SEED jobs will provide practical work experience to enhance the student's future employability or will relate to a field of study or future career.

Most of these applications call for clerks, farm workers, waitresses, waiters, labourers and so on. There are all kinds of jobs which need to be done but I do not feel those kinds of jobs meet the criteria of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I have another example of an application from someone in a small business. He will receive a subsidy to hire his daughter for the summer as a clerk in his store. I have another applicant who has gotten a project approved, and there is no job title or description whatsoever. It is just one big question mark as to what this money is being used for. I have another application by a pharmacy which will receive money to hire two clerks in a store. A town will receive a grant to hire one clerk in a store. Another pharmacy will receive money to hire one clerk in a pharmaceutical store. There is another pharmaceutical business which will receive money to hire two clerks, and another pharmaceutical which will receive money to hire one salesperson.

We can see what is happening here, Mr. Speaker. The summer program which is supposed to enhance the career and studies of students is being used by a number of pharmacies and companies to hire someone to work for the summer. They are using it strictly as a subsidy and saving themselves money, as well as taking away a full-time job from someone.

I have another application from a multinational company, International Minerals and Chemical Corporation, which is well known around this continent. It is receiving a grant to hire 13 labourers, 13 helpers and four others, for a total of 30 people. Another company is receiving a grant to hire a labourer. Another company in Estevan, which I think is in the riding of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia, is receiving some money to hire a waitress.

Mr. Lewis: Are you against jobs in Estevan?

Mr. Nystrom: I have an application for money to hire a grocery clerk, and another to hire a labourer. We can go on and on through all the application forms and we will find that time and time again the grants are going to provide jobs for clerks, cashiers, stock persons, waitresses, yardmen and things of that sort.

Mr. Gustafson: Real jobs.

Mr. Nystrom: What I am saying is that we are borrowing money to finance this program and the Minister of Employment and Immigration is saying in her own brochure that the objective of the program is one which will enhance the student's future employability and will relate to a field of study or future career. That is the objective of the program. It seems to me that some of these applications are really questionable in terms of whether or not they meet the objective of the program. There are all types of other programs which we could have put in place to hire farm labourers, clerks, waitresses and helpers in pharmacies rather than providing multinationals with subsidies. Let us not use the student summer employment program which has as its objective trying to enhance a person's career with work relevant to that career as one of the means of accomplishing that end. That is just another reason why the House should be in no rush whatsoever to approve the borrowing of some $22 billion by the Government. It is really just an extra tax on ordinary citizens.

I remember when the Conservative Party formed the Official Opposition. Members of the Party used to speak loudly and clearly about the Liberals borrowing $5 billion, $10 billion or even $20 billion. The present Government is now doing the same thing. However, it is doing it bigger and more frequently than the Liberal Government used to do in the past. I am sure some of my friends in the Conservative Party who spoke so often and loudly about all this borrowing a few years ago must be feeling very embarrassed for the Prime Minister and for his Cabinet. It is my opinion that, if one takes into consideration the results of public opinion polls, in about two-and-a-half years members of the Conservative Party will be back on this side of the House once again. In the history of polling in the country we have never seen a Government fall so far and so fast as this Government has fallen from favour in the eyes of the Canadian population. It has never happened before provincially or federally. A year or so ago the Conservative Party was sitting at some 55 per cent or 58 per cent in the Gallup poll. It is now in the mid-30 per cent range. it is in a freefall. It is no wonder, since it has broken trust and faith with the people of our country. The Hon. member for Assiniboia being a good red Tory feels the same way as I do. However, he has a fierce loyalty to the Prime Minister of Canada which inhibits him from getting up and speaking his mind.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for his fine introduction in terms of setting us up for re-entry into Government. It is always pleasant to see such an experienced and learned colleague be so astute in terms of forecasts and prognoses.

In saying a few words on this Bill I simply wish to draw attention to some crucial issues affecting the western part of Canada, which are not in any way countenanced in the types of expenditure patterns we see being proposed by the Government. I find it surprising and disturbing that matters which are of crucial economic importance to major economic regions are ignored in the Bill.

There is a storm cloud gathering which has nothing to do with the late arrival of spring in Canada. That cloud is called the U.S. Farm Bill. It will have the impact of driving down world grain prices by something in the order of 20 per cent to 30 per cent. For western Canadian grain farmers this means that the opportunity to try to recapture some economic benefit, after two very difficult years, will be almost impossible. If one were to project the price of grain for June, which is now being done in the futures market on the Chicago Exchange, one will see it is down 40 cents or 50 cents from what the price is at the present time.

Mr. Nystrom: It is actually 90.

Mr. Axworthy: As my hon. friend points out, it is actually approaching 90. This means that the cost of growing a bushel of wheat in western Canada will be close to 60 cents or 70 cents above what will be received for it. There is absolutely no provision anywhere in statements by Ministers or in expenditures of the Government to deal with this eventuality.

A grand opportunity was lost last week when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met with the President of the United States. That was when a representation for changes to the American should have been made in order to bring together the major grain-producing countries to try to work out a formula which would not cause a catastrophic drop in world grain prices. As far as we know the topic was never even mentioned. It was not brought to the attention of the U.S. administration. We are now entering a new growing season in which every grain farmer in western Canada is faced with the alarming prospect of having every seed he puts in the ground costing him 30 per cent more that what he can get for it. What a crazy and absurd situation!

The primary test of any Government is not its philosophy or theology; it is how it responds to an immediate, important issue faced by large numbers of people. In this case it has certainly failed the test miserably.

We are now asking farmers in western Canada—in fact farmers right across Canada—to lose a substantial amount of money. Corn growers in the east will face the same problem, just as will growers of other commodities. They will be putting crops in the ground in a matter of weeks which will result in a substantial loss of money. What do we hear from Members opposite in this regard? Nary a word. What do we hear from Ministers? Excuses. What do we get from the Prime Minister as a result of his grand negotiations with the President? A great zero. That is not effective Government. That is the reason the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is right in saying that we will be back on the other side of the House. We can at least understand the problem. We knew how to respond to it. Rather than sitting silent for the sake of good public relations in Washington and avoiding coming to grips with a major issue we understood it.

Let us look at what is happening to the oil industry in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. As prices tumble, and as the industry slides down the slippery slope the only answer we have from Tory MPs from the City of Calgary is that they will set up another task force, just as their comrades from the east end of Montreal set up a task force to provide for a new economic renewal program. If that task force in Calgary is as effective as the one in east Montreal, God forbid, then I can only offer my condolences to the people of Calgary.

The fact of the matter is that once again there is an immediate and important issue taking place in western Canada which is being totally ignored by the Government. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), when we can find her—she is rarely in the House—says that there is no problem. She tells us not to worry about it, things will get better and the sun will shine. There are already major lay-offs taking place at the big oil companies in Canada. The smaller Canadian companies are simply preparing to sell out since that is the only way they can gain some return.

I would now like to give Hon. Members a smaller example, one that is crucial in my province, of the maladministration, inattention and indifference of this Government. I refer to the Port of Churchill. It was a matter of major concern to westerners for a long period of time that something be done to try to restore the Port of Churchill as a viable and useful port facility. We signed an agreement in 1983 with the Province of Manitoba committing something in the order of $93 million of joint expenditures to bring the port up to proper and sufficient working efficiency. Some two-and-a-half years have gone by since that time.

During that period the Conservative Government, which has seven Members from Manitoba, has done absolutely nothing to implement the agreement. When we look at the proposals for expenditures for 1986-87 all we see in it is a line stating that there will be a major development of a port facility at Step-Îles. We know whose riding that port facility is in. It will receive something in the order of $8 million. But we receive a consolation prize. The Government is going to build us a tug for the Port of Churchill. It will not do the dredging so that the port can operate. Nor will the Government fix up the grain terminal or go ahead with the major refurbishing of the railway line. The Government plans to build a tug. I know that the tug can be moved somewhere else, probably to Sept-Îles to serve the constituency of the Prime Minister.

The commitment I refer to was legal and binding. The money was in place. We talked about consultation with the provinces. There was full consultation with the province. There was a full accord with respect to the objectives and goals.

What has this Government done since it took office? Absolutely nothing. As a result, the Port of Churchill is once again on the brink of extinction. Once again, the Port of Churchill is being threatened with closure because the Government refuses to take the action that a previous Government had already prescribed and funded. The Government simply has not gotten around to finding its way clear to do anything about it.

● (1310)

The Government is asking Parliament for a large amount of money so that it can do good works for Canadian people. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there are no good works being done in western Canada, and there is no reason to vote for this borrowing authority because the people of western Canada are being gypped by the Government. They are not getting their fair share of attention. They are not getting their fair share of resources and they are not getting their fair share of proper, effective Government from the Tories in Ottawa. Therefore there is no reason for anyone on this side of the House who cares anything about western Canada to support the Government in its request for borrowing authority.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 11 minutes after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.11 p.m. the House took recess.

YOUTH

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—SENATOR'S HUNGER STRIKE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, not only has the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) broken his promise to the young people of Canada by failing to table some new youth programs by the end of March, it is quite clear that the approach of the Government to the position taken by Senator Jacques Hébert has been in fact to allow the issue to become a political football. The statements made by the Minister on the weekend will in no way lead to an early resolution of the situation.

I draw to the attention of the Government that not only has Senator Jacques Hébert fought for the reinstatement of the Katimavik program, but the Business Council on National Issues, the organization from which the Government derives most of its economic policies, was so praiseworthy of the program in a policy statement last year that it suggested that it should be continued and expanded. The Council thought the program was working and was reaching out to the social conscience of Canadians. The Government has chosen not only to ignore Senator Hébert and to ignore the plight of young people but also to ignore the suggestions of BCNI.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

ANNIVERSARY OF ATTAINMENT OF FREEDOM

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Greek Canadians and all people who love freedom celebrate today the anniversary of Greek independence when a very small and long oppressed people finally overthrew the yoke of the Ottoman Empire. However, freedom once gained can be lost, and independence for a small country next to a large one, and one with much greater military power, is always at risk. This is why Greek-Canadians have been concerned with such matters as Canadian sales and give-aways of military equipment to Turkey, the major power of the eastern Mediterranean.

For Greeks, also, the joy of their own independence will not be complete while Cyprus, which shares language, religion, and culture with them, remains under Turkish occupation. Canada's contribution in this regard, however, has been meritorious in helping to keep the peace.

Since Greece is the country which took the first steps to democracy, its fate has a special meaning for all of us, and the Greek National Day is an international day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRAGIC MURDER OF FATHER ARSENAULT

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, in the night of March 21 to March 22, an exceptional man from the Gaspé died in Honduras.

Father Arsenault had lived for twenty-one years in Honduras, where he was working to give the poor and children without homes a better life.

His dedication to the cause of needy children, together with his religious vocation, have made him a shining example of goodness and courage for the people of the Gaspé and for all Canadians.

Whatever the cause of his death, Mr. Speaker, it is a tremendous loss for Honduras, and especially for his family and friends in the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

I am sure I express the feeling of my colleagues when I hope that his example will give other Canadians the desire to get involved and help the children of this world.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that the action taken by this Government has brought about some very encouraging results for our economy.

During the last twelve months, that is, since February 1985, 62,000 jobs were created in the Montreal area alone.

The value of construction permits increased 12 per cent in 1985. This represents $208 million in additional revenue for the construction industry in Montreal.

The volume of retail sales has increased 10 per cent since our Government was elected in September 1984.

In 1985, construction starts reached one of their highest levels.

In January 1986, 27 per cent more homes were being built than in 1985.

Mr. Speaker, this proves Canadians chose wisely when they elected our Government in September 1984.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—NEED FOR NEW CANADIAN PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as one of four Members of Parliament who visited Ethiopia last week, I want to remind Canadians that the danger of famine has not passed. The worst of the drought may be over, but six million people, still at risk, will need emergency food aid in the coming months.

Over the past 18 months Canadians gave important help to the famine victims, but the mandate of David MacDonald, Emergency C-ordinator for Assistance, expires the end of this month.

The Government must act now to announce a new program so that Canadians can continue to help the people of Ethiopia. In addition to providing emergency aid, Canada should announce a program of development assistance in such areas as education, health, agriculture, and forestry.

We can help the people of Ethiopia not only to survive the famine but also to become self-sufficient.

WORKERS' SAFETY

CHALLENGE TO DEVELOP BETTER ARCTIC WORK BOOTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in a recent submission to Government, Mr. Jim Evoy of the Construction and General Workers Union stated:

> No matter what the rules say, men and women working outside when the temperature is minus 45 degrees find the steel-toed boot far too uncomfortable to wear. People don't wear those boots when it is very cold outside, and thus end up working without any protective footwear at all.

Judging it not to be beyond human ingenuity, I hereby challenge the footwear manufacturers of Canada to develop a certifiable protective boot for Arctic conditions which is also warm and comfortable. No longer should northern workers have to face the uneasy choice between having their toes either crushed or frozen.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF BOISBRIAND GENERAL MOTORS PLANT WORKERS

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, workers at the General Motors plant in Boisbriand have never been as uncertain about their future. It seems the company is seriously considering the possibility of closing the only plant it has in Quebec, because the plant's assembly procedures have now become obsolete. And this comes at a time when the company has just announced a complete overhaul of its plant in Oshawa, that will cost $2 billion.

Boisbriand workers are at least as productive if not more so than those in other North American plants, and I think we should give this skilled work force a chance to show what it can do and ensure the plant will be viable.

If General Motors spent part of its $8 billion renovation budget for 1985-86 on the Boisbriand plant, it would be acting as a responsible corporate citizen and could protect 3,500 jobs in Quebec, a province where the company makes about 30 per cent of all its sales in Canada.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Teleglobe Canada is a fine, outstanding example of a well managed Crown corporation built by Canadians, for Canadians, with Canadian money. It is our international voice.

I cannot understand, when we have eight out of eleven Canadian bidders, why the Government would not direct its interest only toward those Canadians bidders, would not also insist on 100 per cent Canadian content in all purchases, would not ensure that Telecom communication workers' contracts are protected, as they are today, and not also ensure that Canadians will maintain a 100 per cent Canadian interest through Canadian management, and only through a telecommunication group, not just an entrepreneurial oriented group.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, after a recent crude oil price reduction the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) asked oil industry leaders to reduce prices at the pump. This met with criticism and doubt from cynics, including the Opposition. I am encouraged by the way gas stations are already showing the effects of that persuasion.

On March 13, for example, one Scarborough West gas station charged 46.9 cents for regular gas and 49.9 cents for unleaded gasoline. Today that same station charges 44.5 cents for regular and 47.5 cents for unleaded gasoline, a drop of 2.4 cents a litre.

Crude oil prices have dropped around the world again. It has been demonstrated by the figures I have cited that moral suasion by the Minister produces results in a free enterprise economy. I urge her to take that action again, and to take it now. Canadian consumers deserve a better deal at the pump.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COASTAL COMMUNITIES—HELICOPTER MEDICAL EVACUATION SERVICE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in January the Emergency Health Services Commission of Transport Canada banned the use of single-engine helicopters for night medical evacuations in British Columbia. A few days ago a physician from Prince Rupert phoned to advise me that a two-day old baby required medical evacuation to Vancouver at night. The Medevac jet sped from Vancouver to Prince Rupert. Over the next four and a half hours the special incubator was taken by bus to the ferry, from the ferry to the hospital, hospital to the ambulance, ambulance to the ferry, then to the airport on Digby Island for the jet to Vancouver. It took four and a half hours instead of four minutes.

The northern B.C. coastal communities have had on average over the past year a night-time medical evacuation every three days. The bureaucracy and the Minister may be happy with the ban and the offer of the defence of necessity. However, let it be known that the situation as it now stands, according to doctors, is endangering lives.

The Minister has a responsibility to issue to hospitals, emergency personnel, pilots, helicopter companies, and the public, a statement of circumstances under which patients who cannot be stabilized—

BEHAVIOUR OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the behaviour of the Opposition in this House. It has been quite some time since Canadian men and women have heard such language and witnessed such disgraceful conduct on the part of their elected representatives.

S.O. 21

According to Marcel Adam of La Presse, Mr. Speaker, this Opposition "is acting in bad faith, intellectually dishonest and disloyal by systematically thwarting all Government endeavours instead of concentrating on constructive criticism".

The Globe and Mail's Jeffrey Simpson was quite right when he wrote recently, and I quote: "The Liberals' response to the Wilson Budget offers further depressing evidence that intellectual inconsistency, hyprocrisy and political opportunism—

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign the Tories made 338 promises to the Canadian people. Today's reading from the "Book of 338 Tory Promises" will be on research and development. The first promise was to double our R and D effort to 2.5 per cent of GNP in the first four years in office. The second promise was to change and simplify the tax system. The third promise was to strengthen the linkage between private and public sector research. Another promise was to assist Canadian companies to export their technology abroad, and finally, to facilitate the adaptation in Canada of innovative technology developed abroad. All these promises have, of course, been broken.

POLITICAL PARTIES

BOOKS AUTHORED BY LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CANDIDATES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a pattern is setting in for former Liberal Party leadership contenders. First you get a part-time job as a lawyer. Next you spend a little time in Ottawa. Third, you write a clandestine book about the solidarity of the former Liberal Cabinet.

Straight from the Heart was the first insight into the peace, love, and harmony which permeates the Liberal hierarchy. Yesterday the love-in continued with the launching of a book called Up the Hill. The author, the external affairs critic for the Official Opposition, offers many insightful examples of the harmony, consultation, and team work which existed through 1980-84. The National Energy Program was too minor to bring before Cabinet, as was the decision to have Petro-Canada take over Petrofina.

The author's respect for his former Leader's imagination and feelings on gut issues, and the former Prime Minister's determination to seek advice only from elected representatives, certainly galvanized his Cabinet's solidarity.

We have asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to arrange meetings with those two manufacturers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GULF OF SIDRA—LIBYA-UNITED STATES CONFRONTATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian Government examined the means and, if so, would the Minister care to enlighten Parliament on how the Canadian Government feels it can contribute to an international solution to the situation in the Gulf of Sidra off the coast of Libya? What is the Canadian position?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the tone of the question from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. That is a matter of some tension and of particular interest to Canadians because of the presence in Libya of some 1,300 of our citizens. All facts are not available, but from the facts that are available it appears to us that there was an attack upon the United States, to which the United States responded. We are seeking to gather information from a wide variety of sources. As those facts become available I will certainly make them available to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and to all the Members of the House.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SITUATION OF CANADIANS WORKING IN LIBYA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we know as well as the Minister that 1,300 Canadians are now working in Libya, and we are a little concerned about their future. Could the Minister inform the House whether he feels our fellow Canadians are at risk and whether an emergency plan exists to repatriate them?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have dispatched one of our consular officers who will be in Libya tomorrow morning, local time. We are keeping directly in touch with the Danish Embassy, which in the circumstances has been acting on our behalf to provide information on the situation in Libya. We have no reason to be concerned about the situation for Canadians who are down there.

TRAVEL BY CANADIANS TO LIBYA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Has the Government advised Canadians not to travel at this time to Libya, and should not the Minister be preparing a more precise plan to evacuate Canadians already working there?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are not preparing a precise plan for evacuation because, in our judgement, the situation of the last day and a half has not made any more difficult the situation of Canadians who are there. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the House will know that sometime earlier this year in January a statement was made by the Government indicating to Canadians who were working in Libya that they should use their own judgment and come to their own determination as to whether or not there was a danger to their security. At the moment we have no reason to change that advice. We are seeking information, as I have said to the House earlier, and if that information causes us to change that advice to those Canadians, we will communicate that to them and to the House.

GENERAL MOTORS PLANT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I join with the Premier of Ontario and the Prime Minister in congratulating General Motors of Canada on its recent decision to invest $2 billion in its Oshawa plant. I want to ask the Prime Minister if he would share with the House what representations he has made to General Motors of Canada to protect the jobs, the community, and the economy of Sainte-Thérèse in Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have made the representations that the Government is committed to fair regional economic development, and that requires an investment in the automotive sector not only in Ontario, which we are very grateful for and which we seek more of, but also in the Province of Quebec and other regions of the country. There is a base to be maintained and to be built upon, and this Government is deeply committed to enhancing that sector in the Province of Quebec.

• (1420)

FUTURE OF WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Prime Minister might have been more specific because those assurances certainly do not alleviate the anguish that the people in Sainte-Thérèse are facing.

Will the Prime Minister give an undertaking to the House that he will use his office and the programs of Regional Industrial Expansion to ensure that General Motors will in no way reduce its workforce in Sainte-Thérèse, Quebec, thereby affecting the entire community?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the first major investment in the automobile industry in Quebec in almost twenty years was made last fall with the Hyundai deal, thanks to the intervention of the Government of Canada.

And are the Liberal Members . . . ah yes, the Members of the Liberal Party are against investment in the automobile industry in Quebec, and Quebecers are going to remember that!

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the same subject.

The new investment decision by General Motors is, of course, a good decision for Canada. At the same time, however, three Ministers of the Crown have described the Canada-U.S. Automotive Agreement as a free trade agreement. The President of General Motors, who knows differently and knows that it guarantees certain investment in Canada, said yesterday that the Automotive Agreement should not be on the negotiating table in talks that are going on with the United States.

Mr. Stevens: That is not right.

Mr. Broadbent: He said it. I was there.

Mr. Stevens: He did not.

Mr. Broadbent: It is not a free trade agreement and the President of General Motors said that it should not be negotiated. Does the Prime Minister agree with both those assertions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that the $2 billion Oshawa investment heightened my hon. friend's appreciation for the private sector and the attractiveness and beauty of foreign investment in Canada.

The trade talks will only try to ensure that that prosperity that we see in Oshawa is now shared across the country.

Mr. Broadbent: There are many provinces affected by this, and the people whose jobs are dependent on the automotive industry will not be reassured by the answer.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want the Prime Minister to deal with the question. The Automotive Agreement is not a free trade agreement. The head of the largest corporation in Canada has said that it should not be on the negotiating table. Furthermore, the agreement protects jobs in Canada and we could lose jobs if it is lost.

Considering these facts, will the Prime Minister say to the House that the Auto Pact is not up for negotiation and that it is important to keep it for jobs in Ontario and the Province of Quebec?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member was absent when this question was raised some months ago. At that time I indicated that there was a very satisfactory arrangement in place with regard to the Auto Pact that we saw no reason to change and have no intention of changing.

The point I think should be made to the House is that there are workers in Oshawa and elsewhere in Ontario, members of the United Auto Workers, who are the direct beneficiaries of an arrangement on trade between Canada and the United States. The advantages of that arrangement should not be confined to members of the United Auto Workers. It should be extended across the country, through other negotiations to which we are looking forward.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps one day the Minister will understand that that kind of an arrangement is not free trade, and we support that kind of arrangement because it protects jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Maybe he will learn that one day.

WORKERS AT SAINTE-THÉRÈSE—GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR OBTAINING NEW INVESTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The Auto Pact guarantees a certain level of investment in Canada. General Motors now has 35 per cent of the Quebec market.

What is the Government doing now to obtain new investment in Quebec for the benefit of the workers in Sainte-Thérèse?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member shouldn't be upset, since I just came back from Oshawa, in his riding, where $2 billion have been invested to promote—

Mr. Broadbent: Not by the Government—

Mr. Mulroney: He says: "not by the Government". No, not by the Government but by the private sector which we attracted to Canada. That is the difference.

A Liberal always thinks in terms of government funding. We think in terms of permanent jobs created by the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Mulroney: I again spoke personally to the President of General Motors about Sainte-Thérèse and investment across this country. There will be further meetings between him and the Government, with a view to persuading all companies to invest in high technology sectors on a more nationwide basis.

• (1425)

SITUATION OF GENERAL MOTORS WORKERS AT SAINTE-THÉRÈSE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and again it relates to the situation at Sainte-Thérèse. He has just made a commitment concerning the workers at Sainte-Thérèse and we appreciate that.

However I would remind him that he made a commitment 16 months ago in an answer to a question of the Leader of the Opposition in the House on November 7, 1984. He said at the time that he would take up the matter with the management of GM. How is it that after 16 months we are still at the same point, the workers at Sainte-Thérèse are worried about losing their jobs, and the investments are being made elsewhere?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party members should get their act together. Either they are in favour of investments in Canada—in Ontario, in British Columbia—or they are not. I can say as a Canadian that I am pleased to see that kind of investment in Canada, the largest ever in the history of the automobile industry, if I am not mistaken. So they chose Oshawa, well good for them! It does not prevent me from speaking directly to the president of General Motors, as I have done before, to urge him to invest more and soon in Quebec.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE REPORT TO THE HOUSE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would simply ask the Prime Minister whether he would promise to report to the House within a month on the progress of negotiations, because the people of Sainte-Thérèse are quite concerned and want to know what is going to happen.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the people of Sainte-Thérèse are getting tired. Except for this investment, nothing has been done in the automobile industry in the past 20 years. Finally a new Government takes over and we have this investment. Hopefully there will be others in co-operation with the union and General Motors so as to give a better break to the company workers.

SITUATION OF GENERAL MOTORS WORKERS AT SAINTE-THÉRÈSE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since not a single job will be created in Sainte-Thérèse as a result of Hyundai's investments in Bromont, could the Prime Minister inform the House what specific measures the Government intends to take to protect the jobs of 4,000 General Motors employees at Sainte-Thérèse, which adds up to three times the number of jobs that will be created in Bromont?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said it before and I am delighted to repeat that we have already started a very serious dialogue with the management of General Motors and other automobile manufacturers, to urge them to invest more in Canada and to spread out their investments so as to enhance regional development, including Quebec.

[English]

PROSPECT OF QUEBEC PLANT CLOSURE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Is the Prime Minister not aware of the fact that the General Motors plant at Sainte-Thérèse is due to close in July of 1987 because no further product has been planned for it after that time? If the Government was prepared to put such heavy measures into attracting Hyundai into Bromont, Quebec, what specific measure is it prepared to take to protect those 4,000 jobs and ensure that those automobile workers at Sainte-Thérèse can stay on the job?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the best thing we can do for General Motors or anyone else is to continue what we are doing with interest rates going down, employment going up, and 580,000 new jobs created. That is what it is all about, a healthy private sector and a growing Canada.

YOUTH

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, during this season of reflection and reconciliation, and as a way to be fair to the concerns of all those involved, is the Prime Minister willing to consider fulfilling the original commitment of the Government of Canada to the board and staff of Katimavik until June, 1987, allowing time for an arbitration committee to assess the value of Katimavik and, based on that assessment, if it is of value, to explore possible funding from provincial, municipal, and private sector sources?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on December 18, 1975, the former President of the Treasury Board, a member of the Liberal Government, stated, as reported at page 10157 of Hansard:

I therefore must announce that there will be no Opportunities for Youth Program next summer—

He also said that the LIP program would be discontinued and:

The government will stop providing financial support to the Company of Young Canadians—

What the Government was doing was discontinuing certain programs pursuant to new economic realities, as any democratically elected Government—

Mr. Gauthier: That was 11 years ago!

Mr. Mulroney: Eleven years do not change the principle of a democratically elected Government called upon to make those decisions. We made a decision in regard to Katimavik. That decision remains. We will bring in appropriate programs in due course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM EXTENSION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. Perhaps he would again consider my question. If the mechanics of a new youth program are not yet in place—and understandably it will take time to prepare such a program—is the Prime Minister willing to consider leaving this program in place, at least as a bridge?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the best programs that we can have for youth are found in a headline in The Toronto Star today which states: "Student Job Outlook Best Since '81, Experts Say".

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who ought to know that telling the House that the Tories are no better than the Liberals, or that jobs are better in Toronto, does not help the youth of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: Will the Prime Minister resolve the contradiction and confusion which emanate from his Government by telling us who is right, the Secretary of State who says there will be a program in May, maybe, or maybe never, or before the end of March as he has said on a couple of occasions? Will we have a program as promised by the Prime Minister, or is this a sacred trust?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my statements are on the record. I hope my hon. friend would not do us the disservice of ever comparing us with the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: They lost 285,000 youth jobs in their last mandate. In 18 months we have created 50,000 new ones. The Hon. Member should have the decency to stand up and applaud that.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister refuses to answer questions. Will the Government, as he promised, introduce a program for youth before the end of March, or maybe May, or never, as the Secretary of State has said?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already allocated $732 million for youth programs.

Ms. Copps: What about the promise?

Mr. Mulroney: Contrary to our Liberal friends, who lost 285,000 jobs for our young people, we have created 50,000 more jobs—

Ms. Copps: You promised!

Mr. Mulroney: Louder, louder! We are going to create more. The best way we can do that is by having a sound economy and a growing Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Last Friday, on March 21, 1986, and not 1975, in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Windsor West regarding new job programs for youth, the Prime Minister stated that the Government would be announcing its plans toward the end of the financial year. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether this statement still reflects his Government's policy.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can refer to more than Friday's statement. He could refer to a statement I made on March 3, well before the incident in the other place, when I said the following:

[English]

Our first obligation towards youth is to keep creating permanent jobs and this is exactly what we are doing. But have no fear concerning youth. This will be linked in due time not only with other programs, but with very important initiatives that will create more jobs for our young people.

At an appropriate time, and in a helpful manner, further action will be announced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY IF MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT WILL BE MADE BEFORE EASTER RECESS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister prepared to promise, on behalf of his Government, that a ministerial statement will be made here in this House, either today or tomorrow, before the House adjourns for Easter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was alluding to last Friday, March 21. I answered a number of questions, and here is my reply—

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I indicated on March 3 and March 11 in the House and in other circumstances to the press that at an appropriate time, at or about the end of the fiscal year, and in appropriate fashion the Government—

What I said on Friday still applies.

ENERGY

WORLD OIL PRICES—IMPACT ON ALBERTA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister will know that the OPEC meeting in Geneva has now broken up in disarray with no agreement having been reached. She is also aware of the extremely desperate economic situation in the Province of Alberta. Oil prices today at $12.15 a barrel simply demand that the situation will get worse. Is the Minister prepared to stop monitoring the situation and start doing something now to preserve the jobs of ordinary Albertans?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's colleague is in Alberta offering a floor price as the NDP's solution to the dilemma faced by the industry. I wish he would elaborate how having an artificial price for oil will help all Canadians who, on balance, benefit from lower energy prices.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the situation in Alberta is getting extremely desperate. What do she and her Government plan to do to bring some relief to the troubled oil industry in western Canada and to bring some security to the Province of Alberta? What is she doing? What does she have against Albertans?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I certainly have nothing against Albertans. Clearly they do not think that I do, since they say that, on behalf of the Government, I have brought in the best energy policy ever introduced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LLOYDMINSTER HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Are talks still ongoing regarding the Husky upgrader? Will the federal Government participate in the building of the Husky upgrader at Lloydminster?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that is a subject currently under discussion between the federal Government and the provinces.

Mr. Nunziata: Do you guys believe in commitment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if the Government will clarify its position on the important question of trade with respect to the Auto Pact. My question is for the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that he sees no reason to negotiate, while the trade representative for the United States said that everything is on the table. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether or not in his meetings last week with President Reagan he clearly expressed that, as far as Canada is concerned, the Auto-Pact will not be part of the negotiations? If so, did the President agree with that assertion?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have two responses.

Mr. Crosbie: He's getting coached by Ed there, look.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The first is that the question did not need to come up because the position of Canada is well known. The second is that I am sure that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry—

Mr. Crosbie: The Oshawa wizard.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —will welcome as much as I do the conversion of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who has now said that he is in favour of a trading arrangement with the United States.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to ask the Secretary of State if he has now changed his position. He stated that he would like to apply the moral of the Auto Pact to other sectors. Does that mean that the goal of the Government of Canada in these negotiations is to have a managed trade arrangement in various sectors, with guarantees and safeguards on both sides of the border? Is that the trade goal the Government is now pursuing?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: You got your clap there, Lloyd.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. Before we hear the answer, could everyone on both sides of the House remember that when the mikes are on, they are on?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my position. I leave that to the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION AFFECTING TAKEOVERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns the insidious mobilization of corporate concentration which may destroy competition, and mean exploitation of the average consumer. When will Canada have effective competition and anti-combines laws to curb the voracious appetites of giants such as Gulf Canada, Imasco, and Petro-Canada, companies which, ironically, use the deposits of average Canadians to borrow billions of dollars to achieve these takeovers?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is a new piece of legislation before the House and, as he probably knows as well, this new Bill does contain a provision that will allow the Government to review proposed mergers before they take place. Since there is unanimous consensus among Canadian businesses and the different consumers' associations, I urge all Parties to give quick passage to this legislation for the benefit of all.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FARMERS—REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since last fall Prince Edward Island farmers have been asking the Government for stabilization payments to cover their losses for the 1984-85 year and the 1985-86 year. As we head into the spring planting season, there is still no answer. Will the Prime Minister tell the House why Island farmers have not received an answer to this point and what is holding up the decision?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government realizes that there is a serious situation in the Maritimes and the matter that the Hon. Member raises is presently under discussion. I will make sure that the Minister of Agriculture is made aware of it upon his return to the House.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, time is running out for farmers in Atlantic Canada. If they are going to get a crop in, they have to have some assistance immediately. Will the Minister tell the House specifically when assistance will be forthcoming? We have to know, and we have to know right away.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am a farmer and I realize full well that assistance has to be made known before the farmers plant. We very much realize the situation in Prince Edward Island and will make sure that any announcement is made in time for it to be of some assistance to farmers prior to spring planting.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN JOBS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the United States last imposed protectionist laws against Canada in 1971, Canada passed an Act called the Employment Support Act which safeguarded 22,000 jobs against U.S. import surcharges. Did the Prime Minister tell Mr. Reagan and Congress last week that this Act will again be used to counter any U.S. legislation which is passed against our lumber exports?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the discussions between the Prime Minister and the President, and indeed discussions that I had earlier with Secretary Shultz, and discussions other Ministers have had with representatives of the United States administration, have covered a wide range of issues. We did not see it necessary to go down there in a threatening mode.

If the Hon. Member is raising this question, he should certainly rest assured that the Government of Canada is not only going to protect the interests of Canadian job holders but it will continue upon an economic policy which has been far more effective than any range of threats or protective measures, an economic policy of stimulating the private sector so that we can have the record performance in job creation in Canada that has marked the last 18 months.

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT ACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, there are 160,000 jobs at risk here and I would ask the Secretary of State specifically if he is in fact aware of this piece of legislation, if he has brought it to the attention of the United States, and if the Government is prepared to use it as an effective vehicle to protect our workers and exports.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I am aware of the law of Canada. I am also aware of the fact that the way to secure growth and jobs for this country is not to strike out at our friends, and not simply to seek refuge in protectionist measures. Our future lies in stronger trade and stronger job creation. That is the way of the future. Members of the NDP continue to lie wallowing in the past. We are quite prepared to leave them there.

EXTERNAL AID

OUTSTANDING DEBT OF POOREST COUNTRIES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the tremendous debt burden of the developing countries, particularly the poorest ones in Africa, and in light of the Government's recent decision to extend all further aid as grants rather than loans, is the Government considering action to forgive the outstanding aid debt to Canada of these poorer countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House will know that the Government is preoccupied with the human tragedy in Africa and developing countries elsewhere. We are now seriously considering means of easing or eliminating the burden of past aid loans, particularly on those countries which have shown the courage and the determination to try to bring about fundamental reforms in their own economic systems.

PETRO-CANADA

PRICE PAID FOR REAL ESTATE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A Peterborough company involved in the business of importing sunglasses purchased a property in my riding and resold it two days later to Petro-Canada, thus making a $70,000 profit. Can the Minister explain to the House how Petro-Canada got rooked to the tune of $70,000 in this real estate deal?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have advised the House on many occasions that I do not get involved in the day-to-day operations of Petro-Canada. I suggest that the Hon. Member address this issue to Petro-Canada.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister who is responsible to the House in answering for the Crown corporation called Petro-Canada. Will the Minister table in the House all appraisals and all documents relating to this unusual real estate deal—yes or no?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member is apparently not willing to pass his question on to Petro-Canada, perhaps, Sir, I will.

Mr. Boudria: In other words, no.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROJECT TO ESTABLISH SHOOTING RANGE NEAR BAGOTVILLE, QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence who must certainly be aware of the fact that the majority of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean residents are opposed to his Department's project to establish a shooting range for F-18 fighter aircraft near Bagotville. Keeping in mind the fact that polls reveal that two out of three residents are strongly opposed to this shooting range, not to mention 14 municipalities and seven school boards, when will the Minister shelve that project?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, officials of the Department of National Defence are working with officials of the Government of the Province of Quebec, and are discussing these matters with the affected Members of Parliament as well as the affected communities. I have confidence that they will work out an amiable solution.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF BAGOTVILLE MILITARY BASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Minister unequivocally dissociate himself from the threatening statement of his colleague the Secretary of State to the effect that, if local residents reject the proposed firing range, the Minister of National Defence might close the Bagotville military base?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether that question needs to be dignified with an answer. I replied to the Hon. Member's first question by indicating that officials of my Department are working with officials of the Government of the Province of Quebec, as well as local municipal officials, to try to work out an amiable solution. I assume the Hon. Member would agree that that is the right way to proceed.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

PROMOTION OF FRENCH SONGS—EXPANSION OF RECORD INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. He is probably aware that lowering the quota for songs in French has raised a wave of protest in Quebec.

My question is as follows: How does the Minister intend to promote French songs and help the record industry if the Government lets the CRTC lower French content from 65 per cent to 55 per cent in broadcasts from radio stations in Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that some people disagree with the CRTC's decision in this respect. By law, they can appeal to Cabinet which will then decide on the matter at the appropriate time.

Furthermore, under the last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance, funding was approved for a new policy that will help the radio and record industries, and in a few weeks we will be ready to announce this new policy.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ISSUE DIRECTIVE REVERSING COMMISSION'S DECISION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the situation is very serious.

Would the Minister agree right now to issue a directive reversing a disastrous decision that will prejudice the interests of Francophone creative artists and even jeopardize Quebec's Canadian and cultural interests?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to make a judgment before an appeal is made. I believe that logically, we must let these people appeal to Cabinet and when they do, I will report on the Department's position.

FINANCE

TAX TREATMENT OF LAID-OFF GRIFFITH MINE WORKERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the November, 1984, economic statement, the Minister clearly stated that tax relief for termination benefits would be offered in "communities where alternative employment opportunities are limited or simply do not exist". Will the Minister tell the House why he is breaking his promise to the laid-off workers of the Griffith Mine in the Ear Falls area of northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not breaking my promise. The criteria which have been established for this type of assistance have not been met by the Ear Falls case, and that is the reason for the decision.

APPLICATION OF DEPARTMENTAL CRITERIA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain to the House in what way the Griffith Mine lay-off does not meet the criteria established by his Department?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the affected employees live in a number of communities.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, come on!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There are also a number of employers in that region.

An Hon. Member: You are out to lunch.

Mr. McCurdy: It must be outside Ottawa!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If Hon. Members wish to listen to the answer, I will give them an answer. The simple facts are that there are other major employers in the area.

An Hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Campbell Red Lake Mine is one.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, come off the pot.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Hon. Member does not want to listen to the answer. If he wants to speak to me after, I will be happy to talk with him.

AGRICULTURE

COMMODITY BASED MORTGAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the serious farm debt crisis facing some 40,000 Canadian farmers today. Is the Minister aware of the criticisms of his commodity based mortgage program which was in the Budget, as being misleading, diceptive, and so seriously flawed that responsible farm organizations are advising their members not to take out those mortgages and are planning to take the unprecedented action of obtaining a court injunction to stop the program from going ahead? Is the Minister aware of that, and what will he do about it?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any groups suggesting that they should take court action. I am aware that the Government committed up to $700 million to assist farmers in financial difficulty. That loan money is to be matched with interest reductions in the amount of almost $200 million over two years. It seems to me that is a substantial amount of money to help at least some of the Farm Credit Corporation clients who are having financial difficulty. I am aware of the help we have provided.

REQUEST FOR ALTERATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Clearly the program is not acceptable to Canadian farmers. Is he prepared to alter the program drastically to make it acceptable and effective in assisting farmers who are facing this serious, unprecedented farm debt crisis?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, this is a new approach for the Farm Credit Corporation. There is some money there to back it up. If there are some concerns and the program is not working, certainly we are willing to look at making it work. We all realize the serious financial difficulties which farmers face. We have put up money to ensure that it is there for assistance. Certainly we are interested in seeing that it works and, if the Hon. Member has some suggestions, we would be happy to hear them.

HEALTH

DEPO-PROVERA CONTRACEPTIVE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Women in my constituency advised me not long ago of their concern about an injectable contraceptive called Depo-Provera. Despite its negative effects, the manufacturer is now trying to get the drug approved by the Minister for marketing in Canada, although permission has been denied in the United States.

Could the Minister give this group from the Verdun Women's Centre the assurance that the contraceptive will not be approved if it represents the slightest risk for the health of Canadian women?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question which has been asked previously. I have not received a recommendation for acceptance or rejection from the Health Protection branch. As the Hon. Member knows, it is a regulatory process and one in which I do not interfere. However, I have said to health groups and to women's groups that, before any approval would be given, if in fact a recommendation where made along that line, I would want to be satisfied totally on the safety side of the issue.

INDUSTRY

FLEET INDUSTRIES—INSPECTION PROCEDURES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence and concerns Fleet Industries. Will the Minister confirm that his Department's investigation substantiated the allegations made by the former quality assurance supervisor that there were serious problems in Fleet's inspection procedures and records, and that personnel performing critical work were not adequately qualified? Will he also confirm that the result of this is that no product from the company is currently being allowed to leave the plant?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member may know, this question could be subject to litigation between the parties. I do not know whether I want to affirm the accusations made by the Hon. Member, but let me say that my Department is working closely with Fleet Industries. We have found that procedures were improper, and they are being improved. We have not found any faulty materials, yet.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PRODUCT INSPECTION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell us whether his Department's investigation has examined the products being supplied to other customers such as Spar Aerospace, de Havilland, and Sikorsky? If not, could he tell us whose responsibility it is to ensure that that material is not defective and does not jeopardize public safety?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, each customer supplies its own inspector in this regard. I am informed that faulty materials have not been discovered to our knowledge by any of the inspectors. It is a question of the procedures and paperwork, which were not up to snuff, and it is being remedied through co-operation between the customers and the company.

Borrowing Authority Act

PENITENTIARIES

PROJECTED CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN CONSTITUENCY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows that the Nielsen task force recommended that prison construction stop, and that would apply to the prison which he is proposing to build in his own riding.

● (1500)

In view of the reference of the Nielsen report to a committee for parliamentary review, is the Prime Minister willing to see that construction stop, to have the committee review it and decide whether this additional prison is required in the Province of Quebec and, indeed, in the whole correctional system of Canada.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General, I would like to reply on behalf of the Government that the Nielsen task force, as the hon. gentleman knows, presents a series of options that can be considered by standing committees of this House, which were never asked to consider anything by the former regime. After the relevant committee has looked at the report and the justice system, I am sure it will make recommendations to the Government which we will then consider. At the present time there is no change in plans.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 11570).

Mr. Speaker: Before giving the floor to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who had the floor before the luncheon recess, the House might want to clear. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry ought to have the right to speak to a House that is not in motion. Order, please. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has one minute remaining.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, just to conclude the remarks I was making before lunch, the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was unable to gain any kind of recognition of the serious problem faced by western farmers because of the U.S. farm Bill, and because he did not come with any amendment or any change that would ensure that the western grain economy will not fall flat on its face, creates very serious economic problems for the country. We hope in the consideration of how the Government will spend all that money it wants to borrow that it will pay proper attention to the needs of the western farmers.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak on the borrowing authority Bill. In the Bill the Government has asked Parliament to authorize the borrowing of $22.6 billion to finance its programs. We as parliamentarians must examine very carefully the direction being set by the Government before granting it the authority to borrow.

Upon what must we base our judgments, Mr. Speaker? Clearly, the most obvious statement of the Government's intentions flows from the recent Budget, and it is that document we must examine in determining whether to grant the Government the borrowing authority it is seeking.

What are the most noteworthy features of the Finance Minister's Budget? First, it increases taxes on average Canadians, just as the May Budget did and the November economic statement before it. At the same time as it eliminates the 5 per cent surtax on the wealthy, it imposes a 3 per cent tax across the board on all Canadians. Effectively what this does is to apply a tax cut for high income earners who, last year, paid a 5 per cent surtax, and an increase of $170 in tax a year as a result of the 3 per cent surtax to the average family income tax earner in 1987, which is on top of all the other taxes piled on by the Conservative Government since it came to power in September, 1984.

The second major feature of the economic direction of the Government is to cut back on a number of important government programs. Finally, the Budget does nothing whatever with respect to the overriding and essential priority of Canadians at this time, that is, jobs, job creation and new employment for Canadians.

All of us remember the promise made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign of jobs, jobs, jobs. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we have seen a lost generation, half a million young people between the ages of 15 and 24 who want to work and who cannot find jobs. For them that promise is but a bitter memory of the past.

This Budget is unfair and it is a failure. It is unfair because its tax increases fall heaviest on those in our society least able to pay. It is a failure because it will not provide the stimulus the economy so badly needs to deal with the crisis, not just the economic crisis but the personal crisis of 1.4 million Canadians who are out of work and the personal crisis of the 4.5 million Canadians who live below the poverty line. The Government will effectively choke off economic recovery in Canada. Why has the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) imposed a new round of taxes and cut-backs which will have the effect of taking money out of the hands of consumers and out of local communities?

Today, in my riding of Burnaby, as a result of the combined impact of Tory economic policies since September, 1984, average families have $1,304 less to spend on the goods and services they need to live. In turn, this has a devastating impact on local communities throughout the lower mainland and the rest of British Columbia. This money, instead of creating new wealth and new opportunity in Burnaby and elsewhere, will be siphoned back to Ottawa because of the Finance Minister's obsession with the deficit.

At the same time as the Finance Minister purports to be attempting to cut the deficit, what does he do? He gives a bonanza to the rich of a half a million dollar capital gains tax exemption while cutting back on the standard of living of the middle class and the poor. We as New Democrats want to know why, if the Minister is so committed to raising revenue and to reducing the deficit, is he doing it in this unfair and regressive way? Why is he not asking corporations, wealthy Canadians and the banks to shoulder their fair share of the burden?

The tax probe of the New Democratic Party which travelled across Canada suggested that the Government should eliminate tax breaks to corporations which, in many cases, do not generate jobs or give average Canadians a chance to spend more and thereby increase the over-all level of demand in the economy.

Let us look at some of the reasons for the request of $22.6 in the Bill before the House flowing from the specific features of the Budget. Direct job creation has been cut by $100 million. What an unconscionable signal to send to the 1.4 million unemployed Canadians, half a million of whom are young people, to cut spending on job creation.

Over the next four years, substantial cuts will be made in the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion, Agriculture, Health and Welfare, Transport, and the list goes on.

The Government as well has cut back in its support to the poorest in the global community, namely, foreign aid. Canada has a proud tradition of distinguished service in international development to assist the less advantaged people of the world. The Conservatives have turned their backs on this record, and what is worse, at the same time they are cutting back on the funds for the poor and the starving of the world they have increased funding for that sacred cow of military spending. It is less money for co-operative international development and more money for arms and the military.

What about my own province of British Columbia? With an unemployment rate of 12.3 per cent, higher in many regions of the province, surely the Government would address this crisis. Instead of putting money into creating jobs for young people, the Government has eliminated all funding for the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). Some of us might argue that, given the proposed priorities of the Minister of State for Youth who suggested that federal Government funds should be going to fund PC youth federations, it is just as well she does not have any federal Government funds and that she was cut off.

Mrs. Champagne: How can you say that?

Mr. Robinson: We know the priorities of this Government. We know the Minister of State for Youth suggested that she wanted to fund PC youth federations out of public funds. The record speaks for itself. Many of us are pleased she did not get her hands on the pursestrings of the nation. God knows what she would have done coast to coast with those funds.

The Budget does nothing for British Columbia. Job creation has been cut back. This will particularly hurt the province of B.C. which is already reeling under the impact of a provincial Social Credit Government. There is no mention in the Budget for the forest and fisheries industries. There is no mention of the long standing call for direct job creation measures through the resource enhancement program. There is no mention whatever of additional funding to municipalities to help them create jobs by improving their infrastructures. One really wonders what the B.C. Tories have been doing these last few months. Atlantic Canada is suffering and it receives special attention in the Budget, but not a penny for British Columbia. There is no recognition of the fact that women tend to suffer adversely in times of economic downturn. There are no measures to deal with equality in the workplace. There is no mention of child care despite the excellent recommendation of the Cooke task force.

In the face of all this evidence we in the NDP clearly say no, we are not prepared to allow this Government to proceed with its agenda by giving it the borrowing authority it seeks. Average Canadians from coast to coast are being asked to foot the bill for this Government's economic incompetence. It is hypocrisy, it is unfair, and it will not address the very serious economic crisis facing this country. Canadians deserve far better economic leadership than this Government has thus far provided. It is time for a real change in this country. It is time for an NDP Government in Canada.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, and on the amendment that the Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

In the few minutes at my disposal, Mr. Speaker, I would simply refer to this famous borrowing authority and explain how the Government will spend that money borrowed directly from Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the National Capital Region which I represent in the Ottawa-Vanier riding has been hit very hard by the Conservative Budget and the Government's policies. It has been the target of the Conservatives ever since they took over. In my riding of Ottawa-Vanier, for example, the federal public administration accounts for 28 per cent of all economic activities, so it is important to us to know what kind of human resources management policy the Government follows and, more particularly, what kind of future we have as residents of Ottawa and the region with a Conservative Government which shows little mercy in its attempts to blame public servants for all its problems.

As you may recall, in May 1985 the Government announced that 15,000 public service jobs would be eliminated and, out of these 15,000 jobs that will disappear, we can reasonably expect that roughly one third of those will be in the national capital. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Government happens to be the main employer in the National Capital Region. Its presence is very significant because, from an economic standpoint, each Government job has a job-creating factor of about 1.5, which means that each federal Government job creates one job and a half in the service industry, in the private sector. Well, Mr. Speaker, again recently when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his Budget speech and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) told us about his plan to reduce Government programs by $500 million, it was announced that there was a hiring freeze and that Government expenditures would also be cut back to the tune of some $500 million. Now one can readily relate the impact of that decision to the quality of life of the people in the riding of Ottawa-Vanier and the entire National Capital Region. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in the Budget the Conservative Government decided to cut $500 million. It is a decision it made and which I respect because this Government was elected with a mandate, on its commitment to make cuts in the Public Service. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree. I did not vote for this Government, I can assure you. But when we are told that this Government wants to save money or reduce the deficit at the expense of public servants, well, Heaven knows we are sick and tired of hearing the old refrain that public servants are to blame for the Government's deficit!

Mr. Speaker, in my comments at the second reading stage, I referred to the deficit. I talked about interest rates. I talked about the national debt. I talked about everything that had any connection with the issue. However, I repeat that federal public servants are not to blame for today's high federal deficit. The international economic situation is to blame, and probably a number of factors beyond the control of this country.

Between November 1985 and February 1986, the number of unemployed in Ottawa-Carleton rose by 10,000. In 1985 the unemployment rate was 6.7 per cent. It is now 8.8 per cent. Those figures do not include the Public Service cuts that will become effective on April 1, at the beginning of the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, the cumulative effect of the two Budgets plus the announced cuts in Government spending will have a very serious negative impact on the National Capital Region.

In the time remaining, I would like to talk about the Government's policy to cut the size of the Public Service, and I would like to make a few comments. The Government intends to reduce the size and cost of the Public Service by increasing productivity, privatizing certain federal activities and, if economically feasible, by contracting out certain other activities. This means that first of all, the Government increases productivity, and second, it tries to reduce federal activities by privatizing them without really explaining how it is going to be done, and by entering into service contracts with the private sector for services formerly provided from within the Public Service.

Some time ago I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) what was the Government policy on privatization, for instance, and he told me: There are documents and they will be made public. The Hon. Member will see for himself what the objectives and criteria are. Well, I never did get any document, and the Minister's officials even denied the existence of documents on the privatization policy announced by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, it might be useful if at last the Ministers of this Government were to come clean with respect to information. If they have a specific policy for privatizing certain services such as translation or the general maintenance of buildings they should spell out the cost-benefit of that privatization, tell us exactly what savings the Government is trying to make, and what economies of scale are involved.

It is utterly impossible for anyone to understand that policy aimed at reducing personnel and blaming public servants on one hand, and on the other at proclaiming: We are going to privatize. So they eliminate public service jobs and then brag about having created jobs in the private sector. Can you imagine! Mr. Speaker, the number of translators was cut down, so what does the Government do now? Close to $5 million for translation have been added to the budget of the Secretary of State. Where will it be done? Outside the Government, in the private sector. I am wondering what common sense and what kind of reason they can use now to make us believe that it will save money. No savings there. And there is no job creation either because they eliminate a public service job, they lay off a public servant and tell him: You are surplus, we no longer need you. Then they say they have created a job in the private sector. Mr. Speaker, I wonder just where the logic is in that: eliminate a public service job, supposedly to create one in the private sector. It does not create jobs. It does not maintain a rising level of job creation. All it does is to maintain a Department service, a translation service.

For instance, 136 Secretary of State employees, including 116 francophones and 100 women, have been told they are surplus employees. They incluse 82 translators, men and women, who average eight years of seniority. This Government policy is contrary to the personnel policy of the Treasury Board. Indeed, I looked it up in the Management Manual—Personnel Management, Volume 4—and it reads:

5.1 The Departments must:

5.1.1 plan human resources efficiently so as to minimize the repercussions of personnel shifts on public employees appointed for an indefinite term, on the Department, and on the Public Service;

5.1.2. review the way they use the services of employees appointed for a definite term and the markets of services—

Mr. Speaker, we must put an end to this policy whereby public servants with eight, ten and sometimes fifteen years of seniority are laid off, just so the same services, the same translation, can be done outside by sub-contractors. Mr. Speaker, it does not make any more sense than to say that the sun will not rise tomorrow morning.

Mr. Speaker, I know you have indicated that my time has almost expired. I would have liked to talk about cut-backs in public works, the impact on ordinary workers, on the average family in my riding which is now forced to pay and bear the brunt of these additional taxes levied by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against this borrowing measure because it is bad for the region I represent and I would ask . . . You are cutting me off. I cannot continue, of course, but I would ask for an opportunity to speak on third reading, if possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be now read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee. And on the amendment of Mr. Deans, seconded by Mr. Prud'homme, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after "That" and substituting the following therefore:

"Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Deans), which was negatived on the following division:

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), I take it, is indicating a desire that consent be sought that the vote be applied in reverse on this question? I take it that there is unanimous consent to apply the vote in reverse—

Ms. McDonald: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: —with the addition of the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was not present for the vote on the previous motion but I do want to vote on this one.

Mr. Speaker: For clarity, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood wishes her vote recorded in the negative. The Hon. Member for Trinity wishes her vote recorded in the negative. The Hon. Secretary of State wishes his vote recorded in the affirmative.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall) which was agreed to on the following division:

ARMY BENEVOLENT FUND ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-100, an Act to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the Pension Act, the Veterans' Land Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be presenting this legislation which, I think we will all agree, brings forward measures which will be good for the veterans of this country and for their dependents. Bill C-100 represents the second time I have been privileged to present a significant piece of veterans' legislation to the House in just over a year.

Hon. Members will recall that Bill C-28 received passage through all stages on Valentine's Day last year. Tens of thousands of veterans and their families have since benefited from that legislation. Bill C-100, like it predecessor, is a direct result of the encouragement and support I have received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), my cabinet colleagues and my colleagues in caucus. The Government believes that veterans are very special Canadians and that is why additional money has been freed up at this time of fiscal restraint.

Some of the measures I am proposing today will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. Others will cost little or nothing but will remove irksome and unnecessary obstacles in our legislation. Every single amendment, however, represents the Government's willingness to listen to veterans and veterans' organizations and to act. I take particular pleasure in asking the House to support the measures in Bill C-100 which increase compensation for hundreds of former prisoners of war. The first amendment will assist veterans who were both prisoners of war and badly disabled.

Let me explain the present situation, Mr. Speaker. A disability pension is based on the degree of disability sustained by a veteran and is expressed in percentage terms, total disability being assessed at 100 per cent. In addition, certain former prisoners of war receive a fixed percentage of the maximum pension benefit to compensate them for their confinement. Hong Kong prisoners of war, for instance, receive 50 per cent of the full pension rate.

Section VIII of the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act limits the total compensation to 100 per cent of the pension rate, thus penalizing many prisoners of war who also have pensionable disabilities. It is time simple justice prevailed over administrative neatness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: This legislation proposes that former prisoners of war receive the aggregate of their awards under the two programs. This change will benefit 544 veterans at an annual cost of nearly $2.6 million.

As I indicated, Hong Kong veterans will be the principal beneficiaries. They are a most deserving group. They were the first soldiers to fight and the last to be freed from imprisonment. They were imprisoned under the most terrible conditions but their spirits were unconfined. As someone who had the honour of joining them in Hong Kong last year, I will just add that I think that they are entitled to every last cent we can offer them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I am also proposing increased compensation for a significant number of veterans who were mainly detained as prisoners of war in Europe. Hon. Members might know that persons detained by a power other than Japan for a period of more than 30 months are entitled to a pension at the rate of 20 per cent. Solomon, armed with the most up-to-date computer, would be hard pressed to provide the ideal formula blending the time spent in a prisoner-of-war camp with financial compensation. Whatever the difficulty in rating the severity of prisoner-of-war life, there is no doubt in my mind that a 20 per cent pension is not sufficient. This is why I am proposing an increase to 25 per cent. This will cost $1.28 million annually and will benefit 1,550 veterans and their widows. The bulk of those who will receive these increased benefits are veterans who were taken prisoner at Dieppe. I am very pleased, indeed, to propose this additional compensation for the hardships they endured.

There are 12 amendments in this Bill, all designed to assist veterans and their dependants live a better life. I have detailed two already, and I just want to outline briefly some of the other changes. I particularly want to draw the attention of the House to the proposals affecting the children of veterans.

Under both the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act, a benefit can be paid in respect of a child until that child reaches the age of 17. I now want to bring these Acts into line with other social legislation which views a child as a dependant until the age of 18. At the same time we want to expand our Department's educational assistance program.

Eligible children can now receive assistance in the form of a monthly living allowance and a tuition grant only if they graduate from high school. Experience has shown that this disqualifies teenagers who have no desire to pursue lengthy academic goals. Their career ambitions are best encouraged in trade and technical schools, and Veterans Affairs cannot assist them to meet these ambitions. I suggest it is high time that we assisted those young people who elect to follow a technical training program. In addition, I am proposing that we recognize the spiralling cost of tuition by increasing the maximum grant from $800 to $1,500 per academic year.

The sixth amendment I encourage Hon. Members to approve deals with the Veterans Land Act and the rights of spouses. The proposed change will permit veterans to include the spouse as an owner of the family home on the agreement of sale. This will eliminate the need to probate a deceased veteran's will, thus saving expensive legal costs.

We are also making life easier for spouses through a proposed change to the Pension Act. This particular item will allow the wife or child to follow through with an appeal against a pension assessment even though the veteran pensioner has died since the original papers were filed.

The eighth amendment I wish to highlight also concerns the Pension Act. The survivor of a deceased veteran is currently ineligible for a pension unless he or she can demonstrate that the veteran should have been receiving a pension of 48 per cent or more. Survivors of veterans who would have received pensions of 47 per cent or less had they applied are therefore denied benefits under the Pension Act. Bill C-100 will correct this injustice by allowing the Canadian Pension Commission to rule as if the veterans had applied.

I am proud of this legislation. Every amendment will help veterans and their families, and each amendment confirms the Government's commitment to veterans and to social justice. I say again that veterans are fully deserving of our very best efforts. Today this House is again making a best effort on their behalf.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, first of all, as Veterans Affairs critic for the Official Opposition, I am truly delighted with this opportunity to comment briefly on the subject of Bill C-100, tabled in this House by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), a Bill that is primarily aimed at improving the lot of veterans who are former prisoners of war.

The Bill also increases the amount and improves the availability of pension benefits for spouses, extends the age limit for dependent children and also increases the amount and expands the range of financial assistance for students who are orphans, legally.

Mr. Speaker, I see the Bill as a tribute the Minister of Veterans Affairs is paying today to those who were among the most severely affected by World War II. I would like to comment more specifically on those who were made prisoners of war in Hong Kong in 1941 and at Dieppe in 1942.

Mr. Speaker, you have to talk to those veterans who were prisoners of war to understand how much they suffered, the torture and hunger and the terrible solitary confinement, as well as the whole range of physiological deficiencies they suffered as a result.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of former prisoners of war, perhaps I may recall the former Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare, Dr. Crawford, who, in private moments, with tears in his eyes, and always with a great deal of emotion, would tell us about the suffering he and his men had endured. He would recall sadly how his soldiers died of the most ordinary infections, due to cold and damp conditions, malnutrition and a lack of the most elementary medical care.

This medical officer I just mentioned, who is someone I remember fondly, was himself severely affected by various kinds of irreversible damage to the spine as a result of his imprisonment. Mr. Speaker, he, like many others, was haunted by the memory of this experience for the remainder of his life.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may recall how many of your friends and mine went through the slaughter at Dieppe, those who were taken prisoner and tortured for months on end. Perhaps it would be better not to recall the nightmares that unfortunately continue to go through the minds of those courageous and intrepid soldiers who were taken prisoner.

In adding these major improvements to the legislation, the Minister of Veterans Affairs is following the example of one of his predecessors, that brave veteran and war amputee, the Hon. Daniel Joseph MacDonald, who left Prince Edward Island and Canada a monument to the memory of all these veterans when he, as Minister, helped to smooth the sharp edges of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the two men I just mentioned may be said to belong to that host of heroic and generous men whom generations will remember for what they did for their comrades in arms.

I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs has adequately explained to the House the twelve amendments to the legislation especially those applying to certain classifications of veterans, namely the Hong Kong prisoners of war and the Dieppe prisoners. I believe the amendments correct a situation where, as the Minister pointed out quite clearly, the 100 per cent disability could not be exceeded, even if Hong Kong prisoners of war were entitled to a compensatory benefit of 50 per cent.

I am therefore very pleased that the Minister was able to remedy a situation that was terribly unjust, considering what these prisoners of war had done for their country.

Redress was also provided for Dieppe prisoners of war, who still number 1,500. And there is of course the important question of the children's education. The terms have been considerably expanded and made more generous. According to another amendment, to be eligible for post-secondary education it is no longer necessary to finish high school per se and,—I am referring to dependent children,—they also have the option of going to a technical school. So this is already a vast improvement, and I think congratulations are in order for the Minister, who has brought in those very important amendments to the veterans legislation. Mr. Speaker, it is never too late to remember the bravery and valor of those who fought and fell on the battlefield, and of others who returned maimed but bearing the flaming torch of freedom which we must continue to nurture and protect.

Mr. Speaker, we must remember that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is not a Conservative. He is a generous former soldier who remembers his comrades in arms and knows the best way to improve the lives of those who served their country so well, from the horrors of death row in the dark and dank prisons of Hong Kong to the dreaded cells in Dieppe where prisoners languished in chains, suffering indescribable pain.

I want to thank him again, on behalf of all of us, for having understood the problem and for proposing, as a Liberal in spirit, these twelve legislative measures which I would simply qualify as a much needed update, as equity and reparation, and in recognition of the changes that are taking place during this last quarter of the twentieth century. And I wish he could be as successful as he was on the subject of veterans benefits, and persuade his Government to try and improve the lives of others, including his fellow ministers who are having to cope with regrettable cutbacks which will have a pauperizing effect on the least fortunate in our society. I wish he could persuade his colleagues that this has gone far enough and that with his vast parliamentary experience, he could convince the Government that what he did for his Department, his Cabinet colleagues should be able to do in a similar fashion in order to improve the situation of the average Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be much opposition to this Bill being adopted at all stages in the House today, and once again, I take pleasure in thanking the Minister for having introduced these important improvements for the benefit of those who served their country so well.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is with great honour that I participate in the debate today. When we are elected to this House, we come with our own ideology, our own beliefs and some of our own pet projects. This is one of mine, and I congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) on bringing forth the legislation. It was long overdue and I think it goes a long way to meeting the concerns of many our veterans in Canada.

One of the reasons I am here is the previous legislation. I am a son of a Dieppe prisoner of war. I went to school on a DVA scholarship. My brother did the same but went much further on his DVA scholarship. My mother was looked after by the DVA in terms of pension income for the 23 to 25 years that she lived after my father. Matters relating to compensation for prisoners of war are, therefore, very close to my heart.

I want to set the stage in terms of the importance of this Bill and the importance of the improvements to one sector, that of the Dieppe prisoners of war. I would like to start by reading from a diary, that of private Albert Adam Angus, B Company, Queens Own Cameron Highlanders, Canada. He was a prisoner of war, taken at Dieppe and imprisoned at Stalag VIII B for 33 months. The diary starts:

> Notes as a prisoner of war in Germany. I am starting this five weeks after being captured. I was taken about 11 a.m. on August 19, 1942, four kilometers inland from Dieppe. There were six of us together and an officer, Sergeant Thompson, was taken a few minutes later. We were treated quite decent. They were all young fellows. We spent most of the day bringing in our wounded, also theirs. They let us look after our own first. Late in the p.m. we were marched into Dieppe just in time to catch the rest of the prisoners as they were being marched off to the first night's camp about 15 miles away where we were given some tea and a loaf of bread.
> The next p.m. we were loaded on a train in boxcars and travelled all night to another camp in France where we were searched and questioned. The eats were pretty scarce at first but the French Red Cross sent in some oatmeal and some fresh vegetables, which helped a lot.
> We were kept there for about 10 days when we were again loaded into boxcars, (40 to a car) and rode four days to our permanent camp at Lansdorf, Germany.
> We arrived at camp about 4.30 p.m. and were given some cabbage soup. After that we were given our first Red Cross parcel, one parcel between four men. "Were they good." We were just like a bunch of kids opening their parcels on Christmas morn. From then on we got a parcel on Monday and Friday with bulk issues on Wednesday, Thurs. and Sat. There was an epidemic of dysentry which broke out (I had it for five weeks). After a couple of weeks we were moved to another compound where things were a little better, more water and wood.

That is how my father spent those first weeks before things got rough. When I say things got rough, I would like to describe to you, Mr. Speaker, a bit of what those prisoners of war had to endure.

As I said before, they were prisoners for 33 months. Their hands were tied with ropes for the first 54 days, then replaced by chains for 13 months. The personal trauma experienced by these men while shackled remains in their minds to this day. Their personal hygiene and activities were restrained by the fact that they required the assistance of another human being in order to attend to their normal bodily functions. Nothing could degrade a man more than having to ask his friend to help him in that way.

In January, 1945, during the Russian army advance and in retaliation of bombardment inflicted upon them by the allies, the German authorities decided to march the prisoners. They marched until May, 1945, five months later, with very little food, improper clothing in all types of weather and at the same time being infested with lice. This march was later referred to as the Death March because so many of them did not survive the ordeal.

Over time, many briefs, as the Minister is aware, have been presented to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. The DVA at that time requested a Dr. Herman to undertake research on the life of European prisoners of war. He found in his report that the Dieppe POWs suffered the worst maltreatment and should receive a compensation for their suffering. He also stated that the death rate of Dieppe POWs is the highest of all European theatre prisoners of war. At that time the Government brought in Bill C-92 creating the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act. That Act determined the compensation each POW would receive. Someone who had been a POW for three months would receive the equivalent of a 10 per cent pension. For 18 months it would be 15 per cent. For 30 months or more it would be 20 per cent. Today the Minister is increasing the upper limit by 5 per cent and I thank him for making that modest improvement.

The feelings of POWs have been recorded in a number of ways over the years. Some made notes while in prison camps, others have their recollections, and others have writings on their behalf. I would like to quote three excerpts from my father's diary to give you his impressions:

> Dec. 28, 1942
> —we put in a pretty fair Xmas . . . the parcels were real good . . . we were not chained up Xmas Day.
> Jan. 7, 1943
> What a hell hole this is now . . . the snow tracks in and lays in puddles all over the floor . . . your feet are damp all the time and you can't keep warm. I have all the clothes I own on now, more than I ever wore in my life before.

Those are the words of a young farmer from Manitoba. He came from a rural community which relied on wood heating, where people had to work outside all year round. Cold was not abnormal. However, the impact on him of this incarceration was very, very severe. Finally, Christmas, 1944:

Christmas, 1944

—another Xmas gone by in this hole. I sure hope it will be the last.

The Minister indicated that there is a need for simple justice for these men. They not only fought on behalf of this country in the pursuit of freedom, they also spent time in the prison camps of the countries we were at war with. Let us look at the compensation for those who were captured at Dieppe and spent 33 months in a POW camp. Those who spent less than three months in confinement—perhaps they were captured towards the end of the war or were released early for some reason—now receive half as much as those who spent the full 33 months in confinement. The Minister is increasing that percentage to 25 and I thank him for that. However, I suggest it is not sufficient. It does not come anywhere near what Solomon and his computer would come up with.

We are not talking about a lot of money in comparison to our budget, but we are certainly talking about a significant amount for those who receive an increase. The 5 per cent increase for Dieppe POWs will cost the taxpayer $1.3 million a year. That is on top of the $5.2 million currently being spent. If we went to 30 per cent, all we would need to extract from Government coffers would be another $1.3 million. Going to 35 per cent would mean another $1.3 million. Going to 40 per cent would mean another $1.3 million. The total cost to the Treasury of meeting the request of the Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners Of War Association (Canada) for 40 per cent would be $10.4 million a year. I want to make it clear that I acknowledge the fact that the Minister has been working very hard to increase this amount. Whether it is 30 per cent, 35 per cent or 40 per cent, I know in heart he would like to see it increased. We all would.

So I suggest to Hon. Members, particularly the Minister's cabinet colleagues, that we should take another look at this issue. By all means let us pass this Bill. It is important that we get it through. We in this Party are prepared to expedite matters so as to have all three readings this afternoon, and send the Bill to the Senate for approval and implementation. However, let us remind the cabinet colleagues of the Minister of Veterans Affairs that it is important that we provide simple justice to those 1,550 men or their dependants. We can never repay them for the services they provided, but we can ensure that they have the money they need to live a full and happy life. We would simply be repaying in a small way our debt to them. I say to the Government: Open up those purse-strings a little bit. Let us see a Bill this spring or perhaps this fall which increases the support we provide these veterans.

I want to conclude this part with one more reading from the diary. This is the day before my father's release:

Wed. May 2.45

The end is in sight. Jerry troops have been pouring past here all day retreating from the front. At present the British and Canadian troops are 8 or 10 km away and are just following up the retreating troops. The Jerries are just as glad as we are and are just waiting for a chance to give themselves up. We are at a kind of standto at present and will have lookouts posted all night to give us warning that they are coming so we can get into the bush out of its way.

Those were the final words my father wrote during a very long period of incarceration. He eventually passed away at the very young age of 52 because of the deterioration of his body resulting from his incarceration for those 33 months. One of the ironies of my entry in this House was that it was 25 years to the day of the Throne Speech in 1984 that my father had passed away.

Dealing with other aspects of the legislation, I want to compliment the Minister on the changes he makes. Some of them, as he says, are not expensive but they do make sense. They clean up some of the bureaucracy. May I say that that is the kind of regulatory reform we on this side of the House welcome. We are not dogmatic when it comes to regulations; they have to make sense, they have to work.

I also compliment him on increasing the amount for the DVA scholarship. As I mentioned earlier, I spent a couple of years in university with the DVA scholarship. I could not have done it otherwise; my mother did not have sufficient income to put me into university. She certainly could not have helped my brother who went on for a number of years to gain two Masters degrees. He would not have been in a position to that, and I know that there are sons and daughters of veterans out there who are in the same situation. We have a responsibility to ensure that they have access to education. It seems to me that that $800 figure was around when I was going to university, and so clearly past administrations have not done their jobs in moving that up.

I would like to say as well that I am very pleased with the changes in the areas that affect the Hong Kong vets. Very clearly the move the Government is making is very good and we support that.

Let me close by thanking the Minister once again for bringing forward these improvements. I know he will take the battle back to Cabinet to try to squeeze a few extra pennies out of those misers that he sits with.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to rise and congratulate the Minister on his initiative. We gained firsthand knowledge of the kind of poignant stories about many of our prisoners of war. The Minister who brought forward this initiative has displayed a great deal of sensitivity in this area. He has, in fact, shown leadership in that he has been prepared to move on amendments which will in many respects improve the lot faced by our war veterans, and in particular prisoners of war at Dieppe and Korea.

I have a couple of questions with respect to specific amendments. I am sure that the Minister may be able to respond to them. One is with respect to Clause 14, paragraphs 6.1(a)(i) and (b), which deal with the issue of what is considered to be income. I understand the reason for the introduction of these amendments was to clarify the consideration of income for the purposes of collecting a pension in this particular initiative. I would like to find out from the Minister whether the inclusion of pensions paid to the person or the spouse from the flying accidents compensation regulations, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Penitentiary Act and the compensation regulations and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, constitutes a change in policy. For example, would former members of the RCMP who had also been prisoners of war, be prevented from receiving a pension? If that is the case then I think in that particular section we want to be very careful about how we define income.

We have seen in another area of government initiative with respect to war veterans as well as members who worked in the private and public sectors a regulation, not even a Bill, which changed the definition of income and had a very serious and detrimental impact on thousands of Canadians. I would not like to see the same thing happen in this particular Bill because we definitely see that in Clause 14 there is a change in the consideration of income for the purposes of receiving an allowance.

We are a bit skeptical on this side of the House about the Government's motives. I would like to give the Minister a chance to respond to that.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order. In an effort to be of assistance to the Member let me tell her that there have been informal discussions with both Parties with respect to moving this Bill into Committee of the Whole House at report stage and third reading. It would be our intention to bring the officials in for a clause-by-clause study in Committee of the Whole House. The Hon. Member makes a good point on the issues she has raised, and if she wished to enunciate any other points that she wants us to address during clause-by-clause study, we will be glad to have that taken care of.

Ms. Copps: I am not sure that that was a point of order. It happens to be a good point, but I do not think it is a point of order. Nonetheless I draw that to the attention of the Government because I also have personal interest in this particular piece of legislation. My great grandfather was killed in the First World War, and my grandfather, as a result of numerous war injuries after serving in both wars literally lived out his last days through the help he had from the pension he received from the Department of Veterans Affairs. I know that there are many other Canadians who appreciate the sincerity of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). The Minister has shown sincerity both in opposition and in Government, and a willingness to fight for the rights of veterans. He showed that most recently when he went against his own Government's policy with respect to the redefinition of income when it comes to the receipt of unemployment insurance benefits. Unfortunately, while we can certainly wholeheartedly endorse the good sense and, indeed, the commitment of the Minister of Veterans Affairs on this particular Bill and the work that he is trying to accomplish on behalf of veterans, unfortunately the same cannot be said of the Government which he represents.

That is clear to Canadians when they see a Government that is prepared to ignore the wise advice and counsel of the Minister of Veterans Affairs when it comes to the issue of the definition of income for the purpose of unemployment insurance, when they see the same Government prepared to ignore the wise counsel and advice of a former Minister of National Defence, and when they see that same Government prepared not only to ignore advice from within its own ranks on the issue of pensions and how they are considered as income for the purposes of unemployment insurance, but also from the Department of National Defence which seems to me to be at loggerheads with the Department of Veterans Affairs on this issue.

While we can congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs for the work he is doing, we note that the one hand giveth and the other hand taketh away. The other hand taketh away because certainly those veterans of the Korean War who find themselves in receipt of pensions are now being told that if they are in a position to work they cannot collect unemployment insurance. They must pay into the fund and can never collect even when they find themselves without a job.

While the Minister of Veterans Affairs has shown great support in this area, on the other side of the fence we have the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) and the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) who have not only refused to listen to the pleas of veterans on this particular issue and who have refused to listen to the pleas of ordinary working people, but who have also suggested that those veterans, those pensioners, those former employees of Her Majesty's armed services who decide to fight for their rights, should be threatened with prosecution if they use the words "Canadian Armed Forces" in their circulars.

For the last two decades we have had the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association. We have had a loosely knit group of pensioners whose sole aim in life is to protect the rights of pensioners who gave good service to Her Majesty during the wars and between the wars, whether it be the First World War, the Second World War or the Korean War. I do not think that anybody could impugn the motives of the men and women who have come together in the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association.

When they wrote to the Minister of National Defence on this issue, not only did they not get a supportive reply—as they received verbally and in writing from the Minister of Veterans Affairs—but the Associate Minister wrote to them citing a clause in which he has now made himself the Minister, because in the actual Act the Minister of National Defence is empowered, if he writes in his own hand to an individual or group, to force them to cease and desist from using the words "Canadian Armed Forces" in their information and publicity. No such right is attributed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. As usual, the Associate Minister of National Defence is the fall guy for the Minister of National Defence. The Associate Minister of National Defence took it upon himself to write to these men and women who were fighting for the rights of pensioners within the Armed Forces, veterans of both world wars as well as veterans who were subjected to the indecencies and the inhumanities of prisoner of war camps. Unfortunately, the Government did not reflect the view of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Instead, it reflected the view of the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence. It is shocking that the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence would not fight for the men and women who represent and have represented this country in time of war and peace.

Not only is the Associate Minister unprepared to defend their rights, he and his colleagues have made it quite clear that any attempt on Armed Forces bases across the country to collect signatures in opposition to this cruel and unjust measure will be met with potential military sanctions. Unfortunately, the Associate Minister of National Defence and the Minister of National Defence have not heeded the fine work that has been done by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It is clear to all Canadians who have taken any interest in the Armed Forces that the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs evokes sympathy and respect among veterans and non-veterans alike. However, the same cannot be said for the Associate Minister of National Defence and the Minister of National Defence who have refused, even when confronted by their colleagues, to protect the pension rights of former members of the Armed Forces.

At the very least, the Minister of National Defence, in concert with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), could have put an addendum to this excellent Bill saying that veterans and at least hose who served in the Korean War should not be caught in the trap that has been laid by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the new definition of income. If the Government is prepared to wield that heavy hammer over all workers in Canada, it should, at the very least, exempt those who have represented our country in time of war. The Government has ignored the recommendations, the counsel and suggestions of the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association and in fact suggested that if that association did not remove the name "Canadian Armed Forces" from its name it would be prosecuted. Imagine the spectacle of the Associate Minister of National Defence leading the veterans of this country into court because they had the responsibility and opportunity to use "Canadian Armed Forces" in the name of their organization.

Those of us who examine the intent of the legislation and regulations dealing with the Canadian Armed Forces and how it can properly be represented, recognize that the intention is to prevent private firms, corporations and other concerns from trying to make money off the Armed Forces by somehow representing themselves to be something else by use of the words "Canadian Armed Forces".

The Associate Minister of National Defence has chosen to take this regulation to the ridiculous extreme by suggesting to veterans and former employees of the Armed Forces that they will be prosecuted by the Government and the Minister if they write a letter to the Minister of National Defence asking him to speak on their behalf in Cabinet and in the Government on the issue of pensions as they relate to income for the purposes of unemployment insurance benefits.

I suggest that the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence take a page from the book of the Minister of Veterans Affairs and recognize that their mandate as Privy Council representatives of the Armed Forces in Cabinet should be to protect and promote the interests of the Armed Forces in Canada rather than support the heavy-handed measures that have been taken by their colleagues, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is not afraid to speak out and introduce good legislation. He is not afraid to speak out in opposition to his own Government. He is prepared to call a spade a spade. He recognizes that his number one priority should be the defence and enhancement of the quality of life of veterans, particularly those veterans who have fought for this country and were imprisoned during the two world wars as well as the Korean War.

This Bill demonstrates that he is prepared to put his money where his mouth is and take steps to improve the situation not only for veterans but for their spouses, widows and children. I believe the Minister of Veterans Affairs should be congratulated on his efforts.

I only wish that the good sense which has been demonstrated by the Minister in this particular issue would somehow filter over to the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence. They have clearly abandoned their responsibilities to veterans on the issue of pensions and the definition of income. In other words, they are toeing the Party line even though other Members on the Government side, including a former Minister of National Defence, have the guts to stand up and be counted.

Even organizations within their Party, such as the Oromocto Progressive Conservative Womens Association, are prepared to mobilize in opposition to the government policy. Those of us in political Parties know that women are the backbone of any political organization, and when the Progressive Conservative women's organization fights against a Government policy, the Government is losing the backbone of the organization which put it into office.

The Government should follow the example of the Minister of Veterans Affairs and introduce legislation that will support and improve the quality of life of our veterans rather than falling in line, lock-step, with the initiatives introduced by the Minister of Finance in November, 1984. Those measures were subsequently endorsed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and were implemented in two steps. The first step was taken last year with respect to severance pay and the second step was taken this year with respect to pensions.

I do not believe that the Government realizes that the current discontent among those on army bases across the country is only the tip of the iceberg. I encourage the Government to pass the good Bill being introduced today by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and use it as a message to other Ministers who seem to believe they have no responsibility to their constituents.

The role of the Minister of National Defence and of the Associate Minister of National Defence is not only to protect the defences of this country but also to protect the rights of the men and women who fight and work so hard on our behalf. Unfortunately, those Ministers seem to have washed their hands of that responsibility and have indeed taken their own pompous sense of self-importance to the point where they are prepared to declare unilaterally, with no constitutional or regulatory base, that members or former members of the Armed Forces who use the words "Canadian Armed Forces" in their association will be subject to prosecution.

Do Government Members support the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his work or the Associate Minister of National Defence who would like to prosecute our veterans and former members of the Armed Forces, simply because they are trying to establish their rights and responsibilities with respect to pensions and superannuation?

Having just been inducted into the Canadian Legion Branch 58—the greatest branch of the Legion in Canada—I suggest that most of the members on the Government side of the House prefer the Bill, the method and the quality of life ensured by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and disagree and categorically reject the position taken by the Associate Minister of National Defence. If they believe, as I do, that the Associate Minister of National Defence has bitten off more than he can chew when he suggests that he will prosecute former members of the Armed Forces for using the title "Canadian Forces Pensioners' Association", I suggest they contact the Associate Minister of National Defence and tell him to take a few lessons from his colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The Minister is a man and a Member of Parliament who is fighting for the rights of veterans, unlike his colleague who is doing nothing and is suggesting prosecution in an absolutely despicable way.

Mr. Nunziata: Am I permitted the opportunity to speak?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, after I read the "Late Show" questions, we will have questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Then we will continue debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—External affairs—CIA funding of brainwashing experiment; the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) (a) Agriculture—Cash advance program (b) Committee referrals; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Youth—Job-creation programs.

ARMY BENEVOLENT FUND ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hees that Bill C-100, an Act to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the Pension Act, the Veterans' Land Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the question put to me by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Minister for Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: The Hon. Member was asking about Clause 14. I would like to give her the answer. Clause 14 deals with the harmonization of war veterans allowance income with the GIS. I am very happy to be able to advise the Hon. Member that there will be no loss of income whatsoever to war veterans allowance recipients in this regard.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for her very kind remarks. However, I feel I should at this moment say to her that in all matters brought forward by the Government, I myself and all Members of the Cabinet support the Government's position. I wish her to know that I do support the position of the Government with regard to members of our Armed Forces and the RCMP about whom she was speaking.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that clarification. I also appreciate his clarification with respect to the treatment of income. I had been under the impression that the Minister did not support the Government's initiative with respect to unemployment insurance, specifically as it relates to veterans and those people who had been in the Armed Forces and who will not have an opportunity to collect unemployment insurance as a result of the Government's measures.

I do know that that was the position expressed by one of the former Ministers of National Defence, and perhaps I was confused there. I am sorry the Minister has taken this position because I believe he has a certain amount of political capital, shall we say, in the context of his Party. He is a man who has fought many wars politically in the House of Commons for a number of years. I do think that if the Minister were in a position to exercise his political muscle and capital with his colleagues, he might get the Government to back down on this most controversial and unfair measure.

I am sure the Minister cannot comment further in light of Government solidarity. I believe in my heart that the Minister does not agree with this measure, although he is bound by cabinet solidarity to tough it out. I would encourage him to continue to use his own influence within his Cabinet and his Party to have his Government change its position, because I believe the representations which are coming in from across the country from people who belong to all political Parties, Liberal, New Democratic and Conservative, show quite clearly that in this particular measure the Government has bitten off more than it can chew. I hope the Minister can convince his colleagues that at least to await the recommendation of the Forget Commission would be in his Party's own best interests.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very short submissions with respect to Bill C-100. My colleagues have already indicated that the Liberal Party is in full support of Bill C-100. I have a number of Legions in my riding and a great number of veterans who reside in York South-Weston. I know I speak for them when I congratulate the Minister and thank him for showing sensitivity, compassion and concern for veterans by bringing forward Bill C-100.

It is with a great degree of chagrin, however, that I say that other Ministers of the Crown, including the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) and the Association Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre), do not show the same sensitivity, compassion and concern for our veterans. I note that the Associate Minister of National Defence is in the House and listening very attentively. While the Minister of Veterans Affairs is doing all he can within his jurisdiction to improve the plight of veterans in Canada by increasing their pensions and ensuring that their standard of living is elevated, there are other Ministers of the Crown who are doing what they can to derogate from those very positive measures. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), pointed out, the Associate Minister of National Defence used a very heavy hand in threatening the Canadian Forces Pensions' Committee with legal action because it uses the words "Canadian Forces" in its title.

I have a letter dated February 18, addressed to the Canadian Forces Pensioners' Committee. In that letter the Associate Minister of National Defence threatens this association, which represents thousands and thousands of veterans, with legal action. In the letter he requests, pursuant to Section 248 of the National Defence Act, that its use of the words "Canadian Forces" cease immediately and he enclosed a copy of Section 248 of the Act. Section 248 of the National Defence Act states:

(a) the words "Canadian Forces" or "Canadian Armed Forces" or the name of any component, unit or other element thereof or any abbreviation thereof or any words or letters likely to be mistaken therefor,

If used by any person, that person or organization is subject to prosecution. They are guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. He is threatening legal action against this worth-while organization which has as its purpose, its raison d'être, the improvement of the lot of veterans. Is that any way to treat Canadian veterans? That is an example of the insensitivity of certain Ministers of the Crown.

There are other Ministers, including the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), who bring in measures which have the effect of creating considerable hardship for the veterans of Canada. We have the Minister of Veterans Affairs, on the one hand, attempting to improve the lot of veterans and the Associate Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, on the other hand, doing what they can to derogate from the good that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is proposing. We all know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration introduced a measure which came into effect on January 5, 1986. It states that if one is collecting unemployment insurance benefits, or receiving a pension, then that pension will be included as earned income. Thereby, it deprives a great number of pensioners and veterans from receiving UI benefits. It is obvious that the Minister of Employment and Immigration did not consider the effect that this particular regressive measure would have on the thousands upon thousands of Canadians who are receiving pensions, many of whom are veterans. The Minister simply did not have the sensitivity, compassion or understanding with respect to the impact of this terrible measure.

● (1710)

In closing, I simply wish to congratulate once again the Minister of Veterans Affairs for being a first class Minister. He shows a great deal of class in the House in his fight for veterans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: We know that other Ministers who should be fighting for veterans are not fighting for them. I am delighted to know that the veterans residing in my riding of York South-Weston are well served by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I know that as long as he is in Cabinet he will continue to fight for the plight of veterans, unlike other Ministers of the Crown who have no sensitivity and no compassion for those who were prepared to fight for their country.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the Parties. I think that if the Chair were to ask for unanimous consent, there would be a disposition to send the Bill to the Committee of the Whole House rather than a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-100, an Act to amend the Army Benevolent Fund Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the Pension Act, the Veterans' Land Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I was just told that at this stage a Member need not sit in his or her regular seat. Thus I have taken the opportunity to see what it is like to speak from the front benches. I want Hon. Members to know that it is a different feeling to speak from here. One is so close to the action, the Cabinet and the Minister.

Mr. Hees: I can tell you, the speeches do not sound any better from here.

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister says that the speeches do not sound any better. The heckling from behind is disconcerting when one is speaking from the front benches. I will take this opportunity to sit in one of these front seats and ask a few questions with respect to Bill C-100.

First, with respect to Clause 1, it states:

> Subsections 5(1) and (2) of the Army Benevolent Fund Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "5. (1) The Board shall establish a central committee for Canada and it may constitute such other committees as it considers appropriate.

I would like to ask the Minister to explain the necessity of that particular amendment to the Army Benevolent Fund Act.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the question is that there used to be provincial committees. They no longer exist. Therefore, this new set-up is to take its place.

Mr. Nunziata: What is the purpose of the Army Benevolent Fund Act? What exactly does this piece of legislation do?

Mr. Hees: The whole purpose of the Act is to provide benefits to veterans who are in various types of need. That is what it deals with.

Mr. Nunziata: Is there a means test to be applied under the terms of the Act? I am wondering how the Act works. Is a veteran required to come before a particular committee, as outlined in the Army Benevolent Fund Act, and must that particular veteran show need? What are the criteria? I would like to know how active this particular board is. How many cases does it consider on an annual or monthly basis?

Mr. Hees: The people who sit on the Board are chosen from the civilian population. They judge the matters which come before the board from the point of view of need, that is, whether certain things are needed or not. That is what the board does.

Mr. Nunziata: It states that the board shall establish a central committee for Canada and that this central committee may constitute such other committees as it considers appropriate. Further, it states:

> (2) Each committee shall consist of up to five members, one of whom shall be appointed by the Board and shall be the Chairman of the committee and the other members shall be appointed, after consultation with veterans organizations, by the Chairman of the committee with the approval of the Board.

How many veterans sit on the central committee? Is there any provision in the Act that would require that one or more members of either the central committee or the other committees should be veterans? It seems to me that in order to understand fully and to comprehend them and to have the sensitivity that the Minister has for veterans, it would be appropriate that there be a requirement in law that at least one or more members of this particular committee be veterans. Then the board would have that expertise in and understanding of the needs of veterans.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, all of the members of each of these committees are veterans. I quite agree with the Hon. Member that unless one is a veteran, it is difficult to understand the needs and feelings of veterans. Another very important aspect of this is that when adjudications are made by boards which are made up of veterans, the veterans have much more respect for and belief in rulings that are made by people who understand their problems in the same way they do.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I asked questions relating to the nature of the budget the committee would have. How much money is expended on an annual basis under the Army Benevolent Fund Act?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is that $350,000 covers the whole cost.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister how he will proceed to appoint the members of that committee.

The Bill indicates that he will consult with veterans organizations. Will this be on-going consultation? Will there be a special procedure for such consultation? Can the Minister tell us how he will proceed to appoint those members?

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the people are recommended by the various veterans' organizations in proportion to the size of those organizations. As the Hon. Member knows very well, the Legion is the biggest such organization, and then there is the War Amps and the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans and various very excellent organizations right across the country. All of these nominate the members for these committees.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I understand that and I take it that the amendment that we are studying corrects somewhat something that has been going on for some time. Every province has a committee. We are trying to centralize these committees with this Bill, are we not?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, they have already been centralized and this simply legalizes what has been done.

Mr. Gauthier: I thank the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment, as the explanatory note points out, would require the board to establish a central committee. The explanatory note points out the following:

Subsections 5(1) and (2) at present read as follows:

"5.(1) The Board shall establish a committee for each province; one for the United Kingdom and one for the United States;—

I note that in the proposed amendment, there is no reference to the United Kingdom nor is there a reference to a committee for the United States. Why in the proposed amendment is there no reference to the United Kingdom and the United States and why was there a need in the previous Act and not a need now for reference to the United Kingdom and the United States?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, after the end of the war, there was a tremendous number of cases to be examined and dealt with. At that time, there were these additional committees. Now it is not necessary to have those committees and they have been done away with. The whole thing is done here from Ottawa.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister. I would like to know whether in Clause 2—

[English]

On page 2, Clause 2 reads:

" 'educational institution' means a technical or vocational school, . . . approved by the Minister for the education or instruction of students pursuant to this Act;"—

Is the Minister going to make a list of those technical or vocational schools or institutions throughout Canada to which students could be admitted under this Act?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is that the Minister approves of all of these schools. The reason that the wording is inserted there is to give the Minister, at any time it might be necessary, the right for reason to disapprove of some particular school if it was considered that the actions of that school were not beneficial for our purposes.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, are there any training opportunities that are not covered by this clause? For example, could the son or daughter of a vet take an apprenticeship program given by the private sector and still be eligible for the assistance under this clause?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the Act provides for the tuition required for this kind of education, and I am advised that education of this kind in the private sector is not included. The education must be attained through a public educational facility.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that part of the apprenticeship programs that are entered into in the Province of Ontario require a certain amount of training in a recognized institution such as a community college. People from Thunder Bay go to Sault Ste Marie for this. The component of their study that is undertaken at the college would be eligible, is that correct?

Mr. Hees: The answer to that question, Mr. Chairman, is yes.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I take it that when the Minister says yes, the amendment before us will allow the payment of assistance to orphans who have not completed high school. It used to be a prerequisite that the orphans had to complete high school before they were eligible for these grants, but now they do not have to. Except for children of veterans of the Korean War, I cannot think that there are many students today who would be eligible for this.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the number is 582 students.

[Translation]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister whether the students are over or under 18. Is there—

[English]

—a requirement in the Act that there be an age limit?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, until now, only students up to and including 17 years of age could be included in the program. We have now extended the age limit to 18.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, what happens in the case of a person who is in the middle of working on a university degree? Is the assistance cut off automatically at the time the person reaches 18 years of age, or is there any provision in the Act which would allow for some discretion to ensure that any assistance or compensation provided under the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act would continue?

• (1730)

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman, common sense would prevail in every case. We cannot cut off a student's education half way through. In cases like that—and it is a good question—the education would be continued right to the end of the year. We are a Department with a heart.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4—Time Limit

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, without having the original Act before me, it is difficult to know what will happen. If someone finishes high school, takes two years in the workforce and then applies to university and to DVA, he or she would be ineligible because the 15-month time period has elapsed. What about the situation where students have met the first requirement, that is, have gone from high school to university, have decided that they need some time off, have perhaps taken a year or two and then returned? Are there procedures in place to allow them to interrupt their training per se and be reinstated in terms of the DVA scholarship?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that this is a consequential amendment only. I do not think the Hon. Member understands that.

Mr. Angus: The Minister is right. I do not understand what that means in the context of my question. Perhaps he could obtain some additional assistance from his official and give us a more lengthy explanation.

Mr. Hees: I am advised that the words "high school" always appeared in the original legislation. Now the words "vocational school" have been added to the qualifications.

Mr. Angus: Perhaps my question is more appropriate in terms of the over-all consequences of the Bill. I am looking for some assurance. We must keep in mind that in today's society many young people tend to take a break in their training. They decide to go out and obtain employment, perhaps because they are not comfortable with how they are doing in university or colleague. They obtain some work experience, have a better idea of where they want to head in terms of a career and return to school. I should like some assurance that under such circumstances the son or a daughter of a veteran who has started training, has broken it and has resumed it, will be eligible upon resumption for the scholarship provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Hees: The time allowed for a student to take a break in his or her education and then come back is 15 months. I quite agree with the Hon. Member that it is often very beneficial for students to take a break, go out in the real world, find out what it is all about and then come back to continue their education. They get a great deal more out of their education having learned what are the requirements of the real world. They are allowed to be out of school for 15 months and then come back.

I take it the Hon. Member feels that perhaps it should be a longer period of time than that. If that is so, we will have a look at it. At the present time it is 15 months; perhaps it could be extended to a longer period. I assure him that we will have a look at it.

Mr. Angus: I am assuming that the answer which the Minister gave is in reference to other aspects of the Bill, because the clause before us is very specific and says "before entering an educational institution".

Mr. Hees: The Hon. Member has raised a very good point, something which has not been considered before. I assure him that we will take note of what he has said and take it under advisement. Perhaps he has made a very good suggestion.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I have a general question about the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. I suspect from the title of the Act that the purpose of the legislation is to assist the children of those servicemen and women who are killed in times of war. Is it restricted to the children of those who are killed during the time of war, or would the Act apply to the child or children of servicemen and women killed on duty today?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this applies to the children of servicemen who are killed on duty at the present time.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps the Minister might consider at some point retitling this particular piece of legislation, because the title of the Act suggests that it is just for the children of the war dead. We are not in a state of war with any nation at this particular point of time. When the Minister has little on his plate, he might consider an amendment to change the name of the Act.

Mr. Hees: I think the Hon. Member has made a very good suggestion. Although there are very few times when this Minister finds that he has not much on his plate, he will certainly make a point of giving it very serious consideration. It is a good idea to bring the title of this Act up to date.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I just want to pursue the hiatus or the period of time which renders one ineligible for future consideration under this particular clause. The English text reads:

No allowance or costs shall be paid under this Act in respect of any student whose education has been interrupted by 15 months or more immediately before entering an educational institution.

I take it there is a ministerial discretion here. "Or more" could be read to mean more than 15 months. In the French text the following is indicated very clearly:

[Translation]

I will read Clause 4 in French:

. . . qui interrompt son éducation ou instruction pour plus de quinze mois . . .

So there is an indication that it must be more than fifteen months. Is this left to ministerial discretion?

[English]

Does the Minister have that kind of discretion? If so, where do we find it in the Act? Is there a provision for that?

Mr. Hees: The answer is that it does not appear in the Act. I think the Hon. Member has made a suggestion which deserves consideration. If for some reason such as sickness or something of that kind it is impossible for a student to take advantage of this provision for longer than 15 months, I think the Minister should have ministerial leeway. I think I will recommend that we have that in the future.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 5—

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister elaborate on the phrase "where he was an evader" and educate the House in terms of the meaning of that particular phrase in Clause 5?

• (1740)

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, that was put in the Act to cover a prisoner of war who was smart enough to break out of a prisoner of war camp and be an evader for some period, the longer the better and hopefully get back to our own lines, and that time would be added to his prisoner of war time. He would not in any way be penalized for his ingenuity in being able to break out of a camp and be an evader.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, the Minister will remember that, during my participation on second reading of the Bill, I referred to the original Act which had the gradations, the 10 per cent, the 15 per cent and the 20 per cent, based on the length of time that one was in a prison camp. On the 10 per cent and 15 per cent gradations, do they currently have the same phrase about being an evader, or is it only in the section dealing with those who were incarcerated for more than 30 months?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, any period in which the prisoner was incarcerated applies to the evader section. No matter how long the man or woman was in a prisoner of war camp, that time plus the length of time he or she was an evader are added together no matter how long the times are.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, just for further clarification, I assume that the part in the original Bill that specifies the 10 per cent for three months, the 15 per cent for, I believe, 18 months, is still intact, that that has not been changed? The only thing we are changing here is compensation for those who were in prison in excess of 30 months.

Mr. Hees: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, the proposal is to amend the compensation for former prisoners of war. I gather from the proposed amendment, depending on the war in which you were involved and the length of time you were a prisoner of war, that that would determine the amount of pension you would receive. Is that correct?

Mr. Hees: That is right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, what is the rationale behind differentiating between the various wars? I believe there was the Korean War and then I believe there were the Dieppe prisoners of war. Is that correct? While I am on my feet, can the Minister tell how many individuals we are now talking about with respect to this section?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, there are two classifications of prisoners of war. The first covers those who were in Japanese prisoner of war camps. Having visited that theatre of war in the last few months and having been brought face to face with a great many of the people who were in Japanese prisoner of war camps, I can assure the Hon. Member that what they went through is something that he would find very hard to believe. They went through unbelievable hardship and torture, everything you could imagine.

There are only two types of prisoners of war. One is the Japanese and the other are the Dieppe prisoners of war and any other prisoners of war. Those are the only two.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, the Minister just ended his comments by saying "any other"—

Mr. Hees: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) asked me the numbers and I forgot to give him that answer. There are five hundred and forty-four who were Japanese prisoners of war and 1,550 other veteran POWs and widows who will benefit from this amendment.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I have a matter for clarification. The Minister said 1,500. Is that the total number of people eligible under this section or is that 1,500 plus the 400 that he mentioned?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, that is 1,550 veterans of the other class.

Mr. Gauthier: All classes?

Mr. Hees: They are the Hong Kong veterans, the people who were in Japanese prisoner of war camps. The other category is all other prisoners of war, and there were 1,550 prisoners of war and widows. That is the total. The Japanese prisoners of war total is 544.

Mr. Gauthier: I understand that, Mr. Chairman. But there are prisoners of war from Hong Kong who were under the Japanese responsibility and there are also the Dieppe people, the number of which I take it was a guestimate. And "all others" means those from the Korean War or any others.

Mr. Hees: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, I have a question about the Army Benevolent Fund Act. The amendments being suggested affect Clause 1, subsections 5(1) and (2). Does the Army Benevolent Fund Act in this instance deal only with applications that may come from former prisoners of war or are these amendments applying to the general premises of the fund as a whole?

The Chairman: Is the Hon. Member asking a question on Clause 1?

Ms. Copps: No, Mr. Chairman, it was a general question about the Act. I was confused as to whether the Act was able to be used for former prisoners of war only in this Bill or whether it was for children and all other widows et cetera.

The Chairman: I regret to tell the Hon. Member but we are on Clause 5. Could she relate her question to Clause 5, please?

Ms. Copps: I understand that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, could I assume that the Hon. Member has found some way to include her question in Clause 5, which I would like to answer? There is no restriction on applications. They come from all veterans, not just prisoners of war.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, with the benevolence of the Minister who has agreed to give me some clarification, I have some concerns dealing with a couple of specific instances where the fund was not able to be used. For example, in the case of a funeral of a suicide victim. Apparently this is contrary to army regulation potentially and the Army Benevolent Fund Act in some cases should have more involvement in the social service component of the Armed Forces.

What regulations are there? I had an instance and I was able to get it resolved, but a constituent who had committed suicide could not be buried by the army because of the suicide. It was deemed that the constituent had gone AWOL. What provisions are there in this Army Benevolent Fund Act?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the Army Benevolent Fund sets its own regulations. I do not. If there is need for clarification or the Hon. Member or any Hon. Members feel that any cases of any kind have not been fairly treated, perhaps they could get in touch with me, or send me a letter and I will look into them and see what we can do. I am just as keen as the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members, to see that these cases be dealt with fairly.

Bill reported.

Mr. Hees moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hees moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before the Bill passes I would like to thank members of the Opposition who have taken part in this debate for their very constructive, thoughtful and generous attitude. We have gained considerably from a number of good suggestions of theirs and I appreciate very much their attitude and the constructive help they have given me today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to follow up on some of the questions that the Minister was kind enough to entertain in Committee of the Whole on the Army Benevolent Fund Act. He said that if we have specific problems in this regard, we can appeal to him directly. The difficulty with that process, which we might consider changing by more specific regulations, is that in many cases the ordinary citizen is not aware of his or her right of appeal to the Minister. In the case I cited, luckily I was able to convince the authorities without having to go to the Minister. A constituent was suffering from a form of mental disorder which precipitated his going AWOL. He subsequently committed suicide. The government official I contacted said that his funeral would not be paid for because he had killed himself while AWOL. Through negotiations with the military, I was able to come to a specific resolution of this issue. However, it was necessary for me to phone a Major involved in the issue and suggest that he might not like to see it raised on the floor of the House of Commons.

Because the person involved was single, his mother had to pay for the funeral. She came to me about it some months later. Eventually the Army Benevolent Fund Act was in a position to pay for this funeral, but what would have happened had the mother not persisted and been advised to come and see me? Quite clearly there is still a policy with respect to individuals going AWOL. If they do, they lose all their benefits, even to the point where they would be refused the cost of burial. It is important that there be a right of appeal so that people like this deceased man's mother know they have recourse. Someone finally put her in touch with me and we were able to resolve the problem. However, in many instances the people concerned would not pursue it because obviously a suicide is a difficult thing for any family. There should be some automatic process of appeal in the Act and it should be better advertised.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has brought up a very good point. I commend her for taking the stand she did. It is the kind of thing I would have urged had it been brought to my attention. I am glad she had the initiative and was able to fight it through.

Again I would like to use this opportunity of assuring all veterans and their widows that if they feel at any time that they are not getting a square deal, they can get in touch with me. I have no magic wand because I am limited by regulations of various kinds, but I will do everything I can to see that everything that can be done is done to straighten the matter out. Again, I commend the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) very highly for the fight she put up on behalf of this widow.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to say some extremely brief words in connection with this Bill. I have six Legions in my riding, and indeed I am a member of the Legion myself. I am particularly aware of the plight of former prisoners of war in that a past President of the Hong Kong Veterans Association is a resident of my riding. As well, my former law partner served for many years as Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Canada. His associates were incarcerated along with the father of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) after the Dieppe raid. Given all that, I certainly endorse wholeheartedly the principles set out in this Bill, particularly with respect to the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act. I would like to congratulate the Minister and the Government on doing an outstanding job with this Bill.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I think the last word should be left to one of those prisoners of war, Private G. Oliphan of the Queens Own Cameron Highlanders of Canada from Winnipeg, Manitoba, as follows:

Did you ever hear of Dieppe, boys?
It's a little town in France,
The "Brass-hats" sent us in there
To make the "Jerrys" dance.

It was our first taste of action
As we waded in and fought,
But Jerry was expecting us
And our fighting counted not.

We kept right on a going
The blood and guts flew high,
We saw our comrades falling
And had to let them die.

There must have been a reason
For a slaughter such as this;
Surely someone will account for
The faces that we miss?

So much for Dieppe, Boys
For our plans that hit a snag,
While we Wait for the Armistice
In a lousy old Stalag.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think you may find a disposition for the House to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Gauthier: There is such a disposition. We do not dispute that.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CIA FUNDING OF BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on March 7, 1986, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) when the Government would release all the facts on the brainwashing experiments conducted at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal during the late 1950s, especially those facts surrounding CIA funding of these experiments. One of the Canadians who underwent these experiments was Mrs. Florence Langleben. Her son Wayne lives in my riding of Don Valley East. On February 8, 1986, Wayne Langleben wrote a letter to the editor of a Toronto paper about his mother's mistreatment. The letter states:

● (1800)

My mother was one of the nine Canadians who the CIA used as guinea pigs for the brainwashing experiments conducted at Montreal's Royal Victoria Hospital. Why are Canadians so spineless when dealing with the United States Government? Can you imagine the outcry if Canada had conducted these experiments on innocent American citizens?

The only way these unfortunate victims will receive compensation is for our elected officials to demand a proper settlement. Of course that scenario is most unlikely.

My mother always said that the CIA was waiting for the victims to die off so they wouldn't have to pay. My mother passed away January 2, 1986.

It is too late for Florence Langleben to know the facts. However, her son would like to know, as would many concerned Canadians, what will be done about this totally unacceptable situation. I will give some background. Florence Langleben was admitted to the Allan Memorial Institute on February 8, 1957 on the referral of her personal physician as she was suffering from anxiety and chest pains. She was treated with LSD and other drugs by Dr. Ewen Cameron during her stay. She was discharged on April 3, 1957, and continued to be treated by Dr. Cameron in his office.

On August 20, 1959, Mrs. Langleben was readmitted to the Allan Memorial Institute, again under Dr. Cameron's care, to be treated for anxiety and chest pains. Between August 20, 1959 and November 6, 1959, Mrs. Langleben received 43 days of drug induced sleep, 15 electroshock treatments, 43 days of "psychic driving". That means being drugged and forced to listen to taped messages for up to 16 hours per day. She was discharged from hospital on November 20, 1959.

At no time while she was a patient of Dr. Cameron's was Mrs. Langleben informed that she was participating in an experiment rather than therapy. Nor was she informed that these experiments were being financed by the CIA for non-medical purposes. She was not informed that these experiments would be unlikely to yield therapeutic benefits or that the experiments involved the use of dangerous drugs and hazardous techniques that could result in permanent physical and psychological injury.

Mrs. Langleben suffered such symptoms for 30 years. In 1977, the involvement of the CIA in funding Dr. Cameron's research came to light. The facts surrounding the CIA's involvement and the involvement of the Canadian Government are confused and incomplete. The Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vezina) stated in November of last year: "Certain facts are not in dispute. What is not in dispute is that Canadian citizens were subjects of experimental psychiatric treatment which adversely affected them."

In December, 1980 a group of Canadians who had been unwitting participants in these experiments filed a suit against the U.S. Government in an attempt to receive compensation for their suffering. In January, 1985 the CIA offered to settle out of court. They offered $25,000 per plaintiff. The lawyer acting for the nine Canadians, Mr. Joseph Rauh, was outraged by the inappropriateness of this offer.

In late 1985, a U.S. Federal Court judge ruled that he would not allow CIA station chiefs to testify at a pre-trial hearing about an apology they allegedly delivered to the Canadian Government in 1977. Mr. John Hadwen was the Canadian liaison officer who received the expression of regret from the American operatives when the CIA financing of some of Dr. Cameron's research came to light in 1977. Mr. Hadwen has submitted a written statement to this effect. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have given him permission to testify at the trial. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has raised the issue with the U.S. Secretary of State on three occasions. Ottawa has also been pressing Washington to make available documents relating to the case.

The Minister of Justice has appointed Mr. George Cooper as an independent counsel to determine whether the Canadian Government bears any responsibility for anything that occurred in connection with Doctor Cameron's research. Also, in early March of this year, the acting Assistant Deputy Minister of Public Law for the Department of Justice visited Washington to be briefed by U.S. Justice Department officials on the facts of the Canadian plaintiffs' case against the CIA as the U.S. sees them. I understand from recent press reports that a trial date has been set for July or August of this year in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C.

On the basis of the foregoing information I briefly summarized, it would appear that some progress has been made and that our Government has been assisting the victims where appropriate. However, much more needs to be done. Full disclosure of all the facts surrounding this tragic episode is urgently required. Too much time has passed already for those seeking justice. It is too late for Florence Langleben, but for the other victims, and for Wayne Langleben, these questions require answers.

I urge my colleagues to release Mr. Cooper's report when it is available, to continue to press the U.S. Government to release the informaton it has and to take action to ensure that this tragic and unacceptable incident is never repeated.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no one in the House cannot be moved by the tragic set of circumstances with respect to the nine Canadians who were involved in this particular lawsuit. My colleague has indicated that Mr. George Cooper, who is a superb lawyer from Halifax, Nova Scotia, has been retained by the Canadian Government to prepare a report for the Cabinet to establish what gave rise to the facts of this case some 30 years ago. When those facts are established, they will be put before the Cabinet and a prompt decision will be made with respect thereto.

AGRICULTURE—CASH ADVANCE PROGRAM. (B) COMMITTEE REFERRALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I raised a question in the House concerning the Nielsen task force report, particularly as it concerns agriculture in this country and such things as cash advances and the PFRA.

I have been to my constituency in Saskatchewan a couple of times since this report was tabled. I detect a lot of concern from local farmers about some of the recommendations by this task force, particularly as it concerns agriculture. What makes me very concerned and farmers very angry is that not one of the authors of this task force report on agriculture is a practising farmer. Not one is a farmer from western or eastern Canada.

There are eight study team members. The one who is closest to agriculture is Mr. A. M. Runciman, the former president of the United Grain Growers. He is now retired and lives in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Other task force members include a number of public servants. Others include Mr. Paul Stewart from the agriculture department of the Bank of Commerce and Mr. Stringham, who is Senior Vice-President of Ralston-Purina.

The study team does not include one practising farmer, yet when the Conservatives were in Opposition, they said that we needed more participation by ordinary people in the decision making of this country. There is not one farmer who is a member of this task force on agricultural problems. It is no wonder that it contains recommendations that go against the wishes of nearly every farmer in this country.

I want the Government to tell us which of these recommendations are Government policy. I also want Conservative Members from Saskatchewan to give us their views on the recommendations in this report. Let me refer to a few of those recommendations. The report recommends changing the tax system for farmers from a cash basis to an accrual basis. This would amount to an additional federal tax of $100 million a year from the farmers of Canada.

The report also recommends eliminating the farm fuel rebates, which are worth some $130 million a year. This would increase the tax by $1 million a year on one hand and eliminate the farm fuel rebate by $130 million a year on the other. That amounts to approximately one quarter billion dollars of increased payments by the farmers of Canada.

Another recommendation in the task force report is to increase the crop insurance premiums. Another is to change the cash advance system as we know it. Currently, a farmer receives a cash advance interest free. The recommendation by this particular task force is that the farmer pay the going interest rate on a cash advance. That will hurt not only farmers in my riding, but farmers right across western Canada. The Government is also talking about phasing out the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act which is, again, a popular and worth-while program. In a place like Indian Head where there are agricultural farms, eliminating this program will do tremendous damage, not just to the town and that community, but to a number of farmers in Saskatchewan.

Another recommendation is to prevent the creation of new marketing boards. Why this recommendation was made, I am not sure. Surely that decision should be made by the farmers of this country, not by some Government bureaucrats or private sector people who advise the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). Another recommendation is the unprecedented "rationalization" of prairie rail network, the introduction of variable freight rates and the removal of guarantees and phase out of rehabilitation of the branch lines which are so important to the prairies.

Another recommendation of the task force report is to privatize the Farm Credit Corporation. Farmers in my riding are concerned about that because they have enough problems already with the private banks, let alone privatizing the Farm Credit Corporation. Another recommendation which concerns farmers is the closing down of the Port of Churchill for the export of grain. I know you, Mr. Speaker, are a member from the Toronto area, but I am sure even you would be concerned about some of these recommendations becoming law. My purpose this afternoon is to draw attention to the recommendations made in the Nielsen task force report and to make an appeal to my fellow Members of Parliament from Saskatchewan who sit on the Government side to speak out on these issues. We need the cash advance system as it is today for our farmers. We need the PFRA. It serves a very useful purpose.

We need the farm fuel tax rebate of $130 million because of rising farm input costs and falling farm income. We need to keep the tax system as it is rather than raising an extra $100 million from the farmers by changing the tax system. We do not want to privatize the Farm Credit Corporation. We do not want to close the Port of Churchill. These matters are very important to farmers in western Canada.

In the last 15 or 16 years, farmers in western Canada have seen three important task forces on agriculture. The first task force was in the early 1970s when the Hon. Otto Lang was Minister of Transport. That report recommended eventually phasing out about two thirds of the farms because they were, according to the experts, inefficient. The farmers of this country rallied forth and fought against the recommendations of that task force. Later on we had another task force which recommended abolishing the Crow rate, which was a very important rate for the movement of our grain to various ports in Canada. It was considered by many farmers in the West as part of our deal for coming into Confederation.

Now we have a third task force, which is again insensitive to the needs of the farmers of western Canada. It is written by a group of men—and they are all men—not one of whom is a farmer. They are all businessmen, bureaucrats or retired people who are not active farmers. I therefore call upon the Government to give us as soon as it can its response to the task force on agriculture because a lot of farmers are nervous about what is going to happen. They do not know that the future holds. They want to know where the Government of Canada stands. I appeal to the Government not to spread unnecessary panic among the farmers of Canada. If it disagrees with these recommendations, then tell us. If it agrees with some of them, then tell us in order that we can respond. That is all I am asking in this particular debate today.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), we are not considering the cancellation of the cash advance program to western grain farmers. Currently, departmental staff are reviewing the program in order to bring forward proposals to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. We plan to have the amendments in place prior to the commencement of the 1986-87 crop year.

Our long-term plans include a complete re-write of the Act. This will be accomplished by reviewing the basic principles and by assessing the future needs of the western grain industry. When completed, the new Act will be more responsive to the future development and requirements of the western grain industry.

As to the report mentioned by my colleague, the Government asked an independent committee to make recommendations. We have just received them, we will study them and seek advice. I would think that the hallmark of this Government has been to consult with Canadians on each legislative measure we have taken in the last 18 months. In that respect we have no lesson to take from anybody. We have done our work, we have done our duty.

What we have to do in the current economic context, particularly concerning the international trade sector, is to look to the future. What the New Democratic Party would have us do is to stand pat in the present, if not go back into the past. The only future they seem to envisage is inaccessible: extended services, increased public outlays, more grants, reduced taxes, fewer expenditures. It is impossible.

We are a responsible Government, Mr. Speaker, and we intend to study this report. Within the weeks and months to come we will decide what Government measures should be taken. We will not know that tomorrow morning, we have to study the report and, as we have always done, we will promote the interests of Canadian farmers.

YOUTH—JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on March 18 I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) what programs, if any, her Department had in connection with youth. As well, I asked her to advise the House if there are in fact such programs. I asked her to advise us how many there are and how many young people are involved in them.

I asked the question at the time because I believe that the majority of the people of Canada are under a false impression at the present time. I believe that they are under an impression which has been given them by the Opposition and by the media to the effect that the present Government does not have any programs for youth. I believe they are under the impression that the present Government has not committed any money for youth programs and that, in fact, there are no youth participating in programs put together and in place by the present Government.

Mr. Speaker, you know and I know that that is not the case. We know that there are programs in place. We know that the Government has put a great number of programs in place. However, I am under the impression from what I read in the press and from what I hear in my constituency and across the country that there are a substantial number of our fellow Canadians who do not realize what the Government has done. They do not seem to realize that the Government shares the concerns of all Canadians with respect to the problems of youth. They do not seem to realize, or they do not remember, that during the last federal election campaign, one of the main issues was the whole question of unemployment and the economy. A major part of those issues revolved around the issue of youth unemployment. A large portion of the public do not seem to know or realize that when the Government took office, it put into effect a review of all of these programs, programs for employment, for youth employment and youth training.

The main focus of that review was to make sure that the money being spent to benefit the youth of Canada was being spent as efficiently and effectively as possible and would ensure that the youth of Canada got the most out of the money that was being spent to help them. The review focused on youth employment and how to get more jobs for unemployed young people. As a result of that review, all of those programs were redesigned. New programs were put in place. One of the major new programs was called Canadian Jobs Strategy.

You and I are aware, Mr. Speaker, that in this current fiscal year, something like $734 million is being spent on youth training and job-creation programs. We are aware as well that in this current fiscal year, something like 222,600 young people are participating in all of these various new government programs. As well, we are aware that more money is being spent and more people are involved than were involved under all of the previous Liberal Government programs, including Katimavik. Even at the height of youth unemployment, which peaked in 1982 at something in excess of 21 per cent, the former Liberal Government did not have anywhere near the amount of money committed to youth employment and training programs that is now committed by the present Government under these new programs.

In the years between 1980 and 1984, during what has now come to be called the great recession, 142,000 young people lost their jobs. They lost their jobs at a time when the former Liberal Government was in power and claiming to be helping young people and interested in them. We are aware as well that since September 1984, when the present Government came to power, 75,000 new jobs for young people have been created and that has helped youth unemployment to fall.

I believe that most Canadians are not aware of these facts. I believe that they feel that Katimavik was the only program for youth employment that was in place. They know that it was established as a training program for youth and to give youth life training experiences. What I do not think they understand is that though Katimavik was created and established by a very honourable person, Senator Hébert, when one establishes any program, one becomes personally attached to it and feels that it is a very special program that should be not changed in any way or eliminated. We know that everything in life changes, and hopefully for the better. In fact, what has happened since the new Government put its programs in place is that youth unemployment has been falling. More and more young people have jobs and are getting jobs. Not enough young people have jobs, but still youth unemployment has been falling.

Tonight I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will make those points to the Canadian people and will make the Canadian people aware of what the present Government has been doing as far as youth programs, employment and training are concerned. I hope as well that he will give us some real examples of the types of people who have been benefiting from the new programs that have been put in place by the Government since September 1984.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I could say that what the Hon. Member said is absolutely true. On behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), I would like to provide the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) with a more detailed reply to the question he put in the House concerning the number of programs for youth administered by Employment and Immigration Canada and the number of young people participating in these programs.

As the Minister has already informed the House, this year in excess of $700 million will be spent on job creation and training programs for young Canadians. As the Hon. Member indicated, in 1982, at the height of the recession, $100 million less was being spent. This $700 million expenditure for job creation and training falls into two main categories—programs specific to youth and programs not specific to youth but in which young Canadians may and do participate.

Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, Employment and Immigration Canada assisted youth through Challenge '85 and will do so this summer through Challenge '86. More than 101,000 young people benefited last summer. That is many young people.

Under the entry option of the Job Entry Program, young Canadians experiencing difficulty entering the labour force can obtain up to 52 weeks of skill training and practical work experience. Under the co-operative education option, institutions are able to offer students formally integrated periods of academic study and work experience. In 1985, 65 co-operative education applications were approved which will assist up to 40,000 students in the coming four years. Again that is many young people. We have to think about that; it is very important.

Besides being responsible for employment planning, the Employment and Immigration Commission helps young people through employment services, Canada Manpower Centres, university campus employment centres, and eleven specialized units for young people having a particularly hard time to find jobs. Extension programs, international exchanges and summer employment related to studies also help a number of young Canadians.

I could go on for a long time, Mr. Speaker, but I think the Hon. Member has clearly shown that we have done a lot for young people, and we will continue today, tomorrow and next week to work hard for them. Rather than singling out one specific program, I think we should consider the Government's over-all youth strategy.

We have assumed our responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to do so thanks to the kind of policies I have just mentioned.

YOUTH

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the announcement just made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is an insult to young Canadians. There is a reference to the new role of the Minister (Mrs. Champagne), but everybody knows that the only job created today was a job for a "relocation" company in Ottawa. There was no announcement to show 700,000 young unemployed Canadians that this Government has a heart, that this Government has an interest in them.

[English]

We know the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) has proven herself to be incompetent and incapable of fighting for the young people of Canada. This so-called announcement by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is an insult to 700,000 unemployed young Canadians who want a program from the Government. The only job the Government is creating is a job for an Ottawa moving company.

As far as this Party is concerned, the Minister of State for Youth was incapable when she reported to the Secretary of State for Canada (Mr. Bouchard), she is incompetent when she reports to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and she should be fired.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SOCIAL SECURITY

BUDGETARY MEASURES ANNOUNCED BY QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in recent months the federal caucus of the Official Opposition, in other words the Liberals and especially the social policy critic, have inquired a great deal about the injustice of Government cuts in social programs.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I was both shocked and disappointed today when I heard about the budgetary measures announced by the Liberal government in Quebec City, where social programs were cut drastically.

In Quebec City, despite their apparent social conscience, the Liberals have cut $35 million from health services, $52 million from post-secondary education and $10 million from manpower centres.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lesson here and it is simply: When they are in power, the Liberals are conservative. They act just like the Conservatives do when they are in power, and only in the Opposition do they act as reformers. So the only way to from post-secondary education and $10 million from manpower centres.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The sixty seconds are up.

INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE

BUILDING PERMITS—GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, now that our economic recovery is well underway across the country, the same can be said for northwestern Quebec, in Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, according to the figures published recently by Statistics Canada, there was a substantial increase in construction permits for northwestern Quebec during 1985.

In the residential sector, building permits for a total value of $44,794,000 were issued. In the industrial sector, the figure was $10,999,000; for the commercial sector, $16,371,000 and for the institutional sector, $5,823,000, giving a grand total of $77,997,000, which is an increase of 13.6 per cent over 1984.

Mr. Speaker, these are encouraging signs for my region's economy and clear proof of the climate of confidence created by this Government.

