1984 were jeering. They were saying how risky this was and how terrible and dire the results would be. Now that we have seen hundreds of thousands of jobs created through the policies of the Government we can see the spectre of the Official Opposition suggesting that these job-creation figures come about as a result of a time lag. In fact, they have come about as a natural progression of their own bankrupt policies which are now somehow producing these hundreds of thousands of new jobs. Have the constituents of my colleague from Saskatoon East noticed this hypocrisy on the part of members of the official Opposition and are they giving credit to the outstanding policies of our Government?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that there is a certain amount of cynicism out there. It is understandable why a great many of my constituents are cynical given some of the negative things which they hear day after day, not only from members of the Opposition but from members of the media as well. Nobody seems to like good news. It seems to me that when one takes a look at some of the economic trend lines these days, in terms of what has been happening in the country, I am proud to stand in my place and take some of the credit along with my colleagues. I think my constituents can see through all that. They are saying: "This Government is on the right track. Let's give them a chance. Sure, they are not perfect, they will not do everything overnight". I think it is important that one look at the direction in which we are going. That is the most important thing. Where are the trend lines pointing? They are all pointing up. There is a renewed sense of confidence in the country. There is a sense by the small business sector in particular that it wants to make some investments because there is a brand new Government in Ottawa.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes), followed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and that will be it.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) on his presentation today, in particular on how he approached the topic of the deficit reduction and the agenda for it. He expanded upon a number of words such as leadership, trust and confidence. I believe those are the kinds of things for which Canadians are looking.

Many people in my riding have been in touch with me, and I should like to refer to some of their comments in this area. One constituent wrote: "I am a senior citizen who listened to Michael Wilson present the Budget. I accept this Budget which I feel is fair to all segments of our population. It is moderately tough but all reasonable persons will understand that it has to be in order to reduce the deficit". Another constituent wrote: "Please thank Mike for his no-nonsense Budget. We are lucky to have Mr. Wilson in this critical post. People I talk to appreciate his guts, strength, fortitude, intelligence and devotion at this difficult time". Another constituent wrote: "It is a step in the right direction", and another wrote: "It was long overdue".

These are examples of some of the sentiments and comments of people in the riding of Scarborough Centre. Could the Hon. Member indicate whether they are representative of the kinds of comments from the constituents of Saskatoon East?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, possibly the Hon. Member did not hear me mention that one of the most commonly used expressions about the Budget when I was in Saskatoon last week was: "It is long overdue". On the other hand, nobody likes the bitter pill, the fact that we have to face up to the reality of the country today and pay additional taxes, but they were saying that it was long overdue.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not totally familiar with the House rules, but I believe the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) went about 22 minutes, and normally 50 per cent of the time is allowed for comments or questions. Would Your Honour consider adding a bit of time so that I might ask him a question, inasmuch as he went over?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I went a little overboard as far as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) is concerned, and I have already given a little more as far as the 10-minute question and comment period is concerned. I will now recogize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). There are many other Hon. Members who want to speak on the Budget. Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat. I do not mind being lenient as far as speakers are concerned, but there are other Hon. Members who want to participate. I will entertain a short question from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, and that will be it for this speaker, I regret. Then we will carry on with debate.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to ask a very short question of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). Today in Question Period, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) whether he had fought for the removal of the investment tax credit for farmers, which will result in $150 million actually being taken away from them? Knowing the concern of the Hon. Member and his interest in farmers, did he support the removal of the investment tax credit for producing farmers?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) knows, I am not part of the Cabinet, therefore I was not consulted on that particular issue. I am sure he fully understands some of the things in the Budget for the agricultural sector, such as commodity based mortgages and assistance to farmers who have their backs against the wall by providing some review of their financial situation. There is no question that things are tough in the agricultural sector, as they are in the small business sector and as they are in the corporate sector. Everyone is having to bear some of the brunt. Those people in the most dire straits will be receiving the most assistance, and I think we are addressing that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to discuss a Budget that contains the highest tax increases since World War II.

Today, I want to focus on small business. Since September 4, 1984, the Conservative Government's political rhetoric has been that it has done some very important and very significant things for small business.

First of all, I would like to give a short description of small business in Canada. The small business sector is a healthy one. Small business is essential to continued job creation and economic growth in Canada. In fact, it is estimated that this sector has provided 70 per cent of the jobs created in Canada between 1979 and 1980, and practically all the jobs created in Canada, if we extend this to include the recession from 1980 to 1982. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, at least 90 per cent of our businesses in Canada are small and medium-sized businesses, and they represent over 30 per cent of this country's Gross National Product.

We are often told the Liberals did nothing for small business and did not understand the small businessman. I would like to mention some of the programs set up when the Liberals were in power.

From 1980 until the April Budget in 1983, we took a number of measures aimed at helping the small business sector. I intend to describe some of these programs and measures. We had a program to promote sub-contracting with Canadian businesses (August 1980). The purpose of the program was to give Canadian small businesses better opportunities to bid on subcontracts related to major projects carried out by the federal Government's main suppliers.

The reduced tax rate for small businesses was introduced by a Liberal Government in 1972, but for the first time a Conservative Government narrows the tax rate gap between small and large companies. I will give more details on this later on.

Mr. Speaker, the latest change was made in the November 1981 Budget. The tax deduction was raised from $150,000 to $200,000 and the over-all ceiling from $750,000 to $1 million. Today still the ceiling is set at $200,000. Those were Liberal measures for small businessmen.

Acknowledging the great importance of small- and medium-sized businesses, the Hon. Marc Lalonde announced various measures in his last two Budgets. Together the two Budgets of April 1983 and February 1984 provided tax incentives and new expenditures of more than $2.2 billion in 1984-85, $1.8 billion in 1985-86, and $1.4 billion in 1986-87.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today my colleague on the other side read letters supportive of the Minister of Finance, so if it were allowed by the Standing Orders we in the Opposition could also read letters, perhaps during a whole week. I have no intention of doing that, so I will deal directly with the proposals contained in the Conservative Budget of February 26, 1986.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the 3-per-cent inventory allowance deduction has been eliminated. This is a hard blow to small businesses, Mr. Speaker.

Even the small corner store merchant who must keep an inventory worth between $25,000 and $30,000 to operate will have a tax loss; on top of that, the 3 per cent inventory allowance is eliminated right now, while the small income tax reduction and the other 3 per cent taxes will apply in April 1987 and January 1, 1987 respectively.

Now, the elimination of salary deferral is another blow for small businesses. What happens when the owners or shareholders start a small business? They often have liquidity problems, especially during the first year, so they take a small salary or no salary at all to help pay their bills and develop their new venture.

I mention this because, as an accountant, I often had to do this kind of planning. At the end of the year, I had to sit with a small business owner and prepare his first balance sheet. Realizing that his wages were low, he would suggest to give himself a bonus to make his financial statements presentable and consistent with those of other similar businesses. This way, the small businessman could delay his income tax payment for one year. Since February 26, this is no longer possible. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has decided to hit him where it hurts most. Small businessmen will no longer do that. They will have to pay within 180 days if they want to reduce this bonus. Of course, whenever they declare bonuses or commissions, major corporations have to pay within 180 days, but not small businesses.

The general 3 per cent surtax is another low blow, Mr. Speaker. It will hurt especially the smallest of the small businesses, those which are not incorporated. They will have to pay the 3 per cent surtax effective January 1987, while the large corporations which are paying 5 per cent now, will have to pay only 3 per cent beginning January 1, 1987, a two per cent reduction. The Minister has increased the burden of Canadian consumers and small businesses while reducing that of large corporations. Such are the consequences of this Conservative Budget, Mr. Speaker.

Now that I have explained the surtax, let us go on to the corporate tax rebate. At the time of the tax reform during the 70s, Mr. Speaker, it was a well-established fact that there was a difference in the tax rates for large companies and small businesses. This difference was a well-established fact. There was a 21 per cent deduction for small businesses. The Minister of Finance says that the tax returns will be simplified, but I am anxious to see how this will be done. The tax return for corporations, Form T-2, now provides for a set rate of 46 per cent for all businesses, from which you then subtract the 21 per cent deduction for small businesses and the rebate for provincial taxes, and you get a rate of 15 per cent.

In the Budget of February 26, the Minister of Finance decided to lower this rate from 15 to 13 per cent, but not immediately. This will occur over two years, the rate will decrease by 1 per cent on April 1, 1987, and by 1 per cent on April 1, 1988. However at the same time, the Minister decided to reduce the tax rate applicable to large companies by 3 per cent, from 36 to 33 per cent. There is therefore a decrease of 2 per cent for small businesses and one of 3 per cent for big corporations. That is social justice.

That is what is fair with this Government? He is talking about fairness. Why do big corporations get a reduction of 3 per cent and small businesses get a reduction of 2 per cent, Mr. Speaker? And it is not over yet.

The big manufacturing corporations get a 4 per cent tax reduction and the small business manufacturing corporations get a 2 per cent tax reduction. That is what is fair? Small business for years and years during crisis periods created all the jobs and here the Government is not rewarding small business, it is rewarding big corporations.

That is how fair this budget is, Mr. Speaker. That is why yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in answering my questions said that the Progressive Conservative Party is the Party of small business. That is how the Party considers small business. It is not the Party of small business, it is the Party of big business.

Mr. Speaker, he has abolished the investment tax credit. Of course, this credit also helped small businesses by encouraging people to invest in small business. This credit has been abolished.

Let us now talk about the federal sales tax. I would like to refer first to the building industry, which is vital for our economy. Do you know that federal sales taxes in this industry have increased by 8 per cent in eight months? There were no taxes before. Since the Budget of last May, the Government has started to tax building materials, and there is now an 8 per cent tax on this industry. Since November 1984, the federal sales tax has gone up by 3 per cent. Is this fair?

[English]

Is that fair? That is what Members opposite say when they are trying to sell the Budget. They should be asking themselves whether a 3 per cent increase in federal sales tax in 16 months fair?

The Progressive Conservative Party when it was in opposition was screaming that increasing the sales tax was no good and that it was not fair. The first thing the Conservatives did when they got into power was increase the federal tax 1 per cent.

Let us see what happened in the pre-consultation period. The Minister of Finance said that before he prepared a budget he would consult people to see exactly what they want so as to accommodate everyone.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one of the many things suggested by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business was the very interesting proposal that expenses associated with developing a potential business should be deductible for income tax purposes. It is true that if an established business decides to open a subsidiary, such expenses are deductible. By the same taken, if a taxpayer decides tomorrow morning to rent premises, sign a contract and open a small business, and if, finally, he does not succeed, why should his expenses not be tax deductible? This is what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business asked during the consultations. However, there is no such proposal in the Budget.

The Canadian Organization of Small Business also asked that owners, members and partners in small businesses have an opportunity to invest in a retirement savings plan within their small businesses. Last year, in the May Budget, the Minister of Finance allowed funds to be invested in small businesses, provided that neither the owner nor members of his family nor his partners would invest money in such funds.

Mr. Speaker, as we very well know, a small business has to do without a board of directors or senior management. Everything is done by the owner, by members of his family or by his partners. How do you expect big corporations, big business to invest in small businesses when the first question asked is: "What about your five-year projections? Where are your financial statements for the last five years? Have you figured out all those things?" Do you think that small businesses, the really small ones have five-year projections, that they have enough time on their hands to make five-year projections? They work day and night keeping busy as delivery man, driver, manager, secretary and accountant all in one. They have do do everything. To those people this budget offers nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to quote a few comments we heard on budget night from those organization and say how they viewed this Budget.

[English]

To start with, let us see what the Canadian Construction Association had to say. There were no surprises in the Budget. Bill Nevins said that the 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax effective April 1 presents a severe problem for the construction industry. It could cost the industry an additional $75 million. He was upset that there was not much advance notice given for the increase.

[Translation]

And that is another problem in the construction industry, Mr. Speaker, and we discussed it on a number of occasions here in this House. Long-term contracts are signed but taxes are increased as of now. Once contracts are signed, how will contractors go about collecting that tax?

• (1550)

[English]

The association said that contractors sell on a fixed price basis. Therefore, the contracts already signed will not take this increase into account. The contractor will have to pay for this out of his profits. Since last May the construction industry has been hit three times with tax increases: July 1, 1985; January 1, 1986; and April 1, 1986. Because construction projects take one, two, or even three years to complete and bids are made well in advance, the contractor must absorb the tax increases.

The Budget does not aid the fragile business recovery that just began in 1985. The rate of growth of business investment will be reduced. The Minister of Finance projected in his Budget that the rate of growth would be 7 per cent and Statistics Canada yesterday projected 2.5 per cent. The Member is laughing. Those are the figures of Statistics Canada.

The Canadian Construction Association also said the Budget does not give a positive framework for business. The phasing out of the investment tax credit, the elimination of the inventory allowance, and a 3 per cent corporate surtax will not help the industry, but will slow the recovery.

On Budget night Tim Bennett of the Canadian Federation of Independent for the Budget of the Minister of Finance to bear fruit. The cancellation of the 3 per cent inventory allowance will hurt all small businesses with large inventories such as car dealerships, farm equipment dealerships, and jewellers. The 3 per cent surtax on income tax will hurt proprietorship and partnership small businesses.

The federation would like to have seen a one-year holding period minimum requirement on real estate property in order to qualify for the capital gains exemption tax. It would like to have seen a limit set at $5,000 per year on private pension contributions in order to close a loophole which is very costly to the Government. The federation felt that the restrictions on the 50 per cent RRSP investment in small business should have been lifted to permit the investor to place his money in his own business, or that of a relative or a friend.

Geoffrey Hale of the Canadian Organization of Small Business said that capital gains exemption tax should have been redesigned to be further targeted at long-term equity investment. He said that whether or not the deficit can be reduced below $30 billion is totally dependent upon the investment rate. That is what everyone has said.

Corporate taxes are actually increasing, contrary to first impressions, as indicated by the elimination of the 3 per cent inventory allowance, the phasing out of the general investment tax credit starting January 1, 1987, and limitations on the ability to defer taxes by deductions for unpaid remunerations. Mr. Hale said that there is basically nothing in this Budget for the successful small businessman. The 3 per cent surtax on income tax negates all advantages to proprietorship and partnership businesses.

The night of the Budget the Retail Council of Canada was disappointed but not surprised. It was concerned that the Government sees the deficit as an expenditure problem rather than a spending problem, and that the money is coming out of the public pocket. The Government is hoping that employment and consumer spending will increase substantially. The consumer has been hit twice; once with the sales tax, and again with the surtax on income. The Government is taking a huge gamble on prices and consumer spending. The rise of sales tax could negatively impact on economic activity.

The Retail Council felt it surprising that the Government has let sales taxes increase to 10, 11, and 12 per cent after being upset when the Liberal Government increased the sales tax from 8 per cent to 9 per cent. The council was upset that the inventory allowance was removed, effective immediately, whereas the corporate reductions do not start until next year. It felt that retail business was hit.

This is not a fair Budget, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

This is not a fair budget, and the proof is that a taxpayer in the $40,000 income bracket has to pay an extra $812, while the taxpayer with an income of $150,000 gets a $5,470 reduction. That is not fair, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) and from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I could hardly believe my ears when listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). An analogy kept going through my mind of an arsonist giving a lecture on fire prevention. The Member is part of a Party which almost brought the country to its knees financially. The comments of this Member and those of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who spoke the other day, are an example of the twisting and distortion which takes place.

The Member for Gander-Twillingate said that 23 per cent of our present debt was created by the Conservative Government since September, 1984. That makes me think of another analogy. Consider the case of a forest fire which has burned 3,000 acres. When the fire fighters are brought in it takes them several days to bring the fire under control, during which another thousand acres burns. Do we blame the firemen for the loss of the extra thousand acres? Of course not. We blame the people who started the fire. Canadians are not going to be fooled by this transparent rhetoric about what has happened recently.

Canadians will not forget that the last time the country had a surplus was in 1969-70. They will not forget that by 1975 the Liberal Party created a deficit of $5.7 billion. They will not forget that the deficit rose to $10 billion two years later. Canadians will not forget that by 1982-83 the deficit was $23.9 billion. Neither will they forget that when this Member's Party was in power it accumulated the largest deficit ever in the country, $36.9 billion in 1984-85. Canadians can see the facts, which are very clear.

I want to challenge the Hon. Member on a couple of comments he made about the fairness and equity of this Budget. I consider it to be very fair. In fact, I must again compliment the Minister of Finance for the balance he has achieved, not only between corporations and individuals, but also among individuals.

There are some very good measures contained in the Budget for the needy but, of course, the Member does not recognize that type of initiative. There is a balance between taxes and expenditure cuts at a ratio of 70 to 30. The financial statement of November, 1984, the Budget of May, 1985, and this Budget have consistently struck a balance. The best proof of that balance is the 580,000 jobs which have been created in only 18 months. The Member's Leader projected a loss of 200,000 jobs.

I urge the Hon. Member to be more complete in his assessment of the Budget and to have a little humility with regard to what his Party caused in the country. I suggest that he read the Budget a little more carefully. I understand that he is an accountant and he will appreciate the fairness in the Budget.

The Member spoke as if the surtax wiped out the decrease for small business from 15 per cent to 13 per cent. He knows that is not correct. It is 3 per cent of 15 per cent. In other words, .45 per cent. Clearly it does not wipe out the advantage for small business. I urge him to be a little more realistic and honest as to how good the Budget really is.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative rhetoric is always to reduce the deficit. If they were serious about reducing the deficit, why did they give $2 billion to bank depositors who had more than $60,000 on deposit? Why did they give $2 billion to the multinationals? Why did they give a $1 billion tax reduction to the Reichmann brothers? They only cut $4 billion from the deficit this year but six months ago they gave away $5 billion. That is the rhetoric of the Conservative Party.

I agree with him concerning the 3 per cent inventory tax. However, what upsets me about the budget and corporate taxes, and I would like the Hon. Member to one day stand up and explain this to me, is why did the Minister of Finance reduce the big corporations' taxes by 3 per cent and the small corporations by 2 per cent? Why did he reduce the manufacturing tax on big corporations by 4 per cent and only 2 per cent for small manufacturing corporations? That is why I say this is not fair. The Government has been saying small business is the key to recovery. It is small business which creates jobs. Then why are we giving more—

Mr. Attewell: Is it unfair to create jobs?

Mr. Gagliano: —to big corporations?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Member who spoke earlier reminded me of his leader. It is true the Budget is fair. It is a fair and good Budget for the rich, but there is nothing in the Budget for the poor, and the Budget attacks the middle class. And that is the truth, Mr. Speaker. I wish my hon. friend would tell me, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is here, what he thinks of a measure providing for prepayment of $300 of the child tax credit that covers only a certain percentage of the Canadian families eligible for the tax credit. Today, 1,538,000 families are receiving the full child tax credit, and the Government, by some magic and inhuman calculation, has decided that only one million families will receive the $300 prepayment of the tax credit, and 538,000 families will have to throw themselves on the mercy of the friends of the Conservatives, the tax discounters, who take advantage of the poor. Would the Hon. Member please explain how he could possibly say this is a generous Budget?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is absolutely right. It is a discriminatory measure. It allows some people to receive a certain amount in advance and ignores many others. Mr. Speaker, last year they decided that to be eligible for the child tax credit, individuals could earn as much as but not more than $23,500. This year they are increasing federal sales tax by one per cent, but to compensate for this, they give us a handout of $50 per adult and $25 per child, but only for those earning $15,000 or less, that is, those below the poverty line. Another clear example that this Budget is not fair. Although the Government is going to do everything it can and ask all Conservative Members to sell this Budget, it will not succeed, because people will begin to understand that this Budget is not fair.

[English]

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments and pose a question. It is useful, most of the time, to listen to the Opposition to see if in their comments there are some pearls of wisdom which will shed new light, some new recommendations for change which may not have occurred to us. That is the role of the Opposition, to offer alternatives. I very much regret that I have not heard one alternative or one useful suggestion. Instead, I have heard nothing but railing against a Budget which people generally have accepted as a good Budget, including Mr. Bulloch who the Hon. Member made reference to. Did he not watch his own leader on television when the interviewer said: "Mr. Turner, don't you finally agree that this is a good budget?" I would also ask him if he read Jeffrey Simpson's column in The Globe and Mail on Wednesday morning? That would be an excellent guide to the thinking of Canadians on this Budget.

Mr. Gagliano: Which one should I take, The Globe and Mail or La Presse? They all say the same thing. The Financial Post?

Mr. Brisco: How about making a useful suggestion?

Mr. Gagliano: If you want to reduce corporate income tax, why not do it across the line? Why does small business get less than big business?

Mr. Brisco: Don't rationalize, just tell us how.

Mr. Gagliano: Well, if you decide a corporate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that basis, questions and comments are now terminated. It being four o'clock—

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to enter this debate and indicate my strong support for the initiatives taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in this Budget, as well as for the direction he has given this country since he assumed that portfolio. This is the third major initiative he has taken. His first was in November, 1984 when he laid down a program which indicated his strong intentions to move against the horrific deficit this country was facing. He was going to try to bring our accounts into order so that not only this but future generations would derive some long-term benefit from his actions. He moved from there to his Budget last year. We now have this Budget. We are onstream, moving in the right direction, and at the same time showing the Canadian people that the extra taxes we are going to extract from them will be far less than the cut-back in the over-involvement of Government in the lives of Canadians. As a result, we will be moving forward into the next decade in a way which should give every Canadian confidence that they have a man steering our economic course who fully understands the complexity of the financial situation in this nation. He has taken the type of steps that can only be of long-term benefit to the nation.

I noted that one Member, in questioning an opposition Member, indicated that 70 per cent of the cuts have come out of Government services. In other words, we are cutting back a bloated bureaucracy in a way which can only be of benefit to all Canadians. This will produce long-term savings for the people of this nation and result in their having to pay less taxes over the long term. I happen to come from Atlantic Canada and the only Prime Minister, until this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who really took a serious look at our economic problems and tried to take innovative actions of long-term benefit to our area was John Diefenbaker. The Diefenbaker years were good years for our part of Canada. In this Budget I see some new thinking, some innovative thinking, some real programs that are going to produce long-term benefits for the people who live in Atlantic Canada. I congratulate not only the Minister of Finance, but the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and other Ministers in this Government for taking special time to put together new and innovative programs. I know they will produce a degree of momentum in the development of new industry in our part of Canada and new permanent jobs that are going to be of long-term benefit to our area.

I want to also congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who is in the House, and to tell him how much I have appreciated the personal attention he has given to problems that face Atlantic Canada. I would like to congratulate him for the special and very good innovative thinking on the type of programs he has produced which are going to make the agricultural community once again know that it has a friend in Ottawa who is putting forward new programs and plans that are going to be of long-term benefit to them.

We have a lot of problems in Atlantic Canada. The Minister of Agriculture needs a lot of help from Members from all sides of the House. We still need feed grain assistance and we need a new program for the development of feed grains in our own area that the Minister is moving forward with now in a very positive way. I congratulate him for that, and I say to him that while we are in the period of developing the new initiatives for the development of feed grain production in our part of Canada we still need the additional feed grain assistance. This will allow our agricultural community to hold down their costs of production to compete in a fair and equal way with other farm products in this country. I have had numerous meetings with the Minister, and I find him to be up on everything in his Department. I find him to be very sympathetic to the problems that people face in our area, and I congratulate him for the work he has done.

I would now like to spend just a moment talking about what is happening in Atlantic Canada, specifically initiatives the Minister of Finance took in his Budget relating to Atlantic Canada that will mean new jobs, new opportunities and new developments for our people. One of the most important is the Atlantic Enterprise Program. This program is designed to help the private sector in this part of Canada grow, to stimulate the economy, and to provide the jobs and diversity we need.

This is only the latest step in a series of measures this Government has taken in support of the Atlantic economy since its election in September 1984. In total, during that period the federal Government has committed $1.5 billion to support economic development in Atlantic Canada. Some $611 million has gone to Newfoundland, $90 million to Prince Edward Island, $372 million to Nova Scotia, $328 million to New Brunswick and $100 million to the Atlantic region of Quebec. Our Government has not made empty promises. We have taken action to create employment and economic stimulus for Atlantic Canada. The budgetary measures announced by the Minister of Finance have heralded more growth for the region. The programs it contains are good news and takes the special needs of the Atlantic provinces into account. Together they will promote investment to bring in new employers and help existing businesses to expand.

The Atlantic Enterprise Program will provide the new initiative the Government felt was necessary to give Atlantic Canada an edge. It will build on the strength of the private sector, because we believe that this is the way to achieve the long-term economic growth which is needed in the region.

It contains two basic components. The first is loan insurance for businesses which need capital to establish or expand. The program will insure up to 85 per cent of the loans provided in the capital security, so important to a new or growing enterprise. Second, the Atlantic Enterprise Program will provide less expensive capital for businesses being established or expanded. It will reduce loan interest by up to 6 per cent. This can make a critical difference between a marginal and a profitable enterprise.

To give you an example, it means that someone who today has to borrow money at 13 per cent can have that 13 per cent reduced to as much as 7 per cent in projecting his forward movement as a new or an expanded industry in our area. It is a big incentive for a businessman who is either thinking of establishing in Atlantic Canada or who is thinking of expanding his operation there. This is a significant program which will provide $1 billion in loan assistance in the region. The result will be a healthy private sector which is essential to Atlantic Canada.

The Atlantic Opportunities Program is another federal initiative which will be of important benefit to the region. This consists of a series of special measures to significantly increase the level of public purchasing in Atlantic Canada over the next four years.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), a new Minister in this Government, for taking hold of his Department and producing a program like this that is bound to be of tremendous benefit to our area. What he hopes to do is expand purchasing in Atlantic Canada from $1.6 billion to $2.2 billion, an increase of nearly 40 per cent in actual purchasing in our area. This $600 million dollar increase will generate an average of 5,000 new jobs a year.

That is what it is all about. That is what we mean when we are taking action and producing jobs for people in a real and concrete way. For so long I sat here in Opposition and watched the former Government throw money at every problem and produce what I call gyp programs, because everybody got gypped. The people who got the jobs got gypped because they got 10 or 12 weeks of UIC and then they got 40 weeks of doing nothing to requalify for UIC. They were locked into a UIC syndrome that meant they could never really improve the lives they lived. Nor did they have any hope of improving the lives that they lived. What we are doing is producing firm, permanent, long-term jobs for people rather than the gyp-program jobs of the last Trudeau Government. The Grits were gyps, and that is why they are out and that is why they are going to stay out.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that one of the leaders in producing a new confidence in Atlantic Canada has been the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He has been aggressive. He has gone into Cape Breton, which fed off the former Minister of everything from Cape Breton Highlands-Canso who managed to spend taxpayers' money on producing runways at Port Hawkesbury so his private jet could land, where no one had anything other than a six or eight-week job at one time.

What we have now are long-term favourable programs that have excited the business community and have, from all of the applications that are coming in, produced in that business community a new confidence about Nova Scotia and about Cape Breton. I know that with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion's leadership we will continue to see new plants and new jobs being produced, not just in Cape Breton but in all of Atlantic Canada.

I want to speak about my province of Nova Scotia and indicate what has been happening there since the Government was elected and what will continue to happen in the future. In the past 12 months, 11,000 jobs have been created, including 3,000 in January of this year. The value of building permits in the first 11 months of 1985 was up $94 million, or 18.2 per cent compared to the same period in 1984. Bankruptcies were down 6 per cent in 1985 compared with 1984. Total housing starts in 1985 rose 51 per cent, to their highest level in eight years. Retail sales have increased by 8 per cent between December, 1984 and December, 1985 and have increased by 11 per cent since the September, 1984 election. The value of fish landing in the first 11 months of 1985 were up by $26 million or 11 per cent over the same period in 1984. The former Government left the fishery in a total shambles after years of disinterest and disrespect for the people involved in the fishing industry. Last year, the rate of closures of small and medium sized businesses in Atlantic Canada was 6.3 per cent, down from 8.9 per cent in 1984. The January inflation rate of 4 per cent in Halifax was below the national average of 4.4 per cent. That is the situation in Nova Scotia.

I want to talk about my constituency because during the Trudeau years I was a virtual undertaker, burying one industry after another as a result of bankruptcies. We did not have any good news in Atlantic Canada. However, in the years since 1984 we have seen the establishment or expansion of 21 industries directly related to assistance through DRIE. They are not the only industries that have been established but they had direct federal involvement.

On Monday I will be attending a press conference with the Minister of Agriculture for Nova Scotia and the Mayor of the town of Amherst, participating in the establishment of another industry in Amherst. Furthermore, I can advise the House that there are new plant possibilities under active consideration for Truro, Springhill and Oxford. I have also been personally involved in the establishment of a new luggage factory, with Korean participants, in the town of Amherst. Those are some examples of what is happening because the business sector in this country has confidence in the Government and the Minister of Finance.

Let me say a few words about national defence. We have seen much progress in national defence since the Government took office. Nowhere is that more apparent than in Atlantic Canada. One of my first acts as Minister of Defence was the re-establishment of Chatham as an air base. It is almost a cornerstone industry of northern New Brunswick and, if it had been left to the former Government, that base would have been dismantled completely. We have re-established it as an air base and we have reconfirmed the employment possibilities for those people of the north shore who are associated with that base. I want to congratulate Members from the north shore who worked closely with me in re-establishing that base.

There are many new developments at Goose Bay that will be of tremendous benefit to Newfoundland and Labrador. The Department of National Defence has re-established itself as the lead Department in handling that base. There are many activities associated with NATO in relation to major utilization of that base which will be of tremendous benefit to the people of Happy Valley, in particular, and the people of Newfoundland, Labrador and Atlantic Canada generally.

I am absolutely committed to major improvements in the naval element of the Armed Forces. We must take major steps to ensure that our navy is properly constituted and that it has the ships it requires. Currently, Saint John shipyard is the lead yard in building six new frigates,. While I was Minister, I began the definition program for the second batch of six frigates and I say to the Government that we must move forward quickly in getting that second batch of six frigates on line in order to benefit from the volume buying associated with the construction of those frigates.

I compliment the Saint John shipyard for establishing a centre of excellence with the recruitment of 600 to 700 top qualified people in the construction of warships. We have not been involved in this activity for many years. I have great confidence in their ability to manage the second batch of six frigates that should be constructed. We need new submarines quickly for our navy as well as new helicopters.

We must re-establish the navy which Prime Minister Trudeau and his Government let deteriorate almost to the point of oblivion. The Government must take the necessary steps to establish the navy as a significant part of our Armed Forces if we are to meet our commitments as a partner in NATO.

I want to repeat that our Government has been progressive, with new and positive programs of benefit to all Canadians combined with a reduction in our involvement in their lives. We are moving forward with positive programs that will have long-term benefit for all Canadians. They can look forward to a Government that recognizes the social justice system and is sensitive to the just society. We will not forget those in need while providing a Government that is aggressive and sensitive but much smaller than its present size.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for his excellent speech in which he outlined some of the positive effects the Budget will have on the Atlantic region, and particularly on the Province of Nova Scotia. The Hon. Member also has experience in defence and indicates that the Budget will have positive effects in this area.

I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) deserves much credit in being able to implement positive measures to produce the necessary prosperity in the Atlantic region while maintaining the justice that is so important for that area.

My constituents are quite weary and some are very angry about the burden which was left as a result of the spending of the previous Government. The national debt left as a result of the previous Government's spending represents an average of $7,000 over the head of every single Canadian.

Let us consider some of the statistics. Last year's Nobel prize winner for economics, Franco Modigliani, is a noted economist. He said that in reaching levels unprecedented in peacetime, the deficit has become a serious threat to the well-being of younger and future generations of Americans. His comments, of course, were in reference to the United States deficit which, on a per capita basis, is less than our own. So it is time the brakes were applied.

I would just like to refer to a telephone message which came into my constituency office the day after the Budget. My constituent said: "Thank you for bringing down the kind of Budget the Liberals never had the fortitude to introduce". I believe that the kind of positive comments mentioned by the Hon. Member in his speech are a great tribute to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and to our Government, that we have been able to have those positive elements in the Budget and at the same time reduce the deficit and reduce waste.

We recognize the Hon. Member's long service in the House of Commons and the experience and wisdom he has gathered as a Member of the House of Commons and as a great Canadian. I wonder if he might comment on the relationship of this Budget to other Budgets he has had the experience of debating in this House?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's remarks and I also appreciate her special work in relation to the former Hon. Member for Prince Albert, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. I wish her well in that regard. I am looking forward to the birthday celebration this September.

I would like to say that it has been many years since I can recall a Budget which actually, in a very forthright way, tackled the deficit, and which has given us the long-term projections which, in turn, give us some hope that some day we might be able to balance the Budget in this country again. I was in the House at a time when Ministers of Finance did bring in balanced Budgets, but it was a long time ago.

Today we have a great concern about our dollar as compared with the United States dollar, whether it is at 70 cents, 68 cents or 72 cents. I think it is important to stabilize our dollar somewhere. More importantly, as far as myself and other Hon. Members in this House are concerned, we must stabilize it at a point, even if it is below 70 cents, which will allow interest rates to come down. For instance, a two point reduction in interest rates would mean $100 a month less for a person carrying a $70,000 mortgage. That is a big incentive to our Party, and to our Government, to try and get interest rates down at least two points. Let us hope that when the dollar is stabilized—at whatever level it is stabilized—we will be able to move interest rates down in a positive way, which will be of assistance to all people carrying mortgages at the present time.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my hon. friend from Nova Scotia on his excellent presentation. He gave us an update on the economic upswing in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Wise: It came from his head and his heart.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) just said, it came from the Hon. Member's head and his heart. With respect to the $300 million being funded for the Atlantic Accord and the $200 million Canada-Nova Scotia Development Agreement which has been signed and, for initial projects, approved, will this now mean that many young people in Atlantic Canada and in Nova Scotia will now have a future in their own province? I know in the past, because of years of Liberal neglect, many people, especially the youth of Nova Scotia, had to leave their home province to find employment in other parts of Canada. Will the different developments and agreements which have been signed for Nova Scotia and Atlantic Canada mean that they will now be able to stay in Atlantic Canada and have some hope for the future?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. I want to say that the type of programs the Hon. Member has outlined, and the type of new innovative thinking of a new and strong Government with its special attitude towards Atlantic Canada, will ensure the future for that region. The Minister of Agriculture just signed a new agreement with the three provinces on red meat which indicates this new type of aggressiveness. The youth in Atlantic Canada, because of programs such as the Hon. Member pointed out, have a new sense of confidence about their future in our part of Canada. They are thinking about living, getting educated and working there rather than going elsewhere in Canada looking for jobs.

There is tremendous co-operation coming from the provincial Government of Nova Scotia, the Buchanan Government, and it is that kind of co-operation that has produced the type of new plant establishments which are giving new hope to young people, not only in my province but in our region. The Government has to be complimented for its aggressive and innovative approaches to the problems we face.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to participate in the debate this afternoon on the Budget presented to us by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). This Budget, like last year's Budget, and the Budgets which came from previous Liberal Governments, all have a common goal and strategy. That strategy was so ably described by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops in their historic statement "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis", published in 1983. The big problem in 1983 was inflation. Today it is the deficit. But what the Bishops stated in 1983 is still very applicable today. Here in part is what they stated, and I quote:

As recent economic policy statements reveal, the primary objective is to restore profitability and competitiveness in certain Canadian industries and provide more favourable conditions for private investment in the country. The private sector is to be the "engine" for economic recovery. To achieve these goals, inflation is put forth as the number one problem.

In today's terms, it is no longer inflation, it is the deficit. The Bishops go on to state that the causes of inflation—today it is the deficit—are seen as workers' wages, Government spending and low productivity rather than monopoly control of prices. The means for curbing our deficit are such austerity measures as deindexing of pensions, restraints and cut-backs in social spending. The Bishops go on to say, and I quote:

In effect, the survival of capital takes priority over labour in present strategies for economic recovery.

At the same time, working people, the unemployed, young people, and those on fixed incomes are increasingly called upon to make the most sacrifice for economic recovery. For it is these people who suffer most from lay-offs, wage restraints and cut-backs in social services. The recent tax changes, which have the effect of raising taxes for working people and lowering them for the wealthy, adds to this burden.

The Bishops continue in their statement. They state:

If successfully implemented, these programs could also have the effect of transferring income from wages to profit. Yet, there are no clear reasons to believe that working people will ever really benefit from these and other sacrifices they are called to make. For even if companies recover and increase their profit margins, the additional revenues are likely to be reinvested in more labour-saving technology, exported to other countries, or spent on market speculation or luxury goods.

In my remarks this afternoon I wish to analyze what the Bishops said in their statement of 1983, and demonstrate how very accurate those remarks are, given the economic realities and strategies of today.

The Budget again raises the tax load on middle and low-income groups and extends tax breaks to the corporations and the rich. As the Bishops stated, that was the strategy then followed by Liberal Governments, and it is again the strategy followed by the Conservative Government of the day. Since this Government came to office in the fall of 1984 it has raised the tax bite on the average Canadian wage-earner by some $1,305 through income and sales tax increases. Yet, at the same time, it has extended the tax exemptions enjoyed by the corporations. In fact, the Government will be taking an additional $7 billion out of the pockets of the average wage-earner next year while the corporations will be paying some $75 million less.

Earlier today I read an analysis in The Financial Post which showed that a taxpayer earning $40,000 per year will be paying an additional $800 in income tax in 1987. The same study showed that a person who earns some $150,000 per year will see a net decrease of some $5,500 in the taxes they will be paying in 1987. Our tax system is rotten to the core. There is no fairness in it. The tax credits, deductions and loopholes created by this and previous Liberal and now Conservative Budgets have shifted the tax burden almost entirely onto the backs of the wage-earners.

In the 1950s roughly one-half of public revenues in the country came from the corporate sector and one-half from individuals. Today, the relationship is approximately 25 per cent from the corporate sector while 75 per cent comes from the pockets of individual taxpayers.

I would like to illustrate just how unfair our present system is. A woman who is a teller with the Royal Bank of Canada paid more taxes than the Royal Bank paid in 1982, even though the bank made profits over $300 million that year. Yet the teller paid more in dollars and cents to the federal Treasury than did the Royal Bank of Canada. The kid who pumped gas for Shell Oil in 1982 paid more in terms of dollars and cents to the federal Treasury than did Shell Oil in 1982. These examples are just the tip of iceberg.

In fact, let us have a look at the Royal Bank of Canada, its profits and the taxes it paid. We have a statutory tax rate of roughly 49.5 per cent for banks. If we look at how much the Royal Bank paid in actual taxes, and how much it would have paid had the statutory rate applied, we would see that from the years 1977 to 1985 the federal Treasury would have collected an extra $1.135 billion. When one looks at all the banks grouped together one will find that if they had been paying the statutory tax rate from 1971 to 1983 the public Treasury would have been enhanced by some $3.286 billion. The reality is that the banks have been paying a much lower rate than a women who is a teller at one of these banks.

Of course, the oil companies and the banks are not doing anything illegal. These are tax provisions and loopholes which this Government and previous Liberal Governments put in place. I would ask Hon. Members to remember the theory which the Bishops so eloquently enunciated; that is, the economic strategy is one of allowing the private sector to be the engine of growth. Therefore, they are given all these tax breaks in order that they can earn hundreds of millions of dollars in profits and not pay one cent of tax. The hope is that eventually the money will be reinvested to create economic activity, according to the theory of this Government and previous Liberal Governments.

Let us examine whether they do in fact create economic growth and employment. I would remind Hon. Members that in 1983 the Bishops stated that they doubted that the average Canadian wage-earner would benefit from this type of economic strategy. They predicted that these extra profits would not be reinvested to create jobs but, in fact, they would be reinvested in labour-saving devices or shipped out of the country and invested elsewhere.

The Auditor General estimates that there is between some $30 billion and $50 billion in these tax expenditures. Some of them are personal deductions, child care deductions, charitable donations and so forth. However, a great many of these deductions are those which are aimed to encourage economic growth. They are deductions which are placed there for use by the corporate sector and the wealthy in order to have them reinvest, and to be the "engine of economic growth".

I would like to give Hon. Members some examples of what would fall into this category. In one of Mr. Lalonde's later Budgets, when the Liberals where in power, he wanted to encourage research and development. Thus he implemented a tax credit for scientific research and development. It was estimated at that time that this one provision would cost some $100 million in terms of lost revenues to the public Treasury. The darned thing has ballooned and the public Treasury has now lost some $3.5 billion. The Tories claim some credit for this. They say that at least they closed the door on this major scam. They placed a moratorium on it in October of 1984. However, they allowed some loopholes to remain. In this respect they allowed a grandfather clause. In other words, if you and I had an agreement on the back of an envelope, Mr. Speaker, that agreement would be honoured. By October of 1984 some $1.5 billion of public money had been lost as a result of this cam. The amount is now $3.5 billion. In other words, since the Tories came to power and since the moratorium was put in place another $2 billion has been lost through this one major loophole.

Mr. Ravis: Come on!

Mr. de Jong: It is true. The Hon. Member doubts what I say. He says: "Come on!" I invite him to check the figures of Revenue Canada. This moratorium caused the loss of an extra $2 billion when the Tories came to power.

We must now ask the question: Did we have $3.5 billion in new research and development in the country? No one in their right mind would claim that we have had an additional $3.5 billion in new research and development. It was nothing but a tremendous waste of money. Our universities are starving for funds, as is the National Research Council. Yet, they have been cut and cut again. We have blown $3.5 billion of public moneys for nothing as a result of what is called tax expenditures. Those are loopholes and ways of avoiding the payment of taxes.

I would now like to give some specific examples in this regard. We find that Northern Telecom chalked up $3.3 billion in sales in 1983 and showed $325 million in profit. Yet it managed to end the fiscal year without paying any taxes. We see that in 1982 TransCanada Pipelines Limited had $4.7 billion in assets with pre-tax earnings of some $182 million. Yet it paid just a 7 per cent effective tax.

We mentioned the case of Shell Oil, with assets of $4.7 billion and pre-tax earnings of some $302 million, not paying a cent of tax. How is that possible? Is that just?

Canadians are demanding a change, tax reform and justice. As a people we are not afraid to tackle the deficit, but surely Canadians have every right to expect that when we tackle the deficit the Royal Bank of Canada and Shell Oil will pay their fair share, rather than it being left on the backs of working Canadians.

How dare the President of the Royal Bank of Canada, Mr. Rowland Frazee, sent all of us a nice letter saying how much he is concerned about the deficit and how we must reduce it to save our country? He sits at the top of a corporation, a financial institution, which can get away without paying a cent in tax on over $300 million worth of profits. The gall of the man, the very gall of those who sit in high corporate boardrooms and dictate to us sanctimoniously that we should reduce Government spending—in other words, reduce social programs—and tighten our belts.

Of course Mr. Frazee and the leaders of the corporate sector say: "We have tax breaks so that we can create jobs. There is nothing illegal about them. We have them so that private industry can be the engine of economic growth". We have some grave doubts about whether it is an efficient engine of growth. Studies have shown that it takes some $77,000 in corporate tax cuts to create one job, but that general Government expenditures—in other words, direct government expenditures—create a job at $13,000. If we are really interested in creating employment, I suggest that it should not be done through corporate tax cuts but through general Government expenditures, direct expenditures and grants. It certainly is a heck of a lot cheaper.

I should like to refer to the fallacy that if the guys at the top do well, eventually they will reinvest in new plant and equipment thus creating more jobs. I have in front of me a study of the top 100 Canadian corporations. It reports their annual profit increases from 1981 to 1984. These corporations saw their profits increase by some 97 per cent or almost 100 per cent, almost double, from 1981 to 1984. I know many workers who would like to have seen their income, salaries or wages double in those few years. Be that as it may, these corporations have been doing quite well. However, have they been reinvesting in new plant and equipment? The figures show that in actual fact the number of people working for them has declined by some 3.1 per cent. Some job-creation strategy!

Defeating the deficit is now our major goal. We hear that from the President of the Royal Bank of Canada. We hear from Government Members that we must bring down the deficit. I do not disagree with them; indeed we should decrease the deficit. The amount of money going to pay interest is scandalous. Of course we have to decrease the deficit, but these folks across the way say that the reason for the deficit is that the country is living beyond its means and that we have to learn how to tighten our belts. Also, they suggest that our social programs are a little too rich and it is time that we cut back. How sad it is to hear this reasoning being enunciated in the House and in newspaper columns from day to day.

Let us look at the statistics on what we spend as a country, as part of the Gross National Product, on social programs—housing, education, hospitals, unemployment insurance and welfare. We are one of the lowest in the western industrialied countries. We are lower than the United States, Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, Denmark, Holland and Norway. We are lower than all these countries; we are even lower than Italy.

When I hear the argument that we are living beyond our means and that our social programs are a little too rich, are they trying to tell me that people in Italy can afford a richer social program than we can? It is shameful that a country with our strength and resources should have food banks from coast to coast, people going hungry, starving and sleeping in the streets. Yet, these sanctimonious people across the way, the Frazees and the presidents of banks are telling us that it is still too much, that we have to tighten our belts and cut back on our rich social programs to control the deficit. What a sham. What a tremendous sham.

If the Royal Bank of Canada, Shell Oil and Northern Telecom paid their rightful share, perhaps we could have wiped out our deficit. Certainly it would not be as high as it is today, even if they paid a 10 per cent interest on deferred taxes. There is some $30 billion in deferred taxes out there. If we charged them 10 per cent we could reduce our deficit overnight by $3 billion.

An Hon. Member: Not a chance.

Mr. de Jong: Absolutely, not a chance, because they are the so-called engine of economic growth and if the guy at the top does well, supposedly it will eventually filter down. That theory is similar to the one which indicates that if the horse is fed a lot of oats, eventually the sparrow will get some. It is a disgusting theory. It is one of the major shams which is occurring today, because it has not worked.

Let us look at the figures of investments in the country since the Tories have come to power. We must remember that during the election campaign they said: "Elect us and international business will have such great confidence that we will have new capital flowing into the country".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Lately we have been reading articles such as the one by Alain Dubuc in La Presse indicating that an individual earning $20,000 will be faced with a $500 increase, that an individual earning $30,000 will be faced with a $600 increase and so on. Yesterday in The Financial Post it was indicated that an individual making $40,000 would have an increase of $812, that an individual making $60,000 would have a decrease in tax of $1,201, and that an individual earning $150,000 would have a decrease of $5,470. Would the Hon. Member indicate whether he thinks it is fair that the rich receive tax deductions and the poor and the middle-class have to pay more?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. In the beginning of my remarks I quoted from The Financial Post and stated that it was not fair. Surely it is immoral, but it is part of the economic strategy that has been occurring, in which more and more is given to the wealthy and the rich at the expense of the poor.

Turning to the statement issued by the Bishops from which I quoted earlier, in their summation they indicated the following:

> For the present economic crisis, as we have seen, reveals a deepening moral disorder in the values and priorities of our society.

The Bishops condemned the type of Budget with which we are dealing. The Government cut back on the services of the poor, raised the taxes of the low and middle income workers and so benefitted the rich. The Bishops call it a deepening moral disorder in the values and priorities of our society. The Bishops continue by saying:

● (1700)

> We believe that the cries of the poor and the powerless are the voice of Christ, the Lord of History, in our midst. As Christians, we are called to become involved in struggles for economic justice and participate in the building up of a new society based on Gospel principles.

Unfortunately, the Budget we are dealing with today is a continuation of the moral disorder.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to a question or two. I am seeking clarification from the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who was quoting from some conclusions made by the Canadian Catholic Bishops. Would he clarify whether those comments were directed to the recent budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or do those comments and observations refer to a previous budget? Yes or no?

Mr. de Jong: As I indicated earlier in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, the statement was made in January, 1983.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: The statement attacked an economic strategy that is surely no different. Had the Hon. Member and the Minister been in the House he would have heard the quotes I made from this document. He would have heard that recent economic policy revealed the primary objective is to restore profitability and competitiveness in certain Canadian industries. Is that not the same strategy as the one now when the Bishops stated that the present economic strategy is one of economic recovery through the engine of private industry? Is it not the same strategy that the Tories have now, that Lalonde had and that previous budgets had? Is there any difference?

Mr. Wise: There certainly is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, what does the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) think of the budget setting a target only in the realm of the projected deficit? Could he tell us what he thinks of the underlying assumptions behind that target and what he feels the true targets of a budget should be?

Mr. de Jong: It is obvious again that the real target of this budget—

Mr. Wise: Which budget are you talking about?

Mr. de Jong: It is true the target of this budget and of previous budgets have been—

Mr. Wise: The debate is on this budget.

Mr. de Jong: —to allow economic growth by giving all sorts of tax deductions and tax loopholes.

The Minister stated that reducing the deficit was a major one. He gave us some figures. He had a few assumptions. He assumed a certain price for the price of oil. He assumed a certain interest rate. From this we have from the Minister a projection that the deficit would be reduced to a shade under $30 billion. Of course, the Tories must be crossing their fingers that they do not have another Canadian Commercial Bank or a Northland Bank that will throw the projections out by another few billion dollars. These are very shaky figures.

Mr. Wise: Your comments are a bit shaky, too.

Mr. de Jong: Unfortunately, the Minister has not realized that if he can reduce unemployment by 1 per cent he will get an extra $2 billion. Why does the Minister not have a made-in-Canada interest rate policy, which the Tories talked about when they were in opposition, because every time that interest rates drops by 1 per cent the cost of the deficit gets reduced by $1 billion? There are definite, different alternate strategies in terms of dealing with the deficit. We violently disagree with the strategy adopted by the Government. The Bishops state that it is an immoral strategy. It is one based on the backs of the poor and the working people while benefiting the rich.

Mr. Wise: That is 1982.

Mr. de Jong: It is still true.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). The New Democrats go around painting good socialist colours all over the place. I have people in my riding who are out of work. They cannot pay their union dues. They are on welfare and they find enough money to pay half the rates, hoping that the unions will get them jobs. The New Democrats take money from these union people to run their campaigns. They are taking money from the very, very poor. Can the Hon. Member answer that question?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, concerning contributions, I understand the amount paid for dues is around 5 cents a week. Why did the Royal Bank of Canada not pay any tax in 1982? Take a look at the type of contributions that bank made to the Conservative and the Liberal Parties. I ask the Member to explain to me how the Conservative Party with a budget of some $20 million last year raised some $10 million to $12 million from the corporate sector. You mean to tell me, Sir, that the $10 million to $12 million in contributions to the Hon. Member's Party were just contributions given with no expectations of a continuation in tax breaks? The worker who contributes to the New Democratic Party will have a guarantee that in this House of Commons someone will be standing up on his behalf drawing to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the primary purpose of this Budget should be to create jobs. He will not be having someone, perhaps the Hon. Member and other Members standing, protecting and defending tax breaks to the Royal Bank of Canada which allow the Bank to earn over $300 million a year and not pay 1 cent in tax. That is the purpose of contributions, Sir.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member for Regina East to answer whether these people have a choice. Do they have a choice, Sir?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, it is a choice made by a majority vote within the local. If the majority within the local decide to affiliate and make a contribution to the New Democratic Party, that decision gets made. Might I ask again, the $10 million in corporate—

Mr. Mantha: No.

Mr. de Jong: I know he does not want to hear about this but I am going to tell him anyway. The $10 million in corporate contributions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time for questions and comments is terminated. The Hon. Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate in my capacity as Deputy Prime Minister and not as Minister of National Defence. I want to try to set the framework for what I am about to table next week in its global context.

In his budget last week, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reminded all Members of the House of Commons, indeed, Canadians generally, that our strategy for economic renewal is based upon three fundamental principles. First, the way to create jobs is through private initiative. Second, good government does not mean more Government, it means more efficient government. Third, Canada's prosperity depends upon restoring the health of the nation's finances.

These are not principles the Minister of Finance invented last week. In fact, our Party espoused them throughout the 1984 election campaign, and our new Government reaffirmed them in an Agenda for Economic Renewal which the Minister of Finance tabled in November, 1984.

I want to address my remarks to the second principle, our commitment to more efficient Government and the manner in which that commitment is being realized through the process of program review.

In his Budget, the Minister of Finance announced that the reports of the study teams to the task force on program review would be released on March 11, next Tuesday. I will be tabling those reports in the House on that day at 11 o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The work of the task force on program review and its study teams fulfills a commitment the Government made when it was sworn into office, and an obligation I accepted personally when I became a member of this Cabinet. The people of Canada deserve good Government. In my view, they proved on September 4, 1984, that they wanted good Government by electing this Government. Part of the mandate we received from Canadians was to improve the management of government, to increase Government efficiency rather than its size, and to improve the programs of government rather than just add more programs. We, who sought the responsibility of governing this country, also promised to find new ways of doing things. Those new ways included involving Canadians from all walks of life in policy and decision-making processes.

The work of program review has been one mechanism to honour this mandate. As Members of Parliament and all Canadians will see next Tuesday, March 11, the work of the study teams on program review represents a service to the public which, I believe, is without precedent in the annals of Canadian public administration. The results of the work of these dedicated teams of individual Canadians, as represented in their reports, provide knowledge of how the federal Government functions in a manner which has never before existed in the history of this country.

I am always surprised by the litany of some Members of the House who claim we do not know where we are going or what we are going to do when we get there. In point of fact, we have been steering a very narrow and very deliberate course since the first days of this Government.

I remind all Members that I received the terms of reference for program review from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) just one day after the new Government was sworn in. Our basic agenda for economic renewal was established by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November of 1984. That agenda was reaffirmed in the Budget of May, 1985, and in the Budget of last week. I am pleased to say that some of these measures had their origins in the preliminary results of the program review process.

It should be evident to all honest observers that the Government is following the same track that it has been on since the last election. It should be obvious by now that our actions are consistent with the directions we told Canadians we would pursue in our bid for election. Even more heartening, it is very obvious from our successes in both economic and social policy that we know exactly what we are doing. Moreover, we have a Minister of Finance who knows exactly where we are going.

From the perspective of the program review process, this means eliminating overlap and duplication. It means developing programs that are simpler, more understandable, and more accessible to the Canadians they are designed to help. It means reviewing and revising administrative, personnel, and management processes.

The results of program review are more than just improving the management of government. We are trying to remove serious obstacles to economic and social growth which have developed through decades of unchecked government. We are renewing the confidence of the Canadian people in their Government by making it work for them.

I want to be clear on one thing, however. The study team reports are not, by themselves, the sole source of wisdom available to Government in choosing new approaches and new instruments of change. The study team reports will influence Cabinet in making choices. They will help to provoke a more informed debate, and, in some cases, the proposals contained within them could be accepted unanimously.

The reports do not represent decisions which the Government has taken or is about to take, nor do they represent an articulation of government policy. They are a very valuable decision-making tool, and a perspective on government programs and services which has never existed before. We invited the private sector into the process of program review because we wanted a cross section of opinions, and because we wanted advice that was, above all, independent. The Government assumed that we would benefit greatly from the insights and experience of individual Canadians with backgrounds and credentials in labour, in large and small businesses, and from the professions.

You will find these insights and these refreshing viewpoints in the study team reports. The reports were prepared by 122 people from the private sector and provincial Governments, with the assistance of 99 federal public servants.

Mr. Speaker, there were 19 study teams in all. Each of them had three months to complete their investigations, undertake their analyses of findings, and develop conclusions for their report. The teams worked sequentially in that they commenced their work as soon as they were appointed. Thus, while each team took only three months to report, all 19 teams took a year to complete their activities.

In addition, I was asked in September of 1984 by the Prime Minister to undertake a review of regulatory agencies of the Government. The report of this review process is also being released at the same time as the study team reports since it relates quite closely to the work of at least one of the program review teams.

In developing proposals and options, study teams had to deal with an often confusing and contradictory array of programs and services. Within the limits of time and available information, the teams together compiled a management mosaic of about 125 federal departments and agencies involving approximately 170,000 public servants. The study team reports, which will be released next Tuesday, contain descriptions and assessments of 989 federal programs and services. In addition to these program assessments, study teams produced summary overviews which analysed specific issues or combinations of programs. These are also included in the reports along with optional courses of action for the Government to consider.

It is my deep conviction, Sir, that the people of Canada have a right to the information contained in these reports. For too long, Canadians have had to find their own way through a maze of conflicting Government programs and services. For too long, Canadians have had no idea of what their tax dollars were paying for or who was benefiting from them. We are about to change that. The 20 volumes which will be released contain an image, a snapshot if you like, of the federal Government, more current, complete, and comprehensive than has ever been developed in the history of democratic governments around the world. At no time has the Government of Canada ever been as forthcoming or as open.

When I say the study teams did a thorough job despite their adherence to a very rigid time schedule, I am referring to the many thousands of pages of study team reports. If Members opposite take the time to read these reports, they will find the legacy of Governments of the last 20 years. They will find that the cost of burdensome Government regulations has been underestimated by more than 50 per cent. They will find that no one really knew the extent of Government property holdings, or how much it cost in operating funds and personnel just to look after them. They will find that the cost of a ten-dollar hammer might approach $50 by the time all the procurement forms are finally filled out.

I hope the House will indulge me by allowing me to exceed the allotted time in order to inform it fully of the framework within which these reports are being tabled next week.

I must emphasize that the study team reports are not just a list of horror stories of the kind produced by the Auditor General in his annual reports. They are reasoned, analytical assessments of the programs which came within the terms of reference of each of the study teams. Each study team received terms of reference which, practically speaking, gave them carte blanche to look at just about anything relevant to their review process. As they went about their work, they started discovering things and developing conclusions that did not quite fit into their program review reports, but these concerns arose again and again throughout the entire review process. It soon became evident to the private sector advisory committee that these issues warranted special consideration and a focus of their own.

What are these issues that tend to be so pervasive, overriding, and particularly troublesome for public sector managers? What is the hidden and so far incalculable cost to the public? For obvious reasons, people involved in the program review process began to call them the generic issues, and it is these issues which must be addressed before the full benefits of the review process can be achieved. First among these issues is a phenomenon which was termed the universal subsidy. This is a constant theme running through virtually every study team report. The teams report that successive Governments used subsidies to solve many different problems, to equalize between the haves and have-nots, to support failing enterprises, to provide essential services, and to encourage specific economic and social behaviour in companies as well as individuals. Mostly, these subsidies rewarded and supported activities rather than results.

As a consequence of this phenomenon, the Canadian economy has become like Gulliver, tied down by a multitude of Lilliputian subsidy ropes, each rope infinitely thin yet together immobilizing. To put it bluntly, past Governments in this country have encouraged Canada to become a nation of program junkies. As long as this situation prevails, I for one will be concerned about our ability to compete in international markets or to develop an economy which can adapt to changing realities.

The universal subsidy has been allowed to flourish thanks to another phenomenon which emerged from the program review: inadequate knowledge of the fiscal totality. Until this program review, no Government has had a comprehensive overview of the impact of tax provisions and statutory and non-statutory expenditures. The program inventory compiled to support the review process demonstrated the extraordinary importance of tax provisions which comprise 39 per cent of total expenditures in relation to the other categories. As a consequence, new program proposals have never been challenged or debated within the total fiscal context. Further, there has been insufficient recognition that tax expenditures constitute expenditures as large as all statutory program costs.

The third generic issue uncovered by the study teams relates to program evaluation, the procedures for evaluation within the federal Government itself. Routine Government program evaluations were found by study teams to be inadequate for the work of program review. These evaluations tended to be self-serving and were inclined to overlook the fundamental rationale for programs, concentrating instead on impact and delivery criteria. Further, departmental evaluations suffered from tunnel vision, with their focus on internal programs to the exclusion of similar activities of other government Departments and agencies.

It is primarily in the context of these three generic issues that federal expenditures have been growing with the momentum of a rolling snowball. However, study teams also noted a number of other generic issues which tend to impede the overall performance of Government. They include the power of inertia in a system as large as the federal Government, and the lack of institutional memory, which means that Government is constantly reinventing the wheel or developing solutions to problems regardless of the impact of previous solutions to the same problems. Perhaps the most intractable issue of all is the well-known deficiencies in the personnel system which tie the hands of personnel managers and reward longevity rather than productivity.

There are no easy solutions to these generic problems, but solutions must be found. These issues have been routinized and entrenched in successive government bureaucracies for the past two decades but they must be dealt with, and soon. As a Government, we must support a new attitude for Canada's Public Service, an ethic based on productivity improvements, greater efficiency and the reallocation of priorities within the limited resources available. To put this issue in the sharpest perspective, it is not individual public servants who have created these problems, it is the environment within which they try to function to the best of their abilities which is at fault.

As I reviewed these issues through so many of the study team reports, I was struck by the need to improve the system of management control and accountability if we are to improve productivity within the Government generally. As I mentioned earlier, if we are to correct the many problems identified by the study teams, we must first develop a system for proper management accountability.

All Members of this House are aware of some of the decisions which have been made by this Government that have arisen directly out of the work of the study teams. These have been announced over the past year, beginning with the May, 1985 Budget tabled by my highly-esteemed colleague, the Minister of Finance.

I do not propose to list all of these decisions today or identify all the Government's actions which have arisen, directly or indirectly, out of the work of the 19 study teams involved in the program review process. Decisions in the areas of agriculture, job creation and training, and services and subsidies to business were announced in this Government's first Budget. Subsequent announcements dealt with the Canada Assistance Plan, veterans' programs, housing and real property management. Personally, I announced a major initiative with respect to a national strategy for regulatory reform just two weeks ago, which was the subject matter of the remarks of our House Leader just yesterday. These major announcements are but the tip of the iceberg of activities which are a direct result of the program review process. The study teams, in simply doing their work, have raised the awareness of both politicians and bureaucrats on issues that need resolving and problems which have to be addressed.

The impact is pervasive. There will be very few Government decisions announced over the next few years which have not been influenced, positively or negatively, marginally or totally, by the reports that the study teams laboured so intensively to produce. Sir, the first stage of the process of program review that has just been completed is a credit to the people from both private and public sectors who worked so diligently throughout the past year. They have captured a snapshot of the federal Government for which there is no parallel. I believe that the storehouse of information which has been placed on the public record will keep public administration and political science academics, as well as the general public, interested for many years to come.

If you examine the basic themes of the Budget as put forward last week by my colleague, you will find that we want to restore fiscal responsibility, we want to bring the deficit down to manageable proportions, and, ultimately, eliminate it completely. We want to improve the current taxation system while at the same time restraining government expenditures. We want to help those who are in need today as well as protect our ability to help those who might be in need tomorrow.

In this regard, I believe that the stellar accomplishments of the Minister of Finance have had fundamental support in the work of program review as pursued by the 19 different study teams. If we can create programs that are flexible, that meet real needs, and that are responsible to their clientele, then we have done something that no Government over the past two decades has been able to accomplish.

While that may be a credit to this Government, it is a bigger credit to the people from the private sector and the public servants who worked so diligently during the past year on the production of these study team reports. The decision-making process that was designed to deal with the findings and options presented by the study teams assures the prerogative of Government to act independently and responsibly. By tabling these study team reports next Tuesday, it is my hope that our Government can provide all Canadians with a further opportunity to think about and to influence government decisions in an open atmosphere, where mutual respect is the order of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I did have a question, and I would certainly like to acknowledge from the Minister's report the tremendous volume of work that has gone on in these 19 study team reports. I would like to ask him a question related to the process. I assume there were 19 committees of some kind established. He refers of the private sector. I wonder if he could tell me who were on these committees, and I am particularly interested of course, this week being International Women's Week, in whether or not there were 50 per cent women on the committees?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member would not expect me to name a full response to her question today. There were 122 members of the private sector. All of that information in detail will be part of the published volume that will be tabled next Tuesday at 11 o'clock. I assure her that the composition that she is inquiring about now is addressed in explicit detail.

Ms. Mitchell: Could you not give me an idea of how many women?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, a question on the same topic as the Hon. Member from Vancouver. Would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that in the case of the agricultural study team there were no members from East of Montreal, no members from West of Toronto, no women and no youth, and no one from the agricultural sector other than an official from a sugar company that sat on that team?

Mr. Nielsen: Again, the hon. gentleman will see with precise detail exactly who were on these study teams and where they were drawn from, but I can assure him that the study teams consulted broadly throughout the country with all levels of Government, with industry and with producers in the case of agriculture.

I should have mentioned to the Hon. Member who asked the last question that I am deeply indebted, as should we all be, to the work of the private-sector study team leader who headed up the separate study on regulatory agencies, Louise Martin.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) cannot give me an answer today in full detail and I am waiting anxiously for next Tuesday, but could he indicate to me today if the report will include the Federal Development Bank?

Mr. Nielsen: There are references to that particular program in at least two of the study team reports that will be coming down. The answer is yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions or comments, debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in debate on the Budget. I would like briefly this afternoon to speak to you of issues that affect my riding, more particularly I would like to talk about the farming community, the youth of my constituency and the industry in the riding that I represent. This includes textiles, footwear and many others in that sector. I would also like to discuss middle-class families and how they are affected by this Budget. First of all I want to talk to you about the agricultural sector.

You probably remember only too well, Mr. Speaker, that during the last election campaign the Conservative Party made several promises to the people of Canada. I draw to your attention a booklet concerning those promises. I just happen to have a copy of it here in front of me. It is entitled 338 Tory Promises. This is a complete list of all the major national promises that the Tories, in the last election campaign, made to the people of Canada. Did it ever promise things. It promised to the people of Canada—and I notice that the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) across the way is paying attention to this—113 different things involving spending more money. There were five promises involving the spending of less money. Two promises to increase revenues and twenty-six promises to decrease revenues.

What did the Government do? The Government increased the deficit and claimed that it was being reduced. The Government made several cut-backs and increased the staff of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), among other things. As you see, in general the Government made promises that it could not live with, and now of course and it should not be to anyone's surprise, least of all the Government's, it cannot deliver on the package it presented to the people of Canada during the election campaign.

This Budget is actually not the second but the third budgetary document of this Government. The first document, of course, was the expenditure and program review of November 8, 1984, a day which, of course, has become affectionately known as black Thursday—November 8, 1984—because of all the cut-backs in this particular document.

What specifically did the Government cut? In the area of agriculture, to give you an example, the Government in 1984 cut $6.2 million from the dairy program, and $9.4 million from the operations of Government Departments. It closed down Canagrex and cut off $6.6 million there. It deferred some capital projects, and that cut $8.4 million off the Budget, and increased service fees in the amount of $32.3 million for a total of $62.9 million.

In the May 23 Budget of last year the budget for agriculture was reduced by $50 million annually starting in 1985-86. Of course that means there is another $50 million that was cut off in this year's Budget. The Government increased by 2 cents a litre the excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuel. That of course runs in direct contradiction to the promises this Government made during the last election campaign. We saw tax increases on cigarettes and liquor, and this of course affected the grape-growing industry of the Province of Ontario which I represent. What happened on this whole issue? Let me outline for you a comparison of election promises with delivery by the Government. It promised to reduce the price of farm fuels by 20 cents a gallon, by removing 9 per cent federal sales tax and by not collecting the current excise tax. Do you know what the Government did instead? It increased the price by 2 cents a litre on May 23. The Government said it would extend and expand the Farm Credit Corporation, with special interest rate subsidies. The only thing the Government did there, of course, is it decreased the effective rate of the FCC from 14 per cent to twelve and three-quarters per cent only for those individuals who were financed at a rate of 14 per cent and less.

We have presently in this country 25 per cent of all farmers who are in financial difficulties. This means that roughly or 65,000 farmers in Canada, are in financial difficulty.

In the last Budget the Government announced what it considered to be new measures to improve the farm sector. It promised measures that would partially defer the repayment of loans for 5,000 farmers. Earlier this week I asked the Minister of Agriculture what he will do for the other 60,000 farmers who are also in financial difficulty. During the election campaign the Conservatives said they would assist farmers who were in difficulty, but they did not say at the time that they would only assist a small number of them while ignoring the rest.

The Budget we are discussing today provides for a 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax. This represents a large increase to a farmer buying a $100,000 silo. It will cost another $1,000 for that purchase. When one analyzes the federal sales tax increases as they affect the farming community, the amount of tax increase is greater than the budgetary allocation the Government has made to assist farmers. Obviously, the farmers come out with less after the Budget than before the process began.

Let me talk briefly about the disadvantaged people in our society. Perhaps Leonard Shifrin, a well known commentator who writes for The Toronto Star and other papers, put it best when he said:

> Indeed, some of the poor will actually be a few dollars better off as a result of Wilson's new offering, though others will be worse off.
> A family of four with a $15,000 income is well below the poverty line anywhere in Canada. But under our preposterous tax system, it pays more than $1,000 of income tax. And the surtax Wilson is now introducing will add a further $20 levy.
> At the same time, the 1 per cent in the federal sales tax will pile another $50 or so onto the family's tax load.

Whether one is rich or poor, one has to repair or replace the refrigerator or other major appliance when it breaks down. The fact is that the least advantaged people in our society are paying a disproportionate amount because they can least afford that tax increase that some of us may think is very small.

On the night of the Budget the Leader of the Opposition said:

> It's becoming impossible to improve one's quality of life in the face of this kind of Government attack.

He said that those from 30 to 50 years of age earning from $15,000 to $40,000 a year are the ones who are hit right between the eyes.

I want to talk about the middle income people in our society who are so often hit by tax increases. They must bear the burden. The middle class seems to be getting smaller and smaller. The number who are well off seems to be increasing and there are more and more poor people in our country that we consider to be affluent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with the problems young people are facing in our society. You are aware that a few days before the Budget speech, a report entitled "Youth: A Plan of Action" was tabled in the House in which the Canadian Senate suggested extending the Katimavik Program to offer still more help to young Canadians who need it most. What did the Government do?

In its Budget, it started by dispossessing the Minister of State responsible for Youth of her portfolio or purse, thereby eliminating her department for all practical purposes. From now on, the Minister will have no money and no budget.

Today, in the House, we heard an Hon. Member saying that in a document he had read, the Minister herself was quoted as saying that her responsibility was simply to convince young people to join the Progressive Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, it is a disgrace to see a Minister of the Crown forget about young Canadians and think only of the political gains the party in Government could make.

Illiteracy is another problem which affects a great many young Canadians. It is a very serious problem which most Canadians and a great many of their elected representatives would rather forget then deal with.

In my federal riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, there are quite a number of my constituents who just cannot read, a situation which is not unique, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that although Hon. Members opposite do not seem to be too concerned with the issue, if they could think it over for a few minutes, they would realize that our educational system unfortunately has created a situation in which a great many people are facing the same problem.

Mr. Speaker, the most amazing thing is that such a great proportion of illiterates are young people.

And I call your attention to the following recommendation contained in the Senate report which reads as follows:

> Our committee supports the proposal of a national campaign against illiteracy.
> The Committee feels that the recommendations in the "Obstacles" report that have not yet been implemented should be, and that it is important to acknowledge the special needs of the young who have learning problems or handicaps.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention in particular to the areas where it is seen that this Government is attempting to make quite significant budget cuts in social programs.

[English]

I listened to the discourse of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) in which he spent considerable time of the House telling us how he and others within the Governement are trying to find ways to cut back Government expenditures and make the system more efficient. One cannot help but wonder how a Governement that encourages blatant patronage, as the Tories do, can talk honestly and sincerely about cutting unnecessary expenditures.

I see that one of my Conservative colleagues has woken up. I want to remind him that when my constituents who live near the national capital and work on Parliament Hill or elsewhere in the public service see their salaries and benefits being cut back and their jobs abolished, they do not take too kindly to what we heard earlier today about the patronage of the Government.

• (1750)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have seen a 57 per cent increase in the estimates for the Office of the Prime minister (Mr. Mulroney). Where are the Budget cuts in the Prime Minister's Office? We fail to see any. There were 30 ministers in the previous Government, the new Government now has 40. But the same Government is telling us that we must slash whatever expenditures they consider unwarranted.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, what am I supposed to tell my constituents? What should I tell Mr. Rémi Saint-Jean, for instance, one of my constituents who lives in Cumberland, Ontario, and works for the Department of Public Works and whose job as a janitor is threatened? What am I going to tell him? Am I going to tell him that the Minister will make sacrifices, that the Government will make sacrifices if he loses his job? No, Mr. Speaker, this will not happen. The Government still will have 39 or 40 Ministers, 39 or 40 limousines, 39 or 40 executive assistants, and so forth, constantly giving to those who are well off and taking away from middle income people and the most in need.

[English]

A few days before the Budget came out, Canadians became aware of a rumour that the Government might increase gasoline prices. The Hon. Member from Mississauga is chuckling at that proposition. But we know of course the Government did not intend to make a major increase in gas prices at that time. It was a deliberate strategy, in my view. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government attempted to scare the people of Canada by participating in the propagation of these kinds of rumours so that when the Budget was not quite as offensive as the rumours—in which the Conservatives likely participated—indicated, then Canadians were supposed to be grateful. They were supposed to be grateful for the fact that there was no tax increase on gasoline.

Mr. Gauthier: There is one percent.

Mr. Boudria: I recognize the fact, of course, as my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) pointed out, that the federal excise tax increase will include gasoline, to the extent of 1 per cent, which really means one half cent per litre. We should all be aware of the fact that the Government, through its policy of not encouraging Petro-Canada to reduce the prices on gasoline, is indeed causing a situation of serious hardship on the taxpayers of Canada.

Across the border—and I happen to have been in the United States last weekend—gasoline was selling for approximately 90 cents a U.S. gallon. There are parts of this country where we are paying almost that much, in Canadian dollars, of course, for a litre of gasoline. Indeed, we are paying in the 65 cents to 70 cents a litre range in some parts of the province of Quebec, and 55 cents in my riding, only 10 miles from the Parliament Buildings. That price for gasoline is totally unjustified. The people of Canada expected that the Government, as part of its budgetary measures, would at least have a suggestion in its Budget that it would be cutting off the increases—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired, but he is such a popular Hon. Member that I am sure the House will allow him to continue until six o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on his excellent speech.

I am somewhat familiar with his constituency and I know that he represents a large number of medium and low income families. Since the Government has now changed the definition of the poverty line by lowering it arbitrarily to $15,000 as this is the cut-off level for certain Government programs according to the budget papers, and since 1,538,000 families now receive the child tax credit, whose cut-off level was set at $23,500, and this Budget provides a prepayment of $300 for one million families next November, can the Hon. Member tell us what it will mean for the standard of living of a family in his constituency that 538,000 families will not eligible for this prepayment. For instance, in his constituency, is a family with four children and an income of $17,000, which will make this family uneligible to the prepayment of the tax credit next November, not just as deserving as a family with one or two children and a $15,000 income? Why is this Government insensitive to the fact that 1,538,000 families receive the tax credit and why has the Government arbitrarily decided to exclude 538,000 of these families? Has the Hon. Member anything to say about this?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is raising a very valid point. Naturally, someone in my constituency who has an income of $15,002 rather than $14,999, especially if he has a large family, needs the cheque as much as the family earning a few dollars less. This decision is extremely arbitrary and very unfair for my constituents since a great many of them have low or medium incomes. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), whose constituency is close to mine, agrees with me, and I trust that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) will let her speak later on. If he allows her to speak, I am convinced that she will want to make a few comments.

[English]

This Government will be remembered for tunagate, deindexation, patronage, free trade when it promised the opposite, privatization, lay-offs in the Public Service, bank failures and Ministerial resignations. I say to those Hon. Members opposite that this is not my Government. It is the Government of the Party in power. I may not even claim to like it. But it is goofing up, messing up so many things that I ask those Hon. Members to pick themselves up, get themselves organized and try to make this country work. Investors across the world are losing confidence in the Government because of its activities and because of the way it has gone about totally removing the confidence everyone had. In so doing, it is creating damage not only to itself—and I do not particularly care about that part of it—but to all of us in this House. The actions we saw today are an example of that. The Government is creating damage and that Party should pick itself up by its bootstraps and try to at least act as if it knew what it was doing and run this country appropriately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If Hon. Members wish to ask the Hon. Member questions, he has four minutes left for tomorrow. He is such a popular Member, I know everyone here would want to ask him a question. Please come back tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

THE ECONOMY—LE CONSEIL DU PATRONAT DU QUÉBEC—THE DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on February 14, 1986, during Oral Question Period, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) whether he was going to give us a balanced Budget, a Budget that would try and reduce the deficit. We know that the current cumulative deficit totals $230 billion, a deficit accumulated by the Liberals as a result of their social policies.

This deficit has definitely discouraged investment by our business people, and I am talking about both small businesses and large corporations. The deficit also puts us in an untenable situation in the long term. A country is a little like a family or a business. It cannot always afford deficit financing, something our predecessors have never understood.

However, Mr. Speaker, a deficit of this size, a deficit of $230 billion, is a drain on the savings of Canadians and puts upward pressure on interest rates. Interest rates have increased so much in recent years because of the previous Government's enormous deficit.

To visualize what a deficit of $230 billion means, suppose we divide it by the population of Canada, which is 25 million, which gives us a deficit of $9,200 for every Canadian man and woman, including Canadians less than a year old and those who are nearly 100. That is what a deficit of $230 billion means.

The message given by the Minister of Finance was very clear: in 1984-85, we had a deficit of $38 billion, after last Liberal Budget. Last year, we announced a deficit of $33.8 billion and we remained within this estimate. It was the first time in twenty years that a Minister of Finance managed to meet his own estimates. The present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) did not, nor did any of the other former Ministers of the Liberal Government. This year, we announced a deficit of $29.8 billion, and by 1990, we expect to have reduced the deficit to between $11 billion and zero.

I would like to quote a national accounting firm, Price Waterhouse, on the deficit we are going to reduce this year. Now this company can certainly not be accused of any political involvement, and in its tax bulletin published under the heading "Attacking the Deficit", it says: "The Government provides 70 per cent of the ammunition and taxpayers 30 per cent." This according to Price Waterhouse, a national auditing, accounting and consulting firm.

Over the last eighteen months we have demonstrated the strength of our first Budget. Unemployment has dropped from 11.7 per cent to 9.8 per cent. Our first Budget gave us 580,000 new jobs, and 156,000 of these were in Quebec. We created 9,750 jobs per month in Quebec. The Liberals created 475. When we brought down our first Budget, the Leader of the Opposition said contemptuously that the Budget would lose us between 200,000 and 300,000 jobs. We created 560,000. The Leader of the Opposition was out by 700,000 quite a difference!

And besides that, Mr. Speaker, we have set an example. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did what the Leader of the Opposition refused to do, and took a $20,900 cut in salary. Our Ministers and our Members have accepted cut-backs of $10,000 and $1,000 respectively, and we have introduced incentives for small- and medium-sized businesses.

Contrary to what has been said, we lightened the tax burden of small- and medium-sized businesses and we removed the 12.5 per cent dividend tax imposed in 1981 by Mr. MacEachen, a fact which my colleague did not mention in previous speeches.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the deficit will reduce the cost of money, and that is something the Liberals did not dare explain. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Canadian men and women will pay $2,000 less on a typical $50,000 residential mortgage, and our businessmen will pay less in interest.

That is the kind of effort we have made to control the deficit and boost the economy. I commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for his Budget aimed at restoring financial stability.

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in rather a quandary. After a brilliant statement of that nature, I am not sure whether it requires any response whatsoever. However, perhaps a few points should be re-emphasized.

The Canadian economy performed substantially better in 1985 than most observers anticipated with real GNP growth of 4.5 per cent. The unemployment rate declined to 9.8 per cent in January of this year. Since September, 1984, 580,000 jobs have been created.

Mr. Gagliano: You don't know how to count.

Mr. Cook: It the Hon. Member opposite would listen to those figures, he would realize that we have to be doing something right.

Since the fall of 1984, great progress has been made in controlling government expenditures and reducing the deficit. This restraint resulted from eliminating or reducing Government programs, improving management procedures and increasing Government efficiency. As well, steps have been taken to increase the efficiency and fairness of the tax system. These changes, combined with some increases in tax rates, will over the medium term contribute to further reducing the deficit.

As a result of these initiatives, the net public debt, which averaged almost 23 per cent per year from 1974 to 1984, will grow by only 17 per cent this year and by less than 10 per cent in 1987-88. Those are the important figures for the public to know, those are the important figures for the public to consider.

TERRORISM—INTERNATIONAL SECURITY MEASURES—CANADA'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on December 2, 1985, I rose in the House to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on how Canada could bring pressure to bear on countries to tighten security measures and to take other strong steps to eliminate terrorism and hijacking.

My question was prompted by the tragic deaths of 59 people, including two Canadians, Valina Leonard and her infant son, Andrew, during the hijack and subsequent Egyptian commando raid on Egypt Air flight 648 last November 24. The hijacking of this flight was only one of a number of terrorist incidents in 1985.

On December 27, 1985, 19 people were killed and many injured in almost simultaneous attacks on the airports in Rome and Vienna. It was the thirteenth major terrorist attack in the world causing loss of life in 1985. Regrettably, 1985 became a period of resurgence for terrorism—a year of the assasins.

Terrorism also came closer to home for Canadians. On March 12 of last year, Claude Brunelle, a Pinkerton guard at the Turkish Embassy here in Ottawa, was killed, and the Turkish Ambassador, Coskun Kirca, was seriously injured during an attack on and the seizure of the Embassy by three self-proclaimed members of a group called the Armeniam Revolutionary Army. As a result, Pinkerton security guards were replaced with RCMP special constables.

Subsequently, authorities in Toronto and Montreal received calls allegedly from the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of our Homeland, threatening bomb attacks on the transit systems of both cities, unless the three held for the Ottawa attack were released. Fortunately there were no bombs. I used the word "allegedly" just a moment ago because no proof exists that the Armenian community was involved in this threat. As a matter of fact, I had two meetings with executives of the Armenian Community Centre in North York, including the President, Levon Hasserjian. They were distressed, to say the least, at these aspersions cast on that great community of hard working, decent Canadians.

On June 23, 1985, Air Indian Flight 182, en route for India from Canada exploded and plunged into the sea off Ireland, killing all 329 people aboard. On the same day, CP Air Flight 003 flew from Vancouver to Tokyo where some passengers were to transfer to an Air India flight for Bombay. Two Japanese luggage handlers were killed when a bomb hidden in luggage exploded.

After the Air India tragedy, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) said:

> We will not allow this country to become a killing ground for international terrorism.

What has happened in Canada and to Canadians is just one piece in the world mosaic of international terrorism. We have the killings at the Rome and Vienna airports, the hijacking of the Italian liner, Achille Lauro, and the murder of Leon Klinghoffer, the hijacking of TWA Flight 847 to Beirut, assasinations and bombings. There are many instances of terror. Terrorism is a declaration of war against the western world, and it threatens us all. It threatens Canadians on their home ground.

In January, 1986, security measures were increased at the Ottawa International Airport and the Pearson International Airport in Toronto. One of the difficult decisions we face as members of an open society is how to protect ourselves and our society from the threat and violence of terrorism, while still protecting those precious freedoms which we, in our society, guard so carefully.

What can we, as Canadians, do to combat international terrorism? On January 10, 1986, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a statement which I will quote:

> Those who murder and maim innocent people, and who bring anarchy to civilized society, should have no sanctuary, no comfort and no indulgence.

On January 30, 1986, Senator Kelly rose in the other place and proposed a special committee to study international terrorism because, as he said:

> We do not know enough about the extent to which terrorist groups are locating or have located in Canada, and I think we should know more. I do not think we know enough about the actions Canada can and should take to combat international terrorism.

One group will be taking action this Tuesday, Mr. Speaker, the North American Jewish Students Network Canada. A delegation of students from across the country will come together in Ottawa to take part in a one-day student mobilization effort against terrorism. This day-long event will be the culmination of an intensive nation-wide campaign against terrorism.

I have had the pleasure of dealing with Network on several occasions, most recently to celebrate the release of Anatoly Shcharansky with Naomi Noyek, the chairperson of Anti-Terrorism Day 1986, and Dan Ronen, the chairperson of Network's Political Action Committee.

On March 11, these students will be meeting with Members of Parliament, holding a memorial for victims of terrorism on Parliament Hill at 2 p.m. at which Mr. Edward Leonard and his Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) will be present. A panel discussion on international terrorism with students and Members of Parliament will be held at 3.30 p.m.

I commend Network to my colleagues in the House of Commons and the other place, and I hope they will find the time either to meet with the students on that day or, if the schedule does not allow, at least to focus their attention on the issue of international terrorism.

No society or individual is immune to terrorism. It is time for Canada to take a leading role in combating this insidious cancer of terrorism.

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, speaking before the Memorial Fund Committee on November 3, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stated that freedom to travel safety was the very essence of what international order was all about, and that there was a real danger that global terrorism would come to dominate the international order. In Canada we have been painfully aware of the tragedies visited upon us by international terrorism and, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, we intend that Canada should be in the forefront of countries seeking new initiatives to combat it.

The international community has become sensitized to the issue. In specialized bodies such as the Milan Crime Conference and the International Maritime Organization, resolutions have been passed condemning international terrorism. On Friday, December 6, for the first time, a strong anti-terrorist resolution was unanimously adopted at the United Nations General Assembly. It urged the further development of international co-operation on the prosecution and punishment of acts of hostage taking and abductions as manifestations of international terrorism.

Canada is determined that the scourge of international terrorism should come to an end. We have taken steps within the country to strengthen the security of our airports, and more will be done. Canada deposited its instruments of ratification of the U.N. Convention on Hostage Taking on December 4 and is undertaking negotiations with a number of countries to establish or strengthen extradition arrangements, an essential step in deterring potential terrorists.

More needs to be done. Despite the blows that have recently been struck against international terrorism, the phenomenon is by no means defeated, and the threat to the international order and to civilized international conduct is still grave. I must emphasize that Canada remains determined in dealing with the immediate impact of this tragic phenomenon. Canada will come to grips with its underlying causes and will do everything possible to ensure that Canada's airports and ships remain safe for Canadians to travel anywhere.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—DIFFICULTIES FACING EARLY RETIREES. (B) SCOPE OF REGULATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, last February 25 I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). According to a report by the Office de la construction du Québec, 5,432 pensioners will not be entitled to unemployment insurance, despite the fact they have paid premiums.

Mr. Speaker, we seldom get answers from the Government side, but now and again they are so illogical that we have to raise the issue again on the late show, we simply have to try again in the hope of some clarification.

Mr. Speaker, the illogical answer was: "The matter is before the Forget Commission and they will be reporting in due course." Mr. Speaker, if the Government were really serious, if the Government really wanted to wait until the Forget Commission has dealt with the problem, why not wait until the Forget Commission complete their work and make their report public? Should the commission report suggest that retirees did not have the right to collect unemployment insurance after working and paying premiums, then they would say: Well, according to the report, such and such regulation applies.

However, Mr. Speaker, without notice or comment, an unfair and insensitive regulation has been enforced since January 5.

Mr. Speaker, particularly in the construction industry there are people between 50 and 55 and even 60 who may have decided to accept early retirement in 1981, 1982, 1983 or 1984. A worker might have figured he would be eligible for monthly payments from his retirement fund contributions, or again he might have worked a few weeks in the summer when the weather is fine and, at the time of early retirement, this work would have made him eligible for unemployment benefits to supplement his income and take care of his children. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I know specific cases of people in my riding who have retired early from construction jobs and still have children attending high school or university.

It is not fair for these two or three people who accepted to take an early retirement that the Government decided on January 5, 1986 to cut off their unemployment insurance benefits. Naturally, this means that they will not be able to send their children to university, and this is why I find this decision unfair, Mr. Speaker.

In closing, I would like to quote for the record from a report of the Office de la construction du Québec, which clearly states that the worker who reaches the age of 65 is no longer protected by the Unemployment Insurance Act. For a retired worker to be affected by the recent changes to the unemployment insurance regulations, he must be under 65 and his annuity must exceed $321.75 a month. In such a case, he will no longer be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. Can someone live with $321.75 a month nowadays, Mr. Speaker? It is ridiculous. In fact, the Office says:

> We can establish at about 6,800 the number of pensioners whose monthly income exceeds $300 a month and who are under 65.

Half of them are under 60, Mr. Speaker.

However, in the same report, Table 1 shows that, in 1984, 5,432 pensioners registered hours of work during the year, and we can presume that a very high proportion of them are under 65. This is why we say that, realistically, at least 5,000 construction workers in Quebec are penalized by these unfair and unsensitive regulations—

• (1820)

Or, as we say in English, unfair.

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance program has operated on certain basic principles. Most important are these two: universal payment of premiums to pool the risk; payment of benefits to those who are both unemployed and not receiving income as a result. The changes the Government has made are consistent with those principles.

There are those who seem to believe that unemployment insurance should operate like a savings plan or prepaid pension scheme. The fact is that unemployment insurance is not, and was never intended to be, any of those things. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced on November 8, 1984, as part of the Expenditure Reduction Program, that the UI rules dealing with pension income arising out of an employment would be changed as of December 31, 1984. On December 20, 1984, Cabinet decided to postpone to January, 1986, implementation of that change. This was in order to allow the private sector sufficient time to adjust to the changes. The pension regulations have now been in force since January 5, 1986. Any claimants in receipt of UI benefits on and after that date became subject to the new rules. The starting date of a claim has no impact. Claimants are allowed to earn up to 25 per cent of their benefit rate before deductions are made from benefits payable. The program is being administered according to its basic principles. If the Forget Commission suggests that fundamental principles should be revised, then this Government will consider making the appropriate changes.

I would repeat that for all to hear very clearly: If the Forget Commission suggests that fundamental principles should be revised, then this Government will consider making the appropriate changes.

THE BUDGET

ANTICIPATED REIMBURSEMENT OF TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I sent a letter to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and I would urge all Hon. Members to do the same thing and support my request.

You have all noticed that the Government's Budget contains an error concerning the tax credit prepayment, the kind of error that was made with respect to the deindexation of old age security pensions. Knowingly or not, the Government decided to ignore 538,000 families entitled to the tax credit. As a result of the ceiling arbitrarily set at $15,000, the Government penalizes those families and delivers them in the hands of tax discounters.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, considering that the greatest majority of those families are headed by women, and considering that we are on the eve of International Women's Day, I am sure—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The 60 seconds have expired.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

TRIBUTE TO MARIE GÉRIN-LAJOIE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow March 8 being International Women's Day, I should like to pay homage to an outstanding Quebecer and Canadian, Marie Gérin-Lajoie.

She was French Canada's first graduate bachelor. She was the forerunner of those who took up the fight for the cause of women. She worked for many years in social services and founded the Institut Notre-Dame-du-bon-conseil, a religious group devoted to social action.

Marie Gérin-Lajoie belonged to a great family that associated privileges inherent in academic achievement and wealth with social responsibilities.

It was her mother who fought to open Quebec's first classical school for girls. Her mother was also one of the founders of the Fédération nationale Saint-Jean-Baptiste. Her grandmother founded Sainte-Justine Hospital.

Mr. Speaker, Marie Gérin-Lajoie was certainly far ahead of her time in her thinking about the place of women in society. The story of her life is an example which should be a source of inspiration to all of us.

HOUSING

HALIFAX VACANCY RATE AND RENTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, adequate affordable housing is a problem that affects many Canadians. It is a very serious problem for persons in the Atlantic Region, and an especially serious problem for women.

In the Halifax region the housing vacancy rate has been below 1 per cent for the past five consecutive years. This makes finding housing difficult for all persons, but for female-led, single parent families, it is almost intolerable.

The average monthly rental cost for an apartment in the Halifax area is $583, while the average monthly shelter allowance for a family of three or more is only $468. As a result, over 65 per cent of female-led single parent families in the Atlantic region have had severe affordability problems in finding housing, even at the 30 per cent level of income for shelter.

Today, March 7, a group of women called Mothers United for Metro Shelter, are demonstrating in front of the Halifax Legislature demanding adequate and affordable housing for themselves and their children. I hope the Tory Government is listening.

BUDGET

EXTENSION OF NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the Budget brings to northerners and those living in remote regions of Canada the long-awaited announcement of equity and increased fairness with respect to the taxation of northern benefits. Reports from across the Yukon, Northwest Territories, and northern Manitoba indicate an appreciation for a Budget which recognizes and addresses the high cost of northern living. The new system extends housing, travel, and personal tax measures to a wide range of northerners for the first time.

Let it never be said that the Government does not look after the poorer regions of Canada. Let the record show that the majority of Northerners applaud the courage of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in bringing this increased tax equity to northern Canadians.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, in the Budget brought down last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) we see a development we have not seen since the beginning of the postwar period: a reduction in Government spending. Not only has this Government managed to bring a decade of irresponsible spending on the part of the previous administration to a halt, it has reversed the trend. Thanks to measures taken by our Government, the deficit will drop below $30 billion and the increase in the national debt will be under control.

Our actions will increase the confidence of investors in Canada's prospects and will help bring down interest rates. This will provide for a continuum in the creation of jobs in this country, an area that under this administration has progressed remarkably well. Mr. Speaker, like all other Canadians, the people of the riding of Chambly agree with our Government that reducing the deficit and creating jobs should be our primary goals if Canada is to become prosperous once again.

THE BUDGET

REACTION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, what do New Brunswickers think of the Budget? I will quote from an editorial in the Moncton Times and Transcript. It reads:

> Fair, firm, and probably effective. The Budget is unpleasant, but necessary medicine to restore economic health. It is a finely crafted intricate plan to cut spending, increase revenues, stimulate employment, encourage confidence in the dollar, lower interest rates, reduce the deficit and debt charges, yet give help to those regions, sectors, groups, and individuals most in need.
> It is linked to trade and jobs, using the business sector as the engine of growth, and is intended to send a mesage to the financial communities at home and abroad, where there is no sentimentality, that the Government is serious in tackling the deficit.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have stood in this House a number of times over the past few months to address problems concerning the Native Economic Development Program and, more specifically, its inability to achieve what it was mandated to accomplish. Since the Conservative Government took office it has continually reminded Canadians about efficiency, co-operation, and, of course, jobs, jobs, jobs. The experience of applicants to the NEDP leads me to believe that the opposite is in fact the rule of thumb.

Groups such as the Nishnawbe-Aski Development Fund, and the Yukon Indian Development Corporation have been frustrated for far too long by a Ministry which does not appear to recognize the major purpose for which it was intended. That purpose, of course, is to foster an increased economic base for the first citizens of Canada.

The Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) is in one respect, at least, more fortunate than his colleague responsible for youth—he has some money in his budget with which he can actually do something. Why does he not stand in this House and tell the people of Canada that he is sorry for dragging his feet all this time and that, after Question Period today, he is really going to get to work?

POLITICAL PARTIES

METHOD OF FINANCING

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I am starting a public debate on the method of financing Canadian political parties, with a view to limiting contributions to political parties to $5,000 per year, and only by individual voters, which would exclude corporations, associations and unions. I shall have another opportunity to inform the public on the subject at the national convention of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, which will be held next week in Montreal.

I would ask all Members on both sides of the House to examine the information I have prepared and to think about this proposal, so that together we can help put the political process in Canada on a more ethical basis and improve the democratic process.

Not only should political parties make sure that financial contributions do not impose a measure of dependence on the party, there should not be the slightest hint of such dependence.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

PLAUDITS FOR FILM VISIONS OF WOMEN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today I am very proud to join my colleagues in observing International Women's Day, a day which marks the concerted move by women to participate fully in the consideration of the social, political, and economic concerns of our society as full partners. Last July I had the opportunity to participate at the UN End of the Decade Conference on Women in Nairobi. The Conference proved to be a giant step forward for the democratization of the women's movement. It has now become a populist movement for women around the world.

The National Film Board produced, through Studio D, in co-operation with the private sector, a very fine film called Visions of Women/Visions des femmes. It is challenging and celebrating and—

APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN TO GOVERNMENT BOARDS AND AGENCIES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when International Women's Day was first celebrated, Canadian women were in the throes of fighting for the most basic political right, the right to vote. Today the full range of issues of concern to women occupy centre stage in our political arena. This is due to the remarkable growth in the influence of women's groups and the integration of women into the decision-making process. The Government has made steady progress in its efforts to accelerate the appointment of women to federal Government boards, agencies, and commissions.

[Translation]

Since we have been in power, one quarter of these positions have been filled by women. Last week, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) announced a 22 per cent increase in the appointment of women judges.

Our Government will keep up this trend until women account for 50 per cent of such appointments.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is attempting to do the impossible, sell his Budget in British Columbia, a province where food banks, unemployment guidance centres, UIC and welfare are the major growth industries. With unemployment hovering around 14 per cent and youth unemployment at more than 20 per cent, with a pending crisis in the forest industry regarding U.S. trade, the mining industry in neutral, the fishing and agricultural sectors in serious difficulty, and business still reeling from the recession, what does the Government do? It raises taxes by $1,305 per household, ignores the forest and mining industry, cuts back on help to farmers, reduces support for the fishery, and offers no special consideration to one of the hardest hit areas of Canada. The Budget will actually worsen the economic condition of British Columbia through federal Government lay-offs, program cut-backs, and reduced consumer purchasing power. After years and Socred/Tory-type Budgets in British Columbia, the Prime Minister will have a tough time convincing British Columbians that Socred/Tory times are not tough times.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Budget of the Minister of Finance announces economic assistance programs for farmers. For instance, the Government will increase the budget of the Farm Credit Corporation during the next two years. A $700 million program has been set up for commodity based mortgages. These mortgages will be offered at a 6 per cent interest rate to farmers who have serious debt problems and will assure them of having long term and stable financing.

Initiatives will also be taken to make it easier for farmers who must look for another job. A new program will provide them with vocational guidance, retraining and temporary financial assistance services. These measures to support Canadian farmers will cost $65 million this year and $130 million next year.

The 3 cents a litre fuel tax rebate for primary producers will be extended for one year to January 1, 1988.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-96

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my opposition to Bill C-96, legislation which will cut federal contributions to provincial health care programs by over $4 billion over the next five years. According to the Canadian Medical Association, the cuts will create a two-tier health care system in Canada where one quality of health care will exist in richer provinces, and second or third-rate services will exist in the poorer provinces.

The New Brunswick Medical Society agrees with the Canadian Medical Association and has expressed its concern over the effects the cuts will have in our province where health care programs are already approaching a crisis due to a lack of funds. New Brunswick does not have the money or the taxing ability to raise its share of health care costs, and the Conservative Government, obsessed with slashing, should realize that and withdraw—

EMPLOYMENT

LOSS OF JOBS IN QUEBEC—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, yesterday hundreds of workers came to Parliament Hill to ask the Government to take action and help them save their jobs in Lauzon. This morning, we hear that 44,000 people in Quebec lost their jobs during the month of February, and that 23,000 young people have lost their jobs in this country. My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What does the Minister intend to do to help the 44,000 Quebecers who lost their jobs in February, and especially the employees at Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon who were laid off, or will be in a matter of weeks?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to see once again that the employment level is keeping to below 10 per cent. This is the second month in a row where the rate of unemployment has been below 10 per cent at this time of year. We know that some 52,000 jobs have been created in the Province of Quebec over the last year. We know as well that that is not good enough. The programs that we have put in place are working. That is why we will continue to move in this direction. We want to make sure that job creation in Quebec is at the same level and rate as it is elsewhere in the country.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. I will try with another one, and I may be luckier. My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Youth. As I said a moment ago, 23,000 young Canadians lost their jobs in February. Does the Minister think that she can be of any assistance to the unemployed youth of the country since she has no budget, no program? What can she do for the youth of this country with a chauffeur and a limousine?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are some $700 million in employment and training programs directed to young people in this country. It is having an impact. Certainly we want to see more done. I have said that time and time again. With the Job Entry programs, Challenge '85, Challenge '86, and the institutional training programs for young people, these are having an impact. That is why there are far more young people working today than when we took office in 1984.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Youth does not even have the responsibility to answer the question in this House.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister responsible for regional development. Could the Minister explain, considering the high unemployment rate in these regions, why the Budget papers tabled by the Minister of Finance show that the regional economic development envelope has been cut by $15 to $9 billion for the years 1984-85 to 1987-88?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, clearly this is one more opposition MP who has not understood the facts. Could the Minister inform the House where it says so in the Budget?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I said in response to a similar question yesterday, the Government is responsible for the bulk of the work that is now going on in shipyards. We plan to continue to route work into our shipyards.

What about the designated areas? On what page are they?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, clearly the MP has not been listening. When I said that another 70 will be added to the Canadian workforce nationally in the hour they apparently intend to spend with their negative questioning, it is partly a result of the very excellent Budget brought in by my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

THE BUDGET

WOMEN—SOCIAL JUSTICE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). Yesterday, I met with representatives of a number of women's groups from Quebec. All, without exception, said that the Conservative Budget's substantial tax increases put a heavy burden on women. Is that the meaning of Conservative justice?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, first let me point out that one of the interesting things about the employment figures published this morning is that jobs for women have increased. I think most women would be happy to hear that.

As I said yesterday, the people of Canada know that this is a fair Budget and that it targets our spending to the areas which need it most. There is a refundable tax credit for people in the lower tax brackets, and the child tax credit is being paid earlier. That is something of benefit to women across the country.

DURATION OF SURTAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians, particularly women who make decisions affecting the family, know full well that the taxes imposed by the Government, taking into account the compensatory measures brought in, are an unjust burden on every Canadian family.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance in the absence of the Minister of Finance. Considering that it is the woman who is usually involved in the decision-making process in the family, and that the 3 per cent surtax is very unfair because it hits everyone the same, why did the Minister of Finance tell a Montreal-based journalist that the Government intends to lift the surtax on the rich next year but has not planned to lift the surtax on ordinary Canadians until 1988? Why is there that injustice?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the surtax on the rich is considerably larger than it is on the poor, as the Hon. Member knows.

For an elderly widow with an income of $10,000, the increase as a result of the surtax is $2, which is more than offset by the refundable sales tax credit.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister to deal with the question of unfairness. Is it Government policy, as the Minister of Finance told a Montreal journalist, that the Government plans to lift the surtax of 3 per cent on ordinary Canadians? Although this is not in the Budget, he plans to do it in 1988, which is an election year, while lifting the surtax on the rich next year. Is that fair? If it is good enough for the rich next year, who not lift the tax for ordinary Canadians at the same time?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the tax policies of the Government are directed particularly at those most in need, and the Hon. Member knows that. We have already suggested in the Budget that the refundable sales tax credit is an innovation that is evidence of the kinds of things we think are useful for people in lower-income brackets and that are fair.

ETHICS

AWARDING OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns once again the compensation contracts a number of Conservative Members want to award to the party's financial backers.

According to a report by Canadian press yesterday, a Conservative Member who chose to remain anonymous said that similar lists had been drawn up by other Conservative Members.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House how many more Conservative Members engaged in drawing up similar lists, and could he give the House the assurance that he will put an end ot this practice immediately, to ensure that Canadians will not see their taxes being spent in this manner.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman is talking about and I do not think he does either. Contract procurement practices are set down by the Treasury Board. I think the Hon. Member might be referring to the matter he raised yesterday. The practices that were designed and laid down by the Government of which he was a supporter are still in place and, if anything, are more rigid now than they were under the previous administration.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE DISSOLUTION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, if I do not know what I am talking about, could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Member published the "Sorry, I'm Tory" letter of yesterday? Will the Deputy Prime Minister immediately cause the dissolution of the Ritz-Carlton committee chaired by Mr. Roberge, a comittee that has as a member the Hon. Member for Quebec East? Will he put an end to this right now in order to ensure that the Government continues to have the faith of the Canadian people and the faith of all Members of the House, which he could ensure by dissolving this kind of repugnant committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is clear.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is a question I answered yesterday. The explanation was quite simple. The hon. gentleman who originated the letter, recognizing his mistake, has (a), apologized for it, and (b), written to all of the original recipients of the letter to tell them the correct procedure which is set out in the Treasury Board guidelines and Public Works procedure for the allotment of contracts.

Mr. Boudria: What about the Ritz committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and concerns the Robin Hood myths of the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister aware that figures from the National Council on Welfare show that the combined effects of the 1985-86 Budgets, excluding sales tax, will take $58 of disposable income from a woman with two kids who exists at half the poverty line? Is this the kind of meeting of special needs about which the Minister of Finance has been talking?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how many times I have to explain this to Hon. Members opposite. What we have done was to aim our policies at the people who need them the most, the people with the lowest incomes. Everyone loves to do numbers, but we know what the truth is.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON WELFARE STUDY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, apparently the people who need it most are those in the highest income brackets. Is the Minister also aware that this study from the National Council on Welfare contradicts the Robin Hood philosophy of the Minister by indicating that a poor family headed by a woman will lose $58, not even including sales taxes, while a rich man who earns over $100,000 per year will gain $422? How is that possibly helping those in greatest need?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member forgets some of the other things that we have been doing in this connection. One is that we have reduced the dividend tax credit which is aimed directly at this mythical male person about whom the Hon. Member is talking. We have also eliminated income splitting.

• (1130)

We have introduced a minimum tax. I do not understand why those people opposite do not seem to be able to read.

YOUTH

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for Youth. For several weeks now the Minister, with her chauffeured limousine, has been boasting about her advocacy role in promoting her Government's success in creating jobs for the youth of the country. The unemployment figures released by Statistics Canada this morning show an increase in youth unemployment from 15 per cent to 16.4 per cent. What is the Minister's next move to ensure her credibility with our youth and improve the lot of unemployed youth?

Mr. Boudria: Hire a young chauffeur.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want the Hon. Member to know that youth unemployment has come down 2 percentage points since this Government took office. Some 50,000 more young people are at work today and have meaningful jobs than when we came into office in September of 1984.

Mr. Gauthier: Because they are getting older, Flora.

Miss MacDonald: We are continuing that progress with Job Entry programs for those young people who have not been able to finish high school, for summer students who are coming out of university and college with Challenge '86, and with any other number of programs which are underway in the Department of Unemployment and Immigration.

I would urge the Hon. Member to make sure that those people in her part of the country get their applications in by the end of the week—

Mrs. Pépin: Order.

Miss MacDonald: —for Challenge '86 projects for young people.

[Translation]

BUDGETARY ESTIMATES—YOUTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has lost her voice and her staff, I am giving her another opportunity to speak up and answer for herself.

Where in the estimates can one find funds earmarked to create more employment for the 700,000 youth who are hopeless and jobless?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, $700 million have been set aside this year for youth training and job creation. More than 200,000 youth are now or will be involved in employment programs this year.

That is what the Government has done. The unemployment rate has gone down to the lowest level ever and this trend will continue.

MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

INQUIRY IF LETTER MADE PUBLIC ORIGINATED FROM DEPARTMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). Can she confirm that the letter made public yesterday did come from her department and bear her signature?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, we have checked this last night and indeed the letter came from my department and bears my signature.

Quite obviously an error was made when the letter was drafted. Neither I nor my department ever intended to use public funds for partisan purposes.

I would suggest the wrong word was mistakenly used, and it should read "Party", not "Government". I do not think that anyone in a political "party" would not want to recruit people, so there was an error in the text.

If this incident has embarrassed the Government, my colleagues or the House, I apologize.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that in the circumstance in which she has clearly lost control of her office, she really has no choice but to resign?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I have not lost control of my office. I have no intentions of resigning.

Mr. Robinson: It has lost control of you.

Mrs. Champagne: I have made a mistake, and I think there is no one in this House who can boast of the fact that they have never in their lives made a mistake of one word somewhere.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Right on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: It was a mistake the letter became public.

An Hon. Member: Come on, Ed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that part of the decrease in world oil prices had been passed along to the consumers in a two-cent per litre reduction at the pumps. I want to know why only part of the saving has been passed along to the consumers? And why do we have to wait so many weeks for further benefits?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has answered this question any number of times in the House, including yesterday. She pointed out that there is oil in the system, that the price decline reflects earlier declines, and we would expect that recent declines will be reflected as well.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has never answered this question, never.

WHOLESALE PRICE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Will the Minister of State for Finance tell me and this House why the Canadian wholesale market price for Canadian products in Canada is kept artificially high when the market price for refined products in the United States is going down? Will the Minister tell the consumers why this is happening? And will she tell the independent retailers why this is happening?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have no evidence that there is an artificially high price for petroleum products in the Canadian system, absolutely none, and I do not think the Hon. Member has, either.

If the Hon. Member knew how the market works, he would not need to ask this question any more. It has been answered any number of times by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In spite of the Government's claim of an outstanding record in job creation, Statistics Canada shows that there has been a drop in the real unemployment rate from 10.9 per cent to only 10.7 per cent since the Conservatives were elected back in September of 1984.

Mr. Crosbie: Come on. You are really straining.

Mr. Nystrom: And there has actually been a loss of 149,000 full-time jobs since the election of her Party. In light of this information, how can the Minister justify cutting $100 million from the Canadian Jobs Strategy when there has been a real loss of 149,000 jobs since September of 1984—full-time jobs?

Mr. Crosbie: Your nose is getting a little longer.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what is happening in this House is that we have "Statistics Allmand", "Statistics Nystrom", and I am well content to stay with Statistics Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: How is that nose now?

Miss MacDonald: Statistics Canada reported this morning that the unemployment rate has stayed below 10 per cent, and that since September of 1984 almost 580,000 new jobs have been created.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, they don't like that.

Miss MacDonald: It is widely spread across the country; in all regions, in all age groups, and in all sectors. We know it has to improve, and that is why the Minister of Finance brought in the Budget he did, and we will see improvement again.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about real Canadians, not seasonally adjusted Canadians.

Mr. Rodriguez: Right on.

ELIMINATION OF YOUTH DEPARTMENT BUDGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Would the Minister explain why her Government eliminated the entire budget of the Department of Youth when youth unemployment has gone up since the election of the Conservative Party in September of 1984, in real terms, from 17.5 per cent to 18.1 per cent?

• (1140)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate for young people is 16.4 per cent—down two full percentage points since we came to office. This means there an additional 50,000 young people who are at work today who were not at work in September of 1984.

I have already said we do not think that is good enough. We want to continue that progress, which is why we are putting $700 million of funding into youth employment programs this year. We expect that at the end of the year, Sir, you will see even better progress than we have had to date.

PRICE OF WHEAT—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

On December 13, 1985, a motion was passed in the House calling for the establishment of a committee to examine the domestic wheat price. What is the status of that reference at this time?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government is well aware of the Hon. Member's interest in this matter. I can tell him that the terms of reference are presently a matter for discussion among the House Leaders—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was a bit worried about the question because it is really a question of House business. I think that perhaps it should be put that way.

THE BUDGET

NEW 6 PER CENT TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Finance). According to the Conference Board, the Government would not be able to reduce the deficit as it had hoped. Can the Minister of State (Finance) confirm whether the new 6 per cent business transfer tax to be levied as early as October 1 this year will offset the Government's revenue shortage not forecast in the February 1986 Budget? How do you propose to balance that Budget?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am a little bit bemused by all this focusing on what the Conference Board has said and has not said. Perhaps I could quote precisely what it has stated in its own hand.

Although we have used different assumptions regarding oil prices and interest rates, our analysis shows the federal deficit to be under $30 billion for 1986-87 and decreasing thereafter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON NEW TAX IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. Can the Minister assure the House, and all Canadians, that no new tax will be implemented until the next Budget?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a hypothetical question. The Hon. Member is once again trying to spread confusion on the basis of a newspaper report concerning a Conference Board study which we did not write and for which we are not responsible.

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPACT OF PUBLIC SERVICE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Could the Minister explain why the Government has done nothing to assess the impact on women of its job cuts in the Public Service? Is it fair that most of these job cuts should be concentrated in the Public Service where wages are the lowest, therefore affecting job categories where the proportion of women is the highest?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for posing what is a very sensitive and difficult issue. As Hon. Members know, the situation which was outlined by the President of the Treasury Board is a temporary one. The former Government Departments become tremendously unwieldy. I have been in touch with the President of the Treasury Board about the sensitivity in relation to these necessary actions. The Government has taken a number of actions which are designed specifically to see that those affected such as women enter the Canadian Jobs Strategy. If we look at the question of employment, broadly speaking, and particularly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister is making what should be a statement. On a supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

REQUEST THAT STUDY BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, whether or not the situation is temporary, the lay-offs which are taking place are permanent. Will the Minister responsible for the status of women ensure that the Government undertakes and publishes an impact study with respect to the effect of the Public Service job cuts on women? Since women make up 41 per cent of the Public Service of Canada, will the Government guarantee that no more than that percentage of employees who are women will be fired as a result of the job cuts?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that there is a maximum amount of sensitivity in this whole area along the lines of which the Hon. Member speaks. The question of employment equity, and the question of getting women out of ghettoized jobs where they are the first affected when there are these movements in any part of the economy, are a matter of priority. This is also true for the question of equal pay for work of equal value, so that people, especially women, are not so adversely affected when these sorts of situations are forced upon us.

EMPLOYMENT

EQUALITY—RESPECT FOR WOMEN'S NEEDS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance announced the creation of a new job strategy targetted at women who want to return to the labour force. Could the Minister assure the House that she will respect the needs of women in her new program, contrary to what she has done in Bill C-62 dealing with employment equity?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the question.

[English]

Bill C-62 is before the House for debate. I trust that the Opposition will give support to employment equity. When the Hon. Member was the chairperson of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women I know that she did not put forward any proposals for employment equity. At this point I would urge her to move forward, to progress, to come into the real world, and to support programs which give women a chance.

EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY—MINISTER'S COMMITMENT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to emphasize that the Governement has turned down all the amendments that the Liberal Party had proposer to this Bill. Could the Minister, and I hope she will listen to and understand my question because she failed to answer it the first time around, could the Minister assure the House that she will not implement a new job strategy program if women as a group do not feel that this program meets their requirements? That is quite clear!

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, which started in September of last year, there was a particular program which was directed toward women re-entering the workforce after having been out for a number of years. I have had a chance to visit a number of these projects across the country. This morning, at a meeting with representatives from womens' organizations, I had a chance to talk about these projects. I was told by all that this is a very excellent approach to take, to help women get back into the labour force. I wish the Hon. Member would—

STATUS OF WOMEN

FREE TRADE WITH UNITED STATES—IMPACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Canadian women have denounced free trade with the United States because of the major disturbance it is likely to create for women employed in the service industry. Does the Minister think it is fair to open up without adequate protection this area where 80 per cent of workers are women?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for raising a question on which I have had a number of representations from womens' groups across the country. I wish to suggest to the Hon. Member that I think the women of Canada have a lot of faith in the future of the country. They also recognize that, as we enter into discussions, we are doing so because those most vulnerable at the moment, in terms of these fluctuations, tend to be women who are ghettoized in many jobs. I have had conversations with Mr. Reisman and the Minister for International Trade. I have been pressing them to see that within the negotiation team there will be a person or group particularly designated to see that the interests of women, who tend to be the first affected, or who are in vulnerable jobs, will be protected.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I hope that person will, in fact, be a woman.

REQUEST THAT STUDY BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister guarantee that the study with respect to the impact of free trade on women being undertaken by Labour Canada will be made public and discussed directly with women representatives of the banking, insurance, communications and other service industries affected?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the discussions which are undertaken, and the mandate of those negotiating, will be to be in touch with those who are particularly concerned. Obviously there has to be a dialogue. If at the end of the day there is an agreement that is good for Canada, it will be because there has been a discussion and an agreement in the interests of all Canadians, particularly women.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CIA FUNDING OF BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns the nine Canadians who were part of the brainwashing experiments in the late 1950s.

Florence Langleben, who was one of the nine, died on January 2, 1986. Her son, Wayne, lives in my riding of Don Valley East. He would like to know when the Government will release all the facts on this sordid experiment, and especially the facts about the CIA funding of this terrible experiment.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when we came into office this problem came to our attention. We have taken action on the problem.

Mr. Rodriguez: With the speed of a snail.

Mr. Crosbie: Some months ago I appointed an independent outside counsel, in the person of Mr. George Cooper of Halifax.

Mr. Rodriguez: Is this a crab following a dead cod?

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. gentleman wants to answer this question, he can. Perhaps he knows more about it than I do.

Mr. Broadbent: Probably.

Mr. Crosbie: That may be. But he has certainly not achieved anything in that connection for a number of years now.

Mr. Heap: Neither have you.

Mr. Crosbie: Why does the wise one not wait and listen to see?

Mr. Heap: We have waited a long time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. None of this back and forth. It is not getting the question answered.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great importance to certain people. Why there should be these cheap interjections, I do not know.

Mr. George Cooper was appointed by me to act as an independent counsel to review in detail any connection the Government of Canada or any of its agencies had with respect to these certainly unfortunate events of some years ago. He is expected to conclude his report shortly, and the Government will then consider his report to see whether the Government has any responsibility whatever in connection with this matter.

I have no doubt that, after we receive the report and have had some time to consider it, we will make a statement, if not make the report public.

In the meantime, two members of the Department of Justice visited Washington at the beginning of this week—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister knows I cannot let him go on. He may want to complete this answer under Statements.

Miss MacDonald: But it is very important.

Mr. Speaker: All the questions and answers are important. The Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF CN SHOPS AT MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of Transport.

[English]

My question relates to a declaration made by the Minister's press secretary who said that maintaining the CN shops in Moncton from a purely business standpoint would be impractical and a money loser.

Is the Minister using his press aide as a messenger to the people of Moncton? Is he preparing them for bad news?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I think the Hon. Member knows that this is a matter that we take very seriously. There are several options being considered. An evaluation in being undertaken. I share with the Hon. Member the concern of the workers involved, and I can also assure the Hon. Member that we are trying to work out a satisfactory and positive solution to this whole difficult problem.

AIDE'S STATEMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister believe that such a statement from a ministerial aide is good publicity for the CN shops, especially when CN is looking at different arrangements to keep the shops open and protect the 1,200 jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in a very emotional debate, such as that which is taking place on this very important issue, a lot of statements are made, some of which vary in degrees of accuracy. I think the Hon. Member himself has, from time to time, tended to overstate the case. I hope that he will just be patient and work with us toward working out a satisfactory solution.

YOUTH

WORDING OF MINISTER'S LETTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Youth. I want to give her the opportunity to correct a very serious misleading of the House in which she indulged—and I say that quite seriously—earlier in the Question Period.

The Minister has acknowledged that she wrote a letter to her cabinet colleagues. She said there was only one word in it that was a mistake.

Considering the whole letter is about partisan politics, and begins with references to a political agenda and includes these sentences, Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. Mailly: She has already dealt with that.

Mr. Broadbent: I am in your hands, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that this is becoming a long preamble. Could we have a question?

Mr. Broadbent: Considering the Minister says in the letter:

> Caucus requires tools to maintain its political linkages with youth—
> Support to the recruitment efforts of the PC Youth Federations—

—are important: Which one word among these many was the error the Minister made?

Mr. Rodriguez: The whole letter.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I have apologized for anything in the letter which could—

Mr. Rodriguez: The whole letter.

Miss Champagne: —be construed as a partisan word.

I think that linkages with youth by members of any caucus are very important. I would imagine the Leader of the New Democratic Party would certainly want his people to have linkages.

We are working with the young people of Canada. Now that they know what we have done, what we are doing, and what we will be doing for them, I can understand why the Leader of the New Democratic Party would be worried.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Considering that letter is a blatant attempt to use public funds for the recruitment of young people to the Conservative Party of Canada, would the Deputy Prime Minister not acknowledge that this is an abuse of the powers and responsibilities of a Minister, and request the Prime Minister of Canada to ask for this Minister's resignation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much further the hon. gentleman, or Members applauding opposite, would want any Minister to go. She has been honest and forthright—

Mr. Broadbent: She got caught.

Mr. Nielsen: —in admitting the authorship of the letter, in admitting a mistake of the letter and in apologizing for it.

Surely even the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is sufficiently human to admit mistakes from time to time and to apologize for them.

Mr. Broadbent: If you are in the Cabinet you resign, Mister.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ABSENCE OF FEMALE GUARANTORS FOR PASSPORT APPLICANTS

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I would like to direct my question to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

Is the Minister aware that groups or professions eligible to act as guarantors of passport applications are almost without exception male-dominated ones, and, for example, the profession of nursing is not included on that list? What is the Minister prepared to do about this apparent, if unintended, discrimination against 50 per cent of the population?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising this matter. It is a matter which, on reflection, has a good deal of validity.

I will undertake to talk with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has responsibility for passports, and review that list in this light.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE SUMMERSIDE—CONSTRUCTION OF COMBINED MESS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I had a question on potatoes for the Minister of Agriculture. However, as he is absent, I will address a question to the Minister of National Defence.

On January 24, 1985, the Government announced a new Combined Mess for CFB, Summerside. Construction was to begin in October, 1986. Is that project on schedule?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information at my disposal. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and, as soon as I obtain the information, I will bring it to the Hon. Member's attention.

PROVISION OF FUNDING

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the Estimates for that project. Is that an oversight in the budgetary process or is the project being delayed? I would like to have a response to that question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the exact number of projects we have on the go but it is in the hundreds.

In any event, the final decision on which will proceed this year, for Estimate purposes, must be in by October 31. As a consequence, the fact that it is not in the Estimates cannot be taken as absolute assurance that it will not be proceeded with this year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—WOMEN KILLED IN AMBUSH BY CONTRAS—UNITED STATES FUNDING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations. In Nicaragua recently Contra invaders financed by the United States ambushed a truck, killed four peasant mothers, wounded others, and killed a Swiss agronomist. Will the Minister publicly ask President Reagan to withdraw his request to Congress for $100 million more to pay and arm the murderers of women, children, and civilians in Nicaragua?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has already announced its policy concerning Nicaragua and Central America. I personally have had the opportunity to visit that country. We have a program which we apply very consistantly and we continue to support the Contadora effort.

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, that was not an answer to the question. I asked for a public statement of opposition to the funding of these murderers.

REQUEST FOR DEMILITARIZATION OF CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has visited the region and is, therefore, familiar with the support of the churches for the Nicaraguan Government in its opposition to the funding of the Contras, and the support of at least eight Governments in that area, will she join those Governments and churches in asking for the demilitarization of Central America, including the withdrawal of American troops?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, it is both the practice and tradition of the Mulroney Government to co-operate with volunteer organizations. We are also involved in various programs with Church organizations. I want to emphasize that the Canadian policy differs considerably from the American policy and that we have every intention of sticking to it.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO ANSWER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, this being the first opportunity to correct something I said during Question Period. During Question Period I said that in the vicinity of 50,000 new jobs had been created in the Province of Quebec since the election. That was a mistake. I should have said that 112,000 new jobs have been created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POINT OF ORDER

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) raised a point of order which drew attention to an apparent breach of Standing Order 99(2), formerly 70(16), for those who have figured out the new numbering system.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments requested a comprehensive response to its fourth report presented on October 17, 1985. The Standing Order provides that a comprehensive response should be tabled by the Government within 120 days of the presentation of a special committee report when such a request is made.

I must rule that the Hon. Member has raised a valid point of order, the Standing Order being quite clear. I simply indicate, therefore, that the Member has raised a point of order and this ruling will serve to draw the breach of the Standing Order to the attention of the Minister.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could you give the House some guidance as to what happens to remedy this breach of the Standing Orders which you have noted?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that I cannot. The Hon. Member may wish to read the Standing Order. He will find that it is silent on that matter.

Mr. Speaker: That is the remedy.

STATUS OF WOMEN

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me, as Minister responsible for the Status of Women, to rise in the House on the eve of International Women's Day. We all know that International Women's Day began as a one-day protest of intolerable working conditions for women in the United States.

[Translation]

Today, this event has undergone considerable expansion and is celebrated throughout the world during a full week of activities.

[English]

International Women's Day is one illustration that the women's movement has become global in scope. The movement's character is such that it can embrace women of all cultures, races, and economic conditions. Women are bound together by their commonality of purpose, their movement toward equality, and their desire for an equal chance.

Nowhere was this world-wide sharing of goals more evident than at last year's Wold Conference of Women in Nairobi, Kenya. The Nairobi Conference was a landmark event. I am proud to say that Canada was instrumental in the development of a comprehensive blueprint of action to improve women's status to the end of this century. These strategies for the future are being used to guide our Canadian development of policies related to women and issues of concern to women. They include our employment equity legislation designed to improve the status of women in the workplace, and our efforts to position more women in decision-making positions in government, agencies, boards, and commissions.

The Government made a promise that in its first term of office appointments of women to federal boards and agencies would reach 30 per cent of all appointments made en route to the eventual goal of a full 50 per cent. I am pleased to say that we are not far short of that interim goal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Improvements have been made to public and private pension plans. Further, new laws will facilitate the enforcement of support orders. There will be a legislated end to the decades of discrimination perpetrated against Indian women. The Canadian Jobs Strategy, for example, is now in place. It ensures that women have an equal chance in all federal training programs.

Since we took office in September, 1984, employment for women has increased by 306,000. Unemployment among women has decreased by 79,000. Fifty thousand young women have found jobs under Challenge 85.

[Translation]

These programs, as well as others we have developed, are tangible proof of the Government's commitment to creating conditions that will give Canadian women, on an equal footing with men, an opportunity to achieve their full economic potential.

[English]

That same philosophy, Mr. Speaker, underlies the Budget. While recognizing those most in need, its intention is to restore the nation's economic confidence through fiscal responsibility which will create an economic climate in which Canadian women, as well as men, can see their initiatives and efforts fairly and justly rewarded. Presently, women own one-third of Canada's small businesses and their numbers are growing. Women are responsible for starting two-thirds of Canada's new small businesses, and this is having an important effect on the Canadian economy. Women entrepreneurs will find evidence of the Government's support and encouragement in this Budget. It will reduce the tax rate on small business income, double the amount of guaranteed loans available under the Small Businesses Loans Act, and broaden the tax rules providing deductions for allowable business investment losses.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today I tabled in the House the report of the Task Force on Child Care.

[English]

The important and comprehensive body of research the task force presented will be a valuable formulation to the public hearings of the parliamentary task force on child care. I expect it to be a useful guide in the ongoing discussions addressing Canada's child care needs. Finally, I believe the report will encourage public discussion and debate on child care and child care needs in this country. It is a much needed debate because child care is fundamentally linked to women's equality. It is fitting that an airing of such issues should be renewed on this, the eve of International Women's Day.

In conclusion, as we salute the women of Canada, indeed the women of the world, it is timely to recall the commitment made at the Halifax First Ministers' Conference chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and attended by the Premiers, to bring front and centre next meeting scheduled for November for the economic equality and social justice issues as they relate to women.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise on the occasion of Internatinal Women's Day. I especially want to emphasize the work of women, both outside and inside the home, of all women whatever their income, and to tell them that this is their day and that it is also a good day for Canadian women to tell this Governement that instead of simple statements of principle, they want this Government to keep all the nice promises we have been hearing since the 1984 elections.

I wish to stress the leadership given by the Canadian Government at the Nairobi Conference and point out that this Government should apply the same energy in implementing the principles discussed at this conference for the benefit of Canadian women. The Minister spoke about Bill C-62 on employment equity, and I simply want to remind the House that all the groups who appeared before the Parliamentary Committee said that they were dissatisfied with this Bill because it provides no objectives or quotas. Their recommendations were quite strong and, as an opposition Member, I must admit that I am certainly not satisfied with this Bill myself.

The percentage of women appointed to senior positions was also mentioned. The Prime Minister himself admitted publicly in November 1985 at the Halifax Conference that he was not satisfied with the percentage of women he had appointed. There have been statements in all the newspapers. As recently as this week, there was a statement by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) about the appointment of ten businessmen to a new board set up to help amateur sport, but no woman was included. Once more, statements of principle are very important, but we are still waiting for them to be implemented.

We have examined the new Divorce Act. It is true that there have been improvements. However, during the election campaign, we were told that a central agency would be established to collect alimony payments. We are still waiting for such an agency.

Then, there is the employment strategy. In this regard, I would like to speak about the needs of women. Employment programs are being set up, but they do not address the needs of women. A tremendous number of jobs are said to have been created for women; but those are part-time jobs. And also, to reduce unemployment where women are concerned, they are referred to a program that creates ghetto jobs in which there is no opportunity for promotion. Those women who are living on unemployment insurance benefits are the ones who have been living alone for months and cannot then rely on any assistance program.

Who looks after their children? How can they learn to make up a budget? I think that job creation is good for reducing unemployment for promoting publicity for children's programs but as far as women are concerned, I can assure you that it will not work unless assistance programs are established. With no reference of course to part-time jobs, because most of them are part-time jobs.

Concerning the philosophy of the Budget, we know that it was supposed to help the poorest people. The poorest people are women responsible for single-parent families. They number over 72 per cent in Canada, and their income is in the range of $15,000 to $20,000 and they have been hurt by the Budget. There are taxes on drugs, a 3 per cent tax and a one per cent tax. I think it is unfortunate that the Budget has not been of any assistance to those women.

Speaking of women entrepreneurs, yesterday there was a press conference with women entrepreneurs in the Gatineau Valley area. They all told us: "We have no idea how we are going to survive with the new Budget."

Also when referring to the discussions, the Minister has tabled a report on child care. I am quite happy to have that report. Certainly all this will help the new parliamentary Task Force on Child Care. But then again, this involves the spending of an extra $1 million, and looking at the recommendations of the report that was tabled, I believe many of them could be implemented without having another task force on child care. The need is urgent. There are recommendations for the Government, recommendations that have to be implemented in 1986-87.

Then, at the end of the briefing we had on that report, we were told that the new Task Force on Child Care budget has just been cut to 5 points. Is this a public relations exercise on the part of the Government, or is it definitely its way of tackling the child care problem?

I obviously object to the cuts that were also announced in the new Budget concerning the positive action for women program of the Secretary of State. The Montreal Office of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women will close as of May 31, 1986. If this Conservative Government wants to show it is doing something for women, it will have to prove it. Concerning also the program for battered women and all the grants, it was acknowledged in this House last week that everything was under review, that we would see in due course where the grants would go. There would be an overall approach.

For now I will tell the Conservative Government that I am very satisfied with the declaration of principle, but I would very much like to see the Government fulfill all those wonderful promises we have been hearing about since September of 1984.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on International Women's Day, Canadian women join their sisters around the world to celebrate our achievements in working towards greater equality and our determination to work together in solidarity with our brothers to overcome the many obstacles that remain. At the Nairobi conference we joined women from rich and poor nations who are determined that Governments must make major changes to overcome obstacles and achieve real equality by the year 2,000. We will help each other.

Here in Canada, women in recent years have organized as never before to create a much broader understanding and to demand needed changes. We must remove economic barriers which still keep women in low-paying jobs with inadequate child care. We must continue to work for equal treatment and fair opportunity on all fronts. Women have achieved political power. We must use that power to bring about needed reforms to achieve true equality.

This Government made promises to women when it was elected. It is accountable to women to keep these promises. We are pleased that jobs for women have increased in some regions. However, we want these jobs to be adequately paid and full-time, with equal opportunities for promotion. Women want more access to training and retraining programs with child care, and language assistance for immigrant women. Women were promised employment equity. Unfortunately, the Government refuses to change the employment equity legislation to reflect the very serious concerns of Canadian women, particularly women trade unionists. We were promised pension reform and protection for older women. There has been no expansion of the Canada Pension Plan. The greatest crisis in Canada is perhaps the need for child care. Canadian women want definite action this year, not just a further delay.

In Nairobi, Canada advocated increased assistance for women in developing countries, women who are barely surviving and carrying tremendous burdens. I am ashamed as a Canadian that Canada has broken faith and has cut back on foreign aid to these women.

At the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax before Christmas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) committed his Government to a framework for economic equality with particular priorities to the impact of economic decisions on women. In the most important of government economic decisions, however, the Budget, the Prime Minister has broked his promises to the women of Canada. Unfortunately the Conservative Budget has dealt women a backward blow. Women who still earn 63 cent dollars will suffer most from the very unfair tax measures which will cost families over $1,300, including last year's sales taxes. This will push many women below the poverty line. The refundable tax credit will not begin to cover the actual sales tax poorest families' pay, much less compensate them for deindexed family benefits which will decrease the value of their income each year. Women are the victims as tough restraint programs are imposed by this Government. Women in clerical and service jobs are the first to go as public services are chopped, contracted out or privatized. The $4.8 billion Health and Welfare cut over the next four years and $2 billion in reduced transfer payments will deprive women of services as well as jobs. As I said, we are very concerned that Canada's job strategies also have had budget cuts.

Today we will be receiving the recommendations of the parliamentary Task Force on Child Care chaired by Katie Cooke. I am encouraged that the Minister has assured Canadian women that this important report will be given serious consideration and will provide the launching pad for this Government's special committee so we may find funding mechanisms for accessible, affordable quality child care. However, we do not want more promises. The Government must make an initial infusion of funds this year as an expression of good faith.

On behalf of Canadian women, my Party extends very warm greetings to women across Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to the Arctic Circle. Women who give so much of their love, their talent, their energies and their work to their families, their neighbours, their fellow workers and, indeed, to humanity, we salute you.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, relating to the point of order that was answered by the Speaker about an hour ago about reports, I wish to ask the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) whether he intends to fulfil the obligation of the Standing Orders by introducing this day a response to the fifth report of the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which was tabled in this House 120 days ago.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): The Government is not carrying out construction of Canada Place in Edmonton.

(a)(i)(ii)(iii) Not applicable.

(b) The project is being developed as a "lease-purchase" project, and under the terms of the contract the developer will lease the site from the Government of Canada for a term of 50 years, design and build the project, and lease 61,000 m^2 of space to the Government for a period of 35 years, with options to purchase at 20 and 35 years.

The project was tendered by means of a two-stage lease-purchase proposal call. The first stage invited interested developers, by means of a nation-wide newspaper advertisement, to submit information regarding their organization, their ideas regarding the development of the site, and the consultants and contractors they proposed to employ, together with information regarding their financial capability to undertake a project of this magnitude. Twelve developers responded to this invitation.

Seven developers were selected to participate in Stage II, which was the proposal call proper, and three developers submitted firm proposals. These proposals were evaluated on the basis of cost and design quality. The successful tenderer was Trizec Equities Limited, Calgary, Alberta.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, March 6, 1986, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There were four minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). Further questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to visit Newfoundland last week, as I frequently do, to promote the Budget. I will not say that I was defending the Budget because I found it was not necessary to defend it, only to explain those parts with which people may not be totally familiar. It is one of the finest Budgets ever presented to the House. I will not mention any of the possible exceptions, out of modesty, but it is a Budget based on the concept of enterprise, efficiency and equity. I will explain that as I go along.

My remarks are devoted to showing the kind of preferential treatment that we are offering Atlantic Canada. My theme will be that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is like Prometheus bound, because he is faced with the desperate fiscal situation left to him by our predecessors. He does not have much room to manœuvre but where he has any room he has exercised his discretion to help Atlantic Canada, lower income people and the small business part of the economy in this country, because that is where the jobs are created.

First, I do not have much to say about the pitiful orations we have heard from the Official Opposition during this debate, including the depressing spectacle presented by the Leader of the Opposition in this debate. Rather than give my opinion, I will quote an impartial source. Jeffrey Simpson, a non-partisan person, had this to say in The Globe and Mail on March 5:

> The Liberals' response to the Budget offers further depressing evidence that hypocrisy and political opportunism are thriving on the opposition benches.

He said:

> The Liberals prefer everyone to forget that they are the architects of the slide from a balanced budget to a $36-billion deficit. Rather than inducing in them a pinch of modesty, to say nothing of shame, their shoddy stewardship of the nation's economic affairs is now conveniently ignored.

> Party leader John Turner, upon returning to public life, knew how shoddy that stewardship had been. He pledged repeatedly that if elected he would halve over seven years the federal deficit, then estimated at about $29-billion.

He goes on to point out how the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) came under the influence of Senator Keith "Gravy" who changed his mind on what he should do. The article goes on to state:

> The Liberals are now criticizing Mr. Wilson for a "massive tax grab," especially on low-and middle-income Canadians. But what is their alternative?

What is their alternative? Not once have we heard an alternative from the ragtag, tatterdemalion remnants on the Liberal benches. We know the alternative of the New Democratic Party; we have heard the same croaking alternatives for 15 years. However, we do not even know what the alternative of the Liberal Party of Canada is.

Mr. Simpson ended his article by stating:

> Liberal arguments merely reflect the party's grievous intellectual inconsistencies, to say nothing of flagrant opportunism and blatant hypocrisy.

A measured editorial writer from The Globe and Mail is making that judgment. Is it any wonder that poor Jean Chrétien had to flee from the grievous intellectual inconsistencies, the flagrant opportunism, the blatant hypocrisy and the depressing evidence that hypocrisy and political opportunism are thriving on the Opposition benches? It is a wonder that he could stomach it for so long.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I will leave the tatterdemalion ranks and make some positive comments.

I wish to address myself to Newfoundland because this is a part of the country that is certainly one of the more regionally deprived areas. Since September, 1984, 6,000 jobs have been created in Newfoundland. The figures are even better for the end of February. The total number of jobs created by our predecessor, between February, 1980—when the Liberals deceived themselves back into power after defeating the second greatest Budget of the century—and 1984 was 2,000 jobs.

The unemployment rate in Newfoundland has fallen by 4.6 per cent since the election; from 23.8 per cent in September, 1984, when we took office to 19.2 per cent at the end of February. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has the gall and audacity to get up in the House and talk about jobs. The unemployment rate in Newfoundland while the Liberals were in power between 1980 and 1984 rose by 10 per cent. That is an astounding figure. Yet we hear these paragons—these sump pits of hypocrisy—asking questions about the job figures during every Question Period. The unemployment rate in Newfoundland rose by 10 per cent between 1980 and 1984 but has already gone done 4.6 per cent in the 18 months since we took office. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deserve a pat on the back because their record, compared to the miserable record of our predecessors, is absolutely Hellenic in its brilliance.

Let me give the House some more statistics. In December, 1985, manufacturers' shipments in Newfoundland were up by 41 per cent, compared to December, 1984. Bankruptcies were down 18 per cent and retail sales have increased by 7 per cent in the past year and 11 per cent since the September, 1984 election. The value of building permits is up by 11.5 per cent and 11 per cent more houses were under construction at the end of 1985 than at the end of 1984.

In spite of those facts, we hear those Members opposite trying to say that we are ignoring Atlantic Canada and that Atlantic Canada is somehow discriminated against. I will put the lie to that, if you give me enough time, Mr. Speaker.

I will not dwell on the pitiful shape of the deficit situation left to us by the Liberal-NDP alliance that practically wrecked this country in the last 15 years. I will not even mention that 22.8 per cent of all our spending in Canada for the year ending this March was to pay interest on the debt incurred by the Liberal-NDP wastrels and spendthrifts. It means that there was $25.61 billion that we could not spend on roads, services, economic development or improving the social security system. It had to be spent on interest on the debt left behind by those Members who we hear fussing every day about unemployment, jobs and Government policy. Mr. Simpson was being very polite when he talked about grievous intellectual inconsistencies, flagrant opportunism and blatant hypocrisy. He should have called it blatant opportunism and flagrant hypocrisy.

Let me explain what we have accomplished for Atlantic Canada in this Budget and elaborate on what has been done in Newfoundland in the past 18 months for which I and other Members here are proud to claim the credit. Action was taken for Atlantic Canada because we have influence.

● (1240)

I looked at a rag from Atlantic Canada called the "Atlantic Insight" magazine. One of its articles said that nothing has been done for Atlantic Canada and the poor PC Members there have no clout—they ain't got no clout. Well, if we ain't got no clout, why is the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Just listen now. That is premature anti-clouting.

Mr. Gauthier: How about anti-mouthy?

Mr. Crosbie: What happened in the Budget? First, there was a new program introduced, the Atlantic Enterprise program. There are $1 billion worth of loans for Atlantic Canada for business start-up or expansion. It has to be a minimum loan of $250,000 or greater, for new capital investment. This will go together with the possibility of lower cost financing through interest rate buy-downs of up to 6 per cent. That is to give the private sector a chance to grow and expand in Atlantic Canada.

In Atlantic Canada someone said: "Oh, this is not going to help us. We don't have a very strong private sector". My answer was: "How are we going to get a stronger private sector if the Government does not help it to become strong?" Of all the parts of Canada, Atlantic Canada is receiving an entirely new program to help the private sector—that is, the four Atlantic Provinces and Atlantic Quebec. We are not forgetting our confreres in Atlantic Quebec, the Gaspé and Kamouraska, I think is the county. They are included in this program as well and we are happy to have them included. That is the great new program for economic development in Atlantic Canada. My comrade and friend, the Hon. Sinc Stevens, is in charge of that.

What happened to the investment tax credit? It is phased out across the country everywhere except where? Except Atlantic Canada. Is that discrimination against Atlantic Canada? Is that prejudice against Atlantic Canada? Does that show we have no clout? What utter crap, Mr. Speaker. The investment tax credit is phased out across the country except in Atlantic Canada and Atlantic Quebec. The 20 per cent tax credit has been extended. The 35 per cent for small business has been extended to the offshore to help the development of the oil and gas and mineral resources which lie offshore. So the rest of Canada was eliminated from this program.

I hope no one from the other areas is listening to me because I am speaking now to Atlantic Canada. The investment tax credit is left in place. Is that discrimination against Atlantic Canada? No, it is discrimination for Atlantic Canada because the Government knows that we are regionally deprived and we need assistance.

The 60 per cent tax credit in Cape Breton has been left in place. It is eliminated everywhere else outside of Atlantic Canada and that is discrimination for Cape Breton. Does that show a loss of clout of those who represent Atlantic Canada? Not on your life. That shows that the present Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) has a hell of a lot more clout than the person in the other place who sidled and snook up to that other place. He was shrewd enough to know that the shellacking was coming and he went to the other place and did not run in Cape Breton again.

I do not have time to go into all of the research and development, but there was a $300 million increase in research and development spending for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanity Research Council, which will help us because we do not have that much R and D spending going on in the private sector. We need these granting councils to play a key role.

I was told there is nothing in the Budget for fishermen. What twaddle! Fishermen, farmers and loggers are going to continue to receive the three cent per litre rebate on gasoline and diesel fuel used in commercial activities. It is extended for a year to January 1, 1988. That is over 13 cents a gallon for every fisherman out there in his boat. In the inshore fishery or otherwise, he pays 13 cents a gallon less for his fuel. That is what is there for fishermen.

There is the extension of the Small Business Bond, the capital gains tax exemption, and the increase in the refundable tax credit for R and D. The 12.5 per cent tax on dividend distributions will be repealed. The federal tax rate on small business is going to be reduced from 15 per cent to 14 per cent.

We do not hear the hyenas opposite mention the tax reductions. We sure don't. It will be effective January 1, 1987. The federal tax rate on manufacturing processes and income of small business corporations is reduced from 10 per cent to 8 per cent. The ceiling on total Government guaranteed loans under the Small Business Loans Act more than doubles from $1 billion to $2.5 billion. Who does that help? Small business, that is who. Where are the most small businesses in the country proportionately? They are in Atlantic Canada. Who is this all helping? It is helping Atlantic Canadians, that is who.

I hope the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) speaks in this debate, because while he was in the Government, it was all temporary. Every year the Government had to extend the northern benefits. Now we have put them on a permanent basis. All those who live in northern Canada, including Labrador, will receive a new permanent system of tax benefits for housing and travel. Under the new system, 20 per cent of their net income can be deducted up to $225 per month. There will be an income tax deduction for employer provided medical and vacation travel, and it will apply to those who are self employed as well as to employees. The Hon. Member should get up and cross the floor if he opens his mouth in this debate today, because we have put in place these permanent benefits to encourage the people who live in the north and who are developing northern Canada.

There was also the assistance for low income Canadians. There are more low income Canadians, unfortunately, proportionately, living in Atlantic Canada and Atlantic Quebec than in anywhere else in the country. What did we do there? Whenever we had any money to spare at all, we gave it to the lower income Canadians. The Child Tax Credit increased from $384 a child last year to $454 a child this year. There is a prepayment of $300 a child to be made in November to claimants who have family incomes of $15,000 or less. That will help at least a million claimants. There is a new refundable federal sales tax credit, $50 for adults and $25 per child, for families and individuals with incomes below $15,000. I am asked what this is going to do for fishermen. The average income of inshore fishermen is less than $15,000 a year. What is the Budget going to do for them? It is going to put a lot of money right into their pockets. And there is the New Democratic Party with its picayune, seal-like minds, waving their little flippers in opposition to the Budget when the Budget is doing all these things to help lower income Canadians. Four million families and individuals will be helped.

What did we do to help the disabled? We increased the disability deduction by $250. Last year we extended assistance to an additional 120,000 disabled Canadians. There are 185,000 disabled Canadians who will benefit as a result of the Budget this year. We extended the spouses' allowance last year. Wherever we have had a chance to do anything with the miserable fiscal climate left to us by our predecessors, we have exercised it to help create economic opportunity in Canada, and to help lower income Canadians and small businesses.

I do not have time to go into the private pension plan improvements and the training and employment programs. There is a program for older worker adjustment of $125 million over the next four years. There is the Canadian Jobs Strategy. These are all helping Atlantic Canada tremendously.

Persons receiving social assistance are to have a special program. We are spending $100 million a year to try to get more of them to work. That helps Atlantic Canada tremendously also.

I see, Mr. Speaker that you are giving me the signal that I am running out of time. I don't have enough time and I have lots to say. In my last two minutes I am going to list some of the things we have done.

We set up the Offshore Development Fund for Newfoundland; 75 per cent from the Government of Canada, that is, $225 million. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) just announced $34 million worth of projects. We are supposed to have no clout?

We just put another $77 million into Fishery Products International in order to put it on its feet, and $5.6 million to upgrade its secondary processing facility at Burin. There is a $180 million roads agreement, $112.5 million of that put in by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Members opposite should see the monuments they are erecting to me down in Newfoundland.

We are pledged to build a penitentiary twice as large as the penitentiary which the Hon. Member for Grand Bay-White Falls-Ladrador pretends his then Government was going to put in. I have no time to go into the details. Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite will ask me questions with respect to it.

Then there is money for pulp and paper mill modernization at Corner Brook and Grand Falls, some $46 million in total, $38.5 million of which is federal funds. I announced another $3.1 million for Abitibi-Price in Grand Falls several weeks ago. There will be $38.5 million in the federal Canadian Jobs Strategy program, $35 million from Ottawa.

There are two special programs to help fishermen. There is the extension of the Challenge '85 program in 1986. The allotment this year is over $5 million. There is MILAP assistance for Buchans and Corner Brook to the tune of $7.1 million which is money to assist 118 unemployed miners in Buchans. There is $300,000 for the benefit of five former millworkers in Corner Brook. I do not have time to elaborate. Hon. Members should have come with me to Buchans two or three weeks ago to see what they think there about who has clout and who has not and who is doing what for Atlantic Canada. Oh, it would have brought tears to the eyes of members of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There is $4.8 million in special programs for fishermen prevented by ice from fishing. There was another $9.5 million for fishermen last fall who did not qualify for UI, some 1,350 fishermen and 1,500 plant workers in all.

With respect to flood relief I turned over a cheque for $1.5 million in connection with the Exploits River flood damage. In regard to the Port aux Basques water supply, there was a promise made by the Liberals which was never carried out. We allocated $8.5 million for the Port aux Basques water supply. God, if I had the time to elaborate, Hon. Members would just fall over. They do not realize what we are getting away with.

There is a convention centre in the City of St. John's to which the federal Government contributed $1.7 million. There was some $93 million for the Goose Bay airport, a 10-year program of improvements there. We are going to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see the Minister has finally put his speech out of its misery. I am also happy to note that the Government has regained its confidence in the press in that the Minister quoted from an article written by Jeffrey Simpson from The Globe and Mail of March 5, 1986. I note that the Government now shows its satisfaction with the way the press reports its propaganda. I would like to ask the Minister this. Has he had lunch recently with anyone from the press so that he now has them on his side spreading the propaganda of his own Party?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we do not express either satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the press.

Mr. Gauthier: You sure as hell did!

Mr. Crosbie: The press are there and we live with the press. Of course, some members of the press are even more accurate and truthful than other members of the press. When we see a national columnist who is not known to be partisan come to the conclusion that the response to the Budget by the Liberal Party is "depressing evidence that hypocrisy and political opportunism are thriving on the opposition benches" what can we do but note it and put in on the public record?

I am glad the hon. gentleman asked me the question since I am a bit angry with the press who did not make sufficient of the North Warning System. Of course, we are now placing North Warning Stations in Labrador. Would Hon. Members like to know what will be spent in Labrador with respect to two long-range radar stations at Saglouc and Cartwright and five short-range radar stations? In excess of $120 million. The press failed to report that I had arranged matters so that the consulting engineers doing this work are from Newfoundland. We are now busy ensuring that when the tenders are called they will be called in amounts which are not too large for Atlantic Canada and Quebec companies to handle. The press did not report on that. So this is a little failure of the press which I am glad the hon. gentleman gave me a chance to point out.

In addition, when we were in St. John's last week, the Minister responsible for housing announced a new federal-provincial global agreement in social housing with Newfoundland. The press neglected to give that the attention it should have been given. Some $6.6 million will be allocated for the Agnes Pratt Senior Citizens Home in the district of St. John's West which I have the honour to represent.

Mr. Gauthier: I didn't ask that, John. We are not interested.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not interested. They are interested in Newfoundland. Some 150 chronic care beds will be implemented at the Agnes Pratt Home and the Golden Heights Home in Bonavista in the district of my friend, the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinty-Conception, Captain Morrissey Johnson, that seal captain of international renown.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The press should be criticized occasionally. Some $25 million will be spent under this new social housing agreement in Newfoundland for those who cannot afford to do it all themselves. Some 2,400 new households will be created in 1986. We are extending the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program throughout every nook and cranny of the province.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't get wound up, you're just supposed to answer one question.

Mr. Crosbie: That is being done because of the new Government in Ottawa and the Government in St. John's, and because of yours truly who has fought so hard. They will know down there when they receive their RRAP assistance who is responsible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on a question.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, one hesitates to give the Minister a chance to get wound up again. However, I cannot resist asking a few questions of him.

Mr. Gauthier: You won't get any answers!

Mr. Langdon: I would like to ask a few questions with respect to his superb oratory. However, the facts were not quite so superb, although the oratory was not bad.

With respect to his reference to the program for older workers, might it not have been fair to mention that there is a reduction in the amount of money to be provided in the Budget for older workers displaced and facing readjustment? Also, might it not have been honest when talking about the Canadian Jobs Strategy to mention that the Budget reduces the funds to the Jobs Strategy program and does not increase it? Might it not have been more accurate to have noted that the $50 rebate of which the Minister spoke so proudly is just to make up for the loss which poor people in the Maritimes will suffer as a consequence of the 1 per cent increase in sales tax? In talking about Challenge '86 might it not have been more honest for the Minister to say that this program, too, has been reduced in terms of the amount of money it will receive this year? Finally, in talking about the Atlantic provinces, and if the Minister wanted to boast, might it not have been more wise to boast about the 3 per cent income tax surtax which every Maritimer and Newfoundlander will have to pay? That might have been a more fair and a more honest representation of the realities which Atlantic Canada will suffer as a result of the actions of this Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, beauty is always in the eye of the beholder, as is quite obvious. I could see that hon. gentlemen in the Opposition were not agreeing with some of the points I was making because not only could I see their heads rattling but I could hear them.

With respect to the points the hon. gentleman rattled off a few minutes ago, the unemployment rate has gone down to 9.8 per cent. It is under 10 per cent for the first time in three or four years. Therefore, if there is any diminution in the amount allocated for employment programs in the coming year, surely it is a reflection of the fact that the employment situation is better.

There is some $800 million allocated for employment and training programs in the coming year. There is $125 million allocated to the Program for Older Worker Adjustment which will replace the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. There is a $100-million-a-year program for a duration of three years which will total $600 million with matching provincial funds. There are employment initiatives for people receiving social assistance. If he wishes, the hon. gentleman can say that is less. I say it is more and I say that the need is less than the need was and that the need, as the figures show today, will be going down.

We have a Budget that encourages enterprise. It encourages efficiency and reduction of Government spending and it is equitable. The hon. gentleman over there never mentioned the minimum tax that higher income people are going to have to pay of at least 25 per cent, also a part of this Budget. The official Opposition spent 20 years putting exemptions and tax loopholes into Budgets, exemptions and tax loopholes which we are now closing.

As one of the examples of equity in this Budget, we have the 25 per cent tax on higher income earners. It is reasonable to believe that that is not entirely equitable for some of them, but certainly in the context of the whole fiscal system, for the first time a tremendous loophole has been plugged, yet members of the NDP never croak up to say how appreciative they are of this. Certainly members of the Official Opposition do not because they are the ones who provided all these loopholes in the first place.

As an Atlantic Canadian, I am happy to have had the chance to explain to the House what we are doing in Atlantic Canada. I did not have a chance to explain how we doubled spending under IRDA and regional development last year. We are now spending over $80 million as compared to $40 million on average in the previous eight years of the Liberal administration. I did not have an opportunity to really go into this matter. If I had, I am sure that those over across the way would have been even more dumbfounded and green with envy than they are right now. I challenge one of them to ask another question, just one other question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Sorry, the time for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I really must confess that while witnessing the tremendous oratorical skills of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), I laughed unashamedly at much that he had to say. Almost everyone listening to his speech was overcome with the humour and the encouragement to laughter that so often characterizes those who are otherwise hurting deep inside. If the Minister of Justice had had to admit during the course of his oration how bad this Budget is, he would have had tears in his eyes. It is a fit substitution to encourage laughter in us and in his eyes. It is a fit substitution to encourage laughter in us and in himself to obscure the deep hurt that this Budget is going to cause him and his Party, and is already causing in the Province of Quebec as reported in the newspaper this morning.

The Minister said that our heads did rattle. Of course, the Minister's head does not rattle. It is so full of nonsense that it has little room for rattling. In fact, the Minister went so far as to subject the Budget of his own Party to reductio ad absurdum. I can understand that because when I went home last weekend I called a number of my constituents at random. The judgment that is to be applied to this Budget was expressed in no uncertain terms by all to whom I talked. It was expressed in a very simple, six-letter word, "unfair". The word "unfair" was used by those who themselves will be the victims, the average Canadians. But the Budget was also deemed to be unfair by those who are not going to be subject to the offensive imposition of taxes that the middle-income earners are being subjected to.

Senior citizens are appalled by this Budget that has another devious content, and that is that the average hardworking Canadian who has a hard enough time making ends meet will have to pay the cost for the poor while the rich go scot-free. The Budget is a clear attempt to alienate the average, hard-working Canadian from the poor who are being hurt the most by conditions in the country, conditions which are being perpetuated by the Government.

The complaint of unfairness in this Budget is something that will be repeated again and again. It has been repeated by members of the two opposition Parties and very quietly by members of the Tory Party itself. However, the complaint will come from all across the country until the devils are tossed out.

There is something even more significant in this Budget, something that continues a pattern of the past. The Government promised change. I have to describe an impression of politics that I had from the outside, and that is that politicians are too often unable to see beyond today's press scrum or next year's election sufficient to do the things that are necessary to assure the long-term destiny of this country. This has not changed. Those politicians have difficulty in addressing the concerns of the future and have difficulty doing things within a long-term context which will address in a deliberate, coherent and systematic way what must be done to assure that Canada's destiny will be properly fulfilled. That has not changed.

Part of assuring the future of this country is to assure the future of its young people. The plight of the youth of Canada has been described in recent weeks by the New Democratic Party task force on youth which consulted nearly 600 young people from coast to coast, and by a Senate Committee on youth engaged in a similar exercise. There are differences between the two reports, but they say quite clearly, as did the United Nations when it declared National Youth Year, that there is an incipient crisis among youth that must be addressed. It is a crisis that is manifest in the high rates of unemployment among the industrial nations of the world. It is so serious, indeed, that this alienation and unrest has caused riots in many of the cities in Europe.

In order to avoid that kind of social dislocation in other countries the United Nations, for that specific reason, declared last year International Youth Year.

In Canada we celebrated International Youth Year, sponsored by a Minister who was supposed to be an advocate of youth and who had the responsibility for focusing the concerns of this nation of the needs of young people. We know the sad litany of truths about the real intent of the Ministry of State for Youth. The Minister of Justice talked about hypocrisy. What would be more hypocritical than to have 700,000 young people unemployed, many without a hope for the future? The Ministry exploits the office, not for the purpose of helping youth but to assure the recruitment to the Progressive Conservative Party of the young people of this country.

We have had hyprocrisy from this Government until it is falling out of our ears. This is a Government that has been described as accident prone. No Government would be as accident prone as this Government if it were determined to follow reasonable principles of integrity and commitment to the needs of the people. The way in which the young people of Canada have been treated by the Ministry and the Government is a shame for which the youth are owed an apology.

In response to questions put to the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), we have been told that so much has been done to create jobs for young people and that this new Budget offers so much. If "lie" were not an inappropriate word, I would say that that was the word which could be properly applied to what the Government has done.

Youth are affected in the same way as others by some of the Budget measures. The new 3 per cent surtax will affect young people just as it affects all other people in Canada. Young people will also be affected by the sales taxes. They will be affected by all the taxes that affect other people. While young people are unemployed, one could have expected some effort on the part of the Government to manifest its interest in young people, not by cutting expenditures which benefit youth but by increasing expenditures for the benefit of youth.

Let us look at what the Government has done. The Minister of State for Youth has claimed that the Canadian Job Strategy is the Government's indication of a commitment to the needs of youth in job creation. My God, listen to this commitment, Mr. Speaker. Some $160 million or 8.6 per cent of the Budget out of the Canadian Job Strategy has been cut. That is how the Government serves the young people.

The Government tried to pull another dirty trick on the young people. The Government said $30 million will be put into the census and the young will get jobs. They want 12 week jobs, Mr. Speaker, but they will get six week jobs if they can get the jobs while they are going to school. They will also be in competition with the adults who are also seeking those jobs.

Mr. Rodriguez: Do they have to be Tories?

Mr. McCurdy: That is a good question. Of course, we have an indication that it may be necessary, through the communication of one of their Members, but we will not enter that dispute right now.

In addition to the $30 million diverted from Challenge 86 to the census, there was an additional cut of $8.6 million. This ia how the Government serves the youth of this country. If one looks at the Budget for the Secretary of State for Youth programs, we find it has been cut by $22.7 million, a decline of 56.6 per cent. Then, in 1987-1988 an additional $100 million will be cut from the Canadian Job Strategy. What promise for the future the Government provides for the young people. What promise for jobs? What promise for the future is it providing for the youth?

The Government has failed the future when it failed the youth. The Government has failed them both by this Budget.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Government has failed the test.

Mr. McCurdy: We could talk about the insensitive abolition of Katimavik. We could talk about the sorry litany of things not done for the youth but to the youth. The youth, we are told, by the Government, must be the human resources for future economic development. That is what the Government thinks of the youth. The youth are resources like fish, trees and soil. That is the Government's view. The Government does not address the human concern that the young should be properly educated, properly trained with the skills by which to build the country and so have successful and creative lives for themselves.

If we look at what the Government has done with the universities we will see that they are a shambles. In one university we visited the lights are being taken out of reading rooms to save hydro. In another university they are burning books to save library space. In another university assignments are not given because there is not enough money to provide paper. Our universities are in a tragic situation, so bad financially that increasingly accessibility to the universities is being cut. Potential students who only recently achieved access to university, the women, the disabled, the minority groups and natives, are finding it too difficult to get into university. Someone going to university now has to borrow to the maximum, as low income families do. They will be faced with a debt of $40,000 in interest plus principal. It will cost them $350 a month for nine years before they have a secure life debt free from the cost of attending university. This is how bad the situation has become.

It is so bad that the best of our professors are leaving Canada and for those who get into university, they will find that the quality of education has deteriorated. Yet the Government is cutting the rate of increases in transfer payments, the rate at which it meets the costs of the operation of the universities with the provinces. This has been addressed, at least in part in previous discussions.

We have reached the conclusion that the heads of the Government are impervious to reason, to understanding, and in their ability to look to the future and plan for the future.

This attitude is manifested also in the nonsensical, hypocritical devious way in which the Government has treated science. This is a Government that claims to understand that if the country is supposed to have an economic future, it must be dependent upon the development of research and technology to a level which can reasonably be expected to compete with other countries. At present, we are winning a good, tight race, just slightly ahead of Italy. Pretty soon we will be behind Monaco, at the rate the Government is going.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will have five minutes when we resume.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Friday, February 28, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon,—I invite my hon. friends and colleagues opposite to come in,—to speak to the Budget tabled last week and to express my support for the Government's action at this time, which I may remind the House, is primarily aimed at maintaining a continuum. We shall see how the Budget continues and consistently maintains the principles laid down in the November economic message, the first financial statement tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, 1984, and the May Budget tabled a while ago. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Budget, which is aimed at maintaining continuity, deserves to be analyzed and discussed, and that is why I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate.

The Budget's action is sustained and logical and relevant, and it introduces and is part of a strategy to develop our country and to face up to our responsibilities. Mr. Speaker, this strategy . . . we must not forget that we are looking to the future and that we are particularly concerned with development plans. I must emphasize that the development plan is both regional and sectorial. I remember last year in the House when, after the election campaign and after the Minister of Finance had brought down his first Budget, a wholesale attack was launched on the Budget and the measures it contained.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether you remember, but at the time I compared the House to a chicken coop, because our hon. friends opposite kept saying: You promised jobs, jobs, jobs and all you did was cut, cut, cut. And they kept repeating the same "cut, cut, cut", sounding like a bunch of chickens.

Today, I suppose we could say the attitude of the Opposition has changed, but in any case they are not listening very carefully because there is no one in the House. Their attitude may have changed, Mr. Speaker, because 586,000 new jobs were created, and whatever the Opposition said at the time, which was widely publicized, and the press could perhaps help us in that respect, because they can go back to their files and see what they wrote. The press will tell us it is true, the Opposition told us last year: The Budget brought down by Mr. Wilson will lead to the loss of 200,000 jobs. And now, Mr. Speaker, we have 586,000 new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, that is why it is very important to take another look at Mr. Wilson's Budget speech and look at the statistics it contains, to show how beneficial our action as a Government has been.

Still on the subject of regional development, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say first of all that we are putting $3.8 billion into regional development—I will let my hon. friend from the Atlantic provinces elaborate on the Atlantic Enterprise Program and the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit. I think it is only fair to have the Member for this region comment in greater detail on these measures.

● (1450)

Mr. Speaker, something must be said about measures especially designed for the North. Effective January 1, 1987, all northern residents will be eligible for a net income tax deduction of 20 per cent related to their dwelling, up to a maximum of $225 a month for each individual, or $450 if the taxpayer resides in a self-contained domestic dwelling. In other words, Mr. Speaker, first it is no longer temporary, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said this morning, it will be on a permanent basis, it will be part of the Standing Orders of the House, of the Budget process, and it will be a statutory provision as of now.

So the first thing is the possibility of a deduction related to the dwelling. As a second measure, Mr. Speaker, we will also allow more travel deductions for northern residents, not only for medical purposes but also for vacation travel. There will be no set limit for trips to hospital, but all other trips will be limited to two. This second measure is in addition to the first one concerning the dwelling deduction.

The third important point is the maximum tax of $50 on domestic flights. These three measures will cost the Government $120 million which will be recouped elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, it shows that the Government is taking action on a regional basis. More striking examples can be found in the new Jobs Strategy program, Mr. Speaker. Ever since we have been elected we have been trying to change the general pattern followed by our opponents who sit now on the Opposition benches.

Mr. Speaker, what they had in the past was a job creation program which was exactly the same from coast to coast. Little did it matter whether a man was a resident of St. John's Newfoundland, Vancouver or Victoria, Northern Canada, Valleyfield or Beauharnois, whether he liked it or not, Mr. Speaker, the program was Canada Works. It was the same pattern in Vaudreuil as well.

Mr. Grisé: And Chambly!

Mr. Hudon: And Chambly too, the same pattern, Mr. Speaker, Canada Works, the same program throughout Canada.

It all began at the Victoria Conference, Mr. Speaker, and then with our new employment development strategy we decided to act on six different fronts. Six possible programs. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, what really matters is the results we are getting. Members opposite predicted that with his last year's Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would do away with 200,000 jobs. He created instead 586,000 new ones. And he created these 586,000 new jobs out of his concern for regional development. Our six avenues for job creation will be negotiated later, province by province. Just like Quebec, Ontario and Vancouver, New Brunswick will have the opportunity to adjust these six avenues. But we are going even much further than that, Mr. Speaker.

Not only are we negotiating province by province but, for instance, New Brunswick could decide on the basis of an economy which is more difficult at times, to put more emphasis on community development rather than on any other program. It will be New Brunswick's own choice.

Moreover, we have set up around the Canada Manpower Centres throughout the province possibilities to adapt regionally these employment programs. For instance, Mr. Speaker, New Brunswick could decide to focus on program No. 2 toward community development. On the other hand, the Fredericton area could decide, because of its high unemployment level, to move towards the employment development program. And this flexibility is yielding great benefits. We went from the 200,000 job losses which our opponents predicted to 586,000 new jobs. People should remember that, Mr. Speaker.

This indicates that the Canadian economy is recovering; while unemployment levels and interest rates are down and inflation rates are at their lowest levels since 1971, consumer spending and building permits are rising. I suggest that instead of rummaging through garbage to find letters, Members opposite, the so-called "bottoms-up gang", should pay attention to the signs of our economic recovery.

If you happen these days to enter the offices of Members opposite, you find them sifting through trash. All you will see is their backsides in the air, because their heads are in trash cans.

They are looking for letters. They should look instead for indicators which the media mention every day, although they are not given enough impact or emphasis.

That is the first point. This flexibility we are demonstrating at the regional level for Northern residents will apply also both to the employment strategy and social programs.

Mr. Speaker, I heard my friend the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) say that we had forgotten only five hundred thousand families . . . As you know, the Budget set the income limit at $15,000 for sales tax refunds in the case of the needy. Obviously, our development is regional and sectorial. We have chosen to help a given category of people. The same applies to indexation and a whole lot of services. For instance, we provided assistance to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 last year. This shows that we want to emphasize sectorial development, Mr. Speaker, and that is very important.

As far as regional development and Northern programs are concerned, the facts are there. They are also there as concerns regional development under the employment strategy. They are right there for everyone to see.

However, we cannot lose sight of debt control. In fact, the estimates and borrowing bills necesary to support the budgetary proposals should be readily accepted, like the Budget itself, because we are asking Canadians for money to reduce the deficit.

• (1500)

That is very important, Mr. Speaker, and there is no reason to rejoice when we look at the deficit figures since 1966-67. At one time, a balanced budget was an absolute necessity in Canada. In fact, Mr. Wilson has announced a deficit of $33.75 billion and this should not be exceeded even though we have had problems during the year. None of us wanted the failure of the Western banks. Yet, with this Budget, our $33 billion deficit will go down to $29.465 billion, and if we bring down the deficit by $3 billion, this will mean in fact that we are reducing it by $6 billion because, when you have a $33 billion deficit, you have to borrow to make up for it. You have to go to the bank and borrow, and it is costing us $3 billion a year only in interest. We are therefore paying our $3 billion and reducing the deficit to $29.8 billion, and after a few years, around 1990 and 1995, we shall have a balanced Budget, the Canadian people can be sure of it, because the deficit has certainly sky-rocketed.

It started around 1970, 1971 and 1972 when deficits of $600 million were forecast. Suddenly, in one year, the deficit increased to $1.5 billion. This is $1 billion over the expected deficit, and this is where it all began. Afterwards, Turner came in with a projected deficit of $450 million and an actual deficit of $1.6 billion. In 1973-74, the projected deficit was $975 million and the actual figure was $2.2 billion. That is terrible, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Horrific!

Mr. Hudon: It shows how much money you need just to pay your debts. However, the best is still to come. In 1980-81, Mr. MacEachen forecast a deficit of $14.15 billion and came up with an actual deficit of $13.5 billion, $600 million less. That did not suit him well since, in 1982-83, he forecast a deficit of $19.55 billion and the actual deficit was $27.6 billion. These debts have to be paid. It was a deficit of $27.689 billion.

An Hon. Member: A mistake!

Mr. Hudon: Exactly, a mistake of $9 billion.

Some Hon. Members: The Liberal Government.

Mr. Hudon: After that, Mr. Speaker, they try to tell us what to do and they search the trashcans for letters.

Mrs. Mailly: It is natural for them to be sneaking in garbage cans.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, that is why I support the Bills that are now before the House, including the Borrowing Authority Bill. And, concerning that, the deficit, the management of our debt, Canadians now realize that 25 per cent of federal revenues are used up by the debt, whereas ten years ago, 5 per cent only of the money collected from Canadians was used to pay for our debt. The figure now is 25 per cent.

Mrs. Mailly: Those elastic budgets of the Liberals!

An Hon. Member: That is interest only! It is a scandal!

Mr. Hudon: Just for the interest, 25 per cent of the money we are collecting goes to interest charges on this debt. Then we will have to pay it back, because Canadians are people of honour, they are going to pay their debts.

Mr. Boudria: You dare talk about honour, you!

Mr. Gauthier: You talk about honour? What were you doing here at 1:15?

An Hon. Member: Canadians are sick and tired of paying.

Mr. Hudon: The minute they walk into this House, Mr. Speaker, it shows. They start barking.

The last item that deserves to be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, is Government efficiency. Government efficiency must be improved because while we are paying our debts, while we are reducing our deficit by several billions each year, we have nonetheless to restrain our expenditures and our programs so that the money we are getting from the taxpayers will be used for debt servicing indeed. And all Canadians will benefit. Sometimes in my constituency people ask me: What have you done for Canada, what have you done for me, a car salesman in my area? What did we do? With our fiscal policy and our financial policy, we succeeded in restoring confidence in the Canadian economy, in containing interest rates, so that when you were selling in 1980-81, 6 per cent, economic growth increased automobile sales by 29 per cent. That kind of signal shows that the economy is on the right track. All Canadian men and women are pleased today that they have decent interest rates for their mortgages. I know many Canadian men and women who during certain years sold their houses at 22 per cent.

Therefore—and Canadian men and women will remember this—economic growth is not a matter of surveys, it is a matter of hard facts.

Canadian men and women must be able to borrow at decent rates. Canadian men and women must be able to buy at a general economic growth rate that inspires confidence in the future. The inflation rate is the best since 1971. Why? Because of the Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance. Second, because of the actions that have been taken. People, the financial community know that we have paid, we are paying our debts. We are reducing Government programs in order be able to meet our obligations.

This, Mr. Speaker, is what I wanted to say on Bill C-99 through which it is proposed to give money to Canadians in order that they may borrow on the market.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments and ask the previous speaker some questions. He had stated at 1.17 p.m. that he would be the first one to speak on the Budget after the recess. You know what happened, Mr. Speaker, it is a grim day for Canada since—

Mr. Hudon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Mailly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that the questions and comments must have to do with the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. Malépart: Precisely, Mr. Speaker, I will be dealing with it. After having been deceived by that individual and after that grim day for Canada, why should people trust him? In a few days, we will be celebrating Good Friday, and here is someone who has betrayed us and he will be considered as the Judas of Canadian Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, why should we trust him . . . Have you considered that a disputed budget, in spite of the Member's comments, has been approved today by only 25 Government Members?

Mr. Hudon: And no Member of the opposition.

Mr. Malépart: Twenty-five Tory Members. It is shocking! The Member has been stating facts inconsistent with the policy of the Quebec Government which rejects the Budget—

Mr. Hudon: Question!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the Hon. Member has to say about Alain Dubuc's comment: "Wilson missed the boat." And 25 Conservative members! This is worthy of a Duvalier or a Marcos! This is the first time, Mr. Speaker, that democracy . . . Mr. Speaker, I think I would like to ask the Hon. Member, in concluding, whether he thinks the measures this Budget contains are fair and whether he thinks that in this country we should let 25 Conservative members take advantage of their majority and adopt a Budget all by themselves, and whether he thinks that the refundable child tax credit that is given to only part of the population while the other part is ignored, whether he thinks that is justice, and whether he agrees that democracy has been trampled today—

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about trampling democracy. I can only say that we voted on and adopted the Budget, and that there may have been only 22 Conservatives in the House of Commons, but there were 22 times as many Conservative Members as Liberals. And he made all this fuss just to say there was only one Member in the House when the Budget was being discussed.

And as for my word, Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid of promises, but as a Member of this House, I do not have to make any promises, and I was supposed to speak this afternoon, and Mr. Speaker, I did not lie, I did indeed speak this afternoon—

So what am I being accused of?

Mr. Malépart: A fault confessed is half redressed:

Mr. Hudon: What fault? And Mr. Speaker, should I be ashamed of what is said in the press?

Mr. Speaker, I am never ashamed of what is said in the press as long as it accurately reflects the situation. And everyone, including my adversary from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has a right to his opinions, including yesterday when various flights of fantasy—

Mr. Speaker, ideas are like socks: they have to be changed from time to time, otherwise they start to smell—

• (1510)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, after the Hon. Member's speech, I can see why the Conservative Party dropped in the popularity ratings in Quebec. I see why this party, this Government dropped in the ratings—

Mr. Speaker, I have here the results of yesterday's and this morning's polls, and the Conservative Party now has 27 per cent of the vote in Quebec, while the New Democratic Party has 26 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Does he approve the 1 per cent increase in sales tax that will affect Quebecers and Canadians in general? It is not just the 1 per cent today. There has been a 3 per cent increase since Mr. Mulroney was elected. Does the Hon. Member agree with the 3 per cent increase in sales tax that will affect the average Canadian? Does he approve this, when that same party is being extremely generous to the rich in Canada? Does he approve of this, Mr. Speaker?

I have another question: Does the Hon. Member approve of the 3 per cent increase in income tax for Canadians?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I have been here all this week to debate the Budget and other Government legislative measures. The Budget has been adopted. We are now on a different Bill and I can see that Members of the Opposition are trying indirectly to resume the Budget debate. I should think that Hon. Members have enough work to do and are serious enough to debate the Bill now under consideration and stick to the issue, and particularly to avoid all remarks which are irrelevant to the Budget or the Bill under study.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the opinion of the Chair, the remarks on the question of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville are relevant since we are dealing with Bill C-99 concerning the borrowing authority.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about the Bill before the House, a Bill to borrow $22 billion. We need this money now because we have a Government which has been wasting too much money, a Government which has lost public support over the past three to six months, more so than any other Government in Canadian history.

So I would like to know the opinion of the Hon. Member from Quebec, namely whether he is in favour of taxes, taxes and more taxes on the backs of Canadian men and women, these questions of taxes and levies with no end in sight, Mr. Speaker. Does he agree with that?

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I am not overly concerned about polls. They may brag and feel complacent because the results show 26 per cent against 27 per cent for the Conservatives, but you know very well that in Quebec the New Democratic Party Members always enjoy renewed popularity between elections, but the people will not vote for you.

An Hon. Member: Renewed popularity is all they ever get.

Mr. Hudon: Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it shows the boldness of Mr. Wilson. If we were the kind of people who govern according to the surveys, we would only have proposed so-called popular measures, as our opponents used to do. They gave, they indexed, they gave, they indexed and then they were ditched. What do people want in Canada, in Quebec? They want people who honour their commitments. You are asking me if I support the 1 per cent? I am the one answering. You are asking me if I support the 1 per cent, the 3 per cent? Yes, Mr. Speaker, having been one of the 22 members who voted for the Budget. You were not even here to vote, you were not even here to vote against it, you of the New Democratic Party. You were out eating. I was here to vote for the Budget, and I support that. What I stand for, Mr. Speaker, also in personal life because it is the same thing, I stand for honouring my debts, tightening my belt in some areas in order to pay my debts, whether they are 1 per cent or 3 per cent.

Secondly, you say we are giving to the rich. We introduced a minimum income tax, Mr. Speaker, so everyone must pay. But I can tell you that the rich did not build this country, investors did. And the braggers, we had plenty of those who wanted to solve other problems, who came here and solved everything. But it took investors in the Province of Quebec to put people to work, to put money up front and to take risks. They are the one I will encourage, Mr. Speaker, because they will be creating jobs. It is not I who will be creating the jobs.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that in 14 years I have never felt that my rights as a Member were infringed upon before today.

Mr. Valcourt: Tell the truth. Where were you?

Mr. Rompkey: The truth is this, Mr. Speaker. Whether or not you operate on technicalities is up to you, Mr. Speaker, but there is an intent behind the rules. That intent involves courtesy and civility. In my opinion, neither courtesy nor civility were used today. In the Budget debate and in the Throne Speech debate my experience has been that individual Members of Parliament are given latitude to speak not only on the content of the Budget or the Throne Speech but about their own ridings. It is a time when the individual Member of Parliament has his day to speak on behalf of the people who sent him here. I feel that latitude was abrogated today in a shameful way.

Whatever you say about the technicalities—and you may be right that people were not here a few minutes after two o'clock, and you may be right in your interpretation of the new rules which, I thought, gave more power, more authority and more place to individual Members of Parliament—the mood, the intent or the motive behind those rules was not heeded today, in my opinion. I feel that on this major issue I have been affronted as a Member of Parliament for the first time. I resent that and I want it on the record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: I was here to speak shortly after two o'clock. I wanted to make a speech on a major Government initiative but I was unable to do so because of what I think is a light-hearted and frivolous attitude toward this place in which we stand. I do not condone that. I condemn it and I resent it.

Now I want to make some comments about the Budget that was just passed.

Mrs. Mailly: This is the borrowing authority.

Mr. Rompkey: I want to speak on the borrowing authority Bill because I did not get a chance to make those comments about the Budget.

Mrs. Mailly: You will make the same speech.

Mr. Rompkey: In this Budget, again, the Atlantic area has been cut adrift by a Government which is philosophically bent upon letting the private sector take its own initiatives. If you think I am biased, Mr. Speaker, I want to read some comments made by the Premier of Newfoundland who is of the same persuasion as the Government opposite. Premier Peckford, at a news conference put the case as well as I can put it, but what he said comes from a less biased person than myself. He said:

> —over-all, it looks like Newfoundland is going to be part of a national economic recovery which is going to make recovery here more difficult.
> —what the federal Government is actually doing is transferring its deficit from the federal level to the provincial levels and the end result will be that the over-all national debt, considering the situation in each province, won't change all that much.

● (1520)

He went on to say that the province is still trying to assess exactly where Newfoundland stands but that at present it looks as if the only people to benefit really from the Budget are the low-income earners. While this is a positive thing, over-all Newfoundlanders are going to have less disposable income than before. In the Evening Telegram of February 28, 1986, he went on to say that the federal Budget will provide about $8 million for low-income families but that this year about $6.5 million will go out of the province as a result of higher taxes and that next year that figure will escalate to about $13.5 million.

I want to emphasize again that these are not my figures or comments. I adhere to them and support them and this is what I want to say, but these are the comments of the Premier of Newfoundland. He said that this money is in addition to what the province will be paying the federal Government in alcohol and tobacco taxes. He says that there will really be more taken out than we will get back. He is concerned about a reduction in regional economic development funding this year. He said that the federal Government is cutting this funding by 28 per cent, but he does not know how this cut will affect funding for specific areas such as mining, forestry, fishery, and the province's railway. These are questions that we have to ask in the days and weeks ahead. He said that if reductions in these areas are high, the province may not be able to get current joint programs renewed. He went on to say that it appears that we will be adversely affected.

Those are the comments of the Premier of Newfoundland, and those are the same comments that I want to put on the record today. The fact is that the Atlantic area has been cut adrift in a sea of free enterprise. As a result of the Budget there will be a net drain from the Atlantic area. The increase in income tax through the surtax which has been put on, together with the increase in the sales tax, mean that more money will be going out of Newfoundland than will be coming in. You must bear in mind that we are talking about the area which already has the highest unemployment rate and the highest cost of living in the country. The Budget, which we should be talking about, is going to drive those rates up even more. There is not even relief on gasoline prices. I suspect that the position taken by the Premier of Newfoundland is supported, not only by Atlantic politicians, but indeed by groups such as the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council.

The other thing that disturbs me, which may be the most important issue apart from the reduction in cash transfers and the net drain on the Atlantic area, is the lack of emphasis on young people. The recently released Senate report says that we have a national tragedy in the country. It talks about a lost generation. In my province close to 50 per cent of eligible young people are unable to find employment. I believe that this is a national tragedy. Yet, the Budget does not address that at all. Katimavik and other Government programs for young people have been cut out and there is nothing to replace them. The most important thing about this Budget is its lack of emphasis, compassion, direction, and policy with regard to young people in the country.

As the Premier has said, we have only seen the tip of the iceberg. The imposition of an increase in sales tax means an addition to the 12 per cent provincial sales tax in Newfoundland which results in the highest tax level in the country.

What will the cuts be in fisheries, transport, and other programs and Departments which we have depended on over the years? We already know that there has been a $20 million cut in fisheries on top of the previous $40 million cut. We must look very closely at those programs to see what the Atlantic area will be losing. The economy in the Atlantic area is a special case. The private sector is weaker there than elsewhere in the country.

I want to quote from an article in the business section of The Globe and Mail. It says:

Borrowing Authority Act

Statistics Canada delivered a sharp blow yesterday to Finance Minister Michael Wilson's optimism that business capital spending would increase substantially this year.

The agency reported that business investment is expected to rise by only 2.5 per cent in current dollars this year. In his budget last week, Mr. Wilson predicted that investment—excluding price increases—would grow by 7 per cent.

The following is what it says about the Atlantic area:

For all four Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and the Territories, however, the results of the survey are bad news.

The forecast says capital spending in the Atlantic provinces will drop by 9.2 per cent, which could wipe out last year's gain.

I put that on the record to show you, Mr. Speaker, that when you cut back on Government programs, whether they be transfer payments, departmental spending, or employment in Government Departments in that province, you hurt more those who are already weaker. It is important to point that out. As I and other speakers have said before, there is great disparity across this country. We must be flexible and make adjustments and allowances. I fear that my province is going to suffer more from the cuts in programs and the increased taxes. We have always depended upon the Government of Canada to support the weaker economy in that area. The attitude is now to cut the Atlantic region adrift.