ENERGY

SUPPORT FOR HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, current events in the Middle East—particularly the Libya-United States confrontation—sharply remind us again of the vulnerability of the Canadian oil and gas industry to events beyond our control.

The Oil and Gas Journal estimates that Middle East supplies of conventional oil will last 95 years while known inventories, in the North Sea will last only 19 years, 13 years in Canada, and 9 years in the United States. This will make us prisoners of other countries' resources and frankly, I for one do not wish to be anyone's prisoner, ever, let alone in 13 years.

Therefore, as an instrument of national policy, the Government must immediately take a decision in support of the Husky heavy oil upgrader and tar sands projects in western Canada. As well, it must push ahead vigorously in the development of new hydrocarbon sources in order to ensure an acceptable degree of Canadian self-sufficiency in this vital resource industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TIMETABLE FOR ELIMINATING LEAD FROM GASOLINE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in order to protect human health, particularly that of children, industry in the United States has been directed to remove lead from gasoline by January, 1988. In Canada, however, we are phasing out lead between now and 1992. The Government should adopt the same timetable so that Canadians can draw the same health benefits.

In Canada the coming into effect of 29 milligrams in 1987 was announced before, in December, 1983. Consequently, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is trying to create the impression of giving leadership when, in reality, he is denying Canadians health benefits that are available in the United States as a result of their stringent timetable.

If the Environmental Protection Agency can impose a stringent timetable on U.S. industry, why can the Minister of the Environment not impose the same timetable on Canadian industry?

CANADA COUNCIL

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing yet another manoeuvre on the part of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to control the Canada Council.

Canadians will remember his numerous attempts last year to amputate the arm's length relationship between the Government and independent cultural agencies. The Minister now appears to be wielding a knife instead of a hatchet, but the results may be no less harmful. He is threatening to deny the Canada Council the $10 million boost to its funding promised in the Budget. It seems that unless the Council accepts his dictates on how the money is spent, the funds may be diverted to another Department.

Happily, the Council is so far resisting this coercion and is asserting its right to autonomy. However, we saw its vulnerability to this kind of pressure last fall when it bowed to the Minister's demand to bail out the Vancouver Symphony.

The arm's length principle is essential to the operation of our cultural agencies. The Minister should not be directing funds within an agency's budget to one function or another, any more than he should be telling writers what to say or musicians what key in which to play.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DISTRIBUTION OF EROTIC VIDEO FLYER

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, a mail order flyer advertising the highest quality triple "X" erotic video movies is being distributed through the marketing division of Canada Post. The flyer promotes an "exclusive video offer" and is marked "for mature viewers only", almost an open invitation to our younger people to seize, open, and run with it.

Letter carriers have doubts about making the delivery of these materials, but senior officials took the position that it was not up to the Post Office to play censor. I do not think it is part of the Post Office's mandate to make it easy for others to send us down the road of moral decay and decadence. It is not first-class mail we are talking about. It is unsolicited pornographic literature, indiscriminately distributed as householder mail. It should be stopped now by the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

YOUTH

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT EXPERIENCE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, most of us remember our formative student years of summer employment. We often worked in small businesses gaining experience in life and business. With this in mind, I was very disappointed to hear the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) say that our Government's Summer Employment Experience Development Program should not be used for the hiring of young people as clerks, waiters, waitresses, labourers, farmworkers, cashiers and, in his words, "things of that sort".

The New Democratic Party seems to be saying that the Government and the private sector should not help develop the skills of young people by enabling them to have a real job for the summer. This position taken by the NDP does nothing for our young.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville also said that young people will take away full-time jobs. What kind of socialist nonsense is this? This summer thousands of young people will see first hand how Canadians make a living. Ordinary Canadians already know this. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville and his Party obviously do not.

CHALLENGE '86—SIGNIFICANCE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): In the riding of Longueuil, Mr. Speaker, more than 200 projects have been submitted under the Challenge '86 program.

Challenge '86 is a summer employment program for students who are anxious to gain practical experience in their field of study.

Last year 339 Longueuil youths found summer employment through this program. This year our Government has decided to increase the number of participants so that over 500 Longueuil youths will work and acquire an experience which is directly related to their studies.

This Government's objective is to enable young people to hold the kind of summer jobs in which they are interested. Challenge '86 proves that we show concern for young Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I extend an invitation to all young people who want to work this summer, particularly the residents of Longueuil, to register right away for Challenge '86 at the nearest manpower centre.

INCOME TAX

AMNESTY PROGRAM ADVOCATED FOR PAYMENT OF BACK TAXES

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have read with great interest a report on the extraordinary success of an American program to collect back income taxes. This program provided amnesty from prosecution or fines if people voluntarily came forward and made arrangements to settle past debts. The money came pouring in. For example, the State of Massachusetts ran the amnesty program from October, 1983, to January, 1984, and, while optimistically expecting about $20 million, it actually received $85 million. As a result of this and the accompanying media blitz, the State of Massachusetts has now announced the largest tax cut in its history.

There are other States which have followed this example. The State of New York's Amnesty Program ended in January of this year. New York estimates that it will receive about $350 million in back taxes.

The purpose of this program is twofold; to acquire the additional revenue, and at the same time take the burden of revenue acquisition off the shoulders of the honest taxpayers. When evaders are made to pay, the tax burden is equitably shared. Perhaps an examination of this program—

EMPLOYMENT

TRADES TRAINING PROGRAMS—NEED FOR FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the reduction in federal Government funding for trades training in Nova Scotia. In a letter last week to teachers and institutions offering trades training, the provincial Government Deputy Minister of Human Resources, Development and Training wrote, and I quote:

> A substantial reduction in federal funding is unfortunately resulting in a reduction of a number of training programs and related staff positions. The training program in which you are employed is part of this federal Government reduction and therefore the program which you have been teaching will not be able to be offered in the coming year and your position will be no longer funded.

Trades training plays a vital role in our society. Training is essential to assist Canadians to enter the job market. In these times of high unemployment and especially high youth unemployment, federal funding to these institutions and the students who need it should not be reduced. The Conservative Government continues to attack the least fortunate in our society. In cutting the funding for vocational training the Government again displays its cruel, senseless, and unfair conduct.

YOUTH

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. We have just witnessed a shameful public relations exercise by the Minister of State for Youth and the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Here is my question to the Prime Minister. How can he describe as a new initiative the revival of the Department of Employment and Immigration youth secretariat which was mothballed after he took office? Where is his new initiative?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Prime Minister has assigned the Minister of State for Youth to assist with job creation, employment and training programs in my Department.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Big sister Flora!

Miss MacDonald: Indeed, this is where the Government places its priority. I can also assure Hon. Members that the Minister of State for Youth will be doing much more in the Department of Employment and Immigration than the questioner did in the Government which preceded this one. I have looked, and I know what his mandate was. I can tell Hon. Members that the Minister of State for Youth will be doing much more than that individual did.

REQUEST FOR NEW PROGRAM

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker, and she knows it! She knows that the Challenge '86 program—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Question, please!

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, you too know it is nonsense. The Challenge '86 program which becomes the responsibility of the Minister of State for Youth has ended. Applications are no longer accepted, so just what is her responsibility? Where is the new program promised by the Prime Minister? If he has the nerve, let him stand up and tell us now in front of all Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member said back in 1984 when he was Minister of State for Youth, that:

—existing make-work schemes, such as the $16 million Katimavik program, might have to be redrawn—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald:

—and simplified so that participants receive actual job training "instead of just beautiful human experiences"—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In her press conference this morning the Minister of Employment and Immigration probably reached new depths of cynicism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The press conference was hyped at everyone in the House, and everyone in the country expected a new program. All we got were musical chairs, no new program and no new funds.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about a question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There were no new programs with respect to the crisis affecting youth. Will the Prime Minister fulfill the undertaking he gave to the House and the country that he and his Government would announce new programs for our young people before the end of this fiscal year? Is that going to be lived up to?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Gutless!

Mr. Gauthier: How about having some guts over there?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Look whose talking.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Government is spending $732 million on programs devoted to youth employment and training. This year that will involve some 218,000 young people across the country. These are young people who really need help, young people who have dropped out of high school, and young people who are disadvantaged. At the time when youth unemployment was running much higher than it is now, the previous Government did not put anywhere near that amount of money into such programs.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh yes, we did. You're wrong about that.

SENATOR'S HUNGER STRIKE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Prime Minister would rise to respond to this question and not my third question when I will not have a chance to reply.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Whatever the Prime Minister may think of the intensively personal gesture of Senator Jacques Hébert, the Senator has accomplished two purposes. He has focused the attention of the country on the deep crisis for our young people, and second, he has made it clear to the young people of Canada that they are going to have to fight for themselves unless the Government displays a commitment to them. When is the Prime Minister going to give some concrete evidence of a commitment on the part of the Government of Canada to young people who desperately need hope and opportunities for a courageous future in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition made two points. He referred to a deep crisis for young people. The headline in the Toronto Star yesterday was: "Lots of Summer Jobs are Waiting for Students"—

Mr. McCurdy: That's just in Toronto.

Mr. Mulroney: What? Are you opposed to jobs for Torontonians? The fact that they are from Toronto does not make them less Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: You're a phony, Mulroney.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: The second point to which my Right Hon. friend referred is that young people will have to fight for themselves. Young people have had a terrible fight. From 1980 to 1984, 285,000 jobs were lost for youth. In the 18 months since we became the Government, 50,000 new jobs have been created. They will have to fight, but with the Government fighting for them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister does not seem to understand that whatever recovery we have had has not been evenly shared across Canada. There are parts of the country that are having a very, very bad time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Here is my supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, we will be back in the House on April 7. Is Canada's youth supposed to wait until the House resumes sitting after Easter to find out what your Government intends to do for the youth of this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this was made very clear by the Minister concerned today.

An Hon. Member: No program.

Mr. Mulroney: I am trying to answer . . . Some important action was announced today that will promote job creation, something we have been doing with substantial success during the past eighteen months. No one is trying to minimize the seriousness of unemployment among our young people. That is why we have been so active in this area, and I think that today's initiative with the Minister of State for Youth and the Minister of Employment and Immigration will further promote the creation of jobs for our young people.

[English]

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister knows, we are dealing with a very serious situation here. It is the case that more jobs have been created for young people in recent months, and that is encouraging.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is also true that the most recent figures show that there are 485,000 young people out of work. That is a national tragedy. The Prime Minister has had access to those figures, and he promised in the House on March 3, March 11, March 21, and yesterday that there would be a program of action before the end of this month. Why has the Prime Minister not delivered on that promise?

● (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the tragedy of youth unemployment, and I do not disagree. We inherited the situation, and we have been able to reduce youth unemployment by two full percentage points in just about 18 months. It is not perfect, but it is a major step forward. Were one to do that every 18 months, one would make a serious dent in that tragedy to which my hon. friend refers. We will continue to do so by initiatives such as those we announced today.

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that the initiatives, as he described them, announced today simply consist of a promise to study recommendations which have been made by a Senate task force and by the New Democratic Party. That is not action. That is an argument by the Government for delaying action.

Young people want jobs. They want programs now. Since the Prime Minister is aware of the situation faced by young people and that the Minister's announcement today does not consist of a single new program for action, why did he promise yesterday in the House that we would have new programs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the programs the Government has brought in is Challenge '86. This year we will have some 60,000 applications before us for jobs for young people. Yesterday the spokesman for the New Democratic Party rose in the House and completely derided Challenge '86, which will offer hope and opportunity to some 100,000 young people. He said that that program was not a benefit to young people. I assure the Leader of his Party that young people across the country will find it beneficial. It is one of a number of initiatives which we are taking.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister and to the Prime Minister that there are still many Canadians who would like to take the word of politicians.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They can take yours on any side of any question.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister had suggestions from the Senate and from my Party, as well as others. Why did he promise the House, as recently as yesterday and last Friday, that there would be new programs of action when he has not delivered on that? Do the words mean anything? If they do, why is there no action?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that for the NDP and the Liberals—

Mr. Nunziata: Answer the question, Pinocchio.

Mr. Mulroney: —throwing borrowed money at a problem is supposed to make it go away.

Mr. Broadbent: You made a promise; you said there would be new programs.

Mr. Mulroney: I indicated that there would be continued action and initiatives—

Ms. Copps: You made a promise.

Mr. Mulroney: —such as, for example, what is referred to on the front page of The Toronto Star: "'This could be the summer of summers for job-hunting students. Not since the boom of 1981 has the metro job picture for graduating returning students looked that good', say local student counsellors."

Mr. Axworthy: That was a time when we were in government.

Mr. Mulroney: This is what is happening across the country, and we are going to cause youth unemployment to continue to go down, with government working—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: —with the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: May I ask all Hon. Members to refrain, please, from all the interjections. It is making it very difficult for me to hear anything, I must be honest.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who repeatedly promised the people of Canada open Government, responsive Government, and a Government prepared to enter into consultation and dialogue. In view of the fact that the Government still to this moment—

Ms. Copps: He is laughing.

Mr. de Corneille: —has not announced any new youth programs, will the Prime Minister respond to the communications from his former professor, Leon Dion, from Senator Hébert, from me, and from others, all of whom continue to wait for him to open the door on this critical issue?

Ms. Copps: Stop laughing, Brian.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Have the courage to stand up, Sheila.

Mr. Gauthier: She has much more than you, Joe.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who is running your Party?

Mr. Crosbie: No one. We want Johnston.

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East particularly to accept the Chair's request for no further interjections, please.

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, shut up, Sheila.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask particularly the Minister of Justice to do the same.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Withdraw.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Look who is talking about withdrawing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government has its agenda. It was elected to do certain things. One of them is to create jobs for young people, and that is exactly what we are doing.

With regard to places where young people have not had a chance before—because the previous Government's programs did not assist them—I can tell the Member that in Sydney, Cape Breton, 20 unemployed young people are now getting a chance to train in electronic and mechanical assembly. In northern Quebec young native people are getting a chance to train on jobs for the James Bay Hydro project. In Edmonton young people who are hearing impaired are getting a chance—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister doesn't seem to understand in English. Considering the pressing need for a program for young people, does the Prime Minister intend to demonstrate his Government's open attitude by giving a clear response to the proposal he received from Professor Dion, both in public and in private, and to which he has yet to respond?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been numerous programs that have been introduced by Governments at different times and discontinued. The previous Government did that with the Company of Young Canadians and with the Opportunities for Youth programs. That Government felt it had a mandate at certain times to discontinue programs, and the former Minister of Youth thought that Katimavik should have been discontinued.

Mr. de Corneille: Answer the question.

Miss MacDonald: We feel that we have a mandate to do the best we can for young people in the creation of jobs. That is what we are doing, and we are doing it all across the country.

Mr. Nunziata: You do not have a mandate any more.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. If we can lay aside Katimavik and the strike by the Senator, does the Prime Minister not think that after International Youth Year, a Senate committee report, a New Democratic Party report, federal youth fora, and a promise, the Government has missed an opportunity for a reconciliation with youth, which the Government needs, by failing to live up to the P.M.'s promise? Does the P.M. not think he has missed a chance with a little shuffle to the same old tune?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that 50,000 new jobs for young people is the beginning of living up to our promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We do not by any means say that it is complete. That is why the programs we are developing are directed toward those most in need, to those whom no one else might help, to those whom the Government has a responsibility to assist. That will be some 218,000 young people this year. Already the programs are showing tremendous success. They are not perfect. They will be changed from time to time, and I would invite the continuing participation and input of the Hon. Member.

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not think, because $1.26 billion was spent in 1984-85 and $864 million in 1986, that to suggest $732 million this year is an improvement is to mislead the public and the youth of the country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member is getting his figures. I can tell him they are wrong if the Member is applying them to youth only. We have a budget of some $2 billion; 44 per cent of which is going to youth programs. I think that that is a very commendable effort.

Mr. Deans: That is what he just said.

Miss MacDonald: It may be that that should be increased and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I will be looking to the Minister of State for Youth to advise me in this whole field.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't hold your breath.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if you are having trouble in this House, it is due to the cynicism of the Prime Minister—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sick and tired of that kind of banter.

Mr. Althouse: Who are you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: If you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has a question. He is an experienced Member and knows what should or should not be said in the House. Just a question, please.

Mr. Allmand: It was a short preamble. I think, even according to your own guidelines—

Mr. Andre: Next question.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An Hon. Member: Harvie, you are not the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has a question immediately, please.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

On March 3 the Prime Minister clearly promised this House and the Canadian people a new youth employment program. Nothing else. He made that promise.

When is the Prime Minister going to honour that commitment to this House and the Canadian people? With that promise and nothing else, Mr. Speaker?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first, what the Hon. Member has just said is wrong with regard to March 3.

Second, his reference to cynicism deserves to be noted when he accuses us of being cynical. Here is the Liberal Party defending and asking for the resurrection of Katimavik. Here is the Member for Shefford a year ago telling Maclean's magazine:

> At the same time, Lapierre said that existing make-work schemes, such as the $16 million Katimavik program, might have to be withdrawn and simplified so that participants receive actual job training "instead of just beautiful human experiences" that are of little value to potential future employers.

There is the ultimate cynicism. You are a bunch of shameless hypocrites, the whole lot.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the Prime Minister to withdraw the last remark.

Mr. Nielsen: Why?

Mr. Speaker: I thought I heard him call another Member a hypocrite.

An Hon. Member: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, it was a collective reference. I will be happy to withdraw it if it is inappropriate.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

CABINET POSTINGS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister let the Minister for Employment announce this minor Cabinet shuffle today because he was so embarrassed to do so himself? Is that all he can leave to the Minister for Employment?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that what we have done today is no embarrassment. I want to make that very clear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I do not know how the Liberals considered their previous Ministers of Youth, who were attached to the Department of Employment, but perhaps they are speaking from experience.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Why is your face so red?

Miss MacDonald: On March 3 the Prime Minister said: "Our first obligation toward youth is to keep creating permanent jobs". That is exactly what we are doing.

We began with the creation of 50,000 jobs. The efforts today will build on that.

● (1440)

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who said in the House on March 21:

> —at or about the end of the fiscal year, and in appropriate fashion, the Government would be announcing new programs, including programs that deal with the problems affecting Canada's youth.

Is this an accurate statement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): It is an appropriate initiative and approach which will be very beneficial to Canada's youth.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the quote I read the Prime Minister said that new programs, specifically, would be announced by the end of the fiscal year. It is the new programs I am asking about. Is the Prime Minister saying that new programs would be introduced at or about the end of the fiscal year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is on the record.

Mr. Nunziata: And so is my answer on the record.

Mr. Mulroney: The excellent statement of the Minister of Employment and Immigration today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I know that unless you are throwing borrowed money at a problem, it does not constitute an initiative or anything of value to the Liberals and NDP. This is not our way of—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How much did you throw at Northland?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to her Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Brampton-Georgetown. The people of London East, and indeed Canadians right acrosss the country, are most unhappy with the slow rate at which oil companies are decreasing the price of gasoline at the pumps.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell this House when Canadians might expect a further decrease in gas prices reflecting the decrease in world oil prices which the oil companies have enjoyed over the past few months?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there have been two drops in prices—

Mr. Riis: Come on, Mickey Mouse drops, and you know it.

Mr. McDermid: —of 2 cents a litre, the first on February 20, and the second on March 12.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Big deal.

Mr. McDermid: I am pleased to announce that this afternoon a further 2 cent per litre decrease has been passed on to retailers by Petro-Canada. That amounts to a total drop of 6 cents per litre, approximately 27 cents a gallon, in the last month and a half.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUTH

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in response to my colleague, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, the Prime Minister denied that he had made a commitment on March 3. In the quotation from Hansard of March 21 just read by my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, the Prime Minister referred to his earlier statements of March 3 and March 11 in which he said that at the appropriate time, before the end of the fiscal year, there would be new programs introduced to help the youth of the country. Is he going to live up to that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was responding to a very interesting question from the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East with regard to a statement made on March 3. On March 3 I said:

> Our first obligation toward youth is to keep creating permanent jobs and this is exactly what we are doing. This will be linked in due time not only with other programs, but with very important initiatives that will create more jobs for our young people.

That is exactly what transpired today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I invite the Prime Minister to turn to his statement of March 21 in which he referred to his earlier statements of March 3 and March 11 gave a distinct, clear, and unequivocal statement to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that has been absolutely and fully responded to.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mulroney: This from a bunch of people who caused almost 300,000 young Canadians to lose their jobs! That is an absolutely disgraceful record, and they should be applauding the Government for the job creation success it has enjoyed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Go to confession on Saturday. You will be there a long time.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth.

Mr. Speaker, in her letter of January 6, the Minister mentioned a cut of $100 million in youth programs. She asked her Cabinet colleagues for a budget for the next financial year.

Could the Minister inform the House how she can have any impact on the problems of the youth of our country when she now has neither a department nor a budget?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the fact that contrary to what the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre claimed, funding has been redirected to other programs in the Budget, and this money is again going to be used to create jobs. I did my job as a spokesperson for youth, and I did a very good job.

REQUEST FOR NAME OF NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Considering the promises the Prime Minister chose to ignore only a few days after they had been made, could the Minister of State for Youth name even one youth program that has been set up since Senator Hébert started his hunger strike?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the House may wish to recall that throughout these discussions, we have been told repeatedly that many young people are in difficulty and are having a very bad time; for instance, many have to live on welfare benefits. In the last Budget we saw, for instance, that $100 million was earmarked for creating jobs for welfare recipients. And a substantial share of this money will, appropriately, go to Canadian youth.

ELECTION PROMISES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Prime Minister that there are hundreds of thousands of young Canadians who realize today that they have been hoodwinked by one of the most prominent leaders of this country.

I would ask the Prime Minister whether that is not just one more example of a policy which for months now has amounted to nothing more than making promises to electors, only to renege on them, disregard them and do the exact opposite?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Even coming from a Liberal, Mr. Speaker, this kind of cynisism is absolutely astonishing, totally astonishing!

As reported in Maclean's, his Liberal colleague and former Minister of Youth said this, and I quote:

[English]

But the youthful Minister—

That was a short-term affair.

—stressed that whatever method young people used to look for employment, it had to be practical.

Ms. Copps: What is your word worth, Brian?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Ms. Copps: You wouldn't know the truth if it stared you in the face.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): John, show some leadership.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We now understand why David Peterson threw her out.

Mr. Speaker: Again, I am going to ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to refrain from making interjections, and that will be the last time I will ask.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Good teachers don't make threats.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East would want to withdraw many of the uncharitable comments she makes, so we will pass on it.

Mr. Nunziata: They were all deserved, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: The then Minister of Youth concluded:

In the past we could afford to let our youth dream. But when you are hungry, you have to be pragmatic.

That is a quote from the then Minister of Youth. We are trying to ensure that Canada's youth are no longer hungry and that they have permanent jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANNOUNCEMENT BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the quotation of the Prime Minister and, in all seriousness, I would ask him whether quoting a statement made over a year ago will give food to young people who had faith in him, who took him at his word, and who are disappointed by today's announcement. Does he seriously think that it will solve their problems?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member used the word "seriously", so let us take an unbiased look at the figures.

Since the new Government was sworn in, 580,000 new jobs have been created in Canada—

An Hon. Member: By others—

Mr. Mulroney: By others, he says. The Government of Canada, yes but . . . be it good news or—

An Hon. Member: It is good, but it is done by others—

Mr. Mulroney: —well, it is good, but it is not done by "others".

Well, now, I understand.

When it is good for Canadians, it is good. When it is good for young Canadians, it is very good. That is the philosophy of the Conservative Government.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning he met briefly with some disabled Canadians from the Coalition Against the Employment Equity Bill. They also met for about half an hour with his assistant, Mr. Geoff Norquay, in the Prime Minister's Office. I met just recently with this group and they want to know whether or not the Prime Minister now agrees with their request that the Employment Equity Bill be changed to include a penalty for employers who fail to implement employment equity in the workplace?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this morning on my way to caucus I had an opportunity in the hall to meet with excellent representatives of the coalition who briefly explained their point of view to me. I have since had occasion to discuss it with the Minister, as well as with Geoff Norquay whom I asked to meet with the representatives of the coalition upstairs in the cabinet chamber. He is preparing a report for me, and when I leave the House I will meet with him.

HIRING ON TERM BASIS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for the answer. The group also wanted to know if more disabled people will be hired on a permanent basis in the federal Public Service. As of today 76 per cent of disabled people who work in the Public Service are there on a term basis, and when there is a cut-back in spending they are often the first people laid off.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, from our first Throne Speech through our two Budgets there have been a number of measures specifically designed to assist the disabled. This is not enough. We recognize that these are people to whom we owe a great deal. The Government of Canada will continue to work very closely with them to see if we cannot meet some of their legitimate objectives.

INCOME TAX ACT

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Can he tell the House if simplification of the Income Tax Act is on the committee's agenda?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee has broken itself into two panels. One panel has hearings commencing April 8 to delve into the Income Tax Act leading to recommendations on simplification of personal income tax and personal income tax forms.

YOUTH

FUNDING OF EMPLOYMENT TRAINING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He has said that he cares about the close to half a million young Canadians who have not yet found employment. If that is the case, does he not think it proper to restore the funding levels of two years ago when over $200 million extra and an additional 100,000 jobs were provided in our training institutions and direct employment programs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the funding directed to young people from the Department of Employment and Immigration was $694.8 million. Even though the unemployment rate is much lower today, the amount now being contributed to training and employment programs for young people is $732.2 million.

AMOUNT OF FUNDING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, when is the Minister going to hire a new accountant? The fact is that the figures for that year were $950 million and 270,000 jobs. It seems to me what is wrong with the Minister and her Department is that they do not know what is going on.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the Hon. Member is that he has a very selective memory.

CALCULATION OF PENSION AS INCOME

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why is a retiree in receipt of a pension and working and contributing to unemployment insurance treated differently from a retiree who also works and contributes to unemployment insurance but receives additional income from a retirement savings plan or from investments?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member is raising the question of changes in regulations regarding unemployment insurance and how they impact on pensions and severance pay. As he knows, new regulations came into effect the first of the year. The whole question has been referred to the Forget Commission for examination in all aspects and we are waiting for its report.

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister take the initiative afforded her by a recent ruling of an Unemployment Insurance Commission board and reinstate benefits, at least for those who have been deprived of benefits they otherwise would have received by virtue of retiring prior to January 5, without having to go back through the appeal process?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been many of these cases which have gone to appeal. Some boards have rejected the regulations and other boards have approved them. So there is divided opinion. The next step will be to have these adjudicated by an umpire. As this is a quasi-judicial process and I do not think at this point I should interfere.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF ALBERTA COAL TO PREVENT ACID RAIN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. Does the Canadian Government, along with the Ontario Government, have any plans to provide for the use of Alberta sulphur-free coals to prevent acid rain, instead of utilizing American coals containing ten times as much sulphur, and then spending millions of dollars to clean up the mess, much of which would never have occurred if Alberta sulphur-free coals had been used in the first place?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the coal is not sulphur-free but the Hon. Member is right that it is much lower in sulphur than the American alternative we are importing. I have always found that situation at best anomalous and, at worst, bizarre. My predecessor shared my view to the extent of setting up a task force of experts from across the country, with participation by the western provinces, except Manitoba, and Ontario to boot. The task force will report on June 1, 1986. I await its report with eagerness and with a very favourable disposition to the point of view that the Hon. Member has expressed.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

GENSTAR—ATTEMPTED TAKEOVER BY IMASCO

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. He should be aware that last November's report from the Finance Committee expressed concern about concentration of ownership in the financial services industry and the implications of financial institutions being owned by non-financial interests. In light of the bid from the fast food and tobacco giant Imasco to take over Genstar Financial Corporation, which owns Canada's largest trust company and has 70 per cent of its holdings in the financial sector, will he tell the House what action the Government proposes to take before Imasco's takeover bid closes on April 25?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take that question as notice and refer it to my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance, who will be happy to answer it as soon as he returns.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES FARM BILL

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said on Friday in this House that the Government's assistance to Canadian farmers would be an extremely high priority in light of the negative impact of the U.S. farm Bills. Can the Minister of Agriculture tell the House what specific assistance programs are being considered to alleviate the effect of these Bills particularly on grain producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recognize that Question Period is a very difficult time in which to respond with an answer in great detail. It might be of some help to him to know that my collegue, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, will be making two announcements in the very near future.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on Monday. The Chair, as the House would expect, has carefully examined all the similar cases that could be found. The procedural arguments are absolutely clear. A disorder or breach of the rules must be brought to the Chair's attention at the time of the occurrence. As a consequence, the Chair cannot accept on Monday, a point of order regarding Friday's proceedings which could have and should have been made on Friday, even if that means that certain words offensive to all parliamentarians and clearly unparliamentary remain on the record and unwithdrawn.

The Chair can only do what other Speakers have done in similar circumstances, which is to remind Hon. Members that in some similar circumstances in the past Hon. Members who felt that they had made the remarks that were reported chose to withdraw them voluntarily out of respect for the House and its traditions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, since we are adjourning today until April 7, perhaps the Government House Leader could give the House some idea of the Government business he intends to call once the House resumes.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question by the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give us the inside information, Ray.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, the inside information is simply that we would like to carry on today with second reading of the Bill with respect to the new Competition Tribunal. If we can proceed with that today we may make progress, but there may be an inclination on the part of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) to do something else. We will await for motions. I think there has been an indication that we might have a debate on that today.

In any event, the sequence of Bills I want to present to the House for consideration are Bill C-91, An Act to establish the Competition Tribunal, followed by Bill C-62, the report stage of the Employment Equity Bill which has finished the committee stage. I hope that we can address ourselves to the report stage of that Bill.

Following that, I propose that we move to Bill C-67, An Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act and Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code. I believe that will give us a start on Monday. If there is any time remaining we can carry on with other items of legislation.

Having said that, I should advise the House that since we will be adjourning for Easter there may well be Royal Assent for some legislation during the course of the afternoon.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, will the Government House Leader tell us if he intends to bring in a House order, in compliance with the recommendations of the Reform Committee that were agreed to by the House, to permit television and radio in the standing committees of the House which have now been struck?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to my distinguished colleague in caucus this morning, the fact is that the House Leaders will be meeting with representatives of the eminent press gallery immediately upon our return from Easter recess so that we can deal with the rules that are acceptable to all concerned. I hope that we will have television and radio broadcasting introduced to the committees at a very early period to at last allow the people of Canada to see what great work the Government is doing.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Hon. Government House Leader. Back on December 13, arising out of Private Members' Hour, a motion was passed calling for the establishment of a committee to deal with the price of domestic wheat.

On behalf of farmers of this country, I ask whether any progress has been made in establishing such a committee?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members generally will understand the importance of the Hon. Member's motion to grain producers in western Canada. Discussions are taking place and I think we have the concurrence of the Liberal Party to proceed with that motion. I am now in the process of discussing the matter with the New Democratic Party and hopefully we will be able to work something out that will allow us to get on with this important initiative, even before Easter recess.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the matter can be resolved right now. As I understand it, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is prepared to have both the two-price wheat resolution and the Parity Pricing Bill, which was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), considered by the committee at the same time in accordance with our understanding of the agreement.

If the House Leader can indicate that that is in fact acceptable to the Government, then we are quite prepared to have the motion brought forward immediately and the reference made.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the constructive suggestion made by the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party. As he knows, we have attempted to facilitate opposition initiatives in respect to these important questions. I will consult with my colleagues and the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) and get back to him. Perhaps we can deal with this matter later today.

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order relating to Question Period. During a reply by the Right Hon. Prime Minister, I distinctly heard what I consider to be an unparliamentary term spoken by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi). In view of the ruling that you just made, that a point of order must be raised immediately following the infraction, I want to raise this point of order. Furthermore—

Mr. Rossi: What did I say?

Mr. Gottselig: —regardless of whether Hansard picked up the word used by the Member, he knows that he made it. Other Members sitting in this area would have heard it.

Mr. Speaker: Could the Member for Moose Jaw tell me what he is saying the Hon. Member for Bourassa said?

Mr. Gottselig: I can't say it.

Mr. Prud'homme: Of course you have to say it if you want him to withdraw.

Mr. Gottselig: I am not going to say it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I never said anything unparliamentary and I insist that the Hon. Member—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw is making a complaint to the Chair that he believes he heard an unparliamentary remark which he feels is inappropriate to repeat and is asking the Chair to check the records to determine whether that is true. I take it that is what he is doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for I do not know what constituency says that I made unparliamentary comments during the oral question period, he should have the courage to rise and repeat what I said because, for my part, I am positive that I did not.

We shall have to look at Hansard to see who said what.

[English]

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, the term that I and other Members sitting here clearly heard him say is "bullshit".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh! Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Bourassa telling me he did not say it?

• (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, if that is what he means, I must say that I do not think these comments were unparliamentary because I was not addressing any Member of Parliament. I said that the comments made by the Hon. Member speaking at the time were "b.s.", and what the Hon. Member is now saying is also "b.s.".

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is now in some difficulty. There is no question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question that to use that phrase with that word is unparliamentary language, absolutely. I need not refer Hon. Members to the rules about what language is or is not unparliamentary.

Could I ask the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) to simply withdraw it, if he thinks he said it. Otherwise I will check the "Blues".

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, my comments were not addressed to a Member of Parliament. I said that the comments made at the time were "b.s.", and I think that what the Hon. Member is now saying is also "b.s.".

I shall withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. The Hon. Member for Bourassa simply rose and withdrew it. I accept that.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because I would like to get a serious ruling with respect to conversations which fly from one Hon. Member to another and are subsequently raised. There was a point of order raised some time ago regarding the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) with respect to a statement he made clearly in the House. It was heard by other Hon. Members, and Hon. Members brought it to the attention of the Speaker at the earliest possible opportunity. It seems to me that the ruling of the Chair at that time was not to require a withdrawal from the Hon. Member because of the fact that it was not a recorded part of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The confusion I have here is that the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) rose to say what he said. Having said he said it, I must ask him to withdraw it. That is what I just heard him do.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Chair to review the "Blues" with respect to the submissions made by the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq because I think if the Chair does review—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard the arguments on that matter at the time.

An Hon. Member: Give her the general rule, at least.

Mr. Speaker: The rule is that if an Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it would be simpler if I simply provided the Hon. Member with something.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Seeing as how we are exchanging Easter lilies, let me say that during Question Period I was sitting in the seat of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), and during the Question Period—I admit it was during the heckling part—I heard the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—and other Hon. Members heard him as well—call the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) a liar three times.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I appreciate that the Hon. Member is not in the House at the moment but when he returns to the House, at the earliest possible moment, I suggest, Sir, in the spirit of intelligent parliamentary practice, that he withdraw that statement.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair, following usual practices, would say to the Hon. Member that the Chair did not hear the remarks complained of and the Chair will conduct itself in the usual manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that this has not been a very distinguished hour for the House of Commons and Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) claiming a point of order? Could the Hon. Member give his point of order succinctly, please.

Tabling of Documents

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my point of order concerns the order of business today. I wanted to find out from the Speaker what the order of business was in the sense that I have a standing a request—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member should read the Notice Paper.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 84(1), I wish to lay upon the Table on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in both official languages, copies of a notice of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act.

Pursuant to Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an order of the day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I assume all Hon. Members are presenting only petitions which have been certified.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, on behalf of residents of Hull, Gatineau, and the surrounding areas, a petition humbly asking Parliament to reconsider its decision concerning the Katimavik program and to address the problem young Canadians are facing generally.

I have the honour to present another petition from the Sir Wilfrid Laurier School seeking the same thing.

I have also another petition seeking the same thing from a group of interested people who are visiting Parliament today.

I have the honour, Mr. Speaker, to present two similar petitions from the Nepean-Carleton riding, another from the Gatineau riding, and two others from ridings in the Ottawa region.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that I had 97 other petitions which, apparently, the Clerk of Petitions has been unable to certify today. This is something I deeply regret, considering the seriousness of the problem. I have here 97 petitions signed by over 1,000 Canadians. We will have to wait, but I should like these people to know that we are already taking action—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is exactly why I asked if the petition had been certified, and the Hon. Member knows that.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I humbly wish to table a petition signed by residents from across Canada calling for the Government to re-establish the Katimavik program, who regret the Government's decision to cancel it, and who support the initiative of our colleague in the other place.

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition bearing 2,000 names from throughout Manitoba, from the communities of Brandon, Reston, Ste. Anne, Richer, Neepawa, Steinbach, Selkirk, Roblin and the city of Winnipeg. The petitioners are 2,000 young people who deeply pray that this House of Commons will raise its voice to reinstate the full funding of the Katimavik Program on behalf of the young people of Canada. These are 2,000 young people who do not believe Jacques Hébert is piggybacking on them.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from several hundred residents of New Westminster-Coquitlam, Burnaby, Surrey, White Rock, Delta, Port Moody, Richmond and Langley, all supporters of the British Columbia Automobile Association. The petitioners call upon Parliament to consider withdrawing the separate excise taxes on automotive fuel and reducing the federal sales tax applied on gasoline to a fixed level as it was prior to 1981.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition which has also been approved. It is from residents of the same communities in British Columbia who make the same request of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I have a third petition from residents of the same communities in British Columbia who also make the same request of Parliament.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of Kelowna, British Columbia, and other parts of B.C., requesting once again that the House of Commons reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition signed by 141 constituents of my riding who protest the excessive taxes on gasoline.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present another petition signed by 215 constituents of my riding who protest the illegal operation of the Morgentaler Clinic in Toronto.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have here a number of petitions from residents of Sainte-Foy, Trois-Rivières, Quebec City, Charny, Lac-Beauport, Ville-de-Laval, Longueuil and Farnham, in the province of Quebec, as well as from Manitoba and Ontario, which, according to the Clerk of petitions, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form. The petitioners ask the Government to reconsider its decision to cancel the Katimavik program.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from students of Ottawa and the surrounding area who ask that the Government take the situation back in hand and reinstate a youth program, either Katimavik or one like it.

I also have thousands and thousands of signatures in a number of petitions from La Promenade Secondary School in Hull, Quebec, asking that Parliament and the Government reconsider their decision, revise the Katimavik program and have it reinstated.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I also have several petitions signed by people from Carleton University, Sir Wilfrid Laurier High School, and several other high schools in the Ottawa area, who petition the Government to reinstate full funding for Katimavik for the young people of Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from people residing on Daly Avenue and elsewhere in my constituency of Ottawa-Vanier asking that the Government reconsider its decision to cancel the Katimavik program and humbly pray that this Government reinstate the Katimavik program.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition concerning the Katimavik program. About a hundred people living in Orleans, Pointe-Gatineau, Cantley and Gatineau ask that Parliament reconsider its decision to cancel the Katimavik program. Those people point to the program's success in respect of youth training and the opportunity to become familiar with our country and its two official languages.

I also have another petition to that effect from the City of Longueuil, Brossard and Chambly on Montreal's South shore.

I have a third petition from the constituency of Drummondville, signed once again by about a hundred people who ask for the reinstatement of the Katimavik program.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: They were all certified.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of the neighbouring riding of Don Valley West. It has been examined and found to be in order. The petitioners protest the continued operation of the Morgentaler Clinic in the City of Toronto. They call upon Parliament to require the Government of Ontario to remove any restrictions which may have been placed on the Metropolitan Toronto police force in regard to the laying of charges under Section 251 of the Criminal Code, and to express to the Government of Ontario the displeasure of this House at such lack of enforcement.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present a petition signed by about a hundred Canadian residents, who submit that the Katimavik program has been a success both in respect of the training of 20,000 young people who were involved over these last ten years, and of the significant community work done by those young volunteers in Canadian communities during that period.

Mr. Speaker, for those reasons the petitioners ask that the decision to kill the Katimavik program be reconsidered.

[English]

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from my constituency where a youth delegation asked me to table a petition in accordance with Standing Order 106(4). Therefore, I have the honour to submit to the House of Commons assembled a petition signed by 1,231 young people from the communities of Kapuskasing, Opasatika, Val Rita, Fauquier, Harty, and Moonbeam. The petition asked that the House of Commons asembled reinstate full funding for the program Katimavik.

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition from my people in the riding of Kent which has been examined and found to be in order. They request that Parliament require the Government of the Province of Ontario to remove restrictions placed on the police force of Metropolitan Toronto so that charges may be laid against those operating the premises known as the Morgentaler clinic.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition from 161 residents from the ridings of Thunder Bay-Atikokan and Thunder Bay-Nipigon. The petition has regard to the price of gasoline in northwestern Ontario. The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to use Petro-Canada as the tool to drag down prices.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions. The first is addressed to—

—that the Katimavik program has been a success both in respect of the training of 20,000 young people who took part over these last ten years and of the significant community work done by those young volunteers in Canadian communities during that period.

[English]

It is asking the Government to reinstate this program.

I have another petition which humbly sheweth that in the opinion of the Friends of Katimavik the federal Government's decision to cancel the youth program Katimavik is a short-sighted budgetary measure taken at the expense of Canadian youth and that the Katimavik Program helped thousands of young Canadians develop social skills and employment options while providing an opportunity to do useful community work in different regions of Canada.

I have another petition signed by several dozen friends of Katimavik. It states that all Canadians will be the lesser for the loss of a program that gave young men and women a chance to fulfil their potential and show leadership while helping others. "Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate with full funding the Katimavik Program for the young people of Canada." I think it is particularly appropriate on the last day of the House before Easter that it states—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was not signed by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me a second time. I have two further petitions which have just arrived. They have been duly certified. One of the petitions is from the community of Nakina, Ontario. It has 25 signatures and asks that the House assembled take action regarding the unprecedented high level of gasoline prices in view of the change in world prices for petroleum.

WATERCRAFT LICENSING FEE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have is signed by 324 residents of northern Ontario who ask the House assembled to reconsider that part of Bill C-75 which will impose a licensing fee on individual watercraft whereby no services are being provided by federal Government with respect to these watercraft.

Mr. Speaker: Do I have the unanimous consent of the House to revert for one moment to Presenting Reports from Committees?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

PETITIONS

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have five petitions signed by several hundred Canadian citizens. The petitioners call the Government's cancellation of the Katimavik program a short-sighted budgetary measure as a result of which Canadians in general will be the losers. They are calling upon the House of Commons to reinstate full funding to the Katimavik program.

● (1530)

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a whole set of petitions dealing of course with Katimavik.

To be brief, I have divided the petitions into three groups. The first group includes petitioners from the Montreal metropolitan area who praise the excellent results of the Katimavik program and would like it to be restored.

I also have a group of petitions coming from the metropolitan area of Quebec City and once again the signers ask for the restoration of the Katimavik program which has proved successful during the past ten years.

And, finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a group of petitions coming from the Ottawa area and here again hundreds of signers are asking that the program be reinstated since it has been so helpful to many young people in the past and could help others who would also like to take advantage of that excellent program.

[English]

ABORTION LAWS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present, all from the constituency of Essex-Windsor, all expressing concern with the abortion laws in this country and indicating their unhappiness with the state of implementation of those laws in Ontario.

M. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also have eight petitions from hundreds of people throughout Quebec who ask that the decision to cancel Katimavik be reconsidered. These petitions have been certified and they are in order.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I also have nine petitions with many signatures. The petitioners state that the Katimavik program has been a success, both as concerns the training received by the 20,000 young participants in the program during the last ten years, and the major community projects undertaken by these young volunteers in Canadian municipalities during this same period.

The petitioners ask the Parliament of Canada to reconsider the decision to cancel Katimavik.

[English]

I have as well four other petitions containing the names of approximately 130 or 140 petitioners. The petitioners state that in the opinion of the friends of Katimavik, the federal Government's decision to cancel the youth program Katimavik is a short-sighted budgetary measure at the expense of Canadian youth. The petitioners request the Conservative Government of Canada to reinstate with full funding the Katimavik program for the young people of Canada.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was just counting the pages and found that there are over 30 pages with 30 signatures per page in one petition which has been duly authorized. I have the privilege to present this petition which deals with the fact that the cancellation of the Katimavik program which helped thousands of young Canadians develop social skills and employment options while providing them an opportunity to do useful community work in different regions of Canada has brought serious concern to parents and they ask Your Honour to please consider reinstating the Katimavik program.

I have a petition from the undersigned who humbly state that the Katimavik program gives young Canadians an opportunity to become more familiar with their country and the language and culture of its citizens. They therefore humbly ask Parliament to reconsider the decision to cancel Katimavik. The undersigned come from Sainte-Claire, Île-des-Sœurs, Matane, Beauceville, Lac-Beauport, Stanton, Saint-Nazaire, Saint-Camille, Saint-Georges, Saint-Odilon, Richelieu, Saint-Malachie, Saint-Léon, Kitchener, Waterloo, Orangeville, Sidney, Vernon, St. John, Moncton, Calgary, Vancouver, Kitchener, Île-d'Orléans—

[English]

The petitioners all request consideration of this drastic measure as do the people of Antigonish, Springfield, Halifax, etc.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a few petitions from residents of Buckingham, Pointe-Gatineau, Touraine, Ottawa, Hull, Rural Road No. 2, Belcourt, Riverview, New Brunswick, Wolfville in Nova Scotia, Kemptville in Nova Scotia, Liverpool in Nova Scotia, and Sussex in New Brunswick. Mr. Speaker, the petitioners deplore the Government's decision to end the Katimavik program and humbly call upon the Government to reconsider its decision.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions signed by hundreds of Canadian residents from various parts of the country pointing out that the cancellation of the program Katimavik was a short-sighted measure by the Government and calling on the Government for full restoration of the program Katimavik on behalf of young people all across Canada who are in very grave danger of becoming a national tragedy.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are three items that I would ask to be dealt with by the House now and these items will be dealt with on the basis of discussions between Parties. Agreements have been arrived at with respect to the orders.

The first deals with an order with respect to the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, and I think you would find a disposition to receive by unanimous consent and have passed without debate the following order:

That the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development be empowered to travel to the Sechelt Indian Reserve in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon during the period April 20, 1986, to May 2, 1986, and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CHANGES TO MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the second order deals with the membership of Standing Committees, and again I think you find a disposition to receive the following order by unanimous consent and to have it passed without debate:

That the following changes be made in the membership of the Standing Committees:

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, Pietz for Nickerson;

Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Nickerson for Lawrence;

External Affairs and International Trade, Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount) for Gray (Windsor West);

Finance and Economic Affairs, Nicholson (Trinity) for Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount);

Human Rights, King for Pietz;

Multiculturalism, Jacques for Lesick; and Transport, Dantzer for Belsher.

● (1540)

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being such consent, shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DESIGNATION OF MEMBERSHIP OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, having had consultations, I should like to draw a third item to the attention of the House. I think Your Honour will find disposition to receive the particular order and to have it passed without debate, by unanimous consent. It reads:

Notwithstanding any previous reports of the committee appointed to prepare and report lists of membership to compose the legislative committees, that the membership of the following legislative committees be as follows:

Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof—Althouse, Binns, Blais, Cardiff, Clark (Brandon-Souris), Foster and Fraleigh.

Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and the House of Commons—Cassidy, Copps, Crouse, Ellis, Grisé, Lewis and McGrath.

Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof—Blackburn (Jonquière), Boudria, Bradley, Daubney, Duguay, Hovdebo and Stewart.

Bill C-88, an Act to authorize the acquisiton of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto—Angus, Cochrane, Forrestall, Gray (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine), Nowlan, O'Neil and Tobin.

Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof—Attewell, Cadieux, Domm, Howie, Kempling, Orlikow and Ouellet.

An Hon. Member: Dispense with the rest.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to dispense.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion which requires unanimous consent for its introduction. Is there such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Government House Leader would read the last paragraph of that motion because it is very important.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It continues:

And that the proceedings relating to the Twenty-seventh Report of the Striking Committee be declared null and void.

That is the operative part.

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent for the introduction of that motion, shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That the First Report of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Friday, October 25, 1985, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I sent you notice that I wanted to seek leave to hold an emergency debate under Standing Order 29. I would like to know—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated to the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), the Hon. Member might want to read the Order Paper. Applications under motions under Standing Order 29 come after Questions on the Order Paper, which come after motions. We are now at motions, and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has the floor on his motion.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise at this point to move concurrence in the First Report of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

On April 17, 1982, Parliament took an historic step toward full equality for all Canadians by adopting Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Of course Section 15 is the section dealing with equality rights. In adopting Section 15, Parliament took the position that where Governments, and in particular where parliamentary majorities and legislative majorities, are prepared to trample on the rights of minorities, or where they refuse to move to protect the rights of minorities, there must be some recourse to an independent tribunal. When those fragile freedoms about which Tom Berger wrote so eloquently are threatened, "the courts of the land must offer a means of recourse to citizens whose rights are violated".

Of course it is true that recourse to the courts of the land can be costly and time consuming, and that ultimately we must look at the composition of the judiciary in deciding important questions of social and economic values. We in the New Democratic Party and our predecessors in the CCF have fought for decades for the principle of an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a statement of certain fundamental values and beliefs in our democratic society, a statement of a commitment by the country to full equality.

It was with considerable sadness that we noted that Parliament saw fit as well to include Section 33 of the Charter of Rights, the section which in effect allows parliaments or legislatures, at the stroke of a legislative pen, to override the most fundamental and basic of human rights.

I mentioned the date of April 17, 1982. At that time Governments, both federal and provincial, were given three years before Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into effect, three years to enable them to bring their laws, their policies and their practices into compliance, three years to ensure that the equality on paper in Section 15 would become equality in reality for Canadian men and women.

Three years passed and at the end of that time those Canadians who were affected most strongly by the denial of equality observed that very little had changed. There had been no real legislative change, no real change in policy. Indeed, the only change in respect of the status of women in Canada was an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act to allow women as well as men the right to send wages to their families offshore. The only change in law by the Government of Canada affecting the rights of the disabled was again an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act which changed the word "lunacy" to the words "mental disability". That, after three years, was the sum total of the Government's response. I emphasize that we are talking about the previous Government as well as the current one. That was the level of their commitment to full equality for all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I notice here that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself said: Since we are the children of freedom, it is up to us to defend the cause of human rights and minorities every time they are threatened, and threatened they are indeed!

[English]

In January of last year, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) appointed a seven-member parliamentary committee to examine the implications of the coming into force of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That section came into full force on April 17 of this year. I had the honour of serving on behalf of the New Democratic Party on that committee. At this time I want again to pay tribute to the outstanding work done by my colleagues from all Parties on that committee. There were five members of the Conservative Party. The committee was chaired very ably by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), as well as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) representing the Liberal Party, and myself.

I note initially that the position taken by the Official Opposition, by the Liberal Party, as expressed by its justice critic, was unfortunately to suggest to Canadians that they should have nothing whatsoever to do with this process. Indeed, he went so far as to send a letter to all of the groups who appeared before the constitution committee urging them to boycott this committee and the process. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, that letter was ignored, and the committee did its work. The committee worked incredibly hard. We had hearings across this land for many months. We heard from over 250 organizations and individuals. We received well in excess of 500 written submissions.

Incredibly, and I say incredibly, the committee was able to arrive at a unanimous report after vigorous debate and discussion, a report which reflected our views of the importance and the need for fundamental changes arising from the coming into force of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We recommended sweeping and major changes to federal laws and policies in a whole range of areas touching many aspects of Canadians' lives. In all, in our report, we made some 85 recommendations. As I say, many of these recommendations would fundamentally alter the social and economic fabric of the nation. It would, in effect, put flesh on the bones, the skeleton of Section 15. Were these recommendations to be implemented, it would ensure that Canadians would not be forced into the courts of the land to fight for their fundamental rights and freedoms.

That landmark report was tabled by our committee in October last year. We awaited with great interest the response of the Government to these recommendations. That response was finally tabled by the Government this month on March 4, and it is interesting to note the title of the Government's response. Our committee report was entitled "Equality for All" and that was our objective. The response of the Government was entitled "Toward Equality". I suggest that that accurately reflects the failure of the Government to move with respect to a number of very key and critical recommendations of the sub-committee on equality rights.

There is no question that in a number of significant social areas in particular the Government has in its report, in its response to our committee, made significant advances on paper. The words are there. The Government is saying very clearly that it is prepared to commit itself to important changes in response to the unanimous recommendations of this report. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is going to speak on a number of areas of concern as well as colleagues from all sides of the House, I hope, in support of this motion of concurrence, and I would hope we could have a unanimous vote of support for this important report which, after all, was concurred in unanimously by members of the committee.

I intend in the few minutes remaining to me to highlight some of the areas that we as new Democrats are most concerned about in the Government's response. In many ways the Government response, in underlining time and time again the need for further action and study, falls far short of what we as a committee have recommended.

The committee recommended, for example, major changes in the area of the Canadian Human Rights Act. We recommended concrete, specific amendments. What is the response of the Government? It says it will give careful consideration to the fundamental question as to whether the Canadian Human Rights Act should be amended in the direction recommended by our committee.

The Government talks about study, consideration and further consultation. That was to have been the purpose of our committee. We do not need further study, further consultation and further consideration. What we need in the area of equality is action. That was precisely what the Equality Rights Committee recommended.

Let us look at some of the groups most affected by the recommendations of the Equality Rights Committee. A majority of citizens in this country, 52 per cent, are women. Yet in many respects women are still second-class citizens in the social and in the economic sphere in particular. What were the recommendations of our committee, and how did the Government fall short? With respect to important changes in the area of unemployment insurance, the Government has said: "More study. Wait until the Forget Commission has released its reports before our recommendations in the area of maternity and parental benefits are going to be adopted."

In the area of pensions, the Government has rejected a number of our key recommendations for improving pensions. After all, Members of this House know well that it is elderly women who are the poorest in our society. It is elderly women who must have improved pensions. The Government has refused to accept a number of our key recommendations in this area.

Let us look at one of those recommendations. We said that it was wrong and discriminatory for the Government to extend a spouse's allowance to the poor between the ages of 60 and 65 and that that extension, which did not apply to single poor or to the divorced poor between the ages of 60 and 65, was in breach of the law of the land, that it violated the Constitution in Section 15.

The Government says: "Yes, we acknowledge that there are a significant number of poor men and women", and I say, Mr. Speaker, particularly poor women between the ages of 60 and 65, "but we cannot afford equality for these poor people between the ages of 60 and 65".

You cannot put a price tag on equality, Mr. Speaker. It is fundamentally wrong for the Government to say: "Yes, we acknowledge that the Charter calls for equality in this area but we are not prepared to accept it because it will cost us too much". Where are the priorities of the Government when it is prepared to extend a half a million dollar capital gains tax exemption to the wealthy and at the same time says it cannot afford basic economic equality for poor men and women in Canada between the ages of 60 and 65?

The Government has failed to act on our recommendations with respect to amending sex based mortality tables and to replace them with unisex mortality tables. The Government has failed to act with respect to our strong recommendation that women to give full access to all trades and occupations in the Canadian Armed Forces, that women be judged as individuals and not be lumped together as a group, discriminated against and denied access to some 40 trades and occupations, which they are quite capable of doing. We studied this question as a committee. We heard representations of the Armed Forces and others and we unanimously came to the conclusion that this denial of equality for Canadian women within the Armed Forces must end.

The Government again, on paper, has said "Yes, we are prepared to move. Yes, all trades and occupations will be opened" but when push comes to shove, there is no action. The Government says: "We are going to have a task force." Guess who will be on the task force? It will be the male generals who will decide whether or not women can operationally handle all trades and occupations. What we have is more study and more task forces.

In the area of part-time work, the Government says "Wait and see". We may do something but we are not sure yet exactly what we are going to do. We should explore more options". We have explored these options long enough. The systemic discrimination against women who are part-time workers must end. Seventy-two per cent of all part-time workers are women and they are discriminated against in the workplace.

On the question of employment equity, the Government has said Bill C-62 is good enough. This is the employment equity legislation before this House. In a really quite remarkable step, the Equality Rights Committee said: "No, you must go further. There must be effective enforcement mechanisms. There must be penalties. There must be an assurance of contract of compliance for companies doing business with Ottawa and major federal Government departments and agencies must be included. The Government says "Forget it. We are not prepared to move on this employment equity question," which is of such fundamental concern to women, to visible minorities, to the disabled and to native people in particular.

The Government rejected our proposals with respect to broadening the Human Rights Act to make equal pay for work of equal value a reality. There was no mention in its response to the issue of child care. The Government says it will study the question further. It will further examine the issue of maternity benefits for women in the Canadian Armed Forces, but has taken no action. There is no action with regard to political rights for spouses of members of the Canadian Armed Forces who live on bases as the committee recommended. There has been no action on many other important recommendations as well.

It is no wonder the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has said that it is extremely disappointed in the Government's failure to address the principle of equality betwen the sexes. As the Council says, women will not accept any further deferral of implementation of their hard-fought constitutional rights.

We made important recommendations in other areas as well, Mr. Speaker. In the area of marital or family status we suggested that in Canada today we must recognize that a significant number of Canadians are involved in common-law relationships. The discrimination which currently exists against those involved in such relationships must come to an end. Those relationships should be recognized under all federal statutes.

With regard to the area of religious observance, we recommended a system of statutory holidays which would respect the religious diversity of the nation. The Government says there will be more study and more deliberation, but no action. There are approximately two million Canadians who are physically and mentally disabled. The Government says that it likes our recommendations, but needs more time for study and research. The disabled community in the country is insisting that the time has come for action, rather than for more study.

We were pleased with the Government's commitment to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act to deal with the principle of reasonable accommodation. There will be more study in the area of political rights for public servants. We were pleased with the Government's response in the area of mandatory retirement, and we emphasize that we are studying the possibility of retiring at an age of less than 65. That flexibility, with a reasonable pension, is our objective.

With regard to women in the Armed Forces, I mentioned the hurdle which has historically existed and the attitudes which have been such a barrier to women. An example is the comment of the Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) who said: "Physically it's a tough game. Do you see a woman changing a big tire? You have to have the physical strength".

Finally, in the area of sexual orientation, the Committee on Equality Rights made strong recommendations for specific changes. It recommended amending the Canadian Human Rights Act to include sexual orientation. The Government has made no commitment. The committee recommended that the Armed Forces and the RCMP, two of the most homophobic employers in the country, should amend their policies to end discrimination against gays and lesbians. The order which continues that discrimination in the Armed Forces remains on the books today. It has not been amended, and another task force has been struck to study that important question. We recommended that the security clearance guidelines be changed, and the Government said there is no need. We called for a uniform age of consent and the Government said that it does not have to act on that at this point, but will study it further.

I want to pay tribute to the gay and lesbian community across the country which made very eloquent submissions in response to Private Member's Bill C-225, which was referred to committee. It talked in very real and personal terms about the implications of continued discrimination. I want to pay tribute to the equality rights group here in Ottawa which initiated a national campaign to urge the Government to act on our important recommendations.

Finally, I want to voice my concern with respect to the Government's refusal to move forward with legislative change. When I spoke on this issue three weeks ago one of the Tory dinosaurs who is opposed to these recommendations yelled out: "Don't hold your breath". He said that we should not hold our breath because we will not see the changes in reality. Mr. Speaker, I am calling upon the Government to make equality a reality for all Canadians. The Standing Committee on Human Rights will have the mandate to ensure that the recommendations of this report become a reality, and we will continue to press for full implementation of the long overdue recommendations.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to share this experience with my colleague, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and five members of the Conservative Party. Does the Member not have some sense of hope that as a result of this report we will move toward equality in any way?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, many of us were pleasantly surprised by a number of the more progressive suggestions made by the Government in a number of areas. The committee had hoped that the Government would move forward, and the commitment is on paper.

In response to the specific question, I am considerably concerned by the suggestion by a number of Conservative Members of Parliament, including the Hon. Member for Calgary East and the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), in the areas of the role of women in the Canadian Armed Forces and putting an end to discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, that while the words are there, these changes will not become reality.

As an example, on the issue of sexual orientation, the Member for Calgary East said that he, along with over 50 per cent of the Tory MPs, opposes the recommendations. The recommendations are not for special rights, but for ending discrimination. They are opposed to recommendations for helping to put an end to an atmosphere of intolerance, oppression and pain which can lead to violence, as we saw in the tragic death of the young teacher in Toronto. The Member for Calgary East said: "We are condoning a third sex, somebody who is not exactly normal. We are changing the moral fabric of the nation this way. We are sending out a dangerous message".

I regret to say that the Liberal Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), the critic of the Solicitor General for the Liberal Party, has said that he is opposed to the recommendations with respect to sexual orientation. He believes that the recommendations with respect to the RCMP should not be implemented. He said he would consider it an invasion of his personal privacy if he had to be searched by a homosexual Mountie. For heaven's sake, if that is the kind of attitude we have in the House we must ask ourselves how this particular Member would feel about women in the RCMP. Does he have an aversion to being searched by women? Would he keep women out of the RCMP as well?

In response to the question of my hon. friend from Mount Royal, I acknowledge that progress has been made. If nothing else, the squeals of outrage from the more reactionary forces within the Tory caucus gives some indication of that. Nevertheless, I await, as I am sure many other Members of the House and women and minorities across the country do, specific and concrete proposals for legislative change.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise in this House on behalf of the Liberal Party to comment on the Government's response to the report, Equality for All. I wish I could feel a great sense of joy, and I wish the name of the report had been "Equality for Real". Nonetheless, I believe that a small step toward equality has been achieved. I will, however, indicate the areas in which I feel disappointed.

Four years ago the Liberal Government and its provincial counterparts brought to Canada the guarantees which are so vital to life in a democratic society such as ours. They express, in legal terminology, the values which we hold dear, the values we proudly stand for on the world stage, the very values we wish to protect and pass down to our children and our children's children. Those are the kinds of values which are in this very wonderful constitution and the Charter. We entrenched, for the first time, in this constitutional document of rights, rights which are indispensable in a world in which oppression can much too easily overwhelm democracy and justice.

As the representative of the Liberal caucus on the parliamentary committee established to study the equality section of our Charter of Canadian Rights and Freedoms, I was part of that very special group of parliamentarians asked to propose ways and means to implement the intent of the law so that all Canadians would benefit fully from Section 15 of our Charter. This was to ensure that our laws and institutions, our judicial system, contain the appropriate safeguards to meet the constitutional requirements set out in Section 15 of the Charter. A difficult task for our committee? Monumentaly difficult when you consider the depth and extent of Section 15.

I want to take this opportunity to express to my confreres and our staff my respect and admiration for their commitment to the task. To all those groups who exercised their democratic rights and fulfilled their obligations to the sector of society whose interests they addressed we all owe a debt of gratitude. They brought many issues of discrimination to our attention for consideration. In a sense the true partnership, the linkage between the voluntary sector and Government initiative was concretely demonstrated, in the best interests of our society. I would like to quote the full extent of this section.

Section 15 reads as follows:

Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

At first blush, Mr. Speaker, this statement would seem so straightforward and so basic to any fair and charitable individual that, hopefully, its implementation should be nothing more than a mere formality. After all we live in a free and civilized country where all Canadian men and women enjoy equal opportunities to succeed and share their national wealth. But the truth about such equal opportunities has been warped to a certain extent, if we are to believe the witnesses and the evidence we heard.

We also live in accordance with personal and institutional codes of behaviour which mirror the spirit of freedom, initiative and equality in which we all believe. Those are principles to which my Party fully subscribes and which have always been particularly dear to me.

[English]

Therefore the opportunity to participate in the process of bringing the Charter even closer to all Canadians was a great personal challenge. However, I would be less than honest if I did not tell you that there were moments during the consultation process when I wondered if there was any humanity at all in our behaviour towards individuals and groups in our society. The reality of those words "systemic discrimination" came home again and again, particularly from highly identifiable groups. I hope that even though I personally have a sense of disappointment with the resolutions the Government placed before us in its response, the report Toward Equality, we sensitized people to the fact that they are not being discriminated against individually but as a collective; that together we must find the means to resolve the problem. If we can do that, then we have accomplished something.

While we did encounter certain complex legal and jurisdictional questions which must be addressed, it was also frustrating to be studying issues which should have been resolved years ago. These issues have been shuffled from one committee or study group to another because they were political hot potatoes, economically costly, or did not fit the mould of society from a business perspective. The Government's response is a reflection of the fact that those considerations were more important than individual equality and the removal of discrimination.

Why are people in wheelchairs still prevented from entering certain buildings, visiting museums, art exhibits or theatres, or travelling on aircraft or by rail because of inadequate facilities? Why do we add insult to injury by telling these people that their lack of mobility makes them ineligible for certain jobs? Why do we continue to look at people based on their disability rather than on their ability? That is a key to our moving forward. Why are women still coming before committees like ours pleading for some semblance of equal treatment in the workplace? Why are their jobs and salaries in jeopardy when they choose to have a baby and wish to take maternity leave? Why is it so outrageous that a father would want to take time off as well to spend with his baby? Why does he have to pretend he is sick or that there has been some family tragedy which prevents him from coming to work? Why do our laws not reflect what we say? If they did, then maybe we would have a more humane approach to our problems. Why are energetic and enthusiastic people automatically stripped of their dignity at age 65 with no recourse? We must look at individuals, not the collective. That was the thrust of our action. Why are certain jobs all right for women in the Armed Forces when others are restricted to men only? When are we going to get rid of that stereotype thinking which prevents us from looking at a situation as a whole and basing our decisions on individual capacity, and the role, function and task of a job clearly defined? Why are gay people still encountering discrimination in the workplace or when they are trying to find a place to buy or rent?

I was proud of the way our committee dealt with the mandate we were given. We took a broad and very generous view of Section 15 of the Charter. In our view the prohibition grounds of discrimination listed are simply illustrative and do not exhaust the forms of discrimination prescribed by the Charter. We are well aware that equality is an elusive concept. We gave very careful consideration as to why equality does not necessarily mean equal treatment. The focus is, rather, intended to achieve equality of results. The words of Mr. Justice Brian Dickson, which we selected to introduce our report, express in the most succinct way the reasons we anticipated formal Government initiatives to remove inequality through legislation, obviating the judicial approach where possible. It bears repeating as a constant reminder to all of us. If I had my druthers, and I just might, I would send a memo to every Member of this House to be tacked up on their desk and read once a day. He said:

> A constitution . . . is drafted with an eye to the future. Its function is to provide a continuing framework for the legitimate exercise of governmental power and, when joined by a . . . Charter of Rights, for the unremitting protection of individual rights and liberties . . . (It is not to be read) "like a last will and testament lest it become one".
> —while the courts are guardians of the constitution and of individuals' rights under it, it is the legislature's responsibility to enact legislation that embodies appropriate safeguards to comply with the constitution's requirements.

I suggest that if we really want to do our job as legislators, we will first write laws that can be understood without consulting a million lawyers on whether it is black, white or grey. As well, the laws enacted should be capable of being enforced. Do not make laws which are unenforceable. That is what this is all about.

Our report contained 85 recommendations. If enacted, these recommendations will put us at the leading edge of change in a proactive rather than a reactive way.

● (1620)

Our Parliament is the most effective vehicle for dealing with inequality and discrimination. It is my understanding that some of the recommendations have not been politically popular in the Tory caucus and there are a few members in my caucus who do not find them politically popular or satisfactory from a personal viewpoint. That is not acceptable. It is not one's visceral reaction that dictates the right to equal treatment and equal opportunity in our society. I know that these Members have been working against certain recommendations and have suggested sending them back for further study. This causes me great pain and sorrow. Section 15 is the law of the land and we should no longer think in terms of what is politically popular.

Let our principles, rather than the latest Decima polls, be our guide.

In the time I have remaining let me summarize my Party's stand on the recommendations of the Equality for All report. With respect to employment equity, we believe that one of the basic building blocks for someone to be well integrated into society is equal opportunity in the employment market. Therefore, we believe that as a constitutionally enshrined right, no person should be denied employment opportunity or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability. The only limits deemed acceptable to guaranteeing rights and freedoms under our Charter are those enunciated in Section 1 which calls for such acts to be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. In other words, rather than a magic age limit or an opinion, there must be cause and concrete judgment before making a determination that someone cannot have a job.

Bill C-62, the proposed Employment Equity Bill, does not meet the intended goal of equal opportunity for the handicapped, visible minorities, native people or women. A law that has no mandatory enforcement mechanism is a law with no teeth. It is a sham, and I ashamed that any member of the Government would put a signature to a Bill that has no way of being effective. It is totally inadequate for the Minister to provide a ministerial citation for excellence rather than mandatory operation and enforcement mechanisms. It is a law with no effective force. It has no sanctions, outside of moral suasion. We have had many years of experience with moral suasion, with very little results. It is time to take steps that will bring about the needed results.

It is regretable that the amendments so carefully considered and proposed by my colleagues fell on the deaf ears of Tory legislators. Time permitting, I will read the very succinct recommendations Nos. 62 and 63 which we put forward at page 51. I suggest that Government Members read them again.

The ground of reasonable accommodation should be added to the Canadian Human Rights Act. That is, such special provisions as would not cause undue hardship to the employer but is in response to the needs peculiar to classes of employees who are protected from discrimination by the terms of the Act. If I have time I would like to talk about Mr. Binder whose case was determined in the court. His brother has suffered from discrimination because of the same lack of application of the rule of reasonable accommodation and the right to work under our laws. The application of that rule was a specific request from the Chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission which has been ignored in this report.

Our Party endorses the report's recommendations with respect to the participation of women in all trades and occupations in the Canadian Armed Forces. It is my Party's belief that sexual discrimination within the Armed Forces is intolerable. During our committee hearings we were told by the opponents of female participation that there was the potential for adverse social and sexual relationships. Such arguments are specious and highly reminiscent of the reasons used formerly to justify keeping women out of the paid workforce. They were not valid then and they are less valid now.

I find it astonishing that arguments for the limitation on the role of women in combat-ready roles are based on such notions that combat work is man's work. That is just the pattern of thinking that our Charter was intended to displace. If cultural acceptance is the litmus test for enforcement of a right, no one has any rights except at the discretion of the majority. Women are in combat-ready roles in other countries and have proven that they can do the job. To deny women who wish to serve their country the right to combat-ready roles is to deny them the right to valuable employment opportunities, training, education and promotion within the Canadian Armed Forces. Furthermore, it denies them their full rights as equal citizens of this land. My Party believes that such treatment is unjustifiable. As a mother, I am not anxious to have my children, sons or daughters, choose the Armed Forces for their career but if that is what they want, that is their right.

With respect to mandatory retirement, I remind the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) that the use of age as a factor of discrimination is now illegal. The Minister should fix his laws. The argument of normal age of retirement is no longer valid as a rule of thumb defence for everyone. This Act respects the ability of individuals to meet the requirements of the task as the yardstick of measure, not an arbitrary age. We must not substitute a retirement policy for a personnel policy. Rights are not an administrative convenience. Decisions must be made on bona fide occupational requirements, not on industry standards. The Canadian Human Rights Act should be so amended without delay.

We on this side of the House are ready to fight for the right of older people to contribute to our society and country for as long as they are able. Certainly, there will be some jobs in which retirement age is justifiable, as has been covered in Section 1. When a person is dismissed from his or her job simply because he or she has reached the age of 65, that person has suffered profound discrimination. It is a senseless judgment of a person's worth that is based on age alone. Such inequality no longer has a place in Canada's work ethic.

Although the Government has indicated that mandatory retirement will be banned, I am not convinced that the federal Government has given it thorough consideration. There were no proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which currently denies benefits to workers over the age 65.

The present rules restricting maternal benefits to the female parent are not adequate. Fathers also have an interest in being involved in the care of their newborn children, yet the present law does not give them the same opportunity afforded mothers to provide that care, as maternity benefits are available only to women. We gave a very good analysis in our report, and the Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended that the Unemployment Insurance Act be amended to ensure that the portion of maternity leave relating to social adjustment or infant care be available to either parent. I am pleased to say that my Party endorses this recommendation, unlike the Government that says this area requires further study.

Let me deal with the area of child care. The last thing the Government needed at this time of fiscal restraint and concern over the deficit was to spend hundreds of thousands, perhaps a million dollars on another task force. The need for a variety of child care services has already been demonstrated and we simply need to find a mechanism to put it into place. This does not involve simple economics but a creative approach to how we will look after our youth who are the future of this country. I hope the Government will realize that our youth are the future of this country, and becomes aware of what it is doing to our youth, even up to the age of 25 and 30.

If the Government is going to spend this amount of money on a task force which will result in this protracted delay, I am tempted to encourage mothers to take Mila Mulroney's advice and begin bringing their children to the office.

Sexual orientation must be specifically added to the list of prohibitive grounds for discrimination in employment, housing and accommodation, contracts and services. People whose sexual orientation is gay or lesbian ought not to be excluded from the protection afforded all other citizens, either through the neglect or failure of Government to develop the legislation that would provide that protection. To leave one group in society without such protection and open to discrimination is a dangerous precedent. In a democracy it is equally dangerous to leave the decision about the inclusion or exclusion of any particular group from human rights safeguards to the will of the many at any moment in history.

Homosexual people, like everyone else, deserve a fair chance, not a special chance. I know that this is a difficult thing to understand but it is something we must remember.

With respect to religious holidays, we have not gone far enough in our efforts to amend laws which result in religious minorities being discriminated against. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) says he will try to "reasonably accommodate" people whose days of religious observance do not fall on Sundays or other statutory holidays, possibly by allowing them to take alternate holidays. The Government must not stop short of adopting the Justice Committee's recommendation that it enshrine this principle in amendments to the Canada Labour Code.

We heard moving testimony about the existing inequalities which persist in our society. They serve as a clear reminder to all Canadians that the protection of equality rights cannot be taken for granted. Constant vigilance and monitoring by all concerned citizens is necessary. Let us do the right thing now and make the needed changes. This is a progressive report, let us not be faced with a regressive answer.

My Party has endorsed the report and I hope we will see forward movement and an application of Section 15. Let us ensure that individual minority rights are not the subject of majoritarian views. All of us together must be prepared to fight for our Charter of Rights. In clear human terms we wish to make Canada a real bastion of equality, humanity and decency for all Canadians. With these Charter revisions, we will have advanced to the point at which many deficiencies will have been redressed and we stand quietly proud as a role model in our world global village.

Mr. Speaker: We will have a question and answer period in one moment.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Robinson that the first report of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Friday, October 25, 1985, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I found the remarks of the Hon. Member both interesting and ironic, particularly her remarks with respect to the fact that her Party endorses wholeheartedly all of the recommendations in the Equality for All report.

The Party of which the Hon. Member is a member formed the Government of this land for some 20 years after this House passed the Canadian Bill of Rights, which was introduced in this House by the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, a former Prime Minister of this country. After that introduction, the Hon. Member's Party formed the Government for some 20 virtually consecutive years.

If the Hon. Member's Party so emphatically endorses all of these recommendations, why were they not implemented during those 20 years?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to answer my hon. colleague and perhaps refresh his memory. First, the Constitution is a brand new Constitution.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker. We brought back the Constitution and put into that Constitution a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In that Charter, which will have a very profound effect on our society, was Section 15. I do not wish to give the Hon. Member a history lesson but I will take him all the way back to see who brought in the progressive undertakings with respect to women. It was certainly not his Party. The Hon. Member laughed about the Constitution I would like to remind him that we had to fight with the Conservatives about the flag, the Constitution, to maintain our Canadian independence, and we are still fighting the Government to have Canadian independence with respect to free trade.

With respect to equality, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the report which was undertaken by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the application and the foundation of the Advisory Council, moved to undertake the first study of the situation of the handicapped, moved to take a look at equality for visible minorities, and first talked about Indian nationhood. Tell me, Mr. Speaker, were those the moves of the Conservative Party? They were not. They might have been signed in by the Conservative Party, but it inherited what it could not avoid.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member about women in combat roles. I wonder if she could tell us whether the purposes and needs of the Government, and of Hon. Members in this Chamber, would not be better served if we spent less time discussing the roles of women in combat, how they can get into combat, and perhaps more time discussing ways to keep men out of combat?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I agree 100 per cent with the Hon. Member's observations. If I had my druthers, we would not have combat. Second, as a mother of only sons, I would be most anxious not to have them anywhere near the combat field. More important, the question really is, should we not be concerned at all about women's rights because essentially men have had those rights? What women want is equal opportunity and equal access. Those people who wish to serve their country in that ways, God bless them, we need them, both the men and the women.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and perhaps ask a question of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). The report may cover it, I honestly cannot recall where it is covered, but several months ago I decided that we would try to hire a disabled person in our constituency office. I telephoned the Employment and Immigration office on Yonge Street. I was very pleased to find that it had a separate section and a supervisor who helped in placing disabled people in jobs within North York and the surrounding area.

I outlined my specifications. We needed someone who was able to type and do some telephone work. Within two weeks a young women in her mid-twenties was referred to us. Her name is Eva Kron. A bus picks her up at her apartment because she is on crutches and she works two full days a week mailing citizenship certificates, when I receive the lists from Ottawa, with a covering letter and doing other work.

I know there is a separate section in the report on access to the physically disabled, but I wonder if the committee in its deliberations dealt with this subject? I used this young woman as an example. I wonder whether the Government should be doing more in this area to help the disabled in terms of finding full-time and part-time jobs? As I say, I may have overlooked the section in the report. Would the Hon. Member for Mount Royal care to comment on that? I have had good experience myself.

• (1640)

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just given living testimony in support of that which we heard across the land. That is to say: Look at our abilities and not at our disabilities. Those employers, such as the Hon. Member, who are willing to look at people for what they can bring to the task and for their competence and skill are doubly blessed because they obtain a very good and sound employee. The Obstacles report, and the two follow-up reports, indicate that many people are not using the full talents of the handicapped in our society because they do not know any better. Some of it has to do with education. Some of it has to do with the fact that they have no access. That has to do with the dollars which we need to reorganize our buildings.

The area about which the Hon. Member is concerned is dealt with in Recommendations No. 41 through 57. I would also suggest that the Hon. Member speak to the Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights who, I understand, now chairs the Standing Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. He is very well informed in this area. I know he is doing everything he can to ensure that the recommendations of the committee are put into action so that these people will be better served in our society.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Cadieux (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I may say I am somewhat astonished at the nature of the motion before the House today. Although I share the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for achieving concrete and effective recognition of equality rights, I still believe that it is a denial of the facts to maintain that the Government's response to the report of the Sub-Committee on Equality Rights does not constitute a clear and unequivocal step in the right direction.

Considering the controversial nature of the issues on which the Government had to take a position, it is to be congratulated on its progressive and balanced response to the concerns expressed by a large number of Canadians. Mr. Speaker, the Government has made a clear commitment to abolish the principle of a mandatory retirement age within the Public Service. The Government's commitment in this regard cannot be called ambiguous. The President of Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has promised to ask the Treasury Board forthwith to revoke the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Regulations which prescribe mandatory retirement at the age of 65. Concrete steps have already been taken in this respect.

The Government's commitment regarding mandatory retirement is not limited to its own institutions. Indeed, it has recognized the need for extending the principle of voluntary access to retirement to the private sector businesses that come under its jurisdiction. Thus, Mr. Speaker, we have made a commitment to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act so that when an employee feels he has been discriminated against because of his age, the employer can no longer use the argument that he has to retire because he has reached the normal retirement age.

However, while being firmly convinced of the legitimacy of this reform, the Government must be alert to the impact it will have on labour relations in the private sector. Mr. Speaker that is why the Government has a duty to consult with employers and labour organizations to determine the most effective way of implementing a flexible retirement policy.

Moreover, the Government must ensure that the proposed amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act with respect to mandatory retirement are coherent and consistent with the in-depth review of this legislation by the Government which is now under way. The purpose of this process is certainly not to delay official recognition of the principle of voluntary retirement.

If we could make instantaneous and coherent changes in the present system with a wave of a magic wand, so that the system would reflect the Government's commitment with respect to mandatory retirement, the desired reforms would already be in place. However, since we do not have that magic wand, we have to come to grips with reality.

After this process we will bring before Parliament a Bill to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and various other Acts as a consequence thereof.

The Sub-Committee pointed out that about thirty Acts or regulations set a maximum age varying from 65 to 75 for persons holding positions in the Public Service. It may also be necessary, Mr. Speaker, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, to allow premiums and benefits under the Act to be paid beyond the age of 65.

We hope to be able to introduce around the end of the year the various amendments which we would like to make to the Canadian Human Rights Act. The Government will in this way recognize that flexible or gradual retirement is tomorrow's answer. The Government recognizes that most senior citizens can no longer increase their purchasing power in the same way as active workers. Generally, the welfare of a senior citizen depends entirely on his former earnings and public assistance, and his income is constantly being eroded by inflation.

A worker in good health is suddenly and traumatically forced to become idle by compulsory retirement. This practice is rather dehumanizing since it does not take into account the health of the worker, his desire to continue to work or even his economic needs. Many retirees therefore feel useless and have serious economic problems.

According to the American Medical Association, compulsory retirement can even lead to a deterioration of health if not to premature death. Finally, from the aspect of our national economy, we shall be able to stop wasting the talents of a manpower with a great wealth of experience.

Abolition of compulsory retirement is also likely to favour women, young people and visible minorities.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, workers seem to have a tendency to retire as soon as their financial resources allow them to do so. The proposed amendments to the Canada Pension Plan this year should therefore have an impact in this regard. It is proposed that contributors to the plan will be able to receive reduced benefits as soon as they reach the age of 60 or to continue to accumulate retirement credits until the age of 70. In fact, the public service pension plans already allow workers to retire at 50 with a reduced pension.

The Government is also trying to come to an agreement with the provinces to provide a pension for homemakers. This is another action which could have a major impact. If a couple can be certain of receiving two pensions under the Canada

Pension Plan instead of only one, this couple will have greater financial security and tend to retire earlier.

Abolition of compulsory retirement will be of undeniable benefit for women and all other workers whose career has been interrupted or who joined the labour market later in life. If they so wish, those people will have an opportunity to work longer in order to accumulate enough retirement credits to have a decent pension.

On the other hand, doing away with compulsory retirement may help reduce poverty among senior women whose remuneration is not enough for them to be entitled to adequate benefits from a private retirement plan. We have the example of the woman who has chosen to stay at home and raise her children and who is widowed at age 50. Because of inadequate income from her husband's estate, she has to return to the labour force. If she is forced to retire at age 65, she will not have enough time to contribute towards an adequate pension that will cover her needs. Our intent is not to force her to work, Mr. Speaker, but as long as pensions are not provided for women who have chosen to raise a family, that choice should be made available to them.

Moreoever, available data show, Mr. Speaker, that doing away with compulsory retirement should not result in a loss of jobs for younger employees.

Since 1981, when the policy in respect of work continuation over age 65 was extended, deputy Ministers were instructed to grant extension applications. The number of employees on extended service has increased, but not as much as might have been expected. For instance, in 1981-82, there were 186 jobs extended beyond age 65. In 1984-85, the number was 567. However, if we compare that figure with the total number of pensioned retirements at age 65 or before, 7,032 in 1984-85, the percentage of job extensions at 8.6 per cent only is not that significant.

Statistics for year 1984-85 also show that the majority of Public Service retirements occur at age 65, namely 1,022, and at age 64 and 65, 1,256 and 1,292 respectively, which apparently indicates that public servants want to retire at an age where they can get full their pension together with social security benefits. You will also note, Mr. Speaker, that the average retirement age in the Public Service in 1984-85 was 61.99 years, a decline relative to year 1983-84 when the age was 62.22 years. However, the average retirement age over the past six years has been 61.85 years. This also shows clearly that the majority of public servants want to retire at an earlier age. Besides compulsory retirement, the Government has also made a clear commitment with respect to recommendations dealing with immigration matters. Thus, concerning the recommendation on permanent residents and assisted relatives, I remind the Hon. Member that the immigration regulations have been amended so that a person who has been a permanent resident in Canada for three years can offer his or her support thus providing to the assisted relative the same advantages as provided by the support given by a Canadian citizen. This amendment which was passed on October 31, 1985, was implemented on January 1, 1986.

Some would perhaps take the Government to task for having turned down an immigration regulation allowing the entry into Canada of common law couples as being legally married. It shows that the Government did not try to evade the issue when for basic considerations, the implementation of some recommendations did not seem proper. Then in the case of a common law couple, the Government, while acknowledging that such recognition would effectively remove any obstacle to their being admitted, has nevertheless recognized the serious hazard in granting entry to applicants who might falsely state that they are cohabiting to gain admission into this country.

Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the Government, in its response to recommendation 35, it is extremely difficult to check abroad whether two persons are actually cohabiting.

Likewise, the Government did not hesitate to state openly its position concerning the recommendation dealing with Public Service competitions. The Government has clearly indicated that it felt that the preference now granted to Canadian citizens is a reasonable and justified restriction under the Charter and the International Agreement on Civil and Political Rights.

The main purpose of this step is to recognize that all of us, you and I and every other Canadian, cherish and appreciate our citizenship which involves some duties such as the promotion of welfare within the community. It also includes a number of rights, including the right to vote, Mr. Speaker. And one of the legitimate benefits of Canadian citizenship must be the right of priority access to jobs within the federal Civil Service. It is only reasonable that we should thus recognize the value and particular importance of Canadian citizenship.

If permanent residents wish to acquire the same rights and duties, they have the possibility to do so by applying for Canadian citizenship. After all, we only ask them to wait three years before they can say they are Canadians and proud of it. Any Canadian citizen has the right to claim certain benefits resulting from Canadian citizenship due to the status which Canadian citizenship confers to citizens. Moreover, Canada is not the only country which feels that its Civil Service should be made up entirely of its own citizens. As a matter of fact, countries such as the United States, France, Great Britain and Australia go even further than Canada, making citizenship a sine qua non condition for joining their Civil Services and not merely a criteria for preference as in this country. I should emphasize that, through an international agreement, whoever serves in the foreign service or diplomatic corps of a country must be a citizen of that country.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the government has made specific commitments concerning mental retardation. Recognizing that the mentally handicapped should have the right to cast their votes at federal elections, the government is considering how it could grant them this right without their being taken advantage of or jeopardizing the integrity of the electoral system. Early in 1986, the government will introduce amendments to the Criminal Code to remove any possibility of handicapped people not being entitled to equal protection and benefits before the law.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EQUALITY RIGHTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Robinson:

> That the First Report of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Friday, October 25, 1985, be concurred in.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I hope the interruptions will be as pleasant every time I speak, and I wish to thank my hon. friends.

Mr. Speaker, I will now proceed with the last part of my speech.

Furthermore, as far as pensions are concerned, the Government has taken concrete action. For instance, Bill C-90, the Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985, which the Government introduced in the House, contained measures that would allow men and women retiring under the same circumstances to receive the same pension.

The same Bill would also allow part-time workers earning at least 35 per cent of maximum annual pensionable earning for the purposes of the Canada Pension Plan, to contribute to the employer's pension plan.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, according to an agreement concluded with the provinces, in 1986 the Government will table legislation providing for automatic sharing of benefits acquired under the Canada Pension Plan, in the case of marriage breakdown.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore find it hard to understand how, in the light of these commitments, anyone could accuse the Government of failing to take concrete action to make equality a reality. It is precisely because this Government recognizes the importance of its commitments that it wants to ensure they are implemented in an effective and consistent manner.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux), is it the intent of the Government to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, as was requested by the Equality Rights Committee unanimously, to include sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination?

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I might not quote the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) properly on that issue. I would therefore refer my colleague to the official report of the debates of the House where he will find the eloquent answer of the Minister of Justice on this matter, which is the position of the Government.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: I have one other question if I may. Mr. Speaker. At the present time, Canadian Forces Administrative Order 1920 remains in effect, as I understand it, within the Armed Forces and requires any individual who is homosexual to lose this job automatically.

The Government has said it will take all steps necessary to implement fully equality within the Armed Forces, the RCMP and at all other levels of federal jurisdiction. Is it the intent of the Government to repeal immediately this Canadian Forces administrative order?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, on that particular point, I think it was clearly indicated in the House that the Government would do what it has to do in accordance with certain criteria that will be implemented as soon as possible.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux) for participating in today's debate. It is most regrettable that the Tory Members of the committee, both the Chairman and its members, are not here. I would sincerely hope they are away on government business and are not avoiding being present to respond to their own Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I think it is quite improper to refer to the presence or absence of Hon. Members in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not believe that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) specifically referred by name or by constituency to any particular Member.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I broke a rule of the House. It was a general observation meant with some degree of regret.

Has the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil any idea whether the revisions to the Canadian Human Rights Act, which were recommended in our report, are in process, and where are they in the government bureaucracy with respect to the justice process? Does the Member have some indication, as he is an active member of that committee, when we might expect some kind of report, which would include the strong recommendations of the Chairman of that Human Rights Committee?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the reference to Conservative Members on that committee, I am sure that, should they be absent from the House, they have a good and valid reason.

With respect to the specific question of the Hon. Member, I think the Government has an excellent record as far as putting Bills through this House with respect to justice is concerned. Yes, I am a member of that committee. I am sure that we will do whatever has to be done as quickly as possible.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I was a member of that committee and I recognize that Members worked very hard and very diligently. It was a pleasure to work co-operatively on that committee.

But my question was more specific: Does the Hon. Member have some indication of a time line? That is all.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my speech a little earlier, we do intend to amend that law and quite a few other laws that apply to this question.

The committee referred to about 30 to 40 other laws which had certain paragraphs or articles with respect to this subject. It takes a little time to look into everything but it will be done as soon as possible.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, we tend, when we are looking for equality for all, to think that there are truly various disadvantaged people. Just this past Monday I had appointments with two people in my office. One was a woman, 61 years of age who was divorced a few years ago. She contracted cancer which is in remission now. She is a woman with good energy, attractive and has good abilities but really feels discriminated against. Time and time again an employment officer jokes about what she is going to do about her gray hair and this type of thing. She was divorced when the divorce laws were not as good as we now see them in terms of payments and support. She is working aggressively at attempting to find a job. What does the Member suggest she might do?

I also saw a 34-year old married man who was going to night school in an attempt to improve his job opportunities. He has applied to dozens and dozens of employers without success. He suggested that there may be too much emphasis put on some of the other sectors while there is a great deal of hardship for people of his age, which is also the problem of that married woman. What would my hon. colleague suggest to them?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, the question was with regard to two specific cases. As a practising lawyer before I came to this House, I had experience with cases in which divorcees had various problems, including employment. I am sure that with all the legislation put forward by the Government since 1984, and with the 580,000 jobs which have been created, jobs will be found for those individuals as well. We are doing everything in our power to facilitate that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You may recall that earlier this afternoon the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) raised an issue with regard to the pricing of domestic wheat and its products, particularly those raised in western Canada. At that time the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) indicated that he had a suggestion with respect to the wording of the reference. We have now had the opportunity of discussing that among the Parties and I think you would find a disposition at this time to proceed to motions in order to have this motion brought forward by unanimous consent and passed without debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to proceed to motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON WHEAT PRICING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, to ensure that I have the correct wording, I will read the motion, and I think you will find a disposition to pass it without debate. It reads:

That further to the order made on Friday, December 13, 1985 and notwithstanding Standing Order 94(1), a special committee be appointed to act as a Parliamentary Task Force to examine the pricing of domestic wheat and its products from the farm gate through to the retail market-place, in order to provide wheat producers with higher returns for the sale of wheat for human consumption, while avoiding undue hardship to processors, consumers and other wheat users, and to examine parity pricing—

Those words were added at the request of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker. The order continues:

That the Committee be composed of seven members;

That the Committee have all the powers granted to Standing Committees pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 96(1);

That the Committee or members of the Committee be empowered to adjourn or travel to Montreal, Toronto, Saskatoon and Edmonton if the Committee deems necessary, and that if it deems fit the required staff accompany the Committee or members thereof, as the case may be; and

That the Striking Committee be empowered to consider and report on the Membership and that this report be deemed adopted when tabled in the House;

That the Committee report, on the pricing of domestic wheat, not later than Friday, May 9, 1986.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Robinson:

That the First Report of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Friday, October 25, 1985, be concurred in.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in today's debate on the measures proposed by the Government to promote equality within Canadian society.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms acknowledges equality rights and bans discrimination. This major amendment to the Canadian Constitution enables citizens to take court action. Well, it is more effective and indeed more equitable not to force people who are victims of discrimination to hire lawyers, file a complaint or something else, and appear before the courts. The Government is dutybound to remove discriminatory legislative provisions and take the measures required to ensure equality.

The process is often time-consuming. A subcommittee was struck to study the question and it recommended a number of legislative amendments. The Government is now responding, favourably in most cases. It endorses 46 report recommendations and does not agree on ten others. Generally speaking, the Government more readily accepts the measures where it is only a question of removing barriers. When it comes to more concrete and more costly measures, the Government would rather discuss, study or consider instead of taking action.

[English]

I would like to discuss some of the particular measures in the report Equality for All, and the Government's response to it. I will begin with the abolition of mandatory retirement in the federal sector, the issue which has been the most discussed and the most appreciated. The Government agrees with the recommendation of the committee to abolish mandatory retirement and will work to ensure that there is no adverse impact on women, youth, and minorities. One could applaud the first part of this measure, but I must be more critical about the lack of action to ensure that there is no adverse impact.

There has been no action with regard to provisions for flexible retirement to allow those who wish to retire early to do so. Obviously, that is a key factor if jobs are going to be available to young people and to women re-entering the labour force. If people are going to be able to stay longer, it is very important that those who want to leave early have adequate pensions to enable them to do so.

This will require changes in the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, and federal and provincial Ministers have agreed in principle to prorating the Canada and Quebec Pensions Plans for retirement down to the age of 60 and up to the age of 70. We welcome that news. However, until better pensions are paid, there will not be adequate inducement to early retirement. The adequacy of pensions must be a real consideration. A recommendation by the labour movement to double the level of benefits in the Canada and Quebec Pensions Plans has not been acted on.

Continuing in the area of pensions, a recommendation was made to end the provision of Canada Pension Plan benefits when the surviving spouse remarries. This is, of course, a provision which we have had for a long time which causes terrible hardship to couples. Couples are forced to live together without being married because the livelihood of one partner would be lost upon entry into a legal marriage. The federal and provincial Governments have agreed on this for implementation in January, 1987, and it comes not a moment too soon. This provision should hold for all other kinds of pensions as well.

There is a recommendation that credit splitting become automatic upon divorce or marital breakdown. There is an agreement now to make it automatic upon divorce, but it is still on application for marriage breakdown. There is also the problem of the adequacy of the pension. Half of a pension, which will be prorated for the number of years of marriage, is not very much. There will be no real equality in Canadian society until all women have pensions in their own names, including homemakers.

There is a recommendation to broaden the spouse's allowance to include all persons in need of it between 60 and 65 without regard to marital status. The Government says "no" on account of restraint. We wonder why restraint should be considered here when it is not considered in a lot of less important measures. The Government did not say "no" to the billion-dollar bank bail-out on grounds of restraint. However, on a matter of nondiscrimination, restraint is used as an argument.

There is a recommendation that unisex mortality tables be established for the calculation of annuities. The Government says it has met the spirit of the recommendation through other measures, but I am a little more skeptical.

I have to be a little more critical in the area of employment equity than I was in the area of pensions. Equality for All recommended very aggressive application of equal pay for work of equal value. The members of that committee, in their unanimous report, were very clear on the need for vigorous, strong action. Unfortunately, the Government response is one of complacency. The status quo is acceptable and the Government says it will continue to pursue enforcement of existing provisions. However, these existing provisions are very inadequate. Bill C-62 is not adequate and has been condemned by the organizations concerned with women's rights, native rights, and the rights of the disabled and of visible minorities. The recommendation of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights was very clear. Legislation on employment equity should contain enforcement mechanisms to provide for the review of special programs by the Canadian Human Rights Commission. That commission should be given additional funds and person years to accomplish these tasks. Yet the Government is very wishy-washy in its reply:

"The Government is of the view that the reporting requirements in Bill C-62, together with making such reports available to the public, are sufficient to ensure compliance".

I say bunk to that. There is a requirement for reporting but no penalty for failing to make any improvement in access to jobs for women, natives, the disabled and visible minorities. Adverse publicity has not worked in the past. It has not worked in the private sector for a very obvious reason. There is money to be made by discriminating and paying people less than what they should be paid. Even in the case of Crown corporations where making a profit is not the object, such as the CBC, there is ongoing discrimination against women. There has been public criticism for more than a decade on precisely this point and it has not moved the Government to act.

Let me quote further regarding the complacency of the Government: "The risk of adverse publicity that an employer would face unless progress in implementing employment equity is demonstrated in the reports, as well as the possibility that such reports will provide the Canadian Human Rights Commission with information upon which to initiate an investigation, will provide adequate inducement to employers to achieve the desired results".

Unfortunately, this is wishful thinking. The Bill is the first step towards the Government's goal of employment equity. It attempts to balance the needs of the designated groups against the Government's desire not to interfere unduly in the operations of employers. Unfortunately, it does not balance these two concerns evenly at all. It is weighted heavily to the desire of employers to move slowly, to continue discriminatory practices, and to be less than vigorous in pursuing equality goals.

Regarding physical and mental disability, we see some improvements. Again, not quite as many as we would like to see. The Government has not acted on several important proposals of the committee, for example, on Recommendation No. 41 on interpreter services for the hearing impaired at federal public hearings so that these people can participate fully in this aspect of public life, and Recommendation No. 42, to implement the recommendations of the Obstacles report. That is a good report with a host of very strong and constructive proposals to admit disabled people into Canadian society and the workforce. Yet there is no immediate action, only further consideration. There is only further consideration on recommendations for amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act, and further study on child care, although we just had a major study chaired by Doctor Cooke which provided a massive plan to provide child care services. It was a very thorough response to precisely the concerns raised by the subcommittee, and yet further study is called for by the Government.

Regarding immigration, we have some important recommendations and good progress. One recommendation is that the Act be amended to ensure that there is no discrimination, as in the Charter of Rights. The Government accepts that recommendation. It also accepts that medical requirements be more flexible in the determination of eligibility for immigration. We have seen enormous hardship with very rigid criteria being applied, and many Canadians have suffered difficulty in family reunification, because of overly rigid health requirements. We are pleased to see that there will be some flexibility and reason prevailing here.

sorship, has already been acted on. We favour the recommendation to include children adopted under the age of 13. On language instruction, I have to be more critical. The committee recommended that instruction in English or French be made available to all immigrants, regardless of sex, marital or family status. This is how it should be, but unfortunately the Government is content not to take action. It merely points out what is available and notes the complaints of immigrant women's services that there is discrimination in access. It is not just immigrant women's groups who have been complaining, it is all women's organizations who have been complaining about the Catch-22 situation. The immigrant woman goes in to get language training and she is told she is not the chief breadwinner so she cannot get it. She goes out and gets a job anyway, and she is told she does need language training because she managed to get a job. Yet it may be very poorly paying because she does not have English or French and is not able to compete for jobs which require one of our official languages. Unfortunately, the Government is unduly content with the status quo.

We have seen considerable improvement over-all. The Government has accepted a number of important recommendations. However, I want to refer to a few areas which various ciizens' groups have been raising as concerns with us. The Evangelical Fellowship of Canada is concerned that the religious diversity we have is not being considered at all. The report is far too much oriented to individual rights and does not take into account the fact that individuals live in communities. They are not isolated, but their status and the contribution they make to our society is very much influenced through collective action by people with common beliefs, not just as isolated atoms in society.

Religious beliefs in institutions have not been taken seriously enough for the concerns of value groups. For example, it is not just that employers must make provision for employees' beliefs; there should be recognition that some employers themselves have religious beliefs collectively. They provide social services, missions, public interest groups, publishers, children's aid societies. They are concerned, for example that Jewish Family Services be able to continue to place children in Jewish families. They are worried about their legal status.

Bona fide occupational requirements sometimes miss the point that it is not that an exception should be made, but that it should be understood that a particular community is making a real contribution and it is a reasonable expectation that the people working in it share those views.

Citizens For Public Justice raises a number of similar concerns for collective community rights. It calls for religious agencies to be treated equally in their differences, that they have equal status with secular agencies, not just the right for individuals to be free of discrimination. They argue that freedom of association, freedom of conscience and freedom of religion should be guaranteed not just on an individual level but upheld and recognized at the collective level.

In cases such as funding for non-governmental organizations for economic development projects, art projects, refugee relief, or social services, they should not be required to sacrifice their values or beliefs as a condition for funding. It should be seen as part of the contribution they make. I must say that as a social democrat and sociologist by background I have some sympathy with the fact that we do not pay enough attention to the needs of communities. We are sometimes too oriented to the individual in isolation. Yet we have communities which are part of the fabric of Canada and their needs must also be respected.

Before closing I want to turn to another question which is really not treated adequately in this report, that is economic equality. The thrust of the recommendations of the subcommittee is towards the removal of barriers. It is much more modest on positive measures to catch up.

• (1740)

Our society is still one with enormous differences between income and wealth. For example, there are enormous differences between the native woman who does not have a job and looks after her children—and many of these women live in absolute destitution—and the white male professional or business executive who has a very high income. The differences between these groups are actually increasing in our society today. There is no way that the children of such a native woman can compete on an equal basis with the children of the much more favoured white male.

These differences are reflected in measures which increase sales tax and deindex the family allowance and the child tax credit, while the capital gains exemption provides substantial additional privileges to those who do not need them.

There are significant sectors of our society still living in poverty and there are enormous economic barriers preventing those people from developing their talents and achieving a decent standard of living. We are faced with 10 per cent unemployment and low wages for the working poor. There is the welfare trap that keeps people on the welfare rolls even though they want to work.

Many people are homeless and must line up at food depots for their food. There is a serious shortage of affordable housing. The provisions in this report do not deal with these questions.

One misses the point by suggesting that a poor person who is sleeping at a shelter will not be discriminated against when looking for a job the next day. That person will not have the same strength to look for a job when living such a life.

We will not deal with the problems of those who suffer greatly in our society by simply removing these legal barriers and setting up programs for them.

The Towards Equality report attempts to present a bright future but we must realize that the sun does not shine on all of our citizens equally. There are a million poor children in Canada. There are poor elderly women and natives whose livelihood has been destroyed by pollution.

We must take the next and far more difficult step toward equality by attacking the economic barriers so that all children will grow up being provided with the necessities of life, so that the elderly will not live in destitution, working people will be able to support themselves adequately, and housing will mean the right to real, permanent homes rather than a shelter for the night. There will be adequate support for the disabled and unemployed so they will not have to line up at food depots.

Furthermore, this does not necessarily represent the kind of equality we are discussing, but can be achieved without the legal equality, as such. We are witnessing increasing inequality while those at the bottom are still suffering enormously.

While I share in concurring in this report, I believe we still have a long way to go to achieve real, legal equality and to establish the programs that will advance that equality so that we may address the much more difficult questions of economic barriers that keep some of our Canadian citizens a far distance from sharing in all the benefits of being part of this country.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member is a strong advocate of equality for women and a strong advocate of equality itself. Her comments covered many topics, one of which the legislative committee on the Pension Benefits Standards Act is struggling with right now. It is the question of unisex annuity tables.

The committee has heard evidence on unisex annuity tables to the effect that, if such a program is instituted, it will represent discrimination against men with the money purchase type of pension because women would then receive a benefit which they are not receiving now and men would receive less of a benefit than they are receiving now under the present annuity table. Perhaps the Hon. Member could help me in struggling with this deliberation.

The Pension Benefits Standards Act also deals with the defined benefit type of pension. The testimony we have heard indicates that that discriminates against women because men and women receive an equal benefit and if they make the same contribution, women will not benefit to the same extent as men.

Will the Hon. Member give us her opinion on the subject, particularly with respect to the defined benefit kind of pension? How could we solve the problem of having no discrimination against women in that situation?

Ms. McDonald: With respect to the question of unisex annuity tables, recommendations in favour of them have been made by women's organizations for at least two decades.

I believe the Hon. Member's point is that women live longer than men. That is why we are given a lower pension. The principle was that equality could be achieved by giving women a smaller pension over a longer period.

However, we do not discriminate on any other basis. There are differences in expected life span by race and occupation, but there is no discrimination on those bases and we would consider it quite inappropriate to discriminate on those bases.

It seems ridiculous that we should discriminate on the basis of sex. People often do not understand that the main reason for differences between women and men in life expectancy is that women are more sensible in their lifestyles. They do not booze it up as much, they do not smoke as much, they do not drive race cars and they do not shoot their friends on hunting trips.

There are behavioural differences. One would have to discriminate on the basis of behaviour and have different pensions for drinkers and non-drinkers, smokers and non-smokers, people who drive fast cars and people who drive slow cars. If one took those behavioural differences into account there would probably not be much difference between men and women.

I simply say that we should eliminate those factors. For instance, people whose religion does not allow them to drink or smoke are not given a smaller pension because they will live longer. Why should there be that distinction on the basis of sex?

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Member certainly dealt quite fully with the issue of the money purchase type of pension in the unisex annuity tables.

What is her comment with respect to the argument that the defined benefit pension discriminates against women? Does she have any suggestions as to how we can get around that problem without doing away with the defined benefit type of pension? Would she suggest, perhaps, that we should scrap the defined benefit kind of pension and only have a money purchase kind of pension?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have not received representations as to the nature of the discrimination. Therefore, there would be no point in my trying to respond to objections which I have not received.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to emphasize what the Government has done and what it proposes to do to provide opportunities to Canadians and implement an equality and social justice program for all.

I also want to emphasize at the outset that the Government recognizes in its response paper that Governments cannot do it all. Governments cannot by themselves achieve equality. It is Canadians and groups of Canadians who establish our priorities. It is Canadians themselves who set the mores of society and what is acceptable and what is not.

May I point out that it is now three years since April of 1982. Those years have passed rather quickly. They have also passed without any preparation by the previous Government for the day when Section 15 would become law. I point that out specifically for those Hon. Members sitting opposite. The delay of time was intended to give Governments time to review and amend the already existing laws on the books, to reflect and prepare for the compliance of this provision, namely Section 15. All of us at the time of implementation of the Charter of Rights wanted Canada to become a leader in the world in individual rights and freedoms. It was left to this Government, and to the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), and I want to pay tribute to the Minister of Justice whose initiative led to the release of a discussion paper on Equality Issues in Federal Law and subsequently to the appointment of a parliamentary task force on equality rights.

The task force undertook its task boldly and aggressively. It knew, as we all knew, that while the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms had raised Canadian expectations to a new high, it was the assurance of equality and non-discrimination as referred to in Section 15 which would touch all of us at home and in the workplace. It was to open the door to anyone and to help others less fortunate to take advantage of their potential.

As the task force travelled across the country to hear from Canadians on the issues raised in the discussion papers as well as on other issues, it took a broad and generous view of Section 15. It had no inhibitions in its approach to the subject of equality. Those persons appearing before it did not care about jurisdictions or the niceties of language. This was their forum, and the task force responded in the 1985 recommendation report entitled Equality for All.

Section 15 in fact provides for guarantees; equality before the law, equality under the law, equal protection of the law and equal benefit of the law. The Government has interpreted this to mean that inequality can be found not only on the face of the law but also in the way the law is administered. The Government recognized in its early discussion paper that the provisions of the Charter might be breached by systematic or adverse impact discrimination. Seemingly neutral laws which have an adverse impact on individuals because of their race, sex or religion, for example, have been found by the courts and the Canadian Human Rights Commission as well as the Ontario Human Rights code, to be contrary to the provisions of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights.

There appears to be no doubt either that while Section 15 expressly enumerates certain prohibitive grounds of discrimination; race, national or ethnic origin, and so on, other non-enumerated grounds worthy of constitutional protection would also come within provisions of this section. Thus it was that sexual orientation, marital and family status, were referred to in the Department's discussion paper and addressed by the parliamentary task force.

At the time of the constitutional debate there were those in the country and in this Parliament who felt that the incorporation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms into our Constitution would give the courts too much power and authority. The task force emphasized the flexibility of Parliament and pointed out that this was the preferred means of dealing with inequality and discrimination.

It is this open and progressive attitude of the Government which has defined its approach to equality for all. The Government cannot and does not approach equality issues on the basis of doing the legal minimum. Instead, it has addressed these issues in the context of policies on equality and social justice.

One area in which it is clear the Government has dealt with equality issues as part of larger policies on equality and social justice involves disabilities. The Government is moving on a number of fronts to ensure that persons with mental and physical disabilities can participate fully and equally in Canadian society, that they can participate and make contributions to the economic as well as social goodwill of our peoples. The Government has announced that Canada will participate in the United Nations decade of disabled persons, and Canada has adopted the world program of action concerning disabled persons. In doing so, the Government has recognized that respect for the dignity of individuals with disabilities means that they must be afforded equal opportunities. The Government has also recognized the loss to the Canadian economy when the full potential and abilities of persons with disabilities are not utilized.

Ms. Copps: I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) because I believe he has raised a number of good points. I would like to ask the Speaker, given that there are a number of Hon. Members, including the Hon. Member for York (Mr. Kaplan) and myself, who are most interested in this issue, and given that there are only a couple of minutes left in the sitting today, I wonder if we could have the unanimous consent of the House to continue the debate for one more hour so that we might explore these issues? It is a very important issue.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion made by the Hon. Member but I am afraid I cannot give unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) has the floor for debate.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping that unanimous consent of the House could be given to me to finish this very well prepared speech.

As part of the broad concern with improving opportunities for disabled persons, a parliamentary Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped was established last year. This committee will provide a continuing and public forum for issues relating to disabled persons. That will be another influential voice in the development of programs and policies affecting disabled persons.

Last December, the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) announced new resources for improving the status of disabled persons. The Government has said that so far as it is concerned, persons with mental retardation or impairment, learning disabilities and mental disorders are, and must be, protected from discrimination. In this connection, I note that the Treasury Board of the Government, as the employer for the Public Service, has revised its definition of disability to reflect this very comprehensive approach in its affirmative action policy and programs.

The Government as well has launched several other initiatives. For instance, last year the Treasury Board directed that federal facilities be upgraded to meet the barrier-free design standards adopted by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of everyone, I would like to wish you a very Happy Easter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 4, this House stands adjourned until Monday, April 7, 1986, at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 331-1, 331-4, 331-5, 331-6, 331-8, 331-10, 331-21, 331-22, 331-25, 331-26, 331-31, 331-32, 331-35, 331-36, 331-38, 331-39 and 331-41.

For the information of the House, these deal with the Morgentaler Clinic petitions.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition signed by 34 residents of the national capital region as well as some from Montreal who are opposed to the National Capital Commission's proposal to convert the Mile Circle into embassies.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present four petitions from the Prince Albert region and other regions in Saskatchewan. All of them refer to the Government's inability to deal with the problem of youth skills and employment options for youth in Canada. They recommend that the Katimavik program be reinstated fully.

ACCEPTABILITY OF TESTIMONY OF CHILDREN

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table petitions bearing over 1,000 names. The petitioners seek amendments to the Criminal Code, the Canada Evidence Act and the Young Offenders Act to allow children's testimony in cases of sexual abuse.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I also have petitions from Windsor, St. John's, Corner Brook, Gander, Toronto, Sydney and Glace Bay, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Summerland, Kelowna and Vancouver. All of them are protesting the cancellation of Katimavik and seek to have it restored.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post) moved that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to rise in the House today to acquaint Hon. Members with a very important piece of legislation in the eyes of this Government, which I would even describe as a major economic policy measure.

Bill C-91 to amend the Combines Investigation Act will also give Canada a market charter, a new charter better suited to current conditions. Mr. Speaker, the view of the Government is that the private sector or the market place must be the real driving force behind the most equitable sharing of resources, economic growth and job creation. We do know that the market system within a competitive framework paves the way for a dynamic and flourishing economy. We also know that a sound economy is absolutely essential if we are to maintain and improve the social programs which are the hallmark of Canadian society. To sustain and spur our economy, we have to revamp our major economic statutes and gear them to the requirements of a modern market place. They must also reflect an economy which is and will be ever more closely linked to international trade of goods and services.

When legislation on competition was first drafted in 1889, Mr. Speaker, Canada was barely entering the industrial age. With the passage of time, however, we became leading players on the international scene in such sectors as raw materials, energy, aluminum, newsprint and telecommunications. Our exports now account for about 30 per cent of our Gross National Product.

The report of the Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada underlined the importance of international trade for the Canadian economy by saying that, as much as possible, Canada should use international trade to ensure a continued and aggressive competition on the domestic market.

Mr. Speaker, economically oriented major statutes, such as the laws on competition, bankruptcy, corporations, copyright and trademarks provide the essential tools for orderly trade as they establish the basic rules for a competitive and fair market-based economy. However, most of these instruments are old, inoperative and out of date. Our rules are obsolete, inadequate, and in some cases, more an obstacle than an incentive to productivity. Canadian businesses will have difficulty in taking up the challenge to claim their fair share of international markets and facing the impact of international competition on the domestic market if they are paralyzed by inadequate legislation. Moreover, if our businesses are disadvantaged, all Canadians will suffer.

I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of this House have a clear and pressing responsibility. They must update these statutes, eliminate such obstacles to growth and economic prosperity and see to it that businesses and consumers are treated fairly on the market.

[English]

Hon. Members of this House are well aware that Parliament has tried several times before to enact amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. Each attempt has ended in failure. This time the proposed Competition Act enjoys an unprecedented degree of support throughout the business community, especially with small businesses, consumers and labour interests. The Financial Post, for one, in its editorial of February 1, 1986, stated, and I quote:

> This is, after all, the best opportunity yet after 16 years of seemingly endless debate to bring in much needed reform. The chief virtue of Bill C-91 is that it's a sensible, pragmatic document that will do the job without going overboard . . . like highway speed limits, it simply sets a reasonably clear and enforceable standard of conduct that reflects a broad social consensus.

As for the publication Les Affaires, Mr. Speaker, it concluded that Bill C-91 maintains a fair balance between free competition and the need for businesses to re-organize to become competitive on international markets.

Some interested parties will probably want to express specific concerns to the committee responsible for considering this bill. Nevertheless, they accept both the need for change and the main thrust of the bill. What is important, Mr.

Speaker, is that they recognize the need to take this opportunity, to roll up their sleeves, to amend the Act and to put an end to the uncertainty and the frustration this Act has caused them during the last 18 years.

[English]

As the Consumers' Association of Canada stated after I tabled this Bill in December: "The new Competition Act promises real progress for consumers and is a major improvement over current legislation".

The purpose of Bill C-91, as stated in the purpose clause in the Bill, is to maintain and encourage competition in Canada. However, the clause makes it abundantly clear that competition is not to be considered an end in itself. Rather, competition is sought for its effects on the Canadian economy.

There are four main objectives set out in the Bill. The first objective is to promote the efficiency and adaptability of the Canadian economy. This law will help the expansion of the economy and ensure that it can adapt to changing market conditions and create new jobs.

The second objective is to give us a law which allows Canadian companies to compete effectively in world markets and better meet foreign competition in the Canadian market. The Government is committed to making the Canadian economy world competitive.

The third objective in maintaining and promoting competition is to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises have an equitable opportunity to participate in the Canadian economy, and there is an urgent need for this, Mr. Speaker.

The fourth but not the least objective is to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices. As such, this objective becomes the common denominator in what we are trying to achieve. This is the ultimate objective of the Bill.

It is a law which will benefit all Canadians. A competition law which measures up in these respects will benefit every sector of our economy. It will benefit small business by promoting fairness in the marketplace. It will benefit larger businesses by placing greater emphasis on efficiency and international competition. It will also benefit consumers by giving them a marketplace where there is a choice, which will result in better service, products and prices.

We do not have this kind of competition law now and there has been no such law for a long time. As I said when I tabled this Bill we now have before us, the existing law belongs in a museum, certainly not in the marketplace. Canada has changed tremendously since 1910, but not the Combines Investigation Act. Except for a few alterations, it is the same Act our predecessors passed in this House 76 years ago.

As for being different, Mr. Speaker, the world certainly was at that time, at least from an economic standpoint, as well as from all others, when the present legislation was originally developed. For instance, the population of Canada was only seven million, that of Montreal, 470,000, that of Vancouver, 124,000, and Canadian exports totalled only $274 million compared with $91 billion today.

However, Mr. Speaker, the economic context is not the only thing to have changed. There is also the legal environment. There was no Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms at the time.

In short, Mr. Speaker, that Act is now obsolete with respect to a number of important aspects, and this has become a very serious problem. Our prosperity as a nation depends on the quality of our economic participation in both domestic and external markets. We cannot afford the handicap of an "out of sync", inadequate Competition Act.

Those are the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, this Government has decided to revise the Competition Act, as indicated in the Throne Speech, in the budgets brought down by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and in the statement made by the House Leader on regulatory reform. This legislation is the cornerstone of the Government initiatives designed to make Canada competitive internationally. For the first time, we will have a Competition Act that will reflect the special importance of international trade to the Canadian economy.

Canada is first and foremost a trading nation, and we must make sure that the Act accurately reflects that fact. This is why, Mr. Speaker, the preamble to Bill C-91 clearly states that the purpose of the Act is to expand opportunities for Canadian participation in world markets while at the same time recognizing the role of foreign competition in Canada. The importance of international competition is also emphasized in the proposals concerning mergers and specialization agreements. Moreover, unnecessary constraints resulting from the provisions relating to conspiracy would be abolished to encourage rather than hinder the establishment of export consortiums. Big is not necesseraly bad. In fact, when debating international markets and related goals, the bigger the stronger, the bigger the better.

Although they are strong in relation to the size of our economy, many Canadian businesses when involved on the global stage do not have the clout to compete efficiently with their foreign counterparts. The new provisions would indeed help Canadian businesses face up to their foreign competitors, both domestically and internationally. I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to turn to the major amendments put forward in this legislation—

In an area of law that relies so heavily on economics and business judgment it is very important to have a decision-making body that has the expertise to deal with complex competition cases while still providing the necessary legal protections. We propose to create an entirely new adjudicatory body, the competition tribunal. The purpose of this tribunal will be to adjudicate non-criminal competition matters. Its membership will comprise judges and lay experts in the areas of business, economics and public affairs.

This proposal addresses one of the problems that we have recognized and have had to live with for many years, the complexity of competition cases. Typically, the questions concern probable effects—future effects—and implications of various business activities, questions which have to be considered in their full commercial and economic context. For example: Is a given practice likely to reduce competition in the years ahead? Is this a situation where small market size makes it desirable to permit companies to specialize or to rationalize their production? Would a particular merger result in efficiency gains which would offset any negative effects on competition? Answers to questions of this type usually require the application not only of legal expertise but expertise in how the market-place functions.

I should add that these difficulties have been recognized and commented upon publicly by distinguished members of the judiciary itself. For instance, some 25 years ago Mr. Justice Spence expressed his view that: "A court is not trained to act as an arbitrator of economics." This problem has been addressed in other countries as well. Similar tribunals exist in both Sweden and in the United Kingdom.

Our proposal is based on a recognition that two needs have to be addressed. One is to draw on relevant expertise. The other is to do so in a process that is, and is seen to be, fair, open and independent. I believe the tribunal meets both requirements. Its membership will be balanced. It will include judges appointed from the Federal Court. It will also include people appointed from the world of business and economics.

To ensure fairness and consistency the tribunal will be chaired by a judge. All law appointments will be vetted by an advisory council appointed by Order in Council and made up of representatives of big and small business, consumer groups, the legal community and labour. This body will ensure that all lay members have the necessary expertise to carry out their statutory duties.

The tribunal will adjudicate. It will not have the powers now held by the Restrictive Trade Practises Commission to authorize searches and subpoenas or to conduct inquiries of its own. On matters of law there will be a full right of appeal from the tribunal to the Federal Court of Appeal.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Bill also provides for a comprehensive change of approach in the area of mergers and their impact on competition. In the first place, those moves would be considered as coming under civil law rather than criminal law, as is now the case under the present statute.

For years we have had the opportunity to realize that the criminal law is quite inappropriate where that kind of operations are concerned. Its inherent principles, procedures and penalties are simply out of place. Mergers and other relevant practices are trade practices in the normal course of business activities which, under examination, may or may not affect competition. Our objective is not to mete prison terms nor to levy fines but to protect public interest by setting out specific game rules based on realities and enforce them strictly thereafter.

Criminal law is not only an inadequate tool for analyzing the consquences of amalgamations but again such a procedure, Mr. Speaker, has been shown to be entirely ineffective.

As the Hon. Members know, in criminal law, it has to be proven beyond any reasonable doubt that there has been a violation. It is really asking too much, Mr. Speaker,to assess the prospective consequences of an amalgamation. In other words, how can it be stated beyond any reasonable doubt that a takeover will have effects detrimental to public interest?

It has often been said, that economics is not an accurate science. In spite of this, under the present legislation, a violation has to be proven beyond any reasonable doubt. This is truly inconsistent. Therefore, we should not be surprised that, in the past 75 years, there has never been any conviction on the grounds of amalgamation challenged under the present legislation.

The new legislation surely provides a better procedure for solving our problems. It empowers the Competition Tribunal to prohibit amalgamations or to set specific conditions whenever they are deemed to restrict competition without increasing efficiency.

For the first time, still with respect to amalgamations, the rule of international competition in the Canadian economy will be specifically recognized in the legislation. In 1910, the year when the present legislation was passed, Canada was protected in different ways against international competition either through customs tariff or tariff barriers. Today, many of our industries are directly exposed to international competition both on our domestic and foreign markets.

Thanks to these amendments, Mr. Speaker, when the time comes to rule on the legality of a merger or take-over, the Tribunal will be bound to take into account the extent of foreign involvement in our domestic market.

The new legislation provides also for an exemption in the case of joint ventures which do not limit competition in any way, including research and development projects and natural resources development. Agreements of this kind are especially important for this industry. Most joint ventures do not lessen competition in any way. On the contrary, they bring about gains in efficiency by allowing temporarily joined corporations to share the high risks involved in projects requiring major investments. Joint ventures likely to generate benefits of this kind will be expressly exempted from the provisions of this Act. On the other hand, joint ventures suspected of limiting competition will be subjected to a review by the Competition Tribunal which can then order any remedial action deemed necessary.

Finally, we propose to amend the legislation to make it necessary for merging corporations to submit a prior notice when their assets or gross revenues exceed $500 million. We would then be in a position to examine the pros and cons of major mergers which are most likely to limit competition substantially, before they become a reality. Such a prior notice is provided for in competition legislation in many other countries including Japan, West Germany, Australia and the United States. The omission of such a clause in our own legislation would constitute in my view a major flaw.

In short, Mr. Speaker, these proposals will provide Canada with a legislation which will adequately govern mergers, a workable instrument which will encourage competition while not unduly affecting the activities of Canadian corporations abroad.

• (1130)

[English]

We also propose to repeal the existing criminal law provisions that deal with monopolies and replace them with civil law provisions dealing with the abuse of market power. The reasons for this change are in large part the same ones that apply to our proposals on mergers.

As written, the Act can now deal only with the most blatant and absolutely serious abuses of market power. Even within such stiff parameters, it does not work well. This is an area in which competition law must be effective if there ever was such an area.

Nevertheless, the law must explicitly recognize that in a small, open economy such as ours, some firms may well achieve a market dominance. The law must allow those who are doing a better job to continue to succeed. The problem arises when a dominant firm abuses its power and takes action to prevent or lessen fair and healthy competition. Small businesses which provide so many Canadian jobs are especially vulnerable to this type of behaviour.

The new Act will serve as an effective deterrent to these practices and will give small businesses protection and the fair chance they deserve. First, the law must be clear. As Hon. Members will see, the sectors regarding abuse of dominant position will clearly spell out what constitutes anti-competitive behaviour and will provide examples. At the same time, we will have a law that can be applied more precisely.