We see an example of that in the allowed move of Air Canada from Gander Airport to St. John's. Gander is a specific case in point. The federal Government has always viewed Gander as being vulnerable. It has been an airport town. That is its mainstay. If you do away with its raison d'être, you destroy the economy of that town. I am afraid that the moving of Air Canada international flights from Gander to St. John's is going to affect the economy of that town. That is symbolic of the existing attitude. There must be a protective attitude for communities and areas which need that economic support. That attitude no longer exists.

I see no reference in the Budget to the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation which has been proposed for northern Newfoundland and Labrador. There are great resources in that area, but capital infusion, entrepreneurial skill, and administration are weak. We need the intervention of something like the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation to shore up that area and protect the fishermen and plant workers along that shore who are the most vulnerable of any in Canada.

What has happened to the continuation of the roads program which has been in effect over the years? When Government programs are cut back, the provision of necessary infrastructure is cut back. Those provinces which are weak in infrastructure and need that to support their economy and any new economic initiatives suffer. We want the roads program to continue. There are many roads which we still need to have built on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland. I was hoping for some indication that the Government would deal with that kind of problem. I am afraid that there is no regional development policy. Parliament and Government have always felt that certain regions need special attention, but I see no indication in this Budget of a regional development policy. If you treat everyone alike, you favour the strong and maltreat the weak. That is what is now happening.

The Government has been saying that the Atlantic Enterprise Program is the new economic saviour for the Atlantic area. I would like to say a few things about that program. First, the level is set so high that it will be virtually impossible for most small businesses in Newfoundland to take advantage of it. Fishermen require loans of between $10,000 and $15,000 on an average. However, the lower limit on the Atlantic Enterprise Program is $250,000. There will be very few small businesses in my constituency which will want to borrow that much. Even if they do, it is not clear how the Atlantic Enterprise Program will mesh with existing programs in DRIE and other economic departments of the Government. It is not clear what the meshing will be between that new program and the ones which already exist. In any case, business will still have to deal with the banks. We are talking about a loan program here. I do not know what the record of the chartered banks is like anywhere else in Canada, but in my riding there is clear evidence going back over the years that they are just not dealing with small business. Putting Atlantic small business in the hands of the chartered banks is an abrogation of responsibility. You are throwing them to the wolves because historically the banks have avoided or ignored small business. That will continue.

The Atlantic Enterprise Program deals only with capital expenditures. We know, coming out of the recession, that most businesses already have spare capacity. What they need most, in my experience, is not money for capital expenditures; it is start-up and working capital which is needed. If I have heard one request over the years from small business, it is that they need money to get started. They have to make a profit before they can pay taxes and qualify for tax breaks. So we need to have a program which deals with start-up and working capital. That is not what the Atlantic Enterprise Program does.

There were options open to the Government. It could have used programs which were working already. There are federal-provincial agreements already in place. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has been cut back, but it does have programs dealing with small business. Why not pick a program which is a winner and fund that? If you want to help small business, put money into programs which are already working. Do not start one which has very little chance of success. Really, what we are talking about here is shadows. The $1 billion may not exist. In other words, when the banks decide to make a loan to a small business, only then will the Government be liable for a guarantee. So we may never see that $1 billion in the Atlantic area. I doubt we will. It looks impressive but I do not think that money will flow.

The Government could have put money into improving the infrastructure in the Atlantic area. That is what we need. If businesses in Newfoundland and the rest of the Atlantic area are going to compete, they need improved infrastructure. However, that is what we are losing here. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans lost some of its budget, and so we have the small craft harbours program, which is important to small fishermen, being eliminated altogether. Small business is where most of the jobs across this country are going to be. However, there are no initiatives which I can see that address the serious economic problems we have. The dependency so far has been on oil. The tendency has been to hang programs on that one nail. We see the price of oil dropping now which causes serious doubts and concerns about what is going to happen to projects such as Hibernia. If we put all our eggs in one basket we are really going to be in trouble economically in my province.

Unfortunately, I do not have the time to say all I wanted to say on this Budget today. In closing, I want to highlight again the serious effect this Budget has had on regional programs. In a communiqué, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), said that the treatment of the lesser-developed regions of Canada threatens to divide the citizens of this land permanently into the haves and have-nots. That says it as well as I could. We have seen a diminishing of regional development initiatives and Departments such as Agriculture, Communications, Energy, Mines and Resources, Fisheries and Oceans, and Transport. We have seen these department programs cut. Yet that is where the initiative has come from for regional development in this country. We are seeing the rich get richer and the poor get poorer and I cannot condone that or support it. I have some serious concerns that this Budget, tacked on to the last one, is going to further cut the Atlantic provinces adrift. They will drift farther out to sea on the tide of a free entreprise economy.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member who just spoke is an honourable Member. I must mention that he was present in the House when we came to the vote on the Budget. He is concerned about his riding. As a new Member of this House I do not have the experience of the Hon. Member. Nevertheless, I have been here 18 months and I have noted that the role of the Government is to make sure that legislation comes before this House and to a vote as quickly as possible, particularly that which will relieve certain difficult situations in society. The Hon. Member was present when the Budget came to a vote. He is concerned about his riding. Unfortunately, an NDP Member, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), did not return to the House for the end of his speech and answer questions we could have asked him. We then found ourselves in a situation where we could have a vote on the Budget so that we could give relief to those families which have been giving 15 per cent of their child tax credit to discounters in order to get the money sooner. We could move forward on the sales tax rebate of $50 for each adult and $25 for each child. We could put forward the Bills which will help farmers who are in difficulty. I am sure the Hon. Member is sympathetic to the cause of the farmers in Atlantic Canada, indeed all over the country.

Therefore, I would just like to ask him this question. If the situation were reversed and he were a Minister in the Government, as he was in the previous Government, and found himself in a position where the Opposition was not present for debate when it was supposed to be, would he have just said: "I am not going to worry about the people of Canada who could benefit from these measures, I am just going to carry on debate for the rest of the afternoon"? Would he have done that?

• (1540)

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member in the spirit in which they are taken. I would simply say this to her, that in terms of budget initiatives some are assumed to go into effect as soon as the Budget is read by certain Government Departments. There is an assumption normally made that even as debate is taking place Departments will have to assume that the measures proposed by the Government are going to be passed eventually, and they proceed to act as if that were the case.

Second, of course some budget measures will have to be approved by individual legislation, which is quite different from the budget debate. If a piece of legislation came forward for farmers or some other group in the country, I fully agree that it would be incumbent on us to move that as quickly as possible, but what we are doing here today is taking part in the Budget debate. I say to her again, as I said earlier on, that in my experience the two debates in Parliament where latitude and freedom are granted are the Throne Speech debate and the budget debate. It has been assumed over the years, I think, that individual Members are given time to speak in these two debates. Normally, in my experience, as I recall there was not an attempt made to cut off Members from speaking on the Budget debate or the Throne Speech debate. It has been acknowledged on both sides of the House that that is the practice that has been followed. I appreciate her intervention, but I have to say to her again that I regret that that practice was not followed through today because of a technicality.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) rises on a question or a comment?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, on a comment. Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) that we had no intention of disturbing the mood of the House. At the time the vote was called there was no one in the House from the Opposition and we were prepared to proceed with the business of the day. I have a great respect, and I say this very sincerely, for my hon. friend.

I think my colleague has made many of the remarks I want to make. Had we had any indication whatsoever that someone from the Opposition was prepared to speak, we would have reverted, I would have asked for unanimous consent to revert to the Budget debate to allow him to do so. That is the very reason that we have called debate on the borrowing Bill in order to give members of the Opposition who had speeches they wanted to make an opportunity to speak, and we are pleased to give them that opportunity.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for a question or comment?

Mr. Gauthier: Since we are commenting on the speech of the Hon. Member, I would like to tell him that it is unfortunate that the Government decided to cut off its own speakers by holding the vote on the main motion.

An Hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Gauthier: That is indeed the case because the length of your intervention and mine was limited in the Budget debate, which is supposed to be a special debate where Members can speak about the projects and the problems of their constituencies and suggest solutions, and this was taken away from us. As for the Conservative Members who voted for the motion, as well as those who were unable to vote because they were either in the lobby or were on their way to the House, I must unfortunately tell them that when we adjourned at 1:17 p.m., we had agreed that the next speaker would be a Conservative, more specifically the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon).

Mrs. Mailly: I was there.

Mr. Gauthier: I am sorry, but you were not. However, I was, and the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry, who is a gentleman, will himself recognize that he came to my seat to tell me that he would like to speak after 2 o'clock. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was supposed to follow him. Since the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry did not rise, the vote was held. I am sorry, Madam Member for Gatineau, but you should listen instead of talking. Perhaps you can do both at the same time, but I know that I cannot. Listen to what people tell you. You were not even here at the time.

Mrs. Mailly: Yes, I was here.

Mr. Gauthier: If you were here, then you should understand.

Mrs. Mailly: I was indeed in the House.

Mr. Gauthier: You were not here in your place together with the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) when—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I am aware that the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) has referred to what happened during the vote on the Budget. I had hoped, however, that we would not spend the whole afternoon debating this point. As there is a bill before the House, I urge Hon. Members to make comments or ask questions to the sponsor of this bill. I recognize again the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: I have a question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Budget was adopted on division, there remain 41—

An Hon. Member: No!

Mr. Gauthier: There remain 41 ways and means motions on how to implement the budgetary measures. I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether he has had the opportunity to examine and study these ways and means motions and whether he could comment on the first bill resulting from these Government initiatives, Bill C-99, seeking $22.6 billion in borrowing authority.

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I did not come prepared to discuss the ways and means motion or the borrowing authority, but certainly the borrowing authority has to be linked to the economic program of the Government. I have to say again that my concern is about the general tone, the general attitude, the general intent of that economic program. If you borrow, you borrow to refurbish your coffers, and spend more on the programs that you have in mind. What I am saying is that the general direction is wrong, whether we are talking about spending, the regular Estimates or borrowing. The direction is to allow the free enterprise system to work its will, wherever it will, however it will. I am saying that when you do that, you discriminate against areas of the country which have a weaker private economy. That is what is wrong. The Government should look to its regional development policy and support programs to make sure it is not harming indefinitely the economy of an area which is already very fragile. I say quite seriously to the Government that I am very concerned that the economy of an area that is already weak is going to be further weakened by the general economic thrust.

If you simply allow the market-place to work, it will do so, and there will be more people from our area moving to Alberta, Manitoba and British Columbia. They are there now, and many of them are happy to be there. Many of them are good solid citizens. I hope that more go there, but I want them to go because they have a choice, not because they have to. Many from Cape Breton will leave too. I am afraid the only alternative left, if you do not have the ways and means to provide economic initiative in that region, is mobility. I do not want to see more people "going down the road". There was a very good film about Cape Breton, about Nova Scotia, called Going Down the Road. It says it all, Mr. Speaker. It points to the tragedy of young people who have no option.

What I am saying is that the economic policy of this Government has to take that into consideration. Young people may leave home, and I hope many of them will, but they should not leave because they have to. They should leave because they want to. There should be a way whereby they can live where they were born, where they want to live, and have a decent life for themselves. I am saying that the economic policy has got to change if that is going to happen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil).

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority. This year's borrowing needs will be $22.6 billion, and this represents a 25 per cent reduction in the borrowing needs of the Government of Canada. This Government is spending smarter, using its resources more effectively and more efficiently.

I would like to follow up on some of the comments made by the Hon. Member from Newfoundland about the history of going down the road that was experienced by Atlantic Canadians, Newfoundlanders, people from eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton. That movie was made when the previous Government was in power and at a time when Atlantic Canadians had no options. In 1984 they exercised their options to elect a new Government. Since that time they have achieved new economic options as well.

The Budget of May, 1985, put in place a series of incentives for the Cape Breton region of Nova Scotia which clearly identify and highlight our Government's commitment to regional development and to Atlantic Canada. Cape Breton was the object of some of the most flagrant spending abuses in history. Money was poured into this region of Canada with very little attention paid to long-term economic benefits.

When our Government came into power in 1984, we inherited a very high rate of unemployment and accepted the responsibility to address that problem not only in Cape Breton but throughout Atlantic Canada and the entire country. Canadians have benefited from the creation of 580,000 jobs since this Government came to power. That is more jobs in 18 months than the previous Government was able to create in its final full term in office.

The new options to Canadians, particularly Atlantic Canadians, are conclusive. Our efforts to apply fiscal responsibility in the management of this country will benefit Atlantic Canadians because they realize that as the pressure on public expenditure increases there is less money for programs aimed at regional development, less money for sound social programs and less money for new programs. Furthermore, our ability as a Government to continue financing existing programs is stretched.

Atlantic Canadians know very well that the interest on loans increased from $1.7 billion 15 years ago to $22 billion in 1984-85. That is the interest that taxpayers in this country are paying on the deficit with which every Canadian has been saddled. Everyone has heard the Opposition cry about the state of the dollar. We have heard comments that some people in this country cannot spend as long a time in Florida this year because of the changing value of the dollar. Being able to visit Florida is still very much a luxury in Atlantic Canada, to the disappointment of many of my constituents, but we are still affected by the deficit, the falling dollar and high interest rates. For example, we know that high interest rates represent the single greatest obstacle to new economic opportunities in this country. Atlantic Canadians are prepared to support the efforts of the Government to bring some control to spending.

The position of the Opposition with respect to deficit reduction was recently the subject of comment by a columnist in The Globe and Mail who described the Liberal's response as: "Depressing evidence that hypocrisy and political opportunism are thriving on the opposition benches". That is an assessment with which I and many of my constituents agree.

Let us consider what we have been able to achieve in our efforts to control the deficit and put a ceiling on Government spending. Growth of discretionary spending has been cut to almost zero from an average growth rate of 43 per cent in the three years prior to the Government taking office. In fact, it will be $530 million lower in 1986-87 than over the previous year. Total program spending will be held to $86.6 billion, which is lower than last year's spending. This is the first absolute decline in total program spending in over 20 years.

There are many Canadians who did not understand what the deficit meant but today are beginning to understand that it has very real consequences in their daily lives. It has real consequences on the price they pay for a loan at the bank, on their mortgage rates, the price they pay for goods at the store and it affects their opportunity to get a job.

Let me refer to other comments made about the Government's effort to bring some fiscal order to the management of this country. Hugh Anderson of The Gazette describes the Budget as: "A careful, politically prudent response to a legacy of grievous mismanagement". An editorial in the The Globe and Mail states: "Mr. Wilson's financial trend lines are things of beauty after years of irresponsibility".

The Budget recognizes the needs for poorer Canadians, a disproportionate number of whom live in Atlantic Canada. They will benefit from some of the specific steps we are taking to help low income Canadians who are a major concern to the Government.

For example, the child tax credit will provide greater assistance to low income families. It will provide for prepayment of $300 per child in November, 1986. Canadians, many elderly and low income Canadians, will be eligible for a refundable sales tax credit of $50 per adult and $25 per child. Training programs and efforts to put people to work have been stepped up, and $100 million a year for the next three years is directed to a special program to held social assistance recipients find employment.

I could go on to talk about the generous assistance program that has been put in place for Canadian farmers who are suffering from a very high debt load that has accumulated over the last decade. That was a period of low prices for crops and very high interest rates.

Of course, the most effective way to help needy Canadians who are unemployed is to provide them with a job. Canadians do not want a cheque from the Government of Canada, they want an opportunity to create their own wealth in our society and an opportunity to participate in the Canadian way of life. They want the opportunity to own their own home and pay their own bills. This opportunity has been denied to hundreds of thousands, indeed millions of Canadians over the last decade and Atlantic Canada has been particularly affected by the former Government's policy of spending without thought and efficiency in the last number of years.

I am not one of those who accepts the doom and gloom comments and observations of the Opposition. I am not one of those who believes that the situation which has always existed in Atlantic Canada must continue. I am of the generation that believes times will be better in Atlantic Canada. Our Government reflects that view and we believe that action can and is being taken for Atlantic Canada that will make significant progress in addressing the very severe economic problems facing Atlantic Canadians.

Let us consider the facts. Special programs have been established for Atlantic Canada. There is the Atlantic Enterprise Program which involves a wide expenditure of funds to encourage private sector lenders to make loans for business start-up or expansion through Government guarantees. There will be interest rate subsidies of up to 6 per cent on business loans used to support productive new private sector investment. These are sensible initiatives that require the support of the Government of Canada. It is a new approach that requires the Government to put some money on the table. If grants and mere dollar amounts are all that were required to improve the plight of Canadians, then we would have been successful long ago.

Atlantic Canadians will also benefit from the Atlantic Opportunities Program. That program was recently announced by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), a Member from Halifax and an Atlantic Canadian with considerable clout in Cabinet and the Government. He has been able to persuade his colleagues, along with other Ministers and Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada. The Atlantic Opportunities Program will direct hundreds of millions of dollars in purchasing power to small businesses in Atlantic Canada. I cannot agree more with the Hon. Member who said that small business will be the source of job creation. That is precisely what we are doing in this program. We are directing hundreds of millions of dollars to small business people. Over the next four years, Government procurement in Atlantic Canada will increase to $2.2 billion, almost 40 per cent higher than the current $1.6 billion. This $600 million increase is expected to create significant long-term benefits for industries in Atlantic Canada and will generate over 20,000 person years of employment, or an average of 5,000 jobs per year. This is a program which does provide opportunities for small businessmen.

We can be negative about it. We can say it is not going to work; it is just an ideological proposal from the Progressive Conservative Government. However, we do have a precedent which was introduced in the Budget of last year. It was to apply to eastern Nova Scotia and the Cape Breton region of Nova Scotia. It called for a beefed-up IRDP Assistance Program up to 62 per cent. it provided for a Cape Breton investment tax credit which is working. There is a great deal of interest being shown in the benefits of this program and it has had a great deal of success. We have put in place the Enterprise Cape Breton Program. There are the other benefits, of course, which apply to Atlantic Canada. With the reduction of development incentives in other parts of the country, these incentives become even more attractive. Some people call this system a tax loophole. Where I come from, it is an incentive program designed to result in employment for the people in my region.

Let us look at some of the support the Government of Canada has given. I do not want to go through all of Atlantic Canada, but we heard earlier today the Minister of Justice talk about the very considerable support which has gone to Newfoundland. The Atlantic Accord gave to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia full control and ownership of the resources offshore in the same way as if they were onshore. This is something the people of Atlantic Canada have wanted for three decades, since Robert Stanfield was Premier of Nova Scotia. We have delivered. We recognize that offshore resource development is an opportunity which can be best utilized by the people who live in Atlantic Canada.

I would like now to speak about the initiatives in my riding. I have prepared a list of the various support programs the Government has given to my constituents. It has, for example, funded the construction of a Nautical Institute. Phase three was recently announced. That is a $18 million project which will attract teachers, students and support services which will have a significant impact upon the people of my region. Last week a $13 million manufacturing facility was announced for Guysborough county and for my home village. That announcement was something the people have waited for for 30 years, because in the last 30 years, there has not been one significant private sector announcement of this type in Guysborough county, notwithstanding that we had a Government in Ottawa which poured money into the region. An $8.7 million plant has been announced for another part of my riding on Cape Breton Island. That project will provide 50 jobs. In Toronto that may not be a lot, but in Arichat, Nova Scotia and on Isle Madame, 50 jobs is something they have waited for for well over 25 years. Another small plant worth $3.5 million has been announced which will result in the creation of 70 full-time jobs in Port Hawkesbury. That is a significant achievement and the first of its kind in a very long time.

We turn now to the forestry sector. Far from moaning and complaining about the state of the forests we inherited, we put money into forest management. We announced four forestry joint-venture programs which will result in employment in eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton. We announced a special forestry program for natives. We provided support to the major pulp producer in my riding in the amount of $4.1 million. We supported a local mining company to the tune of $1.3 million. We built an industrial park. We provided for federal participation in a forest management program, including the construction of a nursery. We provided for upgrading of tourism facilities in the Cabot Trail area of my riding. These are just some of the initiatives that the Government has taken in an effort to diversify the local economy in order to provide community-based industry. The incentive program brought forward and put in place by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is working in eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton.

I could identify other successes. In Sydney, we committed well over $100 million to modernize the steel mill. We committed $40 million to upgrade and clean up the tar ponds there. We put money into Glace Bay in an effort to alleviate the short-term and long-term unemployment problems of that community. What we must remember, and what the people do remember, is that the problem was there in September of 1984. The problem was not created in Atlantic Canada in the last year and a half. However, many problems have been solved in the last year and a half.

As a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, I am very proud and supportive of the record of accomplishments of this Government. I intend to work and aggressively promote the interests of our region because, for the first time in many decades, Atlantic Canada is being recognized by the federal Government as a special area. Special incentives are being put in place and results are being achieved which will mean long-term economic benefits. That is all possible as this Government moves to manage the deficit, and bring about a better economic environment, so that economic opportunities can spread from coast to coast.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) during his speech but I believe that at four o'clock on Friday it is usual for us to proceed to Private Members' Hour. I notice that the Chair did not see four o'clock. Therefore, I take it that Standing Order 39(2) applies. I would like to make sure that the House understands that if we are proceeding now until five o'clock with the legislation before us, it is because there was not 24 hours notice of a Private Member's intention to present a Bill, or a motion, for that matter. I just wanted to make sure we all understood that. We are proceeding until five o'clock under Government Orders, Bill C-99, is that correct?

Mr. Speaker: That is correct.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil). In a recent edition of Atlantic Insight the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) were the only two Members from the Government side who came out looking good. I believe Atlantic Insight referred to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso as a cocky and shrewd young Member. However, it was not so nice to certain other Members from Atlantic Canada, but I will not go into that here. I know the Hon. Member takes his responsibilities seriously. He talked about the gloom and doom of the Opposition. I wish to indicate to the Hon. Member what the Premier of Newfoundland has said in this regard. He is not in Opposition, he is in Government. He happens to be of the same persuasion as the Hon. Member. How would the Hon. Member respond to the Premier of Newfoundland who says that Newfoundlanders are going to have less disposable income than before? He also says that there will be more taken out than will be put back. That is not the doom and gloom of the Opposition, it is a comment made by the Premier of Newfoundland.

I would like the Hon. Member to respond to these points since I think they are important. When he talks about job creation in the private sector what does he have to say in reply to an article in The Globe and Mail with respect to Statistics Canada which indicates that for all four Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and the Territories the forecasts for capital spending are that it will drop by 9.2 per cent? That is not the doom and gloom of the Opposition, it is an account from a reputable Canadian news agency. When the Hon. Member talks about jobs being created across the country, that may be true. However, would he admit that only 8 per cent of the new jobs which have been created have been created in the Atlantic area?

Finally, if the Hon. Member feels that the private sector is to be put front and centre—and I agree with that—and if he thinks that that is the appropriate policy, would it not be better to wait until the private sector has had a chance to do its work before we cut government programs which have historically supported the economy in the Atlantic area? In other words, are we not putting the cart before the horse? Does the Hon. Member not think a more sensible course of action to follow would be to continue the support that we have historically given to the Atlantic economy until such time as the private sector has had a chance to become healthier?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first point raised by the Hon. Member, I invite him to read the comments made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) as they will appear in the Hansard for today. The Minister is from Newfoundland. He very eloquently and effectively put forward the case of the Government vis-à-vis its support of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. We have very capable Members in the House who have responded to these same points. It would serve no purpose for me to repeat what the Minister of Justice said today. In any case I could not compete with his oratory and eloquence.

With respect to the business of the private sector and waiting for it to do its job, I point out to the Hon. Member that we suffer from a deficient private sector because of the policies about which he speaks. He wishes to continue these policies. I can tall the Hon. Member that in my riding there are no more churches left to paint and there are no more graveyards which need picket fences erected around them. The grant program has really been exhaustive. It would serve no construction purpose to continue it. Therefore, that type of Government program, which the Hon. Member advocates should be continued—

Mr. Rompkey: That is not what I said at all.

Mr. O'Neil: —is of minimal importance. In my riding we have achieved success in terms of developing the private sector. However, we also have a balance. We have public involvement in a different way. In Cape Breton, as in all of Atlantic Canada, we now have some of the richest incentive programs possible, all this is an effort to bridge our economy to the oint where we do not need to get the private sector involved. However, we do have the bridging. These programs cost the Government of Canada a great deal of money. In my riding we are developing a diversified economy with a private sector base.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I wish to felicitate the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) for his speech with respect to the borrowing authority Bill. He has been described by Atlantic Insight, and by my hon. friend, as being cocky and shrewd. He is much more than that. His constituents should know that he is also an extremely hard-working and diligent Member of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Questions and comments on the speech, please.

Mr. Edwards: I am coming to that, Mr. Speaker.

I know that the Hon. Member's speech must have been prepared in the late hours of the night since it is the Hon. Member's custom to work late and hard.

We Albertans are facing an uncertain future, perhaps, with the prospect of declining world oil prices. However, in discussions regarding the Budget in Alberta we find that Albertans do not begrudge in the least the very special treatment being given by the Government to Atlantic Canada. I know the Hon. Member has lived and studied in Alberta. I would like him to tell the House what long-term prospects he sees for Alberta and, indeed, Atlantic Canada under the enlightened policies of this Government.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, first, I would say that we are preparing for the influx of Albertans to Cape Breton. We expect to have a great many jobs there for them.

In response to the Hon. Member's specific question, the deficit is a major economic impediment to growth in the country. If we fail to address the deficit, we fail to address the priority of lowering interest rates and getting the economy moving again. The deficit is important in Atlantic Canada for that reason as well, just as it is important in western Canada. In an effort to diversify the economy of Alberta we are providing considerable support to the agricultural sector. We have also provided a new energy program for the Province of Alberta.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) for his very aggressive pursuit of the interests of his constituents, and of all Albertans, which have resulted in very understanding policies both for the Atlantic region and the western regions of the country.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a short question. He just made the statement that growth is impeded by deficits. How does the Hon. Member reconcile that statement with the fact that last year we had a 4.4 per cent growth rate while we had a deficit, which was quite worrying, but nevertheless huge, of about $38 billion?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that I can only speculate about just how great that growth rate would have been if the deficit had been lower.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to follow the mutual admiration society which preceded me.

This afternoon I would like to make a speech to the House which takes an historical perspective on the present difficulties which our country faces. I would like to try to pinpoint, perhaps more than some of our usual partisan exchanges do, some of the underlying difficulties which face us as a nation, and in doing so consider the challenges which lie ahead.

The problem which we face as a country has roots which go back to the 1970s and, in particular, back to the oil shock of 1974. I would like to consider what that shock did to growth rates in our country, what it did subsequently to business investment and, after that, to the savings rates of the ordinary family. In that period of time, we have to see the source of these quite complicated economic problems which we now confront.

As Hon. Members know, the oil shock brought a very, very rapid increase in prices to petroleum products throughout the world. Something not as clearly recognized is that it also brought a massive downturn in the growth rates of virtually every country in the world. Canada, because it was a producer of oil, was not hit immediately by the downturn in that growth rate but by 1975 and 1976, Canada began to experience that squeezing of growth rates that were being experienced throughout the rest of the world.

There are some statistics in the very valuable book which the Department of Finance puts out each year. The one I am referring to is the economic review from April 1985. It shows quite healthy growth rates in Canada up to the end of 1974 and then a plunge in 1975 to a growth rate of only 1.2 per cent. That was marked that same year by a decrease which was unprecedented for Canada of 6.4 per cent in exports and by a decrease in our imports to a slightly lesser extent. Clearly, what happened is that growth slowed down in the rest of the world, that squeezed our exports and since we are a country which exports a massive proportion of our output, the consequence was that our growth rate got cut very dramatically.

As a consequence of that, in 1976-77 and indeed in 1978, the business investment in Canada virtually collapsed. There was a 1.2 per cent increase in business investment in 1976, a 1 per cent increase in 1977 and a 1 per cent increase in 1978. Of course, as a consequence of that massive slowdown in both exports and private-sector investment, there was a tremendous upturn in unemployment. If we return to the figures for 1975, 1976, 1977 and 1978, we see a gradual increase from the level of 6.9 per cent up to 8.3 per cent of unemployed.

Typically, Governments in the post-war period have responded to that kind of situation with a counteracting increase in activities. For instance, they have cut taxes and increased expenditures to try to make up for the fact that business investment and exports were not playing the roles expected of them. What we got instead from the Government of the day was the start of this strategy of cut-backs and restrictionism which has been so damaging to the economic recovery of Canada.

This course of action in fact took a new cycle starting with the oil shock of 1979 which equally hit economies throughout the world very, very hard. The squeeze which had hit world economies in 1975 was repeated but accelerated and in 1980 and 1981, there were tremendous squeezes on the economies of Britain, the United States and France. That in turn hit back on the Canadian economy particularly through our export balance, which again in 1979, 1980 and 1981 failed dramatically compared to the rate of increase in the past. Of course, when those exports did not take place, business investment also get squeezed and did not take place.

We see that in 1981, business investment began to slow down a bit, but by 1982 and 1983, because there is always a lag with business investment, there was an actual massive decline in the business investment of 9.1 per cent in 1982 and an unprecedented 12.4 per cent in 1983. In short, these complex issues came together in a way that had the effect of, first, hitting our trade partners, second, hitting our export earnings, and third, hitting the business investment that normally takes place in Canada. The consequence of that was to increase unemployment rates massively. By 1983, there was an unprecedented unemployment rate of 11.9 per cent.

What is the normal response of Government to that kind of squeeze of economic activity? It is to try to expand Government expenditure. It is to try at the same time to cut back taxes so that people have some sense of confidence, some extra money to spend and some ability to get the economy moving again despite this collapse of exports and earnings from business investment. That did not happen. Under the Liberal Government, we had instead tax increases and cut-backs in expenditure which also reduced the amount of economic activity. In short, we had a self-induced, almost suicidal collapse in our economic strategy and activity. Along with this, we had a lack of thoughtful industrial strategies. We did not make the effort to build up a high-tech manufacturing sector which could export into the world in areas where price competition was not as great. We did not have the emphasis on some of our resource sectors, like agriculture and forestry, which might have got us out of the problem.

• (1630)

Instead, Mr. Speaker, we found a target under the past Liberal Government and we find the same target under the present Government. This target is to cut the deficit because somehow, almost by magic, that will rekindle the sense of dynamism and optimism in the business community, and the investment that those industries will undertake will be enough to give us recovery. That did not happen.

What we found, and we have found it with the present Government, is that this crisis in economics that we call a crisis of aggregate demand, a lack of demand within the country, has led to high unemployment and has led to serious currency problems.

Our currency began to drop. When that happens, ironically it gives us some advantages. In particular, it has given us, for the last year and a half, an advantage in the face of the American economic recovery. The U.S. economy has moved ahead quite dramatically. As a result, our exports, particularly because of the reduced dollar, have also moved up quite dramatically.

If we take, for instance, 1984, we get the incredible figure that in that one year our exports increased by 19.7 per cent, mainly in the form of exports to the U.S. Because of the massive deficit it was running, it had high levels of aggregate demand, low levels of unemployment and a consequent booming economy which sucked in all sorts of output from our economy.

It was great while it lasted. It lasted through 1984 and through 1985. That, rather than anything the Government here has done, has given us the 580,000 jobs about which the Conservatives like to boast. The point of this kind of more complicated understanding of our economic situation is that we still face a very high savings rate among consumers, a very low level of aggregate demand compared to what we need to get full employment in Canada. As a consequence, we face a situation in which a Government is doing nothing to deal with the domestic sources of our problems and is instead counting on the foreign answer of the United States economy's rapid growth.

Unfortunately for us as a country, that economic growth in the United States is not going to be sustained. There are two reasons we can be certain of that. The first is that we got within the Budget a projection which indicates a declining growth rate in the United States. The second, frankly, is that we have forces of protectionism at work in the United States that as our trade spokesman I have to say make me very, very frightened.

We have at this stage a surplus with the United States of almost $20 billion. I am certain that this will not be allowed to continue. It is just starting, but the protectionist squeeze on us from the United States is bound to come. This squeeze will come first in the area of softwood lumber. It will probably hit us by May or June of this year. The United States is expected to cut back exports from our present level of about 35 per cent of the U.S. market to about 25 per cent. That will wreak havoc in the economy of British Columbia. Because of oil price decreases the revenue we receive from the United States will be much less. Cut-backs will occur in the automotive sector which has been such an engine of growth for us here.

I feel that particularly with respect to my constituency of Essex-Windsor which produces a great deal of automotive output. We see quite clearly a slowdown in the expansion of consumer demand in the United States for automotive parts and automobiles. That is already costing us some jobs and it will spread throughout this economy.

Faced with that, Mr. Speaker, it means we have to turn back to our domestic sources of potential growth. That is why this Budget is such a tragedy. Instead of doing that, it is making the domestic sources of growth much more difficult with its increase in taxes and its cut-back in Government expenditures.

We have suggested an alternative by which we would shift the tax breaks presently received by corporations, which we know are not generating employment expansion, to tax breaks to people. This would cut people's tax burden and increase aggregate demand in the economy. We would also shift our expenditures to help assist local initiatives and community drives to try to get not expenditure and make-work projects that are run out of Ottawa, but instead local efforts to bring an expansion at the local level and an improvement in the local possibilities and potential of our communities right across the country.

That kind of approach, combined with an imaginative and an aggressive industrial strategy led by Government would give us some chance in the future.

As I see it, and I say it with regret, the Government's strategy, which is being adopted, of relying on the foreign impetus from the United States, now faces such impediments over the next 6 to 12 months that the great pleasure which Conservatives have had in the reduction of unemployment is going to cease. We are going to see ourselves facing once again a crisis of economic growth which will damage all parts of the country, Atlantic, Pacific, western and central.

• (1640)

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has made several points today. Most of them give absolutely no credit to this fine Budget. I think it is a fine one, and word is coming back from different areas of the country that people are indeed willing, in a number of cases, to make some sacrifices in order to restore financial stability to the country. I just checked and I found that the dollar closed at 71.25 this afternoon. That is up 45 basis points. There were some doom and gloomers speaking during the past several days of debate, but I think the merits of the Budget are starting to show through now.

As I have said on a number of occasions, I think it is a very finely balanced Budget, as was the one preceding it and the Economic Statement of November 1984. That balance exists in terms of expenditure cuts, which account for about 70 per cent of the total reduction, the other 30 per cent coming from taxes. Taxes are finely balanced between individuals and corporations as they are among various individuals. The needy are receiving a substantial break through the innovative sales tax refund which more than offsets the 3 per cent surtax.

The Member continues to repeat the argument, which has no substance, that the Government deserves no credit for the 580,000 jobs which have been created since September, 1984. That statement is totally without merit. It was this Government that dismantled the National Energy Program with alacrity and dispatch. It was this Government that saw how negative the Foreign Investment Review Agency was. Many people were putting forward numbers with regard to approval levels. However, the word was out around the world about the needless problems encountered by people who applied, only to be turned down. Under the leadership of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) that was changed. Not only was the name changed, but investment is now welcomed into the country, which investment creates jobs.

The Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the entire front bench have done a tremendous amount to create a new climate of confidence in the country, which will lead to even greater numbers of jobs by the end of this year and next year. The Member has tremendous talent in this area. I ask him to be a little more complete and a little more direct and honest with regard to the substance of the Budget. Give us a little credit on a Friday afternoon.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, because it is a Friday afternoon, I am actually going to do that. There are three parts of this Budget which I found quite interesting, useful, and helpful.

An Hon. Member: You almost said "good".

Mr. Langdon: I will even say "good". The first is the principle that when tax changes are introduced there should be a rebate for the poor to ensure that they are not squeezed as hard as others. I think the Hon. Member made a technical mistake. The rebate program is not for the 3 per cent tax increase, but for the 1 per cent sales tax increase. In response to that, I certainly offer praise.

The attempt to make investment grants for industry more responsive to the varying needs across the country is a good step forward. It is good because those grants were, by and large, ineffective in persuading companies to undertake investment. They respond to aggregate demand, but not to Government hand-outs in most cases. They do respond with respect to location. By leaving certain incentives in for Atlantic Canada, the Government has given a kind of skewing to Atlantic Canada which is deserved, given the much higher unemployment rate which exists there.

Finally, I think that the changes being implemented by the Farm Credit Corporation with respect to its commodity-related mortgages for farmers is a useful innovation. Unfortunately, the Farm Credit Corporation told the Committee on Agriculture last Thursday morning that there are about 39,000 distressed families in the country. The corporation will be able to help only 6,000. Therefore, it is a step, albeit a small one.

Despite the fact that it is Friday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I would not want my response to a question such as that of the Hon. Member to be entirely positive. The abolition of the National Energy Program, which, of course, was met with such glee, has now created major problems in Alberta as oil prices decline. They have come, once again, to see the virtue of regulated prices as they did during the 1950s.

With respect to FIRA, my experience in my constituency has been that exactly what we feared would happen has happened. U.S. companies have started to merge. They have taken money out of our country to finance those mergers, and we have lost both capital and jobs in the process. In any event, Mr. Speaker, you must judge a Budget by its basic thrust. For the reasons which I indicated in my speech, I think its basic thrust is wrong.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite said that Albertans had come to see the virtue of regulated prices. I happen to be a Member from Alberta, and I would like to assure the Member opposite that Albertans see no virtue in regulated prices. They have not done so for the nearly seven years during which I have sat in this Chamber. Indeed, they see great harm in that. They have seen the imposition of regulated prices bring about a partial collapse of the entire Canadian economy. They have seen suicides, spousal battering, and child abuse as a consequence of ill-fated regulated prices. For the Member to stand in this Chamber and indicate that Albertans see the virtue of regulated prices is to ignore the reality of our historical experience with regulated prices. The Member would indeed be hard pressed to find anyone outside of his own Party in the entire population of Alberta who would see the virtue of regulated prices.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I predict that very shortly, if the price of oil continues to fall, we will be faced with a request from the Alberta provincial Government for the establishment of a floor price for oil in the country just as was the case in the 1950s. It is that which I take to be a new recognition that regulation on the upward trend of pricing, which may hurt you at the time, is also something which can defend you when prices fall through the floor. At the moment in Alberta there are a great many economic operations which are facing potential collapse which should not be facing that kind of pressure simply because of what is happening to world oil prices. On that basis, I think a floor price for oil produced in this country, in order to keep an oil industry for the future, is something which I support, and I suspect a great many Albertans support it as well.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I found the Hon. Member's comments concerning the National Energy Program very interesting. Coming from that region myself, I do not see where the NEP would have helped Alberta in the present circumstances. The Hon. Member linked the oil price rise in 1973-74 first with our export trade, then with investment, and finally with employment. Canada was unique among the OECD countries in having its own made-in-Canada price. The rest of the world's trading nations bit the bullet immediately and absorbed the price increase. Can he give us his analysis of the effect on Canada of having a made-in-Canada price at the time?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that could be answered in a long way or a short way. In view of the time let me answer it in the short way. The effect was to hold off by perhaps 16 to 18 months the economic downturn which hit the rest of the OECD countries. The economies of France, Britain and the U.S. faced massive deterioration in 1974. We did not begin to experience that until late 1975 or perhaps the beginning of 1976. However, we did not escape it because the collapse in the economies of our trading partners hit the demand for our exports, which in turn restrained business people in my community, for example, from making investments in factories or other forms of business.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of regret that I stand to address the borrowing Bill when I had hoped to address the Budget.

Mrs. Mailly: You will make the same speech anyway.

An Hon. Member: You were not here.

Mrs. Finestone: The memory of Members across the way is very short and convenient. I was in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: This borrowing Bill seeks $22.6 billion, an increase from last year of $4.6 billion. That is a rather sad comment because a borrowing Bill is one of the ways in which the Government expresses it options, political philosophy and direction. I suggest that this might indicate that at a time when we have had, according to the Government, an improved economic situation, of which the Government can be duly proud, and improvements in the general economy, we would not have had an increase in borrowing. However, the Government has shown poor judgment and no political direction. We have had bad decisions with respect to the Gulf transaction, which cost us about $850 million in a tax ruling; we had $1.5 billion given to the Northland and CCB. The Government says it is $825 million, but by the time the bills are added up it will be closer to $1.5 billion. The capital gains exemption will cost $4.5 billion to $5 billion by the end of the decade. The phasing out of the petroleum gas revenue tax will cost approximately $8 billion until the end of the decade. Gasoline is going up and it is affecting everyone and everything.

Mr. Layton: Gas?

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, the cost of gas is going up. If you go to the pump and fill your tank you will be quite surprised at what the price is.

Mrs. Mailly: Because of the Liberal Government in Quebec.

Mrs. Finestone: Costs for farmers are up, therefore the price of food is up. Lower and middle-income groups are having a very difficult time. Perhaps if the Hon. Member across the way would stop talking and yelling she might learn something.

Mrs. Mailly: Not from you, lady.

Mrs. Finestone: The debate on this Budget clearly reflects the loyalty of the Conservative Party. The Party is loyal to a few members of a privileged elite. That massive vote which brought the Government into power was a very important manifestation on the part of the voters who said, yes, it is time for a change.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mrs. Finestone: That is what they said in September, yes. I strongly recommend that the Government not test the waters now because I do not think Members across the way would be so happy at the voters' present reaction. They are unhappy, suffering from lack of leadership—

Mr. Lewis: Where is Jean Chretien when you need him?

Mr. Finestone: In order to understand the full effects of the Budget it is imperative that it be examined jointly with the May, 1985, Budget. That examination will prove that the onus is on the individual taxpayer and consumer to reduce the deficit. It is not the well-being of the people which is the major focus, it is the famous national deficit. The heavy burden is being placed on individuals as opposed to corporations and businesses. Over the next three years corporate taxes will decline and taxes on individuals will increase.

Few people will benefit from this Budget, and those who do are the people who already live comfortably. Even they are embarrassed at how well they come out in this Budget. The Government has decided in its second Budget to hit the average taxpayer again. This Budget clearly shows that the Government has no intention of promoting equal opportunities within the economy. It seems to be set on widening instead of reducing the ever-increasing gap between the well-to-do and the poor. There are presently 4.5 million Canadians living below the poverty line. They do not find the cavalier attitude of my Conservative confrères very pleasing. It certainly is not filling their stomachs. These people were hit hard last May and are being hit hard again. The reality is middle-class people on welfare, and soup kitchens. All Members have to do is to go into their riding and stop talking to the rich who supported them, but talk instead to the ordinary people who are very unhappy.

An Hon. Member: Particularly in Mount Royal.

Mrs. Finestone: This is a biased Budget. It does nothing for the poor, the unemployed, pensioners, youth, families or public servants. I do not know where these Members are from, but if they would go to their office instead of dilly-dallying and travelling around the world—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mailly: You mean like Don Boudria?

Mrs. Finestone: —they would find people who are unemployed, unhappy and in need of consideration and help. People are sitting very nervously at home. They are very concerned about where the axe will drop next. I do not know how members of this Government can possibly look at themselves in the mirror. Does this Government not have a social conscience and social responsibility? It certainly does not look that way.

Some Hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mrs. Finestone: I would just suggest that if you look at the employment equity legislation and the response to our Equality For All Report, you would find that it speaks volumes. It is undirected, undefined and shows no real commitment. It is just lots of words.

Some Hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.

COMMONWEALTH DAY

OBSERVANCE OF ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today is Commonwealth Day and it gives me great pleasure to salute this remarkable institution. We are all familiar with the spirit of friendship and tolerance which so distinguishes this association of 49 states comprising fully one-quarter of the world's population. Its specific achievements are many, and we quite naturally think of the Commonwealth as an association where peoples from around the world reach across the great divides of religion, race, and economic and political philosphies to establish a commonality of purpose which draws on our diversity and is nourished by it.

Canada needs the Commonwealth and Canadians, by temperament, are well suited to playing a leadership role there. A nation's foreign policy is grounded in the needs, interests, aspirations, and talents of its people. We in Canada are fortunate to have two official languages and many different cultural and ethnic traditions. We have, against great odds, built a country which is second to none in its respect for the rights of others and, most especially, for the right to a life of dignity regardless of race, religion, or creed.

[Translation]

It is no accident that the Commonwealth so accurately reflects these fundamental values of our country. We were present when the organization was established, and from the very outset, Canadians have been active and energetic participants. More than any other multilateral institution, the Commonwealth has been shaped by Canadian values and reflects the driving forces behind our foreign policy.

Mr. Speaker, this country abhors the system of apartheid. It was John Diefenbaker who spearheaded the movement to expel South Africa from the Commonwealth, a spectacular act that sharply focussed the attention of the world, more than ever before, on this shameful situation. Last year in Nassau, it was again the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) who decisively influenced the Commonwealth Agreement on South Africa.

[English]

Going into Nassau there were many who feared that the South Africa question could damage the meeting, could perhaps damage the Commonwealth itself, beyond all repair. We did not share this pessimism. We have confidence in our traditional foreign policy skills and the ways in which those skills have served Canada and the Commonwealth so well over the years.

In Nassau we set a timetable for the dismantling of apartheid and the initiation of reforms. We established a group of eminent persons to facilitate dialogue and work for power-sharing arrangements that might avert a catastrophe in South Africa. That group is now in South Africa and Canada is ably represented by Archbishop Edward Scott in its deliberations.

The Commonwealth has been important to the pursuit of other Canadian foreign policy objectives: The transformation of Rhodesia to the new Zimbabwe, the growing acceptance of women as equal partners in economic and political life, and the efforts to move forward on north-south economic issues. In these and similar areas the Commonwealth has made significant contributions. Indeed, the success of the Commonwealth inspired much of the thinking which went into the hosting of the first ever Summit of Francophone Nations last month in Paris. We have great hopes that this francophone forum, too, will become an instrument for international understanding and human progress.

[Translation]

Canada's foreign policy is conducted through a complex series of bilateral and multilateral associations and institutions. To better understand this country and its position in the world, we should identify the means by which we pursue our national objectives in agreement with our allies and friends the world over. Our foreign policy is distinct because we have a unique network of international relations. Outside the Commonwealth, no other institution reflects so profoundly the way we feel about ourselves.

[English]

Canada has invited Commonwealth leaders to convene in Vancouver in 1987 for their next meeting. The invitation demonstrates our commitment to the Commonwealth, and the Vancouver meeting will demonstrate to Canadians the Commonwealth's attachment to and respect for Canada and the principles which guide this country in our activities around the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my own caucus I would like to share with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) the tribute to what is, indeed, a remarkable and fascinating institution which was born in colonialism and dependency and has now emerged into full blown maturity as an association of free and independent countries able to share common concerns across a wide variety of different points of view.

Our commitment and dedication to the Commonwealth is important at this time in the history of the world because there are increasing signs of a retreat of commitment to the concept of multilateralism and internationalism. Various countries are retreating into forms of regional blocks, alliances, and continental associations. There is a diminishing support for the necessity of bringing the world closer together, not only in pure economic terms but in terms of communication. We see threats of terrorism. We see threats of the antagonisms which have grown up. We see retreat into the forms of preferred trading arrangements which do not allow for the entire scope of world activities to take place.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the key issue facing the Commonwealth in the weeks ahead will be South Africa. The Secretary of State properly referred to the statements made by himself and by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at Nassau and the United Nations. Opposition Members supported the intent and objectives of those statements. However, the clock is ticking. The six-month timetable which was set by the Government comes to an end in early April. At that time some very difficult decisions will have to be made. We will have to decide what kinds of very clear decisions we will make on sanctions and diplomatic representation. Thus far, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the contingency planning which would allow us to meet those commitments and timetables.

The Minister speaks of leadership and that is a very important quality which Canada has and should exercise in the Commonwealth. It means we should be bringing various countries together to look at what could result from the mass movement of refugees in the front line states around South Africa. We should be looking at the representations and responses which would have to be taken, not just in the Commonwealth but in the UN and other world bodies. In other words, the clock is ticking and the time draws near.

This Government should be preparing itself for a number of serious steps which will have to be taken. We know for a fact there has been no improvement in South Africa. There has been no change in the position of the South African Government regarding apartheid. There has been no substantial progress made. Therefore, when the deadline is reached, and it is in the offing, then we in this House will be forced to make a difficult but important decision to take the final step and tell South Africa we will not accept apartheid any longer, that this Government will take every action necessary to make sure it does not continue. We will provide the necessary leadership in the Commonwealth and elsewhere. There will be a time to stand up for principle, and action will certainly be more important than words.

I want to comment on one further aspect of Commonwealth affairs. It is prompted by the release on February 17 of the new proposals for economic co-operation in the Caribbean. We all recognize that the Caribbean is one area where Canada can provide the most positive kind of leadership and support for an important group of Commonwealth nations. The statement of February 17 falls substantially short of that. The exclusion of a number of important areas from the agreement does not represent the kind of commitment we would like to see this Government make. I hope that in next week's meeting between the Prime Minister and the President of the U.S., the Government of Canada will be very forthright and strong in its approach to promoting a much broader and more effective economic program for that part of the world and that part of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I need all the help I can get today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I cannot even get started for the applause. I want to join with both the Minister and the Liberal Party critic in recognizing today as Commonwealth Day. As I prepared to say a few words on this subject I could not help but think that every year we rise and extol the virtues of the Commonwealth. Then 12 months pass and we rise again and extol the virtues of the Commonwealth. That may be a little unfair, but we do not pay as much attention to the Commonwealth as we pay lip service to our concern for the Commonwealth. It is time for Canada to evaluate very carefully the role it can and ought to play as leader in the Commonwealth. We have 49 states with a common bond. The bond takes on many different dimensions but it is exemplified in the movement of people around the world. There is within that movement a very close relationship between Commonwealth countries. In my own case, coming to Canada from Britain, the choices were quite narrow; you went to Australia or Canada. That was because of the Commonwealth tie. It was a sense that we belonged to the same family of nations. We had many similar if not identical standards in our daily lives.

In looking at the shifts which have taken place in the world, the one constant factor has been, at every international conference I have attended, that the persons who came most quickly and most closely together in seeking solutions to difficult problems were those of the Commonwealth. They always seemed to be able to find common ground. They came together in a group not to bully others but to look for solutions to international problems. As you travel around the world you find that in Commonwealth countries there is a tremendous amount of respect for Canada. If you were to ask people in the Commonwealth countries who they look to for leadership and guidance, almost without exception the name Canada comes up early, if not first, in the responses. We have to constantly bear that in mind because with that recognition goes tremendous responsibility. We have to be prepared not only to be a voice among many but to be a leading voice in seeking solutions to the very difficult problems which exist both within and without the Commonwealth. In South Africa, for example, I cannot help but feel that although we have played a role, it is difficult to measure at this stage what progress, if any, has been made as a result. It is hard to see the kind of response from the Government of South Africa which we had hoped to see; the kind of human understanding of the inappropriateness and total unacceptability of the system they have established, that of a division on the basis of colour. We in this country have to be even more strongly represented in the argument against that system. Not on a once in a while basis but on an every day of the week basis. If need be, we would have to take the appropriate additional steps which may turn out to be necessary, which in fact may even now be necessary, in order to try and bring to that regime's attention that, as a leader in the Commonwealth of Nations, we will not sit idly by and allow to continue the kind of activity that they perpetrate on their own people.

Beyond that, there are other conflicts in the Commonwealth, some economic and some social. Canada has to free the necessary capital resources to offer to those countries the base from which they can develop a position of equality within our group of nations, indeed in the world. I say to the Minister that the celebration of Commonwealth Day should be a new beginning. It is not enough to say that we will just continue with what we have been doing. We have to chart a new beginning starting now and clearly establish an independent role for Canada, to show the rest of the world that we are not going to be idle bystanders. We are going to be there when circumstances require it, whether it be a financial cost or whether it be in rallying the rest of the world around the appropriate measures which must be taken.

On this day the message has to be that we in Canada are going out now to establish a new relationship. We are going to ask the rest of the Commonwealth nations to join with us in fighting those things which we all agree are inappropriate. I ask the Minister to consider once again sending a message to South Africa on Commonwealth Day, drawing to their attention what we have in common and what we find unacceptable about the regime's behaviour. Do it as a commonwealth message and ask the rest of the Commonwealth to join us.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 519 will be answered today.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE LEGISLATION

Question No. 519—Ms. McDonald:

Did the Minister of Employment and Immigration change the regulations of the unemployment insurance program to cover performing artists, regardless of their status for taxation purposes, as recommended by the sub-committee on the taxation of artists and writers and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, the UI legislation has not been changed.

(b) Coverage under the UI program is based on an employer/employee relationship, with the general requirement being the person must be under a contract of service in order to be considered in insurable employment. Where the artist is employed under a contract of service, i.e., where the employer/employee relationship exists, the artist is covered under the UI program. However, for the most part, performing artists do not fall under this category but rather, are self-employed.

The UI program is being studied by the Forget Commission; no change will be forthcoming to the UI legislation until its recommendations are made known. Representations have been made by performing artists to the Forget Commission, and their case will be given consideration in conjunction with the over-all review of the UI program.

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 18 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to address Bill C-87, an Act really to privatize Canadian Arsenals Limited, a Government Crown corporation I believe since 1945.

The first point I want to make is that it seems to me that when we talk about the privatization of Crown corporations this Government, and indeed the previous one, seemed to think that the more successful the corporation the faster the Government should divest itself of that corporation. Certainly Canadian Arsenals Limited is one shining example. Frankly, I do not know why the Government wants to get rid of Canadian Arsenals Limited of Montreal. It employs some 800 workers in Quebec at two different factories. It supplies a great amount of ammunition to the Canadian Department of National Defence at a very good price. Last year, for example, it registered a profit of $11.3 million. In The Financial Post survey of the top 500 firms in Canada it came in at number 470. It is not exactly the top, but it is within the top 500. In terms of five-year profit growth it was number three. Again I ask, why does the Government wish to divest itself of this very profitable well run, well organized job producing Canadian industry?

One could almost link this with the sale of de Havilland and the proposed sale of Canadair, even though both of those corporations at the present time are not in a profit-making situation. Nonetheless the taxpayers over the years have poured hundreds of millions of dollars into the development of a Canadian Aerospace Industry. Now we see that after that effort has been made, and the financial input has been made from taxpayer's money, both of these companies are also going to go to the private sector. We do not seem to be in any great hurry, however, to divest ourselves of the losers. Those Crown corporations, which unquestionably will continue to be losers, the taxpayers of Canada are being called upon to continue to infuse with capital simply to keep their heads above water. Not so with Canadian Arsenals Limited of Montreal, a successful profitable job creating corporation that in my opinion, and that of my Party, should be kept as a Crown corporation and, indeed, as an example of how a Crown corporation should be managed, organized and run, and to prove to the doubters that Crown corporations can work, can make profits. That is the key point here as far as we are concerned.

As far as the specific deal is concerned with respect to Bill C-87, there is an upside as well as a downside. I am very happy to see that even though we have to divest ourselves of this Crown corporation the purchaser must be at least 75 per cent Canadian and resident in Canada. The Board of Directors must also of course be resident in Canada. This clause, as far as I can understand it, cannot be altered in the future. It must remain a Canadian corporation, if not a Crown corporation.

Second, the purchaser, SNC Group of Montreal, which is a very reputable private company in engineering, construction and manufacturing—I suppose in the scheme of things one could not expect to find a better corporation in Canada which is Canadian for the purposes of taking over Canadian Arsenals—is owned I understand by approximately 500 of its own employees, and world-wide, including its Canadian operations employs approximately 4,000 employees.

The downside, however, is quite serious. In addition to what I have already said in principle about divesting ourselves of Crown corporations that are profitable, well managed and well organized, we have here, first of all, the loss of a prosperous Crown corporation which sells 90 per cent of its ammunition to DND. When one considers that our own Department of National Defence, which obviously is an adjunct of the Crown—it is a portfolio, a ministry, and by its very nature must remain within the public domain—has its own publicly owned and controlled source of ammunition supply at a very reasonable price, I am told, why would we now choose to privatize Canadian Arsenals, particularly when it has been doing a very, very good job of supplying our own military with relatively inexpensive ammunition since 1945. I believe it is fair to say that from now on the cost of that ammunition will increase now that the company will be privatized. This may not take place over night, but I am prepared to argue that the cost of that ammunition to Department of National Defence will begin to increase.

There is also no guarantee of job security, job creation or expansion as a result of this deal. Of course, this is cause for concern to employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited. As far as we can determine, the new corporation can be allowed to stop producing the kind of ammunition or product that it presently produces for the Department of National Defence.

There is no guarantee of employee benefits. For example, Canadian Arsenals Limited is represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada but the employees of SNC are represented by the CNTU in their collective agreement. There are two major unions involved in this transaction and, while I am not familiar with labour law, it would appear to me that there may be a conflict requiring the collective agreement to be rewritten. Who will represent the employees? Will it be the PSAC or CNTU? I believe this situation will create some labour unrest in the Province of Quebec certainly over the next several months because these are two sizeable bargaining units.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada and its membership was never notified of the Government's intention to privatize Canadian Arsenals Limited. The first information they received was what they read in the newspaper. It is most regretable that an employer would inform its employees of a change of ownership through the media. It is demoralizing and creates widespread apprehension among the workers and the bargaining unit. It does not lead to a peaceful and easy transition from one owner to another, and I suggest the Government has made a major blunder in this process. In addition, the PSAC registered its very grave reservations and apprehensions to Canadian Arsenals Limited and the Government as early as October 7, 1985, with respect to the possibility of the company becoming privatized.

We have other serious questions regarding the process used by the Department of Supply and Services in selling Canadian Arsenals Limited. Dozens of companies expressed interest in CAL but only six were asked to submit final money offers by November 19, 1985. We have no way of determining why only six and none of the other companies were asked to submit final money offers by November 19, 1985. Furthermore, the final bidders were forced to submit three revised bids between July and November 19 because the Department of Supply and Services kept changing its story, according to a newspaper article. In other words, we do not know whether the Department was changing the rules during the game, or why only three of those six firms were asked to submit three revised bids between July and November 19, 1985.

Moreover, a senior official at the Department of Supply and Services, Stan Kerr, Director General of Aerospace and Armaments, left DSS on November 1 to work for CFN Consultants which was lobbying DSS on behalf of SNC for the purchase of Canadian Arsenals Limited. Mr. Kerr signed an affidavit swearing that he would not be dealing with any aspect of the Canadian Arsenals Limited deal. I am not questioning the man's integrity or honesty, but I am suggesting that in the public domain, in the media and in our minds there is always that lingering element of the appearance of conflict of interest. There is the appearance of a possibility of conflict of interest, and I am in no way calling into question this gentleman's honesty and integrity. I simply suggest that it was a poor move at that time because it does raise some eyebrows. I will not comment on it any further.

All of these points may be attributed to the fact that the Department of Supply and Services was treading on new ground in its role as a privatizer, because it traditionally acquired rather than divested of Government assets.

The conditions of sale which SNC has agreed to for the purchase of Canadian Arsenals Limited are not yet known to the public. In a press release dated December 2, 1985, the Department of Supply and Services refers to employee pension rights being protected in the conditions of sale. However, a conversation with Jean Bergeron of the PSAC on February 21, 1986, confirmed that they were still worried about the workers' pension plan.

This is an area of vital concern not only with respect to this change of ownership but with respect to such sales in general. There are situations throughout the country where individual workers who have given five to thirty of their best working years to a company, see that company change hands or go bankrupt and most if not all of their pension plan go down the drain. This is fundamentally and morally wrong. We can no longer tolerate this type of situation in this country where men and women retire with a pension of only $200 or $300 a month rather than the $1,000 they anticipated at age 65 because the company changed hands along the way.

When we address the issue of pensions in general at the federal and provincial levels throughout the country, I hope this type of situation can be brought to an end. As far as my Party, and I am sure most Members of Parliament are concerned, this practice cannot continue. We must bring this type of handling of what used to be called in the 19th Century "operatives in the workplace" to an end.

I urge the Government to make every effort to ensure that as a new company takes over Canadian Arsenals Limited the pensions are totally guaranteed and will continue in place for those workers who are presently working at Canadian Arsenals and have paid into them over the years. In that way they will be guaranteed the kind of dignity and security which they anticipate and expect in their retirement as a result of the present collective agreement.

On December 14, 1985, the Financial Post referred to significant numbers of contract clauses built in to ensure greatly expanded facilities for the manufacture of munitions and the modernization of plants. I said a few moments ago that Canadian Arsenals, a publicly owned corporation, was a first-class producer and ammunition for the Canadian DND. I just wonder whether we should be expanding the role of this munitions manufacturer into a global market-place. I wonder whether it is wise for a country like Canada to become even more deeply involved with those known as the "purveyors of death", the international arms merchants. Granted, bullets are a very small component of any military organization. However, in principle, should we consider allowing a Canadian company, now that it is going to be privatized, to be expanded into the world market-place where weapons, components of weapons, bullets, shells and so on, are sold?

I do not believe Canada has to create jobs in that way, now should it be involved in the international arms trade. We are not morally obligated in any way to become part of that very questionable and murky world beyond the factory gate. Where do the guns, the bullets and shells end up, and I am not referring to SNC? Where do the other weapons of death end up? Through whose hands do they go and where do they eventually end up? We have laws in this country to prevent Canadian manufacturers, whether publicly or privately owned, to sell weapons to the world's hot spots, to where there is insurrection, civil war, international conflict, and so on. It is very interesting that some of the bullets or shells of CAL ended up in the hands of the Contras in Honduras and in the northern sections of Nicaragua. No matter what side one is on in Nicaragua, I think it is unconscionable—if it is correct, and I am going by newspaper reports—that Canadian made bullets would be involved in conflicts, not only between the Contras but, more importantly, now between the United States and the Sandinistas, because that is really what the civil strife down there is all about. It is that Nicaragua posed a major military threat to the United States. But I am not going to get involved in that subject because it is not on topic.

I think we should be very careful. Perhaps we should think about tightening up on these export controls. There have been some notable exceptions over the years, but so far Canada has a pretty good record in this field, and I would hope that by privatizing Canadian Arsenals Limited, by selling it to SNC, we will not be providing yet another company to produce armaments in the world for the purpose of these very questionable territorial or regional military disputes, insurrection or civil wars.

The Government is determined to sell off a winner, a profit-making Crown corporation, which I do not believe it should do. It is a corporation which could have been an example of how a Crown corporation should be run successfully. Nonetheless, with its massive majority, the Government is going to force the sale through. But I hope it will make certain that there are restrictions on the sale abroad of the products produced by the new owners.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question and a short observation first. The Hon. Member will no doubt be aware that the Government in its attempt to sell this Crown corporation decided to hire the firm of Arthur Andersen Limited from Montreal in order to assess the value of its assets and business for the purposes of arriving at some sort of price for its disposal. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) sent me a letter on January 20 in which he said:

> Further to my Legislative Assistant's discussion with you last week, I must once again advise you that I cannot provide you with a copy of the Arthur Andersen Report. However, I can confirm that the Arthur Andersen Company carried out a valuation study of CAL prior to commencement of the bidding and negotiation process and estimated that the value range for CAL was $80 million to $98 million.

The Hon. Member will know that the company is proposed to be sold for an amount of $92,224,941, in other words, considerably less than the maximum indicated in the Arthur Andersen report. Does the Hon. Member agree with me that the Arthur Andersen report should be tabled in this House so that all Members of Parliament could in fact determine whether or not the Canadian taxpayers are receiving their money's worth, notwithstanding the fact, as he said, that perhaps we should not even consider selling the company at all? However, recognizing the majority the Government has, I think the least we should do is ensure that the taxpayers of Canada are well compensated for their belongings, and of course this company belongs to the taxpayers of Canada. Does the Hon. Member think, as I do, that this process should be made public, that the Arthur Andersen report should be tabled in the House so that all Hon. Members can know the value of the company?

I give an example to the Hon. Member. Is the company worth $98 million if it has a guaranteed Government contract? Is it worth slightly less if it does not? In other words, why can we not get the details of this process in order to be able to fully determine whether or not the taxpayers of Canada are reaping all of the benefits from this sale, notwithstanding the fact that we may not even want it sold, to start with?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for putting that question to me. I made reference in my remarks to the fact that we did not have all of the details of the transaction. I think it goes without saying that whenever a Crown corporation is sold—regrettably, a profit-making one like this—all of the details of that transaction should be tabled in the House so that we know exactly what happened. After all, we are the custodians here, not of private stockholders but of public funds which are given to us by the taxpayers of Canada by law. They are the owners, as the Hon. Member pointed out. The taxpayers should be apprised of all of the aspects of any transaction when a Crown corporation is sold to the private sector.

It is rather interesting that there is a difference between the Andersen upward figure of some $98 million, and the proposed sale price of $92.3 million, roughly.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concerns pertaining to the pensions and benefits of the employees. I know of the interest the Hon. Member has in this area. I can assure the Hon. Member that this is also a concern of ours, and I look forward to working with the Hon. Member in committee on this matter.

The Hon. Member also expressed some interest as to how the bids came about and how the decision was made. I should possibly clarify for him that on May 23, the Government's intention to privatize Canadian Arsenals was announced. In response to the announcement, numerous expressions of interests were received. In fact, nine corporations submitted the $100,000 deposit required to obtain confidential information and accesss to CALs facilities. Eight of these nine corporations submitted serious offers on August 9, 1985. Immediately thereafter the Government commenced competitive negotiations with these companies to ensure the best deal for the taxpayers of Canada. This is why the come-backs to the bids took place. The process has resulted in a selection of the SNC group as a preferred bidder. As the Hon. Member has stated, we feel that SNC is a very competent Canadian company, the majority of whose shareholders are Canadian. We are very proud to do business with them.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley). I would be happy to participate in any way I can to make certain the deal goes through, even though I am opposed to it. If it has to go through I wish to ensure that it will go through with as much public understanding and knowledge as is possible.

In my remarks I made reference to the final bidders being forced to submit three revised bids between July and November 19, 1985, because the Department of Supply and Services kept changing its story. Again, that information comes to me from a newspaper report. Nonetheless, I am not suspicious that anything wrong has been done. I am certainly not suspicious that anything illegal has been done. I am simply wondering why these companies would have to submit bids three times. Was this to obtain, for example, a higher price? That would make sense to me if all the bids which came in were too low, or well below the Andersen figure, or below the upper figure, or, in this case, the lower figure. Thus there are still some questions in my mind with respect to this matter. I am not for a moment suggesting that anything illegal has taken place at all, or anything unconscionable for that matter. I am basically opposed to this sale. It is too bad we have to divest ourselves of a healthy corporation. I can think of one or two others which we might let go for a buck.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to my hon. friend's attention the fact that Canadian Arsenals Limited showed a profit of $3 million in 1981 and a profit of $181,000 in 1979, which rose to $11.3 million in 1985. Back in 1980 Canadian Arsenals had sales of $30 million, which sales tripled to more than $100 million in 1985. It appears to me that Government wants to get rid of Canadian Arsenals because it maintains it has been badly managed. Does the Hon. Member think there is evidence to show that the company has been badly managed and that it is some type of a dog, or in fact is this not a company whose profit increase was the third or fourth largest of any company according to The Financial Post 500? Why get rid of it if in fact it is so profitable?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I answered in it in part in my remarks this morning. I mentioned that it was within the top 500 companies according to The Financial Post. I mentioned it was number three in Canada in terms of its five-year profit growth. I asked: Why sell? The taxpayers of Canada do not even know if we are receiving a good price for it. I think it is a shame that we are getting rid of this type of Crown Corporation which has a ready market. Some 90 per cent of its product goes to the Department of National Defence. It is a company which has shown increasing profitability. It is a company which has been improving in the market-place. Obviously, it is not a company which was poorly managed. It seems that the Government automatically assumes that all Crown corporations are badly managed, when in fact here is a shinning example of one among many which is not badly managed and which, indeed, is very efficiently run.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in recalling the Budget prior to the last Budget, and I would love to have been able to speak on the last Budget but unfortunately the Tory majority cut our tongues out on that particular issue on Friday—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I recall in the Budget prior to the most recent Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that he would like to reward success. The new credo of conservatism was: "Reward success". Yet those in the public who do not know a great deal about Canadian Arsenals Limited might not realize that this particular action on the part of the Government, the sell-out of Canadian Arsenals, is in direct contradiction to the promise of the Minister of Finance that he will reward success.

I would like to walk through some of the recent history of Canadian Arsenals which clearly shows that this company was not only making money but that it had the third highest increase in profitability of any company on The Financial Post 500. One would think that under those circumstances the Government would at the very least be prepared to come clean with respect to the total value of the company. However, we quite clearly see another example of the secrecy of the Government. It is not prepared to tell the taxpayers the value of the company which we are now about to divest ourselves of as a result of its credo of privatization. It has so blinkered its eyes to the benefits of some Crown corporations that it is not prepared to even submit to public scrutiny the Arthur Andersen report which assessed the value of the over-all picture of Canadian Arsenals Limited. In fact, if one were to look at the most recent annual report of Canadian Arsenals dated March 31, 1985, one would see that during the tenure of the Conservative Government—so it cannot be said that this is a sneaky Liberal document—this Crown corporation had embarked upon a plan which was succeeding. This was a plan which was not only buttressing our development of high technology in Canada, but which was looking at the whole notion of increasing exports.

We know that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) heads off to the "Sham"rock summit in about a week from now he will be talking about increasing our exports.

[Translation]

For the first time in its history, Mr. Speaker, if we take the time to read the Annual Report for Canadian Arsenals Limited, for the first time in its history, this corporation has exceeded $100 million in sales and $10 million in net profits.

Going back to the year 1977, we know that at the time, the corporation was not in good financial health. A decision was made to set up a project which in fact was ordered by the previous Liberal government. They decided to revamp a plan in order to make the corporation a profitable concern.

In 1977-78, there was a net deficit of $1.2 million. The corporation's sales in that year totalled $8 million, and it was expected the deficit would be a problem.

But if we look at the last seven years, Mr. Speaker, the results of the corporation's plan for 1984-85 show that the mandate given in 1977 to make Canadian Arsenals a viable and financially independent enterprise, capable of attracting private sector investment, has been met in all respects, according to the highest private sector criteria—which is the goal of this Conservative Government.

This Government was expecting to pay a supplement to ensure the security of supply of military equipment in Canada. In fact, according to the Minister responsible for Supply and Services, the decision represents a saving, not including the economic spin-offs for the country in terms of the creation of hundreds of high-paying jobs in an advanced technology sector.

Mr. Speaker, finally, the corporation has made tremendous progress during the last seven financial periods. Today, according to the Financial Post 500, the corporation ranks 470th on sales and third on growth of net profits over the last five years.

If we look at advanced technology, for instance, we know that during the election campaign, the Government promised to double the funding for advanced technology research.

We see that in this corporation, of which the Government is now divesting itself, advanced technology within the corporation represents $86.6 million of a $103 million turnover, and we can better appreciate this when we see that this breaks down as $28 million for new products, $2 million for new filling processes and methods, $25 million for products for which technology was acquired under licence, and $1.6 million for technology sales.

Mr. Speaker, increased inventory has made it possible to increase productivity by 11 per cent, compared with a drop of 2 per cent for the previous year.

We also know that the CAL staff has increased and there is talk about jobs, jobs in the Province of Quebec. They hired 159 new employees last year and the Crown corporation had 827 people on the payroll on March 31, 1985.

The Parliamentary Secretary stated there would be no problems with the employees, their jobs will be protected and so on. Mr. Speaker, the facts show that it is not so. When the Government decided to unload the corporation it did not even have the courage or basic courtesy to contact the union, the Public Service Alliance of Canada. The Government made and announced the decision and the employees found out the corporation would be up for sale when they read about it in the newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, how can we take the word of a Government that promises to protect the former Crown employees who are now working for the CAL when we can see the same Government did not even have the courage to contact them before deciding to sell the corporation which now has about 800 employees in the Montreal region?

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Government showed its total lack of courage in this whole matter. They decided to give a mandate to the Minister of privatization—that is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) who struck the first blow when he sold de Havilland—and then the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) came on the scene right after the Minister of privatization and decided to sell this corporation which is now operating profitably.

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker, why are the Conservatives so keen on privatization? They are quite prepared to sell the corporation, but they did not have the courage to table in the House the documents listing its assets.

[English]

What are the Conservatives afraid of? Why are they so bent on the privatization of this company which has clearly demonstrated that it has followed the Wilson rubric, "reward success"? In the last seven years, it has made a spectacular recovery, finding itself number three on the Financial Post's list of 500 for increasing profitability of a company. Yet the first thing the Government does, in its Pontius Pilate approach to the public sector, is to wash its hands of the entire company.

The Government is selling off the assets of the company and the Canadian Government's only access to munitions without even having the decency to table in the House the corresponding documents.

It could be argued that there is some question of national security involved. Heaven knows, the Government invokes national security at will when it suits its purposes. If that is the case, however, why did the Minister, in a letter to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), who has been questioning the Government on this issue since the announcement of it, tell the Hon. Member that he could see the Arthur Anderson report privately in the Minister's office but that the Minister was not prepared to make its contents public? What is there in this particular document that makes the Government so fearful that it cannot make it public? Is it another example of a de Havilland Giveaway? Is it in fact because the Anderson report shows that the profitability of this company is not only increasing but that the notion of having a Crown-owned manufacturer of munitions is in the interests of Canadian security?

The Government has indicated that it will have the supply question dealt with by making sure that SNC is a 75 per cent Canadian-owned company, and that is wonderful. However, we saw with Mitel that when the Government gives up its interest or in fact is prepared to sell out, there is never any guarantee in the long term that the company will remain in Canadian hands. On the other hand, there is certainly no guarantee that even a Canadian-owned company would always act in the best interests of the people of Canada. Presumably the Canadian Government would act in the best interests of the people of Canada, and that is why a company like Canadian Arsenals was launched as a Government Crown corporation.

The biggest buyer of Canadian Arsenals products is the group known as the taxpayers of Canada. On the one hand, we are the biggest buyer of the company's products. We are selling out our interest and turning it over to SNC, which in fact is now going to be in a position of having a major monopoly on the issue of munitions for Canada. The company is being sold and we are not even prepared to come clean in the House of Commons about the actual value of this company which has shown a remarkable and, indeed, one might even say a miraculous economic growth in the last seven years.

The Government had been prone on a number of occasions to pointing to the fact that the so-called non-profit-making Crown corporations are adding to the deficit. We heard the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) jumping from one figure to another trying to justify the giveaway of the de Havilland Corporation. When the figures were finally tabled in the House, they belied every statement made by the Government on the sale of de Havilland. We will not be able to have the same scrutiny of this particular sale to SNC because we do not even have access to the documents.

It is unfortunate that most members of the public do not understand the function of Canadian Arsenals. They do not know that it has been a profit-making company. They do not know that its prime user happens to be the Government of Canada for the people of Canada. These munitions are made by a Crown corporation which employs people through the Government of Canada. Ninety per cent of its products are sold to the Canadian Government for the people of Canada. Now the Canadian Government is divesting itself of that company without even having the courage to come to the House with the documentation that shows that we have to get rid of this boondoggle. But it is not a boondoggle, it is in fact a very profitable company which has responded to the Conservative mandate by recognizing the bottom line.

Since the establishment of Canadian Arsenals in 1949, we have seen an incredible increase in its move toward profitability, particularly in the seven-year plan that was established in 1977-78. We also see the future for Canadian Arsenals. The selling price is $92.2 million, $87.5 million for the shares and $4.7 million for the debt owed by Canadian Arsenals to the federal Government. Sales in this particular company are projected to double in the next five years. There are currently $200 million in backlogged orders with the company. If my mathematics are correct, with $200 million in backlogged orders and a selling price of $92.2 million, SNC has just gained over $100 million in guaranteed orders without even having to table its fiscal plan for the company in the House of Commons.

This is a giveaway. It is another indication to the Canadian people that the credo of privatization espoused by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and followed by every other Conservative Minister does not always work. There are times when there is a role for the public sector to play in the economy. Surely the sole source of munitions supply for the Government is quite clearly one area where there is a public interest in having this company remain in public hands.

It was the decision of the Minister of Supply and Services some three years ago to analyse the situation. He said that in light of the security implications of the particular company it was important that it not only be Canadian owned but that there be a direct government interest, that it be a Crown corporation. The Government has washed its hands of that particular analysis without being prepared to say in the House of Commons just why, or for how much or for what reason it is selling the company.

[Translation]

Unbelievable as it is, Mr. Speaker, the corporation has a back-log of $200 million in orders, yet SNC is offering only $92 million, which means that in excess of $100 million are there for the corporation.

The Government keeps talking about the deficit and, among other things, it is urging young families to accept cut-backs in family allowances and wants average Canadians to pay 3 per cent more in federal sales taxes, and that might work out to over $1,000 a year per family. We can see the difficulties created by this Budget and previous Budgets as well. The Government is asking Canadian men and women to make sacrifices and then gives away these corporations which are making profits on behalf of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, we can see here that the corporation ranked third among companies that have recorded rising profits since 1982-83, so why should the Government be so anxious to sell without telling the House of Commons what is the real value of the corporation?

For instance, we know that a number of additional facilities are planned for the corporation.

[English]

In 1976, when the Government took a look at how it could improve the status and the situation of Canadian Arsenals, a $3.6 million modernization program had been embarked upon and there was another $3.7 million for the recovery of operating deficits. That total of $7.3 million was to be spent between 1977 and 1982. The corporation showed a profit in 1978. The recovery had taken less time than even anticipated by the Government. Therefore, CAL only used $4.3 million of the $7.3 million allocated. Part of the subsidy was refundable. That brings the total cost to the Canadian Treasury down to $3.1 million, for a company which in the 1984-85 operating year showed a profit of $11.3 million. An investment of $3 million for an $11 million return, a projected $200 million in sales and a doubling of the sales projections over the next five years, is money well spent.

Unfortunately, since the Government is so committed to privatization at all cost—it sold out or gave away de Havilland—it is now in the process of giving away Canadian Arsenals. At the same time it is not prepared to tell Canadians the ultimate cost of the sale to the taxpayers, the costs in terms of lack of security, in terms of actual profitability and in terms of lost jobs. There are no job guarantees. When the company is turned over to the private sector it might keep employees on for a year or two, but there is no guarantee. There is no guarantee built into the take-over by the company from Montreal.

There are numerous questions on the particular sale which have not been answered. I urge the Government to reconsider its decision. In its quest to privatize it has forgotten the credo espoused by the Minister of Finance, reward success. Canadian Arsenals has been a successful company, and it is now being rewarded by being sold off to the lowest bidder.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) dealt with the corporate plan of the corporation which suggested a 100 per cent increase in profits over the next five years. Does the Hon. Member have any idea of the actual amount of possible purchases by the Department of National Defence over the same period of time? Is there a larger possibility of profits by Canadian Arsenals if it works more closely with the Department of National Defence than it did in the past?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government is responsible for about 90 per cent of the products sold by Canadian Arsenals. The export projections in the year 1984-85 were about 7.9 per cent of the company's business. Obviously the projections will come in great part from the added contributions by the Canadian Government.

When the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) stated that the SNC group had been determined to be the preferred bidder, the Government made quite clear that it was not prepared to give preference to the particular company in terms of its own purchasing requirements through the Department of National Defence. As I understand it the only competitor—and I may not be correct in my assessment—to Canadian Arsenals in certain areas of munitions was the SNC group. By selling to that group quite clearly a private sector monopoly will be created. The Government does not like public sector monopolies, but it appears from what it is doing with the sell-out of this company that it not only embraces the notion of a private sector monopoly but it is creating it.

In that regard, the projections for profitability launched in the annual report of Canadian Arsenals will clearly be paid by Canadian taxpayers. It will be taxpayers' money. We are losing on both ends. We are losing because we are selling the company for less than it is worth. In fact we are losing because it is being sold at all. We are also losing because we will be creating a monopoly which will force Canadian taxpayers to pay more for the purchases made through the Department of National Defence. I do not know who is winning in the deal. I think the only group which is winning is SNC. Since it had the gumption to come in with the bid, more power to SNC. However, Canadian taxpayers are certainly the losers in this particular fiasco.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member explain to the House the difference between the federal Government sale of Canadian Arsenals and the Ontario Government sale of UTDC?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has not done his homework. He certainly does not recognize the fact that the Urban Transit Development Corporation was originally a boondoggle creation of Conservatism.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: It was so poorly viewed by the citizens of Hamilton, for example, that when they were offered a free aerial expressway they turned it down.

Certainly the Ontario Government is doing the best it can to make the best out of the situation. If we look at the replacement of Hawker Siddeley in Thunder Bay by UTDC, obviously Hawker Siddeley has been a very effective and profitable company. Unfortunately UTDC drove Hawker Siddeley out of business and then proceeded to take over all contracts into which Hawker Siddeley had entered in the past.

The former Chairman of UTDC was another one of those Tory patronage appointments. He had at his disposal a villa and a number of limousines, including a Mercedes, which were paid for by the taxpayers when he was out flogging the LRT for the City of Vancouver. He was not paying a cent of rent. He was living in luxurious accommodations at the expense of Ontario taxpayers.

Clearly the Ontario Government has taken its responsibility, has conducted an assessment of the situation and has recognized that as long as some involvement by the Ontario Government could be guaranteed—and that is being guaranteed by this particular initiative—it would be the best under the circumstances.

The fiscal plan of the UTDC is a far cry from the fiscal plan of Canadian Arsenals which has increased its profitability to the point where it is third on The Financial Post list of 500. I do not think we would see the same profitability margin with UTDC.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member care to comment on the creation, by the Quebec Liberal Government, of a Cabinet post for privatization?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has probably spent the morning justifying why he called for an adjournment last week, because I do not think he was listening to my speech. There are 40-odd items of business on the books, including pension plans, and the Conservatives could not think of anything to do. They called for an adjournment and then had to eat their own words. They swallowed themselves whole, and the Member is obviously totally inside out today because of that swallowing experience.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I do not think he was in the House to hear my speech. Had he been, he would have heard my reference to the words of the Minister of Finance who said: "We reward success". This happens to be one of the Crown corporations which has shown that it can be profitable and can show the private sector how to do a few things.

My Party and the Liberal Party in Quebec are not so tied to the notion of privatization that it would sell a company which is making a profit and has the Canadian Government as its largest purchaser. The Quebec Government has said that it will move toward privatization in certain areas where it can divest itself of a boondoggle. However, Canadian Arsenals was clearly not a boondoggle. If the Member has any information to show otherwise, would he please table it in the House? We have been begging the Minister of Supply and Services to put the Arthur Andersen report on the table. He will not do that because it is a money-making operation and he is ashamed of the fact that he is selling it for a song. The biggest loser in this operation will again be the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Government of Ontario provided the legislature will all the information pertaining to the sale of its Crown corporation. I guess the answer to the question of my colleague from Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was that it is all right for the provincial Liberals in Ontario to sell Crown corporations, but it is not all right for the federal Conservatives to do the same.

I rose because I have a concern about the Hon. Member's speech. I have concerns about many of her speeches. She indicated that Canadian Arsenals was the sole source of supply for the Government of Canada. She mentioned that we have sold off the Canadian Government's only access to ammunition. I know the Hon. Member is very concerned about statistics and always attempts to be correct. I know she would not want to mislead the House purposely. However, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, and if she is not I will inform her, that there are many ammunition suppliers in Canada. The Government of Canada does not rely solely on Canadian Arsenals Limited for ammunition. The difference between CAL and the other suppliers of ammunition in Canada is that the others are privately owned.

The Member expressed concern that we should sell our "sole supply" of ammunition. It is a major supplier of ammunition, but not the sole supplier. The Government of Canada probably buys more paper clips than any other organization in Canada. Perhaps the Member feels, therefore, that we should publicize the paper clip manufacturing industry in Canada. As long as a Crown corporation carries out valid public policy mandates it will maintain its status as a Crown corporation. When it is no longer a valid public policy vehicle, we feel it should be returned to the private sector. It is not an issue of whether it is making a profit.

The concern with regard to de Havilland was that we were selling it to non-Canadians. The Opposition said that they would approve the sale if it was to a Canadian company. In this case we are selling to a Canadian company and the argument is that the corporation was making a profit. Maybe the Opposition should get its act together.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary had the time to read organs like The Financial Post. If he did, ,he might realize that the statement he made in the House is misleading. The fact is that Montreal-based IVI Inc. provides the forces with small calibre ammunition, up to 30 milimeters, and CAL makes the heavier stuff, up to 155 milimeters. Between them, CAL and IVI account for almost all of Canada's domestic ammunition and both are now owned by SNC. The fact that there is no competition between the two firms is no accident. IVI was a part of Canadian Arsenals until the mid-60s when it was sold by the Government as part of a strategy to privatize as much of CAL's assets as possible. These two companies account for almost the total expenditure by the Government of Canada for munitions and, as a result of this particular venture, they are both owned by SNC.

I am sorry that the Parliamentary Secretary has not better researched who is in in fact behind the companies which are selling munitions to the Government. I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that Arthur Andersen's report may have made this quite clear. If the Parliamentary Secretary were really interested in learning why we are selling this company he should table the Arthur Andersen report. He says that profit is not an issue. The Government will sell corporations left, right, and centre regardless of profitability. If a munitions industry has no reason for remaining a Crown corporation, obviously there is no Crown corporation which has a reason for being attached to the Government. I expect that the philosophy of the Hon. member means that every single Crown corporation will be sold, regardless of whether it is making money for the taxpayers. I think that is a sad statement of the Conservative credo of privatization.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak at some length about this particular Bill and express my regret that the Government has not learned from the sale of de Havilland with regard to its handling of the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

During December and January members of my Party were lobbied on a number of occasions by representatives of SNC, a reputable and very successful Montreal-based engineering company which is now moving into the area of manufacturing. They were frustrated that the sale had taken seven or eight months and asked if we would be prepared to expedite the passage of this through the House of Commons. If the Government was desirous of co-operating with the purchaser of Canadian Arsenals, it certainly did not show it in this House.

The Bill was brought before the House for debate on February 25, only one week ago. While the Government had time at its disposal it could have acted to resolve some very serious questions which were raised by representatives of the workers involved, which we had raised, and which I believe SNC was aware of as well. Rather than doing that, the Government has left those problems in limbo and they are now being debated here in the House of Commons, three months after the deal was originally proposed.

At the time the sale of CAL was announced we, quite naturally, began by focusing on the de Havilland sale. One of the reasons was that we knew that under the terms of the Financial Administration Act this sale would come before Parliament for approval and we would be guaranteed the opportunity to debate it. Members will recall the difficulties we had in getting the Government to agree to release information and allow a parliamentary committee to study the sale of de Havilland. Initially, the Government wanted the sale to proceed without any parliamentary scrutiny at all. I am afraid that we are facing a similar situation with respect to the sale of Canadian Arsenals. We do not have the information we need right now.

Efforts by the union and Opposition Parties to get the valuation in the Arthur Andersen report on Canadian Arsenals, and to get actuarial material which may have been prepared with respect to the pension plan and how the workers at Canadian Arsenals will be affected, have run into a stone wall. I appeal to the Parliamentary Secretary to talk to his young, attractive Minister, this newcomer into the Conservative Cabinet, who came in with a fresh broom to sweep out some of the problems which have occurred in the Government's first year in power. I ask him to appeal to his Minister to do things differently than the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Government did with respect to the sale of de Havilland.

When the Vice-President for Corporate Planning of SNC, Madame Célene Hervieux-Payette, a person who is well-known to a number of Members of this House, came here to press for early action she was simply doing her job. When I spoke with her I urged in the strongest possible way that SNC sit down and talk to the workers representatives in order to resolve their very legitimate questions about what was going to happen to them as a consequence of this sale. I have to record with regret that that was not done. There were one or two get-acquainted meetings with the president of the local, but nothing more serious than that. A meeting is being held this Friday, but only because of the request from the union. It was not initiated by SNC.

With respect to Teleglobe Canada, whose privatization has not yet been proceeded with, it is just this week that the union learned that actuarial assessments concerning the pension plan and the impact on the workers of privatization have been prepared. The union understands that a similar report was prepared by Sobeco with respect to Canadian Arsenals Limited. When they met on January 2 with the assistant secretary of the Treasury Board, Mr. Jean-Pierre Kingsley, specifically to talk about the implications for workers' pensions, no reference was made to the fact that study had either been commissioned or received. That was not fair and above-board dealing with the representatives of the 800 workers involved. That information should have been provided at that time. The Government should be straightforward now in making copies of that report available to the union.

There are a number of questions which have to be answered. The Minister stated on February 24 at page 10865 of Hansard:

> Arrangements have been made with the present employees . . . for the portability and transfer of their pension plans. There will be no prejudice resulting to the employees in this regard.

While I welcome an assurance like that given in the House of Commons, it has not been matched with concrete action. I am afraid the Minister must be misinformed, because no such arrangements have been made. Up until now the employees have not seen what is in the agreement for sale between the Government of Canada and SNC. When they met on January 2 with Mr. Kingsley he outlined a number of options concerning the determination of the Government of Canada pension plan which has covered the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited. They could cash in their plan. They could make an arrangement to transfer their rights. Or, they could take their benefits and cash them in if they were over 55, take a pension and then, if they wished, continue to work with SNC. However, that did not respond to such questions as what happens to workers approaching 55 who have a substantial number of years of service and who intended or expected to have the option of retiring at 55. Will that right continue or will it not? The union has not had an answer to that or the question of whether the indexing of their pensions, to which they have been paying in many cases of up to 15 years, will be delivered, or whether they will lose that right under the successor plan. I am told that the Treasury Board representative told the union that the pension plan they would receive is being adjusted to the industry norm. That would indicate no indexing and there may well not be early retirement at 55. The workers who already have 30 or 40 years of service will be expected to continue to work until 60 or 65, or lose entirely, or suffer a very substantial reduction in their benefits.

On January 2 the Treasury Board was asked for information about the SNC pension plan. One would have thought that could have been provided within a couple of days or perhaps a week. However, as of today, March 10, that information has yet to be provided to the union. That is far from fair and above-board dealing, and certainly far from the arrangements which the Minister indicated had been made. We need those details. When we come to committee stage I suggest the Government get about its business and make sure that information is provided so that the workers do not find they have bought a pig in a poke because of mishandling of this sale by the Government of Canada!

Concerning job security, there was no indication at the time the sale was announced that jobs were on the line. However, we had the first indication of that in the Minister's speech. He said:

> The undertaking and indication of the company is that it will continue to employ the great majority if not all of the employees.

If I was a worker at Canadian Arsenals I would be damned scared about that because I do not know what it means. Does it mean that management employees are going to be made redundant because their jobs will be taken by people from IVI, the other subsidiary of SNC? Does that mean production line workers are going to be laid off despite the anticipated doubling of the output of this company over the next five years? That kind of slipshod statement should not be permitted. It should have been sorted out.