We must be able to distinguish between market success based on superior performance and success built on unfair market muscle. No public interest is served, for instance, by preventing businesses from reducing prices and gaining a larger market share because they have found ways to keep their costs down. However, we do have an interest in acting against dominant firms that use predatory practices to wipe out an inconvenient competitor. To make this distinction and others like it, the new law provides for a defence based on superior competitive performance.

[Translation]

Under the new provisions, Mr. Speaker, any conspiracy to limit competition will remain a major crime. Unfortunately, the current legislation is again quite inadequate. First of all, it is of doubtful effectiveness, because it does not always discourage real conspirators. Also, its wording is so vague that it could stop agreements, especially in the export industry, which, in the final analysis, would prove beneficial to our economy. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we need legislation to block these two loopholes. Any price fixing or competition limiting agreement would weaken the economy. It is therefore necessary to provide for sufficiently severe penalties to discourage people from concluding competition limiting agreements. On the other hand, we also need legislation which does not stop Canadian corporations from concluding agreements that are desirable to tackle international markets.

As a solution to the first problem, we propose to increase the severity of the law by increasing the maximum penalty in the case of a conspiracy from $1 million to $5 million. We will also make it clear both to businessmen and the courts that any conspiracy to restrict trade is intolerable.

We also propose to amend the legislation with a view to eliminating the uncertainty surrounding the mens rea, the intention to commit a crime that must be proven and the agreements the existence of which is inferred, that is, the weight the Courts should give for instance to circumstantial evidence in such cases.

To deal with the second problem, we propose to amend the legislation in such a way that it could adapt to particular circumstances. We do not want to interfere with corporations which are anxious to sign agreements that are clearly in the public interest. Several examples come to mind: agreements between corporations operating within a tight market for the purpose of specializing in different lines of products, or agreements for the purpose of exporting goods to foreign countries. The new legislation provides that the Competition Tribunal may allow specilization agreements for the purpose of increasing efficiency. These exemptions would apply both to services and manufactured goods.

Mr. Speaker, another amendment deals with the status of banking institutions and Crown corporations with respect to competition legislation. At the present time, agreements and interbanking mergers are governed only by the Bank Act. As far as Crown corporations are concerned, they are not, as a rule, submitted to the provisions of the legislation governing competition. A question is constantly raised: Why should banking institutions and Crown corporations enjoy a status different from that of other industries? So far, I have not heard any satisfactory explanation.

Under our proposed amendments, all agreements and interbanking mergers would come under the Act governing competition. Crown corporations which are competing with the private sector would also be subject to this new legislation. Because of these new amendments, Crown corporations would have to abide by the same regulations as the private corporations with which they compete. Of course, regulated activities would not be affected by these changes.

Another one of the main thrusts of the reform proposed in this Bill is the transformation of the enforcement mechanisms. If we want the Act to meet its objectives, it must be possible to enforce it, and to enforce it efficiently, powers of investigation are essential. Many Members will recall the famous Southam affair which established a precedent a few years ago. At the time, the Supreme Court declared inoperative the powers of search and seizure conferred by the present statute. The Court came to this conclusion partly because the fact of conferring to a single organization, namely the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission of Canada, the power both to make decisions and to authorize searches and investigations meant that the organization did not fulfill the requirement for impartiality prescribed in the Act.

As I have already said, the tribunal proposed in the Bill will have only decision-making powers. The regular courts will be empowered to issue search warrants and summonses. We believe that these changes will protect the individual rights enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms while providing the tools required to enforce the law properly.

[English]

In conclusion, I am not the first Minister in this portfolio to come before the House with a Bill to amend this Act. I am not even the second or the third, but I hope I will be the last to do so for quite a while. Indeed, I am optimistic that Parliament will make these proposals law. I am optimistic for several reasons. One reason is the consensus which exists over the need to put an end to the long process of reform. I am optimistic because we are not starting from scratch. All the time and work spent in attempting to change the legislation over the years has not been wasted. The problems and options have been studied in depth and in detail by this Government and by previous Governments.

While there was a good foundation, there were some pieces of the puzzle which still had to be put in place. I believe they are in place now. There is much in the Bill that is new. It is a Bill which bears the imprint of the Government's belief in the free market economy. However, in formulating these proposals, we do not intend to reinvent the wheel. Where the previous work was sound, we have built upon it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we did not prepare the provisions of this Bill with undue haste. The amendments tabled before the House were discussed, prepared and finalized through a series of consultations which began as soon as this Government came to power in September 1984. Those concerned know about these amendments. Organizations representing Canadians from all spheres of society, including business, consumer groups, unions, universities and jurists have been informed of all planned changes. We ensured that this would be done. In response to the working paper distributed in March 1985, we received over 100 submissions from groups and individuals throughout the country. We also requested and received the input of an advisory committee including representatives from business, economic and legal circles created for this purpose in the spring of 1985. Mr. Speaker, the work carried out by this group was very useful in enabling us not to lose sight of our objective during this entire process.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank sincerely the members of this Committee for volunteering their time and for their major contribution to this Bill on competition. I would like to give the names of the members of this Committee. First, Mr. Thomas Kendell, corporate lawyer in Newfoundland, Mr. Marcel Côté, President of Secor Inc., analysis consultant, Mrs. Diane Cohen, well-known journalist, Mr. William McKeown, partner of the Stephens, French & McKeown firm, Mr. Brian Finlay, partner of Weir & Foulds, Mr. Ron Atkey, partner of Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt, Mr. Grant Murray, Vice-President of IBM Canada Ltd., Mr. Alan Cooke, senior partner of Cook & Shandling, and Mr. Eric J. Rice, partner of Campbell, Froh, May & Rich.

Mr. Speaker, one of the aims of that consultation was to locate disagreements. We succeeded. Another aim was to try and settle those disputes and there again we were successful. Unanimity can seldom be reached but in my opinion, we have come as close as possible to a consensus. This has been achieved because many people have worked to develop it. It was attained through various reasonable and well-balanced proposals. The Bill protects the interests of all parties concerned in Canada, that is business people, unions and consumers.

Mr. Speaker, we are celebrating a dubious anniversary in 1986. Twenty years have already elapsed since the Economic Council of Canada examined the Combines Investigation Act.

The need is urgent and time is running out. We know what should be done. More than ever before, we agree on the steps to be taken. It is now time to act. This is, Mr. Speaker, what I am now proposing to this House today.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in the House today to talk about a matter which is of great interest to me, the competition policy. Of course, I am doing so on behalf of my colleague from Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) who is still convalescing and who would certainly have a lot to say in response to the remarks of the Minister.

As everybody knows, many Members of the Liberal Party who now sit on this side of the House have worked hard over the past 10 or 15 years to bring about a reform of the competition legislation.

Indeed, my desk mate, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), my colleague the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and I have all had our say in these concerted efforts to improve Canada's competition legislation. All three of us have tabled bills which came up for debate, and in one case in the mid seventies an affirmative vote enabled us to take a giant step towards improving the competition legislation.

Two more of our colleagues, first the Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), and my colleague from Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), were also Ministers of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at one time or another. In fact, the Leader of the Opposition was Canada's first Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The Official Opposition has no fewer than five Members who have held that portfolio, so we are quite prepared and qualified to analyse this admittedly very complex measure introduced by the Minister, Bill C-91.

And I want to say that we intend to analyse this Bill because, unfortunately, there have been too few successful attempts to reform this legislation, and it has always been a rather laborious process.

That is why I share the Minister's view that, for a number of reasons, this reform is long overdue and we must act without further delay. The Minister said earlier that he would like this Bill to be adopted quickly. Why did he wait 16 months before introducing the legislation? The consultation process surely was important. We recognize that the Minister as soon as he took office had to do some sort of consultation. But consultation is no excuse for inaction. And now, 16 months later, we are faced with a Bill that has its origin in the legislation that was carefully prepared by myself early in 1981-82 and introduced in this House by my colleague, the then Minister Judy Erola, as Bill C-29.

[English]

Let me say very clearly and unequivocally that Bill C-91 is a welcome Bill. However, we must look at it and ask ourselves whether it is better than the present legislation dealing with competition. In many respects, I believe it is. In many other respects it is not adequate. We need to do the job in order to deal effectively with true competition in the market-place This legislation is far from being adequate to deal and to cope effectively with the current situation.

[Translation]

I find it unfortunate that Mrs. Erola's Bill has been "toryfied", if I may use the term. It is my feeling the Minister bowed before big business pressures and recommendations. The Bill he is introducing today does not really meet the needs of consumers and the multitude of small Canadian businesses that are constantly being bullied and crushed by big Canadian businesses.

• (1150)

Considering that Bill C-91 is better than nothing, but not enough to do the job effectively, we, the Liberal Party of Canada, will seek to improve and to strengthen the Bill by amendments based on proper analysis within the framework of the legislative committee. We are committed to the improvement of Bill C-91 and we will react negatively to all amendments that could weaken the Bill even further. Our objective will be to strengthen this legislation substantially.

Why is there a need for such a piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker? Competition is the basis of the private enterprise system. Economic theory states that the more competition there is in the market-place, the better it is for everyone: prices are lower due to the wide choice of firms producing the same products and small business, provided it can face the competition, can assume its part of the market and improve its products and services. Consumers will then benefit from low prices and a wide variety of products from which to choose.

[Translation]

The healthier the competition, the better it is for everybody. For instance, in the '60s we started to relate competition and efficiency. Logic would have it that the competition legislation should help and encourage maintaining conditions conducive to efficient competition. As a consequence, competitive and therefore efficient markets were considered to be those that could allocate those resources that are the most urgently needed by Canadian society with the utmost efficiency. From there flowed the principle that efficient allocation of resources results in the highest possible level of material life. Of course the highest possible level of material life for all Canadians was the goal in the '60s, and as far as this party is concerned it still has to be, more than ever, our first and foremost goal. This points to the significance of efficient legislation in the area of economic competition.

[English]

On the other hand, when there is little competition product choice is poor and, in general, prices are high, sometimes excessively high. Consumers and small businesses are hit the hardest. I know the Government has what we call——favourable preconceived opinion for Canada's oil industry.

[English]

But whatever this Government thinks, for the majority of the people the prime example of an non-competitive sector in the economy is the oil industry. There is little competition, choice is poor and prices are absurdly high. In a country such as Canada, where many of us depend on gas to travel the great distances that separate different communities, the high price of gas is a true scandal. Consumers and the Canadian economy as a whole are hurt by the oil industry.

Mr. Speaker, when world oil prices go up, that increase is reflected at the pumps the same day or the day after. But when oil prices decline, as it is now the case, we have to wait for weeks or months before prices go down at service stations.

Mr. Speaker, the situation now prevailing in Quebec's oil industry is sheer madness. How can it be explained that a refinery is taken over in order that it will not be operated afterwards by its buyers? That flies in the face of logic. It is clear that the purchase of such a plant is normally aimed at operating it. But we know the Ultramar Corporation bought the Gulf refinery in Eastend Montreal, not to operate it, but to shut it down. Well, the Gulf-Ultramar deal is a downright political scandal which weighs heavily on the back of the present Conservative Government.

Why the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) did not back his Director of Investigations to prevent that deal is incomprehensible. I maintain that the Minister did not do his duty. He has lost the confidence of Canadian consumers. And the Bill he is introducing today is another example of his subservience to the large Canadian companies. What reason did he have to defend Ultramar instead of the consumers of the Montreal area?

The concentration in that industry is so real and important that the Canadian Oil Products Marketing Association claims that Canadian consumers paid $302 million more than they should have for gasoline just for the month of January 1986. Yet, independent companies in that field are not afraid of competition and have indeed long been calling for a better competition policy to protect them from oil multinationals. Why is it the opposite in the case of multinationals and other large producers which do not want good competition legislation in Canada? And why is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs protecting oil multinationals?

When the former Combines Investigations Director, Mr. Bertrand, tabled his report incriminating oil companies, I was Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I publicly backed the Investigations Director, Mr. Bertrand. I was in attendance when he gave his press conference and charged the large oil companies of Canada on the basis of vast and bulky information. I never failed in my duty to back the Director of Investigations. But what about the present Minister who went in hiding for weeks, who refused to make public the O'Farrell report, written by the present Director of Combines Investigations? When this civil servant, Mr. O'Farrell, published his report, the Minister simply said that it contained personal views and that he himself did not want to get involved. Now, it is an absolute shame for a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to refuse to back and defend the Director of Combines Investigations. If the Director is no good, let him go, let him be given the sack, let him be replaced. But if the Director is doing his job in a decent and conscientious way, then the Minister must back him publicly in his action. And I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister did not do his duty and chose to protect multinational companies rather than backing his Director of Investigations and protecting Canadian consumers.

As it stands, our competition law is excessively weak compared to those of other coutries. Let us take the American situation as an example. The Americans have one of the best competition laws in the world, which the oil companies in the United States must obey, a far cry from what exists here in Canada. We should therefore not be surprised, Mr. Speaker, to see that gas prices are much lower in the United States than they are here and that any reduction in the world prices is immediately passed on to American consumers. We hope that situation will finally prevail in Canada. A thorough study of Bill C-91 makes one realize, unfortunately, that this legislation is toothless and will not fill the bill and protect Canadian consumers.

[English]

I would also ask the Minister if he believes that the lack of competition in our country has been beneficial to the Canadian economy. For example, in 1978 Canada's top one hundred non-financial enterprises owned 48.6 per cent of all the corporate assets in the country, compared to 30.6 per cent owned by the top one hundred firms in the United States. Canada has gone through a major recession and, consequently, the 100 largest corporations control more than half of the business assets of our country. Furthermore, there is no proof that these very large companies are now better or more efficient because of their size. In fact, they can be either better or worse, but, unfortunaely, there is no documented proof of their efficiency. However, it is certain that their size gives them a tremendous degree of power.

If you define power as the ability to say no, then these very large companies have a definite power, for they have been saying no to competition policy for over 15 years.

[Translation]

The attitude of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in the '70s, in particular, was almost ludicrous. The paranoiac reaction of its leaders to any amendement to the competition legislation completely discredited that body at the time. That is why other groups emerged as adequate and rational representatives of the interests of all business people in Canada. And I seize this opportunity of a debate on Bill C-91 to pay a tribute today to the Business Council on National Issues, particularly to Mr. Tom D'Aquino whose more realistic approach allowed a freer, more serene and serious debate on that matter. I do not hesitate to say that the BCNI has made considerable efforts to better understand the objectives of the Government and those of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to explain to various representatives of the business community that once and for all they had to reach an agreement with the Government with respect to competition legislation. I know quite well that the Minister has resumed the dialogue and carried on consultations with the business community.

[English]

I understand that Bill C-91 was drafted in collaboration with the Gang of five: the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, and the Canadian Bar Association. I have no objection to these associations being consulted. I think it was natural and that they should have been consulted.

Mr. Orlikow: Consulted? They wrote the Bill. They weren't consulted.

Mr. Ouellet: I share my colleague's fear in this regard. I would like to be assured by the Minister that the present amendments reflect not only their concerns and interests, but also those of the Canadian economy as a whole, of the small businesses of Canada and, more particularly, of the consumers of Canada. If the Minister is telling us that the business community is ready to accept the Bill because it is of their own making, I will be very uncomfortable, because if their participation has been, in large part, overwhelming, I would be afraid that Bill C-91 is strongly biased in favour of big businesses.

I am not the first one to acknowledge that a bias exists in favour of business communities in any country of the world. I am not saying that is always necessarily bad. However, we must be aware of the limitations this imposes upon us and acknowledge them. I want the Minister to be open, frank, and honest in this regard and to tell us who drafted the Bill.

As far back as the 18th century Adam Smith wrote in The Wealth of Nations:

> People of the same trade seldom meet together, even for merriment and diversion, but the conversation ends in a conspiracy against the public, or in some contrivance to raise prices. It is impossible indeed to prevent such meetings by any law which either could be executed, or would be consistent with liberty and justice.

More recently Mr. Justice Wyzanski of the United States Federal Court stated:

> Concentration of power, no matter how beneficially they appear to have acted, nor what advantages they seem to possess, are inherently dangerous.
> Their good behaviour in the past may not be continued; and if their strength were hereafter grasped by presumptuous hands, there would be no automatic check and balance from equal forces in the industrial market . . . . Dispersal of private economic power is thus one of the ways to preserve the system of private enterprise.

In view of the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the manner in which the Bill was drafted, and the historical perspective of Canadian competition policy, a serious examination of Bill C-91 in committee is of the utmost importance. The effects of concentration on the Canadian economy are already very serious. The economic sectors of the oil, publishing, newspaper, food, and retail industries have all seen less and less competition and increased, although subtle in some cases, control of markets. This is practically always to the detriment of the consumer. This is obvious. One need only look at what happened in some cases to conclude that it is abundantly clear that consumers have not benefited from this era of concentration in Canada.

It is also to the detriment of our Canadian economy. For example, mergers do not necessarily create more jobs, they often decrease the prices of shares. Neither is a merger guaranteed to bring about more productivity or efficiency. The simple truth is that in some cases it does, but in many other cases, unfortunately, it does not. Our approach and vision of the problem is greatly enhanced when we consider the real motor of the economy, that is small and medium businesses, and also the spending power of the consumers.

Small businesses create the bulk of jobs that exist in Canada. Therefore, we have an obligation to encourage and protect competition and fair trade practices in order to ensure the best conditions for an active and healthy market-place. The reality is that it is not consumers or individual consumers who complain to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about unethical competition. The vast majority of requests that come daily to the Department come from small businesses, entrepreneurs that are squeezed out by the big ones, that are badly treated by the large dominant firms in Canada.

Therefore, once again Adam Smith's perspective can help us in our endeavour. He states as follows:

> Monopoly—is a great enemy to good management which can never be universally established but in consequence of that free and universal competition which forces everybody to have recourse to it for the sake of self-defence.

The Liberal Party will be looking for indications that small businesses are protected from unfair competition by Bill C-91. We will not take only the word of the Minister, we will ask small business representatives to come before the committee and test this legislation as to whether it is efficient. If it is not we will have to amend it, because I believe it must be the essence of fair competition in the market-place; legislation that allows small businesses to prosper in Canada and multiply themselves, not to be squeezed out of business by the big ones.

I would now like to address briefly some of the aspects of the legislation, and the first has to do with the tribunal. Certainly the establishment of a tribunal can be said to be a positive step, since its members will be able to develop a certain expertise, but the issue of composition needs readdressing.

The judge on the tribunal will have great power in the decision-making process since he alone would be deciding on questions of law, and with lay members on questions of law and of fact. These lay members will be sitting on a part-time basis, opening the door to uncertainty as to their constant interest and commitment to the job, not saying anything of their total integrity. I do not think this system has been carefully considered and analysed.

I know that in Quebec, the tradition is that a judge is appointed to sit on some administrative courts. For instance, the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board is a judge sitting full-time on that administrative court for a five-, six- or seven-year term. And once he has completed his term, he returns to the bench, his independence as well as the security of his professional life being assured but we do not have this rather paradoxical mixture of the judiciary and the non-judiciary.

I just cannot believe that Canadian judges of the Federal Court are prepared to sit on such a hybrid body. Asking a justice of a Canadian Superior Court, a Federal Court or a provincial Supreme Court to sit on the Competition Tribunal for four, five, six or seven years would be an excellent idea, but I cannot accept that this justice should continue to exercise his responsibility in his own court, to which he has been appointed and with which he is expected to work. I find it absolutely inconceivable that those justices should be asked to do double duty as justices of both the Federal Court and the Competition Tribunal. And also that they should be asked to lead a panel, not of other judges but of business experts. It is my view that the Minister made an excellent move when he decided on setting up a tribunal, but also that he erred when he turned that tribunal into some half-judiciary, half non-judiciary body.

I also wonder whether that would not be unconstitutional, and it is my view that we should have legal opinions on that before proceeding with legislation that could lead to tremendous difficulties with the Supreme Court of Canada a few years down the road.

But what is more important still for us is who will be appointed to that tribunal. We feel it is essential that people of absolute independence and integrity be appointed to that tribunal, because they will have to pass judgment on economic matters involving millions, if not billions of dollars. And if people are asked on occasion to sit temporarily on a tribunal that will have to decide whether the takeover of two big Canadian corporations should procced or not, I feel that we will thus be exposing those people who in due course will be going back to their own fields of activity to earn an honourable living. It is my view that failing to provide for a fixed term of office and some employment stability in the case of those men and women who will be called upon to sit on that tribunal is a very serious blunder on the part of the Minister, one which I hope he will straighten out.

[English]

In addition, the appeal procedures are very broad and could go on for a very lengthy time. In economic matters, where time is of the essence, we must examine ways of speeding up, or limiting the time spent before our judicial institutions. Otherwise, opportunities may be missed both for companies and consumers.

Moreover, our party, the Liberal Party, is concerned that Bill C-91 will not allow third parties to appear directly before the Competition Tribunal. In my opinion, this represents an obvious lack of access to the tribunal in the context of a growing bureaucratization of the whole process.

I think that it is important for the Minister to accept an amendment which would allow third parties with a competitive interest to appear before the tribunal to express their views and present their arguments before this tribunal makes any decision which could impact on these third parties, who are not directly involved, but who, indirectly, could be very much affected by a transaction sanctioned by the tribunal.

• (1220)

[English]

The legislative committee would also want to look into class action as introduced in both Bills C-42 and C-13, to see once again if this would be a good way for third parties to seek redress, or if procedural rules cover this kind of action sufficiently.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in closing that it is important in my opinion that the part of the Act dealing with mergers be as strong as possible because it is obvious that it is the weak point of the existing statute. The proof is obvious. Since 1910, there has only been one conviction under this section of the Act.

I believe that we are right to transfer jurisdiction for mergers from criminal law to civil law. However, Bill C-91 has been weakened if we consider that its predecessor, Bill C-29, listed twelve factors to determine whether there had been a contravention of the Act.

I do not understand why the Minister has made these changes. The bill introduced by Mrs. Erola was much more important, serious and useful to prevent mergers which would be detrimental to Canadian economic interests.

Bill C-91 omits several considerations, as I have just mentioned. For instance, the difference in size between the business planning a merger and its competitors. There is also the past behaviour of a company to prevent competition, for instance, as well as the potential elimination of a solid competitor, any evidence of the intention to prevent or reduce competition, the possibility that the merger will result in a substantial decrease in supply or distribution sources, as well as the nature and the degree of change and innovation in the specific market, and finally, any possibility that the merger will promote competition. Why have these factors been eliminated from the legislation which Mrs. Erola had introduced? It seems to me that the legislator should provide a text which is as precise as possible to better inform the judges of his intentions. Is it that the Minister does not feel these factors are important? Is it that the Minister wants to instruct the Competition Tribunal not to take these factors into account? If such is the case, it would be quite unfortunate, because we would have run the complete circle. While trying to tell us that the legislation would prevent unfortunate mergers in Canada, the Minister has come forward with a toothless legislation which will not prevent mergers which are detrimental to the Canadian economy.

In my opinion, there are too many loopholes in this legislation. Especially because of this defence of economic efficiency and the obligation to demonstrate a lack of competition, the legislation introduced by the Minister has so many loopholes that major corporations will be able again to get away with it.

Mr. Speaker, I am extremely disappointed that the Minister had to give major companies these concessions to gain their support for his Bill.

Finally, I hope the Minister will understand his mistake and realize that this is a toothless legislation, that it is no good as drafted, and that he will accept the amendments which committee members may suggest to him to strenghten his legislation so that it truly ensures free competition in Canada, in the interest not only of Canadian corporations, but also of Canadian consumers and, on top of that, of the Canadian economy as a whole.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) introduced this Bill a short time ago he said it had the support of the business and financial community. A little later he gave us the names of the advisory committee that worked on this Bill. It then became very obvious to anyone who has an interest in this why the Bill had the support of the business and financial community. All the members of the advisory committee came from the business community or from law firms which represent the business community. The advisory committee had no representatives from farm organizations, labour organizations, consumer organizations or the academic community.

If we are going to be fair, we must say that this Bill is better than its predecessor. I say that only because the legislation we have had until now has proven completely useless. Previous Bills have failed to do anything to control mergers or see that we have real competition.

This Bill is light-years short of what we really need and I want to tell the Minister that the New Democratic Party intends to oppose it as much as we can, for as long as we can. If and when this Bill passes second reading we will insist that there be the most detailed discussion in the committee and that the fullest opportunity be given for input and testimony from witnesses who come from all those areas of the community to which the Minister has not listened.

There has been no sadder page in Canadian history than the failure of governments, Liberal and Conservative, to deal with the whole question of competition reform. That is not just the judgment of the New Democratic Party, it is the written assessment of one of the leading competition economists in Canada, Professor Irving Brecher of McGill University, who wrote a study in 1981 entitled "Canada's Competition Policy Revisted". Professor Brecher knew where to place the blame when he added in that article:

> This judgment is made all the more painful by the realization that, contrary to often-expressed belief, the outcome was not inevitable or beyond the control of Governments determined that it be otherwise.

He was talking about Liberal Governments which failed to deal with the question and he could well say that about the present Conservative Government which is not now dealing with the real issue.

This is a story of continuing failure over a long period of time. The Economic Council began their deliberations about what we need in a modern competition policy in 1966. Their interim report was completed in 1969 and the then Government brought forward its conclusions, drawn from that study, in Bill C-256 which was tabled in 1971. As of today, none of the studies, the commitments, Bills or speeches have produced a law which would reform our simplistic, judicially hamstrung and grossly ineffective competition law. Only one modest Bill was passed.

Today we are being asked to accept Bill C-91 as the ultimate development in competition policy. This Bill is hardly that at all. It is a fifth (and poor) generation descendant of a Bill that has been before the House, but not passed, since 1971. There were in earlier years Bill C-256, Bill C-42, Bill C-13 and Bill C-29. All of these Bills were attempts to reform the Competition laws and all of them failed.

Anyone who believes that competition law reform was or is a priority for this country should approach Bill C-91 with a good deal of suspicion. The question is not what is in the Bill, it is what is not in the Bill. Why did those earlier Bills not pass Parliament? It was not because they were blockaded by Opposition Members of Parliament. It was essentially because they only gave the business community 90 per cent of what it wanted.

In order to introduce this legislation today, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Coté) had to pay a price. He had to give them 99 per cent of what they wanted. It is a bit like Faust having to make a deal with the devil. In the name of promoting competition, the Minister had to reach prior agreement with the same people who had prevented the passage of all four of the previous Bills, namely, the representatives of big business.

We can be more specific. We can say categorically that five groups argued with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs over every clause of this Bill until they got what they wanted. It was not labour and consumer groups, representatives of farm organizations, or academics, who spent years studying this question, who sat in on the drafting of this Bill. The groups which sat in with the Department and vetted every single clause in this Bill were the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada Association and the Canadian Bar Association. These five groups are naturally satisfied with the Bill. We have not had a barrage of objections from them of the kind which downed the previous Bills. We should be very worried indeed. We have to ask ourselves if a committee of foxes did not design this particular chicken coop. We suggest that although they did not do the actual drawing up of the Bill itself, they certainly sat at the table to ensure that any detail did not affect them adversely.

What about the other groups? What about the wide circle of consultation bragged about by the Minister in his press statement of December 17? He said he was listening not only to business interests both small and large, but to the provinces, consumers and organized labour.

We know something about those consultations. Organized labour was given a very perfunctory hearing with no follow-up as to what the Government was actually planning to do. We know that the Consumers' Association was warned to go along or there would be very serious consequences. We had our own experience with this consultation process. Because we believe in being constructive, we sent the Minister a letter on March 27 of last year requesting he meet with seven competition experts from the academic community in order to receive the benefit of their experience and scholarship in this field. My understanding is that none of those persons received any more than a perfunctory consultation. Departmental advisers will call them when they have problems but the Minister was not very interested in hearing their policy views and then acting on their expert advice.

Sunday morning on CBC Radio, Professor Stanbury, an outstanding expert at the University of British Columbia, spoke in considerable detail about what is wrong with this Bill and what should be in this Bill but which is not. Professor Stanbury was one of the persons we recommended the Minister consult, but all the Minister did was write to him, receive a reply, and that was the end of Professor Stanbury's participation.

Our conclusions about this kind of policy making are; first, it is one-sided, calculated to appease the most powerful special interest group, large business. There was no real consultation. Second, other interested parties, particularly the general public which would stand to gain substantially through an effective competition law, were involved tangentially or not at all. Third, expert outside advice was neither sought nor encouraged.

Why this has come to pass is part of the pathetic story told by Professor Brecher in his study. It is a diminishing effort by Cabinet, the Civil Service and political Parties, both Liberals and Conservatives, as the difficulties of passing a useful competition Bill became apparent. Competition reform as a priority gave way to the buzz words of "incrementalism" and "stage one" and "stage two" when the Government realized it would have to fight very powerful interest groups in order to implement a worthwhile policy. It was not prepared to fight. It is not as if the Government was resigned after fighting the good fight to getting half a loaf in Bill C-91. It has brought about this outcome by deliberately lowering its sights and being afraid to fight for a better economic deal for average Canadians in most of their every-day purchases. Just how much average Canadians are paying for this continuing policy failure will no doubt surprise Hon. Members.

We should take inventory of what this policy failure has cost the country and ordinary Canadian consumers. We know that the Canadian economy is highly concentrated. It is susceptible to price increases associated with high tariffs, and the domination of markets keeps prices high throughout a business cycle. The cost to Canada of this kind of anti-competitive system has been estimated at 7.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. In 1984 the Gross National Product was $416.6 billion. The cost of economic wastes attributable to the absence of price competition in Canada is in the neighbourhood of $31 billion and rising yearly. This estimate is from a noted competition economist, A. M. Moore. The Nielsen Task Force should have also looked at private sector waste.

There are further costs to the economy, as Professor Brecher noted. We have highly sheltered markets, which means a sluggish economy, slow to adapt. These non-competitive markets also breed persistent powerful private attempts at manipulation of the policitical process in order to sustain the economic status quo. Thus we can see a New Brunswick dominated by the Irving family interests, a Newfoundland dominated by the Water Street merchants or the western provinces which were formerly dominated by the CPR now dominated in many food industries now dominated by the Weston group and by Safeway.

We now begin to see the double bind on competition reformers in Canada. On the one hand, we have a powerful business constituency wanting nothing to do with a policy it perceives, incorrectly, as being harmful to its interests. On the other hand we have a Government which is loathe to offend those who can cause it the most difficulty at both the political and Civil Service levels. Obviously, the substantial costs of not having a real competition policy have been borne by the ordinary Canadians who could not be effectively mobilized to argue for consistently better economic performance by this country's business firms.

There will be claims by both Liberals and Conservatives that they are the true parents of effective competition law in Canada. Those who study the field in detail know better than that. Professor Brecher said about both Parties:

> The fact is, however, that neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have ever articulated a clear philosophy of competition or a real commitment to its vigorous enforcement.

We have seen the abject Liberal record on this issue. That Party never did put through an effective Bill in all the years it was in office. This assessment ought to make us even more wary about what the Conservatives are promising. When the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs unveiled this legislation last December we called it "more water than wine" in delivering a competition policy to Canadians. There is much more to be said on this.

• (1240)

Before going further I should point out where the Conservatives stood while the Liberals were at least trying to pass a Bill. The Conservatives were opposed to it and only too happy to be the advocates of big business once more. One of the biggest critics of Bill C-42, which was brought forward by the Liberals, was the present Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). We have to ask whether there been a change of heart on the road to Damascus so that the Minister can now endorse the Bill of his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Of course not.

We have seen many changes to the earlier Bill C-42 as originally proposed. It has deteriorated and has been watered down into the present Bill C-91. Undoubtedly, we know that the Government has no great enthusiasm for this Bill. "We can live with it" is possibly how members of the Government explain it. But given Conservative ideology, a strong competition Bill is a must.

The Government repeatedly calls for maximizing the role of the private sector. It believes in a closer trade relationship with the U.S. and lower international tariffs. But lower tariffs are not a substitute for effective competition in the domestic market. We know that certain cabinet Ministers who often profess belief in the market frequently run into difficulties. For example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) believes in letting markets set the value of the Canadian dollar. He believes that until the value drops too low and then he talks about burning the speculators. Let us consider the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). She believes in letting the markets set the value of petroleum products. She says she believes that, even while gasoline prices have declined by only three cents a litre while crude oil prices have dropped by one-half or more. She continues to say she will be patient with the companies, while Canadians motorists want to see some real action from her, action that would cut gasoline prices by 12 cents a litre.

I wish to take a few moments to deal with a tremendously important decision being made right now out there in the real world about the future of this country, with which this Bill does not even deal. I am talking about the proposal by Imasco to take over Genstar. Before I point out what is wrong with that proposal let me put on the record the fact that it is not just New Democrats who are opposed to the takeover of Genstar by Imasco. I would like to quote from a news report which appeared in The Globe and Mail a couple of days ago. It is headlined: "Debate sought on Genstar takeover, Tory MPS oppose Imasco deal". I would like to read into the record a couple of paragraphs from the story.

A group of Conservative back-benchers are preparing to stage a special debate to oppose the takeover of Genstar Corp. by Imasco Ltd.—

The $2-billion deal, accepted by Genstar yesterday, would give Imasco, a Montreal-based cigarette, drug store and fast-food conglomerate, control over Canada Trustco Mortgage Co., a Genstar subsidiary. Canada Trust, with assets of more than $20-billion, is the seventh largest financial institution in Canada.

The protest is led by Paul McCrossan, Tory Member of Parliament for York—Scarborough, who opposes any particular takeover of a mjaor financial institution by a company not already in the financial services industry.

He argues that such a purchase creates a situation whereby a trust company can become the captive of its new parent—a compliant source of financing for deals that might not be in the best interests of the financial institution's depositors.

The article goes on to quote the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell).

Mr. Attewell, Conservative MP for the Toronto riding of Don Valley East and a former vice-president for corporate planning with the Guaranty Trust Co., added that in the wake of recent takeovers, there is widespread support within the Conservative caucus for Government action, both on the Imasco-Genstar deal and on the broader question of corporate concentration.

This is what the Hon. Member for Don Valley East said, and I again quote from the article:

"My interests are a little broader—the whole subject of corporate concentration," Mr. Attewell said. "We need to put the brakes on. Takeovers don't create jobs. Often it's just the opposite, with rationalization that occurs after a takeover."

Members of the New Democratic Party have been saying that for years. We have been laughed at, scoffed at and told that we do not understand anything about business. Yet here we have the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East opposed to such a move. On As It Happens a few nights ago I heard the Chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), make the same point.

I ask the Minister where he is living. Is he living in dream land while bringing forth this Bill and telling us that it will deal with the major problems in Canada? Before us is one of the biggest financial deals that we have ever seen in Canada. It is one which will cause tremendous hardship and trouble for most Canadians. Yet, the Minister does not say a word about it. His Bill does not deal with the situation at all. That is the real world which the Minister so conveniently, either by design or ignorance, avoids.

The fact is that conglomerate mergers are beyond the scope of Bill C-91. Neither Imasco nor Gulf has a horizontal or vertical relationship with the companies they want to take over since they are unrelated companies. Thus the Bill does not deal at all with conglomerates under its merger provisions. However, there is a linkage between the real economy, which makes goods and provides services, and the financial economy of intermediaries which provide capital.

This relationship has been the subject of the Green Paper on the regulation of Canadian financial institutions and hearings by the House Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The Green Paper was confronted with the problems of financial conglomerates controlled by diversified companies. It decided to embrace them by calling them financial holding corporations and sought to regulate them through rules which would ban certain practices and restrict access in other areas. But now the nature of the problem has become more clear. The largest industrial companies have integrated financial holding companies. Brascan has Trilon, which has assets of $65 billion. Power Corporation has Power Financial Corporation, which has assets of $29.6 billion. Imasco now has Canada Trust, which has assets of more than $20 billion.

The problems with this type of relationship have become well known in recent years. There is the potential for self-dealing, to which the Conservative Members I have quoted have faced up. In such a situation the financial institution loses its arm's length relationship with its customers and is bent toward furthering the finances or the corporate goals of the parent company rather than those of the ordinary people who have put their money into these companies because they believe in the free enterprise system.

I remind the Minister of the activities of that well known Conservative Peter Pocklington. He used the trust company which he controlled to help in his real estate speculation. Then there was the case of Leonard Rosenberg and his trust companies, Seaway, Greymac and Crown Trust, and even his involvement in the Canadian Commercial Bank. Those activities which were permitted by Canadian laws, and will continue to be permitted even after we pass Bill C-91, have cost the Canadian people hundreds of millions of dollars if not, indeed, billions of dollars.

This is only the most blatant of conflict of interests which would include any commercial activity that would compromise the normal relationship between the lender and the borrower. Already we are seeing incentives being offered to staff members of Trilon subsidiaries so that they would recommend other Trilon companies to their customers. It could very well be that a non-Trilon company would be better for a customer, both for financial and non-financial services, but will Trilon company employees be professionally restrained from offering anything but disinterested advice? Of course not. That is the problem that was not addressed, and it is only one tiny example of the conflicts that will be facing these companies and their employees every day. This Bill does not deal with that problem.

The answer to this problem, real economic financial conflicts, can be resolved in one clear way: adopt the 10 per cent maximum share limit which now applies to chartered banks. I have been in politics a long time and I did not think that there would ever come a time when I would agree with Canadian bankers on an important issue. However, the 10 per cent maximum share limit is what we proposed in the Finance Committee. We could not get the other members of the committee to agree to it so we proposed it in a minority report. That position is endorsed by groups as disparate as the Consumers' Association of Canada and the Canadian Bankers' Association. However, the Government continues to dance around this obvious solution by pretending it has other solutions.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) continues to maintain that by having published a draft Bill on amendments to the Trust Companies Act she can restrain Imasco. She already knows that her review is flawed. It is not a public process. Public criteria for the decision and public participation in the review do not exist and are not required in this Bill or in the Bill of the Minister of State for Finance. As a matter of fact, that is one of the very important criticisms of this Bill which Professor Stanbury of the University of British Columbia has made.

The Minister of State for Finance could decide against a Imasco only to have a successor Minister, reverse the decision. Policy will therefore be made on the whim of a Minister or the personal views held by that Minister and there will be no public discussion and no public input into the decision. That is hardly the basis for a competition policy. It is hardly what we were promised by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who said that he would bring forth a Bill only after there had been the widest consultations and input from the widest group of interested people possible. It is ad hockery at its worst.

We asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to reconsider the problems of conglomerate mergers and to put provisions for the review into the new competition Act. Certainly the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance must come to grips with their own problems of financial and non-financial corporations and conglomerate takeovers, but the problem goes far beyond the financial sector. We should take a look at what takeovers do and what they do not do.

We can talk about greater efficiencies and economies of scale, but those do not always apply to particular conglomerate takeovers. We know that corporation takeovers are a good deal for those making the takeovers and for those being bought out. A lot of paper is passed around and fortunes are made. In the last couple of weeks the Belzbergs moved to take over Ashland Oil in the United States and they were bought off by what is called green mail. They made millions of dollars because they were persuaded by the profit they received from the present owners and management of Ashland not to continue their takeover bid. They made millions, but what did that add to the economies of Canada and the United States? Did it add one single job? No, it made money for the Belzbergs. That is quite permissible under our laws. I am not critical of the Belzbergs or of any other groups that do this. What I am critical of is the fact that we have failed to pass laws which would make sense and bring benefits to the people of Canada rather than to the few who have been able to make hundreds of millions of dollars.

As legislators, we should ask ourselves several questions. Do these takeovers create employment? The answer in most cases is no. Do they stimulate investment in new technologies, in the industries of the future, in electronics, computers and ceramics? No. Do they bring new companies and skills to Canada? In most cases, the answers are quite negative.

Do the staff members of Canada Permanent who no longer have jobs think much of the Genstar takeover? Do the staff members of Dominion Stores think much of Conrad Black for raiding their pension fund—I would say even stealing from their pension fund—and turning their jobs into $7-per-hour non-unionized jobs at Mr. Grocer from $14-per-hour unionized jobs?

Is there much in the way of investment in start-up enterprises in Canada? No, we support this kind of business at the rate of 50 cents per capita in Canada while in the U.S. it is supported at the rate of $10 per capita. Pension funds have invested only $100 million of $8 billion in venture capital.

I would like to conclude my remarks about the takeover by Imasco of Genstar by quoting from that great radical newspaper, the Montreal Gazette. An editorial entitled "The macabre feast" which appeared on April 2, 1986, had this to say:

What is going on in Canada's industrial circles would surely alarm even a self-respecting cannibal. Certainly it should alarm the governments that are supposed to act as guardians of the public interest.

In a wave of ever-larger takeovers, giant corporations are gobbling each other up in a macabre feast, generating little except profits for the firms involved and their legions of lawyers and accountants.

Certainly there is no discernible benefit to the economy at large, let alone to consumer interest, in most of these billion-dollar deals. A good many of them, in fact, look potentially harmful.

Regarding the Imasco-Genstar deal, the editorial reads:

It is simply not healthy for financial institutions to be in a position where they may be pressured to give favored treatment to some borrowers (their corporate brethren). It is important for the health of the financial system in which all Canadians' savings are invested that such pressures be strictly avoided. Events of the past year have taught that the financial industry can and does run into trouble; this kind of relationship makes trouble that much easier to find.

The editorial concludes by saying:

There are reasonable arguments in favor of letting Canadian firms attain a respectable size, sufficient to compete in world markets. But those arguments assume the big firms will be innovative and will invest in new technologies and jobs.

Having one corporate giant swallow another corporate giant does not of itself create jobs (indeed, as Quebecers have reason to recall, the Gulf takeover last year resulted in the loss of jobs here). When huge firms use their financial muscle to buy other huge firms, they become richer but the economy does not.

If the Minister will not listen to us, I wish he would at least pay some attention to the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. He has five minutes left to speak the next time this matter will be debated. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

MATANE PAPER MILL—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESPECT ITS PROMISE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): In its Saturday edition, the La Presse newspaper published an article entitled "Matane paper mill: Ciaccia asks Ottawa to respect its promise".

Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government, and especially the Prime Minister and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), have failed on three occasions to keep their promises to Quebecers. I need only mention the Gulf-Ultramar dossier where Quebecers were taken for a ride, and also the Domtar dossier.

Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Minister is asking and begging Conservative Members representing Quebec to wake up and pressure the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion into signing the documents and keeping his word to save the Matane paper mill.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, each year toward the end of March the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) announces the initial prices to be paid for western grain. Producers use these prices as a basis for their seeding plans for the coming season. This year the Minister is dragging his feet. For what is the Minister waiting? We know that the Western Grain Stabilization Program is likely to generate a $500 million interim payment. Is the Minister waiting to announce stabilization payments so that he can soften the blow of low initial prices? Is he hoping that such an announcement will cover his Government's inability to deal with the disastrous effect of the U.S. Farm Bill?

The Minister should announce the initial prices immediately and then give some assurance to producers that they will not be ruined by decisions made in Washington. The Minister should give careful consideration to the advice of the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee, or he should guarantee a basic price of $12 per bushel for wheat for domestic use and stabilize the income of farmers now, rather than wait until it is too late—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

AGRICULTURE

FUNDING OF COLOURED HOLSTEINS RESEARCH PROJECT

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, dairy farmers and agricultural research scientists in Canada are incensed that an American company called Dream Street Holsteins plans to use $10 million in research tax credits to fund a research project comparing red and white holsteins with black and white holsteins. This project can be described as superficial or totally useless.

This waste is occurring while Canadian farmers are in financial difficulty and traditional Canadian scientists are looking for more funds. These tax credits will be used to compete directly with dairy farmers on quota prices, land prices, and the purchase of cattle. This will give this major American company a large foothold in the Canadian dairy industry. Already farmers note the unusually high prices being paid for red and white holsteins of poor quality.

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to take whatever steps he can to ensure that this outrageous waste is stopped.

SPORTS

CALGARY RINK WINS MEN'S WORLD CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, "Cool Hand Luke" has prevailed again. No, this is not a western movie to which I refer. It is Calgary's Ed Lukewich and his men's rink who, yesterday in Toronto, retained the men's World Curling Championship for Canada.

The Lukewich rink edged an outstanding team from Scotland four to three with the final rock on the final end, to join the women's World Championship rink of Marilyn Darte from St. Catharines. All Canadians should be justly proud of these two teams that have represented their country with such dignity and with such skill.

AIRPORTS

AIR CANADA—TRANSFER OF INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS FROM GANDER TO ST. JOHN'S NFLD.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to object to the sneaky and cowardly manner in which the Government of Canada announced the movement of Air Canada's international flights from St. John's to Gander, sneaky and cowardly because it made the announcement in the afternoon of the final day of sitting before the Easter break. The decision was made because of a threat issued by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) that the flights must be moved to St. John's. In making the decision, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has violated the security and sterility standards of several government Departments.

I have the questions for the Minister of Transport when he shows up in the House. I just wonder if he has answers.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY PROJECT—MERCURY LEVEL INCREASES AMONG CREE POPULATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, flooding of huge forest areas by Hydro Quebec has resulted in a frightening increase in mercury levels among the Cree Indians of James Bay.

1977 tests showed that 30 per cent of the people had mercury levels above international safety standards. By 1984 this had increased to 64 per cent. Some mercury levels are as high as the highest among the devastated Indians of Grassy Narrows and White Dog Reserves in northern Ontario. Mercury poisoning leads to neurological problems that can end in convulsions, paralysis, and death.

The James Bay Agreement calls for a federal environmental regime to monitor the impact of the huge hydro project. The previous Liberal Government never implemented it, and now the Conservatives are cutting back on environmental expertise.

The basic health of the Cree Indians depends upon the environment, and I call upon the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to implement immediately the federal environmental regime as the Cree have requested.

BILINGUALISM

AWARENESS CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED BY CANADIAN PARENTS FOR FRENCH ORGANIZATION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Parents for French Organization began 10 years ago when 35 parents decided that their children should have a better chance to learn French. The CPF is now a 15,000 member national voluntary organization, active in 140 local chapters.

This year it has mounted a national public awareness campaign designed to help parents seeking information on French second language education. The campaign is called "Making Choices" and the CPF is proud of its successes to date, and will gladly share its objectives with interested persons.

The CPF's recent book More French S'il Vous Plaît is a valuable aid in helping Canadian parents to make language choices for their children. Canadians have a unique opportunity to speak two universal languages. Let us strengthen our collective efforts.

TRIBUTE TO QUEBEC NORDIQUES

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the House the tremendous success of a group of determined young men, I mean the Quebec Nordiques, an outstanding team!

Thanks to their dedication, determination, tenacity and team spirit, the Quebec Nordiques have managed for the first time in their short history—seven years—to finish first in their own division.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it would be appropriate to congragulate them for their brillant performance and to draw from their success a lesson in courage and determination.

Although a number of players are stars in their own right, I think it is essential to emphasize their true team spirit and motivation inspired by their coach.

Because I am convinced that success comes to those who work the hardest—

YOUTH

DROP IN UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, youth unemployment, is a serious problem in Canada. No one will deny this fact. Certainly more needs to be done to address this serious problem. However, in responding to critics of our Government's policy, one only needs to refer to the facts.

In the late 1970s and early 1980s the previous Government allowed the situation of our youth to deteriorate to the point where, in 1983, youth unemployment hovered at the 20 per cent mark. As La Presse stated:

> It was an era during which symbolic programs were given preference over solid realities such as job creation.

In only 18 months we have provided a positive economic environment which has resulted in a 2.5 per cent drop in youth unemployment. Today the unemployment gap between youth and adults is narrower than it was 10 years ago. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

The most beneficial thing our Government can do for Canada's youth is to maintain our present economic course, which is producing positive results, to ensure that much needed jobs in the private sector continue to be created.

THE SENATE

FILLING OF VACANCIES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is about to make two Senate appointments. Who will the lucky appointees be? The rumour mill says Norm Atkins and Michel Cogger, two of the Prime Minister's closest cronies, will get the nod.

Over the course of the next 25 years or so these appointments will be worth over $2 million each to these two gentlemen. That is just like winning Loto 6/49. Last week's Loto 6/49 winners must be green with envy. After all, they will get only $1.2 million after their winnings are split six ways.

I think the press should give these appointments as much publicity as it gives the Loto 6/49 winners. Perhaps we could get a picture of Michel Cogger and Norm Atkins kissing each other on the front page of The Globe and Mail, and perhaps a guest appearance on Front Page Challenge, if it is still in production. Who cares if the Prime Minister broke every campaign promise he has made on patronage? At least he will have made two friends, very, very happy and a little richer.

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN NIAGARA PENINSULA

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, while consumers in other parts of the country were benefiting from plummeting gasoline prices, consumers in the Niagara Peninsula were plagued with halts and slow starts. First, officials of PetroCan said the 2-cent tax cut announced in the House was not an across-the-board reduction, but only where market conditions demanded.

Later, as Niagara residents continued to complain, PetroCan's position was that it takes a while for the word to get through the system. Only when enterprising dealers defied the orders of regional offices did prices drop, but not to the levels of elsewhere. Prices hit 44 and 43 cents for a full week before Niagara benefited.

With less concentration of control at the top we would have more entrepreneurial dealers giving consumers the advantage of competitive prices. We should not have Crown corporations setting regional market prices.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT SOUGHT TO ASSIST BANK EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have written the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) asking him to introduce amendments to the labour code which will result in stronger legislation. I again urge the Government to set up an inquiry into the labour practices of all banks, and to improve the Canada Labour Code so that banks will be forced to negotiate fairly with their employees.

The Imperial Bank of Commerce is well known for maintaining a ghetto of low-paid employees, the majority of whom are women. Decisions against the Bank of Commerce have included Canada Labour Relations Board decisions 745-362 and 745-361, which have found the bank to be practising unfair labour practices by laying off union sympathizers and bringing in employees from other branches known to be loyal to the bank. The most recent decision against the bank forced the signing of the first contract, and the Canada Labour Relations Board labelled the bank anti-union and obstructionist in its behaviour.

The bank and other employers can continue to behave in this arrogant manner unless steps are taken to amend the code. The present situation is a national disgrace which is sanctified by deliberately weak federal legislation.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

DROP IN UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, the Government has demonstrated time and time again its commitment to ensuring equality for women in Canadian society. Ensuring equality requires more than words, it requires action. One area where the results of the Government's undertakings with respect to equality of opportunity is most apparent is employment. Figures released by Statistics Canada on Friday reveal that unemployment among women is down significantly.

To illustrate, 293,000 more women are working today than there were in September of 1984. The unemployment rate for women has fallen by 1.9 percentage points since the election. In comparison, the unemployment rate increased by 3.4 per cent during the term of the last Liberal Government. The number of unemployed women has decreased by 82,000, compared to an increase of 243,000 under the Liberals.

This is real progress, Mr. Speaker, and it will continue so that Canadian women will achieve social and economic equality under a Progressive Conservative Government.

SUCCESS OF CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, there is more good news. The central bank rate dropped last week to 10.14 per cent and banks are lowering their mortgage and loan rates. Lower interest rates help create jobs and, sure enough, the unemployment rate dropped to 9.6 per cent, the lowest rate since 1982. Since September, 1984, 574,000 jobs have been created. Youth employment has risen by 47,000 since the election, compared to a net loss of 285,000 under the Liberals.

I met last Saturday with members of our local advisory council on employment, which is chaired by Mrs. Shirley Scaife of Willowdale. Some of the other local members present were Jack Hauseman, Asta Dvorak, Frank Wilson, and Brian Patterson.

It is clear that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is working. The Job Entry Program, which concentrates on women who have been out of the workforce for three or four years, and on youth, has been a sparkling success thanks to the strong support of business people.

FINANCE

INVESTMENT OF REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS AND OF REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS FUNDS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has made public the final regulations stemming from his May 23, 1985 Budget measures aimed at encouraging investments from pension plans and other retirement plans in small- and medium-sized businesses.

According to the first part of these regulations, Mr. Speaker, RRSPs and RRIFs may invest in Canadian corporations with which they deal at arm's length.

Mr. Speaker, how can those regulations help small business when the Minister of Finance undoubtedly uses them as a smokescreen behind which major corporations hide to diversify their holdings?

Mr. Speaker, we know very well that the only people who can invest in small businesses are the owners themselves, their relatives and their associates.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

IMASCO BID TO TAKE OVER GENSTAR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Last November the finance committee unanimously expressed concern about concentration of ownership in the financial services industry and about the implications of financial institutions being owned by non-financial interests.

The Government has not responded to that report but we now have the fast food and tobacco giant, Imasco, set to take over Genstar Corporation, which owns Canada's largest trust company. The Minister of State said on March 24 she was reviewing the situation. Can she now tell us her action plan and a timetable?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this is an issue which does fall under the provisions of the Bill which we introduced in the House this morning. We will be reviewing all aspects of it under the criteria that we outlined last fall. That review is continuing, and I will be announcing a decision as soon as we have considered every factor.

REVIEW OF TAKEOVER BID

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that Imasco offered her and her officials all the documents to participate in a review as though the legislation had been passed some time ago before the takeover bid was made public, and that she failed to do so?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my officials have been in constant touch with Imasco as a result of this and we have reviewed the criteria. They were not quite in the final form but they have been made available to Imasco.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had information and was in a position to act before now. Why does the Minister wait until she is under public pressure before deciding to move?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are not taking any action on the Bill which was introduced this morning under public pressure. That Bill was introduced in draft form last fall. As a result of public discussion there have been some changes in it. It was produced as soon as it was ready. We are proceeding on track, as we always have. It is not a case of there being a response to pressure.

EFFECT OF LEGISLATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does he realize that his own legislation, not the one mentioned by his colleague, could not prevent a merger such as that given as an example by my colleague from Trinity? What does he intend to do about that?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Last December, Mr. Speaker, we did introduce amendments to the combines legislation. One of the provisions of that legislation is aimed at establishing a competition tribunal responsible for screening proposed mergers and indeed for ruling on such deals.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister realize that he is trying to weaken the combines legislation section dealing with mergers with respect to Bill C-29? Can the Minister tell us why he thinks that the non-competitive history of a corporation should no longer be viewed as a criterion for assessment in the case of a merger? Where is the logic in that?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): As it happens, Mr. Speaker, the ultimate objective of Bill C-91 is to increase competition on the domestic market and enable companies to be more competitive on world markets, create jobs, and boost economic growth. That is precisely the kind of Bill which the House is now considering.

COMMITTEE'S OWNERSHIP RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Since it was the unanimous recommendation of all members on the committee of this House that non-financial institutions should not be able to own financial institutions in order to avoid self-dealing or a conflict of interest, why does she not announce now that she is not going to permit the takeover of Genstar by Imasco?

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have a Bill before the House which suggests that transmissible ownerships are subject to ministerial approval. Among those matters that will be considered are the very excellent recommendations of the parliamentary committee.

However, as I understand the parliamentary committee recommendation, this trust company could be owned 50 per cent rather than 100 per cent. We are looking at all those questions as we reach our decision.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister in Cabinet responsible for this important area of policy, is she in agreement with the unanimous recommendation of the committee that financial institutions ought not to be owned by non-financial institutions for the obvious reason that a situation could arise where companies will be gambling with pensioners' funds in the future? Does she agree with that principle and, if so, why did she not bring in legislation that was consistent with it?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there is more than one way to deal with this issue. We are looking at the recommendations of the parliamentary committee along with some other ways of dealing with matters concerning the ownership of financial institutions and the powers and obligations under the law. There is more than one way to deal with this, and we are looking at all of them.

Mr. Broadbent: The members of the committee from the Minister's Party, as well as members from other Parties in the House, looked at it carefully and reached a decision that makes sense.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is going to review this take-over bid that is not yet complete, will she at least tell the House when she will be ready with the Government's decision?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will inform the House when I am ready with the decision.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

GULF BID TO TAKE OVER HIRAM WALKER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister of State for Finance has just confirmed that the Imasco-Genstar deal will be reviewed under the new financial institutions legislation which just received first reading today. Will he apply the same approach to the Gulf takeover of Hiram Walker by applying the criteria of the competition legislation now before the House to ensure the public interest is protected, including the 1,000 jobs at the Hiram Walker Distillery in Windsor?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure my colleague by saying quite simply that all deals in this country are examined by the director under the Combines Investigation Act and that, in this regard, he examines each transaction on its own merits and takes appropriate action.

[English]

APPLICATION OF COMBINES LEGISLATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government applying two standards? With respect to the Imasco-Genstar transaction the Government is retroactively applying legislation that it just tabled today. Why is the Government not willing to do the same thing with the combines legislation before the House when it comes to the takeover of Hiram Walker by Gulf? The public interest is involved there just as much. Why the two standards?

Why this double standard?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the Government happens to believe that the private sector is the real driving force behind the most equitable distribution of resources so as to promote economic growth and create jobs. The competition legislation now before Parliament will meet such requirements and create a market place in which our economic needs can be met.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE TAX WRITE-OFFS IN IMASCO-GENSTAR TAKEOVER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he confirm that as a result of our existing tax laws the Imasco takeover will cost Canadian taxpayers something in the neighbourhood of $200 million a year in tax write-offs of which the company will be able to take advantage as a result of the cost of this takeover?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is jumping to some conclusions. If he has specific information that he would like to discuss with me, I would be happy to sit down with him.

Mr. Broadbent: He just asked you.

Mr. Blaikie: You haven't looked at it yourself?

COST TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister simply confirm that if Imasco borrows money for this take over bid, the cost of the take over will be deducted as part of its taxes, and consequently the taxpayers of Canada will be picking up the tab for this merger?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the conclusion drawn by the Hon. Member is that it is going to use totally borrowed funds—

Mr. Riis: Why won't they?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member asks why they wouldn't. There are other ways of financing acquisitions than through borrowed funds. I would also say to the Hon. Member that the tax law we have is identical to the tax laws of other countries, and if we did not have that provision in our tax law it would be far easier for other companies—

Mr. Broadbent: To stop it in this case. Stop this case.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —from outside the country to take over companies in Canada, and I do not think that is very good policy.

ENERGY

SITUATION IN OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Tomorrow representatives of the oil-producing provinces will be in Ottawa to ask the federal Government to drop its wait-and-see attitude and do something to save the Canadian oil industry. Is the Government prepared to act now?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very plain that the Government, in co-operation with the producing provinces, is willing to sit down and talk. That is what the meetings tomorrow are about. The appropriate announcement will be made after those meetings which will be held with provincial Premiers and provincial Ministers of Energy. They are very important meetings and I think show most demonstrably that we are concerned about the energy situation in the West.

PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the provinces are asking for more than talk. Thousands of jobs have already been lost. Projections show that at least another 18,000 jobs will be lost. What is the Government going to do to save these jobs?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Liberals, we do not go off on a tangent all by ourselves making decisions without consulting our provincial counterparts.

Mr. Foster: You don't do anything.

Mr. McDermid: That is what is going on tomorrow. Appropriate announcements will be made after the meetings.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

IMASCO BID TO TAKE OVER GENSTAR

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know that Members of Parliament for York Scarborough, Don Valley East, and Mississauga South have expressed their opposition to the takeover of Genstar by Imasco. Does the Minster not believe that such a takeover should be reviewed for its effects on Canadian competitiveness, investment, and job creation? If he does, what action does he propose to take on competition law amendments so that such an inquiry will be thorough, public, and in the best interests of all Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Once more, Mr. Speaker, I think that I shall repeat what I said earlier. We have now before this House a bill aimed at promoting more competition on domestic and international markets. This bill includes various provisions concerning, for instance, the creation of a competition tribunal, new powers of inquiry for the Director, as well as the requirement to notify the Director of Investigations before certain transactions occur. All these provisions are included in the amendments now before the House to make our legislation more effective.

[English]

CONGLOMERATE MERGERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that the legislation as proposed gives the Government power to examine takeovers which extend vertical and horizontal concentration. If that is necessary, why are conglomerate mergers not subject to Canadian competition law because that is not in the Bill brought forward by the Minister?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is the subject of the debate in the House today.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, what I have said is that, while the existing statute does not allow any intervention, the new bill will give the Director of Investigations and the members of the Competition Tribunal the possibility of examining such transactions first and of taking action if need be. A major requirement will be to ensure that competition is protected at all times.

IMPERIAL OIL—REPORTED DUMPING OF OIL ON UNITED STATES MARKET

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if the Government will investigate a report contained in the Winnipeg Free Press last Friday that Imperial Oil is dumping hundreds of thousands of litres of diesel oil in North Dakota at prices below the U.S. wholesale price, and over 50 per cent less than what is being charged in the Winnipeg market? Is this an example of how a private sector firm is serving the proper market in Canada? Will the Minister investigate?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague that such activities are now subject to review by the Director of Combines Investigations and that, if he knows of any facts which could enlighten us and make the work of the Director easier, I shall be happy to receive them and I shall take prompt action.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered my question. I am specifically asking whether or not the Government will investigate the case of Imperial Oil dumping diesel oil across the border. The fall in diesel oil prices has not kept pace with that of gasoline prices, a fall of 2 cents versus one of 9 cents. Is it not time the Government became interested in the downstream pricing policies of our oil wholesalers so that there will not be this type of consumer rip-off?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, it is up to the Director of Combines Investigations to determine whether there are grounds for investigation or not. To my knowledge, the Director has always completed his reviews very promptly.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

IMASCO BID FOR GENSTAR—POTENTIAL IMPACT ON TRUST COMPANY DEPOSITORS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Does the Minister remember the recent circumstances surrounding Greymac and those concerning Seaway some years ago, where conflict of interest situations resulted in tremendous losses suffered by depositors in both of those trust companies? Does she not see the same potential trouble looming with respect to the takeover of Canada Trust?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the allegation of the Hon. Member is a little unfair. We have indicated that we are reviewing this proposal. We have brought in legislation which gives us the power to make a cease and desist order, a power which would have effectively changed the situation with respect to those trust companies. We have moved with our legislative program to deal with the problems which have come up in the past and problems which could come down the road in the future. I will not relate Imasco to something which has gone before in connection with those trust companies.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that the power with respect to cease and desist is after the fact, and that what is potentially before us is the possibility of internal lending of people's money deposited in Canada Trust in good faith? Why does the Minister allow this potential conflict of interest to be included in this deal?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have moved on this legislative package to prevent the type of abuses suggested by the Hon. Member. The problems of the past are just that. We have learned many lessons from them, which is one of the reasons we have moved quickly with legislation.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

MATANE PAPER MILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Minister, last Friday the Quebec Minister of Natural Resources, Mr. Ciaccia, had to hold a press conference to implore you to honour the promise you made to him on January 14, 1985, to fund the Matane paper mill.

Can the Minister tell this House whether he signed today, morning, or whether he intends to sign later today the agreement that would allow the Matane paper mill to proceed?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the proposed paper-mill in Matane I am sure that the Hon. Member will want to know that the company in Norway has advised us that it will not be in the position to say yes or no to the deal until sometime in May since it is the object of a takeover bid. The company has asked us to bear this in mind with respect to any negotiations concerning the paper-mill at Matane.

AGREEMENT PERMITTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MATANE PAPER MILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I had a chance to speak to the Quebec Minister of Natural Resources, and I get the feeling that the two of them are not on the same wavelength.

I would like to know from the Minister, and I am asking the same question to the Quebec Minister, whether the Minister will have signed the agreement by Wednesday in order that the Matane paper mill can proceed? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate what I have said already. It takes two to sign an agreement. The Norwegian company has indicated that it will not be in a position to sign any agreement or negotiate seriously with respect to this project until sometime in May. As far as the Minister from Quebec is concerned, I have had repeated conversations with him, both in person and by telephone. Negotiations are ongoing as to what might be the federal position and as to what might be the Quebec position in the event that the Norwegian company wants to go ahead with this project sometime in May.

THE ADMINISTRATION

KOREAN BANK'S REPORTED LOAN TO COMPANY FORMERLY CONTROLLED BY MINISTER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported, and not denied, that a company controlled by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion received large loans in 1983 from a Korean bank partly owned by Hyundai. First, will the Government recognize the concerns of many Canadians with respect to the grants and quota privileges given Hyundai? Second, will the Government recommend a judicial inquiry be conducted to probe such links between the Korean business lobby and the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which carries at least the inference of a conflict of interest. On behalf of the Government I can inform the Hon. Member that, having discussed the matter with the Minister, I am absolutely satisfied that he has met the very exacting demands imposed by the previous conflict of interest guidelines and by the existing conflict of interest guidelines.

INQUIRY OF MINISTER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my question once more to the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Will the Minister confirm himself that the Hanil Bank, partly owned by Hyundai, loaned his company, York Centre, large sums of money in the past—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

WORLD HEALTH DAY

GOVERNMENT RECOGNITION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today, April 7, is World Health Day 1986 as proclaimed by the World Health Organization. Do the Minister and the Government have any new ideas or thrusts in the general area of health care in recognition of this special day?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has shown an interest regarding health and disease prevention and health promotion not only in Canada but internationally. I think Hon. Members in the House recognize that. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that the goal "Health for All by the Year 2000" remains. However, this year the goal is "Healthy Living: Everyone a Winner". We will emphasize exercise, nutrition and lifestyle. I thank the Hon. Member for also endorsing a program which we propose to all Members of the House.

FUNDING OF COLOURED DAIRY CATTLE RESEARCH

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. There is very great concern in the agricultural community with respect to the Government providing about $10 million to rich American investors called Dreamstreet Limited to do some very phoney research comparing the colours of dairy cattle. Did the Minister support this project which was approved last December? Why would the Government approve such an obvious scam?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the project to which the Hon. Member refers. He should also acknowledge that this is a group which has chosen to utilize a provision put in place by the previous Government. Indeed, I have received a number of supportive representations with respect to the project. I have also received a number of representations which are asking some questions. In this respect I have communicated with the executive director of the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada. I am awaiting his final recommendation.

APPROVAL OF PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister explain why he overruled his departmental officials and approved this project when Doctor Réjean Bouchard, the Co-ordinator of Animal Research, said: "Everyone who was consulted on the project walked away from it"? Is the Minister really trying to put these Dreamstreet people on easy street with $10 million of Canadian taxpayers' money?

• (1440)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure exactly where the Hon. Member is getting his information. The Hon. Member knows that this project, of course, is not approved by Agriculture Canada.

Can someone, perhaps the Minister of State for Youth, explain to our young people how they can take the Government seriously when the Chairman of that famed advisory council admits he does not have much time to devote to it?

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You've been practising all weekend on that one.

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, let me first congratulate wholeheartedly the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville for his extraordinary effort in the French language.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mrs. Champagne: If I understood him correctly, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Champagne: —what the hon. gentleman wants me to repeat to him is that the youth unemployment rate is down by 2.5 per cent since the Government has come into power. We will continue toward—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A short supplementary question.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of representatives of the Government either to repeat this silliness, or to lie to the youth of the country, or distort the truth to the youth of the country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that he cannot—

Mr. McCurdy: I retract that, Mr. Speaker. In order to get to the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. Next.

Mr. McCurdy: Is it not possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McCurdy: Is it not possible for the Government to give a straight answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Next, please. I recognize the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. McCurdy: Is it not possible to get a straight answer from this Government on any question posed to it? I ask—

An Hon. Member: He's either deaf, or silly, or both.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EARLY RETIREMENT PAY OFFERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Is the Minister aware that the post office is now offering up to $14,000 to about 100 executives to take early retirement as a replacement for the unemployment insurance benefits cut by the Minister of Employment? Does the Minister think that this is justified, and how is it that it is only applicable to one group of civil servants and not all, including Armed Service retirees?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have offered early retirement incentives to various groups in the Public Service depending on the particular circumstances of a group, in keeping with our workplace adjustment policy which will be ongoing throughout our workplace reduction exercise from now until 1990-91.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is this particularly geared to replace the cut unemployment insurance benefits, and does the Minister think it is fair to offer this program only to executives and not to all employees, including Armed Service retirees?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, each case is judged on its own merits. There has been a program like that for senior civil servants and also one for cleaners in the Department of Public Works. Each case will be reviewed on its own merits. What we are looking for are equity and justice for all.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED DISCOUNTS FOR MOTORISTS PAYING CASH FOR GASOLINE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is directed to her Parliamentary Secretary. In various parts of the United States certain oil companies are giving discount prices to motorists who pay cash rather than use credit cards. In view of the Minister's advocacy on behalf of motorists, will she ask Canadian oil companies to consider adopting this policy to help motorists who are already paying excessive prices?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said many times, and has made it very clear, that she does not interfere directly in the market-place. No more would she suggest that a company do that than she would suggest that a haberdasher charge less for a suit when customers pay cash rather than use credit cards.

FINANCE

GRIFFITH MINE LAY-OFFS—TAX TREATMENT OF WORKERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, on March 25, defended his decision to deny tax relief to laid off workers of Griffith Mine on the grounds that substantial employment opportunities exist with major employers in the area, citing Campbell Mines. Since the government-commissioned Anderson report on the impact of the lay-off and a survey of the major employers indicate no significant hiring plans, would the Minister now reconsider his decision and grant that tax relief or, failing that, will he make public the criteria under which he plans to deny it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the information I have received is that 117 of the 300 who were laid off from Griffith Mine have already found alternative employment. The criterion under which these decisions are made is if the sole industry in the town is closed down. That was the case in Gagnon but it is not the case in Ear Falls.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must surely be aware that the vast majority of those people moved to get work. Will he explain to the House of Commons, the people of Ear Falls, and the Griffith workers, why there was no consultation such as he promised in his November 1984 economic statement?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked a question about some of the provisions that are available. I should point out to him that the Income Tax Act already provides a number of provisions for assisting displaced workers and I will list these for him: the sheltering of severance payments in RRSPs, the application of pension income deduction against supplementary pension benefits, the deduction of moving expenses, and the tax exemption for a certain type of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED SOLICITATION OF FUNDS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker my question to the Deputy Prime Minister deals with the recently acquired habit of Progressive Conservative Party representatives to solicit funds from civil servants. Why does the Government, which has failed to keep its promise to grant political right to Federal Civil Servants, allow this appeal for funds to be made in the Government's own offices? Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to us why this double standard, why he has failed to intervene to forbid this appeal which is probably made in violation of Public Service regulations?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as Deputy Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada I can inform the hon. gentleman that we adopt a perfectly honest but very productive and aggressive fund-raising effort in all parts of the country.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, given that the Government seems to be willing now to bend the rules slightly when it comes to Tory fund raising, and given this new-found interest in political freedom for public servants, can the Deputy Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the question but it should be about government policy.

Mr. Boudria: Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell public servants that he will forthwith introduce legislation to permit full political participation in the political process of the same public servants from whom he is soliciting funds?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that that matter is sub judice, but in any event I would remind the hon. gentleman that I and many others throughout the country and in the House of Commons have received letters from his Leader, as they have from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, doing the same kind of thing, a little belatedly, I will admit, as our own Party is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I get copies of Ed Broadbent's letters from all my constituents.

Mr. Deans: Did you send us any money?

Mr. Benjamin: Send money and we will quit writing.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance because the 21 Alberta Tory MPs in the House are too chicken to defend the interests of the Province of Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: That's parliamentary.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: I will permit the question, but I will remind the Member that comments about other Members are not allowed.

Mr. Waddell: Does the Minister of Finance object to the Minister of Energy agreeing tomorrow, at her meeting with Energy Minister Zaozirny of Alberta and Premier Devine of Saskatchewan, to the immediate elimination of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax on the oil industry?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that the most vigorous support of the Alberta economy, and the oil and gas industry in particular, I have experienced in the House was from Alberta Members of Parliament when they were on that side of the House and also when they are on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The only thing I have heard from the Hon. Member in this regard is a lot of whining, with no positive suggestion being put forward from the other side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A supplementary question. Just a question.

HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, is the present Government still committed to federal Government loan guarantees to the heavy oil upgrader project in Lloydminster? There is a positive suggestion for you, Michael.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the positive suggestion of the Hon. Member which was made a number of years ago by someone else. The purpose of the meeting tomorrow is to discuss a wide range of matters relating to the very serious situation which is being experienced in western Canada, particularly in the Province of Alberta. Things related to the oil upgrader will be discussed. However, in response to the Hon. Member's previous comment, I should point out that the major beneficiaries of his first suggestion would be the large multinational companies.

PRICE OF HOME HEATING OIL

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister of Energy wrote to the oil companies many months ago asking them to pass on the lower energy cost to the consumer, and we have seen some reduction at the gas pump. However, why have we not seen the price of home heating oil drop as well, before our tanks are refilled with expensive home heating fuel?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The Minister has made very clear that she expects the savings to be passed on, not only in gasoline prices at the pumps but in home heating oil and diesel fuel, as the expensive fuel is used up by retailers. We expect the same excellent action which we have seen in the reduction at the pumps, which is now some 48 cents per gallon.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

MANUFACTURE OF GENERIC DRUGS—GOVERNMENT CONSULTATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said in the House on March 17 that he was "concluding our consultation process" regarding the possibility of restricting the manufacturing of generic drugs. Did this consultation process, which he said was concluding three weeks ago, involve consultation with the most important people affected by this decision—average Canadian consumers?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we have indeed carried out a vague series of consultations over the past few months and, in the course of these consultations, we have indeed met with representatives of pharmaceutical and generic drug companies on the one hand, and with consumers on the other.

[English]

EMPLOYMENT IMPACT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister also stated that the policy "will ensure that it creates jobs and brings investment to Canada". If the Government is to legislate generic drug companies out of business, how is it possible to create employment and to compensate for the massive increase in costs to average Canadian consumers?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): As I said already on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, after the policy has been made public and adopted by the Cabinet, we will have a policy which will meet the need of consumers as well as favour job creation and investments in Canada.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

TIMING OF PAYMENTS ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister will be aware that the western grain stabilization plan will generate an approximate $500 million payment during the next few weeks, I hope, which will cover last year's shortfall in grain receipts. Is it the Minister's strategy to announce the stabilization payments at the same time as he announces the initial prices for grains, in order to soften the blow of those prices being so low? When will he be making that announcement?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. The Government amended the Act a little over a year ago to allow for an interim payment. We are now in the process of determining whether in fact there will be an interim payment. We hope to have the figures generated and the money in the hands of producers by the first of May, if we can. When the Hon. Member talks about initial prices, I guess I would ask for his advice as a farmer. He knows full well that grain prices are not very favourable. I would ask him whether he thinks we should make the two announcements at the same time.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS INQUIRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister makes the announcement on initial prices, will he also announce that there will be deficiency payments to compensate for the low Canadian grain prices and the losses which are being generated by the U.S. Farm Bill? Will he take the advice of the advisory board and announce deficiency payments as well?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we face a very difficult situation in world grain prices. It is not entirely the fault of the U.S. Farm Bill. The European Community has been producing excessive amounts of grain, which I believe is the main reason for the fall in world grain prices. The American action is a reaction to what the Europeans are doing. We are looking at all kinds of avenues to support western and Canadian grain producers in this very difficult time. One of the means we have at our disposal is the Western Grain Stabilization Act which the Hon. Member mentioned in his previous question.

FORGET COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON PENSION INCOME

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Media reports indicate that the report of the Forget Commission will be delayed until the end of September, 1986. I know the Minister is aware of the concerns of pensioners across Canada, particularly those of the Canadian Forces. Is it possible to request from the Forget Commission an interim report on the matter of pension income so that this matter could be settled earlier rather than later?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Forget Commission will be reporting to me in a preliminary way at the end of June, which has always been the target date. The full report will be coming in before the fall. I have therefore asked the Forget Commission, as the Hon. Member will know, to take a specific look at this issue and to report to me at that time.

THE ARTS

DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS TO ARTISTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The Government seems to have a well-defined plan to discourage creative minds in this country, especially among francophones. This last month, the CBC and the CRTC have reduced the opportunities for our singers and composers, artists, actors, and so on to become known to and appreciated by the public. My question is as follows: What is the basis of the Minister's decision to distribute a few million dollars among the artists to develop their talents if, at the same time, he removes the most sought-after and effective means of making these talents known?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the budget of the CBC amounts to $869.5 million, which is an increase of nearly 3 per cent over last year.

Second, as concerns the recording industry, the Minister of Finance has allocated substantial amounts to this sector and the Government should be able to announce a policy in this regard after consultation with the people involved in the coming weeks.

Mrs. Finestone: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I have not had an answer to my question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, what will the Minister do now that the artists and technicians will be without a profession and without a job because of reduction in French contents from 75 per cent in 1973 to 50—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC has announced a new policy in this sector and the Government is aware of it. The people involved are being consulted and, as I have said, the problem is also related to the recording industry because broadcasters generally use records to make up their quotas. This is therefore first and foremost a production problem in the recording industry, and it is in this context that the Minister of Finance has made an additional allocation and that a new policy should be announced within a few weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Langelier) that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Can the Cabinet meeting be held somewhere else?

Order, please. Could I ask all those having meetings to have them somewhere else? The Hon. Member might allow his own colleague to have the floor.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke earlier today I was making as clear as I could the concern and the opposition of our Party and the people we represent to the increasing concentration and tremendous power which now resides in the hands of a very few individuals and companies in Canada, power which has been increasing at an alarming rate. The views I expressed are not held only by members of our Party.

I draw the attention of Members of Parliament to a news article which appeared in The Toronto Star March 19, 1986. Let me read just a few paragraphs from the article written by Diane Francis:

> Nine families control stock worth 46 per cent of the value of the most important companies on the Toronto Stock Exchange, according to a new survey prepared by Canada's major bankers.

The "major bankers" being the Canadian Bankers Association. The president of this Association, Robert MacIntosh, said:

> The amount of concentration is dangerous.
> The nine families include the empires of Kenneth Thomson, Edward and Peter Bronfman, Edgar and Charles Bronfman, Paul Desmarais, the Reichmann family, Galen Weston, Conrad and Montegu Black, Ron Southern of Calgary and the Siemen brothers of Calgary—

In addition, the report points out that two other huge financial instititions—the Laurentian Mutual Assurance Co. and Caisses Populaires Desjardins—have assets that rival the chartered banks.—Robin Korthals, president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank said—"the banks biggest concern is that their own rivals in the financial services business— insurance, trust or mutual fund companies—are not bound by the same ownership rules as banks, but should be—

No one can own more than 10 per cent of a Canadian chartered bank; and banks, in turn, cannot own more than 10 per cent of companies outside banking—

Bankers are not only concerned about the growing size of such family owned financial institutions, but are concerned about "cross ownership"—the linking of trust companies, insurance or mutual funds to other non-financial assets.

That is precisely what I was speaking about and that is precisely why so many questions were being asked today about the probably takeover by Genstar and, therefore, Canada Trust by Imasco.

I want to put on the record in the minute or two I have left the history of what has happened in recent years, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about larger mergers in Canada in which the transaction value is over $500 million. The period covers 1979 to 1985.

In 1979 Petro-Canada took over Pacific Petroleum Ltd. for $1.4 billion; the Woodbridge Co. Ltd., that is Thomson, took over Hudson Bay Co. for $641 million; Carter Oil and Gas Co. Ltd. took over Hamilton Bros. Petroleum Corp. for $522 million; Dome Petroleum Ltd. took over Mesa Petroleum Ltd. for $640 million.

In 1980 Hiram Walker-Gooderham and Works Ltd. took over Consumers Gas Co. for $1.2 billion; Dome Petroleum Ltd. took over Kaiser Petroleum Ltd. for $700 million; British Columbia Resources took over Kaiser Resources Ltd. for $665 million.

In 1981, Petro-Canada took over Petrofina for $1.4 million; Olympia & York Development took over Abitibi-Price for $618; Sulpetro took over CanDel Oil for $546 and Noranda Mines took over MacMillan Bloedel for $626. Dome Petroleum took over Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas for $2 billion; Canadian Pacific Enterprises Ltd. took over Canadian International Paper for $1 billion; Brascade Resources took over Noranda Mines for $1.6 billion; Canada Development Corporation took over Aquitaine Co. for $1.6 billion and Canada Development Corporation took over Texasgulf for $2.2 billion.

In 1983, Bell Canada Enterprises took over TransCanada Pipe Lines for $600 million; Olympia & York Developments took over Gulf Canada for $2.8 billion; Gulf Canada took over Abitibi-Price for $1.2 billion; Petro-Canada took over Gulf Canada for $880 million and Genstar took over Canada Trustco for $1.2 billion. That is just a partial record of the larger companies, Mr. Speaker.

I say, as have the bankers and many Conservative Members of Parliament, that this trend has not been useful to the country. It has not provided new jobs, nor has it made us more competitive. It is time the Government took steps and brought in legislation which would give the people of Canada at least some say about what happens in future economic development.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps I would draw attention to the fact that Bill C-91 brought before this House today is 85 pages long. In order to comment on the following statement by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), a former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I would first like to quote him as best as I can recall. He said that it has taken the Conservative Government too long, and asked why it took so long to bring in a competition piece of legislation. Either the Member for Papineau selectively chooses to forget the history of this Bill or he fails to recognize that it was he himself who introduced into this House, unsuccessfully, amendments to the Competition Bill that we are discussing today as Bill C-91.

He said the Bill does not go far enough and that that Bill C-91 is better than nothing. If this Bill is better than nothing, Mr. Speaker, then I might suggest perhaps the Liberal Government's Bill when in office and the Minister who introduced it must have had a Bill that was less than nothing. Then to confuse me further about what is the Member's actual position on this Bill, which is badly needed, he said he would like to get on with it. We will have an opportunity to answer a couple of the questions of the former Minister from Papineau. I hope we will be able to give this legislation second reading speedily in order to do what the NDP critic, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), says we have not done; that is, listen to the people he maintains we have not listened to in the last 19 months. The Member for Winnipeg North says that we have not listened to consumers and small businessmen and that he will hold this Bill up as long as he can until these people are heard from.

I think it is worthy to mention that in the months of July and August of 1985 we consulted extensively with both small and large business groups. It was implied in debate this morning by members of the Opposition that we were talking to big business rather than small business, that we were dealing with the banks rather than the entrepreneurs, the small businessmen who are the engine of economic growth in Canada.

I do not know whether the Chamber of Commerce in Winnipeg represents only banks, but I know that the Chamber of Commerce in Peterborough has 800 members from all sectors of the economy. In addition to bankers the members include farmers and small businessmen who really care about issues such as dominant position in the marketplace, and how they as small businesspeople can compete against large corporations. They are the first to recognize that over the last 16 years of Liberal domination of the economy of the nation, through policies established in the House of Commons in conjunction with the NDP, there have been no major changes to the competition legislation.

Hon. Members have said that we have not worked fast enough and that we have not consulted. I refer them to the announcements of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) that we have consulted with the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Consumer's Association of Canada, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Bar Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Federation of Independent Petroleum Marketers, and the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada.

Surely we can be realistic enough to admit that not only has there been more adequate consultation during the last 19 months, but that there was 16 years of consultation by the former Government. Many of the things contained in this legislation were introduced by the former Government through at least two cabinet Ministers since I became a Member 1979. Changes to the competition legislation have been next to nil for 75 years. We are dealing with obsolete legislation that makes it virtually impossible to get a conviction on dominant position or conspiracy, or whatever you wish to pursue in the marketplace today in order to give the small businessman a break. It is difficult to prove that big business may or may not be taking advantage of dominant position in the marketplace. If the present legislation had any teeth we would have some convictions. I do not believe there is anyone sitting on either side of the House who does not feel that there are areas in which we would like to proceed to bring changes to the competition legislation in order to give a better deal to small business persons.

The central objective is simple. In Canada we need a charter for the marketplace, something which we do not now have. We need rules which can be enforced. We need an understanding of amendments to the Act, and we also need full consultation on an on-going basis in the future. We must recognize the need for continual changes to competition legislation.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs outlined some major proposals in the House this morning. The former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Liberal Member for the riding of Papineau, recognized that we should get on with it. This legislation may not contain everything he wants, but I am sure the former Minister would agree that the legislation which he introduced did not contain everything he wanted either. However, I think we all generally agree that we need to make changes, and to make them fast.

We need a charter for the marketplace, as explained by the Minister this morning, because we recognize that the drive and momentum must come from Canadian small businesses. These are businesses which employ up to 50 people and make sales of up to $2 million each year. Amendments are needed to ensure the full and continued contribution of this sector to our well-being as a nation, and what a contribution they make.

I am not sure that we realize that small business is the well-spring of a large share of our economic output. Ninety-seven per cent of the business enterprises in the country are in that category. Of every 100 people employed in Canada today, 47 work in small business. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, this sector has been playing a central part in the current economic recovery. In the 19 months since the last election there has been a net increase of 580,000 jobs. One hundred and ninety-four thousand of these jobs, one-third of the total job creation, are in the service sector, a sector which is 98 per cent small business. In short, the role of small business is large in the economic future of our nation, as in any nation in a free marketplace today. It is indispensible. Its contribution must be protected and cultivated. Several of the key amendments in this Bill are designed to let us do that more effectively than we can today.

I would like to consider first the section which deals with the abuse of dominant position; in simple terms, the misuse of market muscle to restrict competition. As any thinking person understands, "big" is not synonymous with "bad". Many big businesses have grown to their size because they are very efficient. We can point to some Canadian examples of that in telecommunications. Companies have become multinational giants because they got to market with innovative products earlier than their competitors. Bigness may be what you need to bankroll exploration and to gamble on research and development. Bigness is often what you need in order to be audacious on a grand scale.

Competition law is not aimed at market power per se, but at its abuse. The amendments before us make it clear that the practices to be discouraged must be anti-competitive in nature. They allow for the defence based on superior competitive performance. However, market power, like any other power, can be abused. One example of this is its use to close the door to new competitors entering the marketplace. Another is to squeeze a vulnerable competitor out by cutting off its supplies, or through what is known as "predatory practices". Having been in small business myself for 25 years, I can verify that I have seen instances of that, with no legislation present to deal with it.

This Bill proposes that we approach abuse of dominant position monopoly as a civil matter rather than a criminal offence. As the Minister has pointed out, the criminal approach has not worked. In criminal law you must prove all the elements of the offence beyond any reasonble doubt. With respect to abuse of monopoly the effects are often perspective. We are concerned about the reduction of competition further down the road. This inherently conflicts with the criminal law approach.

Moreover, monopoly problems often raise complex economic questions with which the criminal courts are not equipped to deal. The competition tribunal composed of judges from the federal court and lay appointments will have the necessary expertise to deal effectively with abuses of the dominant positions while ensuring a fair and equitable judicial procedure.

The criminal approach has another drawback. You do not have much room to manoeuvre to correct a problem, the emphasis is on punishment rather than on correction, on penalties for damages already done. Under civil law, which is where these matters will be dealt with in the amended Act, it will be possible for the tribunal to get the practice itself stopped by issuing a cease and desist order, as an example, or ultimately, if necessary, by ordering to restore competition to the market-place they order divestiture.

This Bill will also give us a law that can deal with anti-competitive behaviour more effectively. The amended Act will provide examples of these practices for the guidance of the tribunal. This list of examples is something that has traditionally been very important and valuable to the small business community.

The other improvements have to do with the focus on the provisions. In some respects the present Act misses the point. These amendments will focus on the real problem. For example, the monopoly provisions in the present Act deal with situations in which market power is used, or is likely to be used, and I quote, "to the detriment of the public". That really does not give the courts a precise course to steer by. It does not point the process at the really crucial question: "Does this practice reduce competition or doesn't it?"

That is one reason why, as we have heard so often in recent days, there has been only one conviction for monopoly in 75 years. These changes will put the focus on the question and in so doing they will give us a better tool with which to defend small growing firms against the abuse of market power of their larger rivals.

Another aspect of the Bill that concerns small business directly is conspiracy. It is a major concern of small business. The conspiracy provision is, of course, the backbone of the competition law. It is the most pernicious of anti-competitive behaviour—it is what the gang has to do before it gangs up and it has to agree to lessen competition unduly. Conspiracy, under these amendments, remains what it has always been—a serious criminal offence.

Ideally these provisions should have a deterrent effect. They should stop a conspiracy before it starts. In cases where conspirators are not deterred the law must be an effective basis for prosecution. The conspiracy sections of the present law have worked fairly well. The sections are a century old and time has caught up with them. One major problem is the type of evidence which must be produced to get a conviction in court. When the unscrupulous get together to conspire they are not likely to leave a paper trail of written agreements.

Until a few years ago it was possible to infer conspiracy from all the surrounding circumstances—you could base your case on circumstantial evidence as long as you could prove, beyond any reasonable doubt, an agreement to lessen competition unduly. But in 1980 the Supreme Court of Canada handed down the Atlantic Sugar judgment which created a number of ambiguities in the law. For that reason the Bill now before us contains an amendment under which the existence of a conspiracy may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. This merely restates the law as it was prior to 1980.

The second change is in penalties. The Act now allows for fines up to one million dollars. In the last attempt to amend this Act by the former Government the anti was raised to two million. To be truly effective, though, the penalty must be much higher. The Bill before us increases the maximum penalty to five million dollars.

However, the Government recognizes that when you're competing in export markets the law should allow firms to get together to promote Canadian export overseas. Bill C-91 proposes to relax the rules on the formation and operation of export consortia and these changes should help small business to take advantage of the enormous potential in greater Canadian trade with other countries.

Finally, there is a change in this Act that deals with pre-notification of mergers. The amended law will require companies with combined assets or sales in excess of five hundred million dollars planning mergers representing a value of more than 35 million to tell the Government about them in advance. It is high time we were able to evaluate the merits of mergers before they have taken place. Small businesses in Canada have let us know through their organizations that they attach a high importance to this change.

We know how important small business is to our economic future; it is a matter of record. We know its importance as a source of jobs and national income, but we should never forget another aspect of its contribution, one that does not necessarily show up in surveys from Statistics Canada. Small business is a well-spring of another kind. It is the source of new products, new ideas and new thinking. Small business is the challenge that keeps the established older sectors alert, uncomplacent and competitive. Small business is the youth of the economy.

To meet the economic challenge of our time at home and abroad we need the full, unimpeded contribution of this sector operating at its full potential. These amendments will take us a step toward that objective. They merit our support. I support these amendments and I urge the Hon. Members to do the same. I hope that finally after 75 years we will see a Competition Act passed in this House that will be current with the times, will address the needs of the small business community, will make it possible to close in on areas where conspiracy occurs and will allow parliamentarians, on a clear conscience, to say that they have done their bit collectively to deal with a nasty situation that is, in some cases, getting out of control in no small part due to the long years of procrastination and delay in dealing with changes to the Competition Act.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member a question. Is the Member aware that the Conservative chairman of the finance committee, the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Member from Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) have expressed their concern publicly about the takeover of Genstar by Imasco and pointed out the possibility that they can use that power which they will get by tapping the assets of Canada Trust for their own purposes, and not necessarily to protect the interests of the depositors in the Canada Trust company. Given that kind of objection by Members of his own caucus how can the Member stand up in the House and say that this Bill deals with the problems it is supposed to deal with.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is somewhat alarmed by the fact that Members of Parliament have the right to freedom of speech and should be able to express their opinions freely. That does not mean that their opinion is not debatable. I can understand the Hon. Member's comments, coming from the New Democratic Party. His Party will take a position which really involves a conscience issue and dictates that position so that everyone must toe the line. Therefore, I can understand why he is concerned about a Member of Parliament expressing an opinion that differs from the opinion of another Member.

I suggest that if he persists in delaying this legislation from moving forward to committee where we can hear from important witnesses such as small businessmen, small petroleum dealers, small grocers and consumer associations, then he is showing irresponsibility in his job as a Member of Parliament. If he intends to follow through with his threat in his speech this morning to oppose this legislation as long as he can, then I say he is irresponsible in his job as a Member of Parliament.

We want to get on with the job and see the Bill move forward so that we may hear responsible people at committee and develop a competition Bill that really means something. He knows as well as I do that there has only been one prosecution under the current legislation and there should have been a lot more.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not need lectures from that Member or any other Member about the way in which members of our Party arrive at conclusions and how they will vote. We have just as much freedom and have expressed those freedoms whenever there was a question of conscience.

I notice that the Member did not deal with my question at all. He did not indicate whether he agreed with the opinion expressed by Members in his own caucus.

Let me put another question to him. Brascan is a company which owns Noranda, among other corporations. Noranda owns mines, forest companies and so on. Does the Hon. Member not realize that when a company like Brascan controls Trilon, the decisions it will make for investment by Trilon may well be decisions which are good for the owners of Brascan but not good for the people who invest in the trust company controlled through Trilon? I am not saying they would make those decisions; I am putting the same question that was raised by the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Mr. Domm: The Hon. Member was in the House today and he knows that we have introduced not one but two pieces of legislation that would give us far more than we have now to deal with the situation he is raising. One of those pieces of legislation deals with financial institutions. We could either go before a tribunal and review the situation as we are proposing in Bill C-91 or we could give the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) the opportunity to react and decide on actions taken for controlling interest in other financial institutions.

We should get on with the job. I agree with what he says but I am sure he also agrees that we do not have anything now which allows us to deal with some of those matters the way we would like.

The Government is simply suggesting that if we can get on with this legislation and the legislation presented this morning by the Minister of State for Finance, we might be able to do more. Filibustering this Bill because everyone has not been heard will not solve any of the problems we have had for 75 years, nor does it deal with the fact that we have tried more than three times to introduce badly needed changes to the competition Act. The Hon. Member will recognize the need for those changes and we would like to get on with it. I am sure he will co-operate in the final analysis because he wants to do something about it.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is aware that two main issues arise in relation to the legislation dealing with competition, the current Combines Investigation Act and the Bill presently before the House. First is the question of the restriction of competition and second is the question of concentration of power.

At present there are two cases of great concern relating to the concentration of power. One is the proposed takeover of Genstar by Imasco and the other is the proposed takeover of Hiram Walker Resources by Gulf. The Genstar and Imasco situation may very well be dealt with by the legislation introduced this morning by the Minister of State for Finance.

If the Bill before the House now is put in place with the terms provided for in the current legislation, will the Parliamentary Secretary state whether it will be effective in dealing with the concentration of power such as that in the proposed Gulf takeover of Hiram Walker Resources?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the intent in Bill C-91 is that the merger of two corporations totalling a value of $500 million or more, where one of the companies being merged has a value of $35 million or more, would be a notification to the Government that the merger could be investigated before the fact. The tribunal is being set up in order that we can do what is not possible now.

The Government requires pre-notification, and setting the size of the merger company at $35 million—which is not a huge corporation—at least provides pre-notification and the opportunity to place the merger before the tribunal. We would be able to assess before the fact whether undue pressure was being applied on the market-place as a result of that amalgamation.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the Parliamentary Secretary did not answer the question put by his colleague, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway). The question was very simple. Will this Bill have retroactive effect? Will it address itself to the Gulf takeover of Hiram Walker? It was not a general question with respect to Bill C-91, but whether or not this Bill, once passed, will be applied to the takeover of Hiram Walker by Gulf.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, my gut feeling—which is what it is at this point—is that if we get on with the job quickly enough we will be able to deal with more than one or two mergers being contemplated today.

I believe this Bill was introduced in December, 1985. If we can move fast enough we can address some of these problems.

Mr. Nunziata: Answer the question.

Mr. Domm: I cannot answer the question directly because it is all hypothetical. We could still be doing this 16 years from now if we adopt the attitude of the New Democratic Party. If we are addressing the subject 16 years from now, nothing will happen.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Canadian Armed Forces— Policy governing homosexuals and lesbians. (b) Government position; the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)— Corporate Affairs—Legislation affecting takeovers; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)— The Budget—Effect on middle-income taxpayers. (b) Economic forecasts.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I believe we all recognize that the debate today is very timely, dealing as it does with a very important piece of legislation at a time when Canadians are very much seized by the fundamental changes taking place in the economic structure of this country. The recent wave of acquisitions, takeovers and mergers highlight what is becoming a very serious matter of concern to Members on all sides of the House and Canadians throughout the country, that is, the concentration of economic power in fewer and fewer hands having a deleterious effect, I would say, on the political economy of Canada, the question of who decides, who has influence and who makes decisions. The trend over the past 10, 15 or 20 years has been substantially accelerated over the last year or two years. The amassing of large amounts of capital has been part of that strange disease which has infected all parts of the free market system in the western world. Certain people in the United States, Great Britain and Europe believe that bigger is better, and we see the advent particularly of the horizontal acquisitions of the large conglomerates for which there is no economic rationale other than the acquisition of assets. That has become unquestionably a matter of very serious public policy and concern. This is not a matter of some kind of game which is being played in the boardrooms of downtown Toronto, Montreal, New York or Houston. It is a matter which really reaches into every town, village and hamlet because the results of those kinds of actions have very serious repercussions on the availability of capital for other kinds of businesses. It has a very major impact upon the workings of the stock market as an allocator of resources for the development of new businesses or the restructuring of old businesses. When we have a situation where close to 60 per cent of the assets of the large 300 corporations in the Toronto stock exchange index are controlled by six or seven major economic groups, one really has to ask oneself whether that will either result in a proper allocation of resources according to the most efficient use or whether it will be based upon who has the smartest set of lawyers, accountants and corporation manipulators. It has become part of the game, and the purpose of the game can be glossed over or hyped up in the most elegant of terms but I do not believe it can be justified in terms of the strict economic interests of this country.

This piece of legislation is really one of the few tools the Government has to meet that problem. But legislation by itself is not enough. We can have the most efficient and effective law on the statute books but if there is no policy to accompany it, if there is no set of clear guidelines, a declaration of commitment or a clear sense of purpose by a Government, then those laws will be abdicated. They will lie fallow. They will simply be there on the books. Any tribunal, regulatory agency or group of public servants follow the signals of the Government which sets the tone. We can look at the anti-trust actions in the United States. Whether it is a Democratic or Republican administration will determine how effectively anti-trust actions will be pursued. It is interesting to note that the number of anti-trust suits taken by the U.S. Department of Justice under the Reagan administration is almost half of those taken under the previous Democratic administration. It is the same law but a different Government, therefore there is a substantial reduction in the number of anti-trust actions which have been taken.

I believe all Hon. Members came to this House with some interest and expectation with respect to the position of the Government not on the legislation per se, important as that may be, but on how the Government intends to use those new legislative tools and instruments in order to deal with the major fundamental change taking place today. We received part of our answer today in Question Period. We asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Coté) if he intends to apply this law retroactively as his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), says she intends to do in the case of financial takeovers. We asked if he would apply the same rules retroactively based upon this legislation to the Gulf Oil Hiram Walker takeover. All we received was an adroit dancing on the head of a pin. There was no answer and no commitment. That was repeated by the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary who, in his period in opposition, ran to the barricades hoisting banners high in defence of the interests of the competitive market-place. All of a sudden he has found a reason to hide behind his desk and behind government bafflegab such as: "Well, maybe. Who knows. We'll have to see. Its hypothetical". We have all been through that, Mr. Speaker. It is greatly disappointing that the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), who acquired such a reputation as a Member of the Opposition for his crusading defence of the consumer, now finds himself engaging in what can only be called dissembling.

Mr. Nunziata: Hypocrisy.

Mr. Axworthy: "Dissembling" I think is a more parliamentary word. It is one I prefer because it carries with it an even broader definition of someone who simply has wheels for legs and runs up and down the aisles looking for cover.

What we have here is a clear example of no policy. We have asked questions as to what the Government intends to do about the obvious and clear evasion of market-place standards by the major oil retailers, refiners and wholesalers. Time after time examples have been brought forward where the downstream pricing of oil products has been convoluted, restricted and, in fact, constipated by decisions taken not by the market-place but inside corporate boardrooms. What answers have we received? We have received evasion, obfuscations and dissembly, no policy. What more evidence does the Government require? We gave the example this afternoon of Canada's largest oil supplier clearly dumping off its extra supply in the United States at below market prices in order to cream off its surplus in the Manitoba market so as to keep its prices high. That is a very obvious demand for action to which I hope the Minister will give his attention.

The reactive demands of the Opposition would not be necessary if the Government had a policy, if it recognized that its theology of the market-place, which has been pronounced from on high from every pulpit since that Party arrived in government, applies both ways. It does not just mean giving the oil companies a free ride on the tax system. It also means making sure the benefits flow cleanly through the system and are subject to market discipline and pressures.

It makes one think that this devotion to the market-place is not a devotion at all but simply a camouflage to cover up some really unhealthy practices carried on by its friends in big business. The Parliamentary Secretary can rise in the House with his hand over his heart portraying his Government as the defender of small business, but its actions belie those words.

I applaud in part some of the Conservative back-benchers who, over the weekend, were bold enough to say some action should be taken. However, by Monday morning they found reasons for not being here and for forgetting their commitment. They got themselves all the publicity they needed over the weekend but, once again, where is the action to support words? What we are finding is that this is a Government simply made up of words. It is a Government in which the public relations mimeograph machine is far more important than the effects of action, policies and programs. That is not excusable when we take into account the circumstances we now face. We are not dealing with some trifling matter or some kind of small marginal legislation. We are going to the very heart of the economic structure of this country. We are going to the question of who will be making decisions. It would seem to me that whether one is Conservative, Liberal or socialist, that question must set up a major concern about growing economic concentrations of power. Those who control the avenues of money begin to control the avenues of communication, of advertising and of political payment. Before we know it, it is they who will decide what is in the public interest, not the people who are elected to decide. The first question we must ask is: Are there sufficient powers in this legislation to respond to that concentration? The second question is: Does the Government have the guts and the willingness to put a policy in place to make it work?

As my colleague said this morning, we contend that the legislation has been weakened from the original legislation, Bill C-29, which was presented by the previous Government by the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. There have been some very interesting shifts in terms of the language. One now has to prove that there is an intent, a purpose, to frustrate competition. It will have to be shown that there is some type of malicious intent. All that the perpetrator will have to say is: "Gosh, I didn't know it was going to happen that way. I'm as innocent as Huck Finn. I've just been out on the raft, folks. I don't know what's going on. The fact that my acquisition has now given me full control over the energy sector, or the drilling sector, is something I didn't know would happen". Thus everyone will say: "You are obviously not responsible". Setting this as a condition seriously weakens the ability to implement the type of action which will be required to deal with a situation involving a major conglomerate acquiring that type of economic power.

Furthermore, as we have pointed out, the question of a tribunal is a very interesting one. Will it really work the way it is intended to work when it has part-time judges and part-time lay people appointed by the Government? I suppose they will be subjected to some sort of Order in Council review by a parliamentary committee. Nevertheless, they will be working without full-time resources and capacity.

This also raises an interesting question with respect to the inherent latent potential for some conflicts of interest. Take the case of a private sector person who belongs to the right kind of clubs. He will talk to his friends who are part of a milieu which gives him a certain feeling of compatability. Is this the type of person we want judging his peers? I suppose one can say that there is nothing more dominating in pure human behaviourial terms than peer pressure, whether it is found within a teenage gang or a group of business people sitting around a table at the Albany Club or the Manitoba Club. I am not saying that this is something malevolent. It is not. It is simply a matter of acquiring the coloration of one's environment, to put it politely. This will draw people out of this type of environment. In effect it will be saying to them: "Judge your peers. You tell them they have to divest themselves of hundreds of millions of dollars worth of assets". I ask Hon. Members: Does that give us the confidence that the tribunal will have the zeal and intensity to come to grips with conditions which we all know are taking place and which will continue?

I believe that unless this Bill is substantially amended and strengthened, the signal which will emerge from the Parliament of Canada to all those people out there who have legions of lawyers and accountants poring over their account books to see what the next raid can be and who can be the next victim is that it is business as usual. The message will be: "There is a licence, folks". Without a policy and some type of legislative commitment, the signal being sent out of these hallowed halls is a very weak one indeed. It does not carry with it the type of strong and deliberate belief that Parliament is deeply concerned with the economic make-up and structure of the country. It does not carry with it the belief that there should be competition in a real sense, that is, within sectors. Therefore, the response will be: "We have a licence to do what we want".

I would like to add a further consideration which I did not hear mentioned in either the speech of the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary. We are now proposing to negotiate with the United States a free trade Bill. The major priority of the United States is in the area of technology and services. The Americans have stated time and time again that their major objective in these trade negotiations will be to have a complete and open market in the area of high technology and services, which includes the financial world. It includes a host of sectors of our economy which heretofore have been subject to regulation because we felt that it was in the best interests of Canada to maintain a fairly strong level of Canadianization in those industries.

As Members of Parliament what we must recognize is how this competition Bill meets with the requirement to ensure that there is not a whole new era of intra-corporation management, collusion and rearrangement. We know that our economy is dominated by a high level of foreign ownership. We know that our economy suffers from a series of decisions made in intra-corporate trade and investment. These are matters which never reach the public view because they are conducted between corporations, carried out in head offices in Pittsburg, London or Atlanta. What we have to look at clearly is putting together a demand for a total "open sesame" in terms of trade and the services industry. There must also be demands to weaken or eliminate the sort of intellectual property copyright laws. There must be a competition Act. What is really being opened up is the potential for major international corporate decisions which will be totally unaccountable to any national body. There will be no form of accountability to Parliament, or to our courts, or to any legitimate body which can hold these corporations responsible for their decisions.

What does the competition legislation say about these types of practices? Absolutely nothing. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gets his way and there is a total economic free trade in the area of services and high technology, how will we be able to prevent large scale corporate decision making being made outside our boundaries? This may impact on our trade, our jobs and our investment. One of the few areas potentially available to us is in the area of competition legislation. I see absolutely no preparation, no consideration, of that whatsoever. Thus here we are launching into one of the most significant historical economic decisions in the history of the country and we are not arming ourselves properly for it.

There have been major discussions in the United Nations with respect to establishing a code for trans-national behaviour. The same type of thing is taking place in the European Economic Community. What is being prepared for us by the Government in order to respond to that condition? Absolutely nothing. There has been no preparation, no looking at the potential. Yet we are being told that the Bill before us is the answer to all our concerns.

I say to Members of the House that we must look carefully at the competition Bill and ask ourselves how it will ensure a level of accountability under the new regime which this Government is practising. If this is not done then we had better go back to the drawing board and take another look, otherwise it will not do the job.

Of course we can say this measure is an improvement over old practices. The real test and standard is how it will meet the realities of today. How will it meet the restructuring of our economy? How will it meet the real fundamental changes which could occur under the proposed free trade? How will it meet the economic political power which is being brought together by these amalgamations in order to protect, defend and nurture not only an economic market-place but a democratic market-place? These are the concerns which we raise on behalf of the Opposition. We will pursue them as diligently as we can.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Party of the Hon. Member was in office for 23 years but for seven months before the election of September, 1984. What did his Party do during that time? Does he have no sense of humility when he gets up now and lectures us with respect to the deficiencies of our Bill?

• (1600)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is enjoying his newfound publicity in the Edmonton Journal and therefore feels emboldened enough to rise to his feet. I would remind him that if he had been a Member of the House during those times, he would realize that one of the major reasons three different attempts to bring in stronger competition laws did not work was the major filibustering on the part of his Party. The kind of parliamentary hijacking that went on time after time prevented that legislation from passing because the Tories were working in concert with their friends in big business.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, let me put the same question to the Hon. Member. I will not go back to Mackenzie King and the more than 50 years of the last 65 years in which Liberals ran the country. However, the Liberals formed the Government from 1962 to 1984. They did ask the Economic Council to study the question. The Economic Council made recommendations and at least three times the Liberal Government brought in draft legislation which was not very good. Now that the Hon. Member is in opposition, he is making the same criticisms of this Bill which we made of the Liberal Bill.

The Liberal Government had the same power to impose closure as this Government has and the Liberal Government did use its power to impose closure although not as often as the Conservatives. If the Liberals had really wanted legislation passed, they could have had it passed. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) that the reason they did not pass the legislation was that the business community really did not want good anti-competition legislation and the Liberals were not prepared to take issue with their financial supporters. That is why the legislation did not pass and that is why the Hon. Member is now making the kind of speech that he should have made when he was a cabinet Minister of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, first I would remind the Hon. Memer that my oath of the Privy Council prevents me from indicating what kind of speeches I made as a member of the Cabinet regarding these matters, but I would say that on this issue, I have certainly been pretty consistent.

I would say to the Hon. Member that his rewriting and interpretation of history is not quite accurate. I would only point to the last major effort to bring in substantial amendments to the Combines Investigation Act in 1983-84, an effort which was prevented by the bell-ringing tactics of the opposition Parties with which I suppose his Party was in concert. The bell ringing was a major frustration in the implementation of that Bill. We had brought in the amendments and if we had had the kind of co-operation that they are now proposing, we would have had a new competition Bill a full two and a half years ago. We would not need to ask for retroactivity from a Minister who is obviously not prepared to give it. We would have been able to implement and activate many of the measures that now exist. We are saying that it is now time for strengthened measures, not the kind of weakened measures that are in this Bill.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on what I feel is the somewhat selective memory of the Hon. Member with respect to the facts as they have occurred over the last few years. The Hon. Member was a Member of the House and a Minister of the Crown for many, many years. He was a Minister of the Crown back in 1976 at the time when a court decision in the K.C. Irving oil case literally put an end to the effectiveness of the present legislation that was put in place many years ago, the Combines Investigation Act. After that, in 1977, the Government introduced Bill C-42. Later in 1977, the Government introduced another Bill, namely, Bill C-13. In 1984, it introduced a further Bill, namely, Bill C-29. All those Bills were aimed at amending and trying to make more effective this particular legislation.

The Hon. Member has talked about the question of the Government's commitment to try to make this thing work. Where was the commitment of the Government of which he was a part at that time? What is the official policy of his Party at the moment with respect to combines and competition legislation? Is it the official policy of his Party to make sure that competition is effective and in place and that there is legislation to allow it, and is it also the position of his Party that we ought to make sure that there is no concentration of power whatsoever in Canada?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, again we are dealing with the interesting question of whose history is more accurate. I would only amend the Hon. Member's comment for the sake of the record. In 1976, I did not have the pleasure of serving in this House. It was only a gleam in my eye. At the time, I was serving the interests of the people of Manitoba in the Manitoba Legislature, but my views on this particular issue were as consistent then as they are now.

I would remind the Hon. Member that he might wish to go back to his history books to learn that in 1976, the then Liberal Government did bring in a series of amendments to the Combines Investigation Act in response to those conditions. Once that Bill was passed, we needed some time to look at the impact of it but were prevented from doing so by the election of 1979 that brought in the Conservative Government. After the 1980 election, we started another major review which culminated in the consultations undertaken and legislation proposed by my former colleague, Mrs. Judy Erola, and at that time we had what we thought was an effective Bill that provided the answer to the Hon. Member's two questions. Yes, we want an effective combines Bill and we do not want economic concentration of power.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the primary purpose of the competition Bill is to protect consumers. Bill C-91 which is now before the House was the result of some very intensive negotiations with the so-called Gang of Five, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Business Council on National Issues, the Grocery Products Manufacturers and the Canadian Bar Association. Is it any wonder that the business community is in general agreement with this Bill? In effect, the business community drafted this Bill which contains a number of loopholes.

It seems to me that one of the reasons for the previous Bills on this particular issue not passing Parliament was that the previous administration was not prepared to cave in to the large business interests in Canada, the Gang of Five. As a result of the input of the Gang of Five, the legislation was watered down.

I would like to ask my hon. colleague a question with respect to the competition tribunal. He indicated that he had certain concerns about the make-up of this particular tribunal in that its members would be lay people. In the view of the Hon. Member, would it more appropriate to have a judicial member sitting on this particular competition tribunal and would it be advisable, rather than having part-time members sit on this tribunal which is to hear merger and monopoly complaints, to consider the possibility of turning it into a form of court of record or a court of law?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member reminded me, with his description of the role of the Big Five, that in the kingdom of the blind, the one-eyed man is king. When the Government is blind, obviously that one-dimensional group is acting in a sovereign role.

As far as the tribunal is concerned, I think that as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), said today, it almost verges on being unconstitutional. Our position is that to give that tribunal the strength it needs, we should have full-time lay members in order to provide a balance but also members drawn from the legal or judicial fraternity as full-time members who do not serve part time in another court. We think that this would give the tribunal the effectiveness, consistency and power it needs and, most important, would provide it with the independence and autonomy it needs to ensure that it is, beyond a doubt, totally independent in making its decisions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is always somewhat astonishing to see that Members of the Official Opposition who had every opportunity to come up with practical solutions for Canadians when they were on this side of the House, now that they are no longer at the helm seem to have an answer for everything. I find that rather astonishing.

It is also somewhat surprising to see that those who then were bed fellows in Opposition, are now tearing each other's hair and blaming one another for amendments made by the Official Opposition when it was last in office.

Mr. Speaker, the work we did before introducing this major legislative measure was the result of exhaustive consultations with the various Governments and parties interested in this Bill. Again we might remind our colleagues in the Official Opposition that they forgot the word consultation, a process for which they did not have much use when they were ensconced in their ivory tower. Ever since we took over we have always made sure that Canadians and the interested parties were consulted before our legislative measures were introduced. It is an important consideration which is giving renewed confidence to Canadians but which had been completely forgotten in recent years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gagliano: Did your Government consult before adopting new unemployment insurance regulations?

Mr. Blais: When the time comes to speak about these regulations, you can do so. As usual, your comments are beside the point. You can never discuss issues at the proper time. When it is time for you to speak, you always try... Earlier, you had an opportunity to rise to ask questions and make comments. You should have done so.

You may laugh, but when you do not know what a piece of legislation is about, it is easier to laugh and to speak about unemployment insurance even though the subject being discussed is an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal. It is much easier.

Mr. Speaker, our discussions on Bill C-91 have clearly shown that competition is the main asset of a free enterprise system, even though it has been badly neglected in the past.

It is therefore proper to note that the purpose of the Act which we are now amending and updating is to protect this advantage, because, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) pointed out this morning, our competition law can be described as a charter of the market. It spells out the rules of the game for competition among businesses in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if this were its only role, legislation on competition would be relatively easy to prepare. However, there is more to it. As we all know, the laws on competition also have an impact on the conditions in which Canadian businesses compete with foreign interests in Canada and abroad. The legislation therefore operates on two levels, namely on the Canadian market and on the international market.

Mr. Speaker, in both cases it is very important to freshen up the Act, to make it workable and bring it in line with current Canadian realities. Those realities have changed considerably with the passage of time; it is a far cry from the situation a century ago when the legislation was put in place. Now, with all the upheavals in international economic relations, it is time to update the Act, Mr. Speaker.

Going back even some 20 years ago only, in 1969, when the Economic Council of Canada recommended that the Act be modernized, Canada was the fourth trading nation in the world, closely followed by Japan. But today, we are down to the eighth rank and Japan exports twice as much as we do. And since then, trade talks, whether the Kennedy Round or the Tokyo Round, have lowered tariff barriers and increased international competition.

The shortfall sustained in recent years before we came to power must now motivate us. In the early '80s, in the late '70s the previous Government should have taken strong measures to stimulate the economy, especially in the area of competition. Nothing was done. We therefore must respond with the legislation now before us.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments contained in the Bill allow for current realities. This shows in the opening paragraph, the preamble where, as opposed to the present Act, the purpose of the new legislation is expressly stated. The preamble sets down, for the benefit of those who will be called upon to interpret the Act in the future, the intent of Parliament in enacting the new provisions. I will simply quote a few words. "The purpose of this Act is to maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to expand opportunities for Canadian participation in world markets while at the same time recognizing the role of foreign competition in Canada". This is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, and it has been our approach to clearly enunciate at the outset what our enactments will be used for and what their purpose is.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House four major aspects of the amendments, concerning specifically international trade. The first aspect deals with mergers. Provisions regulating mergers must be stringent and efficient, because non-competitive mergers can be detrimental to the efficiency of our economy. The proposed amendments offer effective protection against that danger. God knows how much we need that, in view of the meager results achieved over a century. There have been eight prosecutions and not a single conviction.

But there are also other requirements. Provisions concerning mergers must be drafted in such a way as to encourage competition between Canadian businesses at home in Canada, without putting them at a disadvantage when carrying out business dealings in international markets.

The Act as it now stands unfortunately does not meet that requirement. It does not provide for the necessary distinctions, because it takes little heed of international trade. The amendments proposed in this legislation would on the other hand expressly call upon the Tribunal to consider that aspect. When looking at the merits of a proposed merger, the Tribunal would consider the impact of competition from imports, a very important aspect if we are to have an accurate and precise view of a merger. In so doing, Mr. Speaker, the Tribunal would be led to make distinctions. It would have to decide on the difference between a situation where Canadian businesses would be protected against foreign competition, by tariff barriers for instance, as opposed to another where they would have to stomach the full impact of imports.

Canada is a trading nation. One job out of three depends on international trade. This is why when a merger would greatly improve efficiency, thereby increasing exports or substitutions to imports, the Tribunal will have to authorize it.

The second aspect, Mr. Speaker, on which I should like to dwell concerns the various ways of considering copartnerships under this Bill. Once again, each case will have to be assessed according to the advantages and disadvantages of those operations. It is quite obvious that under certain circumstances, involved corporations can reduce competition.

The provisions of the Bill take that possibility into account. A copartnership which reduces competition will be subjected to the provisions dealing with mergers generally. On the other hand, copartnerships are also of some value to Canada. They allow the pooling of human resources, of skills in the areas of energy management, research and development. Under the proposed amendments, the Competition Act will allow copartnerships with respect to projects which could not be carried out without risk sharing among several partners.

The third point which I wanted to raise deals with specialization agreements. As the word suggests, it refers to agreements between corporations which would like to specialize in a line of products or of services rather than competing with everyone in all areas.

Sometimes corporations conclude such agreements because the market in which they operate is too small to accommodate several suppliers. They feel that the rationalization of production resulting from these agreements would lead to improved efficiency and major economies of scale. Thanks to this new legislation, the specialization agreements approved by the Tribunal will be exempted from the provisions governing conspiracies and exclusive dealings. It is clear that we must keep this aspect in mind, since abuses can still occur. Part of the legislation must always provide for punitive action. Agreements which contribute to increasing Canadian exports and substituting Canadian services and products to imports will be eligible for this exemption. The Tribunal will have to take into account these trade realities when deciding whether to authorize these agreements.

Mr. Speaker, another provision of this Bill should help Canada strenghten its position on world markets by relaxing the regulations which govern the creation and operation of joint ventures. Under the current legislation, agreements between competitors affecting only exports are exempted from the conspiracy provisions. However, they are no longer exempted when they limit competition in the domestic market. Well, Mr. Speaker, many observers have pointed out that the wording of the current legislation is vague, extremely restrictive, and likely to impede our performance in foreign markets. There is no doubt that we must clarify and widen this exemption if we want Canada to improve or at least maintain its position as a great trading partner in the present circumstances where international trade is in constant movement and where we must act in the interest of Canadians generally, but especially of our workers who are involved in the export industries, and who need stability and assured markets.

For Canada, Mr. Speaker, international trade is practically a matter of life and death. Through our domestic market of 26 million people, we enjoy the standard of living of an economic superpower. To maintain this enviable position, we must succeed as a trading nation. Out of every dollar of our national income, nearly 30 cents come from sales to foreign countries. That is a lot. These sales to foreign countries are responsible for over 3 million jobs in Canada. Let us not forget it. By making a lot of noise over the past few weeks, Members opposite have tried to lessen the positive impact of the steps taken by our Government to create for Canadians over half a million new jobs, more than 83 p. 100 of which are of a permanent nature.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the Canadian people wanted . That is exactly what they asked us to do. If they have elected us, it is because they wanted us to maintain the permanent jobs we had already and create new ones.

The strategy which our Government has put together to strenghten our economy—in other words, to increase the national income, create jobs and help the economy recover—has given excellent results. Over the past 15 months, this strategy has helped Canadian corporations to become serious competitors on international markets. That is the key to our economic growth. Instead of being afraid to attract attention on international markets, we have strenghtened our position over the past few months, and the results are quite positive.

If we had listened to those prophets of doom and gloom in the Opposition every time we took a step or considered it, either in terms of foreign investment in Canada or the economic steps that were taken, nothing would have been done and we would still be stagnating in the economic situation left by the former Government which only bothered to create temporary employment and provide funds which were borrowed by mortgaging the future of young Canadians and our families.

We have changed that. We decided, Mr. Speaker, to reverse that trend, we decided to give back to our fellow citizens that sense of pride that they had lost. It is not with money borrowed by an already heavily burdened Government that we shall put our country on the path to economic recovery. I believe that is obvious. To those prophets of gloom and doom who predicted a loss of 200,000 jobs when the previous budget was introduced in May 1984, we answered by creating over 500,000 jobs during the past year, which means a difference of 700,000 jobs. That was not the first macro-economic blunder of our neighbours in the Official Opposition. But it does not matter. It is not serious. It is only one of those . . . They made so many mistakes that this one blends in with the rest. They don't mention it. They talk about something else.

Mr. Speaker, it is of course up to the businesses themselves to be successful in the market place of Canada and elsewhere. The position of our Government has been to make way again for our companies, our 750,000 small- and medium-sized Canadians companies, which were only waiting for a little help from our Government to feel that they were understood, that there were people in the Government to back them and speak for them.

At this moment of truth, Canadian businesses must come out as the winners by outdoing their competitors with better ideas, better products, better services and a better commercial strategy. Our past shows that we can trust Canadian businesses to meet that challenge. But the Government, and by this I mean Parliament, also has its responsibilities. We draft the basic rules that allow companies to live and thrive. It is up to us to see that those regulations are consistent, that they are relevant and that they foster rather than impede excellence. It is also up to us to see that those regulations are in keeping with the realities and demands of international competition. The Bill before the House will help us, I am sure, assume those responsibilities. I believe this Bill deserves our support and should deserve the unanimous support of the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in the merger section of the Bill, if this Bill is as good as the Member purports it to be, why is it that conglomerate mergers are not included in the competition policy of Government? Why are conglomerate mergers not included, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member is familiar with the Bill as a whole. If we look at it that way, I would suggest that we took the existing legislation and tried to improve it.

I could go over the major provisions of the Bill, but in that respect I think that no particular problems came up in recent months. The matter has not been the subject of recent consultations, but if the Hon. Member can think of a specific provision which might be improved as a result of representations made in the context of our consultation process, I think he will have every opportunity to raise the issue before the legislative committee. I do not know whether the Hon. Member sits on the committee to which the Bill will be referred, but we will be pleased to debate the question at that time. But each particular case . . . Perhaps you should wait. The Bill is not designed to deal with each particular case. We are proposing a tribunal which will review each case submitted. Then we will be able to see—Sir, you should be listening because I am giving you the answer. If you do not want me to—Was it simply your question you wanted to hear or the answer?

If all you want to hear is the question, no problem, I will just sit down.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I was having a little chuckle because I do not think the Member has read the Bill and I really do not think he understands what a conglomerate merger is because he says that that has not been a problem. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is the Imasco takeover of Genstar and the Gulf takeover of Hiram Walker. I cannot see how he can say that that has not been a problem. It is a problem and that is why the Government introduced this Bill this morning. Where has he been? How can he say that he just wants to fancy the Bill up? Surely he wants to make an effective competition policy. Of course, if the Tories are not interested in effective competition policy, they would be satisfied with that.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the Bill are there. The cases will be dealt with to their satisfaction. Provision has been made for a tribunal, but they are referring to deals which in some cases have yet to be completed.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I had not planned on asking a question to the Parliamentary Secretary, but I feel that I have to rise following his reply to my colleague for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). It is obvious that the Parliamentary Secretary has not examined Bill C-91 properly. It is obvious that he received a paper prepared by the officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Minister's office, which he has obediently read, and that he does not understand at all what our competition law is about. His reply clearly shows his crass ignorance about this matter.