This Bill goes to such pains to ensure that the Government has control over any subsequent sale of CAL to another owner. It contains safeguards in order to retain 75 per cent Canadian ownership of this company. Given that, the Bill could also have ensured that there would be job security for the workers affected; if not forever, then at least for four or five years. It would be expected as well that SNC would manage the company in order to maintain the jobs of the affected workers. However, this was not done.

SNC is said to have guaranteed it will honour the existing contract. The union has not seen exactly what that clause is and whether it is a bankable kind of contract. Can they go to court if SNC chooses to back away? Is there some means by which the Government will monitor the agreement to make sure that clause is respected?

There is a difficult problem here because these workers are passing from the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code to the Quebec Labour Code. There are no successor rights when you transfer a contract from federal to provincial legislation. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary and his Minister either knew or were informed of that by the strategic planning people who handled the sale. Under those circumstances information should have been given to this House that the Government sat down with officials of the Quebec Minister of Labour in order to ensure a workable and effective means of ensuring that successor rights are handed on. If it cannot be done by way of a co-operative agreement, then the necessary legislation should be brought forward at both levels of Government. However, that has not been done.

The privatization policy of the Government as enunciated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the November, 1984 economic statement was that the Government will be sensitive to the concerns of management and employees of corporations which may be considered candidates for sale; while recognizing that negotiations must be conducted confidentially, every effort will be made to keep these groups informed of significant developments and ensure that their legitimate interests are not jeopardized. Up until now that has not been done with respect to the workers of Canadian arsenals. They have been treated like mushrooms; kept in the dark and fed a diet of horse manure. That is not good enough.

If you have a policy, even if it is inadequate, you should stick to it. However, we found in the case of de Havilland that the workers were the last people to be told what was happening concerning privatization. That appears to be happening again in this case. I suggest that is the policy the Government is now following consistently. It does not give a damn about the interests of the workers involved. When workers have worked faithfully for the Government of Canada for 10, 20 or 30 years, they deserve to be treated in a better way than the Government is doing in this case.

That brings me to the final point, which, is where the devil is this whole privatization thing taking us? In the one case the Government sold off de Havilland because it said it was losing money. Now it is selling off Canadian Arsenals because it says it is making money. We have seen the financial record over the course of the last few years for Canadian Arsenals. As parliamentarians we deserve to know whether this has been achieved because of damn good management on behalf of the people, the public service managers running Canadian Arsenals. Have they cut their costs and therefore increased their profit, or have then perhaps simply gotten a better price from the Government of Canada? We should know why it is that the Government is now spending three times as much for ammunition as it was spending through Canadian Arsenals in 1980. Is this a matter of policy? Are they deliberately firing ammunition out into the ocean in order to use up the guns and ammunition to increase the profitability of this company in order to make it a candidate for privatization? Who knows?

I was given to understand that as far as the Navy was concerned, they can no longer get their ships out to sea. How they are using any more ammunition is certainly beyond me.

If an acquisition is taking place in the private sector good management says that, in addition to talking to senior management to let them know what your plans are, you also try to bring the workforce into your confidence. You try to give them as much information as possible to quiet their fears about the acquisition. You try to ensure, and demonstrate to them, that means have been worked out in order to protect job security. Unless it is your intention to try and ditch the union, you try to co-operate with the union in order to ensure that its interests and the interests of its members are going to be protected. If that is good practice in the private sector it is equally good practice when privatization is taking place.

As the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows, we in this Party have grave questions about this whole process of privatization. We think that what is at work is an ideological commitment which says that the public sector is bad and the private sector is good. When you have a public sector which delivers medicare, old age pensions, hospital insurance, Air Canada, and one of the most efficient and successful railways in the world going from coast to coast in Canadian National; when we have all of those things in the public sector I, for one, cannot believe that the public sector is uniformly bad as the Government seems to feel and the private sector is unformly good.

When we have a private sector that poisons the waters up in Grassy Narrows and White Dog Reserve in northwestern Ontario; a private sector which sends chemical blobs into the St. Clair River; a private sector which has permanently contaminated the chemical dumps in the region of Niagara Falls with dioxin; a private sector which continues to support dictatorships in Chile and places like that I, for one, cannot believe that the private sector is uniformly good.

I want to suggest that the Government get away from this black and white ideology in which it suggests that everything that the private sector does is to be praised and everything that the public sector does is to be denigrated.

I want to suggest in terms of any policy about privatization that we should look at each case on its merit. If Canadian Arsenals was going to double its sales in the next five years, if it had shown the competence to increase its sales by three times in the last few years, to begin to enter into legitimate export markets, and that kind of thing, then I want to suggest that maybe it is worthwhile keeping it in the public sector for a few more years.

Canadian Arsenals was not a company which was short in terms of finance. I am just looking at the figures here. It had $52 million in equity and only $16 million in long-term loans and lease obligations. The company had ample room, if the Government did not want to provide it with long-term capital financing, to borrow in the private market.

I want to suggest that if Canadian Arsenals was held back in public ownership from doing the job in terms of expansion or finding new markets in the United States or another NATO country, the reason was because it was deliberately held back by this new Government, and not that of any failure as far as the management of that particular company is concerned.

I suggest we should let public enterprise do the job, grow and flourish, in addition to allowing private enterprise to continue to operate in this particular field. You do not hold back public enterprise, tie both arms behind its back and then turn around and say. See, we told you that private enterprise can do the job and can grow and expand and public enterprise cannot do the job. That is a phoney comparison the Government is making in this particular case.

[Translation]

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that when the co-operation of the New Democratic Party was sought in connection with the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited, I suggested to SNC in Montreal that the matter be discussed with the union and the necessary arrangements made, so that employees would have the assurance their interests would be protected. We have now had three months to make these necessary arrangements, and nothing has been done, either by the company or by the Government.

Despite the Government's policy on privatization, a policy that was announced by the Minister of Finance in November 1984, and which says that the Government will make every effort to ensure that the groups involved, that is, employee and management of companies that are to be privatized, are informed of all developments and are given the assurance that legitimate interests will not be threatened.

Despite this statement of the Government's policy on privatization, employee interests have not been protected. They did not receive the requisite information ensuring that their interests would be protected.

Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances, the Members of our party cannot support this Bill to privatize Canadian Arsenals Limited. In committee, we intend to ask for disclosure of all necessary information, and this includes publishing the evaluation study by Arthur Andersen, and the study by Surbeco, a study of the employee pension system, and also that the necessary discussions take place before, not after the matter has been dealt with in Parliament.

I believe the Government failed to learn its lesson when it privatized de Havilland. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, instead of acting as though this was just Conrad Black selling off one of his companies—

[English]

Instead of acting as though this was just Conrad Black selling off one of his holdings, it seems to me that the Government of Canada should be handling privatization in a different way. We are not talking about Canada incorporating a vast private sector concern which is free to wheel and deal. We are talking about the Government of Canada which, while it has legislative and political authority to privatize if that is the policy of the Government of the day, has certain obligations to deal in a way which should be a model to the private sector, and which should be assigned to the people of Canada. When it comes to protecting our interests as shareholders, and when it comes to protecting the interests of workers who worked faithfully and devotedly for a Crown corporation for many years the Government of Canada, whatever its ideological stripe, should deal fairly, and be seen to be dealing fairly with those interests, rather than simply going hell-bent, helter-skelter to privatization, and damn the consequences for we as sharesholders, and damn the consequences of our employees.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) inform the House which Crown corporations will be earmarked for privatization under a New Democratic Party government?

And at the same time, can he—

[English]

Can he tell us the names of the industries already in the private sector which his Party is committed to nationalize, if the day ever arrives, which I sincerely hope it does not, that his Government were to be elected?

Mr. Cassidy: I want to tell the Hon. Member that I was in Edmonton just last week and had an extremely positive reception. It seems to me that things are opening up for the New Democratic Party, not just in the Province of Quebec, not just in the Atlantic Provinces, but even in the Province of Alberta. In fact the Province of Alberta was one of the founding building blocks of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation in 1932 when, in fact, we founded our Party in the Province of Alberta. We are going to return to those roots. I remind my hon. friend that in the latest opinion polls the New Democratic Party was up at 28 per cent, and that is the highest we have ever been in our history. We are only 8 per cent below the Progessive Conservative Government, despite the disparity in seats between his Party and our Party. That suggests to me that when we talk about going slow on privatization, when we talk about the fact that the Government of Canada still has a role in economic development, a lot of Canadians respond to that and say that we are talking a lot more sense than people on the Government side.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if it is Tory policy to privatize Crown corporations that lose money as well as those which make money, what would the Tory policy be with respect to Petro-Canada? Why would they not use Petro-Canada to lower gas prices as they could, instead of dreaming about privatizing it? Will my colleague indicate which policy makes more sense to Canadians, the Tory policy to sell off every Crown corporation and productive industry that is owned by the public, or is there a more reasonable approach to Crown corporations?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, when I was growing up milk was still being delivered by a horse drawn wagon. The horses that pulled the milk wagons up and down my street in Toronto wore large blinkers so they could not look to one side or the other. That very accurately describes how the Conservatives try to run a public sector corporation in a creative fashion. They are blinkered and cannot see that Petro-Canada is now so large that it could bring gasoline prices down by 5 cents or 10 cents a litre. Instead, they say that even though it is in the public sector it has to operate like Texaco, Shell or Esso.

The Conservatives do not understand that there is a creative role in the private market for public sector corporations. I am sorry about that. They just do not learn.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased that the New Democratic Party is high in the polls. Perhaps they will find that the higher one is, the farther one falls.

Will the Hon. Member tell us why his Party is filibustering this Bill rather than bringing the matter to committee where his questions could be answered as he examines officials who have made the transaction.? He could examine the deal to determine whether it is good or bad. He could properly make comment there instead of holding up the House and this necessary legislation. Why not let it go to committee so that their questions can be answered, rather than talking about it here? It is Government policy to sell the corporation. The details of the sale could perhaps be changed if it went to committee. I suggest that the intelligent step for his Party to take is to allow the Bill to pass.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, let me remind my hon. friend that this sale was announced on December 2 and the House sat until December 20. We resumed on January 13 and have been sitting since then. Yet this Bill, which the Hon. Member says is so vital and important, was not brought up for debate in the House of Commons until February 25. It is impossible for the New Democratic Party to filibuster a Bill that is not before the House for debate. Members of my Party did not comment in the House about this Bill for two and a half months. We had no opportunity to do so because the Bill was not before us for debate.

If my hon. friend is taking part in the legislative committee dealing with this Bill, will he assure us that we will not be subjected to the kind of deadlines that closed off discussion on the Bill dealing with de Havilland? If he could give us that assurance I am sure it would enable us to expedite the determination of this Bill.

Discussion on this Bill has consisted of a morning, an afternoon and a morning of debate. I suggest that does not amount to a filibuster when we are discussing a $90 million Bill. Furthermore, let me state for the record that I believe I am the fourth member of my Party to speak on this Bill, and I suggest that is far from a filibuster.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding from the debate that Canadian Arsenals Limited sells its products to the Canadian Armed Forces and its NATO allies. I also understand from answers by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that some of the products of Canadian Arsenals Limited have found their way to Chile, that escutcheon in South America. It has been able to purchase some of the products of Canadian Arsenals even though that company is owned by the Canadian Government. Some of its products have found their way into Chile, that bastion of democracy and great friend of the United States who may have to rescue another dictator.

If Canadian Arsenals Limited is turned into a monopoly in the private sector, is there not a great danger of our becoming one of the purveyors of destruction in the world by selling arms to places like Chile, as a result of the desire to multiply profits rapidly through the sale of very dangerous munitions?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, there should be enforceable terms in the agreement of purchase and sale to ensure that Canadian Arsenals Limited does not sell to any of the developing countries of the world where these brutal and vicious wars are taking place, with tinpot dictators being supported by the United States and their henchmen in these affairs which, I am afraid, is the Canadian Government in many cases. Furthermore, Canada should take the lead and make it a general policy that we will not sell defence equipment to countries like Chile and other repressive regimes like South Korea and South Africa, but will use our moral influence throughout the world to make sure that all arms manufacturing countries support our view and will not encourage and support those acts of repression by dictatorial Governments. That is the type of lead Canada should be taking in the world.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited. This Bill to dispose of the Crown corporation is required as a result of the Crown corporations Bill which was passed in the last Parliament. According to that legislation, Crown corporations that were established by an Act of Parliament must be formally wound up by an Act of Parliament. Furthermore, that legislation requires the provision of a five-year corporate plan.

As we consider the annual report of this Crown corporation and its five-year corporate plan, it is very interesting to see that this is a Crown corporation that is making a lot of money and has good prospects for success and profits in the future. Therefore, it brings into question the Government's policy on privatization of Crown corporations.

The Government's policy seems to be to dispose of all Crown corporations. However, let us consider Petro-Canada. When the Government was in opposition it forcefully opposed the formation of Petro-Canada in every way. The Conservatives opposed the legislation forming Petro-Canada and they opposed the take over of Petrofina and BP. However, last fall Petro-Canada provided an additional contingent liability to the federal Government of almost $1 billion when it took over some 1,800 gas stations in Ontario and western Canada. Many people, especially Tories, were very upset about that. Certainly, I believe Hon. Members from Calgary and Alberta could not understand what the Government was doing with regard to its privatization policy when a Crown corporation like Petro-Can expands its operations by over $1 billion.

Our caucus can only ask the question: What is the Government's policy? Is it to sell companies which are making a profit and to keep the companies which are losing money? Many Canadians, especially those of Conservative persuasion, wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last fall and asked why the Government was expanding Petro-Canada by 1,800 gasoline stations across Ontario and western Canada, adding an additional liability of $1 billion. The Prime Minister's response was that Petro-Can operates pretty much in the private sector and the Government does not really have any say over its corporate policy. It is very interesting to contrast the policy of the Government in relation to Petro-Canada and its policy with regard to selling off Crown corporations. The policy seems to be to sell off Crown corporations willy-nilly, but in some cases, as in the case of Petro-Can, to expand them. If so, the logical question is, therefore, are only the companies which are making money going to be sold? That seems to be the case with the SNC purchase of Canadian Arsenals.

Canadian Arsenals has been in business as a Crown corporation since 1945. It has two plants, one in Montreal and one in Quebec City. It employs some 800 people. Its sales have doubled in the last five years to some $200 million a year. It looks like a very profitable company. It has sales orders for some $200 million over the next year or so. Yet, there are other Crown corporations such as Eldorado Nuclear, which are losing money at the present time, and in the case of Eldorado Nuclear this is partly due to Government policy of not further upgrading the uranium industry in this country. What are the prospects of selling those kinds of companies? It does not seem very good at all.

What really concerns our caucus with the sale of Canadian Arsenals for some $92 million is that we would like to be able to assess whether or not that is a reasonable price. The Government has that information. The Prime Minister made an outstanding speech in 1983 and 1984 when he was the Leader of the Opposition. He spoke about freedom of information and how the Government was going to be open with Parliament and with the Canadian people. Yet, in the case of this major disposal of a Canadian Crown corporation, it is secretively hiding the information on which this House can make a decision. Our Party would like to see the report of the Arthur Andersen Company, a reputable company, which has estimated the value of the company at some $80 million to $98 million, a range of $18 million, to see whether the price of $92 million is reasonable. For the life of me, I cannot understand why the Government would not be prepared to give this report to the House of Commons, and to the Canadian people, at this time. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) offered to show the report to a Member of our caucus in the privacy of his office but is not willing to make the report open and freely available to the House itself. I believe the report should be made available to the House before we pass second reading of this Bill because it is fundamental to the value of the company and to what the opportunities are for the Canadian people. We want to know whether an adequate price is being offered for this company.

The next point I would like to make is that it seems to me that in selling a Crown corporation of this nature we should look at the profit potential for the years ahead. The profits of Canadian Arsenals in 1980-81 were some $3 million. In 1984-85, the profits were $11.3 million. In 1983-84 the profits were $8.5 million. In 1982-83, the profits were $6.9 million. And in 1981-82 the profits were $5.3 million. So the equity of the company has risen dramatically. The assets have risen from $42 million in 1980-81 and $126 million in 1984-85. That kind of profit picture and increase in assets should only make us more cautious about receiving a better price for this company.

Those are some of the questions we would like to see answered. I think there is also great concern about the way in which the Department of Supply and Services has handled the bidding process. Apparently it was done by word of mouth. There was no proper tendering procedure with respect to calling for bids across the country. Half way through the process of getting the bids, which was done in a very amateurish way, the company indicated that the sole criterion for selling the company would be the price paid. Surely, there are other considerations which we should take into account; whether the employees are going to be treated fairly with respect to pension rights and so on, whether the company is going to expand, and whether it is going to maintain its Canadian ownership. There are a lot of other things besides just the price which need to be considered.

The Public Service Alliance has certainly expressed its concern with the sale of this Crown corporation. The Department of Supply and Services has never consulted the Public Service Alliance as to what arrangements would prevail with regard to the 800 employees. Surely, that is an important matter. We require minimum consideration for private corporations. Surely, consultation with the union would have been appropriate. I do not think that would have been an insurmountable problem. At any rate it would have been an important courtesy to extend.

The whole rationale behind the Government selling Crown corporations should have been brought into play in the sale of this company. There are a number of points which need to be considered with respect to it.

The Government seems to be moving in a disjointed fashion, as I indicated before, with respect to the sale of all Crown corporations. For example, we have heard that the Government is moving privately and quietly to sell off a small Crown corporation in Montreal. I refer to a small fumigation company. This company has amazing importance in regard to the export and import of Canadian wood and food products. Yet when one makes inquiries with respect to this company one can see nothing but mist and fog clouding the position of the Government. I am sure sometime later this year we will hear that the Government has decided to sell off this corporation in Montreal without the calling of tenders. We will learn that it has worked out a private deal with some purchaser without any public announcement being made. This will cause us to end up with a very unsatisfactory arrangement regarding the certificates required for the import and export of food and wood commodities, amounting to some $50 million to $100 million a year. We will learn that the company has been sold for a bargain-basement sale price as well.

The price of $92 million for Canadian Arsenals Limited may well be a fair price. According to the information given by the Minister of Supply and Services the price is within the range set out in the Arthur Andersen report. However, we have not seen the report. If we were to see the report then perhaps we would not be questioning the price. I cannot see why the Government is not prepared to make the report available to Members of the House at second reading stage. It is at this stage that we enter into the whole question of government policy.

With respect to the de Havilland sale, we saw the Government sell off an $800 million corporation for just $95 million. That is essentially the price of one 747 jet airliner rolling off the production line of the Boeing Corporation in Seattle, Washington. It seems to be an incredible bargain. Yet the profit potential is tremendous, especially when one considers the sales force of the Boeing Corporation around the world.

It seems that all Crown corporations which have any potential for making a great deal of profit are being sold off atbargain-basement prices. It would seen to me that if we must sell Crown corporations we should try to make some real profit on the sales. Obviously, those Crown corporations which are not making a profit will have to be knocked down in price. We see companies, such as Canadian Arsenals which is making a real profit, being sold off at modest prices, or perhaps even bargain-basement prices. However, we do not really know because we have not had access to the Anderson report. Certainly with respect to the sale of de Havilland to Boeing, and now with respect to Canadian Arsenals Limited and other comparable Crown corporations with good potential for profitability, we see them being sold off at bargain-basement prices.

As the debate continues on this issue I hope the Government will make the report available to us. It is essential for us to have the report in order to see just how much the Government expects to make. We should see whether or not this is an adequate price. The report should be made available to us.

In the letter from the Minister of Supply and Services to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) the Minister gives some information about the Anderson report. The Minister also indicates in his letter that he is willing to show the Hon. Member the report privately, but is not willing to make it available to all Members of the House. I wonder why such a decision would be taken by the Minister. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Bradley) can clarify why the Minister is willing to make the report available to some Hon. Members on a private basis but not to all Hon. Members for consideration at second reading.

The information which is available seems to indicate that this corporation with 800 employees, which has a guaranteed market in that some 90 per cent of its products are sold to the Department of National Defence, and which has a back-log of $200 million in orders, and whose sales are projected to double in the next five years, is being sold off at a bargain-basement price. If that is not true, then the report should be made available to Members of the House before we refer this matter to the committee.

FISHERIES

SITUATION OF ATLANTIC INSHORE FISHERMEN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Government to reverse its horrific slide in assistance to inshore fishermen. These people are the object of terrible discrimination at the hands of the Progressive Conservative Government.

While the corporate sector gets its fiscal kickbacks, assistance to inshore fishermen is savagely cut. Money allocated to dredging and other improvements for small craft harbours has been virtually eliminated. It had gone from $140 million in 1983-84 to $13.2 million for this fiscal year. This is a cut of 94.5 per cent to the inshore fishermen.

Why is the Government doing this to the fishermen in Atlantic Canada, in places like Gabarus, L'Ardoise, South Bar, Port Morien, Glace Bay, Main-A-Dieu, Little Lorraine, and thousands of other small communities throughout the country? This cut, on top of the cancellation of the vessel replacement program, can only lead to one conclusion: The Department's and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans' (Mr. Siddon) policy for the inshore fishery is to make the inshore fisherman an extinct species.

INDUSTRY

SAINT RAYMOND PULP AND PAPER PLANT AT DESBIENS, QUE.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the situation in the village of Desbiens near Chicoutimi where the St. Raymond pulp and paper mill has been closed for four years.

Eighteen of the 125 workers laid off as a result of the shutdown are now occupying the mill to draw the attention of the Governments of Quebec and Canada to the situation at the mill and particularly to the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the election campaign.

The Prime Minister, then Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, promised financial assistance to re-open the St. Raymond pulp and paper mill, if he and his Party would form the Government. Mr. Speaker, almost 20 months have passed since that promise was made, but the Government has not done anything yet. Promises were made, but no action—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The 60 seconds have expired.

SPORTS

ALBERTA RINK WINS MEN'S CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I realize that congratulatory messages are not permitted under the rules of the House. I would like, however, to draw to the attention of my colleagues and of all Canadians the fact that yesterday the Province of Alberta won the Brier, emblematic of men's curling supremacy in Canada. I would also like to stress that I am a native of Ontario. That is the province that came "oh so close" to winning the Brier. It did not, however, because Alberta was best.

Alberta had the best rink. I feel, therefore, that it is extremely important to announce that all Canadians are proud of Alberta and the Ed Lukowich rink, and all Canadians are looking forward to being so ably represented in the upcoming world championships to be held, by the way, Mr. Speaker, in Toronto.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

ANNUAL HARRY JEROME AWARDS FOR EXCELLENCE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday night in Toronto, Members from all sides of the House, including four Progressive Conservative Members, attended the extremely successful annual Harry Jerome Awards dinner sponsored by the Black Business and Professional Association.

Established to honour the memory of one of Canada's world-class athletes, to pay tribute to black Canadian achievers, and to inspire young black Canadians and all Canadians to strive for excellence, the awards this year went to Bridgette Arrindell and David Lowe for academics, Lorelei Eccleston for arts, and Darren Lowe, Kyle McDuffie, and Donna Smellie for athletics, as well as to role models Carrie Best, an 83-year-old human rights activist from new Glasgow, Nova Scotia, and Alton Parker from Windsor, Ontario, the first black detective in Canada.

The accomplishments of these black achievers are in keeping with the determination of the Government to ensure that blacks and all minorities can participate fully—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

REJECTION OF YUKON INDIAN DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION APPLICATION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, early last week I questioned the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) on the health of the Native Economic Development Program and the fate of the application of the Yukon Indian Development Corporation. On Friday the Minister rejected the Yukon proposal. It was a good proposal, one which had been highly recommended. The Minister did not reject it for lack of money, because we know he withheld $90 million for the program this fiscal year.

Was it rejected because the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) did not want it approved? Who is responsible for the Native Economic Development Program?

The Yukon Indian Development Corporation has been treated unfairly. Stalling, foot dragging, and then rejecting good proposals are sure ways to kill a much needed program, one designed to help native people move from dependency to self-sufficiency.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF DETROIT INCINERATOR—NEED FOR POLLUTION CONTROLS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, a new incinerator of huge capacity and lacking adequate pollution controls is to be built in Detroit. It will spew particulates, dioxins, acids and other contaminants on the citizens of that city in quantities which will significantly increase the incidence of cancer, and it will do so with the blessing of the Governor of the State of Michigan.

This would be a matter of lesser interest were it not that Windsor, which, for the information of the Government, is located just south of Detroit, will also suffer the health hazard that rains upon its neighbour. This must not be tolerated. The Government must provide its support to Ontario in fostering the resolve of the U.S. authorities to impose stringent pollution controls of this facility to protect their citizens as well as to live up to their responsibilities to those of Canada.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to report on the efforts made by our Government with respect to measures announced in the last Budget to increase our support for small businesses. Small- and medium-sized businesses are still one of the major sources of new jobs, and that is why we must support their creativity, their sense of initiative and leadership. Budget measures such as the repeal, as of January 1987, of the special 12.5 per cent tax on dividends paid by small businesses, the higher limit on loans to small businesses, from $1.5 to $2.5 billion, and the broadening of existing tax regulations under which business investment losses are deductible constitute the positive response to the message given to us by Canadians in September 1984, namely to create jobs and strengthen the economy. Our performance speaks for itself: 580,000 new jobs, the unemployment rate has dropped below 10 per cent, and 81 per cent of the new jobs are on a permanent basis.

That, Mr. Speaker, spells performance.

THE COMMONWEALTH

CELEBRATION OF COMMONWEALTH DAY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, today we are celebrating Commonwealth Day in Canada and throughout the Commonwealth, for the tenth consecutive year. Twenty-six countries are represented here in Ottawa by their High Commissioners.

The Commonwealth is a unique association, embracing 49 countries of varying races, religions, and cultures, representing 25 per cent of the world's population. The members share a common working language, the heritage of common law and parliamentary traditions.

The Commonwealth has provided leadership in many ways, such as international leadership in the movement against the apartheid in South Africa. It is also playing a major role in maintaining North-South dialogue, and in focusing world attention on the economic and debt problems of the world's poorest nations.

We must also applaud the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association for emphasizing the need to integrate women as full partners in the world-wide economic development process.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR GASOLINE PRICE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the price of fuel in western Canada is too high. I call upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) to investigate this immediately. The rapid decline in the price of crude oil has not been passed on to the consumers—only two cents per litre to date. We in Saskatchewan do not have a provincial sales tax. We have the lowest refining charge in Canada, yet fuel prices to farmers have increased in 1986.

Recently the Government of Saskatchewan introduced a royalty rebate of 4.6 cents per litre effective January 1, 1986. Nevertheless, major oil companies, including Petro-Canada and the local co-operatives, recently raised their prices by five cents per litre. I, as well as thousands of consumers in Saskatchewan, do not believe this was just a coincidence. The provincial rebate program was for primary producers, not the oil companies.

FISHERIES

GRANTING OF CRAB FISHING LICENCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, crab fishermen in Atlantic Canada will be setting their first traps of the season next month, but they are still in the dark about this year's management plan. There is still no decision about the number of permanent licences to be granted this year. Fishermen are waiting to hear how many designated crab zones there will be, but they have heard nothing from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon).

● (1410)

The Minister's silence on this matter is inconveniencing the fishermen. Fishermen in Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Nova Scotia are now in the process of preparing their boats and gear for the coming season. They need to know who will be fishing where, and they need that information now. The Minister must decide immediately. Crab fishermen in Atlantic Canada are waiting for an answer.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, more and more Canadians are becoming very disappointed with the Government which sits across the way. For example, Brian Gilbert from Calgary said of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney): "I wouldn't vote for him again, not him personally". An anonymous Conservative MP was quoted the other day as saying: "We're in trouble with the public because of him. Many see him as too easy, too glib, too stagey". Mr. McRae from Etobicoke was reported in a newspaper recently as saying: "Then the horror stories started; the tuna business, the family patronage, the indexation for senior citizens, the bank bail-outs. When is smiling Brian going to show some leadership?"

Finally, a backbencher from Montreal said recently: "Last election workers here voted for change, but they never got it. If they don't get it soon, this Government will go the way of the last one." As you can see, Mr. Speaker, more and more Canadians, including Conservative Members of Parliament, are very, very disappointed with the performance of their Government.

FOOD AND DRUGS

DEMAND THAT FAST-FOOD CHAINS LIST FOOD INGREDIENTS

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I bring to your attention the millions of Canadians who suffer from allergies to food and additives. Allergic reactions include rashes, headaches, severe illness, and, in some cases, death.

This surely demonstrates the need for listing ingredients of foods produced by fast-food establishments. Manufacturers of prepackaged foods are required by law to list ingredients, and the Consumers Association of Canada and the Allergy Information Centre have appealed to fast-food restaurants to provide this information. Most companies provide it upon request to the head offices, but others refuse. They cite a lack of public interest and the need for confidentiality.

How can the possibility of anaphylactic shock and death within 30 minutes be ignored? The fast-food chains must be willing to see the importance of this matter, as almost two million Canadian citizens suffer in some way from the effects of allergies.

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS CREATED IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the February Budget continues to assist small business in the assault on unemployment, a thrust which began with the economic statement of November, 1984. At that time the Opposition said we gave Canadians tax increases and cut-backs which would destroy hundreds of thousands of jobs.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that since November, 1984, some 90,000 jobs have been created in the Prairie Provinces alone through a stronger private sector. Unemployment on the Prairies varies from 8 per cent in Saskatchewan to 8.5 per cent in Alberta.

On a national basis over 580,000 new jobs have been created, and the national employment rate is under 10 per cent for the first time in years.

Now the Opposition seek to claim credit for all of this as somehow being due to their old bankrupt policies. What hypocrisy! And yet what else can they do in the face of this PC record of solid achievement, a record unmatched in Canadian history?

YOUTH

REDUCTION IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, young people in Canada welcome the positive policies the Government has introduced over the past 18 months. Young Canadians welcome the fact that youth unemployment has fallen 2 percentage points since 1984, and that 50,000 more young people are working today because of the sound economic strategy the Government has followed. Young Canadians also welcome the fact that the Government is reducing the burden of debt that they will be forced to bear as they grow older.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, young Canadians welcome the practical job training programs, such as Challenge '86, which the Government has developed. Challenge '86 is already proving to be a huge success in my riding of Scarborough Centre as businesses flood the employment centres with project applications. Economic growth, job creation, and social justice are what young people expect from their Government, and those are what the Government is delivering.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

YOUTH

SENATOR'S HUNGER STRIKE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I have just learned that the indifference of the Government to the plight of young Canadians has led one of Canada's most distinguished humanitarians, Senator Jacques Hébert, to undertake the extraordinary step of holding a hunger strike outside the Senate as a protest against the Government's indifference. Therefore, will the Government not recognize what its inaction is doing to a whole generation of young Canadians, and immediately institute adequate funds and programs to address in a real way the problems of young Canadians all across the country?

• (1415)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government's record in the over-all increase of jobs for young people from September, 1984, to January, 1986, is 75,000 jobs. That is a monthly increase of approximately 5,000 jobs. This is quite a contrast with the net loss of jobs which occurred in the previous four years during the Government of which the Opposition House Leader was a member.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister forgets that youth unemployment rose substantially last month and it is still too high. How can he say his Government is doing enough to deal with the problems of our youth when the Minister of State for Youth, in her infamous secret letter to a colleague, said: "There has been a significant diminution in youth-related spending, close to $100 million since the election"?

Is that not the truth? You cut spending and programs for young people. Why don't you do something about it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, Sir, it is not a new version of the truth; it is a new version of the twist. The truth is that the Liberal record from April, 1980, to September, 1984, was an over-all decrease of 285,000 jobs for young people. We turned that around to an increase of 75,000 jobs. The actual truth is that under the previous Liberal Government there was a net monthly loss of 5,200 jobs. We turned that around to 5,000 newly created jobs a month for young people.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE DISMISSED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is suggesting that it is not the truth when the Minister responsible for youth says there has been a significant diminution in youth-related spending, close to $100 million since the election. Will he then do the meaningful thing, and get rid of this Minister of State for Youth and get one who will really do the job, because she is not doing it? The Deputy Prime Minister proved that in what he said criticizing the truth of what she said in that infamous letter.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Official Opposition House Leader should know better, given his background, than to make such a charge. He obviously has not read Part III of the Estimates which indicate that, in agriculture, some $7.486 million is being spent on youth-related employment. In EIC itself he has heard the Minister say that some $700 million is going toward direct youth employment. From CIDA there is $10.5 million going to scholarships for studies and international development assistance. In DIAND there is $533,037 for scholarships. In DND there is $2.271 million for the Air Cadet League, the Army Cadet League, and the Navy Cadet League. From Health and Welfare there is $6.687 million. In Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SITUATION OF YOUTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In the realisation that the situation is critical, the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Youth, Senator Jacques Hébert, having observed the astonishing inertia of the Government, started a hunger strike today, and the Deputy Prime Minister will know that he is prepared to discuss the matter with the Government and would like to see the Government produce some new initiatives.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether his Government intends to announce any major initiatives very shortly, as the Prime Minister promised some time ago?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when the Government has announcements to make it will make them in the traditional fashion, at an appropriate time, and in an appropriate place. In the meantime I would suggest, with great respect, that the Hon. Senator could be spending that time reading Part III of the Estimates in order to acquaint himself with the millions of dollars being spent on youth.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE MAJOR INITIATIVES IMMEDIATELY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I think the cynical laughter of our friends opposite with respect to the youth situation is entirely inappropriate. I hope the Deputy Prime Minister will be able to inform the House whether the Government intends to announce very shortly, as promised by the Minister of State (Youth) and the Prime Minister himself, a number of major new iniatiatives that will benefit the youth of this country. His own Government promised to make these announcements. Is it going to do so very shortly?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): It is the same question, and the answer is the same. I should like to add that the hon. gentleman himself should spend some time reading Part III of the Estimates and inquire where $700 million is going from CEIC toward direct youth employment-related programs.

MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

RECRUITMENT OF YOUNG CONSERVATIVES—MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). Has the Minister of State (Youth) managed to remember the name of the person whom she sent a letter mentioning the use of taxpayers' money to recruit young people for the Conservative Party?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I said Friday that a mistake was made in the way the letter was phrased. It was never the intention of this Minister or this Department or the Government to use public funds for partisan purposes. Like any minister or government, I think we all want to do as much as possible for as many young Canadians as possible, and if it has a beneficial impact, I will be delighted. I repeat it was never anyone's intention to use public funds for partisan purposes.

RECIPIENTS OF MINISTER'S LETTER—FUNDING OF YOUTH PROGRAMS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the question. Has the Minister of State for Youth remembered to whom she sent the letter, and perhaps she could tell us also whether there was a response to her allegation that $100 million was cut from youth programs, and whether there has been any correction of that error in policy to which she called attention and about which she expressed concern?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): The one thing that is being changed is that some money has been reprofiled, and in this Budget we have as much as $11.732 billion being spent on young people in Canada. This is what is being done. That $100 million was reprofiled and it was added to reach that total, which now comes to $11.732 billion this year for young people.

STATISTICS CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF CENSUS COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Statistics Canada. For the third time in five days Canadians have learned of blatant political patronage and abuse of power by the Government. Can the Minister of Supply and Services tell this House why he bowed to pressure from his caucus colleagues and appointed unqualified Tories, who failed a test with result as low as 9 per cent, to be appointed census commissioners for Statistics Canada for the 1986 census?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this Government, for the very first time, has called upon all Members of this House to volunteer names of persons who would help participate in the census. All Members have volunteered names, and a good number of those have been selected with the assistance of friends on that side and friends on this side. Statistics Canada advised that only competent people are being selected.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in the people who passed the test. I am interested in those who failed.

RATINGS USED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House, since a memorandum drafted by his department indicated that 60 per cent was the passing mark, why it only takes 9 per cent for Conservatives, when 60 per cent is the passing mark for all other Canadians who want to work for Statistics Canada?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I asked Statistics Canada to follow two rules, number one, that the integrity of the system be maintained, and number two, that only qualified people be involved in the census.

MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

RECIPIENTS OF LETTER—INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth).

She admitted Friday that she sent the letter that was inappropriate.

My question is quite simple: To which Minister?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I offered the apologies appropriate in the circumstances. I consider the matter closed.

[English]

RESPONSES TO LETTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there are many people in the parliamentary system who believe that a simple apology for such an error is not enough. Did she send that letter to other members in the Cabinet, including the Prime Minister, and, if so, what was the response?

• (1425)

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I think my answer will be the same as for the first question.

Last Friday, I made the appropriate apologies, and I am certainly not going to hand in my resignation at the request of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

[English]

INQUIRY CONCERNING RECIPIENTS AND RESPONSES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it certainly is not sufficient. Considering that the Minister apologized last Friday for something that she clearly believes was wrong, it is very relevant to ask her if she sent that letter to the Prime Minister or other members of the Cabinet and, if so, what was the response? The Minister has an obligation to reply to that question and not simply repeat an apology.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I apologized because there seemed to be an understanding by some people that there was an intent to use taxpayers' money for partisan purposes. Such was not the intent, and the letter was misinterpreted.

I also admitted that the writing of the letter was a mistake and I have apologized for that. There was never any such intent, so I think that this is all there is to it.

STATISTICS CANADA

NOMINATION OF CENSUS COMMISSIONER IN COCHRANE-SUPERIOR CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. In the constituency of Cochrane-Superior in northern Ontario the wife of the former President of the Progressive Conservative Riding Association was nominated as a census commissioner. That is no problem, but it is reported to me that she failed the test and performed very poorly in the interview. Nevertheless, orders came down to officials that, despite her performance, she should be hired.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is time for a question.

Mr. Penner: Why did the Minister cause such an order to go down, that this woman be hired despite the results of her exam?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear my earlier response that two orders were given to Statistics Canada; one, to maintain the integrity of the system; and two, to hire qualified people.

IMPACT ON CENSUS RESULTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, because this happened in Cochrane-Superior, is the Minister not concerned that unqualified persons will in the process of taking this census invalidate the results?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have been given assurances by Statistics Canada that it is absolutely confident that the results will be bona fide and that the competency of the people who have been hired is appropriate to the job that has been imposed upon them.

YOUTH

RECIPIENTS OF MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of whether he or the Prime Minister received copies of the letter sent by the Minister of State for Youth at the time they were first sent out?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. gentleman, indeed any Hon. Member opposite, would not expect me to disclose to them the nature of my correspondence. I would no more think of asking the hon. gentleman to disclose his correspondence. In this case, that is the response to him. Surely it is none of his business.

Mr. Deans: It is public business. It is public business when a Minister suggests the expenditure of public funds on private matters.

MINISTER'S CONDUCT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, now that the Deputy Prime Minister knows the content of the letter, does he deem it appropriate that the Minister of State for Youth should have sent out such a letter to colleagues in the Cabinet, advocating the expenditure of hard pressed taxpayers' public money on the building of the youth wing of the Conservative Party?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes or no.

● (1430)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that twist and double twist are totally unworthy of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Broadbent: It's unworthy of a cabinet Minister.

Mr. Nielsen: I read that which is in the public domain, and the way in which I read it was that it was a letter from a Minister spelling out her program requirements. The Opposition has latched on to one aspect of the letter for which the Minister has apologized. It should ruddy well be satisfied with that—

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Nielsen: —instead of trying to put a murky cast on the entire letter.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Look who's talking.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister has apologized for the mistake. She has admitted it, and its authorship. Surely that should be satisfactory to any hon. gentleman in this House.

Mr. Broadbent: No, it's not. It's not sufficient.

ALLEGED SECRET MEETING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. She said today on at least two occasions that she would never see public funds being used for partisan purposes. Can she explain why a secret meeting took place on February 27 at the Progressive Conservative Party headquarters office in Montreal for the express aim of securing government summer jobs for people on condition they be active members of the Progressive Conservative Party? Is this blatant abuse of and insult to young people a new part of the Minister's youth strategy?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of such a meeting.

Mr. Foster: That's what you said last Thursday.

Mrs. Champagne: I certainly was not involved in it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that this meeting, combined with her own cabinet strategy, which we released two weeks ago, and combined with the letter which was released in the House last week, are enough to demand her resignation from the portfolio of the Minister of Youth?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): No, sir.

STATISTICS CANADA

HIRING OF CENSUS COMMISSIONERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. It has to do with his personal role in the whole question of hiring Tory hacks as census commissioners.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the Minister deny that he personally intervened to ensure that Tory hacks who failed were hired, in spite of the fact that they had not passed the competition for census commissioners?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes or no?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): No.

Mr. Nystrom: Therefore, he confirmed it.

FUNDING TO HIRE YOUNG PEOPLE AS CENSUS TAKERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell the House what the relationship is between the $30 million of youth employment funds to hire census takers, and the Minister of Youth's letter to recruit young people for the Tory Party with federal money? What is the connection? Come clean.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): I do not know about being clean, Mr. Speaker, but the facts are that 25,000 youth are going to be involved in the census, and anyone who wants to get a job should go down to an unemployment insurance centre—

Ms. Copps: PC Party headquarters.

Mr. McInnes: —and their eligibility will be determined.

YOUTH

MINISTER'S LETTER—REFERENCE TO YOUTH-RELATED SPENDING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Youth. She has apologized for part of the letter but the Deputy Prime Minister has defended the rest of it. Let me ask the Minister about the rest of the letter. Was she being truthful with her colleagues when she told them that there had been a diminution of $100 million in youth-related spending since the election? Is that an accurate statement as far as she is concerned?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, there were some funds—there were some programs, as you know, Mr. Speaker, which were about to be moved from other places and I wanted to make sure—and this was my job—that there would be money available for young people in the Main Estimates as produced by my colleague.

Mr. Kaplan: We gather those efforts were unsuccessful. They were made, but they were unsuccessful.

MINISTER'S REFERENCE TO SPENDING LEVEL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Let me come back to the question. Was the Minister really telling her colleagues, and was it a fact, that since the last election, as she put it, youth-related spending has been reduced by the Government by $100 million?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that later we can see that in the Budget funds have been added for the youth of Canada—

Ms. Copps: Left-overs for youth.

Mrs. Champagne: —and we now have the total, which I have given before, for programs directed to for youth—

Mr. McCurdy: Eleven billion dollars.

Mrs. Champagne: —or which primarily designate youth as a target. There are programs accessible to students—

Ms. Copps: P.C. youth.

Mrs. Champagne: —provincial transfers of interest to youth, and other programs for which youth qualify. The total is the number which I have given before.

INVESTMENT CANADA

ATTEMPTED PURCHASE OF GLC PUBLISHING COMPANY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. Even though Gulf and Western face deep opposition to its takeover of Prentice Hall, the United States giant has forged on and is buying out another Canadian subsidiary, GLC Publishing in Agincourt. Will the Minister immediately tell this U.S. conglomerate that there can be no exceptions for it in this latest case, and that the rules against foreign control in publishing will be completely enforced?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members of the House will be pleased to know that that word has already been conveyed to Gulf and Western.

PRENTICE-HALL TAKEOVER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister has taken this position with respect to GLC, will be also take a similarly tough position with respect to Prentice-Hall, Ginn Brothers Ltd., and with respect to this attempt by Gulf and Western to build an empire for text books in our country?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a question of taking a tough position or not taking it. The fact is that Gulf and Western is well aware of the July policy which was enunciated by my colleague, the Minister of Communications. It is well aware that any purchase which is made now must abide by that policy. As far as transactions are concerned prior to that policy, it is well aware that we will look at them under the precedents and regulations which applied at that time under the old Foreign Investment Review Agency legislation.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. At the end of last week the Central Banks of West Germany, Japan, and the United States all reduced their discount rates. What steps has she or the Minister or the Minister of Finance personally taken to ensure that the Bank of Canada follows the lead of those banks this week and lowers interest rates to protect the interests both of mortgage holders and other commercial borrowers in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question because we are, obviously, very pleased to see the general decline in interest rates. I can tell the House that our dollar, of course, continues to strengthen, and that Treasury bills are trading well below their tender level of last week. And the Toronto Star is predicting that interest rates this week will be down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AGRICULTURE

IMPACT ON CANADIAN FARMERS OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know, as a western Member of Parliament, of the deep concern which is now being expressed about the impact the U.S. farm Bill will have upon the western grain economy. In the Minister's discussions with the Secretary of State for the United States, Mr. Shultz, on Friday, did he raise this matter of concern, of great priority? And can the Minister tell us if the Prime Minister intends to put this on the agenda when he meets with President Reagan next week, and to ask the President to curtail the application of the Bill until such time as the impact of it can be discussed with Canada and other grain exporting nations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is concerned about the implications for Canada of U.S. farm legislation. It has made that clear on several occasions. I have raised it with Mr. Shultz.

Let me take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry on his designation as the External Affairs critic for his Party.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for the honour, but I am simply raising the question as a matter of deep interest to western Canada.

MEETING OF GRAIN EXPORTING COUNTRIES PROPOSED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): In response to the Minister's answer, as we know, the whole purpose of the U.S. farm Bill, in large part, is to launch a trade war with the European Community on agricultural matters. Will the Prime Minister raise with the President of the United States whether or not he will support the convening of a meeting of all grain exporting nations so that we can offset, or curtail, any proposed trade war before it very deeply hurts Canada, as predicted?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of initiatives taken by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board with regard to the problem which has been raised by the Hon. Member. Certainly the discussions between the Prime Minister and President Reagan will touch upon, among other things, the importance of a very strong approach regarding agricultural questions in any multilateral trade negotiations.

YOUTH

MINISTER'S LETTER—RECIPIENTS—INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth. Since the Minister apologized last Friday, and reiterated her apology today, and since the letter is now public knowledge, would she not agree to advise the House exactly to whom she sent the letter? Would she also not agree that we are entitled to that information?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the question. However, I must remind Hon. Members that this is now the fifth or sixth time which it has been asked. Therefore, I would ask that the supplementary not be on the same question.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, no.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENT BE INFORMED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, running the risk that I may be ruled out of order, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether or not he would agree that the House is entitled to share in this information.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, of course I would not. Surely it is utterly ridiculous for the hon. gentleman, or any Member opposite, to expect to be included on the distribution list of letters which Ministers write. That is what he is suggesting—

Mr. Broadbent: We want to know what the Cabinet did with it when it got it.

Mr. Nielsen: —by suggesting that he should be the recipient of correspondence from cabinet Ministers to whomever they write. That is surely patently ridiculous.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR DEBATE AND VOTE BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It regards the timing of an open debate and free vote on capital punishment. Would it seem reasonable to the Minister, in light of the promises made by the Government, to hold this debate and free vote prior to the forthcoming summer recess?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it has been made clear on a number of occasions, and made clear again by the Prime Minister recently, in fact on his very successful tour to western Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Have you seen the polls?

Mr. Crosbie: He still found it very difficult to find a live—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Minister please conclude?

Mr. Crosbie: As the Prime Minister said on that very successful trip to western Canada, before the end of this session of Parliament is reached adequate time will be provided for a full debate and a vote on the issue of capital punishment. I cannot tell the Hon. Member whether or not it will be during this year. That is a matter for the Prime Minister to decide. He will doubtless consult me and the rest of the Cabinet when he comes back from his successful trip to western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

IMPACT ON CANADIAN FARMERS OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. A recent study by Chase Econometrics states that the U.S. farm bill will cut net Canadian farm incomes by 20 per cent from 1984 levels. It will have a disastrous effect on western grain producers. What action is the Government planning to take to protect our farmers from the impact of this United States farm bill which, at the same time, is increasing incomes for American farmers?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to inform my hon. colleague that in the agricultural sector alone, our Government has taken more action in eighteen months than his Government took in the twenty years it was in power.

Regarding his concerns about the U.S. Farm Bill, I can inform the Hon. Member that the initial prices will be announced at the end of March or early April. The Minister, Mr. Mayer, is now in Japan to negotiate other contracts.

Perhaps I may remind my hon. friend of the two latest sales to the USSR and Brazil, which were advantageous for all Canadian farmers. This is a real Government that looks after its business.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In the Prime Minister's meeting with President Reagan this weekend is he willing to try to get a commitment that the $1.5 billion grain export subsidy program will not be used against Canada's traditional grain customers?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Government has demonstrated on a number of fronts in the agricultural field, and in others, that, despite the fact that the actions of the Government of which the Hon. Member was a supporter led the Americans to believe that they could roll over Canadian interests, whether it was with respect to the sovereignty of Canada or the interests of Canadian farmers, it has taken a decidedly different approach. The Prime Minister will speak for the interests of Canada in the summit with the President, as he has in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GRAIN

DELIVERY DIFFICULTIES OF WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that in many places in western Canada farmers are unable to deliver their grain because of congestion in their elevators. This is congestion caused by the inability of the railways to supply enough cars for them to ship their grian.

Will the Minister tell the farmers of western Canada what he is doing to rectify this situation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that there is a shortage of rolling stock. My understanding is that there is congestion at the terminals and elevators because of insufficient capacity for drying, cleaning, and processing of grain. Nonetheless, I will look into the Hon. Members' s allegation and get back to him.

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure grain producers in these areas where congestion is a problem that he will either have sufficient cars by March 29 or that he will call upon his colleagues to extend the quota period?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in no way accepting the premise of the question, I repeat that if there is a shortage of rolling stock we will certainly take every initiative possible to ensure that the cars are provided. I repeat again, I doubt very much whether that is the real problem.

REQUEST THAT WARNING LABEL BE PLACED ON DRUG ASA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the fact that the death of a 15-year-old girl from Reye's syndrome has been linked to the drug ASA, why has the Government not ordered the pharmaceutical industry to place a warning on its labels since that link has been suspected by the industry for the past three years?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague for his question. As he knows, the Government has been very efficient in dealing with the concerns of consumers. I am informed that the Department of National Health and Welfare works very closely with the industry in order that warnings will be placed on its labels. So far I can say that 30 per cent of the industry has already agreed to comply with our requirements.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Will the Minister explain to the House why he has abdicated the role of the federal Government as the catalyst for economic growth in the poor regions of the country and substituted for it the Atlantic Enterprise Program, which he knows is a program administered by the central Canadian bankers, who, as history tells us, have never demonstrated any concern or compassion for the well-being of citizens in that area?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think it must be obvious to most Members of the House that the Hon. Member's preamble is absolutely false. The facts are that, as far as Atlantic Canada is concerned, my Department and the Government of Canada have many programs in place. We have supplemented these programs by the new Atlantic Eneterprise Program which will ensure relatively low-cost money for those who want to open up and expand factories. This will give more jobs to Atlantic Canadians, something of which I assume all Members of this House, including the Hon. Member who asked the question, should be supportive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE AMENDED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will he listen to the cries of businessmen in those regions, and lower the threshold of $250,000 down to $50,000? We he also provide grants and assistance with regard to working capital? Finally, will he amend the Altantic Enterprise Program so that the maximum of 6 per cent in the interest buy-down will become a minimum for all businessmen? Will he listen to the Canadian small-businessmen from Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't you listen, you turkey?

Ms. Copps: You just laid and egg, Crosbie.

Mr. Broadbent: That's unparliamentary, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. I must ask the Minister of Justice to rise in his place and withdraw that.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that comment about the turkey.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You can insult Liberals but not turkeys.

Mr. Nunziata: That's garbage.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if all turkeys are all settled and on their roosts—

Some Hon. Members: Name him.

Mr. Speaker: Next questioner.

Mr. Nunziata: Where's the discipline?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Minister will simply rise and withdraw that comment.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, of course I will withdraw that comment.

Ms. Copps: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: But, Mr. Speaker, I would simply—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Next question. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville.

YOUTH

MINISTER'S LETTER—RECIPIENTS' REPLIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth and is in regard to the letter she sent to a Minister, or Ministers, that was revealed in the House last Thursday. Can the Minister tell the House whether or not she received a reply from the Minister to whom she sent a letter or indeed from any Minister to whom she may have sent a letter, or do we have to wait until that is leaked as well?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, my correspondence is usually not made public.

Mr. Speaker: Different question, supplementary question.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER RECEIVED REPLY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has said that her correspondence is usually not made public, will she make another exception this time and tell us whether or not she received a reply from the Minister to whom the letter was addressed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. That is the same question. Next question.

PETRO-CANADA

EAST COAST DRILLING PLANS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that Petro-Canada is abandoning five wells off the East Coast of Canada and is backing away from new drilling programs?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice in the absence of the Minister.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I would like to know when we are going to hear an announcement on the issue of the indexation of Public Service pensions. Does the Minister feel that retirees from the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP have had adequate representation during the discussions on pension issues?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on a number of occasions, we have consulted widely on this issue. The Government is committed to pension reform, but it is also willing to make a very clear statement that we will live by the commitments we made during the election campaign of the summer of 1984 and throughout our term of office. I think the Hon. Member can expect to see a proposal put before the House in the very near future.

MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth), and it concerns the letter of January 6. Since the last paragraph contains clear instructions, and I shall read them in English:

[English]

The letter indicated that she seeks at this time an indication of the 86-87 fiscal parameters vis-à-vis her Ministry. Did she indeed write this letter to the President of the Treasury Board, and did he acknowledged receipt of that letter?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that I have said that questions should not simply repeat themselves. Therefore, I suggest that if he has a question that is different from the one that has already been asked, I will allow it.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING DEPARTMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Did he receive the letter? Did he give it special attention? Was he sufficiently attentive to his colleague's, the Minister's, request to explain to the House today what the parameters of this department are? And where do we find those $100 million in the Estimates?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have no comments to make whatsoever about the correspondence I receive from my Cabinet colleagues.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRESENTATION OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. There has been a lot of confusion about whether or not we are going to receive a White Paper on defence. Can we expect a White Paper on defence some time in the late winter or spring?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet decided upon a date for the White Paper. When I have done so, I will advise the hon. gentleman, and indeed all Members of the House.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that no White Paper is forthcoming and we have been waiting almost a year for a White Paper, would the Minister be prepared to make a statement on any fundamental policy changes in DND, in lieu of a White Paper?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can give that very helpful suggestion every consideration. In the meantime, we have not been waiting for a year; we have been waiting closer to 14 years.

STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Earlier he said that only qualified and competent census commissioners were hired. In view of the fact that incompetent and unqualified Tory hacks and flacks were hired, will the Minister immediately instruct the dismissal of all those who failed to achieve 60 per cent on the test in order to qualify to be commissioners?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, there are two tests. One is written and one is oral, and the examiner takes both tests into account. If I ordered the dismissal of all of those who failed one of the tests, a great number of the nominees from over there would fail.

REQUEST FOR DISMISSALS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this Minister does not care about the integrity of the census. Again, in order to maintain the integrity of the census that is about to be taken, will the Minister recognize that unqualified persons, mostly Conservatives, were hired, and will he immediately dismiss those individuals who did not pass the written test, the only test?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that Statistics Canada has advised me that only people who are qualified to carry out their obligations under the census will be hired.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INCREASED PILOTAGE FEES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will be aware of a decision handed down regarding the increased pilotage fees. Will the Minister use his powers to overrule this decision and provide the pilotage authority with the necessary funds to operate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware that, under the provisions of the ruling handed down, there is a period of time during which a decision can be appealed, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment until that time has expired.

EFFECT ON SURVIVAL OF SEAWAY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Does the Minister not agree that any increase in any costs related to the marine industry on the Seaway will be detrimental to its survival?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my response would be the same. I would be prepared to express an opinion, perhaps in another context, but I think in light of the responsibility that I have, I would want to refrain from making any suggestions at this time.

FISHERIES

UNITED STATES DUTIES ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister will be meeting with the President of the United States on Monday of next week. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell the House if the issue of countervailing duties on salt codfish and fresh fish going into the United States will be on that agenda.

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that depends upon the developments in the United States regulatory procedures with which the Hon. Member will be well acquainted. I should take the opportunity to tell him that I raised that particular matter in very strong terms when I met with Secretary Shultz on Friday.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time has expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) had completed his speech. The Table advises me that his time had expired.

An Hon. Member: What about the period for questions and comments?

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that. I was about to call questions and comments. Does the Hon. Member for Algoma believe that he has some time left?

Mr. Foster: I wanted to complete my speech, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: My dilemma is that the Table advises me that the Hon. Member had used his 20 minutes. Questions and comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Since the corporate plan of Canadian Arsenals Limited indicates more than a 100 per cent increase in profits during the next five years, does the Hon. Member have any comments to make on the advisability of going from a situation where we supply most of our armaments for national defence from the Crown corporation to one where we will have to bid against other corporations?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has raised a very good question. It outlines the dilemma of the Government in privatizing the corporation. Some 90 per cent of what the corporation produces is sold to the federal Government; some 10 per cent is sold abroad.

Its corporate plan outlines that profits will increase over the next several years. In fact, it now has orders of some $200 million which are ready to go. These profits will now accrue to SNC rather than to Canadian Arsenals Limited or to the benefit of the federal Government.

What is the value in selling off a corporation which essentially sells its production to the federal Government and, in the process, delivering the SNC massive profits over the next several years? In fact, the production and the sales over the next five years are expected to double. Essentially the federal Government, through the auspices of a Crown corporation, is now manufacturing ammunition and armaments which it seels to itself. Obviously it is making reasonable profits which accrue to the Crown corporation or to the Crown, in the end, itself.

Another factor comes into play when it is sold to SNC. SNC will then have the vast majority of armaments and ammunition production capacity in Canada and, of course, can raise the price willy-nilly to the federal Government, its major customer for at least 90 per cent of its production.

The Hon. Member has raised a valid point. It does not seem to be sensible to sell off a Crown corporation which is projected to make large profits. It experienced a loss at one time, but it has been making profits for the last four or five years. These profits are projected to be even larger in the future.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) seems to want to be co-operative. Perhaps we could have access to the Arthur Andersen company report to know whether the price is a reasonable one. Also we would like to know whether the corporation taxes will be a reasonable amount so that the Government will not suffer larger losses in that regard. As I said, the Hon. Member has raised a very good question. It is the kind of question we have asked in the House since the debate on Bill C-87 commenced a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I know he has spent a considerable amount of time studying this matter and what might be the repercussions. If the Conservative Party were really serious about saving taxpayers' money and reducing the deficit, it would not figure out ways to pass a profit-making mechanism off the backs of taxpayers and on to the back of a private organization. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what might be some of the ramifications of this.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think the question of the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) really begs a question of why the Government is selling off this Crown corporation which will have massive profits in the future, as profits have been building up.

During the five-year period from 1980 to 1985, it is interesting that the corporation's profits have risen from $3 million to $11 million. The projections indicate that its sales will double in the next five years. It is reasonable to expect that profits within the next five years will approach at least $22 million. If we keep the Crown corporation, those profits would accrue to the Government directly. If it is sold off, as is proposed by the Government, the Government will recoup some of the profits in corporation taxes. However, if we had access to the Arthur Andersen report on this matter, we as Members of the House of Commons would be able to judge whether or not the price is a fair one. Obviously, if it is a profit-making corporation, we should charge more for it.

However, we still have the whole question of whether it is wise to be selling a Crown corporation which sells practically all of its production to the Government of Canada. The same situation applies to provincial Crown corporations such as Ontario Hydro. It services, or the services of its subsidiaries are mainly sold to the people of Ontario. We must ask ourselves whether it is wise to privatize Canadian Arsenals Limited whose main customer is the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the dilemma in which the Government finds itself in this particular Bill, the dilemma of encouraging and increasing the profits on armament sales. This has been traditionally against the policy of the Government of Canada which has assiduously stayed away from the selling of Canadian arms for profit; it has managed to stay away from the designation of merchants of death. Now the Government is encouraging this by selling to the private sector the industry for the manufacture of arms. The Government has not convinced me that it has changed its policy. It is just proceeding on the ideology of privatization without considering the reasons it should not do so.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the problems with the privatizing of corporations such as Canadian Arsenals Limited. At this time the Government has the authority to direct the policy of the corporation. Obviously, when it becomes a private corporation it can sell to the Middle East and other countries throughout the world which are political hot spots, and the Government will have to work through a mechanism other than the direct mechanism it had when the company was a Crown corporation.

We have seen in recent press reports that the Cabinet is bitterly split on this issue. We understand that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is determined to have a German company set up an armaments manufacturing plant in Nova Scotia, whereas the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is violently opposed to that. That kind of battle is going on within the Cabinet all the time, so we never know until the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) makes his final decision exactly what the Government policy will be.

I agree with the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) that this will indeed be a problem in a private sector company. It will be able to wheel and deal and sell munitions and armaments throughout the world. A great deal of its business will always be done with the Government of Canada, as it is now. Rather than those profits accruing to the Government of Canada, they will accrue to this company, which is probably being sold at a bargain basement price. We do not know that, although we suspect it. We suspect that this is why the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) is not making that information available to Members. It would be very embarrassing to him, and he does not want to make it public at this time.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is an important Bill because it raises very fundamental questions about the policy of the Government. We must begin by asking why the Government chooses to privatize this particular Crown corporation. Why does the Government choose to sell this corporation? The Government may have reason for selling corporations which are not making a profit. From the Government's perspective it can be indicated that those corporations are costing taxpayers money, and there is good reason for turning those corporations over to the private sector. However, those arguments do not hold in the case of Canadian Arsenals Limited which last year made a profit of $11.3 million. Why sell a profitable corporation to the private sector?

I must conclude that the Government is doing this because of an ideological commitment to the motion of privatization. The Conservatives must believe that there is no legitimate purpose for having a profitable corporation in the public sector, that if a Crown corporation is making a profit, the logical thing to do is to sell it. They can see no justification for having a Crown corporation making a profit and remaining in the public sector.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That's not true.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague on the far right indicates that that is not true. I ask him to join in this debate and—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am on your left.

Mr. Keeper: You may be sitting on my left, but you are on the far right. If the Hon. Member feels that what I am saying is not true, let him join this debate and explain why the Government is selling a profitable corporation to the private sector and depriving the Canadian Treasury of $11.3 million. Why deprive the hard-pressed Canadian taxpayer of $11.3 million? I would like to have the Conservatives explain that to ordinary Canadians.

I can only guess the Government is doing this because it is committed to the notion of privatization. It is committed to the notion that a Crown corporation, which is making a profit, cannot exist in the public sector. This indicates to me that the Conservatives are totally committed to their ideology that the economy should be nothing more than a series of private sector corporations. They are totally committed to a notion of a free enterprise economy with no role for Government or the public sector. Through this move the Conservatives are abandoning the notion of a mixed economy in the country. They choose, instead, to leave all the economic activity to the private sector and to private profit-making corporations.

The problem with that is that it reduces our capacity for an industrial strategy in the country. It reduces our capacity to give the economy some direction. Therefore, in the final analysis, it reduces the capacity of the Canadian Government to make a serious effort to provide full employment in the country.

I have another question about the sale of this corporation. Ninety per cent of the sales of Canadian Arsenals are made to the Department of National Defence. Through selling this corporation the Government is creating a monopoly in the private sector in the munitions industry in the country. It is, therefore, putting the Canadian taxpayer in a very vulnerable position. That private sector, profit-making monopoly can then set its price for munitions. We will be in a position of having to pay whatever price that monopoly chooses to charge the taxpayer. The Government is giving up an $11.3 million profit for the public Treasury and replacing it with a private sector monopoly which will be able to demand whatever price it chooses from the Canadian Government for munitions. The Canadian taxpayer will pay for that, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to know why the Conservative Government chooses to sell Canadian Arsenals Limited to the private sector. I hope Conservative Members get up and explain this to us. Does it have it anything to do with the fact that the company buying Canadian Arsenals made campaign donations to the Minister responsible for industry?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Careful.

Mr. Keeper: The Member says I should be careful. I wish he would stand up and explain to the Canadian people why the Government is selling a profitable corporation to the private sector. Why give it to a company which gave campaign donations to the Conservative Party and the Minister responsible for industry? They make comments from their seat but they do not get up in debate and answer those fundamental questions. Is it because they are following their patronage policy, a policy which they condemned when they were in opposition? They condemned the Liberal Party and the Leader of the Opposition. Now they are in office, they continue a policy of patronage, patronage, patronage. Whether it has to do with census takers or the sale of profitable Crown corporations, that is what they are doing. I would like to see Conservative Members stand up and answer those questions.

There is another question surrounding the sale of this corporation, having to do with conflict of interest. We are aware that the former Director General of Aerospace and Armaments with the Department of Supply and Services took a job with CFN Consultants. He was originally in charge of privatizing Canadian Arsenals. He left the public sector and went to work with the consulting firm which was working for the company buying Canadian Arsenals. On the face of it there is a conflict of interest. The Government has not adequately explained this. Why has the Government allowed this to happen? These questions demand answers. If we do not get adequate answers, then we have to believe that this Government is not keeping an adequate eye on the question of conflict of interest.

Another question has to do with the fact that 10 per cent of the sales of Canadian Arsenals are to the international market. The Government press release dealing with this sale said it would make the ammunition industry in Canada more internationally competitive. Does this mean that the Government is encouraging Canada to get into the arms race? This is an important question because we know that military equipment produced in Canada has ended up in places like Chile, Nicaragua and El Salvador. Surely the average Canadian does not want to build an economy which is based upon profits from debt in international conflicts. I am concerned about this Government's policy regarding the international sale of arms and what the movement of this corporation from the public sector to the private sector means in those terms.

[Translation]

We have a number of questions about the Bill now before the House. One of them is what security has the Government given to the employees of the corporation? According to the press the Government did not consult the union about the sale.

Mr. Speaker, the corporation employs 750 people in Saint-Augustin near Quebec City and in Ville Le Gardeur and they want to have job security and firm commitments concerning their pension rights.

Mr. Speaker, the sale of that Crown corporation has not been adequately explained. Why did the Government sell a profit-making company? Could it be that the buyer of the corporation made financial contributions to the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election campaign? Is patronage involved? I want Conservative Members to respond to that allegation.

As a result of the sale, Mr. Speaker, the Government will create a private sector monopoly and Canadians will have to pay even more for national defence. This is a rather strange policy because this Crown corporation has been putting its profits in Government coffers.

Mr. Speaker, I want the Conservative Members who misled me on a few occasions to take this opportunity to reply to my questions. Why is the Government selling a profit-making Crown corporation? Is it because of the contributions the Party received from their private sector pals during the last election campaign?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, a number of organizations are very concerned about the sale of arms by Canadian corporations in any form. They are concerned about Canada becoming a merchant of death. Charges have been levelled against Canada by church groups who are alarmed by the increase in the export of military equipment from Canada. Would the Hon. Member comment on that very great concern over Canada becoming a producer of military equipment which contributes to the possibility of war around the world?

● (1530)

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question because it is an important question about public policy in this country. When we look at countries like Chile, which has a very brutal dictatorship which as Amnesty Internatioal has indicated, has not only tortured but also killed people who have opposed it, when we look at those situations, we naturally condemn those kinds of regimes and we wish to see a return to democracy in countries such as Chile, countries which have a long history of democracy. When we find out that Canadian arms or Canadian equipment that can be used by the military end up in Chile and are used to repress the population there and to maintain a dictatorship, then we are naturally distrubed and outraged. Church groups across the country have documented the movement of Canadian equipment to countries such as Chile, and they have protested this sale of Canadian military equipment to dictatorial regimes. The difficulty with the law before us today when the Government moves this corporation from the public sector to the private sector is that it invites an increase in Canada's participation in international arms trade. it invites a situation in which Canadians will be living off the profits of conflict around the world. This is not a policy that we should be floowing and it is one that outrages most Canadians.

Rather than creating a circumstance by the sale of this corporation which encourages us to be involved in international arms trade, we should be going in the opposite direction. Not only that, we should be following the advice of church leaders who indicate to us that we can create more employment by being involved in non-military production than we could be by being involved in destructive military production.

It is important for the Government to listen to these kinds of concerns that Canadian people have been expressing, and particularly Canadian church leaders.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Right Hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on a question or comment.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly interested in the issue just raised by the Hon. Member.

[English]

I am particularly interested in his references to the export of Canadian equipment to Chile or to other countries. He may recall that nine months ago in the House his colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) asked a series of questions relating to the Canadian export controls policy. I answered those questions indicating there was a review of that policy. I invited the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap to participate in the review and on behalf of the New Democratic Party to outline for us specifically the changes that the New Democratic Party would like to see in the export controls policy. In other words, I invited the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member's colleagues and others, to move beyond making speeches in the House of Commons and to participate with us directly in helping to clarify the policy. That was nine months ago. I have yet to receive a response from the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap or the New Democratic Party.

I know they would not want to be accused of simply making statements in the House that they are not prepared to back up with their actions. Will they tell me why they have not replied to my invitation to make specific proposals as to the ways we could put in place an export controls regime that would be more effective? Can he tell me whether they intend to reply, and if not, why not?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will not speak on behalf of my colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap; I will leave it to him to respond to the Minister. I would like to know why the Minister does not respond to the concerns that Canadians have expressed about Canada being involved in arms sales and equipment that end up in places like Chile, and why we do not move to convert those industries to civilian purposes that would produce more employment and that would pull us out of the situation of supporting regimes such as the one in Chile.

Most Canadians are familiar with the fact that there are reports in the press on a regular basis of Canada's participation in arms sales that affect countries like Chile, that affect countries like El Salvador in which we therefore end up supporting dictatorial regimes through our material efforts. I would like to see the Minister stop a number of things. One is to stop using the Export Development Corporation to subsidize these kinds of arms sales and to stop issuing permits for these sales which end up in the hands of military dictators. I would call upon the Minister to answer the concerns that Canadians are expressing about Canada profiting from arms sales that go to countries and simply maintain repressive regimes, such as the Chilean regime which, as Amnesty International has documented, has used torture and killed people who have been in opposition to that regime.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to respond to those concerns, and indeed, I have been doing so. In the spirit of this Government of trying to involve citizen participation and trying to give the NDP an opportunity to put its work where its rhetoric is, I have invited, very seriously, the representatives of the New Democratic Party who raised this question to join with us in the hard work of defining the rules that Canada should follow. It is easy to stand up in the House of Commons and make speeches. It is a little more difficult to write out precisely the changes in law and practice which should be followed.

We believe in participatory democracy. We believe that New Democrats, who are prepared to get up and make speeches, should be given the opportunity also to respond with their particular proposals. What I have received is nine months of silence from the New Democratic Party.

It is a very serious matter. The Hon. Member will recall, with regard to Chile and the issue raised by his Party, that the question in issue was not arms but, rather, was whether or not we should be exporting equipment that is used by police, in effect, apparel used by police to stop riots. Is he suggesting that all Canadians who produce that kind of equipment should stop producing it? Is he suggesting that all Canadians who have jobs in the production of that equipment should lose those jobs? If he is not suggesting that, what new rules is he proposing? Why will he and his Party, who have asked for new rules, not accept my invitation to come forward and help us draw up those new rules? Why, when we are working to bring in a new export controls policy, have we received only nine months of silence from members of the New Democratic Party? Are they interested only in making speeches in the House of Commons or are they prepared to respond positively to invitations to help formulate Canadian policy?

It is a very important matter that relates very directly to the question under debate here, because it is the easiest thing in the world merely to express opinions. All of us have been sent here with a much higher responsibility than just the expression of opinion. We are asked to bring about changes in the country. I have invited members of the New Democratic Party to participate in those changes. So far I have had only silence. When are they going to move away from the easy work of offering criticism and respond to the invitation to join in the hard work of actually defining new approaches that might be followed?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about export permits. It should be clear to the Hon. Minister that Canadians oppose the approval of export permits that allow equipment to go to a country like Chile to be used by the police forces for the repression of the efforts to return that country to democracy, that have been documented by Amnesty International as having involved torture and the deaths of citizens. The Minister talks about words, well, he has been using a lot of words here today. While he is using a lot of words, the Government, through export development grants, continues to subsidize sales that end up in countries like Chile. Why does the Minister not bring a stop to that?

• (1540)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this Bill because I and other members of my Party wish to raise a number of concerns. Hopefully, the Minister or other members of the Government will be forthcoming with some answers, perhaps during the question and comment period.

The concept of the divestiture of Canadian Crown corporations is not one to which I or my Party are opposed. However, there is a legitimate concern about the way in which that process operates. For instance, we must consider the buyer, Canadian versus non-Canadian, the price and the assets. We must consider the effect it may have on the workforce, and whether the pension plans of that workforce will be transferable. We must consider whether Parliament and Canadians have all of the facts surrounding a particular sale.

That is what is disturbing about the Government's refusal to place the Arthur Andersen Report before Parliament. It has been misleading, even if unintentional. This report on this particular sale was financed through Government expenditures and we believe that Parliament and Canadians ought to know the contents of that report.

I am not suggesting that the successful bidder, SNC, is a bad company, because we know that it is a good Canadian company with an international reputation. However, let me refer to a letter dated January 20, 1986 written to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) from my colleague, the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). The Minister responded by saying: "I cannot provide you with a copy of the Arthur Andersen Report". However, he does say in the letter, in a postscript: "I can show you a copy of the report in my office if you so wish". That is signed by the Minister.

Is this an example of the sort of tactics and practices of clandestine meetings that we saw some months ago, or was it a real attempt to provide legitimate information? If the information is confidential and of such a nature that it is of great embarrassment or detrimental to the security of the nation, perhaps that should be said. However, the Minister simply states: "I can show you a copy of the report in my office if you so wish". I suggest that Parliament has been prohibited from seeing the real information with regard to this particular Crown corporation.

Perhaps that SNC offer was the best possible selling price the Government could have received for this Crown corporation at that time. However, I have serious doubts about that based on information I have about another bidder in the process. These are facts which I have in my possession and I would be happy to respond to Ministers on the floor or in private if they have any questions.

This company, International Defence Products Limited, is as reputable as SNC, to my knowledge. It provided a bid to the divestiture project office in ottawa. I have a letter dated September 11, 1985, in which it submitted its proposal.

While perhaps only the Minister of Supply and Services can comment, the transactions and communications which took place subsequent to its bid was very limiting, at best. I find that very surprising because this is an Ontario corporation, Canadian controlled and over 75 per cent Canadian owned. I believe it is a good corporate citizen.

Let me highlight some of the benefits that would flow had this company's bid been accepted. International Defence Products Limited is controlled and managed by Canadians. The initial value of the offer and the undertaking is far in excess of the selling price as referred to by the Government with regard to selling to SNC. Other benefits would include increased exports, increased employment in certain areas of the country, transfer of leading edge technology to Canada, major new investment and manpower training, an increase in continuing research and development expenditures, a world product mandate, three new industrial facilities, and increased corporate and personal tax revenue from new products.

Although many benefits would be provided to Canada, the germane question is what the company offered financially. We know that SNC paid $87 million for the purchase of the shares and approximately $4 million for the debt owed to the Government. International Defence Products Limited, in its bid, was prepared to pay $40 million to the Government of Canada for the discharge of the debt. In addition, as it stated in writing before the divestiture committee, it would add an additional $38 million for refurbishment and expansion of the Canadian Arsenals Limited plant. Furthermore, if this bidder had been successful, it would have invested an additional $100 million in new plant and facilities outside the Quebec-Ontario region, into a less fortunate region of the country.

The total purchase price and investment plans amounted to $178 million, providing direct, permanent, durable jobs for more than 210 individuals.

Perhaps that bid was significantly flawed, but I am not privy to the information which the Government has with regard to the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited. That is why my colleague, the official critic for Supply and Services, has demanded that the Government and the Ministers who have been in attendance provide a copy of the Arthur Andersen Report forthwith.

The questions and concerns that we have with regard to this particular sale could be answered. When we do not have information except for mere references by the Government, the sum of $178 million and 210 additional jobs, compared to approximately $95 million, suggest a major discrepancy. One must ask, as an opposition Member, for the purpose of argument, whether that would not have been a better deal for Canada, particularly considering the region in which this company would relocate. I cannot honestly make that comparison, but from the information I have it seems that something is obviously missing.

I would have hoped that the Government would explain to Canadians the details surrounding this deal. May I suggest that Government Members, who campaigned on the basis of openness and civility during the election, should produce the Arthur Andersen Report so that all Canadians will know about this particular deal. My colleague, the official critic for Supply and Services, has raised this matter both publicly and in the House of Commons. He has the taken advantage of writing to the Minister responsible. He has had meetings with members of the Minister's staff to try to elicit the report which he believes, as I do, is germane to the entire argument.

I want to be perfectly clear that conceptually I am not opposed to the Government selling off Crown corporations, not at all. But I think that before these sales are consummated—and I repeat, before they are consummated—it is appropriate that all Members of Parliament have available all of the information in order to make their decisions and their opinions known. If we do not have the information, I could get into a shouting match, if you will, with the Minister of Supply and Services, make all kinds of accusations and allegations that he is abandoning his region, that he has forgotten the economic impact on Atlantic Canada, a whole host of things, but I do not want to do that. I would like to assist but, by assisting, I hope that the Government will be candid enough to place that information before us.

In rising today to speak in this debate I had hoped to get those few things on the record and that the Parliamentary Secretary or someone else could provide the answers to some of my questions which have not been answered to date.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question with regard to the policy of his Party. We are talking about a corporation which is involved in the sale of armaments. I wonder about the policy of the Hon. Member's Party with regard to the sale of these armaments when they end up in places like Chile and El Salvador. There has been a history over the last while of arms ending up in hot spots around the world. What is the policy of the Hon. Member's Party in this regard?

I was not clear whether or not the Hon. Member was in favour of this corporation being sold. Does he think that the sale of this corporation will add to the international arms trade in which Canada is involved in places where human rights are involved such as Chile? Given the fact that there is a history of Canada being involved in arms in places that are abusing human rights which goes back for a number of years, including when the Hon. Member's Party was in Government, could he explain to us the policy of his Party in this area?

Mr. Dingwall: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, with regard to our policy of selling armaments, it was my Party which brought in the present restrictions under which we are operating at present. We believe in those restrictions with regard to the export of armaments in the international market. That has been said very clearly by my Leader and by our official critic for External Affairs as well as by other Hon. Members of our Party in terms of exporting armaments to countries where war is imminent. I do not have the legislation before me but that is basically the thrust and policy of our Party.

With regard to whether I am in favour or against this particular sale of a Crown corporation, let me say that conceptually we have no difficulty with selling off Crown corporations. However, I have great difficulty with a Government which wishes to sell a Crown corporation and in that process fails to provide all of the written documentation which predicated the sale. I have given to the Hon. Member and to Hon. Members of the House information regarding a bid by a second bidder. From my perspective—and I say this to the Parliamentary Secretary in a very constructive way—the second bidder looks much more significant with respect to benefits for Canada. But when my arms are tied behind my back because of the Government's refusal, as it so often does, to give me documentation such as the Andersen Report, it is very difficult to say whether it is a good or a bad deal. Perhaps the information I have, I say to the Hon. Member respectfully, is not accurate information. I do not know. I raised the matter of the bid sincerely. But the Government has not provided the information to date. Perhaps the Hon. Member has more information than I have, and I would be prepared to accept his information and read it.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware of an article in the Whig Standard of July 2, 1985 which states:

> Of course it's not the first time that countries such as Chile have received the benefit of Canadian military technology. In 1981, for instance, Crown-owned de Havilland Aircraft sold helicopters to the Chilean air force, with the help of a $6.1 million credit from the Export Development Corporation.

The Hon. Member said he supports the policies which were in place. The article indicates that under the previous Government public funds were used to support the sale of military equipment to a regime such as Chile which is abusing human rights. Is that the policy the Hon. Member supports?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain I understand the question in terms of relevancy of the particular Bill which is being debated. However, that is a debate on another subject matter: is it or is it not taking place? The Hon. Member seems to suggest that it is. I have said to him quite candidly that I am not fully aware of all the details as to where the products produced by Canadian Arsenals have gone. To my knowledge, they have not gone there. If the Hon. Member has information which is in direct contradiction to that, I suggest he place it before Parliament. I am not aware of it.

With regard to the sale, I underline again the thrust of the policy of the Government of the day. I was prepared to table for the Parliamentary Secretary the letter to the divestiture committee on September 11, 1985, signed by the Chief Executive Officer of International Defence Products Limited. So it is not a hokus-pokus, it is a legitimate document. Based on that information, I would have to say that this particular bid looked more promising for Canadians and I would have preferred it because of its regional impact and guarantees and so on. However, I do not have all the facts.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said he does not know that Canadian military equipment is going to countries like Chile which is abusing human rights. Yet he supports the policies which are in place. His primary point seems to be that he favours the second bidder over the first. Does he not realize that the sale of the corporation to the private sector will increase Canadian trade in arms? How does he explain that, along with the fact that the Liberal Party is trying to portray itself as a Party concerned about peace and human rights?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, you can readily see the utter stupidity of the New Democratic Party. It is bent on a philosophy that anyone wearing a green military uniform is against peace. I want to tell the Hon. Member that there are precisely 12,450 direct and related jobs in the military world in my Province of Nova Scotia, which I support. I support companies that are in the military sector providing armaments.

Mr. Keeper: What about Chile?

● (1600)

Mr. Dingwall: I do not support countries that are in breach of international treaties, international commitments—long-standing traditions if you will—with regard to human rights.

Mr. Keeper: Your Government did.

Mr. Dingwall: If the Hon. Member, with his warped mind, suggests that I do, then not only is he misleading the House but, I would suggest frankly and sincerely, he might be intentionally misleading the House.

Mr. Keeper: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has accused me of intentionally misleading the House. What I point out, and what the Hon. Member may not be aware of, is the fact that when his Party was in office it supported the sale of military equipment to the regime in Chile to the tune of $6.1 million through the Export Development Corporation. This regime is one which abuses human rights. I would like the Hon. Member to acknowledge that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As far as the first point raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) is concerned, I believe the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) did not accuse the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre of misleading the House.

Mr. Keeper: He sure did.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe he used the words "might be". However, if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes, I will read the "blues" in this regard.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, just so the Hon. Member will be able to leave the Chamber at six o'clock to go home and sleep I will withdraw any reference to his intentionally misleading the House. I wish to have it clearly understood that the Hon. Member and his Party—the rump of this House—are unequivocally against anyone in this country who wears a uniform and who defends and protects our country. I want it to be underlined that the Member of Parliament for Cape Breton-East Richmond—

Mr. Keeper: That is a distortion.

Mr. Dingwall: —is certainly not against the Canadian Armed Forces, as is being suggested by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-87. I was under the impression that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) would be participating or would be present in the House during this debate.

Mr. Blenkarn: He was here. Where were you?

Mr. Kaplan: He was here? I was down on the list of speakers for my Party. However, I did not make a decision with respect to that list or with respect to the order of speaking. In any event, I have some remarks to make which I know the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will find of interest. I am sure he will have a great many questions which he will want to ask me when I conclude.

I come to the subject of debate with considerable interest in the policy of the Government with respect to privatization. I followed carefully the criteria of the Government with respect to the sale of de Havilland, which was the first major sale made pursuant to its privatization policy. One interesting point with respect to the privatization policy of the Conservative Government is that it gives Canadians an opportunity to see how the three political Parties represented in the House of Commons stand on an issue in which differences among the Parties are highlighted, perhaps more than on any other single issue.

I would first like to deal with the approach of the Liberal Party to privatization. We were not opposed to it. We were not convinced that the Government ought or ought not to remain and carry on particular businesses. We were taking a pragmatic approach to the effect that if there was justification for the sale of a corporation, then it was perfectly proper for the Government to sell it. We were of the view that the Government has the same capacity as the private sector has, in almost every respect, with regard to the undertaking of business. There is certainly no shortage of public-spirited Canadians who are willing to come forward in order to bring private sector discipline into a corporation in the public sector. As far as the rank and file staffing of a company is concerned, if one considers Canadair and de Havilland one will find that the types of people who come to work for these companies at all levels are certainly equivalent to the people who work for similar corporations such as McDonnell Douglas, Pratt & Whitney, or Spar Aerospace in the private sector. Person-for-person it is as easy for the Government to be involved in a business as it is for the private sector.

On balance, the Liberals have said that if the Government is to remain in a business then there should be some public sector justification for it. In other words, were all other things are equal, a corporation which is running an industrial business, for example, should be in the private sector.

The Conservatives have a different approach to this matter. It is the firm belief of members of the Conservative Party that Governments should not be in industrial enterprises of any basis at all. It is a very ideological position which they take. They simply think it is wrong for taxpayers to be backing such an enterprise and that the sooner we can get out of it, virtually at any price, the better. The attitude is that it is better to give it away, as was seen in the case of de Havilland. It is their firm belief that private sector ownership will always perform a better job than government ownership.

Just to make the proposition is to illustrate some of the considerable weaknesses with respect to it. There are badly managed businesses in the private sector, just as there are well managed ones in the public sector. As a Liberal I think it is wrong that the Conservatives have so little faith in the Government being able to do things well. One has to admit that the private sector imposes a type of discipline on an industrial operation which is a very healthy thing when the company is doing nothing more than providing a type of product or service which can be provided in the private sector.

For our part in the Liberal Party—and I think I can say this for my colleagues and for my Party nationally—when all other things are equal and there is not a good, strong reason for a company to be owned by Government, then it is better to turn it over to the private sector. This should not be done at any price or on any basis but at a reasonable price and on a sensible basis. I contrast the pragmatism of the Liberal Party with respect to this question of privatization with the ideological bias which the Conservatives have. This bias sometimes distorts reality and makes it hard for them to appreciate when a company is better off and performing well in the public sector as opposed to how it will perform in the private sector.

Even in light of the remarks made by some members of the New Democratic Party with respect to this sale I can turn to the Party as a whole and say that before us is a profitable company, why turn it over to the private sector? As a Liberal, it does not trouble me at all that a corporation is turned over to the private sector from the public sector when it is profitable or because it is profitable. Indeed, it is hard to see why the private sector would want to take over a company which was either not profitable or did not have the prospect of becoming profitable.

Members of the New Democratic Party look at the situation from a socialist point of view. That is to say, if it is making money then why should that money not go to all taxpayers? Members of the New Democratic Party ask: Why should it go just to those who invest in the company? This point of view shows a lack of appreciation of the important, positive role which capitalism has played in developing the prosperity which we know in our country and that which is known in other capitalist countries. Members of the New Democratic Party missed that point, something which members of the Liberal Party could not miss. We certainly recognize that turning something over to the private sector when it is making a profit can be a good reason for turning it over. However, if a profitable company is to be turned over to the private sector then the taxpayers should receive a fair return for the stock in the company which they are turning over. With the way this deal has been presented to Parliament, even members of the Conservative Party have to admit there is no way that any non-Government Party can make a judgment about it. The Government is not giving us the facts that we need to determine whether or not a fair price is being paid for the company.

I have here a letter from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) written to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), on January 20, 1986. The letter states categorically that the Minister cannot provide the Member with a copy of the Arthur Andersen Report. It is the Arthur Andersen Report on which the Government has made the judgment that the purchase price being paid for the company is fair.

I will not go for the NDP line that there is no way that a profitable publicly owned company should be sold, but I do have to know, before I can put my seal of approval on a sale, that the taxpayers are getting a fair value for it. When a Minister of the Crown is refusing to give us a copy of the valuation of the company, what conclusion can be drawn, particularly with the track record of this Government?

This is a Government that has shown us much reason to be suspicious of the things it does. We know it works with its friends. We heard examples of that during today's Question Period. Tories are insiders and get the benefits. The example of how Tories choose the citizens who are going to be hired to work the census was brought to our attention today. We all know how important it is that the census have credibility.

When the Liberals were in Government, we established a written test for census workers. These people had to take the test and if they did not pass it, they did not proceed to the interview and they did not get the job.

Mr. Skelly: Liberal Party cards, Liberal donations.

Mr. Kaplan: The Conservatives still use the test, but people who have failed the test miserably but have the advantage of being the wife of the President of the Conservative Association in Cochrane-Superior—

Mr. Skelly: Sit down. The only thing is they are worse.

Mr. Kaplan: I am not speculating here. I am putting forward a documented case for which we have proof. My friends in the NDP are wanting to suggest that there is no difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the House is in fact being given correct information in the sense that the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Tories are not doing something that the Liberals did when they were in power.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that this is a point of order. I would ask the Hon. Member who has the floor to speak on the Bill.

Mr. Kaplan: I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are not objecting to what I am saying on the grounds of relevance. I want to show why the House is entitled to be suspicious when the Government tells us that this is a fair price but will not show us the facts on which it makes that judgment. I am suspicious because of the census issue and I have to say a few more things about it. When we were in Government, the Liberal Party established the test. When I was a Minister and when I was a back-bencher, I was asked to put forward names, as were other people, but if those people we recommended did not pass the test, they did not get the job. Now the Conservatives want to coast on the integrity of the Liberal procedure for hiring people for those jobs. Yet when well established Tories fail the test, they still get the job.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe we are going to hear a point of order on relevance, which I think is a well founded point of order. I would ask the Hon. Member to get back to Bill C-87.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it is a point of debate or if this is the subject we are debating today, but the Hon. Member is totally off base. He is well aware that the test is changed each year by Statistics Canada. He is well aware that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has the floor on debate on Bill C-87.

Mr. Kaplan: I know that the Member who just spoke is an honourable Member and I certainly trust him. However, I want to explain why the Canadian people, to an increasing degree, do not believe this Government and do not trust it. I just wish that that very trustworthy Hon. Member were a Minister. If he were a Minister, we might see more integrity in that Cabinet. We might have a more honourable Government than we do. When we hear how the Minister of Supply and Services condones a situation in which Tory hacks who have failed the qualifying test end up getting the jobs, we have to be suspicious.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First, it is a rather indecent suggestion to make that someone has failed a test when the Hon. Member has no evidence whatsoever to produce to the House. Why should he impugn the competence of private individuals in an attempt to make points on a specious matter in debate? This is not proper. You have warned him twice, Mr. Speaker. It is not fair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is a point of debate.

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to turn to the other reason which arose just this week and last week to justify our suspicion of the Government when it says the price is a fair one. The matter to which I wish to refer is the letter, now retracted, written by the Hon. Member for Québec East (Mr. Tremblay) dealing with the awarding of contracts of a value of less than $30,000. When I tell you the way the Government has handled this issue, Mr. Speaker, I think even you will want to agree with me that we are entitled to be suspicious about the price paid. In connection with the awarding of contracts of a value of less than $30,000, a letter was written by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry. I really do not believe that that is relevant. I understand what the Hon. Member is doing but I do not believe that this is relevant to Bill C-87. I could understand the Hon. Member making reference to it. However, I would not like him to go on with that matter in his speech.

Mr. Kaplan: I appreciate your observation that you can understand my referring to it. I had a lot I wanted to say about it but I will not do so because I appreciate your desire to see the debate proceed on the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited. I will not say more about it. I simply put it forward as another reason why the Canadian people do not believe the Government and why the Government's privatization policy to which I wish to return now is viewed with suspicion and alarm.

In the case of de Havilland, the first substantial company to be privatized, my own position was made well known in the House and in the country. We did not think that that company should have been sold to non-Canadians. I am glad to see that Canadian Arsenals is being sold to Canadians. With the de Havilland situation, we were able to force the Government to make much information public by the simple fact that some of it was leaked, and when I made it public, the Government was obliged to make the rest of it public to try to tell the whole story. In this case—

[Translation]

In this case, the file is slimmer and I have not yet had a copy of the Andersen Report and I doubt that one has been available to allow the public to make a judgment on the selling price.

To come back to the issue of privatization as such, everyone knows now, I believe, that the Liberal Government had developed a policy of selling a few Crown Corporations. We had created the Canada Development Investment Corporation and put it in charge of some of the Crown Corporations which were to be sold, but they would not have been sacrificed in some kind of fire sale.

• (1620)

[English]

When the Canada Development Investment Corporation was established by the former Government, it was done in a clear way of recognizing that there were companies owned by the Government which ought to be privatized. A strategy was developed and was in the process of being worked out which would have led to companies being sold. de Havilland and Canadair were in that portfolio. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South does not question at all my assertion that the Liberals also had an eventual plan to sell the companies owned by the Canada Development Investment Corporation. It was a questiuon of wanting to establish a basis for selling them. In the case of de Havilland, I feel that the sale should not have been made to non-Canadian buyers. A lot more preparation of groundwork should have been done to make it clear that the company had a bright future, that it was a company which would have found Canadians who were interested in buying shares. The employees and management at the plant, some of the suppliers and customers of that company and the public at large could have been brought forward as a group or individually in an effort to find a home for that company in Canadian hands.

Canadian Arsenals Limited or Arsenals Canada was not a company on the Liberal list to be sold. I think it is important to indicate the view of the Liberals. Although it was a private company, although it was doing something the private sector could do with the discipline of the bottom line, perhaps marginally better or a lot better than a publicly owned company could do, it was a company which was too close to national procurement to be sold. This was a company whose future, even if it were privately owned, depended totally or almost totally upon Government policy to be successful. When a company which is that close to the Government is put on the market and has private owners, it becomes a very difficult situation for the Government to live with, especially when the Government is the vendor of shares to the private sector. However much one might want to get away from it, the Government is underwriting the future of the company, so far as procurement is concerned, in the hands of the private owners.

There is another problem as well. This is a company which would not be allowed to go out and find other customers around the world. Obviously we would not want it selling to any of the enemies of Canada. For example, non-NATO countries or East Block countries might be willing to pay a lot for the products of the company, but Government policy would prohibit them from being sold. That type of limitation does not apply to normal companies in the private sector which have many opportunities to develop and sell their products. The activities of this company are just too close to Government policy and to Government procurement for the state and the taxpayers to feel comfortable with it being in private hands. What is the proper profit level? How much should the Government buy from it? Who should the other customers be? These are things which are not decided at head office as much as they will be decided in the Government. That was the Liberal reason for not wanting a company such as this one to be put on the auction block. I challenge the Government to show good reason for those considerations being wrong and why those considerations should not have been the ones brought to bear on a decision about the future of Arsenals Canada.

I see that my time has run out. I will certainly be glad to deal, as much as I can, with the questions of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I know that I cannot ever answer his questions to his satisfaction, but I will certainly entertain them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about the pragmatism of the Liberal Party and about how it had every intention to privatize companies. In the entire history of the Liberal Party, I do not think there was a single instance of privatization. It was a very pragmatic argument—when the companies were doing well, they were doing too well to be privatized; when they were not doing well, they could not be privatized unless they did better. The pragmatist's approach was never to privatize.

Also the Hon. Member suggested that if the company depended to a large extent on Government procurement or Government policy, the company ought to be in the hands of the state. On that basis, then, we should put in the hands of the state companies like Spar Aerospace and perhaps others which might be involved in producing ships for the navy and the like. The fact of the matter is that the state represents a major purchaser in our society. Government policy clearly declares how profitable a company will be, but there is no indication that the company should not operate in the private sector. After all, the state controls the effectiveness of that company. It controls whether the state will buy from that company or from some other place in the world. It controls to some extent where that company can sell, but not completely. It can sell its products to other people in the world, provided they are not banned by procurement arrangements or by Orders in Council.

The Hon. Member really said nothing to indicate why the company should not be sold. If he is a pragmatic Liberal, as he claims to be, then the company ought to be sold. The only question then would be whether it is a fair price. That is a question he will be able to determine as he determined on the de Havilland matter when it was before the committee. The House will recall that the Hon. Member said that de Havilland was being sold for less than the fair market value and that Canadians would pay more. When the witnesses appeared before the committee, they said that they were fortunate to get Boeing to buy de Havilland and that they could not have done better. Now the Hon. Member says that it was because it was a foreigner. The fact of the matter is that pragmatic Liberals are the same as the pragmatic or less than pragmatic socialists; indeed they are all the same.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I strained to hear a question in those remarks, but I want to respond to them.

An Hon. Member: It was a comment.

Mr. Kaplan: It was a comment; it was very well taken. Indeed the Liberals did sell corporations. If de Havilland was not sold, it was because the sale of de Havilland was premature. I feel that it was premature.

Mr. Blenkarn: What companies were sold?

Mr. Kaplan: The Northern Transportation Company and Nordair.

Mr. Axworthy: We put them on the block.

Mr. Kaplan: Perhaps it was a matter of signing the closing documents; that was done by the Conservatives. I will certainly say that the Conservatives have been much more aggressive about selling than the Liberals ever were. However, I think that aggressiveness is not healthy in the case of privatization. That aggressiveness in the case of de Havilland has resulted in a great loss to our country, however well de Havilland does.

I want to say to my friend, because I hope the opposite impression is not created, that I think Boeing is a wonderful corporation. Surveys conducted in the United States show that it is the sixth most popular employer in that country. I would not have wanted the company to be sold to the McDonald hamburger company, which I suppose is more popular. It is in the line of work, but I just felt, for all the reasons raised at that time, that the sale to a foreigner should have been the last resort of a desperate Government with a company with no prospects. None of those circumstances were justified. The Government was desperate, but it should not have been.

Mr. Darling: In whose riding is it?

Mr. Kaplan: de Havilland?

Mr. Darling: Yes.

Mr. Kaplan: It is in my riding.

• (1630)

[Translation]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I think that when the Hon. Member (Mr. Kaplan) spoke on this Bill, there was a great oxygen shortage.

[English]

If the Member recalls correctly, it was his Government which sold the other part of this organization to SNC. I believe Les Industries Valcartiers Inc., which produces small calibre ammunition, was sold by the Liberal Government with no protection for jobs or pensions and no basic concerns about employees. It is ironic to hear him stand in the House and criticize his bedmates on the other side of the House.

I was somewhat surprised, and realized at what a low level the oxygen in this place must be, when I hear him talk about patronage. When the Liberals left office they were probably the most accomplished dispensers of patronage in the free world. They moved out of the way to allow the Conservatives to start where they left off and to continue, until it has reached a disgusting level which is beyond belief. To hear the Liberals criticize patronage is astounding.

It is also a bit of a surprise that they do not recognize that in the mid-sixties they sold the other part of this ammunition supplying operation to the private sector with no controls whatsoever. I know that was attributable to a momentary lack of oxygen in this place and that the Member is now back to form and will try to explain that to the House.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the one point which the Member made which is worth dealing with is the issue of job guarantees. I think the NDP may be using that as a device to prevent privatization from ever taking place. What does a "job guarantee" mean? How can you ask a private purchaser to promise that every person will keep his or her job forever? It is impossible to ask a private purchaser to make such a promise.

If such a promise were made, when the collective agreement expired the employees, knowing that they could not be fired under this arrangement, could ask for any increase in salary that they wanted. It would not have to be reasonable or justified by profitability. When one pursues the logic of what the members of the NDP want, you see that they have come up with a seemingly logical way of trying to block privatization, but when one examines it, it falls to the ground. You cannot ask an employer to guarantee that every employee will keep his or her job forever.

However, you can ask the purchaser to do things in the future which, if they work out, will ensure that the company will have a future. That was my grave regret with regard to de Havilland. We could not expect Boeing to promise that every person would be retained in that company forever. How could it do that if the products did not sell, or if there was a recession? That is unreasonable. However, the Government did not ask Boeing to promise anything. It did not ask Boeing to promise to do research or development in Downsview. The Government asked for nothing other than a negative promise not to assemble de Havilland products anywhere else in the world. There were a hundred ways in which a Seattle lawyer could bypass that promise without Boeing having to do anything. There is a good Liberal ground for a sensible privitization policy between the NDP's request for guarantees of everything, which is unrealistic, and the Government's requirement of nothing at all in the way of commitment from the purchasers, but this is not it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to have an opportunity to speak today on Bill C-87. Since the format for a debate on second reading is that of the principle and context in which a Bill is developed, I am sure the Chair and my colleagues in the House will allow me a little latitude to develop the context in which this legislation appears in the House, in order to understand it better.

The comments of the previous speaker were important. He spoke at length about the philosophy of the Liberal Party with regard to privatization and nationalization, and criticized the New Democratic Party and our colleagues in the Conservative Party. The Liberal position, in all the time that that Party has existed, has been schizophrenic. If one were to label it, that is what it would be. I am sure my colleagues in the Conservative Party will agree with that. They stole a good idea from the NDP and, with absolute incompetence, implemented it and wound up with absolutely nothing that anyone could appreciate, except for the Liberal Party. PetroCan is one of many very good examples in the country.

I suggest that that is a real problem. In handling public sector operations the Liberals tried to perform like the Conservatives with ideas developed by the New Democratic Party. No one denies that there is a very important and relevant role for the private sector in the country. For a cabinet Minister from the previous Liberal Government to criticize others is astounding. Their period of penance is not finished. It is amazing that the leaders of that organization would allow any of the front-benchers of the previous Government even to speak in the House at this time. The reputation of that Government was so bad when it was hurled from power by the Canadian people that there can be no credibility in what it promoted in the last Parliament. I see that the previous speaker is hanging his head in shame and leaving, to the comfort of all other Members at the present time. He will be back in due course to make his contribution.

There is a definite solid role for the private sector in the country, which it does perform, sometimes harmed by the Government and sometimes aided by it. Let us make no mistake that when someone in that Party attempts to criticize the NDP for its support of the private sector it is complete nonsense and is known across the country as such. We will see in a short time that that is the case in Manitoba.

Canadian Arsenals has been sold to the private sector for $91 million. It was sold to the firm which bought the small calibre operation flogged by the Liberals in the 1960s. It now has an effective monopoly on the provision of ammunition in Canada. That is unfortunate because it creates an interesting position for the Government of Canada. If something goes wrong with the firm, where will the Government acquire the material? If the firm is not able to negotiate a successful contract with the Government of Canada and decides to close its doors, where will the Government go? Would the Government simply have to buy it back, or would it simply make a cost-plus arrangement as was done so often in wartime? We know what happened in the United States with that kind of formula. There was absolute rank privatizing by many corporations, which was the subject of many investigations and criticisms after the war.

I agreed with the previous speaker when he said that this firm is too close to the national interest. It is too close to public procurement to be sold to the private sector. After all, the Government produced its artillery shells and small calibre ammunition for its own Armed Forces. Then it suddenly decided that this single-customer operation should be in the private sector. It is absolute nonsense that the Canadian Government should be buying from that firm at cost. That is the first principle. This company is not a private sector operation. If it is in fact selling ammunition to the Canadian Government for the Armed Forces, it should remain in the public sector and should not be handed off, in whatever fashion, to the private sector.

The other important point is that this is a monopoly situation. This company sells to the Canadian Government as its exclusive customer. I presume that in the future that exclusive customer will have to pay an interesting price for ammunition. It will certainly have to pay the cost of production, which includes wages, pensions, research and development and raw material. In addition, the price of artillery shells for the Canadian Government is going to go up. It is simple mathematics, because the company will add its acquisition cost to the price of its goods. We are going to pay the cost of production and the cost of acquisition. Then we have an additional cost, that of the company's profit. Why should we pay a private sector company a profit on top of all this in order to acquire artillery shells for which we are the only market? That is absolutely irrational.

If the Government sells these products to our NATO allies—and I presume we are not going to sell to Khadafy, but I am never quite sure with this group sitting across the way—what kind of conditions are we going to extract from them? Or, is the Government just going to have some loose policy that it hopes the company will follow? What kind of control will we have over resales of this equipment by our NATO allies?

A very disturbing fact is that some of our ammunition has been found in the hands of the Nicaraguan Contras. That means this company must in some way have transactions with agencies which provide ammunition to the Contras to shoot at Nicaraguans. Is that government policy? Here is a group fighting against the elected Government of Nicaragua, actively involved in what I would say is despicable terrorism, using Canadian ammunition, and the Conservative Government has not done anything about it, to my knowledge. However, it may be that we are simply selling to our NATO ally, the U.S., which is trying to supply $100 million worth of aid to be used against the democratically-elected Government of Nicaragua. They know what kind of activity is going on there by the Contras and they would rather have Canadian ammunition and maybe European weapons found in their hands when they are taken by the Nicaraguan authorities.

That brings us back to the question of where the Government is going. Is the ammunition to be sold only to the Government of Canada? If that is so, we should own it. If it is not so and the company is going to be encouraged to market its products around the world, what is the limit? Certainly with the private sector mentality which is present in some sectors of the Government, I am sure an intermediary selling to Libya might be an acceptable operation as well. There has to be very tight control in this legislation over who the recipients of the production will be. Without that tight control there should be only one customer, the Government of Canada. It is my hope that when the committee studies this legislation it will come forward with recommendations to tighten up the Bill.

The previous speaker talked about a sort of mixed-bag approach to moving different Crown corporations into the private sector. He was very concerned about employment guarantees. He did not feel it was possible to guarantee employment. What he might have been saying is that it is entirely possible that SNC is unable to strike a bargain with the Government on the price and may shut the operation down and everybody will be out. Or it may suggest that if the Government cannot open up the market, then SNC does not want to continue producing because it is not worthwhile. It could say that if it cannot get a cost plus agreement, it is not worthwhile. There are many possible ways in which the existing jobs could be lost.

It is my understanding as well that there are serious concerns about maintaining existing pension plans for these workers. Perhaps some government members could stand up and tell us their understanding of how this would work. Will these employees continue to have their pension rights? What information are we going to get on that?

This Bill does not provide any benefit to these workers or the people of Canada. There is no single benefit which will come to the people of Canada because of this particular action. Instead, we are watching the Government fulfil an ideological fixation. Members opposite have two basic beliefs which I think are rapidly becoming apparent to the people of Canada. The first is that Government is bad and somehow you have to get rid of as much of it as you possibly can. The selling of de Havilland was a mistake but it did fulfil an ideological commitment to a very narrow group in Canadian society which this Government appeals to. A member across the way is shaking his head. He is upset about that. Certainly there was a great desire to get rid of the Liberal Government. That resulted in 211 Conservative Members of Parliament, the largest mandate in our history. To see it running through their fingers at an enormous rate is indeed sad to see. The Conservatives are at 36 per cent or 37 per cent in the Gallup polls. In Quebec the loss has been enormous. Since September of 1984 it has been a tragic disaster. There were many people in this country who had very high hopes that this Government would make a fundamental change in direction in a constructive way for the Canadian people. This is not a constructive direction. The people of Canada are giving a very clear message in repeated polls that it is not going to sit well when the Government comes to appeal for a second mandate.

The Ottawa Citizen recently listed many of the sins of this Government. Today was a beautiful example in the House of Commons. The Opposition was absolutely stymied. We would generally like to deal with one faux pas a day, but when you start getting two faux pas and three faux pas a day that are at the level of national issues it is astounding.

What is before us today is a faux pas. Canadian Arsenals should not be going to the private sector. If the House, in fact, were to hoist this legislation, or if it were simply to drop it, it would be doing a constructive thing for the people of Canada. There may be Crown corporations that can be sold off, that can be constructively put into the public sector, but this is not one of them. A large cross-section of people would support the concept that we should retain our principal source of artillery shells.

The second thing is that in no way should we be creating a private monopoly on the production of artillery shells and ammunition for our Armed Forces. Neither should we be forced to go outside the country to purchase that material. It is an extremely important consideration. It is not beyond understanding that this outfit could close down and we would be forced to organize another one in the public sector, so that is a mistake. The other aspect of it is that those jobs are important. We have no guarantees about pensions or benefits, and certainly we have no guarantees that the jobs will continue. This absolute carte blanche in putting this particular company into the private sector is absolutely wrong. It is my hope that Members on the Government side and Members on the Liberal side, certainly supported by the NDP, will not pass this Bill, or, hopefully, it will be dropped or hoisted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, before we vote on this Bill, I would like to ask my friend and colleague whether he can provide a bit more information on the protection given to the employees who will be directly affected if the proposal to sell goes through. I shall probably be voting against it, but I would like to ask him whether he can tell the House about the protection given to the employees.

Has he received from the Government or in his Party information saying that, whatever happens to this Bill providing for the disposal of Canadian Arsenals Limited, the employees will be or would be protected? Will the pension fund be protected?

[English]

Mr. Skelly: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), one of the very bright lights in the Liberal Party for a long time who has given it a solid sense of direction, and I think come to its support many times when the Government was running contrary to what many people felt was the commonsense approach, has zeroed in on a critical issue. Within the legislation we are concerned that there are not guarantees that will protect employment and pension plans—an extremely important question. If it had remained within the public sector there certainly would have been an opportunity for the Government to have a direct influence on levels of production and the nature of technological improvements. It could have guaranteed decent wages and working conditions, and it would have guaranteed pensions and benefits.

I suggest again that my colleague has zeroed in on a critical point, and I would have been certain that he would be supporting as well the position that we are putting forward on this matter.

Mr. Gauthier: On the last comment of the Member dealing with the pensions, the problem of course is the cross-over from public ownership to a private sector company. I am wondering if he would agree with us that indeed we have not had the information we requested. The Government has failed to come across with information dealing with the pension benefits that will be paid, and the indexing of pensions. I wonder if he would elaborate more on that and give us his view or his Party's view on this whole question.

Mr. Skelly: In terms of the sales of Crown corporations, this has been one of the very serious problems. The Government is not giving information on these sales. We do not know the value of this corporation in real terms. We do not know the conditions that will be imposed or removed from employees, and we certainly do not know what the future is going to bring for that group of people as they are cast out in a great deal of uncertainty. Where it does not make sense with this particular sale is that the client or the customer of this corporation is the Government of Canada.

Unfortunately, to reiterate some of the extremely important points, this Government is not only not providing Parliament with the information it needs to do its job, this Government talks of parliamentary reform and at the same time refuses to give to Members of Parliament the information they need to do the job. My hon. colleague from the Liberal Party has just mentioned the absolute travesty made by this Government in dealing with the de Havilland project. It refused to provide the background for Members of Parliament to do the job, in absolute contradiction of parliamentary reform. It is doing exactly the same thing with this proposal. In fact, this proposal is worse. I suggest to my colleagues over there that there are some serious steps that have to be taken by a Government that wants parliamentary reform, and the first important step is that Members of Parliament be given complete information, access to all government studies done, and a good briefing on its interpretation and what it anticipates will happen in terms of its actions.

So the information has to be given as well as the Government's position and intention, and those are not forthcoming in this particular incident. They were not forthcoming in an adequate and timely way on the de Havilland incident. One aspect beyond that is that in the previous Government—and I would suggest this as a very positive note about the Liberal party when it was in power—it was possible to obtain information from the Public Service in a rather open and fair way. The bunker mentality of the present Government is something to behold. It is virtually a matter of parliamentary privilege for Members of Parliament to secure information now that Members have been cut off from information. The information which comes to them is limited. We have a very, very serious problem on our hands that one day very soon will become the subject of a debate in this House. I am extremely pleased that the two previous speakers have raised this issue.

Mr. Keeper: I have a question for my colleague. I am sure that my colleague is aware that this corporation which is being given to the private sector for a token, earned a profit last year of $11.3 million. It is puzzling why this corporation is being sold to the private sector and why the public Treasury is losing $11.3 million a year as a result of this sale. I wonder if the Member sees any connection between the sale of this corporation to the private sector and the fact that thousands of dollars in campaign donations were given by the company that is buying this corporation to the Conservative Party and to the Minister of Industry.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, if I were to believe the letter put forward by the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) in which she advocated going out and recruiting people for the Conservative Party using public dollars, then this is an example of that type of mentality. She did not of course deny it; she simply said she made a mistake. My time is up. Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he can tell the House whether we shall continue the debate on this Bill tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock or whether we shall be going on to something else?

[English]

Let me repeat the question. I want to know if the Government will call the same Bill at eleven o'clock tomorrow. As you know, there is much interest in the Bill and we would like to proceed with this discussion. Will we be proceeding with this Bill or will it be something else?

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, we will be calling this Bill at eleven o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

INCOME TAX

PROVISION OF FUNDING FOR PEACE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation whereby the income tax form would provide a specific section enabling taxpayes, who so indicate, to have that percentage of total annual federal expenditures dedicated to national defence transferred to a peace tax trust which would provide funding for peace and disarmament research and education.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a timely issue of concern to us all, the survival of the human species. We live in a world where the two major powers have built up an arsenal of nuclear, chemical and biological destruction. In terms of the nuclear dimension alone, each superpower has the capacity to kill every man, woman and child 14 times over. It is totally unthinkable to even contemplate a global nuclear war. The lucky ones will be those who are killed immediately in such a confrontation.

Recently we have heard about the effects of a nuclear winter. Noteworthy scientists from both superpowers have predicted that a nuclear war would set off a nuclear winter that would destroy our weather patterns totally and make it impossible to grow crops and feed the remaining population. Nuclear war would destroy totally the social and physical connections within our country. Communication, electricity and gas lines would be totally disrupted along with our social network of hospitals and policing.

Of course, there are the long-term effects of nuclear war, including genetic mutations. In our age of increased nuclear testing above ground we saw dramatic increases in leukemia throughout the world.

There are generals from both major powers who suggest that a nuclear war is plausible and that a limited nuclear war can be won. Such a suggestion is unthinkable.

Let me quote from Lord Mountbatten who was actively involved in the two great wars as a commander. He stated on May 11, 1979:

As a military man who has given half a century of active service I say in all sincerity that the nuclear arms race has no military purpose. Wars cannot be fought with nuclear weapons. Their existence only adds to our perils because of the illusions which they have generated.

There are powerful voices around the world who still give credence of the old Roman precept—if you desire peace, prepare for war. This is absolute nuclear nonsense and I repeat—it is a disastrous misconception to believe that by increasing the total uncertainty one increases one's own certainty.

Despite the warnings of people like Lord Mountbatten, the arms race continues unabated. What makes rational human beings become involved in an arms race from which no one can emerge a winner? Surely it must be a sense of paranoia that exists both in the United States and the Soviet Union. In many ways, this paranoia is understandable.

Let us put ourselves in the position of the Soviet Union which has historically been surrounded by opposing forces. The Soviet Union is totally surrounded with nuclear warheads, missiles and submarines and is a country that lost many of its citizens in the last war. From that perspective, the origin of its paranoia is quite understandable.

When we put ourselves in the position of the United States, as most of us in the western world do, we certainly have a basis for fearing the might of the Soviet Union. We have seen how the Soviets have expanded their borders into Afghanistan, Poland and Czechoslovakia. While the origin of our paranoia may be understandable, we have reached the point where the paranoia of one nation feeds on the paranoia of the other, like two images reflecting in a mirror. The Soviets become paranoid as they seee Cruise missiles and stronger weapons being situated around their borders. Therefore, they take what they consider to be protective steps, through increased defences, which is perceived by the western world as an offensive build-up. Therefore, we increase our defence expenditures which leads to increased Soviet defence expenditures, and the spiral continues.

Surely we have reached the point today when the very survival of the human race stands at the brink, when enough armaments have been built up on both sides that a mistake, a misconception or a mad act can offset a chain of events that will totally destroy the human race as we know it.

Therefore, as parliamentarians, wherever we may live, there is no greater issue than the survival of our human race.

Let me introduce another dimension into this debate. It is the economic dimension. Conservative estimates indicate that the total cost of the arms race is close to three-quarters of a trillion dollars. It is not possible to remove a trillion dollars from the economy of the world without everyone paying for it.

We pay for it in terms of higher interest rates. For example, the American deficit is almost a trillion dollars, largely due to the arms race. It is so great that total U.S. savings hardly meet the interest on that deficit. Therefore, the United States must maintain a strong American dollar in order to attract capital from other parts of the world and service their debt. In order for Canada to keep some of that capital we must also raise our interest rates.

Interest rates are normally 2 per cent to 3 per cent above the inflation rate. Therefore, with inflation currently at 4 per cent, interest rates should be approximately 7 per cent. At 7 per cent, a lot of farms will be able to survive along with a lot of small businesses. A lot of people will be able to afford to buy a new car or a new home. All this economic activity could occur if it were not for the high interest rates.

I maintain that every Canadian on a day-to-day basis pays for the arms race through higher interest rates, unemployment and farm bankruptcies. We cannot take a $1 trillion dollars out of the world economy without the result of lower standards of living for all people throughout the world, Canadians, Americans, Russians and Europeans. It is a reduction of $1 trillion to all of our standards of living. That is the price we pay for this madness which any reasonable person must admit does not work. If these weapons are ever actually used it will mean our mutual destruction. What my motion is asking today is that those conscientious objectors, any Canadian who feels that our participation in this madness is not a very fruitful exercise, those people who feel, because if their religious beliefs and moral principles, that their tax dollars should not help to contribute to this dance of death, be allowed to have their money put in a peace trust.

The history of conscientious objectors is an honourable one stretching through the history of the human race. There are groups of people who believe that participating in wars and in the arms race is not the solution to the problems which create war. Some of us might disagree with that, but no reasonable person can object to allowing those members of our society to object in a conscientious way to the machinery of killing. It would enrich our civilization and make us as a more civilized society if we allowed those men and women, because of their consciences, to object to participating in this madness. I am asking for this for those enlightened Canadians who believe that more can be obtained to satisfy the security needs of Canada if we spend more money on peace research and find out how we can resolve the human conflicts which create war. Such things as checking up on compliance, what is the proper technology for that? It needs money, research, investment to develop educational programs so that people can stop thinking in terms of the "good guy—bad guy" scenario but will think, rather, in terms of co-operating. Those are the models which are needed if we are going to resolve the conflicts which create this potential for war.

There is a tremendous need for peace research. The only way we can save our civilization and our way of life is through peace. Yet that hardly receives any funding at all. I believe it is close to $300,000 per year. Of course, our military budget is much closer to $9 billion per year. As a country, we spend over $9 billion doing things which I would tend to think most Members of Parliament in their heart of hearts really believe is a futile effort. There is no defence in a nuclear age, only madness. But we continue to pour over $9 billion into this make-believe.

But there is an area in which we can have some effect, an area which can really help to preserve and save our way of life, that is, peace research, to which we now only give a token amount. I am asking for the support of my colleagues. I ask them to look favourably upon my motion and to pass it.

The Conscious Canada organization is not unique. There are some 17 countries with similar organizations. In fact, they have achieved some success in various jurisdictions. In Italy, some 17 taxpayers who had been charged with not paying their taxes because of conscientious objections, have been found by the Italian courts to be not quilty. Under the Italian Constitution, they are guaranteed the right of conscience. In the United Kingdom, Some 20,000 individuals, including 60 Members of Parliament, have a signed a document urging the Government to change its legislation to allow the people to not pay that proportion of their taxes which would go to military spending, and instead have it redirected to peace research. In the United States, the peace tax fund Bill is supported by 42 Members of Congress and four Senators. So the story goes through some 17 countries where there are organized groups of individuals who are attempting to redirect their tax money towards peace research.

I urge the Government to play a leadership role and Canada can play this very vital role. But here we stand between the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States. Our very survival is dependent upon peace. It is dependent on the hope that those powers do not use their weapons of destruction, because if they do, it will happen over our heads. It is in our immediate national interest to maintain peace so, therefore, it must be in our national interest to do everything possible to work towards peace and disarmament, to make certain that those two superpowers remain at peace with each other.

I ask my hon. colleagues to support me in my motion so that Canada can take its rightful place and play its rightful role as a peacemaker in this world and to do that not only in our national interests but in the interests of the whole human race.

Humanity cries for a country and a group of people to rise up and take that leadership role. I urge my colleagues to dare to be different. I urge them to state that the king is wearing no clothes, that the arms race is a make-believe world filled with tremendous fear and danger. I challenge my colleagues to stand up and dare to be different in this world and to help preserve the human race.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is further to the proposal of the Hon. Member for Regina Est (Mr. de Jong) for allocating income tax revenues to funding for peace and disarmament research and education. The Hon. Member is no doubt aware that according to one of the fundamental principles of our society, Canadians elect Members to speak on their behalf when decisions are made on matters such as the allocation of financial resources that are supposed to benefit all members of our society. In its present form, the Income Tax Act contains no provision that allows taxpayers to determine areas to which their taxes are to be allocated.

Any change in the allocation of personal income tax revenues, such as the proposal contains, requires an amendment to the Income Tax Act by an Act of Parliament.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is responsible both for proposing and amending tax legislation and will deal with the tax questions raised by this motion.

In any case, today, Canadians can actually obtain tax deductions by making donations to non-profit Canadian peace organizations appearing in directories such as "A Directory of Canadian Peace Organizations with International Concerns", published by the Mennonite Central Committee.

The Government believes that defence and peace activities are not mutually exclusive, and that an amendment to the Income tax Act is unnecessary, since Government expenditures can be balanced so as to safeguard the security of Canada and the Alliance, while at the same time taking advantage of every reasonable opportunity to advance the cause of arms control and disarmament and of world peace and security.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may explain how Canada is now advancing the cause of peace and security without having to de-allocate tax revenues earmarked for defence in order to subsidize organizations for peace research and education.

For 35 years, our security policy has been based on three complementary principles: Deterrence, within the context of the collective security provisions of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the North American Air Defense Command; seeking fair and genuine agreements on arms control; and finally, a commitment to peaceful resolution of disputes, including participation in collective efforts to deal with the underlying social, economic and political causes of international tension.

Canada recognizes the need for collective action to discourage acts of aggression against North America and Europe. It endorses and financially supports NATO's defence efforts, particularly those policies under which the Alliance must have as few as possible of the weapons required for effective deterrence, while at the same time seeking to establish a dialogue and reach fair, balanced and verifiable arms control agreements. In that respect, stability and security for all are the objectives.

We belong to an Alliance whose deterrence strategy rests on both conventional and nuclear forces. Deterrence must guarantee enough stability to enable us to negotiate international agreements on arms control. Each member of the Alliance must share the burden of collective defence while benefiting from its protection. Our direct contribution to deterrence and defence is to provide efficient conventional forces. Rather than a question of ethics, it is a matter of knowing how we can best contribute to our own security, taking our limited resources into account.

The Government has clearly indicated its intention of honouring its commitments to our allies in terms of contributing to the stability of East-West relations with respect to security, and this stability flows from a credible and effective deterrence position. We have decided to provide a defence budget which is big enough to guarantee the effectiveness of our contribution and reduce the vulnerability of our troops in the field. In short, Mr. Speaker, an effective defence paves the way to peace.

It must be said however that defence funds are used to finance various nonmilitary measures which directly benefit all Canadians and contribute to restoring peace. This brings to mind the planning activities of Emergency Canada. As to our armed forces, they perform a great many nonmilitary roles such as the evacuation of critically flood-striken communities, search and rescue operations, fishing patrols, air transport of supplies and medical assistance to countries hit by natural disasters like earthquakes, as well as many other emergency services.

As a sovereign nation, Canada must dedicate part of its resources to develop and maintain its defence capability. At the same time, it is second to none among nations for its efforts in promoting disarmament and arms control, as well as international peace and security.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with the six Canadian goals in arms control and disarmament, as spelled out on October 31 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before the Consultative Group on Disarmament and Arms Control Affairs, and more recently by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his speech before the House on January 23. They are: First, negotiated radical reductions in nuclear forces and the enhancement of strategic stability. Second, maintenance and strengthening of the nuclear non proliferation regime. Third, negotiation of global chemical weapons ban. Fourth, support for a comprehensive test ban treaty. Fifth, prevention of an arms race in outer space. Sixth, the building of confidence sufficient to facilitate the reduction of military forces in Europe and elsewhere.

Concerning the first objective, the Canadian Government welcomes the progress made in the bilateral negotiations held in Geneva between the United States and the Soviet Union. We fully support the goals agreed upon and deem as encouraging the detailed proposals made last fall by both parties. These proposals have certain points in common, Mr. Speaker, but like all Canadians, we fervently hope that negotiations will bring about fair and verifiable reductions of nuclear weapons.

In his statement of January 23, the Secretary of State for External Affairs welcomed with satisfaction the latest proposal of Secretary General Gorbatchev, who reaffirmed the commitment of the Soviet Union to nuclear disarmament. While this new proposal is silent on certain issues, such as the SS-20 missiles now deployed in Asia, it does provide some encouragement.

The second objective mentioned by the Secretary of State is the maintenance and consolidation of the non-proliferation regime. Last year, Canada took part in the Third Nuclear Weapons Non-proliferation Treaty Review Conference, which was a great success for all the countries. Indeed, the countries present at the Conference reaffirmed by consensus the viability of the Non-proliferation Treaty as an essential tool in maintaining world security. The success of this review process shows that multilateral diplomacy can have results when all the parties involved decide to cooperate instead of confronting each other. Canada confirms this success since two major objectives have been reached, namely the maintenance of the NPT as the main foundation of the non-proliferation regime and confirmation of the objective and provisions of the NPT.

The complete ban of chemical weapons is our third objective. We believe that this can be achieved at the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva. To support the ongoing negotiations, Canada has shared the knowledge it acquired following investigation of the use of chemical weapons and presented last year to the Secretary General of the United Nations a manual on how to carry out this type of investigation.

The fourth item on which Canada is working is the bringing about of a total ban on testing. Support for such a ban is a basic goal of Canada's foreign policy. However, it is our belief that the question of inspection is the major obstacle to be overcome. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has announced in September, 1985, at the meeting of the United Nations' General Assembly, that Canada would update its analytical capacity in the area of seismic research. To that end, we intend to enhance our major facilities in Yellowknife in order to be in a position to better discriminate between low-amplitude earthquakes from disturbances caused by underground nuclear testing.

In addition to that, Canada took part with 26 other countries in the international exchange of seismological data. That technical experiment has been a major step on the road towards the verifiability of a total ban of tests.

The fifth goal, that is the prevention of the arms race in outer space, is now on the agenda of bilateral talks in Geneva. In the multilateral context, Canada took the lead at the 1985 session of the Disarmament Conference held in Geneva by circulating a discussion paper on the International Law Aspects of Outer Space, thereby contributing to the substance of the discussion.

As a final goal, this Government feels it is critical to develop the measures of confidence required to bring about a reduction of armed forces in Europe and elsewhere. Confidence is fostered by political actions conducive to increased East-West co-operation, and strengthening the dialogue is one of Canada's major goals.

Peacekeeping is another key component of the efforts to establish international peace and security. One of the goals of Canada's foreign policy has always been to help strengthen the powers of the United Nations Organization, especially its capacity to control conflicts and act as mediator. This goal, which has been part of our general aim to work for peace and security, remains a valid one. In fact, it is in our own interests to stop regional conflicts before they can escalate and jeopardize our security or vital interests. Our military role in international peacekeeping operations helps prevent hostilities from spreading or breaking out, so that the underlying political problems can be dealt with through negotiations and the threat of direct involvement by the super powers kept to a minimum. However, Canada has never considered peacekeeping as a goal unto itself. Peacekeeping is aimed not only at preventing conflicts but also at creating a climate conducive to seeking solutions to the underlying problems. That is why Canada has always held the view that there should be considerable emphasis on the link between peacekeeping and the efforts deployed by all parties concerned to achieve peace.

Since 1947, Canada has participated in 15 UN peacekeeping operations. Outside the UN context, we have taken part in three similar missions, namely, the control commissions of 1954 and 1973 in Indochina and the international observers group in Nigeria. These initiatives were mostly financed from the Defence budget. During the past financial year, the Government of Canada has contributed over $41 million towards military salaries paid by the United Nations. These operations reflect the profound commitment and continuing contribution of generations of Canadians and successive governments to the peace objective.

Mr. Speaker, through various UN agencies, the Government has made a continuing contribution towards maintaining peace in all the countries of this world.

Not long ago, the Government demonstrated its commitment to peacekeeping. On April 11 last year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that Canada agreed in principle to take part in the multinational force and observers group based in the Sinai peninsula. The departments concerned are now considering how Canada can best contribute to the operations of the force, to replace the Australian helicopter unit of 100 men which is due to be withdrawn in April 1986.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to consider the means available to the Government to give direct support to organizations involved in peace research and education, and thus provide an argument against setting up the peace tax trust proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina-Est (Mr. de Jong).

During the current fiscal year, over $700,000 from the External Affairs Canada's Disarmament Fund will be made available to groups and individuals from all parts of Canada. Since its creation in 1980-81, the Fund has made it possible for over 149 groups, organizations and individuals to support and encourage the debate, research and supply of information on all issues related to disarmament and arms control.

The Department of External Affairs subsidizes also other research and public information activities in this area. The Verification Section of the Arms Control and Disarmament Division is responsible for the analysis of the verification process and developing techniques and approaches for verificating the enforcement of current and future arms control and disarmament agreements. In addition to research on seismic technology and means to investigate alleged uses of chemical weapons, this service is looking into the feasibility of a satellite monitoring system to ensure compliance with arms control agreements. As I have already mentioned, it recently presented to the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva a working paper on the nature of the judicial system that might apply to space beyond the atmosphere.

The Department of External Affairs also gives a permanent $100,000 annual grant to the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament. The Centre was established in 1983 and given the responsibility of organizing conferences and study groups on these questions.

The New Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security was created by Parliament in 1984 when all Parties supported the Bill shepherded by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Institute is directly funded by Parliament. Its budget in 1985-86 was $2.5 million and will increase to $5 million between now and 1988-89. It will seek to improve the knowledge and understanding of questions related to international peace and security within a Canadian context, and it will promote, finance and conduct research in those fields.

In 1983, 1984 and 1985 Canada gave a $100,000 grant to the World Disarmament Campaign. Our contributions will directly support world-wide public information and research activities. Our 1985 contribution was used to publish the Disarmament Yearbook, to finance the United Nations Institute for Disarmament, and to replenish the Voluntary Fund for the U.N. Decade for Women which we are celebrating this year.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Government is actively engaged in promoting peace and has earmarked sizeable funds to that end. In our opinion, the current Income Tax Act enables us to look after all matters concerning peace and security without the need to resort to the kind of measure proposed in the motion now before the House.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our caucus I should like to respond to the very heartfelt, informative, interesting and innovative proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). I believe that he captured in his remarks and in the intent of his motion a sense of concern or anxiety among Canadians far more than did the statement of the Government spokesperson who, in a somewhat self-satisfying way, said that enough was being done. The Hon. Member for Regina East properly captured the real feelings of people who say that not enough is being done, that far more must be done.

During the past year I had the opportunity to participate in the work of the Special Joint Committee on International Relations. We had the rare experience of visiting across the country and listening to literally thousands of Canadians present their concerns before the committee. It was instructive that the first person from whom we heard was a young school teacher in Halifax. He gave a very eloquent and moving address on star wars. Afterward I asked him what prompted him to make a presentation. He said that he was a school teacher and that his students had asked him about star wars. He was embarrassed at the time not to know anything about it and started meeting around the kitchen table with his friends. The more he examined the matter, the more he learned and the more he became concerned. Every Wednesday night they met around the kitchen table and began developing a series of ideas, analyses and information. Finally he appeared before the committee last July when it was on the East Coast. He talked about what they as a small community in Pictou county felt about star wars. That was not an isolated incident. It happened in many communities across the country. People would appear before the committee and say that more must be done.

The Hon. Member for Regina East properly expressed the imbalance in our commitments. People look around and see enormous sums being spent on armaments and in the nuclear arms race. They see the United States and the Soviet Union about to launch a new generation of the arms race with the proliferation and pollution of our outer space and the star wars program. They ask whether Canada can do more, whether we can find a way to turn the corner in a more meaningful way.

I am not saying that many of the efforts described by the Parliamentary Secretary are not useful. Of course they are useful, but they do not touch the deep undercurrent of unease and anxiety or that of hope and aspirations. Canadians believe that their country should be a peacemaker. As well, many people are asking what they can do to make a contribution, to do more.

I was partly dismayed at the committee hearing when we heard from the educators for nuclear responsibility, a group of school teachers from across the country. They said something which was very disturbing to me. They pointed out how difficult it was in the curricula of our high schools to get courses on arms control or on peace because they are considered by the school boards to be too controversial. Perhaps they represent too much of one side of the argument. When I visit the high schools in my riding every two or three weeks, I find that the students want to talk about one issue only. They do not want to talk about jobs. They do not want to talk about the environment, although they are concerned about it. They want to talk about the nuclear issue. Last Friday I visited Miles Macdonell Collegiate in my riding which was having a five-day teach-in on the issue of peace. They invited Members of Parliament to talk to them about what we thought was happening or where we could go. I was struck by the deep level of concern and by the willingness on the part of these young people to commit themselves. It is felt by thousands of Canadians that more must be done.

Does the legislative proposal of the Hon. Member for Regina East properly give form and substance to what must be done? In part I am attracted to the idea, but I have reservations on one ground—I think it would let the Government off the hook. If we resort to a form of populism or participatory democracy in the classical Greek sense where individuals make up their own minds—and I do not object to that—it means that the Government of Canada loses its obligation to make a choice for Canadians. That is what Parliament is all about. I want the Government to make different choices. I want Members on both sides to make different choices. I believe we are not making the right choices any longer. We should have the opportunity to debate the Estimates of the Department of National Defence. The defence Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) should appear before the committee to explain their actions because they can easily forgo, evade or avoid their sense of responsibility.

I should like to refer to an example. Recently we received a report of the committee of NORAD which recommended that we sign up for another five years. To my unhappiness they indicated that there was not sufficient evidence to register a concern about the shifting sense of strategic thinking in the United States, moving from a sense of deterrence toward an active defence system. There was a multitude of testimony to show that this is what in fact was taking place. The Americans are making major commitments here and now to a very active defence system which will result in the fundamental militarization of Canadian territory, a vast network of active defence systems. That is a choice which Canadians should be making. It should not be made for us. It should not be made piecemeal. It should not be made in Washington. It should not be made in the NORAD headquarters. It should be made in this Parliament. However, it will only be made if Canadians understand what is going on. This means that the Government has to rid itself of its secretive attitude about what is taking place and start divulging far more of what it knows about the plans.

We must also look at the alternatives. If we say to the Americans, who are our allies, that we will not fully integrate our defence system with theirs if they go ahead with star wars, it means that we must put something in its place. We must put forward an alternative for the northern part of North America. As the Senate recommended a few years back, perhaps we must have our own form of satellite detection. We must develop an alternative to the proposals being put forward by the United States Defence Command. That is the important choice. It may mean that we have to utilize defence expenditures in a different way. We may not have to utilize them in a conventional or routine sense of going along with the conventional wisdom. We may have to establish a more independent defence posture in order that we can provide a bargaining position, a sense of leverage, with the United States in this very important and very crucial strategic security choice.

If the Hon. Member had his way and all those good minded Canadians who are very concerned about the arms race in effect abdicated and pulled out their money, there might not be money to provide the counterweight or counter ploy to the star wars program. That is a choice which should be retained in the hands of the Government, and it should be answerable for it. I agree fully with the stated purpose of the Hon. Member, that much more must go into the research and development of alternative techniques. One of the last acts of the Liberal Government, of which I was very proud, was the establishment of the Canadian Peace Institute with an endowment of $5 million. I am pleased to say that the successor Government continued with that initiative. However, it is not enough; it is just a beginning.

Let us look at the tremendous appetite or hunger on the part of Canadians for more information. There is a tremendous ability in the number of peace groups across the country; there is individual time and talent; there are our educators and numbers of groups, ploughshare groups and others; and there is a kind of force they could bring to bear. We must find a better way of financing their efforts, a far more independent way so that they do not feel totally beholden to the Government. There must be an independent body which provides them with funding. They must feel far more free to undertake the kinds of investigation about which the Hon. Member talked. I fully agree with him. I would be prepared to say that perhaps we should look at the tax system to see if a more generous deduction could be allowed. It could be similar to the system of financing political Parties; that might be an alternative. I am not here to prescribe it, but I am saying that it is worthy of examination.

I see the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence sitting opposite. Perhaps he would be prepared to take the question of peace education as part of his agenda for the committee in years ahead. It is critical and Canadians want it. However, if we follow the total advice of the Hon. Member, although I fully agree with his intent, in a sense we may be denying ourselves in Parliament the responsibility we need to make some very fundamental choices. For that reason, I express that reservation without expressing any reservation whatsoever about the intent, purpose, and objective of what he does.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, having expressed that reservation, we must still recognize that it is time for Parliament to have a much broader and more significant debate about the arms race and what we are doing, as a country, in the nuclear age. Canadians are far ahead of their Governments and this Parliament in expressing their concerns. They are leading us. One of the reasons is that we have not had an opportunity in this House to have a full-scaled broad-based debate about where Canada will go in the 1990s with regard to the matters of which the Parliamentary Secretary spoke, but which we have had very little opportunity to debate in the House.

I again recommend that Members of the Government side, who I know also feel very deeply about these concerns, represent to their caucus that it is time for Parliament to provide some leadership rather than to follow. It is time to let individual Members speak their minds and fully express what is in their hearts on this very fundamental issue. I compliment the Member for Regina East for at least giving us an hour of parliamentary time to do that. I wish we had an hour every day to do this. I wish this were an ongoing debate. If we had an ongoing debate, we may be able to accomplish what so many Canadians, particularly young Canadians, want us to do. They want us to find some answers to this very complicated, deep, and abiding issue which affects us all.

I want to extend to the Hon. Member my appreciation for his motion. Even though I have reservation about the actual technique, his objective is right. It behooves us, as Parliamentarians, to countenance his words and see how we can provide more leadership and direction in this very crucial issue.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. The issues raised by this motion are important and fundamental. For that reason, I do not apologize if my remarks today are similar to those expressed in this House last September 26 when we debated virtually the same proposal.

I have concerns about this proposition, albeit not about the ultimate goal of promoting peace and disarmament. It would be hard to take issue with the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) on that most desirable objective. However, the method he is proposing in this motion is not one which this House should adopt. There are important issues of tax policy and fiscal policy which argue against adoption of this particular proposition. There are also important questions of parliamentary democracy which are involved, questions about the way in which our society tries to live together and govern itself.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will not hesitate to be repetitive today and to discuss the same issues as we debated last September on a similar motion of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). The sponsor of today's motion was repetitive in the same way. I can only regret that our arguments of six months ago did not succeed in changing his mind. We will try again today.

First, I would like to deal with an unfortunate implication in the wording of this motion. It contains the idea that somewhere there is a fundamental opposition between the search for peace and disarmament and our expenditures on defence. What kind of conclusion is a taxpayer likely to reach if, on his T-1 tax return form, we present him with the option of earmarking 10 per cent of his income tax, or whatever percentage of federal spending goes to defence, to be spent instead on peace and disarmament, research and education? Is the taxpayer not likely to conclude that these two fields, defence and peace, are considered by the Government to be diametrically opposed?

I am in no way arguing that a valid case cannot be made for conscientious objectors, those who for strongly-held personal principles are opposed to serving in active combat where they could be called on to take another's life in defence of their country. However, that is in wartime. We are at peace now, and there is no contradiction in the position taken by the Government and accepted by a great majority in this House and across the country that our defence dollars are being spent to maintain peace and to prevent war.

Our defence expenditures reflect the long-standing Canadian policy in support of national and international security. For years Canada has played an honourable international role in seeking peaceful settlements of conflicts between countries. Our support of NATO and NORAD reflects the broadly-based public recognition that those alliances serve to enhance international security. I recognize that the New Democratic Party does not accept that position and would have Canada withdraw from the western alliance. However, I do not think that their position goes so far as to call for abolition of Canada's defence forces. This motion does not advocate such an extreme step. I think the reason for that is clear. The NDP, like the rest of us, recognize that our defence forces serve Canada's vital national interests in many ways.

If the New Democrats, by some strange chance, were ever called upon to form a government here, I wonder whether that Government would really adopt the principles which this motion advocates. This motion calls for a system of opting out which involves an issue that affects our national well-being in a very vital way. I do not think that this way of doing things is part of our system of parliamentary democracy. In our society, democracy involves much more than just the idea that the majority rules and imposes its view on the minority. Canadians have always sought tolerance. Through public debate we have sought to develop policies which take differing views into account, and we seek solutions with which everyone can live.

In the debate last September 26 on his motion, which is virtually the same as the one before us, the NDP Member cited the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. He argued that freedom of conscience and religion, as protected in the Charter, should allow citizens to opt out in this way from financial support of a major sector of Government activity. I remind the House that the rights and freedoms in the Charter are conditional. They are "subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society".

In our democratic society, we are all subject to reasonable limits on our freedom of conscience, religion, and self-expression. This simply means that tolerance must work both ways. The majority must be prepared to listen to individual differences, but at the same time the individual must recognize that there have to be broadly-accepted rules which apply to all in our society. I do not believe it is unreasonable to expect all citizens to bear their fair share of the cost of Government services provided for the common good. It is not unreasonable to say that a democratic Government should decide, in the final analysis, where and how those public funds are spent. I re-emphasize that in our democratic society those decisions are made after the widest public debate with sensitivity to differing viewpoints.

The premise of this motion would allow any special interest group in the country to put forward a similar motion. If they were against abortion, they would want their funds to be earmarked for anti-abortion programs. If they were in favour of capital punishment, they would want their funds to be earmarked for that purpose. There are many special interest groups which would like to have their tax dollars earmarked for their special projects. Yet, we are faced with the reality of having to maintain the defence of the country. The previous Government took the strict diplomatic route and totally ignored the physical defences by which we maintain the safety of the country.

We must remember that the Russians understand only one thing; a position of strength rather than weakness. If you have any doubt, talk to Poland, East Germany, the Ukraine, Hungary, or Czechoslovakia. These countries lost their freedom to the Soviet Union, which has very little sympathy at the negotiating table for the rights and liberties of the people in these countries. It is vital to the safety and well-being of our country that we ensure that we are wise stewards of our tax dollars. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the best position for peace is a position of strength. If we do not prepare adequate defences for the country, we could find ourselves in the same predicament as so many other countries find themselves.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION—LOCATION OF NEW UNITED STATES EMBASSY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is my first experience with an adjournment debate as a follow-up to my question on February 24 to the Acting Minister of Public Works and I intend to get to the heart of my extremely serious concern quite quickly.

The National Capital Commission will be making a fundamental planning and political error if it recommends to the Government that the Mile Circle be used to house embassies. The local, regional, and indeed national outcry of total opposition to this proposal should in itself be a proper, clear, concise message to the Commission that it is making a big mistake. The duly-elected representatives of the four levels of Government directly affected are unanimously opposed to the proposal. Those representatives are myself at the federal level, Mr. Gilles Morin, the provincial Member, Mr. Marc Laviolette, the local alderman, and the Reeve of Rockcliffe Village which borders on the site, Mr. Pat Murray. There is no local political will for this project, why should there be a bureaucratic administrative one?

The Mile Circle land has been held in trust since 1904 by the federal Government as parkland. I cannot believe that today, in 1986, with all of our collective knowledge and experience, that the Commission is actually threatening to destroy these parklands. I cannot accept the arguments that any development will be done in such a way as to maintain open spaces and a parkland setting. That is impossible since thousands and thousands of tons of concrete and steel will be sewn together by architects, engineers and construction workers to build embassies on the Mile Circle.

My professional background is in conservation and tourism development, and I know what impact infrastructures can have on parkland. If parks are for people, and I truly believe they are, then you put any or all development outside of them. Thomas Keefer meant for the Mile Circle to be used by people—people of all ages and from all places, not just from the National Capital region. The National Capital Act of 1958, Section 10(1) states:

The objects and purposes of the Commission are to prepare plans for and assist in the development, conservation and improvement of the National Capital region in order that the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada may be in accordance with its national significance.

I have received letters from across Canada opposed to this proposal from Canadians who feel that the Commission is compromising one of its fundamental philosophies, namely to conserve many of the natural parkland settings of our great capital. I am very proud of our magnificent city and I credit the Commission with making it that way. I, for one, want to keep it that way. In 1972 I defended Banff National Park from being raped by tourist developers. As someone who has lived in Ottawa all my life, I am proud to defend the Mile Circle Park from being raped by the Commission. This act of short-sightedness must be stopped. There are certain sections of our city that are sacrosanct, and this is one of them.

The Policy for Parkways and Driveways, published by the NCC as approved in July, 1984, the official plan of the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton as approved by the Province of Ontario in November, 1983, and the official plan of land use of the City of Ottawa, published in June, 1984, all state their commitment to the public open-space corridor along the Ottawa River, with the Mile Circle as part of this landscape conservation. These are commitments made to their constituents by three levels of Government. If the federal Government places embassy offices on this land, it would be an expression of contempt for the due process of planning.

Treasury Board wants to raise new revenue by selling some land, and I think we will all agree that this is worth while. However, for the sake of financial expediency, this particular case is not in the national interest. Is the NCC willing to reopen the terms of reference for the contract to study the Mile Circle site so that it would include the study of other potential sites as well? Will the Commission be willing to consult or will it not consult beforehand with community groups on such projects?

Is the Commission prepared to put its final selections through the due rezoning process required of all other citizens by the City of Ottawa and the Province of Ontario? If not, what form is there for the citizens of this region to participate in major rezoning projects by the Commission? Will the Commission seriously consider an appropriate site on the Rockcliffe Air Base as a timely alternative to the Mile Circle? My last question is: Will the consultant report on this proposal be made public?

In conclusion, let me congratulate the tremendous efforts of the Save the Mile Circle Committee for their work, and to my executive in Ottawa-Carleton for unanimously supporting my opposition to this project. If this proposal is part of the vision for our capital, then I cannot see very clearly.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to first compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), for his diligence and commitment not only to this House, but outside the House and in caucus. His record is well known to his constituents.

As you know, there are no simple solutions to a complex issue such as the site for the U.S. embassy. The process that we are going through is lengthy. We are dealing with an issue of major national importance. We are also dealing with the very real concerns that were expressed and which all committees face in an evolving capital city. All of us need to share the responsibilities as well as the benefits of living in a capital city in the late 20th century. The relocation of the American embassy has a very long history. I do not want to bore Members with the endlessly long details of the events which followed the evolution of this issue, but I would like to point out a couple of significant highlights and events.

The relocation of the embassy first arose in 1969 when the embassy proposed to expand its facilities along Wellington Street to meet the growing accommodation requirements. However, this property was considered to be of paramount importance in meeting the accommodation needs of Parliament. The Government of Canada subsequently proposed to find another site to which the American embassy could be relocated. As the federal Government's agent responsible for creation of the capital, the National Capital Commission was charged with finding an appropriate site.

Until about a year ago, it was considered that a top priority site would be the one on Sussex Drive, north of the Connaught building. However, the U.S. Government imposed regulations for locating new embassy buildings. Obviously we know why. The NCC was asked to add additional criteria to the list for site selection. These new criteria for site selection included among others: a minimum site area requirement of at least six to eight acres; no tall buildings adjacent; and a buffer zone all around the embassy.

In all, 12 major criteria were used in evaluating some 20 sites in both the Quebec and Ontario parts of the National Capital Region. During the process of site evaluation, a certain number of sites were rapidly eliminated. Selections of these sites would throw into question a number of long established fundamental capital planning principles, as pointed out by my colleague. These principles include, among others, preservation of our river front properties. This exclusion is consistent with the NCC long-standing policy to retain federal river front land in Canadian ownership for public use. This policy acts to ensure direct access by the public to the river shore. The remaining candidate sites were considered in detail, and the Mile Circle was selected as the site which best met all criteria.

As part of the site selection process, the NCC has retained the services of a consultant charged with carrying on a detailed site analysis. This analysis includes such matters as the suitability of land use arrangements in the Mile Circle, environmental impact, landscape design and ecological considerations. The study should be completed by spring. At that time the NCC intends to recommend a specific site in the Mile Circle area. The Canadian Government may then exchange this site with the American Government for the U.S. embassy land and buildings on Wellington Street.

It is my sincere hope that at the end of this process we will have produced a site development concept for the Mile Circle which enables the Government to meet its national and international obligations. I am sure that I need not remind my hon. colleagues that the Government of the United States spared no effort in providing our own Government with one of the most prestigious sites for our embassy in the City of Washington. In this context, I would call on the citizens of this great capital city to recognize their shared role and responsibility in this international dimension of the capital.

MULTICULTURALISM—PRESERVATION OF IMMIGRANTS' HERITAGE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a while ago I asked the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) about the Government's plans to continue providing strong encouragement for the cultural heritages of immigrants to Canada. The Minister assured me of the Government's commitment to retention of cultural heritages, and that he was in the process of reviewing the funding criteria for those programs encouraging the retention of ethnic culture.

Multiculturalism is a very important aspect of our lives. In fact, multiculturalism is part of what it means to be Canadian. In my riding of Don Valley East, one of its most exciting features is the cultural diversity.

My wife, Sandy, and I can recount many close friends from varying cultural backgrounds. George and Penny Poulos are of Greek heritage. Jay and Ann Hong are from South Korea. Rhett and Betsy Abarquez's roots are in the Philippines. Incidentally, one can imagine how thrilled they are with the new democratic Government of President Corazon Aquino. Garo and Zaro Pashayan are proud of their Armenian heritage. Mrs. Setsuko Thurlow of Olsen Drive is a survivor of Hiroshima. Frank and Judy Wilson are recognized leaders in the Jewish community. Vincent and Agnes Ching cherish their Chinese heritage, having been born in Hong Kong. George and Margaret Hayling from the black community take great pride in being from Barbados.

The peaceful coexistence of people of diverse races and cultures, bonded by common citizenship, not only fosters social cohesion and national unity, but also creates the basis for the eradication of prejudice and bigotry. The cultural diversity of Canada is as much a part of our national identity as regional diversity.

This diversity has been a factor throughout the history of Canada. Our nation was founded on the basis of cultural pluralism. The subsequent arrival of immigrants from many countries added to the pluralistic nature of the developing Canadian society.

The multicultural nature of Canadian society was officially recognized in 1971, when the House of Commons gave unanimous consent to the Government's response of the 1969 report on the "Cultural Contribution of the Other Ethnic Groups" of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism established in 1962.

The Government adopted an official policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework. In 1972, the Multicultural Directorate was established within the Department of the Secretary of State, and a Minister of State for Multiculturalism was appointed. In 1973, the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism was established. In 1983, this Council was revitalized and restructured to become the Canadian Multiculturalism Council, or the CMC.

In 1982 the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was proclaimed. Section 27 reads: "This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians".

In May of 1985, the first deferal/provincial/territorial conference on multiculturalism was held. Employment Equity legislation was passed by the House of Commons. Also, in response to the recommendations of the "Equality for All" report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights, a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism was established. With the inception of this committee, everything pertaining to multiculturalism can be examined in depth. The mandate, to encourage and monitor the implementation of the principles of the multiculturalism policy throughout the Government of Canada, is a great responsibility and, indeed, a great opportunity. I am proud to be a founding member of this Standing Committee.

The Government's policy on multiculturalism is to help to preserve and enhance the traditional cultures; help members of the enthocultural minorities to develop the skills they need to participate fully in Canadian society and the economy; help all Canadians to recognize the multicultural nature of the country and to adapt themselves and their institutions accordingly. This provides a solid framework for all Canadians.

• (1815)

Canadians are proud of their origins and cultural heritage and wish to retain this essential part of their identity. The retention of cultural heritage is very important, not only to the various ethnocultural groups but to Canadian society as a whole. We are all enriched by cultural diversity. Indeed, our own family is expanding its cultural roots. While Sandy's parents were born in Scotland, my mother is of Irish descent and my father of English descent. Our younger daughter,

Leslie, married John Strolenberg, who was born in Holland. Our elder daughter, Pamela, married Mark Zaorski, who is of Polish-Irish heritage. Therefore we are developing a rich diversity within our own growing family.

As the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) has pointed out recently, multiculturalism encompasses all aspects of our lives. It has to do with jobs and rights as well as cultural retention. It must become both a social and economic reality. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated, and I quote:

> There is no obligation more compelling, no duty more irresistable than to ensure that our minorities live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice.

It is a cornerstone of multicultural policy that there shall be no barriers to prevent Canadians, whatever their origins, from enjoying all the rights and privileges of citizenship.

In closing, may I say that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism in recent statements has spoken about the need to bring ethnic minorities more fully into the economic mainstream of Canada. Multiculturalism, in addition to its widely perceived value as a cultural asset, also makes good business sense. It is also a decisive advantage in a highly competitive economic environment. One way to create economic opportunity is to take greater advantage of the talents and resources of our ethnocultural communities. Over half of all small businesses in Canada are run by members of ethnocultural communities. In recognition of this fact, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism is sponsoring a conference in April called "Multuralism Means Business". I am very proud to be a part of this Government for its initiative in the field of multiculturalism and I look forward to even greater things to come.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am equally proud of the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) for raising this matter which allows both of us to put on the record what means so much to us, the multicultural nature of this country. As the Minister of State for Multuralism (Mr. Jelinek) said in reply to the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) last November 5, 1985, and I quote from page 8372 of Hansard:

> I am very happy to see an interest in this important matter coming from this side of the House as opposed to the Opposition Parties.

I strongly concur with the Minister's statement. Like the Hon. Member for Don Valley East, I have, as I am sure have many Hon. Members of the Government, a multitude of ethnocultural groups, a veritable treasure-trove of different languages and foods in my riding. I think at one time I came up with 52 different ethnocultural groups which reside within the Hamilton-Wentworth region alone. There must be as many more ethnocultural groups and nationalities in Metro Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal and other parts of this country. Not one of those peoples would see any conflict in being a Canadian first, yet the wonderful mosaic that makes up my own region stems from the fact that they retain their cultural heritage and roots and wonderful sense of their homelands. That makes up the fabulous cultural mosaic in our region.

I do not see the sense of Canadianism and homeland feeling as being mutually exclusive, nor do I see this as crossing any kind of political boundaries, although, as I said at the outset, I do agree with my Minister that no one opposition Party should presume to represent these people exclusively. From a Government point of view, it is entirely possible for the Government to be receptive to the idea of cultural pluralism, the preservation of fundamental concept of national unity.

Nobody should be obliged to suppress cultural identity. By emphasizing the need for all Canadians to have equal opportunity to participate actively in the economic life of the country, the Government regards as essential the playing and the maintenance of identity, the playing of all of these ethnocultural groups in the wonderful multicultural nature of this country of ours and in our future.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, the motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.21 p.m.

PROGRAM REVIEW

TABLING OF MINISTERIAL TASK FORCE STUDY TEAM REPORTS

Mr. Deans: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know the Minister is going to table his documents but I would like to ask him if he could assure the House that there is no duplication, other than the necessary duplication to guarantee that each of the documents will be presented in both official languages, that each document stands on its own merits, and that there are no more documents in that pile than are required to meet the requirements of tabling in each language.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Oh they of little faith.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour to lay upon the Table, in both official languages, copies of study team reports of the task force on program review.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I asked for that assurance for a reason. As you know, Sir, it is not appropriate to have a demonstration in the House of Commons. I sought assurance from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) that each document was a single document in either French or English, and that there was no duplication for the purposes of demonstrating in the House of Commons, for whatever purpose. The Deputy Prime Minister did not assure me of that, I noted. I looked at the documents and there are in fact duplicates.

Mr. Nielsen: That is absolutely false, Sir. The tabling is strictly in accordance with the requirements of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. Absolutely.

Mr. Deans: Why didn't you say so?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Read them all, Ian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: You take a look at the French Transport report.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

STATEMENT BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER—STUDY TEAM REPORTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to have tabled today the reports of the study teams of the task force on program review. The volumes that I have tabled represent the combined efforts of 221 individual Canadians who have reviewed nearly 1,000 programs and services in the federal Government. Perhaps that is some explanation for the hon. gentleman.

Over half of the men and women who were involved in the work of the study teams were recruited from the private sector. These men and women came from Victoria to St. John's, left their jobs and their families to serve their country without remuneration, each for three months. Among those who so served were senior executives of major corporations and small businesses, labour leaders, city administrators, and provincial deputies. I want to take this opportunity to formally recognize the debt of gratitude the Government and the country owe these outstanding Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Like the review itself, the output of these individuals is unique in the annals of Canadian public administration. Never before has there been such a broad representation from outside Government in such a wide-ranging examination. The release of the work of these mixed study teams is a public acknowledgement of their extraordinarily valuable contribution. Each study team reviewed the array of programs within their area of examination and prepared assessment notes on each program, presenting options for improvement and reform. In addition, the study teams prepared thematic overviews to describe their over-all assessment of program groupings. These study team reports were then referred to the Private Sector Advisory Committee comprising 12 representatives of labour, business, and professional organizations. The organizations themselves selected the representatives of their respective organizations to serve on that Committee. I would like to acknowledge these individuals and their sponsoring organizations for their outstanding leadership during the past year.

This private sector advisory committee met every Monday throughout the year-long course of program review and acted as a further review mechanism to the work coming to it from the 19 individual study teams. The study team reports I have just tabled today are the final product of this process of consultation and co-operation. Philip Aspinall, Chairman of the Private Sector Advisory Committee, and Darcy McKeough, the Private Sector Liaison Advisor, will be meeting the media shortly to describe in more detail the work of the study teams. I would, however, like to take a few minutes to highlight some of the major observations of this work.

The Government of Canada has for decades been functioning in a twilight of partial information, overlapping responsibilities, and organizational inefficiencies. This condition has allowed structural distortions to creep into our economy and our society. Canadians deserve to know more about the myriad of programs and services they pay for. After a little over a year of careful examination by mixed teams of private and public-sector analysts, we know much more than any Government has ever known before.

This Government is not the first to discover the necessity for a wide-ranging, unfettered and objective analysis of the federal public administration. Over the years a number of studies, including the Glassco Commission and the Lambert Commission, described this situation. Several years ago the Auditor-General concluded that the management of Government was "out of control". During the summer election campaign of 1984, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who was then Prime Minister, recognized the dimensions of the problem when he said:

> There is a lot of space to reduce and cut expenditures and duplications: programs which are no longer in force, which are no longer pertinent, wastages in public administration.

[Translation]

What is unique in this case is that a party newly in power took advantage of this opportunity to open the doors and conduct an independent analysis in co-operation with the private sector. In other words, to welcome new ideas. And today, by publishing the conclusions of the study teams, we are opening those doors even wider.

• (1110)

[English]

A central conclusion of the study teams, and one with potentially profound implications, is the degree to which there has developed a vast array of government programs that are designed to subsidize activity rather than results, effort rather than success. Few who take the time and spend the effort to read the study team reports could dispute the observation that we have become a nation of what I call program junkies. In the absence of a full comprehension of the extent, nature and content of government programs, past Governments have felt little reluctance to use subsidies as a blanket solution to many problems of society. Therefore, government spending, including tax expenditures, has been expanding with the inexorable growth of a rolling snowball.

As I have said, the implications are profound, for the analysis I have just described reflects how dependent on government Canadians have become. The elements of this conclusion were evident from the first study team report, when those examining business services and subsidies observed that the Government has been "giving with both hands". However, it was important to await the observations of all the study teams before coming to any over-all conclusion.

My decision as chairman of the task force was not to pre-empt or to prejudice the work of study teams by releasing reports throughout the year. For this reason, I felt it was desirable that the reports be published together.

The study team reports and their options represent the first orderly step toward cabinet discussion. They do not represent government policy nor are they decisions of the Government. The reports provide the basis for discussion of the wide array of programs which exist throughout government and provide a valuable tool in the decision-making process.

Having said that, it is obvious from announcements already made throughout the past year that the business of governing has proceeded responsibly, while the review has been underway.

The decisions that have already flowed from the process of program review are of the following nature.

Decisions have been made on programs and services where the focus is primarily on the internal administration of federal Departments and agencies. Examples are in the area of regulatory reform, real property management and veterans' programs. In addition, a limited number of decisions have been made with implications for the provinces. These were in areas largely where we had confidence from our continuing federal-provincial consultations that the provincial Governments concurred with our direction. Examples include the Canada Assistance Plan and housing programs and devolution to the provinces in small cases under DRIE's Industrial and Regional Development Program.

On behalf of the Prime Minister, I have given written assurance to the provinces that no unilateral decisions will be taken by the federal Government and that advance consultation will occur before federal programs are revamped in ways that affect the provinces—especially where provincial Governments share program costs.

It should be noted that in making decisions the federal Government has not, and will not, be bound just to the options put forward by the study teams. A close reading of these reports will show that independent study teams, working within their individual terms of reference and examining the same programs, can come to different and sometimes contradictory conclusions. This only confirms the autonomy of individual study teams.

While the Government will be taking the options presented by these mixed study teams into account, it must and will make its decisions from a perspective that is broader than that of any individual study team.

Finally, the Government is referring these reports to the respective Standing Committees so that their analyses and their options can be assessed in the light of open public discussion. This Government is committed to parliamentary reform and determined that parliamentarians become meaningfully involved in the broader reforms to public policy.

The process of program review and the reports I have tabled today are steps in the reform of public administration in Canada. Parliamentary reform relates to the way decisions are made by elected officials. We must join these reform initiatives to policy-making in Canada.

Sir, the Government has been asking Canadians to join our commitment to the reform of Government as part of the mandate for economic renewal given to us by the people of Canada in September, 1984. The tabling of these documents shows beyond any reasonable doubt that this Government remains committed to policies of economic renewal in a climate of openness and public dialogue. We are committed to improving the management of Government and providing better service to the public.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, first of all we want to congratulate the participants who worked on these reports, a great many of them voluntarily, and we appreciate the amount of time that they have spent composing these reports for consideration by the Government of Canada and by this House. We are sure that the good things in the reports will be ignored by the Government, and certainly the cuts that have been suggested will certainly be implemented by the Government of Canada. This Government is more interested in figures than it is people. This Government is more interested in cuts. They have an obsession with cuts and reducing services to Canadians.

Perhaps the first thing that one will note in looking at some of these reports is that the Government of Canada really did not wait for these studies to be done. If one just peruses some of the reports, for example, the one on housing he will find that it deals with the RRAP program. One section deals with the Canadian Oil Substitution Program. Another section deals with the Home Heating Oil Subsidy Program and exemptions for CHIP grants in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. Canadians and Members of the House know that these programs have been terminated since these study groups began.

We can look at another report on the environment. We see sections dealing with national parks and the weather services. There is a magnificent section dealing with the wildlife conservation programs, including migratory birds conservation, wildlife research and conservation and wildlife interpretation. After this study group began to study these programs the Government decimated the Canadian Wildlife Service.

We can go on to look at another report on major surveys, including the Surveys and Mapping Branch, the Canadian hydrographic service and oceanographic data. The list goes on. We know what the Government has done since these study groups began their work. We know about the charges it has implemented that make it practically impossible for people in the fishery to even buy charts.

Let us go on to look at job creation, training and employment services. That is an interesting report which studies Canada Works. We all know that Canada Works is no longer in existence. This report studied Katimavik and many other programs which have been dealt with by the Government since the study groups began their work. Yet the Minister stands up in the House to say that the Government will not unilaterally make any changes in the Government until this report has been studied by the Standing Committees of the House and reported to the Canadian people.

We are also concerned about what interpretation the Government will give to the positive conclusions that were arrived at because of a sincere concern on the part of the participants in these study groups. We need only to go back to when the Minister presented his reports from the study teams in May, 1985 to understand the basis for our concern. In that report of the various study groups we can see some constructive comments under targeting of scientific research and development through the National Research Council, but we know what the Government of Canada did to the National Research Council following the presentation of that report.

When we look at the employment services section of that report that was presented last May and look under "job placement", we know that the Government cut out the mobility grants that were available to Canadians in order to move from one part of the country to the other. The Government took the main representations of those study groups on training, job creation and employment programs at face value and reorganized the direct job creation delivery of programs in this country. But did the Government consult with those who were affected—the unemployed? No. It commissioned some fine studies to be conducted by very educated people from the universities, the trade schools and the unions as well as private enterprise. It then discontinued the direct job creation programs for the poor man with a family and only eight weeks of work in a year. Those individuals are not allowed to work under direct job-creation programs of the Government because of the interpretation given to the recommendations of that particular study group.

According to the Government's largest employment program, a person who has trained in the occupation of a job being advertised cannot be referred to that job. For instance, an unemployed carpenter is not allowed to be referred to a carpentry job in his community. A person who has just finished a carpentry course in trade school is not allowed to be referred to that job. The Government has proven that grave errors are made when the people affected by these reports are not consulted.

In conclusion, we want to congratulate the people who formulated these reports. We look forward to examining the reports and holding the Government accountable for its actions. The Government should not proceed with any further changes to our system until there has been full consultation, not only in this chamber but with the people in our society who are affected by those changes.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the Task Force reports which we received about an hour ago, I was tempted to bring all the documents with me and ask whether there is an agenda for action by the Conservative Government, or whether it intends to pick and choose which of those recommendations it finds most to its favour. In fact, when I look through the document, I begin to see that this is simply a continuation of what we have seen from the Government in its first 18 months in office. The values of Bay Street and Wall Street prevail in the Government's budgetary policy as well as in the Nielsen Task Force review which has been brought forward today.

It is quite clear that the unfairness that led to a $1,300 increase in taxes on the average family between the November, 1984 statement, the May, 1985 Budget and the most recent Budget is to continue. When it comes to spending review, or program review as the Government calls it, it intends to take away essential services to ordinary Canadians while leaving the services to the business and corporate sector essentially untouched, unexamined and in fact uncut.

In effect, the other shoe has dropped. We see that the unfairness of the tax policy is being matched by the unfairness in terms of spending policy. The Government began the Nielsen Task Force by saying that the goal was to eliminate waste and inefficiency in Government. What we are in fact seeing is that the Government intends to eliminate services that are extremely important to average Canadians.

In order to conduct this review the Government spent much money and invited 221 experts from different walks of public and private life to meet every week. The Deputy Primer Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has given his praise for their work. Rather than suggesting that the Government is grossly inefficient or wasteful, that study group suggested a number of areas to be cut and chopped. The sections of the report that I have read indicate that the group frequently agrees with the priorities, prejudices and biases of the Progressive Conservative Government. Perhaps they were chosen to conduct this review for precisely that reason.

The House Leader feels somewhat aggrieved by that, but I do not remember, from my experience in the Ontario Legislature, that Darcy McKeough was particularly concerned about the needs of ordinary Ontarians. Yet he has played a key role in sifting through the recommendations of the various study groups.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about the CLC?

Mr. Cassidy: There was one member of the review committee and he was there to try to prevent some of the worst things from happening. If you put one trade unionist with eleven people on the main review committee and you have 200 people from the private sector, you end up with the introduction that we see.

The first substantive recommendation in this report deals with the question of universality. It says that as far as the Task Force is concerned it found universality everywhere it looked and it is determined to stamp that out. It intends to take away universality. We debated the principle of universality in 1984 and 1985. Those debates took place because ordinary Canadians were very concerned about the fact that the Government was backing away from universal programs that were essential to the average Canadian family. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stood in his place to say that universality was a sacred trust. The sacred trust means, obviously, it was to be defended for at least 12 months before the program review came in. Now we have this new attack on universality which appears will mark this Government up until the next election.

We are told that study team after study team focused on universal subsidy programs and then built a case to abolish them. I am not sure whether or not what is in this report is Government policy. We are told it is not. But yesterday I received a phone call from the Public Service Staff Relations Board and was told that 15 workers in one particular section had been given pink slips and were told they were being fired because of the Nielsen Task Force. The task force report is not Government policy until the Government decides to make a move, and it would appear it does not particularly want to have a process of public review over a series of recommendations which, to put it mildly, vary a great deal in terms of quality.

The documents point to the lack of control over tax expenditures as a major weakness in Government financial accountability. I welcome that admission. The documents confirm the estimates of the Auditor General of between $30 billion to $50 billion in tax expenditure taking place every year, and that this is an area of Government expenditure which is essentially not under control. Neither the Liberals nor the Progressive Conservatives have shown themselves to be accountable in this particular area.

My hopes with the introduction of the document were that perhaps the review would deal substantively with the question of tax expenditures. My hopes have been dashed, however, as I look at what has been done in terms of tax expenditures to business. When we get down to the specific recommendations, we find that the task force has copped out when it comes to dealing with major tax expenditures to business and to the wealthy. The largest tax expenditure that I can see in this particular document is the accelerated depreciation which is given to business. In spite of all of the resources of the task force, it was unable to come up with an estimate of the value of that particular tax expenditure more recent than 1981. If that tax expenditure was worth about $3 billion in 1981, one has to assume that in 1986-87 it will be worth between $5 billion and $6 billion. How does the task force deal with that major expenditure? Did it really go into it in order to see whether it was justified or whether there were better ways of spending the public funds of the taxpayers? No, it did not. It stated that while it was most difficult for the Department of Finance to evaluate, its impression, based on discussions with the Department of Finance, is that it believes that the objectives of the system of tax expenditures for accelerated depreciation are reasonably satisfied.

Mr. Rodriguez: Spoken like a bunch of corporate giants.

Mr. Cassidy: That is right, Mr. Speaker. What it did when it assessed various programs of tax expenditures to the corporate sector was to adopt the principle of revenue neutrality. Even if it thought that in certain cases some reductions in tax expenditures should be made, rather than saying, "Let us ensure that the money goes into the hands of the taxpayers and is used for other purposes", it said, "But if we take those tax expenditures away, we should reduce the over-all tax rate so business in general is not left to be suffering at all".

That is particularly objectionable, given the statistics which indicate that the corporate sector in Canada now takes more from Government in terms of grants and tax expenditures than it pays in corporation taxes. In 1983—which are the latest figures we were able to get, lacking the ample resources available to the Nielsen Task Force—corporations paid about $7 billion in taxes and received $12 billion in tax subsidies and grants. That is a far cry from the ordinary family who were seeing their taxes go up by $1,300 per annum as a consequence of the tax measures of the Government, and the taxpayers know damn well they are paying a lot more than they are receiving from the Government.

There is something wrong with a task force which spends as much time in minuscule considerations of cuts in the patent office, recommendations which have already been demonstrated to be unworkable, to be based on faulty information and to be totally unsustainable and justifiable, as it does on a program which now costs $5 billion or $6 billion in terms of tax expenditures through the process of accelerated depreciation.

I want to suggest that even a cursory glance at these documents suggest that they are widely varying in quality and in terms of the degree to which the very study teams accepted what they were told by the Government, the degree to which they accepted the line they received from the Government. The quality is enormously variable; the prejudices, however, are consistent. Those prejudices, I want to reiterate.

[Translation]

Those prejudices come from St. James Street, from Bay Street and from Wall Street in New York. It means that instead of a study of Government spending that focuses on the interests of the average Canadian family, of the people on Main Street, Canada, we have a study containing 21 papers, all of which reflect this Government's bias towards the corporate sector, the big companies and the rich in our society who ignore the needs of the average family and small business people in this country.

[English]

I would like to give an example of the prejudices found in this particular report. Universality is the first target. If we accept the task force, I suspect there will be no more universal programs. The task force recommends the elimination of most non-profit and co-operative housing programs. It recommends that employable people now receiving welfare be moved over to unemployment insurance, apparently to save tax dollars. And when the unemployment insurance benefits run out I suppose they will have to take their tin cup to Sparks Street or to Bay Street and hope that they can survive on that. The task force proposes that the Government withdraw from native health services. In the area of regional development it proposes to eliminate the subsidies for marine transportation even where that is vital to keeping our country together. It proposes that subsidies in grain movement will go to farmers, not the railways, something which was fought bitterly in this House over the course of the two or three years before 1984. Despite the promises made during the election campaign by the Progressive Conservative Party, the task force recommends an end to all farm fuel tax rebates. It is recommending that one of the important programs for the maintenance of cash flow for farmers, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments program, be cancelled. It is proposing to eliminate all socio-economic considerations for the fisheries as well as the federal role in habitat protection in western Canada. It is proposing to reduce expenditures in person years in fisheries by 20 per cent in two years. It is proposing what is said to be aggressive cost recovery on coastguards, harbours and so on, which I suspect would lead to our coasts becoming depopulated because no one would be able to afford to use the harbours.

One would assume that perhaps the task force would recommend means of increasing employment, but one does not increase employment by terminating Katimavik, as the task force recommended, which has led now to the tragic events taking place outside of the Senate. The founder of Katimavik is now engaging in a hunger strike. The task force is proposing that training spending be cut to 95 per cent of 1985 levels. It suggests that future guaranteed training levels be eliminated, that critical trades skills training be cut in half, and that the basic adult literacy program be eliminated. These are just a few of the recommendations of the Nielsen Task Force. It is proposing that the Canada Council be made a flagship for grants and, as a consequence, that other programs of support for cultural activities be cut, and is proposing to freeze the capital budget of the CBC. It is considering the elimination of the National Film Board because "it is a threat to the private film sector in Canada". It proposes to cut women's programs to the levels of 1983-1984.

It is proposing to look at the whole system of exemptions on sales tax and to raise the sales tax on building materials, bicycles, non-prescription drugs, clothing and a number of other items. That is again a somewhat mindless approach.

[Translation]

—once more, I suggest that this list may be satisfactory to the people on Bay Street, on St. James Street and on Wall Street, but it will not satisfy the people on Main Street. It will certainly not satisfy the people on average incomes, the middle income families in Canada.

[English]

This is a shopping list for Bay Street at the expense of Main Street. In conclusion, I do welcome the fact that the Government intends to refer this matter to the various standing committees. In those standing committees—and I see that my time has expired—we will not stand for a set of cuts which cut universality, something which hurts ordinary people and which is directed at average Canadians. It is about time that the privileges given to large corporations and to the rich and powerful are taken away, not the services to ordinary Canadians.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

FIRST REPORT OF CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the first report of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

It was my privilege, again, to attend a meeting in Washington, D.C., of the Sub-committee on Out-of-Area Challenges to the Alliance of the Political Committee of the North Atlantic Assembly. As it appears in the report, the greatest of these challenges still continues to be southwest Asia, including the Middle East Basin.

PETITIONS

PFAA—HAIL AND CROP INSURANCE—VULCAN COUNTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, because the Alberta Hail and Crop Insurance and PFAA used the whole County of Vulcan, comprised of some 493,000 acres, the pay-out of the funds provided by the federal Government under the Prairie Crop Drought Assistance Program was among the lowest even though the crops were among the worst. Therefore, some 287 farmers, about 70 per cent of the farmers in the county, are petitioning Parliament and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to rearrange the boundaries and put divisions one, two and three, where the crops have been virtually nil for three years, into one designated area and thus make payment where the need is the greatest. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) assure the House that the petition is certified according to the new rules?

Mr. Taylor: Yes.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East) moved for lease to introduce Bill C-281, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to allow a judge when passing sentence on a person who has been convicted of first degree murder the option of sentencing that person to either life imprisonment or to death. The intent here is to place in the hands of each judge an option that he or she may exercise after hearing the individual evidence and taking into account any recommendations from the jury.

In addition, in the case where the death sentence is imposed, death shall be by means of an intravenous injection of sodium thiopentol.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and order to be printed.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

REFERENCE OF STUDY TEAM REPORTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties with respect to the reference of the various reports which have been tabled by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) earlier this day. I think Your Honour will find a disposition to accept by unanimous consent and without debate the following order:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the Reports of the Study Teams of the Task Force on Program Review, laid upon the Table earlier this day, be referred to the several Standing Committees as follows:

Since the list is rather long and there is a detailed allocation of the reports to the committees, if it is agreeable to the House, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the list be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 510 and 511.

[Text]

INCOME TAX OWED BY CORPORATIONS

Question No. 510—Mr. de Jong:

1. In (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 (e) 1984, how many corporations currently active in Canada have failed to remit taxes owing and in what amounts?

2. For the 1985 taxation year, what is the estimated amount of taxes that will be owed?

3. (a) How many corporations, no longer active in Canada, still owe taxes to the Government and in what amounts (b) how many are (i) foreign (ii) American owned?

4. What is the breakdown of the taxes owed by corporate size and size of debt?

5. (a) How many corporations have been deferring taxes for the years referred to in Part 1 and what is the breakdown by (i) amounts deferred (ii) corporate size (b) what is the current amount of deferred taxes?

6. How long a period have taxes been owed by corporations?

7. For the same years, what was the amount of taxes in dispute?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The Department does not maintain a listing of corporations currently active in Canada. We are able to provide the following statistics with respect to corporations that owed income tax as at the fiscal year ends in question.

Year ending March 31	Number	Dollars Outstanding (000,000,)
1982	95,781	870
1983	88,197	937
1984	81,457	1,055
1985	87,713	1,243

2. The Department estimates that as at March 31, 1986 corporation taxes outstanding will be $1.2 billion.

3. This information is not captured by the Department.

4. The statistical information obtained for collection purposes does not link size of debt and corporate size. We provide the following breakdown of taxes owed by corporations as at March 31, 1985.

Dollar Range	Number	Dollars Outstanding (000,000,)
Current
Debt—All ranges	58,025	$ 277
Overdue
Debt– Under $5,000	18,824	34
$5,000–$50,000	9,449	138
Over $50,000	1,415	794
Total	87,713	$1,243

5. Information concerning deferred income taxes is not assembled since it is not useful for the management of the collections function.

6. The Department's aging of accounts receivable classifies old accounts in an "over two years" category. A particular account could involve reassessments to several taxation years. Accordingly, extensive analysis of individual accounts would be required to produce the requested information. It was agreed that the response in 1. above provides sufficient information.

7. The following reflects the dollar value of the accounts outstanding on which appeals had been filed, as at the respective fiscal year ends.

Year Ending March 31	Dollars Outstanding (000,000,)
1981	$350
1982	364
1983	302
1984	488
1985	565

Canadian Arsenals Limited

In (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 (e) 1984, what was the amount of tax owed by individual tax filers and what is the breakdown by income groups?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Statistical information concerning taxes outstanding on the basis of income groupings is not captured by the Department. The following information is provided on the amounts owed by individuals for the years requested.

Year ending March 31	Numbers	Dollars Outstanding (000,000,)
1981	793,836	$1,015
1982	808,772	1,225
1983	799,547	1,372
1984	876,329	1,680
1985	862,947	1,701

[English]

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 35 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to speak to Bill C-87, which is entitled "an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof". The long and short of this particular Bill is that the Government is asking the House of Commons to authorize it to sell a Crown corporation, Canadians Arsenals Limited, and to place that company into private hands.

Taken within the context of the way the Government is behaving with respect to all social, cultural and trade policies, this is one more piece of evidence which convinces us that the Government is again being irresponsible and amoral—in fact, in this case it convinces us that this is an immoral Government. We are told that the purchaser is the SNC group of Montreal, Quebec, which has operations in that province. I hasten to say that I have absolutely nothing of a negative nature to say about SNC. This is not a question of whether or not we are concerned and in favour of this particular company buying Canadian Arsenals Limited over and above some other company. Indeed, I was pleased to read in the release made by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) that 500 of the 4,000 employees of that company own the plant and the corporation. In that sense it is an enlightened company, if that number of employees are shareholders in it. I hope no one will regard my comments with respect to what the Government is doing in selling this corporation off as being in any way aimed at SNC.

My Liberal colleagues have expressed in their speeches so far in the House—and I trust they will in the future—their objections to the sale and a number of technical factors involved with it. For example, they are concerned about the sale price. We are told that the report commissioned on behalf of the Government by Arthur Andersen states that the value of the company is between $80 million and $98 million. Some of my colleagues have been asking whether or not this sale price of $92 million is an adequate price. They point out that, after all, the assets were alleged to be worth $126 million in 1984. Apparently business is booming at Canadian Arsenals Limited. Its profit levels have gone up constantly year after year. My colleagues are wondering if this sale price is a good one or if this is another fire sale like de Havilland. They also say that they cannot really know. We in Parliament are being asked, as in the case of de Havilland, to give our support to something without having the facts at hand.

A Government that came to office claiming that it was going to enforce freedom of information is apparently unwilling to disclose to these representatives of the Canadian people in the House of Commons the figures and the report from Arthur Anderson. Apparently we are asked to simply proceed on faith, as we were asked to do so in the $1 billion giveaway to the banks and in the de Havilland case.

Of course, the Government realized later on that people of Canada really do not approve of these hidden, secretive methods of selling off things that belong to the Canadian people, or giving away money without giving the Canadian people and opportunity to have access to it. One would think that the Government would have learned. It has had to back off time after time and finally give in and give to the people of Canada the information they have demanded. That was true with the banks, and especially true with de Havilland. There are objections from my colleagues that they are not in a position to be able to make a competent judgment on behalf of their constituents and the Canadian people with regard to the value of this particular sale.

Some of my colleagues have pointed out that there is also a problem in that this may create a monopoly situation. They feel that the Government is providing a company an opportunity to have monopoly access to the Canadian Government for the selling of ammunition. They feel that this sale to the Canadian Government could then be boosted to whatever price the company might wish. There is no clear explanation as to how this might be avoided if this company is put into the hands of a private-sector firm.

As well, some of my colleagues are concerned about the fact that the Public Service Alliance, despite all the claims of the Tories that they are going to consult, has not been consulted. The Tories have again made a mockery of this statement in presenting the Nielsen report. They say they consult the Canadian people when they in fact act first and consult afterward.

My colleagues point out that the Public Service Alliance indicates that the workers at Canadian Arsenals Limited were not consulted. Despite the comments of the NDP indicating that there was no concern given by the Government to the pensions of the workers at Canadian Arsenals Limited, I was glad to see that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) had indeed taken some steps to protect the interests of the workers at least by way of pensions, and I commend him for that effort.

While there has been Government secrecy, a lack of consultation and the fact that once again the Government is selling out a profitable Crown corporation which belongs to the taxpayers at fire sale prices, I have other reservations about this particular sale. I have additional objections to this sale on the grounds that all this in any case fits into a most regrettable over-all Tory approach, which is that the only way to measure what we do is to get money for it. Making money and saving money are the considerations of the Government first, second and last. The consequence of this kind of approach to governing is to destroy life, to destroy the quality of life or to destroy our environment for the sake of a fast buck. I suggest that this Government's over-all approach to young people, senior citizens and those groups that are aggrieved, including the poor, is that it cares about statistics, not people. It cares about statistics instead of people.

In selling off the ammunition company to the private sector, the Government is encouraging this company to compete for contracts abroad. That is my indictment of this deal. This company will be put into the private sector and there is nothing to keep us from seeing this organization fall into the hands of some organization other than SNC, an organization that will sell ammunition for profit. In fact, the Government admits this and boasts about it. The Government points out that this new consortium will be better able to compete in the international markets. After all, SNC only makes small ammunition but will now be able to get into the business of large ammunition and in fact create a much larger complex which can compete more effectively on the international markets. That is a tragic confession on the part of the Government. Is that not just what we would expect of the Tories? They do not mind Canada being a merchant of death if it will turn a buck.