Since this Bill will soon be referred to a committee, I urge him to make a serious study, to do his homework and to read the Bill so that he can make an objective and rational contribution when this Bill is considered in committee.

The question asked by the Hon. Member concerned mergers. Bill C-91 is much weaker than Bill C-29 introduced by the former Government, which contained a whole series of factors to be considered for rejecting a merger which would have harmful effects on the Canadian economy. The Minister has ignored these twelve factors. He has put them aside. He has substantially reduced the strength of the provisions of the law on competition which allow the Government to take action to prevent a merger which would have harmful results for the Canadian economy.

What the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt asked was why the bill was not stronger and did not have more bite as concerns mergers.

Let me ask the question again: Why does the Government not provide itself with a rule that would adequately prevent mergers that are detrimental to the country?

In conclusion, let me say that the previous Government intended to introduce legislation that had teeth. This was hampered by the systematic and unacceptable obstruction of the Tories who were then in opposition. They did not want Bill C-29 to be passed because it would have had the teeth to prevent the kind of excessive mergers now being carried out by big corporations in Canada.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, if they speak of "crass ignorance", I will counter with "crass negligence". The Hon. Member was a member of the Government, he was a Cabinet Minister for a number of years, so he had every opportunity . . . It is easy now to blame us for opposing certain provisions of their legislation. But when he himself was in Government, when he was a Minister, he had every opportunity to enact legislation that could have had the teeth he is referring to. He should have done so at the time. That is negligence. It is not by saying today that we have not enacted, or that they had a bill that would have been better . . . You only had to pass your Bill. Such ruminations are mere navel gazing and totally disregard your own responsibilities when you had them. We will not answer that kind of question. That was negligence on your part, and today you are bearing the consequences.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: My, my, my, Mr. Speaker, how defensive the Hon. Member has become. In his submissions, the Hon. Member indicated that people were consulted with respect to the drafting of Bill C-91. We know that the Gang of Five was consulted. I indicated earlier who the Gang of Five was, but just to refresh the Members' collective memory, I will reiterate who they are. They are the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Business Council on National Issues, the Grocery Product Manufacturers of Canada, and the Canadian Bar Association. This is the representative group of business which helped draft this legislation. One commentator said that it is like asking convicted burglars to assist in drafting amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with burglary.

We all know that the purpose of this legislation is to protect consumers rather than to allow big business to find loopholes in it.

The Hon. Member spoke of a new era of consultation. Why did the Minister allow the Gang of Five literally to draft this legislation? Why did the Minister allow big business to bulldoze this legislation across his desk? On the other hand, why did he reject some of the major recommendations of the consumer organizations in Canada? Is this indicative of who, in effect, is calling the shots with respect to Bill C-91?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) "buzzes" through with an obvious lack of consideration of the whole issue.

Mr. Speaker, there was consultation. Canadian consumers were consulted, over a hundred briefs were submitted at the federal-provincial conferences at which all Canadian provinces were represented. People submitted—

Of course, your Government at the time could not know about that, because it had no notion of consultation. It never did know what it was. For 20 years, there were only groups of five, four, three, ten ... Our Government has been involved in true consultation with the Canadian people. If I may ... You listed them a while ago, Mr. Speaker, but rightly or wrongly, probably by mistake, about a hundred papers which have been tabled were not mentionned; there have been consultations with the provinces, with the Business Council on National Issues, with the Consumers' Association of Canada, with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and with the Canadian Bar Association.

It was ridiculous to say that when the time came to amend the Criminal Code, criminals were consulted ... That is ridiculous, and a comparison so insignificant that it does not even deserve to be mentioned in this forum. These people are working in the interest of Canadians. What our Government is doing is relying on Canadians, on associations made up of Canadians. You should stop seeing groups, whether on the business level or whatever, as enemies of the Canadian people. This is over now, because our Government trusts the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I have been through this process before. I recall when the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I remember his words very well when he was piloting that Bill through the House. I remember his quote in The Globe and Mail when the Bill was finally passed when he said, "I hope this Bill will never have to be used". I think he can rest assured that it has not been used very much. Certainly it has never been abused.

Here we are dealing with C-91, the great great grandson of Bill C-256. This Bill is called the competition policy. Here is a Conservative Government, and before it was a Liberal Government, both dedicated to the free market system, to free enterprise, to initiative, and here is this Government that is the arch representative of that kind of philosophy. The Government keeps telling us that that is what the system is based on, and that these businesses out there in the market-place are only willing to compete.

I ask myself why it is necessary that a Government has to force people to compete. I asked that question and I said to myself, well now, let me read this Bill and find out if that is what actually is going to happen. Is that just the cosmetology of the thing or is this just the trimmings and the window dressing to give the impression to the people at large that this Government really is interested in competition policy?

In fact that Party over there that is the Government, which is so dependent on corporate contributions—in fact we only have to see the recent convention in Quebec where the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) got the Conservative Party off the hook and guaranteed it its corporate contributions—that in fact postponed limitation of corporate contributions to the Conservative Party. This is the same Minister that has introduced Bill C-91. This is the Government that wants the consumers and the public at large to believe that it is really interested in taking on corporate concentration, and really forcing the corporations that act like white sharks out in the market-place, as opposed to hammerhead sharks, to give the consumer a fair shot.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), who consulted on this Bill called them the Gang of Five. They were the ones, all the corporate elite in this country, advising the Government on consumer policy on a Bill that is designed to give consumers in the market-place some protection. That is equivalent to asking the chickens to expect Colonel Sanders will look out for their interests. That is the height of impunity.

I remember when Bill C-42 was before the House and it was a little bit better than this one. The Conservatives, led by the now Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), Chairman Sinc, late of South Korea, fought that toothless tiger, Bill C-42, into submission, and the Liberals rolled over and they were not too anxious to get any kind of tough legislation on the books. They said, "We are held up to ransom, we give up". Mr. Speaker, they lay down. They surrendered. They were only too anxious to surrender because they were getting heat from the corporate world that their contributions were going to be cut off. It was called the silent surrender. What we have here is a watered-down version of Bill C-42. That one was a toothless tiger; this Bill C-91 is a roaring rabbit.

Why have we New Democrats opposed it? We see right through the flimsy négligé of Bill C-91 and we strip it away. We want to point out that if you are going to have competition policy in this country then it has got to be tough. I do not see why they always say they can never accept the position that the Government should be dominant in the business community and in the market-place. That is the problem. Why then should the Government accept the dominance of any corporate conglomerate in the market-place? It should be consistent. What the Government should do is to bring a Bill forward that really attacks corporate concentration in this country. It does not do that in this Bill.

I know that my friend from York South—Weston will feel a bit sensitive about it, but one of the groups they had advising them on the drafting of this Bill was the Canadian Bar Association. The Government had to have lawyers there because it needed some weasel words. If you look through the Bill, you find weasel words like "unduly restricting competition". What does "unduly" mean? Well, that is a field day for lawyers and for the courts. If you look carefully at the merger section, the dominant market section, you see the words "substantially reduced competition". What does "substantially reduced" mean? It means anything you want it to mean. Every time you have weasel words like that in there, you are not going to get effective competition policy because you create loopholes that elephants can go through. The history of prosecutions for monopoly in this country in the last 100 years total one conviction. That is why J. P. Morgan came to Canada and established Inco, because he was getting heat from United States because they were tightening up the laws on monopoly practices. He came into Canada and established Inco.

We New Democrats have said that we should have an effective competition policy. For example, in 100 years we have had just one successful prosecution on an illegal merger, and that was a guilty plea. He copped a guilty plea, did some plea bargaining and got some time off.

• (1650)

In the last 100 years there has only been one successful prosecution concerning market monopoly. The legislation was regarded as unenforceable with respect to price discrimination and nothing was done about it. With respect to conspiring to fix prices, it was regarded as weak but workable. That is an evaluation of the competition policy that is designed to protect consumers in the market-place. That is why I called it a roaring rabbit. In fact, it is not there to protect consumers or prevent the predatory pricing practices and monopolistic practices of certain capitalists in this country. It is there to give the illusion that something is being done.

We remember the Bertrand Report that said gasoline companies were ripping off Canadian consumers by some $12 billion. What happened to that report? It has been shuffled off somewhere in the court system and nothing has happened.

We have talked about weasel words. Let me read the section concerning monopolies. Of course, the tribunal consists of part-timers. Clause 51(1) states:

Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that—

It sets out conditions (a), (b) and (c). Condition (c) states:

the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market,

There are three conditions which must apply, and then we see weasel words like "lessen competition substantially". I suggest that it could never be said that this clause is effective because they will weasel out of it. That is why they are called "weasel words".

The clause dealing with monopoly must be clarified before it is acceptable to us. That weasel word "substantially" would have to be removed. It seems to me that any lessening of competition cannot be to the benefit of the consumers but must be to their detriment.

With respect to mergers, we see the same wording in Clause 64(1) which states:

Where, on application by the Director, the Tribunal finds that a merger or proposed merger prevents or lessens, or is likely to prevent or lessen, competition substantially—

It must be proven that competition is lessened substantially. In fact, the clause even allows lessened competition as long as it results in gains in efficiency. Even the weasel words make it clear that a lessening of competition is acceptable in this policy, even though the consumer will pay through the nose, as long as it results in gain in efficiency. The Government is not satisfied with its weasel words in that clause, it must give added protection to the companies.

Furthermore, since conglomerate mergers are not included in this clause, how can the Government develop an effective merger policy to deal with the reality of conglomerate mergers today such as the Imasco takeover of Genstar? Consequently, while we are debating Bill C-91 in Parliament today, the Government has introduced a Bill this morning to deal with a conglomerate merger.

Banks are not allowed to take over other banks, but not only is the Government allowing a concentration of power, there is no prohibition of self-dealing. How can any Government that is serious about competition policy and the protection of investors and people who put their money in trust companies develop an effective policy when it does not include a prohibition against self-dealing? What is good for the banks must be good for those who buy out or merge trust companies.

I believe the Bill is flawed because it does not take into consideration the reality of the market-place. Canada has the worst record for corporate concentration and corporate takeovers in the western industrialized world.

We cannot accept the provisions of this Bill regarding conspiracy. Prior to 1976 the Crown won approximately 90 per cent of the conspiracy cases it prosecuted under the present law. Since 1976 the Crown has won only 55 per cent. This indicates that there has been a lessening of the ability of the people, as represented by the Crown, to prosecute for conspiracy. The law has become less effective in the last few years.

We have heard today that nine families control a large percentage of the economic activity in this country. That cannot be healthy and the Government must be concerned about setting up the rules of the game so that consumers in the market-place receive some protection. The conspiracy clause seems to condone conspiracy and allow the tribunal to ignore the argument of lessening competition unduly as long as it can be shown that some efficiency in the market-place is provided. In other words, it is acceptable to rig prices according to this clause. While competition has been lessened unduly, which is wrong according to the law, the tribunal can ignore that as long as there is some improvement in efficiency.

The Government proposes to increase the punishment from $1 million to $5 million. That does not even take inflation into consideration. It is as harmful as getting six lashes with wet spaghetti. Analysis has shown that the average fine in conspiracy cases is $71,000 for the period from 1983 to 1985, which has really only kept pace with the inflation rate on such fines since 1900.

It seems to me that there must be a more powerful deterrent to price fixing. Price fixing is worse than robbery. It is deliberate. We New Democrats oppose the Bill. It does not include class actions. We have not had the kind of input into the Bill which should have been there in the first place. The Bill does not include any prohibition of conglomerate mergers and does not deal with interlocking directorates and management restrictions.

If this Bill ever gets to committee, you can expect, Mr. Speaker, that it will be thoroughly analysed. Hopefully, it will be tightened up in the areas we have pointed out.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that the thrust and main issue of this Bill is to ensure that there is not a lessening of competition. The purpose of doing that is not because competition is all powerful in itself. The Bill is aimed at trying to improve the situation for the consumer, to make sure that competition does create lower prices, better quality and more choice. That is the main thrust of the Bill. I know that the Hon. Member is quite aware of the sort of merger and monopoly the Bill is aimed at. He talked about the conglomerate takeovers and mergers. He knows this Bill has provisions to deal with those takeovers if in fact they do restrict competition. However, as he has pointed out, they do not deal with the situation if competition is not restricted. If there is one of those wonderful conglomerate mergers about which the Hon. Member spoke, and it does not restrict competition, then it is not dealt with in this Bill.

The Bill introduced this morning by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) deals with that to a limited extent with respect to the banks and financial institutions, but this Bill does not. I understand from the thrust of the Hon Member's remarks that he would like to see this Bill deal with that sort of thing. I would like to know from him what the official policy of his Party is with respect to allowing or not allowing mergers that perhaps do not restrict competition in any way but even encourage competition. What is the official policy of his Party in that respect? Would he not allow any mergers whatsoever? And I wonder if his answer is going to be one which his Party often espouses, an unrealistic one, or is he going to weasel out of an answer?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, no one can ever accuse the New Democrats of weaseling out of any answer. In fact, if we want to look for weasels giving answers, we just have to go back to the promises made in the election campaign and compare them with Government policies now that it is the Government. That is where we will find the real weasels. Those people say things they think a lot of people want to hear and so will vote for them. But when they get into office, they stick it to them. I can only think of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the way it treated people who took early retirement. Those are the real weasels.

I thought I made it quite clear in my speech that we should have a competition policy with teeth. We ought not to include such weasel words as "It's all right to do it as long as it does not substantially lessen competition". It seems obvious to our Party, and we have said this very clearly, that any lessening of competition—if that is the mentality which prevails in this Chamber—will be detrimental to the interests of the consumers. When we use the words "substantially lessen competition" the competition policy becomes not very effective. We have a competition policy which deals with vertical and horizontal mergers but does not deal with conglomerate mergers which are taking place in the reality of today. Why does the Government have to deal on an ad hoc basis with Imasco taking over Genstar? That should be part of a comprehensive competition policy which also provides class actions for consumers who do not feel they have received a fair shake in the market-place. It should also deal with the interlocking directorships and prohibit self-dealing. There is no prohibition against self-dealing in this Bill.

We have no objections to mergers but there should be protection within the legislation so that the consumers, when those mergers do take place, will be protected. We are saying they are not protected in this Bill. In fact, it is the opposite. The Bill is deliberately designed to give the impression, just as the Hon. Member did with his question, that it is an effective Bill when in fact it is nothing but a roaring rabbit.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for his most entertaining submissions. They were a little weak on substance at times but nevertheless very entertaining. The Hon. Member made a number of good points. He indicated that the Bill has a number of loopholes. We in the Liberal Party are also concerned about the so-called "weasel words" referred to by the Hon. Member, particularly with respect to mergers. The new competition tribunal will look at proposed mergers and try to decide whether they are likely to prevent or substantially lessen competition. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is concerned about the addition of the word "substantially". He argues that the clause should simply read: "—the proposed merger is likely to prevent or lessen competition". I am sure the Hon. Member will recognize our concern with that. There will be mergers which will lessen competition to a certain degree. Those mergers might be in the best interests of consumers per se. To suggest that the tribunal should not allow mergers which will in any way lessen competition is to take an unrealistic position because competition might be restricted by a very small percentage but the merger itself may be in the best interests of consumers generally.

Would the Hon. Member agree that even though there may be some lessening of competition, some mergers might be to the benefit of consumers? And does the Hon. Member agree that although Bill C-91 is full of loopholes, is inadequate and does a disservice to consumers in a lot of respects, it is at least a step in the right direction? Rather than being obstructionist as the New Democratic Party is suggesting it will be, would the Hon. Member not agree that we would be more productive as legislators and parliamentarians if we tried to work in committee and convince the right wing opposite to toughen up the Bill? Rather than delaying the Bill unduly, would the Hon. Member not agree that we should work towards improving the Bill in concert at committee?

Mr. Rodriguez: I just want to say to the Hon. Member for York South-Weston that I thought my speech was replete with very concrete criticisms of the Bill as well as suggestions of things which should be part of it. I thought I did that very well in 20 minutes. I recall that when I first came here in 1972, the Liberal Government brought forward Bill C-256. It was an anti-monopoly Bill. It was a competition policy Bill. Of course, the corporate sector of the country put up a great howl and cut its contributions to the Liberal Party. It was then decided that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) was too progressive. So he was taken out of the area of consumer and corporate affairs and somebody else who was more amenable to the corporate sector was put in. The Liberal Party split the Bill and left measures such as price fixing, double ticketing and so on. It then put the merger questions in another Bill and, of course, nothing happened. We end up with the puffball legislation which is presently before us.

With respect to the question of mergers, the Hon. Member asked me whether or not we would still be opposed to the legislation if it lessened competition but was of benefit to the consumer. I say that we start from the position of strength. In fact, we should prohibit it and give the merging groups the right to appeal. Let them prove in an open court that a merger would be of benefit to the consumer. I would also include in the Bill the right to class actions so that if consumers believe that it is not in their best interests, then they can haul the beggars before the court, as they do in the United States and other enlightened jurisdictions. However, the Liberals fought such a provision. I moved an amendment to that effect in the previous Parliament. The Hon. Member for Papineau, who was the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, would not have anything to do with it.

I say to the Hon. Member: We will not obstruct the Bill. But there are certain philosophies and principles which we want included in it. We must get those in committee or else we will have a Donnybrook here on the floor of the House of Commons. We will also see how the Hon. Member will vote.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in welcoming this Bill as a useful first step in dealing with concentration, I must say that it is timely. At the present time we are seeing a great rush of mergers such as we have not seen since 1981. I would like to focus in particular on concentration in the financial services industry. There are three sections in the Bill before us which deal with bank mergers. The Bill introduced by the Minister this morning, which is specifically on financial services institutions, also makes reference to competition policies. Thus there is a connection here.

Hon. Members will be aware that a Green Paper on financial institutions was released by the Government last year, following which there were very extensive hearings held by the Finance Committee. Many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee chose to focus on two issues. They were, first, concentration in general and the problems associated with it; and, second, the potential for conflicts of interest associated with ownership of financial institutions by non-financial institutions. The Green Paper proposal on domestic ownership proposed that cross-ownership of financial institutions be permitted through a particular mechanism, that is, an upstream and inactive financial holding company. It also recommended accepting closely-held ownership as opposed to broadly-based ownership. That proposal was a reversal of previous domestic ownership policy which favoured widely-held financial institutions.

The Finance Committee did not accept those recommendations in the Green Paper but had some alternatives to propose. One was that the Minister of Finance be empowered to review and prohibit the merger with, or acquisition of, an existing institution, and that explicit criteria be developed for the application of such a review procedure. There was also a very specific recommendation by the Finance Committee at that time to the effect that the Minister of Finance not approve any merger between Canada Trust and Canada Permanent Trust until an ownership policy for financial institutions had been developed and implemented. The Government ignored the second of the two recommendations which I have described, that being Recommendation No. 58. The merger went ahead and was finalized in January of 1986. This is how Genstar came to own Canada's largest trust company, which has been the basis of some of our questions today, as we now see a further concentration with Imasco proposing to take over Genstar.

Members of the Finance Committee were unanimous in expressing concern with respect to concentration of financial power and also in stating that the committee did not believe that financial activities and non-financial activities should be combined. I would like to quote briefly from the report of the committee which states:

Concern for concentration of economic power, and in particular financial linkages, was overwhelming in the evidence presented to the Committee. The Canadian Bankers' Association and consumer groups, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and the Canadian Organization of Small Business, expressed serious reservations in this regard and recommended an imposition of ownership limits and a roll-back of non-financial ownership of financial institutions.

I think that the Finance Committee looked rather carefully at the question of roll-backs and was somewhat divided on the issue since this is a rather major and disturbing request to make. The committee was concerned with the increasing trend toward non-financial ownership of financial institutions, as I have said, and considered that concentrated ownership, particularly that of large financial institutions, should be limited.

I would like to provide some samples of the type of evidence which was given before the committee at that time. The Canadian Bankers' Association stated:

We believe that this co-mingling of non-financial and financial businesses is undesirable. It would try the confidence and trust that Canadians place in their financial system.

More recently the President of the Canadian Banker's Association has been quoted as saying that the increase in takeovers and concentration is becoming "intolerable". The Consumers' Association of Canada was concerned that if the present trends go on we would end up with a few financial conglomerates having bought up most of the competition. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business was concerned about the implications of what it called the "unremitting trend toward greater concentrations of economic power". It was stated on the federation's behalf that it was wary of any measures which would tend to increase potential concentrations of power.

I do not think it needs much imagination to see the type of thing with which small business is concerned. If there is a non-financial institution, for example a development company which owns financial institutions, then there is the risk that its lending practices will favour its corporate brethren and discriminate against the small entrepreneur, the small business owner.

Cadillac-Fairview presented a very interesting brief in which Mr. Justice Wyzanski of the U.S. Federal Court was quoted. He stated:

Concentrations of power, no matter how beneficially they appear to have acted, nor what advantages they seem to possess, are inherently dangerous. Their good behaviour in the past may not be continued; and if their strength were hereafter grasped by presumptuous hands, there would be no automatic check and balance from equal forces in the industrial market—

That is a very strong statement—perhaps a little too strong for some of us here. There probably do exist cases in which concentration will assist in efficiency and economies of scale. It has traditionally been said that in Canada, because our population is relatively small and our country immense, there is a case for greater concentration of power than that which is found in the United States. However, when looking for evidence that concentration does in fact enhance R and D and marketing ability, it is very hard to find. Concentration certainly does not create new jobs or innovation. In fact, what we have seen most often recently is that as assets get shifted around among fewer players, jobs disappear.

Corporate concentration with respect to financial institutions has potentially greater ramifications than it does on the non-financial side of the economy because of the particular characteristics of money and related near-money assets. As well, once this concentration of power has been permitted, it would be very difficult politically to reverse the process and re-establish a widely held ownership structure in the financial sector. This is certainly a situation for which prevention is better than a cure.

That leads us to the example we had put before us today, one which had been dealt with in Question Period to some extent and will undoubtedly continue to be of concern to all of us. That is the situation with Imasco and Genstar. At the end of 1985, there was a specific recommendation made in the Finance Committee report that the Government block the merger of Canada Trust and The Permanent until such time as there was a clear policy. The Government did not accept that recommendation and the merger went ahead. The new entity, Canada Trustco Mortgage Company, was born. Canada Trustco Mortgage Company is Canada's sixth largest financial institution with assets of over $20 billion and is the centrepiece of Genstar's holdings.

In fall of 1985, Genstar, having already owned Canada Permanent Trust, acquired Canada Trust in a $1.2 billion takeover. In March of 1986, Genstar shares rose $7.63 to $55 in a flurry of trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange. On Monday, March 24, Imasco, with extensive holdings in consumer products, announced its bid of $54 per share for 100 per cent of Genstar's 36.9 million shares or $1.9 billion total. The offer is open until April 25.

On March 24, a question was raised in the House by a Conservative Member who asked, since the proposed takeover would result in a financial institution being owned by a non-financial institution, if the Government would block the takeover. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said that she would review the takeover bid. Today we learned that apparently the review is still going on and the Minister is not prepared to indicate when she might be able or willing to announce her decision.

On Thursday, April 3, Genstar and Imasco reached an agreement on the takeover, the price now being $58 per share. Imasco is to look for a way to spin off a restructured Genstar without Canada Trust. If no agreement is reached by April 15, Imasco will simply buy out all stock at $58 per share.

Let us look at these companies and what is involved with them. Genstar is San Francisco based with a nominal head office in Canada. About 60 per cent of the assets and 60 per cent of the shareholders are in Canada. It has other holdings in construction and property and 70 per cent of its business is in the financial sector. It is the fourth largest holder of personal savings accounts in Canada after the Royal Bank, the Bank of Commerce and the Bank of Montreal, and it is Canada's largest mortgage lender.

To be sure, this company is reputable. There is no reason to anticipate any conflict of interest except that in this situation there surely is the potential for conflict of interest. Managements do not stay forever. People move, people change, circumstances change. One would have to raise a question about the wisdom of having a company which is itself involved in development also having a large mortgage company. It may very well be and probably is the case that all people concerned will always be absolutely objective in their lending practices, but the potential for problems exists.

Imasco's extensive holdings include Imperial Tobacco, Shoppers Drug Mart and Hardee Food Systems in the United States. it is about 40 per cent British owned but was deemed Canadian under Investment Canada rules and therefore the Genstar acquisition could not be reviewed by Investment Canada. It also qualifies as a Canadian company under the present trust company law. It has total assets of $2.8 billion so it is really very small compared to Genstar. It is like having a snake proposing to swallow an elephant. The takeover is being funded by a line of credit with Citibank.

This may prove to be a situation from which Canadian consumers and Canadians generally will benefit, but that has to be proven. Surely the risks as spelled out by the Finance Committee and by so many witnesses are such that a careful examination is required. Imasco was prepared for that examination. It notified the Minister of State and her officials of the proposed takeover bid before the bid was made public. It offered to provide documents and to participate in a review on the same terms as if the legislation which was tabled this morning by the Minister of State for Finance and has been available as draft legislation since November 29 were already in law.

Presumably the Minister's officials acted on this offer, although the Minister was less than forthcoming during Question Period today. Since Imasco is proceeding, presumably it has been encouraged to proceed by Department of Finance officials. If so, the House is due a very full explanation of the reasons for that approval. There may very well be sound reasons, but there are also sound reasons why it is not a good precedent and why it flies in the face of the advice received by the Finance Committee from many, many sources and the advice which the Finance Committee gave to the Minister.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member about the merger involving Imasco. Does she see any particular value in this merger? Will any new jobs be created? Will consumers receive the benefit of lower priced products? Will there be better control of pollution? Will there be less waste in the country? What are the good things in this merger for which we might look, if we were to be generous?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, indeed that is a central question. As I said earlier, the experience has not been such as to inspire confidence that these mergers bring good things. We have not seen evidence that they provide jobs, greater innovation or greater R and D. However, we have seen great evidence of potential for problems.

I do not know how it would benefit someone who has a savings account in a trust company to have the trust company amalgamate with non-financial firms involved in fast foods, tobacco and construction. I would think that there would be certain hazards or risks in the lending practices being skewed to the needs of the corporate cousins rather than to the needs of the depositors or shareholders. Until such time as the Minister is prepared to show us some of the advantages which Imasco has demonstrated to her, which are encouraging her to approve this merger, I am unable to say that I can see any advantages in it.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the other side of the question. Because in many cases these are international corporations, I suppose one could say that there is the possibility of ripping off consumers by charging a higher price than is required for consumer products. Because of these interlocking directorates or these large mergers which control several kinds of companies, are there any teeth in the Act which would allow the Government or the regulatory body to take action?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I think the Act as it is before us is an improvement of the present situation but it needs to be strengthened somewhat. I should like to see some further changes at committee stage. I am sure the Minister will be open to amendments and suggestions for improvement at committee stage. I think it is a useful first step.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to rise in the House this afternoon in support of Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

This piece of legislation is really the culmination of a great many efforts over a long period of time. It is a culmination of efforts aimed at reforming the law as it relates to monopolies and mergers which restrict competition. That is not to say that the principles of this law are aimed at allowing competition just for the sake of competition. This law is certainly not aimed at glorifying the concept of competition. However, over many hundreds of years now economists have been telling us that competition is one of the keys to having an economy which works and benefits consumers, to having an economy where consumers can buy products at the lowest price, have a wide choice of products and at the same time have a better quality of products. That is the aim of this Bill. It is trying to allow for competition in order to benefit the consumer. Of course, the way in which competition benefits the consumer is by creating a competitive situation where there is greater efficiency in the market-place. Of course, with greater efficiency there is greater productivity and greater industrial growth. All those things create the environment for competition which will benefit the consumer through lower prices, better quality goods and more and wider choices.

We have had competition legislation in the country for a long time. It is nothing new in Canada or in other countries around the world. In fact, I am told that we have had competition legislation since about 1889, a long time back. The modern legislation, the present Bill which is in force at the moment, with some modifications is called the Combines Investigation Act. It was originally passed back in 1910. The piece of legislation which we have for controlling mergers and monopolies is an old one. We have found that as time has gone on it has not been doing the job it was put in place to do. As we look at what has been happening in the market-place, we see that more and more mergers and monopoly situations have taken place and have come into effect in recent years than ever before. At the time the original Combines Investigation Act was passed, there was very little in the way of corporate mergers. As time has gone on, there have been more and more of them. Between 1945 and 1949, something like 50 corporate mergers per year were taking place. By 1960, that had increased very substantially from 50 to some 250. Between 1977 to 1984, just about 500 corporate mergers were taking place each year. Since 1975, the 100 largest companies in the country have been involved in more than 150 corporate mergers or takeovers. More than 25 per cent of the total corporate growth of those companies has come through a form of corporate mergers, corporate takeovers and amalgamations rather than through the traditional form of increasing sales through the market-place.

The legislation we have had in place to monitor and to control merger and monopoly situations during this period of time has been a criminal type of legislation. It has been a criminal type of law. It has made illegal certain types of mergers and certain types of monopolies. A merger where a person or a company acquires any interest in another business which lessens or is likely to lessen competition to the detriment of the public is illegal. A monopoly where one or more persons or companies have substantial control of some area of the market and which operate or are likely to operate to the detriment of the public is illegal too.

The problem, of course, has been in trying to enforce those provisions. Because those provisions are criminal types of provisions, the criminal law is generally applicable to them. The first criminal law provision applicable is the whole matter of the standard of proof.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that there is a difference in the standard of proof between civil offences and criminal offences. In civil offences the standard of proof is considered to be the balance of probability on the evidence, but in a criminal offence, the standard of proof is the question of beyond a reasonable doubt. That is where one of the problems has come in in trying to enforce the current legislation effectively. It has been criminal in nature and, therefore, in order to establish that an offence has occurred, an offence of an illegal merger or an illegal monopoly, the Government under the Combines Investigation Act has had to try to establish that this has happened beyond a reasonable doubt and that there is no reasonable defence that can be offered by the accused company or accused person.

In addition, because it is criminal in nature, the whole procedure has been a slow one. It has been a costly one and it has been procedurally cumbersome. Because of all these things, the present law has proven to be completely ineffective in dealing with merger and monopoly situations.

The culmination, I suppose, of the situation came in 1976 with the K.C. Irving case. After that time, the Restrictive Trade Pactices Commission under the authority of the Combines Investigation Act threw up its hands and since that time has been virtually completely ineffective in dealing with merger and monopoly situations in Canada.

It was obvious at that time, and a number of my hon. colleagues in this House were here and have pointed it out this afternoon in some of their comments and remarks, that we needed to make some changes in this legislation if it was to be effective. A number of attempts were made to introduce new legislation to try to make changes to make the legislation effective in order to control mergers and monopolies.

In 1977, for instance, a Bill C-42 was introduced by the previous Government. That did not solve the problem. In fact, Bill C-42 never got through Parliament. In the same year, the Government of the day introduced another Bill, Bill C-13, which also did not get anywhere. In 1984, there was a third attempt at introducing legislation which would amend the Combines Investigation Act and put some teeth into the procedure to control mergers and monopolies. That was Bill C-29 at the time and that, too, never passed through Parliament nor did it go into effect.

Finally, as a culmination of the frustration that has gone on, at least since 1977 and before, and the attempts that have been made successively to try to put something in place, to try to introduce some legislation which would be effective and which would generally meet with the approval of the Canadian people, we have Bill C-91 before us today.

One of the previous opposition speakers said that it was important the Government show a will, a direction and an ability to carry through with this legislation and its intent. I agree with that. It has taken a long time for us to get that will and to get that intention to carry through, in fact since 1977. Now we are at a stage where, apart from criticisms of the Opposition, which is a natural kind of criticism, and apart from the criticism of the odd other commentator, generally there is an acceptance across the country that we have a piece of legislation before this House which will be effective, perhaps not perfect, but be effective in restricting and controlling mergers and monopolies.

What does this Bill provide, Mr. Speaker? First, it makes a very substantial change in the previous law. It changes the whole concept of that law from a criminal law to a civil type of procedure for dealing with mergers and monopolies.

The criminal law proved to be ineffective in dealing with it and so we are going to take a stab at trying to deal with it as a civil offence. The Bill itself changes this method dramatically. First, it creates a competition tribunal composed of members appointed from the private sector, business people, people with experience in the whole area of dealing with business problems, mergers and amalgamations, people who will know what they are talking about when they are dealing with this sort of thing. At the same time, it puts in place with that tribunal judges who will officiate and provide an appeal panel once the competition tribunal deals with a particular case. The Bill abolishes the old Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. It requires in the case of mergers that certain things take place.

First, where a company which is involved in taking over another company has assets or sales in excess of $500 million in Canada, and where the company that it proposes to take over has assets and sales in excess of $35 million, a prenotification requirement is necessary on the part of the companies involved in that merger or amalgamation so that the competition tribunal will have the opportunity to review the application to see if it meets the standards set out in the Bill.

Let me outline some of those standards set out in the Bill. It is aimed at preventing, lessening, likely to prevent or likely to lessen competition substantially. In order to determine that, it sets out a number of tests. What is the extent of foreign competition in the market affected by the merger? Are any of the parties about to go out of business, go bankrupt? Are there substitute products available in the market? To what extent is there effective competition going to remain in the marketplace? All of these things are provided in the Bill.

There is also provision with respect to a monopoly, changing the offence from a criminal one to a civil offence. The Bill sets out extensively the tests to apply in all these cases. It also sets out penalties that were not available before, not just criminal penalties of imposing fines and sending people to jail, but penalties which would also provide orders prohibiting the engaging in anti-competition acts and penalties which would require the divestiture of assets or shares. Those are the sorts of things that are contained in this Bill. Those are the sorts of things that are going to put some teeth in the competition law of the country. That is why I call upon the House to support this Bill and to pass it quickly.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Member for York East (Mr. Redway). What does the Member see in the interaction under this proposed legislation between the Investment Canada Act and this Bill? As an example, Investment Canada is looking at the impact of the Gulf and Western potential for merger. What would happen if it were being looked at under the Competition Act as unfair competition, as a restriction on the distribution of books or films? If that were in the cards, would it be examined under Investment Canada or under this Competition Act?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. Of course, I must offer only my own opinion on this. As a lawyer with some past experience relating to FIRA and the Combines Investigation Act provisions, as it now stands, it would be my opinion that any company contemplating a merger would have to comply with both of the provisions. In the past they would have had to have complied with FIRA and the Combines Investigation Act. With Investment Canada in place, it may very well be not as restrictive and, therefore, easier to comply with Investment Canada. However, in my view, they will still have to comply with the competition legislation. They will certainly have to satisfy all of the tests. If they can do so, fine, and if not, it will be caught by this piece of legislation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Member for York East (Mr. Redway). He made the argument that he thinks this Bill will be effective. One of the reasons he gave was that it is now removed from the ambit of criminal consideration. Why does he think it is necessary to provide all these "outs" with words like "substantially lessen competition"? Why does the defence for conspiracy have to be built in? Why do you build in the defences against the breaking of the law?

Why is there no provision in the merger section to outlaw self dealing? That is one of the more potentially serious drawbacks to the mergers.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's question. After the Hon. Member made his speech he was asked whether or not all mergers may be bad for consumers. My comments will relate to that question as well as to the questions he has put to me.

There was a recent case in which it can be argued that a merger took place which was good for the consumer. That was the merger involving Genstar and Canada Trust. That merger restricted the number of trust companies. In that sense it was restricting competition. On the other hand, by improving its financial position, it is now the sixth largest financial institution in the country and is very competitive with the chartered banks. Therefore, it is, in effect, increasing competition in the banking area.

At the same time, the amalgamation of the real estate sales operation of Canada Trust and The Permanent has created a larger and more effective competitor for the Royal Lepage company which has been in the market for a number of years. There is an argument that in that case, even though competition was restricted, it will be beneficial for the consumer. I suggest that the answer to all of the questions put to me by the Hon. Member lie in that example. In this case we need to build in some defences because it may be that a merger may be beneficial to the public at large through lower prices, more choices, and better quality products. That, in essence, is the answer to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, just as the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) can quote an example of where he thought this was beneficial, we can pick out examples where mergers have been absolutely disastrous for individuals. For example, in the Rosenberg case of the buy-out of the trust companies, the people lost all their savings. Would he not agree that there should be prohibition and the right to appeal in an open court in order to prove that it is in fact beneficial to consumers? Second, why is there no provision for class action suits which, it seems to me, is one of the most effective ways of keeping the corporate sector on its toes?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened carefully to my remarks and had read carefully the Bill before us, he would have noted that in a merger situation there is a requirement for prenotification to the competition tribunal where there are assets or sales on the part of one company of $500 million and assets or sales on the part of the company being taken over of only $35 million.

The Hon. Member has spoken about the Rosenberg situation and other cases of trust companies. If the Hon. Member looks caefully at the assets of those companies, he will find that they were far in excess of the bottom line limit for the requirement of the prenotification notice to the tribunal. Therefore, there is going to be, not only a review, but an opportunity on the appeal for the public hearing to which the Hon. Member has been referring. If he examines this piece of legislation carefully and does not close his mind to it, as he so often does on other matters, I am sure he will be quite happy with it as this is going to be an effective piece of legislation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—POLICY GOVERNING HOMOSEXUALS AND LESBIANS. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 of this year I directed a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) concerning the policy of the Canadian Armed Forces with regard to the hiring and retention of homosexuals in the Canadian Armed Forces. At that time I asked that the Minister confirm that these policies, as set out in Canadian Armed Forces administrative order 19-20, be immediately rescinded to ensure full equality for gays and lesbians as recommended unanimously by the parliamentary committee on equality rights. At that point, the Minister of National Defence replied that the response of the Government was set out on page 25 of the report which had been tabled that day.

He quoted from that report the following extract. "The Government believes that one's sexual orientation is irrelevant to whether one can perform a job or use a service or facility." While the Government, through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), on March 4 in its response to the report of the parliamentary committee on equality rights entitled Toward Equality did indeed say that it believes that one's sexual orientation is irrelevant to whether one can perform a job or use a service or a facility, it would appear that there is a great distance between those words and reality, and a real change in policy. The policy continues to deny employment to gays and lesbians within the Armed Forces. The requirement that any person who happens to be gay or lesbian be fired from the Armed Forces is still on the books today.

I want to note the arguments that were made by the parliamentary committee on equality rights on this subject. I had the honour of serving as a member of that committee. We travelled from coast to coast and we heard from many individuals and organizations with respect to this very sensitive question. We noted the Armed Forces has a policy of not recruiting homosexuals and of dismissing homosexuals from the Forces once detected. We noted as well that the individual in question was often subjected to interrogation by the special investigation unit of the Canadian Armed Forces. Within the last four years, 37 members were discharged in 1981; 45 in 1982; 44 in 1983, and 38 in 1984, solely on the basis of their sexual orientation.

The committee heard stories of a number of former members of the Canadian Armed Forces who served in the Forces for years without any problem whatsoever but were released for only one reason, their sexual orientation. These members describe the arbitrary, grossly insensitive treatment to which they were subjected as part of the investigation of their personal lives. They were detained in isolated conditions for many hours and subjected to intensive interrogation about their activities and those of others. The committee unanimously recommended—and I emphasize the unanimity of the committee here with five Conservative Members, one Liberal Member, who I see in the House today, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), and myself—that this policy be repealed. We stated that in this day and age there is no place in Canada for such a policy. The arguments put forward by the Canadian Armed Forces do not justify the present policies. We recommended an amendment to the Human Rights Act to prohibit all discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

When the Minister of National Defence appeared before the equality rights committee, he made it very clear that he fundamentally supported and approved of the policies of the Canadian Armed Forces that denied full equality to gays and lesbians. He stated in a letter which was addressed to a number of individuals who wrote to the Government on this issue: "No change is currently being contemplated to the Canadian Forces' position in respect of homosexuality". Fortunately the Minister of National Defence was outvoted by his cabinet colleagues. The Cabinet has made it very clear that it will not tolerate a policy which discriminates in this systematic manner against gays and lesbians.

I would note that thousands of homosexuals have had distinguished careers in the Canadian Armed Forces. One example is Major Sutcliffe of Toronto who served for 18 years in a variety of fronts, and rose from the rank of private to major, has seven campaign medals as well as the M.B.E. and the C.D. He was fired solely on the basis of his sexual orientation. It is not a question of opening up the Armed Forces to gays and lesbians. It is a question of recognizing the reality that there are already homosexuals within the Armed Forces. Surely we should recognize that these individuals who serve their country with distinction should not have to live in conditions of pain, oppression and of hiding their true reality.

I would note that there are other countries which have long since abolished these policies. The Netherlands, for example, has stated very clearly that one's private sexual orientation is in no way a bar to membership in the Armed Forces. I note that according to NATO, they have one of the finest navies in NATO. Clearly that has not been a barrier to them.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Wenman), who is responding on behalf of the Government today, will recognize that the time has come for change and that the words of the Government, which call for an end to all discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, must become a reality. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary when the Government will repeal Canadian Forces Administrative Order 1920? How many more task forces and committees must the Generals set up before this employer, which is clearly the most homophonic employer in the country, finally recognizes that equality must at last come to the Canadian Armed Forces as well?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has often expressed his view on this subject. After the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) tabled the Government's comprehensive response to the recommendation of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights several weeks ago, the Hon. Member asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) the question which he posed today. At that time the Minister appropriately referred him to the page where the Government's position was stated in clear and understandable language by the Minister of Justice.

I want to inform the Hon. Member that on all issues affecting the Department of National Defence, we are actively pursuing which procedures and policies are necessary in order to conform with the principles of the Charter as stated by the Minister of Justice in the House on March 4. To that end, the staff of the Chief of Defence has set up a departmental task force which will look at all issues and recommend an appropriate course of action.

I believe it is very clear that the major responsibility of the Armed Forces of Canada is to ensure the security of Canada and our alliances, to ensure the operational effectiveness, morale and discipline of the Armed Forces and that we uphold standards of behaviour and conduct compatible with the objectives as stated by the Minister of Justice.

I am sure that these accommodations will be found and these objectives can be met within the response of the Minister of Justice when the task force reports. In the spirit of tolerance, justice and the interest of individual Canadians and the Canadian Armed Forces, I am confident that these values of tolerance, discipline and effectiveness of the Armed Forces will be upheld within those principles as enunciated.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—LEGISLATION AFFECTING TAKEOVERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on March 25 I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) a question about the mergers and acquisitions that are sweeping this country. I referred to, as reported at page 11860 of Hansard:

> —the insidious mobilization of corporate concentration which may destroy competition—and went on to ask:

> When will Canada have effective competition and anti-combines laws to curb the voracious appetites of giants such as Gulf Canada, Imasco, and Petro-Canada—

Indeed, I believe we have a serious topic on our hands. It is evident just from what has happened in the past week. My question was asked just a day after the bid by Imasco for Genstar which, in turn, controls the giant Canada Trust.

I believe that particular acquisition is very dangerous for the main reason that this involves a potentially very big and successful non-financial conglomerate taking over one of the most successful and largest trust companies in Canada, Canada Trust.

With good management it might work out, but I do not think we can leave it to chance. The temptation could often be too great. There are temptations in terms of lowering competition. There are temptations as far as insider trading. For those reasons, that particular deal causes me concern when one considers what has happened.

In many cases, the depositors of various banks will be funding this acquisition to the tune of $2 billion. We have the great risk of competition being lessened. In an acquisition just a few months ago there was a tax concession, legal at the time, given to a large conglomerate of $590 million. Ironically, the average Canadian depositor is funding the very types of deals of these monolithic structures which are going to come back and haunt them and, indeed, hurt them through less competition in the market-place.

We last had a royal commission into the question of corporate concentration in 1975. That was brought about at the time of the threat of Power Corporation trying to take over Argus which at that time held such companies as CFRB, Dominion Stores and so on. The conclusion of the royal commission, which reported back in 1978, was that there was no real threat of lessened competition in the market-place, so nothing was done.

I feel very confident that if we were to thoroughly examine the record over just the last five years, we would see that the wave of mergers and acquisitions has accelerated. A professor at Dalhousie University reported recently that the ratio of our last 20 mergers is something like two and a half times as great in size as those in the United States. I believe it is time for action. The Government has taken certain steps. Bill C-91, which was debated extensively today, is a step in the right direction. However, I doubt that it was drafted with the real threat of the huge conglomerates having such extensive power in mind. I do not believe it has roll-back provisions.

Today another important Bill was brought forward by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). Bill C-103 does indeed have the type of power for which I am looking. It could stop the Imasco deal right in its tracks. I believe under Clause 48.19 that Imasco would need to have the Minister's approval in writing before the deal could be consummated. I want to go on record as being strongly against that particular merger. One of the finest and largest trust companies, with assets well over $20 billion, could be gobbled up by this group and who knows what use could be made of its huge deposit level.

Another aspect of these takeovers I would like to comment on is the loss of jobs. All too often through these mergers and acquisitions hundreds and thousands of jobs just evaporate. The process is called "rationalization". It happened recently with the merger of Canada Permanent and Canada Trust. Hundreds of employees were no longer needed both in head offices and in the branch structures. If the two companies had outlets on the same corner, one of them would go in the name of efficiency, with the resulting loss of jobs.

There is an argument for size of scale. For us to be competitive at the world level we need large companies, but we do not need them at the expense of thousands of jobs or at the expense of competition being lessened. We certainly do not need laws which will permit consumer funding, not only by way of deposits but through foregone taxes, because a large corporation is given a tax concession of $500 million.

In summary, I want to recommend in the strongest possible terms that the subject be given a fresh look because of these activities over the last five years. I do not really know whether a royal commission would be the best vehicle, but that is the one I favour. If it does go to a finance or special committee, it must be given the financial wherewithal and the people to do an in depth study. A superficial look will not do on an issue which is so serious. I hope the Government will move in this direction. The train is moving. We cannot pause and look at this forever. We need to get on with this important topic in an in-depth way in order to protect the consumers of Canada.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) has always been quick to speak out in support of consumer issues. No doubt the two events which took place in the House today will bring some ray of light to a very involved, comprehensive and serious problem. I refer to the introduction of Bill C-91 by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) and the introduction of Bill C-103 by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), both of which have been mentioned by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East.

Over the years we have tried desperately not once, twice or three times, but many times—in fact, the former administration worked on it for 16 years—to try to bring about major changes to the competition legislation. We did this in order that we could deal with companies which had acquired, or were acquiring, a dominant position in the market-place through mergers, thus creating unfair competition to small businesses which were having very difficult times.

I think that the pre-notification provision initiated in Bill C-91 answers many of the questions raised by the Hon. Member. No longer will large corporations whose assets total over $500 million collectively be able to merge without first being reviewed by the tribunal which will be set up under the new legislation. If either one of the two being merged has sales or assets of more than $35 million, then they will fall into this trap whereby they will have to pre-notify. Within a period of approximately 21 days the Government, through the tribunal, will have a chance to respond to the pros and cons of such a merger. I think that a volume of $35 million alone will handle the problems brought to the attention of the House by the Hon. Member. Under the merger pre-notification provision we will be able to first review whether or not it will have a negative effect or impact on business.

The one exception under Bill C-91 is that we will permit companies to merge which, perhaps, will create a dominant position, but only for export purposes. That is to say that such a move would have to make us competitive on a world basis. They would then be able to merge.

We are seriously looking at the situation. I am optimistic, as is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that all Parties in the House will come to the realization that after 75 years our competition legislation is obsolete and that it is time to move on for better protection for consumers and small businesses.

Adjournment Debate

THE BUDGET—EFFECT ON MIDDLE-INCOME TAXPAYERS. (B) ECONOMIC FORECASTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on March 13 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a question with respect to a budget document entitled "The Canadian Budget in Perspective". This document was not included in the package of budget documents released on budget night, February 26. Its existence came to light a couple of weeks later, at which time it was learned that the document had been specifically prepared for distribution from Canadian posts abroad. It provides a certain perspective on the Budget and conditions in Canada but not at all the same perspective as that given to Canadians in other budget documents.

• (1820)

Canadians were treated to a grim-faced Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who opened the Budget Speech with the following statement:

My message today is a serious one, and in many ways not pleasant.

However, statements of this tone and tenor were nowhere to be found in the document prepared for distribution overseas. By contrast, that document is determinedly upbeat and self-congratulatory. It is a slick and obvious selling job and an unabashed effort to substitute style for substance.

The document prepared for distribution overseas brags about the following:

In many key respects the Canadian economy is now performing better than the United States.

We were not informed of this in the Minister's Budget Speech, nor were Canadians told, as were the foreign readers of this document, the following:

On the basis of economic assumptions consistent with the U.S. Administration forecast, the ... growth in Canada would be such as to balance the Budget by the end of the decade.

There is not one word in the Budget Speech made in this House about a balanced Budget. In fact, according to the Budget Speech, Canadians can look forward to a $22-billion deficit by the end of the decade.

In the Budget Speech, Canadians were also presented with the following:

—the truth about our financial problem. The billions we can save through better management are not enough to resolve Canada's financial problems.

That statement appeared on page 8 of the Budget Speech yet this great truth does not appear anywhere in the perspective document prepared for the international community whose confidence the Government is so transparently courting. In fact, I am not sure that the word "problem" appears in this document at all in connection with anything the Government has done or will do.

Whereas the Budget Speech told Canadians that they still have a tough row to hoe, the perspective document would have the reader believe that we have already turned the corner. On page 2, it says the following:

The government's expenditures, deficit, and debt have all been restrained significantly.

On page 6, it says:

The economic recovery can be expected to continue ... The prospects for the expansion continuing in Canada remain good ...

There are a couple of interesting discrepancies. The issue of federal-provincial transfer payments is an extremely sensitive one for Canadians. From the Government's previous economic statements, we know that transfer payments are to be cut by $2 billion. There was not one word about that in the Budget Speech; however, in the perspective document, we see that reductions in transfer payments to provincial Governments for health care and post-secondary education are listed among the Government's so-called efficiency measures on page 6.

Then we might turn to the question of the closing of Canadian posts abroad. We might expect that to offend some potential international investors so, not surprisingly, it is not mentioned in the document that purports to sell the Budget to that constituency. However, in the Budget Speech prepared for Canadians, we see the closure of diplomatic posts in foreign countries listed among the Government's cost-cutting measures.

The Budget was accompanied by an unprecedented amount of salesmanship. There were special functions in U.S. posts on Budget night, officials were dispatched to sell the Budget and this document was produced. Is anybody fooled? Are international investors impressed enough with the show to overlook the fact that the entire exercise is based on assumptions that are tenuous at best and inaccurate at worst?

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is commenting on two different documents which she has not read in their entirety. The same charts can be found on page 9 of the document entitled "The Canadian Budget in Perspective" and on page 4 of the document entitled "Towards A Sustained Expansion: Canada's Economic Prospects, 1986-1991". The same charts can be found in both documents.

[English]

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Ah, but interpreted differently.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Charts are charts, Mr. Speaker, they do not change from one document to the other.

Mr. Speaker, I should think it is quite normal to send a summary of the Budget to other countries. It does not have to be as elaborate as the document tabled here in the House. Surely the Hon. Member for Trinity can appreciate that.

What may have thrown off the Hon. Member for Trinity, and perhaps that is where the danger lies, is the fact that we have had an economic statement in November 1984, a Budget in May 1985, and a second Budget in February this year, and every time Members opposite have said: "We are going to lose jobs. The value of the dollar will decline. Interest rates will climb." And every time, Mr. Speaker, we found out that in those 18 months the actual number of new jobs created has been higher than in all European countries as a whole during the same period.

Mrs. Finestone: And interest rates as well?

Mr. Vincent: And interest rates went down 2 per cent since September 1984, while the value of the Canadian dollar has been steadily rising since the February 1986 Budget. The dollar has gone up and down every time a Budget was introduced in the past 25 years. It has nothing to do with the Conservative Government. It was the same thing under the previous Liberal administration. The people must be made aware of that. Such fluctuations are normal the day following a Budget, and eventually the value of the dollar becomes stable, as is the case now. Interest rates are declining and job creation is at an unprecedented level.

Again this weekend it was announced that the unemployment rate had gone down in the riding of Trois-Rivières, as it did at the national level. Mr. Speaker, that is good news.

Of course, the Opposition is not happy and will check whether the chart is on page 5 or page 6 and whether there are two different documents, one for Canadians and another one for the other countries. I can understand it. That is the role of the Opposition. However, Mr. Speaker, people are also beginning to say that, instead of always criticizing, instead of checking whether the chart is on the right page or not, the role of the Opposition should also be to propose solutions and to make valid suggestions, instead of speaking about whether a chart should be on one page or another. Mr. Speaker, that is certainly the role of the Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Attewell): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 331-46, 331-47, 331-49, 331-50, 331-51, 331-54, 331-55, 331-56, 331-61, 331-77, 331-78, 331-80, 331-93, 331-94, 331-95, 115, 116, 117, 143 and 167.

I would also comment that these are in response to petitions with respect to the Morgentaler Clinic in Toronto.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, in both official languages.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions to this House. The first petition is from 33 residents of Aylmer, Nepean and Ottawa in the national capital region. The second petition is from 32 residents of the same region, Gloucester, Aylmer, Nepean, Cumberland, Carlsbad Springs and Navan. These petitioners are strongly opposed to the potential destruction of parkland within the Mile Circle by the National Capital Commission's recommendation to the Government that this national piece of real estate be used for future embassy locations.

ASSESSMENT OF CN MAINTENANCE FACILITIES

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, once again I have the honour and privilege to present to the House a petition which has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It is signed by citizens in the greater Moncton area who are expressing their concern with regard to the current assessment being conducted by Canadian National into the shop capacity throughout Canada. The petitioners are concerned that this assessment will have a negative effect upon the employment figures in the greater Moncton area and, therefore, a drastic effect upon the economy of southeastern New Brunswick and the province as a whole, and they call upon Parliament to prevent any downgrading of the facilities in Moncton.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 455 could be made an order for return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 455 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPORTATIONS FROM CANADA

Question No. 455—Mr. Heap:

1. Since the implementation of the new Immigration Act in 1978, how many deportations occurred for the year (a) April, 1979 to March, 1980 (b) April, 1980 to March, 1981 (c) April, 1981 to March, 1982 (d) April, 1982 to March, 1983 (e) April, 1983 to March, 1984 (f) April, 1984 to June, 1985?

2. What types of immigration violations caused these deportations?

3. Were the deportees returned to their countries of origin and (a) if so, what were they (b) if not, how many were sent to other countries and which ones?

4. Of the total number of deportations which occurred between April, 1979 and June, 1985, how many (a) were permanent residents in Canada for more than 5 years (b) came to Canada as landed immigrants prior to (i) 21 years old (ii) 5 years old?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Coté (Langelier) that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address Bill C-91 this morning, I will make the same observation as was made by other Hon. Members of this House, an observation which I think is extremely relevant to discussion of the Bill, about the present planned takeover of the Genstar Corporation by Imasco. This is a paradigm of the type of corporate manoeuvre or strategy which should be regulated by the Competition Act. It is a very good example of the problems which can arise in an economy such as we have in Canada when policies of corporate concentration are allowed to be pursued. I am glad to say that although the basis may be somewhat tentative, we do at least have some countenanced legislation which will give the Government some powers in this type of merger.

What I would like to do initially is outline the problems which can arise in an economy like ours if this kind of merger were to go through, particularly, of course, if it were to be repeated. I would like to draw parallels between that merger manoeuvre and the sort of clauses which should be in Bill C-91, and are not, and the clauses which are in Bill C-91.

What we have, and what we have seen over the last few years in Canada, is a continuing trend of corporate concentration which has tended to put power in the hands of a decreasing circle of people, an increasing number of whom live and have their major business interests outside of this country. What that means is that Canadian trade and commerce is gradually falling under the domination of groups that have a trans-national base, a multinationial corporate ethic and ethos, and which have practices that may very well be at variance with those we would desire to see as Canadians and which, frankly, are verging on the sort of concentration that is repugnant to Canadian ideals and to previous Canadian commercial and corporate practice.

It has been observed that Genstar swallowed Canada Trust and Canada Permanent and is now being swallowed by Imasco. It puts one in mind of the saw that big fleas have little fleas upon their backs to bite them and that little fleas have lesser fleas, and so on ad infinitum. What we see is in the reverse. It is a system whereby each corporate takeover will be no more than a preparatory manoeuvre for the next round of corporate takeovers in which the larger corporations will take over the smaller ones. We will see an increasing concentration of corporate power outside the boundaries of the country. As we have found out with the American legislation concerning domestic international sales corporations and the export of goods in certain categories to countries considered to be hostile and embargoed, we will see increasingly that these activities will be taken beyond the framework of Canadian legislation and beyond Canada's ability to regulate.

The problem is this. Clause 64 of Bill C-91 does not deal with conglomerate mergers. It only deals with the concentration of holdings within a specific industry, be it on the horizontal level with one phase of a specific industry controlled by a single interest, or very few interests, or be it on the vertical level where an entire industry, the entire phases of supply of a goods or service, are controlled by a single corporation.

What we in the New Democratic Party would like to see is the withdrawal of Bill C-91. We would like to see it reintroduced with provisions which will govern conglomerate mergers and with significant strengthening measures. We believe that it is hard to see where Bill C-91 offers any improvement over the four other competition Bills that have been introduced in the House since 1971.

Of course, that raises the question as to why these Bills have come in and why so little progress has been made in the regulation of competition in Canada. I think it is plain to see that there are conflicting ideologies within the Liberal and Progressive Conservative Parties. There are those ideologies which are laissez-faire. They believe in the complete and unfettered freedom of the market-place to determine the forms of corporate organization and the forms of company structure. There are ideologies which are closer to those of the New Democratic Party. They recognize that there are authentic and genuine Canadian interests which must be protected, not by arbitrary interference in any sector of the economy but by a firm set of rules which are laid down and which will regulate all sectors of the economy, including the operation of Crown corporations at both the federal and provincial level. As the newspapers have been reporting, I am glad to see that there are Members on the Government side who are opposing this deal. They want to make sure that we have some say as a Parliament and as a Government over the type of corporate structures which will exercise enormous economic power and, frankly, political power.

What we are seeing with the increasing concentration is a tendency toward the Japanese system known as the Zaibatsu system, a system which works quite well in that country. It is a system that is antithetical to many of the values which Canadians hold true. It serves different values, some of them quite worthy. However, I do not feel that within the context of a country so large and so diverse as Canada that competition policy can be allowed to function on the same level as it would function in a geographically small country such as Japan. It is a unitary state which has been hallmarked over the last 60 years by a singleness of purpose, which does not exist in Canada and which I do not think we should necessarily be promoting.

For example, Japanese companies look toward providing lifetime employment for their employees. Japanese business ethics and business practice, while very effective in that country, and no doubt harmonious with its cultural values and institutions, will be totally alien to Canadians in our context and our cultures.

We see that there have been incentives offered to staff people in these Canadian conglomerates to encourage others to deal with other companies within their conglomerate. We see the very real linkage between the goods and service economy and between the financial economy of intermediaries, of arbitragists, of lenders and borrowers, which enables the conglomerate that controls financial institutions to exercise enormous power that is largely unfettered in Canada at the present time. This is known as self-dealing. It is the system whereby the financial institution loses its independence, its arm's length relationship with its customers, and is bent toward furthering the finance or corporate goals of the parent.

That was very clearly the case in the instances of a Toronto financier and his trust companies, Seaway, Greymac, and Crown Trust. It is something which, without effective competition legislation to regulate conglomerate mergers, would always stand as a temptation to the people who exercise the controlling interest in the resulting multi-industry and mixed-industry conglomerates.

The record of corporate concentration in Canada is sad, since there has been no commitment to the lifetime employment system which makes it such a practical institution in, for example, Japan. Rather, we have seen the reverse. We have seen that the commitment is toward the reduction of employment. The commitment is toward eliminating employment which pays a respectable wage and replacing it with low-wage employment, for example, in the case of Dominion Stores. These are not the consequences that members of the New Democratic Party want to see from a revision of our competition policy.

There is other opposition to this measure as well. Perhaps we should be glad that there can still be opposition in the newspapers. After all, I point out that there is very little to prevent any conglomerate now having gobbled up a financial corporation from lending itself the money to buy out a newspaper that could act as a house journal and a propaganda organ on the Canadian market. We have such headlines as: "Big-biz takeovers bad news". In my hand I have an editorial entitled: "The macabre feast". On the side of the coin is a headline which states: "Hiram Walker's latest moves are making economic history". Apparently, there is one corporation that has decided that corporate concentration is perhaps not the way to go.

In the minutes I have remaining I would like to turn to the market where the need for competition is most evident and where it is obvious that Bill C-91 must have some bite and teeth for it to be effective. I refer to the market for refined petroleum products. This is a market in which major multinational corporations have always had control. They have been able, because of their vertical control in the Canadian industry, to exercise price-rigging, to fix the price at any and all levels with very little reference to the needs of ordinary consumers and, indeed, without much regard to government policy either.

I would like to quote from a letter from the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada which states that Canada has the weakest anti-trust laws of any western democracy. There is little doubt that this Bill will be too weak to do anything about increasing independent share of the market or anything about high gasoline and home heating prices. That is my worry. It is my concern that we will not see eliminated that nine cents per litre which the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada estimates to be the effect of price rigging and of oligopoly control of the Canadian market. We will not see eliminated that nine cents per litre that Canadian consumers are currently paying as a premium for having the Canadian oil industry controlled by a few major players resident outside the country.

A press release from the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada indicates that this mechanism keeps rack prices to independents artificially high, threatens independents that majors will force down retail prices and squeeze margins if independents import cheap gasoline, will be used to keep retail prices up themselves and will be used to maintain inefficiencies. I do not think there is a community in this country that has not felt the impact of this form of price rigging by the oil-company majors. Certainly in my own riding there are a number of communities where competition does not exist, and has never existed, and where there is absolutely no guarantee or certainty that it would exist after the passage of a Bill such as Bill C-91.

In those communities to which I refer, the people have been told very frankly by the oil companies that the oil companies do not consider it necessary to compete in those communities, that they are perfectly willing to continue selling refined oil products at 14 cents per litre in a community that is only 230 kilometres away from here, that it really does not matter to them because it is not part of their marketing strategy. People just 230 kilometres up the road are paying a higher price which now equates to a premium of something like one-third over the cost of gasoline sold in more fortunate communities.

What will Bill C-91 do about those sorts of things? The whole problem with the Bill is that it has been written in large degree with the assistance of the very people who would be most likely to be regulated by effective competition legislation. It would appear that the Minister has listened to the representatives of large business and that not enough notice has been taken of the lobbying efforts of the organizations that represent small business and the Canadian consumer.

My Party tabled a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) listing seven independent experts whom we believed should be consulted on Canadian competition policy and whose views we felt were worth taking into account in the framing and tabling of new legislation. Our follow up indictes that there has been only the most perfunctory consultation with these experts, and that by and large it is the interests and representations of large business organizations that have been included in the legislation.

The House of Commons cannot afford, and the Government should not be able to get away with introducing in Canada competition legislation that will lead to a replay of the history of having one successful prosecution for price rigging in the last 100 years. That sort of regulation is not what the Government was elected to bring in. It is not the sort of toothless bulldog that the people of Canada will allow to shamble around the alleys of corporate power.

The people of Canada want to see legislation with teeth, legislation that will prevent price fixing and corporate concentration, legislation that will control self-dealing and above all legislation that will ensure the delivery of all products and services, and particularly refined gasoline products, to Canadians at prices that represent only a fair return and a fair producer margin and do not include padding for inefficiencies, financing of future takeovers, funding of corporate expansion and the general support framework for concentration of corporate power in Canada. I fear that if Bill C-91 is passed as is, it will allow all those things to continue, possibly even at a greater speed than they have in the past.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke whether he believes that the Bill tabled by the Minister, especially in the section that concerns mergers, is an adequate response to the present need for legislation on competition in order to prevent mergers that would be disastrous to the Canadian economy.

To me it seems clear that Bill C-29, as tabled in the House by the previous Government, had the advantage of providing a whole series of factors that had to be taken into consideration when deciding whether a merger was acceptable or not. I think that with Bill C-91, the Minister has diluted the impact and the scope of the Bill, especially in the section on mergers, by removing the very factors that should be considered when assessing whether a merger is good or bad for the Canadian economy.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for his question and comments.

As far as Bill C-29 is concerned, since I was not a Member of this House when the Bill was tabled, I would rather not make any judgment on its merits.

However, as far as the present Bill is concerned, I fully agree with my hon. colleague, in that it does not provide the same legislative or governmental authority for regulating mergers that could have disastrous consequences for the Canadian economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Questions and comments? The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr.Allmand).

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-91 because I had introduced a similar Bill in 1978 prior to the 1979 election. While this Bill tends to go in the same direction as the Bill I had introduced, a Bill which was known as Bill C-13, it is not quite as strong in many areas. However, as my hon. colleagues have said, the Bill is certainly an improvement over the legislation that is presently in force and we will support the motion to send it to committee where we hope that, with extensive hearings, we might be able to agree on certain amendments that would strengthen the Bill.

Bill C-91 has had a long history. The process began in 1969, I believe, with the report of the Economic Council of Canada on competition policy. That report was very critical of the legislation that was in place, the Combines Investigation Act, and its record in dealing with restrictive practices and mergers in the market-place. The report of the Economic Council at that time recommended wide-ranging legislation to correct the abuses and shortcomings in the Combines Investigation Act and its implementation.

Initially Bill C-256 was introduced in 1971 by the Hon. Ron Basford who was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at that time. That Bill was met with massive objections from the business community. In many cases those objections were wrongly directed. However, the Bill was debated. It went to committee and stayed there for ever and a day. When that session came to an end that Bill died. Following that, another attempt was made in 1975 when the previous Bill was split into two parts, and Bill C-2 was finally passed. In 1977, Bill C-42 was introduced to carry on the reform of the competition legislation. It also died on the Order Paper due to opposition Then I introduced Bill C-13 in 1978. In 1984, Bill C-29 was introduced by the former Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, Judy Erola, and now we have Bill C-91. We have had six Bills attempting to deal with this important subject since the report of the Economic Council of Canada in 1969.

These Bills attempted to deal with several problems in the legislation which were criticized over the years. The most important one was the absolute failure of the provisions in the legislation, in the Combines Investigation Act, to deal with mergers and with monopolies. In the 75-year history of the legislation there was not one conviction under the provisions dealing with mergers and, as far as I know, there was only one conviction under the monopoly provisions, that is, the provisions dealing with the abuse of dominant positions in the market-place. Virtually those two very important provisions in the law have been ineffective.

Much important time was spent by officials in the Department of Justice and in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs preparing cases against businesses and individuals who had, in their opinion, violated the provisions of the Act, but they were never successful. Why were they not successful? It was because the legislation was of a criminal nature. One had to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the merger was harmful to competition, harmful to the free market economy and the market-place. The abusive dominant position had to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. It was virtually impossible to mount that kind of proof when we were dealing with conversations between individuals and not with the eyewitness observations which comprise proof in other criminal cases. Of course there was very little written documentation when people got together to abuse the market-place. Most of that activity would be of a nature that could not be proved in that way.

The reason the legislation was of a criminal nature is that for a long time the law relating to civil matters had been under provincial jurisdiction and the federal Government had been left with criminal law jurisdiction. It tried to deal with these important problems under the criminal law, and it just never worked.

There was also criticism of the conspiracy sections of the Combines Investigation Act. There have been convictions under those provisions, but over the years the fines have been so low that they have amounted to being simply a payment to carry on illegal activity. I am pleased to see that in Bill C-91 the maximum level of fines has been increased to $5 million. That is very important because very often large firms which violate or abuse the market-place can well afford by such abuse to pay a low fine and still make huge profits in the market-place, either by monopolistic practices or otherwise.

I have pointed to the fact that this is the sixth Bill since the report of the Economic Council in 1969. Each time a Bill was introduced to deal with these important matters it was delayed interminably by opposition, principally on the part of the "Gang of Five", as W. T. Stanbury of the University of British Columbia calls them; the "Gang of Five" being the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Business Council on National Issues, the Grocery Products Manuacturers of Canada and the Canadian Bar Association. Each time an attempt was made to bring in better competition legislation, there was massive lobbying, submissions to committee, more submissions, hearings, et cetera.

Mr. Murphy: And the Liberals gave up.

Mr. Allmand: I can tell the Hon. Member that when I was the Minister there was not one attempt by the NDP to assist in this legislation.

Mr. Murphy: Oh, come on.

Mr. Allmand: As a matter of fact, I looked through the various Question Periods over the entire period of time, and the NDP showed little interest in this legislation. I do not know why. I would expect them to be more interested in it.

Those who were opposed to the legislation knew very well how it would affect their ability to make profits, but it was very difficult to translate the important provisions of competition reform in a way in which it could be well understood by the man on the street. Of course, the man on the street is interested in the lowest price and the best goods and services possible in the market-place. However, it was difficult to translate the complex provisions in the competition legislation so that he understood that it was to his benefit.

When these Bills were before the House—and almost the same thing is happening now—we did not receive massive support from the general public in favour of them. However, we received massive opposition by large businesses, the "Gang of Five " and the members of those associations. What is very interesting about this debate, which has been ongoing for many years, is that these are the people who say they believe in the free market economy. They continually brag that they are free enterprisers and that they believe in free competition. However, whenever we try to do something to make the market economy work in a more competitive way they oppose it. Why do they oppose it? It is because they are not really interested in the principle of free competition. They are interested in maintaining their dominant position, once they have attained it. In other words, for many of those firms the only thing which matters is the bottom line, not principle. I am sorry to say that, but that is what in fact happens. If they are in a position to dominate the market, they do not want to see the young enterprising small company come in to challenge them. They want to keep their dominant position, and to hang with the free market system.

In Canada over all these years we have had multinationals which in the United States had to submit to much tougher and much more effective anti-trust legislation. They were willing to live with it in the United States, but the subsidiaries of those same companies opposed that legislation in Canada right down the line. They said that while it was good for the United States, it was not appropriate in Canada.

Other countries such as the European Economic Community, Britain and West Germany, countries, which had great success in business, were revising and reforming their competition legislation, but some of the dinosaurs in Canada were opposing it. In my opinion, they were being paranoic in opposing it, and showing themselves to be a bit hypocritical. On the one hand they stood for the free market economy but opposed legislation which would have made the market economy more competitive. Because they were so big, well organized and well financed, they were able to mount massive publicity campaigns saying how bad the various Bills were. When they are up against the five big associations, to which I referred, they did not have much success.

We also had associations of small businesses which supported those Bills over the years; for example, the Independent Petroleum Association. Small businesses knew how they were being treated, in many cases by the large companies, the multinationals and the combines that were going on, and how they were hurt by predatory practices to prevent new entries into the market-place, and refusals to deal.

I congratulate the Government for bringing in this Bill. It is not as strong in its present form as I would like it to be, but it is certainly a step in the right direction. We will support the motion to send Bill C-91 to committee where we will listen to witnesses and perhaps try to improve on the Bill to make the legislation even better.

The purpose of competition legislation and the original purpose of the Combines Investigation Act had fine principles, but the legislation was ineffective because it was criminal type legislation. The purposes have always been the same, namely, to promote fairness and honesty in the market-place, to promote economic efficiency, to prevent or reduce the abuse of economic power by large conglomerates, to protect the consumer and to protect small business. These have been the goals over the years. They are worthy goals and ones we support.

I earlier mentioned Professor Stanbury of the University of British Columbia. He is probably one of the best known experts in Canada on this subject and he has written extensively about it over the years. He points to some of the improvements that this Bill will bring about in our competition legislation. He levels, however, two important criticisms against the Bill. One would hope that we could concentrate or focus on these shortcomings when the Bill goes to Committee. First, with respect to mergers, mergers will now come under civil law provisions rather than criminal law provisions. This means we will be able to use the substantial burden of proof, or the predominant burden of proof, rather than proving beyond reasonable doubt, which is the burden of proof required in criminal law cases.

The central task for the judges in the new competition tribunal will be to determine whether a proposed merger is, and these are the words, in the Bill, "likely to prevent or lessen competition substantially". Professor Stanbury points out, and probably with reason, that the word "substantially" is not defined. That may put up a very serious roadblock to making this legisation effective, if the courts judge that "substantially" is a very large barrier to cross. As a result we will be no better off with this Bill than with the merger provisions in the present legislation. The word "substantially" could cause a lot of difficulty when we go to prove that mergers are likely to prevent or lessen competition.

Professor Stanbury also has some criticism for the new monopoly section. Once again it is a good thing these provisions have been transferred from criminal law jurisdiction into civil law jurisdiction. It may still be very difficult to enforce, because the Crown will have to establish four items of proof. First, the Crown will have to prove that one or more firms substantially or completely control the relevant market. That will not be easy to prove even with the civil burden of proof. Second, the Crown will have to prove that the firms have engaged in a practice of anti-competitive acts, such as those listed in the section. That may be easier than the first burden, but it is still difficult. Third, the object of the practice is to lessen competition. It is easy enough sometimes to prove that certain firms are engaging in certain practices, but then to prove that their purpose, their intention, in doing those things is to lessen competition might be extremely difficult. Fourth, the practice of lessening competition has had, is having, or likely to have the effect of lessening competition substantially. Once again, that word "substantially" could cause a lot of problems for the Crown in trying to prove its case where there is abuse of dominant position in the market-place.

A Bill like this has to provide balance. It is always a question of judgment as to what that balance should be. But it has to be a balance between the rights and responsibilities of large businesses as opposed to small business, especially small business that is trying to enter a market-place dominated by big firms. We must also maintain a balance between investors, entrepreneurs and consumers. We do not want to discourage investment or to harm consumers. We want to be sure they get the best possible goods and services at the best possible prices.

We will vote to send this Bill to committee, not because we approve of everything in the Bill, but because we believe it is a step in the right direction. Once in committee, having heard witnesses, experts and consumers, we will try to make amendments. We reserve our right, however, to take a different position on this Bill once it returns to the House for third reading. If no improvement is made, we will have to decide whether or not we will still support the Bill. We are hopeful that improvements can be made in committee. I look forward to participating in the committee procedures.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, this Bill before the House is probably the fifth generation of Bills in competition policy going back to 1969. As I recall, we have had a whole series of Bills since 1971. I see five pieces—

Mr. Allmand: This is Bill number six.

Mr. Nystrom: This is Bill number six? The first one was Bill C-256 in 1971, then Bill C-42, Bill C-13 and Bill C-29. I have obviously missed one if this Bill before the House is the sixth attempt at competition policy.

One of the concerns I have is that there is a powerful corporate lobby in Canada which always seems to succeed in convincing Members of Parliament to water down competition policy. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) mentioned the big five, the National Council on Business Issues and so on, that are lobbying very hard in this area. I notice the advisory council, for example, is made up of people from the business community and the business community only.

I am really concerned as a Member of Parliament in a riding that represents a lot of very ordinary Canadians that their voice is not being heard when legislation of this type is drafted. The Member was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at one time. I know personally where he stands on these issues. He is a good progressive Liberal. He would like to see a much tougher competition policy, but why was this not done when the Liberal Party was in power? It was in power for many, many years. The Liberals had several studies, several different papers and they made several different attempts at changing competition policy. Why was the Liberal Party always consistently persuaded by big business to come out with a toothless tiger when it came to competition policy?

I know the Member will and say that the Liberal Party did not get enough pressure from the NDP. I do not think that is good enough. The Liberals were the Government. They had a majority. Why were they not able to stand up to the business community in Canada and defend the ordinary Canadian workers, ordinary Canadian farmers and small business? Why could the Liberals not do that? They had a mandate for many, many years.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out, there was some legislation passed. As a matter of fact, I think my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was the Minister in 1975 when Bill C-2 passed. Perhaps that is the Bill he does not have on the list. He mentioned Bills C-256, C-42, C-13, C-29, and now C-91.

In answer to my hon. colleague's question, following the strong lobbying against Bill C-256, it was divided into two Bills. It was a long, very complicated, omnibus type Bill. Part of it was made Bill C-2 and the other was referred to a parliamentary committee under the chairmanship of Norm Cafik who, at that time, was the Member for Ontario. After a certain amount of debate in the House, Bill C-2 was passed. Some of the things originally proposed by the Economic Council were passed in Bill C-2.

The Member's question is still a legitimate one. As I tried to indicate in my original remarks, when these Bills were introduced and sent to committee the big business community, in particular, strongly opposed them. I went out looking for support for the Bills. I invited people to appear before the committee. Professor Stanbury, other academics, the Consumers Association of Canada, and other organizations such as the Independent Petroleum Association did support it. However, for every national association which supported the Bill, about 20 well organized and heavily financed organizations opposed it.

Members of the House of Commons in all political Parties were receiving all kinds of letters. The letters did not all appear to be coming from the big business community. Letters were received from individuals saying what terrible legislation this was and very few letters were received in support of the legislation. That is in contrast to the heavy lobby on both sides when the Government attempted to deindex the old age pension.

I was committed to the Bill, but I had a hard time convincing many of my colleagues who were preoccupied with other issues in caucus and in Parliament. I looked for support from all Parties at the time, and priorities were elsewhere; with energy, interest rates, employment, or whatever. I had a very difficult time, as a Minister, convincing ordinary people in the church groups and the various coalitions which usually support these things, that this was just as important an issue for the things they believed in, including lower prices, anti-inflationary tendencies, and better services and products. With 20 Bills on the Order Paper, great support for 19 of them, and all kinds of opposition to poor competition Bill No. C-13, I had a tough time convincing my colleagues that we should spend time on it in the House of Commons.

All of these Bills have led to a refining of the negotiation process. It is obvious that the present Bill C-91, built on the negotiations undertaken by Miss Erola and those undertaken by myself, is more acceptable to the business community. I hope that we at least get this Bill through.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, would the Member admit that the reason it is more acceptable to the business community is that the Government's advisory group consisted of the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturing Association of Canada, and the Canadian Bar Association? All of these groups are very conservative, big business oriented groups which I am sure would not represent many members of the Conservative Party who pretend to believe in so-called free enterprise and small business in the country. Does the Member agree that perhaps this is why this Bill is now acceptable to the big business community in the country? In effect, they have written the doggone Bill and it is something they can live with. There has been no representation from farmers, trade unions, consumer representative groups, community associations, women's groups, or native groups. Is this Bill more acceptable to big business because it was conceived by big business and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) is now delivering it on their behalf? Is that not the case?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member. I think the Bill is more acceptable because concessions have been made. We will be dealing with the Bill in committee, at which time I hope we can convince Government Members, upon hearing witnesses, that there should be changes. If there is going to be an advisory council on the appointment of people to the competition board, we should ensure that the balance of advice comes from the consumer and producer side as well as the big business side. We will certainly be pressing for amendments in that area.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my colleague and friend, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), regarding to the new aspect in the competition Bill, the prenotification requirements. The provisions require that certain companies prenotify the director and provide documentation as required for transactions where the combined assets or the gross revenues of the parties exceed $500 million in the case of a merger. I also understand that these provisions apply where the assets or gross revenues of the target company exceed $35 million, and for amalgamations where the target company's assets or gross revenues exceed $70 million. That is the new aspect of the law.

I would like to know how my friend would answer the questions people in my riding are asking me with regard to how preventive we must be in legislation of this nature. By setting the ceiling of $500 million we are indeed exceeding many other countries in terms of these kinds of mergers and takeovers. The Member is a former Minister and is familiar with the subject. Does he have any idea how preventive this legislation must be in terms of its amounts? Why did we choose $500 milllion?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in the previous Bills introduced by Liberal Governments there were also provisions for prenotification with respect to mergers. These provisions are slightly different. When the Bill reaches committee we must examine in detail whether the amounts referred to are reasonable and just, or too high or too low, considering the present value of the dollar, the Canadian economy, the profits that could be made, and so on. I think the prenotification provisions are very important. We supported prenotification provisions in the previous Bill. I think they can do a lot to help prevent damage from taking place. If those provisions did not exist, we would sometimes find out about mergers after they had been agreed to. Business people, lawyers, and accountants may spend a lot of time cooking up something which will not be agreed to by the authorities under this legislation. Therefore, I think prenotification is a good preventive measure. It should be the function of the committee to decide whether or not the details are correct.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-91. The first thing we should note is that this Bill is less than it seems. It masquerades as a serious attempt to deal with the important problems facing industry and the market-place, the important problems of protecting the consumer, small producer and small business person. In fact, however, this Bill is nothing more than a charade. For example, I would like to read the statement of the purpose of the Bill:

> The purpose of this Act is to maintain and encourage competition in Canada in order to promote the efficiency and adapatability of the Canadian economy, in order to expand opportunities for Canadian participation in world markets while at the same time recognizing the role of foreign competition in Canada, in order to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises have an equitable opportunity to participate in the Canadian economy and in order to provide consumers with competitive prices and product choices.

That is admirable. I do not think there is any Member of the House who would want to dispute or oppose that purpose, particularly the last part. The problem is that the Bill does not really meet the purpose it sets out. It is like other legislation the Tories have introduced in this session. The employment equity Bill sets out some very noble goals but completely fails in its objective.

There are two reasons why we have such a weak Bill. The first is ideological and the second is pragmatic. From an ideological point of view, there is a hard core within the Conservative Party who believe very strongly in the myth of the self-regulating free market. Society will benefit if only the Government does not interfere. Perhaps I am stating this too baldly, perhaps not. Even hard core Tory back-benchers have begun to recognize that this ideology cannot stand up to the reality of today's corporate world. Even they have to recognize that the predatory power of concentrated wealth which destroys smaller businesses has to be resisted at some point. Even if they fail to see how this so-called free market does not really protect the consumer, they recognize that by the law of the jungle only the very largest animals can be free from fear. Even then, they continue to live only so long as they find some smaller animals to devour. Recognizing that, we now have Conservative back-benchers standing up, and rightly so, to oppose the Imasco takeover of Genstar. This is commendable. They are finally recognizing that here at least is the point at which they should be drawing a line. However, we have to ask where were they—

Mr. Blenkarn: Where were you people on this issue?

Mr. Manly: —before?

Mr. Blenkarn: Why weren't you leading the charge?

Mr. Manly: The New Democrats have been leading the charge on this issue and others.

Mr. Blenkarn: You were quiet, silent.

Mr. Manly: We would like to see a little more leadership from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I hope we will allow the Hon. Member to finish his speech and then I will allow the other Hon. Member to question and comment.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member or others might even want to speak on this Bill. They talked a great deal about putting up a big fight but we have not seen much of a fight yet.

It is interesting to note that even the bankers are very concerned about this conglomerate takeover of a financial institution because of the danger of self-dealing. It is reported that most failures of financial institutions, including three-quarters of the bank collapses in the U.S., result from massive self-dealing. Yet here we have a Bill which, as I read it, specifically excludes this whole question of conglomerate mergers. Clause 67(2) says:

> For greater certainty, this section does not apply in respect of the acquisition of assets of a combination.

That explicitly excludes the concern we have over the Imasco takeover of Genstar. Yesterday a special Bill was tabled which the Government hopes will deal with that question, but in the meantime the deal is proceeding apace and we have no assurance that it is going to be stopped.

While the Conservatives have this ideological fixation on a so-called free market, they are beginning to recognize the need for legislation which will curb the worst excesses of that system. However, their commitment to the myth is so strong that the legislation is weak. It is important to remember that the market is a human creation and it must be regulated by humans. It will not regulate itself. On that basis the representatives of the people, namely, the Government, should be regulating it in the interests of the people.

Back in 1910 Teddy Roosevelt had some interesting things to say about this:

> It is my personal belief that the same kind and degree of control and supervision which should be exercised over public service corporations should be extended also to combinations which control necessaries of life, such as meat, oil, and coal, or which deal in them on an important scale.
> I have no doubt that the ordinary man who has control of them is much like ourselves. I have no doubt he would like to do well, but I want to have enough supervision to help him realize that desire to do well.

We do not need to point the finger at the people in charge of these corporations or paint them as bogymen, or as people who are evil in a way other people are not. We can say, as Teddy Roosevelt said, that no doubt they are the same as we are. No doubt they wish to do well. However, we have a responsibility to provide the kind of supervision which will ensure that they do good. So I urge the Conservatives to shuck off this ideological fixation they have with the so-called free market.

The second reason this Bill is weak is pragmatic; that is to say, big business lobbyists got to the Government. In fact, there were five groups who were particularly involved in vetting this Bill before it ever came before the House of Commons, the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers Association, and the Canadian Bar Association. These five groups obviously got to the Minister and went through the provisions that were to be included in the Bill to make sure there was nothing they could not live with. The fact that it is so acceptable to them is fairly conclusive proof that the Bill does not offer the kind of protection consumers need.

We have just finished several years of Liberal Government. While the Liberals perhaps do not share the ideological opposition of the Conservatives to regulation in the marketplace, they were quite susceptible to the pragmatic reasons for having a weak Bill. They let a lot of the same lobbyists get to them.

It was instructive to hear the Hon. Member for Nore-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) saying he was glad this Bill was more acceptable to the business community. Since 1971 we have had four Bills introduced before this one and not passed. This is the fifth attempt to bring in legislation to deal with the whole question of consumers.

It is my understanding from talking to people who have looked at the previous Bills that this Bill is the weakest of all. It is interesting that when the Liberals were criticized yesterday for failing to act, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) said that one of the reasons they did not get their Bill passed was because of the bell ringing incident during which the bells rang for two weeks and the House was stalled by the Conservatives. It struck me as being rather strange, that this must have been the two weeks during which the Liberal Government was to be at the very peak of its performance, that it had so much great legislation to be passed in that short two-week period which never saw the light of day, and has been buried ever since, all because of that short two-week bell ringing incident. If the Liberals have nothing else to thank the Conservatives for they should be down on their knees every day thanking the Conservatives for that bell ringing incident, giving them that great excuse for all the legislation they did not pass over the last 20 years. Certainly that has some relationship to this anti-combine legislation.

The need for this kind of legislation is very obvious. Since 1979 there have been some 22 mergers in Canada involving assets with a transaction value of over half a billion dollars. In 1980 the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation acquired Kaiser Resources Limited, or 66 per cent of it, for $665 million. Those of us from British Columbia know all about the BC Resources Investment Corporation. For others, I would just like to remind you that BCRIC was Premier Bennett's experiment in people's capitalism. He was going to show the people of British Columbia what capitalism was all about, so he took the assets of the province that had been built up over a number of years in public ownership, and he put these within the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation. He gave everybody six free shares, and then he put some shares on the open market. A lot of small people put their life savings into those shares. They bought them at $6 a share. They took Bill Bennett's word. This was their entry into the whole world of capitalism led by the Social Credit Premier of British Columbia. This is the same corporation that took over Kaiser Resources. Today those shares are trading around $2, if you can get $2 for them. They went from $6 down to $2. That is people's capitalism under the Social Credit Government.

We can look at the takeover in 1981 by Noranda Mines Limited of McMillan Bloedel, 49.8 per cent at $626 million. McMillan Bloedel is one of the largest employers in British Columbia. It has a long history of involvement in the forestry industry and was taken over by Noranda Mines, a corporation that has no real history or interest in the forest industry. Later that same year Brascade Resources Inc. took over Noranda Mines for $1.6 billion. Here we have Noranda taking over McMillan Bloedel and then we have Brascade taking over Noranda. We have the big fish coming along and swallowing the smaller fish.

We have to ask where it is all going to stop. We do not have confidence that this Bill will solve this problem. We see in some of the definitions that we have of anti-competitive acts that Government knows what these are. It defines them as squeezing, acquisition by a supplier of a customer who would otherwise be available to a competitor, the use of fighting brands introduced selectively on a temporary business to discipline or eliminate a competitor, pre-emption of scarce facilities for resources required by a competitor for the operation of a business, buying up of product to prevent the erosion of existing price levels, adoption of products specifications that are incompatible with products produced by any other person, designed to prevent his entry into or eliminate him from a market, or requiring or inducing a supplier to sell only or primarily to certain customers.

The Bill defines all of these in Section 50 as the abuse of dominant position and as anti-competitive acts. Section 51 imposes the conditions under which an application by the law takes place. These conditions have to be met before the tribunal may make any order prohibiting these practices. As my hon. friend from Nickel Belt said yesterday, this Section is filled with weasel words that allow practically anything to happen.

For example, in Section 51(c) "the practice has had, is having or is likely to have the effect of preventing or lessening competition substantially in a market". There can be a lot of debate about what the word "substantially" means. It is going to be a lawyers' field day, but it is not going to provide much protection for the average consumer.

In conclusion, I want to say that Canada badly needs legislation to protect consumers from monopoly and predatory pricing practices. It badly needs legislation to protect smaller businesses from being gobbled up and eliminated, for no other reason than the desire for bigness. It badly needs proper anti-combines legislation. Unfortunately, Bill C-91 does not meet that need, and on this basis I urge the Government to bring in some proper amendments that will make it more effective.

Mr. Blenkarn: I would like to make a couple of comments and then perhaps ask the Member a question. He will realize that this is the fourth Bill that has been introduced on competition over a period of time. I remember one was introduced by one Tony Abbott, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs following the 1974 Parliament. He defeated me in the general election and went on to be Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister, and the competition act defeated him.

Then we had the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)who introduced a paper on competition. It was circulated around the countryside, and every storekeeper, every small businessman, every person in the whole country that was in any way involved in franchises or whatever formed almost a squad to run the Minister out on the rails. That Minister was very fortunate in losing the portfolio of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. So the Bill has had a very rough time.

The Hon. Member will know that there has been a great deal of consultation. For example, the Consumers' Assocation of Canada has been heavily involved. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Independent Petroleum Association heavily support the Bill. I wonder, in view of that support, and in view of the very hard history, why the New Democratic Party and, in particular, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), would not stand up and applaud the Government for introducing the legislation, and applaud the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), bearing in mind the way other Ministers of that portfolio have gone down the pipe with competition Bills. He should be applauded for having the strength of character to introduce this Bill.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about strength of character being needed to introduce this Bill. I am speechless at the idea that the introduction of a Bill like this requires strength of character. That is utterly beyond my comprehension, unless the Tories have a completely different understanding of what "strength of character" is all about. The Hon. Member talked about the great deal of consulation which has taken place. The labour movement was essentially asked a few questions, but there was no extensive follow-up with the labour movement, or any consultation. The Consumers' Association of Canada was essentially told to take it or leave it. It was not really involved in helping to draft the kind of legislation which is needed by the Canadian public for its protection. I do not think that the introduction of this Bill requires any kind of strength of character. Certainly, it is not the kind of Bill I would want to applaud.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, is it the view of the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party that, for example, Crown corporations should not be included in a Competition Bill? Is it his Party's view that the banks should be able to carry on the way they have and not be covered by a competition Bill? Does the Hon. Member not begin to understand that for the first time Governments have had the strength to be able to say to Crown corporations and the banks: "You, too, are going to be subject to the competition legislation this Government proposes"?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I do not think at any point in my speech I said that everything in this Bill was wrong. What I said was that this Bill does not begin to deal with real problems facing the Canadian consumer. The Bill has the weasel words like "substantially" lessening competition. So what we have is a field day for lawyers. Instead of having a Bill with some teeth to give consumers some real protection, we have a Bill which is fairly thick, which has a lot of verbiage, but which does not do the job required.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party if he would explain why he would make the statement in the House that the Consumers' Association of Canada does not endorse the Bill, and has not been consulted? It has written letters of support. In fact, it was the Consumers' Association of Canada which asked that a tribunal be set up. It was one of its key thrusts, in order that we could have representation from the business sector in deciding whether major corporations were gaining a dominant position in the marketplace. Where did the Hon. Member get his information that the Consumers' Association does not support this Bill?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would listen to what I said. I did not say the Consumers' Association of Canada did not support this Bill. I said that the Consumers' Association of Canada was in effect told to take it or leave it, like it or lump it, and that it had better start making the right noises. That is in effect what has happened. It is making some of the right noises, but that does not mean that the Bill really satisfies the Consumers' Association of Canada, or that is going to meet the needs of consumers across Canada.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I think, in fairness to the Consumers' Association of Canada the Hon. Member should give his source of information. If the Hon. Member has been advised that it was told to take it or lump it, then I would like to know who advised him that that was the position of the Consumers' Association of Canada, which last summer in July and August endorsed the Bill and asked for certain things which are included. The Hon. Member rises in this House and repeatedly tells us he has been advised under the table, from a brown envelope or somehow, that the Consumers' Association of Canada has said it was told to take it or lump it. Would the Hon. Member be more specific? Who said to take it or lump it?

Mr. Nystrom: I was told by Blaikie.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) told the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), and I heard it right from the horse's mouth.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions or comments? The time for questions or comments has now terminated. Resuming debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I thought the last interjection by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) that he received his information from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) was a pretty good indication of the depth of the research the New Democratic Party put into this Bill. I note the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said that he was also involved in this research into the Consumers' Association of Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Believe it or not, Don.

Mr. Blenkarn: But, seriously, Mr. Speaker, when a Member of Parliament impugns an association like the Consumers' Association of Canada, that Member of Parliament is doing damage to a voluntary association. He should prove that it has said it has not been given a fair hearing, totally disapproved of the Bill and that it was told to lump it or leave it. That is a pretty serious accusation against a very valid association. To make that accusation and refuse to back it up is certainly, in my view, not the kind of thing we should expect from Hon. Members in this Chamber.

Some attack was made with respect to our philosophy in connection with competition. I want to make it very clear to this House, particularly to the New Democratic Party, that we believe very strongly in the private marketplace. But, we believe that the private marketplace should be open and free for competition amongst various parties in the private marketplace. It is our philosophy and our hope that there will be as many active competitors in the marketplace as possible. We do not, quite frankly, enjoy having to use the state, which really amounts to bureaucrats and the dictatorship of the state, to try to force the divestiture or control of businesses. What we want to do is create a climate whereby there is as much open competition as possible. Let it be very clear that if we cannot by persuasion create a climate of openness of competition, then we will not resist using the powers of the state. That also is the philosophy of this Party.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member, because he said some things about Members of the Conservative Party making some statements concerning the Genstar and Imasco matter, that not just Members of the Conservative Party but all of the Members of the Finance Committee last evening endorsed a resolution asking the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), who introduced Bill C-103, to block the Imasco takeover of Canada Trust. The Progressive Conservative Party is taking the lead on this whole question. We did not hear a thing from Members of the New Democratic Party for weeks and weeks, in fact, not until yesterday in Question Period in the House of Commons. They finally caught on to the fact that, perhaps, non-financial institutions would take over a very major financial company.

Mr. Orlikow: You know that's nonsense!

Mr. Gormley: Oh boy, there speaks an expert!

Mr. Blenkarn: Bill C-91 is a first-class Bill. For the first time it will set up a competition tribunal which will combine the judicial concept with the business concept. In effect, the tribunal will act as a court-type operation. It will deal with the serious business problems which come before us in terms of the conflicting views of businessmen and citizens generally. It will deal with them in a sensible and business-like fashion. It will be better than a court in that it will have an independent business attitude on the bench, so to speak. However, it will be a court in the sense that it will be staffed by people who have judicial training as well as by people with business training.

This legislation will leave us open once again to use the strength of our country so that our businesses can be internationally competitive. One of the problems with our present combines legislation is that it can be used to destroy the international competitiveness of Canadian business. Under the legislation which is before us, mergers and acquisitions which will assist Canada in its international dealings will be allowed to take place. In this way Canadian products and services can be marketed internationally. That is a very important thrust contained in the Bill.

Another important thrust in the Bill is the concept of pre-notification. In other words, if a takeover is contemplated by a company worth $500 million, then it must pre-notify the Minister. There are 21 days in which to reply. That is another important aspect of this legislation.

It is essential that, for the first time, we have brought the banks into the act as well as Crown corporations. Many Hon. Members will remember the situation with the former Government in which a cartel was established in connection with the sale of uranium. The only ones who could be prosecuted were the private companies which were part of the cartel. Here was a situation in which the Government was, in fact, illegally promoting the cartel, but the only people who could be prosecuted were the private companies. The Government members of the cartel were let off scot-free, including the Minister. Surely that was wrong. This Bill solves that problem.

I wish to congratulate the Minister of State for Finance who introduced Bill C-103 in an urgent fashion yesterday. That Bill again demonstrates the intention of the Government to stand tough with respect to how the financial institutions of the country are run and governed. In a sense that Bill is a companion piece to the legislation before us. It gives the Minister a great deal of power in preventing takeovers which are not in the Canadian interest.

Since the question of takeovers of our institutions is continually before us, it is important to analyze the whole question surrounding it. I would like to read into the record some of the testimony given by Bernard Ghert of The Cadillac Fairview Corporation to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Mr. Ghert stated:

> The concern for public policy is not simply that those with such power will earn excess profits. Rather the concern is that these large groups will have the ability to earn an acceptable level of profits (e.g., sufficient to prevent a takeover) and be able to use their power to achieve objectivies other than increasing the shareholders' wealth. This power may be used to alter the behaviour of other firms involuntarily, e.g.,
> —by advancing the interests of some customers or suppliers and/or by penalizing others;
>
> —by undermining the position of rivals in ways inconsistent with maximizing the wealth of one's own shareholders;
> —by providing excess rewards, pecuniary or otherwise, to the top management coalition that effectively controls the corporation; or
> —by using economic power to influence public policy via the political process, i.e., expenditures on lobbying, advocacy advertising, public relations, campaign contributions and the ability to redirect corporate locational decisions.
> Corporate concentration with respect to financial institutions has potentially greater ramifications than in the non-financial or "real" side of the economy because of the particular characteristics of money and related near-money assets.

This testimony was commented upon favourably by writers in the financial papers and in the regular media.

The Finance Committee recommended this fall that there be serious controls placed on the ownership of financial institutions. A financial institution is not just a boot and shoe company. It has the power of massive leverage. For example, for every one dollar in assets of its shareholders' money Canada Trust is entitled to borrow $25 more from the marketplace. Thus it has a 25-to-one leverage. It is presently operating at about 18-to-one or 19-to-one. That is amazing gearing.

It means that for a couple of billion dollars one can gain control of $21 billion or $22 billion. That is the essence of this whole problem. It is unusual for a boot and shoe company to have more leverage than one-to-one or two-to-one. In such a company there is really very little borrowed money involved. Most of the money in such a company is equity money. In such a case we are really not talking about control of vast amounts of money because of the leverage involved.

Very little equity controls massive amounts of money in financial companies. When a financial company is involved, and there is this gearing, it is essential that we look very closely at who the shareholders of the company are and what group has control. This is so because the control of that massive amount of money means that all sorts of transactions can come one's way.

In meetings of the Finance Committee this fall I had a private chat with one trust officer who, for obvious reasons, will remain undisclosed in name. He said: "Don, you don't really make any money on the leverage operation or the management of a company. You buy these things because of the power you get to make the deals. It is a power which allows you to get in on the ground floor of a deal because you can supply the mortgage. This gives you the edge. The power is in the right to have access to this great pot of money". That is the very reason it is absolutely essential that there be controls placed on financial institutions.

For a moment I would like to talk about other takeovers. I think it only fair to point out to the House, and I think Hon. Members will agree, that just bidding the shares of a corporation up in value on the market-place does not create any new wealth. It does not create new jobs that build Canada. Indeed, it probably hurts the country. When shares are bid up, the new price level of the shares must be justified. There has to be a price-earnings ratio and a return on the investment again. The company has to be organized in such a fashion that the new high price can be validated.

In the Genstar takeover of Canada Trust, $1.2 billion in debt was created. If the Imasco deal went ahead, there would be another $2.4 billion in debt created. Where is the money to pay that debt going to come from? Does it come from the depositors? Does it come from the borrowers? Does it come from fast deals? What benefit is there to Canada? I think we all have to ask those questions because in many senses these transactions are financed by us.

Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) what was the cost of borrowing and what was going to happen. It is clear that since there is interest deductibility in this country, when one buys a capital asset the person buying the capital asset is entitled to deduct from his other taxable profits the interest cost. Therefore, in many senses you and I, Sir, pay the bill.

One might ask why we allow that tax deductibility. The obvious reason is that we must have a tax system very much in line with the tax system that exists in the United States. Prior to 1970 Canada did not allow the deductibility of interest used to buy capital assets, but the Americans did. All sorts of companies in our economy were acquired by foreigners simply because the foreigners could deduct the interest and our guys could not.

I remember being involved in a takeover situation. A group of us from Port Credit were putting some money together to buy a construction company. My young brother is now involved in that construction company. We were faced with an alternate bid from an American construction company that wanted to get into Canada. The American company could pay a heck of a lot more than we could because it could deduct interest and we could not. We were a little faster than the American company and we managed to make the deal. However, our real problem was that that company could deduct interest and we could not. The Income Tax Act was subsequently changed to make that possible. But I would point out to the House that the effect of that change is to make takeovers very much more probable.

Without allowing the deductibility of interest, many of the takeovers, and indeed I suggest most of the takeovers that we have seen occur in the past two or three years would not have taken place. The proposed Imasco takeover could not take place without some borrowed money. Whether all the money has to be borrowed or not is another matter, but certainly some money has to be borrowed. The Genstar takeover of Canada Trust could not have happened without the huge amounts of money advanced by a syndicate put together by the Toronto Dominion Bank through Gordon Capital.

We might ask why we allow this kind of thing. The answer is that our tax laws have to be relatively in line with those of the United States. As we enter into trade negotiations with the United States, one of the things we might negotiate with the United States, since the Americans have the same problem with takeovers as we do, is limitations on the deductibility of interest for the purposes of takeovers.

I mentioned initially that competition legislation has been before the House on a number of occasions. The legislation has always failed, not because there was not enough time to put it through but because the legislation got to committee and was absolutely destroyed by representations made from all sides. It is difficult to have legislation that affects people right across the country without having it hurt some people.

While this Bill may have some imperfections—I suppose every piece of legislation we produce has imperfections—I suggest it is important that it proceed now and be passed speedily. For the first time in 16 years, we will at least see some changes made to the competition legislation, and for the first time in 75 years there will be some legislation on the books that makes sense.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. First, let me say that the reason the Bills did not pass when brought forward by the former Liberal Government is that there was a great deal of opposition to them. That opposition came mainly from the business community which did not get everything it wanted. This time, the Conservative Government avoided that by calling in the five big business organizations and letting them work on the Bill.

Until recently, when we spoke of competition legislation and the necessity for it, we were thinking of things like a steel company buying another steel company or a pulp and paper company buying another pulp and paper company and in that way lessening competition. However, what we are facing now are conglomerate takeovers. I would like to ask the Hon. Member how this Bill deals with those takeovers.

Let me give the Hon. Member a few illustrations of what has happened in recent years. Noranda took over MacMillan Bloedel and paid over $600 million for it. Then Brascade took over Noranda and paid $1.6 billion for that takeover. Canadian Pacific took Canadian International Paper and paid $1 billion for it. Bell Canada took over TransCanada Pipe and paid over $600 million for it. The Thomson interests took over the Hudson's Bay and paid about $641 million for it.

What did those takeovers accomplish? Was a single new job created? Do these companies really know the operations of the companies they took over? Do they know how to make them more efficient and bring in new technologies? They do not, and that has also been the experience in the United States. Big oil companies got involved in acquisitions of companies outside of the oil business three or four years ago and are now selling those companies at huge losses because they realize they do not know the businesses they acquired.

Does this Bill in any way give the Government, Parliament or an agency of the Government the authority to look into these conglomerate takeovers which have become so prevalent and decide whether or not they are good for the country?

Mr. Blenkarn: First, Mr. Speaker, the pre-notification requirements in this Bill require every takeover company with over $500 million in sales or $500 million in assets, the big companies about which the Hon. Member and I are concerned, to notify the Government.

Let us look at the Gulf and Hiram Walker transaction for a moment. Hiram Walker is involved in the energy industry, and Gulf is also involved in that industry. There may well be something which would reduce competition, and if the Bill were in place it may well be that the takeover could be prohibited. With takeovers such as the one of which I am speaking we often find that they are occurring because another interest is ancillary, like or close to the interest of the business of the company taking over. In most cases the pre-notification and the provisions of the Bill will allow the Government to come to grips with the problem. Perhaps it will not in every case. However, if we take a look at the Bill, and at Bill C-103, we come to the realization that most takeover activity will be subject to pretty serious review.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, let me explore further the illustration which the Hon. Member used, the takeover by Gulf of Hiram Walker. I think Hiram Walker has been in the liquor business for more than 100 years. I presume it knows that business because of that, and it is a profitable business. In its desire to diversify, it bought into the oil and gas business. It is very new in that business and I doubt that it knows as much about it as it knows about the liquor business. Gulf is now proposing to take over Hiram Walker. Apparently Hiram Walker is not selling its oil and gas interests, just its liquor interests. Would the Hon. Member explain the economic rationale of that? I am not referring to the point of view of the people who own and manage Hiram Walker. I am sure that whatever they do will protect their interests, but how can that takeover possibly help Canadians?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in my remarks, obviously the question of whether or not Canadians will be helped in the takeover is one that would have to be reviewed under the provisions of the Bill. I really do not think that the details of the Hiram Walker and Gulf dance around the mulberry bush in court and elsewhere should be a concern of ours in discussing the particular Bill and its details. In that the Bill would require pre-notification, in that Hiram Walker is now partly an oil company with the ownership of Home Oil and Consumers Gas, and in that Gulf is in the oil and gas business, surely there is the possibility of a lessening of competition. It would seem to me that the Bill would cover that takeover. The dancing around the mulberry bush, which the directors are doing to protect their jobs or other interests, is a matter which perhaps the Hon. Member and I can enjoy and understand; if we want, we can invest in the stock-market and take our chances. However, the essence of the Bill is that it is a review mechanism so that the lessening of competition by the takeover route can be prohibited.

Mr. Orlikow: The tribunal which will be conducting the review, does it have the power or the right to say in respect of one of these takeovers that there is no benefit to the country, that it will not produce any new jobs or provide any new technology and therefore it cannot be done? Does the tribunal have that power? If not, what is the point of the review?

Mr. Blenkarn: The point of the review is that this is a piece of competition legislation, and if there is a lessening of competition then a decision will be rendered on that basis. Surely it is not the business of the Government to worry about whether there are profits or no profits in a transaction.

Mr. Orlikow: How about jobs? Should the Government not worry about jobs?

Mr. Blenkarn: We cannot expect one piece of legislation to solve all the problems of a society as complex as ours. Surely the Bill goes a long way toward getting at the issue of competition.

Mr. Orlikow: No way.

Mr. Blenkarn: I hear the Hon. Member. I suggest to him that the Bill is a good step forward. It is far better than anyone heretofore has been able to produce, certainly within the last 16 years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) rising on a question or comment?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment. In view of the fact that I will be the next speaker, I wonder whether there would be unanimous consent to call it one o'clock so that we can start afresh after Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments is now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Sudbury as the first speaker. Does the House agree to calling it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.57 p.m. the House took recess.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PAYMENT OF NEW BRUNSWICK PREMIER'S LEGAL COSTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it recently came to public attention that the Progressive Conservative Party of New Brunswick paid $123,628 in legal fees for the defence of a Mr. Richard Hatfield against a charge of possession of marijuana.

The charge was laid by the RCMP in respect to Mr. Hatfield's standing as a private citizen and was not influenced by or initiated on account of his position or political office.

I request that the office of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) begin an immediate investigation into a legality of the use of funds solicited for political use in the legal defence against a charge of possession of marijuana.

I also request a ruling on whether anyone in receipt of such a benefit is required to pay income tax on what is clearly a taxable benefit.

Donations to political Parties are made by Canadians to ensure the continuation of Canada's democratic institutions. Is it correct that an individual's legal defence should be paid from such funds? I await the findings of the Minister of National Revenue.

YUKON LEGISLATURE'S VOTE AGAINST CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, last week the Yukon Legislature voted to oppose Cruise missile testing and increased military activity in the north. This was a free vote on a private Member's motion, and the Government Leader clearly urged all Members to follow their consciences. The Liberals, symbolically, split on this issue.

The Government should note that people who have to live with the Cruise missile hanging over their heads are not too happy about it. They frankly do not like Canada's contribution to the nuclear arms race. They are concerned for their safety when the Cruise missile crashes in two consecutive tests, and they do not want their backyards turned into playgrounds for the Pentagon.

While defence planners tend to look upon our North as a big empty space, just perfect for military exercises, northerners have a much different vision of their homeland. It is time that we took notice of that vision and consulted them before subjecting their homeland to low-level flights by Cruise missiles, NATO fighters, or B-52s. The Government should first assess the impact of this activity on northerners' lives and homes, and ask them if they approve.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

IMPORTANCE OF REGIONAL INFORMATION PROGRAMS FOR REGIONAL ECONOMIES

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House to denounce the incompetence of the President of the CBC, Pierre Juneau and his colleague, Louis O'Neil. Last week, a great deal of publicity accompanied an announcement that cut backs would be made in regional programming at Matane, Rimouski, Sept-Îles and Chicoutimi, communities that are bound to suffer since the situation for the communications media is already far from ideal.

Mr. Juneau and Mr. O'Neil have opted for the easy way out by hitting those who cannot strike back. Why not seek out areas where money is really being wasted, and I am thinking of the duplication of responsibilities and the top-heavy administrative machine we find at the headquarters of this superstructure in Montreal?

The CBC will have to cut its expenditures, I agree, but I cannot tolerate this being done by depriving the Lower Saint Lawrence, the Gaspé and the North Shore of services that constitute an indispensable part of the economy of these regions.

PORNOGRAPHY

DISTRIBUTION OF PROMOTIONAL MATERIAL BY MAIL

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my constituents in Mississauga North who are increasingly concerned about the widespread and growing distribution of pornographic materials.

The number of complaints to my office concerning pornography has risen dramatically. This is not surprising in view of the fact that recently many of my constituents received in their mail a flashy looking envelope advertising an "exclusive video offer" addressed to "mature viewers only".

It may be unparliamentary to describe further the contents of this exclusive video offer, but you can be assured, Mr.

Speaker, that the private citizens, organizations, and even church groups, who received this so-called mail were deeply disturbed.

Canada Post very recently passed a regulation disallowing the distribution of such material. This is not enough. Our Government must act swiftly to pass legislation to control the spread of degrading, offensive, and harmful pornography.

AGRICULTURE

FUNDING OF COLOURED CATTLE RESEARCH PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is giving some $10 million to Dreamstreet Holsteins to do some phoney research on the colour of dairy cattle. This obviously is a tax scam to rip off the taxpayers of Canada since the research seems to be useless.

Agriculture Canada researchers have denounced the scheme as something from which we should walk away. National Revenue apparently turned the project down several times last year before the Minister approved it in December.

• (1405)

What political pressure was brought to bear to get it approved? Who gets the money? Does it go to rich investors in New York? How does Canadian agriculture benefit from this scheme? Why does the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) support the project when his departmental officials do not? I call upon the Ministers of Agriculture and National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to cancel the project, or come before a parliamentary committee and explain why they are spending millions of dollars of taxpayers' money this way.

RESEARCH

FUNDING OF RESEARCH COUNCILS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming increasingly clear that the Government's claim that it will increase budgets to the three federally funded research councils by $1 billion over the next five years is, in the words of the Dean of Science of the University of Manitoba, Dr. Bigelow, "entirely a sham, created by bogus manipulation of the figures".

First, to reach a target amount to offset annual inflation at 4 per cent per year, the Government would have to commit $654 million by 1990-91. The Government has only committed an unconditional amount of $536 million, or a shortfall of $118 million.

Second, additional funds will have to be provided on a matching basis with private sector donations, a very dubious concept in that private companies are more interested in product applications than in research.

Third, even if maximum private donations are matched by the Government, the amount made available to the three research councils in 1990-91 would be $692 million, which is only 6 per cent higher than the amount required to offset 4 per cent annual inflation.

Mr Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds. The Hon. Member for Athabaska.

ENERGY

REMOVAL OF PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ADVOCATED

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I cannot overemphasize very severe economic downturn in western Canada caused by the falling oil prices. Thousands of jobs are being lost as small, medium, and large producers cut staff and related exploration activity in an attempt to survive. Heavy oil and oil sands development, so vital to our country's security and economic future, is slowly grinding to a halt. The Government still collects a front end production tax. The Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax is a profit tax. The problem is that there is no profit for producers at today's prices.

It is time for the Government to announce the removal of the PGRT once and for all. It is time for the Government to get rid of this discriminatory tax created by the former Government.

Let us send the message to western Canada that the Government still supports the need for a strong energy sector and that the Government still believes energy to be the engine for economic growth. Get rid of the Liberal PGRT.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MILITARY AIR TRANSPORT—SENATE COMMITTEE FINDINGS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the recently published report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence and Military Air Transport concludes as follows:

> Air Transport Group and Ten Tactical Air Group provide our country with excellent service, but they are over-committed, short of aircraft, at minimal or inadequate manning levels, and operate fleets which must be renovated and strengthened over the next 15 years.

The report, Sir, is highly critical of the "fits and starts" which characterized military procurement under the previous Liberal Government. Like the hon. Senators who authored this excellent report, Members of this House also look forward to the early tabling of the promised White Paper on National Defence.

UNEMPLOYMENT

DECREASE IN NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the good news keeps coming in, ever since a Conservative Government was elected in Ottawa. Last Friday, Statistics Canada announced that the unemployment rate in Canada had gone down again. From 11.7 per cent in September 1984, it has now dropped to 9.6 per cent in 1986, the lowest unemployment rate in at least four years. Mr. Speaker, this is the result of sound policies, policies that promote the creation of real jobs throughout this country.

Among our youth, the unemployment rate dropped from 18.4 per cent during the last election to 15.9 per cent in March. This means a drop of more than 79,000 in the number of young people who are unemployed. I may recall that in four years of Liberal Government, 142,000 more young people became unemployed. When the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, 115,000 young people joined the ranks of the unemployed. Unlike our Liberal opponents, we don't waste time making the headlines, but we concentrate on putting Canada back on the road to prosperity.

UNITED STATES NUCLEAR TESTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, scheduling another underground nuclear test is not the way to create an atmosphere conducive to world arms control and mutual balanced force reduction. Canadians are saying that nuclear tests should become a memory of the past—they do not make sense. Therefore, Canadians, by and large, do not support today's test in Nevada because they are very uneasy about nuclear tests in general.

• (1410)

It is worth noting for the record that of the 1,509 nuclear tests held so far, India has held one, China has held 29, the U.K. has held 38, France has held 128, the Soviet Union has held 556, and with today's test the United States has logged 758. What real purpose is served by holding nuclear tests in this day and age?

TERRORISM

INTERNATIONAL ACTION PLAN URGED

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, terrorism is a cancer festering in the body of our global village. Canada is no longer a peaceful nation which was once insulated from this bloodshed. The time has come to face the reality that terrorism is ultimately aimed at destroying the foundation of our civilization. No citizen of the world is immune from this threat.

The time has come for all peace-loving nations to join together in a common front. We need to go beyond the various UN conventions and the Helsinki Accord to establish an international plan of action. Our Government has initiated some much-needed improvements to deal with this threat in Canada. However, more needs to be done. Let Canada become the world leader in developing a sound, co-ordinated plan of action or agreement against terrorism which would be acceptable to any peace-loving nation in the world.

FORESTRY

CALL FOR CREATION OF FULL MINISTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the National Forestry Congress begins in Ottawa tonight to address the serious issues facing Canada's forest industry. The industry is under attack on a number of fronts, including the U.S. forest industry. It is facing serious underfunding problems and, in spite of being Canada's number one export industry, it still does not rate the status of a full federal Ministry.

Surely this is an ideal opportunity for the Government to demonstrate the priority this critical Ministry deserves by declaring in the next two days the creation of a full Ministry of Forestry for Canada. The industry is too important to be regulated to a third-rate status. Mr. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), give the Minister responsible for forests something to do. Give him an opportunity to do a real job.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF SERVICE CLUBS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, all of us owe a debt of gratitude to those who have taught us bits of wisdom and given us excellent advice and insight to understand better the world in which we live and work. We owe, as well, a tremendous debt to our country and our home communities which have given us safe and secure havens to build on our hopes, and to help fulfil our needs and aspirations.

We must, as well, acknowledge those organizations and service clubs which make life better for those around us. They keep reminding us that we owe society service above self-interest, that we have a responsibility to support the causes with which one can identify. They channel people's efforts to meet the needs of society, whether they provide service to the family, funding for education, medical care, social agencies or cultural pursuits. None of us can afford to decline the opportunity for self-involvement in order to make the world a better place in which to live.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF DEFERRED SALARY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the recent federal Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) calls for new rules affecting salary deferment plans. From now on deferred salary will be taxed on an accrual rather than on a cash receipt basis. That effectively abolishes an excellent job- creation arrangement.

For example, teachers in Nova Scotia use the deferred salary leave to make openings available for others in their profession who are desperately seeking a year's work. The plan also helps school boards save money. This is a plan that works. It is essential and beneficial in relation to job retention and job opportunities, to phased-in retirement, and it permits teachers to remain abreast of current developments in the educational field. I call upon the Government to reconsider a job-creation plan far better than any it has imposed since it was elected.

BASEBALL—"NEXT YEAR" IS HERE!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, today that annual madness re-exerts its grip on the Canadian psyche. Strikes, balls, and double plays become the words of common conversation. Stieb, Reardon, Raines and Moseby—these names ring bells and encourage fond thoughts of relaxing summer afternoons at the ball park, stretching into fall pennant drives.

How well I remember sitting behind the dug-out in Montreal's Olympic Stadium as our beloved Expos were eliminated from competition by the nasty Dodgers in 1981; or, last year the ectasy of the American League East win over the Yankees, and the agony of Kansas City's final game victory over the Blue Jays. Oh well, hope springs eternal. This is now the "next year" we predicted would come at the end of last season.

Today we, all 25 million Canadians, take the field, represented by the young men of summer, in our quest for the elusive World Series. I wonder what they will say in New York, Detroit, St. Louis or Los Angeles as the World Series of 1986 alternates between Montreal and Toronto. This is the stuff dreams are made of!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

IMASCO BID TO TAKE OVER GENSTAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. We are faced in this country with a growing phenomenon of a concentration of corporate power. The Minister herself knows the danger of industrial companies taking over financial companies, particularly banks and trust companies. This allows companies in trouble to use depositors' money for their own purposes. In the instance of the Imasco takeover of Genstar, will she use the powers that she gives herself in the Bill she introduced yesterday to block that transfer?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the areas that the Government has been very concerned about, and that is why we discussed it at some length in the Green Paper we produced about a year ago, after years and years of inaction in this area. When I have the facts at my disposal in this case, I will make my decision.

SELF-DEALING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The facts speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker. Self-dealing operations are the major cause of many bank failures in the United States, and the victims of such failures are ordinary citizens, including people who contribute to retirement funds.

Again here is my question: Will the Government honour its promise and make self-dealing operations illegal?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated in our Green Paper, and I have done it in speeches in this House and in speeches elsewhere to the public, that we have a great deal of concern about self-dealing. It is one of the causes for financial institution failure, but it is not the only cause. Naturally we will look at any transfer of ownership that comes to our attention in light of what is in the public interest particularly for the depositors.

COMMITTEE'S UNANIMOUS REPORT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves and we are bringing this particular instance to her attention. She is faced now with the unanimous report of the finance committee of this House which resolved that non-financial institutions should not be allowed to take over financial institutions. There is increasing rumbling in the back-benches of the Government. Will she accept the recommendation of the unanimous report of a committee of this House?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will take into consideration the recommendation of the Committee as I will take into consideration other information, which includes information which is still to come from the company.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Before Imasco's bid to take over Genstar Corporation was made public the Minister told the Financial Post that she has no problem with industrial groups controlling financial institutions. Since the Minister was informed of the takeover bid before it was made public, will she tell the House whether she made that statement knowing that Imasco was bidding to take over Canada's largest trust company?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that article was one of a series that was produced in the latter part of March in which we discussed a broad range of issues, and ownership policy is one of those issues. I cannot honestly tell you if it was before or after.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Exactly when did the Minister say that in her view it was all right for conglomerates to go their merry way, and is that still her position?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I never said that conglomerates could go their merry way. In the Green Paper we have produced some ways of dealing with the situation. The parliamentary committee produced some ways of dealing with this situation. We will consider all of those when we make our decision.

STATEMENT MADE BY SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Last night the Superintendent of Insurance, who is responsible for Canadian trust companies chartered federally, indicated that he could provide no compelling evidence at all to show that Imasco's takeover of Genstar was in the best interests of Canada. My question to the Minister is can she?

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think he said the reverse either, and I have told the House that when I have all of the information available—

Mr. Orlikow: How much more do you need?

Mrs. McDougall: —which is to come from the company, then we will look at all of the issues involved. There are many issues besides ownership at which we intend to look.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BLOCK TAKEOVER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Finance now in its report, as well as in a motion recently passed, stated unanimously that it wanted to recommend that the Minister block the takeover of Imasco. Given that probably every single Member of the House of Commons now supports the blocking of this takeover, would the Minister simply respond to the wishes of every single Hon. Member of the House and agree to block this takeover? Will she state that right now?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will make the decision in the normal course of events when I have all of the facts at my disposal.

PETRO-CANADA

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If the Government is interested in consumers as it claims, why is it allowing Petro-Canada, the people's own oil company, to charge Canadians 7.5 cents a litre more for gasoline than it is charging Americans?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member looked into the situation a little further he would find that Petro-Canada is working at its refinery at Clarkson on contract to a company in the United States which has bought crude oil from Canada and is paying Petro-Canada to refine the oil for it in Oakville. Naturally, that gas is being shipped into the United States.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, this is Canadian oil which is being sold to Americans. Petro-Canada and Imperial Oil have no trouble meeting the American price—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. MacLellan: —but they won't sell it to Canadians at that price.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Why is the Government continually allowing oil companies to pick the pockets of Canadians?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not interfering in the market-place. The cheaper gasoline coming into Canada via independents from the United States is forcing prices to go down in this country. Fair competition like that will continue to keep the prices down and that is what we want for the consumer, fair prices for them here in Canada, low prices, and that is what they are now getting.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

MULTINATIONAL DRUG COMPANIES—PATENT LEGISLATION INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. One Minister has just said that it is the Government's policy not to let conglomerates go their merry way, but the senior spokesperson for international trade in the United States, who reports directly to President Reagan, is reported to have said yesterday that the U.S. Government has become impatient with the Government of Canada for its tardiness in changing our patent laws as they affect drug prices and large conglomerates. Are we now going to have legislation introduced in Canada which will benefit the multinational drug companies, precisely because that is what the United States wants?

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I will give the same answer to that question which was given in the House of Commons yesterday by the Minister responsible, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We will be announcing a policy. We are in consultation. The position will be the same as it has always been. When it is announced, whatever the policy is, it will create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: It will not eliminate generic manufacturing. I am sure that, unlike the former administration which found it impossible to deal with the situation in any form, we will deal with it in order to create economic growth and jobs.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I will say to the Hon. Member who just replied that one thing we know—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order. Question.