This is the case not only for this one sale. On the contrary, this fits into the Conservatives' total philosophy. The Minister of Supply and Services was selling off for a fast buck a Canadian Crown corporation to a non-Canadian company. We saw this approach in the case of de Havilland. But the most shocking and callous example of all was the recent announcement by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) that he would solve the economic problems of Cape Breton by bringing to Cape Breton an ammunitions plant. Is that the way to solve the economic problems on a long-term basis? An ammunitions plant in Cape Breton will have to do whatever it can to turn a buck. Of course, if it is in Cape Breton, it is able to sell from Canada in a way that it cannot sell from its own country.

Which company was this that the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion suggested would set up a plant in Cape Breton to help Cape Bretoners with their economic problems? It was suggested that the company that would come to Cape Breton to make machines of war would be the Thissen Company. Thissen is the name of the father, if you will, of the Nazi war machine. Thissen was the man who originally put Hitler into business and who financed his campaign and armed his bully thugs. Thissen was the man who set up the armaments machine of the Nazi Wehrmacht. That was Thissen. Imagine suggesting that a company with that name could come to Cape Breton to set up an armaments plant in order to be merchants of war and sell to whomever will buy. It is disgusting. It is a revolting thought. It is insensitive and it is criminal.

Is the way to solve the economic problems of Canadian people to make us merchants of war?

It is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who suggested this solution to the problems of Cape Breton. I am concerned that this can be done without the blinking of an eye, without some concern on the part of the Government which did not deny this but is rather considering this as a way to solve our problems

Is it not true that for decades Canada has built its reputation upon being a country of peace? Is it not true that we have indicated repeatedly that we would not be merchants of war or merchants of death? Is it not true that Canada has indicated that it would not sell armaments throughout the world to countries which use them to destroy one another, to kill one another? Is it not true that we do not want to be contributors to more bloodshed in the Middle East, Africa and Asia?

Canada is not in the business of selling armaments in order to make our living in the world. We can find better and more constructive ways, by setting up companies which deal in the fields of environmental, medical, biochemical, and biomedical research. We have enough brains in Canada to concentrate on things that build rather than on things that destroy.

I have a concern about the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited. It is one small, miniscule part of a total approach in a program which is insensitive about matters of war and peace, and about how Canada images itself in the world. Canada plays its role to bring about peace in a world weary of war, where millions of people are starving, suffering and dying. Do we need to become involved in the munitions business and send out weapons for people to kill one another? Is that what Canada is to become? I do not care which administration would do it or did it. I do not care what Party label is on it. I am saying that it is not good now. We should not approve of this kind of approach to solving our economic problems. It is better that the company remain in the hands of the Government and not become part of an arsenal of machinery or of an industrial military complex.

When Dwight D. Eisenhower became President of the United States, he confessed that he was concerned that the United States was doomed and had been sold out to the industrial military complex which was calling the shots for him in the White House. He expressed dismay and concern. We do not want to build our economy on any kind of industrial military complex. Perhaps the Tories emulate and look with great satisfaction at how the United States has built up a $2.5 trillion deficit, mainly on defence, mainly on the largest machinery of war ever created in the history of the human race. That is what the Americans base their budget on, going to defence, as they call it. Is that how we will build up the Canadian economy? Are we envious of the Americans? Do we want to get into the business with them? Are we so hungry for profits that that is the direction in which we have to turn? I do not think a single Canadian would say yes to that.

The people of Prince Edward Island are concerned that Litton Systems might come there; that is becoming a problem in that province. Canadians do not feel that they want to make money from the blood on the faces of other men. That has been a Canadian sense of pride throughout our history. We have only gone to war to destroy oppression. We have not fed the machines of war and we have not profited from it. I am sure that those whose sons died in the last war to put down Hitler will not appreciate the fact that we are considering bringing Thissen into Canada to sell munitions and to profit. That company was founded by the men who backed and put Hitler into power.

Canada should be perceived as a messenger of peace. Therefore I believe that we should reconsider all steps, not only the one which we are considering now, which is a little one in the over-all issue. I plead with the Conservative Government to re-examine its priorities. Above all it should give support to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). If he is to go throughout the world saying that Canada stands for peace, we should not be making Canada appear to be a merchant of war.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on Bill C-87, an Act to sell Canadian Arsenals Limited to the private sector. Some people may ask the following questions. What is Canadian Arsenals Limited, how important is it, and why should it not be sold to the private sector? We have heard a few speeches in the House outlining the whole theory of why we should be selling arms at all, and why we should be privatizing a somewhat important Canadian Crown corporation which will now probably go out to peddle arms around the world. I find that to be morally repugnant. It is the main reason I oppose the sale of the particular Crown corporation to the private sector.

The reason the Government is selling this particular Crown corporation is nothing short of its dogmatic commitment to the ideology of privatization.

Mrs. McDougall: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) can rise to contradict those comments with good arguments. I invite her to do so. Canadian Arsenals is a very profitable Crown corporation. It has a lot of money. It has a lot of guaranteed contracts. From a business point of view, it is a sound business corporation which has made a lot of dough. Why get rid of it? Why not keep the corporation and use its profits to reduce the deficit? It does not make any sense whatsoever to sell it.

Canadian Arsenals Limited was founded back in 1945. It is owned 100 per cent by the people of the country through the federal Government of Canada. It manufactures medium and large calibre ammunition. Its main customer for 90 per cent of its production is the Department of National Defence. The Government is selling a Crown corporation which sells 90 per cent of its products to the Government itself. I ask whether that makes any sense. It is an industry which is located entirely in the Province of Quebec. It has two plants. One is located in St. Augustin just outside Quebec City. The second is in Le Gardeur just outside Montreal. As I said, the company has been very profitable. Ninety per cent of its production is sold to the federal Government of Canada and 10 per cent of its production is exported. It has many contracts. However, the Government of Canada wants to sell it. I really wonder why, other than its dogmatic commitment to the ideology of privatization. We can see what that has done for Margaret Thatcher in Britain.

The employees of the company are organized by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. It is my understanding that the union was not consulted on the sale at all. Its workers are concerned about their pension benefits. There is no guarantee about jobs or job security. Suddenly the Minister announced that the company would be sold, and that was it.

I should like to refer to a press release issued on December 2, 1985 by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who is also in charge of the privatization task force. He said: "Currently the government of Canada purchases 90 per cent of Canadian Arsenals Limited's production. This Crown corporation, CAL, has been impeded in exploring opportunities to diversify". The Minister is saying that because it is a Crown corporation it has not had the chance to diversify as it might be able to do in the private sector. He went on to say: "The Government is confident that once the company is privatized, CAL will produce additional markets in product diversification. Indeed, through this sale, the Canadian ammunition industry should become internationally competitive, making possible increased sales to our NATO partners".

One of the purposes of the sale is to try to make Canadian Arsenals Limited a merchant of war peddling arms around the world. I ask Conservative Members of Parliament whether or not this is really what they want. Here we have a Cabinet Minister saying that if we sell this company it will pursue additional markets around the world. It will diversify its products, selling to God knows whom, Mr. Speaker, in different parts of the world. I say to you, Sir, that this country has had a very proud record of not being a merchant of war and it has had a very proud record of not creating jobs through producing bombs, rifles and ammunition. That has been neither our history nor our tradition. Going back 50 or 60 years, it was not our tradition. It was not our tradition in the Pearson years, the Diefenbaker years, the Trudeau years or in the Clark era.

Why do we have this change in policy? Why is the new Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) privatizing a very profitable company? One of the major purposes being to diversify and pursue international markets so as to peddle guns. That is not good enough. I wish for once that some of the backbench Conservative Members of Parliament would get up and say what they feel and think, and say no to the Prime Minister who is trying to change Canadian foreign policy in this very important way. Why is he doing it?

SNC Defence Products of Montreal is a private company that produces ammunition. Is the Government selling CAL to SNC in Montreal because that company contributes money to the Conservative Party for electoral purposes?

Mr. Thacker: That is silly.

Mr. Nystrom: There we have a Member of Parliament from Alberta saying silly. I just happen to have here a copy of an article from The Toronto Sun. If the Member thinks this is foolish, he should get up and respond in a few minutes time. The Toronto Sun for Dec. 4, 1985 writes that SNC contributed $1,000 directly into the campaign funds of the Minister of Industry in his fight for re-election in his Toronto area riding in 1984. So we have a $1,000 contribution to the Minister's campaign fund.

Further, La Presse reports on February 19, 1986 that SNC contributed in excess of $10,000 to the Tory campaign in 1984. I ask my friend from Alberta whether it is silly to wonder why the sale of this private Crown corporation is going to SNC when it contributes money to the Tory campaign caucus. Here we have a private manufacturer of ammunition contributing to the Conservative Party. That same Conservative Party is privatizing Canadian Arsenals and selling it to SNC. Is there a bit of hanky-panky going on behind the scenes and that is why the Government is privatizing this company? I wonder.

SNC has sold ammunition to the rebels in Nicaragua in the past. If it did that in the past, and if we in this House allow the privatization of Canadian Arsenals, then there is nothing to say that that company will not sell more ammunition to the rebels in Nicaragua who are trying to unseat the Sandanista Government. It is against the foreign policy of this country, as stated many times by the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina), to export arms of any sort to a trouble spot like that in the world.

Are we in this House being complicit in escalating a war in Nicaragua because we are selling Canadian Arsenals to the private sector? That is one question I would like to have answered by Conservative Members. I do know that there are some progressive Members in the Conservative Party who are concerned about President Reagan's push to fund the anti-Sandanista contras in Nicaragua with $100 million for arms and military equipment and who are concerned about the possibility of another Vietnam in Central America. Yet here we have a Canadian Conservative Government selling Canadian Arsenals Limited to a private firm that has sold ammunition to the rebels in Nicaragua. I think that is a very important moral question that Conservative Members of Parliament had better answer before we allow this Bill to become law.

I also mentioned that CAL has been very profitable in the last few years. It has made millions of dollars. Its projected sales and profits for the next few years will be about 20 per cent per year. I ask again, why sell a company that is so profitable? Why sell a company that does 90 per cent of its business with the Canadian Government? Why privatize a company of that sort, Mr. Speaker? It is one of Canada's most successful Canadian Crown corporations. I thought it was good business to keep things that are doing well. I thought the private enterprise philosophy said that if things are going well and you are making a profit, you keep it and reinvest the profits, but divest something that is not doing too well. So I ask why sell it?

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Free enterprise.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member from Montreal says: it is free enterprise. But free enterprise for whom, Mr. Speaker? Is it free enterprise for war merchants?

[English]

Free enterprise for whom?

As I said before, 90 per cent of its market is guaranteed by the Department of National Defence. Why sell? Its sales are expected to double. It is Canada's third most profitable company, so why sell it unless you want to enhance the profits of some members of a private company that contributed to the Conservative Party? I see the Member from Camrose or Battle River. He is so excited that he is jumping to his feet. He is embarrassed by the sale of Canadian Arsenals. I will not go on too long because I know he wants to participate. He, being a red Tory, is embarrassed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: —by this kind of blatant privatization to thicken the pocketbooks of contributors of the Conservative Party in the City of Montreal. I know that the successor to Jack Horner in this House must be repulsed by that very idea.

Mr. Robinson: Stand up and be counted, Arnold.

Mr. Nystrom: If the Member did not have a Prime Minister who would keep a tight reign on him he would be up in this House making a very eloquent plea that we should not be going ahead with this deal, in the tradition of John Diefenbaker who would never have done this kind of thing. John Diefenbaker would never have sold Canadian Arsenals to a company selling ammunition to Nicaragua and the rebels, escalating a war in a far-away land. I know that a red Tory like the Member from Central Alberta is very unhappy about this type of deal. I wish he would use his seniority and his muscle to teach the Prime Minister a few facts of Canadian life and tell him of some of the important things surrounding the history of our country and what it has stood for over the years.

I appeal to Members of the Conservative Party to not let the country become a merchant of death or a merchant of war. If this company is privatized and sold to SNC in the Province of Quebec, as the President of the Treasury Board said, the company will then pursue additional markets, diversify its products and sell internationally. But what is this company going to sell? Ammunition and guns. It is not selling food products or machinery and technology to the Third World countries to help them become self sufficient. The company is selling guns, just like President Reagan in the United States who is trying to sell guns to the rebels in Nicaragua. Thank goodness that members of the Congress and members of the Senate in the United States are saying no to Ronald Reagan.

An Hon. Member: That is dirty.

Mr. Nystrom: A Member of the Conservative Party says that is dirty. Of course, it is dirty work that Ronald Reagan is trying to do in Nicaragua. I agree. But the American Congress and the Senate will not let Ronald Reagan get away with it. Let us not do by the back door some of the President's dirty work in Canada by selling this Crown corporation to the private sector that will produce arms for Central America. It is a question of morality. It is something we should not be doing as a country.

It is also a question of good economic sense. Why sell a very profitable Crown corporation to the private sector? Why sell to the private sector a corporation which is doing very well? Please get up and respond to that. If something works well, the Conservative Party wants to get rid of it and load more and more debt on the shoulders of the people of Canada. If something is not going very well, they do not seem to have any response whatsoever. This is the same Conservative Party that puts tax after tax after tax on the farmers in my constituency. The same Conservative Party that in the Budget of a week or so ago got rid of the investment tax credit for farmers. That means a tax increase of $50 million a year for Saskatchewan farmer, and some $150 million a year for all farmers, including those in Ontario who produce tobacco. If you increase the tax load of farmers by 50 per cent you are putting a lot of them out of business. At the same time they will line the pockets of their wealthy friends in Quebec, Ontario and elsewhere by selling them a very successful Canadian Crown corporation with a guaranteed 20 per cent return per year, and increased sales each and every year. It makes no sense whatsoever.

All we hear from this Government is taxes, taxes, taxes. Since the Conservatives took power in September, 1984, the average family in my riding has seen its federal taxes go up by $1,304 a year. The sales tax went up by 1 per cent in the last Budget, 1 per cent in the previous Budget, and 1 per cent in the financial statement of November, 1984. There was a 3 per cent increase in income taxes as well. The ordinary people in this country get taxes, taxes, taxes. The wealthy people of this country get all kinds of tax breaks so they can line their pockets with extra money.

This is very important legislation. I wish Conservative Members of Parliament would get up on their feet and talk about it. It is the kind of legislation that previous Conservative Prime Ministers would never have thought of introducing. There is no way the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), if he were still Leader of the Conservative Party, would introduce legislation to privatize one of the most successful Crown corporations in this country, particularly when, once it is privatized, it will become a merchant of death exporting weapons around the world. There is no way under the sun that the Right Hon. Member would ever do that. There is no way that John Diefenbaker would have done that.

What we have now is a new Republican Party. Sort of the Republican Party North. What Ronald Reagan says in Washington, Brian Mulroney will do in Ottawa. This Bill is testimony to that fact. I know that a lot of Members of the Conservative Party are very upset about it. That is why we see a nosedive in the polls like we have never seen before for any Government in the history of Canada. Never before have we seen a party fall, over about eight or nine months, from 60 per cent to 36 per cent. It is a free fall.

[Translation]

It is a free fall, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

We have never seen that in the history of Canada, federally or provincially. We have never, never seen a party fall so quickly from public favour. With this kind of legislation that free fall is probably only half finished. Come the next election campaign there will be very few Members of the conservative Party left when Canadians mark their ballots.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments?

[Translation]

Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, about the question asked by Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom): Why sell Canadian Arsenals . . . Why in his brilliant speech that lasted nearly twenty minutes, did we get all this rhetoric about the sale of Canadian Arsenals? For twenty minutes he trotted out all kinds of frightening, ridiculous and idiotic scenarios, something at which the Socialists are experts. Why, after 40 years, sell a company the Canadian Government no longer needs?

Forty years ago, in 1945, the situation was different. Munitions for defence had to be purchased on the market. Now, 40 years later, the situation has changed.

The Canadian Government is role is to administer the affairs of Canadians and not to operate commercial enterprises. We are not a capitalist institution but a Government institution that administers the business of this country.

The Hon. Member said earlier that the present Government of Ontario also consists of both Socialists and Liberals, who recently sold the Inter Urban Transport Company, also a profitable enterprise, to Lavalin.

However, ten years ago in Toronto they had a problem. The city of Toronto needed interurban transportation equipment. In ten years they developed a technology and built up profitable enterprise that today can be used not just by the city of Toronto but by all of Canada and perhaps all of North America.

Now that is what sensible Governments try to do, while the Socialists, supported by the Liberals, continue to spout their rhetoric and try to interfere, whenever a Government makes a sensible decision. Yes, it is a sensible decision to sell Canadian Arsenals to the private sector because it will help to diversify and create more companies. The raison d'être of any enterprise should be, first of all, to make a profit, and to make a profit, one must increase sales, produce more, diversify and be competitive.

That is what private enterprise will do with Canadian Arsenals Limited. It will certainly not use it to produce food.

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed anyone would have Canadians believe that the company that purchased Canadian Arsenals Limited will peddle munitions and arms, emphasizing the situation in Nicaragua and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville why he rose in the House to play the demagogue on such an important Bill, unless he is doing it for the sale of publicity. All he can think of at the present time is the opinion polls. I wonder if he has any other valid reasons, and whether these include the interests of middle-income Canadians or, as he keeps saying: "Ordinary Canadians, ordinary Canadians".

Mr. Speaker, for the Conservative Party there is only one kind of Canadian, the real Canadians. As I said the other day, the "extraordinary Canadians" are on the other side of the House. They are the socialists. There are not many of them, and there are very few Canadians in this country who listen to what they have to say.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from Quebec asked me a question: Why sell the company—

An Hon. Member: Why this demagocic approach to the sale?

Mr. Nystrom: —why sell the company to the private sector, Mr. Speaker?

First of all, the company has been quite profitable and made a lot of money in this country, and that is why I want to keep it for the people of Canada and for the Government of Canada. That is one good reason for us to keep the company.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party is now in the process of changing a Conservative tradition and a Canadian tradition. Up until now, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party and the Government of Canada under any Prime Minister—Pearson, Trudeau, Diefenbaker or Clark—have followed the same policy and, traditionally, making munitions has never been geared to profits. It is a very important principle and the present Government is about to change it. Until now we have decided to keep the industry in the public sector because it happens to be a sector where profits are not required, Mr. Speaker, and it has been a Progressive Conservative Party's tradition.

Third, Mr. Speaker, is the significance of public enterprise. The Hon. Member said we are socialists, that we want everything to be state-controlled, and so forth. Well, Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that the Progressive Conservative Party has always been a staunch defender of public enterprise. I vividly recall the policy of John Diefenbaker, and before him came Sir John Macdonald. The Progressive Conservative Party has always been a strong advocate of public enterprise, a time-honoured legagy, Mr. Speaker.

It was the Progressive Conservative Party that set up Radio-Canada, the CBC, not the Liberal Party. It was also the Progressive Conservative Party that established the Canadian Wheat Board, which is another major public enterprise in this country. We owe it to the Progressive Conservative Party. It was also the Progressive Conservative Party that created the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Speaker, not the Liberal Party.

The great Conservative tradition concerning public enterprise exists as well at the provincial level. Two Alberta Conservative Members sit in front of me, and they know that Mr. Lougheed nationalized a number of companies in their province. I remember very well the case of PWA, Mr. Lougheed's airline. He nationalized it, along with many other Alberta companies. The Conservative tradition in Alberta is to have a lot of state-controlled enterprises. Perhaps Mr. Lougheed is a Red Tory, but still it is a major Conservative tradition.

It was the same thing under Mr. Davis in Ontario. It was Mr. Davis and his Progressive Conservative Party who nationalized Suncor, a major oil company. I would suggest that the neophyte Conservative Member from Quebec has no understanding at all of his Party's tradition and roots. The Party of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not at all the same as Mr. Diefenbaker's Party, Mr. Speaker. This Party has changed its views and policies, it is not the same political Party. As I said in English, we now have the Republican Party of the North. It is a Party like Mr. Reagan's Republican Party, or a Conservative Party like Mrs. Tatcher's Conservative Party in England. It is not the same political Party.

That explains the current drastic drop in the popularity of the Progressive Conservative Party throughout Canada. It is the Party of corporate power, the Party of wealthy people, not the Party of ordinary Canadian men and women.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) on a very short supplementary.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Yes, very short. Mr. Speaker, you do not have to be a genius to realize that, when the situation calls for it because the private sector is unable to provide the services required by the Canadian public, the state must take over. Naturally, we were completely in agreement when the Canadian Government created the Canadian National Railways, Air Canada, the CBC or the Canadian Wheat Board, which you mentioned, and when the CBC established in our own region of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean the first French-speaking radio station outside major centres. But the situation has changed. In the small region that we represent, there are now nine radio stations. Since the private sector can replace public corporations and do the job better and more economically, a responsible Government like the Conservative Government must accept to transfer to the private sector not only the lame ducks among the Crown corporations, but also the profitable ones to make them even more profitable and beneficial for Canadians and for the Government, because a corporation which is sold when it is on the brink of bankruptcy will not be profitable for anyone, but if it increases the number of jobs it offers and its revenue, it will benefit all Canadians, and not only extraordinary Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Very, very quickly.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member says that the Conservative Party established the CBC, the Canadian Wheat Board, Air Canada and so on because it was important at the time to create such corporations—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): It was the Government.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, the Government established these corporations. However, Mr. Speaker, I think that the same is true for Canadian Arsenals Limited. It is also an important corporation as it deals in defence production, such as guns and ammunition. This is very important and it is important to keep this here in Canada. We traditionally have in this country a policy—

[English]

We have a tradition in this country when it comes to production of arms and the sale of arms that we have is done by a public corporation. We do not export arms to other countries around the world. It is a long-standing Conservative tradition, a long-standing tradition of our Party and the Liberal Party. It is a standing tradition that was talked about many, many times by former Conservative Prime Ministers. Yet we have a Government today that wants to change that and become more and more like Ronald Reagan and the Republican Party by privatizing this very important munitions company; privatize it and sell it to a company that has already sold arms to the rebels in Nicaragua. Do we want to become that kind of a merchant of war? I say no. I say the Conservative Party tradition has not stood for that. If the Member from Yellowhead was still leader of the Party he would not be doing this. Now we have a head of the Conservative Party that does not have these long-standing Conservative traditions and a real commitment to this country, like we had with John Diefenbaker and Joe Clark and so many other Conservative leaders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order. Period of time for questions and comments has expired. The Hon. Member from Crowfoot on a point of order?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I hesitated to interrupt the Hon. Member on what is obviously his maiden speech. Surely he has been around here long enough to know that the use of first names of Members of Parliament and leaders of parties is against parliamentary tradition. He has repeatedly done so. Any speech that tries to focus on what is a historical tradition when he cannot follow them ought to be a speech that is not listened to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. As has been the case for most of the bills it has introduced so far, this Bill is an opportunity for the Government to hide facts and distort the truth. As most everybody must be aware by now, the purpose of Bill C-87 is to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Ltd. This Crown corporation was set up in 1945. At the present time, it is providing 750 jobs at its Le Gardeur de Repentigny plant, in the Montreal area, and 50 jobs at its Saint-Augustin plant, near Quebec City. Unfortunately, as usual, the two elected Members representing these areas are keeping quiet, and both are of the Progressive Conservative Party persuasion.

Why, as members of the Liberal Party, do we oppose this Bill?

It is not so much because we are altogether against the Government selling Crown corporations, but because we feel it is doing it the wrong way. First of all, this is a profitable operation. Why is the Government so eager to sell right now this profitable operation? Also, there has been no consultations between the Government and the employees. That is the second mistake the Government is making while trying to sell this corporation. Finally, a study of this corporation was carried out by Mr. Andersen. Unfortunately, the Government refuses to make public both the study and Mr. Andersen's report. Why is the Government refusing to make them public? What is it trying to hide? Also this matter is whose responsibility? That of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes). And everybody is aware that the Minister of Supply and Services was involved in the census-connected patronage and jiggery-pokery. How could the House trust that Minister when all Hon. Members were deceived by him; yet, this individual would like us to take his word for it without seeing the report?

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that no Canadian who is listening to us now could understand it if, as Members of the Official Opposition, we accepted this deal without seeing the report, while taking the word of this Minister who has misled the Canadian public before.

The company is not going bankrupt, as I indicated, and it has a $200 million backlog of orders. Why proceed in secret with that deal? As we know, this is not the first deal made since September 4 by this truth-hiding Tory Government. We experienced that in Montreal in the Gulf-Ultramar case, and we will refer to that later this afternoon. With respect to issues in east-end Montreal, we had lies and lies and lies. We could also refer to matters such as I indicated earlier concerning the survey. We could mention the Pratt & Whitney issue which Ministers came to announce, while withholding the truth concerning job creation outside of Montreal. We saw that in the Hyundai plant location, another lie to Quebecers. They hid the truth, all the time knowing the company headquarters would be located in Ontario and parts would be manufactured outside. But they let the people believe that everything would be located in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, our Tory Members are naive. They are not accomplices, they are naive people. They had themselves manipulated by the Ministers and people in the Prime Minister's Office. Let them pass the Bill, if they have no conscience, but they would like us in Opposition to blindly accept that deal without having seen Mr. Andersen's report. In a conversation which my colleague who is critic for the Department for Supply and Services had, he was told by the Minister: "If you want to see his report, come to my office, I will show it to you." Why do it in secret? Why act that way? When one has nothing to hide, one opens up the books. When one is accused, one opens up the books still wider. Why does the Government . . . I would like a Tory Member in this House to tell me why his Government will not let out Mr. Andersen's report. Why will the Tory government, the Minister of Supply and Services not make that report available to Conservative Members?

Mr. Speaker, that deal does not involve a company manufacturing candy, or chocolate bars, or foodstuff. That company manufactures ammunition. This in my view calls for a very close scrutiny. What may happen to an ammunition company tht is sold to an individual or to a company, to a corporation? With all the conflicts raging throughout the world, as we know, those people have just one mandate and it is to make profits. If there are opportunities to sell arms and ammunition to foreign countries, those people will only see profits to be made. When the company was a Crown corporation, the government was using it to meet its own needs.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is not a warring nation. In Canada we speak of peace. Who will trust us if, when we speak of peace and extend our hand, we hide a knife behind our back? Who can trust a country, a Prime Minister acting in such a way? One of the reasons why I question that deal is that the Minister of Supply and Services, as we know now, will not disclose that famous report.

Once again, I want to ask the Conservative Members of this House: Why can't they see this report?

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, there was a controversy about the F-18 tests and the shooring range, which clearly shows that the people of Quebec and the people of Canada are against war and violence. In this case, the Government's attitude to the sale of a Crown corporation, a major corporation involved in the manufacture of munitions, is about the same as if it were selling a chocolate factory.

Mr. Speaker, several Conservative Members protested earlier when the previous speaker, the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, mentioned the matter of contributing to the Tory campaign fund.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I will mention another case, namely what happened to Gulf in Montreal East in connection with the campaign fund, and the financing of certain companies and certain decisions that have been made since September 4.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to ask the Conservative Members in this House: Why sell off this company so quickly? It is a profitable enterprise. It is a company that manufactures munitions. What guarantee do we have that this company will not sell munitions and arms to foreign countries that are presently engaged in armed conflict? What guarantee do we have that this company will strictly meet the needs of the Canadian Government? If we do have that guarantee, why sell the company, since it is a profitable concern? Is there any Conservative Member who can tell me why the Minister refuses to publish the report by Mr. Andersen who made a study of this enteeprise? Can any Conservative Member tell me whether this company has no more orders or is in difficulty and therefore needs the private sector? Why didn't the Government consider a joint venture, in order to monitor the company to a certain extent, considering the specific nature of this enterprise?

We saw what happened when the sale of de Havilland was negotiated. This time, however, we have a company that manufactures munitions, and that is a very important point.

I realize that Conservative Members, as great capitalists and defenders of the rich, are delighted to see one of their gang getting richer. But it should not be done at the expense of the people of Canada, and I repeat, this is a company that sells munitions, which is a very serious matter.

As I said before, the people in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area are protesting. I have yet to hear a single Conservative Member in this House say he is against this transaction, I have yet to hear a single Conservative Member truly speak on behalf of his constituents.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen what the Government did in the Budget. We have seen what this Government has done about its spending, and the devious way in which it managed to get rid of its Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne), by cutting the funds she was allocated to help our youth. We have seen, I repeat, the behaviour of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) who is responsible for this transaction. The Minister wrote to all Liberal members guaranteeing there would be a single representative for the Census . . . He failed to keep his word, and today, you expect me to trust this person who deceived me personally, in writing, who deceived the entire Canadian population, and who is now saying: You can't see the Andersen Report, but trust me! Come to my office, I will show you . . . That is rank hypocrisy! It is rank hypocrisy to treat Canadians this way. It is about time that certain Conservative Members wake up and see the light. I repeat, I, for one, and we in the Liberal Party are not systematically opposed to the privatization of sale of Crown corporations, but we simply do not accept the way it is being done. We would like—and I suspect all Conservative Members wish they could have the same figures—to have all the information the Minister had to make a decision.

It was the same thing in the case of de Havilland and Pratt & Whitney when he made the announcement. How do you explain that the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) had full access to the files while the other Members from the same region did not? Why this smokescreened and dishonest approach? Why are they always trying to hoodwink people?

When you look at poll results in Quebec, there has to be a reason why the gap between Conservatives and New Democrats has narrowed down to one percentage point. Stop wondering, you are responsible for your own downfall, what with all those mistakes and scandals. Much the same thing can be said about the letter which a Conservative Member from the Quebec City area sent to all local contractors to tell them their names would not appear on a list unless they had contributed to the 1984 election campaign chest and, second, played ball and joined the Brian Mulroney club. What a shame! It is a disgrace, and after the many recent incidents you expect the Official Opposition—and the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) will surely ask the question—to adopt this Bill sight unseen, as it were? Well, I do not owe anything to anybody. I am here to represent constituents, not to defend the Government. Considering the double-dealing that has been going on we simply cannot accept the refusal to table the Andersen report. If the Minister is so sure he is right, why not table the report? If he choses not to, it is because the report does not quite reflect his own views.

It was the same thing in the case of Gulf, when the Minister referred to the O'Farrell report. He lost face and the report was hidden, shelved or burned just so he would not hear anymore about it for a whole month.

● (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on a point of order.

Mr. Champagne: Although his speech seems to be well on its way, Mr. Speaker, I should like the Hon. Member to deal at least with the Bill which is now before the House and not with the Gulf Corporation issue. That is over and done with. The Hon. Member should refrain from considerations which are beside the point and stick to the issue of the Canadian Arsenals Limited divestiture.

Mr. Malépart: It's a fact that we are concerned about this Bill, Mr. Speaker, but because of the way the Government has dealt with other issues, I am compelled to say: I can no longer trust the Government. Just like the Canadian people as a whole are saying "niet", I can no longer trust this Conservative Government and I will have to double check and ask twice as many questions.

And why do we have to do this today? It is because of its previous decisions concerning the Gulf issue. A number of Progressive Conservative members were royally conned by the Government on this issue, just like in the Domtar and Montreal East affairs. Why? Is there a single Hon. Member . . . Perhaps the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) could enlighten me: Why were there no consultations of the employees by the Government? Just consultations. It was not necessary to make the decision for the corporations, but the Government could at least have consulted them. Why did it choose to ignore them completely? It seems to me that the lives of 750 workers in Montreal East and 50 workers in the Quebec City area are important. It seems to me also that it would have been quite natural for someone from the Minister's office—not necessarily the Minister himself—to meet them and say: The current situation is such and such, and you should not be concerned about losing your job. But the Government has provided no job security whatsoever. Surely the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean and the Hon. Member for Champlain both agree with me that the employees should have been consulted. Before the Government decides to sell any such corporation, Hon. Members and employees alike would appreciate being consulted. I suggest that when the Government wants to privatize a corporation such as the Canadian Arsenals Limited, the de Havilland or Canadair corporations, it is of paramount importance that it be done in consultation with the employees. I am not suggesting that it should deal only with the union representatives. If it wanted to, it could easily organize a meeting of the 750 employees inside the plant to consult them and advise them of the Government's decision.

I think that the Government should rely on the intelligence of these workers. They are qualified and competent people. Perhaps they could have advised the Minister on the best way to protect these 750 jobs in the Montreal and Quebec City areas. I suggest that would be important. Let us consider this decision as a whole, Mr. Speaker, Government Members and Opposition Members will certainly agree with me that in the case of some decisions that had been made previously, no sooner had the banks failed that the Prime Minister said: We must find money to compensate the rich people with over $60,000 in investments. Two or three people made that decision, most Hon. Members being unaware of what was going on. But when the time comes to help ordinary citizens like these employees, it's a different ball game, Mr. Speaker, it is the dictatorial aspect that is surfacing.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to know what has happened since September 4, we have only to look at the adjournment motion which the Government proposed last Friday. It was certainly the first time in history that a Government defeated its own motion, Mr. Speaker. They vote with their eyes closed. However, I must congratulate the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) for having kept his head. He did not act like a sheep or like a follower by saying to his leader: Yes, I am rising against our motion. He said: One moment, I shall not act like a buffoon; if you want to do so, go ahead, but I shall remain seated; I do not want to be part of this. Since September 4, there has been mistake after mistake, Mr. Speaker. Do you know the latest joke in all Canadians homes? The people are betting on which Minister or Member will be the next one to make a mistake. It has replaced Loto Québec and Loto Canada. We shall have to start a lottery. It would work better than the hockey lottery, Mr. Speaker. Do you think that we are going to accept to support this—

An Hon. Member: Blindly!

Mr. Malépart: Yes, blindly. Mr. Speaker, I would like at least one Member opposite to have the courage to say: I am familiar with the Andersen Report and we do not want to table it because it tells the truth and we want to do the opposite of what it recommends. Or else, he could say: Yes, I know about the Andersen Report; it tells the truth and we are going to publish it, and I am promising right now that I shall put pressure on the Minister to publish it. If the Conservative Members accept such a deal without being familiar with all the studies which have been made, they will remain blind followers for quite awhile. We saw a lot of them last Friday, but thank God, a few saved your honour.

An Hon. Member: Not many.

Mr. Malépart: The same thing will happen again. Is there one Conservative Member who will rise and say that the 750 employees of Le Gardeur should have been consulted? The Government made a mistake in not consulting the workers. It is essential that the Government go and see these people.

Mr. Speaker, I began my speech at 12:40 p.m. and I see that it is nearly 1 o'clock. I am anxious to see a Conservative Member rise after the Oral Question Period and say: I am going to see the workers and we are going to have the Andersen Report. If not, I am not asking him to vote against the motion, but he should simply stay away from the House when we vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry but the time alloted to the Hon. Member has now expired. Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Why did you, the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, remain on your seat for 10 years? Why did you not open your mouth in this House during those 10 years? Did you have velcro on your lips? You like to say that some Members on this side have velcro lips. Is it because the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie had "Krazy Glue" on his seat? Or is it because the Hon. Member was wearing new suits? Or is it that the Hon. Member had new dentures? During those 10 years, there must have been issues discussed in this House and proposals moved by the Liberal Party. If not—

Mr. Blais: Two-hundred billion.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): If there were none, how is it we are now faced with a debt exceeding $200 billion? There certainly were some. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie certainly has seen some of them. Therefore, I ask the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, how it ever was that during those ten years, no reference was ever made to single-parent families? How come you never fought for farm producers, Mr. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie? How can you explain, Mr. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, when your Government, your party voted billions for the F-18, and you referred earlier to the F-18's in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, how can you explain that having voted those billions for F-18's and we had to foot the bill—all Canadians, not only ordinary people, but all true Canadians—the price had more than doubled? How is it you never spoke on that? Why then when there were votes for investments in Canadian Forces Base Bagotville, in the area you referred to earlier, you never rose? How come there was that question of a firing range, as you mentioned earlier, during a period of ten years? And he never did anything. You never had the courage to rise, you and your Party, to speak up, to make a stand!

Mr. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie, on September 4, 1984, Canadians had enough. If you have a chance, please read Le Devoir of March 11, about who actually owns the Liberal Party of Canada. Mr. Speaker, earlier he had the courage, if I may use that word, to announce that after the oral question period, he would rise to speak on political party fundings. But that kind of courage, he owes it to Conservative Members. Who but a Conservative Member has first referred to party funding? Who else but our Prime Minister spoke of healthier political practices? That is a bunch of questions we are asking you, Mr. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie. What did you do concerning . . .Before this afternoon, except for putting your feet in your mouth, as you do on occasion, what have you done about political party funding during those ten years you had that velcro over your mouth and that "krazy glue" on your seat?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) and those who applauded, the Hon. Members for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais), six months ago, we accepted that those people did lack experience. But they and the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean have just demonstrated that now, after close to two years, what they are showing is incompetence and ignorance.

Mr. Speaker, I would first tell the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean that I have not been sitting in this House for the past ten years. As far as political party funding is concerned, I was in Quebec City, this is where the quest for democracy in funding started. Do you therefore see the depth of the ineptitude you are now showing? Do you see, Mr. Speaker, how stupid one can be? In the beginning, during the first six months, we knew he was looking for the toilets, for the doors to the clothes closets, but now he has shown just how incompetent and ignorant he is.

As for the time I sat here before being a Member in Quebec City, I can tell the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean or the less than important Member for LaSalle that I was re-elected, because my constituents trusted me. But on their side, any ninny could have been elected. He will learn this, Mr. Speaker, that when there is an overwhelming majority, the winners are those who are re-elected.

Now, I will tell the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean what the Quebec Liberal team has done. My colleagues, namely Claude Tessier and Jean-Guy Dubois demonstrated on the Hill with the factory owners and the workers of the footwear industry to obtain quotas from the Government. However, not a single Tory Member was brave enough to do likewise.

Mr. Speaker, concerning the Crow rate policy, it is thanks to the Quebec Liberal Members that the policy was amended.

I realize why the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is not familiar with the Tory tradition, because in Quebec so many former Liberals or Creditistes turned Tories at the last election because they had the chance of being elected. Now the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is one of those who has often changed his political subvervience.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just clearly shown that and I think that I have answered many of his questions but he himself has not answered the basic question about this Bill. Is he ready to vote without having seen the report which is now in the Minister's hands? And why is he ready to vote without being aware of all the consequences?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Canadians, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). For a year and a half now, Canadians have been wondering about the Hon. Member, but he just gave us the answer. He said it all. He talked of intelligence, knowledge and abilities. He talked like he used to in 1976, in Quebec City, where it all began. He just gave us proof that he left his intelligence, knowledge and abilities in Quebec City . . . he did not bring them with him to Ottawa. As a matter of fact, since he came to Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, he never mentioned the financing of political parties, and neither has his Party.

He said he talked about it in Quebec! That Bill was introduced and passed by the Parti Québécois. So . . .

On behalf of Canadians, I thank the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. Now we know that you left your intelligence and abilities in Quebec City, and that for 10 years you have been collecting your pay doing nothing but sitting in your chair, something conservative Members will not do and would refuse to accept.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the subject now under discussion is privatization and I will read the title—

Mr. Gauthier: —because you did not know that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —is Canadian Arsenals Limited.

A while ago the Hon. Member for Champlain rose on a point of order because my colleague had mentioned a few other initiatives of this Government. He has now launched an abusive tirade against my colleague from Montreal-Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and I do not see how it relates to Canadian Arsenals Limited.

I would merely ask you, Mr. Speaker, as much as possible to try and ask the Hon. Member who is speaking to be relevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on the same point of order.

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I am in total agreement with my colleague for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on his point of order.

However, my colleague for Lac-Saint-Jean was responding to the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Had we not strayed from the legislation, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques has just commented on, most probably and certainly we would not have heard from the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, such disgraceful comments as made by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie made.

Hence since a point of order was raised, if the Chair lets the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie carry on with his examples, then in my view the Hon. Member from the other side of the House should be allowed to answer along the same lines as the Hon. Member who had the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I recognize the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, also on a point of order.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it is improper to refer to the presence or absence of Members and I do not intend to do so. However, when a Member is away from the House and cannot hear the debates, if he was unable to see them on television when he was in the lobby, I think that it is very wrong for him to come back to the House and try to bring other Members to order.

Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) indeed heard—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please! Order, please! For the last time, I hope, a point of order from the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Canadian Arsenals Limited

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, it is only fair that I defend myself since I was attacked two or three times.

As concerns the law on the financing of political parties, I would like to point out that it was the Liberal Party which proposed amendments to this law in 1976.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to simply advise the House with respect to Business of the House. I had contacted the opposition House Leaders at the outset of today's proceedings and I now confirm to the House that tomorrow will be an allotted Opposition day and we will continue on Thursday with Government business.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on that same point of order, I thank the Minister for that advice and notice. I would like to ask him if on Thursday we will be proceeding with the same legislation that is before us today, or if he had in mind anything specific for Thursday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it would be our intention to continue with the legislation in the order in which I had indicated last Thursday. We will continue to monitor the situation and hopefully make progress.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-87, an Act to provide for the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited. We are talking about a Crown corporation which is 100 per cent owned by the federal Government. It was formed in 1945 to ease the transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy. Ninety per cent of its sales are to the federal Government through the Department of National Defence. Canadian Arsenals Limited makes medium and large-calibre ammunition. It had profits of some $11.3 million last year. Yet this company is being offered for sale for some $92.2 million.

We in this Party are asking what reason the Government is giving for this sale. We are not able to perceive any reason except an ideological reason. There is a blind adherence to an ideology that all Crown corporations are somehow wrong. If there is one thing that Conservatives dislike more than Crown corporations that lose money, it is Crown corporations that make money. Here we are talking about a Crown corporation that makes money. Last year the Financial Post ranked Canadian Arsenals Limited as number three in Canada in terms of its five-year profit growth. It is a profitable company with which we are dealing; yet the company is going to be sold by the present Government for some $92.2 million.

I would like to point out to Hon. Members that the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited is not the only example of the Government being led blindly down the privatization path by its adherence to an ideology that has no real connection with the reality of the Canadian economy. The privatization program is not one that is helping the different regions of Canada. I am sure this is true for the region affected by the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited. Certainly it is true on Vancouver Island. There is the proposed privatization both of the Esquimalt drydock and of Teleglobe which has facilities on Vancouver Island.

I would like to illustrate what I mean by dealing with some of the factors involved in the privatization of the drydock at Esquimalt. That facility has a replacement value of some $56.3 million, and since 1978 the federal Government has invested some $30 million in the Esquimalt drydock to make sure that it is an up-to-date, modern facility able to handle virtually any ship on the Pacific coast. It is in fact one of the largest drydocks on the entire Pacific coast, both in Canada and the United States. It is an important facility and an important part of the greater Victoria economy.

The Government's plan for privatizing the drydock has three steps. First the Government will attempt to sell it to a Canadian company. If that is not successful, it will put it out for international tender, and if that is not successful it will then be sold for scrap. What studies have been made about the importance of this facility to the over-all economy of Victoria?

I would like to remind Hon. Members opposite that according to the unemployment statistics that came down last week, Victoria has the highest unemployment rate of any major metropolitan centre in Canada. In fact, the unemployment rate is 16.1 per cent. For Vancouver Island as a whole the unemployment rate is 16.2 per cent.

I would like to know what studies have been done with regard to the impact privatization will have on unemployment. Since the Conservative Government was elected in September 1984, the City of greater Victoria has lost 10,000 jobs. Yet the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton) are Conservative Members. Their ridings have lost 10,000 jobs and we are concerned about that. I expect privatization will make the situation even worse.

We have not seen any attempt by the Government to make the drydock in Esquimalt pay its way. The current rates for work being done in the drydock are badly out of date. They were set in 1971 and they have not been raised since that time. It is no wonder the drydock is losing money. We can presume that any buyer that attempts to operate that drydock will raise the rates.

We can look at the philosophy of privatization as it affects Teleglobe which has a facility at Lake Cowichan in my riding, a facility that employs 19 people. This is another corporation that is making money, just like Canadian Arsenals Limited. The employees of Teleglobe have the same basic concerns as the employees of Canadian Arsenals. They are concerned about job security and their pension rights. They have no guarantee as to what will happen to them. They have not been involved in any kind of meaningful discussion one way or another. The same kind of situation is being faced by the employees of Teleglobe as is being faced by the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

It seems that the policy of privatization being followed by the Conservative Government is almost exactly the same as the policy of privatization that was followed by the Bennett Government in British Columbia, a policy that has resulted in disastrously high unemployment rates and a disastrous economy in general. It is a policy that is tied in with the attempt to starve our economy to health in the belief that if we cut back enough somehow the economy will start blooming and blossoming. That has not worked. There is no recognition of the Government's basic responsibility for the health of the economy. There is no recognition that the Government can be on the side of the people to help provide better lives for them. Instead, there is just a blind adherence to an ideology of privatizing any Crown corporations that exist.

Canadian Arsenals Limited as a Crown corporation selling to the Department of National Defence saves taxpayers money. It helps keep our deficit down. I would like to ask government Members what studies they have done indicating that privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited will in any way serve the public interest. Is it going to serve the public interest by reducing the cost to the Government for munitions? Is it going to serve the public interest by creating job guarantees? How is the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited going to serve the public interest in any way? It will serve the private interest of SNC, the purchaser.

It is interesting to note that SNC gave $1,000 to the campaign fund of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and $10,000 to the 1984 Tory campaign fund. It is very solidly in support of the conservative Party, and the Conservative Party likes to look after its friends in situations such as this. However, I suggest that the Conservative Party and the Conservative Government have a responsibility to Canadian people. We have not seen anything in connection with Canadian Arsenals Limited which suggests that they have even conducted basic studies as to the value to Canadians of privatization. The SNC group operates world-wide, but mainly in Canada and the developing world. Since it is the group which owns the company that provides small calibre ammunition to the federal Government, we are concerned that it will have a monopoly on munitions sales in Canada. We are also concerned about what will happen in terms of munition sales in other parts of the world, particularly in the Third World.

It is interesting to note that in the press release of December 2, 1985, the Minister said that the Government was confident that once the company was privatized, CAL would pursue additional markets and product diversification. Also he indicated that through the sale the Canadian ammunition industry should become internationally competitive, making possible increased sales to our NATO partners. We are concerned that it will not only make possible increased sales to NATO members but indeed, increased sales to Third World countries which should not be putting money into munitions; for that matter, neither should NATO countries. Certainly we are concerned about the idea of a Canadian company becoming involved in the merchandizing of death through armaments.

Also it is interesting that IVI, the only manufacturer of small calibre ammunition in Canada, a subsidiary of SNC, has been found to be supplying arms to the Contras, the rebels in Nicaragua, which follows the whole philosophy of Ronald Reagan trying to destabilize the situation. We have received appeals from all countries in Central America and in South America that there must be a withdrawal of interest by other countries so that the people of Central America can solve their own problems. Here we have a Canadian company selling arms to the Contras, making a handsome profit and trying to destabilize the entire situation. We do not want to see this continual merchandizing of death. We are concerned that it is something that will happen as a result of the privatization of CAL and the sale to the SNC group.

Our Party has some basic concerns about the rights of employees and how they will be affected by the sale. It is interesting that in the same press release of December 2 the Minister indicated that the interests of CAL employees were of paramount importance to the Government in conducting the sale. In particular, SNC must as a condition of the sale, sign a reciprocal transfer agreement to ensure the portability of the pension rights of CAL employees. In addition SNC has agreed to observe the terms of the collective agreement recently ratified by CAL employees.

The interests of CAL employees have not been taken into account in any kind of adequate way by this agreement. They were not consulted prior to the sale being drawn up. They have been unable to look at the agreements to see whether the promises in the press release were present in the agreement. There is no satisfactory agreement with the employees on their pension rights; for example, the question of indexation for which they, along with other federal public servants, have paid to guarantee indexation. There has been no agreement on the indexing provision. No information has been made available to the employees as to whether the early retirement provision of their pension plan will still be in effect after the sale. The present plan allows for early retirement at age 55 years, but they do not know what is happening to it. They do not know what is happening to their job security. As I said earlier, there was no consultation prior to the sale.

Since there is a lack of participation on the part of Conservative Members in this debate, we have come to the conclusion that there is no reason for the sale except ideology. It is not in the public interest to proceed with the sale. It is very definitely not in the interests of those employees who are presently working for Canadian Arsenals Limited.

The whole question of private profit should be taken away from the manufacture of munitions rather than putting it back in. Basically that is what the Government is doing by privatizing Canadian Arsenals Limited and by making it available to the SNC group so that it can make a handsome profit. If we are to live in a world where there are conditions of national security which have to be met, let us make sure that we meet those conditions on the best terms possible for all concerned rather than make national security some kind of financial bonanza for one more corporation.

Reference was made this morning and this afternoon to the warning of the late President Eisenhower about the military industrial complex. By privatizing Canadian Arsenals Limited we are encouraging the development of a military industrial complex in Canada. I do not think it is something that should be encouraged. When we look at the whole question of privatization, perhaps there should be a simple test which the Government could apply; that is, that unless there is adequate reason for privatizing it should be left in the public domain. The reverse of that is also true. There should not simply be nationalization for purely ideological reasons. There should be sound reasons on both sides of the debate. If industries are to be nationalized, brought into the public domain, it should be done for very concrete reasons. By the same token, if Crown corporations are to be privatized, it should be done for some very basic, empirical, pragmatic reasons. We do not see those empirical, pragmatic reasons in this particular situation. Instead we see a blind adherence to an ideology that Crown corporations have little or no place in the fabric of Canadian life.

From my own vantage point as a Member from Vancouver Island, I say that privatization will have an adverse impact upon the economy of that region. I am concerned that it will also have an adverse effect on the people of Quebec, the province in which Canadian Arsenals Limited operates. There seems to be a policy on the part of the Government of raising taxes, taking more and more money from individual taxpayers. This means that moneys are taken out of local communities, such as those on Vancouver Island, to be used for whatever purpose by the Government here in Ottawa. However we are not receiving programs which feed money back into the local economies. In fact, quite the reverse. We are drawing money away from the local economy which will have a strangling effect on it. We have seen nothing in the way of job creation. We have seen the loss of some $16,000 jobs on Vancouver Island since September 1984 when the Government was first elected.

Along with this policy of raising taxes and doing nothing about job creation in areas where it is most needed we have a policy of privatization, of selling off our resources and not letting the Canadian people or the House of Commons know what is involved, of keeping employees in the dark about conditions under which their jobs are being sold out from under them. Privatization is being kept very private. It should be a matter of public information.

Finally there should be tighter controls on the production of munitions in Canada. We do not want to see this simply proliferate in a way that will allow all kinds of private corporations to get involved, not only in producing munitions and selling them at a profit to the Canadian Government, but producing munitions and selling them to Third World countries. If we have legitimate reasons for national security, then it makes sense for us to keep control of the production of our own munitions. It should be done only for purposes of national security, not for purposes of profit.

On this basis, I would like to oppose this Bill. I urge all Members to think very carefully before they rise in support of it.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the speech made by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). He covered many of the points of concern to members in all caucuses.

With regard to Bill C-87, does the Hon. Member believe that keeping the Arthur Andersen report private is really in the best interests of a reformed House of Commons where Members are making decisions in the light of all information? Does the Hon. Member really believe that the Government is doing itself a service and doing Parliament a service by keeping that report private? It deals with profitability and the long-term plans of the corporation. This Crown corporation is reported to have some $200 million in backlog of orders and it is reported to be increasing its sales of armaments and munitions during the next five years. What is the profitability from the Government's point of view? Will the corporation taxes it will pay in the private sector equal the profits which now directly accrue to the Crown?

It seems to me the report on other matters relating to how the new company will be handling its labour relations would be very valuable, as would details of whether employees will be able to transfer their credits and the rights they now have under the Public Service Act, for example pensions and so on.

I think the other point which the Hon. Member made, also very important, is how well the Government will be able to control the sales of the company. Will we suddenly be sending armaments and munitions into world hot spots, such as the Middle East or other dictatorial dominated nations? I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comments in this regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). When we resume Orders of the Day, the Hon. Member will be able to continue.

It being 1.35 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.35 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the youth of Canada are being brutally neglected by the Government. Programs such as Katimavik gave hope to many idealistic youth, unemployed youth, or youth in transition, who worked for $1 a day and served this country, its municipalities and people, in this award-winning program. Katimavik has now been brutally cast aside, bringing sorrow and disappointment to thousands.

Senator Jacques Hébert, in the face of overwhelming evidence based on the Senate task force report on youth, knows that too many young people have no work and no hope of work. He has seen the Tories cut funding for education, job training, and youth employment. The Tory Budget completely neglects youth and has rendered its own Ministry of Youth powerless. Senator Hébert is desperate. He has gone on a hunger strike. How sad it is that the Government should cause this man to feel the need to take such action on behalf of the despairing youth of Canada.

YOUTH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it should come as no surprise that it was Erik "the hatchet man" Nielsen who eliminated Katimavik. In killing Katimavik the Government failed thousands of young Canadians and hundreds of communities. The Government has failed to see the tangible benefits of assuring all youth a future. The Government has also failed to understand the very real plight of a lost generation of youth. The Government has failed to grasp the intense vision which compels Senator Hébert to dramatize his concern. The Government has failed to provide an effective advocate or program for the youth. Instead, it has produced a Tory recruitment agency.

Mr. Nielsen said this morning that the study team reports do not constitute Government policy. The recommendations contained in the 21 volumes will be referred to standing committees for study. If that, in fact, was his intention, why did Mr. Nielsen kill Katimavik?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind Members that reference to Members by name is out of order.

THE CENSUS

CHOOSING COMMISSIONERS

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express amazement at a remark made in the House by the Official Opposition with respect to census commissioners. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals accused us of political patronage in the selection of census commissioners. Opposition Members have a short memory. Since 1963 the Liberals have had the last word on the appointment of census commissioners, over 20 years to build up their system and dictate their political preferences. I wonder whether they are so lily-white. Before any kind of examination, the official responsible for selecting the commissioners in my riding made it quite clear to our representative that appointments would be made among those who had experience in the 1981 census. For the opposition, one has to be a Liberal to make the grade. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that my commissioners in Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup are just as intelligent if not more, than Liberal applicants.

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

DIAMOND JUBILEE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, this year marks the Diamond Jubilee of the Royal Canadian Legion. It was on a rather bleak day in 1926 when Sir Percy Lake, President of the Legion, told the delegates gathered in Vancouver that the future for those who served in the Great War was very difficult indeed. Their first proposal for pensions was practically ignored. The membership was then 11,000. Today this organization, founded on the principles of remembrance, just rights, loyalty and comradeship, has over 1,800 branches. Membership now totals 600,000 people, roughly the size of Winnipeg.

S.O. 21

I am certain that Members of this House would like to pay tribute to this great organization as it celebrates 60 years of service to Canada and Canadians, service which has continued in times of peace and war.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HOME MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Thanks to the Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker, we have two classes of citizens: those who have home mail delivery and those who have not. In the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou some families do not have home delivery, yet others, practically next door neighbours, do. Until yesterday we Canadians were proud of the fact that this Government service was universal, but the situation has changed since the advent of the Conservatives. Why should somebody who buys a new house not be entitled to home mail delivery, whereas somebody else who bought a house two years ago does have that right? It is unfair, Mr. Speaker.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Multiculturalism Minister's failure to follow the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) lead on Japanese-Canadian redress, weekly becomes more outrageous and tragic. The Minister does not recognize that the Canadian Government in 1942-1943 uprooted and dispossessed people who had not been charged with any seditious activity and whose only offence was their Japanese origin. The Minister does not appreciate that there has never been proper compensation for these property losses.

The Minister refuses to negotiate a proper redress and speaks recklessly of the millions that he thinks it might cost. Mr. Speaker, the Minister's skirmishing against the Japanese-Canadian community is repugnant to Canadians. Other Canadians, such as those of Ukrainian origin who came to Canada before 1914 from Austro-Hungary, suffered unjustified internment during wartime.

But these communities recognize that dispossession of the Japanese-Canadian community is a unique precedent the Parliament of Canada must cancel.

Only a properly negotiated redress can do that.

Mr. Speaker: Order Sixty seconds.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

TABLING OF REPORTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the tabling this morning of the reports of the Task Force on Program Review chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is of a significance which cannot be overstated.

It is part of the process of reforming the public administration of Canada which got out of control over years of mismanagement and because of the practice of setting up a plethora of programs to deal with every real or imagined problem.

The options outlined in the report will provide the Cabinet with sensible alternatives so the Government can in future be conducted in an efficient, humane, and cost-effective manner which Canada deserves. The thanks of this House and the nation are due to the many Canadians who served so ably on the Task Force on Program Review.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Longueuil riding has a major industrial vocation and is at the heart of Canada's aerospace industry.

Among the corporations in my riding which are directly involved in this industry, there is the Pratt & Whitney corporation which employs over 7,500 workers. The Pratt & Whitney corporation manufactures airplane motors and exports 85 per cent of its production. It contributes very significantly to the economic development of our country.

Our Government recognized recently the importance of the aerospace industry in Canada and the impact it has on our economy by creating 1,000 new jobs in the fine riding of Longueuil.

Mr. Speaker, it is thanks to the kind co-operation which I obtained from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) that this project has become a reality.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT OF PAY ZONES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible to think that, in a nation based on the solid foundation of equality, the federal Government chooses to discriminate against segments of its own work force. I am referring to the system of pay zones designed more than 20 years ago to determine the salaries of selected public servants. The idea was to pay public servants salaries reflective of the regions in which they worked.

There are over 14,000 members of the Union of National Defence Employees who are subject to this form of economic discrimination. There are tens of thousands of other employees in Public Works, Agriculture, Transport, Environment, and other Departments, in similar circumstances. If the Government of Canada can establish universal pay scales for the RCMP, the Armed Forces, Canada Post and, yes, Members of Parliament, no matter what region we may represent, then these dedicated Public Servants deserve no less.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR REUNIFICATION OF BULGARIAN FAMILY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Today I want to bring to the attention of the House another case of children trapped behind the Iron Curtain. Ziya Ismailoff, who works in my riding, and his wife, came to Canada from Bulgaria in 1984 to escape religious and political persecution. Their sons, nine and 11 years of age respectively, are being held as "deposits" to ensure the parents return. Bulgarian law prohibits removing children from the country.

Recently one of the Ismailoff children sent his parents a paper airplane with a message, "I want to fly to Canada. I want to fly to you".

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to do everything in his power to see that the Ismailoff family, and the many others like them, are reunited here in Canada.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

BALTIC COMMUNITY'S OPPOSITION TO HIGHWAY TO HEAVEN TELEVISION PROGRAM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, representatives of Canada's Baltic community have expressed grave concern over the scheduled March 12 airing of the one-hour program Highway to Heaven on CTV. Rightfully so. The episode depicts a fictitious family named "Baltic" as neo-Nazis terrorizing a concentration camp survivor.

This depiction on national television of a neo-Nazi, who carries as his surname the name of an ethnic group, can only bring lasting damage to the promotion of racial tolerance and sensitivity. It is absolutely contrary to the multicultural fabric of Canadian society to allow such indirect bias, wherein an entire group of citizens is, by implication, maligned.

I therefore join with other concerned citizens and call upon the CTV at the very least either to delete or dub over this offensive reference. The possible defamation of 100,000 Canadians who take pride in their Baltic heritage can and must be averted.

TERRORISM

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL EMERGENCY RESPONSE TEAM

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, many weeks ago the North American Students' Network Canada arranged for today to be an anti-terrorist lobby day here in Ottawa. The group of approximately 200 students are led by Naomi Noyek, chairperson of the Anti-Terrorism Day, and Dan Ronen.

These students are to be commended. Their honest concern and actions typify the worries and frustrations of most Canadians that Canada not become a haven for terrorists or other suicidal killers who are determined to bring their conflicts from their own country to our soil.

Several incidents during the past year have made it shockingly clear that we in Canada are not immune or insulated from these savage, brutal activities. Accordingly, all Canadians will be supportive and proud of yesterday's announcement by the solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) that a permanent special emergency response team will be formed to counter terrorism in Canada.

NIELSEN TASK FORCE REPORT—AVAILABILITY ONLY IN ENGLISH

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): We have just received the findings of the Nielsen task force report, Mr. Speaker, and for the first time in their lives, Hon. Members were unable to receive bilingual copies.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Ms. Copps: Having sent a request, I have been provided with a copy in English only.

Mr. Speaker, I sit in the House as a Canadian Member, and not as a French or English Member. And I suggest all Canadians have the right to know what is going to happen with Mr. Nielsen's cuts. I want to find out in both French and English what is going to happen with the cuts to the Canada Employment Centers.

As an elected representative, Mr. Speaker, I think I have the right to read, both in French and in English, the findings of the task force which will result in programs being cut, especially those for young Canadians.

AGRICULTURE

OFFER OF JOB COUNSELLING AND RETRAINING TO FARMERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Rural Transition Program announced in last month's Budget is a bleak indication of the government's farming philosophy.

The Government wants to help farmers get off the land. It is issuing the golden handshake to the small independent farmers by offering them job counselling and retraining. I will not deny that Canadian farmers are facing a serious financial crisis, but training them to be computer programmers or pipe fitters does not solve the problem. The country needs an innovative strategy designed to foster growth and prosperity on the family farm. Family farms are the backbone of many rural communities. Those people have spent their lives working the land to produce cheap food for Canadians. What are they being offered in return? Encouragement to close the farm gate!

Farmers do not want job counselling and retraining. They need a bold, aggressive approach to keep them on the farm. The Government must meet this current crisis head on. It must not take the easy way out and turn its back on Canadian farmers.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, during the last two months crude oil prices have fallen from $25 U.S. a barrel to $12 U.S. a barrel. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) said that prices would come down during this period. She was right. Prices have come down at the pumps, but only in the United States, not in Canada. The price of gasoline in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, at 31 cents a litre, is 20 cents a litre lower than the price in Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, at 51 cents.

Constituents of mine filled their gas tanks last weekend in Sault Ste Marie, Michigan, and saved $18 on a single tank of gas. today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says that she is losing patience with the oil firms about gasoline prices. Canadians are totally frustrated and fed up with the oil companies, the Minister, and high oil prices.

If the Minister will simply tell Petro-Canada to charge fair prices for gasoline, Canadians will have them from all oil companies within 24 hours. Canadians want the Government to act on oil prices now.

YOUTH

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There are 700,000 young Canadians without a job and rapidly losing hope. The Prime Minister's Government has been destroying youth training programs and has recently gutted the Youth Ministry. In light of the recent vivid demonstration of commitment on the part of Senator Hébert and others, will the Prime Minister give us some cause for hope that he will be announcing some new programs for the young people of the country? Will he give them some indication that they have a future in Canada?

● (1415)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the House that, indeed, there would be further programs announced on an ongoing basis, particularly in regard to the role of the Minister of State for Youth. As the financing from the previous year winds down, at the end of the fiscal year, or at about that time, I have already indicated that there would be new indications put forward.

I should indicate that under the terms of the legislation the Minister of State—any Minister of State—is technically and legally a Minister of State to assist a given Minister. So the role of the Minister of State for Youth is not only to put forward various programs but to be the effective advocate on behalf of youth, and this Minister has done this throughout the entire Government. For example, in one Department, the Department of Employment and Immigration, $700 million has been set aside for youth, and 37 per cent of the entire Budget is devoted to youth. Some 219,000 young people will benefit from programs in the portfolio—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The answer is too long.

[Translation]

YOUTH PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is trying to protect his Minister's reputation. Senator Hébert, however, has made a brave gesture.

Could the Prime Minister, in turn, give him some indication that he may reinstate a number of programs or set up new programs for youth, in order to meet commitments he made to the youth of this country during the election campaign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the House that for us, youth unemployment is one of the major problems we have in this country. It goes way beyond the partisan considerations of any political group. These are our children, the children of all Members of this House and all Canadians. That is why we worked so hard that the unemployment rate among young people between the ages of 15 to 24, which on September 4, 1984, was 18.4 per cent, is now 16.4 per cent, a drop of 2 per cent in 16 months. Fifty thousand new jobs were created for young people in 18 months. It is not enough, but we are going to work through other programs and new initiatives in order to bring about a substantial reduction in unemployment among the youth of Canada.

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a mere recital of statistics does not help our young people who are despairing of finding work. Indeed, if the Prime Minister wants to deal purely in statistics, the last numbers show that unemployment for young people between the ages of 15 and 24 went up in the last month. The Minister of Finance recognizes that.

I have from the other place a unanimous report of the Senate, with 26 recommendations which can go, I believe, a long way to restoring hope for our young people. Will the Prime Minister give us a firm indication that he intends to bring in some new programs which will meet a very vital problem? Unless he does, we risk losing half a generation.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the sentiments expressed by my right hon. friend. Indeed, it is imperative and incumbent upon all Governments to deal in a straightforward and effective way with the problem of youth unemployment which became a tremendous tragedy between 1980 and 1984, with a net loss to the economy of 285,000 jobs for young people between the ages of 15 and 24 years. Youth unemployment between 1980 and 1984 escalated from 12.9 per cent to 18.4 per cent. That is where the tragedy is involved.

However, in response to my right hon. friend, I can assure him that, yes, I will be delighted to look at that program, and any other suggestion that will create jobs for—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt. It is becoming rather long.

CREDIBILITY OF MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). I would like to ask the Minister whether in all sincerity she can, at this very moment, claim to speak for youth this Government, or if, after her attempt to manipulate and organize the youth of this country, she thinks she has no credibility among Canadian youth to speak on their behalf. Where is her legitimacy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Minister is not only a spokesperson but a credible and very, very effective Minister in this Government and for Canadians.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I understand. The Prime Minister was not about to let the Minister put her foot in it again, which is why he answered for the Minister, but I would ask the Prime Minister: Could he, in all honesty and integrity, claim before this House that the Minister speaks on behalf of young Canadians, when she has tried to take advantage of them, manipulate them and certainly organize them for partisan, unworthy and unacceptable purposes?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is a very biased and partisan remark which is unworthy of the Hon. member who himself has been a Minister. He knows perfectly well that the Minister has worked very hard for the youth of this country, and with results. The New Democrats are snickering. Job creation makes the New Democrats snicker. The fact is that the youth unemployment rate dropped two per cent since the Minister was appointed. And that is the result of hard work.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

STUDY TEAM OPTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister knows today, since he commented in the House, that his Task Force on Program Review of the Government has now reported. The alleged task of the task force was to make recommendations on improving efficiency in government programs and agencies. If that were all that were involved everyone would be delighted. Will the Deputy Prime Minister acknowledge that the large majority of cuts recommended by this task force have nothing to do with efficiency but, instead, consist of cuts affecting services to people in every region of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge no such thing. What the Leader of the New Democratic Party is trying to distort is the fact that what was tabled today were study team reports by mixed private and public sector study teams, headed by a private sector advisory committee upon which three national labour organizations were represented. Those study teams have presented options to the Government as a first step in the orderly process of the decision-making process. What is more, they have been referred to the standing committees of the House for a full airing and invitation of broad public discussion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMITTEE REFERRALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, of course the Deputy Prime Minister did not answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I say that with seriousness. I hope he will listen to the second question and answer it.

Considering that, among other things, this task force recommends that the Government abandon farmers, native people, the poorer regions of Canada, and all those dependent upon public housing, will the Deputy Prime Minister acknowledge that in referring this set of packages to the committees the dice are loaded and that what is really being referred to the committees is a Conservative agenda for an uncaring Canada? That is what he is about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I counted six false representations in the preamble to the Hon. Member's question. The hon. gentleman would like to arouse, for partisan purposes, the fears attached to those false representations. However, the fact remains that these are study team reports produced for the examination of parliamentarians and parliamentary committees. They do not set forth recommendations; they set forth options. The hon. gentleman may have some of his own and I am waiting with bated breath to hear what are his suggestions and those of his party members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

TASK FORCE OPTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister saying that the task force does not recommend a series of cuts and an abolition of a number of programs providing economic and social services that affect farmers, Atlantic Canadians, native people, and women? Is he telling the House that the task force does not make those recommendations? If he is not saying that, will he admit that the second question is right, and that what the Government is proposing is a very uncaring, insensitive Government for the people of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the gentleman continues to distort. I said clearly this morning, and I am sorry he was absent when I tabled the report—

Mr. Broadbent: I read it with care.

Mr. Nielsen: If he read it, he would have noticed that in the introduction to each and every volume of the reports that have been tabled, there is the statement that the reports were setting forth options identified by the study teams, and that those options did not represent Government policy and were not decisions of Government but that all of them were referred to the parliamentary process for review. I repeat that if the hon. gentleman and members of the Official Opposition will take advantage of the opportunity, they will be advancing their options at the committee stage.

YOUTH

FUNDING OF MINISTRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth. In her reprofile of spending for youth, the Minister misled the House. In fact the actual spending cuts, projecting for inflation, are not $100 million but $150 million, at a time when youth unemployment is rising. How can the Minister justify her own $1 million budget until April Fool's Day at a time when she has sat silently and allowed programs like Katimavik to be cut?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, our efforts on behalf of the young goes on full time: jobs are created, more and more young people avail themselves of training programs. Our work goes on as usual.

CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. If the Minister of State for Youth has been so effective in lobbying on behalf of youth, why is it that the Nielsen task force is suggesting that within two years there could be a potential closure of every Canada Employment Centre in the country?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I repeated to the Leader of the New Democratic Party in answer to his three questions, what we are dealing with are reports of study teams which have presented options for all Members of the House to consider in the committee process.

I might take this opportunity to point out the very positive accomplishments already achieved by the Government as a result of the task force work. One example is the consolidation of real property services. Under the previous administration, there were literally billions of dollars—

Ms. Copps: We are talking about jobs for young people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

REDUCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the report submitted by his task force estimates at some $36 billion, the amount of tax expenditures, that those expenditures have increased much faster than general Government expenditures, and that the Government knows neither the costs nor the benefits of those tax expenditures, will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why his task force has done nothing to reduce those billions of dollars of tax expenditures, particularly those intended for big corporations? Instead, they chose to aim the greater part of their cuts at services to the average Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am really quite surprised at what the Hon. Member has just said. Obviously he did not read the Budget. Obviously he did not read the May Budget. Obviously he has not been paying attention in the House.

We have eliminated the largest number of tax expenditures of any Government in recent history, and I can enumerate these. They include the scientific research tax credit, the limited partnerships, as was recognized by his own Party's finance critic, the bump of which the O&Y Company took advantage, the use of trusts, the income splitting, the financing of yachts and the financing of motels. I have a long list of these, and I wish the Hon. Member would read the documents before he wastes the time of the House with questions like that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATE INCOME TAX

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If he is talking about options, will he explain why options were not provided with respect to the cutting of major tax expenditures which benefit corporations? Can he justify the task force which says that it does not suggest significant changes relative to the four corporate income tax expenditure items covered by the overview? Why are those options not being made available to the committees of the House and to the people of Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, two major corporate tax expenditures were eliminated in the last Budget—the investment tax credit, 7 per cent and 10 per cent, plus the inventory valuation allowance. Those are two examples of the continuing and ongoing effort which the Government has made to weed out of the tax system all tax expenditures we can that are no longer effective. I have referred the Hon. Member and his colleagues to the booklet we put out last year which enumerates all these tax expenditures, and I am still waiting for their recommendations on what ones we should be removing.

Mr. Broadbent: You got your letter before the Budget.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence.

Mr. Broadbent: Just don't lie in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Broadbent: I will stand up and say it if you want.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard that. I must ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa to withdraw that, please. I simply ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my comment about the untruth of what he just said.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Ontario university presidents are criticizing the Government and have united to say that the underfunding which is taking place will seriously undermine our post-secondary educational institutions. The president of the University of Waterloo, Douglas Wright, is participating in a strike to demonstrate this concern. Could the Prime Minister explain how he can allow the deficit to be fought on the backs of our post-secondary educational institutions which guarantee the future of our country and of our youth?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon Member takes a look at the Budget and at the legislation now before the House, he will see that the growth in Established Programs Financing, both for health and for post-secondary education, is ahead of inflation. There is also protection in the Bill for inflation plus. If he looks realistically at the legacy left in terms of the amount of money which is now paid from the public coffers for debt financing, I think he will have to admit that it is a fair offer in view of the circumstances which we all face.

Mr. de Corneille: Let him tell that to the presidents of the universities and to the youth.

FEDERAL SHARE OF FUNDING

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister kindly answer my question? Is he really prepared to ignore the fact that universities are sinking into oblivion as buildings and equipment fall apart, as students are jammed into classrooms which cannot hold them, and as professors and other staff are demoralized? Or will he hear the desperate cry of our young people?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is David Peterson doing?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. gentleman to the Al Johnson report, for instance, in terms of what the federal Government was paying relative to what the provinces were paying for post-secondary education. I have already indicated what the Minister of Finance has done in terms of the Budget and Established Programs Financing. Why does the Hon. Member not go to his Liberal counterparts in Queen's Park and say: "You pay your share too"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I sould like to direct my question to the Prime Minister who represented Atlantic Canada at one time. The Nielsen task force recommends drastically cutting services to Atlantic Canada, in particular the fisheries, all in the name of efficiency, at the same time as it is raising costs. Will the Prime Minister agree that these recommendations have little to do with efficiency and everything to do with Tory ideology?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman must be hard of hearing. I have said several times today that these are correctly identified as study team reports which consist of analyses and options put forward by study teams for consideration in the decision-making process. The reports have been referred to the standing committees where those options, as well as those of the hon. gentleman and others, will be fully exposed to the public light of day for the first time in the history of Government in our country. I would hope that he would ensure that his input is there.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, what the House and, more important, the people of Atlantic Canada want to know is where the Government stands in respect of these particular recommendations. Will the Government go on record now and distance itself from this drastic and Draconian measure?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to which measure the Hon. Member is referring.

Mr. Rodriguez: All of them.

Mr. Nielsen: All right, the hon. gentleman says "All of them". Obviously he places no credibility whatsoever in the consultation process.

Mr. Rodriguez: All the cuts.

Mr. Nielsen: Two hundred people have devoted themselves for over a year to present these options for consideration by parliamentarians—

Mr. Nystrom: Not the farmers.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not the fishermen.

Mr. Nielsen: —and he wants to throw them all in the garbage bin. That is his idea of democracy and his idea of the consultation process; it is not ours.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I have received a letter from a women whose son will soon complete his post-doctorate in physical chemistry. She fears that he will have to join his brother and three former classmates in the United States because Canada will not look after our young scientists. Everywhere he applies he receives the same answer—no vacancy due to lack of funds. By inadequately funding research, as the Minister did in the Budget, what is he saying to this mother and to a whole generation of young Canadian scientists?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am saying to that mother and the whole generation of young scientists that there is a tremendous future in Canada because of the funding provided in the Budget of a couple of weeks ago, which could amount to a total of $1 billion over the course of the next five years. That is in addition to the research and development measures which we took in the last Budget. The Government is committed to encouraging research and development. The facts are very clear, that that is where we stand.

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF BRAIN DRAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, ACFAS, the Association canadienne-française pour l'avancement des sciences, says the scienctific community has been swindled by the Minister. My question to the Minister is this: What will he do to prevent a brain drain that will drive young Canadians away from this country, that will drive out research and future jobs?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member neglects to say that the budget left to the Government showed a distinctive downturn which took place in the current fiscal year. We have restored that downturn. More than that, we have increased the budgets from there in a very innovative way which will bring the research community more closely together with the industrial community, so that the research efforts will be much more co-ordinated as between research laboratories and the market-place. That is what makes effective research and development.

GRAIN

PORT OF CHURCHILL—USE FOR EXPORTING PURPOSES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my honourable, honest, and trustworthy friend, the Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Wait for it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is the high-water mark.

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister and his Party, in the Prince Albert statement and subsequently in the federal election campaign, promised and guaranteed to expand and improve the use of the Port of Churchill for grain transportation, and the Deputy Prime Minister is referring all these reports to the standing committees. In order to save the time of the standing committees, will the Minister now repudiate the recommendation of this bunch of boneheads to exclude Churchill from the grain transportation system! Will he repudiate that now, so that the committee does not have to deal with it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister indicated in his comments this morning, the recommendations which have been presented are simply recommendations and do not represent government policy.

Mr. Benjamin: Then repudiate it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Nor are they decisions of the Government. They provide a basis for discussion.

Mr. Benjamin: What is there to discuss?

• (1440)

Mr. Mazankowski: I would think the Hon. Member should be aware of the 23 projects under the ERDA subagreements that were fulfilled to enhance the Port of Churchill, which was an undertaking by the previous Government. Of course, Mr.

Speaker, I would not want to preclude the Hon. Member's participation in the standing committee because he may have further advice to offer.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course, Mr. Speaker. We are going to be on this for weeks.

VIA RAIL

CAPITAL INVESTMENT IN ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am just trying to help the Minister to be a man of his word. In order not to allow the Deputy Prime Minister and the Transport Committee to make a liar out of him, will the Minister now guarantee that there will be no postponements, as recommended, that this item will not be referred to the standing committee, that there will be no postponements on the provision of capital investment for locomotives and transportation equipment for VIA Rail?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who wrote that question?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows the discussions with respect to the acquisition of new rail passenger cars are ongoing between VIA and the TransConsortium of Bombardier and UTDC. Those discussions are continuing.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EMERGENCY RESPONSE TEAMS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. During the past year it has become agonizingly clear that diabolical, suicidal terrorists have considered Canada a relatively safe haven. However, all Canadians will welcome the anti-terrorist initiative the Solicitor General announced yesterday. My question, Mr. Speaker, which I am getting to, is since the RCMP already has emergency response teams across Canada, will they be dismantled when the new unit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Member have a question? I am sorry, I just heard the preamble again.

Mr. Attewell: Shall I repeat the question, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Minister, I think, is ready to answer.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): I think I heard the question, Mr. Speaker. It was whether or not we would be dismantling our emergency response teams. The answer is no.

This new team will differ from conventional emergency response teams because of the degree of training. Conventional emergency response teams are made up of police officers who are assigned other responsibilities and who train one day a month. This new special emergency response team will be in constant training. It will be permanently assembled and it will be ready to be dispatched at the sign of any emergency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PORNOGRAPHY

USE OF TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is replacing the Minister of Communications. It concerns dial-a-porn. As the Minister knows, the problem of youth as consumers of pornography is a disturbing one, and nowhere is it more evident than in the growing abuse of the 1-900 telephone system for dial-a-porn operations originating from the United States. Why is the Government allowing the Canadian telephone system to be used to import and spread pornography to the young of Canada?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the Minister's interest in this question. I will take notice of it and he will respond to the House in due course.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

STATUS OF WOMEN

STUDY TEAM REPORT—FUNDING OF WOMEN'S PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My question is for the Prime Minister who promised women equality.

The culture and communications study team, which involved only male consultants from the private sector, has recommended a $9 million cut to the Secretary of State Women's Program which funds rural, native, and immigrant women's programs, as well as helping women's centres, transition houses, and advocacy programs.

Will the Prime Minister assure women, who were not consulted in this process and do not agree with the assumptions of this committee, that there will be no cuts to women's programs that are designed to help women achieve greater equality and protection from violence?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Again, Mr. Speaker, I point out that this is a study team report, the one to which the Hon. Member is referring. It will be going to committee where it will have full input. In the meantime I can assure the Hon. Member that there was the broadest possible consultation, including that with womens' groups, not only by that study team but by others as well.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary, please.

CITIZENSHIP, LABOUR AND IMMIGRATION STUDY TEAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister support the recommendations of the citizenship, labour and immigration task force—another task force—which came up with exactly the opposite conclusions, questioning the credibility of this whole exercise? It stated that any cuts to Secretary of State women's programs would be inappropriate given the Government's commitment to long-term action for women. What kind of a study is this when we have no input by women?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is now too long.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member was here this morning when I tabled this study team report, not a task force report, she would have heard me say that many of the options outlined by one study team were contradictory to options that were identified by another, or even a third. That will be found throughout the work, which only goes to emphasize the independent, autonomous nature of the objective process through which the study teams produced their reports for our consideration.

YOUTH

REPAYMENT OF STUDENT LOAN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Youth concerning a serious problem faced by many of the people she is supposed to represent.

A constituent of mine, a young woman with a small child, for the last few months has been harassed by a collection agency on behalf of the Secretary of State's Department, for the collection of a student loan that she made, even though she has repeatedly tried to negotiate a long-term payment schedule with the bank and the collection agency.

This is not an isolated case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Order, please.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to ask the question of the Minister of State for Youth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is this a policy statement or an individual question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just a question, please.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to ask the Minister of State for Youth whether she is aware of these harassment techniques that are now taking place, and will she make representations to her colleague, the Secretary of State, not only to investigate this case but what it appears to be a general pattern of harassment of those who are benefiting from student loans?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this being a policy in any way. I will take the question as notice and bring it to the attention of the Secretary of State—

An Hon. Member: We have lost two years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: It is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East and others, and on this side too, today. The House is getting noisy.

Mr. Benjamin: And it is going to get worse.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary, please.

STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Youth. In view of the fact there is an escalating number of defaults and an increasing debt load carried by those who have student loans, will the Minister, on behalf of her constituency, undertake to represent to her cabinet colleagues that there be a major review of the Canada Student Loan Program to determine whether the actions of the banks and collection agencies are really fair—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Student Loan Program is being looked into very seriously to make things as easy as possible for young people who have to borrow money to continue their studies. During the course of that study, I am sure the Hon. Member's concern will be looked after.

AGRICULTURE

CASH ADVANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Considering the task force recommends cancelling the interest-free cash advance program for prairie farmers, a program brought in by the Diefenbaker Government years ago, will the Minister repudiate the recommendations to cancel cash advance programs that are so important to the prairie farmers? Indeed, it is an assault on prairie farmers.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to questions and answers on this subject throughout the Question Period. I cannot understand why members of the Opposition are not getting the message from the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Broadbent: We got the message.

Mr. Wise: The message is very clear—

Mr. Broadbent: It is a loaded dice.

Mr. Wise: It is a joint report, private and public, involving provincial input, on a whole variety of programs. I am certain Hon. Members across the way should recognize that these are options, and they should recognize and accept the fact that these are not government policies.

An Hon. Member: They are slow learners.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMITTEE REFERRALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Prime Minister. In light of that answer and others, will the Prime Minister now agree not to refer to committee any recommendations from this task force report that are contrary to promises made by the Conservative Party in the 1984 election campaign? Will he agree to that?

• (1450)

Mr. Broadbent: Let's hear that one, Erik.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You guys are absolutely incredible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Poor Gary Philmon, he is a dead duck.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, try as they might to distort the facts, they are not going to succeed. What we are dealing with are study team reports which require a little maturity, more than that displayed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, to deal with. What the NDP is saying is: "To heck with the study teams; burn before reading. We don't want any discussion at all."

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No change.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely that is not a mature approach to the decision-making process in which we invite them to be involved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

SAFEGUARDING OF PENSION PLAN FUNDS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know from recent press reports that the private sector has put pension funds in jeopardy and pensioners themselves at risk. What action is being taken to secure pension plan funds against unilateral action by the parties concerned, particularly third party claims against pension funds in the event of a bankruptcy?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he probably knows, the Advisory Committee on Revision of the Bankruptcy Act tabled its recommendations earlier this year. Consultation will take place this spring. I can assure him that his point will be a very important part of these discussions as well.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. Is she aware that Katimavik, among its many activities, works with senior citizens? For example, there is a project involving the North Centennial Manor in Kapuskasing, Ontario. Does she really think it is right that a worth-while experience of giving and learning for Canada's youth should be eliminated?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, while going across the country this year talking with young people, yes, they said they are prepared to do voluntary work. They want to work with the older generation. They are prepared to do it, Sir, without it costing the Government up to $20 million a year. That is what they will be doing, Sir.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE REINSTATED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he agree to reconsider this action very carefully and, having done so, restore Katimavik to its full level of funding so that our youth can continue to benefit from this program, as well as those whom they serve?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the decision to end Katimavik was just one of many painful decisions the Government was forced to make as we struggled to restore fiscal sanity to the country. I have acknowledged that previous Governments had the option to introduce programs like Katimavik. That is a fundamental right of any Government. It is also the right of any subsequent Government, having received a mandate from the people, to implement other programs on behalf of youth. That is what we have done. In the process we brought the youth unemployment rate down from 18.4 per cent on the day we were elected, to 16.4 per cent today. We have not done enough, but we are going the right way and we are going to do an awful lot more.

ABOLITION OF PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the policies of the Tory Government, one Quebec farmer out of every five is now facing bankruptcy.

Can the Minister of Agriculture assure Quebec farmers that the disastrous recommendations made by the Nielsen Task Force, which will result in an almost complete elimination of farm subsidy programs, will not be accepted by his Government?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is really the same question we have been getting throughout Question Period. Again, these are strictly options, not government policy. Let me just give them a couple of examples. If they read what the task force said with reference to dairy policy, did we accept it or reject it? We rejected it. Indeed, for the first time in a long time, we delivered a dairy policy for this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: That is one example.

ABSENCE OF FARMERS FROM NIELSEN TASK FORCE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is ready to reject some recommendations, and I am now asking on behalf of all Quebec farmers, why not reject all those disastrous recommendations, and why did the Task Force not include a single Quebec farmer?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, they have some difficulty defining the difference between options and recommendations. I am not so sure whether they got the last example or not, and if they did not, let me give them another example. They should look to see the recommendation of the task force regarding feed freight assistance. Did we accept it or did we reject it? We rejected it. Just take the time and trouble to see what policy we are working on at the moment.

SHIPBUILDING

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF ICEBREAKER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport whose many virtues have already been extolled by the Hon. Member for Regina West. What progress has been made toward the construction of a Polar Class 8 icebreaker, and when will the keel be laid?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): 2010.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, discussions are ongoing. An interdepartmental committee has been established and I have been mandated, along with the Associate Minister of National Defence, to bring recommendations to Cabinet some time within the next month or so to meet the very worthy proposition to which the Hon. Member has referred.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. She has admitted she is getting impatient with high gasoline prices. It is nice to see that she has faced reality along with the rest of Canadians. Since she has not imposed a deadline for gasoline price reductions, and since the companies are not rushing forward to reduce their prices, why is she so sure prices will decline now?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I suggest it was the former Liberal Government which did not face reality when it brought in the NEP which caused so much damage. In response to the question, we put in place a competitive system and under that system gasoline prices will fall.

ANTICIPATED PRICE REDUCTIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, time has passed the Minister by in all senses regarding her predictions. Will she tell us if prices will be falling in a substantial way, or exactly how much can consumers expect to save at the pump?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no Government has ever been so wrong in the forecasting of oil prices as the former Liberal Government. That Government forecast prices would rise to $70 a barrel. I am quite prepared to wait and see how the situation unfolds.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McInnes that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I will speak briefly in response to the question that was asked before the lunch break. I was asked a question about the Arthur Andersen Report about the value of Canadian Arsenals Limited, and certainly we, in our Party, would want to have that report released when this Bill goes to the legislative committee, as I expect it will. Our representative on that committee will be pressing to have the Arthur Andersen Report tabled. We believe that this is important not only for the information of Members of Parliament, but also for the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited and also for the general public. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments. Resuming debate? Question?

Mr. Cassidy: This might be a slightly transparent means of getting the point on the record, but I would like to ask my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), whether he would agree with me that it would be desirable for the Government, in addition to tabling the Andersen Report when the committee meets, also to undertake to table the actuarial report on the pension plan and the consequences of the privatization, and also any other documents or studies which may have been prepared in connection with this particular sale following the precedent that was set previously when the Government proceeded on the de Havilland affair and made those documents available to the committee that was studying it. Would my hon. friend agree that that was a good idea and recommend that to the Parliamentary Secretary and to his Minister?

Mr. Manly: Absolutely. As I mentioned in my few remarks on Bill C-87, one of the problems that the employees of Canadian Arsenals face is that while the Government has said in a press release that their pensions are being protected, they have not been able to see any of the documents relating to this. This matter has to be clarified by tabling all relevant information so it will be available to the legislative committee that is studying it, and, above all, so it will be available to the people who are most affected, and that is the employees.

Mr. Speaker: Questions, comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in this debate on Bill C-87, a Bill to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. We have, as you know, debated this question now for some three days and I would like to put on the record some of the reasons why we feel so strongly, and our prerequisite to supporting the motion that this Bill be now sent to a committee for further study and consideration, clause by clause. The Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), you will recall, in his speech to us at the opening of this debate speaking as the Official Opposition spokesperson on February 24, 1986, referred to unanswered questions in regard to the value of Canadian Arsenals Limited and the cost efficiencies the Government is looking for in privatizing this company. I can quote from page 10866 of Hansard my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, said:

> The first thing we should know is that, although the Minister has assured us that there has been an agreement with the employees and that the employees were seemingly satisfied with the way this whole sale will take place—

He went on to say:

> —this does not at all reflect the conversations I have had with the people from the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

That is a most essential point, and I think any employer such as the Government of Canada should tell us openly that he has consulted with the employees and assured them that the cross-over from a public to a private company will be done in the most efficient and care-taking manner.

I do not want to talk about the several subjects which this entails, such as job guarantees and career opportunities, but there is one point which I find to be very interesting and which should be raised again today, and that is, the question of pensions. These people have for years been working for a Crown corporation covered under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, I take it, and under the Public Service pension plan. That pension plan, of course, as we all know, has been indexed to the cost of living and these people have contributed to the public pension fund and, therefore, should be assured that this plan will be transferred to their new employer when the effective transfer is made to the new owner.

We do not have that guarantee. We do not have much information dealing with the pension arrangements. We will be looking forward in committee to getting from the Minister some of the answers to these questions.

In his opening remarks also, after speaking about this Bill, my colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell referred to a letter which was received by him from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) dated January 20, 1986, which has been quoted in this House several times. I just want to read a couple of paragraphs from that letter because they are germane to the point I am trying to make. It reads:

Dear Don, further to my Legislative Assistant's discussion with you last week, I must once again advise you that I cannot provide you with a copy of the Arthur Andersen Report. However, I can confirm that the Arthur Andersen Company carried out a valuation study of C.A.L.—

That is, Canadian Arsenals Limited. It goes on to say:

—prior to commencement of the bidding and negotiation process and estimated that the value range for C.A.L. was $80 to $98 million.

We have been asking the Government for a copy of the Arthur Anderson Report. I dare say that every speaker, at least from the Official Opposition, has asked for a copy of the Anderson Report, but we have been continuously told, "No, we cannot give it to you". I can tell the Government now, and I think I can speak for my Party at least, that if it will table that document, if it will give us the undertaking that it will table this document in committee, we will at this time give our concurrence to this Bill being referred to committee for clause by clause study. Until that commitment is given to us I cannot assure anybody that we will not continue to press the Government for information, to press for the facts, to ask the Government to come clean on this issue, to come and tell us, and the Canadian people, why the privatization of CAL is of value to the Canadian public. We want to know why the Government is selling off a winner. It is a public company that has recently been profitable, making some $10 million. Indeed, the Government is transferring to the private sector a company which is solid and making a profit.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it would be useful for me to go over the background before speaking about the two or three major points which I want to raise this afternoon. The corporation being discussed this afternoon, Canadian Arsenals Limited produces medium and large caliber ammunition. We know that it has a plant at Le Gardeur, near Montreal, which employs 750 workers, and another in Saint-Augustin, near Quebec, with 50 workers. I repeat that 90 per cent of the production of Canadian Arsenals Limited is sold to the Department of National Defence and 10 per cent is exported.