Mr. Broadbent: —is that the change will cost Canadians $200 million a year in drug prices.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question to the Minister.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is this. Since the Eastman report has estimated that a change could cost Canadians some $200 million a year, and since senior citizens will be the major group of Canadians affected, will the Minister assure the House that, before legislation is passed, the senior citizens of Canada will have a chance to appear before that committee and have their views heard and listened to by the Government?

• (1425)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, the Hon. Member should realize that Eastman also recommended changes to the present system. That is something which should be taken into consideration.

Second, the Hon. Member asked whether or not senior citizens and other groups would have the right to appear before the committee should the Government come forward with legislation. That is generally the procedure when legislation is before the House. I think it will apply in this case as well.

VIEWS OF PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we will take that as a promise and not as a sacred trust.

Since the Minister is responsible for health services in general—and he should obviously have a concern about this—will he assure the House that the changes contemplated in the years affecting the holding of patents will not be more substantial than those recommended in the Eastman report? Has the Minister consulted with the provinces to find out their views with respect to how they will be affected?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member has more assurance of his own ability and that of members of his Party who sit on the Health Committee, or the appropriate committee to which any legislation might be referred. They can ask for whatever witnesses they want to appear or think should appear.

Regarding any elements of any legislation, the Hon. Member will have to wait until it is produced, if and when it is produced.

ENERGY

FALLING OIL PRICES—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last year the Minister promised to create hundreds of thousands of jobs in the energy industry. Today tens of thousands of jobs are being lost in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and thousands of jobs are at stake in Ontario at places such as Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie. When will the Government act to preserve these jobs which are being lost daily?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. member that at this moment the Minister is meeting with her provincial counterparts in order to discuss the impact of the low world energy prices on our producing provinces. I am sure an announcement will result from that meeting later on today.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that Alberta has acted already with $400 million worth of aid to the petroleum industry. When will the Government come forward with a program to save the jobs in these industries, such as the jobs in Sault Ste. Marie at Algoma Steel?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member this. If the National Energy Program were still in place today those same oil companies would be paying $1 billion more in taxes. The taxes were cut when we redefined the energy policies of the Government. That has helped the energy industry. They would be in deep trouble today—far greater trouble—if the National Energy Program were still in place. I can tell the Hon. Member that 700 small Canadian companies would be paying the PGRT today if the NEP were in place. That number is now down to 70 because of the policies of the Government. Help is there for the energy companies and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GENERAL STANDARDS BOARD

QUALITY OF DIESEL FUEL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Farmers, truckers, taxi-drivers, and many others, have been complaining recently about the declining quality of diesel fuel. The fact is that this decline in quality is increasing the wear and tear on the engines of their vehicles. Can the Minister, who is responsible for the Canadian General Standards Board, the board which sets the Cetane levels for diesel fuel, assure the House that there will be no further downgrading of the quality of diesel fuel and that, in fact, there will be an upgrading of the quality of diesel fuel so that when users buy diesel fuel they can be assured it will not hurt their vehicles?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the representation made by the Hon. Member. It is a rather esoteric inquiry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: I will be glad to reply to him in the fullness of time.

MEMBERSHIP OF BOARD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is not esoteric for the farmers of the country. Can the Minister explain to the House why the members of the Middle Distillate Fuel Committee of the Canadian General Standards Board are dominated by members of oil companies when this is the board which sets the very regulations which are supposed to guide them? Why are there not any farmers on this board? Why are there not any members of other diesel fuel users on this board? Why is it dominated by oil companies?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making another representation. I will inquire to see if it has merit.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PATENT LAWS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister for International Trade. Was it accurate when the U.S. trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, said that in fact the Government much earlier had made promises to the U.S. Government to alter the patent laws substantially? What promises were made to the U.S. Government, and why were promises made before the House had a chance to examine the legislation, know what it contains, and know what will be sacrificed by the Canadian consumer?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government has no intention of doing anything that in the long run will be harmful to the Canadian consumer. That is not the way the Government operates, and it will not operate that way in the future.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, how about the short run? Was Mr. Yeutter correct in saying that the Government has already given concessions?

Was that discussed by the Prime Minister at the Washington summit? What kind of concessions were given and what kind of promises were made? Why is the Government doing this before the House has had a chance to examine the legislation?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as we advised earlier, the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be making an announcement on this matter in due course.

HOUSING

EVICTION OF ROOMERS FROM VANCOUVER HOTELS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing. The coroner for the City of Vancouver, to whom I spoke this morning, told me that on April 4 at 9.15 a.m., at the corner of Pender and Carroll Streets in Vancouver, Harold Scarrow, age 61, who was to be evicted from a room for which he was paying $225 a month at the Lotus Hotel, to make way for Expo guests paying $50 per day, threw himself under a dump truck and died. What is the Government of Canada doing to stop this inhumane treatment of poor people who cannot really defend themselves?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that with the changes in the National Housing Program which we are now negotiating, we will meet the needs of those needy Canadians like the one he has described twice as fast as under the old program. I can inform the Hon. Member that last year the expenditures on social housing in the Province of British Columbia—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Went down.

Mr. McKnight: — increased 23 per cent in 1985 over 1984.

Ms. Copps: Because it was the lowest in the country in 1984.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL INTERVENTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Minister heard my question. Given that at the end of February there was another suicide of a man evicted from the Patricia Hotel in order to make way for Expo guests, would the Minister—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There's no Minister of Hotels.

Mr. Waddell: Would the Minister use the good offices of the federal Government, through the Prime Minister, to deal directly with Premier Bennett of British Columbia and make sure that this situation does not continue?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we recognize the concern of the Hon. Member and others in this matter. It does not fall within the jurisdiction of the federal Government. The federal Government is attempting to negotiate a housing agreement across Canada that will change—

Mr. Waddell: How many more suicides are we going to have?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member asks how many more suicides there will be. I deeply regret the loss of life, but the Hon. Member must recognize that we are attempting to change a program, which under the previous administration only targeted one-third of its dollars to those in need, to a program that targets 100 per cent of the federal government expenditures to those Canadians truly in need.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INACCURATE ANSWERS GIVEN BY TAX OFFICIALS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. This is the worst year for accuracy on the part of Revenue Canada. Forty-three per cent of the questions addressed to the Department of National Revenue are wrongly answered. Why did the Minister of National Revenue not train his personnel to answer correctly all inquiries of Canadians who need answers to file their income tax returns?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the House and my colleague opposite that the Department and I are deeply disappointed and puzzled by this rather poor performance by our people. We are looking at remedial action. Some of the outstanding recommendations of the Woods-Gordon report and other options are being studied at the present time. We could think of instituting a two-tier system. As the Hon. Member knows, we used to be involved in silent monitoring, which is no longer acceptable. I can assure the Hon. Member that our officials are studying the matter and we hope to improve the situation in the near future.

OFFICIALS' KNOWLEDGE OF THE LAW

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have 22 days left to file their tax returns. On whom can those Canadians rely to prepare their tax returns if Revenue Canada officials do not even know their own legislation?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have already told my colleague opposite that we recognize the seriousness of the situation. We regret that the situation cannot be reported in a more favourable light. On the other hand, personnel are doing the best they can and it may be that, upon analysis, the results will not be as disappointing as they may first appear.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF GM PLANT IN QUEBEC—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET COMPANY MANAGEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Does the Minister know that GM might close its Boisbriand plant as early as in 1987, and will he promise the House to meet with GM management to discuss the future of this plant which provides work for 4,000 men and women and tens of thousands of indirect jobs?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to take the Hon. Member's question as a representation. If it would be helpful to meet with the parties he has indicated, certainly I would be more than willing to do so.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PERSUADE GM TO MODERNIZE PLANT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since it is a fact that this plant's production costs are the lowest in North America, can the Minister ask GM to use the plant's profits to upgrade its facilities?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure most Members of the House are aware, and as the Hon. Member is certainly aware, GM has either spent or committed to spend $6.4 billion between 1980 and 1990. I think that is a very credible commitment to Canada and I would certainly suggest that the Hon. Member put his question in that context. GM has been a good corporate citizen in Canada.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS TO BAGGAGE INSPECTORS AT MONTREAL AIRPORTS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Because of a technicality in the Canada Labour Code, the Burns Agency, which has a contract with Air Canada at the airports at Montreal and Quebec City, pays its baggage inspectors $2.20 per hour less than their colleagues at other Canadian airports.

Could the Minister inform the House what he intends to do to force the Burns Security Agency and Air Canada to correct this unfair situation which, I may add, affects many of my constituents who are paid less for duties that involve greater responsibilities?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that the issue in the industrial dispute of which she is speaking is one that will be settled by bargaining between the union that represents the employees and Burns Security Services. I have put forward a mediator, Mr. Doucet, at the request of the company and the union, to assist them in their negotiations. The areas of work in question are not those areas covered by a provincial decree. Provincial decrees are within provincial jurisdiction. Industrial relations are within the federal jurisdiction.

AIRPORTS

AIR CANADA—TRANSFER OF INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS FROM GANDER TO ST. JOHN'S NFLD.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who, in a sneaky fashion after the House closed for the Easter recess, approved an application by Air Canada to move its flights from Gander to St. John's, Newfoundland, despite the objections of tens of thousands of Newfoundlanders in all federal ridings. Was the Minister aware that Air Canada said the following a year ago:

> We cannot move to St. John's. Proper facilities do not exist at that airport for international flights.

Could the Minister explain what or who changed Air Canada's mind since the facilities have not changed?

Mr. Rodriguez: John Crosbie.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what kind of correspondence the Hon. Member has in his hands but I have in my possession a letter from the President and Chief Executive Officer of Air Canada requesting that international flights to the U.K be transferred from Gander to St. John's. In my letter of—

Mr. Foster: The devil and Crosbie made you do it.

Mr. Mazankowski: In my letter to the President and Chief Executive Officer, I indicated that we would be able to accommodate Air Canada in that regard after consultation with my cabinet colleagues; namely, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

• (1440)

REASON FOR CHANGE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Minister what I have in my hand. Will the Minister not admit that the real reason they changed their minds and the Minister approved the application was a threat by the Minister of Justice that "Air Canada had better conduct transatlantic flights from St. John's or there's going to be trouble for someone"? Was that not the real reason for the change of mind by Air Canada? The Minister knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member will not like this answer, but the real reason is that Air Canada requested the move, and we responded in a positive fashion.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on, Maz.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SIGNING OF PETITIONS BY SPOUSES OF SERVING PERSONNEL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Could he tell the House why the spouses of present Armed Forces personnel are being bullied by the Defence Department not to sign petitions which protest recent UI changes?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, in keeping with the long-standing and well-founded tradition of not involving the military in political activities, base commanders have quite properly interpreted Queen's Regulations and Rules to mean that political activity of this sort is not proper on military bases.

Mr. Broadbent: For their spouses!

RIGHTS OF SPOUSES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is it the Government's position that the spouses of Armed Forces personnel are restricted in the exercise of their rights by virtue of marriage? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh?

Mr. Andre: Absolutely not. The question is on military bases and political activity on military bases.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where else should their spouses live?

Mr. Andre: Perhaps the Hon. Member feels that it is appropriate to have the military involved in political activity. We do not, in keeping with long-standing tradition, and base commanders are simply enforcing the rules.

ROAD SAFETY

SCHOOL BUS EQUIPMENT AND STANDARDS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the best Minister of Transport Canada has ever had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Next, next!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question, please.

Mr. Taylor: What part does the federal Government play with regard to the safety of equipment on school buses which carry Canada's greatest treasure, namely, our girls and boys? Is any co-ordination being carried out leading to uniformity in equipment and operations in the provinces?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. I like those kinds of questions, especially the preamble. Perhaps George may not agree.

Mr. Hees: You can't win them all.

Mr. Mazankowski: To answer the question, yes, Transport Canada provides the design, manufacturing and functioning standards for school buses in Canada. There are some 35 standards. They are monitored and inspected on a regular basis by the Transport Canada Road Safety Directorate. As far as provincial safety equipment is concerned, that is co-ordinated under the CCMTA, an organization of which I am sure the Hon. Member is aware.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED INVESTIGATION OF CONTRACTING PRACTICES IN CONSTRUCTION OF MUSEUM OF MAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Public Works. Could the Minister confirm that a criminal investigation has been undertaken by the RCMP concerning the contracting practices of his Department in the construction of the Museum of Man in Hull, and will he indicate to the House the nature of the investigation?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, probably that question could be properly addressed to the Solicitor General. The Hon. Member will know that there have been press reports indicating that a police investigation is under way and, as a consequence, it would not be appropriate to comment further.

Mr. Speaker: I will listen to the supplementary question, but I remind the Member of our rules with regard to sub judice convention.

Mr. Boudria: Of course the Minister will know that as yet no charges have been laid as far as we know.

INQUIRY WHETHER CHARGES HAVE BEEN LAID

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my supplementary should be directed to the Minister, since he seems to have other information. Were any charges laid? And if so, was a Member or were several Members of this House named in these charges?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, in cases where there are police investigations it is not appropriate to raise the matter on the floor of the House of Commons so as not to prejudice the results of a police investigation or the ability of an individual to get a fair trial. I think the Hon. Member will respect that.

IMASCO BID TO TAKE OVER GENSTAR

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Does she see the decision last night by the finance committee as the first fruits of parliamentary reform in the new independence of committees and, if so, why will she not respect that spirit of parliamentary reform and heed the unanimous recommendation of that committee now?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this question was more or less asked before. I have said, first of all, that I respect very much the parliamentary reform process. I also respect very much the opinions of the people on that committee. I do not yet have all the information. At the risk of repeating myself as well, when I have that information I will make the decision in the best interests of depositors and the financial system of Canada, as I have always done before in matters of this nature.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S UNANIMOUS RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister place the unanimous recommendation of a committee of the House as a fact along with any other fact? As far as the House and Members of Parliament are concerned, that should be a paramount fact in the mind of the Minister—a unanimous recommendation of a committee of the House.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I could say it more clearly than I have. I respect the process, I respect the Members, and I will take their views well under advisement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Thank you very much, Barbara.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BENEFITS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the jolly Minister of Veterans Affairs. Many veterans in my riding have expressed concerns—

Mr. Speaker: Could we please stop these comments now? A question, please.

Mr. Andre: How come insults are okay and not compliments?

Mr. Lesick: Many veterans in my riding have expressed concerns regarding the harmonization of the war veterans allowance assessment requirements and those used by the Department of National Health and Welfare for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Could the Minister assure my constituents that the War Veterans Allowance Benefits will not be adversely affected?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to assure the Hon. Member for Edmonton East, who always takes a very keen and useful interest in his veterans and their welfare, that no recipient of the War Veterans Allowance will see his or her benefits reduced in any way due to harmonization. In fact, on the contrary, veterans will benefit from this move by seeing paperwork reduced and simplified, and the resultant administrative savings will be applied to the Veterans' Independence Program, a truly great and imaginative program.

FINANCING OF PAPER MILL AT MATANE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and it concerns the Matane paper mill. The answer given by the Minister yesterday in the House has created uncertainty in Matane with respect to the future of the paper mill project.

Therefore I want to ask the Minister, in order to reassure the people of Matane, whether he is still prepared to meet the commitment he made to the Government of Quebec, namely, to enter into a joint financing agreement for the paper mill project in Matane.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when a similar question was raised yesterday, I indicated that certainly we are willing to carry on with our negotiations, including those with the Province of Quebec. At the present time the Saugbrugs company in Norway is not in a position even to consider a deal. In fact I spoke with its Chairman, Mr. Per Etholm, yesterday in Norway. He said that nothing could be done on the Canadian side at this point, until their annual meeting was held on April 24, at which time it will be decided who in fact is in control of the company.

COMMITMENT TO QUEBEC GOVERNMENT RELATING TO INVESTMENT—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Minister has not added anything to what he said yesterday. This is what we want to know: Does the federal Government still have the political will to meet the commitment made to the Government of Quebec, whether the investor is the Norwegian firm or any other serious investor? That is what the people of Matane want to know, and that is what I am asking the Minister.

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if the Hon. Member finds that when you ask repetitive questions you get repetitive answers. The point is, as I indicated yesterday, that we would very much like to see a major project consummated in the Matane area. We are certainly interested in discussing the project with all parties, including the Province of Quebec, and that interest will continue, hopefully, to a successful conclusion.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It pertains to the 16,000 forest workers in British Columbia who have been laid off. More than 5,500 of them are over the age of 50.

Since the forest industrial relations people and the IWA have been trying to have a meeting with the Minister, would the Minister be prepared, while the group is in Ottawa for the forest conference this week, to undertake to have a meeting with them to discuss the plight of those workers and possibly set in place a labour adjustment operation, similar to the ones in Ontario?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that last spring I met with both the IWA and the industry. We discussed the concern on behalf of the industry and the union about the inability to have early retirement worked in to the pension plan which those members had.

Mr. Benjamin: A year ago?

Mr. McKnight: At that time I asked the executive of the IWA to provide me with all the information they could. Unfortunately, they were busy assisting in protecting the exports of lumber to the United States at that time and were not able to get back to me with information.

I have met with them before, I am willing to meet them again. I do not know what my schedule is now, but if there is a request, I will meet them. As the international vice-president of the IWA knows, my door is always open.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, they would appreciate that, and since they are in the lobby today, they will be bringing forward their request.

Some 5,500 of those workers are on pension. They have been laid off for more than two years, and a break in their pension will certainly be of harm to them. Would the Minister be prepared to discuss with these workers ways in which the Government of Canada can assist those who have been laid off and whose pensions are being destroyed now because of the break in the time they have worked?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance contained a Program for Older Worker Adjustment. Some $125 million was identified for it.

We are going forward with discussions with industry, the provinces, and with the unions to make that program work across Canada. I will see if it fits into the criteria that are explained to them.

REDUCTION IN TRADES TRAINING IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Fifty-seven persons employed in trades training in Nova Scotia have received termination notices which read, in part:

A substantial reduction in federal funding is unfortunately resulting in a reduction in training programs.

I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister on behalf of the Government to explain why Nova Scotians have to accept a 38 per cent reduction in trades training, thereby depriving Canadians in that region of training which would enable them to obtain meaningful jobs?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the specific question, I will take notice of it for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I would point out to the Hon. Member the positive side of the employment picture is that the unemployment rate has fallen from 11.7 per cent in September, 1984, to 9.6 per cent in March, 1986, the lowest rate in four years.

Mr. Benjamin: That was not the question.

Mr. Nielsen: Jobs are being created faster in Canada than in any other OECD nation. I could give the hon. gentleman further statistics, but I think I might bore his bias.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Deputy Prime Minister that at one institution in Nova Scotia there are approximately 2,500 people on a waiting list for the basic training skills development program. With these cutbacks, only 60 people will be available for that particular program.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister reconsider providing additional moneys in Nova Scotia for trades training for those people who are desperately seeking some form of job training for jobs in the future?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should know that, compared with the administration that he supported when he was on this side of the House, jobs are being created almost 4.5 times the rate at which they were being created when his administration was in office. Total unemployment has fallen by 227,000.

The programs that have been put in place, far-reaching, imaginative programs, by this Government under the guidance of the Minister of Employment and Immigration have had that very positive result. Instead of complaining, the Hon. Member should be applauding.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA TELEPHONE BILLS—REFUSAL OF CASH PAYMENT

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications and Culture. It has come to my attention that certain Bell Canada offices, both in my riding and in other parts of the country, are no longer accepting cash for payment of telephone bills. In view of the inconvenience this causes many Canadians, and in view of the fact that cash is still legal tender, would the Minister take whatever action is necessary to correct this situation?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in recent months Bell Canada has changed its policy regarding cash payments at some of its offices. I understand that Bell has taken this action in the interest of efficiency since, as in the case of most utility companies, the majority of Bell subscribers pay their bills by mail or at banks.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Did you write the question too?

Mr. Masse: The CRTC is aware of this issue and has asked Bell for more information. I believe the CRTC is in the best position to determine how the public interest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

NON APPLICATION OF OWNERSHIP RULE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Why is the 10 per cent ownership rule, which applies to chartered banks in Canada, not appropriate for trust companies?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, ownership is only one of the factors that has an impact on solvency and capital in the interests of depositors. There are many other factors as well; the financial resources of the company involved, the quality of the management; all those things. My concern is for the depositors, the solvency of the institutions and the competitive nature of Canadian business.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that that particular ownership rule was put in place to protect the depositors she now claims she is concerned about?

Why are the bank depositors protected in that way and trust company depositors left to their own devices?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): I would like, with respect, Mr. Speaker, to correct one piece of information. The 10 per cent rule, as I recall, was put in to prevent foreign ownership of the Canadian banking system.

Mr. Deans: And to protect depositors.

Mrs. McDougall: As we have seen, not only in Canada but in other countries, ownership ordinarily held is only one of the factors that has an impact on how financial institutions behave and on their solvency requirements.

HEALTH

MERCURY LEVELS AMONG JAMES BAY CREE POPULATION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is he prepared to use the power given to him under the Environmental Contaminants Act and request an inquiry into the pollution levels of mercury in the James Bay reservoir, levels that are so high that they are described by Allen Peen, Director of Lands and Environment Development for the Cree Regional Authority, as more extensive and widespread than anywhere else in the world?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about the issue which the Hon. Member has raised. We are co-operating in whatever way we can, both within the jurisdiction of the federal Government as well as with the provincial Government. This matter is being monitored very closely by us. We have not yet come to conclusions on what kind of remedies, if any, should be found or can be made.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF DEPARTMENTAL DATA

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister at least release Health and Welfare's National Surveillance Program tracking data from the 1970s requested by the Cree Regional Authority from the Minister's Department a year ago, a request which has still not been acted upon? They would very much like to have ongoing tracking data.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will look at that request, and if it is possible, if there are no impediments, I will be glad to see whether we can meet that request.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Langelier) that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in resuming the debate on Bill C-91. I would like to preface my remarks by indicating to you, as have other members of my Party, that we intend to support Bill C-91 in principle at second reading. We do so despite some misgivings about areas where we feel the Bill could be improved. We do so as well because we happen to believe, contrary to the belief of my colleagues to my left in the New Democratic Party, given the historical development and the difficulty we have had in getting any kind of competition Bill through the House of Commons, that this Bill is better legislation than that which exists today to protect the consumers in the country.

Given that caveat, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to support the Bill in principle. I do, however, wish to speak on certain parts to which the Liberal Party believes it can move amendments in committee, to improve the legislation. We hope we will be listened to by the Government.

I believe that since the Hon. Judy Erola, previously the Member of Parliament for Nickel Belt, introduced the last competitions Bill, the current Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has done a reasonable job of consultation and has put forward amendments which I believe will improve the legislation. With regard to those improvements, Mr. Speaker, the Bill differs from the previous Bill in that problems with corporate takeovers will be referred to a tribunal rather than the court system. I believe that is a significant improvement. I understand it was the Consumer's Association of Canada which recommended to the Government that the tribunal system replace the court system for appeals. I believe that that in itself is an improvement to the legislation.

I also believe very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that appointing lay members to the tribunal will be a step forward.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask Members to hold their meetings somewhere else, out of respect for the Hon. Member who has the floor?

Mr. Frith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak about the improvements to the Bill because I think they are fundamental to the reason the Liberal Party will support the Bill in principle at second reading. I firmly believe that the tribunal system is an improvement over the previous legislation. The tribunal system will allow, for the first time, lay members to be appointed to ensure that consumer voices are heard when these matters are discussed.

Another improvement in the legislation is that Part VII matters have been removed from criminal jurisdiction and are now a matter of civil liability. That in itself is an improvement because restrictive trade practices and anti-competitive behaviour would then only require proof "on the balance of probabilities" as opposed to the criminal burden of "beyond a reasonable doubt". I believe that having it under criminal jurisdiction in previous legislation was a detriment to the ability of the inspectors within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to successfully charge corporations with violations, or restrictive trade practices.

Before I continue in a general way to outline some of our other concerns, it is important to note that Bill C-91 is before us to ensure, first and foremost, that free competition exists in the country. That is a very important principle. Second, the interest of consumers would be protected by this legislation. A third major and probably very controversial point, Mr. Speaker, is the achievement of economic efficiency. A number of speakers have already taken part in this debate. They have spoken about the need for maintaining free competition, the need to prevent abuses of economic power—in other words to protect the consumer—and the paramount need, in terms of our legislative program, to achieve economic efficiency in the economy.

I know that some Members have indicated previously that they find it odd that the five big lobby groups in the country have had a significant impact on previous legislation. Speaker after speaker has indicated that previous Governments have had difficulty passing any legislation with respect to competition because the lobby groups have been very successful in putting forth their viewpoints. Consumers have been very difficult to motivate in terms of lobby groups and, as a result, the weighting has been more on the side of big business than on that of the consumer. That fact is pointed to as one of the major reasons that previous Governments have failed to pass a competition Bill with objectives similar to those outlined in Bill C-91.

I do not find that surprising, Mr. Speaker. We in this House are not political virgins. We recognize that lobby groups are involved in every piece of legislation that comes before Parliament. I have no dispute with the big five, which includes the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Business Council on National Issues, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. They have done the job which lobbyists are expected to do. It is our job, as Parliamentarians, to take into consideration the testimony given to the committee. We must also listen to the viewpoints expressed by other interest groups in the country. That is part and parcel of the political process in the country.

My colleagues to the left in the New Democratic Party have chastised some members of my Party on some of their interventions. They have asked why the Liberal Government was unable to get certain pieces of legislation through the House of Commons. It sounds to me like they are political virgins, that they are surprised that lobby groups have that degree of power.

When the Liberal Government brought in its Budget in November of 1981, through which we were attempting to make the tax system more equitable, the then Minister of Finance told our caucus to expect a great deal of pressure from lobby groups. He indicated that as a result of that Budget of 1981 one million more Canadians would have more disposable income in their hands. In other words, the Budget of 1981 was going to beneficially affect one million Canadians, and only approximately 225,000 Canadians would be adversely affected by that Budget.

Being a neophyte in the political arena, it came as a bit of a surprise to me that not one of the one million Canadians who would benefit from the legislation bothered to phone me as a Member of Parliament. However, I can assure you that all of the 225,000 Canadians being adversely affected by the legislation made sure that their views were made known to the Liberal caucus.

I recall very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that when it came time to vote on that Budget, through which we were attempting to rectify inequities in the tax system, my colleagues in the New Democratic Party consistently voted with the 225,000 Canadians who lobbied hard to reverse a number of major measures in that Budget. It therefore comes as a surprise to me today that the New Democratic Party is now pointing to the Liberal Party and chatising it for its inability to progress with competition policy.

I want to speak for a few moments on the principle of economic efficiency. That in itself is a laudable goal of any competition policy. Perhaps it is at the heart of the debate which will take place here regarding the Imasco takeover of Genstar. But more importantly, it allows us to raise the issue of other takeovers which have created a great deal of concentration of ownership of questionable value to the public interest. That is at the heart of the issue of achieving economic efficiency.

There are many in this country opposed to the Government intervening in corporate takeovers. The basis for their objection is that if Canadian conglomerates are going to compete in an international economy, they will have to do so with the same financial clout as the other players. In other words, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) pointed out this morning, it hinges upon the degree of integration that our economic system has with its American counterpart. It also raises the question of the extent to which we can use Government intervention to prevent corporate concentration from the standpoint of taxation.

As you know, the integration between the Canadian and American tax systems plays an integral part in corporate decision-making in North America. The Canadian tax system cannot be completely out of whack with the American system when it comes to allowing conglomerates on either side of the border taking over other conglomerates. We will have to distinguish between the non-financial corporate takeover of a financial institution from other takeovers in which financial institutions are not involved.

For example, let us go back to the takeover of Northern Telecom by Bell Telephone. There were those who argued that the degree of corporate concentration would not be in the public interest. I would argue that to some extent each one of these takeovers has to be judged on its own merit. That is why I am pleased to see that the Government has introduced the principle of a tribunal review. My argument is that that kind of corporate takeover was beneficial to the public interest because it created a company which is recognized world-wide as a leader in its field. As a result of that merger, Canadians have achieved some supremacy in the field of communications, which supremacy would not have been achieved had that takeover been prevented by Government legislation.

On the other hand, I have serious misgivings about some of the other corporate takeovers in this country. I am not now talking about the Genstar and Imasco deal, I am talking about takeovers involving two non-financial institution conglomerates. For example, last summer's takeover of Gulf Canada by Olympia & York. I do not disagree with the accounting principles used by Olympia & York. Frankly, they are doing what every other Canadian company does every day, and it is legal. However, that takeover cost the taxpayers $1 billion in foregone tax revenue, and not one job was created.

That is the kind of takeover this legislation will cover and justifiably so. That kind of takeover should go before the tribunal. It should be ascertained whether or not the public interest is being served. That is where I find fault with this legislation to some extent. In more cases than not there is no specific clause in the legislation which will allow class action suits to take place. There is nothing in the legislation which will allow a determination of whether the public interest is being served.

As another example we have the latest attempt by Olympia & York to purchase Hiram Walker. Whether or not they are successful remains to be seen. Hiram Walker, in an attempt to get around the bid by Olympia & York, is attempting to divest itself of its liquor business. The point I am making is that under this proposed legislation it would not be possible for that deal to be referred to the tribunal to determine whether or not it makes good sense for the workers involved in Windsor. This is the kind of thing that I believe should be added to the Bill.

As I indicated, I hope we can get this legislation through and into committee as quickly as possible. I hope members of the committee will view the representations made by various interested groups and Members of the Opposition to enhance the ability of the tribunal to look at corporate takeovers from the point of view of whether or not they serve the public interest.

I have indicated as well that I have some concern about the degree of corporate concentration of ownership in Canada over the last 15 to 20 years. I must share part of the blame, I suppose, if there is blame to be attached. However, whether it is a Conservative Government or a Liberal Government matters little. The point is that whenever we talk about corporate concentration, the argument is made for the need for integration of the tax system here and in the U.S. That argument was made when we were in power and it is being made now that the Conservatives are in power. It seems to me there is some validity to the argument.

I do not believe we live in a self-contained world. The tax system here has implications for foreign investment and foreign takeovers. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South properly pointed out that prior to 1970, when U.S. companies purchased Canadian entities, the interest on the money they borrowed to do so could be deducted from income from other sources. Yet Canadian corporations were not allowed the same benefit in Canada. As a result, up until 1970 we had ever-increasing foreign ownership of key sectors of our economy. That led to the pressure to change the tax laws to allow Canadian companies the same tax privileges as those in the U.S. We could then have Canadian conglomerates becoming larger and larger. To some extent I think that has been beneficial for the Canadian economy.

However, there has to be a public debate on how we are going to prevent abuse of corporate concentration of power, compatible with a tax system which we all recognize has to be integrated with that of the U.S. I would point out that in Canada at present 100 of the largest corporations control more than 50 per cent of the business assets. In the U.S. it is only roughly 30 per cent. So the concentration of power issue in Canada is of paramount importance, and we still do not address it in this legislation. Yet it will become of increasing importance, particularly when we have six or seven families in Canada who control the majority of the assets of the corporations listed on Canadian stock exchanges. That I hope can be addressed in committee, and with that I will entertain questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of interest that I rise today to speak to Bill C-91. We welcome this Bill. Its main quality is that it is better than the present almost non-existent legislation dealing with competition. As my hon. colleague just said, the incredible concentration of power now in the hands of six or seven families is of serious and ongoing concern. It is rhetorical to ask wehther do we need this piece of legislation. It is timely because of the number of mergers taking place across this country in the past year or so. Such a concentration of power in the hands of too few is counterproductive for most Canadians.

Competition is a vital key to the private sector and the private enterprise system. Some economists tell us that the more competition in the market-place the better it is for everyone because prices are lower due to the wide variety of choice of firms producing the same or similar types of products. This makes for better competition. Small business, provided it can face the competition, as it must, can assume its special position in the market. The challenge, with the innovation it brings, can lead to improved products and services, as well as keep the competition on its toes. This will in the long run benefit all of us—the consumer—that is you and me. In other words, the consumer benefits from lower prices and the wide range and variety of products available. On the other hand, when there is little competition product choice is restricted and prices are generally high.

I remember the sugar fiasco we all lived through. We went into the store and took a bag of sugar off the shelf. By the time we looked at the price and got to the checkout counter the price had gone up and we had to pay more.

Consumers and small businesses suffer the most from restricted trade and restricted competition. In a few moments I will give some examples of how the concentration of ownership has caused problems for a sector of the cultural industry, leading inevitably to a lack of ability to compete. This is not an esoteric subject, this is quotidian for monsieur et madame; it is tout-le-monde. What we are discussing here is a restraint through competition which leads to a restraint of self-expression on the part of hundreds and hundreds, perhaps thousands of talented and creative Canadians in a wide variety of fields.

Essentially what we do is take the food out of their mouths. Most certainly we shrink their take-home pay when we have a high concentration and lack of competition in the field of cultural enterprises—artists, musicians, singers, sound and light technicians, film and script writers, stage and screen actors, producers, people iwth diversified jobs. That is what we are talking about and that is what competition in the cultural industrial field is all about.

Small entrepreneurs create the bulk of jobs that exist in Canada. We have an obligation to encourage and protect competition and fair trade practices to ensure the best conditions for an active, healthy market-place. The Liberal Party will be looking for indications that small business is protected from unfair competition by Bill C-91.

Let us look at competition in the film industry. The vertical integration of distribution and ownership concentration in the Canadian film industry has a severe negative impact on competition in this country, because it restricts trade andprevents entry into the Canadian market. The showcasing through our theatre screens is thereby limited, because "Distribution determines who can see what, when and how", to quote a report from the film industry task force.

As a result a special relationship between distributors and exhibitors in the 1920s large American studios were able to take control of the Canadian market, and things have not changed very much since then. An inquiry into these exclusive relationships in the film industry reached the following conclusions: That a combine exists in the motion picture industry in Canada within the meaning of the Combines Investigation Act; and that a combine exists and has existed at least since the year 1926. It is also felt that the combine has operated and is likely to operate to the detriment of the interests of the public.

The commissioner identified the members of the combine as Famous Players and the distributors, Paramount, Universal, Fox, Columbia, RKO, Warner, First National and a few others. He concluded that by reason of agreements, arrangements and other activities of the above mentioned, Famous Players in this instance has been able to acquire, particularly in the large cities and towns in Canada where the most profitable business is, such substantial control as to reduce competition to a minimum, making it extremely difficult for the independent theatres to survive. Booking arrangements have been restricted by the pooling and operating agreements and acquisitions I have just mentioned.

Canadian law at the time provided no remedy. Not much has changed since then, regretfully. Canadian law as early as 1930 demonstrated no apparent concern about the lack of open competition in Canada's film industry. We addressed this issue again in 1982, and I will have more to say about that in a moment.

Our neighbour to the south had the same situation with concentration of distribution. The United States Supreme Court decided in 1948, under the Sherman Act, that it was contrary to the public interest to have direct or indirect control over American theatre networks by these companies. The Supreme Court subsequently forced the five vertically integrated distribution companies—Paramount, Twentieth Century Fox, Loew's, which is now MGM, RKO and Warner Brothers—to divest themselves of all interest in film exhibition. In order to reduce ownership concentration in exhibition, the five had to give up about 1,200 of the 1,300 theatres they directly or indirectly controlled. As a result of that judgment, competition intensified at all levels, and the creativity and performance of the American film industry improved substantially. I think we could look forward to the same thing here. It is an unfortunate fact that the American action has not had any influence in Canada. This is just an overview or simplification of the major areas of concern for our cultural industries.

In 1982 the Cineplex Corporation, a Canadian theatrical chain, lodged a complaint with the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. Cineplex alleged that seven of the large distributors operating in Canada had concluded long-term contracts under which they were committed to furnishing films to the two largest theatre chains, that is Odeon and Famous Players, excluding Cineplex and other companies. In other words the showcase was cut off and we had a restrictive trade practice, a cutting back of competition.

As a result of the allegation, negotiations took place. An agreement was reached with the distributors to modify their distribution practices to "allow exhibitors to compete for each film". Following a decision of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission under Section 31.2 of the Combines Investigation Act we got the commitment to modify the distribution practices and allow for the present "open bidding" system. In fact the report of the film industry task force, which reported to our Minister of Communications(Mr. Masse) in December, did not find that "open bidding" had really begun or was really truly working.

Let us consider Cineplex, as an example. In January of this year France Film lodged a complaint to the director of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission stating that open bidding has not been the practice and that the 1982 agreement has been broken.

—Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to this article published in La Presse of Thursday, January 16, 1986 under the heading: "France Film attack against Odeon and United Cinemas":

Yesterday the France Film cinema chain filed a request with the Canadian Restrictive Trade Practices Commission in an attempt to put a stop to unfair competition from Cineplex-Odeon and United Cinemas. France Film President Pierre René stated that "we were often among the highest bidders last fall, yet we failed to get any of the films we wanted to have".

"We are convinced that Cineplex and Famous Players, a Gulf and Western subsidiary——and we in the House know all about Gulf and Western——and parent company of United Cinemas, did obtain copies of the films they wanted without even bidding, or by submitting lower bids than we did—

France Film, which supplies the Saint-Denis and Desjardins Complex cinemas as well as the Cinéma de Paris in Quebec City and Sherbrooke among others—all told 30-odd cinemas in Quebec—was unable to obtain any of these American films—

At issue here was a matter of money, a loss of income at the most crucial time of the year, the winter holiday season—

• (1530)

We are still awaiting an answer from the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission on the complaint lodged by France Film. Hon. Members in this House probably do not realize the intensity and seriousness of the problem of concentration in the Canadian film industry. I can say the same for many of the sectors of the cultural industries which are big business. In 1985 in Canada there are still only two major theatre chains, Odeon-Cineplex with 472 screens and Famous Players with 471 screens. Together, they take in over 60 per cent of box office receipts. Each theatre chain is vertically integrated with a distributor. Famous Players and Paramount are both owned by the same conglomerate, Gulf and Western. Cineplex-Odeon is associated with Pan-Canadian and Universal through its MCA interests.

Any distributor vertically integrated with either of the major theatre chains can use this access to the main points of sale to acquire all commercially valuable foreign or domestic movies. As a result, other Canadian distributors' access to the major theatre chains is decidedly limited. By controlling distribution of the most lucrative productions, the company consolidates its position as an exhibitor, it is in a position to limit competition in exhibition and cause difficulties for other chains' mini-circuits and independent theatre owners. The last two are then vulunerable to buy-outs and takeovers. The resulting impact is that a few companies are allowed to get bigger and bigger by swallowing up smaller, innovative enterprises.

By the way, this also hits our consumers who are captive to the promotion which can be put on these larger chains and which are often not equally accessible across our lands. I think it is wonderful that Golden Agers can, I believe, either Tuesday night or Wednesday night, go to all the films and cinema they wish for $2.50, if they live in the major centres. But what about those who live in the hinterland where there are no such theatres? The film industry identified the problem with concentration in the film industry. It felt that this was a problem because significant competition is essential to a healthy and orderly market-place and therefore recommended that the Government take the necessary steps to prevent and eliminate any vertical integration of distribution and exhibition which would limit competition and restrain trade in the Canadian film industry.

Not only in the film industry do we find examples of concentration of ownership and power. The Canadian broadcasting industry is currently seeing firsthand the old bugaboo of corporation ownwership in broadcasting and cross-ownership in broadcasting, newspapers and electronic media. In a current case before the Canadian CRTC, arguments are being presented over whether the Power Corporation of Canada, a large and diversified holding company, will be granted permission to buy Tele-Metropole Incorporated. If that deal is approved, we will see Montreal's largest French language newspaper, La Presse, which owns as well three other daily newspapers in the province, eight weekly publications and a radio station, now take over a major television network. I would suggest that this is of serious concern. This application would have been virtually unthinkable in the days of the Kent Commission in the early 1980s. I believe that is the most striking example of a new era of deal making in the communications industry. We are as well witnessing other media magnates such as the Bassett and Eaton families of Baton Broadcasting and Allan Waters of Chum Ltd. who are getting into the act and expanding their operations through acquisition. This is totally unacceptable and leads me to believe that power tends to connect and absolute power connects absolutely.

The Conservative Government signalled support for such concentration and cross-media ownership last May by cancelling, without so much as a whisper, a former 1982 cabinet directive that the CRTC prevent cross-ownership. The directive, I believe, was applied only once in its short life in a 1983 case involving the broadcasting licence of New Brunswick's Irving family. Its request for cross-media ownership was turned down, in essence, because it would have allowed too high a concentration of power in the communications field. The question was, basically, how much one owns of what is available. In this instance, there was very high concentration of ownership in a small area.

Last September the Conservatives dropped the Liberal directive and the CTRC now has the authority to allow K. C. Irving and his sons to control newspapers, television and radio stations in New Brunswick. I was tempted to show you a list of their holdings, Mr. Speaker, but I decided that it was not such a good idea. It is just that it does create a certain series of problems when one looks at competition and control.

David McKendry, a regulatory industries analyst with the Consumers' Association of Canada, said that the Irving decision, "was as good as telling the industry that cross-media ownership is fine and this Government is not concerned about it". But we have to be concerned about every-day Canadians and their right to unbiased information with such a concentration as that of the Irving family and, potentially, the Power Corporation, which has significant and diverse holdings not only in the media industry but also in other fields which require the free investigative powers of journalists and the electronic media to ensure coverage of vital issues with a relevantly unjaundiced eye. The Power Corporation and the Irving family can assure and reassure us over and over again that they do not interfere in the editorial policy. Perhaps they do not and perhaps they have no intention of doing so. But they may not always be the owners of these mechanisms of communication and who knows what the other corporate takeover entity might do and what the impact would be on journalistic independence. When it comes to the power of the pocketbook, there is every possibility that the media would remain silent and compromise journalistic freedom for the sake of their pay cheques from those it is protecting.

In summation, access by the Canadian public to the media and to the theatre is an important element of social and cultural enrichment. By ensuring free competition, we are allowing small enterprises to flourish and at present, with such a large emphasis on employment, I would think that the Government would understand it is in small business that employment is created and thus strengthen this Bill even further to disallow such concentrations of ownership.

In relation to cultural industries, we are very concerned with two areas which are of importance with respect to Bill C-91, that is the abuse of the dominant position and mergers. The Liberal Party is concerned about the abuse of dominant position provisions because Bill C-91 has added a new requirement concerning the object of the practice. This in effect becomes an additional test and renders proof more difficult. How will we be able to prevent film, cable and book distribution from abusing the dominant position?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all this may seem very technical, and that is why I am now going to talk about the provisions regarding mergers involving cultural industries. In fact, this is the Achilles heel of the present legislation, and it is quite easy to prove. Since 1910, there has been only one conviction under this section of the Act.

[English]

I think we have taken the right approach by transferring this matter from criminal to civil law. This Bill has been weakened considerably, if we consider that in Bill C-29 we took into account 12 factors in determining if the law had been breached. In Bill C-91 the following important factors have been left out: the size differential between the relevant business and its competitors; any history of anti-competitive behaviour; any likelihood that the merger will result in the removal of a vigorous and effective competitor; any evidence of intent to prevent or lessen competition; and the likelihood that the merger will stimulate competition.

• (1540)

In the field of telecommunications we will have to monitor competition policy carefully as we are faced with much new technology—the implications of satellites, fibre optics and cable. Therefore, I deplore that in Clause 65 of the Bill concerning criteria for evaluation of mergers the nature and extent of change and innovations in a relevant market will no longer be applicable. Consequently, in view of all this, Bill C-91 will not be as effective for cultural industries because it does not address mergers on as wide a criteria base as is needed for these industries. They have either been diluted or removed.

[Translation]

I have to challenge the priorities of the Bill's objectives. In fact, I think it is clear that this Government is too concerned about economic efficiency at the national and international levels, so much so that it seems to have lost its perspective and completely forgotten the consumer. A striking example is the difficulty third parties will have in gaining access to the Competition Tribunal, which also goes to show how little consideration the consumer is given in this legislation.

[English]

I would like to finish by asking the same question as was asked by Adam Smith. "Is . . . improvement in the circumstances of the lower ranks of the people to be regarded as an advantage or as an inconvenience to the society?"

Perhaps we might all feel that this Bill will improve upon the existing legislation—it will. However, it might not be what we want. We should seek to improve the circumstances of the greater number of Canadians who are at a disadvantage when there is little competition in the market-place. In this case I stress the importance of the circumstances of the greater number of Canadian consumers of cultural goods.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). Given the fact that there is a provision in Bill C-91 which provides the Government with a mechanism to deal with the problems in the film industry when competition is unduly lessened, why will the Hon. Member not support the Bill?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if my colleague thinks that I said I would not support the Bill then I regret that. I started my remarks by saying that it is a good Bill but that it needs some improvement. I said that this was the time for change and that the time had come. I said that I welcomed the Bill. What I pointed out was the removal of certain constraints and measures which would be used to evaluate mergers. That was my concern.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, in the Hon. Member's remarks with respect to the film industry, what is it that bothers her with respect to the idea that integration vertically in the film industry would create a lack of competition? How would she stiffen up that provision?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the factors which have been left out. I would be appreciative if members of the committee would reconsider these factors when the Bill is being studied. I suggest members of the committee look at Bill C-29 and compare it to Bill C-91. In so doing, they will see that the factors which are left out are of concern, particularly with respect to all cultural industries where the distribution of films and books, et cetera, are key factors. The size differential between the relevant businesses of the parties to the merger and their competitors is a key issue, particularly here in Canada where our industries are smaller and must face the large American competitors coming into the country.

If the Hon. Member recalls, yesterday I asked where the criteria of Investment Canada begin and end in terms of this Bill. I think there is an overlapping of jurisdictions which needs some clarification, particularly with respect to that factor. Also, any history of anti-competitor behaviour on the part of any party must be considered. I do not want to name names but I can tell Hon. Members that there is a fine history of anti-competitive behaviour in Canada. The report with respect to France Film which is before Hon. Members is good proof of that. The report deals with Cineplex Odeon, Famous Players and France Film. Cineplex Odeon brought the complaint before it was joined by Odeon and the Rank firm. I think it is quite relevant.

Another factor which has been left out of Bill C-91 is with respect to any likelihood that the merger will result in the removal of a vigorous and effective competitor. Then there is the factor dealing with any evidence of intent to prevent or lessen competition. There is also the factor with respect to any likelihood that the merger will result in a substantial foreclosure of sources of products or distributors. I would ask the Hon. Member to take a look at what is happening in the book publishing and distribution industry and what happened to a number of booksellers which we have out in the market-place.

There is another factor with respect to the nature and extent of change and innovation in the relevant market. I would ask the Hon. Member to look at what is happening in the cable and satellite industries and to consider the fact that technology is changing at such a rapid pace. How can we measure if we do not have a measuring stick in place when looking at mergers? It is very important.

Then there is the likelihood that the merger will stimulate competition. This is another factor which I think should be taken into consideration.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out a few things to the Hon. Member. When talking about Bill C-29 we are talking about a Bill which was not enacted. It was a Bill of the former Government. We have been talking about these types of Bills for 16 years now. We have been dealing with competition legislation which has been in place for some 75 years.

Let us consider the five points which the Hon. Member has mentioned. First, this Bill strengthens rather than weakens or lessens control in the following ways. The maximum fine for conspiracy is increased up to $5 million from considerably less than that in the previous Government's Bill. The Hon. Member spoke about lessening competition. The "test in merger" which we are using states "lessen competition substantially". The test that would have been used by the Hon. Member's Party was to "lessen competition significantly". The Hon. Member can play on words all she wants. When we talk about competition and substantial reductions in it there are more teeth contained in the word "significantly" than were contained in Bill C-29. The thresholds for pre-notification have been reduced. In Bill C-29 one had to acquire a company in excess of $70 million. That was the threshold. In Bill C-91 it has only to be in excess of $35 million for investigation, pre-notification and a hearing before the tribunal to take place.

As admitted by the Consumers' Association of Canada in its press releases, the setting up of a competition tribunal is a strengthening of the legislation. It is pleased to see Bill C-91 allowing a tribunal to investigate mergers which might create a lessening of competition. Finally, the investigative powers of the director of investigations and research are made more effective in conformity with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

With these five strengthening provisions that we can use to get at mergers which reduce competition in the market-place, I think that the Hon. Member would be anxious to see not only some ideas of the former Government put in place but some strengthening ideas which have been included in Bill C-91. The sooner we get the matter to committee the sooner we can call all the witnesses the Hon. Member would like to hear from and the sooner we can bring the legislation back for third reading. A great many mergers which have taken place in the last 20 years have taken place because no Government has brought in any legislation with any teeth in it to stop what the Hon. Member wants to have stopped.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, first, I appreciate the Hon. Member bringing these points to my attention. I am delighted that the Government has taken into consideration Bill C-29. It is not interfering by filibustering as Members opposite did when they were in opposition when Bill C-29 was before the House. At that time they rang the bells and made life very difficult for a Party that was in a minority position. We are responding in the way that we must respond. We are pleased that there is now a position of dominance, perhaps, which is covered in the Bill. Therefore, we will not be subject to the harassments and pressures of big business. We will not cave in. Further, we will support the Government's efforts in this regard. I would like to suggest that the Government review some of the defences since fines are not enough. By the time we get around to imposing fines the damage is sometimes irreversible.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to say a few words on the principle behind Bill C-91, the amendment to the Combines Investigation Act. I have been here since 1968 and I can recall many times when attempts were made to bring combines legislation into the House. In fact, if my memory serves me correctly, this is the sixth time legislation has been proposed to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

Way back in 1969, the Economic Council of Canada did a study and recommended that we needed a stronger combines legislation to provoke more genuine competition in the marketplace. As a result of that, a whole string of Bills were introduced starting with Bill C-2 back in 1971 and then moving on to Bill C-256, Bill C-42, Bill C-13, Bill C-29 and now Bill C-91.

I see we have a new Speaker in the House. I would like to commend you on your new position, Mr. Speaker. You look very distinguished sitting in that chair. I am sure that your constituents in The Battlefords—Meadow Lake will be very proud. There is no increase in pay, by the way.

This is the sixth attempt to amend the competition legislation in Canada. I suppose the only positive thing we can say about this Bill is that it will probably pass. It is better than the others and so it will pass. In the past, tremendous business lobbies have persuaded various Ministers of previous Liberal Governments to withdraw legislation, sometimes in a minority Government and sometimes in a majority Government. However, in all cases the business lobby was very powerful and well financed and hired efficient PR people. These lobbyists persuaded parliamentarians to withdraw the legislation.

The legislation we have today is in many ways still very much of a toothless tiger, as our critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), has said. As reported on page 11935 of Hansard, he said:

> If we are going to be fair, we must say that this Bill is better than its predecessor. I say that only because the legislation we have had until now has proven completely useless. Previous Bills have failed to do anything to control mergers or see that we have any real competition.

The Bill that we are dealing with today is in many ways like a toothless old hound dog and one reason for that is that, as I understand it, the advisory committee to the Minister included five very powerful groups that were in the same ball park regarding their interests. Those groups were the Business Council on National Issues, a very powerful lobbying group with a certain point of view; the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, a very large business group with a certain point of view; and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, again a business group representing large manufacturing firms with a certain point of view that is not unlike the point of view of the two previous groups. As well, there was the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada Association, again an organization of business types with a very similar point of view to that of the Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association and the Council on National Issues. These four groups come from the same general sector of Canadian society in terms of outlook, interests and ideology. They were joined by the Canadian Bar Association, not a business organization but a fairly conservative, staid type of organization.

[Translation]

I am sure the Hon. Member from Quebec agrees with me. He is entirely in agreement, because these five organizations are even too conservative for the Conservative Member from Quebec, because he is a red Tory, a Conservative who is more progressive than his Minister.

[English]

What is the definition of a red Tory?

Mr. Bouchard: The meaning of red.

Mr. Nystrom: I am asked about the meaning of a red Tory. I am sorry that you are in the chair, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you could define that better than I. I was here for many years with John Diefenbaker. His riding bordered yours, Mr. Speaker, and was not too far from mine. He was a good example of a red Tory in certain ways, as was Robert Stanfield. There have been a few members of the Conservative Party who at times have been more progressive than Liberals.

Mr. Crosbie: That wouldn't be hard.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) says that that would not be hard. He too is in many ways a red Tory, but of course he was a Liberal for many, many years back in the days of Joey Smallwood.

Mr. Crosbie: I'm a black Tory.

An Hon. Member: Everybody is entitled to one mistake.

Mr. Nystrom: He is entitled to one mistake? I hope he keeps it at one mistake.

Mr. Crosbie: I'm not going over with you guys, I can tell you that.

Mr. Nystrom: Well, John, you are progressing. You moved from the Liberals to the Conservatives. By the time you're 50, you will probably be here.

The reason this Bill is so conservative is that these five groups were on the advisory committee. I am very curious about this fact. I have nothing against the Chamber of Commerce or the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. In fact, there have been New Democratic Party Governments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia that have had advisory committees composed of Chambers of Commerce and manufacturing groups, but while these people were on their advisory groups, there were also representatives of trade unions or farm organizations, consumer groups, academic groups, women's organizations and community groups.

It seems to be fairly strange that we have a relatively new Government and a new Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has spent much time criticizing the old Party of the Minister of Justice, the Liberal Party, for being very centralist and for being controlled by the bureaucracy and a few people within the Prime Minister's Office rather than listening to the people of Canada. The Conservatives said that they would open up the Government. To use the words of a former Prime Minister, Conservatives said that there would be more participatory democracy and openness in this Government. Yet on the drafting of a very important piece of legislation, farmers and fishermen were not represented nor were consumers or ordinary Canadians.

I am sure that if you were not in that chair, Mr. Speaker, you would be making a speech about how concerned you are that your constituents like mine have been frozen out from representing their views on this committee that advised the Minister when he drafted the new competition legislation. In a democracy, it is very important that advisory groups to Ministers who are members of any Party be reflective of the country as a whole, but this did not happen in this case. That is one reason why this legislation is acceptable to big business. That is one reason why big business is not fighting this legislation. Big business is getting about 90 per cent, if not more, of what it wanted from the Conservative Government.

I would like to make only one point and that is that we need much stronger legislation. Our Party has been consistent on that point. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, our spokesman, has outlined the different things he would like to see changed in this particular Bill. He has mentioned legislation that he would like to see strengthened. I hope that when this Bill gets to committee stage, there will be a broad cross section of Canadians who will come before the committee to tell us what they want in a competition policy for Canada. We need a competition policy. We need legislation to make sure that companies do not form monopolies or oligopolies or become monstrous giants that gouge, steal from and pick the pockets of ordinary Canadians.

Before I sit down this afternoon, I would like to tell the House of one example of an industry in which there is, in my opinion, a near monopoly created because of a lack of legislation. Here I am not criticizing the Conservative Government because it has only been in office for 18 months. I am talking about farm chemical companies. In Canada, there are a few farm chemical companies, almost all of which are owned by Americans or foreign companies. These companies sell chemicals to Canadian farmers and they have a monopoly on their patents of 17 years once the chemicals are registered.

When looking at the price of chemicals in Canada, one sees that farmers are being gouged. They are paying excessive rates for farm chemicals. The reason I mention this now is that it is so relevant to the question of competition. I think Parliament should pass a law to provide for generic farm chemicals just like the one that provides for generic pharmaceuticals. If a chemical company develops a new chemical at the present time, it has a 17-year exclusive monopoly on the sale and production of that chemical in Canada. There can be no competition whatsoever under Canadian law. That is not good enough. It is particularly not good enough in a Parliament which is discussing competition policy.

• (1600)

I should like to put a few facts on the record about farm chemicals as an example of why we need stronger competition policy. A survey was conducted recently by the Manitoba Institute of Agrologists for the Senate Committee on Agriculture. The Senate is a fairly staid and conservative institution.

An Hon. Member: Sometimes.

Mr. Nystrom: It has become radical in recent weeks, but it was a fairly conservative and staid institution before that time. The Manitoba Institute of Agrologists indicated that the price of active ingredients in a sample of non-patented herbicides averaged $2.96 per pound while a sample of patented herbicides showed a price of $29.67 per pound. On average it was 10 times as high. When active ingredient chemicals were off patent, the price was one-tenth of the price of chemicals under exclusive patents held by multinational companies.

Let us look at the price of Round-up, which is produced by a company called Monsanto. By the way, Monsanto is a very large multinational company which produces a chemical used very widely in your province, Mr. Speaker, as well as in mine. The company is foreign owned. It has an exclusive 17-year patent on the product called Round-up. According to a study conducted by Merrill Lynch, a very renowned stockbrokerage firm, in June, 1982, the market share for Round-up was 100 per cent controlled by Monsanto because there was no competition. The Round-up sales in 1982 amounted to $472 million. Its gross profit margin was 75 per cent, and its gross profits were $357 million. Its net income was $181 million and the earnings per share were about $4.50. Let us refer to the projected market share, the projected earnings and sales of the Monsanto product, Round-up, according to Merrill Lynch. From 1982 to 1988 it will keep 100 per cent of the market because it has an exclusive patent for the product. No competition will be allowed under Canadian law. The company will have that exclusive right. The $472 million of sales in 1982 will go up to $1 billion in 1988 according to the projection. Also we see the net income of the company going up from $180 million to $333 million, guaranteed by the law. We see the profit or the earnings per share going up from $4.50 to $8.25, again guaranteed by the law. It is an example of why we should not only look at competition policy but at the patent laws as well. However, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) is now entertaining the thought of perhaps changing the generic pharmaceutical legislation to allow for an exclusive patent once again as was the case prior to 1970. That is a backward step, a step toward giving more and more power to fewer and fewer people who control pharmaceuticals in Canada.

Returning to Monsanto for a few moments, I know the Parliamentary Secretary is not a westerner and is not as familiar with some of these terms. Round-up is a very important chemical for farmers. The evidence before the Senate Committee on Agriculture indicated that the price of Round-up in Canada was sitting at $24 per litre. However, the price in Australia was some $17 per litre, again according to the study by Merrill Lynch. The price is about 40 per cent higher in Canada despite the fact that it is 9,000 miles closer to the source where Round-up is produced. Round-up is patented in both countries, but for marketing purposes it is sold for a lower price by Monsanto in Australia. In fact, in order to indicate the size of the particular company, its development costs are about $40 million, and these costs are recovered every 24 days through the company's sales around the world. Every 24 days it sells enough chemicals to make up its development costs of some $40 million. This powerful, multinational company is gouging farmers by charging excessive rates for its farm chemicals. However, in Australia, where the stuff has to be shipped an extra 9,000 miles, the company charges 40 per cent less.

There is something wrong with our laws when we as parliamentarians allow that kind of situation to occur in Canada. That is why we should not be afraid of big companies and should be drafting tougher laws when it comes to competition, patents, generics and such things.

I should like to refer to a few more examples of what I mean. There is a chemical called Atrazine which is used out West on rape-seed and in central Canada on corn. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) will be more familiar with that particular chemical. Atrazine dopped by about 30 per cent in price from the late 1970s despite inflation because it came off patent. In the late 1970s the price of Atrazine was $43.50 for a 10-litre jug. The price after patent in 1984 dropped down to $30 for the same 10-litre jug, a drop of some 30 per cent, without even taking inflation into account. It was because it came off patent and there was some competition for the particular product. It is a good example of what can happen when there is more competition in the marketplace and what can happen when a certain company has a monopoly. It is a good example to use when discussing the principles of the Bill before us, why the Bill should be strengthened and why good competition legislation is needed in Canada.

There are various other examples one could use. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North recently spoke in the House about generic pharmaceuticals. In 1969, when I first came down here, I recall that there was legislation before the House to end the exclusive 17-year patents for pharmaceutical companies. They were ended and, as a result, we have found that pharmaceutical prices dropped significantly compared with those in the United States. In fact, the Eastman Report indicated that the average price of chemicals in Canada in 1969 was about 9 per cent higher than the price in the United States. By 1976, after we had generic pharmaceuticals for a few years, the average price of pharmaceuticals in Canada was 21 per cent lower than the price in the United States. In fact, there was a time when Hoffman-Laroche was so determined to stop copies of its popular tranquillizer, Valium, from getting into hospitals that it gave away Valium to hospitals for one year. That just shows the size of the company and the assets it has to promote its tranquillizer, Valium. It is another good example of why we need strong competition legislation. If we do not have it, farmers and consumers will pay much more than they should for the various products they must buy.

The reason I have used farm chemicals as an example this afternoon is that I come from a farm riding. Because of the economic situation in the world today, I know that the income of farmers is going down. The price of grain is also down. The Americans have a farm Bill which is very protectionistic. It will drive the price of wheat down by another 20 per cent to 25 per cent, according to the federal Government. Also there has been a drought on the Prairies. On the other side of the ledger, there has been a tremendous increase in input costs for products such as fertilizers and up until recently fuel costs. By the way, the price of diesel is still not tracking its way down, as it should. However, one large input cost is that of farm chemicals. In my remaining minute let me say that in 1984 the Canadian farm chemical business had sales of $778 million, three-quarters of $1 billion. It is a big industry and there are big rip-offs, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there is a gentleman named Mr. Gawdy, who you may know, at Melfort who is trying to set up a company in competition with some of these huge multinationals. He could sell farm chemicals 20 per cent, 30 per cent, probably 50 per cent or 60 per cent cheaper to farmers in our province if we had a change in the patent laws and in the product specification Act of this country. Not only Mr. Gawdy, but the co-operatives, the wheat pools, the provincial wheat pools, provincial Governments or the federal Government or joint ventures between all sorts of people can produce farm chemicals at a much cheaper rate. We can produce a lot more at a much cheaper rate in this country.

• (1610)

I make an appeal to this House to make sure, when the Bill goes to committee, that we strengthen the legislation, that we get input from more than just the big business community and big business concerns and that we have some genuine competition legislation. Later on we should amend the Patent Act so that we can get farm chemicals and other products to ordinary Canadians at a price that is reasonable so that they can carry on their livelihood and make a contribution to this great country of Canada.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gormley): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Penitentiaries— recommended abolition of mandatory supervision release; the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs— Acid rain—United States' emissions. (b) Prime Minister's discussions with the United States President; the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young)—Child Care—funding of services. (b) request for additional funding.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Is the Hon. Member really convinced that there has not been consultation with the kinds of people the Hon. Member represents in his riding in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am told by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North that the Minister announced there was an advisory committee that included the five groups to which I referred. If that is the case, that is certainly not a wide enough consultation. Those five groups represent four big business interests and the Canadian Bar Association. I do not think that is good enough.

I know that there are businesses in my riding that belong to the Chamber of Commerce, but there are many small businesses. When the Canadian Chamber of Commerce speaks, it usually speaks for bigger companies not for the small people in a place like Kamsack, Saskatchewan. I made the point made by the spokesman for my Party that the advisory council consisting of only four business groups and the Canadian Bar Association is not good enough.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I think I should clear up the misconception that in the West and in the area of Saskatchewan and other prairie provinces as well as in British Columbia there was more than just correspondence in the form of consultation. I was part of a group, including the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) who went to the western provinces and met with Ministers of Consumer and Commercial Relations in the provinces. I think they are well able and capable of speaking for consumers in the various provinces. We met with them, we discussed our intent as it pertains to competition legislation. We heard their input. If that is not good enough, I am sure the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) will know someone in his area who is a member of the Canadian Federation of Independent Petroleum marketers, not big corporations but independent marketers across this country, and we had full consultation with them.

To add to that, there must be people in Saskatchewan who belong to organizations like the Canadian Federation of Labour. We had correspondence directly with its President. He had dialogued directly with officials within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It was at his urging in large measure that we incorporated into Bill C-91 the provision for the tribunal. He liked it.

I am sure the President represents a lot of labour in the province not only in Saskatchewan but in other provinces as well. There was consultation with organizations like the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen, one of the largest national organizations representing businesses doing less than $2 million a year, and 100 representations were made to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister directly so I fail to see that there has not been a broad range of consultation and a general consensus that this Bill is urgently needed. I have yet to hear from anyone who does not want the Bill to proceed to committee directly. If there is some fine tuning, that is the place to do it, not by taking up too much time in this House.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned the Canadian Federation of Labour. It is indeed very small in Saskatchewan. Most of our people are affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress.

The Parliamentary Secretary was very careful to say that there was full consultation with all these groups by himself or the Minister, that there was correspondence with a whole series of organizations and individuals, and that there was dialogue with all kinds of different people concerned about this Bill. These are words I heard from Liberal Governments year in and year out: dialogue, correspondence, communication and so on.

Is it or is it not the case that there was an advisory committee and that the advisory committee consisted of the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada and the Canadian Bar Association? The Parliamentary Secretary nods.

I have been around the workings of Parliament and Government long enough to know that when there is an advisory council, that council usually has an awful lot of influence. Often when you consult other groups that are not on the advisory council, it is window dressing, it is lip service.

I could probably go through Hansard and dig out speeches which the Hon. Member for Peterborough made when he was on this side of the House in which he said similar kinds of things. The Liberal Parliamentary Secretary would get up and say "Well, we consulted the farmers or the NFU. We consulted the steelworkers of America" and so on. The important thing is who is appointed to the advisory council.

Four business groups and one group of lawyers who represent the business groups were appointed. We have business groups and their lawyers advising the Minister on this issue. That is the point I made. I do not see that as having real input from various groups. Sure you can get a letter from the Consumers' Association of Canada. You can call up that Association and ask for advice. You can dialogue a little bit if you want with the President of the National Farmers Union or someone else. Why not put representatives of the farming community on the advisory committee? Why not put representatives of the labour movement on the advisory committee? Why not put some consumer representatives on the advisory committee? Why not put someone from the Status of Women or the Action Committee on the Status of Women on the advisory committee?

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if you want to have a truly representative piece of legislation, that is where you put them. These advisory committees have a lot of influence. They are the ones who tend to have more expertise, who tend to dialogue with experts in the area and who tend to have the ear of the Minister. Maybe this Parliamentary Secretary did an awful lot of consulting on his own. I do not try to pretend that he did not, but it is a lot easier to be consulted in a genuine way if you are a member of the advisory committee. Perhaps I could ask why this was not done.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be an ideal situation if we took the 2,850 associations and organizations across Canada and had formed an advisory committee.

Mr. Nystrom: Now you are being silly.

Mr. Domm: We cannot have all of them on the committee. I was glad to hear the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) agree that we should have had organizations like the Canadian Labour Congress because he has members from that group in his riding. I can report to him that we did. We had correspondence with the Canadian Labour Congress. We asked to meet.

Mr. Nystrom: A letter?

Mr. Domm: They wrote us a letter and told us what they would like. The net result is that our people from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs met them. They did not come to meet the Department's people. As a result of that meeting, they asked us to give serious consideration to the tribunal as a method of judging the dominant position in the market-place. We did, and I am sure they appreciate it. I want the Member to know that we did consult with the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, today I also have a few comments to make on Bill C-91, and I may say that the Liberal Party of Canada feels that sound competition legislation is necessary to ensure genuine competition on the Canadian market. However, in the course of this debate, we would like to contribute some ideas and solutions, to give this legislation teeth so that it can truly deal with the intolerable situations that develop every day in this country.

Yesterday, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Domm) said that the Bill would be a great help to Canadian small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to read a long letter from one of my consitutuents in the riding of Saint-Léonard—Anjou, a small businessman who, after many years of research and hard work, managed to invent a new process. He converts cars and trucks from gasoline to natural gas. This gentleman got in touch with Gaz Métropolitain Inc. Mr. Speaker, I shall quote directly from a letter of which I sent copies to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Ms. Carney), the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté).

I hereby wish to inform you of the problems and difficulties I have been having with, both personally and as a business, in addition to the machinations of G.N.C. Quebec,

—a branch of Gaz Métropolitain—

—Conversion Division, and especially Réal Lefebvre and Sylvain Denis. I urge you to take action as soon as possible, if possible before Christmas. I want to be quite clear about the following items—

The letter is addressed to Mr. Martin, President of the company. Item one

1. Stop raiding my workshop for customers and trying to convince them that G.N.C. does a better job.

2. G.N.C. should not work on conversions already done by us without our permission (we have had no returns to date except for adjustments or defective parts).

3. A guarantee applies to work done in our workshop.

4. Stop urging customers to avoid our workshop and stop all negative criticism of our business—we have proof this is happening.

5. Mr. Lefebvre and Mr. Denis are to stop immediately any abuse, either in writing or verbal, for the purpose of making me close my dealership.

6. Stop all discrimination against me because of my Italian ethnic background.

7. Stop immediately all threats about closing down my business if my prices differ from G.N.C.'s, since this is illegal and against the "Price Fixing Combine Act".

8. The G.N.C. centre should be a technical centre to help dealers and should not compete directly with them. It should stop all unfair competition.

9. Stop preventing G.N.C. employees from working in another concession.

10. As far as their so-called "Come Back" is concerned, I am a qualified first class technician, #101177. G.N.C. has an incredible number of dissatisfied customers and repairs, unbeknown to its senior executive, so that people are becoming reluctant to having their cars converted.

11. I suggest the formation of an independent G.N.C. committee to control operations of systems installed throughout Quebec, which would include customer service.

12. I want a guarantee on the land for my dealership.

13. According to Sylvain Denis, they want to close down my dealership and give it to the Shell Station only.

There is another whole page, and I will stop here at the end of the letter, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Martin, I hope you will understand what I am trying to say. I am personally willing to meet you at any time if you want further details or want to discuss anything. I am in business, I create jobs, and I want things to be fair for small businesses as well as for the multinationals. I am a resident of Quebec and I pay my share of taxes. Awaiting your reply, and hoping you will answer as soon as possible, I remain, Yours very truly.

Carmelo Nicolo

Mr. Speaker, here is one of thousands of small business people who are always struggling against the competition. Even if we do get through Bill C-91 today, this is not going to solve any of their problems.

Nevertheless, in their speeches and whenever they rise in the House, Government Members constantly refer to small businesses and mention everything they have done to help this group.

We saw another instance of this last week, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced his new regulations on small business investment in pension plans. What was missing from or rather, what should have appeared in this press release? It was the words: small businesses. And they were missing because the new rules apply mainly to large businesses. Mr. Speaker, according to these regulations, the entrepreneur, members of his family and his associates may not invest in small business. How are investors going to invest in small business without asking for certain guarantees, without having a system that will ensure they get a return on their investment and that their investment is a good one?

The Government does not want to understand all this and keeps prohibiting small business from investing in its own pension fund and its own business.

Mr. Speaker, this is obvious from the document entitled "Investment in Small Business", published by the Minister of State for Small Businesses. It mentions that a pension fund would take the money and administer it through the small business. Upon reading this paper we realize that the whole scheme is unacceptable and unrealistic.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Domm) read press release 10 of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada. It reads:

There is no doubt that the Minister has brought forth an elaborate package, with all the appropriate buzz words (trade enhancement, job creation, fairness, reliance on market forces and private sector, as the trend to deregulation continues, etc.).

Unfortunately, the Minister has listened too much to the representatives of Big Business (B.C.N.I., Canadian Chamber, C.M.A., Grocery Products Mfg. Association, and Canadian Bar Association), and not enough to consumers and small business . . . .

Our next step is to greatly strengthen this Bill at Second Reading. We believe that we can count on M.P.'s of all parties for this non-partisan effort, which the McGrath reforms now make possible.

We know that our concerns are shared by the Consumers Association of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the National Automotive Trades Association, and the Canadian Organization of Small Business, and we look forward to working with them on this most important endeavour.

That is in response to the Parliamentary Secretary's statement that he had the support of the small business groups. As seen in the press release of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada, that is not so.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to talk about something that happened in my riding at the end of the year. It involved an industry in my riding, SKD Technology at Ville D'Anjou which has lost 200 jobs, and neither this Bill nor the present Bill nor the Bill on foreign investment would have been able to save these jobs, and Government Members did nothing to help these employees keep their jobs. The facts are as follows: Continental Can had a shock absorber plant at Ville D'Anjou, which employed about 200 people, and a decision was made to sell the plant to the Marmon Group. At that time, if the transaction had been arranged directly, there would have been some problems with the Investment Canada Act, since both companies are foreign entities. They decided to announce the plant was closing down, and Marmon Group bought the building and equipment, and in that way was not obliged to go through Investment Canada, and the upshot was that 200 jobs in Montreal East were lost, out of a total of 5,000. Mr. Speaker, if we read through this Bill, there is absolutely nothing there to protect those jobs.

There is also a letter written to one of my colleagues by a wholesaler, and I would also like to quote a few passages, for the record, so that Members will realize that there is competition and very strong competition at that, between small businesses and large businesses. And when Government Members stand up in the House to say that a Bill like C-91 helps small businesses, that is just not the case, and this letter emphasizes the fact it is not, although the Government would have us think otherwise.

• (1630)

I quote a letter from W. A. MacLeod & Son Ltd:

The danger we face as wholesalers comes in the form of large anti-competitive conglomerates who threaten to damage us irreparably by marshalling their economic might against us. Their tactic is loss leader selling. Because of their huge size, they can sustain temporary losses. Slowly but surely, the use of this tactic can drive us out of business.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we know very well—we often see advertisements—I see my colleague from Dollard (Mr. Weiner), a former drugstore owner who surely had such experiences—as I was saying, we often see cartons of cigarettes advertised at below cost price to attract customers. This Bill will do nothing to remedy that situation. Hopefully we will be able to get a closer look at that in committee, because it is now a problem for small businessmen and no independent storer owner can face that kind of competition. I continue quoting the letter:

[English]

Never before has the threat been as great. With the recent spate of mergers between large companies, the critical balance between big and small businesses could be irredeemably tipped towards the huge conglomerates. If their unreasonable and unfair practices go unchecked, the economy could be severely crippled. Wholesaling will become dominated by very few large sellers who will each have an entire market to themselves.

As with my fellow NATCD members, all the profits from my company remain in this locality. As an independent entrepreneur, I am part of the backbone of a healthy economy. In this age of rapid change, Canadian business needs all the imagination, flexibility and entrepreneurship it can muster.

As the owner of a small wholesaling business, I can be more responsive to changes in the business climate than a large bureaucratic, centrally located conglomerate.

Some examples of such business in direct competition with us. TRA Wholesale owned by the Sobey's group, Mason's Wholesale owned by Bolands Ltd. would operate IGA Supermarkets. Another serious threat to us in this area is Atlantic Wholesalers owned by Loblaws who are not yet in the area, but there have been rumours of this for some time now. Ever since TRA Wholesale have moved into Sydney, we have watched our profit margins on confectionery drastically decline. They regularly practise the use of "loss-leaders" and you and I know they can afford to. However, as a small independent wholesaler, I cannot.

On November 18, 1985, the NATCD President, Bill Marcus, wrote to the ... Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, requesting an amendment to the Combines Investigation Act to prohibit loss leader selling. The Minister in his reply of December 11, 1985 recognized our concerns:

I appreciate how damaging below cost pricing can be when it is engaged in for the purpose of lessening competition or eliminating competitors from the market.

Nevertheless, the Minister's full response was less than satisfactory. He considered it not appropriate to legislate an outright prohibition against loss leading pricing, suggesting that his forthcoming proposals to amend the Act (subsequently introduced in the House on December 17, 1985) would enable competition law to deal more effectively with predatory conduct through a new civil provision dealing with abuse of dominant position, to be adjudicated by a new Competition Tribunal.

I could continue because there are another two pages to the letter, but let me just say that small business is simply asking for a competition law with teeth. We must be able to stop some unscrupulous big businesses who are trying to take away the markets of small business which create most of the jobs in the local community. I do not see anywhere in this Bill that such protection can be achieved. Therefore, once this Bill moves to committee I hope Members will look into these details and make sure that all small business and consumer groups have their say. Then, when the Bill comes back to the House for third reading or clause-by-clause study, we can make sure that we have a competition law with enough teeth to protect consumers and small business.

Another example of what we can deal with under this legislation is the crisis in the liability insurance business. We had to ask the Minister to intervene in this situation, and when he did not we had to use the law to get an inquiry. We are still waiting for an answer and this is a problem which has to be solved. Then we have the Gulf refinery closing in the east end of Montreal. One company threatened to close its refinery and leave Quebec if another refinery was sold to someone else and remained open. This is the kind of situation we have to deal with today. We have to solve this problem once and for all and make sure that everyone in Canada is allowed to do business without being pushed around.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is of enormous importance. It is one of the two or three most important economic questions facing this Parliament. I wonder if you could ascertain whether there is a quorum, given the vital importance of this legislation.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Technically there is no quorum at present in the House. Ring the bells.

And the bells having been rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is now a quorum. Debate.

• (1640)

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your recognizing the lack of a quorum a moment ago and ensuring that more Members are in the House.

As I said a moment ago, the question of competition in the Canadian economy is surely among the two or three most important questions that come before this Parliament. I would suggest that, in terms of cost to the middle and lower-income Canadians particularly, the only thing that could match or top this concern is the unfairness of the present tax system which extracts billions of dollars from the pockets of individuals, while at the same time wealthy Canadians and big companies get off almost scot-free. There are those who avoid paying taxes for years at a time. I suggest that that is the only topic that is more important than this matter of competition which is before us in Bill C-91.

There are a few topics I have looked forward to discussing in this Parliament with more anticipation than this particular topic because I have made a study of the development of market controlling companies in the years around the turn of the century. I have also had an interesting time looking at the development of the laws of this land which are supposed to provide for competition. In looking at the early development of competition law in this country I have seen just the sort of behaviour by Governments which the Conservative Government is serving up in Bill C-91.

One of the remarkable things about Canadian consideration of competition is the fact that a Canadian Act, the Act of 1889, is actually older than the Sherman Act, which was passed a couple of years later. The remarkable thing is that at the national level the Canadian Parliament was ahead of the American Congress almost 100 years ago in looking at the threats to competition that faced companies.

One of the most interesting questions that faces one in looking at the situation of that first attempt to deal with competition is the question of whether the attempt of 1888-89 was in fact a serious one. There are colleagues of mine in the historical profession who are convinced that it was not a serious attempt. I, for my part, in reading very carefully what was said in the House of Commons in 1888-89 in the last century, as well as what was said in the Senate, have come to the conclusion that it was a serious attempt by some Members of Parliament. It was a serious attempt which is very much like the efforts that the Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) have been making in the last days. It is always interesting to hear back-benchers speak up and try to influence the policy of Government.

It is distressing and depressing to see the way in which these Members fail as Governments yield time after time to the pressure of big business and refuse to legislate effectively. That is why I look back a hundred years in scanning something of the history of competition law in this country. It is a very similar process and situation time after time of Governments yielding to pressure with the result that there is not any effective law.

One of the evidences that I see in 1888 that convinces me that N. Clarke Wallace—who was the leader at the time of this effort to control combinations in restraint of trade—is the fact that he had a select committee struck to look at the situation. That select committee included not a single big city lawyer, not a single representative of the corporate interests of Canada in the 1880s. Instead, it included a variety of business people, people who were involved in trade in small towns; some millers, a few lawyers from outlying areas and a farmer or two. That mix of Members of Parliament that he put forward in 1888 looked at the question of whether there were already then companies that had a sufficiently strong position in the Canadian economy to necessitate a law to restrain them in their getting together in combinations against the interests of consumers. The fact that he struck that kind of a committee is one of the reasons that I am convinced that N. Clarke Wallace really wanted a strong law. I do not have anything like the time to explain and explore what he did at the time, but let me say that the sad fact is that he put forward a Bill in 1888 and in 1889 presented it again, but because it was too late in 1889 to carry it through, before the House of Commons had passed something, that Bill of his had been transformed into something else. Before the Senate had passed the version that he had to settle for, we had the law which ended up in the 1890s in the Criminal Code. We had all that paraphernalia of having to restrain competition unduly, which has been a delight to lawyers ever since, and which has allowed the business people of this country to combine together in various ways with impunity. There has been very little successful prosecution.

The fact that that happened in 1889, almost a hundred years ago, suggests at the very beginning what the difficulties of Members of Parliament would be. Governments yielded to these business interests, and the result was that there was no effective law.

There were some interesting developments in the 1890s in an attempt to strengthen the law. Those Members of Parliament, and a few Senators too, who thought that the law should be stronger, made diligent attempts year after year to try to amend the Act, to strike out this adjective "unduly", which was particularly restrictive on prosecutions. One of the most amusing incidents occurred in the Senate. It became clear that if a Bill could not pass the Senate, there was no point to passing it in the Commons. When one year a Senator put a measure forward and used arguments about the importance of Senate action regarding a combination between undertakers and casket manufacturers being one of the agreements amongst business people that cost consumers money, he seems to have appealed to a concern of some of the Senators who were, after all, near their last days and a little concerned about the cost of funerals. The Bill actually passed the Senate that year and got absolutely nowhere in the House of Commons, as a demonstration that the Government was going to ensure that if the Senate actually slipped up that way and passed it the Commons would not have the chance to make it the law of the land.

The difficulty that faced legislators in those days was their conviction that the reason there were such agreements among Canadian companies is that we had a tariff, and behind the Customs Tariff barriers companies were able to get together and rip off the consumers who were buying their products. All of those Liberals who were free traders in those days of course wanted to take care of the Customs Tariff, to get rid of the national policy which they were blaming for all of this. Wallace, of course, believed in the national policy and was not concerned about whether it was the reason or the cause for it. He wanted an effective law that would allow the prosecutors to deal with agreements of this sort. The law actually had some effect on business people even though I have been describing it as—I think any scholar would—completely useless because of the almost total lack of effective prosecutions. It led business people to get together in mergers rather than to have agreements among themselves.

I believe that can be seen from one particular pair of mergers which occurred at the beginning of the 1890s. There was no doubt almost 100 years ago that the manufacturers of cotton textiles had come together in two groups, one controlling the grey cotton producers and the other in charge of the whites and coloured cottons. These agreements very obviously worked. When there was an over-production situation, they closed down plants. There was not much doubt in the minds of the public that they had in fact colluded in this way. Yet with the Act passed, how could they be sure that they would not end up in court being prosecuted? So the result was a merger of these two groups into two companies. One company ended up in 1905 being transformed into the Dominion Textile Company, and it has gone on victoriously ever since as a product of the merger of the early 1890s and the second reorganization in 1905.

This response by businessmen indicated that they were very uncertain about what the effective law might be. The Government tried to reassure them with weak law. I think the only thing one needs to say about the Combines Investigation Act of 1909 is to recognize that the Government of those days—the Liberals even more then than the Conservatives—was prepared to consider the possibility that the Customs Tariff was the cause, and if there was some kind of agreement among producers behind the tariff barrier, it would just reduce the tariff. One of those actions occurred in 1903 against newsprint producers. The only significant addition that Mackenzie King made with the 1909 Combines Investigation Act was to say that the Government should assist consumers in demonstrating that a combination has been effected behind the tariff barrier. The Combines Investigation Act did precious little other than providing a publicly financed process for inquiry into this process.

I mention that because the Minister in introducing this Bill yesterday suggested that very little has changed since the Combines Investigation Act in 1910. I do not think that is fair in terms of later attempts to amend the law. It is all too true in principle in the sense that the activities of 1889, 1909 and 1910 were largely processes of yielding to the business interests of the day and creating law which would not send anyone to prison and probably would not even lead to any large fines. But there have been some changes in the law since 1910. Those changes deserve some recognition.

One might almost say that if the Conservative Party had been more successful in holding political power in this century, our competition law might well have a different shape. The tribunal approach, which is part of the legislation we shall be considering in committee if we give this Bill second reading, is anything but a novelty coming from a Conservative Government. One can go back to the years just after the First World War and find a Conservative attempt to use that kind of public body which would use other than the criminal law in the courts to deal with competition. That attempt was swept aside by the Mackenzie King Government after its election victory in 1921 and the Combines Investigation Act was brought back. Then, in the middle 1930s, the Government of R. B. Bennett, particularly H. H. Stevens, the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, pressed inquiries into the kinds of use of economic power which existed in Canadian manufacturing and retailing. The endeavours of Mr. Stevens led to a second attempt by Conservatives to use a commission or tribunal approach to the problem. After the defeat of 1935, this was swept away, and we had again the Combines Investigation Act approach, unsatisfactory and inadequate as it had been. These are the sorts of features I find in looking back over the years which lead me to think that conceivably in this competition law there are some possibilities. But when one compares what is put before us now in Bill C-91 with what was presented 15 years ago and the more recent history of competition law in Canada, one finds there is not very much reason for satisfaction.

I think that is particularly unfortunate given the possibilities we had at the beginning of the 1970s. I want to suggest that the year 1971 and the period immediately following, the beginning of the 1970s, was one of the most disappointing eras one can look to. I think it reflects particularly badly on the Prime Minister of those years, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. In 1971 we had in Bill C-256 a comprehensive attempt at competition law. On the tax side, the fiscal policy, we had an Income Tax Act which took up the work of the Carter Commission on taxation and attempted a substantial reform. The terribly depressing reality is that Bill C-256 was never carried to conclusion. The Income Tax Act was amended and overlaid with all of those provisions. After 15 years of additions to the Bill, of course, it has the accountants of the land protesting that the tax system of this country is too complex. Surely, there is an incredible irony in Conservative charges and the charges of so many other people that Mr. Trudeau was some kind of left winger. There may be some aspects of the actions by his Government which could justify one saying that there was some significant development in social policy, but in the absolutely fundamental areas of taxation and competition policy, he and his Governments buckled to business pressure and left us with a completely emasculated competition law and with a tax system which transfers wealth in incredible amounts from individual middle and lower income Canadians to the wealthy.

The fact that we have both of these features operating in competition by public policy is what arouses one to such outrage about the situation as to have led me a few minutes ago to ask for a quorum count in order to ensure that when we are debating these matters, which are fundamental to the well-being of Canadians, we have enough Hon. Members in the House to ensure we can carry on a lawful debate on these questions.

The terrible realities of the weakness of competition law, the failure of the law to deal with mergers of the sort which could lead to market dominating combinations, the failure of Canadian law to ever grapple with the existence of monopolies in various areas, have led to the situation that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was pointing to yesterday. Attempts have been made to calculate the costs to Canadians of our competition law. These estimates suggest that it could be as much as 7.5 per cent of GNP. That is a cost to consumers of $31 billion. That is an incredible amount of money.

The weakness of the law has led to a situation where Canada has such a concentrated economy with a small number of families and economic interests controlling so many companies and so much of what goes on in the economy, that the Canadian Bankers' Association, that small club of chartered banks, admittedly added to by some international banks in the last years, could point to concentrations in those other areas. That is the end result of competition law, the failure of it, in this country.

The Government has taken the same approach again in that it has consulted with these leading business interests, satisfied them, had the advice of corporate lawyers ad nauseam, and given us a law that leaves out many of the provisions we need for class action and so on. These are the reasons I join with my colleagues in our caucus in opposing this Bill with all the energy I can bring to bear.

I call upon the Government to respond to the concerns of its own back-benchers and give us a law which will really allow us to create the competition which the Government says it wants to create and which Canadian consumers so desperately need if we are to have an effective economy.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to speak to the legislation in front of us today. It has been a concern of mine for many years that we have not developed a piece of legislation which will ensure a competitive state in terms of our economy. For years we have heard people from all three political Parties get up in the House and talk about the virtues of small business. They have extolled the fact that it is the backbone of our economy and that men and women involved in small businesses create jobs for many Canadians. Yet over the years we have seen a small group of people gain almost complete control of our economy. We have seen figures which suggest that nine families have virtual control of our economy.

Whether it was under the previous Liberal Government, or the present Government, we have not seen legislation pass the House of Commons which would in any way, shape or form give us the ability to control the corporate conglomerates which are running our country. This is not just a view based on political philosophy or on whether one believes that large corporations dominate control of the economy, which I believe is the case. It is a matter of effective management. Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North in speaking to this Bill talked about Noranda Mines taking over MacMillan Bloedel for $626 million. He went on to point out that later on Brascan took over Noranda for $1.6 billion. All that money did not create any new jobs. It did not mean new research and development or new competitiveness, which is what some people say is necessary. What it meant is that the management of MacMillan Bloedel passed to Noranda Mines and then it passed to Brascan. The people in Brascan did not know anything about the lumber industry and they knew very little about mining. What happened was the taking away of effective management. Instead of having people who are actually involved in one particular industry looking after their factories, shops, mines, et cetera, we start a system of developing large conglomerates. This takes away management from the actual shop floor and the business which it manages.

I am sure many Canadians believe it to be true that we are developing a system in which we are passing over the financial management of firms and leaving the actual decision making to those who are not capable of making decisions. In other words, as we build these economic empires which quite often benefit from tax loopholes we end up with a situation in which important management decisions cannot be made by the people who are at the top of the pyramid. The people at the top of the pyramid may know how to take advantage of tax loopholes. They may also know how to win a phoney paper battle in the stock exchanges of the country. But they know very little about operating the mine of which they are now the owners; or they may know very little about the operations of a forest industry company such as MacMillan Bloedel. So it is of concern that we have lost the ability to manage based on experience in the industry because the ownership has transferred from the industry to a financial holding company which really has no knowledge and no expertise in the very corporations which they are now controlling.

I have similar concerns with respect to the way ownership has been concentrated in many of our other industries. The present Government and the previous Liberal Government talked about deregulation in order to increase competition. To illustrate my next point I will take the example of our airline companies. We talked about deregulation at the same time as we saw one airline take over other airline companies, or at least attempt to do so. For example, Canadian Pacific took over Eastern Provincial. It is now trying to take over Nordair. We are in a situation in which we talk about deregulation with the idea of creating more competition while at the same time we allow more corporate concentration. In effect, this means that the decision making of Canadian Pacific will certainly not be of the type that is needed in order to foster more companies competing for business.

Because of the fact that corporate concentration means there is no, or very limited, competition, and because we are taking away effective management of our industries as a result of these conglomerates, we should be concerned about what is happening in the country.

The events of the last few months and those of the last few years indicate that there are other concerns which we must also have. One is with respect to the very matter with which we are dealing today. I refer to non-financial institutions taking over the management of financial institutions. Under the legislation which is before us it is quite possible, through the complete ownership of Canada Trust, that Imasco will be in a self-dealing situation. In other words, the lending of money from its own trust company with no controls to prevent it from dealing in its self-interest, as opposed to dealing in the interest of those people who invest in Canada Trust, is a serious problem. We have heard the Minister and others defend the situation by saying it is not a matter of ownership or a matter of the concentration of ownership with which we must be concerned. We have been told that all we should be concerned with is the fact that perhaps we need to fix up our regulations. We have been told that we need to have better regulations in order to ensure that Imasco, or any other group of people who have control of a financial institution, whether it be a trust company or bank, exercises its power of ownership in the public interest and in the interest of its depositors.

It might also be true that if we had adequate regulation of banks and our financial institutions such as trust companies then we would not have to be worried about ownership. However, the two bank failures last year indicate that when it comes to the regulation of banks and the effective control and supervision of those regulations we are not ready. Among other reasons for these bank failures, it has been indicated that there were many dubious loans made to those who were in ownership positions of the two banks. Those are serious concerns. If it were only regulations and adequate enforcement of those regulations that would look after our problems, that should have happened last year and those banks should not have gone under. The Canadian taxpayers would not be in the position they are today of having to pay millions upon millions of dollars to those people who deposited money in those banks.

Those who say that adequate government regulations will solve our problems would probably be correct in an ideal world. In an ideal world, the Conservative Government and the previous Liberal Government would have acted to institute the types of regulations that we need and to make sure that there are adequately financed supervisory groups to enforce those regulations.

One of the other things that we learned as a result of the bank inquiries is that the Inspector General of Banks was looking for additional staff last year to supervise those banks that went under, but he could not get the money from the federal Government. The Conservatives who were in power last year and the Liberals who were in power the year prior to that had denied him the money he had requested in order to have a staff that could regulate those banks. If he had that staff, perhaps the bank failures would not have taken place. We did not spend the money that was needed at that time, but now we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars resulting from the fact that the Government would not spend the money necessary to supervise those banks.

The Minister responsible for this legislation has risen to say that regulations will solve the problems and that we do not have to worry about corporate concentration of ownership or having financial institutions, through their non-financial institutions, involved in self-dealing. I have to wonder if she is really thinking about what happened last year when this same lack of supervision and adequate regulations allowed two banks to fail. I agree that regulations would help. I agree that adequate supervision of those regulations would certainly help to enhance the protection of investors. However, I think we have to worry about more than just self-dealing. I think we also have to worry about how economic decisions are going to be made.

Earlier on I expressed concern about the concentration of ownership. We have to be worried about concentration of ownership not only within the mining, forestry and drug industries, although those are legitimate concerns, but we must have even more concern when our financial institutions fall under this kind of concentrated ownership. It is no surprise to us to find out that we are talking not only about Canada Trust but about a number of trust and mortgage companies that are likely to fall under the corporate umbrella of Imasco. We are talking about a number of institutions which will be controlled by Imasco and are presently controlled by Genstar.

In Canada, there is no method of controlling the decision-making process of Imasco to ensure that Canada Trust money is being lent in ways which would serve the real economic interests of our country. If a number of small banks and trust companies make those independent decisions which may not be in the best interests of our country, that is bad enough. The fact that there are a number of players in the financial game helps to protect those small businesses that want to make loans. However,once we allow for a concentration of ownership, it makes it very difficult for a small business person to go to a local financial institution and make the financial arrangements he or she wants to make. There is no longer a smorgasbord of institutions to which one may go to discuss terms. One ends up seeking a loan in a very limited market.

Because there is no real competition in the banks at this time and because the concentration of ownership in trust companies is increasing and will increase as a result of this move, there really are no options of which small businessmen, farmers and others who want to borrow money may take advantage. For all of these reasons, we need to have real competition legislation.

I have to agree with others who have said that the legislation before us is not good enough. We need more protection than this Bill offers. It upsets me that on this very important issue, we have not spent the time over the last 10 or 15 years required to see how we can effectively control the concentration of ownership and secure the diversification of financial lending institutions that is so important to Canada. Studies have been done and the House of Commons committees have looked at the matter from time to time, but there has not been the political will on the part of various Governments to make sure that we have effective legislation. The same thing is happening again today.

We know that the present legislation is favoured by many of the very powerful groups in our nation because they helped to write the legislation. The people who helped to write this legislation are the very people from whom this legislation is supposed to protect us. The fact that the consumers' associations, labour movement and farm organizations were not involved in the drafting of this legislation while those in the higher echelons of the corporate sector were is enough reason for us to be afraid about the weakness of this legislation.

Those are the types of concerns we in this Party and many Canadians have. We know that one of the reasons we have not passed adequate competition legislation is that there have been loud voices. Large institutions have had the ability to prevent the House of Commons from exercising its political will by passing the legislation that we need to protect the consumer, the farmer and our own economy.

We now have before us a piece of legislation which was drafted in the corporate boardrooms. Members of all three Parties know that it will not provide the protection necessary to prevent the Imasco takeover. We know that it would not have prevented the Genstar takeover which occurred last fall and it probably will not prevent the next takeover about which we will hear one or two months from now.

Why are we not getting the legislation we need? Why is the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) talking about this legislation as is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) rather than acting to protect our interests? Why are they not doing that? I realize that I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, but let me suggest to you the reason they are not doing that. It is that too much power is being used by those in positions of power. They have the ability by themselves and through their lobbyists to control what senior bureaucrats think and what cabinet Ministers do, whether the previous Liberal Government or the present Conservative Government is in power. This is proven by the fact that there have been six attempts to get competition legislation through the House and we have only managed to pass one weak Bill so far. It is time for Canadians to realize that competition legislation is something which protects them. It is in place to protect farmers and workers. It is in place to protect the interests of consumers, whether it is people who want to deal with banks and trust companies or whether it is people who want to purchase goods such as drugs, lumber or any other product. Competition legislation which ensures adequate competition in our nation is legislation for ordinary Canadians. It should not be the type of legislation we have now which justifies and aids corporate conglomerates in Canada.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He referred to the need to protect Canadians and I believe he said that Canadians were not consulted widely enough in the consultative process. The Consumer Association of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business were indeed involved in the consultations. Is he saying that these are the groups from which we have to protect Canadians?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there were discussions with these groups. Those are not the groups from which we need protection, but I suggest that consumer associations and others do not really believe that this is the strongest legislation we can have to protect their interests and the interests of other Canadians.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Member who just asked a question seemed to indicate that somehow the Consumer Association of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business were involved in the consultative process. I do not quibble with the Hon. Member as to whether or not they were consulted, but it is important to determine the degree of consultation and the degree of input by those two organizations compared with the involvement of the so-called Gang of Five— the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Business Council on National Issues, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada and the Canadian Bar Association. It is public information that the so-called Gang of Five actually participated on a clause by clause basis, suggesting and recommending and insisting upon certain clauses being included in the new legislation. Indeed the Consumers Association of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business were consulted, but they were simply asked for their general views.

Having made that point, I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Does he believe that the consultative process in respect of the drafting of Bill C-91 was a fair process in the sense that all interested parties were listened to equally? Does he believe that the submissions of the Gang of Five carried as much weight as the submissions of those organizations representing small business and consumers? I suspect that those who carried the day were members of the so-called Gang of Five and those who represent big business in Canada. It is obvious that the legislation before the House, compared with the legislation introduced by the previous administration, is more business oriented. It allows for more loopholes for those who are represented by the Gang of Five. Would the Hon. Member for Churchill comment upon the consultative process?

I was also interested in hearing his views in respect of the purpose of competition legislation. He quite rightly pointed out that its purpose was to protect consumers and that it was not to allow business the opportunity to be involved in mergers, conspiracies and monopolies to the detriment of competition and to the detriment of consumers in our society. Does he believe that Canadian consumers—and he referred to them as ordinary Canadians—are adequately protected and that the purpose of competition legislation is well served by this particular piece of legislation? As the official critic for the Liberal Party pointed out, while the legislation is a step in the right direction, it is still in need of amendment and of a different orientation, an orientation which would put consumers and the interests of consumers first and foremost. Would the Hon. Member comment upon the points I have raised?

Mr. Murphy: Obviously I agree with the Hon. Member and he agrees with me about the fact that competition legislation is not meeting the needs of ordinary Canadians or consumers. I believe the legislation could be much stronger. I will not debate whether the legislation of the previous Liberal Government or its proposals for legislation were better than the present legislation before the House. I merely point out that that legislation was never passed by the Liberal Government, which indicates that it was not on its real political agenda. Despite the fact that the Liberal Government has some problems getting legislation through, it was a majority Government for most of the last 15 years and it had the ability to introduce and pass legislation if it really desired to do so. The fact that the Liberal Government did not pass strong and reasonable competition legislation indicates the lack of political will about which I spoke earlier.

In terms of the general question asked by the Hon. Member, there is a difference between being consulted and being consulted. I should like to refer to what happened in the case of consumer associations and others who represent the less powerful in society. They had meetings. They were shown some outlines of the Bill. In some cases they actually agreed with the general direction of the legislation. Sometimes they actually believed that the legislation would do a good job. In other cases they agreed with the legislation because they did not think they would get anything better in terms of competition legislation. Based in part upon our history of not passing competition legislation, consumer associations sometimes agree to passing legislation because they know they cannot get anything better and suspect that a Conservative Government perhaps will never pass competition legislation unless they accept weak legislation such as that before us at the present time. Those groups were consulted and in some cases they agreed with the legislation. However, there were other groups which were never consulted.

Were the labour groups really consulted? Were farmers really consulted? Were other consumer groups really consulted? Yes, there was very limited consultation with some of those groups, but let us compare the amount of consultation which took place with them and the effectiveness of that consultation with the consultation with the Big Five. Over the last seven years I have sat on enough committees of the House of Commons, as I am sure have other Members, to know that we listen to a number of groups that appear before committees. We will hear 15 or 16 witnesses on a piece of legislation, but some of them have a lot more say than others. Some of the witnesses are there for the clause by clause study. Some of the witnesses have the financial resources to ensure that legislation is written in the way they want it to be written. This is what happened in the case of the competition legislation with which we are dealing today. Sure, you talk with the Consumers Association and with other groups, but the people who had the resources and the ear of the Government were able to dictate the way this legislation was written. As a result of that, this legislation is imperfect and will not deal with the legitimate concern of Canadians.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): A very, very short supplementary question from the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, having said what the Hon. Member has said, I am sure the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) will recognize that there is one final opportunity to hear submissions from the Consumers Association of Canada, the Federation of Small Business and the Consumer Protection Association at committee stage. At present we are dealing with second reading of this legislation.

Recognizing that that opportunity exists, can the Hon. Member explain why the New Democratic Party has stated that it intends to obstruct this Bill, delay its passage, notwithstanding the fact that, flawed as it may be, Bill C-91 is a step in the right direction, and it is certainly better than the existing Combines Investigation Act?

Can the Hon. Member for Churchill on behalf of his Party indicate to the House and to Canadians that the New Democratic Party will co-operate with the hearing of witnesses, those representing both big business and small business and organizations representing consumers, in order to try to persuade the Government, difficult as it may be, to adopt certain recommendations in the interest of consumers?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words this afternoon during debate on Bill C-91 and its ramifications for competition law in Canada and the Combines Investigation Act.

A strong, effective competition law is an essential part of the Government's economic policy. There is a critical need to update our economic legislation. The existing law is out of date and out of touch. The changes being proposed in Bill C-91 will give Canadians an effective, enforceable and up-to-date competition law, something that is long overdue. Competition law sets the rules of the game. Canadians need a competition law that works.

I want to begin by highlighting some of the points in Bill C-91 and what they touch on. By way of some comment, I would like to address a few thoughts to the comments made by my hon. colleagues in the Opposition.

Some of the highlights of this legislation will involve international competition. International competition is emphasized throughout to help Canadian business compete in world markets.

As for adjudication provisions, the new competition tribunal to be established will combine judicial and business expertise to deal with anti-competitive mergers and trade practices. Investigatory powers will now be dealt with in a more effective fashion. New investigatory powers of the director of investigation and research will be made consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There will be more attention in this legislation to the issues of merger. Obviously in recent days and weeks there has been considerable discussion about mergers, particularly from the Opposition as evidenced today.

The competition tribunal can stop mergers that lessen competition substantially. International trade will be a major factor in this, and pre-notification is required for large mergers. I will be touching on these in greater depth later in my comments, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted to highlight a few of these for the record.

As far as the abuse of dominant position or what is known as monopoly is concerned, the tribunal can stop anti-competitive practices on behalf of monopolies. Also in the area of conspiracy, there has been a considerable tightening up in that regard. Banks will now be included in this legislation as well as Crown corporations.

To run over these particular highlights, I would like in a few moments to deal in greater depth with several of these proposals. It has been 60 years since the last change to competition legislation in Canada and 75 years since there has been any degree of substantial change.

I would like to comment on how the opposition Parties have been dealing with this matter so far. While not being an overly great fan of the Official Opposition, I must remark that in this particular instance the Liberal Party has dealt with its response in a reasonably responsible fashion. We have heard such expressions as "improvement from the past" in debate today. We have also heard many members of the Official Opposition standing to support passage of this Bill into committee stage where it can be dealt with in greater detail and, of course, in the new spirit of reform of the House of Commons— here I am sure I am speaking on behalf of all Members—where it can be dealt with through an exhaustive study of the provisions in order to ensure that this legislation, as effective as it is, stays to be an effective voice and an effective measure of competition law.

The Liberal Party as well in government has been the author of no less than four previous pieces of legislation that dealt with competition law. In so doing, many of the speakers today have agreed that Bill C-91 does go significantly further. I give credit to the Official Opposition for dealing in this respect in a reasonably responsible fashion.

Mr. Nunziata: What about the NDP?

Mr. Gormley: I hear a Member asking what about the NDP. In Saskatchewan, maybe it is because we have only 14 Members out of 282, we are proud of electing to this House of Commons Members who are very strong in spirit if not voice as advocates of the Saskatchewan way of life. Unfortunately, the Saskatchewan way of life is often reflected in the number of New Democratic Members who continue to put appearances in here after every four years.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Say it for competition.

Mr. Gormley: That could be called competition, I suppose, as one NDP Member reminds me. We have heard comments today, from members of the New Democratic Party particularly, that I think bear a further look.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), my friend who obviously predates me by many years in this House, has referred to the input in smaller Saskatchewan communities from people in the smaller businesses of Saskatchewan and ways of making a livelihood. He refers to this as part of competition.

I will touch on it later, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to remind the Member that the degree of input received in this process through the formulation of the Bill has come from groups like the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which is made up of many small chambers of commerce like our Chamber of Commerce in The Battlefords which reflects small retail businesses, agricultural service companies and oil field service companies. We have seen people from The Battlefords Chamber of Commerce emerge as some of the primary leaders in the Saskatchewan Chamber. Of course, we are well heard in the national Chamber. As well we hear from groups like the Federation of Independent Business and the Consumers Association of Canada. I do take some exception to what the Member for Yorkton—Melville said, that there is no input into this kind of competition legislation from smaller communities and from smaller businesses in different and perhaps more remote walks of life in Canada.

Another long-term habit of the New Democratic Party is what I call the vilification of business. We heard members of the NDP at length today and the day before, in referring to the Big Five, I think they call them, somehow referring to the evils of Canadian business. As one examines further the measures contained in Bill C-91, as we will in committee and in this House, we will see that part of the philosophy of legislation that deals with competition has to address itself primarily to the kind of business environment we want for Canada.

A member of the New Democratic Party this morning said, with particular respect to the tribunal being established, that the state should have the power to examine business transactions and question whether there is a profit motive or if there are other job guarantees. The tribunal should have the power to disallow these kinds of business operations and transactions. That begins with a fundamental premise that business transactions, the doing of business in Canada, begins from the state determining how much or how little you should be allowed to do. Obviously responsible competition legislation should start with the premise that we have a market-place. We have businesses large and small that are conducting business and, within the bounds or constraints, competition legislation is designed as an effective measure of protection for consumers, protection as we will deal with it in Bill C-91.

The provision for takeovers and mergers, which has been dealt with to a great extent due to recent events, has often been overlooked by members of the New Democratic Party who have conveniently forgotten that this is a comprehensive Bill to deal with competition. It obviously deals with mergers but, as a member of my Party mentioned earlier today, if one looks at the newly tabled Bill C-103 in connection with Bill C-91, one can see how the Government is able to deal with, as an example, the Imasco-Genstar takeover which has been debated at such great length here.

I would now like to deal in greater detail with some of the points contained in Bill C-91. I would like to indicate why I think they are good, timely, and effective measures. Notification will be required of all proposed mergers or takeovers involving companies with combined assets of more than $500 million, or with a takeover cost of at least $35 million. If the director of combines believes that the deal would reduce competition, the merger would go before the tribunal for adjudication. From that measure an appeal of the tribunal's findings could then be made to the federal court. For the first time international competition is givin explicit recognition and a great deal more emphasis. This law will recognize that in some instances concentration may be necessary to make Canadian industry world competitive to the benefit of consumers and businesses all across our country.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): An excuse for domestic monopoly.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I hear an NDP Member say "an excuse for domestic monopoly". Considering the kind of state-dominated economy that the New Democratic Party would like to wreak upon us, that kind of comment is not surprising. Again I refer back to my Saskatchewan roots. With regard to competition and the degree of forward investment in Canada, one need only look at the Saskatchewan experience of the nationalization of potash mines by the NDP.

In Saskatchewan a man is hoping in vain to be Premier again. The Leader of the NDP is saying that, in the very unlikely event that the NDP was re-elected in Saskatchewan, it has, at least at the Party policy level, given itself the authorization to take back anything that the present Progressive Conservative Government has privatized or initiated on behalf of the people of Saskatchewan. It is that kind of attitude that makes that Member's comments not particularly surprising. However, I will not become sidetracked again, Mr. Speaker, as there are a number of things we can talk about with regard to Bill C-91.

Criminal laws against monopoly will be replaced by civil prohibitions against anti-competitive behaviour. It is virtually impossible to obtain a criminal investigation. At least this has been the experience in the past with combines legislation. At this point a new approach is necessitated. Under this new approach we will be dealing with the measure in which the tribunal will be working. This is again a point in contrast to earlier legislation.

There have been questions asked about whether this law will benefit Canadian consumers. Obviously competition law is a framework piece of legislation which offers general benefits to the consumer. Effective competition laws ensure that we have an economy predicated upon competition, the market, and a measure of free enterprise. With effective legislation such as this there is, in turn, benefit to consumers through lower prices, increased choices, and protection against conspiracy and anti-competitive behaviour.

I want to touch upon the role of the tribunal in this legislation. It has been compared to that in Bill C-29 of the previous Liberal Government. The provision for use of a tribunal can be compared to the former proposal in Bill C-29 for using the courts. There are arguments on both sides. It is our view that the tribunal is a better way of proceeding. It provides, in large measure, a more effective way of adjudicating decisions which come before it.

A judge of the Federal Court of Canada will chair the tribunal. There will be up to four judicial members. On the recommendation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), the Governor in Council will appoint up to eight lay members. The prospective appointees will be vetted by a statutory advisory committee comprising persons knowledgeable in the industry, in commerce, and in public affairs, including representatives of the big and small business communities, consumer groups, and labour.

The point which has been raised more than any other in today's debate is who had input into the formulation of Bill C-91. That question has been bandied about by the New Democratic Party in particular which is crying about the woes of big, bad business, as the NDP refers to Canadian free enterprise. I would like to list some of the over 100 organizations which were consulted. They include the Chamber of Commerce, the Consumer's Association, the Business Council on National Issues, the Manufacturers Association, the Bar Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Independent Petroleum Marketers, and the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada.

I think it would be instructive to put something on the record to indicate how the Consumers Association of Canada views this. I have a news release dated December 17, 1985, the day on which this Bill was tabled. The Consumer's Association of Canada says:

> The new competition Act tabled today by Consumer Affairs Minister Michel Côté promises real progress for consumers and is a major improvement over current legislation. . . .
> Urging—

I emphasize the words "urging" for the record, Mr. Speaker.

> —that the bill get the highest priority, CAC's economic issues committee chairman, Robert Kerton, said it will help create "a marketplace where providers of goods and services must be innovative and competitive in meeting consumers' wants and needs if they are to prosper".

The news release goes on to say:

> It should also help prevent wasteful mergers that reduce competition and concentrate economic power in fewer hands without compensating consumers through better prices, choice, or quality.
> Kerton listed many positive features of the new Bill, including several that CAC has pressed for. Among them:
>
> Corporate mergers and monopolies will become matters of civil rather than criminal law, making it more enforceable.
>
> A new tribunal with no cabinet override will handle noncriminal matters; consumer groups will have a role in nominating tribunal members.
> Merger provisions will be substantially strengthened.
>
> Crown corporations will be included in the Act . . .
>
> Conspiracy provisions . . . will be strengthened . . . .
>
> Monopoly provisions will be strengthened . . . .
> CAC will be highly supportive of these amendments . . . .

I would like to make a few remarks with respect to Crown corporations. It has been the experience in dealing with competition legislation that Crown corporations have been exempt, particularly in cases of unfair competition or what is known quite openly as "cartels". We all remember the Eldorado case in which it was actually ruled that a Crown corporation would not be liable for action under the Combines Investigation Act to the same extent that a private business would. In the Eldorado case the ruling was that Crown corporations would be immune when acting within their purposes. In the interest of fairness, all Crown corporations which are engaged in commercial activity should be subject to the same rules of conduct as private firms. That is contained in the Bill and that in itself is a landmark measure.

● (1750)

Again to hunker back to my Province of Saskatchewan, we have a preponderance of Crown corporations. Many of them are of the monopoly utility type that in a very conservative fashion are seen as rendering the best service when publicly-owned. That is obviously a conservative notion if one looks at a community in the sense all of us do philosophically with its involvement in looking after individual needs. However, in Saskatchewan, where we have had a socialist Government for 40 years, we have many Crown corporations competing head-to-head with private enterprise, and with, I argue, very questionable reasons for being. Therefore, I find it very encouraging that provincial Crown corporations will be included in this legislation along with their federal counterparts and they will not be allowed to indulge in anti-competitive activities.

There is much more that could be said on this Bill, of course, but I thank you and the House for the opportunity to speak in support of Bill C-91.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer some comments on the speech which the Hon. Member has just made and on the speech of my friend from Churchill earlier. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) feels himself to be in an ideological battle time after time. He speaks in defence of free enterprise against the fearful socialists. I suggest that one of the very real difficulties that we in the NDP face, one faced by our predecessor, the CCF going back to its first leader in the early 1920s, is that where economic power becomes concentrated in few hands we cannot get back to the kind of competitive economy that my friend believes in. The alternative has to be public ownership. If we cannot use regulation to deal effectively with natural monopolies, what other means do we have but to establish public ownership and trust that the Government of the day, sensitive to the needs of consumers, will ensure that these public enterprises operate responsibly? I do not feel quite ready to go that far today. I do not want to see the corporations controlled by the nine family groups passing into public hands, because that would represent an incredible concentration of power. If those companies ended up in the hands of a few public appointees, how concentrated would the power then be? It is precisely because of that problem that we want effective competition law.

I was interested to see that in making his comments yesterday the Official Opposition critic quoted from Adam Smith on the matter of competition. He quoted what is in fact one of my favourite Smith quotations which is very rarely taken seriously. I challenge my friends on the government side to take this statement very, very seriously. More than 200 years ago he said:

> People of the same trade seldom meet together, even for merriment and diversion, but the conversation ends in a conspiracy against the public, or in some contrivance to raise prices.

Adam Smith was so convinced that business people would get together against the public interests that he did not even want a register of business people at City Hall so that someone could look the list over and say: "Aha, so these are the people that do the same things I do". Adam Smith hoped for a world in which competition would really prevail. It does not take a great deal of knowledge of economic theory among Government Members to realize that in competition of that sort, profits would melt away. Prices would be driven towards the cost of production. The existence of profits, which our friends are so eager for, are in a sense—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. On a point of order, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the purpose of the time for questions and comments, the comments and questions should be short and not consist of an entire speech. The Hon. Member would have that opportunity on another occasion.

Mr. Rossi: You did the same thing yesterday.

Mr. Redway: Who, me?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I think I signalled to the Hon. Member that the time may have come for a question.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the other issue on which I will just offer a brief comment is that in the Canada of today, where economic power is as concentrated as it is, we are perilously close to the kind of society that in days past our forebears in England criticized when they looked at Imperial Germany and Japan. We have economic and political power here which is in grave danger—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, it makes one tingle all over to be able to debate Adam Smith at three minutes to six. I would like to have the opportunity some other time. Throw in Edmund Burke and we will have a very good session.

As to philosophy, the CCF, the prairie grassroots agrarian movement, has nothing in common with the NDP. We all know that, particularly those who have been raised in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in precisely three minutes the six o'clock news will be on in all jurisdictions in this time zone. One of the major stories tonight will be the proposed merger between Imasco and Genstar. This legislation, Bill C-91, will, to a certain degree, address the issues involved. The Hon. Member has obviously given a lot of consideration to this legislation and I would like to ask him about the retroactive effect of the Bill. I asked the Parliamentary Secretary this precise question and he was unable to answer so I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether this legislation will have any effect whatsoever on the Hiram Walker-Gulf situation. If not, should this legislation in his view have a retroactive effect in order to ensure that that particular deal is properly scrutinized to determine whether or not it is in the best interests of Canadians? I am sure all those who are about to watch the six o'clock news will be very concerned about the whole question of mergers. I see the Hon. Member is obtaining his instructions from the Parliamentary Secretary across the way. I think he is about ready to answer the question.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if we should have that Member repeat his question. However, I think I got the gist of it. I would like to advise the Hon. Member that if he is here during Question Period every day he should take note of what has been happening in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which has been well publicized and the recommendations it made on the Bill tabled yesterday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: We are ready for the six o'clock news.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PENITENTIARIES—RECOMMENDED ABOLITION OF MANDATORY SUPERVISION RELEASE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, some 14 months ago, on the night of January 30, 1985, one Leander Chesterfield Savoury, known to his friends as "Pappa Lea", entered an Esso self-serve gas station on Jane Street south of Highway 401 in the City of North York in Metropolitan Toronto. At that time he held up the attendant at that service station with a sawed-off shotgun. During the hold-up, the shotgun was fired three times. As he left the service station, Savoury was accosted by members of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department hold-up squad and intelligence squad. They identified themselves and called upon Savoury to throw down his weapon. Savoury pointed the shotgun at the members of the police department. They, in turn, fired at him, and as a result, Savoury was killed.

Recently there was a coroner's investigation into the death of Leander Chesterfield Savoury. As a result of that coroner's investigation, it was found that at the time of his death he was on mandatory supervision, having been released from prison. At the time of his death, he was 21 years of age. He was a man with no fixed address. He was convicted for the first time in adult court for illegal possession of a weapon when he was 16 years of age.

Evidence at the coroner's inquest showed that Savoury was released on mandatory supervision in October of 1984, and that between that time and January 30, 1985 when he was killed in that police shoot-out, a period of time that was only about three brief months, he had been in contact with his parole officer on three occasions, once in person and twice by telephone.

The evidence given at the coroner's inquest also showed that he was the prime suspect in eight other robberies in the Metropolitan Toronto area during the month of January, 1985. In one of those robberies, the attendant of a gas bar had been killed by the accused robber with a sawed-off shotgun, the same type of weapon that Savoury used on the night of his own death.

Is it any wonder, when those facts were disclosed to the coroner's jury a few short weeks ago, that the coroner's jury said it felt the mandatory supervision that Savoury was on at the time of his death was grossly inadequate? Is it any wonder that the coroner's jury said as well that it believed that this kind of inadequate mandatory supervision was not an isolated incident? It is a common occurrence in this sort of a situation with mandatory supervision cases. Is it any wonder as well that the coroner's jury recommended that mandatory supervision for dangerous offenders should be reviewed and substantially revised? Is it any wonder that the coroner's jury in this case urged this House and this Parliament to adopt without delay Bill C-67?

Bill C-67 came to us for third reading some time ago. The Bill will give the National Parole Board the power to deny automatic release to dangerous offenders. Is it any wonder, bearing in mind all of these circumstances, that the public has lost confidence in our criminal justice system? There are some of us who feel that when a judge sentences someone to prison, that sentence should mean something. It should not be subject to being shortened at any cost or at any time. Even the Law Reform Commission of Canada has said that. At the very least, when a judge imposes a sentence, the person should not automatically get out of prison after serving only two thirds of his sentence. There should be a procedure whereby the National Parole Board in the case of a dangerous offender can require that person to remain in prison and serve the entire term. That is the sort of thing which is provided for in Bill C-67.

Bill C-67 was reported back to this House on February 1, 1986. It had gone through first reading, second reading and an extensive examination in committee. It was rushed through committee to get it back here at the beginning of February of this year. However, since that time nothing has happened. I hope that tonight we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary that the Government intends to get on with third reading of this Bill. Let us get this Bill passed and into effect so that the people of Canada can have a better sense of confidence in our criminal justice system.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the concern of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and also his efforts to improve the correctional service system in Canada. I wish to add to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for York East on March 24, as well as today. The Hon. Member commented on the verdict of the coroner's jury on the death of Leander Savoury. Savoury was under mandatory supervision when he died as a result of police intervention while he was committing an armed robbery and holding a kiosk attendant at gunpoint. The jury found that the two policemen involved were blameless and that Mr. Savoury died as a result of his own actions.

It is my feeling that there is some confusion about mandatory supervision in Canadian society. I would like to offer some clarification. I do not think that Canadians at this time really want the wholesale abolition of mandatory supervision for offenders sentenced to penitentiary terms. Mandatory supervision is an added measure of protection for society when these people are released, and that is the vast majority of penitentiary inmates.

Prior to 1970, inmates were released after serving two thirds of their sentence as a result of earned remission, which is often referred to as "time off for good behaviour". They were released without any supervision, just as if the sentence of the court had ended. In 1970, the Parole Act was amended to render these inmates who were released as a result of remission subject to supervision until the last day of their sentence. The rationale was that these inmates who had not been considered a good enough risk for parole were even more in need of supervision than parolees.

Since 1970, every person sentenced to a penitentiary term is under some form of control until the last day of the sentence. Before we decide to abolish mandatory supervision, we must ask whether the alternative of no supervision during this critical transition is better. There are some Canadians who want to abolish remission altogether so that inmates cannot earn any time off for good behaviour while incarcerated. There are some who even want to abolish parole so that a sentence of five years means five years to the day, no matter what. Do we really want such a harsh system in Canada, one which in effect would lengthen penitentiary sentences by one third?

Some of the American states which had opted for "flat sentences", as they are known, are reinstating a more flexible system because of the disastrous practical and psychological consequences of the other approach. It would overcrowd our jails. I hasten to say that dangerous criminals should not be released on parole.

There is a correctional law review committee within the Department of the Solicitor General which is mandated to study the remission system and the release process. The issues are very complex and, first and foremost, require clarification of our values as Canadians on rehabilitation and punishment. This committee will report in one year. I expect that from its study a clearer legal mandate for corrections will emerge.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I hasten to say that Bill C-67 should be passed very quickly. It should not be delayed by opposition in the other place, that is, by the Liberals, or by the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons, as we have been warned. If that Bill had been in place, it is possible that Mr. Savoury would not have been released. A few days before the release of this man, which was automatic under the current law, the Parole Board had commented in writing to the Correctional Services of Canada that this was "a dangerous release".

The solution is not further elimination of mandatory supervision but more flexible use of the Parole Board's judgment with respect to the release of individual offenders. Dangerous criminals should be kept incarcerated until they have served their full sentence. I trust that Bill C-67 will be brought before the House in the very near future.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES' EMISSIONS. (B) PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on March 19 in the House, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) stated:

> The Prime Minister has achieved a real triumph on behalf of Canadians and I suggest that... the Hon. Member should join other Canadians across the country in rejoicing over a major Canadian accomplishment.

The Minister was referring to the question of acid rain and the last summit.

Let us compare this major accomplishment with what was said in the House on March 11, 1981, five years ago, when President Reagan expressed his concern about transboundary pollution. At that time he said:

> We want to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no borders.

The reference at that time puts President Reagan ahead of where he found himself in 1986 at the last summit.

In addition, let us look for a moment to the recommendation in the envoys' report in which there is no promise to cut so much as one milligram of sulphur emissions. However, on page 29 of the report there is a hope that the Commercial Demonstration Program will result in some "near-term reductions in U.S. air emissions" which affect the Canadian environment.

With our hopes pinned on the Commercial Demonstration Program, let us take a closer look at page 29 of the report. It states that the Government should provide half the funding, some $2.5 billion, for projects which industry recommend for which it is prepared to contribute the other half of the funding. So what Canada has agreed to is a program which amounts to zero if the polluters who have consistently resisted controls do not provide the funds for commercial demonstration projects. Therein lies the substance of the Minister's optimism that some near-term reductions in sulphur dioxide emissions may then result.

At the very least we might have hoped that the envoys' report, or the commitment made by President Reagan, would have included a process for negotiating some sort of a clean air treaty, as was proposed in the 1980 Memorandum of Intent. We were told by the Minister to look at page 4 of the envoys' report. Indeed, page 4 makes a reference to the need for a bilateral accord. However, it is not contained in the recommendations but rather as a piece of background information. Nowhere in the envoys' report is there a specific call for action or a process described to negotiate a clean air agreement between the two countries. In this respect, it falls short of even regaining the position of August 1980.

• (1815)

With these points in mind, I would put this question to the Minister through the Parliamentary Secretary: Is it really a major accomplishment, as he described it in the House, or is it more like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself described it in The Globe and Mail of March 2, 1986, as being not such a big deal?

We heard the Minister of the Environment make a new statement over television on Sunday during Question Period. At that time, he said:

> We're going to have to have, in both Canada and the United States—specific targets for substantial reductions in acid rain causing emissions. We're going to have to have schedules to achieve the target and we're going to have to have specific commitments of cash for both purposes—We have a summit a year from now, in Canada, in which acid rain will be put on the agenda again.

The Minister went on to say that at the next summit, the discussion will focus on the questions of targets, schedules and commitments of cash. Yet the Prime Minister is reported on March 22 to have said that he had asked Mr. Reagan to cut U.S. emissions of acid rain pollution, but he cannot persuade the unpersuadable. That is a fairly realistic statement. Why then is the Minister of the Environment committing himself while the Prime Minister, the only person who attended the meeting, believes President Reagan to be unpersuadable? Is the Minister just raising false hopes for political purposes?

Much has been said about the Government reaching a new phase in Canada-U.S. relations on acid rain, but is it really so? If you look at the record, Mr. Speaker, and there is not much time to do that, you will realize that in addition to the Memorandum of Intent of August 1980; in addition to President Reagan's statement of March 1981 that he wants to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the water and air pollution that respects no borders; in addition to formal negotiations that began under the terms and conditions of the Memorandum of Intent of June 1981; in addition to the March 1984 formation of the 30% Club as an international initiative to cut acid rain; and in addition to the March 1984 agreements with the provinces renewed in June 1984, a lot of action has taken place. However, now we have to look clearly at what the Minister of the Environment said on Sunday when he spoke about emission controls that will be put on the table at the next summit when the Prime Minister and President Reagan will meet again. It is of course necessary to bring the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister down to earth with historical facts, but will the Parliamentary Secretary now tell us what precisely is the schedule of cuts in sulphur emissions in the U.S. to which the Minister referred during the television program on Sunday?

Adjournment Debate

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Canadian Government has always been very clear. It is that our objective, both by the actions we take within Canada and the accord that we must reach with the United States, is to reduce the sulphur emissions that are falling on Canadian lakes, forests and territory by 50 per cent by 1994. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) knows that full well. There has never been any question about that. If he would care to look at the other comments made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), indicating that we need to reach a bilateral accord with the United States, he would see that there remains no question about that.

We are fully aware of that position, but the issue here is whether we are going to be able to achieve it within the time frame and whether we are going to be able to achieve real results from real programs. I think that is a fair and legitimate question for everyone to ask. That is the reason the Minister said things the way he did on Sunday night and the reason the Prime Minister is not trying to tell anyone in Canada that the job is done or that there is not much more work to do.

• (1820)

In the time allotted to me, I have adequate time to account for the change in the position taken in 1981 when Mr. Reagan was here. Nothing substantial was accomplished by the previous Government or its Ministers to bring forward what we have today, that is, a significant breakthrough, and I am sure most fair-minded Canadians would agree. Apart from the real reductions which may result from the commitment of money and the co-operation of the American Congress with the American industry, we have a recognition that the problem is bilateral and requires a bilateral accord to achieve a successful result.

Mr. Caccia: We had that six years ago, in 1980.

Mr. Gurbin: If the process was there six years ago, it was going nowhere. I would have to say that the process was non-existent. The words were there, as were many of the comments of the Hon. Member for Davenport, but nothing was accomplished. It was not my criticism or that of the Government which indicated that time had been lost. It was a parliamentary committee which indicated that time had been lost not only in Canada—and the Government has put that in order by concluding provincial agreements—but in advancing the necessary agreements and bilateral accords with the Government of the United States. Precious time was lost in that five-year period. We are now on a substantially improved track. We all have honest and legitimate hopes that we will reach a successful conclusion within the next few years.

CHILD CARE—FUNDING OF SERVICES. (B) REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, on March 17, I asked the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean), who is also responsible for the Status of Women, a question about child care. I asked whether the Government was prepared to provide additional funds for child care services as an indication of good faith in fulfilling its election promises. Unfortunately, as so often is the case, the response was vague. The Minister used the current parliamentary task force examining child care as an excuse to put off government action until some undefined time in the future.

The fact is that the need for greatly improved child care services has been proven time and time again. The Government should have committed funds in its recent Budget to child care. This would be an indication of good faith on the part of the Government, and it would be an indication that the parliamentary task force on child care actually means something. So far it seems as if the Government is willing to use the task force as a way of further stalling to avoid its commitment made at election time.

As an initial first step to show its serious intentions, the Government should commit $300 million toward the child care system. That should be the Government's immediate response to an urgent situation. Over the next few months, the parliamentary task force on child care will draw up a plan to implement universal child care, but we should like to see a concrete demonstration of the Government's commitment.

The need for an improved publicly supported child care system has been demonstrated often. Some 20 or more studies in past years have documented the necessity of an expanded publicly funded system of child care. The recent task force chaired by Dr. Katie Cooke found that child care was in crisis in Canada. The current supply of licensed child care spaces is able to accommodate less than 9 per cent of children requiring non-parental care on a full-time basis. In the last 30 years the changes in family structures and the increase in the participation of women in the labour force have moved far ahead of government policy on child care.

The vast majority of Canadian women of child bearing age participate in the paid workforce. In 1983, 69 per cent of all women between the ages of 20 years and 44 years worked outside the home. Of course, this trend will continue. In 1983, 49 per cent of mothers with children under the age of three and 56 per cent of mothers with pre-schoolers in the three to five age group were in the paid labour force.

• (1825)

The percentage was even higher for mothers whose youngest child was between the ages of six and ten. The Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association pointed out in a recent report that there are about 172,000 spaces for children in licensed day care facilities, yet there are almost two million children 12 years old and under in Canada. For many families, licensed child care services are not available. Also, many families find quality child care unaffordable.

Because of unstable and patchwork funding for child care, it is hard to maintain high quality programs. Child care staff subsidize the real cost of child care by working hard for low salaries. Varied policies, funding and distribution services across the country have created a situation where some Canadian families have access to child care services and some do not. The care and well-being of our children is a social as well as individual responsibility. Women must not be penalized for maternity.

During the election campaign, which brought the present Government to power, the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised cash dollars for child care. He said:

> We view the provision of day care as requiring leadership in funds from the federal government because proper day care facilities are an instrument for economic advancement and fairness for women.

The need for child care services has been adequately proven and shown by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, by women themselves, by children and indeed by numerous studies conducted at the federal level. As a very minimum, the Government has an obligation to provide funding now for child care services to show a good indication of faith in Canada's future and Canada's children.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's concern for child care and the need for adequate child care facilities. I also realize that it will take public dollars to develop and support those child care facilities.

The Hon. Member must recognize that social justice is an important aim of a group of people who took over the management of this country in September, 1984. Of course, we had a few things to put in place before we could get to all of the things we wanted to do. Those had to do with putting people back to work and with giving people a sense of well-being. We do have four or five years to establish all of the priorities that we talked about in the summer of 1984.

As a Member of this Government, finding workable, affordable solutions to the present child care crisis has been and remains a priority objective. It is clear that public dollars will have to be used to develop and support a system of child care adequate to the needs of children and their families. The inability to pay for adequate, suitable, quality care severely restricts, in fact one could say removes parents' choices and unnecessarily exposes children to risk.

When we realize that only 9 per cent of children who need supervised care are in licensed care, we must accept that their families are not choosing the care they prefer, but finding what they can and, in most cases, are using inadequately supervised care. In other words, families must make tremendous sacrifices and may still find themselves in unsuitable and costly arrangements.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the provinces have the major responsibility for regulating and delivering child care. I am convinced that to improve the over-all situation, co-operative action is required. The Katie Cooke task force, in a comprehensive research document which recommends short, medium and long-term options, proposes a system comparable to the education system, financed solely from public funds coming from the federal and provincial Governments. How we will achieve this is very much in the hands of the parliamentary task force on child care which is seeking public input on the issue, the federal-provincial health and social services ministers and the finance ministers.

The Government is committed and convinced that it is necessary to take steps to improve the child care system. However, we must also strike a balance between our fiscal priorities and our social policy responsibilities. Whatever the direction taken, we will ill serve women, children, families and society if we fail to make significant improvements to the current situation.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TRAINING AND EDUCATION OF OFFICIALS DEALING WITH TAXPAYERS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from a Canadian taxpayer who in 1984 filed a correct income tax return. Three months later, Revenue Canada corrected his return and sent him a refund of $142. Six months later, Revenue Canada corrected its own mistake and asked him to pay back the $142, plus $9.50 in interest.

This taxpayer now has the following question: Why should he pay $9.50 interest, when it was Revenue Canada's mistake?

If we consider that 43 per cent of the questions Revenue Canada receives are answered incorrectly, I wonder how many people find themselves in similar situations, Mr. Speaker. Could Revenue Canada decide once and for all to train its staff to give the right answers?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REDUCTION OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Nielsen task force wants to phase out farmers by phasing out branch line rehabilitation and guarantees, allowing variable freight rates, make transportation payments to farmers instead of railways, and privatize the Farm Credit Corporation, all of which are opposed by the great majority of western farmers.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised he would eliminate taxes on farm fuels. He has broken that promise.

The Conservative Premier of Saskatchewan comes to Ottawa, ostensibly to fight for our farmers, on the same day the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board, who believes that free enterprise and market forces should be the centrepiece of farm policy, announces a 19 per cent reduction in initial grain prices. What did we get from Premier Devine in all this while here in Ottawa? Not one word. His indecisive and spineless conduct is inexcusable.

Again, western Conservatives and a western Conservative Premier have betrayed western farmers. To the Minister and Mr. Devine, I say, to quote Cromwell:

You have sat there too long for any good you have been doing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

Mr. Benjamin:

ROAD SAFETY

TRIBUTE TO RESCUE WORKERS AT QUEEN ELIZABETH WAY ACCIDENT

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in praise of the speedy, intelligent, and competent action of each and every member of the rescue team that helped to save lives in last Sunday's terrible accident on the Queen Elizabeth Way in my riding of Mississauga North. A pleasant outing to the Metro-Toronto Zoo for a group of visitors from Buffalo turned into a nightmare when the group's bus went out of control and smashed into a chain-link fence on the highway. The top rail of the fence was driven through the front window and the entire length of the 66-passenger bus, impaling two men and injuring many others.

The efficient and co-ordinated effort of Mississauga firefighters, paramedics, policemen, ambulance staff, dispatchers and hospital staff helped to prevent loss of life. The rescue team calmly worked to administer oxygen and intravenous medication while hacksawing through the pipe that impaled the last casualty extricated from the wreck. At the same time the rescue crew treated the many other casualties of the accident. The courageous and intelligent actions of this fine rescue crew from Mississauga should be commended.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

MINES AND MINING

PROPOSAL TO BUILD LEAD SMELTER AT TRAIL, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in light of negative comments which appeared recently in The Globe and Mail and other media concerning the plight of Cominco Limited's smelting operations in British Columbia and similarly the plight of the City of Trail, I want to assure the House and my constituents that the negotiations between Cominco and the Province of B.C. regarding Cominco's proposal to build a new lead smelter at Trail are progressing well.

I am keeping myself well informed on the progress of those negotiations, as are the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), and the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton). We are satisfied with the progress. We fully expect that an announcement on the positive outcome of those discussions is forthcoming and will be made before the end of this month.

IMMIGRATION

PROPOSED VISA REQUIREMENT FOR PORTUGUESE VISITORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, many constituents have expressed concern which I share about reports that the Government is considering imposing a visa requirement on visitors from Portugal in order to curtail the increasing number of refugee applicants from that country. This is no way to deal with the problem which lies not in Portugal but with our refugee determination process. Out of the backlog of 20,000 refugee applications, only 1,000 are from Portuguese.

The majority of Portuguese Canadians living in Toronto are originally from the Azores, nine islands a two-hour flight away from our visa office in Lisbon.

Instead of punishing Canadians and their families overseas by putting them to the uncertainty and expense of fulfilling a visa requirement, why does the Government not take some action on the real problems: the weaknesses in the refugee determination system, and the so-called immigration consultants who exploit those weaknesses?

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, many western Canadians must be recalling, with irony at best and cynicism at worst, the now transparently empty rhetoric spoken by members of the Conservative Party about western Canada during their many years in opposition.

With yesterday's announcement that farmers will be getting less for their grain than at any time since the Great Depression, with the international market-place playing havoc in the energy sector, and with the unrealistic cost-recovery deadlines imposed on the northern transcontinental route, the Conservatives are revealing by their approach to these issues that their real loyalty is not to western Canada but to some hidebound, stupid, and destructive ideological fixation on letting the so-called market-place determine the fate of western Canada while western Canadians dangle in the foul free-enterprise wind. Many western Canadians have rejected this view over the years. They have voted NDP. Many more will do so in the future in order to have a voice that can be counted on not to remain silent like the voice of the Tories they elected in 1984.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF CANADIAN ADVANCE ON VIMY RIDGE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, 69 years ago today Canadians achieved the unachievable. Sixty-nine years ago today at zero hour the barren earth erupted humanity. From dug-out, shell hole, and trenches, men sprang forward and advanced toward the Ridge. It was Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific that was on parade.

Brigadier General Ross said that he thought then that in those few minutes he witnessed the birth of a nation. Only a few of the 100,000 Canadians who advanced on Vimy Ridge that day are still alive. They are the final survivors of an army that did what the British and French before them had failed to do.

• (1410)

Today Vimy Ridge in northwestern France still stands as the most important battle in Canada's history. This is why each year the Government of Canada holds a ceremony at the majestic Vimy Memorial, on land deeded to Canada by France in honour of the 60,000 Canadians killed. We will remember them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NEED FOR MIRABEL SECURITY PERSONNEL TO GET DECENT SALARIES AND ADEQUATE TRAINING

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, last night on the program Le Point, we saw how lax security is at Mirabel and other airports—and in Toronto two months ago—and that it is far too easy to smuggle arms and dynamite aboard aircraft.

At a time when an unprecedented wave of violence is threatening airports in Europe and the Middle East, and after tragedies such as the Air India crash and the TWA incident last week, some very serious questions arise as to the effectiveness of security measures here in Canada.

At Mirabel, the regular security screening employees are on strike. They earn a miserable $4.00 per hour.

Since there are no anti-scab laws here in Canada, the replacements get only superficial instruction on security standards, which represents a threat to the lives of passengers.

Mr. Speaker, the regular employees should be paid a decent wage, and that is why I insist that the present contract be declared null and void and that the new offer reflect provincial labour standards, so that the qualified employees who are on strike can get on with their essential duties—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The 60 seconds are up. The Hon. Member for London-East (Mr. Jepson).

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH PARTICIPATION IN JOB ENTRY PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Montreal the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced the approval of 17 apprenticeship projects which will employ 339 young Canadians this year. This is only the beginning, the tip of the iceberg. Over the course of the year over 400 such programs will be under way across Canada, with about 12,000 participants.

These projects are part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy announced by the Minister as a means of giving our youth practical experience and real job skills. Over the course of the year $125 million will be invested in these projects. In addition, another 8,000 young people are participating in the Job Entry Program.

In total, $900 million will be invested in the youth of Canada as part of the commitment of the PC Government to Canada's future. Tens of thousands of young Canadians will benefit from projects which allow them to gain experience, develop needed skills, and ultimately get a real job.

This is what leadership is all about. Much still has to be done, but our record is some cause for encouragement when compared with that of the previous administration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE IN SECURITY AGENTS' DISPUTE AT DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): This morning, Mr. Speaker, we were visited by Mirabel and Dorval security agents and they gave us petitions. We have here a common front of Conservative, Liberal and New Democratic Members who are urging the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to intervene — he did tell the union representatives that he would — and give them a favourable answer today. In addition, as requested by the Conservative Member, the contract ought to be cancelled, those people should be given decent wages, and the security of Dorval and Mirabel passengers should be tightened up.

JOB ENTRY PROGRAM

YOUTH—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): In Montreal yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced that 17 job entry projects have been launched and will enable 339 young Quebecers to complete training sessions in various fields of activity. The purpose of the program is to help them gain experience and make it easier for them to join the labour force. Mr. Speaker, what a change from the slipshod programs of the Liberal Party!

These projects stem from our employment strategy policy aimed at promoting job opportunities for as many young people as possible.

This year, Mr. Speaker, $900 million will be set aside to implement that policy, including $125 million for job entry projects.

Between now and year's end, tens of thousands of young Canadians will benefit from a wide range of programs designed to give them lasting work anywhere in Canada.

Unlike our predecessors who were quite satisfied with window-dressing schemes, we have set up real youth programs.

AGRICULTURE

SUICIDE RATE AMONG FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, a recent task force report from Ontario highlighted a growing concern in rural Canada—the increase in the suicide rate. Suicide is now the fastest growing cause of death in farm families. Farming has always been a dangerous occupation and ranks up there with forestry workers and miners for accident rates, but now the suicide rate among farmers has surpassed even the accident rate.

The impact is most profound on farm families, from the youngest child with failing grades and emotional problems, to wives who fret in isolation at the prospect of a splintered family, to husbands who take to the bottle. The absence of unemployment insurance benefits, and severely restricted access to welfare for farmers trapped in the long downward spiral to failure, have not helped much. The much vaunted social net barely exists for Canada's farmers. The Government promised much more to Canada's farmers. Surely our farmers rate more than despair and economic ruin.

EXPO 86

EVICTIONS CARRIED OUT BY VANCOUVER RESIDENTIAL HOTELS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I gave an undertaking to the downtown eastside residents of Vancouver that I would put this question to the Prime Minister on his return to the House.

Later this month the Prime Minister is going to Vancouver to participate in the opening of Expo 86, which will be a triumph for Canada and a great credit to the Province of British Columbia and to our country. As the Prime Minister knows, I am sure, there has been a black eye recently with the eviction of hundreds of elderly citizens who have been thrown out by residential hotels so that they can take advantage of the short-term profit from Expo.

Would the Prime Minister telephone the Premier of British Columbia and suggest to him, as has the Vancouver City Council, that a moratorium be imposed during Expo to prevent any further evictions, or any excessive rent increases, so that we can forestall this continued injury to our weaker and older citizens?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while agreeing with the Right Hon. gentleman's observations about Expo 86 and the fact that it will be a success, I certainly agree that it has been somewhat tarnished by the reference to the issue to which the Right Hon. gentleman has referred.

I have spoken to the Premier personally about this matter and I have written to the Ministers responsible, indicating our concern in the hope that they will take corresponding reciprocal action.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport was in Vancouver during Centennial Weekend in his capacity as Minister responsible for Expo. He knows the seriousness of the problem but, I believe, with the greatest respect to him, only the Prime Minister can impress the gravity of the situation upon the Premier of British Columbia.

HOUSING

PRIORITY REQUESTED FOR SOCIAL HOUSING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing. He knows that in Vancouver we have a crisis in social housing. He knows that all funds have been frozen this year, except for a release yesterday on co-operative housing.

Would the Minister, when he travels to Vancouver on April 24 to meet his provincial counterpart, insist in any agreement with the Province of British Columbia that priority be given to co-operative, non-profit, social housing, and that a presence remain in federal hands in the signing of that particular agreement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the interest which the Hon. Member has in co-operative housing. I should draw to his attention, however, that co-operative housing is the only housing the federal Government will be putting forward that will not be fully targeted.

The Right Hon. Member has expressed concern about low-income earners in Canada. Every dollar, with the exception of the co-op housing program, will be 100 per cent targeted to those Canadian families who are in need.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR UNILATERAL FEDERAL ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Despite their posturing and that rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, social housing remains an acute problem in Vancouver and in parts of British Columbia. If the Minister of Labour is unable, on his visit to Vancouver, to achieve an agreement with the provincial Government, will he insist on unilateral federal delivery of social housing programs to alleviate the acute shortage and the hardship in Vancouver?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the initiative taken by the Government has been to increase the number of social housing units in Canada over the previous administration's policies.

Ms. Mitchell: You turned down Expo housing.

Mr. McKnight: We will be doubling the number of housing units available to Canadians in need over what the previous program delivered.

In 1985, Mr. Speaker, we increased the numbers in British Columbia by 23 per cent, and this year, if we can come to an agreement, we will increase the number of social housing units by 60 per cent over what was accomplished by the previous administration.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

REDUCED INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I want to ask him about the devastating blow to the Canadian farm economy as a result of the announcement yesterday of the very low initial prices for wheat and barley. In effect Canadian farmers are being asked to accept 1978 prices when they have to face 1986 costs.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to announce a major deficiency payment to help farmers survive, as recommended by the advisory council of the Wheat Board? Is he also prepared to organize a major meeting of all the grain exporting nations so that we can come up with a plan which will not make Canadian farmers the casualties of an agricultural trade war?

Mr. Benjamin: You wouldn't know a bushel of wheat if it hit you in the face.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Look who's talking. You wouldn't know anything if it hit you in the face.

Mr. Benjamin: When's the last time you shovelled any, Ray?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the severe financial problems facing grain producers, not only in western Canada but throughout the country. The Government has been very much aware of the needs of agriculture. Since the formation of this Government we have taken some 100 initiatives which have resulted in the spending of several billions of dollars. Last year the Government supported the western grain producer to the tune of almost $1.5 billion.

With regard to the announcement made yesterday, the normal procedure would have been to follow the U.S. loan rate which went down 27 per cent. We showed support for the prairie grain economy and the other grain producers in the country by lowering prices 19 per cent. That is certainly not good news, but it shows the concern which the Government has for agriculture.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES FARM BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is a strange form of logic to suggest that yesterday's announcement is going to help western farmers. It is going to hurt them desperately.

In the Prime Minister's meeting with President Reagan during the summit meeting in Washington did he raise the issue of the devasting impact which the U.S. Farm Bill will have upon western farmers? Did he ask President Reagan for an agreement to hold a major meeting of the exporting nations so that we can co-operatively find an answer to a problem which is going to destroy the western grain economy if the Government does not do something about it?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, at no time did I say that yesterday's announcement would be of help to anyone in the country. It is bad news.

Mr. Orlikow: Answer the question.

Mr. Mayer: With regard to the Hon. Member's question, the Prime Minister has raised this issue with the President of the United States. The Secretary of State has raised it with Mr. Shultz.

Mr. Axworthy: What's the answer?

Mr. Mayer: The Minister of Agriculture has raised it, I have raised it, and the Minister of International Trade has raised it.

Mr. Axworthy: What's the answer?

Mr. Mayer: We have raised it in such a way as to enable us to continue talking to the Americans to let them know our concerns. We have not gone down there and insulted them, and told them that their farm programs are unethical and unchristian, and called them pip-squeaks.

Mr. Axworthy: What's the answer?

Mr. Mayer: We want to have on-going dialogue with them in order to attain results, rather than just going outside the country and calling people names.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who made very specific promises to western farmers. Yesterday's announcement by the Government will mean a net loss in income for prairie grain farmers of $1 billion a year. That, added to their present burden, means that their income this year will be less than zero—zilch. Given the promises the Prime Minister made in the last election, why has he abandoned the western Canadian farmer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly aware of the fact that there is a serious problem in western Canada as it affects commodity prices. That is why the Government has worked so hard, with almost 100 initiatives since it was sworn in, to be of assistance to the agricultural sector in western Canada in particular. In fact it is widely known in western Canada that if there is a Farmers' Party in the country, it is the Progressive Conservative Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: It used to be. It's not any more.

Mr. Benjamin: It's the Dirty Eighties.

Mr. Mulroney: We have introduced capital gains tax exemptions, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Western Grain Transportation Act, and advance payments for crops. We have given substantial assistance to farmers in western Canada. It is not enough, we are going to do more, and with the help of all Members of the House we will be able to do so in the—

• (1425)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as a result of this so-called Farmers' Party, as described by the Prime Minister, 40,000 Canadian farmers are on the verge of bankruptcy. That was before yesterday's announcement, without considering the effects of that announcement.

Almost two years ago to the day in this House the Prime Minister said: "It is typical of the Government that when the interests of western Canada are involved it is always tied to something else. No wonder western Canada won't trust them as far as they can throw them." He said that about the Liberals. Why was that any more true of the Liberals then than it is of the Conservatives today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Because, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals, with the help of their sweethearts in the NDP, crushed the western farmers. We brought them back to life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is the difference between a socialist and a Liberal and us. We have brought in dozens upon dozens of measures designed to reward the productivity of the western farmer. The western farmer knows full well that we have been helpful and others have been less so. He knows full well that when he is looking for a friend in Ottawa, he looks to the Progressive Conservative Government.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): He may have looked to the Conservative Party in the last election but he sure will not in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't bet Bob White on that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, what is there in the Conservative Party's philosophy that could cause Government in one weekend last year to find $1 billion for the banks but this year take $1 billion out of the pockets of the prairie farmer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have put almost $3 billion into the agricultural sector since this Government was elected. We indicated that we believe this, while helpful, is not enough and we hope to do more. The Hon. Member raises the question about the distinctions between this Government and others. This Government did not give the farmers 20 per cent interest rates, and this Government did not tell the farmers to go sell their own wheat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR INTERIM PAYMENT UNDER WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Wheat Board. He said that his announcement yesterday was bad news. For most western farmers it is considered a total disaster. Since the initial wheat payment will not even cover the cost of production for many young farmers teetering on the brink of bankruptcy, is the Minister prepared to make a commitment right now to a $1 billion payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): I will tell you what I can say, Mr. Speaker. We are in the process of doing the final calculation on the figure for an interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We hope to have that in the mail and in producers' hands by May 1. We did that as a result of an amendment we introduced. We did not do what the previous Government did, make a small payment in the middle of an election for political purposes. We are making it prior to spring seeding so it will do some good for the farmers in putting their crop in the ground.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that payment is for the present crop year, not the upcoming crop year. How is it that the Government is able to find $1 billion for a bank bail-out over a Labour Day weekend but it is not able to find $1 billion for farmers?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You guys are using the same writers as the NDP.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): First, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that we did not bail out the banks. It was the depositors who had money in those banks who were the people who were looked after.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Tell that to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mayer: Go ahead and laugh. He should also know that yesterday we announced a couple of other things. We are freezing the maximum tariffs charged by elevator companies in terminals—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The NDP would not do it.

• (1430)

Mr. Mayer: You want us not to do it? Is that what the Opposition is saying? I can understand the Liberals as they do not have a farmer over there, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): As a farmer I would like to direct my question to Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. In April, 1984, the present Minister condemned the Liberal Government in a motion which he put before the House which said, "This House condemns the Government for its failure to recognize the importance of the agricultural sector". It went on to say, "... and urge the Government to resist the erosion of initial prices of western grain".

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just a question, please.

Mr. Hovdebo: How can the Minister make that kind of a statement and subsequently erode the prices of western grain by his announcement yesterday?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): I said yesterday when we made the announcement that it is a very difficult situation. As a farmer from Prince Albert the Hon. Member knows that we face the same kind of problems when we go to our banks in the spring to make financing arrangements for our crop. I said we are going to make a western grain stabilization payment as large as we can and get it in producers' hands with regard to—

Mr. Benjamin: It's their money.

Mr. Mayer: Part of it is their money. A third of it is their money, two-thirds of it is Government money. It is up to the Government to decide when and what amount the interim payment should be. We announced yesterday that we are going to be looking very seriously in terms of what we can do on the domestic price issue. As a country Canada has taken the lead, and always has, in international wheat agreements. Canada chaired the International Wheat Council meeting that was held recently in London to look at the international wheat—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Short supplementary.

REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Will the Minister announce at least a $2.50 per bushel deficiency payment to save those thousands of farmers who are going to go bankrupt because of the announcement that he made yesterday?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that makes it very difficult for Canada, as well as Argentina and Australia, to deal with on the international grain market is that the three of us, as countries, export such a very large per cent of our production. That makes it very difficult for Canada to compete with the Americans and the Europeans in what a lot of us think is a ridiculous price war.

What we are trying to do is work with the other exporting nations to make sure that when they are spending money that it is not going to be spent in such a way that simply drives prices down and hurts all of our producers collectively. Canada has been taking the lead in trying to bring about those discussions.

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a question the Prime Minister. Why is it that under the current arrangement the Canadian farmer is going to be paid $3 a bushel while the American farmer at the same time, when you take in the deficiency payments, is going to be paid $6 a bushel, twice what the Canadian farmer is going to achieve? Will the Prime Minister undertake to repair this difference in payment in some fashion in order that we can avoid more bankruptcies and more hardship on our Canadian farmers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): It is very simple. The American Farm Bill addresses two things. The Americans feel that they have lost a market share and they would like to get it back, and they believe that they can get it back by lowering international prices. We do not think that is going to work. The Americans are prepared to put up a massive amount of money to see if they can get back their market share. The estimates in the United States of the cost of the U.S. Farm Bill over the next five years go as high as $100 billion Canadian. We are simply saying that we do not think spending that kind of money, even if you have it, is going to get results as far as increasing prices for Canadian farmers is concerned, let alone for any other farmers around the world.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY FUND DISCUSSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Canadian Government is not capable of using its so-called special relationship with the United States to get a comparable payment to Canadian farmers. Will it at least convene a meeting through the Prime Minister of the Premiers of the grain producing provinces to set up and discuss a farmer's emergency fund as soon as possible in order to meet this situation?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): This situation not only affects Canada, it affects Argentina and Australia as with well. We have all been making those kinds of representations to the Americans to try to point out the concern we have, as well as the Europeans. If you want to go back far enough and look at the cause of the major part of this grain glut and the lowering prices, we must look at the European Community. If the Right Hon. Member wants to ask his question and be consistent, he should include the Europeans in that discussion, which Canada has already done.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Since he has been cultivating a very close relationship with the Americans and has had several meetings with them prior to this decision, and since the American Farm Bill was a factor before the last set of meetings, can he tell us what he has achieved through his close contact with the American administration? Can he tell us what he has given away in return to the Americans for having participated in their farm program and allowing our price of grain to drop?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Europeans have increased production dramatically in that part of the world through very large subsidies. It is causing problems as far as trade is concerned in many other agricultural products besides wheat. It is causing problems in beef, dairy products, sugar-beets, and many other areas. We have raised those kinds of concerns on a larger scale. We raised those concerns almost a year ago when we saw the prospects of what the U.S. Farm Bill could eventually produce. We have been aware of this and have been raising those concerns, as have other countries around the world.

We believe the best way of being able to have an ongoing discussion with the Americans, as with everybody else, is to do it in a firm fashion, pointing out some of our major problems without at the same time being insulting with them, which was the case with the previous Government on too many occasions.

COMPETITIVENESS OF CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Since the Europeans are now locked in a discussion of whether the price of wheat should go up 3 per cent or 6 per cent at the farm gate, and since the Americans are expecting the equivalent of something over $6 Canadian to their farmers, what is it that the Government is proposing to do to keep Canada's farmers competitive? We cannot compete with $3 wheat against $6 and higher. What are you going to do to make certain that we remain competitive as producers, given this world situation?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we addressed this question previously. We have the Western Grain Stabilization Act that pumped some money—

An Hon. Member: We had it last year.

Mr. Mayer: That is right, we did have it last year, and he should know that the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Board said last year that without federal government spending in agriculture in the West the total amount of money that farmers had would have been in a net deficit position, so at least somebody from his own province is willing to give the federal Government some credit for the spending that has been going into agriculture.

AIR SAFETY

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, and to paraphrase the Hon. Member for Bow River, the most ineffective one Canada has ever had.

How does the Minister intend to explain to the Canadian people, after all the assurances he gave following the Air India incident, why security at Canadian airports is still so lax, as was very aptly demonstrated the other day by two CBC journalists?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the Hon. Member has referred is being investigated. It would appear on the surface, at least, that there was a breach of security and I am certainly not going to deny that. A number of measures have been and will be implemented. To be specific with regard to the security screening, we are planning to introduce new standards for security screening personnel, and a new comprehensive training program. We plan to step up the monitoring as well. My colleague, the Solicitor General, and myself are in the process of preparing a joint memo to Cabinet which will provide for an enhancement of the security program at all Canadian airports, and that should cover the whole gambit.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the good word of the Minister is no longer enough.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT SECURITY PROCEDURES BE CHANGED

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): The Minister told us the exact same thing 10 months ago. Will he intervene now and settle the strike that is taking place in Montreal by the security agents? Will he change immediately the security procedures at all Canadian airports, not just with words but with action right away?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the issue of the strike of the security people at the airports in Montreal is being handled very capably by my colleague, the Minister of Labour. It is under mediation.

As far as the other suggestion that the Hon. Member has advanced is concerned, we are taking that into consideration. I am planning to call the executives of the airlines to Ottawa to discuss what steps might be taken, to discuss this particular issue that has arisen, and to see whether we can take immediate steps to tighten up security further at all airports.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PREOCCUPATION OF WOMEN CONCERNING SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to women's concerns about social programs, especially the Government's review of universal programs. Will the Prime Minister give Canadian women the assurance that this review will be a fully open one and that it will include improvements to universal programs, not just cutbacks?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the Hon. Member since she has referred to the reference in the Budget regarding social policy review. I know that some of my colleagues, including the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and others, have been meeting with groups which pertain to their Departments. That is just beginning.

I want to assure her that, from the perspective of women and the issues that concern them very deeply, that open review and our association and collaboration with them will continue. I appreciate the comments she made.

NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will he respond to the recommendation made by the National Action Committee that, in order to ensure the full participation of women's groups in their particular concerns about universality, there be adequate funding to allow groups to prepare detailed briefs as was done for the equality review?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot commit myself to that request on the floor of the House. It would also fall largely within the responsibility of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. However, if there is a request, obviously it will receive our respective considerations.

ENERGY

FUNDING OF HUSKY HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, energy and the security of supply are a major concern for all Canadians. My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I understand that there have been some very positive results from her meeting yesterday with the representatives of Husky Oil and the Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Is the Minister prepared to tell the House the results of that meeting?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Briefly.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, certainly we on this side of the House are proud that we are the first federal Government to put real money on the table for the Husky upgrader. At our meetings yesterday we did agree with the company and the two Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta to pick up, on a shared cost basis, the cost of completing the preconstruction engineering phase, which is about $90 million, of the upgrader. I believe it shows our commitment to security of supply at a time when energy prices are very chaotic. It shows our commitment to the industry at a time when other investment plans are on hold.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SECURITY AGENTS' STRIKE AT MONTREAL AIRPORTS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr.Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I think the Minister will agree, as some journalists proved yesterday on the program Le Point on the French CBC network, that security for passengers at Dorval and Mirabel is inadequate. Is the Minister prepared to intervene right away in the security agents' dispute, to ensure that these people are given fair treatment and also to ensure passenger security? Is he prepared to do something today?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the Hon. Member that there is a mediator in place—

Mr. Benjamin: Not the one you said.

Mr. McKnight: I am sorry. The Hon. Member has drawn to my attention that I said mediator Doucet yesterday. It is mediator St. Hilaire who is in place. I want to inform the Hon. Member that at this time the mediator has, through his good offices, put forward a proposal from the company to the union which the union is now considering.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The correction made to the Minister's reply clearly shows he is not well informed on the subject.

Would the Minister who just answered or the Minister of Transport be willing to meet with employee representatives who are here today, in order to settle this dispute? Is one of the two gentlemen capable of acting responsibly and meeting with these people in order to settle the dispute and thus safeguard the security of passengers at Dorval and Mirabel?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that collective bargaining takes place between two parties—the employer, and the employees represented by the bargaining units. I suggest that the Hon. Member wants the Government to intervene in the collective bargaining process.

An Hon. Member: What about security?

Mr. McKnight: We are here to assist both parties and we are available at any time to mediate and use the offices of Labour Canada to assist both parties in coming to a mutually agreeable understanding that can put people back to work and provide the security about which the Hon. Member is concerned.

ENERGY

OIL PRICES—REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATION OF FLOOR PRICE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Tommy Douglas once said that in the past, when the so-called market failed western Canadians, western Canadians did not hestitate to use other instruments like co-operatives or the power of the state to turn a dust bowl into a modern economy. If the Minister really wants to help the industry in western Canada why does she not negotiate a made-in-Canada floor price for western Canadian oil producers?

Mr. McDermid: Nobody wants it but you.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the late Tommy Douglas was also able to participate in the private sector as a director of Husky Oil, so he certainly believed in the free market sector for the oil and gas industry.

VIEWS OF SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Premier Devine of Saskatchewan said in his nomination meeting, and later in Toronto, that he favoured a $15 U.S. floor price for oil. Did Mr. Devine put forward that view at the meeting and, if so, why did the Minister not listen?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to report to the Member and the House that we had very fruitful meetings yesterday with the three western provinces. Our discussions included eleven Ministers and one Premier and we were able to examine some of the current problems facing the oil and gas industry in some detail.

Mr. Waddell: Did Devine put that question?

Miss Carney: As the Hon. Member knows, the various mechanisms available to Governments at any level have different impacts on different provinces. We are trying to work together in a co-ordinated fashion to ensure that any approach we take is the most effective.

I can just add, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Miss Carney: —at no time has Premier Devine or anyone else asked for a floor price for oil.

HUSKY HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Recognizing that the agreement signed yesterday on the Husky upgrader should be applauded by all Members in the House, when will the final decision for the construction of the project be taken? What is the time frame, and what is the target date?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleagues in the Alberta caucus for their strong support and their many recommendations to me both in the matter of the Husky upgrader and energy policy.

We will make the decision on the construction phase of the Husky upgrader later this fall when, hopefully, the oil pricing situation is clarified.

AIRPORTS

ST. JOHN'S NFLD.—FACILITIES AVAILABLE TO HANDLE AIR CANADA INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has informed the Departments of Immigration, Customs and Excise, and Transport that in order to meet existing regulations Air Canada will have to off-load, in stages, Newfoundland-bound passengers from its international flights because a security area big enough does not exist at St. John's airport to handle even the domestic travellers at peak periods.

Why did the Minister inform the President of Air Canada on March 26 that the space and facilities are available at St. John's airport when Air Canada says that they are not? Or was the Minister talking about the great outdoors?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the anticipated passenger traffic, the Minister of National Revenue has indicated that there are adequate facilities to handle that traffic. The Hon. Member is talking about planeloads of 200 to 230 passengers when, in fact, Air Canada is talking about planeloads of anywhere from 60 to 120 passengers.

OBJECTIONS TO TRANSFER OF FLIGHTS FROM GANDER

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, because there is no adequate security area, over 200 passengers on a L-1011 using this service, because of fog or mechanical problems, would be held captive aboard the aircraft.

Will the Minister confirm or deny—and he'd better not deny it—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —the existence of a policy letter dated December 17 from Customs and Immigration to the Minister's Department which lists serious objections to the transfer of flights to St. John's? Will he explain to the House how he can ignore serious objections such as this?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the Hon. Member yesterday, I did consult with my Cabinet colleagues, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Immigration, and all three Ministers responded in the affirmative that accommodation could be made. That is the letter that stands, not the letter to which the Hon. Member refers.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR OIL PRICE STABILIZATION PLAN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister will be well aware that unless some immediate action is taken, eventually the only players left in the Western Basin will be the large integrated multinational oil companies. What action has the Minister taken other than a study of the situation in order to respond to the request by the 100 Canadian independents who have asked for a price stabilization plan?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have already taken significant and historic action in the signing of the Western Accord with the provinces, which removed billions of dollars of taxload from the very producers about which the Hon. Member speaks. I would like to remind the House that under the Liberal program there were about 530 companies paying the PGRT. Only 70 companies are now left paying this tax. That is what we have done for the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister and the Government will know that unless some action is taken we will see literally thousands of jobs lost in the oil industry alone in western Canada. Last night we found out that we will be hammering the farmers a little bit longer. Where are the 59 western Tory Members who have the courage to stand up and say that what the Government is doing in terms of the wheat pricing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

LABOUR RELATIONS

SECURITY AGENTS' CONTRACTS AT DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question to the one I directed to the Minister of Labour yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, since Radio-Canada proved yesterday that security at Dorval and Mirabel airports is seriously lacking, can the Minister tell us whether he intends to ask for the security agency's contract cancellation and call for public tenders, making sure this time that the contract will compel bidders to abide by the provincial decree on security agents?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member, as I have informed another Member of the House, that at the present time an offer has been put forward by the company to the union. The union is presently looking at that offer. The collective bargaining process will continue. Labour Canada and mediator St. Hilaire are there to assist. The Hon. Member referred yesterday to a provincial decree which does not have anything to do with the collective bargaining process as it impacts on federal jurisdiction.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TALKS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Canada Petroleum Association has predicted that this year $2.2 billion less will be spent in the energy sector and that 18,000 people will lose their jobs. Why is it that after 12 hours of talks with her provincial counterparts the Government could agree only to have more talks?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement is entirely false. We agreed on the financing of the pre-construction engineering of the Husky upgrader, something which was merely a campaign promise in a leadership race under the former Liberal Government. It took hours of numbers crunching to come up with that project. We spent hours discussing all the various mechanisms we can use to aid the industry.

I can also add that we reviewed the terrific progress which the industry has made since the signing of the Western Accord, with a 15 per cent increase in employment, billions of dollars in new investment, which had been put at risk?—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Get serious!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS ON HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the money which the Government put toward the Husky upgrader was to pay for past development engineering and not future.

Mr. Shields: That's a lie.

Mr. MacLellan: Will the Government table the invoices with respect to the expenditures for which this money will be placed? Will the Government do this in order to give us some indication of where it will go? We want future energy development, not past debts paid.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my Department would be glad to assist the Hon. Member in researching his questions so that he can work from an appropriate data base.

This work will be done from now until January, 1987. I do not see how the Hon. Member can possibly suggest that the work which will be done from April until at least Janaury, 1987, is work which has been done in the past.

AIRPORTS

SECURITY—GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In spite of, or because of, the ability of a Radio-Canada reporter to breach security at both Dorval and Mirabel Airports, will the Minister decide to carry out the responsibility of the Ministry of Transport and take over all airport security, not leaving it up to the airline companies to do it on the cheap, which companies hire untrained scabs to carry out security at Mirabel and Dorval?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that I take the situation very seriously. As I indicated earlier, we are taking steps to upgrade the standards of the security screening staff. We are also taking steps to improve the comprehensive training program. Yes, I am even considering the suggestion to which the Hon. Member refers.

WAGES OF BAGGAGE INSPECTORS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that commissionaires issuing parking tickets at the parking lots at Dorval and Mirabel Airsports are paid over $6 an hour and the security screeners are paid around $4 an hour, will the Minister give greater priority to those who screen passengers, baggage, and hand luggage, over those who issue parking tickets?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in an earlier answer, the Solicitor General and I are developing a comprehensive enhanced security program for all airports which will cover the longer term. In the immediate term there are some measures which we are implementing. We are improving the system all the time.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that I will be calling in representatives of the airlines next week, as well as representatives of Burns Security Services and other security agencies, to see what steps might be implemented to address this very serious problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—REPORT OF ACTION CONTEMPLATED AGAINST LIBYA

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Recent information, as recent as two hours ago, suggests that the United States may be contemplating a military strike against Libya. While we are all desperately concerned about terrorism, will the Government express its concerns to the U.S. administration about the dangers inherent in escalating any military action in the Mediterranean at this time?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the American Government is well aware of the dangers indeed in escalating any action in that area or elsewhere. The American Government and others are growing progressively concerned about the irresponsible and criminal misconduct of some agents of countries which appear to be giving succour to terrorism and terrorist activity, which is reprehensible and completely unacceptable to Canada and every other civilized country.

POINTS OF ORDER

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my question during Question Period, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) appeared to be inadvertently cut off by the Speaker when she replied that at no time did Premier Devine ask us for a floor price for oil. I wanted to make sure that that was not lost from the Hansard record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE—WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) was questioning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and I inadvertently blurted out that that was a lie. I want to assure the House that I have too much respect for that Hon. Member ever to accuse him of lying, and I would like to withdraw that.

DROUGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to table a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents from the Dixonville area regarding the drought assistance programs for farmers in the Peace country.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron—Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition signed by residents of the riding of Huron—Bruce protesting continued operation of the Morgentaler clinic in violation of Section 251 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker: Would all those who are not presenting petitions please sit down or go somewhere else?

USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATING UIC BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and honour to present petitions from the Dartmouth-Halifax area in Nova Scotia, from Sydney, Nova Scotia, and from Lively, Ontario. All of these petitions protest the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act with respect to pension income being used as earned income for the calculation of benefits. All these petitioners protest and ask Parliament to withdraw the iniquitous provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from hundreds of people of my riding who call upon the Government to make sure that the consumer receives the benefit of lower oil prices at the pump.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I continue to submit petitions reflecting the absence of a creative youth policy on the part of the Government and I have 450 signatures protesting again the cancellation of Katimavik. The petitioners come from Sir Wilfrid Laurier University, Newfoundland, Victoria, Windsor, Saskatoon and Nova Scotia.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present another petition signed by 34 residents of the National Capital Regional who are very much opposed to the National Capital Commission's proposal to turn the Mile Circle into an embassy row. They indicate that Mile Circle was designated in 1925 by the Ottawa Improvement Commission as a national park and they are very much opposed to this change.

REQUEST FOR NEW ASBESTOS POLICY

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I have here four petitions from my riding.

The first one bears the signatures of Danville residents urging the Government to restore the kind of climate that should exist with respect to the use of a major natural resource, asbestos.

I have another petition signed by a group of people from Asbestos in my riding. Most of them are asbestos workers and they too urge the Government to implement a policy with a view to promoting the use of asbestos in the safest way possible.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of Richmond in my riding. They want the Government to come up with a good, strong and worthwhile asbestos policy.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 530 and 532.

[Text]

FUNDING OF WILDLIFE INTERPRETATION CENTRES

Question No. 530—Mr. Caccia:

1. What amounts of federal, provincial and other funds are required to operate the Wildlife Interpretation Centre (a) Creston Valley, British Columbia (b) Prairie, Webb, Saskatchewan (c) Wye Marsh near Midland, Ontario (d) Cap Tourmente near Québec City (e) Percé on the Gaspé Peninsula in Québec?

2. Is any other funding involved and, if so, from what sources?

3. How does the budget for 1985-86 for each Centre compare with the budget for 1984-85 and the estimates for 1986-87?

4. How does the number of federal employees for 1985-86 at each Centre compare with staffing levels for 1984-85, and those anticipated for 1986-87?

5. How many volunteer staff were required in 1985-86 at each Centre and how do these figures compare with the number of volunteers used in 1984-85 and those anticipated in 1986-87?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment):

1. The costs to the federal Government for the running of the five Wildlife Interpretation Centres during the fiscal year 1986-87 are the following:

	Federal	Provincial	Other
1986-87
Creston	$ 25,000 (operating funds)	$ 25,000	None
Webb	$ 75,000 (operating funds); plus $ 25,000 (Maintenance for building and parking)	up to $ 10,000	None
Wye	$ 125,000 (loan) plus $ 35,000 (maintenance)	None	Not available
Cap Tourmente	$ 12,000 (maintenance)	None	Not available
Percé	None	Not available	None

2. Yes. Creston—Province of British Columbia (through Creston Valley Wildlife Management Authority). Webb—Province of Saskatchewan and admission fees. Wye—Volunteer contributions and admission fees. Cap Tourmente—Admission fees. Percé—Province of Quebec.

3. The following figures include federal funds only.

Financial Year	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87 (estimated)
Creston	$ 133,000	$ 25,000	$ 25,000
Webb	$ 217,000	$ 90,000	$ 100,000
Wye	$ 282,000	$ 423,000[1]	$ 160,000[2]
Cap Tourmente	$ 185,000	up to $ 85,000[3]	$ 12,000
Percé	$ 158,000	$ 3,000	None

Legend

1. Includes $ 200,000 grant + $ 175,000 loan
2. Includes $ 125,000 loan
3. Includes up to $ 73,000 loan

4. Federal employees employed in the Wildlife Interpretation Centres number as follows:

Financial Year	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Creston	7	None	None
Webb	12	None	None
Wye	16	2 *	1 *
Cap Tourmente	10	None	None
Percé	9	3 *	3 *

*The Department of the Environment has lent in 1985-86 and will lend in the 1986-87 these employees to provide expertise and knowledge but receives reimbursement of their salary for services rendered.

5. The Department of the Environment did not keep records of volunteer staff in 1984-85 and has no access to records for 1985-86 or predictions for 1986-87.

HON. JEAN MARCHAND

Question No. 532—Mr. Blaikie:

Were any benefits granted to the Hon. Jean Marchand on the termination of his tenure as Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission and, if so, what was the (a) amount of any cash settlement (b) timing and amount of any subsequent cash compensation paid or payable as part of the arrangement (c) nature and value of any non-pecuniary compensation agreed to?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission has been advised that it is not the pratice of the Treasury Board to reveal details of separation settlements. It is the policy of the Treasury Board, however, that separation payments may not exceed two years' salary, with the precise amounts varying according to the circumstances of the separation, the age of the individual, length of service, and likely difficulty in securing re-employment. Each case is considered by the Treasury Board.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

GRAIN PRICING—DECISION BY MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour knows, earlier today I sent you notice of my intention to move, under the provisions of Standing Order 29, a motion for an emergency debate, if you should decide that the circumstances cited in my notice warrant that conclusion.

Briefly stated, my reasons for making this appeal are as follows: Yesterday, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) made a decision affecting the pricing of grain in Canada which will take some $1 billion out of the income of prairie farmers. This is coming on top of a situation in which 40,000 farmers are already on the verge of bankruptcy. Such circumstances are leading to a virtually zero income for prairie farmers this year. Our conclusion from this is that if anything constitutes the grounds for an emergency debate, this is it.

GRAIN—LOWER WORLD PRICES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as you know, we have also given to you notice of a similar motion that we believe demands an emergency debate.

The reasons we have put forward include not only the severe economic impact this matter would have upon the farming community, but the failure of the Government to come to grips with this situation with the United States administration to work out a reasonable solution allowing a proper agreement among the export-producing countries to resolve the problem of increasingly lower grain prices around the world and therefore the threat of major bankruptcies in the western Canadian farm economy.

• (1510)

Sir, we hope you will consider this motion a matter of deep urgency which requires immediate action.

Mr. Speaker: Both the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) gave me the required notice of their applications for an emergency debate under Standing Order 29. Since they in effect deal with the same subject, I propose to rule on them together.

The House will know that the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, and the Government in its response to that report, had something substantial to say concerning the Speaker's role in exercising the responsibilities of the Chair under Standing Order 29 and what the Chair should or should not say with regard to applications. Therefore, I am not yet persuaded that the circumstances set out by the Hon. Members in their applications establish the existence of a genuine emergency calling for immediate debate, as envisaged by the Standing Order. In my view, therefore, the applications do not meet the requirements of the Standing Order and I must rule accordingly.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Langelier) that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I decided to participate in the debate today because we on this side of the House, in this quarter of the House, are concerned with the increasing concentration of corporate power in Canada. We relate that concern to the provisions of the Bill and to recent events in the country which are escalating the takeover fever.

In general terms we support the thrust of Bill C-91. We are glad that the Government has finally brought in legislation. A lot of work has already been done. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) initiated the process of consultation which brought together whatever consensus there may be between business and Government as to the provisions of the Bill. He also initiated thorough consultations with consumer groups across the country.

The former Bill was Bill C-29, presented by Judy Erola when she was the Minister and the Member of Parliament for Nickle Belt. The Bill died on the Order Paper. The subject has been kicking around for years. I am told that the provisions of this Bill have mustered and mobilized business support, particularly from the Business Council on National Issues. However, I believe, and I am advised, that insufficient consumer consultation may have preceded its introduction.

The Hon. Member for Papineau, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and other Members have explored what we believe are some of the deficiencies in the Bill, and we will be presenting the appropriate amendments at the appropriate time. However, I should like to draw to the attention of the House, and indeed the country, our submission that the merger provision is not strong enough. The competition tribunal set forth in the Bill—while it sets up a so-called independent tribunal—may be an advance, but we do not believe that the tribunal will be properly served by part-time members. We believe that the expertise and the burden on the tribunal will demand full-time attention, both in terms of developing the expertise and retaining it and in terms of dealing with the cases which will come before it. There are no criteria for membership set forth in the Bill. There is no review by the House of Commons of the appointments. I suspect that this will be yet another field for random, wide open and rampant patronage.

Bill C-91 is a watering down of Bill C-29. Under the former Bill, the merger criteria involved what in effect was a 12-point test. Now there are only six criteria involved in the merger provision. For instance, the present Government has eliminated the past anti-competition activity factor. It has eliminated the innovation in market factor. The economic efficiency defence is now based solely on the achievement of the economic efficiency of the company in question, not on the benefit of savings to the consumer as was formerly the case. When one analyses the present Bill, one realizes that the Government relies primarily on, using the words of the Bill, "the extent to which effective competition remains". I refer to Section 65(1)(E). After the merger there is absolutely no definition of what the word "effective" means. It could be anything; we do not know. Presumably it is being left to interpretation by the competition tribunal as that tribunal eventually defines it.

Let us look at the provision relating to an abuse of dominant position where a giant corporation squeezes its competitors with non-compatible products, for instance. Under the Bill, the Crown must prove intent to abuse. That is almost impossible to prove, as the courts have illustrated in cases up to this point. I suppose the timing of the introduction of the Bill, long as it has taken to introduce it in the House, is coincidental. We have the Gulf-Hiram Walker takeover which is currently before the courts and before the scrutiny of shareholders. We have the Imasco-Genstar takeover, and we have witnessed an escalating takeover fever in the last number of months resulting in, we believe, an over-concentration of corporate power in Canada.

[Translation]

In its discussions across the country, the Government claims that we Canadians need big multinationals in Canada to compete with the big foreign multinationals. There may be some validity to this argument. We must have companies that are powerful enough and vigorous enough to respond to initiatives here on the Canadian market and on international markets, but in my view, recent takeovers do not support this argument. And if we analyse competition in Japan, in newly industrialized countries and even in Europe and the United States, we see a pretty clear movement towards the decentralizing of specific units where product quality can be ensured. Quality becomes the main factor in world markets, along with price, precision and especially customer service. And all these factors are just as important as the products themselves.

Takeovers by increasingly larger corporations are at odds with the principle of better quality through more defined units. And a number of questions arise in connection with recent takeovers: Where are the new jobs? Has the efficiency of both companies improved after the merger? Has competition really improved in Canada? Will Canadian technology be better off?

[English]

We have, incidentally, in a companion piece of legislation before the House a Bill which purports to relate to our financial institutions. I refer to a situation which is now before the Government. I speak of the attempted takeover by Imasco of Genstar. That takeover is being attempted in the face of a unanimous finance committee report of the House of Commons several months ago which protested and gave as a recommendation to the Government that a takeover by a non-financial institution of a financial institution be prohibited. That provision was reinforced last Monday night by the finance committee, again unanimously. It adopted a resolution adverse to the potential takeover of Genstar by Imasco. Why is this, Sir? I believe most Members of the House are concerned that a takeover by a non-financial institution of a financial institution is not in the best interests of the country. A financial institution so controlled can block or divert loans from competitors or to competitive allies. It can control cash flow. There is the temptation for self dealing that was only too apparent during the crisis three years ago in Ontario involving Greymac and other trust companies. Fundamental to our objections is the fact that the interests of the depositors are not necessarily going to be paramount where there is a conflict of interest in holding and where the shareholders in their co-related and blended interests will take precedence over the depositors.

• (1520)

I venture to say, although there has not been too much public debate in the business community, that about 90 per cent of the businessmen and women in Canada, if you were to ask them privately in person, are disturbed by the growing concentration of economic and financial power in Canada. I think if you were to put the question personally they would admit that they are disturbed that more and more assets are winding up in fewer and fewer hands.

Some businessmen have been courageous enough to speak out. I refer to a recent article in Maclean's magazine by Peter Newman. He interviewed Bernard Ghert of Cadillac-Fairview. Mr. Ghert in response to Mr. Newman's inquiry said:

When one entity is both a creditor and an owner of equity in a company, there is an obvious conflict of interest.

I regret to say that as this escalation in concentration has proceeded with an increasing corporate temperature the Government has turned a blind eye to it, and I do not believe that it is good for the country. I believe the advantage of widely held corporate institutions by thousands of shareholders gives Canadians a proprietary interest in equity terms in the future of our country. I think it gives people a stake, either through pension funds or through individual holdings in the future of Canada. As those opportunities for investment are diminished by this concentration, fewer and fewer Canadians will find a legitimate outlet for investment in their own country through the private enterprise available.

I want to add too that if these companies are privately held in larger and larger units, then the public has less and less ability to scrutinize the affairs of those domains that have a wider and wider purview over average Canadian life.

I believe also, in terms of the phenomenon of power, that too much concentration of economic power lends itself to abuse in terms of attempted use of political power. I would think this House should turn its mind to this issue. I believe the House would also want to review some of the amendments we intend to propose to see whether this vogue, this wave of takeovers, can somehow be controlled.

[Translation]

There is another phenomenon, the concentration of economic power in a few large cities in Canada, and I believe, and I submit to the House, that this is to the detriment of other regions in Canada. Such concentration will have repercussions on regional development policies, and management of these large corporations will drift farther and farther away from the small communities of this country.

Less competition has a number of immediate effects. Without competition, the pressure for lower prices diminishes. Without competition, there is no longer the same drive to offer a quality product. Without competition, consumers have a narrower range to choose from. Without competition, the number of information sources we have is reduced. Without competition, consumer power drops and corporate power increases. And Canadian consumers are the losers.

[English]

The more concentration we have, the fewer outlets consumers will have. There used to be hundreds of opportunities in various businesses in various industries in Canada. Now those opportunities, those channels of choice are being narrowed. The number of brands is being reduced. There are reduced options for the consumer. There is a continued squeeze on small companies. There is more and more temptation on behalf of these larger units to indulge in predatory pricing or restraint in trade at the expense of independent Canadian small business.

We recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this issue has to be dealt with in a balanced way. There has been study after study. The economic council has looked at it, as well as the C.D. Howe Research Institute, and you can name the provincial and federal governments that have tried to deal with the issue. There has to be a balance between our ability as Canadians to compete internationally and the protection of our smaller businesses, particularly the Canadian consumer.

I had the honour under Mr. Pearson, when he was Prime Minister of our country, to be the first Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Orlikow: Why didn't you bring in some legislation?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We brought in a lot of legislation. I want to say this to my friend from Winnipeg, that shortly after we set up the Department, got it moving and got it into operation, we had a change in leadership of the Party and the next Prime Minister elevated me to a different portfolio, otherwise I would have considered my interest in the consumer and the four rights of the consumer at that time. They were the right to choose, the right to be informed, the right to complain and the right to receive an answer. Those were the fundamental rights of the consumer at that time, and I doubt very much whether in this current piece of legislation or under the current philosophy of the Government that those rights are paramount.

What has happened under the laissez-faire attitude of this Government when it comes to corporate concentration? We now have an open season for the corporate raider. We have an open season for the asset hunter. We have an open season for those who wish to acquire assets as a short-cut to building a business and to building jobs.

As I said, I am particularly concerned with the impact of the phenomenom on small business. The bulk of jobs in small business give us the bulk of our new employment. Most employees of small business are women. Most of the opportunities for our young people will be found either in entrepreneurial opportunities in small business or by being hired by smaller business.

We can examine a lot of examples of over-concentration. I do not want to over-indulge myself at the expense of the House, but let us take the food and retail business. Every amalgamation, every merger makes entry of new business much more difficult. The giants control the price, the labels, the quality, the distribution network and the supply. Small business cannot compete with these giants in this particular theatre. More and more of the corner drugstores, the smaller enterprises and family stores are being closed across the country. Is that an advantage, Mr. Speaker? There are two sides to the question, but I think the loss in personal service and the loss in family proprietorship is not a net gain for the country. We will have more and more giants, fewer and fewer independent businesses able to compete, fewer jobs and more commercial bankruptcies.

I think, of course, the most important impact is on the consumer. If we take the recent situation in oil prices and compare the American experience with the Canadian experience, it illustrates quite clearly what I am trying to say to the House. Because of the diffuse nature of the United States oil industry, because of the intense competition, because of the multiplicity of refining capacity, when world oil prices went down world-wide, the American consumer got a far more immediate benefit than the Canadian consumer because competition was allowed to play. Here in this country we have only four major refineries. We have Esso, or Imperial Oil, we have Gulf, Texaco and Petro-Canada. Because of that concentration, I believe the Canadian consumer did not get the same benefit in lower prices as did the American consumer.

Concentration of power gives corporations more control over the pricing mechanism. I do not subscribe at all to the thesis of John Kenneth Galbraith that prices are uniquely in the hands of corporations. However, there is no doubt that the fewer the competitors, the less mobile and less flexible the pricing structure.

I believe, as does my caucus, and I believe the vast membership of the Liberal Party, that the pendulum has swung too far. We believe that there is now a concentration of economic power for the sake of concentration, maybe even for the sake of massaging a few egos, and maybe even for the sake of enjoying paper transactions at the expense of building business and the country. That concentration is benefiting fewer and fewer people at the expense of more and more Canadians.

I sense that this is a growing concern to the average Canadian. I think that our citizenry is beginning to realize that all of these mergers, takeover bids, stock purchases, and buy-outs are not just isolated games being played in corporate board rooms. What is happening will have a real impact on all of our lives. It will impact on the prices that we pay for food, clothes, shelter, books, movies, automobiles, telephones, and transportation, and on the quality and availability of these products.

We believe that any competition policy should have, as its primary focus, the need to protect Canadians from the real damage of over-concentration. We are not against business getting bigger. If a business gets larger because of efficiency, marketing skills, good management and product, that is fine. That builds products, jobs, and Canada's competitive ability. We do not believe that the same result is achieved by the shortcut of mergers and takeovers. We can analyze the net result of every transaction, and in most of these instances we have yet to see the new jobs, new efficiency, so-called synergy, and so-called competitive advantage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If business in Canada becomes bigger through efficiency, marketing, and a better product in competition with others, that is fair ball, but it should not be done by simply buying out the competition or squeezing it out with unfair practices. The Canadian consumer must be uppermost in the mind of the House.

We believe that this Bill, in its present form, has weighted the argument in favour of the corporate sector to the detriment of the consumer. However, we believe that it is a step forward. With proper amendments, which we intend to submit during the legislative process, we believe that the legislation can be salvaged and, if properly directed, can strike a real blow for Canadians against the overwhelming corporate financial power which is now emerging in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Leader of the Official Opposition several questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognized the Hon. Member for debate.

Mr. Gauthier: You had better read your rules.

Mr. Speaker: It is entirely up to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, but our practice has been that those speakers who have unlimited time have not been subject, under the rules, to the ten-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have known the Hon. Member for a long time. I will hear what he has to say.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I will ask two questions and will try to keep them brief. I have a list of 22 major takeovers which took place since 1979. Eighteen of them took place while the Liberals formed the Government. Why did they not act then?

Is it not true that the conglomerate takeovers which have occurred, which involve hundreds of millions and billions of dollars, may be very profitable to the shareholders and the executives of the company, but that most of them really do not add a single job or a single new technique to the country? Of what benefit are they to the country?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I tried to address the issue of the benefits. I would want to be satisfied in any individual case that there would be a net gain in jobs, productive capacity, technological capacity, and so on. However, in too many cases the immediate benefit happens to be for the majority shareholder. In many cases, despite reviews by the securities commission, the minority shareholders do not get the amount of leverage they might have. Without trespassing on a current inquiry, I can mention the concern of the Southam shareholders in the transaction with Torstar.

There were a good many takeovers in the years the Hon. Member mentioned. My argument is that the process has been accelerating in recent years. My colleague, the Member for Papineau, brought the issue to a conclusion by presenting an opportunity to strike the parameters of a Bill. Judy Erola brought that Bill into the House. As I understand, it was the intention of Mr. Trudeau's Government to pursue that matter actively. It is true that the problem did not arrive yesterday, but it is escalating and being aggravated. I believe it now needs the attention of the country.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there are, of course, those who will congratulate the Government for having introduced Bill C-91 almost as much as the Government has congratulated itself. I suspect, however, that those who will accord the most enthusiastic congratulations are the friends of the Government.

I believe that this Bill represents another manifestation of the trickle-down theory, or perhaps even the trickle-through theory. Beginning in 1969 there was a flood of attempts at reform of competition policy. Dam after dam was mounted in advance of that flood by big business. After that final barrier presented by the Gang of Five, we have a mere trickle of reform. I suppose it would be too much to say that it is a law against rape written by the rapist. It certainly is the illegitimate child of big business, the former Liberal Government, and the Tories. On the evidence, this Bill has ignored the concerns which would be expressed by consumers, labour, and others who, in the context of the consortium of the two old parties and business, represent the powerless, as all too often those affected are the powerless.

It seems to me that the Liberals protest too much. They propose to support the Bill and have it go to committee where they will do some hand wringing, followed, I am sure, by some Pilate-washing of the hands. This is not unexpected from that Party because it has never claimed an ideological basis upon which it would combat this Bill.

However, one might have expected a little more from the Tories. They are supposed to stand for an idealistic, free enterprise, capitalistic sort of society. However, do they really? Are they really in favour of a free market? Are they really in favour of all the interests of small business which are already ignored by Government action and victimized by banks with preferences for funding the mergers which have been so much a matter of discussion? Are they really in favour of the initiative, creativity, and competitive spirit which small business characterizes, but which has been so ill-supported, or are they in favour of the domestic feudalism and mercantilism which has evolved over recent times and has become of late such a matter of so much concern? Already small business is starved for funds as a result of capital being mobilized, not for creative purposes, new production or new products, but for the aggrandizement of power on the part of a relative few.

We have heard all too often during this debate the allegation that we socialists could not understand the attributes of capitalism which make it so worthy an ideal. The critics claim socialism constitutes centralized, co-equal control of economic and political power. It represents a system not subject to market forces which result in efficiency and creativity. They say that socialism lacks the element in the free enterprise market-place which so inevitably results in socially responsible action on the part of investors. They say that socialism does not provide that risk-taking will be rewarded. Yet we have to ask: Is centralized control by the Reichmanns, the Desmarais, the Bronfmans and the rest of the nine families preferable to state control?

What are the motives of those who are so heavily engaged in acquisitions and mergers? I submit they are nothing more than wealth and power. Power which The Financial Post says will inevitably lead to a relatively few families controlling every aspect of Canadian society; a new form of feudalism based on mercantilism which will ultimately lead to social unrest and the destruction of the kind of society in which we live and to which we aspire.

Where is the market-place discipline resulting from competition? What new products have been the result of the activities of the Blacks? Surely the disappearance in substance of Dominion stores does not testify to any benefit to the consumer in communities now left with one supermarket. What price advantages accrue to the consumer when market control means control of prices? What does it mean when the interest paid on borrowed money increases the prices to be paid by the consumer? Where is the social responsiblity involved in the trading games which go on to the benefit of management, whether they win or lose in their merger attempts? What benefit accrues to Windsor if the attempt by Gulf to take over Hiram Walker is successful and Seagram causes the disappearance of this venerable employer noted for its social responsibility and job security for so long? No, there is so much that is wrong.

This Government is really devoted to a free enterprise system which is based on the ideal. The Government adheres to the view expressed so clearly by Conrad Black, that "the traditional ideal of the Canadian private sector being controlled by a numberless horde of proverbial contented widows and orphans and other small investors is contrived nonsense". He goes on to say, and this Government agrees, that "financial baronism is unsentimental and relentless". And, I say, anti-social and not in the interests of the vast majority of Canadians. I believe this Bill requires further consideration. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is in order, therefore the debate is now on the amendment.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise to lead off the portion of the debate dealing with the amendment which will provide greater time for the kind of consultation should have occurred in the drafting of this Bill. It will give six months for the Government to meet with the groups who are really affected, the consumer groups of Canada. It is not big business, which has very successfully negotiated out of this Bill everything with teeth, who needs protection. It is the average Canadian consumer who goes to the corner store or supermarket, who buys a car or a service, who needs protection from the continual consolidation and empire-building we are seeing in this country. Nowhere is that more important than in the smaller communities across this land. People living there do not have the opportunity to go to two or three different supermarkets. They only have one. They are held captive to the pricing and marketing policies of that particular store. There is no competition. We have to give them time to have some input into the drafting of this Bill.

This process, I gather, started in the mid-1960s and was foiled time and time again by the vested interests of the big companies. They believe that free enterprise is the freedom to consolidate, to gobble up their competitors so that they and they alone are able to make decisions. We have seen them all across this land. We have seen company towns which go beyond the paper-mill or mine but do own the company store and the land. In some cases we believe very strongly that they think they own the people. We have to have a Bill which will allow them some kind of say, a Bill which will really provide teeth in our advertising laws so that consumers know exactly what they are getting. Right now only two of the six sectors in the Advertising Act are effective in any way. That certainly does not help the people of this country.

Throughout this debate we have heard from my colleagues who have suggested very strongly that the Bill before us is nothing more than a public relations exercise to try and give the people of Canada the impression that there are going to be new measures to protect them, to ensure that there is fair competition. However, what we have seen elsewhere in the Government should have led us to recognize the truth behind this Bill.

We have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) moving to deregulate transportation; that is, to remove the rules so that Government can no longer direct the operations of our transportation companies. We have, on the other hand, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) who has moved to take the rules off the game in terms of energy. It should be no surprise to us that we have Bill C-91, which, in effect, does not move to apply new and stronger rules into the operation of companies in this country.

This should not be a surprise as it is consistent with the philosophy of the Conservative Party. They are not prepared to go to bat for those Canadians, the average man and woman throughout this country who looks to the Government for some protection. They want to be protected from that ad that offers them a golden deal, whether it is on a car or on a tape deck or whatever, only to find when they have been enticed down to the store that it is not there, or it is not the way it was said to be. They need that kind of protection. It is the responsibility of Governments, whether at the federal, provincial or municipal level to provide that leadership so we can protect our consumers. We are not necessarily talking about dictating to companies how they conduct their business, but we are talking about ensuring that the rules of the game are fair, balanced and applicable to all.

I think we all have instances of lack of competition in our home community. We have one in Thunder Bay in broadcasting. Owned by one company we have a CBC television outlet, a CTV television outlet, an AM radio outlet, and an FM radio outlet, along with the local television listings. In radio we have competition. We have seen the value of aggressive competition in the improvement in the quality of services in radio. In addition to the one that is owned by the conglomerate, we have a separate AM commercial station, a local CBC outlet with local production, local news gathering, as well as CBC-FM. We have competition within the broadcasting industry in terms of radio. In terms of the listings for television radio we have competition both from the newspapers—the daily and the weekly—as well as from the publication put out by this company.

In television we have no local competition. We have seen over the years that the quality of the services provided are not anywhere near what they are in other communities. We have one news package. At six o'clock you can sit down in front of your TV in Thunder Bay and turn on either Channel 2 or Channel 4 and get the same news package. You do not get a comparison. There is no competition to outhustle the other guy for television news. There is no competition to provide the best quality programming. Competition can be extremely beneficial to the consumers, whether they are consumers of television or radio, or consumers who are buying those necessities of life.

It is time that this Government took this Bill back, took the six months that we are prepared to give them to redo it and bring it back in a form that will very positively impact on consumers of this country, and that will finally tell big business what they can do with their tactics. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about Bill C-91 which was introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post (Mr. Côté). In the light of the Minister's past experience with respect to consumer protection, particularly concerning Quebec's oil industry, I would suggest this is another failure and most Canadians simply cannot have confidence in him. He may be very pleasant and a real gentleman, but unfortunately he is a Minister from Quebec and, in this Government, he has no clout. He is powerless and did not even budge when he and all Quebecers were held up to ridicule here in the House of Commons by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). And, on behalf of I do not know whom, this man who claims to be Minister of Consumer Affairs—I think he has a tendency to protect companies more than consumers—has introduced a Bill which is incomplete and does not provide enough consumer protection.

As in many other cases, Mr. Speaker, we get the Bill after certain deals have been made. I am referring to the oil industry. We all remember the famous O'Farrell report which was tabled by this Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post and in which it was clearly established that Quebec's refineries would not operate at full capacity—against the best interests of Quebecers—if the Government endorsed and approved the proposed sale of the Montreal East Gulf refinery to Ultramar.

Mr. Speaker, at a press conference the Minister made a firm commitment eight times in response to Ministers that he would make the report public the following Friday. The press conference was held on Wednesday, and I was there. On Thursday morning, the day after the press conference, the Minister just did not have anything more to say and we finally got the report long after the time it should have been released for useful debate. The Government did nothing to prevent what will be described in Quebec's history as a barbaric move against Quebecers: it approved a deal enabling a foreign company to buy a refinery—yet there were prospective Canadian buyers—only to shut it down, throw 450 Montreal East workers out on the street and, worse still, eliminate the competition which was the protection of Quebec consumers.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Government speaks about a tribunal in this bill. How will this tribunal be constituted and how will its members be appointed? In view of all that has happened since September 4 as concerns patronage, corruption and appointments, and of all the mistakes made by Ministers and other members of this Government, how can we of the Opposition trust these people and still be serious about our responsibilities to our constituents and the Canadian people? How can we trust these people who will make appointments strictly for political reasons when we know that the great majority of those appointed by this Government will be representatives of the industry who care nothing about the consumers and who think only about their profits?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister has introduced this bill and we know that he will soon be tabling other amendments concerning drugs which will go against the interests of consumers. It is a fact that large companies, multinationals are putting pressure on this Government and it is true that the friends of Brian carry a lot of weight and have a lot of money. Mine do not, but they are sincere, honest and ordinary people. They are consumers.

An Hon. Member: You are all angels in Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: The best proof of this, Mr. Speaker . . . the Hon. Member has just said that all the people in Sainte-Marie are angels. In fact, everyone read in the newspapers about the $7 million winners in Sainte-Marie. We had a good proof of the honesty of these people when someone found the winning ticket and brought it back to its rightful owner and the winnings were shared equally. This clearly shows the honesty and generosity of poor people. They could have made a token gesture like people in high society often do and given a mere $50,000 while keeping $7 million for themselves, but they shared this money equally, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I know that in committee my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who have much experience in this area, with the support of consumers associations, will make suggestions and fight to amend this Bill for the purpose of improving it.

Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons why the Bill as introduced is unacceptable, not only because of its lack of substance or effectiveness, and because of the way cases will be heard and people will be appointed to the Tribunal, but especially because of the lack of confidence Canadians have in this Conservative Government generally and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in particular.

Mr. Speaker, all polls indicate clearly, over and over again, that Canadians have no confidence or, to use an expression which everybody can understand, cannot "trust" this team and especially the Prime Minister. That is why the Liberal Party will do its utmost to force the Government to give this Bill some credibility, to ensure that, throught an appointment formula, consumers in every region—Canada is a large country and people in Quebec think differently from those in Alberta and have different concerns—are duly represented on this committee. We must not let the Government alone appoint the people on this committee, for they would then be strictly large corporation people.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude with this, because there are in my party a number of my colleagues who know this subject better than I do and who have some comments to make. But I want you to know that over the next few days and weeks, the Liberal Party will fight, under the leadership of my colleagues and friends the Hon. Member for Papineau and Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, to ensure that, once adopted, the Bill will protect first and foremost consumers' interests.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), in his attempt to have the Government reconsider its position on this legislation by delaying second reading for six months.

The Government has failed in its effort to address the issue of competition in a fair and equitable manner. Instead, it has introduced a Bill which it believes will improve the opportunities of consumers and effectively deal with business concentration in this country. However, the fact is that the Bill is hopelessly inadequate. The Government is extremely negligent when it puts forward a Bill that will not protect Canadians from the effects of corporate concentration in this country.

When one considers the harm that will come to consumers, small and medium sized businesses, I am amazed that here has not been a great movement by that business sector to tell the Government that it has betrayed them.

The Conservative Party of Canada has stood up for many years to say that they represent small business and that spirit of independence and driving force which has made the economy in all parts of this country work. It is that sector which hires the largest number of people and services all the communities in this land. The Conservative Party has falsely stood up to say that it supports small business and will protect and nurture that sector of the economy. This Bill is a betrayal of that position. The Government had a responsibility to introduce effective competition legislation, yet this Bill is misleading and simply ineffective.

The previous Government failed hopelessly in addressing this question. It shackled small business with many constraints. It allowed the chartered banks to charge enormous interest rates that essentially destroyed many small businesses in this country and wiped out the investments of thousands of people who had invested their savings in small business. They worked hard, only to have the previous Government completely destroy the initiative and wipe out their investment and the services they provided throughout the country. That destruction of small business took place because of a lack of any effective competition legislation.

The Conservatives told small business how they would assist them, yet this Bill represents the single largest failure by the Government to protect small business.

What is the purpose of competition legislation? It is to address the question of whether a sector of the economy should be controlled by three or four large players who determine the sourcing of raw material, the sourcing of supplies to that sector, produces the bulk of the material within that sector and determines who will distribute and supply it in the communities. The fact is that many of our sectors of the economy are controlled by three or four powerful giants. Furthermore, they do not compete with each other but divide the country into market shares and determine which small and medium sized businesses can participate in the economy. They begin to informally fix prices, determine supply and essentially decide which businesses will be allowed to participate and thereby essentially drive out other businesses.

We need fair and strong competition legislation that will protect small businesses and guarantee that the market-place is indeed free and open to participation. This extremely weak piece of legislation will not accomplish any of those goals but will ensure that concentration continues and that an increasing number of small businesses will be driven out in favour of one large business within a sector.

The role of the chartered banks in controlling the economy has been pointed out today. As well, we have heard what major oil companies have done to squeeze out small distributors and the difficulties they have had in obtaining supplies and setting proper prices in their communities. Those smaller suppliers have asked Members of Parliament for improvements, but the louder voices have suppressed those requests.

The Conservatives made the same mistake as the previous Liberal Government. They have left the small business sector to hang out to dry.

It has also been mentioned that the publishing sector is in the same dilemma. Every year an increasing number of independent small newspapers fall to the newspaper chains. Ultimately the single thought of a single owner will be conveyed to hundreds of communities and the quality of news that appears will be reduced. Indeed, the Kent Commission pointed out that there were some very severe problems with concentration in that sector. Those concerns were ignored. At that time Conservative Members of the House chose to sensationalize it. They suggested that there were tremendous anti-democratic manoeuvres at work and that the results of the commission had to be deeply buried.

• (1610)

In fact, there were some extremely good ideas which came out of the Kent Commission. These ideas would have seen a large number of publications fostered in a community, providing an opportunity for different ideas which true working democracies bring out. However, the Government refuses to acknowledge that type of thing, at least with this legislation. It refuses to fulfil a responsibility to protect an independent and flourishing small business sector. Instead, its protection has been extended to the majors in each sector; to the large oil companies, to the large chartered banks and to the large two or three firms working within each economic sector.

The House has been given an opportunity today to suspend this Bill for six months while we see developed a stronger piece of legislation. I am certain other of my colleagues will want to share their opinions on this matter. It is my sincere hope that it will be suspended. This would give the Government an opportunity to fulfil its responsibilities to the small business sector, to protect it and allow it to grow and flourish in those communities.

There are many parts of the country in which the recession is not yet over. In those parts of the country there are massive lay-offs. As an example I put forward the forest industry in British Columbia. The paycheques and the strength of economy are just not there. There has been tremendous harm done to the people who work in those communities. The small businesses which depend upon them have not only been harmed by the recession, they have been harmed by the tremendous increases in oil prices and interest rates. They have been harmed by the imposition of taxes which the Government has placed on them. They have been harmed by the cut-backs of basic transportation services and of postal services. The irresponsible cumulative effects of the actions of the Conservative Government have severely handicapped many small businesses.

The legislation before us is another example of the irresponsible behaviour of the Government. It has failed to live up to its responsibility to provide that protection to small business, to ensure that there is an adequate framework within which real competition can take place in the market-place. I will now terminate my remarks so that other Members of the House can make their contributions.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased with this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-91, since it concerns a subject that is very much in the news at this time and that is being discussed and debated in many circles.

It is also a subject that has been studied, analyzed and reviewed for a number of years. One of my colleagues said in the course of the debate on Bill C-91 that there had been six or seven attempts in the past to improve this legislation. I must say that, quite frankly, I think there are some very good reasons for wanting to improve the legislation.

In recent years, Mr. Speaker, as discussions and negotiations went on and appropriate remedies were being considered, we saw a number of mergers and such like and finally came to the conclusion that our economy was increasingly becoming a world of very large corporations, an economy with only a few large financial institutions, and I must admit that these mergers and takeovers were not and are not always in the best interest of the consumer.

I feel that for the time being we should support the Government's initiative, which in the circumstances would seem to be offering an improvement over the previous situation. However, Mr. Speaker, I think that once we have accepted the principle that the situation needs improvement and we are prepared to make the effort to introduce the appropriate remedies, and there is a general willingness to do so, we should also be prepared to take the time to consider what has to be done to achieve the best possible results.

I recognize that it is not an easy subject and that it is not always possible to foresee in advance everything that could happen, but I believe that there is unanimity on a number of points. For instance, everyone recognizes that, more often than not, competition means efficiency and, in most cases, increased productivity. Competition is also to the advantage or in the interests of consumers. In many respects, it is also a major cause of technological improvement. These are principles which everyone must recognize.

However, it seems to me that there are great dangers if the mechanisms provided are incomplete or badly articulated to the extent that the law cannot be effective or useful to solve future difficulties and problems.

In the past few years I have seen situations which are altogether unacceptable, in my opinion. We are now debating Bill C-91 entitled an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof. Various speakers have referred to banks, to the Patent Act and to a wide range of issues, and I think that the average Canadian consumer is lost in that maze of legislative provisions.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that this Bill will have an impact on the day-to-day life of practically all Canadians.

I am talking about common situations that can be found everywhere. For example, in our ridings, outside major urban centres, we have all kinds of small businesses which are forced to make considerable efforts to market their products. In many cases those small businesses have to face very well organized and structured competitors who have ready access to huge financial resources. The unfortunate result is that many small businesses are literally gobbled up, not to say destroyed, because big companies are always intent on doing away with competition. There are many such examples.

There are also other factors which in my view are part of the consumer's day-to-day life. We have those big corporations which, in order to strangle, to kill competition, will offer a whole range of products at retail prices that are well below the cost prices of other small retailers.

How is it then possible for a small businessman who does not have the purchasing power of this or that big chain to survive, when he is forced to sell a considerable volume of products at much higher prices, because his cost prices are higher than the selling prices of the big companies?

Mr. Speaker, because of all the many situations that are so detrimental to Canadians and consumers, it is our duty as a Parliament, first, to look for an improvement, but also to look for the best possible improvement. And it seems to me that there are some flaws in the legislation that could be amended if the Government committed itself to clearly and openly protecting the interests of consumers. Of course, there are good points. Let me mention only one, the fact that this is no longer a criminal matter, that the standard of proof will now be the one used before civil courts, the test being the weight of evidence. This is a significant improvement. However, the fact that there is no reference at all, in whatever form, to the so-called "lost leader" seems to be quite an oversight.

Another major oversight that was emphasized by a number of my colleagues is the fact that appointments are left to the discretion of the Government. Those appointments are not subject to the recently introduced mechanism designed to monitor or oversee them. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, there is every reason to believe, in view especially of this Government's record, that party hacks will be favoured in that process, and, of course, they will be selected from private enterprise which will then have the responsibility of administering the Act. This looks ominous to me, and I am extremely concerned.

Mr. Speaker, it also seems obvious, looking at this legislation, that very large corporations will be clearly favoured as against the small ones.

As I have already explained, big corporations have substantial capital and they are always willing to inject millions of dollars, and even tens of millions of dollars in the system to block the opposition of small groups of consumers or other people who would like to express their disapproval. These corporations do so by investing either in their operation or in public relations so that, eventually, they must always win over those who are not as able to express themselves because they do not have the same resources.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when we try to correct the situation, we should make it easier for third parties and all those who defend the interests of consumers to present a united front when they make a claim of some kind. This is another weakness which I find completely unacceptable. If the Government really wanted to do something practical and reasonable about this major concern which has been discussed for decades, I think that it would be very simple to make the necessary changes quickly. We would then be able to give quick passage to the Bill as it would be in the best interests of consumers.

For the moment, after looking at Bill C-91, I have the feeling that the dice are definitely loaded in favour of big business and, naturally, to the disadvantage of the consumer. I think that we must try to bring back some balance to protect adequately the interests of consumers, and I trust that this will be done soon when further amendments are introduced.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to take part in this debate. I wish I had been able to speak sooner so I might have had more time. I would like to warn my good friends on the Government side that I intend to do a little bit of philosophizing in the name of and for the welfare and good order of the so-called free enterprise system. That might surprise Hon. Members but that is my intent.

• (1620)

The motion before us is to provide for a six-month hoist. The matter could be dealt with if the Government would agree to take this Bill back to the drawing board. I think the Bill deserves some redrafting and reconsideration by the Government, if for no other reason than to get it passed much more quickly.

All of us agree that we have been waiting a long time for new and updated competition legislation. However, as long as the legislation is built on the traditional theory of free enterprise and market forces, then we have the same problem we have had for the last many years.

Free enterprise is great in theory. I suppose one could say the same thing for the positions of Karl Marx and Adolf Hitler. They are great in theory.

Mr. Andre: I don't think so. I wouldn't say that.

Mr. Benjamin: However, in practice—I would say to my hon. friend from Calgary that one of the things that drives people to totalitarianism on the left or the right is the implementation of the free enterprise theory in practice. People are driven to those sorts of extremes.

Mr. Andre: Revolutions and armed forces.

Mr. Benjamin: My colleagues and I are trying to promote a revolution at the ballot boxes, not at the end of a bayonet.

What underlies the theory of free enterprise and free market forces is the maximization of profit. In other words, Mr. Speaker, in a free enterprise system you do anything you have to do to make a buck, no matter who it hurts, whether it is the consumers or your own country.

I would like to say at the outset that members of the New Democratic Party are not opposed to making a profit. We never have been. We are for real competitive profit making in the private sector. We are against profit taking in the absence of real enterprise. To me, Sir, free enterprise means trying to do your best to make a conscionable profit based on the quality, durability, price, service and efficiency provided by whatever product is being sold.

The main problem with the theory of free enterprise and free market forces which needs to be considered over the next six months is that it is an invitation, as if one were needed, to greed, selfishness and the asking of "what's in it for me?" Tommy Douglas, who Members on all sides of the House have extolled at length in the House and all over the country, said many times many years ago that the trouble with free enterprise is that too much of it is neither free nor enterprising.

Mergers and takeovers are valid only if they pool resources and research, resulting in the maximum use of technology and efficiency which allows not only for a conscionable profit but provides the maximum benefit to the employees and consumers of that industry. Surely mergers and takeovers are invalid if, as and when they reduce competition, obtain market control over any product or sector of a market, or are designed to make quick bucks in rapid turnover or in market speculation with shares. In most cases, mergers and takeovers do not create new jobs. In fact, in most cases they decrease jobs.

• (1630)

There have been countless instances where the instigators of mergers and takeovers arrange financing from the banks. Much of those funds come from the deposits of ordinary Canadians who have savings accounts, share accounts or term deposits in those banks. They use the money of Canadian citizens by arranging loans with financial institutions for their mergers or takeovers.

I could never understand why a large corporation in the transportation business would want to become involved in the oil and gas pipeline business or would want to become involved in mining. If one is involved in transportation, one is involved in transportation. Why not do a good job in what one has been set up to do?

I should like to refer to the drug business and to agriculture, both of which are and should remain in the public domain. To paraphrase Tommy Douglas once again—and it is something with which I profoundly agree—those who would profit from the misfortunes of others are basically immoral. The attempts by the Government to change our laws to provide monopoly powers for the manufacturers of brand name drugs in the name of allowing them to recover their research costs are not only despicable but unethical and unchristian. I am one of those persons who has to buy drugs. I can afford the ones I have to buy. Thank goodness for the Saskatchewan drug plan; I do not pay more than $3.50 for any kind of drug. However, what about those who cannot afford them? We cannot allow private dominance and private control over the research, development, manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs. We cannot allow it to be in the hands of one, two or three national or international drug manufacturing firms. It is an area in which free enterprise has no business. It is one place where free enterprise should not either make or take a profit. It should be in the hands of university medical schools and research departments, in the hands of the Departments of Health of the provinces and of the federal Government and in the hands of hospitals. All development and research should be in their hands and in the public domain.

Let us look at the multinational corporations which control food chains not only in Canada but internationally. The matters of plant and food research and of plant and food production should be in the public domain as well.

What is being extolled by the Government and its supporters in terms of their version of the theory of free enterprise is nothing more than a licence to exploit Canadians and people in other countries including those in poor countries, because those companies will want a return or a profit from the misfortunes of others. I submit that the legislation must address the issue of free enterprise, not "me" enterprise. That fundamental principle must be in the legislation, including its preamble. Unless and until we reach that point, anything in the legislation will prove to be meaningless in the months and years to come. I hope the Government is willing to return to the drawing-board with this Bill for another couple of months and bring it back to the House in a much better form than the legislation which is before us now.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-91 and on our motion to hoist the Bill for six months, which is a way of protesting it. I see the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), who is from my town of Vancouver, sitting opposite. I also see the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who used to own a small gas station in Quebec and is very interested in the energy field. In my 10 minutes I will try to talk about how the competition Bill does not do anything for lack of competition in the Canadian energy industry.

At the outset I say to the Minister of Energy that she has the worst of both worlds. She has a situation where Canadian consumers are not benefiting substantially and properly—

Miss Carney: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Waddell: They are not benefiting from the dramatic fall in world oil prices.

Miss Carney: It is down 10 cents per litre.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister of Energy is heckling me. She can speak after me. She should talk to the average consumer in Vancouver Centre, in Toronto or in Montreal; parlez aux consommateurs de la province de Québec. Consumers are not stupid. They look across the border and see the price which Americans are paying. Why are the Americans paying so little compared with us, even if we leave the tax matter aside? The reason we do not have competition in the oil industry—

Miss Carney: Why don't you move there?

Mr. Waddell: The Minister asks: "Why don't you move there?". It is because I am proud to be a Canadian. I want to see the Canadian system work.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about their health plan.

Miss Carney: And their pension plan.

Mr. Waddell: If Hon. Members opposite will listen, I will tell them what is the matter with the Minister's policy. The Hon. Minister of Energy deregulated, through the Western Accord, the oil industry; she went to the world market and away from a regulated price under the National Energy Program. The problem is that there is no free market in oil. It is an oligopolistic situation; there is no real competition in the oil industry.

Mr. McDermid: Why did the price fall?

Mr. Waddell: That is why it is not falling completely; that is the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: That is why it is not falling the way it should be falling. I do not know what Hon. Members are laughing at.

Mr. McDermid: You.

Mr. Mazankowski: You.

Mr. Waddell: Let me try again to get it through their thick heads. The fact is that in Canada oil prices have not fallen as they have fallen in the United States. Why?

Mr. McDermid: For all kinds of reasons.

Mr. Waddell: One reason is that there are more taxes in Canada than in the United States. That is one reason, and I admit it. Another reason is that oil companies are not passing on the gains as fast—

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Waddell: They say that it is in the pipeline and that it takes time, and Canadians know that.

Miss Carney: It is being passed on.

Mr. Waddell: As I said, the reason is that we do not have competition in the oil industry like the Americans do.

Let me point out that in Canada, Imperial, Texaco, Petro-Canada and Shell control 70 per cent of the retail market. The second string companies, such as BP, Irving Oil, Ultramar and Husky, control another 15 per cent. That means about eight companies control 85 per cent of the market. The remaining 15 per cent is controlled by independent operators. Independent operators in this context mean gasoline retailers who actually control the retail price themselves instead of being dictated to by their suppliers.

What is the policy of the Government? In fact it had Petro-Canada go out and buy more gas stations, so there is a further lack of competition in the industry. The United States has more refiners, more retailers, more oil companies and more competition. This is an old story in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Let me give some examples. First, consignment sales. The big oil companies give sales on consignment to the small retailer. They can control the selling price of the retailer. Let me remind the House of the case I raised in the House of the couple from Gravenhurst, George and Cora McAra.

Mr. McDermid: They were breaking the contract.

Mr. Waddell: They were breaking the contract, the Member says. They had a consignment sales contract from Petro-Canada. They could not reduce their price. They could not have a gasoline war. That is an example of the problem. There are other methods of dealing with the independents, ways of squeezing them out of business and ways of controlling the refining and the market at the same time. This is why Canadian oil prices have not gone down as quickly as American prices.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Waddell: I challenge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to appoint, as Premier Pawley did in Manitoba, an official who will investigate why it took so long for the decrease in price to move through the system. Why did it take so long? Why did it take more than 60 days for those prices to be passed on?

Mr. McDermid: It didn't. Track it.

Mr. Waddell: It did. I invite the Hon. Member to check. I will show him the figures and he can look at them. I ask again, why are Canadians paying so much more for gas than Americans when you got rid of the tax? I ask the Hon. Member for Duvernay. He knows how the big oil companies work.

Let us look at this Bill. The Director of Investigation and Research for the Combines Branch made some recommendations which included a way of getting some competition into the oil industry. I do not have much time but I will go through some of them. One concerns the refining sector.

If you have more refiners you will have more competition. The Government is closing refineries. Look at the closure of the Gulf refinery in the east end of Montreal. The Director said that all reciprocal supply arrangements between refiners in excess of 90 days be prohibited, except where found by the RTPC to have a beneficial effect upon competition. The Director found quite clearly that these types of arrangements, which are very common in Canada, restrict competition.

Nothing in the Combines Act that we are debating today, nor in the present Act nor in this Bill would prevent these types of agreements. There is nothing on the refining level. "Outright prohibition on suppliers of motor fuels and their affiliates from obtaining direct or indirect control over retail prices, except where the supplier owns or operates a gas station". That is what the director recommended. There is no such prohibition in this Bill. The Director recommended doing away completely with any method of price control, whether it be consignment sales, temporary allowances or other price support where the amount of support is tied to the pump price. This Bill would allow the type of Gravenhurst situation to continue.

There is nothing in this Bill to address restrictive covenants restricting the use of property for the sale of motor fuels or eliminating the source of supply of motor fuels to the new owner. There is nothing there. The Director also recommended prohibiting exclusive dealing contracts between suppliers and retailers of motor fuel. There is something there, but it is not tough enough.

I could go on and on about the marketing, the refining and the retailing level. Just let me repeat, as the Minister leaves the House, that her policy is a failure because she deregulated the oil industry in a market that is not a free market. That is a fundamental flaw. That is why Canadian oil prices have not gone down as quickly as American oil prices when there was this dramatic decline in world oil prices.

We have a situation in Canada, as I said, where the Minister has the worst of both worlds. The independent Canadian Alberta producer is dying. The big multinational companies will survive. The small producer is getting paid $10 a barrel for oil. Companies cannot live with that. On the other hand, although prices have come down a little bit the amount should have been double, the consumer, the motorist, is continuing to get ripped off at the pump. This Bill, I am afraid to say, will not remedy the situation.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on the hoist motion of the New Democratic Party on Bill C-91. We are very concerned that not enough work has gone into this Bill and that the work has been developed into going backwards from previous Bills on the subject. A six month hoist is a very strong suggestion that the legislation is inadequate and that one has to go back to square one in rethinking what it should be. That is what we want to convey this afternoon.

Competition reform is among the saddest experiences "in Canadian public policy". That is not just our judgment, but a judgment made by independent academics and researchers working on the subject. The study Canada's Competition Policy Revisited lays blame very clearly. It states:

> This judgment is made all the more painful by the realization that, contrary to often expressed belief, the outcome—

meaning this legislation—

> — was not inevitable or beyond the control of governments determined that it be otherwise.

We have a story here of continuing failure over a long period of time to deal with the problems in competition in Canadian business.

The Economic Council of Canada began deliberating toward a modern and an effective competition policy in 1966. It produced an interim report in 1969. The first competition Bill was tabled in 1971 as Bill C-256. There are those who think that that was the best of a rather sorry lot of competition Bills.

To date none of the studies, Bills, speeches or commitments has produced a law which would reform the situation. In fact, we have this judicially hamstrung legislation on the books. Instead of moving to make it tough and effective, we have this extremely weak, watered down version before us today.

Being asked to accept Bill C-91 as the ultimate development of competition policy is hypocrisy indeed. It is a fifth descendant of Bills, each one weaker than the one before. Bills C-256, C-42, C-13 and C-29, all have attempted to reform competition law in this country and all of them have failed. One would have to be very ill-advised to think that Bill C-91 is going to do the trick.

To introduce this legislation, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) felt he had to pay a price. It is a trade-off that should never have been accepted. This is like asking the foxes to regulate the chicken coop. We have a Minister that let big business have what it wanted and was not prepared to give protection to consumers.

The groups that have argued with the Minister's Department over this Bill got what they wanted. Consumers did not. The groups that were successful, the big groups, the money groups that have a lot to gain by having weak competition policy and laws, are on the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturing Association and the Canadian Bar Association. If these groups are satisfied, we certainly are not.

What about consultation with people who know about the subject and who care? Unfortunately, the Minister has had his Department engage in a pro forma kind of consultation. The Minister bragged in his press statement of December 17 that he has been listening not only to business interests, small and large, but to the provinces, to consumers and to organized labour.

We know something about this consultation. Organized labour was given a very perfunctory hearing and there was no follow-up as to what the Government was planning to do.

The Consumers Association of Canada was essentially told to like it or lump it. We are very concerned about the fact that business groups get the opportunity to make clause by clause representations and get their way and groups which are concerned with protecting consumers do not.

Competition reform as a priority for the Government gave way to incrementalism and stage one and stage two concepts when it was realized the Government would have to fight to implement a good policy. It was unprepared to take on this fight. It is not that it was resigned to getting half a loaf after putting up this fight, but it deliberately lowered its sights. It did not take it on. It was not prepared to fight for a better economic deal for average Canadians.

We have to look at what this misguided, ineffective policy is costing Canadian consumers at the present time. We have a highly concentrated economy with major sectors which do not have adequate competition in them. It has been estimated that the cost to Canada of this lack of competition is 7.5 per cent of Gross National Product. The 1984 estimate of Gross National Product is approximately $416.6 billion. That means that the cost of economic waste attributable to the absence of price competition in Canada is $31.4 billion and rising yearly. This is the cost that consumers pay for not having competitive prices.

There are further costs to the economy which everyone pays for having a sluggish economy. Highly sheltered markets mean a sluggish economy which is slow to adapt. These uncompetitive markets also breed persistent and powerful private attempts at manipulation of the political process to sustain the economic status quo. Thus, New Brunswick is dominated by the Irving family, Newfoundland is dominated by Water Street merchants, and the western provinces were formerly dominated by the CPR. Throughout the country a very small number of large corporations have an inordinate sway in economic decision-making. The public pays the price through higher costs.

Over the years the Liberals have been involved in introducing better competition Bills and then not following through with them. Neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have ever articulated a clear philosophy of competition or a real commitment to its vigorous enforcement. However, in the time of Liberal Governments we had somewhat stronger Bills from which they backed off. The present Conservative Government is not even attempting to come up with something tough to begin with.

I would like to discuss some of the particular provisions in Bill C-91 and indicate what is wrong with them and what enforcement practices to date should suggest to us that we need. The sad fact of the matter is that there is very little enforcement. The loopholes in the current legislation are so enormous that there are very few successful prosecutions in the area of competition.

In the case of illegal mergers there has been one successful prosecution. There has been one successful prosecution with regard to monopoly of a market. Independent academic researchers consider price discrimination to be unenforceable except under the most extreme conditions. The legislation with regard to conspiracy to fix prices and share markets is regarded as weak but workable, but of limited use because of continuing court decisions of a very weak nature. With regard to misleading advertising and resale price maintenance, only the recent sections dating from 1951 and 1969 respectively appear to be fairly effective. Therefore, the majority of the enforcement mechanisms are extremely weak. After a very long period of time these laws are still not being enforced.

This is a record of futility. Of six major sections of the law, two are almost absolute failures. One is mostly unenforceable, one is extremely weak, and two appear to work. That is not a very good record, and Bill C-91 will do nothing to correct that unhappy record of failure. Even with a mixed tribunal and civil law procedures, there is little optimism that this Bill will deal with anticompetitive offences better than the previous law did.

Let us consider once again the specifics. To win a monopoly or abuse of dominant position case, the Director of Investigation and Research must now meet the following tests: substantial control of a market in a persistent manner, anticompetitive acts resulting in less competition, and practice which will lessen or prevent competition substantially. I emphasize the word "substantially".

It is extremely difficult to meet all the parts of this test. The built-in defence that superior competitive performance brought these results leads the people who study this field to believe that there is little chance of the director of investigation actually winning a case. Section 51 of the Bill should be rigorously examined to ascertain whether its weakness means that it will just become another inoperative section of the law.

There are the same types of difficulties with regard to mergers. The Director of Investigation and Research will have to demonstrate a substantial lessening of competition. Another built-in defence of the merger bringing gains and efficiency could result in no conviction. However, there is a far worse defect in the mergers section in that it does not cover conglomerate mergers. That is surely one area which should give rise to a great deal of concern. Much has been said about conglomerate mergers, and people are concerned. Yet, this Bill is silent on this fact of life.

With regard to conspiracy, price-fixing, market-sharing, and restricting entry to competitors are at the heart of any competition law and Canada's law in this area has become less effective in recent years. It has been shown, for example, that prior to 1976 the Crown won close to 90 per cent of all conspiracy cases. Since that time, the Crown has only won 55 per cent. Yet, Bill C-91 does not really change the provisions in this area.

In conclusion, this is a very inadequate piece of legislation. There has been better legislation in the past which was not passed. This is surely the time to give Canadian consumers the decent and adequate protection which they deserve. The cost to the economy of any such competition should not be borne by consumers. Let us put this Bill on the back-burner for six months, have a proper study, and produce tough legislation which will give Canadian consumers the deal they deserve and ensure that we have a well-functioning economy.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the hoist motion moved by one of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party. If that motion were passed this Bill would not be debated in the House for the next six months, which would give the Government the opportunity to redraft this legislation. That would allay a lot of the concerns which I and others who have spoken in this debate have expressed since this Bill was introduced on Monday.

It is clear that this legislation will not go the route. It will not do what it is supposed to do. It will not create effective competition in the country or stop the increased concentration of ownership which exists. No one has refuted the fact that big business wrote this legislation. The active role of the Manufacturers Association and others in writing this legislation indicates the problem which exists with it. The legislation was written by the very people from which the legislation is supposed to be protecting the public.

Our competition legislation will not halt the increased control of our economy by a small number of families. It will do nothing to prevent the situation occurring at the present time in which the oil companies, through their refineries, have a way of restricting supply to the independent operators. This legislation will do nothing to prevent the price gouging which has occurred in the past. It will do nothing to protect the rights of the public effectively.

When I spoke on this legislation earlier in the week I talked about what was happening in society. I indicated that ownership is falling into the hands of fewer and fewer people and that it is of major concern when financial institutions are bought by non-financial institutions. When those non-financial institutions borrow from their subsidiaries, the rights and interests of the depositor and small investor are not protected. The bank inquiry made it apparent that that was one of the problems which resulted in the closure of the two major banks in western Canada last fall. Here we have a situation where that danger is going to return and the legislation in front of us will do nothing to prevent that.

Very few Conservatives have spoken on this legislation, but some of those who have, have said that ownership is not the question. It is not a matter of who owns a financial institution, it is a matter of Government regulation and enforcement which will protect the small investor or someone with deposits in a financial institution. The inquiry which is going on right now into the bank failures shows that our regulations have not been effective in preventing those bank failures. They were not effective in preventing some self-dealing between the Commercial Bank, the Northland Bank and some of their principles. In addition, the enforcement of these regulations was hampered by the fact that the present Conservative Government and the previous Liberal Government would not provide the Inspector General of Banks with the staff he requested in order to enforce the existing regulations. In other words, the Government was unwilling to provide the staff to the Inspector General of Banks which could have prevented the closure of those banks through proper enforcement of the regulations. Therefore, we have to be concerned when we have legislation which is as weak as this is, knowing that regulation has not worked in the past and that the Government has not provided the financial resources to see that the regulations are enforced.

There is another problem which exists as a result of the fact that we have more and more concentrated ownership in our country. It is not just that decision-making is in the hands of a limited few, it is that effective management disappears when ownership is taken from those who have some knowledge and experience of the industry involved and deposited with those who are best at stock market and tax loophole manipulation in order to gain control of a corporation. For example, MacMillan Bloedel is no longer managed by people with knowledge of the lumber industry. Noranda, which is facing an economic crisis, is no longer effectively managed by people who have knowledge about that company's industry. The real control rests in the hands of a bunch of people who are out to increase the power of their holding company. Therefore, for any number of reasons, this is bad legislation.

As well, this Bill illustrates how Parliament does not always work properly. The Liberals have said they are in favour of competition legislation. The Conservatives have said they are in favour of competition legislation. Yet we still have weak legislation in front of us. When the Liberals were in power there were five different attempts to pass competition legislation and only one succeeded. That one resulted in weak legislation. The Conservatives have now introduced another piece of weak legislation. If all three Parties in this House are in favour of strong competition legislation, why do we not have it? Why, after 15 years of trying, have we not provided the legislation which all three Parties say they are in favour of? The answer is either that the Parties are not sincere, or that the power of those affected is so enormous that the Government of the day, whether it be Liberal or Conservative, is unwilling to take the political risk, to demonstrate the political will, to provide the legislation it says it is in favour of.

It reminds me of how the Parties stand on political rights for public servants. In the last election campaign the Conservatives indicated they were in favour of those rights. The Liberals have indicated they are in favour of those rights. However, when either of those Parties is in Government, it will not legislate those rights. So we have a situation where Parties campaign on platforms and policies which they will not effectively implement when they become the Government. The Conservative Government campaigned on political rights for public servants. It has been in power for almost two years now and nothing has happened. The Conservative Party campaigned in favour of effective competition legislation. Again, we are not getting effective competition legislation.

I realize that my time is almost up but I want to say one more thing. The credibility of this House under parliamentary reform has to be based on whether or not the government back-benchers actually have the guts to get up and say that something is wrong when their Government presents it. On Monday night all three Parties in the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs called upon the Government to do something to prevent the takeover of Genstar. We are now in danger of passing legislation which will do absolutely nothing to prevent that takeover. If all three Parties agreed on Monday night that that is what should be done, then we should be passing legislation which would prevent such takeovers.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a subject which has been of concern to Canadians for many, many years. There have been innumerable efforts, supposedly, to bring in legislation which would help protect the interests of ordinary Canadians. Unfortunately, the legislation which we have had up until now has been almost a complete failure. Let me quote what two well-known competition analysts, William Stanbury, a professor at the University of British Columbia, and Gill Reschenthaler said about our competition track record:

> The Canadian anticombines legislation is quite properly viewed by practitioners and academics—in Canada and abroad — as relatively weak. Recent decisions have further weakened the law.

The lack of sensitivity to the non-economic arguments for antitrust enforcement and the concomitant absence of a fundamental distrust of economic power concentrations account, in large measure, for legislation which is largely behavioural in orientation and which relied exclusively on the criminal law until 1976.

Professor Irving Brecher of McGill University has written, quite correctly, that the reason we have such weak laws is that neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have been prepared to take on the tremendously powerful business and financial interests which really do not want tough anticombines legislation because it would interfere with the way in which they do business.

Over the last few days of debate I was particularly interested to hear Liberal Members of Parliament criticize this legislation as inadequate. After all, they were in power for more than 50 of the last 65 years and they had innumerable opportunities to bring in legislation but they did not do it. I was also interested to hear them attack the present Government because it has not, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) just indicated, adopted the unanimous recommendations of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs that the takeover of Genstar by Imasco be stopped. Why do Members of Parliament from all Parties want that stopped? They realize that a company like Imasco, which is in the manufacturing business, the service industry, the retail business, could use the financial clout in the Genstar ownership of Canada Trust for its own purposes, which might very well be contrary to the interests of the Canadian consumer. That is a very valid argument.

I find it strange that the Liberals have suddenly learned that lesson. Just six years ago when the Liberals formed the Government the same thing took place which they are opposing in the takeover of Genstar by Imasco. Six years ago Brascan, which owns Noranda, a large mining corporation which owns McMillan Bloedel, one of the largest lumber, pulp and paper corporations in Canada, formed Trilon. Trilon is precisely the same kind of company as Genstar which owns Canada Trust. Trilon, which started six years ago while the Liberals were in power, owns Noranda and McMillan Bloedel and many other companies. Trilon took over the London Life Insurance Company and then it secured control of the Royal Trust Company. The Royal Trust Company took over A.E. Lepage, which is a property and real estate company, and then it took over Wellington Insurance. It is into the trust and financial services business, the insurance business, the corporate financial business, the investment business, the trust business, the money market operations and bond trading business, the loan and investment business and the leasing business.

While the Liberals were in power, Brascan did precisely what the Liberals are now opposing in the takeover of Genstar by Imasco. What we see, as we have seen so many times over the years, is how progressive and people-oriented the Liberal Party and the Liberal Members can be when they are in the Opposition and how, as soon as they win an election and form the Government, they immediately show their true colours because their concern for people disappears. What we see is their real concern and their real support of the financial and business corporations which use their power to fleece the ordinary Canadian.

Let us just look at what has happened over the years. If we review the major aspect of the competition law we have, we see how barren the record of success has been. When former Governments acted against illegal mergers, there was one successful prosecution. When they acted because they believed there was price discrimination, it was regarded as unenforceable except under the most extreme conditions. When they looked at conspiracy to fix prices and share markets, we find that the law was regarded as weak but workable, and of limited use because of continuing court decisions.

When we look at the record with regard to misleading advertising and resale maintenance, we find that only these recent sections dating from 1951 and 1969 legislation respectively appear to be fairly effective, according to Professors Stanbury and Reschenthaler. We see a record of futility. Of six major sections of the law two are almost completely failures, one is mostly unenforceable, one is extremely weak and two appear to work. For futility, that takes some beating.

The Conservatives are going to try to beat that record with the legislation we are dealing with now. There is no need to wonder why competition reform is required. Another consensus position, except for big business, is that the courts are not the place where competition cases should be heard. The Minister has not been quite successful in convincing businesses of this requirement. The result is we have this proposal for a high bid competition tribunal.

What about these remedies? Even with a mixed tribunal and civil law procedures there is little optimism among those who have studied the record—and I am talking about the academics to whom the Minister really did not want to listen—this Bill will deal with anti-competitive offences more effectively than the previous law. Here is an assessment of the major enforcement sections of this Bill made by, as I said, some very competent, knowledgeable academics who spent years studying this.

Dealing with the question of monopoly or abuse of a dominant position, they say that to win a monopoly case the Director of Investigation and Research now has to meet a number of tests, first of all, to prove that there was substantial control of a market in a persistent way; second, that anti-competitive acts mean less competition; and third, that the practice will lessen or prevent competition substantially.

Given the difficulties of meeting all these parts and the built-in defence that a superior competitive performance brought these results means to many people who study this Bill that there is little chance of the Director winning a case. When we look at the question of mergers of the kind we have had in the past where a steel company took over a smaller steel company or a paper company took over a smaller paper company, they are unlike the most recent mergers, the large mergers we have seen by conglomerates. That is really not dealt with by this proposed Act at all.

For these reasons and many others we intend to oppose this Bill. I can assure Members of the House that we will have a substantial number of amendments when this Bill goes to committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows. Mr. Côté (Langelier), seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn moves that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. McCurdy:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

The question will therefore be on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. McCurdy) which was negatived on the following division:

PETITIONS

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 33 residents of the National Capital Regional who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take their concerns into consideration and reject the proposal to build an embassy on the Mile Circle.

ASSESSMENT OF CN MAINTENANCE FACILITIES

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, once again I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition, duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions, from the constituents of the southern part of the Province of New Brunswick expressing their concern with regard to the current assessment being conducted by Canadian National into its maintenance facilities across Canada. The petitioners are concerned that any results of that study that would downgrade in any way the facility in Moncton would have a drastic effect upon the economic wellbeing of the Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a notice of an application under Standing Order 29 from the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Order Paper Questions

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

GRAIN PRICING—DECISION BY MINISTER

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday you ruled on a motion that was somewhat similar to this, but I believe there are at least two items of which you were perhaps not aware at the time that I would like to bring to your attention today. The first is that the Legislature of Saskatchewan spent the day yesterday discussing this very subject on the basis of it being an urgent and pressing matter for the economy of Saskatchewan. I think the west part of the country is a very important part of the economy of Canada and the decision that was made on Monday impacts very heavily on the people of the West.

A group of farmers from that area of the country have to use the decisions made this week to decide what it is they should be planting. Those decisions are not made lightly or quickly. The farmers have to know whether or not the decision the Government has made is final. They have to know whether there will or will not be deficiency payments. Therefore, we say that this debate is of an urgent nature and have posed the question in a little broader sense again today.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has given me notice. May I remind him, as I perhaps should have reminded his colleagues yesterday, that what is intended when one rises to put the application is that only the letter that has been given to the Speaker should be read. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) came very close to paraphrasing that letter. The reason I say this is that the only information the Chair has with which to answer the application is that which is contained in that letter.

I received the application of the Hon. Member on time. I am not yet persuaded that the application does meet the terms of the rule as it is envisaged in our Standing Orders.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Question answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 534.

[Text]

GRAIN COSTS

Question No. 534—Mr. Angus:

1. In the past ten years, what was the cost of all improvements and upgrading of facilities related to the movement of grain at each of the major ports in Canada and which were paid for or legislated by the government?

2. What expenditures are planned for future upgrading of such ports?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport):

1. In the past ten years, the federal government has spent approximately $6.5 million on improvements and upgrading of grain facilities at Ports Canada: $3.1 million on upgrading of the dust control system in the Halifax elevator, and $3.4 million on other grain related improvements such as dredging, solar heating, tug replacement (to be completed in 1986) at the Port of Churchill. Ports Canada has also undertaken (from port generated funds) dust control improvements projects at elevators in Montreal ($3.0 million), Prescott ($2.2 million), Port Colborne ($2.4 million) and Churchill ($0.3 million) for a total of $7.9 million, to conform to Labour Canada standards for airborne dust in the work environment.

In addition, the federal Government contributed $30.4 million towards the construction of infrastructure for a new grain elevator constructed by a consortium of grain companies at Ridley Island, Port of Prince Rupert.

2. Over the next five years, federal Government funded grain related improvements are planned only at Churchill, and are estimated to cost $13.9 million: $7.6 million for dust control and $6.3 million for berth deepening.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker if question No. 533 could be made an order for return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 533 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are now working under the new Standing Orders. I may recall that there are some questions on the Order Paper that require a reply within 45 days and other questions that do not. Upon checking today's Order Paper, I noticed there were some questions dated February 24, which means that 45 days have elapsed since these questions were put. I would therefore ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he intends to reply to these questions tomorrow. There are at least six, Mr. Speaker.

• (1110)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member inquiring as to whether or not we will meet the timetable tomorrow? I think he will find that we are making every effort to meet the timetable, and tomorrow at this time I will probably be able to give the Hon. Member the news that we have.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the point was well understood. Today is the forty-fifth day since at least five or six questions were put on the Order Paper. The new rules indicate that the Government must respond within those 45 days. Since the Parliamentary Secretary has not responded to them today, does he intend to do it tomorrow? We are going to be flexible.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, perhaps I did not understand the Hon. Member's presentation. I thought he said that tomorrow was the last day. If Hon. Members have requested replies—and the Hon. Member will know that we have replied to several petitions under the new rules—

Mr. Gauthier: I am talking about questions.

Mr. Lewis: —we will make every effort to reply to as many of them as possible. I will look into the matter and get back to the Hon. Member tomorrow vis-à-vis the petitions which have not been responded to.

Mr. Gauthier: Questions.

Mr. Lewis: Questions, I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

COMPETITION TRIBUNAL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Langelier) that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the conclusion of business yesterday and prior to the adjournment of the House, we endeavoured to determine whether we had reached the end of debate. At that time the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon—

Mr. Keeper: Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Domm: Was it not the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp)?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Domm: All right, that is fine.

Mr. Speaker: At the time the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) had the floor. He indicated that he wished to debate. He is not here to complete his speech, let us put it that way. Therefore, resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to—

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not mean to interrupt the Hon. Member, but since the Parliamentary Secretary raised a point of order, I should like to raise another one. I should like to know if the Minister intends to be absent for the third day in a row while we are discussing his legislation in the House. I think it is very important legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that the Hon. Member has a viewpoint, but I think he knows that it is not a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: If it is not a point of order, it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has put his view on the record, but he has not raised a proper point of order, let me put it that way.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-91 today. To date the debate has been a very intelligent, which I believe reflects the seriousness of Members of Parliament in terms of what is now very clearly happening in the country, that is, the continuing move to more and more corporate concentration. I am referring not only to corporate concentration in a political sense but to the fact that more and more of the control of the Canadian economy is falling into fewer and fewer hands. When more and more economic power falls into fewer and fewer hands, those few hands are given some significant political muscle as well.

When we consider that about 50 per cent of the value of stocks traded on the Toronto Stock Exchange are controlled by nine Canadian families, a picture begins to emerge of corporate concentration which would never be tolerated in most industrialized nations. Even the United States, that bastion of capitalism, has sufficient anti-combines legislation which would not enable the extent of corporate concentration that has become a reality in Canada to occur in that country.

Year after year attempts have been made by various Governments, particularly successive Liberal Governments, to bring forward legislation which would tend to restrict corporate concentration. However, inevitably, because of the corporate lobby, successive Liberal administrations have never brought a significant piece of legislation to the floor of the House of Commons.

Today we are debating Bill C-91. While it may be recognized as a step in the right direction, it really has insufficient teeth to make any significant dint in the trend toward corporate concentration in Canada. Obviously takeovers in this country have been increasingly dramatically; mergers and takeovers are accelerating. In the 1960s the average number of takeovers per year were 253. During the 1970s that increased to 382 corporate takeovers on an annual basis. In the 1980s—and we can only measure what happened in the first half of this decade—it would appear that about 522 corporate takeovers per year have already occurred, which indicates a significant acceleration. This means that more and more of the economic activity within Canada is being controlled by fewer and fewer corporations.

Since 1975, the hundred largest companies in Canada have been involved in more than 150 mergers and takeovers, and more than 25 per cent of the growth of these large companies has been from financial transactions rather than the development of new products or new growth in the market-place, so to speak. At a time when we ought to be more concerned than we are in terms of finding ways and means of providing employment for unemployed Canadians—and in my estimation the track record of the Government in this regard is rather abysmal—we see corporate takeovers and mergers taking place. This almost inevitably results in a net loss of jobs. As corporations take over other corporations, they are not creating any new business. They are not creating any new enterprises, any new product lines or new jobs. They are simply concentrating their economic power.

The most insidious type of takeover and merger is the one which is on our minds today, that is, the takeover by Imasco of Genstar. What is particularly insidious about it is that it is an example of a non-financial institution, which has vast holdings, taking over one of the largest financial institutions in Canada. Let me quote the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Missisauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who said, "Imasco is buying a bank".

We have seen this trend develop in the last while with Branscan, Trilon, Power Corporation and the Power Financial Corporation, with financial and non-financial institutions merging and melding. The concern is that this will give some unfair advantage to the corporate giants which have their own financial institutions. Self dealing will inevitably result.

There are many classic cases of self dealing, of conflict of interest, when unscrupulous corporate leaders have taken advantage of their access to financial corporations in which they own major shares. We do not have to go any further than the famous Leonard Rosenberg and his trust company, Seaway, Greymac and Crown Trust. They were making loans to other interests of Rosenberg that were totally inappropriate in terms of using depositors' money.

If Imasco is allowed to control the largest trust company in Canada, the sixth largest financial institution in Canada, namely Canada Trustco, will this enable Imasco in its operations to have special opportunities in the free market place? I think the concern of every Member of Parliament here is that in fact it would.

Having sat on the Finance Committee now for a number of years, let me suggest that there are hardly any issues on which all of the members of the Finance committee agree. I can recall only three or four instances where the collective members, reflecting all the political Parties in the House of Commons, agreed. One of those issues was that we should not permit financial institutions and non-financial institutions to meld, particularly when the ownership was over 10 per cent. There was a unanimous motion of the committee to that effect in its report. It was a unanimous motion of the committee the other night when it examined the Imasco Genstar situation.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, on that committee are some very thoughtful and experienced financial people. We heard witnesses from the trust companies and from the financial industries of Canada. People made the point very clearly. After a great deal of thoughtful pondering and reflection members of the Finance committee unanimously agreed that the action we are seeing take place in Canada today, the takeover by Imasco of Genstar is not in the best interests of Canada or Canadians.

The other night in the Finance committee I put that very question to the Superintendent of Insurance, Mr. Robert Hammond, who is responsible for monitoring and supervising the trust companies of Canada. He is probably one of the most knowledgeable individuals when it comes to trust companies and the role they play in the Canadian economy. I asked him if, in his opinion, this particular type of takeover was in the best interests of Canada. His answer was that he could not identify any compelling reasons to make that case. I am convinced there is not a single Member of the House of Commons in his or her heart of hearts who believes that the Imasco takeover of Genstar is in the best interest of Canada, Canadians or the future of the Canadian economy.

The decision is clearly now in the hands of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), who has the authority under the Bill now before the House, retroactive to the end of November, 1985, to stop this transaction and to say here and now that the Government of Canada will not tolerate the takeover of financial institutions by non-financial institutions.

If the Government were wise enough, it would follow the recommendations of the New Democratic Party in the White Paper where we recommended that financial institutions, such as banks and large trust companies, should abide by the 10 per cent rule, that no group ought to own more than 10 per cent of a bank. Those are the rules we have today. I believe when you look at the large trust companies in Canada, there is no logic, no justification for not having that 10 per cent rule apply to them.

If that were the case, this discussion and concern, now reflected in the House of Commons for many days, would not be in evidence. This takeover would not be allowed.

In closing, we oppose this so-called competition legislation, because we see that it will not result in more fair competition. In fact, quite the contrary. This Bill does very little toward easing the accelerating corporate economic and political concentration emerging, best reflected, as I said earlier, in nine families controlling 50 per cent of the value of the Toronto Stock Exchange.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for giving me the floor, and I would like to say a few words about this competition legislation.

First of all, it is clear that this is an extremely complex Bill which required months of preparation. Several ministers with responsibilities in this area have worked on the subject, and although the Bill is not perfect, there will be discussions in committee. The Official Opposition intends to support the principle of the Bill and help improve the present situation and protect consumers against excessive concentration.

When we look at the problem as a whole, and we realize that a limited number of families and corporate groups control over 50 per cent of the Canadian stock market, on the exchanges in Toronto and Montreal, there is reason for concern not only about the consumer but about the survival of our free enterprise system. I have often told businessmen, when I had occasion to speak to them as a colleague or as a politician, that excessive concentration is probably the greatest enemy of free entreprise, a principle they tend to uphold in their professional associations. When faced with excessive concentration, not just of economic activities in general but in a specific sector, which is very similar to a monopoly situation, I thought it was clear that if voters had a choice between a public monopoly and a private monopoly, they, or our democratic system in general, would opt for the State monopoly. I think that, in this respect, the business community may be somewhat to blame for Government intervention in this area.

I therefore support the idea of legislation that will allow and promote increased competition and make it possible to avoid concentration as far as feasible, in such a way that the consumer will benefit and that our enterprise system, which encourages individual initiative, will continue to prosper in this country.