During the sixties, the Government of the time decided to divest itself of part of the production aspect of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to keep only a smaller operation specialized in the production of medium and large caliber ammunition.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to us that the selling of Canadian Arsenals Limited to SNC is strangely similar to the de Havilland-Boeing deal, at least to the extent that the Government is once again refusing to provide information which would allow us to judge for ourselves whether this virtual monopoly that SNC will be given will benefit Canadians. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the selling of de Havilland to an American company had been the subject of an intense debate in the House last winter when the Government sold this Canadian company specialized in aeronautics for $90 million without giving Members of Parliament and the Canadian public access to the reports providing information on its value or the reasons of the Government for transfering it to the private sector.

Hon. Members will recall that, after exerting a lot of pressure on this Government, we succeeded in getting a committee of the House be established to review the transaction, the costs, the financial and social benefits and the costs in aeronautical and scientific research which would probably be involved in this transaction, and this committee had quite interesting meetings where the Government presented reports which helped us to understand better the selling of de Havilland to Boeing. However, Mr. Speaker, even before the committee presented its report, the Government had already signed and closed the deal with Boeing.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that this Government did not wait for the committee to conclude its examination before selling de Havilland gives an indication of the position of this Government as regards public transactions. This is why we are reluctant this time to give it a free hand and to say that we trust it to do the right thing. The Minister tells my colleague for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), in a little aside at the bottom of his letter:

[English]

I can show you a copy of the report in my office, if you so wish. Please call.

[Translation]

That is very generous of him. Mr. Speaker, we are asking for a copy of the report by Arthur Andersen and Company for all Canadians, not just for a select group of Members who would be allowed to see the documents at the Minister's discretion. Mr. Speaker, what about open Government? What about this new reform policy that is supposed to give Members access to documentation that will help them acquire a better understanding of the subject and make better decisions, so they can be better Members of Parliament and better politicians? Oh no, they tell us: This is a confidential document for the Minister's eyes only.

Mr. Speaker, once again, we insist on being given this document, we want the Minister to understand our reasons, to stop playing for time and refusing this perfectly normal request, and to release the Andersen paper so that we can all understand and analyze with him the advantages and disadvantages of this transaction.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful to go back and examine the whole issue of privatization. If we consider this Government's policy, which consists in divestiture of certain Crown corporations by selling them to the private sector, we can ask ourselves: Has this Government, before proceeding with privatization, conducted market studies and ordered a cost-benefit analysis and has it done what every employer and company owner ought to do, which is to ensure that the same will benefit taxpayers? Hon. Members will recall that I raised this matter in connection with public servants and the Government's habit of always trying to privatize certain services in order to cut the establishment of the Public Service.

In a question to the Minister responsible for the Treasury Board, I asked the Minister whether he was prepared to publish cost-benefit studies he had in his possession, so that we could understand what the Government's policy was on privatization. Mr. Speaker, in an answer I received on February 27 of this year from the Parliamentary Secretary during a debate here in the House, I learned something which I think should be interesting for anyone who wants to understand why the Government is going to privatize. I shall, if I may, read one paragraph from the Parliamentary Secretary's speech, which explains at page 11052, and I quote:

> With respect to privatization, the Government has established a ministerial task force to co-ordinate the possible sale of Crown corporations or other equity holdings.

I repeat: "the possible sale of Crown corporations or other equity holdings."

> A privatization secretariat has been set up in support of the task force. The ministerial task force has developed a systematic process for the review of each individual privatization initiative to ensure that all issues be fully identified in advance and that divestiture proceed in a business-like manner.

I think that is pretty clear. And that is why we are asking to have the systematic examination include the Arthur Andersen report which focuses on the economic consequences of this sale. Mr. Speaker, we want proof that this $92 million sale is backed by valid reasons, has definite merits and that it is certain beyond a shadow of a doubt that Canada will benefit by this transaction.

And I continue to quote from the reply the Parliamentary Secretary made on February 27, to a question which I had directed to him concerning privatization:

> In the initial stage, the Minister who is responsible for a particular corporation will present his or her recommendations to the task force on the whole range of issues concerning possible privatization, including the continued public policy role of the corporation, alternate means of delivering the same policy, potential impact on employees, service to the public and preliminary financial consideration. The task force will then decide whether or not to proceed with a further study of the corporation.

Mr. Speaker, nobody could have said it better. Those are exactly the points which we have been trying to make during the three days of this debate on Bill C-87. For instance, we have asked: What are the "potential impact on employees"? This is apparently one of the criteria of privatization. Could we not obtain this information from the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary?

Second point: "service to the public and preliminary financial considerations". Well, I suppose that the Arthur Andersen Report deals with that, because this report was requested by the Minister even before he asked for bids.

An Hon. Member: What is in this report?

Mr. Gauthier: I wonder what is in this report. Why will they not provide us with a copy of it? The task force needs to know about these criteria.

I will keep on reading the Parliamentary Secretary's reply, because there is a lot of substance in it. It is not often that he provides us with a good reply, but he must have made a big effort that time because his reply was well written. I continue:

> The purpose of the next study phase would be the proposal, again by the responsible Minister—

In this case, the Minister of Supply and Services.

> —of resolutions to the outstanding policy issues, including impact on employees and more detailed financial and cost benefit analyses. I would stress that this work will be done by the line department in consultation with the privatization secretariat—

I could continue like this, Mr. Speaker, but you are signalling that my time is almost up. I therefore refer people who are interested to the House of Commons Debates of February 27, 1986, page 11052, where they can read the rest of the Parliamentary Secretary's reply concerning privatization.

Since you are indicating to me that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to state publicly whether the Government is planning to make public the Arthur Andersen report and assure us that his report will be provided to the committee members. I think I can assure the House that my party will go ahead and refer this Bill to the committee for study and consideration.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, my good friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), has raised numerous points in his presentation to which I paid very close attention and which I feel are very pertinent. Many points were raised as well by my good friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). In fact, many points were raised during the whole of the debate which I feel have been valuable to us.

We advised all bidders that the Government was concerned about the employees. SNC has assured us that it will honour the contracts until new contracts are struck and that it will, with the Government, enter into reciprocal pension transfer agreements to ensure portability of pension rights. In spite of this, my hon. friends opposite have raised many matters. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert have both stated that they would be prepared to let this Bill go to committee if we released the Andersen Report in committee, and we are very interested in getting this Bill into committee so we can go over the fine details and points.

The Minister made the offer to the spokesmen of the Opposition to read the Andersen Report in the Minister's office because the Andersen Report was still the property of Arthur Andersen and Associates and could not at that time be made public. The policy of the Government usually is for the committee to request the report and the Government to make it available at that time. However, because of some of the concerns expressed by the Opposition and because of the insistence on the public announcement of this report's availability, I am prepared to make an exception in this case and, rather than wait for the committee to request the report, if both opposition Parties are willing to let the Bill go to committee at this time, I am willing to give my word and the word of my Minister that the Arthur Andersen Report will be part of the briefing report for Members on that committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a great initiative on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary. I want to congratulate him for the work he has done in trying to help us all come to grips with this situation. I also want to thank him for giving his word and the word of his Minister that this report will be tabled. I take it that he can tell me today that the entire report will be tabled, not just extracts from it. If that is so, I want to thank him and the Minister again and tell them that we will be active in committee in trying to make a good deal for Canadians on the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for agreeing to provide the report which has been requested. I noticed that when my colleague was asking whether the report was to be tabled in its entirety, the Parliamentary Secretary nodded his head. I wonder if we could get a verbal comment for the record.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do everything in my power in committee to provide committee members with whatever materials they request. I can assure the opposition at this time that the Arthur Andersen report in its entirety will be tabled.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is as follows: Mr. McInnes, seconded by Mr. Côté (Langelier), moves that Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Friday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Given a chance to find my notes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will take this opportunity to comment on this very important piece of legislation.

Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, seeks parliamentary approval for the expenditure of some $22 billion. As I read here, I think that is what it is, twenty-two billion six hundred million dollars, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

Mr. Speaker, since we all know that the Government borrows money, perhaps it might be useful now and then to ask why the Government wants to borrow $22.6 billion. It is a rather impressive and astronomical amount, as my colleague would say. But what we have to understand is that $22.6 billion is the same as 22,600 million dollars. That is a lot of money!

I would like to comment on such borrowing authority in light of the credibility of the Government's projections pertaining to interest rates, oil prices, investments, and the interest costs of those loans, for I think it is imperative to discuss this in the House since it is a public question, a question of interests to be paid by all Canadians. I would like to talk about the debt structure and, finally, the interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, after tabling his Budget on February 26, 1986 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced a Bill asking the House for authority to borrow, as I just said, an amount not exceeding $22.6 billion for the fiscal year 1986-87, namely the fiscal year beginning next April 1 and ending March 31, 1987. That is the fiscal year of the Government. This amount represents the financial requirements of the Government, meaning that exchange operations are excluded, as provided in the 1986-87 fiscal plan. What we have to keep in mind is that it is based on the new accounting practices now in use. Indeed as of this year the Auditor General asked that the accounting methods be changed—and I acknowledge this may be beneficial—and in its Budget the Government has adopted such new accounting methods.

As it happens, Mr. Speaker, I think that the first question has to do with the credibility of the Government's premises because, in our judgment, the premises on which the Government estimates are based have no credibility.

The information now available makes it seem like a real possibility that the deficit will be much higher than forecast. We question for instance the projections related to interest rates, oil prices and investments.

Let us speak first about the interest rates. For 1986, the Government foresees an average interest rate of 9.5 per cent for 90-day bills. However, as we all know, the interest rate was 11.4 per cent as of yesterday, March 10. I do not have today's rate because it is impossible to be always up to date, but yesterday, the rate was at 11.4 per cent, and according to the figures of the Government, every 1 per cent of difference in the interest rate means a difference of about $1 billion in the deficit. I repeat that each upward or downward variation of 1 per cent has a $1 billion impact on the deficit. In other words, if the average interest rate for the entire year were 10.5 per cent, for instance, the deficit would be $1 billion over the deficit forecast by the Government. The Conference Board, which is not—

Mr. Lapierre: A two-bit organization?

Mr. Gauthier: It is not just a two-bit organization, but while it does not refuse to examine minor problems, it is concerned mostly with problems which affect the Canadian economy, and for 1986, this organization has forecast interest rates of 10.4 per cent, that is 1 per cent higher than what the Minister forecast. If we look at the projections of experts like those at the Conference Board, we immediately see that the Government will miss the mark in its projections and will probably take a bad fall as concerns the deficit by exceeding by $1 billion the amount forecast.

Let us now talk about the oil prices. The Government forecasts average oil prices of $22.50 U.S. a barrel until the end of 1986. The spot price, which is the price of oil on the European spot market where oil is sold, is about $12 U.S., or approximately $10.50 under the figure announced in the Budget.

Mr. Lapierre: Another mistake.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada—this is another serious organization, an economic advisory council to the Government—used an average price of $19 U.S. for its economic forecasts. The Conference Board, on the other hand, used a price of $18 U.S. for the second half of 1986, and $21 U.S. for the last part of 1987. Now, for each reduction of one dollar in the price of oil from the estimated price, there is a loss to the Federal Government of $110 million in corporate income tax and gasoline and oil taxes. We can therefore see here net losses, because the forecasts as stated by the Minister of Finance are not accurate. He is wrong in our view on interest rates, and he is wrong on the price of gas and oil.

He stated in his Budget speech that these were the best figures available when the Budget was sent to print.

An Hon. Member: They did not look very far.

Mr. Gauthier: We told him, Mr. Speaker: If that is true, it is up to you to give new figures, to feed new data into your computer and print out more accurate figures, rather than carrying on with that false theory based on a totally inaccurate assumption.

As far as investments are concerned, the Minister of Finance did forecast in his Budget a growth rate of about 7 per cent for investments in 1986. The most recent survey made by Statistics Canada concerning business investment intentions shows that Canadian business think they will be investing only 2.5 per cent more this year than last. And God knows how important business investment intentions are!

Furthermore, the Minister of Finance estimates that investments in new plants and equipment will be 6 per cent, while Statistics Canada forecasts a 1.9 per cent decline in actual figures, when price increases are taken into account. If Statistics Canada's forecasts were to prove right, the economic growth rate would be lower than the one predicted by the Minister of Finance. And for each reduction of one percentage point in actual economic growth, the deficit once more increases by $1 billion. An error of one per cent in investments expands into a $1 billion increase in the deficit. They were wrong in interest, so an extra $1 billion can be added easily. They were wrong on the price of oil, and there again it is $110 million for each dollar reduction in that price. And we also note, on investment projections, quite a serious error that is supported by agencies as important as Statistics Canada and the Conference Board. So we have here an extra $1 billion increase in the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, this means it is vital for us that the Government review its figures, that it put all the economics back into its computer in order to give Canadians the real answer and the hard facts, which is that those computations are wrong and the data are totally inaccurate.

Let us now look at interest charges, Mr. Speaker, because there is always a cost for money that is borrowed. Interest is like a rent on money, we pay money to someone when that person lends us funds, in the way of interest, or to make it simpler as a price for money. It is rather difficult admittedly to figure out interest payments on Government borrowings. This is based of course on the rate of interest charged, on the term of the loan and on the currency in which that debt is designated. This is quite important. Those are the figures which the economists are constantly throwing at us and we are told with great fanfare every Thursday, I believe, what the Bank of Canada interest rate will be during the week. The banks look at it and say: "Well this is good or not so good. We will set the prime rate according to that rate". Then it is increased or reduced. I admit that it is difficult to judge. It is like the Canadian dollar, it depends on the mood of those who have the power to set the bank interest rate and the Canadian dollar rate the following morning.

Mr. Speaker, it is expected that on average the Government will pay 10 per cent. I feel that 10 per cent is a rather realistic average rate on a $22.6 billion loan so that we will only pay interest on that amount for 1986. It is a rather huge sum we have to pay for borrowing money.

Mr. Speaker, such an estimate seems to be rather accurate since the Government says that in 1984-85 on a net debt of $199 billion, they paid in interest alone something like $18 billion or 9.05 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that for 1990-91, a paper tabled following, not the last budget but the previous one, included all kinds of projections on the impact of budget measures on national accounts. We had then learned that for 1990-91, the Government, according to an intermediate scenario, would pay $31 billion net in interest on a $360 billion debt, that being 8.61 per cent.

Unless such a scenario should become unfavourable, it is not $31 billion but $36 billion in interest that will have to be paid in 1990-91 on that debt which should amount to close to $400 billion, always on the basis of projections for the forthcoming five years.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with another matter before I resume my seat and it is the structure of our debt, because it concerns many people and much has been written about the structure of our debt and deficit.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian debt is made up of a large number of items with a great variety of maturities and other characteristics. However, it is possible to break down that debt into a Canadian dollar component and a foreign currency component.

Mr. Speaker, I have in front of me a table showing that on December 31, 1985, 5.2 per cent of the Canadian Government debt was in the form of foreign currencies.

Since the Government had to borrow heavily on foreign markets to support the Canadian dollar, that percentage will most likely increase throughout 1986.

We know that around Christmas time the demand for US dollars rose sharply, causing the Canadian dollar to catch a cold and drop to 69 cents. It recovered slightly in January, but with the presentation of the famous Budget on February 26 last, it caught another cold and has a bad case of influenza now, and we are left wondering if it will indeed recover. It was back to 71.5 cents, I think, yesterday, not quite back to its pre-budget level, but getting there gradually. Presumably, the Minister was not able to satisfy foreigners and currency speculators that the Government was serious about its Budget and really meant to strengthen the position of the Canadian dollar on the exchange markets.

Mr. Speaker, when the Government borrows money on foreign markets, interests has to be paid. Those interest payments mean that we have that much less to run our economy. Those funds leave Canada and help foreigners become richer. I am referring in particular, Mr. Speaker, to developing countries such as African countries, but I am also thinking of one country which depends heavily on its oil exports to be able to pay just the interest on its debt, Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, the national debt of Mexico is positively huge. It think it is in order of $100 billion. Interest on that debt is paid from the sale of Mexican oil to foreign countries. When the price of oil goes down, you can easily imagine what kind of problems arise... The problem of Mexico is that they are unable to meet their interest payment commitments and are therefore urged by their creditors to take some form of action.

In Canada, 5.2 per cent of our debt is with foreign countries. Compared to Mexico or other African or even European countries, our fiscal situation is good largely because the Canadian government has been able to finance its borrowings in Canada and that insurance companies, pension funds and Canadian people are buying Canada Savings Bonds, have confidence in the Canadian Government and say: Yes, we went through difficult times in the 80s; true, we had a world recession, oil prices have gone up and the Canadian dollar has taken a beating, interest rates have increased, but all that is not due to the federal Government. Some international concerns had an impact and we recognize it. But we trust you and we will lend you money. And therefore, today in Canada, most of the national debt is held by Canadian people, pension funds and public agencies.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by saying that the Government's strategy for this Budget was very simple. It was aimed at restoring confidence among world financial circles. They failed miserably. Their numbers were wrong, their datas on crucial matters such as interest rates and, as I said, oil prices as well as investment plans of Canadian companies, were wrong. They were totally wrong. We are simply asking them... and we do not blame them for being wrong, we recognize as well that it can happen under difficult international circumstances when the oil price decreases by $10, $12 and $13 within a few months, without Canada being responsible. We are aware of that fact.

In 1972, we have been through a similar situation with prices going up. I remember when I was first elected in 1972, Mr. Speaker, oil sold for $3 per barrel. And with the OPEC crisis, as it is called, the price of a barrel jumped to $36 within a few years. We had to adjust, we had to give a new direction to our economy. Of course, the deficit increased substantially and the Canadian people will have to pay for it. I am aware of it as well. But that problem, essentially, was not due to Canadians but to external forces.

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating to me that my time has expired, which I regret because I wanted to deal with other matters. However, I will come back eventually to this topic whenever I have the opportunity to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for questions or comments.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I listed with interest to the representations of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He referred to the Economic Council of Canada in support of his representations. He has great faith in that body. He describes it as quite trustworthy, and I agree with him one hundred per cent.

Today he is basing his arguments on the Economic Council of Canada which he calls reliable. I would like to ask him why, when his party was in office, he did not rise in the House to recommend that his Government cut tax expenditures which were then and still are considered as not productive by the Economic Council of Canada. Why did he not stand up and recommend a reduction in tax expenditures?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, and if he has time,—I don't know whether he will bother to take the time,—he should look at Hansard for the years 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, and I could go on. I think I am one of those people who are somewhat critically inclined, and who on occasion are not afraid to say what they think. I was often accused of being a rebel, which I was not. I thought it was perfectly normal to fulfil one's role as a Member of the House. I know that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) does his job as he thinks right, and I feel he is certainly interested in his work because we often see him speaking in the House, and he is interested in debate. I have been doing this for nearly thirteen years, and I think that if he speaks again in this debate and has a specific question about pensions or budgets, I have some experience in those areas, and perhaps I could give him a more specific answer. If the Hon. Member does consult Hansard, I think he will realize that I was often even critical of my own Government.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments and several questions for the Hon. Member who just spoke to the Bill before the House today, the borrowing authority legislation. I believe he gave us his critique in three parts. First, he discussed the Estimates. Second, he questioned interest rates. Third, he commented on the actual structure of the debt.

First of all, I may remind the House that an article appeared recently in the press, quoting another journalist from the Globe and Mail, and I shall quote, Mr. Speaker, to avoid being called to order and accused of using unparliamentary language. The journalist, Marcel Adam, was repeating comments made by Jeffrey Simpson of the Globe and Mail. He said—and showed in his criticism of the Wilson Budget—that again the Liberal Opposition has proven in a depressing way that intellectual inconsistency, hypocrisy and political expediency are the hallmark of Members on the Opposition benches.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is an accurate summary of the gist of the Opposition criticisms, as we can see in a brief retrospective of the three points made by the Hon. Member who criticized this Bill. With respect to forecasts, remember not so long ago when the new Progressive Conservative Government tabled its first Budget. Mr. Wilson had made various forecasts based on advice and his own competent judgment. As far as I know, this is the first time we have a Minister of Finance who happens to be an economist and who can indeed understand the feedback he gets from his department officials and tell them about the policy of the Party.

That is why you may have noticed in the course of the debates that he is always quite prepared to defend his own policies, not those of a rearguard of public servants who used to tell previous governments which way to jump.

Speaking of forecasts, Mr. Speaker, I can recall that some newspapermen shouted "wrong facts, Turner". I can recall the New Democratic party predicting that the first Wilson Budget would cost 200,000 jobs in the first year. Some 585,000 jobs have been created in Canada since then, so they were way off the mark by about 800,000 jobs. And I can recall that a former bank president, now Member for Laval (Mr. Garneau), had bragged about his own competence and predicted that interest rates would skyrocket as a result of that Budget. Well, down they went.

Remember the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who had stated at the time that inflation would soar the following year as a result of that Budget. We all know that his theories fizzled right out, for inflation remained quite stable. Yet at the time, the Minister of Finance, ably supported by his Minister of State (Finance), had admitted that perhaps there just might be the odd fluctuation in interest rates, inflation and unemployment, but that such fluctuations would be minimal as compared with major changes in those rates. And Heaven knows that they have been right ever since that their figures were true within a cent or a tenth of a percentage point. So when Members opposite, whether "libé-reux" or "nouveaux PD" as I call them, suggested today that we are making a mistake, I wondered whether it is not some kind of endorsement which Canadians appreciate. I think that the Globe and Mail has just provided us with these data. If only Members opposite would open their eyes and consider both the estimates and interest rates, they would realize that long-term interest rates are down presently on the money market. All financial interests, banking institutions, trust and insurance companies know that rates on long-term annuities are low. That is exactly the option the Minister of Finance has chosen.

As to the debt structure, they stumbled again over accidents; they tried to base their argument on one-twentieth of the debt with impact on foreign markets with which we must trade. Mr. Speaker, this is fighting over trifles. I should like Hon. Members opposite to try again in a more responsible way and taking into account that the Canadian people no longer believe in the Opposition's fantasies.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) was going to make a speech, because he seemed on his way to talk all afternoon.

However, I should like to point out to him two things: first of all, he will find in Hansard for Friday, March 7, on page 11310, the reply to Mr. Jeffrey Simpson who was kind enough to tell us about Mr. Adam's report. At that time, I was directing a question on this to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) who had dealt with the Budget. And I was saying to the Minister that he had probably lunched recently with Mr. Simpson, because it is the Conservative Government's policy to have lunch with newspapermen in order to provide them with the Government's propaganda and convince them to spread the good word. I was asking the Minister whether Mr. Jeffrey Simpson had lunch or dinner with him since he was now propagating the policy of the Government even though the Conservatives always used to say that the journalists kept spreading false ?. However, when a few articles are favourable to the Government Members, they take very good care of them and quote them in the House. It is not the first, but rather the second or third time that a Government Member mentions this article. It is an article by a public relations specialist. For Heaven's sake, do not start to suggest that this attitude is general and that all the reporters are on your side!

Second, as concerns the difference between the Canadian and American interest rates, I think that the Hon. Member for LaSalle is an honest man and that he will recognize that such a difference is excessive. There is a difference of 4 points between the Canadian and the American rates. I think that the Hon. Member will agree that it is not really to the advantage of Canada to have such a wide gap, even a gap of 5 points as of March 6, 1986, according to my figures. I believe that it is to the disadvantage of the Canadian economy to have such an inflated interest rate, and I use the word "inflated" intentionally, because there is no justification for the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, which has always been 1 or perhaps 3 points lower than the Canadian rate, being 5 or 6 points higher as it is now. I deplore this abnormality, and in my opinion, the Hon. Member for LaSalle is intelligent enough to recognize that actual interest rates in Canada are now unjustifiably high from an economic point of view.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when we discuss this borrowing authority Bill, we cannot discuss it in isolation. We have to think about it and assess it in conjunction with the Budget and in conjunction with the task force report on program review tabled today by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen).

• (1600)

The borrowing Bill asks Parliament to approve the borrowing of some billions of dollars. I say that the amount asked for by the Government is not sufficient. It is not sufficient because the revenue projections in the Budget were all wrong.

In case Members feel that I am saying this for purely political, partisan reasons, let me put on the record the views of Don Braid, The Edmonton Journal's political columnist, in a column he wrote and which appeared in The Gazette in Montreal on Thursday, March 6, 1986. Let me remind Members that Don Braid is no flaming radical. He was a very vigorous critic of the former Liberal Government and of its National Energy Program. Let me quote a couple of paragraphs from what Mr. Braid said about the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He said:

> By estimating the price of oil at $22.50 U.S. per barrel for the rest of 1986, and projecting revenue from that figure, Wilson has underestimated his deficit by about $2 billion.

He goes on to indicate why that is, and his estimate of what this meant reads:

> The federal Tories seemed stunned by hostile reaction to their Budget in the West, and especially Alberta, but there's no mystery about it.
> Most westerners had expected realism in this Budget. Instead, they were handed a grade-school blunder that suggests Finance Minister Michael Wilson can't count. And he made his mistake in an area where westerners tend to be very discerning, oil prices.

He concludes his article with the following:

> Wilson made the worst kind of budget mistake: He ignored economic reality in order to make his document look good. The whole budget is now suspect not just to everyone familiar with the oil industry, but to the world financial community.
> Wilson may be forced to revise it within months, with yet more devastating results for Canada's image in foreign markets. The mistake is so serious that this minister should find a new line of work.

That is from a very conservative columnist.

The Budget and the borrowing Bill are wrong because if we need to borrow, we should only do so after we have established a tax system that is fair.

Some of my colleagues have talked about the unfairness of the corporate tax system. I want to talk about the unfairness of the personal income tax system which is permitted and encouraged by the Conservative Government.

Let me quote to illustrate what I mean from The Financial Post, March 8, 1986. This is the current issue. Nobody could accuse The Financial Post of being hostile to the business community or to middle and upper-income Canadians. In the March 8 issue of The Financial Post there is a box headed "The Tax Hit". It gives illustrations of how the new income tax proposals will affect three Canadians, one with a $40,000 income, one with a $60,000 income and a third with a $150,000 income. The table shows what these people paid in income tax in 1984 and 1985 and what they will pay in 1986 and 1987.

Let me summarize the facts. A Canadian with a wife and two children with a gross income of $40,000 would have paid $9,145 in income tax in 1984. In 1987, he will pay $9,957, an increase in income tax of $800 in round figures. A person with a $60,000 income would have paid $14,909 in income tax in 1984. In 1987, he or she would pay $13,708, a reduction in income tax of $1,200. A person with a $150,000 income would have paid $53,448 in income tax in 1984, and in 1987 he will pay, thanks to the Conservative Minister of Finance, $47,978, a reduction of $5,470.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is Tory fairness.

Mr. Orlikow: That is the Tory idea of fairness and it is one which Members of my Party simply cannot accept.

Mr. MacDougall: What about the Grits in the 1980s?

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member on the government side is interjecting. I will be very happy to take his questions when I have completed my remarks.

This Budget breaks with the Conservative promise, the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was Leader of the Official Opposition that he would create jobs, jobs, jobs.

The Conservatives talk about the jobs they have created. If you look at the Budget Papers, Mr. Speaker, you will see that they themselves say that the target for the end of 1987, 18 or more months from now, is for 9 per cent unemployment, a reduction in 3 years of just 2.5 per cent. Is that good enough when regions like Newfoundland, parts of eastern Quebec and parts of British Columbia, hard hit by the recession, have an unemployment rate of not 9 per cent but twice that or 2.5 times that? I say that this is simply not acceptable.

We have 400,000 young people without jobs. They are becoming a lost generation. We have older workers and discouraged workers who have very few prospects for work. They now find that any benefits, to which they were entitled by the way of unemployment insurance, will not be there because of the new regulations concerning severance pay and pensions et cetera.

That is why the Government's economic policy as outlined in the Budget and in the borrowing Bill is so dangerous. It is terribly complacent. This is a Government that has been in office for less than two years. I cannot remember when I heard remarks in this Chamber as mean, as cruel and as unthinking as the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) on February 27 when he said:

> In Canada today, there are more than ever job openings and opportunities right across the country, except for a few pockets. There are "help wanted" signs all over the place. Newspapers carry special supplements for "help wanted" ads.

Where does that Member live? He lives in the city, part of which he represents and part of which I represent. A few days ago an announcement was made by a company that it was going to hire people. One hundred and fifty people lined up the night before and stayed in line all night because they had not been able to find jobs. That situation is happening all over the country. In my own City of Winnipeg, which has one of the lowest unemployment rates in the country and which has had low unemployment rates for the last couple of years—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Thanks to the NDP Government.

Mr. Orlikow: —we have several dozen voluntary agencies which are handing out food baskets. We have an agency feeding people.

Mr. Gustafson: Thanks to the NDP Government.

Mr. Orlikow: That is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. I put it on the record because I want to be honest. What is happening in my province, and I am ashamed of it, is happening in every other province in this country, and much worse as well, and I will come to that in a minute.

But where has this Member from Winnipeg-Assiniboine been? I know he represents the most affluent part of the City of Winnipeg. Surely he cannot be so blind as to imply, as he did in those remarks, that anybody who wants a job can find a job. That is just not true and he should have known that. I think it was the same day he made those remarks that the CBC's The Journal devoted 35 minutes or more of its program to what is happening in British Columbia. There you see the new reality: a Social Credit Government which is concerned only about restraint and keeping the deficit down. The Journal told us that in addition to the fact that one in six people in British Columbia are living below the poverty line, there is a new class which includes 4,000 unemployed teachers and 16,000 persons with university degrees who cannot find jobs. I ask Members on the Government side to do some simple arithmetic. How much money did it cost the people of Canada to educate those people? Surely we and they would be much better off if they were working and paying taxes and not drawing unemployment insurance or welfare. Surely it is a tragic failure for this country when these trained people cannot find jobs and use their skills. Some of these people have used up their unemployment insurance benefits and their savings and are now drawing welfare. Some of these people were interviewed while getting food baskets from food banks established by charitable organizations. What a commentary on this country! That is the reality in British Columbia. That province was the first to implement a program of restraint, but the situation is now much worse there than it was in 1981. The unemployment rate then in B.C. was 6.7 per cent and now it is almost twice that level.

Five or six weeks ago I was in Saint John, New Brunswick and Halifax, Nova Scotia. I visited one of those agencies in each city which has been established to help those in need by people who care. I urge all Members of Parliament, regardless of Party, to visit these places. There is one in almost every city in Canada. I visited Romero House in Saint John, New Brunswick. When it started four years ago it was serving 20 to 30 people a day. Now it is serving a hot meal to 200 people a day, seven days a week. It hands out food baskets and is making plans to establish three other places in other parts of the city who will be doing the same thing. Romero House was organized by a very concerned and caring woman, namely, Mrs. Carol McNulty. She is supported by individuals, service clubs and church groups. Some farmers give produce and some stores give the goods they have been unable to sell. It costs about $3,000 a month to operate. The group gets no money from government sources. What interested me was that they do not want money from government sources. They are doing what they are doing because the need is there. They believe it is a disgrace that in a country as wealthy as Canada hundreds and thousands of people have to depend on charity.

The next day I went to Halifax and visited Hope Cottage. It was started in 1970 by a Catholic priest. It is now feeding 300 people a day. I was told that in the beginning it served older people, 55 and over, and street people. Now, 60 per cent of the people who come there are under 35. A large number are in the age bracket of 16 to 19. Many come from small towns. They have little education, they sleep and eat wherever they can. We have had news reports about people in many cities who have no place to sleep except in an alley or under bridges. We all know what that means in Canada in the winter. Hope Cottage provides meals, a place to stay, and clothing. They counsel people and are trying to make the public and Government aware of the seriousness of the problem.

I also visited Adsum House, which is very close to Hope Cottage, where they try to help homeless women, and the North End Community Clinic which is trying to organize improvements in the health services for poor people. These are the realities which this Budget and this borrowing Bill completely ignore.

I talked about British Columbia and the three years during which that province followed the kind of restraint program which this Government is imposing on the people of Canada. Surely we can learn a lesson from British Columbia. The idea of restraint which the Conservative Members of this Parliament are proposing is exactly the same kind of idea which was proposed and implemented in British Columbia. It did not work there and it is not going to succeed here. This is why it did not work.

Public sector lay-offs, and that is what we are getting here, and wage restraints, did not give the consumer in British Columbia any confidence in the Government so as to spend money and increase demand. Those Government employees who lost their jobs were not absorbed into the private sector labour force. This obviously did not reflect investor confidence in these measures. The Government did not save money by laying people off. In fact, it had to pay out money in the form of welfare and other benefits. The British Columbia Government's ideological agenda blocked any significant recovery of the economy at a time when the rest of Canada was starting to emerge from the recession of 1981-83. Wages were capped, cutting demand, massive unemployment was accepted by that Government, and it is going to be accepted by this Government. Low paid and unorganized labour was encouraged to grow at the expense of higher paid workers, and education and social services were cut back. That is precisely what this Conservative Government is proposing. This Government is proposing to bring the B.C. model to Canada as a whole. It was wrong in British Columbia and it is going to be just as wrong in the rest of the country. It is for those reasons that we oppose this borrowing Bill.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have here in my hand Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, which we are debating at this time. It is interesting that in three short paragraphs, on one single page, this Government is asking for permission to borrow $22.6 billion. Why? To carry out, we are told, the policies of this Government which have been put forward over the last year and a half. As I consider this Bill, I have to ask: Do these policies, clearly laid out by two Tory Budgets, two sets of Estimates and an Economic Statement, meet the needs of the people of my riding or, for that matter, the people of Canada as a whole? Do these policies really fulfil the aspirations of our people? I do not think I need to refer to opinion polls to come to my own conclusion and that my answer on behalf of the constituents to whom I speak, is an emphatic no. I am inclined to tell the Government that I do not really wish to see it borrow this money until it shows that it cares more about people and less about statistics, until it is prepared to care more about the average man and less about the wealthy.

• (1620)

The names I am using now are fictitious, of course, but the people and the stories they have are not. Ruth Jones in my riding is a single mother with two children. She is working as a secretary. She wants to take her BA at night school. She applied, but she cannot get in. Apparently we are finding that the universities are not able to take a person like her into evening courses because the seats are taken.

Joe Smith wants to help his son Jim to fulfil his dream to become a computer science graduate. Jim applies, he cannot get in. There are only 40 students who get in while the department receives 700 applications. Ruth Jones, the single mother secretary who wanted to improve her education, finds that her income is stuck, stuck forever with no hope for advancement, she feels. Joe Smith will never become a computer scientist. The university he applied to has no room for him because it does not have the money to fund any more seats in this course. Government cut-backs for post-secondary education have caused the university to be unable to serve people like Joe Smith.

These are real people. This is what the future of post-secondary education in this country is like. These people are illustrative of the impact of the cut-backs by the Tories to post-secondary education. They want to borrow money to fulfil their policies, but their policies are to cut back on post-secondary education. This is the reality of the full cut as a result of Tory incompetence and shortsightedness.

The federal Government has announced and now has brought in Bill C-96, which will change the formula by which transfers of support by this Government for post-secondary education will take place. It is reducing the formula for these transfers by 2 per cent per year. This will result in a cumulative cut to post-secondary education by 1990-1991 of aproximately $2 billion, $2 billion out of an education system that has been trying to fight a war on behalf of the youth of our country who cannot find jobs and have been returning to the post-secondary educational system in droves in the hopes that they can advance their education sufficiently to qualify themselves to get those jobs which they need to have to carve out for themselves a future. This avenue is now being closed to them as well, no jobs and now no studying.

Faced with increased costs, the unviersities have also faced declining budgets. As David L. Johnson, President of the 79-member Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the AUCC, stated, "No government can make the claim of fiscal responsibility if it puts at risk the very institutions on which Canadians depend for their future.

Post-secondary education is but one example of how this Government's latest Budget is one of doom and despair for the youth of this country. At a time when youth unemployment is running at 15.9 per cent, where are the opportunities for jobs for young people? How can they train adequately for the future when budgets to colleges, CEGEPs and universities are cut; when federally paid for seats for university training programs and colleges are by 40 per cent; when colleges and university employment offices are cut back and closed down; when job-training programs in 1987-1988 will be cut by another $100 million on top of the $200 million cut for 1986-87 unveiled in last May's Budget?

The Senate committee report on youth released just this month urged the Government to act to prevent some 700,000 young people from becoming a lost generation. It was a study made by the Members of the Senate of both Parties, and it was agreed upon unanimously. So after this recommendation from the Senate committee on youth, what does this Government do? It cuts funds to post-secondary education contrary to the recommendations. It cuts funds for retraining programs, funds for job-creation, it cuts out the First Chance program, it cuts out Katimavik, a youth program whose obvious success is evident in that there have been some 20,000 graduates, a program which at the time it was cut was receiving some 500 applications a week. It was a program which provided services by youth at a salary of $1 a day to the elderly, to the handicapped and to such worth-while projects as reforestation and environmental and community improvement. It is amazing. This is a United Nations prize-winning program. This is program which has been endorsed by the municipalities of Canada. A resolution has been passed by the organization of the municipalities across Canada pleading for its reinstitution.

A 20-year-old, for example, on his own and jobless costs Canadian taxpayers from $3,000 to $9,000 for nine months. The person contributes nothing to society. Katimavik, on the other hand, costs $9,450 for the same period and gives the young person dignity, self-worth and a unique and toughening learning experience in real life classrooms.

Katimavik is cut because the Secretary of State says he wants new programs to create "permanent jobs for young people". Where are these programs? Today we have had the admission that there is no program at the present time to replace Katimavik. Katimavik is a program that develops citizenship, a community spirit, resourcefulness and the ability to solve problems and to learn. Also it gives young people the chance to go across the country, to learn the other official language, and in fact to have an experience in jobs, in working with others. It is a program that is famous internationally.

The Government has said it has changed priorities. It claims it wants permanent jobs for our youth. So of all things it cuts Katimavik, promises a new program, and barely three weeks later the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brings down a Budget that kills the hope of training and retraining by 40 per cent and job-creation programs by $100 million. It kills the hopes of our young people by blasting and stunting all responsible expectations that our youth might have had for some conscience from this Government and concern and caring for our youth. No, this Tory Government has dumped all over our youth. The corporations get tax cuts. The millionaires get bailed out in their bank investments. There is money for that in the Tory Budgets. The rich get capital gains as presents to the tune of $500 million, which ends up as a cash bonanza of $125,000, but the youth are sacrificed on the battlefield to fight the deficit in the Tory war supposedly against the deficit. I find it absolutely tragic that these are the values of this Government. Where is its concern for young people? Where is its program for young people?

The Government is borrowing money for a bankrupt policy that does not invest in the future, the basis of which is the youth of our country.

Today I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) a question which he referred to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). The purpose of my question was to point out that university presidents are unamimous in their opposition to the policy of the Government and are united in saying that under-funding for universities will seriously undermine the future of post-secondary education.

I pointed out that the President of the University of Waterloo, Douglas Wright, is participating in a strike on the campus to demonstrate this concern. I asked the Prime Minister how he could allow this under-funding to take place on the back of post-secondary educational institutions which are so fundamental to Canada's future and the future of young people.

I did not receive an answer from the Prime Minister so I asked, as a supplementary question, if he was prepared to face the fact that universities are sinking into oblivion as buildings and equipment deteriorate, students are being stacked in the classrooms by the hundreds, and staff are being demoralized to the point where some are leaving the country. I asked him if he did not hear the cries from the universities and acknowledge that there was a crisis. He did not answer my question. Again, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was left to tell me that perhaps the Province of Ontario should do something. He does not say that to all of the provinces because the Ministers of Finance, except for the Province of British Columbia perhaps, and all of the Ministers of Education have told the Minister that the Government's policy is short-sighted in this respect.

What happens to the youth of our country who manage to get an education and find a job? Those who wish to get married, buy a house and raise a family face grave obstacles. Let us consider our youth and family life in this country. First, many of our youth do not get full-time jobs and, if they do, many of them are low-paying jobs that have been created by corporations by laying off older employees in order to take advantage of Government programs. Why, in a country like ours, should we have youth filled with doom and despair? They may not have much hope because they are finding it difficult to save money in their junior jobs with junior salaries.

The fact is that the Government's latest Budget is eroding their pocket-books even further. Last year, the Conservative Budget removed 3 per cent of inflation protection from the tax tables during a year of 4 per cent inflation. The average Canadian has not seen the impact of this reduction. Canadians do not yet realize what has hit them because they have not received the message that their tax tables have been manipulated with a 3 per cent cut in inflation protection. There is another 3 per cent cut in this year's Budget, and that 3 per cent inflation protection will be removed by the Government every year thereafter. Such a cut affects the young and the old.

The Government also imposed a 3 per cent surcharge. When the Government came to office it renewed the 1 per cent sales tax, imposed another 1 per cent sales tax in its Budget the following year and has slapped on another 1 per cent this year. The sales tax has risen from 9 per cent to 12 per cent and has reduced the purchasing power of young people by 3 per cent.

The Government has also slapped an 11 per cent tax on health care items that were not previously taxed. These include health care items and some medicines used particularly by elderly people. The Government is imposing a wide range of new taxes on Canadians.

We have read that gas prices will decrease as a result of falling world oil prices. We see that these prices have fallen in other countries, but not in Canada. In fact, the Tories have added to the price of gasoline with this sales tax increase of 3 per cent.

During the world-wide recession, the Liberal Government recognized that young people needed help in purchasing a home. We introduced the RHOSP plan which allowed young people to put up to $10,000 in a special bank account that could be spent, tax free, on housing and furnishings. The purpose of this program was to give young people an incentive to build their own home and start a family.

Of course, the Conservatives immediately cancelled the RHOSP program. The successive 1 per cent federal tax increases introduced by the Government jack up the price of houses by 3 per cent. Furthermore, they raise the price of all other goods Canadians require for their home and families. It is tragic that the Government is sapping the ability of Canada to compete in the world. It is crushing our young people and their ability to contribute to the economic, cultural and moral growth of Canada. The state of our universities and colleges leaves young people without hope.

I want to deal with the voluntary sector, including the charitable organizations and community organizations. This sector has proven to be one of the largest and most intensive job creation sectors in Canada. It is an intensive labour market which provides services to Canadians cheaply, which no Government can duplicate. Yet this voluntary sector in which our young people may find jobs has been ignored by the Government in terms of the fifty-fifty plan for organizations. While the Government may have had reason not to address this sector in its first Budget, due to time constraints, nothing has been done in the latest Budget for the volunteer sector or the charitable sector in this country. That is reprehensible.

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I probably agree with the objectives and the concerns of the previous speaker, but obviously, I cannot support the means he is suggesting.

● (1640)

During this debate on our borrowing authority, many speakers this afternoon have criticized the statistics and forecasts used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget to establish our borrowing requirements and the projections for the coming year.

However, I would like to say that, since I am a newcomer in this House and must therefore read a lot, I have made a few quick checks this afternoon to see what have been the forecasts, the ideas and the projections on the occasion of past budgets. On November 12, 1981, for instance, the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Mr. MacEachen, stated: "This Budget has three themes: restraint, equity and economic renewal" And he stated, on page 12721 of Hansard: "The first is the need for restraint on the part of the Government and on the part of all Canadians. For our part, I believe we must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially". This is what he was saying at the time. And that Hon. Minister came forth with a deficit projection of $10.5 billion for 1982-83. This was based of course on indicators, on his own perceptions, on the advice of his advisors around him, on his own vision of Canada, on his confidence in the economy. And by pure coincidence, a totally, absolutely pure coincidence, at the end of the year concerned, Mr. Speaker, we found ourselves with a $24.7 billion deficit. With that kind of instrument, with that kind of margin, with that range of variation, excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but almost any moron can be Minister of Finance.

Mr. Malépart: This is why they took on Wilson.

Mr. Hamelin: Listen, with that range of variation, 10.5 to 24.7, anybody can be Minister of Finance and make all kinds of predictions.

We have Mr. Lalonde in 1984-85 who predicted a $29.6 billion deficit and we found ourselves with $36.9 billion. That was an improvement. Yes, things are improving with a $10 billion margin. How horrendous! Billions of dollars!

Well, I think we had forecasts last year, my dear colleague, from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and they were borne out. For the first time in 20 years, we had a Minister of Finance whose predictions—

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, may I ask our colleague whether he knows the difference between a question and a comment, and to please tell us where he is leading to.

Mr. Hamelin: I feel I have no lesson to learn, especially from the Hon. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie, as to the difference between a question and a comment.

Mr. Malépart: Just prove it.

Mr. Hamelin: In the first place, most often questions by the Hon. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie are controversial comments dealing with almost every subject and having little to do with the facts.

Therefore, before asking my question, and it is coming . . .

An Hon. Member: Spit it out!

Mr. Hamelin: I will spit it out when I feel like it, my friend!

And rest assured, my dear colleagues—I am speaking to both of you—you are lucky our Parliamentary system does not allow having more frequent exchanges between the two of us in this House, because we would enjoy ourselves, I am sure.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I want to ask a question, they criticize our estimates which for the first time in 20 years have proved to be real, realistic and valid. I am sharing the more humane concerns of the previous speaker who referred to his concerns with respect to youth, etc. Do you not believe, my dear colleague, that because of those estimates which proved to be accurate in the past, probably in the months and years to come there will be much more funds available for the objectives which we would both like to attain in the matter of education and employment for young people?

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, first, I must admit that I had not commented on the accuracy of the budget predictions. I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that he has recalled a period—at which time the Budget was brought down by the Hon. Allan MacEachen—which immediately preceded a world-wide recession. I would suggest that not only the Government of the day, but every Government in the world, had miscalculated in their budgets because of the world-wide recession. What I think would be tragic is if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) were a good predictor and prognosticator. We would then be in a horrifying situation because it would mean that the level of unemployment for youth will continue to be unacceptably high, if that is his prediction. It would mean that the universities are going to be starved to an unacceptable level in terms of education. It would mean, according to the presidents of the Research Councils, that grants which will be given for research will no more than cover inflation. It would mean that the Canadian university system is literally going to go down the drain, if this Government's predictions are right.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief comment on the Hon. Member's speech and ask him a question.

In the first place, I would like to remind my colleague and this House that some of the Quebec Members have been quoting from favourable reports in newspapers, but they forget to quote from well-known and qualified reporters such as Mr. Alain Dubuc of La Presse who stated on February 27: "Wilson has missed the mark." I think that some of the Tory Members should also read the comments of an editor of La Presse, Frederic Wagnière, who said on February 27: "A too severe budget." And also Jean Pelletier in the Journal de Montréal who wrote: "The taxpayers will foot the bill." They are all columnists writing on economic issues and it is worth noting that Alain Dubuc clearly shows how Mr. Wilson's Budget will cost at least $500 per Canadian family in new taxes and that the Canadian taxpayers will be losing 3 per cent of their purchasing power. However what is still more shocking and this is the question which I would like to ask the Hon. Member. Does he remember that to save their income some of our senior citizens, our parents, mothers, grandparents, had to come on the Hill and Mrs. Denis dared to jeer at the Prime Minister? Does he remember that sick people had to make representations in our ridings and to the Prime Minister's Office so that he would remove the 10 per cent tax? Does he remember that mothers came on the Hill to make their views known to the Prime Minister and the Tory Members? I would like to know from the Hon. Member what he thinks of all these means that the public has to resort to in order to be heard. Now it is the young people, and a Senator has to go on a hunger strike to make the Government aware of their plight. What is the point of view of the Hon. Member on the activities that the public must initiate to be heard by the Government?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Malone): The time for questions and comments is now over. Debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-99, which would give the Government authority to borrow some $22.6 billion so that it can carry out its program. Our problem with this Bill is that we do not like the Government's program because it fails completely to address the real needs of Canada at the present time. As presented in the Budget two weeks ago what we have is a program which increases taxes, cuts government programs and does absolutely nothing with respect to jobs. It has an emphasis on the deficit, which is misplaced because by its actions in throttling the economy the deficit will not go down as hoped.

• (1650)

I wish to emphasize in the few minutes I have this afternoon the absolute need for jobs and the absolute need for the Government to address this situation. I wish to focus my remarks on British Columbia, and Vancouver Island in particular, because I think the situation there stands out in very stark contrast to the situation in the rest of the country.

The situation in British Columbia makes me ask where the 19 Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament were when the Budget was being drawn up. I must also ask where the three members of Cabinet from British Columbia were when it was being prepared. Why is there not something in the Budget which would help to deal with the problems in British Columbia? There is nothing. Since the Conservative Government was elected in 1984 the City of Victoria has lost 10,000 jobs. Some 16,000 jobs have been lost on Vancouver Island. In February, our youth unemployment stood at 22.1 per cent. When we look at the figures for long-term unemployment in British Columbia we see a very desperate situation. Some 65,000 of the unemployed in British Columbia have been unemployed for six months or more. This represents 31.4 per cent of all the unemployed in British Columiba. That is the highest percentage in all of Canada. When we look at the unemployment who have been unemployed for over one year we see the same story. Some 29,000 British Columbians have been unemployed for a year or more. This represents 14.2 per cent of all unemployed British Columbians. Again, this is the highest average in all of Canada, some 40 per cent higher than the national average with respect to people who have been unemployed for longer than one year.

We must combine these statistics, which have to be looked at in terms of real human beings and the suffering which they are experiencing, with the lack of programs introduced by the federal Government. Last year the Government trumpetted a great deal about the federal-provincial forestry agreement. This agreement was to see some $300 million of federal-provincial funds for British Columbia forests over the next five years. However, foresters in that province say that in order to address adequately the situation in British Columbia, which is at a crisis point, there should be at least twice that amount of money. Certainly in terms of employment needs it should be twice that amount of money. However, there is nothing in the Budget to help our forests.

With respect to fisheries, the Minister promised in February that if the users could ante-up with one-third of the money, about $100 million, the federal Government would put in $200 million to establish a $300 million salmonoid enhancement program for the next five years. The fact is that user groups, particularly commercial fishermen, are completely unable to meet the request for $100 million at the present time. Anyone who has followed the situation on the West Coast, and certainly all Members from British Columbia should have done so, knows that British Columbians have gone through a number of very difficult years. There have been poor catches and not great prices, high interest rates and high gas and oil prices. Last year was a good year and British Columbians were just beginning to catch their breath. The Government is now trying to blackmail them with the idea that there will be a salmonoid enhancement program only if they come up with this $100 million user fee. As one British Columbian said, it is like throwing an anchor to a drowning man. Instead of putting money into British Columbia to help it recover from the recession, what we have seen from the Government in its November, 1984 Economic Statement, last May's Budget and the present Budget, has been a series of unfair taxes loaded on low and middle-income people.

These taxes total some $1,300 for the average family. This money is being taken not only from individuals but from every family. It is being taken away from their communities such as the communities of Duncan, Sooke, Colwood, Chemainus and Ladysmith. This is money which comes to Ottawa for whatever purposes the Government wishes to put it to.

This money is being removed from local communities where it could circulate and do some good toward helping sustain a large and fragile economy. It is being removed from local communities which will have an even more depressing effect on the province. One of the most unsettling facts about this situation is the unfairness of it all. The fact is that wealthy income earners will be paying lower taxes because of the reduction of the surtax at the end of this year while all other Canadians will be hit with a 3 per cent surtax on their income tax.

Since the Conservatives came to power we have seen three increases in the federal sales tax of one percentage point apiece. This directly hits low-income people. In the Budget we saw some help for Atlantic Canada, which I know is not enough. I know that Atlantic Canada has very serious long-term problems. However, Atlantic Canada received more help than did British Columbia. British Columbia received nothing. At least Atlantic Canadians received the $1 billion Atlantic Enterprise Program and the tax credit program. However, there is nothing such as that for British Columbia.

In considering the situation of women and children we see nothing. The last word the Government had for women and children came when it cut the indexing with respect to family allowances. That was this Government's response to the needs of women and children. Instead of moving quickly to address what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized as a serious situation in the election campaign, that is, the need for adequate and affordable day care for all Canadians coast to coast, the Government has chosen to appoint a parliamentary committee which will tour Canada and hear submissions. We do not need more submissions. What we need is a system of affordable and quality day care for our children. In this respect the Cooke Report was recently tabled. The Government could act on this report instead of waiting to receive another which will be tabled some time in the future. When this report is tabled I am sure the Government will take its time to consider it. In fact, it will stall even further. When will we receive some action on day care?

In looking at the cut-backs to the Established Programs Financing we see that it has led responsible medical people to say that this could result in a second class system of medicare for some of Canada's poorer provinces. The Government cut the Katimavik program. This was a program which allowed some young people to participate in helping to get to know their country and to get to know one another. It provided some opportunity for service and training for our young people.

I am particularly concerned about the cuts in our goals for development assistance. Here I am speaking of commitments which Canadians made to the needy people of the world. In 1984, shortly after the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was appointed, he stood up in the United Nations and promised that we would reach the goal of 0.7 per cent of our Gross National Product for official development assistance by 1990. The Economic Statement of November, 1984 postponed that goal to the year 1995. It was outlined in the statement that we would reach 0.6 per cent of GNP for development assistance by 1990. Then, last month's Budget put the goal back yet again. We will not reach 0.7 per cent until the 21st century. The needy people of the world look to Canada for assistance. We have turned our backs on them.

I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to finishing my remarks on another day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

MONTREAL EAST GULF REFINERY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of intervening in the matter of the Gulf refinery of Montreal East in order to save the hundreds of jobs which are threatened and to protect Quebec consumers, thus respecting the unanimous resolution of the National Assembly of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, now that you have read the motion, which I will read again, we will have a chance to measure the intellectual honesty of our Conservative colleagues and this Government, and to get to the truth of a matter that has caused so much ink to flow.

Mr. Speaker, the motion is as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of intervening in the matter of the Gulf refinery of Montreal East in order to save the hundreds of jobs which are threatened and to protect Quebec consumers, thus respecting the unanimous resolution of the National Assembly of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this matter goes back to the summer of 1984, and we are still discussing it today. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) is wrong when he says it started under the Liberals. He is wrong, Mr. Speaker, and I hope he will listen carefully, because his credibility is at stake.

Mr. Speaker, during the summer of Olympia & York, Petro Canada and the federal Government proceeded with the purchase of the assets of Gulf. Early in September, thanks to the efforts of a number of Conservative members, Olympia & York was persuaded to postpone closing the refinery for two months. I take my hat off to those Members, and they are the Hon. Member for Mercier (Ms. Jacques) first of all, and then to some extent the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin)!

Mr. Speaker, matters got worse, and today, we have reached the point where the refinery is closed down, 450 employees have lost their jobs, and a Conservative Minister has resigned. A number of Conservative Members have lost all credibility with the public on this matter.

To me, the credibility of Conservative Members is not the main thing. That is their problem, not mine and not that of the people of Canada. What is still at stake today is the credibility of the Prime Minister, and also the interests of Quebec consumers and 450 employees of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East.

I know that those people are watching us, and I hasten to commend the representatives of the Gulf refinery workers for all their work and efforts to save jobs in Montreal East and soften the blow against Quebec consumers.

Mr. Speaker, those workers had confidence in all Members of all political persuasions, at both federal and provincial levels, but they wake up today and they are out of a job. Still, they know who is telling the truth in this matter.

What happened? How is it that we in the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, are involved in this case which took place in the riding of a Conservative Member, the Member for Mercier?

For starters, it all began after the announced closing of four Montreal East companies, and those people called on us to support them on the picket line. I knew full well that as a plant worker I would never have accepted a politician showing up at the plant gate just to have his picture taken, shake a few hands and drive back home. So I agreed, along with my colleagues—the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre)—on the condition that we would regroup as the Eastern Townships residents had done, set up a survival committee made up of people from all political parties, and make an honest effort to save as many jobs as possible.

So it was to deal with the Gulf issue, the Canadian Steel Wheel issue, the Vickers issue, the Daoust issue, the Parisette and Bombardier issues that all employee representatives, all elected representatives at the three levels of government, no matter their political stripes, got together under one blanket organization, the Comité de survie de l'est de Montréal. And even the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who is not directly connected with this area attended the first meeting.

Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate all provincial candidates, men and women, who took part during their election campaign without ever trying to make political gains.

But newspaper reports will indicate that the three or four Conservative Members included were the only committee members who were in disagreement. It was not a Liberal candidate haggling with the PQ candidate, but the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques) who quarrelled with the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) and the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce). The only people who made nuisances of themselves during the Montreal East battle were the three Conservative Members who constantly argued and tried to destroy one another. What happened here in the House? They are the same Conservative Members who brought in Gaz Métropolitain. The Quebec caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party, as its chairperson can bear witness here, supported this initiative. But what happened is that everybody let down the Hon. Member for Terrebonne in this issue.

How did we learn about the sale on December 3, the day after the provincial election? How did we learn about the transaction? What happened at the consumer level? Let us forget for a while about jobs and let us think about the interests of consumers.

On January 18, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post (Mr. Côté), a Quebec Minister of the Crown, a Conservative Minister . . . Ottawa could repudiate the sale of Gulf to Ultramar. This goes against the interests of Quebec consumers. The Minister made the following statement on the 17th, at a press conference which I was attending. After questions asked by the journalists on the other side, the Minister promises seven or eight times to make the report public the next Friday. What happens that Friday, Mr. Speaker? The Minister remained silent. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has shut him up. Another little Quebecer has just been told to keep quiet.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, Ultramar is threatening to close its refinery. Shell Canada is threatening to close its refinery in Montreal East and the Quebec National Assembly agrees unanimously to a motion on December 18, if you recall, immediately after the election. To my knowledge, the Liberals and PQ Members are not that friendly. These people unanimously asked that the Canadian Government and the Prime Minister, who prides himself on being the little guy from Baie Comeau and who has been named citizen for life of Westmount, wait 90 days before agreeing to the transaction.

• (1710)

It is quite unusual to have a motion passed unanimously in the National Assembly after an election campaign. What happened then, Mr. Speaker? During the Christmas adjournment, on December 19 our own adjournment was around December 21—Minister Côté made a statement which clearly showed that the consumers would be penalized in Quebec. We have to remember that it is following the signature of six or seven Liberal Members that the Minister was forced to intervene. What happened then, Mr. Speaker? On December 27, in Montreal, while everyone was enjoying the holidays, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, believing that no one would notice, that the Opposition Members would be gone, that the Conservative Members would all be away, that the Gulf Refinery employees would be unable to do anything, the Minister, who is unilingual, went alone to Quebec to announce that he had accepted the deal between Olympia & York and the British company Ultramar.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to remember that Olympia & York had obtained tax shelters of nearly $1 billion to purchase this refinery and protect the assets of Western Canada when refineries and service stations were sold to Petro-Canada. However, the Gulf Company had been left out.

Mr. Speaker, the reason given by the Minister, if market conditions so required, he had the gall, although his colleague in a press conference had suggested that this went against the interests of Quebec consumers, but the Minister of Consumer Affairs did not attend that press conference. In his press release, the Minister said that.

What do we have now after having looked at all that? There are Conservative Members who joined in good faith. They even said that the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) has the feeling he has been manipulated. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced the Hon. Members for Duvernay, for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques), for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin), were involved in good faith like all other Members, but unfortunately they have been misled. Just like the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I attended the press conference; he looked very happy. After that he winked at me, it was almost in the bag. But after that there was no more of him to be seen.

But we do have the O'Farrell Report, Mr. Speaker. The O'Farrell Report was made public, and it is in there in black and white that Quebec consumers are penalized by the Gulf Refinery shutdown in east-end Montreal. It is here, we managed to lay our hands on it because, as you remember, in this House, when the Opposition Members directed the question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney), she openly gave the not so important Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a good dressing down. She made it quite clear in the House that she was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and that her figures were right, meaning: "Listen kid, you sit down and keep quiet there".

Here, Mr. Speaker, we managed to lay our hands on that famous Energy, Mines and Resources report from the Minister, not to name her, that Minister who hails from Western Canada and who knows very little about east-end Montreal. Quebec, what is that? She does not know yet. And I have conclusions. In her view, Quebec never will be short of gas, not to worry, there is plenty of it in Ontario. Such are her own findings, Mr. Speaker, or rather the findings in her report. And to realize that Quebec Conservative Members will be conned again!

When we read the famous report from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, we notice that the figures are the same as those in the telegram which Mr. Woodroffe, the Ultramar representative, had sent to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Stevens) on September 25. As it happens, the Ultramar figures are the same as those quoted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). Isn't that funny? It is quite a coincidence. As I said a moment ago, I made a check on Ultramar and Gaz Métropolitain, and I find out that Ultramar had given $3,000 in Baie-Comeau, a mere $3,000, and Gaz Métropolitain gave nothing.

I have some other interesting figures here, Mr. Speaker. Coincidentally, Ultramar had contributed another $2,100 to the riding represented by the Minister of Finance. It is always useful. One has to admit that the Ultramar people were right on. Olympia & York, in the riding represented by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). They know the right people.

I wish a Conservative Member could tell me why, on December 20, following the motion adopted unanimously by the Quebec National Assembly and calling for a 90-day moratorium, the Government acted secretly and without advising anybody, as it had done from the start? Why?

I remember that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, accompanied by a few petty Hon. Members, a few groupies, announced on the 27th that, as Judas, he had sold Gulf to Ultramar for the purpose of closing it. The Minister thought that it was over. But three days later, the people had banded together and formed a common front. A common front made up of employee representatives, Members, both Liberal and Conservative, of the House of Commons—the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) was there—as well as Liberal Members of the provincial assembly, and various representatives from the petro-chemical industry.

At one point, Mr. Speaker, a Minister came in because there was a Member present in the hall who was against the common front. To tell the truth, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) was sitting on the other side of the fence. The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), who was a Minister at the time, came into the hall and signed the petition to indicate her support. That's when the Hon. Member for Duvernay signed the petition too, in front of the cameras.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is about to expire. I think there is an ultimate chance, and the Gulf employees, I am sure, are listening to us at this moment. The motion is clear. As Conservative Members, you have the chance... The Quebec Government is still taking steps to possibly save the whole or part of the refinery. You made a mistake when you gave the preference to a British firm over a Quebec firm; therefore you should find a solution to this problem. You must exert pressure on the Ultramar owners to compel them to sell to the Lavalin company, the SNC Group or anybody else, but in co-operation with the Quebec Government, to start the whole refinery going again, or at least to save the petro-chemical facilities, in order to keep these jobs in Montreal East and protect Quebec consumers.

• (1720)

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this is the last chance for Members of the Conservative Party. I hope that no one will accept to do the arm twisting job.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I second the motion by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), and I want to say that a few weeks ago I was in Montreal East with the Hon. Member, and I know it is perhaps unusual in the House to say anything good about a Member of another party, but I want to say that we have here a good Member who has worked hard for his constituents in Montreal East. He has worked very hard. Of course he worked hard because he is an active Member of this House, and although he is a Liberal, I want to say he is a good Member of this House.

There were also many members from the provincial legislature. One was Louise Harel, a member of the Parti québecois whom I know very well. She is the provincial member for the riding of Maisonneuve, and she is also very actively involved in the problems of Montreal East.

Mr. Speaker, the issue involving Gulf and Ultramar is a very important one, and it is perhaps one of the reasons why the Conservative party has lost so many points in the polls. I think everybody knows the Conservative Party experienced a free fall in Quebec. According to the SORECOM polls, taken two or three weeks ago, the Liberal Party got 47 per cent of the vote, the Conservative Party 27 per cent and the New Democratic Party, 26 per cent. The Conservative party has nearly become the third party in Quebec.

The poll organizer in Winnipeg said exactly the same thing three or four days ago. He said the NDP now had 25 per cent of the vote in Quebec, the Conservative Party 27 per cent and the Liberal Party, 44 per cent.

One of the reasons for the swift free fall in Quebec, even with 58 Conservative Members from that province in the House, is the fact that the Conservative Party closed down the refinery in Montreal East. This is no joke. This is not a laughing matter. Maybe the Hon. Member from Quebec should go to Montreal East and talk to the workers and talk to the people. Everybody down there knows perfectly well it was the Conservative Party with its decision regarding Investment Canada that closed down the Gulf refinery in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, Ultramar bought the Gulf refinery in Montreal to close it down and get more customers for its refinery in Quebec city. That is the only reason Ultramar purchased the refinery in Montreal East. Otherwise it would not have turned down offers to purchase the Montreal East refinery, by parties such as Gaz Métropolitain, which would have increased competition on the Quebec market.

I know it was a Conservative Member from Montreal East, the Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms Jacques) who said just before Christmas that Gaz Métropolitain might be a prospective buyer.

However, Mr. Speaker, when the sale of Gulf by Ultramar was examined by Investment Canada, Ultramar threatened to close down its refinery in Quebec City if the Government tried to keep the Gulf refinery open.

Mr. Speaker, it was the pressure of the big multinationals, and unfortunately, the Government listened to the multinationals and not to the people of Quebec.

The same threats were made publicly by Shell Canada which also has a refinery in Montreal. Shell Canada was doing exactly the same thing as Ultramar, the British Corporation, had done.

Mr. Speaker, there is also the matter of undercapacity in Quebec. Now that Gulf has shut down, the Province of Quebec has only three refineries left—Ultramar, Gulf and Petro-Canada. Those companies will now be in a position to boost their refining capacity from 75 to 100 per cent, and their profits will increase accordingly. The companies will also be able to sell all their products to their own retailers, which might signal the demise of independent retailers. That is an important issue because in Quebec as elsewhere in Canada there are quite a few independent retailers whose main problem is to remain competitive, Mr. Speaker.

Everybody, including the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), the Minister of Energy of Quebec and independent retailers, they all agree that Quebec refining capacity will no longer be able to meet the needs of Quebecers.

At long last the O'Farrell report was finally made public, and it states that Quebec's refining undercapacity will lead to price controls by those three companies—Petro-Canada, Gulf and Ultramar—as well as excessive prices for Quebec consumers. Mr. Speaker, the current situation is such that crude oil prices are tumbling throughout the world. As I recall, a barrel of oil cost $38 three months ago, but according to this morning's Globe and Mail a barrel of oil is selling for only $14 or $15, a drop of $23 or $24 a barrel.

But the main question is this, Mr. Speaker: Why did the Conservative Government give in to the oil industry and ask for the Gulf shutdown? Why did the Government wait for the major company, Ultramar? Secondly, Mr. Speaker, why did the Government not take action to protect the interests of Gulf workers and Quebec consumers? And thirdly, Mr. Speaker, why did the Government imitate the Liberal Party which, a few years ago, closed down three refineries in Montreal? Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party and this Government are not the only ones who closed a refinery in Montreal. When Mr. Trudeau was Prime Minister, the Liberal Party closed not one or two but three refineries in that great Canadian city.

Mr. Speaker, the Combine Investigation Bureau should carry out a new inquiry in order to determine whether or not the oil industry is responsible for the Gulf refinery shutdown. Shell and Ultramar together threatened the Government which gave in to pressure.

Mr. Speaker, it is a question of great importance for the Quebec people. It is a question of employment, of "jobs" for many people in Montreal East. It is also an important question on the national level, due to the fact that we now have in the country many, in fact too many foreign businesses, and a lot of foreign control in our economy. This Montreal refinery could be sold to Canadian interests, to a Quebec buyer, such as Gaz Métropolitain. Yet, in spite of the situation, the government and the Minister for Industry have decided to sell this large corporation to a British firm. Mr. Speaker, I know that Quebec people do not agree at all with this decision. I know that because, three or four months ago, I met with many Quebecers, as I said before when I was in the East end of Montreal, with Mrs. Louise Harel, the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, and 50 other people.

An Hon. Member: Federal Liberals!

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, federal Liberal Members and also provincial Liberal MNAs. I know there are also, Mr. Speaker, federal Conservative Members who do not agree with their Minister, or with their Prime Minister with regard to this refinery.

There is the Minister who resigned on that issue, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). We know, Mr. Speaker, that she has principles and she followed her conscience. I hope that more Conservative Members from Quebec will do the same, because a recent poll is giving only a 25, 26 or 27 per cent support to the Parti québécois, the Conservative Party, and after the next elections there won't be any Conservative Member left in Quebec, because the Party broke its electoral promises. They broke the promises they made to the Quebec people.

Gulf Refinery

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker—

• (1730)

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. From a procedural point of view, I would like to know whether the fact that Conservative Members will speak up to 6 o'clock, means that they are against the Motion and that they are abandoning the Gulf refinery.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): That is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mrs. B. Tardif: I am greateful for this opportunity to speak about a subject which we consider very important. As all the Hon. Members are aware, the Federal Government is committed to the creation of a new economic environment in Canada in which, and this is the crucial point, industry and commerce will be able to develop in every region in Canada. One of the troubling facts about a competitive market is that, sometimes, decisions have to be made which will mean plants closing and jobs lost. In such cases, we call upon the Governments to use all available resources to solve the problems.

The Government of Canada has stopped governing the country with ad hoc short term policies. The Progressive Conservative Government is governing the country in a much longer term perspective.

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) gave us a history lesson a while ago. I would like to do the same. If we look at what happened in December 1985, Ultramar and Gulf Canada announced that, on January 8, 1986, Ultramar would acquire the capital assets of the refinery and the marketing operations of Gulf Canada located in Quebec and the Atlantic region. It was then decided to close the Gulf refinery in Montreal. Ultramar took over the facilities with the intentions of using them as a terminal for oil products.

The decision to close the Montreal refinery was taken following an evaluation of the refining capacity in Quebec. Closing the Gulf refinery will allow the Ultramar refinery in Quebec City to remain viable.

Mr. Speaker, such are the facts which led to this transaction during 14 months between February 1983 and May 1984. Under the former Liberal Government, nine refineries were closed in Canada, including three in Montreal. This brought about the lay-off of 1,870 employees, including 1,080 in Montreal. As the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) pointed out last January 13 when he replied to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie and asked him what he did when Esso, BP and Texaco were closed and 1,080 jobs were lost in Montreal East, he should explain his own behaviour then. He did nothing. Where was he when the then Government announced that it was all over for the petrochemical industry and Pétromont?

As for us, within a few weeks, we injected $15 million in Pétromont and we have just injected $55.8 million in this company to guarantee a viable petrochemical industry in Montreal. That is progress. That is building on solid bases. For about 10 years, oil demand has gone down considerably in Quebec. The market share of natural gas has nearly doubled since 1980, when it was about 8 per cent, as it has now reached 15 per cent. The share of electricity has also increased substantially, from 27 per cent in 1980 to 38 per cent in 1985. I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) recalls the target set by the Quebec Government in its 1978 energy policy, which was a 41 per cent share of the market for electricity and a 15 to 20 per cent share for gas by 1990. The Government has therefore nearly succeeded in meeting its objective, and it has done so five years before the original target date. That increase in the market share of competing energies resulted in a similar decrease in oil sales, which used to account for more than 70 per cent of energy consumption in Quebec in the early 70's. In 1980, that proportion was reduced to a little over 60 per cent, and, finally, in 1985, oil only accounted for about 45 per cent of energy consumption in Quebec. The unavoidable result of that lower consumption was a refining over-capacity for oil products. Selling the Gulf Corporation facilities is one of the steps in the industry redeployment required because of those structural market changes. The selling of the Gulf assets in Quebec and in the Atlantic area remains a private transaction between buyer and seller, over which the Government has no control. The significant decrease experienced in oil consumption is the major factor in the decision to shut down refineries. The market shift from heavier products to lighter ones and the capital investments required to update plant and equipment also have been contributing factors to the shut-downs which affect all regions in Canada. The reduction in the Quebec production, which at times may seem disproportionate, was caused by the relatively fast decline in demand for oil products. I noted that my hon. colleague is concerned about the possibly negative impact of that shut-down on Quebec consumers. I want to reassure this House that Quebec's security with respect to supplies of oil products is not predicated upon its self-sufficiency in the area of refining capacities. I would like to give the House an example. Some provinces like Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba, have no refineries. The State of New York, with 15 million people, has no capacity in that area other than a small asphalt plant. The security of supplies is no major concern in those areas, and this is because they do not feel they need to have refining facilities of their own capable of coping with their internal needs. Quebec market forces in 1985 have been boosted by deregulation, which gave Quebec easier access to products from international sources, at competitive prices. The Hon. Member also referred earlier to the O'Farrell Report, about which he made a great fuss. As is often the case in his comments, he was looking at only part of the question. And indeed he does that very often in this House. If we had a look at what the report states, and especially what the author wrote, and I quote: This document is not the report of an inquiry under the Act. It was rather a brief of a consultative nature which had been submitted to the Minister.

Such is the O'Farrell Report. It contains not recommendations but assumptions, scenarios based on a market that includes Quebec, Eastern Ontario and the Northwestern United States. The under-capacity to which it referred must be viewed from that angle, as a market that covers part of the North American continent rather than a market limited to the Province of Quebec.

We should certainly not be mixing apples and oranges. I think that is quite clear in fact for anyone who has appraised himself of the contents of that document.

As far as safe supply is concerned, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this is what Mr. O'Farrell has to say: "It is an irrelevant question in the context of a competition oriented policy".

I wish Hon. Members would use this report as it was intended to be, and not for the kind of partisan debate that never allows us to take a good look at what is in the files.

Turning to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker, there was a recent survey of the refining capacity and the internal demand in Quebec. That survey concluded that there was an over-capacity in 1985, when Gulf was still operating. Although the Gulf refinery was closed in January 1986, there is still an over-capacity.

That survey was completed, Mr. Speaker, and is presently being studied along with four other studies by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission.

Let us now turn to the investments made by those refineries specifically in Quebec. Some $500 million were invested in the last five years in refining and marketing projects. Other investments amounting now to $215 million will be made in the years to come by Shell and Ultramar. The purpose of such investments is to enlarge the capacity in Quebec and therefore the operating range of the refineries.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members in this House that last fall we asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney) to postpone by two months the closing of the Gulf refinery in order to encourage possible buyers to come forward. That request was accepted and officials from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Departmental of Regional Industrial Expansion gathered the information and analysed the economic projections of offer and demand in order to assist potential bidders needing that information.

Earlier on, my colleague for Montreal-Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) mentioned the figures given by some companies. Of course it was in the interest of the Government that potential bidders have access to the basic information in order to be able to bid for Gulf, and to try and co-operate with every effort made by Members of Parliament and Departmental staff to make such bids possible.

Throughout the negotiating process and until the final date, interested parties discussed a possible purchase of the Montreal refinery without reaching a conclusion. However, there is still an interest in buying the petro-chemical facilities within the refinery, and Ultramar will study any commercially feasible proposal. The final date for the submission of bids was even postponed to June 1 1986.

I am sure that if my Hon. colleague had read today's papers, he would at least have learned that that final date for bids was postponed until June 1986.

However, Mr. Speaker, the oil industry in Quebec remains extremely active and the Government spares no effort to support it.

For instance, Petromont received a grant of $55 million from the federal Government in order to upgrade its facilities, and this grant is to be matched by the Quebec government.

Among the other investments made over the last two years in the petrochemical industry in Quebec, Petro-Canada built in Montreal a cracking unit using the new CANMET process. The total cost of this project is $135 million, and it created 30 jobs. I would also like to say that much of the equipment needed for this plant was manufactured by the Vickers Company in Montreal; this is obviously of interest to the workers of Montreal . . . Petro-Canada is also building a catalytic cracking unit for a total cost of $60 million which will make it possible to keep the present jobs in the Montreal facilities of the company. This unit, just like the CANMET plant, was opened in November 1985.

Shell also announced last December an investment of $80 million in its Montreal facilities in order to replace the catalytic cracking unit and maintain the number of jobs at the present level. Perhaps it is also worth mentioning that the Ultramar Company completed in 1983 its new facilities in Saint-Romuald, near Quebec City, at a cost of $310 million. This investment created some 80 new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, any job loss certainly worries this Government. We are particularly concerned about the future economic situation of the Montreal area. This is why we have formed a Cabinet committee to find ways for this area to continue leading the economic development of Canada, and particularly that of the Province of Quebec.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote Mr. Claude Piché, Executive Commissioner of the Commission d'initiative et des développements économiques de Montréal who said: "According to the press, the East end of Montreal is an area of desolation. In fact, the City of Montreal has also successfully contributed to industrial development projects between June 1984 and December 1985. More than 4,000 jobs have been created or maintained in East end Montreal, over a period of just 18 months." And I am still quoting: "Go and ask the 900 employees of MacDonald Tobacco if they are pleased with the $50 million investment at the corner of Iberville and Ontario Streets. Go and ask the employees of Johnson and Johnson if they are pleased with the $32 million investment on Pie IX Boulevard."

Mr. Speaker, through DRIE alone, since September 1, 1984, we have helped create some 17,000 direct jobs in Quebec. Contributions for the Montreal area were close to $279 million. These figures reflect the creation of 8,000 jobs, most of which are in the small business sector.

Mr. Speaker, I wish Opposition Members were not so negative in their comments. They should ask some companies like Balcan Plastics, Cari-All Inc., Industries Genetic and Tye-Sil, what they think of the assistance they received from our Government in East end Montreal. We are going to inject some $10 million to create even more jobs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker . . . instead of shouting, my hon. colleague might help our Government to create even more jobs for the Montreal area.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I would like as well to comment briefly on—

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: This is not a Government notice or motion. I understand clearly that the Government has a powerful majority. That is the decision of Canadians. However, it is customary to let someone on this side speak on a motion that is presented by a Member of this side, to the best of my knowledge. I would hope that the Chair would be advised accordingly. I do not want to push further, except that I think I should be recognized.

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): I recognize the hon. gentleman's intervention. If I recognize him, there will have been three Opposition Members speaking on the motion. I say, if I recognize the Hon. Member I will have recognized three Opposition Members on the motion. Therefore, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Duvernay.

Mr. Della Noce: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your discretion is right. I want to speak on this motion because my name was mentioned often and I think it is only proper that I be allowed to speak.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have often heard about the Gulf transaction and my colleague for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) made a lot of noise about it in Montreal and in all the surrounding areas. When I took over the Gulf file, it was simply to request from my Minister a two month extension which was granted immediately. Things were going well. Suddenly, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie appeared in the picture and all Opposition Members tried to get some publicity for themselves out of this issue.

An Hon. Member: A lot of publicity.

Mr. Della Noce: A lot of publicity and maybe even too much at times.

An Hon. Member: On the back of workers.

Mr. Della Noce: Now were those particular workers not the victims? Yes, Mr. Speaker, workers found themselvess in a dead end just like me. Recently, I wrote an article on the Gulf deal for my fellow citizens and in particular for the residents of Montreal, which was entitled: The Gulf transaction brought to an end, hoping that someday someone would understand the truth. I also wrote an article on the Gulf issue of which I have a copy here, where I asked: Who speaks the truth? I can bet my salary that few people know the truth about the Gulf transaction and I have no time to explain it today in ten minutes.

But let us start, like my colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie did earlier, by some background on this case. Two groups were interested in the purchase of the Gulf refinery. One was Ultramar and the other, Gaz Metropolitain with which, we, as Members from Quebec, have made many deals. After a meeting in early January, officials of that company had told us they wanted to put an offer on the refinery. The first question I asked was whether they had the money for it. They said yes. I then asked whether they needed some Government support. They said no. I thought: it's in the bag. But later on, what happened was that that Chairman had forgotten a minor detail, to ask the executive the authorization for that purchase, which I think was never granted.

With regard to that Gulf deal, I believe that we have been manipulated by some supposed buyers because in my opinion, Conservative Members have worked a lot harder than those supposed buyers who did not exist. Ultramar was a potential buyer from the start with 120 nice million Canadian dollars. But there was no other buyer. Later on, we had offers for $80 million. Another one put an offer on December 26, but bids were supposed to arrive before December 2nd. As a former businessman, I understood one thing. When you want to buy something, put an offer on it, then put the money. Since there was no money, there was no offer.

But I can tell you that we, the Quebec Conservative Members of Parliament and caucus, at the request of Gulf workers and Gaz Métropolitain, succeeded in obtaining a short extension of two months to allow the possible buyer, which was supposed to be Gaz Métropolitain, to file a serious bid before December 2, 1985. However, the president of Gaz Métropolitain, Mr. Martin, who had promised before a Conservative caucus that he would file a $120 million bid without any Government assistance, did admit in a press conference on last February 20 that it was because his bid was lower than the Ultramar one, $80 million instead of $120 million, that he had lost the battle. Yes, he lost the battle because he did not put enough money. When he was assessing his bid, he thought it would be more or less equal to the Ultramar one. This was not so. What did Mr. Martin say afterwards? Let me quote the story: "Recognizing the industry is a select club, Mr. Martin eventually indicated, in another press conference, that Gaz Métropolitain would own a refinery if it had filed a $120 million bid." That is what I have always claimed. The Hon. Member for Duvernay had claimed that all along. That is why he was not exactly sitting on the same side as my Hon. colleague for Montreal-Sainte-Marie who has a talent for gathering opposition people. Imagine, even the NDP was involved in that. That was good for public opinion polls. Imagine what happens when the NDP gets involved in that! A union leader—

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is accusing me of gathering people together but it seems to me that a Member of Parliament has a right to work with all Canadians in a non-partisan way, without looking at political stripes. We are here to defend the interests of people. I do not see why my colleague blames me for speaking to people who are New Democrats, Péquistes, Liberals or Tories.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): This is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Quite the opposite. I commend him. But the Hon. Member is making a serious mistake. He only calls on unions. There are interesting people, people from the city who said: Why do you look at only one side of the coin? Because it served your purpose. You were looking at only one side of the coin. We never had Gaz Métropolitain! He forgot to invite the owner, who was supposed to be the buyer. He forgot to invite Ultramar. That is disgusting! It is awful what he did! He had everybody worked up. My friend and colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) enjoyed coming to see that fight. He even took my colleague's coat.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This time, Mr. Speaker, you certainly have followed the debate very closely. I very much enjoy debates, but my colleague has dragged me into one in which I had no opportunity to speak in the first place. And I think it is against the rules for the Hon. Member to impute intentions I do not have. You very well known that I have a point of order on that he referred to my enjoying being there. I went because it was my duty as a Quebecer, I went because it was my duty as a citizen supporting the wish of the National Assembly.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Order, please. The Hon. Member is engaging in debate. That is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the Hon. Member was there to answer the call of duty, but he also came in at the last minute. He came to put out the fire that perhaps some of his colleagues had lit and thrown gas on, but never did the man from Gaz Métropolitain come to say: True, I wanted to buy, true, I offered $120 million. Tell the truth, you never tell the truth!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. If we all stop speaking, the motion will be accepted. If my colleague goes on speaking, it is because he wants to talk the motion out. He is against the Gulf company. Truth hurts!

Mr. Prud'homme: It is not six o'clock yet.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): From where I stand, the hour provided—

Mr. Prud'homme: It is not six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): —for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I respectfully submit to you that there is at least two minutes left on that clock and two minutes left on that clock. Let them kill the Bill and we will know what to do afterward. You cannot cut the debate because the other Member wants to speak.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My colleague from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) has still some time left and he should be entitled to continue and I hope that he will no longer be interrupted needlessly.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The Chair will be indulgent and allow the debate to continue for one minute. The Hon. Member for Duvernay.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, if they keep interrupting me, and I know they like to do so, I will not have enough time to complete my comments and I will probably be accused of talking out the motion.

Mr. Malépart: It is true!

Mr. Della Noce: This is not the reason why I am speaking. I want to tell the truth, because Liberals do not.

Mr. Malépart: No, it is to talk out the motion!

Mr. Della Noce: This is why I will tell you the truth. Three refineries have been closed within two years. It did not only happened yesterday. It happened with the O'Farrell Report which is the worst lie ever told anywhere.

Mr. Prud'homme: You must be happy now, you talked out the motion!

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 is deemed to have been moved.

SHIPBUILDING—PLACEMENT OF CN MARINE FERRY ORDER. (B) LAUZON SHIPYARD

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say something more about the state of the shipbuilding industry and specifically about the contract from CN Marine for the construction of a second passenger and vehicle ferry to be constructed at a Canadian yard, which subject has been before the House on a number of occasions over the past months. Last Thursday there was a demonstration on this Hill in Ottawa by more than 600 workers from the Versatile Davie Shipyard in Lauzon, Quebec. These workers came to Ottawa in 16 buses and were greeted here by some of the more foul weather this city has produced during the winter. The weather all too sadly reflected the kinds of economic circumstances in which their industry finds itself.

Hundreds of these workers had been at work not many months ago on the construction of the motor vessel Caribou. It is a vessel which represents a most important addition to the fleet of CN Marine. With the vessel now very near completion, and with most of the workers on unemployment insurance, the yard which normally employs 1,600 workers has presently something over 100 employees at work. The workers from Versatile Davie in Lauzon wait in a desperate anxiety for a decision to be made by CN Marine on the purchase of another vessel like the Caribou which they would dearly love to build at their yard on the St. Lawrence.

The nature of my question can be focused if we look at a statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in November of 1984. In response to a question regarding ferry service on the Atlantic coast he said, and I quote from Hansard at page 217:

> There will be a rationalization of the Gulf ferry services and the coastal ferry services. As a matter of fact, there will be an additional three new vessels on the Gulf service and one new vessel on the Newfoundland-Labrador coastal service. These vessels will be of the latest state of the art; they will be faster, they will be larger, and they will provide more flexibility and more reliable service. Not only that, this will have a tremendous impact upon the shipbuilding industry and, therefore, will create jobs.

Clearly, the Minister of Transport, who was described by my colleague from Regina this afternoon as an honest and honourable Member of Parliament and Minister, promised something about which so many of us who are concerned about the industry—and pre-eminently, the workers at Versatile Davie in Lauzon—have been looking for, a decision by the Government.

The question has been raised in the House a number of times. I put it to the Minister of Transport on October 29, 1985. At that time I decried the delay which was occurring. The Minister at that time asked: "Should we be dictating to the board?" Well, I think there is reason to dictate to the board. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) spoke to this matter a couple of days later last October. The Minister again suggested that they were respecting the board's concerns.

On November 5, I spoke on this very same Adjournment Debate and expressed the necessity for the Government to make a decision on this matter. The months passed. I think ruefully of the fact that last June, I pressed the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) on the matter of policy for the shipbuilding industry. I asked him if we were going to have to wait months and months for a decision about an industry which finds itself in circumstances more depressed than those in the 1930s.

The Minister served up: "No, Mr. Speaker". It is going on eight-and-a-half months since then and the Government has done absolutely nothing of a new sort. There have been no new initiatives taken. There may be matters in the wind such as the matter of the Polar 8 ice-breaker, which is still under consideration by the Government in spite of the promise given last September. Yet we continue to wait.

It seems to me that there is a very good case to be made for instructing CN Marine to get on with it and to place the contract. If we have to spend the money on the purchase of a vessel abroad, which appears to be the alternative, that will cost us in terms of foreign exchange. It will bring in some duty to the Government, if they duty is not remitted. However, it will cost us in terms of foreign exchange and place an additional pressure on the dollar. What we have in Canada at Lauzon are workers who are surely costing the better part of $20 million in terms of unemployment insurance on an annual basis. When we consider paying that type of money in unemployment insurance and consider the construction of a vessel which will cost us no more than $120 million or so, it seems to me that we have every reason to get on with it, make a decision, place the order and put the workers back to the jobs they like so well—construction of vessels on the St. Lawrence.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concerns of my colleague from Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) regarding a situation that currently prevails in Canadian shipyards. In fact, my hon. colleague has stressed those concerns on several occasions in this House.

I would like to remind him that in a reply he was given by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) on March 6 of this year, the Minister indicated that the Canadian Government was the main purchasing agent for work at shipyards. To help the Hon. Member appreciate what this means, I would like to point out that today, 90 per cent of shipbuilding contracts in our yards are Government contracts. Furthermore, 60 per cent of the work in repair shops is carried out on Government ships. The Canadian Coast Guard's current construction program includes 18 ships, while the total contract is worth over $465.2 million.

Contracts from Ports Canada and CN Marine for the construction of new ships total $143 million.

Transport Canada and a number of Crown corporations may allocate further amounts for other contracts.

As for the new ferry, I think it was said several times in the House that the matter will be submitted to Cabinet within the next few weeks, and so that an answer to the Hon. Member's question may be forthcoming.

THE BUDGET—FAMILY INCOME STANDARDS. (B) REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish the previous debate could have finished on a more positive note, but I have the impression that on the Gulf issue, all Conservative Members including the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) were determined to talk the motion out and let all those jobs be lost.

Mr. Speaker, my question concerns an announcement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) regarding prepayment of the child tax credit. In light of a question I had asked the Minister of Finance, I must say in all honesty that perhaps he did not quite hear me, or he misunderstood my question, or again perhaps I did not express myself clearly, but the answer was not good enough.

Mr. Speaker, so as to be sure to get a clear and specific answer, I will repeat my question. It has to do with the prepayment of the child tax credit. The Minister of Finance is patting himself on the back and trying to make us believe that he has helped poor families in that respect. In Canada there are 538,000 people or families who receive the child tax credit. The upper limit set by the Minister of Finance, by the Conservative Government, is $23,500. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker—and this is the question I asked the Minister—he has decided that only those families with a maximum income of $15,000 will be eligible for the $300 child tax credit prepayment, a highly commendable measure which the Liberals and community groups had suggested to the Minister last year. This is not a Conservative invention, they simply cannot come up with constructive measures. But here again, as in the case of the spouse's allowance for the elderly, this Government is wont to discriminate.

What I was asking the Minister, and I did not get an answer then, but I trust that someone will give me one now, was why 538,000 Canadian families will not be entitled to the prepayment of the child tax credit according to the statement published by the Minister. There will be a prepayment to prevent people from going to the loan sharks and tax discounters, but in the case of a family with four or five children and an income of $16,000, since it often happens that both spouses work, why did the Government decide that such families will be at the mercy of the tax discounters? If it has a social philosophy, why did the Government not say: Last year, we decided that the maximum family income for the child tax credit would be $23,500. Why is the $300 prepayment not being sent to all these families? It would have been quite simple. Why discriminate on the basis of income?

We must also remember that this same Government lowered the ceiling for the child tax credit last year.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has done the same for the sales tax refund. However, as concerns the child tax credit, this would not cost the Government anything as it is already earmarked.

I trust that the one who replies will give me an answer this time. Let him tell us that, for the Conservatives, someone with a family income of $15,500 is now a wealthy person in Canada and that such a person will have to go to the tax discounters, the loan sharks, the friends of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Health and Welfare... We haven't heard from him in a long time. Normally, it would be the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), better known now in Canada as the Minister of social injustice, who should have made sure that no one in Canada is penalized and that all taxpayers who receive the full child-tax credit get an early payment of $300 to ensure that these needy families... Also, this cheque should have been mailed in September and not in November, because it is when children are returning to school that their parents need the money.