Mr. Speaker, had this debate on the Bill before the House taken place two or three weeks or a month or two months ago, perhaps the context would have been different.

Today, in addition to the Bill before the House, there is another matter on our minds, and I am referring to a transaction that would place one of this country's largest trust companies under the control of Imasco.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to define the position we of the Liberal Party have taken on this matter. The report made to the House by the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs last November, says in Recommendation 58, which we approved, and since I have the English text, I will quote the recommendation in English:

[English]

58. That the Minister of Finance not approve any merger between Canada Trust and Canada Permanent Trust until an ownership policy for financial institutions has been developed and implemented.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we endorsed this recommendation of the report tabled in the House by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) did not do anything. To my knowledge, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) did not intervene publicly to stop the deal between Genstar and Canada Trust. All of a sudden now, because Imasco seeks to do the same thing with Genstar, they are raising hell.

Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that I personally approved Recommendation 58. More than that, we presented a minority report stating that in principle the Official Opposition did not agree with non-financial institutions being allowed to take over financial institutions, particularly larger ones. But I do not see any explanation, and I certainly intend to fight this one to ensure fairness. If the deal was good for Genstar, so it is for Imasco. What is good for Peter is also good for Jacques. If the Imasco deal is to be blocked, in the context of the Bill now under study concerning concentration, I will ask the Government to be consistent by honouring and implementing Recommendation 58 which was unanimously proposed to the House by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

If nothing comes out of Recommendation 58 I will ask the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), to take the same approach with respect to these two companies because they are not financial institutions.

I am saying to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) that we want fairness. If indeed these deals are now being blocked under some kind of principle, considering that nothing was done a few months back to stop a similar operation which was much more significant since it involved the merger of two companies, two trust companies, with the result that Canada Trust is now among the largest Canadian trust companies, if not the largest, well if the first deal was not blocked I fail to see why this one should be.

I would humbly suggest that in the case of these two companies, Genstar or Imasco, both have been behaving as good corporate citizens in this country. I do not see why the Genstar deal should be okayed and the Imasco deal rejected. That would amount to outright injustice. Nor do I see why the Conservatives should be inconsistent if the law is enforced and if they are quite prepared to fight for that law and that principle. They simply must not change the rules in the middle of the game; having allowed Genstar to merge Canada Permanent with Canada Trust there is no way they can now prevent Imasco from doing the same thing, because the situation is similar in terms of these deals.

If the law is enforced, I shall be in complete agreement with Recommendation 58. However, if it is not enforced, I would have to say that there has been a lot of hypocrisy in some of the activities we have witnessed and the comments we have heard.

This is why I say that there must be some sense of equity. On the whole issue of the concentration of power, we must not act too quickly either, because we could prevent other smaller groups from organizing to compete with the larger groups, especially if the Government does not have the courage to dismantle these larger groups. I am thinking of much smaller groups which must become organized to provide effective competition for the consumers. I humbly submit that if the present situation is maintained and if the Genstar deal made last November and finalized in January is not changed and if the Imasco deal is blocked, there will be a basic inequity which could have been avoided if the Government had shown its colours as soon as the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs made this unanimous recommendation.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I come back to what I was saying at the beginning, namely, that it is important to have legislation to limit concentration, that this legislation must have teeth and that we must ensure that there is a competitive capacity in our Canadian system to protect consumers and free enterprise; but to meet this objective, we must act fairly and equitably so that legal entities from whatever region of Canada will be treated fairly and equitably.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are certainly not ready for the question. I wonder why government Members are so anxious to rush this Bill through the House, rather than giving it full and adequate debate.

The legislation now before the House, Bill C-91, purports to be competition legislation. Obviously, with its level of corporate concentration, Canada requires effective competition legislation. My colleague who spoke a few minutes ago mentioned that nine families control the vast majority of the companies on the Canadian stock exchange. That gives Canada an image similar to that of a banana republic. Corporate concentration is a real problem in the country and must be dealt with effectively.

We must ask why the Government is so anxious to rush this legislation through. Is it afraid to have the provisions of the legislation examined? Is it afraid of having an evaluation of what this legislation is capable of accomplishing? We oppose this lesgislation because it is weak. It is weak legislation which is meant to deal with a very difficult situation.

We know that the Government was faced with a challenge when it sought to introduce competition legislation. Over the last couple of decades the Liberals have played around with attempts to draft competition legislation. They always hesitated to bring such legislation before the House because they knew that once they drafted effective legislation they would run into opposition from the corporate community. Therefore, they danced around the issue rather than coming to grips with it.

We are not surprised that the Conservatives have not dealt with this matter effectively, because the problem of concentration of corporate economic power in the country is a very difficult one. Rather than dancing around the issue the Conservatives chose to water down their solution. Thin gruel is no answer, Mr. Speaker. We need effective legislation.

While this legislation purports to deal with monopoly, merger, and conspiracy, it is riddled with loopholes. One of the biggest loopholes in this legislation is a clause which refers to mergers which will lessen competition substantially. Through this loophole the Government can allow continued concentration of corporate economic power. The Government can say that it has legislation to assure competition, but if the economic activities result in the substantial lessening of competition, it has gone too far and will not be allowed.

High priced corporate lawyers will argue before a competition agency about whether competition will be increased to the benefit of the public, whether we are going too far in seeking to increase competition, and whether, in fact competition has been lessened "substantially", whatever that means. While the lawyers argue before judicial bodies, the concentration of economic power will continue to take place.

That is why we consider this legislation to be weak, ineffective, and to be legislation in name only. It lacks the required substance to deal with the fact that nine families control the vast majority of the companies on the Canadian stock exchange. This is clearly a terribly over-concentrated pattern of ownership.

We have to ask why the Conservative Government has come up with such weak legislation to deal with such a difficult problem. We do not have to look far to find the answer. Who have the Conservatives been listening to? We are not surprised when we learn that the Conservatives have listened very carefully to the five major business organizations who represent corporate interests in this country: The Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers Association, and the Canadian Bar Association. When we have a Conservative Government with the ideology of big business, when we have a Government that runs its political machinery on the basis of donations from large corporate enterprises, then it is not surprising that it listens to the Business Council on National Issues.

What the Government must be severely criticized for is the fact that it has chosen to listen to the representatives of business and not those of ordinary Canadians. The Government has consulted with labour in a very token fashion. Yet it has consulted with the representatives of corporate enterprise in a detailed, clause-by-clause fashion. The Government has failed to listen to the Consumers' Association of Canada. Yet if there is any organization that should be listened to very carefully concerning competition legislation, surely it is a body representing the consumer. They are the ones who pay the price every time competition is decreased, every time a monopoly is created, and every time a merger takes place. The Conservatives have failed to listen to the ordinary Canadian expressing concern about the need for adequate competition legislation. They have failed to recognize the need for measures which will decrease the concentration of corporate ownership in this country. They have produced weak legislation precisely because of who they listen to. They listen to the representatives of corporate Canada and fail to listen to ordinary Canadians.

We are worried about the continued concentration of corporate ownership because it increases the disparities in wealth and adds to the poverty which exists, which in turn adds to the social injustices in our country. The fact that poverty has increased with the election of this new Government is no surprise. This legislation tells us why. The Government continues to condone ownership of the Canadian economy by fewer and fewer people, by nine families. If we are to have a true democracy it is necessary for wealth to be shared equitably. The trend towards increased corporate ownership goes in the opposite direction. We are also concerned about this trend because an economy owned by a few families undercuts political democracy. It allows for large corporations to finance a political party which, when elected, will serve business interests rather than those of ordinary Canadians.

It is time we had decent, effective competition legislation. The Government, rather than trying to rush this legislation through the House, should pull back to reconsider what it is doing and bring forward legislation which can work.

We are particularly concerned about the takeover by Imasco of Genstar. What this means is that a large corporate enterprise is able to buy its own bank. When it wants to borrow money, it can just reach into its other pocket. That is a very dangerous precedent to establish. It is a sad commentary that when we are dealing with competition legislation the Government has to bring in another piece of legislation to deal with this kind of takeover. It just shows how weak this legislation is. Clearly, if we allow large corporations to buy their own trust company or their own bank, we run real risks of conflict of interest, risks that depositors cannot have confidence that their money will be properly taken care of.

I see you indicating, Mr. Speaker. Does that mean I have one second or two seconds?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It means your time is up.

Mr. Keeper: It means my time is up? Perhaps my time for speaking in this House is up, but the time is up for this Government. It is time it brought in good legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I think that there are two major points to consider in the Imasco deal and the Genstar-Canada Trust transaction. The first concerns a deal between associated corporations, especially between a financial institution and a non-financial institution. The concern raised by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) on this point seems indeed justified. In my opinion, because of the circumstances, the same policy must apply to the second transaction between Imasco and Genstar as to the first one between Genstar and Canada Trust. I think that the same mechanism must apply to both transactions.

The second aspect to be considered is the concentration of economic power in the hands of certain financial groups or certain families. I think that, in this regard, we should not be reacting to the concentration of power by dealing with isolated transactions. I think that what is needed now is a general set of rules to make an in-depth review of the concentration of economic power in the hands of certain groups. If I remember correctly, in Canada, 46 per cent of all private corporations are concentrated in the hands of seven or eight families or financial groups. In these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, what I suggest is that the same mechanism must apply to the Imasco-Genstar transaction as to the Genstar-Canada Trust transaction. Otherwise, if we do not apply the same criteria to the two transactions, it might lead people to believe that there is a conflict between certain Ontario lobbies and interests in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I wanted to say about the Imasco-Genstar transaction.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it might be useful in the few minutes that I have to review very quickly some of the provisions of Bill C-91. I am going to start by looking at the existing competition law, just to remind ourselves just how wretchedly ineffective it has been in policing the market-place. I want to quote two well known competition analysts, William Stanbury and Gill Reschenthaler who wrote this about our competition track record in Canada:

> The Canadian anti-combines legislation is quite properly viewed by practitioners and academics—in Canada and abroad—as relatively weak. Recent decisions have further weakened the law.
> The lack of sensitivity to the non-economic arguments for anti-trust enforcement and the concomitant absence of a fundamental distrust of economic power concentrations account, in large measure, for legislation which is largely behavioral in orientation and which relied exclusively on the criminal law until 1976.

This means we do not have either the motivation or the law to deal with competition issues, and the record bears this out. If we review the major aspects of our competition law we can see how barren the record of correction really is after 100 years of attempts at anti-competition law.

Let us look at that record. In all that time there has been one successful prosecution of illegal mergers, and I believe that was successful because the defendant pleaded guilty. There has been only one successful prosecution of monopoly of a market. Price discrimination is regarded by experts as unenforceable except under the most extreme conditions. What about conspiracy to fight fixed prices and share markets? This is regarded as weak, but workable, and has been found of limited use because of continuing court decisions. What about the question of misleading advertising and resale price maintenance? These have become a little more effective as a result of changes that were made to the Act in 1951 and again in 1969 respectively. There we have five major measures of an effective piece of legislation dealing with competition, and only two of them have been moderately effective. It has not been effective in legal mergers, monopoly of a market or price discrimination. When we get down to some of the market sharing and misleading advertising, we do occasionally find the legislation works on behalf of consumers.

There is no need to wonder why competition reform is necessary, or the reasons for bringing forth Bill C-91. What did we get? We do not seem to have the kind of remedies that are needed. We have recognized that the law courts do not seem to be a proper place for these kinds of cases to be dealt with. We have come up with a sort of halfway mixture of the tribunal and civil law procedures. We are not sure that this is going to solve the problem either.

How are we proposing to handle the monopoly or the abuse of a dominant position of a company that controls the market? In order to win a monopoly case the director of investigation and research now has to meet four basic tests. He must prove substantial control of a market; he has to prove that that control was exercised in a persistent and consistent manner; he has to prove that the anti-competitive act of that person or company means less competition; and the Crown has to prove that the practice that has been followed will lessen or prevent competition substantially. It is not clear what "substantial" means in the court.

Given these difficulties, meaning all four parts and the built-in defence that can be offered, that superior competitive performance brought these results about, means that many people who study this field say there is really little chance of a director winning any cases. Certainly Section 51 should be rigorously examined at committee level to ascertain whether its weaknesses mean that it will rapidly become just another inoperative section of the law.

We encounter the same problem in merger enforcement with this Bill. The director of investigation and research will have to demonstrate a "substantial" lessening of competition with another built-in defence that the merger brings "gains in efficiency". The defence is almost written into the Act by the method we have chosen in Bill C-91 to write the law. The confusion of the wording and the lack of any number of successful cases in past law do not give any ground for optimism for people who are worried about the competition field.

With regard to conspiracy, the third area of practice that we had hoped this law would be able to tighten up in favour of consumers and people in Canada, we find that price fixing, market sharing and restricting entry to competitors is at the heart of any competition law, and yet Canada's law in this area has been critically less effective in recent years.

It has been shown, for example, that prior to 1976 the Crown won close to 90 per cent of all conspiracy cases, but since that time the Crown has been winning just over 50 per cent. Bill C-91 does not really change the provisions of Section 32(1) to tighten this up, and we are continuing with a change in the Bill which does nothing to deal with the problem of conspiracies.

When we go into some analysis of conspiracy cases we find that the average fine has been about $71,000 for the period between 83 and 85, which means it has only kept pace with the inflation rate since 1900. In effect there has been no change in the way we treat conspiracy in the courts since the year 1900.

I see my time is coming near an end, so I would like to point out very quickly some of the other shortcomings in the Bill. This Bill leaves out many of the protections to consumers that were introduced in other Bills that pass. Let me give some of the aspects of consumer competition legislation that have been left out of this Bill.

There has been no provision to permit class actions, as we see in competition legislation in other countries. There is no means of offering substitute actions. The question of interlocking directorates and management restrictions is not permitted to be brought forward under this legislation, so the influence directors have, by sitting on a large group of different companies and using their information to carry it back and forth and perhaps use their influence to fix prices, cannot be looked at under this Bill. The abuse of intellectual property is not a subject for investigation under this Bill. Neither are agreements to restrict imports or exports subject to this Bill. We are living in a very international kind of economy, yet agreements to restrict imports or exports are beyond the relevance of this Bill, as, indeed, are international conspiracies. There are no amendments to the aspect of price discrimination in this Bill. I see no amendments to cover predatory pricing in this Bill. It is essentially a policital gesture designed to try and appease the public with the appearance of action, while leaving the structure of business totally unaffected. Bill C-91 is another Conservative Government triumph of symbolism over substance.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the debate on Bill C-91, An Act to establish the Competition Tribunal, provides the House with an opportunity to reflect on a number of matters, which I will attempt to do in the next 10 minutes.

First, I want to talk about the whole question of productivity. We have heard much from the Conservatives, both in Opposition and in Government, about productivity and the problems in the Canadian economy being caused by decreased productivity. The argument that our economy had to be made more productive was generally associated with the view that the decrease in productivity was ralated to decreasing labour productivity. Very seldom did we hear Conservative Members talk about other aspects of the productivity debate.

Today's debate concerns a matter which directly relates to the productivity of the Canadian economy. Many economists have noticed in the last 10 years that the Canadian and American economies in particular, and the European economy to some extent, have seen a decline in productivity which is largely a result of the merger phenomenon that has been taking place.

Many of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have already explained how the rash of mergers and takeovers do not increase employment, and the point has not been made sufficiently clear that these mergers also have an effect on the over-all nature of economic activity. In fact, rather than stimulating new activity and producing new wealth, during the last 10 years the capitalists in this country have been farming the corporate system in such a way that ours has become a paper economy in many respects. The capitalists have been planning how to make money through mergers and utilizing the tax system, rather than through real productivity. Our economy is not nearly as productive as many of those in the corporate sector would like us to believe. They are looking to blame others for the lack of productivity in our economy when, in fact, much of the blame lies with those in the corporate sector who are trying to find the easy way to legally increase their profits in non-productive ways.

Our Party does not believe that this is a good Bill. The debate on this Bill basically centres around the tension between the traditional poles of the capitalist economy; irrational competition on the one hand and monopoly on the other. Neither of these tend to be good for the ordinary citizen. The trend in this country has been toward the pole of the corporate monopoly, and I was shocked to hear that some nine families now control 50 per cent of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Certainly this does not reflect the spirit of free enterprise and rugged individualism, but rather a move toward a new feudalism in this country where a handful of families can make economic decisions which affect all Canadians. If that is called democracy, I must ask Members opposite just what they mean by democracy.

The New Democratic Party believes that democracy is more than just electoral politics. It is a question of social and economic democracy. When our country can allow itself to be in a position that nine families control over 50 per cent of the Toronto Stock Exchange, it can hardly call itself democratic in any comprehensive sense of the word.

I believe that we are debating the future of democracy in this country. When so much power is concentrated in the hands of so few people our function in Parliament as the appearance of democracy becomes increasingly irrelevant, as decisions that affect the economic future of this country are being made elsewhere with no accountability to the well-being of Canadians, or to the Government for that matter.

Previous Liberal Governments and the present Conservative Government have refused to stand up to the beast and make the capitalist economy accountable to the people of Canada. The debate today is essentially whether or not we will ever have a Government that is willing to make the capitalists accountable for those decisions.

We have often heard Members opposite talk about the notion that big Government reduces accountability for the decisions which affect Canadians in their daily lives. While we all must be concerned about big Government, it should not be at the expense of concern for other equally important decisions that are taken without any accountability. At least one can say about Government, however big and bureaucratic, that there is still a political process in place by which we can occasionally rein in its power, if not in a comprehensive way at election, through political pressure exerted on the Government between elections. Regardless of its size, Government still has accountability.

The debate on Bill C-91 concerns economic power which basically has its way with the Canadian people and the Canadian economy. It has had its way for years in systematically intimidating former Liberal Governments not to do anything about monopolistic power in this country. It has had its way with the present Government by ensuring that it fully agreed with the Government's policy before the introduction of the its legislation. The Government, having made the deal with the devil, is trying to say that it has stood up to these economic powers, when it in fact made an agreement with them.

The absence of good competition legislation in Canada continues to be one of the saddest stories in Canadian history. Canada continues to be a country where very few people make many important economic decisions. I refer to John Porter's book The Vertical Mosaic, the subsequent book by Wallace Clement entitled Canadian Corporate Elite and other studies which have been made. The trend is obvious that more and more power is being concentrated in fewer hands. That is the exact opposite of what the New Democratic Party believes should be the case. That is why we will continue to oppose this Bill. It does absolutely nothing about that trend.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to share the concern of my colleagues about the deplorable implications of this Bill. This Bill reflects a long history of inadequate competition legislation in the House, beginning with the Liberals and now being propagated further by the Conservative Government.

When one listens to the debate, one cannot help but reflect on how many monopolies in Canada are controlling our lives. Many Canadians do not realize the very subtle and, in many ways, evil influence. My colleagues have referred several times to the nine large, rich and powerful families who control most of the stocks in the Toronto stock exchange. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in British Columbia, and I am sure in other provinces in the west as well, we do not have to dig very deep at all to see the monopoly powers of the Canadian Pacific Railway. These kinds of powers were given early in our development to this huge monopoly, which even to this day controls our lives and developments in a very anti-social way.

I would like to give a couple of examples I hear about frequently in Vancouver. The fact is that the CPR moved funds from the gifts given to it by the Canadian Government into a merchant fleet which was taken out of Canada. That in effect ruined any chance of a merchant marine in Canada. Instead, the merchant fleet went to places like Panama, where it is allowed to employ non-Canadian crews, thereby destroying the potential for Canadian jobs in Canadian shipping. That is the monopoly of the CPR.

Even last week when I was in my riding of Vancouver East the powers of Marathon Realty, which is a branch of the CPR, made apparent its influence in anti-social development. The transfer points for dangerous commodities in downtown Vancouver is being moved eastward into my riding of Vancouver East. It is alleged that this is largely because Marathon Realty wants to develop expensive condominiums at the location where these downtown rail and ferry lines meet. All of the recommendations made by the planners to get the dangerous goods right out of the city were completely disregarded. We do not want them moved from one very densely populated residential area into another. All good sense would say that these dangerous goods should be moved right out of Vancouver. I must say I am extremely disappointed that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has allowed this decision to go forward.

You may think, Mr. Speaker, that this particular example is a bit distant from this particular Bill. However, it illustrates the total power of monopolies and corporations which really control our lives, and do not allow either businesses or communities to flourish.

I would like to put some points on the record about the background of competitive legislation reform which, according to one expert, has been one of the "saddest experiences in Canadian public policy". This Bill is the finale to a very sad history of abortive gestures in dealing with competition reform in Canada. That is not just a judgment of the New Democratic Party, but is an assessment of one of the leading competition economists in Canada, Mr. Irving Brecher of McGill University. In 1981, in a study called "Canada's Competition Policy Revisited", he stated:

> This judgement is made all the more painful by the realization that, contrary to often expressed belief, the outcome was not inevitable or beyond the control of Governments determined that it be otherwise.

This is the story of continuing failure over a long period of time. The Economic Council began its deliberations toward a modern competition policy in 1966. Its interim report was completed in 1969. Probably one of the best competition Bills was tabled in 1971, Bill C-256. Perhaps the Speaker who was here at that time remembers that Bill. As of today, however, none of the studies, commitments, Bills or speeches in this House have produced a law which would reform our simplistic, judicially hamstrung and grossly ineffective competition law. Only one very modest Bill was passed.

Today we are being asked to accept Bill C-91 as the ultimate development in competition policy. According to the experts, and I do not profess to be an expert in this field, this is not true at all. It is a fifth generation descendant of a Bill which has been trying to pass this House since 1971. Bills C-256, C-42, C-13 and C-29 all attempted to reform competition law in this country, and all failed. One certainly wonders why.

Anyone who believes that competition law reform is a priority for this country, either under the Liberals or under the Conservatives, should approach Bill C-91 with a good deal of suspicion. The question is not what is in this Bill, but what is not in the Bill; that is the concern. To introduce this legislation, the Minister had to pay a shameful price. In the name of promoting competition in Canada, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) had to reach prior agreement with the very same people who had prevented the passage of all four of the previous Bills, namely, the representatives of big business. We know who the spokespersons are for big business. Conservative Hon. Members are usually very proud to say that they are the spokespersons for big business. How can the Tories effectively negotiate with the very large families and corporations which have a vested interest in this issue and give to the Conservative campaigns?

It is not as if the Government is resigned, after fighting the good fight, to getting half a loaf in Bill C-91. It has brought about this outcome by deliberately lowering its sights and being afraid to fight for a better economic deal for average Canadians in most of their every-day purchases. Just how much average Canadians are paying for this continuing policy failure will no doubt surprise Hon. Members.

We should take inventory of what this policy failure has cost the country and ordinary Canadian consumers. The Canadian economy, as we know, is highly concentrated. It is susceptible to price increases associated with high tariffs. Domination of markets keeps prices high throughout a business cycle. The cost to Canada for this kind of anti-competitive system has been estimated at 7.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. I will elaborate on that.

In 1984 the GNP was $416 billion. The cost of economic wastes attributable to the absence of price competition in Canada was, therefore, $31.4 billion and rising yearly. This estimate comes from a noted competition economist, Mr. A. M. Moore. I do not believe the Nielsen task force looked into this whole area; certainly it should have done so. But there again, of course, most of the representatives on the committees who were advisory to the evaluation were also representatives of big business.

There are further costs to the economy, as Profesor Brecher noted. Highly sheltered markets mean a sluggish economy which is slow to adapt. These non-competitive markets also breed persistent and powerful private attempts at manipulation of the political process to sustain the economic status quo. Thus we can see a New Brunswick dominated by K. C. Irving family interests, a Newfoundland dominated by Water Street merchants, or the western provinces, formally dominated by C.P.R., in fact still dominated by Marathon in Vancouver, and or many industries such as the food industry, now regionally dominated by only one or two groups.

This legislation in its weaknesses and omissions will is going to allow this trend to continue. That is a disgraceful situation. It affects every Canadian consumer. I am sure that if the Canadian consumers were only more aware of what the Government is trying to do to them, they would join us today in strongly opposing this very inadequate and, indeed, negative Bill.

• (1220)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to take part in the second reading debate on Bill C-91, a Bill which in many ways is one of the most important and fundamental pieces of legislation to come before this Session of Parliament. This legislation is about the smoke and mirrors that goes on when the Tory Government is actually asked to make its rhetoric a reality. The rhetoric of the Tory Government is that it believes in the free market, in free enterprise and in letting the market-place make decisions. The history of competition legislation in Canada shows very clearly that it has been the Conservative Party which over and over again has thwarted attempts to make effective competition a reality. We need look no further than at the level and nature of the consultation which took place before Bill C-91 in order to establish the reality in Canada. A Government which professes its belief in competition and free enterprise in fact believes nothing of the sort when it comes to the crunch.

The big five, the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada Association and the Canadian Bar Association—

Mr. Allmand: The Gang of Five.

Mr. Robinson: That Gang of Five, as my colleague has called it, is once again writing competition legislation for the Government. Was there any consultation with groups representing farmers, working people, consumers or the academic community? No. Rather, the Government consulted the Gang of Five. That is not surprising because we know the old saying that he or she who pays the piper calls the tune.

This morning I took the opportunity of looking through the record of contributions made to political Parties during the last federal election. Lo and behold, as I looked through the list of corporate contributions I found that the Gang of Five was very generous indeed, and in most cases its generosity was shared in equal portions by the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party. The big five banks each donated $50,000 per year to the Conservative Party and $50,000 per year to the Liberal Party. He or she who pays the piper calls the tune, and we see in this legislation that the big corporations and the big banks have been calling the tune on competition legislation.

What is the effectiveness of this legislation? We have seen many cases of individuals being arrested and convicted of theft and sent to jail, or if fined and unable to pay the fine, sent to jail in default. However, when a corporation steals from Canadian consumers through excessive pricing or many of the other mechanisms which are used to rip off consumers, do corporate executives go to jail for that? Of course not. They write it off as another tax expense.

We in the New Democratic Party believe in economic democracy as well. We do not happen to believe in the rhetoric of the Conservative and Liberal Parties which is that if we have a wonderful free enterprise system in which competition takes place, then somehow everything will be just fine. As democratic socialists, we remind Canadians that in the pursuit of profit through corporate greed, many other human values are twisted, eroded and destroyed.

What results from the pursuit of global maximization of profit? First, because the costs of production are driven down, we see destruction of the environment, pollution, destruction of our beautiful lakes and rivers and destruction of clean air. It costs money to properly protect and nurture our precious environment. If a corporation is trying to drive down the costs of production and externalize those costs, it wll pollute and destroy the environment.

We know that in an attempt to maximize profit, working men and women have their health and safety threatened. Of course, it costs money to make sure that the workplace is safe and healthy. In the corporate drive for profit we see regional disparities and inequities resulting. The levels of unemployment in some parts of the country, including the Maritime provinces, rural Quebec and British Columbia are tremendously high.

We see the results of the pursuit of corporate greed in the production of shabby and unsafe goods. Of course, it costs a little more money to produce quality goods. If a corporation wants to maximize, then the bottom line is that it does not care about effective, safe and non-hazardous consumer goods. It builds in the costs of a few deaths, as did the manufacturers of the Pinto, knowing full well that that car would explode and result in a few deaths. That is the corporate greed which we in this Party reject.

Corporate greed means that there is advertising to promote a demand which in many cases is ineffective. It means that the corporate sector will be fighting tooth and nail against effective affirmative action to ensure that the hiring of the disabled, women, visible minorities and native people is promoted. As we know, that is action which the corporate sector has vigorously rejected.

While we recognize that we should be holding the Government accountable to its own rhetoric about competition, free enterprise and letting the market rule, we in this Party believe in a very fundamental alternative. We believe that the economy should be organized, not to squeeze as much profit as possible out of it for a few faceless shareholders in some corporate board room in another part of the world, but to serve the needs of Canadians and to ensure that global inequities in the distribution of wealth and power are eliminated. We believe that an economy should be organized in such a way as to ensure that the overriding goal of full employment, a job for each and every Canadian who wants one is met. We believe that there are many ways of achieving this other than using corporate cutthroat greed and competition.

In the short time available to me I will not have an opportunity to elaborate to any great length on some of those alternatives. However, surely we should be looking far more seriously at an important and significant role for the co-operative sector to play in society. We must look at an important role for local communities to play. Local communities should be able to make decisions about their own economic priorities.

I see that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is present in the House. He very ably chaired a task force on unemployment and job creation. One of the things we on that task force heard over and over again was that smaller communities wanted to make their own decisions about their economic priorities, rather than seeing more and more mergers and acquisitions which contribute not one new job, but merely line the pockets of a few corporate shareholders.

We in this Party say that this legislation is fundamentally flawed. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), has pointed out so eloquently in his remarks, many of the objective commentators have pointed to the weakness of this legislation and to the fact that it has been systematically eroded over the passage of time. We know that effective provisions for class actions, for example, which are so important for consumers, are totally lacking in this legislation. We know that effective provisions to deal with predatory pricing are absent from this legislation.

We look forward to an extensive study of this legislation in committee in order to ensure that, to the extent that it is possible to improve this badly flawed legislation, it will be improved.

• (1230)

Surely the bottom line is that we as a country must recognize that the way to organize the economy is not to try to squeeze as much profit as possible out of the country, but to serve human needs and human values.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is the following one. Mr. Côté (Langelier), seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-91, an Act to establish the Competition Tribunal and to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Côté (Langelier)), which was agreed to on the following division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, is the result of that vote because some Members voted twice, or are some of the Members being counted as voting once? I really think there should be some clarification.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that the votes were counted as Members intended them to be counted.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think that under the circumstances it would probably be appropriate to call it one o'clock. Now that the Bill has been called for consideration, we can commence our deliberations in earnest after Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the House agrees that the Chair now see it as one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 12.56 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

THE ADMINISTRATION

MOVEMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR YOUTH

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government has done it again. By moving the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) from the Secretary of State to Employment, the Government is downgrading the importance of youth in Canadian society. All the Government is going to do from now on is to consider youth as an employment problem.

S.O. 21

Until now, women, the disabled, minorities, the native people and youth were looked upon as an integral part of Canadian society. By relegating the Minister of State for Youth to Employment and Immigration, youth is dropped from the Canadian scene. In essence the Government says: "You are no longer a partner in Canadian society. You, whether native, multicultural or otherwise, have no place at the national table and we decide, not you."

In the Liberal Party we reject vigorously this ill-considered decision by the Tory Government and we will do what is in our power to ensure that youth regain their strong voice and role in Canadian society.

CANADIAN CULTURE

TRIBUTE TO ABBÉ MAURICE PROULX

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I, and with me all the people of the riding of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, all Quebecers and all Canadians, wish to pay tribute to a man who has made an unprecedented contribution to the history of film in Quebec. From the Depression years to the Quiet Revolution, he produced and made an impressive number of films.

Father Maurice Proulx, a pioneer in the art of cinematography, was among the founders of one of our greatest Canadian cultural institutions, the National Film Board.

In recognition of the admirable work done by this resident of La Pocatière, yesterday, Father Maurice Proulx was made a Member of the Order of Canada.

FORESTRY

LOSS OF JOBS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) participated in the National Forest Congress which is concluding today in Ottawa, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the plight of forestry workers in Canada, particularly in British Columbia. Some 26,000 people have lost their jobs in the forest industry in B.C., 16,000 of them members of the IWA. Of those, 5,500 are older workers whose pensions are threatened because their lay-offs have extended beyond two years. I call on the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), the Minister of State for Forestry, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Prime Minister to help immediately develop a labour adjustment program for these disadvantaged older workers.

Given the Government's failure to introduce a national forest policy, it must now take measures to introduce a National Forest Act, a Department of Forests, and a full Minister of Forests in order to bring the industry into the prominence it should occupy in our country.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

OPENING OF THE WALTER DINSDALE DISABILITY INFORMATION SERVICE IN CALGARY

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the number of services available to the physically disabled in our communities is growing, but many people have trouble finding out about these resources. Today in Calgary the Secretary of State has opened a centre which will keep track of all the information and services available to physically handicapped persons, their organizations, and rehabilitation professionals across the country. The federal Government is giving $720,000 to the University of Calgary over the next two years to develop and operate the centre.

I am particularly delighted that the Disability Information Service Centre is to be named after my predecessor, the late Hon. Walter Dinsdale. Periodically, individuals make an outstanding commitment to a cause. The Hon. Walter Dinsdale was such a person. He devoted a lifetime of work to increasing the awareness of all Canadians of the specific problems encountered by the physically disabled. He worked to make life easier for those who were so disadvantaged. Therefore it is exceedingly appropriate that this Centre be named in his honour.

SHIPBUILDING

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED OFFSHORE PURCHASES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government more concerned with creating jobs in foreign countries than in Canadian shipyards? Canadian shipbuilders will see their jobs either gone or about to disappear. They are outraged with the latest insult to their industry by the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre). On April 4 in Halifax the Minister told a news conference that "I am still entertaining the possibility" of buying up to $100 million worth of foreign vessels for the naval reserve and auxiliary fleet.

• (1405)

Whatever happened to the eight separate promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election campaign to the shipbuilding industry to increase the number of workers?

These proposed offshore purchases must be scrapped immediately and replaced with a commitment on the part of the Government to build these ships using Canadian labour in Canadian shipyards in British Columbia, the Atlantic provinces, as well as in Quebec. The Government of Canada has an obligation to support Canadian workers in this industry and it is about time it began living up to that responsibility.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANCELLATION OF CONTACT PROGRAM

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, not long ago, The French network of the CBC, Radio-Canada, announced that the program "Contact" would be dropped. This program had a daily listener rating of 40,000. "Contact" was the only program covering social and cultural activities in the Gaspé.

The half-million dollars Radio-Canada wanted to save in Gaspé could have been found in other areas, by cutting back on administration and overtime, for instance.

The decision by Radio-Canada to drop "Contact" reflects a petty attitude and a desire to politicize a decision that should have been a purely administrative one.

The people of the Gaspé will not tolerate being used by Radio-Canada in its attempts to blackmail the Government.

Remote regions really need Radio-Canada's regional services. If the Crown Corporation no longer wishes to accept that mandate, its very existence may be challenged.

Our Government's goal is to cut fat, not to cut services to remote communities.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

RESTORATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, today is a day of victory for CP pensioners. As a result of the lobbying by CP pensioners across the land, as a result of the lobbying by Members of this House, and as a result of the petitions tabled here by members of the New Democratic Party, CP Rail has informed its present pensioners that they can get their rail passes back.

In a letter to CP pensioners the President of CP Rail, Mr. Allison, indicated that pensioners can have a choice: they can either keep their rail passes or join the health care plan offered by the company. This is exactly what the pensioners wanted. CP Rail could have avoided this controversy if it had given the pensioners this choice in the first place.

To the pensioners' credit they fought back this attempt to take away something that is rightfully theirs. CP Rail should have learned from the experience of this Conservative Government: you do not do anything to get our senior citizens mad. Seniors fight back, and as they should, and they invariably win.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC GASOLINE SURTAX BE REDUCED

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, this morning, gasoline was selling at 44.1 cents a litre in Ottawa and at 50 cents a litre in Montreal. That is a difference of 6 cents a litre and it does not go to the oil companies. It does not go to the retailers either, nor to the federal Government. The fact is that the Quebec surtax has not been adjusted to the lower prices since September 1984. Apparently, the elevator cannot go down when the prices fall.

Mr. Speaker, why wait for the next provincial budget to adjust this odious and unfair surtax charged to Quebecers?

When prices have increased in the past, the adjustment was made the very same week.

I have been denouncing this surtax since November 18, 1981, and I shall continue to denounce it until it is completely withdrawn because it was supposed to be temporary and variable. Withdrawal of this surtax would not make things better in Quebec than in Ontario, but it would put both provinces on the same footing.

This is my fondest wish for all Quebec consumers. This surtax is unfair and it has cost Quebec consumers about $64 million. This money should be given back to them immediately.

EMPLOYMENT

VERSATILE DAVIE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the employment growth attests to the success of our administration. Instead of closeting ourselves with Government technocrats, we made sure that we would have the ongoing co-operation of the people.

In my riding of Lévis for instance, a private company, Versatile Davie, its unionized workers, the Chamber of Commerce, the economic development councils and businessmen have been openly co-operating with their Member and the Government.

Our Government paid close attention to the wishes of people in the constituency of Lévis, and today the Lauzon Versatile Davie shipyards workers know that they need not worry about unemployment for several years.

As a result of this co-operation, Mr. Speaker, the various economic interests in this case will take part in a radio program aired between 6 a.m. and 9 a.m. tomorrow over our regional station CFLS.

We are successful, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the co-operation of other Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS REDUCTION—CONSEQUENCES FOR EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Employment and Immigration has released statistics which prove that once again older Canadians have been had by the Conservative Government as a result of unemployment insurance cut-backs: 34,000 pre-retirees have been had, including 13,000 in Quebec, 8,000 in Ontario, 6,648 in western Canada, and 3,087 in the Maritime provinces.

Those people had been assured by their employers and Department officials that they would be eligible for early retirement to enable younger workers to keep their jobs, but on January 5 the Government arbitrarily slashed their income.

Mr. Speaker, a national organization is being set up to urge all those people to launch an appeal, and I do hope we will have the support of all Hon. Members to help those retired Canadians.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

COMMODITY BASED LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Commodity Based Loan Program represents an innovative approach to farm financing for those existing FCC clients who find themselves in financial stress.

The CBL permits refinancing at 6 per cent interest, while principal and annual payments will fluctuate according to the percentage increase or decrease in the selling price of the borrower's main commodity.

This is not an interest rate subsidy plan. The purpose is to reduce the number of farm failures among FCC clients by reducing payments, and thus easing demands on cash flow in times of falling commodity prices. Should prices rise greatly, which we all hope, there is a cap. A borrower cannot pay more than the amount called for in the CBL mortgage.

The CBL program will be monitored over the initial two years and a decision will then be made on whether the program has merit and can be expanded to other potential borrowers.

This is a bold initiative, one worthy of consideration. I commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for this new and imaginative measure.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

SMOKE-FREE WORKPLACES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament may have noticed the unhappy story of the de Havilland employee who was forced to work in a smoke-polluted office or quit her job.

The fact that this case falls under provincial jurisdiction and proves the inadequacy of provincial occupational health and safety legislation should give us no cause for complacency.

Federal legislation is no better, as other cases of employees wishing to work and breathe safely have shown. Treasury Board still fights employees and their unions who seek a smoke-free workplace.

Returns from a survey in my riding show 90 per cent support for legislation to ensure a smoke-free working environment, and support goes up to 93 per cent, 94 per cent, and 95 per cent respectively for smoke-free buses, planes, and trains.

With 35,000 Canadians dying every year from tobacco related diseases, 5,000 of them from secondary smoke, largely in the workplace, surely it is time for the Government to bring in effective legislation.

THE ECONOMY

MEASURES TO ASSIST SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, some recent examples illustrate that Saskatchewan people are being heard in Ottawa.

Despite quite a bleak outlook for Canada's grain exports, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr.

Mayer) announced an initial price which was low, but higher than it could have been. With a good grain stabilization payment anticipated, and a serious commitment to raise the domestic price, our Saskatchewan citizens know that the Government is doing everything possible to improve prices.

In the energy field many of us have worked hard to see the Husky upgrader stay alive. Federal Ministers and Premier Devine have agreed to a $90 million plan to see the project through until the construction phase.

What about the issue of farm credit? Just minutes ago the bank rate dropped from 10.14 to 9.33 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gormley: This will help the farmers and the small-business people of Canada. Indeed, Saskatchewan is being heard here in Ottawa.

CANADIAN HYDROGRAPHIC SERVICE

SOUNDING OF NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, much of Canada's navigable waters yet remain to be accurately sounded. This is particularly true in the Arctic where Canada would exert its sovereignty.

Conventional bathymetry, using sonar equipment carried by surface vessels, is costly, time consuming, and hampered by ice cover.

The Canadian Hydrographic Service is to be complimented for its excellent work over the years and now for its interest in developing new airborne depth measuring systems such as those using electromagnetic and laser techniques.

Speedy, accurate, and cost effective airborne bathymetry will improve the efficiency and safety of navigation in Canadian waters.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

REDUCED INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Because of yesterday's news that the initial grain prices would be 19 per cent lower than the 1985 initial prices, the western provinces, already reeling from lower oil and gas prices, find themselves in a wholesale crisis. I wonder if the Prime Minister would respond to what I put to him yesterday and convene a meeting of the western Premiers to address the question and come up with some sort of farm emergency relief.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the serious situation facing western grain farmers, in fact all grain farmers in Canada. As was said yesterday, we are getting very close to being able to announce an initial payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is well aware of the many initiatives taken by the federal Minister of Agriculture and the amount of money which was pumped into the Canadian grain economy last year.

We are well aware of the situation. We have been communicating as well with our trading partners in order to make them aware of how serious we view this situation, and how much we question their actions in terms of trying to be helpful to farmers in all parts of the world.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would have hoped that my question would have merited a response from the Prime Minister. However, I will put my second question to the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION ROLLBACK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister knows that, as a result of the difference between the 1985 and 1986 initial grain prices, gross income for many western grain farmers will drop by about $20,000. Under these circumstances he will understand what that does to western communities, the municipal base, machinery companies and automobile dealers, in fact the whole community. Would the Minister talk to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Finance to see whether he could get a guarantee to move the 1986 prices back up to the 1985 level?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance needs to be congratulated for the way he has been handling things so that we can see such a dramatic drop in interest rates as we have today.

Farmers are large borrowers and users of money. This will have a beneficial effect on them and help to reduce some of their operating costs.

Mr. Gauthier: But they can't pay their debts.

Mr. Mayer: We know that is not the total answer. Something the Right Hon. Leader should also be aware of is the Striking Committee Report this morning on the establishment of a committee to investigate increasing the price for domestic wheat. That also involves consumers. We were very happy that Sally Hall, the President of the Consumers' Association of Canada, said this morning that she supports an increased domestic price of wheat used to make pasta, flour, and other food products, as long as the money reaches farmers. There are some encouraging things and some things we can do there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister refers to his colleague, the Minister of Finance. I doubt whether people in his constituency or other farmers in western Canada would be in the same congratulatory mood.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Under the circumstances I will direct my third question to the Minister of State for Finance. She knows that farmers are now paying about $1.1 billion annually in interest rates. Since she has been so generous to the depositors in the western banks, to the tune of $1 billion, would she convene her friends in the banking industry and arrange a moratorium on foreclosures in western Canada until this crisis is over?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, let me just point out two rather important pieces of information to the Right Hon. Member since he seems to have missed them. First, we had another decline in interest rates today which is of great benefit to farmers.

Mr. Ouellet: He just said that.

Ms. McDougall: Second, many of the depositors in those banks were farmers.

REQUEST FOR CO-OPERATIVE PLAN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he may well know, if a farmer in southern Manitoba were to find some way of moving his land across the border to North Dakota he would not only receive double the value for his wheat, he would get cheaper machinery, fuel, and chemicals. This crisis calls for a totally co-ordinated approach covering all aspects of the farm cost price squeeze. Would the Prime Minister undertake to put that co-operative plan into place to look at things like reducing the fuel tax for farmers and providing a deficiency payment so that they can at least have a chance to compete in top world markets?

• (1420)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about a co-ordinated approach. He should know that the U.S. Farm Bill was put in place not solely by the administration but by the Congress as well. We have gone across the line to speak to farm groups and we have encouraged farm groups in Canada to do the same.

As I understand it, the Hon. Member had a chance to participate in the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Association meeting which occurred at the end of February and the beginning of March. I would like to know if he took the concerns he is raising now on behalf of farmers to the U.S. Congressmen to see what kind of response he would get. If we are going to have a co-ordinated approach, I would like to know if he has been participating in seeing that that co-ordinated approach comes about.

INTERNATIONAL MEETING OF GRAIN EXPORTING COUNTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, once again those people are abdicating their responsibilities and asking us to form the Government. We would be quite happy to take on that responsibility.

My supplementary question is again directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of State for the Wheat Board has said that he expects there to be an international meeting this summer of all the export grain producing nations. In his discussions with President Reagan did the Prime Minister gain the agreement of the President for American participation in that conference, and did he also get the President's agreement that the Americans will co-operate in trying to find an international solution to this very deep and devastating problem affecting our farmers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about abdicating responsibilities. He should know that, as a result of a Government of which he was a part, which totally abdicated fiscal responsibility, we saw interest rates go as high as 20 per cent and that put a lot of farmers on their backs. We have a Minister of Finance who today is able to see the bank rate go under 9 per cent. That tells me that there is some responsibility on behalf not only of farmers but of everyone else in the country.

REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister. He said earlier that the Government would soon have something to say about stabilization payments. The Minister knows that there is a major distinction between that and deficiency payments. Since the Governments of the United States and European countries are doing a lot for their farmers to enable them to keep their farms and to keep producing, much more than our Government is in the present crisis, will our Government announce a deficiency payment soon in order to put our farmers into a competitive position?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, this is the beginning of the growing season and it is a long way away from being completed. Admittedly it is bad news at the beginning because of world grain prices over which Canada has very little control.

The President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the largest grain handling company in the country, said that "only crop insurance, grain stabilization and other agricultural programs kept the provincial farm economy from plunging into the red in 1985," and that in 1985 farm income showed "a net loss of $405 million when payments from these Government-supported programs aren't considered". We have been aware of the serious situation in agriculture and, as Mr. Turner said, without the help we gave in 1985, prairie farmers would have been in the red. That is the kind of record we have had in the past and we want to see what we can do to see that that record survives into the next year.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to what Mr. Turner said last year. I will refer to what he said the day before yesterday. The day before yesterday he said that prairie farmers needed $1 billion from the Government. The Government did it for the banks. It should do it for the farmers now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Would the Minister deal with that substantive question? Considering that the Europeans and Americans are helping their farmers, and considering that the Government bailed out the banks when they were in need, will he bring in a deficiency payment to help out our farmers who are now in need?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. By listening to him, one would think that the federal Government has done nothing for farmers. In fact there have been over 100 initiatives for farmers involving several billions of dollars.

As I said yesterday and on previous occasions—and if the Hon. Member wants to do the arithmetic, I will give him the figures after Question Period—the amount of money the federal Government put directly into the prairie grain economy in 1985 amounted to something like $1.5 billion. We have seen the problem, and we have acted by transferring literally billions of dollars to the western economy.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the crisis that is being faced now is in 1986. The Minister was talking about 1985.

• (1425)

FARM FUEL TAXES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. On the eve of the last general election, in Prince Albert, appropriately enough, he made a number of promises on behalf of his Party to the agricultural sector. Among them was the promise to remove all federal taxes from farm fuels. Since at least four cents per litre has not been rebated to farmers, will the Prime Minister at least live up to his promise which he made in the Prairies to farmers, and remove all federal taxes from farm fuels?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was reading the wrong document. The document to which he should more accurately refer suggested that we would remove the sales tax from farm fuels. If he checked the record, he would see that we did that. In fact we did it about three days after this House convened after the election.

EFFECT OF REDUCED INITIAL PRICE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. In the last general election the Prime Minister made a campaign commitment that he would make Canada into a superpower in terms of agricultural exporting nations. How can the western farmer even survive with the initial price announced this week, it being the lowest since 1930 in terms of purchasing power back in the days of R. B. Bennett and Bennett buggies?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, in terms of Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier of high quality food products around the world, Canada has an extremely good reputation. The Canadian Wheat Board has a very good reputation of being able to sell and maintain our markets. The Canadian Grain Commission has a reputation second to none. It is one of the oldest and most respected agencies in terms of grading and quality of grain in the world. We have maintained that reputation. The problem we face is not unique to Canada and Canadian farmers. The problem we face is a larger problem, that is, very depressed world grain prices.

REQUEST FOR 1985 INITIAL PRICE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government not prepared to provide 1985 initial prices which would provide about $1 billion worth of support to western farmers who are in serious financial difficulty? The Minister knows that during the last several weeks, or a month or so, we have advanced several billions of dollars to support banks in trouble. Why can we not give the same kind of support and assistance to farmers who are in deep trouble?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have to say again and again that we have been spending many, many millions, in fact billions of dollars, in terms of the federal Government's support to Canadian agriculture. Let me also tell the Hon. Member what some people in the grain business are saying. He talked about raising prices to the 1985 level, which everyone would like to see return. Here is what some people are saying: "Please tell the farmer the truth and don't use initial prices to mislead him". That is what we tried to do. We have tried to be as honest and as straightforward as possible in the very serious situation which we face in world grain prices.

As I pointed out, the Government has a good record in terms of seeing the problem, being able to address it, and of the amount of money which has been transferred from the federal Government to the grain economy.

REMOVAL OF FARM FUEL TAX

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Prince Albert Declaration indicated that they would remove the 9 per cent sales tax and all the excise tax. Will the Minister now tell us that they will do exactly that?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that action was taken so long ago that I would have to check the record, but my memory would lead me to believe that indeed that has been done.

Mr. Broadbent: Ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, along the same lines of agricultural finance, would the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board at least consider the payment of a deficiency payment?

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that that is not a supplementary question. The Hon. Member for Papineau.

AIR SAFETY

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. What guarantees can he give this House that today, as he promises to tighten security in our airports, his credibility is any better than it was on June 25, 1985, after the Air India tragedy, when he announced that exceptional air safety measures would be taken?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member yesterday, a number of steps have been implemented and a number of steps are under review. Airports across the country are undergoing audits. I also indicated yesterday the additional steps we would be taking in view of the very serious issue which occurred last week. I take this matter as a very serious one. I indicated that I would be calling in the executives of the airlines and the Burns security people. As well, I will be inviting representatives of the unions to sit down to see what further steps can be taken to ensure the highest level of safety at all airports throughout the country.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO IMPROVE SECURITY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister jumping on his feet to try to save the credibility of the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Could the Minister of Transport tell us whether it is true that 100 recommendations were made a long time ago that are now before Cabinet and before the Government for study, and that the Government has not yet taken any action because of costs? The Government is now nickel-and-diming with the lives and the security of Canadians.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, I will put the credibility of this Prime Minister against any past or future Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We will take a bet.

An Hon. Member: Tell John Fraser that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: To respond to the serious part of the Member's question, as I said yesterday, the Solicitor General and myself are in the process of preparing a joint memorandum to Cabinet which will provide for a comprehensive security enhancement program at all our airports. I am sure the Hon. Member will be very interested in that.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. He knows that the United States floor price for grain is $145 a tonne Canadian, and that the announcement the Wheat Board made in this country for initial prices works out to $130 Canadian.

Why is the initial price for Canadian grain $15 or $10 lower in Canada than in the United States when the U.S. floor price in reality becomes the world floor price? Why is there a $15 shortfall for Canadian farmers? It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure the Hon. Member does his arithmetic correctly. There is more to setting prices than simply looking at the U.S. rate. Also, if the Member wants to get into the U.S. Farm Bill, he will know that it is a very complex piece of legislation. I have said previously, and I will say again, that we do not want to be totally spooked by the U.S. Farm Bill. We want to look at the bigger problem and look at it in context with what the Europeans are doing.

We have set, to say it again, the initial prices this year at probably a higher percentage of the anticipated realized final price than has been the case in the past.

COMMITTEE STUDY OF PARITY PRICING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board knows that this morning we had a striking committee on a special study of parity pricing and a higher domestic wheat price.

Can the Minister say whether or not he is now prepared to make a recommendation that we have a parity price for Canadian grain sold to Canadians for domestic purposes and that we adjust it annually according to the increase in the cost of production?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is appropriate for anybody to prejudge what the committee will find. What I said on Tuesday, and say again, is that we want to look very seriously at raising prices for domestic consumption.

Mr. Benjamin: What the hell is your policy?

Mr. Mayer: We give credit to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville and also to the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek, for this is something we want to look at very seriously.

I quoted before the President of the Consumers Association of Canada, Mrs. Sally Hall from Edmonton. Anytime we have gone to consumers with our case and consumers understand where the money is going, we have been treated very fairly by them. That, however, is up to the committee. Whatever the committee recommends, as far as the Government is concerned, we will be prepared to take a very serious look at it.

PUBLIC WORKS

INVESTIGATION INTO AWARDING OF MUSEUM OF MAN CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS—INQUIRY WHEN PRIME MINISTER INFORMED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the matter of the Public Works contract or contracts at the Museum of Man construction site in Hull.

When did the Prime Minister become aware of this situation and could he inform the House whether his Office or the Privy Council Office has investigated the matter, and more specifically, what the scope of the investigation was? Was it a full investigation and will it be tabled in the House?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the House dealt with this question the other day. As the Hon. Member knows, he alleged in the House of Commons that there was a police investigation under way. It would not be appropriate for the House to comment further on it.

Mr. Gauthier: How about the Government?

INQUIRY CONCERNING SEARCH WARRANTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. He seems to want to answer lots of questions on this subject. My question concerns the same case.

Can the Solicitor General inform this House whether the RCMP has obtained warrants for the search of parliamentary offices of any Members of Parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not allow that question.

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: Any matters with regard to that are entirely within the province of the Chair.

EMPLOYMENT

EXPENDITURES ON JOB TRAINING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There are now so many chronic unemployed in Vancouver that the Vancouver food bank is running out of food and has to close down on "welfare Wednesdays". Why, in the last fiscal year when $55 million was approved for job creation and job training in British Columbia, was only $40 million spent? Why, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that, indeed, the situation in British Columbia is serious with regard to unemployment, but he will also recognize that since this Government came to office 60,000 new jobs have been created in the Province of British Columbia.

In the past year some $260 million alone has been spent by the Department of Employment on programs to assist individuals and organizations in the Province of British Columbia.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, there are 50,000 fewer people employed in British Columbia today than there were in 1981. There are 5,000 fewer people employed on Vancouver Island than when this Government came into office.

Even though that money has officially lapsed, will she reprofile it so that the people of British Columbia can at least get some benefit from it and the $15 million will not be completely lapsed?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unemployment in the Province of British Columbia is down 32,000 since our Government came to office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That is not a full answer, but it is the right trend. We want to see that trend continuing.

As I said, in the last year some $260 million was spent in the Province of British Columbia by the Government, and this year we will continue to fund projects that will help alleviate the distress in that province.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST THAT SIMPLIFIED TAX RETURN FORM BE DEVISED

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question today is for the Minister of National Revenue. One way American citizens cope with the complicated personal income tax system is with a special one-page tax return for filers with few deductions, called 1040EZ. Can the Minister tell the House whether it would be possible to provide over 10 million eligible Canadian taxpayers with similar and much needed tax simplification?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my colleague knows that for many many millions of Canadians who are claiming tax credits, such as refundable sales tax or child tax credits, the T-1 Special affords them an opportunity to simplify greatly their income tax filing. On the other hand, for Canadians whose social benefits are delivered by both the federal and provincial Governments through the tax system, we are still trying to devise a way to simplify their tax returns.

As Members know, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South made reference to the contribution that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs hopes to make in this regard, and I can assure him that our officials are also working very hard in conjunction with the Minister of Finance's officials in proceeding with this important task.

PUBLIC WORKS

REPORTED INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question about the matter raised by my colleague and not answered by the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General has been silent about the matter but his officials have not. Officials of the RCMP have made official statements about the matter.

Therefore, with the cloud that has been raised by these statements over the activities of the Ministry of Public Works, has the Prime Minister discussed this investigation with the Minister of Public Works? Will the Minister of Public Works continue to be responsible for all of his duties, or does the Prime Minister intend to call him in for a discussion about this matter, which has been officially raised by the RCMP?

• (1440)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. gentleman to the comments of his Leader made on November 30, 1984, reported on page 770 of Hansard. He said the following:

> Would he—
>
> —meaning my predecessor as Solicitor General—
> —review the practice of his Department, and perhaps his own approach to investigations, by reinstating the practice that used to apply in this House, and I believe still should, reflecting the principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty?
> He must realize the reflection that announcements of investigations may have on private reputations, and should refuse to reveal whether an investigation is in progress by the police unless and until charges are preferred.

Mr. Nunziata: That has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. Beatty: I expect that the Hon. Member would respect the wishes of his Leader, which were not to do that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The issue has been raised by your own officers, Perrin, and that's quite different.

Ms. Copps: That's right, get your facts straight.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The Solicitor General has raised a red herring in the remarks he has just made. A cloud has been cast over the operations of the Government. There is an inquiry going on and there may be charges laid. I am not asking about that.

With regard to the ongoing operations of the Department of Public Works, has the Prime Minister spoken to his Minister of Public Works? Does that Minister continue to exercise fully the responsibilities of that office?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, all of the questions which are being asked by the Liberals today are premised on the belief that there is a police investigation under way. I refer them to the comments made by their Leader, the Leader of the Opposition, who was very explicit and said that the Minister "should refuse to reveal whether an investigation is in progress by the police unless and until charges are preferred". I believe that was the position of the Liberal Party of Canada as enunciated by the Leader of the Opposition. It is the correct policy, and I would expect that his members would respect it.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER SOCIAL HOUSING PROJECTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for CMHC. I have just learned that 20 more hotels in downtown Vancouver are undergoing renovations which could cause another 1,000 evictions. Will the Minister now reconsider and approve emergency funding for the five downtown social housing projects which were requested as a special CMHC Expo project?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, prior to January of this year I approved five special projects for the City of Vancouver. I received a communication from the Mayor of the City of Vancouver recognizing the fact that CMHC and the federal Government had recognized that there would be additional strains in the City of Vancouver this summer. He thanked us for that recognition. We put forward five or six additional housing projects in the City of Vancouver in anticipation of Expo 86.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SOCIAL HOUSING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Member for Vancouver Centre would agree that the people of downtown Vancouver are suffering greatly. What are they supposed to do—sleep under a bridge?

Is the Minister responsible for housing still determined to transfer responsibility for social housing to the B.C. Social Credit Government when it has demonstratred again and again its lack of consideration for poor people, especially those in downtown Vancouver?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we anticipate a 60 per cent increase in the number of social housing units in British Columbia this year because the provincial and federal Governments are joining together to spend additional dollars on social housing.

Ms. Copps: You're creating ghettos.

Mr. McKnight: The Member for Hamilton East says that we are creating ghettos. Under the policy of the previous administration only one-third of the housing dollars spent by the taxpayers of Canada went to those in need. We will be spending 100 per cent of those dollars on Canadians in need.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDITS

AUDIT OF COLOURED CATTLE RESEARCH PROJECT

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Revenue. Dreamstreet Holsteins of the United States, presently constituted as Redgen Holstein Research Inc. in Canada, is planning to use $10 million or more in Canadian Scientific Research Tax Credits to conduct what appears to be a superficial test of red and white versus black and white holsteins.

Can the Minister assure the House that the audit procedures in place in his Department will guarantee Canadian farmers that the $10 million in research tax credit will be used efficiently to benefit Canadian agriculture?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I certainly can. In view of the rather unfortunate history of this program, all applicants for SRTC are being audited. When necessary, appropriate expertise is employed to ensure that the research qualifies for the purposes of the Income Tax Act.

While I cannot talk about the specific affairs of any taxpayer, I can assure the Hon. Member that in every case the interests of the Crown are being looked after.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CHANGES AFFECTING BENEFITS—PROVISION OF INFORMATION—RIGHT OF APPEAL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Undoubtedly the Minister is aware—and I am sure she disagrees—that her Government arbitrarily decided to reduce the income of 34,000 Canadians by changing the unemployment insurance regulations, overnight as it were.

Considering that they were misinformed, would the Minister be prepared to write to these 34,000 people and advise them that they are entitled to appeal and seek redress?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been raised many times in the House of Commons. I have said that the question of pension income as it affects unemployment insurance benefits has been referred to the Forget Commission. We are awaiting the recommendations of that commission with regard to this issue. In the meantime I am sure the Hon. Member knows that anyone making any claim whatsoever under the Unemployment Insurance Act has a right of appeal.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not reply to part of my question.

I would point out to her that the people whose income was reduced were misinformed when told that they did not have the right to appeal.

That is why I am asking the Minister, in light of these changes, to write to these 34,000 Canadians and tell them they have the right to file an appeal, including those who were misinformed and for whom the appeal deadline is over.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: As I said, Mr. Speaker, anyone who feels that he or she has any claim whatsoever with regard to unemployment insurance has the right to appeal.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT LOSSES SUFFERED BY BRITISH COLUMBIA CATTLEMEN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. All of the western cattlemen who experienced drought conditions last year have received some kind of compensation except those in central and southern British Columbia. Can the Minister explain to the House why this is the case, and why he has not taken action to provide relief to these troubled cattlemen as well?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have received questions on this serious matter from the Hon. Member before, and more particularly, and more frequently, from members of my own caucus. As I have indicated before, the federal-provincial committee was under a great deal of pressure to identify the areas affected and the seriousness with which they were affected. I appreciate that the committee has met its deadline and, in doing so, has perhaps overlooked certain areas in the interior of B.C. If it is possible to secure some financial assistance within the existing package, I will direct it to that area. Today I am not in a position to indicate other than that at this time matters are fairly positive.

BRITISH COLUMBIA GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. The president of the largest fruit growers' association in British Columbia has found that very few of the financially strapped B.C. fruit farmers will be able to take advantage of his FCC proposal. What does he plan to do to help the lion's share of farmers in western Canada who do not qualify for his FCC program?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have a little difficulty following the Hon. Member who has moved from the vineyard to agriculture in B.C. specifically, and then on through to western Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: I thought B.C. was in the west.

Mr. Wise: His Leader should realize that the three of them deal with different programs. I am not aware of any specific difficulties which exist with the B.C. grape growers. In co-operation with the provincial Government we provided some financial assistance. Recently I signed an order, at the request of British Columbia, changing an agreement to allow greater paricipation by the grape growers in that replant program.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF PENSION AS INCOME—EXPENSE OF APPEALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Last evening we learned from her Deputy Minister that since January more than 34,000 Canadians have suffered the harsh impact of her unemployment insurance changes. Of those, 2,000 have already taken their cases to appeal. Will the Minister not recognize that this is an expensive and difficult process for unemployed Canadians, and immediately suspend these measures until the Forget Commission reports?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will just reiterate that this question has been raised on a good many occasions in the House of Commons. I have indicated to the Hon. Member and to the House on a number of occasions that the matter has been referred to the Forget Commission. I am awaiting its recommendations.

UPHOLDING OF APPEALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, since unemployed Canadians have already won several of these appeals at the board level, will she not at least let these decisions prevail until the Forget Commission reports? Let the positive decisions prevail.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, again, as I have said in this House each time this question has been raised, decisions have been made by Unemployment Insurance Boards of Referees, on both sides of the question. It now proceeds to the Umpire. That is a judicial hearing. The hearing will proceed and I do not feel I should intervene in that process.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES—IMPORT LEVELS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion whose emissaries have returned from Japan. Will he give us a report on whatever progress has been made with respect to the continuation of voluntary import restraints on the part of the Japanese auto manufacturers, as well as Japan's intent with respect to part sourcing in Canada?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in 1986 we seem to be having a repeat of what happened in 1985. You will recall there was continual questioning concerning negotiations between Canada and Japan regarding the voluntary export program. We arrived at an agreement last July, and I ask the Hon. Member to be patient. Negotiations are continuing very well and I think he will not be disappointed with the results.

SOURCING OF PARTS FOR TOYOTA PLANT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give his response to today's CBC report that Toyota officials have indicated they intend to source 90 per cent of their parts in Japan for the new plant in Cambridge, Ontario?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I hope no other Member of the House would use a source for his questioning such as the Hon. Member has just done. Let me assure him that when I met with Mr. Toyota, Chairman of Toyota, in Davos, Switzerland, about six weeks ago—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Name-dropper.

Mr. Stevens: — he specifically said that he intended to source in Canada with respect to the parts that were needed for the plant he intends to build in Canada.

CHALLENGE '86 PROGRAM

APPLICATION MADE BY VANCOUVER FOOD BANK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can see the Minister goes right to the top in a neutral country.

My question is directed to his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She knows that the Vancouver food bank is now obliged to close its doors one week a month because of a lack of funding. She was not able or did not see fit to respond to my request that that bank be funded either under the Job Development Program or under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Will she consider an application by the food bank to be funded under the Challenge '86 Program so that during the summer students may collect any surplus food in the Lower Mainland to help that bank operate?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member has followed Challenge '86 and its various aspects and will know that the application date for Challenge '86 projects has already passed.

Mr. Axworthy: The soul of generosity.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

HAZARDS FACED BY MINE WORKERS

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines and concerns the safety of miners working in Canadian mines. Following four mining fatalities in the Sudbury area in 1984, the Province of Ontario commissioned an inquiry into ground control and emergency preparedness, the findings of which have recently been made public. In light of the inquiry could the Minister tell us what the federal Government is doing about the hazards involved in working in this very important sector of our economy?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to acknowledge the Hon. Member's concern for the safety of workers in the mines. The federal Government has been sharing in the cost of that very special study which followed the accident. We have been providing one-third of the cost. There is a very extensive $4.2 million program into rock bursts, and we are providing an information exchange on ground control in mining involving the EMR, the U.S. Bureau of Mines, and the Ontario Ministry of Labour.

ENERGY

PETRO-CANADA—SALE OF GASOLINE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. Petro-Canada and Imperial Oil are selling gasoline in the U.S. at 7.5 cents a litre less than in Canada. American buyers are turning their trucks around at the border and reselling it to Canadian consumers at our domestic price. How can the Government allow the people's own oil company to participate in such a sham?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we have virtually open borders with the U.S. in energy products at this time. Therefore there is naturally a lot of movement of product across the border in both directions as entrepreneurs look for the best marketing opportunities. I think that is in the interest of consumers.

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): American companies are making a profit at the expense of Canadian consumers of as much as $3,000 per tanker truckload. Will the Government take action to stop this shameful practice and assure Canadians that they can buy their own gasoline at a fair price?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that, upon reflection, the Hon. Member will agree that gasoline in a tank does not have citizenship papers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: It is almost impossible to tell whether a molecule of gasoline came from the American side or the Canadian side. I suggest that the situation as he presents it—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I clearly find that they do not want to hear my answer.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LOCATION OF UNITED STATES NUCLEAR WASTE DUMPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister with respect to the summit in Washington. Can he tell the House now whether or not he raised with President Reagan personally the question of the list of potential American radioactive dump sites near the Canadian border which can possibly affect Canadian water basins?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: What did he say?

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I know it is not a tendency of the Prime Minister to go on and on, but can he tell us whether or not he got a positive response from Mr. Reagan, and what action we can expect from the American administration to alleviate the concerns which many Canadians have about that list of potential dump sites?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The President was very interested.

TRANSPORTATION COSTS—EFFECT OF REDUCED FUEL PRICES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question from Monday is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): As energy prices decline I would like to know if Canadians, especially senior citizens and students, can expect to see a decline in their transportation costs, particularly bus fares, air fares and taxi fares, as well as all other direct transportation costs?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my colleague for his concern over consumers.

As he pointed out, the regulation policy announcement concerning the oil industry, among others, did result in declining consumer prices, and hopefully the deregulation with respect to transportation will lead to lower consumer prices. Of course we are monitoring the situation with great interest.

FORESTRY

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows the National Forest Congress is being held in Ottawa. In fact the Prime Minister participated briefly yesterday at that Congress. I want to ask the Prime Minister why has he not announced, as requested by both industry and labour in the forestry sector, the establishment of a full Ministry and full Department of Forestry as the Prime Minister himself committed to do during the course of the last election campaign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): What we announced after 20 years of Liberal neglect was a creation giving the forest industry a proper and responsible voice at the cabinet table for the first time in years. One of Canada's most important industries had been deprived of an opportunity to have representation at the cabinet table. I know that my hon. friend would agree that the present Minister of State for Forestry is doing such a remarkable job that I would not displace him except to promote him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in receipt of a notice of a desire to raise a point of order and a notice with regard to a question of privilege. Since privilege takes precedence I will recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

PRIVILEGE

FEDERAL TAX ON FARM FUELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I rise on a question of privilege arising from what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said in reply to a question earlier today. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sticks around because his words are directly relevant to what I have to say in a minute. There goes the man, Mr. Speaker, who said he would speak up for the west.

Point of Order—Miss Carney

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: All right. I raise a question of privilege because the Minister of Agriculture, who we know without exception to be an honest person, would not want to mislead the House deliberately. I think inadvertently he has misled the House and that is my question of privilege.

He said in response to a question from me today that his Party did not promise to remove federal taxes from farm fuels, he said only sales taxes.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member may have a dispute about facts or debate, but I take it he is raising a question of what the Minister said. That is not a question of privilege. All he is doing is debating what the Minister said. Does he have a question of privilege?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thought that might be the case, and I will raise the matter directly with the Prime Minister tomorrow, and I hope he will answer at that time.

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice of two points of order. The Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), then the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

POINT OF ORDER

EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS ON HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT—CLARIFICATION

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If there is any interest in this matter I wanted to advise the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Miss Carney: I am attempting to say that yesterday in response to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) I may have inadvertently misled the House in terms of the expenditures of the $90 million which will be shared between the provinces, the company, and the federal Government. In his question to me the Hon. Member indicated that it was his view that all the money was for historic or past cost. In my answer I inadvertently indicated that all of the money is for future costs. I just want to clarify that I have been advised that of the $90 million, some is going for historic costs because the project is an ongoing one. In response to the Hon. Member I may add—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. On the business question, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the customary questions for a Thursday. Will the Government House Leader give us an indication of the business he intends to call for the coming week?

Mr. Speaker: I gather the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) wants to raise a point of order. Order, please. A point of order? Order, please. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Wise: I appreciate you recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, and if I just had the support of the House for 30 seconds I think I could clarify the information that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party raised earlier during the Question Period. I indicated that I was responding from memory.

I had an opportunity to receive more specific information and I think that perhaps it would be good information to be shared by both of us. The actual commitment was to reduce the price of farm fuels by 20 cents a gallon by removing the 9 per cent federal sales tax and by not collecting the current excise tax. The action, of course, was to remove the 3-cent sales tax rebate and the 1.5-cent excise tax. That goes into effect, providing a benefit of some 18 cents a gallon.

Mr. Speaker: On the business question the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to proceed with the customary question on House business. I might say parenthetically that the interjection of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has nothing whatsoever to do with House business. I say with all due respect to him that if he wanted to make a statement of that kind there is another time and place to do it. I hope the Government House Leader will now give us a statement as to the business he intends to call for the coming week.

Mr. Nunziata: Just as the Minister of Energy had almost completed her point of order, and as she was sitting down I distinctly heard her either call you or the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) an s.o.b., and I would ask Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. I will check the record as is our custom. I did not hear the comment. I take it the Hon. Member would like me to check the record and I will do so.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, some time back the House Leader of the Official Opposition asked me about the business for the next week. I would like now to respond to that question. Parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, I might say that we look forward to a very busy and interesting week. I hope we can make some progress.

Today on Orders of the Day we will, of course, start the consideration of report stage of Bill C-62 regarding employment equity. After some consultations with opposition representatives and the House Leaders I will interrupt the consideration of Bill C-62 and call as an item of business Bill C-99, an Act respecting the borrowing authority which has now been reported out of committee. Hopefully we can make some progress on that. If we have not completed our consideration of Bill C-62 by tomorrow, we can maybe go back to that particular item of legislation.

I would like to put forward Bill C-45 and Bill C-103 in that sequence as the business into next week. We will continue to monitor progress on that legislation and consult. If there is progress made we will bring forward further legislation, and I will advise the House at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded with consideration of Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Speaker: There were more than 60 motions on the Order Paper to amend Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity.

Let me first deal with the motions standing in the name of the Honourable Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin). From the consultations that I have had with the Official Opposition, I understand that the Hon. Member for Outremont will not proceed with her motions. Accordingly, motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 33, 36, 37 and 38 will not be selected for debate and will be dropped from the Notice Paper.

[English]

Motion No. 1 is in order and will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 2A, 9, 11A, 13A, 14A, 15, 16A, 20A, 22, 24, 25A, 26A, 31 and 36A have all been dealt with in committee, or closely resemble motions dealt with in committee. The new provisional Standing Orders not only allow the Chair to group motions for debate but also, in effect, instruct the Chair to use its discretion in selecting motions for debate, guided by the note attached to Standing Order 114(10) which reads in part:

—a motion, previously defeated in committee, will only be selected if the Speaker judges it to be of such exceptional significance as to warrant a further consideration at the report stage.

Of course, this is our first time through this procedure and the Chair finds itself in a dilemma at this point. How is the Speaker to decide that a motion previously defeated in committee is of such significance that it warrants further debate? In fact, the note would appear to instruct the Chair not to select for debate any of the motions that I have just mentioned. I am not ready to make a final ruling on this question because some discussions are still going on about those motions, but I invite Hon. Members concerned to make further representations to me. But it must be absolutely clear that under no circumstances, reading that note correctly, could the Chair ever accept to put to the House all of the motions mentioned.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 3A, 4, 5A, 6 and 10 standing in the names of the Hon. Members for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) give the Chair procedural difficulty in that these five motions significantly modify the interpretation clause of the Bill. It would be my intention to rule these motions out of order and I refer the Hon. Members to citation 773(10) of Beauchesne's 5th Edition.

Motions Nos. 8 and 8A are identical and it is the Chair's intention to select motion numbered 8, since it was the first one submitted.

Motion No. 12A will be debated and voted on separately.

• (1510)

[English]

Motions Nos. 19 and 20B in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) appear to seek to add the principle of collective bargaining to the Bill, which was not contemplated at second reading. In keeping with our precedents, it would be my intention to rule these motions out of order.

Motion No. 19A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand) attempts to introduce into the Bill a new group of employers who were not considered for inclusion when the principle of the Bill was agreed to by the House at second reading stage. To paraphrase Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, an amendment is out of order if it is beyond the scope of the Bill it seeks to amend. Therefore, it would be my intention to rule this motion out of order.

[Translation]

Motion No. 19B will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 21A will be debated and voted on separetely.

Motions Nos. 23, 28 and 29 seek to incorporate provisions from the Canadian Human Rights Act into the Bill. This was not contemplated by the House when the Bill was read a second time. I would be very reluctant to proceed with these motions.

Motion No. 27A will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions 31A and 32A will be combined for debate but voted on separately.

Motion No. 33A would have the effect of enlarging the duties of the Human Rights Commission by making it a partner with the Minister in the preparation of reports under the provisions of the Bill. This is beyond the scope of the Bill and, in the view of the Chair, out of order.

[English]

Motions Nos. 34 and 35 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motion No. 37A will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 39 and 39A will be debated together. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 39 will dispose of Motion No. 39A. A negative vote on Motion 39 will require the question to be put on Motion No. 39A.

For the benefit of Hon. Members, I will review those motions which the Chair believes to be out of order. These are Motions Nos. 3A, 4, 5A, 6, 10, 19, 19A, 20B, 23, 28, 29 and 33A.

[Translation]

In order to allow Hon. Members sufficient time to present any procedural arguments they may wish to make, I will hear such arguments on the day when the order is next called or sooner if necessary.

Motions Nos. 2A, 9, 11A, 13A, 14A, 15, 16A, 20A, 22, 24, 25A, 26A, 31 and 36A previously dealt with in committee will be allowed to stand on the Notice Paper until the Chair has received representation from the Hon. Members concerned and a final ruling is made.

[English]

The motions that the Chair finds now to be in order and to be debated are Motions Nos. 1, 8, 12A, 19B, 21A, 27A, 31A, 32A, 34, 35, 37A, 39 and 39A.

May I say to those present that one of the Chair's concerns with the motions that were defeated in committee is that those motions were laid on the Order Paper prior to the adoption of the new rules. For the moment the Chair will put Motion No. 1 to the House, unless there is some argument to be made.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, since you asked for some representations in your ruling, I would like to make some representations and arguments.

You stated in your ruling that you invite Hon. Members concerned to make further representations, preferably in private. I must say that since this is the first time that we are dealing with some of the new rules as they apply at report stage, I want to make my comments in public because I believe it is important business that should be considered by the House.

First, let me speak to the new guideline under one of the Standing Orders which states that a motion previously defeated in committee will only be selected if the Speaker judges it to be of such exceptional significance as to warrant further consideration at the report stage. I believe that the motions I have reintroduced here at report stage, that were defeated in the committee, are all of exceptional significance.

I note that you said at the end of your comments in this respect that: "— it must be clear that the Chair cannot accept to put to the House all the motions mentioned." This indicates to me that you might not be following the rule which is in the Standing Orders, but some sort of quota system. It would seem to me that if none of the motions which were defeated in committee are of exceptional significance, none of them should be allowed. On the other hand, if there are four or five such motions put forward and they are all of exceptional significance, then they should be accepted. I agree that this type of guideline puts the Speaker in a very difficult position because he is not always able to closely follow the debates in committee and in the House. Since we deal with such a wide range of questions, how is the Speaker to know what is of exceptional significance? I can only say that in interpreting this new guideline in the rule I hope you would give it broad interpretation and err on the side of permitting the motion that was defeated in the committee rather than keeping it out. If you do not do that, I suggest Hon. Members will begin to keep most of our key amendments for the report stage and not take a chance. I suggest this will simply clog the House with far more motions than you would otherwise get.

It has been my experience so far with the new legislative committees that little attention is paid to them. It is very difficult to reach the public in those committees because they are not covered by the press or television. In other words, one cannot have the impact on public opinion; whereas we can have impact to a certain extent in the House. If Members believe that every time they put a motion in the legislative committee and it is defeated it cannot be dealt with here, they will simply reserve and put them here. Therefore, I would argue for a broad interpretation of that rule.

You also stated in your ruling that it would be your intention to rule these motions out of order and you referred Hon. Members to Citation 773(10) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. That citation reads as follows:

A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a bill.

• (1520)

I would argue that two of the motions to amend which you say you intend to rule out of order are not substantive amendments to the interpretation clause because the interpretation clause of the Bill simply says:

"employer" means any person who employs one hundred or more employees—

We simply changed the number from 100 to 25. So we are not really changing the substance of the interpretation section but suggesting simply that the level be changed. I would ask you to reconsider that submission.

Finally, in point 13 of your ruling you say:

Motion numbered 33A would have the effect of enlarging the duties of the Human Rights Commission by making it a partner with the Minister in the preparation of reports under the provisions of the Bill.

In committee the Government agreed to an amendment which brought in the operation of the Human Rights Commission. After it had originally drafted the Bill and the Bill had gone to committee, the Government agreed to an amendment to the Bill to mention the Human Rights Commission and to bring it in as a partner. All we are doing simply is refining that new provision which the Government itself provided. I would respectfully ask that the Chair give some consideration to the points I have made.

Mr. Speaker: I will, of course. My dilemma, as the Hon. Member well knows, is that although I was happy to hear him on the selection question, he has continued beyond the selection question into his concerns about particular procedural arguments, which I had indicated I thought Hon. Members would prefer to make when the matter is next called.

However, I am perfectly happy to hear other Hon. Members on the procedural admissibility question now, if they want to be heard, or to proceed with Motion No. 1 and those motions which have been ruled in order for those Hon. Members who may wish to take a little time and make argument when we call the Bill again. I am perfectly prepared to hear argument now if the Parliamentary Secretary is ready to respond.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask for a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker? Did I understand the Chair to say that Motion No. 21A has been ruled on?

Mr. Speaker: I did indicate that I found it in order and subject to a debate and vote. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary wish to make an argument that Motion No. 21A is out of order?

Mr. Lewis: I just wanted to clarify the position on Motion No. 21A. Motion No. 21 has been withdrawn and the Chair has ruled on Motion No. 21A, then.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you very much. If Motion No. 13 has been withdrawn, that leaves for discussion the matter of whether or not Motions Nos. 13A and 15 should be proceeded with.

Mr. Speaker: Yes. Motions Nos. 13A and 15 are two of the motions which were defeated in committee. I have not yet made a ruling as to the procedural admissibility or inadmissibility of any of the motions which were defeated in committee. If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary wishes to make a procedural argument that, even if they were to be considered significant, they should be regarded as inadmissibible on other grounds, I have not reached that stage. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary wish to make that argument now or wait?

Mr. Lewis: I am prepared to wait.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, we will proceed to Motion No. 1.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 6 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"2. The purpose of this Act is to promote and encourage".

He said: Mr. Speaker, we now begin the next stage of Bill C-62. This debate has been going on for over a year since we first received the report of Judge Rosalie Abella. Judge Abella was appointed by the former Government when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Judge Abella brought down with a very superb report. She stated that this country needed what she called "employment equity" for the majority of women as well as for the three minority groups, the disabled, natives and visible minorities.

We have gone through the preliminary stages. A Bill was introduced for first reading by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). We then had a second reading debate. We have gone through very extensive hearings in the parliamentary legislative committee. It has been an interesting and fascinating process.

I have proposed Motion No. 1 which deals with the purpose of the Bill. The purpose section of Bill C-62 states:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada—

The key words in the purpose section are: "The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place".

I moved this amendment because I do not think this Bill will achieve equality in the workplace. I call as my witness to this fact the four target groups for which this Bill was planned. Several women came before the committee and all said to us that the Bill was not strong enough, what we needed were targets. The Bill does not have targets. They said we needed goals and timetables, but this Bill does not have these either. In addition to women, disabled Canadians came to committee and told us the Bill is not strong enough, that it does not have timetables, goals or objectives. In effect, this is not a Bill to achieve employment equity. It is a Bill to report on employment equity. There is a big difference.

I was proud of several disabled Canadians who came to this Parliament about a week and a half ago and waited outside the Conservative Caucus Committee room. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) came to the caucus they confronted him. They pleaded with him to strengthen Bill C-62. I remembered a blind Canadian, a deaf Canadian, and a very articulate woman from Toronto who was in a wheelchair. They spoke to the Prime Minister as part of a coalition against Bill C-62 as drafted. They pleaded with the Prime Minister to strengthen it. To his credit, the Prime Minister sent them up to see his policy adviser in the Prime Minister's Office. They spent about a half hour with him and were promised that a report will come back to them.

But I make an appeal now on behalf of disabled Canadians, one of the four target groups, that we strengthen Bill C-62. If we do not, we might just as well accept Motion No. 1, because my motion brings Bill C-62 in line with what it is really all about. My motion would change the words "to achieve employment equity" to the words "to promote and encourage employment equity", because all we see in the Bill is the reporting of employment equity, we do not see the achievement of employment equity. So on behalf of disabled Canadians I call upon the Goverment majority to persuade the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Prime Minister to bring us some targets, an enforcement agency and some goals and objectives so that employers will be made to achieve employment equity on behalf of women and disabled persons; that is what they asked for in committee.

I also call as witnesses the visible minorities. They came to our committee and contacted us in person by telephone and by letter. They also said the Bill was not strong enough. They want an enforcement agency, targets, goals and objectives. If these things are not written into law, because of the human psyche of the majority in our country and everywhere else in the world, these minorities will still be discriminated against.

My last witnesses are the original Canadians, the Indians, Métis and Inuit people of Canada or, as the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) used to call them in our constitutional committee a few years ago, the "prefounding Canadians". They are not the founding races such as the French and the English, but they are the ones who were here first of all. Those people spoke to us as a predominantly white, male-dominated Parliament, and said that this Bill is not strong enough and would only encourage and promote employment equity in reports on employment equity rather than achieve employment equity.

• (1530)

Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, when the Conservative Party was elected to government, I was greatly optimistic that there would be a new era in Canadian politics.

Ms. Mitchell: Shame on you.

Mr. Nystrom: I am being shamed by my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway, and she is right.

Ms. Mitchell: Vancouver East, but he's ashamed too.

Mr. Nystrom: When the Conservative Party was elected to govern, I thought that there would be more openness. I thought that Conservative Members would listen to various groups and draft legislation that ordinary Canadians wanted. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a solemn promise that he would do so. In fact, he made over 300 electoral promises on which Canadians elected him. Even new Members like the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who is sitting here in all her splendour are disappointed that the Conservative Party has not kept its word.

The Bill before us has been drafted for the benefit of women, natives, disabled Canadians and visible minorities but all four groups say that it is not good enough. All four groups have rejected the Bill. Is that participatory democracy? A former Prime Minister used to talk a lot about participatory democracy. He lasted here for about 16 years before the people wisened up. Now members of the Conservative Party talk about the same thing without using those words. They said they would listen to the people and that there would be more openness in Government. They said that they would bring people into the centre of power and cut away the bureaucracy.

I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is probably quite embarrassed by all this. Having been Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at one time, he has a great feeling for native Canadians. I am sure that if he had drafted this Bill, it would be a stronger one. I know that he is a good progressive Tory and he would have drafted a stronger Bill.

Ms. Mitchell: There's no good Tory.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member seems to be very anti-Tory. She has said that there is no such thing as a good Tory.

Mr. Waddell: There's a good suppository but not a good Tory.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps she is right, but I tend to be a bit more optimistic than that. I do think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would have developed a more progressive Bill than did the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare could use his good offices and influences to try to persuade the Minister of Employment and Immigration to accept some amendments that would ensure that this Bill will listen to disabled Canadians and other targeted groups and include an enforcement agency and a maximum fine increased from $50,000. After all, what is $50,000 for the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Bank of Montreal or General Motors? It is peanuts.

We are going to have to get a lot tougher. We are going to have to have targets. As well, Government Departments will have to be brought into line with Bill C-62. I know that there are Treasury Board guidelines, but those guidelines are ignored. In fact, we heard in committee that over 75 per cent of disabled Canadians who work for the federal Government work on contract and are not full-time employees. When there are budget cut-backs, the contract employees are often the first to be let go. That is why disabled Canadians want a stronger Bill.

I know that many Conservative Members are afraid to take a stand against the big banks and large companies but I appeal to them to listen to the target groups for which we are trying to draft legislation and to put into law the things that the groups are requesting. These groups are saying that they want collective bargaining to be implemented in this Bill so that workers in the different industries will have a guaranteed role to play in the implementation of employment equity. Women are telling us that they need equal pay for work of equal value. Like the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), I was not optimistic that the Conservative Government would listen to us about that, but perhaps we can make a few more appeals.

I see you are getting a little restless, Mr. Speaker. Last, on behalf of those four target groups, we want to have a tough provision in this Bill on contract compliance so that companies that sell goods or services to the Government of Canada will have to achieve employment equity or be cut off like you are trying to cut me off, Mr. Speaker. I am now taking my seat. I ask the Government to either amend the Bill according to the wishes of the four target groups or accept this motion which says that instead of achieving employment equity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not wish to cut off the Hon. Member but he knows that under Standing Order 14(9) of the new rules, he has 10 minutes to speak. I would love to listen to him, but unfortunately his time has expired.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I fully agree with all the criticisms levelled against this Bill by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He is quite correct in stating that the Bill is a toothless tiger. It is not nearly as good as the Charter of Rights which is entrenched in the Constitution and prevails over all other ordinary legislation. If this Bill did something, it would be worth while, but it is a toothless tiger. There is no means of enforcement of the Bill.

While I agree with everything the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has said about the Bill, to change the purpose of this Bill, which is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities, at this stage before we have had a chance to deal with the other amendments that he and I have put, amendments designed to strengthen the Bill, would be wrong.

It is too bad that the amendment put by the Hon. Member could not be put at the end of the process. Both and he and I and others have put amendments on the Order Paper which, if the Government accepted them, would create a Bill that would achieve equality in the workplace. At the present time, the mechanisms in the Bill are not sufficient to achieve equality in the workplace.

If all the clauses of the Bill remain as they now are and if all our amendments are defeated, then I think it would be appropriate to change the purpose of the Act as the Hon. Member suggested and perhaps even to change the name of the Act. Many of the witnesses we heard in committee suggested that this Bill should not be called an employment equity Act because it is not an employment equity Act. They said that it should be called an Act to collect information with respect to employment equity. That is why I will put such an amendment at the very end of the process. If the Government will not accept any amendments to make this Bill enforceable, then we should change its name and purpose.

While I appreciate the spirit in which the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has put his amendment to change the purpose of the Bill so that it would describe what it really is, I think we should deal with the other amendments that will strengthen the Bill first. I would like to reserve my vote on that amendment until we see what gets done. Since all votes are deferred in any case, I will know at the time whether or not it is worth while voting for this amendment.

I should remind the House that during the extensive hearings on this Bill, not one of the target groups said that this Bill would achieve employment equity and they all recommended amendments. Many of the amendments that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, and I have put down for consideration were suggested to us by the people who are being discriminated against, the visible minorities, the disabled, women and native people. We are simply trying to act for them in this Parliament. There are not enough of them here. We must voice their views on their behalf. If none of the amendments put forward to strengthen the Bill are accepted, I will certainly vote for Motion No. 1 in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

• (1540)

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a great deal of pride and humility in responding to the comments of my two hon. colleagues. I have lived my entire life in the milieu, although I am not a member of a visible minority, of a minority community. Through my lifetime I have been exposed to quotas. I can say honestly that I feel I am a worthy representative of all target groups which have been mentioned. Sixty per cent of all Canadians fall within that range. I represent a riding which is very heavily ethnic in its nature. My consultations with my supporters and the people who live in the riding of Dollard indicate to me how pleased they are with the Government, the first Government anywhere, having the guts to bring in legislation which will actually put into effect an employment equity program.

We want jobs. We know that when goals and timetables are put into effect, we will get those jobs because we are qualified. We do not want quotas. We do not want to focus upon process. We want results. We want initiative. We want a commitment to change. We want measureable goals. We get all this with employment equity.

Today I heard the request for a new enforcement agency. We are already involved in enough bureaucratic red tape. We are in the process of examining ways of dismantling some agencies. We know the high costs of governing. We already have in place the Canadian Human Rights Commission which is very well prepared to handle all cases of systemic discrimination resulting from employers not following the program we have put into effect.

My friend in the New Democratic Party wants us to put water in our wine before we ever begin. We are introducing today a mandatory program for the first time. The wording "to achieve equality" more correctly reflects the purpose of the Bill. What we are doing is achieving it. Promoting and encouraging are voluntary terms, and that is not what we see in the Bill. We want to see all groups move forward, not strictly by legislation because that is simply a process. We want to send out a signal of how productive society will become when we use the full constituent part of our community.

I am certainly completely against this motion. In terms of what might be the position of the two opposition Members, it has been a pot-pourri. In terms of all other motions, I know I will have an opportunity to speak on each one of them. April 10, 1986 is a proud day for us because we are sending out a signal to Canadians in all walks of life that from now on one's colour, sex, nationality or racial origin does not matter; if one is qualified, the job will be his or hers. We are doing it with an affirmative action program.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Motion No. 1 in amendment to Bill C-62. I am concerned with the remarks which the Parliamentary Secretary has just made. I am somewhat amazed that he should rise and say that he represents a minority which has suffered from the imposition of quotas and then imply that we do not need positive mechanisms to deal with the problem. He is making quotas, an example of enforcement machinery, a dirty word. He is using the same language for positive measures to promote real employment equity. He is trying, by guilt by association, to suggest that it is somehow discriminatory. He says that they want results, but we have Bill C-62 which will not bring results. He says that we have mandatory employment equity. It is not mandatory if there are no employment equity enforcement mechanisms. That has been made very clear. Judge Abella said that voluntary enforcement simply would not be adequate. It does not matter how much it is called mandatory. If there is no enforcement mechanism to make it work, it will not be truly mandatory.

I support the motion before us which calls the Bill really what it is. Turning to Clause 2 of Bill C-62, it reads:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada—

That is certainly the objective. That would be fine, but since we do not have teeth or enforcement mechanisms in Bill C-62, the clause dealing with the purpose of the Act is misleading. It tells the public that employment equity will be achieved, but it will not be achieved until there are real tough mandatory provisions. The proposal of the NDP is simply to be honest about the Bill. It has good intentions, and that is all. Therefore, in part our amendment reads:

The purpose of this Act is to promote and encourage.

Of course it will promote and encourage employment equity. It is looking in the right direction. It has the right goal at the end, but it is just that it is in no hurry to get there. If we are to have effective enforcement of employment equity, we would have serious penalties for violation. However, Hon. Members will recall that the only penalty contained in Bill C-62 is a $50,000 fine, and $50,000 is peanuts for a company which is making a fortune by exploiting people and paying them less than they ought to be paid. The only penalty is for failing to report. There is no fine for failing to make progress in achieving employment equity. If this Bill were really about the achievement of employment equity, the fine would be in the failure to move ahead, the failure to see that women, visible minorities, handicapped people and native people really made it into the labour force in sizeable numbers, the numbers they deserve, not just token members here and there.

By comparing successive reports, the Minister hopes that the evidence will be sufficient for the Canadian Human Rights Commission to correct systemic discrimination identified by the reports. However, the Minister intends to rely heavily upon public opinion to persuade firms to remove discriminatory barriers which face women, native people, visible minorities and disabled persons. This is precisely the approach which was rejected by Judge Abella in her study. It is precisely the point made by representatives of organizations representing women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities. They have said that this is not enough. Indeed, some of them said very strongly that we ought to vote against the whole Bill unless the Government is prepared to bring in amendments or to accept our amendments to put real teeth into it.

Public opinion will not work because profits are involved. People make money by paying victims in the market-place less. That is what they will do. They are not moved to change their practices. They are not moved to make reasonable accommodation to incorporate disabled persons. They are not moved to change their recruitment practices to find people who have not heretofore been available for that kind of work. All of that requires a bit of effort and a bit of money. Who is going to put forward that effort and money to bring their employment practices up to fair standards when they can go ahead without any fear of penalties by maintaining the practices that they already have?

We recommend that this Bill should include all Government Departments under federal jurisdiction as well. As it is written now, it applies only to federal Crown corporations. It does not extend to Ministries. At the very least, as a matter of principle, the Government should expect itself as an employer to follow these quite low expectations, not high enough expectations, but surely that at least should be a requirement for the Government to follow.

Treasury Board guidelines are in place for affirmative action in the federal Public Service, but these have been very weak. They have not been effective. We have seen very little movement as a result. The guidelines can be changed. They are not subject to a statute. They can be changed without the matter coming to Parliament at all, whereas if the requirement were right in the Bill, then that could not happen without a new Bill being brought back into Parliament.

The Bill as it currently stands does not allow for adequate participation by labour unions, which have shown a great deal of sensitivity and willingness to work to achieve employment equity. Many of the employers who fall under federal jurisdiction have largely unionized workforces. We have asked that wherever a union is present in the workplace, the employer must bargain the implementation of employment equity. The Bill does not require this. It simply requires the employer to consult with the bargaining agent, but not to sit down seriously and work out a plan that is fair, reasonable and will be effective.

Throughout debate in the House and before committee we emphasized the importance of enshrining the concept of equal pay for work of equal value in this Bill. We moved amendments to this effect, but our amendments were rejected. The Abella Report was very clear that equal pay for work of equal value should be part of all equity programs. It is not here in the Bill.

Finally, I would like to point to contract compliance. We fought to have this added to the Bill. The answer we got was: "Well, we are going to go ahead with it anyway so we do not need a statute on this". But the provisions which the Government is planning to go ahead with are not as vigorous as they could be. They are limited to firms doing $200,000 or more worth of business with the Government and where the firm has more than 100 employees. It is a start, but why should it be restricted to only those companies?

If we really want to encourage employment equity and equal pay for work of equal value, we would extend that principle and use the bargaining power of a contract with Government to make more companies be fair in their employment measures. They would have a positive incentive for coming up with employment equity measures instead of relying on the same goodwill which we know has not been effective. If that had been effective, we would not need this Bill. Employment equity would already have been achieved and it would have been achieved years ago. But it has not.

What we are calling for is real teeth. Unless and until we get real teeth we think at the very least the Government should have the decency not to mislead the Canadian public and to call the Bill precisely what it is, namely, an attempt at goodwill to promote and encourage employment equity, but it should certainly not claim that it is a Bill that will achieve employment equity.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to motion No. 1 which has been proposed to amend the text on the purpose of Bill C-62 from saying it is a Bill to achieve equality in the workplace to stating instead that it is a Bill to promote and encourage such equality.

The explanation given by the mover of this motion is that regrettably the Bill does not achieve the goals that are needed and, therefore, the Member proposes that we call it what it is and say that it is simply something to promote equality in the workplace, a very desirable thing.

I have to say that I do not want to support this motion because I feel that that would be a way to give satisfaction to the Conservatives. They would then be able to say that they had achieved something by saying that they were promoting something. We know they are not going to achieve a thing through this Bill, other than to deceive the public into thinking that they have done something. This is the regrettable part of this Bill. It will betray by delaying those people who are still waiting for their rights, rights which were promised to them under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, at least guaranteed to them by law if they take their cases to court. The Government, instead of now applying the provisions of that Charter, for which we had to fight so hard in the last Government, is postponing its implementation by making people think that by a long, circuitous action they will some day arrive at the promised land.

Some people say they are eternal optimists. They have to wait an eternity. One of the Tory Members said that she was an eternal optimist. Those people who have to wait, the handicapped, the deaf, or the blind do not want to wait for an eternity. They want action now. They want the kind of action that has been called for by all who are experts and knowledgable in this field as to what the purpose of a Bill that brings about equality means. They want action that will have teeth in it.

Judge Abella brought a report forward. We had the Obstacles Report before that. Various reports in other countries have been made. All reports call for legislation to make it clear that the victim does not first have to prove his right to justice. It is up to the Government, if it has courage, to provide to people the kind of guarantee that they will have their rights protected.

After fighting for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms against the Tories during the last administration when they rang the bells, attacked the Chair and yelled and stood up hour after hour on various questions of privilege and points of order to stall and deter the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution from being brought to this country, that same Party, in this kind of hypocritical stance, now pretends it will stand up for those rights and enforce them. It is not standing up for rights. It is not enforcing them. It is making a mockery of them.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary for Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner) speak about how he represents minority groups in his riding. I hope he will continue to try to represent them. I am sure he is sincere in believing in his heart that he is effectuating something helpful to them, but I want to tell him that I have worked for most of my life in human rights causes and as head of a human rights organization. One of the reasons I came to Parliament was to try to see the Charter of Rights and Freedoms brought into effect. One of the reasons I am in Parliament is to try to bring about those things that I saw needed to be done as head of a human rights organization. I saw the discrimination that took place, the delays, and I saw the poor people who do not have the money to bring their cases to court. As a Government, we should provide effective machinery for them to carry their cause so they do not have to go to court to plead it. That should be the next step. The question must be asked, is that what is happening?

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in the field of human rights you will find that all minority groups, all oppressed groups, say that if you want to know whether or not something is good, ask us because we are the ones who suffer. We have heard the people. We have asked them. They have come to the committees. They have practically unanimously said that this Bill is not enough, it does not protect us.

I suggest that we should leave the word "achieve" right where it is. It is not as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration said. If we put in those other words, it would not be watering the Bill down to say, "to encourage". What the Member of the New Democratic Party was trying to do was to mock the Bill. That is why he did what he did. The Bill deserves to be mocked. I will not, therefore, support the idea of changing this to "encourage", but would rather leave it as "achieve" so that the record of history will judge them on what they did to help the people of the country who are handicapped, the women, the native people, and the minority groups.

• (1600)

Are they really satisfied in their hearts that they have done enough? I think they will not say that they have achieved nothing else but to ensure that some reports are sent in. Is that what they are going to do? They are giving companies three years to make reports. If the reports are not made, they will be fined $50,000, but if they do make a report, it will be okay. That is the kind of enforcement this Bill gives us. They can dilly-dally in the courts indefinitely with regard to what that report said and did.

This a tragic travesty. I hope that when the Government comes to its senses it will either change this Bill or accept the condemnation of all of these groups: women, minorities of various racial backgrounds, visible minorities, native people, and the handicapped.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Service—Impact on Employment of Government Policy. (b) Government Position; the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)—Trade—Provincial Fresh Water Rights. (b) Grand Canal Company Proposal.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Nystrom) (p. 12098).

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me today to have the opportunity to comment on the employment equity Bill as it moves into report stage. I have been interested and involved in this Bill since its inception and through the committee stage. It is a very proud moment for me and my colleague, the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, to be here today as the Bill goes through its final stage in the House and becomes reality.

The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) referred to a Member who has been referred to as an optimist. I am that Member. Yes, I am an optimist, and I am proud of it. I am proud of this country and I am proud of Canadians. I believe that Canadians support the concept of employment equity, and it is Canadians who will make it work rather than government. Social change does not come about merely because government decrees it. This kind of social change comes out of the consciousness of Canadians. We, as legislators, provide moral leadership, but Canadians themselves, who recognize inequity, are prepared to make the changes which will be so important.

If we are going to mock anything, I think we should mock the horrendous record of the opposition Party which was in power for almost 20 years and did not do anything to ameliorate the conditions of inequity in the workforce. It had lots of opportunity, but did nothing. In a mere 18 months the Progressive Conservative Government has put this proposal forward, has listened to the people of the country, and is achieving results.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: The purpose of this Bill is to achieve equality, and I believe it will do that, for a number of reasons. Those of us who have been involved in the committee are aware of the process. Employers will be required to report on their progress in employment, training, and promotion of people from the target groups. Data will be available to which companies may compare their figures with the number of people available in the community with those qualifications. It will be quite an easy process and it will be on the public record.

There will be, first of all, the public assessment. I know that some of my colleagues in the Opposition pooh-pooh that and say it does not matter. I do not agree with them. Public assessment will operate in two ways. People who are concerned can respond with their dollars. They can withdraw from purchasing the goods or services of those companies which do not fully participate and achieve employment equity. There are other interesting things which I am sure my colleagues are aware of.

In my own hometown of Vancouver, the Vancouver City Savings Credit Union and a private sector group have already new investment funds in place which they will only invest in socially responsible companies. Part of the criteria will be that companies implement and achieve employment equity. That kind of recognition is taking place out in the market-place. That is not Government telling people to do it. Canadians are saying that they think it is right, and they will achieve it themselves.

This piece of legislation is perhaps a carrot on a stick. Being the optimist that I am, I really believe in the carrot. I certainly think this legislation provides that carrot. The companies will have to make their reports, and they will have to start to examine themselves. They will have to start to put in place proper human resource management policies in order to achieve equality. They will have to reach out into the community.

As I said in committee so often, if we spent less of our time arguing about the process and procedure, and more of our time getting representatives of the target groups together with the employers to talk about how we are going to do this, we would achieve more. I recommended this to representatives of the target groups and companies. They said that, since they were not quite sure of what they should be doing, they would like to talk to people in those groups. If we used that co-operative, consultative approach, I think we could achieve employment equity even without the stick which we have in this piece of legislation.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): There is no stick.

Mrs. Collins: My colleague has said that there is no stick. He is totally wrong. There is a very heavy stick. There is the stick of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. If the Member had attended the December 19 meeting of the legislative committee, he would have heard from Gordon Fairweather, the Chairman of the Human Rights Commission, that we can enforce employment equity by enforcing the Canadian Human Rights Act. He said that we can initiate complaints, examine data and plans, and then appoint tribunals which have the authority to impose sanctions.

Mr. Fairweather also said, as have my colleagues, that some of the groups would like their own agencies to be there. There is enough fragmentation in the country now without dividing into a proliferation of boards, commissions, and agencies. We want to improve opportunity. Gordon Fairweather, who I know all Parties acknowledge for the pre-eminence of his work, supports this position. He said that we can do it.

One of my colleagues in the NDP said that a fine of $50,000 is peanuts. Maybe for the NDP $50,000 is peanuts, but for someone involved in business $50,000 is an awful lot of money. No company would want to be faced with the shame of being brought before an inquiry, with the cost involved in such an inquiry, or with the public shame of receiving a fine which would not look very good on their bottom line when they have to report to their shareholders and the public.

My colleagues on this side of the House have worked hard. This Bill does provide mandatory sanctions and a mandatory system of enforcement. However, I do not know why we spend so much time on this issue because, more importantly, the Bill provides the new thrust and thinking which will achieve employment equity for women, natives, racial minorities, and the handicapped in this country. I applaud this Bill and am happy to have been a part of it.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). She mentioned that she believes in the carrot. I know that Bugs Bunny believes in carrots, but I do not, nor does my Party. What we really need is a big stick in this Bill.

• (1610)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Bugs Bunny turned 50 the other day and what happened?

Ms. Mitchell: Bugs Bunny turned 50? He still likes carrots, but I do not.

There is no question, as we have said over and over again in committee and in this House, that this Bill must be strengthened if it is going to achieve the goals of equal opportunity in the workplace for women, native people, visible minorities and the disabled. There is no way we can expect movement in this direction unless the federal Government sets the example. We need a Bill which is far more comprehensive. It should affect a far greater number of employers and employees. It should have real teeth so we can have real enforcement of affirmative action or employment equity as the term is used in this Bill.

I am really rather amused by the amendment we are speaking to because it attempts to define the Bill as it really is. In its original state the Bill refers to the goal of achieving employment equity. As my colleague has pointed out through this amendment, it will not achieve employment equity. It is aiming at promoting, encouraging and persuading a few large companies which do business with the Government to give more attention to employment equity.

It will be very interesting to see how Conservative Members vote on this amendment. Are they going to vote in favour of our amendment which describes the Bill as it actually is? Or are they going to go back to the existing wording in the Bill? I hope that in the time remaining they take action with the Minister to try to change the Bill to strengthen it so it will have some real meaning. As it is now, it is just paying lip service. It will really be regressive to raise people's expectations only to find that in practical terms it cannot work.

My colleagues have also talked about the things we object to in the Bill. All the target groups who appeared in committee, I refer particularly to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, as well as the coalition groups, the CLC and many trade unions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope Hon. Members will give the Hon. Member an opportunity to speak. I love to listen to her expound on this particular Bill and I would hope the other Members would, too.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the wisdom with which you listen to these profound remarks I am making and I also thank my colleagues for listening.

I was saying that many groups will be affected by employment equity or the lack thereof. There were many women's groups, groups of the disabled, trade union and labour groups, as well as various representatives of native groups, including the Assembly of First Nations, and certainly other groups concerned with race relations and multiculturalism. I know there was a consensus among them all that this Bill was not strong enough. It did not have the teeth to enforce the stated goal of achieving employment equity. There is no effective enforcement mechanism. The only penalty is one of $50,000 if a designated employer fails to report. Even just providing a picture of what their business is, is hardly achieving employment equity in a very real sense.

We have also expressed a number of objections about the kind of myths the Minister has put forward. Sometimes I wonder if she really understands what mandatory affirmative action is. I really feel that she does not comprehend it. I have respect for her, I think her motives are very strong and she wants to do something for the target groups we are talking about. However, she brought in an amendment which provides an action plan for employers. It was added after all the various groups objected that there was no enforcement. However, it is just words because there is no enforcement. There is no penalty for the employers who do not adhere to the plan. What is the point in putting it in? It is, once again, just platitudes.

I cannot believe that the Minister did not listen, but she did not seem to comprehend what organized labour is saying.

These are the people who work in these large corporations. The CLC and various other labour groups have said over and over again that employment equity must be negotiated. It must be part of the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Must be negotiated?

Ms. Mitchell: What does the Minister do about that? She brought in some reference to token consultation with unions. I see the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) is here. You cannot really blame the labour movement for really being very angry about this. This is undercutting the whole collective bargaining process. There must be negotiations involving employment equity and all employees must be involved.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Negotiations? What happened to the big stick?

Ms. Mitchell: The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) comes from Manitoba. I wish he would stand up and tell us about the pay equity Bill which the Manitoba Government brought in. That is an attempt to put into legislation equal pay for work of equal value. Judge Abella strongly advocated that this must be part of the legislation. The NDP tried to present amendments here and they were rejected. There is no contract compliance which requires every company doing business with the Government to practise employment equity. There is no penalty if they do not. This Bill only applies to a few very large employers. There are probably only about three or four in British Columbia who will even be affected. Again, all they have to do is to report.

Another thing I want to stress, something to which Judge Abella made reference, and I have not heard other speakers referring to it, is that Judge Abella said that for there to be employment equity for employees in Government and private industry, there must be access to child care for parents who are working. If they do not have affordable access to child care suited to their shifts or their hours of work, they do not have equal opportunity in the workplace. They certainly do not have equal opportunity for promotion.

• (1620)

We have travelled from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back again. Everyone is asking us to do something about the crisis in child care. One of the things that should be done is to have more access to workplace child care and the federal Government has given no attention to that whatsoever. There has been no attention given to training opportunities. People who know about affirmative action say you must have opportunities to upgrade people, especially women and disadvantaged people, so they have a chance to move into other kinds of better paying, promotional jobs. It is an inadequate Bill and I feel very sorry that in this first attempt we have not made a better job of it.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable reluctance that I rise to speak to the question and the amendment before the House.

First of all, what we want is to obtain equality for all Canadian men and women: equality as such and equal access. However, this Bill is a sham.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, although I would like to support the Bill as it stands, assume and hope that it would achieve employment equity, there is no way the content of this Bill will enable people who are suffering at this point from a lack of equal access and equal opportunity to bring to the workforce their talents and skills.

We do have, unfortunately, a systemic discrimination that is indigenous to our workforce. The goal of employment equity is real and it is practical. It is a distant goal that is not going to be realized for those people who really need it.

I listened to the Parliamentary Secretary and the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), both of whom I had assumed had a much larger heart and a bigger understanding of the issues. It is with a deep sense of regret that I listened to both of them. On the one hand the Parliamentary Secretary talks about the fact that he is a witness to what discrimination can do. I can speak as well from the same perspective. On the other hand the Member for Capilano spent six months with me travelling across this land and was witness, as I was, to the testimony of one group after the other who, unlike my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner), and myself, have lived the experiences that we heard about. We have not had to live our life being deprived of earnings, which has a negative impact on our life and our ability to raise our family and give them the things we would love to give them. This would apply to native people in this country, the aboriginal peoples, the blacks in this country, or any of the other visible minority groups and some of the non-visible minority groups as well as the handicapped who are looked at constantly based on their disability rather than their abilities.

I wish the Parliamentary Secretary had come along; maybe he would not have spoken the way he did. I regret that the Member for Capilano, who did come along, did speak the way she did. The reality is that there are few industries upon which this Bill will impact. We have had a sensitization of our population to this problem by Judge Abella. She is a very fine spokesman, extraordinarily articulate, and she made her voice heard. She said that voluntary action has not worked. Appeal to the hearts and minds does not impact on the people who are included in our concept of non-discrimination and equal opportunity in the workforce. From what I heard I can only tell you that we have missed the boat, and it is sad. The potential was there. I think the Minister wanted to realize her goals, but I think she was blocked at every turn by big business and by the corporate sector which, if you read the Nielsen task force Report, indicate quite clearly that they did not want this Bill to be mandatory and they were not at all interested in seeing it applied in its fullest measure. I am sorry to say she has had to cave in.

One of the disappointments in this Government is the breaking of the promises that were so glibly falling from the tongue of our charming Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In the Throne Speech the Prime Minister stated, and I quote him, "economic equality is the vehicle through which women—", and he is referring here, of course, to a lovely target market, 52 per cent of whom were supposed to buy his promise, and I continue my quote, "—will come to full partnership and participation with men in our society". These are very laudable principles, and words are very simple, but a law is another matter.

I would suggest to you that this law has no mechanisms to effect what we want in principle and in practice through equality. Judge Abella said that employment equity is a strategy designed to obliterate the present and residual effects of discrimination and to open equitably the competition for employment opportunities to those arbitrarily excluded. It requires a special blend of what is necessary, what is fair and what is workable. Obviously what was necessary, fair and workable did not work to date. In order for it to become workable you have to have a law that has teeth, otherwise it is a law in name only and it is a farce and a joke. To play games with our visible minorities, with our handicapped, with the ethnics, with the native people is a sham, and you should be ashamed of yourselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: You are wrong.

Mrs. Finestone: You may think I am wrong, but it is you who are wrong.

I bring to your attention that when an evaluation was done in New York on the impact of the affirmative action program, which was mandatory in the United States, the analysis was, and I quote Victoria Smith, the senior consultant in New York, that, "Business is comfortable with numerical goals and targets. That is how business works. We just did surveys of our clients and most of them are Fortune 500 big corporations, they are now Fortune 1000, and of 142 responses 95 per cent said they would keep on using numerical goals to track the progress of women and minorities regardless of government requirements".

She went on to say that first you have to get them to understand that we are not imposing on them something that is anathema. The focus and the goal of employment equity is to bring the talents and potential of individuals to enrich our business community. It is not to punish them because we wish to give equal opportunity to those people who were discriminated because of the systemic barriers that need to be revised and reviewed.

I think it is about time that our federal Government, its agencies, Crown corporations, the federally operated and regulated sectors, and companies doing business with Government start to recognize the diversity of Canada's population and the potential of these disadvantaged people. This Bill demonstrates that this Government lacks the willpower and the leadership that is needed to implement employment equity programs effectively. I can only ask the Parliamentary Secretary to go back and read what the Canadian Ethnocultural Council has said or the coalition of provincial organizations for the handicapped. They are all disappointed with this Bill. I would specifically direct the Parliamentary Secretary to take a look at a research piece that was done in his own area. How will he respond to the Jamaican Association of Montreal? We have 18,000 Jamaicans and the statistics are quite astounding. There is a 69 per cent unemployment factor for 18 to 25 year olds; 41.5 per cent unemployment for those between the ages of 25 and 35; 31 per cent unemployment for those aged 35 to 45; 22 per cent unemployment for those between the ages of 45 and 60; and over 43 per cent unemployment for those aged 60 and over. That takes only the Jamaican community of Montreal into account, not including Haitians, Vietnamese or the handicapped. It is a shame. Tell me how this Bill will answer the needs of those people. It will not.

• (1630)

Employment equity deals with many things, including education, child care, re-education and training. Many activities are required and this Bill will not meet the needs of those members of his constituency, mine or that of anyone else in this country. It is with a deep regret that I indicate that we on this side of the House are not satisfied with this Bill.

There is no such thing as voluntary compliance according to affirmative action laws right now. A law without teeth is not a law. If voluntary compliance worked, then Moses would have come down from the mountain with the 10 guidelines.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Motion No. 1 in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to amend Bill C-62. This Bill is purportedly designed to achieve equality in the workplace. The amendment attempts to change that to read:

The purpose of this Act is to promote and encourage——equality in the workplace. This motion recognizes the particular lack of enforcement provisions that would be required to achieve employment equity and, therefore, justifies our proposing that the Bill is designed only to promote and encourage employment equity. It is a fair description of the Bill and it is particularly important to recognize that this is the extent to which the Government plans to take action. I believe that various groups in Canada hope that the Government will do more; which leads one to question how one views this particular Bill. We trust that the Bill will provide the necessary information to undertake additional action through various forms of compliance with the required enforcement to ensure that employment equity is actually achieved. The information provided in this Bill is certainly necessary in achieving that goal, and these groups will argue that the Bill should be passed so that the Government can introduce additional measures to meet the criticisms that my colleagues have already put forward and which I will consider as well.

The fact is that the Government does not intend to do anything more. There has been enough dicussion about the need for enforcement mechanisms to be included in the Bill.

A few minutes ago the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) made a fine argument for depending on carrots. It is similar to what a Liberal Leader of the Opposition in the 1890s called "sunny ways", against the harsh measures that a Conservative Government was trying to bring to bear on the Province of Manitoba. One can celebrate sunny ways and one can enjoy carrots almost as much as Bugs Bunny has during his 50 year career, but the sad fact of the matter is that human beings frequently need a little more pressure than that.

The corporations to which this Bill will apply are those with more than 200 employees and having sales to the Government amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Those corporations in particular will require some pressure, but the Government does not plan to bring any of that pressure to bear because once the Bill is passed—as the Government will presumably ensure—and the reporting begins, the Government will argue that several years must pass before we have any real basis to say that on the evidence of the reports they failed to act. The Government will argue that we must let that time pass before we envisage bringing in any substantial pressure to bear on these companies.

There will be a great deal of disappointment and anguish across the country in the next two or three years because there is no doubt that we will not see any enforcement provisions before the end of the Government's mandate in 1988 or 1989. Furthermore, there will be no action to meet the other criticisms that I will explain in a moment. Undoubtedly we will hear many fine intentions. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) makes that kind of speech very well. The Parliamentary Secretary is undoubtedly an honourable person and speaks to the need to achieve employment equity. I am sure that other Government Members can state those intentions very well too, but the Government does not intend to ensure that employment equity takes place.

It will depend on the Human Rights Commission, which is an independent body. I fear that when amendments to strengthen the Canadian Human Rights Act are introduced sometime in the next year or 18 months, they will not include some of the provisions that are needed so that the Canadian Human Rights Commission—the only enforcement means envisaged by the Government—will have the authority to ensure that employment equity will make progress. It is clear that this Bill does not provide the means to achieve employment equity but is undoubtedly designed to promote and encourage employment equity.

Let me point out some of the more specific weaknesses in the Bill. I have already commented on the lack of enforcement mechanisms. The most the Bill provides for is a $50,000 fine to those who fail to file reports. The Bill should have included provisions that take into account how a workforce reflects the local labour force, including the number of women in the workforce or who want to be in the workforce, the number of native people and visible minorities who live in the area and would like to find employment, as well as the number of disabled who are seeking employment. As the evidence mounts that these companies have not employed these people, we will only have the effect of public opinion on the Government.

In a week when we have been considering Bill C-91 relating to competition, I am reminded of other Governments that thought public opinion would do a great deal. The Combines Investigation Act is a splendid example of that. The best that could be said for William Lyon Mackenzie King in his day is that if companies were exposed as combining with others to constrain trade in order to drive prices up, to take from consumers more than those consumers should have to pay, and if he thought public opinion would make any difference, there is a lot of evidence that it did not in fact happen. Although fines are assessed against companies these days for a variety of offences, there is no lack of evidence to show that when companies are found guilty, they pay these fines and presumably go on their way, which leaves us to appreciate the fact that the lack of enforcement mechanism is a very serious flaw in the Act.

The first words in Clause 2 of the Bill, "to achieve equality in the workplace" makes this Bill unworthy because of the fact that it refers to the "workplace" in general terms. The Bill does not not provide for federal Government Departments themselves who are, after all, fairly substantial as employers. One of the things we sought in committee was an expansion of the Bill to relate specifically to Departments of the Government. I fear that in this area the report of the special committee on the participation of visible minorities may deserve some part of the blame for what has happened. In the distinctions which were drawn in that report we have discussion of the need for "affirmative action", as the language was at that point. There was a section which related to the country generally and to the private sector, if you will, and then we have another part which related to Government and the needs of Government. I believe that if the Government of our day were really serious about achieving employment equity in the workplace, it would have ensured that the Bill applied to those Departments. It would have overcome the shortcomings of that aspect of the Equality Now Report and ensured that there was such an application.

For these reasons, among others, I support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that Clause 2 be amended to read "to promote and encourage", because that is the most that this Bill will do.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to participate in the debate on report stage of Bill C-62. I would like to preface my remarks by recalling to the House a quote by Judge Abella, the architect and author of the Abella Commission Report. She said: "Unenforceable rights are no more satisfactory than unavailable rights". I think that speaks volumes about the malaise of Bill C-62. I believe it is the malaise of Bill C-62 to which Motion No. 1 refers itself. Following the presentation of the Abella Commission Report, which was a very courageous, forthcoming and progressive report, great expectations were created among Canadians and, more specifically, among the four target groups which the Abella Commission identified. There were great expectations that the Government of the day would take the window of opportunity and the momentum which was offered by the Abella Commission, by the Equality Now and Equality for All Reports and that somehow those recommendations and bold findings would be put into legislation. But neither the recommendations nor the findings are in Bill C-62.

Bill C-62 does not achieve employment equity. It only talks of and about employment equity. There is a world of difference between the two.

During second reading, Hon. Members on this side of the House asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to strengthen Bill C-62. It was hoped that at the committee stage, where we would be meeting with those four target groups and other Canadians interested in Bill C-62, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Government would see the merit and the reasons for strengthening such a Bill. Group after group, the Ethnocultural Council, the Urban Alliance for Race Relations from Toronto, women's groups, native groups and groups of the disabled, all came forward with hope in their hearts that the committee would grant equal opportunity not just to you and me, Mr. Speaker, but to those individuals. These groups appeared before committee and told Hon. Members from all Parties what they were seeking and had been seeking for years. It is not an easy process, nor is it an overnight process. It is a long-term difficult task. There should be no shortcuts nor the easy public relations gimmicks about which Bill C-62 speaks.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said so often on the hustings in 1984: "We will provide a Government for the people". If there is an absence of that promise, it is in Bill C-62. It is a piece of legislation which says that we are going to have basically four targets, women, natives, the handicapped and visible minorities. But those people came before the committee and before Members of Parliament in other forums, such as public meetings in Toronto, and said that they are not in agreement with Bill C-62. They told us that it falls short and will not do the things it says it will do. But those submissions fell on deaf ears. If this is a Government for the people, then the Government should at least have the decency to respond specifically and honourably to these requests and aspirations.

Those groups have gone away with the hope that at report stage, at which we are now, the eleventh hour, the Government will address in a bold and courageous manner that which it said it would. There is a shortage of action between Bill C-62 and the Abella Commission Report. There were great expectations which once again have not been met.

As Members of Parliament, perhaps one of the most difficult things for us to tackle in terms of individual representations in our constituencies, are the requests of individuals seeking employment. Individuals come to their Members of Parliament and say: "Look, I have not had a job in the last year. I have put in X number of applications and the answer is always the same. Would you please try to help me?" We, as Members of Parliament, try to do our utmost to assist those constituents. What is more hurtful is to have individuals within the four target groups come to us and suggest they are being denied opportunities of employment because of who they are or because of their handicaps. That hurts deeply. It is the dignity of work which I believe gives definition to one's self worth. It is having employment which gives one the hope of carrying on and providing for one's family. But when a black Canadian, a handicapped Canadian, a native Canadian or a woman come to us and tell us they are being discriminated against based on their particular traits, we must feel that this is something that should not happen in this country. It should not happen with our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Yes, Canada is a great country. We all realize that we have no peer in terms of our greatness. However, we should not end the debate there. There are a large number of Canadians who unfortunately cannot concur with those sentiments. Some Canadians are saying that the opportunities that exist for their neighbours or for people in other provinces do not exist for them. As long as that is the case, Canada does not mean to those people what it means to you and me, Mr. Speaker. That is why it is important for Bill C-62 to deal with opportunities in a forthright and courageous way and, perhaps, in the most challenging and difficult way.

It should be admitted that this problem is not an easy one to eradicate. However, that is not an excuse to give the issue only some PR and patchwork. There is no excuse for doing that. We should have built on the momentum of the findings of the various reports to which I have referred. We should have built on the representations that these four communities made not only during the constitutional process and the making of the Equality for Now Report but during the Abella Commission hearings. The Government is not delivering the goods.

It is no wonder that we are hearing representatives of these individual groups saying that they are losing faith and trust in the system. They have been telling the system to change for the last number of years. Here in Parliament we have the window of opportunity open that would allow us to make the lot of these four groups better, but I am ashamed to be a part of a Parliament that is presenting Bill C-62. That is why I was astounded when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister rose to say that April 10 is a great day and he is proud. What is he proud of? Why do we not ask members of the four target groups if they are proud of the Government? Does the Parliamentary Secretary understand the struggles of those Canadians day after day or, in some cases, generation after generation?