Mr. Speaker, I dare hope I will get a favourable reply to this question.

[English]

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Montréal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the child tax credit and the sales tax credit are two separate programs with different purposes. The child tax credit threshold of $23,500 in 1986 approximates the low-income cutoff point of a couple with three children in an intermediate size city. The average child tax credit family has 1.8 children, so the threshold is really quite generous. For exemple, for a couple with two children in an intermediate size city, the threshold is approximately $3,000 above the low-income cutoff point in 1986.

In the May 25, 1985, Budget, the threshold was reduced from $26,300 to $23,500 for the 1986 tax year and the credit value was substantially increased to $454 per child. The threshold will be indexed to the extent that inflation exceeds 3 per cent in order to help preserve its real value.

About 2.5 million families benefit from the child tax credit. The refundable sales tax credit will benefit over four million families and individuals, or about 40 per cent of all Canadian households. The federal sales tax credit is intended to protect the lowest income Canadians from the effect of the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax. It will benefit many child tax credit families as well.

• (1815)

For example, the couple with two children and a net income of up to $18,000 will receive benefits. Obviously the Government cannot afford to give such a broad-based credit to every Canadian. Given limited resources, it was decided that a substantial credit to lower income families was a better use of public resources than a lower credit for a larger number of families. The credit will cost $330 million in 1986, which demonstrates the Government's real concern for low-income Canadians.

THE ECONOMY—EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you will remember as well as I do the frightening and astronomical interest rates of 1981. At that time mortgage rates were in excess of 20 per cent. It was those frightening and astronomical interest rates which brought on what has now been called the great recession of the 1980s. It was those interest rates which brought on record personal, corporate and farm bankruptcies. It was those interest rates which brought on unemployment that reached almost to 13 per cent of our entire workforce.

Despite the devastation which those interest rates wrought on our economy, and despite the havoc which they wreaked on the lives of individual ordinary Canadians, the Government of the day told us that it was impossible to bring down those interest rates because American interest rates were high. We were told that we could not bring down our interest rates below the American interest rates. Also, the Government of the day told us that if we did, we would have capital fleeing the country. We would have the dollar falling, we would have inflation rising, and we would have runaway inflation. In fact, the then Government said that our economy would be wrecked. Well, the economy was wrecked, not because of the falling dollar and the inflation situation, but because of those very high interest rates about which you, Mr. Speaker, and I and every Canadian was most concerned and crying for relief from.

Fortunately when the Conservative Government took office, we followed what I consider to be a low interest rate policy, either by good luck or good management. I choose to think that it has been through deliberate good management that interest rates have continued to fall with one or two modest exceptions. Sometimes, I must admit, when I hear comments from the Governor of the Bank of Canada, I shudder and think perhaps it is good luck rather than good management. However, by and large, I am sure that it is because of good management that interest rates have been falling.

As I indicated, there have been one or two exceptions. One of those exceptions occurred just last month when suddenly, as a result of our falling exchange rate, the Bank of Canada raised its lending rate, raised interest rates in Canada in order to do what was described as "burn the speculators" and to try to steady our Canadian dollar.

The result of our general over-all policy of falling interest rates had been good for the Canadian economy. We have seen unemployment fall. We have seen bankruptcies fall. We have seen the Gross National Product go up. We have seen housing starts go up. We have seen all economic indicators go up. Be that as it may, however, Canadian interest rates have continued to be above American interest rates. In spite of the rising economy and all other good indicators, we have seen the Canadian dollar continue to fall. However, with that falling dollar we have not seen the cost of living go up, we have not seen runaway inflation, and we have not seen the economy in a state of complete collapse, the way the former Government predicted. In fact, we have seen just the opposite. Be all that as it may, we still have an interest rate which is substantially above American interest rates. At the moment our prime rates are some 4 per cent above the American prime rate. Do we need an interest rate that high to keep our dollar steady and to support it? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker, and neither does the former adviser to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), Mr. William Mackness, who has recently been quoted inthe press as saying:

● (1820)

—the Government made a "major policy error" by going into the Budget with Canadian interest rates substantially higher than those in the United States.

Such a wide variation in interest rates is a source of instability in the Canadian dollar itself.

When interest rates are so far apart, you have to know something is seriously wrong. It's a little like someone trying to sell you a bond with a 25 per cent interest rate—you become suspicious of the product.

Mr. Mackness said that just a few days ago.

High interest rates obviously have not until recently been doing anything for the Canadian dollar. In fact, it continued to fall, which as been hurting our economy. The spread between the American interest rates and our own has had a serious effect on our economy. We must have low interest rates if we are to have a growing Gross National Product and if we are to have falling unemployment so that we can protect our social safety network.

Other countries have been dropping their interest rates lately. I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that at long last the Minister of Finance recognizes that our interest rates are too high in comparison with the American's and that they will start to come down. I trust the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that this very Thursday.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) raises a very important and interesting issue.

I would like to begin by suggesting that it is possible to have both lower interest rates and a stronger dollar. Indeed, the two go hand in hand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: I believe that the policies which best promote this result, on a sustainable basis, are those designed to encourage non-inflationary growth. I think that is important. On the fiscal side, this involves the policy of sound financial management, including progressive reductions in the budget deficit, as emphasized in last month's Budget.

I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that there cannot be misgivings in financial markets about our commitment to a sound currency if we are to achieve lower interest rates and the foundation for the dollar is to be a firm one. That is why the authorities had to move in a forceful way recently to stem speculative excesses in the foreign exchange market. If these had been allowed to gather additional momentum, they could have spilled over into even stronger pressures on interest rates. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree with me on that.

While it is unfortunate, the route to sustainably lower interest rates inevitably involves some temporary reversals. I am convinced that to have attempted to avoid increases in interest rates through monetary means when the dollar was under strong downward pressure would have been self-defeating. The confidence of Canadian and foreign investors alike would have been undermined, in my estimation. The downward pressure on the dollar would have intensified, a strong risk of reversing the progress that has been made against inflation would have been run, and, ultimately, higher rather than lower Canadian interest rates would have resulted.

By acting as they did, Mr. Speaker, the authorities have paved the way for eventual interest rate declines, and I am sure you are going to see that happen.

The Canadian economy has performed, and I think the Hon. Member will agree with me, extremely well over the past 18 months. I can see the Hon. Member nodding his head. In 1985 our growth rate exceeded those of the United States and Europe. That is important. Our prospects for this year continue to be favourable. The economic policies of this Government are providing the framework to ensure the recovery is not only sustained, but supported by low interest rates and a sound currency.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.26 p.m.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

NIELSEN TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) tabled a series of documents which make up the report of the Task Force on Program Review.

Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister tried to make us believe that the Canadian people would have an opportunity to study the recommendations contained in this report before their implementation, but in fact a closer look at these documents reveals that half of those recommendations are already in force.

Mr. Speaker, the shameful aspect of all this is that the Government has chosen to attack people while completely ignoring the industrial sector.

A glance at page 55 indicates that last year the committee urged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to levy a 10 per cent tax on sick people and to increase it this year so as to obtain additional revenues.

Mr. Speaker, that same committee recommended the abolition of Katimavik and various job creation programs—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The 60 seconds allotted to the Hon. Member have now expired. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to draw the attention of the House to the continuing decline of post-secondary education in Canada as a result of under-funding. The international reputation of the University of Toronto has been shown to be in severe decline following independent reviews of the University's 52 graduate programs. These reviews show seven programs in serious academic difficulty, and another 17 that will be in trouble unless the quality of research and faculty strength are improved over the next few years.

This decline has been the product of 15 years of under-funding by the former Ontario Conservative Government, and the fiscal noose has now been tightened by the federal Conservative Government's cut-backs to post-secondary education. This is just one example of what is happening to all universities.

The short-sightedness of these cuts has been pointed out by none other than David Vice, the president of Northern Telecom, who stated that federal and provincial funding increases for higher education increased by only 2.5 per cent in the seven years prior to 1984-85, while student enrolment increased—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE JOSEPH DESLIÈRES

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise my colleagues of the death of Mr. Joseph Deslières who was Liberal Member for the federal riding of Brome-Missisquoi from 1952 to 1958.

Since I knew Mr. Deslières at that time, I should like to pay homage to him by saying that he was a devoted and dedicated Member who stayed in close contact with his constituents. It is with emotion that I recall his warm welcome at his home during the September 1984 election campaign, even though we did not belong to the same political Party.

Mr. Speaker, in the name of my Party and on my own behalf I wish to extend our most sincere condolences to the Deslières family.

YOUTH

FORUM 86 PROGRAM—TRAINEES VISIT TO PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I know that all the Members of this House will wish to join me in welcoming the 130 young trainees, students from all over Canada, who are taking part in the Forum 86 Program.

These young people have come to Parliament Hill this week to become more familiar with how the Government and the Parliament work.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to meet them at a workshop on the role of the Member of Parliament and I know that you met them this morning yourself. We can both attest that these young people are very attentive and interested and that, like their Members of Parliament, they are worthy representatives of their regions.

Mr. Speaker, some of them are certainly future leaders of tomorrow's society, and perhaps future members of this House, and I therefore invite my colleagues to make themselves available to meet them.

Let me conclude by wishing them a very pleasant stay among us and success in their studies. Canada needs their contribution.

YOUTH

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—SENATOR'S HUNGER STRIKE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, a Senator is risking his health and life for the cause of Katimavik, which really means the cause of youth in search of a meaningful role in life, as young people undertake when growing into adulthood.

Jacques Hébert is the Senator now in his third day of a hunger strike. Senator Hébert's message is catching the attention of the media and, through the media, of the public.

The Government is saying no to Senator Hébert's request that Katimavik be reinstated. The Government hopes that the public will not respond to Senator Hébert's call for action. The Government, of course, will be proven wrong as Canadians rally to the defence of Katimavik and put pressure on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to do the honourable and decent thing—reinstate Katimavik now.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STUDY TEAM'S REPORT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the study team report on Indian and native programs shows at best a limp grasp and, at worst, a profound misunderstanding of the aspirations, needs, and living situations of Canada's First Nations citizens.

The good ideas in it are, almost without exception, repetitions of issues raised by First Nations' organizations, the Auditor General, and even the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The misconceptions are profound, even appalling. For example, they state at page 13 that 70 per cent of status Indians will be incarcerated by age 25, and, at page 23, that existing Government programs are "recreating modern suburbs in the northern bush". My riding includes one in every eleven Indian bands in Canada and there is perhaps one community that even faintly resembles that ludicrous description.

On page 69 we find the statement: "There would probably be better results if more of the investments were for the purpose of taking over established successful operations". I wish the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) had considered that before he sabotaged the Native Economic Development Program application of the Yukon Indian Development Corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

COMPLETION OF STUDIES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, for the first time all Canadians can get a comprehensive review of how the federal Government spends billions of dollars of taxpayers' money on myriad programs, many of which were designed only to buy votes for 22 years of Liberal reign. The identification of waste, government mismanagement, and ineffectiveness, has all been documented by the task force review.

Had the NDP ever come to govern, or had the Liberals continued, it would have taken the same task force twice as long to complete the twice as many programs they would have had with, of course, the federal debt being twice as big as it is now.

The reason being that the opposition Liberals' and NDPs' hidden agenda is to spend more money.

While the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) had no comment on such a major review, the NDP condemned the entire report without reading one paragraph of the 21-volume report. I am sure a leadership review by the Liberal and New Democratic Parties is imminent.

YOUTH

TRIBUTE TO YOUNG PEOPLE VOLUNTARILY PERFORMING COMMUNITY WORK

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the tens of thousands of young people who, every day, every week, every month, volunteer to do good work in their communities. They work in hospitals. They work in youth camps, clubs, and senior citizens' homes. They volunteer to do work wherever it needs to be done. The difference is that they do it in their own communities. Because they do it there they are seldom noticed, and seldom is there ever any tribute paid to them.

I rise today because they deserve this tribute. There is no one starving himself to give tribute to these people. There is no one recognizing their work. They did not travel across Canada to do their work. They did not engage in a government operation. They worked in their own communities, and I rise to pay tribute to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

TRANSPORTATION IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place today, and as I do so to make my point regarding the task force report I am assisted by the Hon. Member to my right who just stood up and held up the document as it were the bible of the Conservative Party, and its agenda.

The attempt to try to separate the Cabinet from this task force report will not succeed. The fact of the matter is, and Canadians should know, that this task force report was released after a committee of Cabinet, consisting of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who is a former Minister of Finance, and one other Minister, scrutinized it and allowed it to be released. That is the fact of the matter.

On the transportation side, this task force report makes a series of recommendations, approximately 40 per cent of which have already been implemented since the report was given to Cabinet in September of 1985. The Government of Canada has committed itself over the week in Atlantic Canada to use transportation as a tool of regional development. It has made that commitment to the Premiers of the Atlantic provinces. At the same time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

POLITICAL PARTIES

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW—REACTION OF LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, Liberals and New Democrats are an amazing species. Why they have not become extinct remains a political mystery. On one hand they argue that Canadians ought to receive more social programs. On the other hand they defend a ballooning debt that requires one out of every three tax dollars to pay interest charges, which diminishes our capacity to provide social programs.

While these social-conscious symbols advocate more social-support systems, they are willing to let the debt grow until 1990 when it will take two out of every three tax dollars to pay interest charges, therefore destroying our opportunity to be a caring country. Yet they pretend to be caring.

When the report of the Neilsen task force was tabled, and the contents revealed that social programs were not being abused or inefficiently operated, but that many tax exemptions and business breaks were to be reconsidered, the Liberals and the New Democrats claimed that it was an attack on social programs. Their motto is: "Down with up". They remain consistent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

EXAMINATION OF OPTIONS ADVOCATED

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Task force on Program Review has opened the door to an opportunity for Canadians. This report and its options should be carefully examined.

In national policy-making, an unswerving adherence to the status quo is often a self-defeating exercise which prevents growth, development, and progress. I encourage all Canadians to participate in a constructive national questioning of the status quo.

Thoughtful people should agree that it is healthy for a nation to assess, challenge, and test its long-held approaches and policies. It would be regrettable if some political Parties would prefer grandstanding instead of a positive national dialogue. Here exists an opportunity for all of us, opposing as our viewpoints might be, to discuss options in a conciliatory and rational debate and then decide which proposals we should accept and which we should reject.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

FUNDING OF SKILLS TRAINING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, is in respect to the report which bears his name. I think we on this side of the House can say that a search for more efficient and less costly Government is a search worth making, and, of course, we will study the report very carefully.

I want to say to the Deputy Prime Minister, before putting the question, that efficiency in Government cannot be achieved on the backs of the poor, the aged, the weaker regions of the country, the unemployed, or at the expense of our young people. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give an undertaking to this House, and to the country, that the 25 per cent further cuts in skills training recommended by the task force, which will affect our young people, will not form the policy of the Government and will be rejected?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, essentially that is the same question as those which were put yesterday. The answer is still the same. The personnel on those study teams—over 200 of them laboured long and hard, and in the case of 102 of them from the private sector, without any remuneration—have come forward with options which have been referred to the standing committees so that the full light of day can be focused on the totality of the problem which we inherited in September of 1984.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): May I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that he cannot have it both ways. This report bears his name, and he and the Government have to take responsibility for the report and its conclusions.

TRAINING AND JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that there are 700,000 young Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 years out of work, will the Deputy Prime Minister give a firm commitment that the Government will shelve those recommendations which further restrict training and job opportunities for young people, and that they will not be part of Government policy?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the House has already referred to all of the options, hundreds of them, which were identified by the study teams on program review, to the standing committees of the House where parliamentarians are invited to examine those options and, indeed, to come forward with others, if there are others, and in due course to follow the parliamentary practice, presumably, of giving the House the benefit of their advice.

REQUEST FOR NEW YOUTH PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to put this question to the Prime Minister, but I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In his reply to Senator Hébert, the Prime Minister implied that the Government had new programs to help the youth of this country. Could the Deputy Prime Minister advise the Prime Minister forthwith to announce these new programs as soon as possible in order to deal with the situation and meet the needs of young people across this country?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I do not know how many times it has to be said before it sinks in, but the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration say that $700 million has been devoted specifically to the youth programs. That is a major percentage of the budget of her single Department.

The Right Hon. Leader knows that in the period 1980 to 1984 youth unemployment rose from 12.9 per cent to over 19 per cent, and that there has been a net drop in youth unemployment of two percentage points since September of 1984.

That is progress—not enough, and more needs to be made—and this Government will ensure that that progress continues and grows.

CONSULTATION WITH CITIZENS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Since yesterday he has been saying, and he has just said it again to the Leader of the Official Opposition, that the recommendations in his report will be examined in committee and that the people of Canada will be consulted. Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why half the recommendations in this report have already been adopted by this Government, without consulting the people of Canada?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is a serious misstatement of fact. I am sure it was unintended by the hon. gentleman, but when he says that half of the options that appear in the reports of the study teams have been adopted, that is not correct. But there have been some very positive options identified in the reports which have been accomplished by the Government, including the setting up of a real property unit to bring under control some $60-billion worth of real property—we do not yet know how much there is—and that move is a first. We have centralized regulatory management in the Ministry of the Hon. Government House Leader, and we have folded in the two sub-groups that were doing that job—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

IMPOSITION OF CERTAIN TAXES—SOCIAL JUSTICE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister could read the report in French: Services and subsidies to enterprises, pages 53 and 54, and that is my question: Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Minister of Finance slapped a 10 per cent tax on illness in this country before consulting the people? And even if it is one of the report's recommendations, it would be immoral to do so.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman is talking about. Having regard to the accuracy of his first preamble, I very much doubt the implications of his second.

FUTURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It is one thing to refer a set of general propositions to committees for consideration. It is quite another, I would suggest, to refer to committees resolutions or propositions that completely contradict what the Government promised when it was campaigning for election about a year and a half ago. Considering that in his Halifax statement of August 2, 1984, the Prime Minister said the following:

> A Progressive Conservative government will... support and continue to operate the Newfoundland railway—

Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that since his task force recommends the abolition of this railway, the Government will live up to its election promise to the people of Newfoundland and keep that railway?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what the Leader of the New Democratic Party is exposing is his ignorance of the Terms of Union between the Government of Canada and Newfoundland. Clearly all that the Prime Minister was saying in the speech that was quoted by the hon. gentleman was a reaffirmation that this Government intends to honour the Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland, and that is one of them.

FARM FUEL TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, given the slippery history of the Government and its promises, I will take the words of the Deputy Prime Minister to mean that the Government's commitment to the people of Newfoundland for the maintenance of this specific railway will be kept.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about another part of Canada. Since the Prime Minister and all Conservative candidates in rural communities promised in the summer of 1984 that a Conservative Government would make sure that no farmer paid federal tax on farm fuel, and considering that the Nielsen task force recommends just the opposite, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the farmers of Canada that that election promise will be kept?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman continues to ignore the fact that a more accurate description of what was tabled yesterday was study team reports rather than government policy. He also overlooked a glaring fact, which is his wont when putting loaded questions like that, since that measure has just recently been extended.

• (1425)

COMMITTEE REFERRALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are glad that the Deputy Prime Minister knows that. What we are looking for is the assurance that the promise will be maintained in the future and that the Government does not backtrack on this as it backtracked on so many things, as the people of Canada well understand.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Remember your image, Ed; smile.

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a general question. Considering that the Conservatives promised many things during the election campaign of 1984 which are contradicted flatly by the recommendations of the task force—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member was very long on the first one. Could this just be a question, please?

Mr. Broadbent: Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that any recommendation from the task force which contradicts what was promised by the Conservatives in the election campaign of 1984 will not be referred to the committee for study?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the reference is a matter of history; it was done yesterday. What really astonishes me about the Leader of the New Democratic Party and those in the House of Commons in his Party—

Mr. Broadbent: What is it, Erik? Tell me that.

Mr. Nielsen: —who ask questions is that, here they are, the representatives of a once dynamic Party, the Party of change, the Party of new direction—

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Nielsen: —and all of a sudden it is the Party of the status quo.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DESCRIPTION OF RESERVES AS MODERN SUBURBS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Task Force Report on Indians and Natives indicates that the Government of Canada has created modern suburbs on Indian reserves in the northern bush. In all of the Minister's travels across the country, where has he seen modern suburbs in the northern bush? Where do they exist?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): In northern Rosedale.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think anyone who has had the opportunity, as I have, to go across the country visiting scores and scores, indeed hundreds of reserves, would not be able to write those words.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

INDIAN INFANT MORTALITY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is he aware that in the same report it is indicated that infant mortality among Indians is 60 per cent higher than the national average, due to bad housing and a lack of sewage disposal and of safe, clean drinking water? How does that square with modern suburbs in the northern bush? Does that not invalidate this Buffalo Jump report?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I responded to the first question truthfully, and I want to respond to the second question the same way. First, the report has many ideas. Some are good, some are bad, and the Standing Committee of which the Hon. Member is a member may want to consider some; it may want to reject some. I say to the Hon. Member, and to anyone who is actually interested in the issue, that the ideas in the report which are not suitable to Indian people ought to be rejected; the ideas which are suitable ought to be supported. I hope the Hon. Member does not simply reject all those ideas but indeed will go to the Standing Committee, since he is a member, and pay attention to it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE—CASH ADVANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will recognize that the report which he tabled the other day recommends the elimination of structures which have been built up to assist in the survival of the family farm, maybe even the survival of agriculture under present economic conditions. Will the Deputy Prime Minister honour the memory of John Diefenbaker who brought in the Western Grain Advance Payments Plan, and assure us that the Advance Payments Plan will not be savaged by the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as that hon. gentleman knows, coming from where he does, no other Government in the history of our country going back to John Diefenbaker has ever done as much for agriculture and farmers as this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer the question.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I hope we can believe him.

• (1430)

FARM FUEL TAX REBATES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister now also reject the recommendation of the Nielsen Task Force that farm fuel rebates be terminated, and move to fulfil the Government's promise that farmers would have to pay no taxes on farm fuel?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I have already answered that in response to the Member's Leader. Here we have another example. Here is a Government that is throwing open the windows to let the light shine in, and the Members over there are even afraid to look through a crack in the door.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Try that on the Prairies.

[Translation]

SOCIAL HOUSING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister should realize that the light does not shine bright on the poor in Canada.

I would like to ask him whether he is aware that according to the subsidized housing policy announced in his report, 1.5 million Canadian men and women now living in poverty will no longer be entitled to subsidized housing in Canada.

Is that Conservative justice?

Mr. Malépart: And the Minister made his cuts before the report was tabled—

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not a policy. It is not a recommendation. It is an option that was identified by the study team. The Hon. Member will no doubt participate with interest in the standing committee to examine those options. When she is doing that in her work on the committee, she might consider that 1,840,000 low-cost housing units are being planned for Metro now.

The Government continues to progress, regardless of the examination of committees. Does the Hon. Member expect us to stand still?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Deputy Prime Minister would get his facts right. He has obviously cut Katimavik, and the recommendations of the report have already been implemented. He likes to have it both ways, and he cannot have it both ways.

POVERTY LEVEL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If he really feels, and if his Party feels, that those 1.5 million Canadians living below the poverty line, living on $11,000 to $22,000 a year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry this is a long preamble. Is there a question?

Ms. Copps: I am asking a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have not heard a question begin yet. Just a question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Show some respect to the House.

Ms. Copps: My question is whether the Deputy Prime Minister believes, and whether his Party believes, that the new level of poverty in Canada is $11,000 or less, leaving 1.5 million Canadians in poverty, ignored by this report, by this Government, and by the new standard of poverty in Canada.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I made a mistake, I believe, when I said 1,840,000. The figure is 1,840.

Ms. Copps: A million boob.

Mr. Nielsen: The quick answer to the Hon. Member is of course not. She does not have a corner on compassion for those who exist in poverty in Canada. The Party of which she is a member, when it was in Government, did precious little to alleviate the plight of those in poverty.

We are making solid progress in that connection, and we are going to continue to do so.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Insulting the poor on that one.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had calls from some farmers in my riding who are concerned that the federal Government might be abolishing the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, the PFRA, and also privatizing the Farm Credit Corporation.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister give a farmer in my riding, Ron Harper from Danbury, the assurance this afternoon that the Government will not abolish the PFRA which, in part, manages the Diefenbaker Lake and the Gardiner Dam.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the hon. gentleman does nudge open that door a bit more, does step in and examine the options put forward by the study teams when they come before the standing committees of the House of Commons, he will be able to make that kind of suggestion and perhaps, just perhaps, other constructive suggestions.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, what Ron Harper in my riding wants to know—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Let's elect Ron Harper.

Mr. Nystrom: —is whether or not the Deputy Prime Minister will make the same argument when the PFRA goes before the committee. Will he make that argument on behalf of Canada's farmers?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would urge the hon. gentleman himself to go before the committee—

Mr. Broadbent: Will you? He will go.

Mr. Nielsen: —and make that representation for his constituent—

An Hon. Member: Where will you be at that time?

Mr. Nielsen: —and perhaps other constructive suggestions, as has been the objective of this whole process of program review. But why do the Member and members of his Party not open that door a bit, stop being dinosaurs, and stop being defenders of the status quo.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DATE OF REPORT ON JOB CREATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In examining the Task Force Report on Job Creation, we note that the report was completed in March, 1985, one year ago, and most of the programs referred to have already been changed.

In the circumstances, what is the purpose of referring the report to the standing committee? Does this mean the Government is ready to reverse those changes if the committee recommends that that be done?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the inability of that hon. gentleman to understand the open process, the consultative process, that is going on here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Yes, bugsy.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad, however, that the Member has observed that there have been some changes.

An Hon. Member: Oh?

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly there have, and all for the better. Those changes and the better results are reflected in the job creation numbers, 577,000 I think, since September, 1984.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It was 580,000 last week.

TIME SPENT REVIEWING PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that this task force with a majority of businessmen tried to evaluate 65 employment programs in 10 Departments in two months, with very little outside consultation? Is this what the Minister means by a serious review of Government departments?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is wrong. He obviously has not read the report.

Mr. Allmand: I have read it.

Mr. Nielsen: And the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has not even read the front of the introductory volume which sets forth the authors of the report. They have signed their names to it, and mine is not among them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You take responsibility for it.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonetheless, we are committed to opening the books.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has read it cover to cover.

Mr. Nielsen: Those chaps over there, Mr. Speaker, would like to have the door closed shut and to hunker down in the storm cellar, but that is not the way this Government operates.

PUBLIC SERVICE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. He told Parliament yesterday that recommendations in his task force report were only options that would be examined by parliamentary committees prior to action being taken.

I have a memorandum from the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board which states:

> Following recommendations made by the Nielsen Task Force on Program Review, the Cabinet has made the following decisions which impact on the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

One of those decisions is to lay off 18—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the third statement. Just a question, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain how it is that yesterday's options are decisions which were made last week without reference to parliamentary committees?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the task force was set up in September, 1984. That is a year and a half ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Very good.

Mr. Nielsen: The implication of what the hon. gentleman is suggesting here is that we should have stood still from that time until now. The business of the country has to go on, and certainly decisions have been made in the interim.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is this: Why was Katimavik wound up without a referral to a parliamentary committee? Why were eighteen employees of this research office laid off without prior referral? How many other decisions have you made without referral, behind Parliament's back?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Because, Sir, we were elected to make decisions and not to hunker down in the cellar of the dinosaurs like the New Democrats in their new-found attitude to change.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Coming from Erik, that is delightful.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Canadian public is becoming increasingly impatient with the slow reaction of the oil companies in lowering the retail price of gasoline.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Belsher: Will the Minister consider sending another telex, this time not being so polite?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to tell the Hon. Member that politeness pays off. Today Esso and Petro-Canada have announced that they have dropped the price of gasoline by 2 cents a litre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Only 8 cents to go.

Miss Carney: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I asked the industry to ensure that the price decreases were passed along to consumers so that everyone could take advantage of our deregulated oil and gas industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

PRENTICE-HALL AND GINN CANADA TAKEOVER

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister has succumbed to the scorched earth policy threats of the American entertainment interests by announcing the acceptance of the American Gulf and Western giant takeover of the book publishers Prentice-Hall and Ginn Canada.

Will the Minister now assure the Canadian book publishing industry that this is in its best interest, and advise the House what written undertakings he has from Gulf and Western that it will respect the principle of Canadian ownership and control through practice, if not through the policy of majority Canadian ownership? Will he table those agreements, please?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, of course that assurance can be given to the Canadian book publishing industry. The Member will find that the information which she has requested has already been delivered to her office.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it was not delivered to my office and I suggest that the Minister's office check that out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN-CONTROLLED BOOK DISTRIBUTORS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister announced that Simon and Schuster will rely on Canadian controlled distributors to distribute—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry. Order, please! Just a question, please.

Mrs. Finestone: Is this an assurance of the elimination of the problems created by the present buy-around practices which have caused so many problems for book publishers and distributors?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is familiar with the relationship between Simon and Schuster and General Publishing. That is the Canadian company which has been distributing the works put out by Simon and Schuster in Canada. Their contract runs for another year and one half. Our agreement with Gulf and Western is that such distribution will remain in Canadian hands, which I am sure all Members of the House are pleased to hear.

EFFECT OF TAKEOVER ON BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister and is on the same subject. Why did the Government not use the powers it had under the provisions of FIRA to protect the industry which was of significant benefit and importance to Canadian culture, as he was urged to do by all the groups associated with the publishing industry?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has obviously not had time to comprehend fully the nature of the deal we made with Gulf and Western. When he has an opportunity to study it, he will find that for the first time in Canadian history with respect to a book publishing company, we have secured an assurance that 51 per cent of the equity of Ginn Canada will be turned over the Canadians. That has never been done before in Canadian history.

ROLE OF PRENTICE-HALL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, precisely on that point, unless the Minister has assurances that 51 per cent of Ginn will be owned by one Canadian institution or individual, is it not true that with Prentice-Hall controlling 49 per cent it will in fact run the company rather than the Canadian owners?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has obviously not read the agreement. The fact is it is anticipated that there will be one Canadian buyer for the 51 per cent.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

WARTIME JAPANESE-CANADIAN INTERNEES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. In dealing with the issue of Japanese-Canadian redress, he has completely and irresponsibly disregarded his Government's commitment to a fair compensation package to be negotiated with the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

Why does the Minister still refuse to honour his Government's two central promises of compensation and negotiation? Does the Prime Minister concur with the reversal of his own promise during the last election campaign?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how often I must say that this is the first Government in 43 years which has made a commitment to a fair package of redress for Japanese Canadians. That commitment will be kept.

I would like to advise Hon. Members that after full and extensive discussions with Japanese Canadians, organizations, and associations, as well as with other interested Canadian groups and individuals, the matter is now before Cabinet. It would be inappropriate for me to make any further comments until Cabinet makes a final decision on the matter. However, the commitment which the Prime Minister made when he was Leader of the Opposition is going to be kept.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister, who continues to act more like Rambo than an advocate for human rights and justice. Will the Minister stop railroading his Leader and his Government's own promises? Will he assure the House that his Government will not move unilaterally on such a sensitive national issue?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, as I told Mr. Art Miki, the president of the National Association of Japanese Canadians, in Winnipeg, last Friday, we discussed this matter as openly and in as much detail as possible with him, his association, and all other interested parties in Canada. The matter is now before Cabinet and we will have to wait for a cabinet decision.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

TEXTILES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. A number of Canadian colleges and universities offer programs on textiles, which include courses in industrial engineering, textile chemistry, dyeing and dressing processes. Could the Minister advise the House whether he intends to promote research and development in this area in an effort towards greater innovation and increased productivity in this industry?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the Government is developing a number of new measures, the thrust of which is designed for technology diffusion and application to permit our traditional industries, such as the textile industry, to make the necessary adjustments and rationalizations to move into the computer and technology age without too much disruption.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

SEARCH AND RESCUE FACILITIES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence. When the Conservative Party was seeking office it made the following promise in Halifax on August 2, 1984: "A Progressive Conservative Government will increase marine search and rescue capabilities with a particular emphasis on a ready response force".

I would like to give the Deputy Prime Minister an opportunity to deal with that. Is he now prepared to repudiate the Nielsen task force recommendation of a 10 per cent cut over a two-year period, and a move toward a voluntary rescue agency? Does a promise not mean anything to the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thought I might move members of that Party into some area of reason, but that is very difficult to achieve. The simple answer to the Member's question is that the Government is well advanced in the implementation of a plan to meet the recommendations of the commission which the Member for St. John's East has so often raised in the House. That planning is very quickly coming to a point which should meet all the pressing problems of search and rescue in country.

SALMON ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he give a commitment to keep his Government's promise to establish a salmon enhancement program and repudiate the Nielsen task force report recommendation not to expand the salmon enhancement program on the East Coast?

● (1450)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, where has the Hon. Member been? I have referred to them as dinosours. NDP does not stand for New Democratic Party, it stands for New Dinosaur Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The decision on salmon enhancement occurred when I was still Acting Minister of Fisheries. It was announced shortly after the new Minister was appointed. Where has the hon. gentleman been?

STATISTICS CANADA

CENSUS COMMISSIONER—ALLEGED OFFER OF JOBS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns blatant political patronage once again in the awarding of jobs for the 1986 census. Why does the Government allow this situation to go on? Last Monday night the Tory census commissioner for the riding of Ottawa-Vanier attended a meeting of the University of Ottawa Progressive Conservative Youth Club to offer jobs as census takers. Why is he using the census to give jobs to young Tories? Why is he trying to destroy StatsCan in doing so?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was here last Monday when the Minister addressed a similar question asked by him. The Minister assured the House that StatsCan is following the same procedure it has followed in previous census-taking activities.

Mr. Gauthier: That is not true.

Mr. Bradley: As reported at page 11354 of Hansard the Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I have been given assurances by Statistics Canada that it is absolutely confident that the results will be bona fide and that the competency of the people who have been hired is appropriate to the job that has been imposed upon them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

IMPACT OF LETTER FROM MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As you know, this reply had nothing to do with the question. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Is he satisfied with the impact which the letter from the Minister of State (Youth) has had on the Minister of Supply and Services? Could he say whether the latter is providing enough patronage assistance to young Conservatives to satisfy his colleague the Minister of State (Youth)?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question reminds me of my youth, when I used to spend my summers on a farm, and of farmers ploughing swamp land, because that is all it is.

YOUTH

ROLE OF MINISTRY OF STATE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, a number of events in recent weeks have dramatized the need for an effective voice for youth, one which will be heard.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. McCurdy: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government claims a variety of Departments have been more directly involved in providing jobs and training opportunities for youth. Is it the intention of the Government nevertheless to enhance the role of the Ministry of State for Youth and provide an advocate for and a symbol of the needs and concerns of youth?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): That is an exact description of the Ministry. The hon. gentleman should go back and examine the procedures in place prior to 1972 when the Government Organization Act was passed. He should look at the position of Ministers without portfolio as it was then. All of that changed in name with the 1972 Government Organization Act and we now have Ministers of State. Those Ministers are there to assist. They are not line Ministers and departmental Ministers in the sense that the hon. gentleman might mistakenly believe.

MINISTER'S CONDUCT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister believe that a Minister who abused her office, who was less than forthcoming with this House, and who provided a prevaricating apology—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): A what?

Mr. McCurdy: —is an appropriate model for the youth of the country to emulate?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): We have been all over that ground ad nauseam.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister answered, I have answered, the Prime Minister has answered. It is totally unproductive to repeat answers which have already been given, let alone the questions, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GASOLINE PRICE REDUCTION IN QUEBEC—FUTURE PROSPECTS

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Today, the Esso and Petro-Canada corporations have announced that they were reducing the price of gas in Quebec by 2 cents a litre. Could the Minister tell us whether we can expect more of the same good news in the future?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

YOUTH

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Three days ago the Deputy Prime Minister, in his answer to me, said the Government was quite satisfied with what it was doing for the young.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister wrote in a letter to Senator Jacques Hébert that he agreed with him that much more should be done for the young, and today the Prime Minister made another move and is now saying he is ready to announce a new program for the young before the end of the month.

In the name of human and Christian charity, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister: will he now be able to take speedy action, since they admit the mistake they made a few weeks ago?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, indeed I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. If he had been observant he would have seen how quickly this Government has acted to turn a very undesirable situation into one which is far more favourable to youth today than it was in September, 1984. There is still a considerable way to go, but a good deal more progress is being made now than ever was made before under the Liberal Government.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE UNDERTAKEN IMMEDIATELY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister did not grasp the meaning of my question.

In view of the dramatic turn of events in the Senate, where a senator has decided to put his health on the line, a 62-year old man, I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister, in the name of human and Christian charity—because as we know he will do it any way—if they could not proceed immediately instead of waiting till the cows come home.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is the same question again. We have heard myself, the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration try several times to get through to Hon. Members opposite that $700 millions—

Miss MacDonald: Far more than when they were the Government.

Mr. Nielsen: —is specifically targeted to youth employment.

Mr. Tobin: That is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: It is true.

Mr. Tobin: No, it is not.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a fact. The statistics are there. Youth unemployment has dropped two full percentage points, whereas it went up almost five percentage points under the previous Liberal Government.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The report of the Task Force on Program Review recommends that the Government consider abolishing the Human Rights Commission in favour of court action brought by individuals, as is now necessary in British Columbia where the Social Credit Government abolished the provincial Human Rights Commission. Can the Minister tell us whether he is in agreement with this recommendation?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very much in support of human rights.

Mr. Orlikow: Get the violin out.

Mr. Crosbie: The best way of enforcing human rights, of course, can be a matter of debate. The report has been referred to committee. Some recommendations may be accepted by the committee and recommended to the House; others may not. They will be dealt with in due course. In the meantime the matter is open for discussion in the committee.

REDUCTION OF STAFF

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell us whether the Government anticipated this privatizing of human rights when it accepted a decision to reduce the Human Rights staff in the Department of the Secretary of State from 15 persons in 1984-85 to 11 persons this and next year?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is mixed up as usual. This is not my Department but I am attempting to elucidate the matter for the hon. gentleman. The only change would have been in connection with the Court Challenges Program which has now been taken over by the Canadian Council on Social Development.

Never fear, this Government has spent more money than has ever been spent by its predecessor on the enforcement of human rights.

PRIVILEGE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) misinformed the House and therefore, I believe, violated both my privileges and those of the House. He stated that he had sent me a copy of his press release including all the details about which I asked him during Question Period. I had not received it prior to Question Period and I still have not received it. I just checked with my office.

I believe the House should know what agreements the Minister made in the interest of the country and book publishers.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made a representation. She will know that it is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege. It is, nevertheless, her opinion.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is simply that, as is the usual practice, the kit was sent to the office of the Leader of the Opposition for referral to the critic and this was done at eleven o'clock today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is clearly a dispute as to facts. It is neither a question of privilege nor a point of order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISTRIBUTION OF STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of the House the fact that the printed Standing Orders are being distributed to all Members today. It is my understanding that the Page staff have inserted them in the folders which Hon. Members usually keep in their desks. Members will recall that advance copies were made available to all of us on Thursday, February 20, only a week after their adoption.

[Translation]

Work continues on the many changes required by these new Standing Orders. The Index Branches are engaged in producing new indexes which will be available in a few weeks.

I wish also to acknowledge the same diligence shown by the distribution staff in ensuring that all Hon. Members received without delay the many documents which were tabled following the budget statement and the presentation of the estimates.

[English]

I am sure that all my colleagues will wish to join me in expressing appreciation to all the staff involved for their exceptional efforts. I thank, in particular, the staff of the Journals Branch and those associated with them, including the Translation Bureau and the House Computer Operations Branch, for the long hours of hard work they put in to meet the stringent deadlines we set for them.

We know that our staff accepts these pressures regularly as part of their normal duties, but it seems to me that when special dedication has occurred we should make note of it.

PETITIONS

TEXTILE AND CLOTHING INDUSTRY—PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege to present a petition from over 250,000 citizens of all regions in Quebec. This petition is supported by Canadian unions and by the Comité de survie du textile et du vêtement. The petitioners humbly pray that the Government of Canada take action to save their jobs and reduce the insecurity about the future felt by the men and women working in the Canadian textile industry.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member whether this petition has been certified? I must have the assurance from the Hon. Member from Drummond that this petition has already been certified. Can the Hon. Member assure me that it has in fact been certified? Has the Hon. Member presented his petition to the Clerk? Has it been certified?

Mr. Guilbault (Drummond): I have presented it and it has been certified, Mr. Speaker. It contains 250,000 signatures and they are certified, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: Are they certified?

[English]

ABORTION LAWS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as a Member who is dedicated to protecting the lives of unborn Canadians, it is both my duty and honour today to present a petition signed by citizens from across Canada calling upon Parliament to acknowledge representations made by citizens concerned about permissive abortion laws and to act on these concerns. The attached petition is in conformance with Standing Order 106.

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from many residents of my constituency of Burnaby. They point out that the telephone is essential for communication and that rental costs must always be affordable. They state that the telephone pricing scheme known as local measured service, charging for each local call, means having a telephone will cost much more per month for most people.

My constituents call upon the Government to direct the CRTC to deny telephone companies such as B.C. Tel the right to charge for each call and order the retention of monthly rental for telephones.

MORGENTALER CLINIC—ALLEGED RESTRICTIONS ON POLICE

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present to the House several petitions which have been certified by the Clerk of Petitions and contain over 700 signatures. These petitioners want to protest the continued operation of the Morgentaler clinic in Metropolitan Toronto and ask that Section 251 of the Criminal Code be enforced so that the Province of Ontario will remove restrictions placed on the Metropolitan Police Force and appropriate charges be laid.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) rising a second time to present a petition?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the right to present another petition.

Mr. Speaker: Normally, when a Member has more than one petition, we attempt to have him present those petitions once he is on his feet.

EQUALITY RIGHTS—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Winnipeg, Manitoba, who call upon Parliament to implement recommendation nos. 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 of the Report of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights with respect to sexual orientation, amending the Human Rights Act and requiring that the Canadian Armed Forces and RCMP bring their employment practices into conformity, and amending the Criminal Code and federal Government security clearance guidelines.

CROP INSURANCE—DESIGNATION OF UNIT—VULCAN COUNTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition on behalf of more than 90 farmers in the County of Vulcan. The entire county, comprising some 493,000 acres, was wrongly designated as a unit and the pay-out was consequently reduced considerably for those who had no crop during the last three years. By drawing the lines which had no relation to weather, crop production, grasshoppers or cutworms, and choosing large areas, much of the money went to the wrong producers.

My petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rearrange the boundaries either on a township basis or by reprogramming the Alberta Hail and Crop Records of each farm in order to provide a fairer and more equitable distribution of the money provided by the federal Government. A certificate is attached, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members might be reminded of the obligation to be as brief as possible when presenting petitions.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to empower the Canadian Transport Commission to order the construction of six-foot high chain-link fences along railway rights-of-way to prevent children from entering on to rail lines.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: The purpose of this Bill is to extend the present law relating to Firearms Acquisition Certificates to the ownership, possession and use of firearms, and to change the name "Firearms Acquisition Certificate" to "Firearms Possession Certificate".

The Bill would apply all the criteria presently stipulated for a Firearms Acquisition Certificate to firearms ownership, possession and use. This was contained in the original gun control legislation which was presented to Parliament before it was watered down.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 524 will be answered today.

[Text]

IRAP—GRAND CANAL COMPANY

Question No. 524—Mr. Caccia:

1. Was funding given to the Grand Canal Company of Newfoundland under the Industrial Research Assistance Program and, if so, what were the specific terms and conditions?

2. For what did the company apply to use the funds?

3. Did any other Government department or agency approve funding for the company and, if so, in each case (a) which ones (b) in what amounts (c) on what dates were applications submitted and approved?

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows:

1. Funding was provided to the Grand Canal Company of Newfoundland for work under the Industrial Research Assistance Program (IRAP). The terms and conditions were the usual ones for the program which include:

(a) The project initiated by the company must be technically challenging for the company and relate to an opportunity for it to achieve economically beneficial results for itself as well as benefits for Canada.

(b) The work must be carried out competently, but not necessarily by members of the company. (In the actual case, much of the work has been done by students from Memorial University in St. John's, Newfoundland working under direction of the company, during the non-academic segment of what is generally referred to as a "co-op" program).

(c) The intellectual property resulting from the work is the property of the company, but NRC has full rights of access to the ongoing work and the final results. The company is not free to transfer ownership of the intellectual property without NRC's approval.

(d) The work is to be carried out on a cost shared basis.

(e) The cost sharing arrangement is structured as a contribution, not as a grant.

2. The company applied to use the funds for very preliminary work associated with defining more accurately than had previously been possible a number of the major technical and related cost (economic) problems that might confront the Grand Canal concept. Typical of such problems are: (a) stabilizing of Great Lakes water levels, (b) complexities of water courses from Lake Superior basin to drought areas of southern Prairies.

In addition, the work allowed for making contact with agencies of the federal Government which might have technical contributions to make to the work.

3. Not applicable.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION FOR YOUTH

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its lack of consideration for Canada's youth, for its inaction in the face of the crisis an entire generation of Canadian men and women are faced with, and for neglecting to take immediate action in order to allow them to participate fully in Canadian society.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the House today, at a time when the youth question has captured the attention of many Canadians but, unfortunately, has not sufficiently captured that of the Government. That is why we, the Official Opposition, want to dedicate this Opposition Day to making the Government and all Members of this House aware of the very serious situation we have in Canada today.

Mr. Speaker, at this very moment, there are 700,000 young Canadian men and women who, although they want to participate fully in society, unfortunately have no opportunity to do so. We have 700,000 young people who are asking society for a small place in the sun, who really want to work, and they are being told outright: Sorry, no room.

We have these 700,000 individuals who are losing all their illusions and who, in many cases, have already lost hope, because after the sacrifices they made to get an education, their hopes and dreams have now been dashed by the current situation and by the state of the economy. Today, I thought it was essential for the Government, and in this respect, I do deplore the absence of the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne). She seldom has an opportunity to take part in the proceedings, and she is probably waiting for someone to write her speech so she can rehearse it, like a script. Meanwhile, I am sorry she is not here in the House to discuss with us the problems of Canada's youth.

Mr. Speaker, I think all Canadian men and women will realize that we, as parliamentarians and with our responsibility for the well-being of Canadians, should ask ourselves a number of questions and do some soul-searching.

We should ask ourselves whether as elected representatives, we have done enough to make equal opportunity a reality for young Canadians. And if during the recession, we merely did what we could to save what we already had, we must remember that those who had nothing were unable to enter the system.

We should also ask ourselves whether we are parliamentarians and especially you as the Government have fulfilled the mandate you were given by Canadians. After looking at the statistics and reading various papers published by the Government, we realized that since September 4, 1984, when this Government received a majority of support from young Canadians, they were the first group this Government decided to drop. And it did so for a very simple reason. This group does not have a powerful lobby. It is not one of Frank Moore's customers. It is not . . . in fact, it is isolated in so many ways, Mr. Speaker. And of course this Government is ignoring the isolated members of this group, each of whom is going through some particularly dramatic situation.

The Minister of State (Youth) has buried her head in the sand ever since her appointment. She would not face reality. She thought that she had been appointed to speak on behalf of all those who had succeeded, to strut about, to try and convince everybody that everything was fine and dandy in the best possible world, and to avoid at all cost to address the needy. As you know, Mr. Speaker, she has defended so weakly her constituency that she has been divested entirely of her own department and budget.

The Minister of State (Youth) is here today before us with the only support of her chauffeur and limousine. Under these circumstances, I do not think that she can do much for her constituency who need help so very much.

When we look at the situation straight in the face, Mr. Speaker, we realize that it is a tragedy. The unemployment level is very high and, as usual, the Prime Minister will provide us with a whole series of figures which the Minister of State (Youth) will repeat. But the whole situation is much more serious than these figures would indicate.

They say the unemployment level is lower than it was in September 1984, but youth unemployment increased last month, something nobody mentioned in the House. And the tendency is not downwards. I dare hope that the Minister of State (Youth) will realize for instance that in Nova Scotia, the unemployment level among young Canadians is .9 per cent higher than it was when she assumed her portfolio. It has also increased in New Brunswick since then.

It is all very nice to generalize, but there are particular situations. When we read the Nielsen report and realize that businessmen are now controlling this Government, we can imagine what is happening to the poor devils who are 16, 17 or 18 years of age. They cannot influence the Government. They are represented by a Minister who was supposed to defend them and, now that she is on her way out, can hardly defend herself. They have a Minister who wanted to manipulate them. Her own correspondance bears witness to that, Mr. Speaker. She is more interested in the future of the Federation of Young Conservatives than in the lot of young Canadians generally.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is scandalous for her to want to spend $7.5 million of taxpayers' money to get young people to join the Progressive Conservative Party—the Minister confessed that much herself—while fully ignoring the dramatic situation of young Canadians generally.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Youth) confessed her helplessness in her letter dated January 6, 1986. She recognized having wasted $100 million in the Youth programs since her election. If this is being concerned about the situation of young Canadians and being part of a Government eager to meet their needs, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand how the Minister of State (Youth) can claim today having done a good job over the past year and a half.

Mr. Speaker, looking back at what has been going on these last few days, there was, of course, that famous letter from the Minister, but there was also the spectacular, sad and dramatic gesture by our colleague from the Upper House, Senator Jacques Hébert. And that gesture, Mr. Speaker, is a symbol of how serious the situation is. This does not happen every day, and indeed I think it is the first time in history that a Member of this Parliament has decided to offer himself, his health in fact to try and wake up the bunch of sleepyheads in the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I see some of the Members shaking their heads. But I do not expect one single Member in that party to have the courage to defend a constituency with that much faith and devotion. And to that extent, Mr. Speaker, I feel the situation will force the Government to start thinking, because they have been laughing these last three days.

I venture to predict that their laugh will turn sour as days go by because they will have the whole situation on their conscience. And then, I think that over the coming days, the media will keep focusing the general public's attention on the situation of our young. All of us in our constituencies are aware of instances of neighbours, of people we know who have not found jobs, whatever the statistics may say. We know that the Manpower Centres are filled with young people waiting in line for opportunities.

It is therefore not good enough to be satisfied with the situation and refer to statistics. I do not understand why the Government does not admit its error now. They slashed through programs, in an arbitrary, hasty and somewhat vengeful way. But actually, it is not senator Hébert who is being hurt, but the thousands of young people who had pinned their hopes on that program. And the thousands of young people who are also waiting for the Government to respond to the Senate report.

In the Senate report, Mr. Speaker, there are 26 recommendations. It is not a Liberal report, it is a unanimous Senate report, about which Conservatives senators have agreed with Liberal senators to say this: The situation is far past the stage of partisan considerations. And although that report was made public, we did not even hear a whistle from the Minister of State (Youth), as usual. However, the other Members of the Governement should take the time to read it, and act on it because what is in that report is a call from the heart, and it is my hope that this Government will have the courage to act within the shortest possible time. I suspect there is a move, I think that in the last few days they have been thinking. It started three days ago when the Deputy Prime Minister said: "We will do nothing, all we have been doing is very well done, hurrah for the statistics, and those who do not appear in the statistics, let them manage by themselves".

Yesterday, the Prime Minister sent this reply to Senator Hébert, and in his letter the Prime Minister admitted: I would be the first to recognize that much more should be done for the young. That having been said, I think there is a move. Today the Prime Minister, probably on the way out of his caucus, said that probably, by the end of the month, the Government would be announcing new programs for the young. It would therefore seem that he is beginning to see the light. The Minister of State said she was not aware of anything. This is no news to us, she has never been aware of anything since she has been there, Mr. Speaker. I think she should inquire from the Prime Minister because it could help her in her speech today and she would look better if she did not contradict the Prime Minister before the end of the debate. I think it is important to know that at 12:23 p.m., according to a Canadian Press report, the Prime Minister has said he will announce new programs before the end of the month. However, she may no longer be there and this is why he did not ask her advice. However, Mr. Speaker, I think we should go beyond the personal case of the Minister of State, because the Government will deal with it, but we should look after the young people. As a result of the situation in the Senate which no doubt will become embarrassing for the Government, I know of no Government who would face such a situation without doing a self-examination and taking action.

In that case, why should we wait? Indeed, we know that a mistake was made when programs were swiftly cut. They admit that they have not done enough, that new measures will be taken before the end of the month but why are they not acting now? I think it would be in the interests of young Canadians. When the Government killed Katimavik, they promised that the $20 million would be transferred to another program and, of course, the Minister of State did not know what kind of program it would be.

It would perhaps be proper now for the Minister of State to rise, to show some leadership and announce a new program which would end the human drama of certain young people throughout the country and would hopefully satisfy our colleague, senator Hébert. Since certain Members are making light of the situation in the Senate, I would like to ask them to reflect on an editorial in today's Le Droit:

> The most sinister sniggering in the history of the House of Commons in Ottawa may have been heard on Monday. The whole venerable assembly of the representatives of the Canadian people once burst out laughing about the problem of battered women. When advised Monday about the fast of Senator Jacques Hébert, who is asking for the Katimavik Program to be reestablished, the Conservative Members of Parliament did something even more ugly.

The editorial goes on to say that, by laughing at Jacques Hébert and his hunger strike to save Katimavik, which represents the only ray of hope for many young people, the sniggering Conservatives showed their simplemindedness, their absence of morality, or even their pleasure at a situation which is in fact quite disastrous. There is no other reason to react as they did. I dare hope that the Minister of State (Youth) and all her colleagues will reflect upon these words written by editorialist Johannes Martin Godbout. Today the House is wondering what we as parliamentarians might do for that important segment of our population. It is a starting point.

We will be told there is no money, think of the funds required and the deficit. How far can we go on hiding behind deficits and sacrificing an important part of a generation? How wrong can our priorities be when we can find $1 billion to bail out wealthy bank depositors and pretend there is nothing left to help the most dynamic forces in our society? As suggested in the editorial, I think it is a lack of ethics.

I know that this Conservative Government is not overly sensitive to the plight of young Canadians, except perhaps to offer them minor census jobs. My colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) gave us a good example today when he told us that, at the request of the Minister of State (Youth), the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) followed her advice and offered census jobs to young people, particularly those who belong to the Ottawa University Conservative club. I think measures of this nature are not worthy of a proud Government or of parliamentarians like our colleague from Valleyfield who, I know, has a lot more class than that and is aware that the future of youth is a matter of honour and that we should not belittle the problems experienced by the new generation.

I think that the Government is not offering them opportunities because it feels that those who are lucky enough will make out all right, but too bad about the others. The fact is that solutions are there, they have been proposed by various organizations.

We have had studies galore. The one example I would give is the First Chance program which could have met urgent needs. The Minister of State (Youth) may laugh her head off! What to expect? I think she has no sense of responsibility, because young people urgently need ready access to the labour market, they need practical experience. I would suggest that the First Chance program could have been one of many avenues open to them. Call it whatever you like, but do something!

I think that it is important for young Canadians to feel that not only big business lobbies can influence this Government, that not only large companies, such as the oil multinationals, which have so much attention already, can catch the attention of the Government, but that ordinary people can do the same, that is those who cannot afford to attend weekend conventions or come to Ottawa to protest. I have been told: There are not that many youth organizations because there are no demonstrations on the Hill. Even coming here from Montreal or Toronto is too much to ask people who might have to live on $145 a month in welfare benefits. Would we want them to live on even less? I think that you only have to look at the facts to realize that there is a major problem.

I therefore hope that the events of the last few days and the daily problems facing many young people will convince our friends opposite to stop being concerned only by those who make large contributions to the Party and to take care of real people. I hope that they will show—and we already know that this is a big business Government—that this Government also has a heart, that it has courage and that it can admit that, because the Members opposite tried to go too fast in reducing the deficit, they forgot to take into account the human factor and to examine the type of situation in which 700,000 young people find themselves, they forgot to consider that these young people need at least the same opportunities as the other elements in our society.

There is now a difference of 6 per cent in the unemployment rate for young people and the rate for older Canadians. Some positive action must therefore be taken to help these people.

I do not see why this Government refuses to accept its responsibilities and I am convinced that the discussions that many Members opposite will have next weekend in their own constituency will give them pause and convince them to ask their caucus, their Leader and their Ministers to take more positive action in the coming weeks.

I trust that this will happen sooner than later and that the signs shown by the Prime Minister these last few days will lead to the implementation of a major program, not only knick-knacks, but something substantial, not just a political gesture to try not to lose face and show that something has been done, but a real program, a bold program, geared to the needs of young Canadians.

I am convinced that, should you take a poll—and you do that often enough—you would find that Canadians would be willing to make some sacrifices for the upcoming generation. I can say, right now, that all Canadians want to give young people a chance.

Ask your own conscience, look at your own children. Don't you want them to have the same opportunities you had? I am not asking for more than that. Give our young people the same opportunities you had when you were their age. Then, you will have a clear conscience, you will know you have done your best by giving them the programs they need to have the same opportunities you had.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), because of his experience, has his speeches oozing with both honey and gall.

Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to take the young as hostages. It is very easy, for instance, and especially when the galleries are packed full, to say to those young people: "You know, boys and girls, they would rather help the banks than you". This is very simple, especially when reference is made to banks, and the Hon. Member opposite knows very well that the bank situation is not a situation we had been looking for, but we had an obligation to act.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member also said earlier that the young were "a multitude of solitudes". I am repeating his exact words. I do not believe that at all. They are not a multitude of solitudes, but rather, in view of the rates we are currently noting—and this is why I would like to ask my question in that direction—since unemployment rates are now declining, I do not think we should speak of a multitude of solitudes. Quite the opposite, studies show they now have the highest possible rate of dynamism.

I would simply like to ask my question which is threefold. In the Prime Minister's letter to which he was referring earlier, it is stated: "On September 4, 1984, the unemployment rate among the young aged 15 to 24 was 18.4 per cent, and it is now 16.4 per cent."

This is quoting from Statistics Canada, unless you think that Statistics Canada is wrong once again. However, Statistics Canada says so: there are 2 per cent less unemployment according to the seasonally adjusted statistics.

Second, over the 18 months since September 1984, 50,000 new jobs have been created for young people. This again is quoted from Statistics Canada. Third, between February, 1980, and September, 1984, young Canadians have suffered the loss of 285,000 jobs. This again is taken from Statistics Canada.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague opposite was also Minister for Youth. What did he do at the time?

I will repeat the figures. Mr. Speaker, from 1980 to 1985, I will give January figures, seasonally adjusted figures:

In 1980, the young unemployed rate was 13.1 per cent; in 1981, it declined to 12.9 per cent; in 1982, it rose to 15.3 per cent; in 1983, it rose to 20.4 per cent; and in 1984, it decreased to 18.4 per cent. The rate came down to 17.5 per cent and now to 15.9 per cent. But what do you make of those figures? They are not the same.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

• (1540)

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, this is precisely then reason. I think that with reference to a crooked mind, my friend should realize that the February figures show the extent of unemployment amoung young people and if he wishes to fiddle with figures, the rate started at 15.9 per cent and last month reached 16.4 per cent under a Conservative Government. Consequently, this game of statistics can well be played.

Mr. Speaker, this is not enough, even if the rate is 16.4, 16.2 or 16.1, it is too high. Seven hundred thousand unemployed, that is too many, and that is unacceptable. And we congratulate you if the rate has decreased from September until now but this is not good enough. You must do something else. Do not be satisfied with a 15.9 rate which has now reached 16.4. We ask you to do more.

Mr. Hudon: Oh yes, something else!

Mr. Lapierre: This is what I have been asking you in my speech. I urge you to act because you are now glossing over your darn statistics while 700,000 people are in distress. You better stop bragging about your figures when facts are altogether different. You know quite well that your statistics do not include those who are depressed and discouraged and are no longer looking for jobs. All those who are registered with the Manpower Centres are not included in your statistics. And we know quite well that in some serious cases, after looking for a job for two or three years, one has to accept any kind of job. For instance, a fellow who has a Ph.D. is driving a taxi. Do you think this is satisfactory? In your statistics cases such is these are not included.

How many young people are presently underemployed because there are no openings for their particular talents, so that they never have the opportunity to practice the trades for which they prepared themselves, at great costs to themselves and their families? That is something your damned statistics do not show. But stop burying your heads in the sand, as the Minister of State (Youth) is doing, and face reality. And reality commands you, for human dignity's sake, to act. That is what we are beseeching you to do. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I, for one, cannot accept, when faced with this human tragedy, that the Government should try to hide reality behind a series of figures. When we hear about holding young Canadians as hostages, I suggest the Government once again demonstrates a paternalistic attitude, because young people can judge by themselves. For my part, I present my own view of the matter in trying to I urge you to act, and they can very well assess the performance of their so-called representative. Let them decide for themselves.

But young Quebecers have already decided, and if you want figures as evidence of that, I can refer you strictly to the results of the Gallup polls.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) has the floor for a question or a comment.

Mr. Hamelin: Just a comment, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that my hon. colleague's remarks . . . of course, everybody agrees with the higher principles, just as everybody is in favour of motherhood. But it is also the expression of obvious bad faith on his part.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that in this country Canadians can normally renounce their rights to an estate. When the liabilities exceed the assets, they usually do. Unfortunately, we could not renounce the situation we had inherited from you as former nominal Minister of Youth. We simply could not. We owe you the 700,000 unemployed young Canadians you have mentioned and we are stuck with them. How dare you come forward as you do and, in bad faith, blame us for this situation. As the Government, your party had 20 years to address this problem. Under your administration, unemployment figures constantly went up instead of going down.

If intelligence is a sword, Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague unfortunately is entirely helpless. It is a disgrace that he should rise in the House today and attack the Government in such evident bad faith. We are as aware as he is, as former nominal Minister, of the problems young Canadians are faced with. If there is a region where the situation is particularly acute, it's mine. I sympathize with their predicament and, as Members of the House, we try every day to—

Mr. Malépart: Quit sympathizing and do something!

Mr. Hamelin: I do not think I have any advice to receive from the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (M. Malépart), because in our constituencies, in our have-not regions, unemployment does not affect only the young, but also the less young people, as well as those between 40 and 60 who are laid off by companies, as in Forestville recently where 213 people were laid off. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie knows that what we are not talking of 450 jobs in Montreal, which may amount to .0231 per cent of the total Montreal workforce, but that in my area, when 213 jobs are lost in a small town like Forestville, it means that 70 per cent of the families are affected. All your shouting and negative biased comments are therefore quite inappropriate in this House as you are presenting a distorted image of the facts. I am making efforts, and so are my colleagues. I have made efforts with my colleague who helped me with a number of files, and did not do so in a partisan way as you are suggesting today. We just tried to come up with new projects, to involve young Canadians and ask them as we ask all Canadians to make the necessary efforts to address the situation. But because of the bad stuff you have been putting out for 20 years, we need a little time to further cut down the deficit and deliver what we promised.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that comment, we know of course that our Hon. friend can only shout as he knows that his arguments have no substance at all. Let me tell you something, Mr. Speaker. One can of course say that people are biased and put the blame on previous Government. But can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member blaming me for the past 20 years of management of our country! Mr. speaker, I am 29; do you think that I sat here in the House of Commons when I was 9? The Hon. Member cannot be speaking in good faith, and I just want to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that they on the government side have a responsibility. I have been a member of the Government, and if the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) has a ministry—or had one, now that only her title is left—if there was a Ministry of State (Youth), it was because I fought to make sure that the voice of young Canadians would be heard within the Government. I fought hard to get the Ministry and that position created, and my colleagues should remember that I was among those who criticized the situation and called for action, and we did indeed take actions. All we are asking this Government to do, as they claimed that they could do better with respect to everyone and everything, all we are asking them, instead of cutting down the budget, as the Minister of State (Youth) wrote in her letter of January 6, is this: You promised to do better, well, do it then, but by God do it!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments is terminated. We shall resume debate with the Hon. Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne).

An Hon. Member: She is still there!

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, this Government is being accused of ignoring Canadian youth. This Government is being accused of failing to deal with what they insist on calling "the crisis of a generation", and finally, it is being accused of failing to take immediate steps to deal with problems that this Government inherited from an administration that spent money as if it were going out of style but failed to deal with any of the problems the country was facing.

Mr. Hamelin: That's right.

Mrs. Champagne: It is therefore not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people rebelled as energetically as they did on September 4, 1984. And that is why, Mr. Speaker, this Government wanted first of all to get rid of this cancer that is eating at each and everyone of us, but especially at our youth, the children of Canada.

[English]

What we hear from Opposition Members is single word "spend". They do not care about a baby born this very minute who has a mortgage of $8,000 on its tiny shoulders.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Champagne: They do not care about the deficit, the national debt, which was eradicating every chance that child had to a decent life, a life to which every Canadian is entitled.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are being told to spend, even if there are no worthwhile results in the long run. Spend just the same! Create jobs for a few weeks, just long enough to let people draw unemployment insurance benefits and then go on welfare, until they are back in the same old cycle.

Mr. Speaker, when the Opposition says this is what Canada's youth wants, it shows how far removed it is from reality. I really wonder when these people last had a worthwhile discussion with young people.

The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) referred earlier to those who made it, but who does he think he is? He is fine, he has done very well for himself. Mr. Speaker, he never had those problems, and he is too young to have children who did. In fact, I wonder when he last had a serious conversation with young people.

Mr. Speaker, when Opposition Members insist on lamenting the lot of what they refer to as the lost generation, they are not only showing their ignorance of reality but, and this is much worse, they are insulting a whole generation of young Canadians who are making every effort to survive, despite the disastrous consequences of those long years of Liberal Government.

• (1550)

[English]

Our youth is not—I repeat, not a lost generation. They are young men and women struggling through a Liberal created mess, out of which this Government is now leading them surely and effectively.

We are not taking immediate measures to help young people, Mr. Speaker? I have heard of the pot calling the kettle black, but this form of hypocrisy should not be allowed, neither in this House nor in the worst God forsaken street of this world.

What did the Liberals do between February, 1980 and September, 1984 when young people lost 285,000 jobs and when the rate of unemployment soared to 18.4 per cent? What did they do, Mr. Speaker? They kept on with their make-work projects which never helped anyone acquire a permanent, rewarding job, and they continued to increase our national debt.

Ms. Copps: What about Katimavik?

Mrs. Champagne: I will come to it if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) will just keep quiet for a moment. Her sweet voice is not helping.

What did we do, Mr. Speaker? Fifty thousand jobs were created in a mere few months. I have heard the Opposition scream that they were not all permanent jobs. Again, Opposition Members have shown their lack of knowledge of what is going on. Many of our young people are looking for part-time work while they are pursuing studies in their chosen fields. They said so themselves. Yes, many in what the Opposition called that lost generation want to study and work. Our young Canadians are not all a bunch of drug addicts, alcoholics and suicidal people.

Ms. Copps: Who said that?

Mrs. Champagne: You just said it before. Some of them do have more difficulty than others, but calling them hopeless is certainly not helpful.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe we have a point of order.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, do I misunderstand? I thought it was a rule of the House that a Member did not read a speech but rather was impelled by the sincerity of feelings about the subject being discussed—

Ms. Copps: She doesn't understand the subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister may proceed.

Mrs. Champagne: We know that during these difficult times for our young people, especially between 1980 and 1984, many of them had to leave school. We have made some important decisions. Young people must be given a chance to get back into the labour force, to make something of their lives and plan for their future. That is why we are allocating some very substantial funding for youth. Within the Canadian Jobs Strategy alone, we have allocated $700 million or 37 per cent of the Department's budget. Speaking of labour market integration, we will be spending $210 million to help those seeking their first job.

Institutional training: $280 million. Challenge '86: a total of $210 million.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, all young people are eligible for the other components of our Canadian Jobs Strategy, programs that will total almost two billion dollars this year.

Challenge '86 is a program that young students appreciate because it gives them an opportunity to acquire the experience they need to obtain a permanent job.

In 1984, the Young Canada Works Program had a budget of $200,000 and created 65,000 jobs. Challenge '85, with a budget—

An Hon. Member: $200 million.

Mrs. Champagne: Excuse me, $200 million, and 65,000 jobs. Challenge '85, with a budget of $205 million, has created more than 100,000 jobs, of which 67 per cent were directly related to the individual's career or course of study.

In 1986, Mr. Speaker, with the private sector participating we will create even more jobs. We expect 120,000 summer jobs will be created.

Those who are less fortunate, including drop-outs, will be able to attend training courses and at the same time acquire practical job experience. This should encourage them to either continue their education or at least get some professional training. And we are being accused, Mr. Speaker, of inertia vis-à-vis our young people!

[English]

As well, we have loans and loan guarantees that will be available for students, for those who would rather start their own business. This is how to encourage leadership and entrepreneurship. This is how to avoid condemning an entire generation to a lifetime of welfare.

Ms. Copps: Come on.

[Translation]

Mrs. Champagne: As the Quebec poet Félix Leclerc said so eloquently, Mr. Speaker: The best way to kill a man is to pay him to do nothing.

An Hon. Member: You have been doing that for twenty years.

[English]

Mrs. Champagne: Because we are aware that too many people have to rely on welfare to live while looking for employment, an extra $100 million was directed to them in the Budget. This will also benefit a lot of young people.

[Translation]

In 1986, more than 200,000 young Canadians will benefit from federal employment programs, and this in addition to programs offered by Agriculture, CIDA, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Fisheries & Oceans, Justice, Environment, and there are others, and of course the Department of the Secretary of State. And this Government does nothing for youth?

Mr. Speaker, because of the sad legacy of the previous Government, we have had to make some difficult decisions that will help put our finances in order. Katimavik is part of what the Prime Minister referred to as "painful measures".

Mr. Malépart: Just to do the rich a favour.

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, it was impossible for a responsible Government to go on being so unfair to so many young Canadians. It was unthinkable to continue spending $20 million for the benefit of only 2,000 out of 4.5 million young Canadians who are entitled to take their place in society.

Mr. Malépart: And 56 million to change the colours of the uniforms.

[English]

Mrs. Champagne: Katimavik was never meant to be a job-creation program, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stewart: Right.

Mrs. Champagne: Its participants lived a great experience for nine months at a cost of $20 million a year. Was that fair, Mr. Speaker? Some of the participants even left school or a permanent job to get into the program. In the latter case they would get unemployment insurance benefits after. Was that fair? Considering the state of the country's finances, it became clear that the same money could be put to better use and, more important, directed toward a greater number of people.

I am quite aware that voluntary work can be most rewarding for whoever gets involved and for whoever is the beneficiary. During a recent of poll of young people between 15 and 24, some 24 per cent said they were currently doing volunteer or community work, and 73 per cent said that they would participate to acquire work experience. I am not surprised, because our young people are generous, kind, and wise. They want to help, and to help one another. The youth of Canada deserve better than to see 20 million of our scarce dollars shared by fewer than one-twentieth of one per cent of their peers.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should refresh the memory of our Liberal colleagues and remind them that about ten years ago, in one fell swoop, the Trudeau Government buried the Company of Young Canadians, ended all operations under the Opportunities for Youth program while slashing the Local Initiatives program budget by 30 per cent. All those programs were geared to young people. Those $77.5 million were earmaked for something else, the equivalent of $200 million in current dollars. There was a resulting loss of 37,000 jobs. And now the Members of that same Party are sanctimoniously lecturing us about youth! Young people had to wait for nearly two years before Katimavik was launched. The Opposition applies a double standard, shamelessly.

[English]

Shamelessly they accuse us of throwing Canada's youth in Mr. Trudeau's "dire straights".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, at the Department of Youth we seriously consider reports from the Senate and the New Democratic Party. We carry out in-depth studies, as a responsible Government and a responsible Minister ought to do.

It is with sadness that I reflect upon the matter. If the Senators believed that the only really important thing in their report is that Katimavik is touted as having been the answer to all youth problems, then a lot of money has been wasted in drafting the report.

[English]

When one looks at the NDP report, the same word appears again, "spend". It is the flagship recommendation. They want us to spend $5,500 a year for two years for young people to do as they please; study, acquire skills, or simply think over what they might want to do when that money runs out. Mr. Speaker, $5,500 a year is not even enough for an ordinary Canadian, like the Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), to take a decent holiday, as he stated recently. Like the song says, I wonder what the poor people do? This is not Camelot, this is Canada, and Canada is recuperating from 20 years of wasteful Liberal policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Champagne: Young people do not want a new form of welfare. They do not want to be part of a ghetto where, no matter what one does, he or she is considered a desperate, lazy, hopeless member of a lost generation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, young Canadians spoke and our Government listened to them.

Young Canadians seek an opportunity to better themselves, they want to acquire the training and experience needed to secure lasting employment, work that will enable them to increase their knowledge and improve their standard of living. That is exactly what the Government has done. It showed concern, it has already acted and it will continue to act for the benefit of all groups and all regions. And, as the Prime Minister said, we will go even further when the time comes.

Mr. Speaker, rebuilding a country is somewhat like renovating a house. One must be sure that the foundation is on solid ground before spending money on decorations.

We are rebuilding this country with young people who day by day begin to feel hopeful again. First and foremost we must ensure that young people do have a future.

[English]

Politics becomes a very sad word when it is used to drown the hopes of a generation, when it is used to insult a generation which is but paying for the mistakes of the past, and when one is blackmailed into believing that life without any real personal responsibilities will cure all that may seem imperfect. Nobody said life was easy, but living it is worthwhile, but only if you keep on trying.

"Spend" they say. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do, and we will, but wisely, and where it is most needed. That is what the Government will continue to do for Canada, for those who are very much part of our present, and for whom and with whom we are building tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) on a question or comment.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for dealing at last with the unemployment situation with which young Canadians are faced, but I should like her to tell me . . . When she said that she had consulted young Canadians, maybe she was inferring that we had not consulted them enough. I know that over the past year, the Minister has spent $400,000 to organize regional meetings which were to culminate in a national conference supposedly to develop a national consensus on priorities for young Canadians. Now that she has renounced for the time being her project to hold her national conference, presumably for lack of funds, could she tell us what will happen of all her consultations? Will she publish a report? Did she hold consultations with young people just for the sake of making them talk? What I should like the Minister to tell us is whether the national conference will take place in two years, after the International Year of Youth, or does she intend to hold it very soon as promised?

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, we have always indicated that the national conference would take place later, that the International Year was only a step towards better things and continued involvement with young Canadians. The International Year has been for all parties concerned a period of deep reflexion; it provided young people who had never been consulted an opportunity to express themselves. Previous Governments would set up and abandon programs without ever consulting young Canadians. Throughout this International Year, our Government has dialogued with young Canadians from all parts of Canada, from Newfoundland to the Yukon Territory. When the time comes to get young Canadians together again, we will do so, but at the time I, together with the Prime Minister, will choose, without the young people needing to wait for a decision from the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

An Hon. Member: They have certainly waited long enough.

Mrs. Champagne: Although they expected a great many things from the Hon. Member, they never got much from his party.

When the time comes, Mr. Speaker, we will call again young Canadians to a meeting and we will work together with them towards a better Canada for them all.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear that the Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) is not going to get an answer to his question. The answer, of course, is no, there is no national forum scheduled, unless the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) decides to change his mind about allowing one to occur.

I have a couple of questions which I had not anticipated addressing in my speech. We have had great difficulty getting information about some of the things which the Minister had stated as fact in the House. Perhaps she can tell us what the $11.73 billion is which she mentioned in the House the other day.

She condemned Katimavik because, as I recall, it affected only one-twentieth of one per cent of the youth in the country. Did she oppose the capital gains tax exemption on the basis of the low percentage of the population of the country which would benefit from that? Did she oppose the bail-out of banks on the basis of the small percentage of Canadians which would have benefited from that? By the way, when she was considering the cost of the youth prospects program did she make any reference in her mind at all to the $2.8 billion which was flushed down the drain for the benefit of Tory buddies?

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, the statistics on amounts of money to which I referred earlier this week are very simple to get.

Mr. McCurdy: Send me a note.

Mrs. Champagne: The Member and his Party have a research team. They can very well look into Part III of the Estimates which were presented in the House by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). They can do the work themselves and they will get exactly the same answers. I am not going to do their work for them.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to . . . it is indeed a sad day when 700,000 young Canadians thought that the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) would see this as an important debate and announce new things. The Minister has confessed her failure. A little while ago, my colleague asked her . . . The Minister has allowed $56 million to be spent on uniforms of a different colour for our military personnel instead of keeping $20 million for young Canadians. The Minister was all in favour of granting the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) $100 million more per year to send 1,000 more military personnel to Europe, instead of helping young Canadians find jobs.

During her speech, the Minister has insulted young Canadian men and women who needed just a little push and not a slap in the face. Could the Minister stand up and say honestly why she has allowed expenditures of $56 million . . . and $100 million per year to send 1,000 soldiers to Lahr instead of keeping between $20 or $25 million to help young people in Quebec and the rest of Canada?

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, we are keeping and shall continue to keep our promises to young people, and by the same token, we are keeping and shall continue to keep our promises and commitments to NATO. I do not see why one would prevent the other. The amounts are there and the results also. Jobs are being created. There are programs in just about every major Department, programs which we are coordinating for all young Canadians. We are keeping our promises as far as they are concerned and we shall continue to do so. Like the Prime Minister said this week, in due time, new programs will be announced, but these programs will meet the needs and aspirations of young people while taking into account the amounts available to the Government at this time following the disastrous situation of the last 20 years.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, someone accused me earlier of arranging the figures to suit my purposes, but I would like to say that I made a mistake. I took the first line while I should have taken the second. If I had wanted to arrange the figures, I would have quoted the second line for February when unemployment figures are always the highest. I would have done so if I had wanted to arrange the figures. I quoted the figures for January.

I said earlier that, in 1982, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 15.3 per cent. I have the honour to inform you that, if I had wanted to arrange the figures, I would have announced a rate of 15.4 for February, 16.2 for March, 16.8 for April, 17.6, and normally, in July, when many young people have jobs, the rate is lower, but while the rate for January was 15.3, in July of the same year, it was 21.3. And they try to criticize! This is what I would have said if I had arranged the figures to suit my purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask my hon. colleague whether, if Katimavik was so popular with the public, the private sector would not have jumped on the opportunity to take over from the Government after cancellation of this program was announced. We have heard no such thing.

Mr. Malépart: The private sector took the money.

Mrs. Champagne: In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to prevent Opcan from collecting funds from the private sector to keep the program in operation. The Government decided that these $20 million would be allocated elsewhere to help a greater number of young people. I am thinking, for instance, about what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in his Budget. We know that, unfortunately, many young people are on welfare. Another amount of $100 million has just been granted to help create jobs for people on welfare. And the Members opposite say that we are doing nothing for young people and for those who need help.

They told me that they were expecting me to make announcements today. They tell this Government: Spend even more money, never mind that the young people have no future because there will be this terrible debt which they will never be able to repay. That is not why this Government was elected and that is not how I intend to work with and for young people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for a question or a comment.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to ask the Minister whether, in the said $11.7 billion she was referring to, family allowances are included, because I think those figures are misleading our people.

I would also like to ask her sincerely whether she is now saying, as mentioned by the Prime Minister, that the Government is ready to announce programs for the young. She knows very well that Senator Hébert is now on a hunger strike that could have truly serious consequences for his health.

I heard the Minister speak in good faith outside the House when she stated Senator Hébert was a man who represented a certain hope for the people. She spoke well of him outside the House.

If her Government is ready to announce something, why is she not doing it today, a program that would give some hope not only to Senator Hébert but to the young people? Because we know that in the Nielsen Report, where reference is made to Katimavik, it is said that if that program were cancelled without being replaced by another one, this could cause despair among young Canadians.

I think the Government's decision to kill a program which the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Mulroney) said was good, was made because this was a former Liberal program. It was not killed because it was a bad program, since it was a program recognized by the Canadian people and internationally as a program that provided the joy of living, training, life experience, quality of life to those who never had much luck in life.

Therefore, why? If she really represents the young in the Cabinet, why does she not react today and give a little hope to those young Canadians who are following the debate today and who ask for a single gesture today from the Government and the Minister that would give some hope to our young people?

As far as we are concerned, we do not call the young "junkies" or alcohol-prone. But it must be recognized that the suicide rate among young people has doubled over the last ten years. And we are now beginning to see that this may be a lost generation, a generation without hope.

As a woman, it seems to me that she can understand the plight of a generation without hope.

Why does she not give some hope to these people today through an announcement, whether it be only $20 million, or whether it is a step in the right direction for the Katimavik program? But at least let her send a signal to the young of our country.

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, the end of Katimavik was announced by the Minister responsible for it a few weeks ago and the Government had then to make that decision, "a painful decision" as the Prime Minister said yesterday, considering the needs of young people, the lack of available funds and especially the very small number of young people who could take advantage of the program.

Nobody ever said that the program was not satisfactory, that it had nothing good. We cannot at present give special privileges to a mere 2,000 young people when there are 4.5 million of them and we have so little money.

The Prime Minister said today:

[English]

He said that unfortunately the resources are stretched across the Government. That does not make my task any easier than was the task of the previous Minister. However, we are working and, as I indicated some weeks ago, the financial year ends on March 31, and at or about that time we will be making some announcements regarding funding and initiatives and programs we think will be helpful to the youth of Canada. We will once more keep our word. When this is ready to be done, it will be done.

● (1620)

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in support of the Liberal motion.

I listened to the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) who berated us because we expected her to announce some new programs. I would have to assert that I had no such expectation. I do not expect the Minister of State to do very much more than she has already done, which is nothing. She also berated us for alleging that she was not concerned about youth. We know that she is concerned about youth because she devoted a full-length letter to her colleagues about this subject.

Ms. Copps: Why is she leaving?

Mr. McCurdy: We would not expect the Minister of State for Youth to stay and listen to the debate about those people about whom she cares so much. She said that we did not acknowledge her concern for youth, but we were recently table to identify quite specifically her concern for youth. Her concern for youth is that they are a target of recruitment for the Progressive Conservative Party's youth federation. She alleged that we did not believe her concern about the problems of youth but we know that she is very much concerned about the problems of youth. Why else would she attempt to exploit the problems of youth to meet the ends of her own recruitment policy for which her office is being used?

We have just completed International Youth Year. Perhaps I should remind the House why International Youth Year was declared by the United Nations. As in the case of women, members of the United Nations believed that there should be a year for youth in order to focus attention on the imminent crisis that was affecting young people, particularly in the western world. Riots had already taken place and there was a great deal of concern that if something was not done about the unemployment among young people a crisis of significant proportions would lead to social disruption. International Youth Year was not intended to be a year of celebration for the accomplishments of youth, as it was celebrated in Canada in many respects, but was intended specifically to focus attention upon the concerns, the problems and the need for participation by young people in determining policies that would affect their lives.

The Minister of State for Youth says that she has been consulting with young people. During International Youth Year her Ministry sponsored a number of forums. She attended these forums, leaving in her wake deep disappointment among many that she did not have the time to spare to sit down with young people to listen to their problems at length, as many of us have done.

They do not want to be told what problems to discuss or what their concerns should be, they simply want us to listen. These forums were rather consistent with the content of the Minister's letter and, in many instances, were seen by young people as attempts to steer the discussion of youth toward directions chosen by her Party in order to support her philosophies and those of her Party. Therefore, perhaps it is not a great disappointment that the fifth national forum has been cancelled after four which served little purpose for young people. Perhaps we must admit that a fifth forum would have served little purpose.

Until recently the International Youth Year failed in its goal to provide a focus on the concerns of youth. I was involved as critic for youth and post-secondary education in the New Democratic task force which coursed across the country and talked to hundreds of young people. There are so many easily identifiable problems affecting so many youth that I believed that the media and the three Parties in this House would have been able to respond. I have been puzzled, grieved and saddened by the great difficulty in drawing attention to the plight of young people in this country.

When I say that some 25 per cent of the population of young people represent a lost generation, I am not denying the contribution, the honesty and creativity of young people. However, when we consider how the problems of many young people are being disregarded and reflect upon why there is the rejection of effective participation by youth, I recall the many graduation speeches I have heard in which adults have told young people: "Tomorrow this will be your world because you are the leaders of tomorrow".

Let us examine the background of such statements. It means that this is our world today but will soon belong to young people. We are saying that eventually someone will take over our territory and we will have to concede to youth. Perhaps when we tell youth that this will be their world tomorrow and they will be tomorrow's leaders we are really confessing that we are suspicious of our youth and do not want them to be involved because they are the enemy. I believe we must stop projecting that attitude in our relationship with young people and begin to consider youth as our partners in this democracy, from whom we have much to gain in developing the destiny of this country.

We have also heard the assertion that today's youth are going through the same experience we had when we were young. This is not true. Our experience as youth in this country and throughout the world was quite different from today's youth. Many of us earned our political spurs in the 1960s. While many of us participated in social actions that could have caused us trouble, we knew we would ultimately be able to get a job. Indeed, some may ultimately end up in the Parliament of Canada after engaging in near revolutionary movements. In those days there was full employment but today there are many young people who are unemployed and may never have a job.

Today's young people are awash in information. They have received far more information in half an hour of television than they can learn from a week in the classroom. At no time in history has a population grown up in circumstances where change is so rapid with respect to technology, the transfer and the flow of information that there is little time to prepare or make judgments.

We did not grow up in communities where families were subject to such dramatic and drastic change. Many young people are the children of single parents and come from families that suffered marriage breakdown. Today, family relatives live far apart. The atmosphere among families today is one in which they spend six minutes a day to discuss family concerns.

There is a vast difference between now and then. That is why the young people of today are pleading for more help, more advice and more guidance. There were recommendations that there be significant changes in the educational system because the youth of today are different. They are different because of the environment in which they grow up. Their needs are substantially different. Their experience and problems are different. So we had better stop looking at young people through a distorted mirror. We must see them through a window which reveals their lives. We should try to understand their particular experience of growing up in this world.

I must confess to a certain degree of gratitude. Over the last few weeks, the release of the New Democratic Party task force report, the Senate committee task force report, the ineptitude, unfortunate as it may be, of a Minister who was caught in serious error and, now, more recently, the grievance expressed in the form of a hunger strike by an eminent Senator, have all brought some focus on the problems of our youth. I hope that this emphasis on young people will not be aborted. I have been very much concerned about the lack of attention given to the youth of Canada in this House. Although I believe it is unfortunate that a hunger strike by one of its own has brought the Liberal Party more consciously into the effort, I appreciate that it is with us. I hope that the Conservatives will begin to realize that what we are talking about is not a share of already existing programs but rather the initiatives which will be taken in response to what has been identified by two task forces, and many others, as a unique problem.

Let us consider the Senate report and our own report. Let us look at the recommendations in contrast to what we have been hearing from the other side. There are two things on which both reports agree, first, that the problem of youth is significant and we should address their needs as unique and not relating to the rest of the population; and second, and this is by far the most important, that there must be some means by which young people can be involved in advising all levels of Government of their needs and concerns. We should provide youth with the means of participation in a variety of ways. One of these would be to ensure the existence of youth advisory councils at both the federal and the provincial levels. Youth chosen by democratic means could be given the opportunity, through the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), who is supposed to be a true advocate for youth, to advise Government and Government Departments of their needs and concerns. We should enhance the opportunities for young people to be heard from on all of the issues affecting them.

Our task force report made a number of recommendations.

[Translation]

The goal of the task force was to provide a forum for young people and alow them to speak about the various Government policies which affect them, to state their views on various social, economic and political issues and to promote the development of new strategies to meet economic needs as far as social development was concerned and this involved over 4 million young Canadians aged 15 to 24.

[English]

One of our important recommendations was with respect to youth prospects. We do not mean a hand-out like the $2.8 billion for the research and development credit. It is not like the capital gains exemption. It is not a hand-out like the money which went to the banks and which benefited the banks outside our borders to the extent of 30 per cent. None of these things were subject to the criticism that those people would waste the money on vacations, cars, and so. In fact, one got the impression that if they did go on vacations and purchased cars, it was probably a good thing to do with the money.

Our recommendation was intended to provide opportunity. We were impressed by the fact that, to a large extent—as a result of the inaction of the Government in respect of the financing of universities—accessibility to universities was being seriously impeded. The gains which had been made in the last decade in providing opportunities for minorities, the disabled and women were being restricted as a result of financial exigency by the Government. It failed to respond to the needs of the universities in a number of respects. We have encountered many young people from poor families who, were they to go to university, would incur debts totalling as much as $40,000. They would be faced with nine years or ten years of making payments at the rate of $350 a month. We also found that the youth from poor families could get an allowance if they went into a training program. So we have an arrangement that creates an essential bias. The poor go into the training programs and the rich go to university.

There were a number of other problems which existed among young people which had to be addressed in an effective way. We suggested a program which would affect young people between the ages of 18 and 22 years. If they chose to participate in the Youth Prospects Program, then they would be provided not with a gift of $5,500, but with an allowance just like the allowances which are provided for training programs now and which are denied those young people going to college and university. This will make it possible for young people of all classes and all backgrounds to make a reasonable choice of whether to go to university or college or to go into entrepreneurship programs or work skill developments which are similar to Katimavik, or to go into industrial training programs which exist now. Such a program, if integrated with already existing programs at the federal and provincial levels will cost relatively little. It would certainly cost a good deal less than the $30 billion in deferred taxes afforded to large corporations. It would cost less than the $11 billion in tax expenditures which benefit the larger corporations. Indeed, it would cost exactly the same amount of money as the capital gais exemption and at its peak would cost no more than $1.4 billion.

It disturbs me, as I am sure it disturbs many of the young people from whom I have heard—who regard this as an excellent program in response to their needs—that the Government would criticize such a program on the basis of cost at the same time that it shows such quick generosity to the banks and large corporations. Moments ago we heard that $1 billion was given to the banks because of the urgency. The problem of youth is far more urgent than the problem of those who had the stupidity to take a chance and who expected the Government to bail them out.

● (1640)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: If this Government does not hear this and if the Minister does not hear this, then the Minister should go home and represent her constituents in her riding. She is certainly not representing the youth of the country.

The report of the New Democratic Party and the report of the Senate addressed the fact that the young people of the country have said that the educational system is not meeting their needs. It does not meet their needs with respect to career guidance. It does not meet their needs with respect to counselling. It does not meet their needs with respect to the world of work. It does not meet their needs with respect to relevance.

It is about time we recognized what has been said in report after report—there needs to be a co-ordination of post-secondary education in the country and a co-ordination of what we are doing with elementary and secondary education. If we do not do something, then we will let down the youth of the country. We will fail in taking an opportunity to do something creative about the future of our nation. This can only be done by addressing the needs of youth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, although I do not agree with the Hon. Member's rethoric, even if I try to tone down his criticisms which somewhat seem to outweigh if not his thoughts, at least his ability, when he describes as—and I quote—stupid, people who have invested in a bank which failed and I hope that Westerners who voted for the New Democratic Party will remember his insulting remarks.