We should not be proud of Bill C-62. We should put it back on the drawing board. Motion No. 1 speaks to the malaise that has gripped Bill C-62. I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but it is my hope that following report stage, the Government will find some sensitivity and will be progressive rather than simply do a PR job on what is a very fundamental issue for Canadians.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this Bill. But before I do so, Mr. Speaker, noticing you in the chair, I would say that I was severely critical of 21 Alberta MPs for not speaking out on another matter the other day. I would like to make that 20 MPs and certainly exclude you, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Waddell: Well, then, 19. Are there any more? Let me speak on this Bill. It is important—

Mr. Desrosiers: Shame on you.

Mr. Waddell: I invite the Hon. Member to rise to speak on this Bill if he wants to reply. Unfortunately, unlike the Hon. Member, I cannot speak while seated. We know where the brains of the Tories are. They are better when they are sitting on them.

This Bill is supposed to be about employment equity. I think the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) summed it up very neatly when he said that the Bill talks about employment equity and looks as if it were about employment equity but does not really do very much about employment equity. He outlined the four major groups that have made submissions to the Government over three inquiries, one commission and one constitutional hearing, namely, women, visible minorities, natives and the disabled. Apparently the Government was not listening to them. Certainly if it had been listening, there would have been a much stronger Bill with some teeth and enforcement provisions presented to the House.

Let us confess, we all like the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) a great deal. However, I have picked up from the debate that Hon. Members feel that she kind of struck out in Cabinet. That is an appropriate metaphor as baseball season is just beginning. Flora got up to bat and struck out in Cabinet. This Bill certainly will not do effectively that which we believe the Minister of Employment and Immigration would like to do, giving her the benefit of the doubt, and that is, to bring in a Bill that will give a sense of equity and fairness to Canadians who are not in an equal position.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: In French!

Mr. Waddell: My hon. friend asks me to speak French. Well, the problem is the same for Quebec as it is for other regions in Canada. The problem is exactly the same, and that is why I intend to continue in English.

[English]

We have to ask ourselves why the Government has watered down this Bill and the policy of real equality.

Mr. Nystrom: Because they are Conservatives.

Mr. Waddell: Exactly, because it is a Conservative Government. As we can see by the competition Bill, and with only a few exceptions, this is a Government that is in tune with the wealthy and big business interests. Its relentless pursuit of tax increases, elimination of jobs, protection of the wealthy minority, taxes on old age pensioners, taxes on pensionable UIC recipients and cut-backs on social services for the needy show the basic thrust of the Government. We can see evidence of that in the competition Bill, a sweetheart Bill for business, and this Bill, a backtracking Bill that does not really deal with employment equity.

In Proverbs, chapter 22:16, the Bible says:

> He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.

In spite of today's opinion polls, I predict that if the Government continues on this path, it too will surely come to want, if not in heaven then at the next election.

There are ways to deal with the flaws in this Bill. It could be made stronger. Women are members of one group that is affected. Employment equity pertains basically to women. They are the ones who are unequal in the workplace. All sorts of commissions have said that, and some eloquent speeches have been made by some of the women opposition Members today. I need not repeat them.

This Bill will not have the tough enforcement procedures we need to make equality a reality. It will not come overnight. We have to have some enforcement procedures and some specific goals and targets. Again, there have to be ways of enforcing those goals and targets. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) spoke about possible effective enforcement procedures in some detail.

Visible minorities form another group that will be affected. In my riding, there are many Chinese Canadians, probably more than in any other riding. In many ways, Chinese Canadians are now receiving a measure of equality and acceptance that they never have in the past, mainly through their own efforts but also through a change in attitudes on the part of the people of British Columbia. In the past, there were race riots in British Columbia. The stores of Chinese Canadians were burned. A recent survey taken in British Columbia revealed that British Columbians had become one of the most tolerant people in Canada. That is real progress. The Chinese struggled to get that equality. I am not pleased to say that the place which Chinese Canadians used to occupy is now occupied by East Indians who are a very visible minority in the southeast part of Vancouver, especially Sikhs who wear turbans and so on. Sometimes it is a real struggle for them to get equality in the workplace. They have made progress. Unions such as the IWA have helped to make progress in integrating East Indian people into the forest industry, but it takes a lot of effort. Native people are another visible minority group.

I remember the worst thing that happened to me in the last election campaign. The people in one household absolutely turned me away. I can sense some heckles coming from Hon. Members opposite; I leave myself open when I refer to the worst thing that happened to me. I can knock on a door and be confronted with people who may not agree with me. They may be Conservatives or Liberals, although there are few of them in the West.

Ms. Copps: Watch it.

Mr. Waddell: Well, not Liberals, because people in the West believe that politicians should stand for something, so they vote either Conservative or NDP.

Ms. Copps: You will live to regret those words.

Mr. Waddell: They realize that Liberals are like—

Ms. Copps: A former member of the Liberal Party, shame on you, Ian.

Mr. Waddell: —mugwumps who sit on the fence with their mugs on one side and their wumps on the other and do not know on which side to come down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I am willing to give this popular Member an extra minute or two, but if this carries on, I think I will have to cut him off.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, even I know that I am being irrelevant.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) really insulted the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) when she said that he used to be a former Liberal. That is not the case, is it?

Ms. Copps: Yes, it is. Now he is really embarrassed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member knows that that is not a point of order. Now, look it, let's grab a lifestyle here and let's get with it, okay? It is three minutes after five o'clock and the Hon. Member has two minutes remaining.

Mr. Waddell: A nasty rumour went around a few years ago that there was a fellow who looked exactly like me and knew the most intimate details of my personal life. There used to be, years ago, a former assistant to a Liberal Prime Minister. I do not know where this fellow gets around, but I want to say that I am certainly not a Liberal, today.

Mr. Nystrom: That was a Liberal answer.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, it was. However, let me conclude by saying that we think the Bill is flawed. The Minister of Employment and Immigration had good intentions but she could not get a really tough Bill through Cabinet. We need a Bill which will help women, visible minorities, native people and disabled people. We need a Bill with better goals than Bill C-62. We need targets to reach those goals and some way to enforce those targets and goals. That is what a good Bill would be about, and we would vote for such a Bill. However, this Bill ain't it.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to speak in support of Bill C-62. Much has been said about it this afternoon. For a moment or two I should like to refer to the contents of the Bill itself. Its purpose is defined as follows:

> —to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

I hope it is clear to everyone that the target groups are women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada.

In that Your Honour is from Edmonton, I think you would be the first to agree that southeast Edmonton contains large numbers of people in the target groups. It may surprise Hon. Members opposite to know that in Edmonton—Strathcona 62 per cent of the people living there are of origin other than British or French. As was stated so eloquently by the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner), this is a step forward in Canada. It is the first time in our entire history that a Government has done something about employment equity. It is a day of which all of us in the House should be proud. I, for one, am very proud to be associated with a Government which is doing this.

It is self-evident that the target groups are not given the same opportunities as other Canadians. I recall being in Montreal a couple of years ago when it was pointed out to me that the unemployment rate among visible minorities in that city was in excess of 20 per cent. It is an unfortunate fact of life in Canada that people in the target groups do not have the same opportunities as have other Canadians. If my Party believes in anything, it is that we believe in equality of opportunity for all Canadians including the four targeted groups.

Mrs. Finestone: Certainly you do, David.

Mr. Kilgour: It is not perfect, but I ask my close friend, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), what has any other Government in our history done in this regard? I think the answer, in fairness, would be, absolutely nothing.

I should like to deal with some of the points raised by Hon. Members opposite. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal referred to employment statistics on visible minorities and to Canadians of Jamaican origin. For the first time employers in Montreal and elsewhere will be required to implement equity and demonstrate the results of their efforts. For the first time those employers will have to account to the people of Canada and to the Canadian Human Rights Commission which will take action if companies fail to show positive results. As I understand it, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) stated that she did not like the enforcement question. The Canadian Human Rights Commission will monitor progress under the Bill. I understand the commission appeared before the committee and indicated that it fully supported the proposed enforcement process and that it would continue to monitor the progress made. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) indicated that public opinion, as I understand it, was not important in the achievement of employment equity. To what do any of us answer? It is public opinion, and I am not referring to those days when we do well in a public opinion poll. Public opinion is the governing factor in a democracy, and I hope it always will be.

I listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). I would ask him: Which recommendations in the excellent Abella Report we are not attempting to deal with? My parents and his ancestors came to Canada with hope. In my view we must all start at the same point on the starting line and compete together. However, the reality is that the target groups in the Bill all too often do not have the same opportunity. We are determined on this side of the House—and I hope that is the case for those on his side—to ensure that Canada takes this very significant step forward today.

• (1710)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate. There have been a number of facetious and fallacious statements made by Government Members. It is unfortunate that they do not know the facts. They do not know that this particular so-called step forward has been criticized by every group and every organization involved in the search for equality and for minorities.

It is also pretty clear, as stated by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), that the heavyweights in the Conservative Cabinet put their foot down and blocked any move toward real equality for women. It is very clear that some of those heavyweights do not believe in equality for women.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is the Minister responsible for the implementation of the equality report. Let us look at what the Minister of Justice thinks about women and what he thinks about equality even in this very august Chamber. At a fund raising dinner a couple of weeks ago, the Minister of Justice made his comment very clear, Mr. Speaker. An article in a newspaper, in part, reads:

> Saying federal opposition MPs presented "strong arguments for retroactive birth control" and likening Liberal MP Sheila Copps to a codfish, federal Justice Minister John Crosbie was on the attack—
> One of his more venemous attacks made against Ms. Copps. After describing a codfish as having a "stupid looking face" with a mouth that is "usually wide open," he went on to say: "The perfect example of a codfish would be Sheila Copps."

The Minister of Justice who said that the opposition Parties are the greatest justification for retroactive birth control is, in fact, the same Minister who is responsible for the implementation of equality. If Members on the Government side of the House had taken the time to read the equality report, they would know that in the report itself there is an absolute and direct challenge levelled at the Government with respect to the employment equity Bill.

The equality committee, made up of a majority of Conservatives, studied the laws of the land, including the proposed Bill we are discussing today, and found that this particular legislation did not meet the needs of women, did not meet the needs of minorities and was a violation of the principles of equality. Why is it still a violation of the principles of equality?

First, built into the legislation is a clause that states that all federal agencies covered under the Financial Administration Act will not be covered by this Bill. In one fell swoop, with one stroke of the pen, the federal Government has introduced a Bill which does not apply to the RCMP, to the Canadian Armed Forces or to any federal Government agencies which are directly under the rubrick of Treasury Board. It only applies to federally regulated companies. To boot, Mr. Speaker, all federally regulated companies are not covered under this legislation. Only approximately 100 of over 30,000 federal companies will be covered by this legislation. Approximately 100 companies, and the balance, over 30,000 companies, can thumb their noses at the Government and can tell the Government that they will continue to pursue the voluntary approach which has proven in the past not to work.

Even though this measure covers only 100 companies, it will target a number of employees within federally regulated bodies, such as the banks and various transportation industries, and for that we would give them a great round of applause if the Bill said anything. The Bill should say, "You have targets which you must reach, otherwise the federal Government, through the auspices of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, will step in and do something". There is no requirement upon any company to do anything. All that is asked of a company is to send in an annual report on its progress.

How will those reports be monitored? An audit, a random audit which would lead to absolutely no response or no conditions on the companies at all. We have heard over and over again in the House of Commons today from a number of Members who should know better. I think of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), who was presumably informed on the issue since she spent the better part of last year criss-crossing the country, studying questions and saying that nothing had been done under previous Liberal Governments. I would like to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker.

Those of us in Parliament realize that under any Government the progress we have made is not enough, but it is pretty important that the public recognize that in 1971 Canada became the first country in the western world to recognize women at the highest levels of decision making by establishing a cabinet position for women. In 1973, a non-governmental advisory council on the status of women was established. In 1972, the federal Government ratified the International Labour Organization's convention concerning equal pay for work of equal value, even though the current Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) with respect to the labour dispute in Newfoundland has made it quite clear that the Government does not intend to respect the ILO convention signed by previous Liberal Governments. In 1975 there was the introduction of an omnibus Bill to provide equality of status for women. In 1976, we had the adoption of the Canadian Human Rights Act forbidding discrimination on the basis of sex. In 1978, we had an amendment to the Canada Pension Plan to provide for the equal splitting of pension credits and amendments to the Canada Labour Code to eliminate pregnancy as a basis for lay-off or dismissal. In 1982, we had the Charter of Rights and Freedoms over the dead body of a particular Progressive Conservative Premier of a certain province in Canada. Over his dead body the federal Liberal Party introduced the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which guaranteed equal rights to men and women, including an override clause, which was blocked at every step by Conservatives across the nation.

When we talk about equality, let us look at the question of unemployment benefits, which has a direct bearing on how we can seek equality in the workforce. We know right now that the federal Conservative Party, the Government sitting across the way, is looking at taking pregnancy leave out of unemployment insurance benefits. It is one of the things being studied by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

When the Liberal Government introduced pregnancy leave as a right through unemployment insurance, as with other types of leave which were not covered under the Searching for Work section, it was introduced because Liberals believed and continue to believe that in order to give women the opportunity to compete equally in the workforce they have to have an opportunity of access to child care, access to bearing a child without being penalized and without fear of losing their jobs, without financial hardship and disability. It seems to me that what we have here is a Government that is sending the women of Canada a double-whammy.

[Translation]

It is a well-known fact, Mr. Speaker, that many ministers in this Government, in this Cabinet, have not the slightest interest in achieving equality for women. We also know that as far as this Bill is concerned, all groups, including women, minority groups, racial minorities, all those groups have already told the Government that the Bill does not meet the needs of Canadian men and women. Not just the ethnic groups and visible minorities and women's groups have voiced their disapproval. The Conservative Committee said in the report on equality that Bill C-62 went against the principles of equity as previously defined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

If Progressive Conservative Members would take the time to read the Charter, they would see why the Committee was unanimous in demanding that the Government change the Bill, and the reason is that the Bill as tabled fails to provide for Government responsibility.

For instance, most companies are not covered by the Bill, including the Government, including the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which has been said to discriminate against Francophones. Today, the Canadian Forces fail to respect the equality of women as far as career opportunities in the Armed Forces are concerned. All these groups are not covered by the Bill because the Government, or rather the Minister—I suppose as a result of the enormous influence of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen)—has decided to eliminate all the groups included in the Financial Administration Act. In other words, Government employees will not have the same rights as employees in the private sector, before the federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear there are incredible deficiencies, and if Progressive Conservative Members are truly interested in equality for women, they should reject the Bill in its present form.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the remarks of the Minister when she introduced this Bill and to those of the Parliamentary Secretary, I could only conclude that either they are completely ignorant of how the real world of employment operates, or they are involved in a charade trying to fool the Canadian people into believing they are doing something when, in fact, they are not.

In terms of employment, the fate of four important groups will be vitally affected by the effectiveness of this Bill. Those groups have expressed their opposition because they know from experience that without targets and numerical goals being set in the Act, nothing will happen. I refer to women, natives, the handicapped, and people from the visible minorities.

I heard the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) say that 62 per cent of his constituents come from neither Anglo Saxon nor French origin. That Member grew up in Winnipeg and he will know that the percentage is even higher in my constituency. I had the opportunity to work for a dozen years with the labour movement, ethnic groups, and community organizations in precisely this area of how to deal in Canada with the problems of prejudice and discrimination.

In the 1950s we suggested to Governments, federal and provincial, that legislation was needed to stop employers from refusing to hire people because of their race, religion, or colour. We heard all kinds of lectures about the fact that legislation would not work. We were told that legislation would only exacerbate the prejudices and that we needed education. After a few years of really studying the problem, the Government realized that legislation was needed.

I give credit to the first Government to enact such legislation in the form of the Fair Employment Practices Act, the then Conservative Government of Ontario lead by Mr. Frost. Some years later, when we went to work on the question of accommodations, we were able to prove that there were hotels, summer resorts, and even districts in certain cities, which made it impossible, or very uncomfortable, for people to get accommodation because of their race, colour, or creed. We then had passage of the Fair Accommodation Practices Act.

We are told that all we need do is to encourage people. The federal Liberal Government targeted certain Departments. It said that it believed in making employment for minority groups easier. It targeted certain Departments to hire people from minority groups. The record was very poor. I am not saying that that Government did not want a better record and did not try. However, it is easy to pass legislation or announce policies, but if the personnel managers do not believe in it, it simply will not work, and it has not worked.

If one studies the Departments which were targeted by the former Government to make progress, one sees that there was very little progress. How many natives and other non-white people work for the federal Government? How many women are there in senior executive positions? There are very few, although our universities have graduated large numbers of women lawyers and doctors and some women engineers and architects. They are not working for Governments because the personnel managers have not been convinced that they ought to do this, and we have not set goals.

The United States has had a great deal of experience in this area. Under the Johnson and Carter administrations, legislation very similar to ours was passed. However, they set goals and targets, and those targets were monitored. The American Government is now headed by the most pro-business President that the United States has had in 50 years. The present Government is against legislation and regulations which interfere with the rights of businesses to make decisions which they think are right for themselves. They have been considering getting rid of these targets. This is a very interesting situation. Even though they are ideologically committed to getting rid of these targets and goals, the Secretary of Labour, Mr. Brock, is telling President Reagan that they should keep the goals and targets.

In addition to Secretary of Labour Brock, representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers in the United States, the major organization representing the major business corporations in the United States, have said openly, clearly, and on the record to the President of the United States that they do not want those numbers to be eliminated. They have explained it very simply by saying that as long as the Government sets targets and tells them clearly and precisely what they are required to do by way of bringing more equity into the workforce, hiring more people who are non-white, native, handicapped, and women, they are prepared to do it. They feel that there will be no doubts or difficulties and that they will not be criticized in the future for not having done the right thing. If that is what the American business community has learned through experience, surely Canadian business and industry would come to the same conclusion if given the opportunity and requirement.

I go into the banks, supermarkets, and major retail stores in my city of Winnipeg. We have thousands of non-white citizens in Winnipeg. I challenge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who comes from my province, to come to Winnipeg, as I am sure he does, and to go, as I do, into any of those establishments. Mr. Speaker, you would have to look for a long time and wear very large magnifying glasses before you would see a few, if any, people who are non-white, handicapped, or native, working in any of those places. The record of my city Government is no better. There has been a long campaign to try to get the Winnipeg Police Department to hire a few native people, a few Filipinos, a few Sikhs. We have as well a very small percentage of women on the Winnipeg Police Force. When I use my city as an illustration, the record in other cities such as Montreal, Halifax, Toronto, Calgary, Edmonton or Vancouver is, I am certain, no better. Passage of this Bill without a requirement for targeting as well as provision for enforcement will make it a mockery and it will not work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Ona point of order, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Kilgour: He is sending someone out to get another Member.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I cannot hear because of interjections on the other side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker—well, that's okay.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Pretty shabby.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) wishes to participate in the debate?

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The debate is on the motion to change the preamble of this Bill to "promote and encourage" rather than to "achieve". At first sight this amendment is almost trivial. However, I think it communicates something of importance, that being a recognition of the limitations of this legislation, which are considerable. It reminds us, too, of the limits of past legislation dealing with human rights. There have been a number of laws passed in this country the purpose of which in general has been to give the force of law to the notion that there ought to be accorded equal opportunity in the first instance to minority groups and, as our philosophy on equality evolved, to women, the disabled, natives and others. Never has any of this legislation achieved the purpose for which it was intended. It has always been a case of an effort to make progress along a path which has always proved to be far more difficult than people want.

Of course, this legislation is dramatic testimony to the failures of the past in attempting to achieve anti-discrimination legislation. At one time it was possible to hope that by saying it was against the law to discriminate in employment practices and providing a mechanism by which someone could enter a complaint, in the end employers would not discriminate. Of course it failed and ultimately led to a whole new point of view regarding anti-discrimination legislation, usually described as affirmative action. Therefore, even if you accept that this Bill was able to promote employment equity or affirmative action, the fact is that it has none of the requirements which are essential to achieving that end.

It is to mislead the public and the target groups to suggest that this Bill promotes that goal, because it lacks so much. Even were it to contain every necessary element, the essential purpose of the Bill could not be described as any more than promoting and encouraging employment equity. Therefore, to suggest this amendment is to do nothing more than to suggest that the English language be used properly.

Of course, there are more substantial difficulties with this Bill. These have been enumerated on many occasions. The claim that it does achieve or even promote employment equity or affirmative action dissolves into nothingness when you realize that all it really does is to demand that employers determine the numbers of minority groups or target groups in an employer's shop. That is fine, that is progress, but let us not make it any more than it is. It does not set any kind of penalty for failure to achieve some measure of equity. It has no targets, no timetables, and none of the things that just about everyone concerned, certainly the target groups, have demanded.

I have many opportunities to talk in particular to members of visible minority organizations and many who are not part of any organization at all. Many of them have lived in this country for many, many years, watching a moving target. That moving target is to achieve equality and equal opportunity not only in employment but in a number of other areas. This Bill specifically deals with employment. In Toronto, for example, the Urban Alliance discovered two things in two studies, first, that members of visible minority groups have one-third the chance of the majority population of even getting as far as an interview. The same survey found that many employers, without provocation and quite spontaneously, uttered the most awful stereotypical and negative comments and views about members of visible minorities.

We were told in an earlier intervention that this Bill imposes a really serious requirement in its demand for enumeration, that to impose anything more would be to increase the degree of factionalism in this country and increase division. I have never heard a more absurd argument. What could be more divisive or faction-generating than that significant portions of our population, something of the order of half a million citizens of this country, should have the perception that they have one-third the chance of the general population of getting access to ordinary jobs in a city which historically has been regarded as one of the best urban areas with regard to access to opportunity? Many of these people have watched effort after effort to implement anti-discrimination legislation only to see such legislation fail. Often the legislation has been excellent for its time. The anti-discrimination legislation of Ontario led the continent. The anti-discrimination legislation and its implementation in Nova Scotia became the symbol for the world of the success of that kind of an effort. No matter how successful this good legislation was, it failed. It failed because attitudes hardened and practices developed that made discrimination more subtle, and now is the time for change. Everyone who has looked at the issue knows that the only approach is through affirmative action programs which are mandatory and enforced. This Bill, therefore, lacks its essential quality to provide affirmative action and employment equity which are mandatory and have teeth.

This is a toothless wonder that disappoints the minority groups of this country and it is far too long that they have been disappointed in their goal of achieving a nation in which equity, fairness and opportunity are accorded to them in the way that history has given them cause to earn.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): I would like to support the amendment that has been put forward because I think it is more in keeping with what is going to be achieved if Bill C-62 is passed. There is nothing in this Bill to indicate that the purpose of the act of achieving, as it is presently stated, equality in the workplace can possibly be realized. It is a Bill of statements and a Bill of wishes, but nothing that would indicate anything in the area of what is going to be achieved. Neither is there any indication or likelihood that it will be achieved unless this Government brings forward some proper sanctions.

I think the idea of the Bill and the statement of what we would like to see brought forward and achieved in it is a laudable one, and I commend the Government for that. I am very much concerned that we have this Bill before the House at the present time, and we have stated what we would like to see achieved, but I am very concerned that it is not going to be achieved.

It has been said in debate in this House, "Well, here we have Bill C-62, and this is a start, this is something that we can build on, this is more than we have had before". I do not see it that way. I am concerned that the opposite will be the case, that by passing this Bill into law, Members of the House and the Government are going to say, "Well, that is that subject out of the way. We can put this question of employment equality aside for a while and get on to other things", when actually this matter has not been dealt with adequately.

To delude ourselves that this Bill is going to allow us to push this question aside and to get on with other things I think would be a travesty. In fact, there is so much that needs to be done for the visible minorities, women, native peoples and the handicapped that this Bill does not scratch the surface.

We are not even putting our own house in order as a federal Government and as a federal jurisdiction. The federal Departments and agencies are not all being brought under the auspices of this Bill. We have got to create an example in the federal jurisdiction. We have not done that and this Bill is not going to do it. If the Government is not going to set the example, how can the Government possibly expect others to adhere to what this Bill would like to see achieved?

None of the requests or objectives of the four minority groups that this Bill hopes to cover have been met. All four groups have appeared before the committee relating to this Bill and have asked for a stronger Bill, for more stringent provisions, and certainly sanctions that would allow this Bill to be followed the way we all would like to see it followed.

We owe a great deal in this country to the groups that are mentioned here, and I think that by giving this question such a cursory glance and such cursory attention we are really doing a disservice, not only to the groups but to our country. We have heard so often about the problems that exist with respect to the disabled. We have had an excellent task force on the disabled which presented a report during the last Parliament called Obstacles. I think it brought to our attention and to the attention of Canadians in a much more detailed fashion the problems facing the disabled today. The disabled have a right to achieve equal opportunity in the workplace and in the market-place.

We must certainly do a great deal more. I know we have given special attention to entrance and exit requirements, to special parking requirements, and to service requirements for the disabled, and these are very important. These have been very sizeable steps in recent years. This Act does not complement these advances. This Act does not add anything further to what has been done, because what we need now is to be able to give the disabled the assurance that they are going to be treated fairly when it comes to gainful employment.

Another group that is mentioned here are native people. A great deal still needs to be done. Many of the problems have been historical problems that we have created. I think that trying to deal with the problems that have been created from past attempts, albeit very noble and well meaning attempts to deal with the needs of our native people, trying to address and correct these problems here with this Bill, is only going to make the situation worse. It is going to indicate to our native people that by bringing this Bill forward in the form that we have it we are not sincere, we just want to make a cosmetic attempt. This is wrong because it deserves much more attention.

What I have to say about the first two groups applies as well to the visible minorities and to women whose problems and needs have been emphasized and discussed already in the House. There is a great deal more that needs to be done. There needs to be some way of getting to the problems and ensuring that the problems are going to be corrected. We cannot let employment equity take place on an honour system. It is far too important. We must create an example by imposing sanctions to show that we, as parliamentarians, mean what we say and are determined to improve the situation of these groups.

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know there are some Members who may be disappointed that the House is not ready for the question, but they will have to listen to one more speech and, hopefully, many more.

An Hon. Member: The Bill disappoints you.

Mr. Keeper: I hear the cries of disappointment across the way and they bring joy to my heart because they indicate that we must continue the debate. Perhaps if we repeat the points that must be made government Members will begin to see the error of their ways and realize how this Bill is deficient. Perhaps they will decide to withdraw this Bill and introduce adequate legislation.

Mr. Nystrom: With new ideas.

Mr. Keeper: More than anything else, the Government needs new ideas and new initiatives. It must begin to take real action on the problems facing Canadians.

Mr. Nystrom: They're Conservatives.

Mr. Keeper: Of course, it comes as no surprise with a Conservative Government that it fails to take effective action when it involves social justice and equality in Canadian society.

Although this employment equity Bill purports to have a mandatory affirmative action program, its compliance is essentially voluntary. Experience has shown that in order to have an effective affirmative action program it must be truly mandatory, which means there must be an enforcement mechanism to make sure that companies falling within the domain of this legislation will pay a price if they do not take the necessary action to ensure equality in the workplace. That penalty must be sufficient to encourage them to take the necessary action.

This legislation fails fundamentally because it does not have any teeth to enforce the policies of equality in the workplace between men, women, visible minorities, native people and the handicapped.

Enforcement mechanisms are necessary because the decisions made by companies are motivated by the ability to make profit from products that are marketable and competitive. Those companies face these pressures when making decisions on the allocation of their resources. If the Government expects these companies to bring about equality in the workplace, it must apply sufficient pressure to encourage them to introduce those programs.

One of the basic elements of an affirmative action program is enforcement. That mechanism is lacking in this Bill. Therefore, this legislation needs to be debated at length.

An Hon. Member: For at least another five minutes.

Mr. Keeper: Given the quality of the legislation, five minutes would be a long time.

[Translation]

Ms. Mitchell: In French.

Mr. Keeper: That is a good idea, Mr. Speaker.

One of my colleagues here says the legislation should be debated in French as well. I must say I agree, because the legislation is important for all Canadians, both Francophones and Anglophones.

This legislation on employment equity is inadequate. It is inadequate because it lacks a basic provision, which is the authority to force a company to set up a corporate employment equity program.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen how affirmative action works in the United States and Australia. The Australian experience is especially important because, in that country, the affirmative action program has positively changed the income ratio between men and women. They found that legislation can be effective.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would appreciate it very much if the Hon. Member would stick to the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Keeper: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker . . . yes I have it now, I can read the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill provides, and I quote:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality—

We do not think it will ever be achieved with this Bill and that is why we have introduced an amendment which states: The purpose of this Act is to promote and encourage—

Mr. Speaker, the amendment implies that the measure now before the House is too weak and inadequate. It is unfair, we must change the law, we must introduce an adequate law which can be enforced—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have approximately 15 seconds. Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on debate. It is six o'clock. The Hon. Member will be the next to speak.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. This evening I would like to speak to an issue which affects the Ottawa—Vanier region in particular, and the National Capital Region in general, namely the fate of federal employees as a result of budgetary measures and especially staff cut-backs. I would like to refer to a situation which is alarming, to say the least, and say how sorry we are to see the lack of sensitivity shown by this Government towards its federal employees.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will recall that on January 21, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) whether his Government will make sure that, in the future, collective bargaining will include a provision under which layoffs might be negotiable.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is very important in terms of job security and in looking forward to a career within the public service to know whether the main employer, the Treasury Board, is aware of what it can mean to a family to learn one day that the income earner has been told: "We no longer need your services."

I simply asked the President of the Treasury Board, who has jurisdiction as employer, whether he intended to keep his word to negotiate an agreement concerning layoffs with these public servants.

I would like to quote his answer, which can be found on page 9995 of Hansard for January 21, 1986. Here, then, are the comments of the President of the Treasury Board:

I would like to emphasize the fact that we indicated in the May Budget that 15,000 person years would be eliminated over the next five years, including 5,000 during the next fiscal year. We have negotiated with all our unions a policy concerning employees who might be adversely affected by this program. ... most of them will be re-assigned either in their own Departments or in others.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the fiscal year began last April 1. There will therefore be 5,000 lay-offs, and since one third of those will involve people who work in the Ottawa-Hull region, nearly 1,500 and perhaps as many as 2,000 workers will be directly affected by this staff reduction policy.

In a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I asked the President of the Treasury Board whether he would keep the promise made by his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to federal public servants during the 1984 campaign to the effect that he would initiate discussions with the unions to ensure that such matters would be negotiable, and I quote from the Prime Minister's letter—

• (1800)

[English]

A PC Government will negotiate directly with Public Service unions and associations toward the establishment of an improved collective bargaining system ... Staffing procedures, classification, technological change, designations and other issues will become negotiable.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have to wonder if this promise will be kept, and God knows that this is a current issue, because this Government is becoming one of the least credible we have had in a long time! To the cut-backs announced by the Treasury Board, namely, the 15,000 jobs in the next few years, must be added the staff reductions by agencies and corporations whose person-years do not come under the control of the President of the Treasury Board, that is under direct Government control. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the Budget Papers of May 1985 where, following an explanation of the budgetary cut-backs, one can read all about staff cut-backs over the coming years with respect to Treasury Board controlled person-years. I quote from page 31 of the Budget Papers:

Similar reductions will be made to the salary budgets of those departments and agencies whose person-years are not controlled.

Mr. Speaker, "similar" might mean another 15,000 employees. It is not complicated! All journalists got the message, and so did I!

So we are looking at a minimum 30,000 job cut-backs in the staff of departments, agencies and corporations of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, let us delve deeper into this issue and see whether this Government really has a specific policy. I am referring in particular to the recent Treasury Board announcement that maintenance workers would be laid off. One can read in the press release issued by Treasury Board that only 15 of the 265 Public Works maintenance workers declared surplus in October 1985—therefore prior to the new fiscal year—had found alternate jobs in the Public Service. And then the Government announced the adoption of special incentive measures to convince other cleaners that they ought to hand in their resignation. In doing so, the Government has admitted that its reassignment policy is a failure, and as for the promises made by the Minister in the House, that a substantial percentage of the 5,000 jobs to be declared surplus in the coming year would be reassigned within the Public Service, while others would find other positions, and that as far as the Minister was concerned, only 700 people would be affected ... Mr. Speaker, if we only consider what is happening in the maintenance sector, we see that this policy does not work. Among Public Works maintenance workers, 15 found jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are looking at the clock, and I would like to conclude by reporting a comment I heard.

• (1805)

[English]

Phillip Aspinall, Chairman of the Nielsen task force study, said, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of March 12, that "the 15,000 (Public Service job cut target) is not necessarily the limit or maximum."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of grave concern, and I may say I consider it to be a disaster for my area.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, January 21, 1986, my hon. colleague asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) if the Government would allow negotiations in the future on layoffs and job security. I can appreciate my hon. colleague's concerns about job security of Public Service employees.

The Hon. Member was right in stating that the legislation does not provide for collective bargaining on this issue. In fact, we are dealing with two different Acts. The Public Service Employment Act provides that the deputy head of a Department may lay an employee off where his or her services are no longer required because of lack of work or because of the discontinuance of a function. The Public Service Staff Relations Act, which governs management-union relations and collective bargaining in the Public Service, precludes negotiations on the subject because it provides that no collective agreement can include any provision which would require the amendment of any Act of Parliament listed in an attached Schedule, a Schedule which includes the Public Service Employment Act. This does not mean that the Government is not concerned about the jobs of Public Service employees. Certainly the Government has no wish to lay off large numbers of its employees.

As Members of the House will recall, the Budget Speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of May 1985 included measures intended to ensure the more effective and efficient management of Government business as well as to reduce the deficit by reducing government spending. One of these measures was the reduction in the size of the Public Service by 15,000 person-years over the next five years, starting with some 5,000 person-years in 1986-87. Where possible, the reductions will be achieved through attrition. Through the application of the workforce adjustment policy, efforts are to be made by Public Service managers to minimize the impact of the reductions on employees whose jobs are to be eliminated.

Since the person-year reductions were announced last May, a great deal of planning has been done by Departments and by both the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Public Service Commission to minimize the impact of the reductions on Public Service employees. Based on data received from all Departments for the period through to March 31, 1987, the President of the Treasury Board announced on Friday, January 17, 1986, that of the 5,000 employees who will be directly affected by the elimination of their existing jobs, the Government is projecting that 3,200 will be redeployed to other jobs in their own Departments, 1,100 will be placed in jobs in other Departments with the assistance of the Public Service Commission, and a maximum of 700 could be faced with layoffs and be without jobs. Many of the 700 could be placed in other jobs if they were willing to move at Government expense or if they were willing to accept lower-paying jobs. Those who accept lower-paying jobs would have their salaries protected for one year under the workforce adjustment policy.

• (1810)

On the question of designations to which the Hon. Member also made a brief reference, Section 29 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act places the onus on the Treasury Board, as the employer and in the public interest, to propose for designation employees who cannot participate in a strike because their duties are necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public. This same designation under the Act also allows the certified bargaining agent to object to the employer's proposals for designated employees and, where an objection is lodged, it is the Public Service Staff Relations Board that determines which employees are designated. Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, a legal strike cannot occur until the matter of designated employees has been resolved.

TRADE—PROVINCIAL FRESH WATER RIGHTS. (B) GRAND CANAL COMPANY PROPOSAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to contest the answer or non-answer of another Minister. That particular non-answer relates to a question I put in the House some months ago in respect of the water diversion project which is being contemplated by the Government.

We have the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) stating that the federal Government does not endorse a policy of diverting water from James Bay through the Great Lakes for sale to the United States. The Minister of the Environment says no. However, through my own research I was able to determine that the National Research Council, through its office in St. John's, Newfoundland, had given a $30,000 grant to the Grand Canal Company Limited to begin a feasibility study into the project the federal Government claims it opposes.

On the one hand we have the Minister of the Environment saying that he is against it. On the other hand we have proponents within the NRC who are trying to promote the project. The third and most unsettling point, the one to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) did not respond in the House of Commons, is that our chief negotiator in the free trade agreement, Simon Reisman, has made quite clear that he feels the sale of Canadian water to the United States is the ace in the hole and could be the most important issue facing the country over the next 100 years. He has quite clearly made his position known.

It is the fear of many Canadians that the Canadian Government, under the current free trade discussions with the United States, will use water as the lever to force the U.S. Government to accept some of the Canadian propositions. This is occurring at a time when the Minister of the Environment has stated that he is opposed to the particular project. On February 13, Energy Probe contacted the Minister expressing its very grave concerns on behalf of Canadians in respect of any Government funding for water diversion projects. It appears that the Government does not know what is going on in this dossier. When I originally directed my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he said that that was absolutely not happening and that there had been no funding.

I have been able to establish that there has been funding. In an attempt to take attention away from the issue in Ottawa, it was a local grant through the NRC in St. John's, Newfoundland which permitted the project to go forward. The grant structure was applied for here in Ottawa. It was turned down by the Interdepartmental Committee on Water Quality which said: "No, we do not want to fund this project. In particular, we do not want to fund the Grand Canal Company to do a study on a project which has already been endorsed for the last two decades". As indicated in one press report, it is like asking the monkey to do a test on the peanuts. That is exactly what the NRC has done with this particular grant. It has told the Grand Canal Company to go ahead and study a project which has been the lifeblood of the company since the late 1950s.

• (1815)

Quite clearly we have two messages coming from this Government. The Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) appeared muddled and befuddled in the House of Commons when presented with the evidence. We need a clear-cut response, not only from the Secretary of State but also from those responsible for the National Research Council, as well as the Minister of Environment, that clearly and categorically the Canadian Government will in no way support through research funding or any other measures a water diversion project which could threaten the very delicate ecological balance which is currently facing the development of the far north.

I am happy to see the Parliamentary Secretary will be responding to the questions I have raised, but it would have been nice had the Minister been here because this is a question confronting Canadians and Americans on both sides of the border of the Great Lakes. We have seven million Canadians living in the vicinity of the Great Lakes water table who will be affected by this particular measure.

Indeed, it is a matter of some gravity that our chief trade negotiator in Washington, Simon Reisman, is making public statements about a project on which he at one time held a directorship. We know his personal interests. We know his private interests in the particular company and the project in question. He has to state categorically for the record that our water is not for sale, that the diversion project will not be carried forward. Indeed, he should give some reassurance to Canadians, to those on both sides of the Great Lakes borders as well as those who are affected by any waters coming from the Arctic table, that they will not be adversely affected by this project which, at the moment, has been given the Good Housekeeping seal of approval by the Government since it decided to go through the back door and provide $30,000 seed funding through its office of the National Research Council in Newfoundland.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the question raised by my hon. colleague from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) concerning potential water sales to the United States. I am particularly happy to have this opportunity since I have had my answer ready since March 18 when this question should normally have been raised in the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) not responding to the question. He simply has no desire to raise a point that from the outset may seem absurd.

Mr. Speaker, there are three very important aspects to this matter.

First of all, the trade negotiations will be just that. We certainly have no intention of giving up any rights to our natural resources, and I must say, I do agree with my hon. colleague when she says that water is one of our natural resources. So Canada does not intend to give up any control whatsoever over its natural resources.

Second, I would like to say that the National Research Council and the Newfoundland Regional Office have every right, within reasonable limits, to enter into agreements with other parties. Now, if it is supposed to be Government policy to maintain control over every single contract for which authority has been delegated to the regions, that is another situation altogether, but it is not our policy, Mr. Speaker.

Third, just because the National Research Council has decided to enter into an agreement does not mean that Canada's foreign policy is automatically involved. That may have been the case under the Liberal Government when contracts by the National Research Council involved a commitment and even influenced Canada's external relations or external trade, but this Government, Mr. Speaker, does not work that way.

A National Research Council contract is not going to shape our country's external policies. That is more or less the point I want to make. Now I suppose I could conclude by saying that if the Hon. Member opposite, and I agree that water is part of our natural resources, if the Hon. Member opposite doesn't want this country to sell water abroad, she can avail herself of the rights she has as a Member and have a Private Member's Bill passed in the House, prohibiting Canada from selling anything at all to the United States during the next couple of hundred years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Therefore this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.20 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDS FOR NORTHERN ONTARIO BANDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this week several chiefs representing six newly recognized Indian bands of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation in northern Ontario were here in Ottawa seeking assurances that their capital funding program would be approved. They have the support of Members of Parliament in all political Parties and from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) himself. Nevertheless they are apprehensive because, living in a time of Government restraint, they are aware that obstacles may arise which would prevent them from proceeding with the upgrading and improvement of their remote communities, putting in place basic services that other Canadians take for granted.

These dignified chiefs are not here for a hand-out. Their Governments are now recognized, and they are here to assert their constitutional and aboriginal rights. I say to the Government that, even in times of restraint, the constitutional and historical obligations to our aboriginal peoples must be honoured.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON VANCOUVER ISLAND MARITIME TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, despite letters and telegrams to the office of the Prime Minister dating from last December, he has not responded to requests from the Nanoose Conversion Campaign about the renewal of the Canada-U.S. agreement on the Maritime Experimental and Test Range located at Nanoose, Vancouver Island. The Conversion Campaign Committee wants to know what changes and extensions the Americans are requesting in the present agreement which expires next Monday, April 14. From coast to coast thousands of Canadians have petitioned the Government to hold an open inquiry on the matter, yet it has chosen to proceed with renewal, with no public input whatsoever.

In spite of repeated requests for information regarding the advantages and disadvantages to Canada of the test range, the Canadian people have been given no information whatsoever on the changes the Americans are seeking to make.

I call upon the Government to make a full statement of intentions before signing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

ENERGY

GASOLINE PRICES IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in most of the major centres of the NWT the pump price of gasoline remains in the 60-cent to 70-cent per litre range, with prices which can be much higher in remote communities. There has been some amelioration in the southern areas where there is a degree of competition but, for example, in the lower Mackenzie where Esso has a virtual monopoly, prices have remained static at just less than 70 cents per litre.

Northern consumers are aware of the high taxes imposed by the Territorial Government and the high transportation and storage costs, but they still feel that crude price reductions are not being fully passed on. Northerners ought to receive the same benefits from lower crude oil prices as do southerners.

EMPLOYMENT

WOMEN—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this Government has repeatedly shown that it is committed to create equality for women in Canadian society. Action has been substituted for rhetoric.

Employment has to be the sector where the results of equal opportunity measures taken by the Government are most telling.

Statistics Canada figures released on Friday reveal that female unemployment has declined sharply. Here is supporting evidence, Mr. Speaker: there are now 293,000 more women in the labour force than there were in September 1984; unemployment among women has gone down 1.9 per cent since the election, from 12 to 10.1 per cent, whereas it actually went up 3.4 per cent under the previous Government, from 8.6 to 12 per cent; there are 80,000 fewer women without jobs, whereas there were 243,000 more under the Liberal

S.O. 21

That is what we call significant progress, Mr. Speaker, and the situation will continue to improve over the years thanks to the unequalled leadership of the men and women of the PC caucus.

MULTICULTURALISM

PROPOSED POLICY CHANGE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Multicultural Minister has made it clear that he wishes to alter the policy of multiculturalism radically to a more pro business mode and has declared that some organizations are going to be cut out. There has been absolutely no consultation on this shift but, moreover, such a change would run counter to the spirit and development of this policy since 1971.

The Minister's slogan of "multiculturalism means business" is reflective of the Tories' perverse tendency to view everything in business dollars and cents. The promotion and retention of our Canadian culture cannot afford such regressive and narrow thinking. There are thousands of multicultural organizations which are serving the Canadian community well and honourably, and they deserve continued support and encouragement.

I urge the Minister to restore the country's confidence immediately in a true multicultural program by abandoning his ill-advised strategy. The Minister should become a genuine advocate for the constituency he is supposed to represent and defend in cabinet and in Government.

ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY—FORTHCOMING VISIT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Anatoly Shcharansky was released two months ago today on February 11, 1986. We learned this week that he and his wife Avital will visit the United States next month and will meet with President Reagan.

We understand that the Soviets have threatened to halt even the current mere trickle of Jewish emigration if the Shcharanskys indulge in anti-Soviet statements. Notwithstanding this threat, Anatoly has said he will not submit to this type of blackmail.

We hope and pray that Anatoly and Avital will visit Canada and meet our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and their thousands of friends across this land. Anatoly's victorious battle for the cause of Soviet Jewry, both refusniks and prisoners of conscience, helps to sustain all of us as we march toward greater victories in the war against the Soviets' violations of human rights.

ENERGY

GASOLINE EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I found out that we refine 550,000 barrels a day of gasoline in Canada. In February 50,000 barrels of refined gasoline was exported to the United States. In other words, we are exporting refined Canadian gasoline to the United States which is then sold cheaper in the U.S. than it is in Canada.

I found out as well that the Canadian independent retailers cannot buy this cheap gasoline in Canada so they go to the United States. In February they imported 10,000 barrels of refined gasoline a day. The independent retailers did a loop, if you like. What kind of energy policy is that, Mr. Speaker, when independents have to go to the United States to buy the cheap gasoline they cannot buy in Canada? That is a crazy energy policy.

What we are seeing is a failure. We have the worst of all possible worlds. Canadian motorists are paying more than Americans for gasoline, and Canadian producers, especially in the Province of Alberta, are getting killed by the Western Accord.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, the good news keeps coming in, for the greater benefit of Canadians.

Yesterday, the Bank of Canada rate dropped nearly one per cent. This was the biggest drop in a long time.

Mr. Speaker, let us recall that under the previous Government, the bank rate reached a record high.

Today, under the Conservative Government:

—Interest rates on five-year mortgages have gone down 3.25 points, representing a saving of $108 per month on a $50,000 loan. Current rates for five-year mortgages are at their lowest level in seven years.

—The interest rate on five-year mortgages from the Farm Credit Corporation has dropped three points.

Mr. Speaker, that is what I call leadership, a fact that is recognized by the Gaspé, Quebecers and Canadians.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, falling world grain prices have impacted seriously on our farm economy. In response, the Government over the past 15 months has contributed, through the Western Grain Transportation Act, federal share of crop insurance, federal share of western grain stabilization, federal crop drought assistance, cash advances to farmers, rail branch line expenditures, livestock drought assistance, and fuel excise and sales tax rebates, some $2 billion to western agriculture.

In Saskatchewan the provincial Government has, through a number of programs such as the Farm Purchase Program, the farmers' oil royalty rebate, livestock cash advances, crop insurance adjustments, production loan guarantees, Ag credit, and others, injected more than $1.5 billion into the agricultural economy. Never in Canadian history have any two levels of Government made such a response to the needs of western agriculture.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

ATTENDANCE AT COMMITTEE MEETING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, imagine my surprise this morning when I went into the committee on Employment and Immmigration and moved a motion that the salary of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) be reduced to $1 until she revokes the cruel and unfair imposition of changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, and the only Conservative Member who had bothered to show up, other than the chairman—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order!

Ms. Copps: —fled the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Ms. Copps: Fled the committee. Where are the Conservatives?

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTIONS IN BANK AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, anyone who has read the headlines in the morning newspapers is aware of the dramatic drop in the bank rate yesterday. In his last Budget the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that this fall would happen, and it has. Canadians across this great land realize that the Government has taken the right course to achieve lower interest rates.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, let us look at five-year mortgage rates. Since the election five-year mortgage rates are down by 3.5 points, a savings of over $108 a month, or of $6,500 over five years on a $50,000 mortgage. What a difference that is from the 20 per cent plus levels which prevailed under the Liberal Government. Mortgages are now lower than they have been in the last seven years. Mr. Speaker, this is what a sound Government is all about.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—EMPLOYMENT FEES CHARGED TO BAGGAGE HANDLERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, free enterprise is alive and well at Pearson International Airport. Four enterprising skycaps or baggage handlers approached the airlines with an offer to manage the skycap services at the airport for free. The airlines, seeing an opportunity to comply with Transport Canada regulations about maintaining such services at the airport, while eliminating any expense to do so, of course leaped at the scheme.

These four entrepreneurs then put the arm on the baggage handlers and said that they must pay them $80 a week to work there or they would be out. That is $4,000 a year to work for tips, Mr. Speaker. Two skycaps complained to the media and were fired. Two more were fired this week for taking time off while sick. Under this payola scheme workers with a doctor's certificate cannot even take time off while sick. It is like organized crime, or like free enterprise.

When I first communicated this to the Minister a month ago, he expressed sympathy for the skycaps in the press. However, he has yet to reply to myself, or to make his interest known to those who have lost their jobs. Lip service in the press will not solve this problem or assist the skycaps—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR CANADA—APPEAL AGAINST TRANSFER OF INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS FROM GANDER TO ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have today registered an appeal against the movement of Air Canada's international flights from Gander to St. John's. The appeal is registered under Section 23(2) of the National Transportation Act under which I am charging that the act of the carrier will prejudicially affect the public interest.

The Freedom to Move policy of the Government in dealing with Air Canada is somewhat confusing. Today I learned that the letter to Air Canada from the Minister saying: "We do not interfere with corporate decisions based on good business practices", is in a file on the desk of the President of Air Canada attached to another response from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to an identical request from Air Canada to move international flights from Mirabel to Dorval. The answer to that letter is an unqualified "no". Air Canada has freedom to move to St. John's, but no freedom to move to Dorval. The question now is whether I have the freedom to appeal and whether the Minister will recognize that freedom.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA—UNITED STATES RELATIONS—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that the crisis in Libya is escalating. My question relates to the security of Canadians living and working in that country. Three weeks ago I put that matter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and he assured the House there was no danger. Will the Prime Minister tell the House how he currently views the situation and whether the risk is broadening for Canadians in Libya?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): We view the situation with seriousness, Mr. Speaker, consistent with our statement of January 10, 1986. I would add to that that our consular officials who are there advise that there is no immediate cause for undue concern for Canadians. We have conveyed two things. To Canadians we have conveyed our view, as we expressed it in January, that their analysis of their security concerns should motivate their own behaviour in regard to remaining there. Secondly, we have advised the Americans and our allies of the location of all Canadians and have urged upon them, and all others, great prudence in regard to them.

INQUIRY IF AGREEMENT MADE BY UNITED STATES FOR EVACUATION OF CANADIAN CITIZENS FROM LIBYA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last month when the Prime Minister met President Reagan in Washington, the crisis in Libya had already started. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he was given the assurance that, in the event of the United States engaging in military operations, Canadians in Libya would be evacuated.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, we did not discuss it in those terms. First of all, the Canadian Government has spoken out and taken action against terrorism in any form, and we have made clear our complete disapproval of certain actions by governments or agents acting on behalf of governments, where terrorism is concerned. Furthermore, we have taken initiatives at the government level, as announced on January 10, 1986, especially with respect to Libya.

In addition, we have urged our allies to ascertain at all times that retribution is justified and to act with great caution in this area, and especially in connection with the Canadian presence, we emphasized and re-emphasized this aspect as recently as yesterday and the day before, and of course its importance for the Government of Canada in this situation.

CURRENT SITUATION—CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister been in personal touch with the President in recent days urging, as he put it, all caution and prudence, and moderating the position which seems to be escalating the crisis?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Government of Canada has conveyed a number of views directly to all those involved and concerned—first, our deep concern for the Canadians there; secondly, our view, which is unchanged, that terrorism is the bane of a civilized society. It cannot go unchecked or unchallenged. The response to a terrorist attack must not be a shotgun approach. It must be a very careful, considered, and thoughtful response. However, terrorism is not something we can ignore, nor do we propose to do so. We think it sows the seeds of destruction of civilized relations between civilized people. Any Government which purports to subsidize or encourage or aggrandize terrorism ought to be dealt with very severely.

PRIVY COUNCIL

INQUIRY IF PRIVY COUNCIL OR PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE MADE INQUIRIES INTO METHOD OF AWARDING CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS FOR MUSEUM OF MAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the Government's policy on awarding contracts. Without wishing to comment on any police investigations that may be going on at this time, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he could inform the House if the Privy Council or the Prime Minister's Office, not the RCMP, has conducted an internal investigation of the Government's contract policy, and especially the contracts involving the Museum of Man in Hull.

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised earlier on in the press conference held by the Prime Minister. If the Hon. Member had taken the time to follow the answer at the press conference he would understand that we are not in a position—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are not commenting. The Solicitor General has dealt with this matter. It is not appropriate with respect to investigations that are being undertaken either by the RCMP or any other police force. We refuse to be drawn in by the back door with respect to commenting on this particular matter.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, there is more to this Parliament than a press conference. I want to direct my question to the Prime Minister in supplementary. Concerning the awarding of contracts, are there any other similar PCO or PMO investigations going on in any other Departments or the operations of any other Departments, in particular the Department of Supply and Services; yes or no?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I respect Parliament I think far more than the Hon. Member. I do not want to take any lectures from him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Government will undertake its responsibilities with respect to any investigation, but we are not going to be drawn in the back door with regard to commenting one way or the other with respect to investigations.

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF GRAIN EXPORTING COUNTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is aware of the very serious crisis in the grain industry in the world today and the effects of the U.S. Farm Bill in terms of subsidies of exports and subsidies to the American producers, as well as subsidies in the European Common Market. Will the Prime Minister now show some international leadership and convene a meeting of all grain exporting nations to try to sort out this mess and come up with some kind of international grain agreement?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very useful suggestion. It is a suggestion that has been made many times. It is the view of this Government that we should be meeting on a regular basis at the political level. The Member will know that there are, on an ongoing basis, meetings of officials, the most recent one being held in London under the auspices of the International Wheat Council.

I have had discussions with the other major wheat exporters over the past eight months to lay out our concerns. We have seen this problem coming. Canada has taken the lead in this instance, as it has in the past, going back to the International Wheat Council agreements where there were international agreements on prices. Canada has taken the lead in the past, and we are taking the lead presently in promoting the very kind of discussions to which the Hon. Member refers.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONVENE INTERNATIONAL MEETING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an answer from the Prime Minister. He did not hesitate to come to the west for votes. Why does he not answer questions from westerners in this House?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Does the Hon. Member have a question only, please?

Mr. Nystrom: I want to know from the Prime Minister whether or not he personally, as leader of our country, will convene a meeting of grain exporting nations to try to sort out the mess that is going to crush western farmers.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to say that I have spoken on western issues more often in the House than the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: These western farmers from Aylmer are going to get us all in trouble. I take notice of the suggestion of my hon. friend, and pursuant to the answer given by the Minister of State we will consult, and advise the House, if and when it is appropriate.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): But for the grace of Brian, there goes God!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I will not allow a response. Just a question, please.

Mr. Nystrom: The price of wheat in Canada will be about $3 a bushel and in the United States around $6 Canadian. Is the Prime Minister ready to announce a deficiency payment on our international sales so Canadian farmers will have a decent price for the work they are doing?

• (1125)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we have attempted to approach this issue as a very serious matter, which it is. The Hon. Member does not do any good to the people he represents in his riding of Yorkton—Melville by taking cheap shots at anybody.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: We have tried very hard to co-operate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just the answer, please.

Mr. Mayer: We have pointed out, time and time again, this Government's commitment toward agriculture in the west and across the country, the many initiatives that have been taken by the Minister of Agriculture, and the total amount of money that has been transferred from the federal Government to the grain economy. The Prime Minister outlined it in detail this morning at his press conference. I think that tells you the strong commitment we have to western agriculture as far as this Government is concerned.

PUBLIC WORKS

DEPARTMENT'S CONTRACT AWARDING PROCESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the tainted tuna scandal arose the Prime Minister said: "When it was brought to my attention, bang! Immediately the Minister's resignation was secured". Has anything been brought to his attention on which he should take action to assure the integrity of the contract awarding process in the Department of Public Works? Bang!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a former Solicitor General of Canada. He knows very well the position that was taken by his Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, which was that no Solicitor General or no Member of Parliament should take action which could impede a police investigation or impede the ability of an individual to have a fair trial. Surely a responsible individual would respect that point of view, and would desist from this sort of questioning in the House of Commons.

Mr. Kaplan: I also know that it is unparliamentary to hide behind an irrelevant consideration like that.

INTEGRITY OF PROCESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking about the police investigation. The Government is responsible for all of its Departments and for the contract awarding process—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question.

Mr. Kaplan: Have any steps been taken to ensure the integrity of the contract awarding process of the Department of Public Works?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, who is an officer of the courts as a lawyer, and a former Solicitor General, may believe that the principle that individuals are entitled to a fair trial and that we should not interfere with police investigations may be irrelevant. We on this side do not.

I would expect that all Members of the House of Commons would show some sense of responsibility and not interfere with investigations which may be under way.

GRAIN PRICES—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The low initial grain prices are forcing down the projected income of the farmers. The banks are reacting by cutting off the line of credit of many farmers and therefore making it difficult, even impossible, for them to get into seeding operations this fall. Will the Minister back the need for action indicated by the Prime Minister this morning, by attempting to upgrade the income of farmers by some kind of deficiency payment, which will allow their projected income to rise?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, Members on all sides of the House passed, in one day, amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act a year ago in February, which allow for interim payments to be made. The Prime Minister said this morning that we will be making that announcement at the beginning of the week and I am sure the Hon. Member will be very pleased with that announcement. It will provide considerable support to do exactly what hesays—allow producers to put their crops in the ground, in the spring, as they usually do.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES AND EUROPEAN GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Those payments are for last year's deficiencies. Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Government not give the Canadian grain producers the same kind of protection and support that is given to the U.S. grain producers and European grain producers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, sure, the money is there as a result of what we believe will be the final amount of the Western Grain Stabilization Act payment for the present crop year. However, the point is that it will come at the very time they need it the most—prior to spring seeding.

The Hon. Member is a farmer. In fact there are only a couple of farmers in both opposition Parties and he is one of them. He will know that the timing of the receipt of money as far as many people are concerned, especially farmers, is almost as important as the amount. That timing will be there. In all likelihood, if these markets continue, there will be another stabilization payment for the coming year as a result of the Act. So the money will be there at the beginning of this planting season.

• (1130)

Interest rates in the meantime have gone down. That is an assist as far as farmers going to their banks to get money to put their crops in the ground are concerned. I think the Hon. Member should give the Government credit for the way it has been able to manage its fiscal affairs so that those interest rates have come down as much as they have.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that the Canadian Press has just reported that Senator Robert Packwood, chairman of the U.S. Senate committee studying President Reagan's request for authority to negotiate a free trade agreement with Canada, has just said that his committee is likely to turn down the President's request, to vote against it? Is the Prime Minister aware of this and, if so, what is he going to do about this startling development?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of it. I was just made aware after the press conference that Senator Packwood, an Oregon Republican, has offered his prediction of what might take place with regard to a committee of the United States Senate. I suppose there are two answers. First, this should establish very clearly for some Hon. Members of the House of Commons, who appear to have felt that the United States was somehow just down there on bended knee waiting for the Canadians to come in and negotiate an arrangement, that, if we can negotiate one, it will be very much in Canada's interest to try to do so.

Ms. Copps: You were on your knees.

Mr. Mulroney: Second, I have never minimized the difficulties involved in this kind of complex process. I heard what Senator Packwood said, but I remind my hon. friend that we deal with the administration as a whole, including the Congress, and not just Senator Packwood.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Will the Prime Minister assure the House that he and his Government will not now move to make concessions to the United States on matters like exports of lumber or Canadian patent law in order to try to ensure a favourable vote in that Senate committee?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, of all the silly things the Hon. Member for Windsor West has said, this one takes the cake.

What we have been doing is protecting Canada's interests with a vigilance which this country has not seen in some years, and we will continue to do precisely that, including trying to negotiate a bilateral trade enhanced agreement with the United States which will bring more jobs and more prosperity into Canada. I think that Senator Packwood's apprehensions indicate the extent to which this Government is on the right track in trying to do precisely that.

FREE TRADE TALKS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have the same question to direct with extreme seriousness to the Prime Minister because this chairman is clearly reflecting his committee. It is not just a chance announcement by one man in the Senate. In view of this, will the Government now withdraw the request for freer trade talks—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —and instead work out a more modest trade package following recommendations of the special parliamentary committee for the establishment of an IJC-like trade mediation committee and a tougher, more flexible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Langdon: —Canadian import tribunal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult. I suppose the answer to that is no. The Hon. Member mentions that Senator Packwood is a member of the Senate. Indeed he is. He is also a representative of a state with major timber interests.

I have just gone down there and said that we will not accept their version of events and will not sacrifice Canadian lumber or timber interests in this regard. I have made that very clear to everyone from President Reagan down, which may explain some of the Senator's hesitations. But I expect that he will rise above that and will see the merit for both countries in this kind of trading arrangement. I hope he will, anyway.

GENERIC DRUG ISSUE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Would the Prime Minister tell the House if the Government will also commit itself not to give in to the United States on the generic drug issue as it has given in on other issues like FIRA, which is yet one further concession, to try to get these talks back on the rails now that they look they are in such serious trouble?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman is expressing a hope rather than an opinion. He mentions the generic issue. That will be dealt with by the House at an appropriate time.

As I indicated earlier today, if the Government takes a position on a given issue which affects our bilateral relationship with the United States, it does so because it believes it is in our national interests to do so, as we did, for example, with the National Energy Program. I indicated this morning that, long before I had the privilege of being a Member of this House, I said that the National Energy Program, in my judgment, was exactly like a hold-up at a gasoline station at three o'clock in the morning and it would have to be dismantled. That is what this Government—

Mr. Langdon: Order.

Mr. Althouse: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: We acted on the National Energy Program because that was in our interests and not in the interests of the United States.

FARM FUEL COSTS—ABOLITION OF VOLUME DISCOUNT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Wheat Board. The Minister knows that his decision to lower initial grain prices is having a devastating impact on western Canada. Farm input costs are not going down in Manitoba because the big oil companies like Petro-Canada and Shell have done away with an eight cent per litre volume discount this spring. While world prices for crude oil have dropped by more than 50 per cent, the actual price per litre for farm gas is within one cent of last year.

Will the Minister go back to Cabinet and get authorization to reinstate the 1985 initial grain prices and have Petro-Canada instructed to reinstate the eight cent per litre volume discount which it had last year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises several points in his question. First, we believe that the initial prices are realistic according to world markets. It is not I who sets them, or the Government. Unfortunately influences outside our borders and outside our control set world grain prices.

With respect to the farm discount, I would tell the Hon. Member that I farm and I would very much have liked to have had an eight cent per litre discount. I am certainly not aware of anyone who had a discount nearly that large. It was more in the order of two cents or three cents. The Hon. Member is right that the discounts have all been removed. We have all made representations on those matters.

Third, the Hon. Member was not accurate when he said prices have not come down, because in Manitoba the price of diesel fuel and gasoline, I believe, has come down something like ten cents in the last two months.

Mr. Speaker: Short supplementary.

BANK OF CANADA

REPORTED CASH ADVANCE TO CHARTERED BANK

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, there are reports around that the Bank of Canada has advanced over $2 billion to one bank during the last several weeks because of its financial difficulties. Why can the Government not provide $1 billion of assistance to over 140,000 western farmers to reinstate the 1985 initial prices for grain?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that the Bank of Canada has a liquidity function to perform in the banking system, and that it is totally inappropriate to comment on what that institution is or what the rumours are. That is absolutely and totally separate from the business which is being discussed with the Minister of State for the Wheat Board.

AIR TRANSPORT

NORTHERN BRITISH COLUMBIA HELICOPTER MEDICAL EVACUATION SERVICE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns night flight medical evacuations with single-engine helicopters which have been banned in British Columbia since January by the Minister and by the Premier of British Columbia, Bill Bennett. Since the Minister offered all possible assistance in February, does this include a budget for the tasking of the Prince Rupert twin-engine Transport Canada S-61 to 24-hour-a-day emergency medivacs in northern British Columbia?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): To put this issue into perspective, what the Hon. Member is proposing and is asking me to authorize is to allow passengers to fly in single-rotorcraft helicopters at night. That is totally contrary to the air navigation order. I wish the Hon. Member would make up his mind on whether he is a supporter of stringent safety standards or whether he wants me, as Minister of Transport, to violate them.

HELICOPTER STATIONED AT PRINCE RUPERT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to doctors about this matter and they are concerned about the negligent inaction of the Minister. I ask the Minister whether or not he is prepared to task the S-61. It is a twin-engine helicopter which is sitting in Prince Rupert. It is under the Minister's control. Will he task it, or at least deliver the twin-engine helicopter which the transport committee promised to Prince Rupert a year ago?

• (1140)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, discussions have taken place between my departmental officials and the Emergency Health Services Commission in an attempt to resolve this matter. The fact remains that the air navigation order stands. This Minister will not compromise that air navigation order.

Furthermore, there are a number of available multi-rotorcraft helicopters which are in the business. We are trying to work the matter out. Surely in cases of emergency the Coast Guard helicopter which is available can be used, on a cost-recovery basis.

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATE REDUCTIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Bank of Canada rate fell another 81 points indicating growing approval of the federal Budget and, indeed, of the economic direction of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): My question is for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Has the Minister been able to measure or quantify the impact of general interest rate reductions on farm input costs?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member raises a very good point. One of the input costs which farmers face every year is interest costs. If we look at the total amount of borrowed money in agriculture against which interest has to be paid, then every percentage point drop in interest rates means a saving of $200 million to the farm community. I think that tells Hon. Members something about how important the overall economic thrust and policies of the Government are, not only to agriculture but to every other economic sector in the country. We want to work and develop jobs.

IMMIGRATION

PROPOSED VISA REQUIREMENT FOR PORTUGUESE VISITORS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. Recent reports indicate that she is considering departmental advice to slap on a visa requirement on Portugal as a response to the number of refugee applications. She should know that the problem is not with this European country—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Marchi: —but with the backlog which the Government has refused to address. Will the Minister eliminate the growing concern and anger which are being felt in the Portuguese-Canadian community by telling the House and that community that she will not follow departmental advice to slap on a scapegoat visa requirement for all visitors and individuals from Portugal?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take notice of the Hon. Member's question for the Minister of State for Immigration.

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, she carries the title "Minister of Employment and Immigration". Is the Minister prepared to assure the House that no visa requirement will be placed on Portugual, and rather than using that as a scapegoat, she will bring in a refugee determination process and go after the phoney consultants who are at the root of many of these problems?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I agree wholeheartedly with the need to ensure that there is no abuse of the system by anyone who is trying to provide false advice to individuals wishing to come to Canada. I also welcome the Hon. Member's sense of urgency with respect to bringing in a new refugee determination system. I am sure we will have his support, and the support of members of his Party for whom I take it he speaks, when we introduce that new refugee determination system very shortly.

Ms. Copps: I thought you were the Minister.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN PRICES—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. This is the time of year when both farmers and lenders assess the future viability of farms. Given the 20 per cent drop in initial prices and the scary parts of the Nielsen task force report regarding future commitment of funding by the Government, will the Minister make a clear statement today the Government's intention with respect to deficiency payments? Will the Government make up the difference between world price and the losses with which farmers have to deal, or will it not?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the reports of the task force have all been referred to the appropriate committees for consideration. Again I say that we have shown support for agriculture, particularly western agriculture, in the past year. The Prime Minister said this morning that we plan to make an announcement on Monday with respect to the size of the interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. When the Hon. Member hears that announcement I am sure that, as a farmer, he will welcome the news.

STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure the bankers and the farmers that when the stabilization fund is depleted on Monday the Government will continue its legislative commitment to keep that fund full when future calls come against it? Will he also assure us that cash advances will not be subject to interest, as was proposed by the Nielsen task force?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and since the Hon. Member has served as agriculture critic for his Party, he should know that part of the legislation states that the federal Government is responsible for making up the deficit.

Mr. Althouse: So does it say that they should have interest-free cash advances; but you are talking about doing away with them.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member should also know that there was a time, I guess about two years ago, when that fund contained $1 billion. If it is fair to run a surplus then I think it is reasonable for farmers and for Government to expect that it can run a deficit. So there is no problem with making payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, even if the fund goes into a deficit position, Mr. Speaker.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL AND DORVAL—BURNS AGENCY CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Further to recent events at the airports at Mirabel and Dorval which demonstrated the ineffectiveness of the security firm responsible for screening baggage, does the Minister intend to cancel the Burns contract and ask for another public tender?

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for the Minister's absence. He had to leave to catch a flight—a public flight I might add?—to Vancouver.

I indicate to the Hon. Member that the contracts are between the carriers and the security firms. The involvement of the Government is simply in relation to standards for security. Finally, I would like to indicate that on Monday morning the Minister will be meeting with the security firms, the carriers, and the unions involved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MINOR WAR VESSELS PROCUREMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Recently, in Halifax, he stated that the Government was considering a $100 million purchase of vessels for the Naval Reserve. In view of the fact that there is high unemployment among shipbuilders in the Atlantic area, British Columbia, and Quebec, why would the Minister want to use $100 million of Government money to purchase ships offshore for the Canadian Armed Forces?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to clear up this matter. I made no such statement. There is no intent on our part to do what the Hon. Member suggests.

The Navy is in great need of new equipment after years and years of neglect. We are doing everything we can to provide that new equipment. Part of what we are trying to do is with respect to a program for minor war vessels. The $100 million figure to which the Hon. member refers goes back to 1982 when the then Liberal Government turned down such a program. If and when we can find the money to proceed with the program, I can assure the Hon. Member that the ships will be built in Canada, by Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN SOURCING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister that it was his Party which made eight specific promises with regard to the shipbuilding industry and that it has not fulfilled one. I take it from the Minister's earlier statement that he is giving the House an undertaking that if there is to be a procurement policy by his Department with regard to the shipbuilding industry it will clearly be with respect to ships made here in Canada by Canadian labour. Will he confirm that undertaking?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thought I just did.

Mr. Dingwall: It's in contradiction of the Minister of Transport.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—MILITARY RESPONSE TO TERRORISM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. American sabre-rattling off the coast of Libya now threatens to turn into "the real thing". Canadians want to know where their Government really stands. Does the Prime Minister think that military action is an appropriate response to terrorism? Will he agree that such action will lead to a further escalation of international tension and, in fact, to an increase in terrorism and international tension?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I responded earlier in this regard. However, I should tell my hon. friend that in a statement on January 10 I set out our position on behalf of the Government, that is to say that those who murder and maim innocent people and who bring anarchy to civilized society should have no sanctuary, no comfort, and no indulgence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to say no sanctuary, no comfort, and no indulgence; it is another to engage in a retaliatory strike.

SAFETY OF CANADIANS IN LIBYA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of this very serious situation, what is the Government prepared to do to ensure the safety of individual Canadians, in addition to finding out where they are and asking them to reassess their personal situations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Government has and will continue to develop contingency plans to be of assistance to Canadians. Their welfare and security are of the highest concern.

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the House Leader referred to the Prime Minister's press conference, which prompts me to ask a question that was not answered at that conference. It relates to the resignation of the former Minister of Fisheries. On March 7, in an interview with The New York Times, the Prime Minister said: "When it was brought to my attention", that is to say the rotten tuna, "bang! Immediately the Minister's resignation was secured". How does he reconcile that statement in that interview with his "Dear John" letter of September 23, 1985, six days after the issue became public, to the then Minister saying: "I have received your letter in which you request that you be relieved of your responsibilities". In other words, the Minister and the Prime Minister recognized that the then Minister resigned. In The New York Times he said that he was fired immediately, but the letter of resignation came only six days after the issue became public.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I said no such thing. The context of both incidents is clear, and there is no inconsistency in the position.

NEW YORK TIMES INTERVIEW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was directly quoted in the The New York Times and we have the transcript. Further, the issue was brought to the attention of the country on September 17, 1985. On September 18, in the House, the Prime Minister refused the resignation and refused the Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the right hon. gentleman have a supplementary question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is the Prime Minister saying that he retracts his statement in The New York Times? Which version is right—his letter and the version given to us by the former Minister of Fisheries, or what he said in The New York Times?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am saying that there is no inconsistency at all in what has been said. Indeed there was a grave inconsistency, a very serious inconsistency, with regard to a resignation which involved the Leader of the Opposition and then Prime Minister Trudeau, and Prime Minister Trudeau indicated that the version given by the Leader of the Opposition was incorrect.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EXPENDITURES UNDERTAKEN BY RADIO STATION

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications my question is directed to his Parliamentary Secretary. The residents of the riding of Timiskaming were very annoyed to learn earlier this week that the CBC radio station in the North had spent an estimated $50,000 on TVs, VCRs, tape recorders and cassettes, after guidelines were indicated by the President of the Treasury Board and after the Vice-President of the CBC indicated that stations should keep within the spending guidelines. Could the Parliamentary Secretary advise my residents and many people across the country why such spending is still allowed?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague well knows, the CBC is a Crown corporation at arms length. However, the suggestion is a very serious one. I will undertake to ask the Minister to convey this information to the President of the CBC on Mr. Juneau's return from the Peoples Republic of China.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF NORTHERN ONTARIO BANDS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who recently made the time to meet with seven chiefs of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation to discuss funding for the recently created bands in northwestern Ontario. Is the Minister prepared to state before the House his full support in doing everything possible to expedite approval of funding to meet the requirements of those bands?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may know that when I met yesterday with Grand Chief Cromarty and the other seven chiefs, I indicated that I would support their efforts. I will be engaged in discussions and consultations over the next number of weeks, and I am hopeful that we will reach a satisfactory conclusion.

MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister is aware that if these funds are not approved in time for the very limited construction season, there may well be hundreds of people living in tents come the fall. Therefore I ask for the Minister's commitment to bring this matter before the Social Development Committee of Cabinet within the next two weeks.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that I am aware of the tight time frame, given the geography and the climate. As the Hon. Member may well know, we have just received the application from the region. We will have to go through the process at all possible speed, and I will do it as soon as I can.

FIREARMS

IMPORTATION TO CANADA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given his stated concerns this morning about increasing terrorism, and given recent moves in the United States to relax its gun control laws, could he tell us why, in his Government's Budget, he made it cheaper to import rifles and shotguns into Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this had to do with a Tariff Board ruling on sportsmen's rifles. It was a regulatory change which was made before, and this was brought into line with other regulations.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is he not concerned about the kind of signal which this sends out? On the one hand he is expressing concern about increasing terrorism. On the other hand his Government is making it cheaper to bring high-powered shotguns and rifles into the country. Does he not think this sends out a mixed message to Canadians?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a little unfair to deal with Canadian sportsmen in the same breath as dealing with terrorism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDY ON IMPACT OF SHOOTING RANGE PROPOSED FOR LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In August 1985 in Jonquière, the Prime Minister promised to release the results of the impact study on the shooting range proposed for the Lac-Saint-Jean area. When will the Prime Minister finally keep his promise and provide the people, many of whom object to this project, with the results of this impact study?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, over the last few months the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi has been talking to the constituents in that area. I am assured by all press reports, and by all indications from the responsible individuals, that in fact most of the fears which have been fomented by others have been reduced. Indeed the level of support has increased considerably over that to which the Hon. Member has referred.

[Translation]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. It is very simple: When does the Minister intend to publish the results of the impact study?

[English]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows or should know, the lands in question are Crown lands in the right of the Province of Quebec. In fact the decision rests with the Province of Quebec. Our officials are working closely with the officials of the Province of Quebec, and Members from the area are working closely with interested people. Things are proceeding along smoothly, which I know must disappoint the Hon. Member.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INFORMATION GIVEN TO EARLY RETIREES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She knows that officials have recognized that the notices to the corporations and unions were sent only on December 24 and that 34,000 people had accepted to take an early retirement long before that.

Since these people were misinformed, as the Hon. Member for LaSalle has said, will the Minister blame the businesses for misinforming these 34,000 workers or were these businesses misinformed by her Department before the workers involved took an early retirement?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is somewhat confused about the processes. Anyone making a UI claim is instructed at the time on how to go about launching an appeal. That has been explained to the Hon. Member on a number of occasions. If he has a specific case about which he is concerned, I wish he would bring it to my attention.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ATTEND MEETING

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is so sure that she is right, would she be willing to take part in the meetings which will be held beginning next Tuesday in Montreal, Quebec City, Sherbrooke and Trois-Rivières? Can she make sure to be there? The population will tell her about the facts. If she is sure that she is right, she can say so to the 34,000 people involved and they will applaud her. Will she be with us? As for me, I shall certainly be there.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the Hon. Member had specific cases to bring before me, he would have done so before this time. He has not done so—

Ms. Copps: Thirty-two thousand of them.

Some Hon. Members: Sh-h-h!

Miss MacDonald: I wish he would get on with what I think is a very serious matter. On the other hand, I have to say that my schedule is set well in advance. I am sorry that I cannot accept all the invitations the Hon. Member has given me, but he will know that I joined him the other day in Montreal East for a very good discussion—

SMALL SHIPS REPLACEMENT PROGRAM—OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADIAN SHIPYARDS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. The shipyard workers of Canada must have been delighted to find that the Government considered it a ludicrous notion that replacement vessels for the Naval Reserve be built offshore. Can the Minister assure shipyards in Canada, particularly those in Atlantic Canada, that if funds become available for the Small Ships Replacement Program they will have every opportunity to compete in the process?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I am doing everything I can within the confines imposed on us by budgetary considerations to accelerate this program. I think the Navy and the Naval Reserves have a vital role to play. They need the best equipment. I want to see that equipment designed, built, and constructed in Canada.

POINT OF ORDER

DISABLED VISITORS TO PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, you may be aware that on Monday a large number of people who are handicapped will be coming to the Hill and to the House of Commons in order to express their concerns about the Bill before the House. Those with wheelchairs would find the facilities very constraining. I believe there are places for only four or so. Whatever the case is, there will be a large number of people who will seek access.

Could the Speaker indicate whether or not there is any plan or provision, as we do when we have a joint session of the House and Senate, to provide access for the handicapped to use perhaps some of the floor space in the House where they can sit down? Or is there some other way to provide access for the handicapped so that we do not just pay lip service to their needs but effectuate it.

Mr. Speaker: This is the first time the matter has been brought to my attention. I will be happy to look into it. I have to say to the Hon. Member that I know of no provision that would allow the floor of the House of Commons to be used, but I will be happy to investigate the matter.

Mr. de Corneille: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: You are welcome.

Mr. Penner: This goodwill has got to end, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I hope not.

PETITIONS

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to submit petitions bearing some 700 signatures from Thunder Bay, Saskatoon and Windsor protesting the Government's cancellation of Katimavik as a symbol of its concern for youth and asking for reconsideration.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I am pleased to present a duly authorized petition from 100 constituents residing in the northern communities of Manitouwadge and Kapuskasing. These petitioners ask that this Parliament assembled take action regarding the unnecessarily high gasoline prices being paid by consumers in northern Ontario.

EQUALITY RIGHTS—DISCRIMINATORY POLICIES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several hundred Canadians resident in Saskatoon West, St. John's West, Kingston and The Islands and a number of other constituencies throughout Canada calling upon the Parliament of Canada to implement Recommendations 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 of the report of the parliamentary committee on equality rights, which would ensure that discrimination based upon sexual orientation is no longer permitted within federal jurisdiction.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND REPORT OF TAX

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in Burnaby calling upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases which are contained in the most recent budgetary proposals.

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present on behalf of many constituents in Burnaby a petition calling upon the Government to insist that the CRTC not allow the proposals for local measured service whereby each individual call would be charged for. As the petitioners point out, Mr. Speaker, the telephone is essential for communication and it is essential particularly for the elderly, for those on fixed incomes and for volunteer associations. Local measured service would have a devastating impact on those individuals.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of constituents from the community of Blaine Lake, Saskatchewan. They express the desire that the Government of Canada take cognizance of the reduction they have had in support of youth, and reinstate the Katimavik for the young people of Canada.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a couple of hundred of my constituents who state that in their opinion the federal Government's decision to cancel the youth program Katimavik was a short-sighted budgetary measure at the expense of Canadian youth. They point out that the 1985 study found 60 per cent of Katimavik participants over a four year period were employed, and of 27 per cent in school or university only 6.7 per cent unemployed while the youth unemployment rate was running far higher—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

LOWER GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of an application under Standing Order 29 from the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to place before the House today a request for an emergency debate concerning the grave economic situation which faces grain farmers as a result of the Government's decision to lower the initial price of grain for this crop year by some 20 per cent; that is, 19 per cent for wheat, 28 per cent for oats, and 25 per cent for barley.

Since credit decisions are being made now, lending institutions and farmers must be aware of what the Government proposes to do to provide some income guarantees in order that loans taken out now will have some chance of being repaid. The House should be aware that a 20 per cent reduction in gross incomes means that the vast majority of Canada's grain farmers are being sentenced to one more year without any pay for their labour. Payments were received from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund in the last two crop years. This year's pay-out will be similar to the one made last year, therefore, no funds to compensate for the price reduction can be expected by farmers or their lending institutions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order! Just the facts.

Mr. Althouse: These are the facts.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: These are not the facts.

Mr. Althouse: In order to generate the funds necessary to repay money borrowed for crop expenses this year, banks will need some guarantees that the loans will be repaid. Since this year's stabilization pay-out will virtually empty the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, lenders and farmers need to know if the Government intends to keep the fund viable to respond to the price drop.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order! You're bootlegging in the wrong information.

Mr. Althouse: Since lenders are being extremely cautious about the future viability of many of their customers, I urge that you permit an emergency debate under Standing Order 29 to permit these issues to be presented for response by the Government. The future of Canada's farmers is at stake and communities will suffer. We need to know the answers now.

Mr. Speaker: The House will know that I have given earlier consideration to two of these matters. I propose to reserve on this application.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 105 and 535.

[Text]

MINISTER'S STAFF

Question No. 105—Mr. Kaplan:

As of the date this question is answered and by Cabinet Minister, how many officials seconded from the Public Service, Crown corporations, agencies or other federal bodies are employed on the Minister's staff and, in each case, what is the salary range?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed as follows:

Minister	Number	Salary Range
Prime Minister's Office	1	$24,999 to $27,172
Employment and Immigration	2	$35,498 to $51,320
	1	$45,702 to $51,591
Deputy Prime Minister's Office	1	$24,271 to $26,563
Transport	1	$21,533 to $23,552
	1	$23,019 to $25,175
Finance	1	$41,663 to $52,099
Consumer and Corporate Affairs	1	$32,588 to $36,734
State – Mines	1	$43,793 to $50,106
	1	$45,702 to $51,591
Other Ministers:	None

DEFICIT

Question No. 535—Mr. Althouse:

1. What is the amount of the current accumulated federal deficit?

2. What is the average level of interest being paid on the deficit?

3. Was money borrowed to cover the deficit and, if so, what amount is outstanding in increments of interest at (a) 20% or more (b) 19% to 20% (c) 18% to 19% (d) 17% to 18% (e) 16% to 17% (f) 15% to 16% (g) 14% to 15% (h) 13% to 14% (i) 12% to 13% (j) 11% to 12% (k) 10% to 11% (l) 9% to 10% (m) 8% to 9% (n) 7% to 8% (o) 6% to 7% (p) 5% to 6% (q) 4% to 5% (r) 3% to 4%?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): (1) The accumulated federal deficit or net public debt as of March 31, 1985, amounted to $191.4 billion. Financial assets amounted to $41.1 billion and gross liabilities to $232.6 billion, of which $172.4 billion was in the form of unmatured public debt. The figures are as reported in the 1984/85 Public Accounts and do not reflect the accounting changes shown in the February, 1986 budget documents.

(2) The average interest rate on unmatured debt as of March 31, 1985 amounted to 11.31 per cent.

(3) The accumulated deficit together with financial assets acquired, less funds acquired through specified purpose accounts and other miscellaneous liabilities, have been fianaced by the issue of public debt.

Interest rates on the Canadian dollar components of public debt as of March 31, 1985 were as follows. The amount of outstanding domestic marketable bonds (in billions of dollars) classified by interest rate payable was: (a) above 20%—nil; (b) 19-20%—nil; (c) 18-19%—$0.1; (d) 17-18%—$0.3; (e) 16-17%—nil; (f) 15-16%—$4.9; (g) 14-15%—$3.1; (h) 13-14%—$12.9; (i) 12-13%—$11.5; (j) 11-12%—$14.8; (k) 10-11%—$13.6; (l) 9-10%–$6.1; (m) 8.9%—$1.4; (n) 7-8%—nil; (o) 6-7%—$0.3; (p) 5-6%—$0.8; (q) 4-5%—nil; (r) 3-4%—$0.2. The average interest rate on Treasury bills ($52.3 billion) was 10.89 per cent. The interest rate peyable on Canada Savings Bonds ($42.0 billion) was 11.25 per cent.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

She said: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, Bill C-99, which seeks borrowing authority for the 1986-87 fiscal year, has been returned to the House for report stage and third reading by the special committee of the House which has concluded its examination of the Bill. Today I rise briefly to remind Hon. Members of the contents of this Bill and to inform them of the current situation with respect to borrowing authority.

As Hon. Members are aware, Clause 2 of Bill C-99 requests $22.6 billion of borrowing authority for the 1986-87 fiscal year. This amount matches exactly the financial requirements for this fiscal year as set out in the Budget of my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Government is not requesting any additional amount of borrowing authority for fiscal 1986-87 since it has access to $2 billion of nonlapsing authority provided by the Borrowing Authority Act 1984-85 (No. 2).

Clause 3 of Bill C-99 states that any unused borrowing authority of the Borrowing Authority Act 1984-85 (No. 2) will be cancelled on March 31, 1987, to the extent that the unused authority exceeds $2 billion.

[Translation]

Perhaps Hon. Members would like to know how the Government used the borrowing authority granted by Parliament for the fiscal year ending in 1986. The over-all amount authorized was $32.2 billion, as follows: $12 billion under last year's Borrowing Authority Act; $18.2 billion under last year's Borrowing Authority Act (No. 2); and $2 billion of nonlapsing reserve authority provided by Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85 (No. 2).

For the fiscal year 1985-86, domestic borrowing operations so far have used roughly $24.3 billion of borrowing authority: $9.9 billion through Treasury bond issues; $11.5 billion through sales of negotiable securities; and $2.9 billion through net sales of Canada Savings Bonds.

[English]

In addition, foreign borrowing added $5.8 billion to the use of borrowing authority. Consequently, a total of about $30.2 billion of borrowing authority was used during the 1985-86 fiscal year, and $2 billion was carried forward into the 1986-87 fiscal year. The $2 billion of reserve authority is currently being used. Financial requirements are always seasonally heavy at the beginning of the fiscal year and, given the limited amount of borrowing authority provided by the reserve, the Government will quickly have to resort to running down its cash balances.

Without having new borrowing authority in place for the 1986-87 fiscal year, the Government will soon have to resort to the use of Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act in order to avoid totally depleting its cash balances. As Hon. Members are aware, this is a temporary measure only and is designed to provide short-term funds to the Government if it appears that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be insufficient to meet the dibursements lawfully authorized to be made from it. Thus, I hope that the House will be able to deal with this matter in its usual expeditious manner.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition certainly appreciates that this Bill must be passed fairly promptly in order for the Government to conduct its business, and we do not intend to delay it unduly. Bond issues have to be planned and announced to the market weeks in advance of the sales date. New funds raised at Treasury Bill auctions are announced a week in advance. Therefore, it is not our intention to delay the passage of this Bill. However, the reservations which we expressed at the time of the second reading debate, and in the legislative committee, remain. I think it is important that they should be put on the record once again.

The Bill before us requests $22.6 billion worth of borrowing authority for 1986-87. The Government also has access to $2 billion of unused, nonlapsing borrowing authority as provided by an earlier Borrowing Authority Act. We certainly hope the Government will be able to manage its affairs in acccordance with its forecast needs and that the Members of this House will not be asked later in the year to approve a request for supplementary borrowing authority.

Our concerns arise from the assumptions and projections by which the kGovernment arrived at the $22.6 billion figure. As I and a number of my colleagues here have said before, we have our doubts about the soundness of those assumptions. If the economic picture as drawn by the Government in the budget documents does not come together as anticipated, then obviously the consequences are different. The Government is having some good fortune now with respect to interest rates which, in the Budget, are forecast at 9.5 per cent for this fiscal year. However, we are less than two weeks into the fiscal year and it remains to be seen whether today's encouraging trend will stabilize. Each percentage point over the Government's forecast adds another $1 billion to the deficit, according to the Government's own figures. The Conference Board of Canada, as one reputable forecasting agency, is predicting interest rates of 10.4 per cent in 1986.

Another of the Government's assumptions which has drawn skepticism is its projected oil price of $22.50 a barrel. Since the Budget was brought down on February 26 we have seen a steady decline in oil prices which, to begin with, were less than the Government's projected price. How credible then is the 22.50 a barrel figure when, for example, the Economic Council of Canada assumed a price of $19 in its forecasts, and the Conference Board of Canada based its forecasts on $18 a barrel in the second trimester of this year? As a rough rule of thumb, for every one dollar a barrel fall in the price of oil, the Government's revenues from the PGRT drop by $110 million. If the Government is indeed losing that much tax revenue for every dollar drop in the price of a barrel of oil, it would seem likely that it stands to lose $1 billion in tax revenues this year based on current prices.

In the legislative committee I asked the Minister for her forecast and indeed she confirmed that if oil prices averaged $10 a barrel less than forecast, that is $12.50 a barrel, the Government would lose $1 billion in oil and gas tax revenues. That is only in direct revenue from the PGRT. The fall-out as a result of regional problems in the oil-producing provinces could have other effects. In committee the Minister suggested that lower oil and gas prices would have a beneficial effect on the economy this year. There will be beneficial effects on the economy from lower oil prices, but I think it would be more realistic to say that those are long term rather than short-term benefits.

Today we are discussing borrowing authority for the present fiscal year, a term in which we cannot expect to see much of the advantage of lower world oil prices. The Economic Council of Canada, in their appearance before the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and also in documents they subsequently released on the economic impact of falling oil prices, said that the loss of revenue from the energy sector would raise the deficit for the first two years and not until three years thereafter would the loss of revenue be offset by the higher taxes generated by a stronger economy. So at present it looks as though Canadians will have to pay the consequences of the Government's unrealistic oil price assumption this year and that the advantages of the situation are further down the road than the Government would have us believe.

The Budget also predicted growth in investment of approximately 7 per cent in 1986. However, StatsCan figures on business investment intentions this year are very much lower, showing around 2.5 per cent growth this year over last. That is a very large discrepancy. A shortfall here also has serious consequences for the deficit, because if economic growth does not match the Government's expectations the deficit will be another $1 billion higher for each percentage point in growth under the projected figure.

[Translation]

Consideration must be given as well to the structure of the Canadian debt which is made up of a large number of instruments whose terms and other characteristics are quite varied. For example, 5.2 per cent of the Government of Canada debt on December 31, 1985 was in foreign currency. It can be reasonably argued that this percentage will increase during 1986 since the Government had to contract huge loans on foreign markets to shore up the value of the Canadian dollar.

When the Government borrows on foreign markets, interest must be paid to foreigners and these funds are therefore no longer available to keep the Canadian economy rolling.

Although foreign market interest rates are now lower than on domestic markets, the Government has to keep in mind that the situation can change. The Government must repay these loans over the next five or ten years and, since the Canadian dollar value against foreign currencies may very well decline, real interest rates might be higher than those on domestic borrowings.

[English]

In other words, since not all the Government's borrowing is done in domestic markets, domestic interest rates are not the only interest rates that could throw off the Government's calculations. Money borrowed on foreign markets has interest payments at prevailing rates. What our Government pays also depends on the value of our dollar in international markets.

Economic projections in any case are something of a guessing game, no matter what the information available and no matter how sophisticated the model. I acknowledge this and I am not faulting the Government's projections as such, but what concerns me and a number of my colleagues is the credibility of these projections when compared to past performance and the projections of other agencies. The issue of credibility is directly related to this Bill requesting borrowing authority and to the Government's entire budget strategy.

• (1230)

The Government's approach to the Budget was obviously to gain the confidence of the international community in order to stabilize interest rates, and the dollar, and bring the deficit down. How impressed was the international community by the Budget whose tax increases this year far outweigh the expenditure cuts? How impressed were outside observers by the $29.5 billion deficit figure so transparently arrived at by manipulating numbers on paper?

It is clear the Government relied too heavily on tax increases instead of expenditure reductions for the international communities' liking, as well as for the liking of the Canadian taxpayer. However, this Budget, which is a poor quality product, received a selling job on a scale that was unprecedented, with special seminars and meetings in various centres in the United States, senior departmental officials and Cabinet Ministers fanning out to pitch this Budget. The Government even went so far as to use taxpayers' money to produce a special budget document to be distributed from Canadian posts overseas. It is called the "Canadian Budget In Perspective". It certainly does provide a different perspective on our country and our economy from that given to Canadians by the Finance Minister in his budget speech.

In fact, this document was not included in the package of budget documents made available to Canadians on budget night. So what are we to conclude about the credibility of a Government that tells its own citizens the glass is half empty, and then turns around and with great flourish tells the international community that no, the glass is half full.

I spoke about this during an Adjournment Debate last week and gave a number of examples of how the Government gave Canadians a very grim perspective in the budget speech, but then there is a very optimistic perspective in this special budget document. Production of a document of this kind would cast doubt on the quality of the Budget even if it were a good Budget, one that took a coherent approach to consolidating economic recovery, one with realistic economic projections. One would assume that a good budget could speak for itself. As it is, we have this slick attempt to substitute style for substance to mask a poor quality product. The existence of this document is an indication of that poor quality, and an additional reason to question the assumptions on which the Budget is based and on which the government arrived at the borrowing requirements we are debating here today.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Government comes to us for borrowing authority asking, in a sense, for a vote of confidence from the House in the economic management of the country's affairs. For us it is simply not possible to provide such a vote of confidence for this administration and its economic leadership, or lack of leadership, over the last 15 months.

The surprise announcement this morning from Washington that suggests the free trade talks with the United States are scuttled is a clear indication, first, of the problem of a Government putting its faith in one solution and, second, a reflection of the incompetence with which the Government has followed that particular policy choice which they made to try to implement it.

I weep some tears for the Government. I do not weep such tears for this country if this trade agreement is, in fact, rejected. It is this trade agreement which I want to talk about most this afternoon in discussing the borrowing authority.

This freer trade move toward the United States has been the centre piece of Government economic thinking for the rest of its period in power. The Government has hung its hopes on an exceedingly slender reed, which looks like it is being broken in the U.S. Senate. In addition, it is putting its aspirations in a continentalist context, which ultimately will have serious damages to inflict on this country.

I want to start off in my review of this particular part of Government economic policy by simply talking about the question of the utter and total confusion which has marked activity in this issue here in this country itself, leaving aside the United States. We have had confusion over who negotiates; is it the provinces, is it the federal Government, or is it Simon Reisman? Are there to be groups of people in the bargaining room? Are there to be buttons to be pressed, as the trade negotiater makes certain statements that indicate that he is opposed, by provinces who sit in an outer room? So confusion has existed very much over who negotiates.

Equal and more dangerous confusion has existed over what is to be negotiated. We have had slated here in the House of Commons comments from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) suggesting that vast areas are, in fact, off the negotiating table. At the same time we have had our people in Washington sayng, "No, virtually everything is negotiable". That kind of contradiction is not what a good Government should be giving the Canadian people.

We have had contradictions over marketing boards and whether they are part of the negotiation process, over agriculture and the auto pact and whether it is to be part of the negotiation process. Throughout the whole sorry tale of incompetent confusion we have had a veil of secrecy, which is a shame for this country to experience.

It has been six months now since 42 studies were listed to the House of Commons which had been completed by the federal Government. They include studies that look at different sectors, different regions and different issues—studies very, very important to Canadians to be able to make some logical realistic choice about what faces us in these negotiations, if they take place. Yet not a single solitary study of these 42 has been released, despite appeals through freedom to information , despite appeals to the commissioner of that system. It makes the notion of running in the dark, which has so characterized this Government in practice, show up in this specific example. As a consequence rather than deal with the questions and the concerns that Canadians have we have had a Government which has resorted to insult. Most sadly, it has resorted to insult in the case of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who should be above that. Yet, in March in Penticton, British Columbia, during one of a series of speeches on free trade, the Prime Minister talked about the timorous, insecure and fretful opponents of free trade. He has talked about those who want to build a Great Wall of China around this country. He has talked about the neo-reactionaries, the prophets of protectionism and the apostles of the status quo. The illustrious Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) has added to that kind of insult by saying that we are gutless.

• (1240)

Let me say that there is nothing in those insults except a recognition that the Government is not prepared to debate substance, but only to take recourse to empty rhetoric. Why is that happening? It is happening very clearly because opposition to free trade with the United States has been growing by leaps and bounds in this country.

The most recent polls show that 40 per cent of Canadians believe that there will be greater unemployment after a free trade agreement, compared to only 38 per cent who think there will be more employment. Despite the Government's propaganda efforts, despite the Government's speeches and insults, Canadians are recognizing the fallacies in its argument and their support for this crazy thrust is falling. This opposition is not only shown in the polls but in forums, such as public forums across Ontario where people have pointedly attacked the very suppositions of the Government's free trade move.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about Lethbridge.

Mr. Langdon: Tell you about Lethbridge? I just came back from Lethbridge where most young people at that university were starting to express very serious scepticism. I can also tell you about the sugar-beet farmers in Lethbridge who felt and still believe very strongly that their interests are not being protected and that a free trade agreement will prevent the implementation of policy measures which will make it possible for their concerns to be met.

We can talk about British Columbia from which I recently returned after another speech. Again, opinion is growing that free trade will result in the sacrifice of the interest of resource producers to the United States. That is the opinion we are hearing more often from people on Vancouver Island and people in the interior.

Not only have we heard this opposition expressed at public meetings and public forums, we have seen the formation of a national network for trade fairness, which includes organizations and groups representing over 8 million Canadians. They met in Ottawa in February and expressed serious questions about the secrecy, lack of consultation and lack of openness with respect to the job disruption that may take place.

Opposition to free trade is also being expressed by other groups across the country, such as the boat manufacturers who met in Ottawa last week, and book publishers and magazine publishers who have strongly expressed their scepticism about what is taking place. There are groups like the National Farmers' Union and the National Action Committee on the Status of Women which recognizes that the major disruption and cost will be borne by women in traditional industries as those industries are disrupted.

Besides this sense of growing opposition, there is also a feeling that the Government has sabotaged each of the key arguments it has made to support its position. This includes such simple examples as the Government saying it is not talking about free trade but trade enhancement. I could quote from the U.S. Trade Commissioner who spoke to the House of Representatives just a few weeks ago. He made it very clear that what was at issue was: "A free trade arrangement with Canada just like the free trade arrangement with Israel." We are talking about free trade, so let us not have any more nonsense about trying to camouflage that.

The Conservatives also argue that we will somehow magically escape the protectionism of the United States by signing a free trade arrangement with them, creeping in under the continentalism umbrella and thereby achieve freedom from such major American instruments of protectionism as the International Trade Commission. The American official who is in charge of the negotiations with Canada says that there is almost no chance that Congress will approve a trade treaty that eliminates the U.S. process of applying countervailing duties on imported Canadian products when it appears to regulators in the United States that the Canadian goods are somehow subsidized.

The very real problems we face now with respect to our lumber producers, fish producers, hog producers and strawberry producers we will face after any trade agreement is signed because the countervail provisions will definitely remain and continue to be a barrier that United States producers will use to counter Canadian products.

When we talk about lumber in particular, we not only have the recent words of Senator Packwood, who has shown his power this morning, but Senators from a wide variety of other states who have put it to us very bluntly that if Canada wants a free trade agreement it will have to sign an agreement on lumber imports that in fact reduces the lumber exports that we make to the United States. The irony is that free trade with the United States actually concerns cutting back our ability to export despite the investments and improvements we have made to our lumber industry in western Canada.

Even the National Association of Manufacturers in the United States is saying there is only one condition under which a free trade agreement with Canada would be acceptable. That is, a fixed exchange rate which would give our manufacturers a very difficult problem to face. In fact, it would actually force many of those manufacturers into opposition to free trade.

• (1250)

Beyond the demolition of the Conservative arguments on the issue, what else has taken place? I think Canadians have learned that there are some tremendous costs we would face from free trade. First, there would be job disruption. It has been estimated by the Government itself that close to 800,000 jobs would be disrupted. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) who sits opposite knows that we do not yet have the kinds of instruments which could cope with a disruption on that scale, which would help to transfer people from one job to another to make up for that disruption.

We have also learned that free trade means a tremendous loss of policy freedom for us as a country, not just to do something for sugar-beet producers in Lethbridge but to do something for our fishermen on the East Coast. From that lack of freedom, lack of political freedom will follow and I think we will see a slide away from the independence of this country which young people and ordinary Canadians are simply not prepared to countenance.

There is an alternative to this free trade cop-out. It is an alternative which puts the stress on community development, which talks about cutting taxes instead of raising them, as this Government has done, in order to get the dynamism working in Canada and our economy going. It is an alternative which finds an industrial strategy, which builds on our resources in order to give us jobs for the future. But that kind of imaginative alternative will only follow if we abandon this foolish, dangerous, potentially destructive and certainly incompetently organized thrust toward free trade with the United States.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in debate on third reading of Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority. More specifically, it is an Act to provide the authority to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government to borrow moneys not exceeding $22.6 billion, as may be required for public works and general purposes. We have here a proposal to borrow a substantial amount of money in order to ensure that the federal Government will have the funds required to cover the shortfall in revenues which the Government clearly expects will occur during the 1986-87 year.

The points I would like to explore in my comments this afternoon are threefold. I would like to consider why there will be this shortfall, because the question of what attitude we have toward the need to borrow is certainly coloured by the reasons for a shortfall in revenue which forces the Government to this particular expendient. I want to consider, out of my explanation for this shortfall what some of the consequences are for the Canadian people because the Government is forced to continue the borrowing patterns which Governments have followed for some time. Third, I would like to offer some observations on what Government should be doing, following on the changes which are needed to deal with the consequences, with the moneys it wants us to give it authority to borrow.

I may say that I am pleased to see this number of Hon. Members in the House this afternoon. It is a Friday afternoon and we sometimes worry about the number in attendance. I am really pleased to see the number of Hon. Members here today because we have had some abominable attendance here this week. I called for a quorum count during the debate on Bill C-91, following a period during which I was counting nine and ten Hon. Members on the Government benches. While we were debating another measure yesterday something of that sort began to appear as well, but then the number of Hon. Members picked up.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not believe the Hon. Member should refer to debates from previous days and the numbers of Hon. Members in the House. I think that should be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not referring specifically to the absence or presence of specific Hon. Members. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to be relevant to the Bill, please.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to see we are all here this afternoon in good number to consider this important measure to which I would like to address some observations.

The first question is why the Government expects to experience this shortfall in revenue which forces it to borrow more than $20 billion for various purposes. The shortfall is surely not the result of individual lower and middle-income Canadians not paying enough in taxes. I do not believe anyone on the Government benches would argue that individual lower and middle-income Canadians are not already paying enough in taxes. In fact, there have been such large increases in taxation in these areas that one would think the need to borrow would be quite removed, given what the Government has done. There have been increases in sales tax. First, we had the approval in the fall of 1984 for the proposed increase which the Liberals had in mind during the last Government. Then we had an additional percentage point of tax put on, and still one more increase. We have had increases in excise taxes in various areas and extensions of sales taxes in areas which were not previously touched by tax. There was then the decision to end the indexation which applied to income taxes, which had the effect of increasing taxes. Now we have a 3 per cent surtax on incomes of individual Canadians. I am sure that my Conservative colleagues opposite, who regard themselves as such defenders of individual Canadians, would concede that this Government has socked taxation to individuals in a very serious way.

The measure of that burden, which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not seriously disputed, although he has quibbled about other things, is that the Government has increased the taxation on the average family by something over $1,300 a year. This is a heavy and shameful burden to put on individual Canadians at a time when slower economic activity, which is basic to the shortfall, should have called for tax reduction rather than tax increase in order that there could be more business done in our communities.

Obviously, if it is not reduced taxation on individuals which is the cause, there must be some other reason why this shortfall occurred. It surely must have a great deal to do with the fact that the Government has found ways of providing breaks in other areas. I think the most outrageous taxbreak coming from the Minister of Finance is the proposal for a $500,000 capital gains tax holiday. If that proposal had related to investments in this country there could conceivably have been some argument made for it. However, to have it represent investments which could be made anywhere in the world makes it an invalid action.

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I give up my position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) had the floor. Since the Hon. Member is not here, debate will be resumed with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I can see that my fellow Members are anxious to vote. They are restless. I know it is Friday afternoon, but I have a few comments to make on this very important Bill which, after all, involves a very substantial sum of money and is aimed at giving the Governmentt the authority to borrow up to $22.6 billion, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are of course prepared to comment on those "general purposes", which can mean just about any thing, and you will understand that I want to take this opportunity to address a matter that is very important to me, and I am referring to the way this Government has been treating federal public servants in particular, and the way it is proceeding with budgetary cutbacks and cuts in personnel, and the lack of sensitivity this Government has shown vis-à-vis its public servants, and I may add, Mr. Speaker, that the situation is pretty disastrous in the riding I represent, the riding of Ottawa-Vanier, because in Ottawa-Vanier, the Government is the main employer, which means that we have what is referred to as a company-town economy.

The federal public servants who have jobs are of course important to the secondary economy, the services sector, and these are the people I would like to consider this afternoon during the few moments I have at my disposal. I want to say how worried they are and how, lately, their morale has been a major cause for concern.

Mr. Speaker, before addressing this very important subject, namely the future of our public servants, budgetary cutbacks and cutbacks in personnel, I may remind the House that this Bill proposes to borrow $22.6 billion, on assumptions that are somewhat shaky if not totally unsound. We know that the Government is forecasting a rate of interest of 9.5 per cent for 1986 and that it stood at about 11 per cent until yesterday. Admittedly it had gone down. The Bank of Canada rate for 90-day commercial papers dropped sharply by 0.8 per cent yesterday, which is an encouraging trend. But in light of the Government's own forecasts or theories, interest rates will have to fall much more if they are to average 9.5 per cent over the coming year. Therefore I suggest we cannot hope the rate to remain stable at 9.5 per cent, although I wish we could. We know that every plus or minus percentage point fluctuation would signal a $1 billion-odd change in the deficit. A 1 per cent change, Mr. Speaker, and we are looking at one thousand million dollars, and that is a lot of money.

Incidentally, earlier today during lunch hour I went to the University of Ottawa to address political science students, and some of them asked me: Just what do $22 billion represent? If we put $100 bills one on top of another we will end up with a spectacular high-rise structure. If we line them up one after another we will have miles and miles of $100 bills. I tried to imagine what $22 billion represent in terms of quantity. Mr. Speaker, it is the kind of money which you and I could not spend, not even the daily interest. Although we may have discriminating taste and know how to live, you and I would find it difficult to spend that money in our cities, on our respective families.

Mr. Speaker, the Government assumes also that the prices for U.S. oil will average $22.50 a barrel by the end of 1986. Again, its estimates are faulty, because everybody knows that the price of oil today is closer to $12 than $22 a barrel. If the Government, therefore, assumes that the price of oil will average $22.50 a barrel in 1986, when we know that it will be almost impossible to reach, maintain and keep this average, the Government will have to suffer the consequence of this faulty assumption, for it will have to raise taxes to cover the $110 million difference that has to be accounted for with every dollar of error in the projections.

In his Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had foreseen a 7 per cent business investment growth in 1986. Well, according to the most recent survey carried out by Statistics Canada concerning their investment programs this year, Canadian Corporations are planning to invest only 2.5 per cent more than last year. Moreover, the Minister of Finance had foreseen an increase of 6 per cent in new housing start investments, while Statistics Canada is contemplating a 1.9 per cent decrease in real terms.

Mr. Speaker, the three major assumptions to consider when the time comes to borrow money on a budgetary basis, as I said, are the interest rates, the price of oil and the level of investments. For the Government to have any credibility, it will have to reconsider these assumptions, because as far as we can judge, the three of them are faulty, if not outright wrong.

I come now to my main topic, Mr. Speaker, and again I suggest that I could not be accused of making irrelevant comments, because they deal with this Bill to borrow $22.6 billion for general purposes. We all know that the Government is spending money to pay its civil servants. Therefore, it has to borrow money and use part of it to pay the hard-earned salaries of our Federal civil servants.

[English]

I should like to address this question by referring to a recent study which took place in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier. Basically, the workers of my riding are employed by the Public Service and service industries. It does not have a very high family income group; in fact, it has the lowest in the Ottawa area. However, we are very proud of the fact that we represent one of the oldest areas of Ottawa. Its housing stock is of good quality. Over the years the previous Government showed its interest in that, and we have improved the housing stock over the last 12 years or 13 years. There is still a lot of work to be done. The study was of the impact on the Ottawa area of budget cuts, especially personnel cuts or cuts in the Public Service. I should like to refer to that study because it is a disturbing indication of trouble ahead for the Ottawa community.

I know it is not very popular outside this community to speak about Public Servants and how important they are. However, in this area there are 90,000 public servants who serve the country to the best of their ability. Presently they are being whipped around by certain groups, certain people and sometimes by the Government. They are being used as a whipping boy for the deficit of the Government, and I think unjustly so. No argument has convinced me as yet that cutting into the administrative costs of the Public Service will have much of an impact on a deficit of some $25 billion to $30 billion. A third of Canada's public servants work in the national capital region or, as I said, almost 90,000 of them. Of course I include in this number those who fall under the Public Service Employment Act and those who work for Canada Post, the RCMP, National Defence—and I see the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) here this afternoon—and Crown corporations in the Ottawa area. Therefore they constitute an important section of the labour force.

Further, a great many Ottawa—Hull residents are engaged by the federal Government on a contract basis and draw incomes from those services. There are approximately 85,000 public servants per se, if we exclude all the others I have just mentioned. In any event they represent 20 per cent of the Ottawa—Hull workforce. If major cuts are made in the Government, employment in the Ottawa—Hull area is seriously affected. It results in a difficult situation.

For the residents of my riding the prospects are especially cloudy. I will show in my remarks that a significant number of people are facing lay-off at this time, basically because they are middle management, support staff or in administrative services. Furthermore, I will attempt to show, if I have the time, how difficult it is to be a young Canadian living in my riding today, expecting to follow a possible career in the Public Service of Canada and realizing that the chances of obtaining a job in the Public Service, directly or indirectly, in the Ottawa area are very meagre. I accept the one-company town approach in the Ottawa-Vanier community, but when a major employer cuts 5,000 jobs, when there is a paring back of personnel, the effect is felt by those in the modest income group.

Approximately 20 per cent of my families are single-parent families, mostly women who are earning their keep, trying to make a living and in many cases sustaining families. They are faced with a difficult situation. The Conservative Government announcement of a reduction in the Public Service did not come as a surprise to me or to them. As a matter of fact, I cannot be blamed for voting Conservative. In my riding they did not vote that way either. They knew better because in 1979 we were threatened with 60,000 cuts. If I had the time this afternoon, I would prove that again we are facing a Government which has not forgotten the 60,000 cuts. There were 15,000 cuts in the May 1984 Budget. There were 15,000 cuts affecting those who are not under the control of the Treasury Board. There was another reduction in the growth of 1 per cent per year which we in the Ottawa community had experienced over the years. It is logical that because we had a growing population in Canada we took it that the Government would be responsive to that growth with increased services, but that has not been the case. A further cut was also announced in the Nielsen task force.

Mr. Daubney: Nonsense.

Mr. Gauthier: I hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) saying "nonsense". Mr. Aspinall was quoted in The Citizen. I do not have the article here, but I could send it to the Hon. Member. If he reads the newspaper he will find that Mr. Aspinall said that those 15,000 cuts were not necessarily the bottom line, meaning that there could be similar cuts, which possibly means another 15,000. I understood it that way. The press understood it that way. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa West did not understand it that way, I wish he would rise to explain what Mr. Aspinall meant.

Mr. Weiner: Which riding does he represent?

Mr. Gauthier: That question comes from the Parliamentary Secretary. Mr. Aspinall was on the Nielsen task force which looked into all these problems, and I thought that he had knowledge of the subject and some understanding of the issue.

Let us return to the main subject at hand, what these cuts mean and why they are aimed at public servants. The cuts are aimed squarely at those public servants hired under the Public Service Employment Act, those directly under the control of the Treasury Board. That groups represented 40 per cent of all federal Government employees in 1981. Also the Government announced, on top of those cuts that "similar reductions will be made to the salary budgets of those departments and agencies whose person-years are not controlled by Treasury Board".

In addition to this are the employees on short-term contracts. Their contracts are not likely to be renewed. We knew that. That was the first thing done. Contracts were not supposed to be renewed. Term employees were supposed to be let go, and we were supposed to have a freeze in the Public Service. I should like to illustrate the potential for further cutbacks. The number of term employees in 1984 ranged from 10,130 to 19,975. The cuts in the public service employment will be much greater than the 15,000. I wonder what the Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) is going to tell his term employees. I am sure he has some sympathy for those people who have been on term employment with the Government. There are 10,000 to 19,000 people on term employment who are going to be told: "Sorry, we have no more work for you. Too bad. We don't need your services". It is a catastrophic situation. It is a key issue in this area. It is an issue which, if this Government does not address it seriously within a few months, will become a difficult economic situation for all of us in Ottawa-Hull and the national capital region.

Our housing starts are down. The hotels are complaining that their rates of occupancy are way down to 30 per cent from the 70 per cent they used to enjoy. The restaurant trade is going out of business. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the Government has made Ottawa-Hull the target for the cuts and has made it so that the confidence of people living in this area has now been lowered to pretty well despair. They do not know how they will be able to buy a home, take their families out to a restaurant or make purchases in the stores. The department stores sales are also going down. The economy of the Ottawa area is pretty well near a critical stage in their history.

I see that you are indicating I have one minute left, Mr. Speaker. I regret that, but I will have other occasions to refer to this matter. Let me say that I cannot possibly stop the Government from borrowing $22.6 billion. I do not think I would want to anyway, because if it wants to borrow that is up to the Government. I do not think we would quarrel with that. It is the way the Government is going to spend the money that we are going to look at very carefully. The way the Government is managing the economy right now, as far as public servants are concerned, is a disaster, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Miss Nicholson: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on this Bill at second reading—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I forgot we have a question and comment period. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, my colleague, who has just spoken, referred to the hopes and the prospects of young people. Would the Member care to comment on the Government's plan to reduce transfers for post-secondary education and how he sees this affecting equality of opportunity for young people?

Although there is no mention in the last budget speech of these planned reductions, they were dealt with in previous statements of the Government. In a different budget paper, the one prepared for overseas consumption, we find this statement: "The rate of increase of federal transfers to provincial governments for health care and post-secondary education has been reduced". In relation to the Hon. Member's previous comments about youth, would he care to expand on this?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her question. It gives me the opportunity to tell her, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, that I spent my lunch hour at the University of Ottawa meeting with some of my constituents, and also talking to some second year students of political science. That question is uppermost in their minds and it impacts directly on the costs of their education. It is a difficult matter to try to explain in terms of what the federal Government's role is in education, because of the constitutional jurisdiction with which we are faced.

It is a fact that we, the federal Government, pay 50 per cent of post-secondary education. At least that is the principle. The provinces pick up the rest of the tab with the parents or the students. I find it completely unacceptable that the Government, in times when our youth is experiencing difficulty, is cutting funding to the provinces. We are told we could have up to 600,000, possibly 700,000 youth unemployed.

I am not quoting figures that are foreign to this House. It has been said before in this House that there are a lot of others who are not counted because they are discouraged. I happen to have a university, a post-secondary institution and seven high schools in my riding. Many students are very worried about the future, very much concerned with this policy of the Government not giving to the provinces the required funds to support education.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the entire speech of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) but I did hear the last five minutes. I must say I was disappointed at some of the remarks he made. I have always had a very high regard for the Member. I think his remarks lacked perspective and balance. He made a couple of references to 60,000 public servants losing their jobs, going back to the 1979 scare tactics of the Liberal Party. It is the same kind of scare mongering he is entering into now, and that is very unfortunate.

Mr. Isabelle: What about R.B. Bennett? Go back to R.B. Bennett.

Mr. Daubney: If we look at the history of the Liberal Party in power there have been significant lay-offs year after year after year of indeterminate employees in the public service.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has stated in this House and outside that 15,000 person years, not individuals, but person years is the sum total of the reductions over the five fiscal years involved in this program, despite the recommendations—whether they are accepted or not and obviously not all of them will be—of the Nielsen task force. I think it is highly irresponsible of the Member to say otherwise.

We have a serious situation in the City of Ottawa. As a local Member of Parliament on the Government side, I am doing my best, as are my colleagues on the Government side on both sides of the river, to deal with the particular situations of hardship of those employees who have received lay-off notices. The President of the Treasury Board has introduced a very attractive Workplace Adjustment Program, much more attractive than that under the previous Government. A longer period of notice will be given, training services and counselling services are provided. People are being placed in other jobs in the Government. We hope to reduce the 15,000 person years by attrition. Attrition is the key word, Mr. Speaker, and that process is working.

In terms of natural attrition in the Public Service, some years it has been as high as 10,000, certainly well in excess of 5,000, the highest in the five year program, in this fiscal year. In subsequent years it will be 2,000. That is right across Canada, not just in the nation's capital. I think it highly inaccurate and irresponsible for the Member from Ottawa—Vanier to imply otherwise.

May I say in closing that some of us want to do something about diversifying the local economy here. That is why I and other members of the Conservative Party are encouraging high technology development. That is why we are encouraging small business so we will not be as reliant as we have been in the past; and be a industry town.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there is enough comment from the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) for me to make a speech on. That comes from a Member who spoke about diversification to this Member, who over the years in the high-tech industry is well known to have done his utmost to try to create whatever could be created and supported high-tech in the Ottawa area. Let me say that I do not have to take any lessons from him.

On the question—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as concerns the issue of reassignments and growth in the Public Service, I can give you the data since 1980—

[English]

I have it here. Agencies under Treasury Board control experienced annual employment growth rates of 1 per cent from 1976 to 1981 and 1.5 per cent from 1981 to 1983. That is not cut-back, as the Member said. That is growth. He is cutting them back. Agencies not under Treasury Board control experience annual growth employment rates of 6 per cent, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk about——the matter of the reassignment of surplus employees.

Mr. Speaker, recently, 265 maintenance workers at the Department of Public Works were designated as surplus to requirements, but only 15 of them were reassigned to other positions. Yes, only 15 people! This clearly shows that the policy of this Government is completely bankrupt, unreasonable and ineffective. Reassignment of surplus workers does not work, Mr. Speaker, it is—

Mr. Isabelle: It is worthy of R.B. Bennett.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, as the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) points out, it is worthy of R.B. Bennett

I see the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who is smiling and making gestures to say: Again, for heaven's sake! Would you like to rise and to make a nice little speech? Perhaps we would learn something about Gatineau if you spoke more often, Madam.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to remind the House that the Public Service Alliance, and I shall close with these comments ... Jean-Robert Gauthier, Member for Ottawa—Vanier, and many people in the National Capital region do not believe this Government. It has lost all credibility. The figure of 60,000 which I have mentioned and which we are anticipating will be the result of this bankrupt policy, and it is based on an announcement of 15,000 jobs lost and a similar announcement of another 15,000 jobs lost, which makes 30,000, and the 1 to 1.5 per cent normal increase over the next five years, which makes a total of 60,000 jobs which will disappear in addition to the casual workers and term employees.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I find it amusing to see Liberals and Conservatives taking turns doing the same things, and then taking turns criticizing one another for what the other did. There is nothing new about that. It goes back to before 1867. I find it amusing to hear the kettles calling the pots black about the economic situation which the country is in.

When I spoke on the second reading debate I urged the Government to borrow an extra $1 billion to $3 billion through this Bill as a constructive, self-liquidating part of the deficit rather than the dead-weight deficit which we have. The Conservatives and Liberals conveniently forget that 80 per cent of the deficit is comprised of interest being paid on interest to pay off old borrowings. Eighty per cent of that is money which was lent by individual Canadians, pension funds, brokerage firms, and banks. They buy Canada Savings Bonds and Treasury Bills. Every year a large portion of the funds which the Government seeks to borrow is to be used to obtain funds by way of Treasury Bills, Canada Savings Bonds, and so on, to pay off previous Treasury Bills, Guaranteed Investment Certificates, and Canada Savings Bonds. We keep going in the same circle.

I am all in favour of paying our bills. The most conservative economists in the country tell us that if we reduce unemployment to 6 or 6.5 per cent and get companies producing, the present deficit would be paid off in three years. That can be done through leadership by Government. An additional $1 billion should be put into housing. There are waiting lists as long as your arm in every city in the country for chronic care beds, senior citizen housing, and hospital beds.

Increased expenditures in the housing industry would impact the forest industry, the people who manufacture drapes, carpets, plumbing fixtures, wiring, and the construction industry. It would impact upon the entire economy. That gives a lead for the private and co-operative sector to do likewise. Without that lead they will not do it. They never have, and they never will.

The deficit of the Government of Canada in today's dollars in 1933 was twice as high as it is now. The deficit at the end of World War II in today's dollars was three times as high as it is now. We had to rebuild a civilian economy following a war time economy. We put people to work and the deficit was paid off by the late 1950s.

At second reading I urged the Government to borrow an extra $1 billion for housing for senior citizens and low-income families, for public, co-operative, and private housing, and for hospitals and chronic care beds. I urge the Government to borrow at least $200 million or $300 million this year, to put up to one-quarter of a million young people to work over the next five years cleaning up our air and water. We have no right, as a nation, to leave the mess which we are leaving for succeeding generations. Who do we think we are? We hold our air, waters, and environment in trust for our children and grandchildren.

I call those kinds of borrowings a constructive deficit, a self-liquidating debt, rather than the dead-weight debt with which we are continually afflicted. We can borrow money for fighter planes, but we seem to have difficulty borrowing it for food. I am not suggesting that we should be defenceless, but we borrow money for fighter planes which are of no use to us. We should be buying planes for their transport capability in our Armed Forces, rather than for fighter planes. However, that is another argument.

The point is that it is a matter of priority. Surely the production of food should have an equal, if not greater, priority than borrowing for fighter planes. Fighter planes came to my mind because the Minister of State for Defence (Mr. Andre) is here. If another Minister had been here, something else may have come to my mind. It is a question of priority when a Government at any level borrows.

That brings me to the subject of food. During the last number of days we have heard much about what is occurring in the international grain market. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have, in effect, told Canadian grain producers in all provinces that they not only have to compete in the so-called free and open domestic market for lower prices, but that they also have to compete by themselves against the treasury of the United States and the treasury of the European Economic Community.

I listened to the responses of the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in which he said that $1.47 billion has been spent directly and indirectly to benefit agriculture. That is true, but all of those payments are for things which happened in past years. Payments to the railroads under the Western Grain Transportation Act are not just for the benefit of grain producers. Those payments benefit every producer and manufacturer who ships anything by rail from Winnipeg to the West Coast. It is unfair to prairie farmers to call that a payment to western grain producers when the improvement of the infrastructure of our railway system in western Canada benefits all shippers and receivers.

Yet the finger is continually pointed at the grain producer. This is a $650 million subsidy and the Government has the unmitgrated gall to add that to the amount it says is being paid out as a benefit to farmers. If we did not produce a single bushel of grain starting tomorrow, those railway lines would still have to be fixed up to haul all the other commodities. Grain occupies only 14 per cent of the capacity of those main lines into Vancouver through Calgary and Winnipeg. Yet the finger is always pointed at the farmer. Look at him, they say he is getting $650 million to haul grain. The name of the Western Grain Transportation Act is a misnomer. It should be the Western Transportation Act because it is not just for grain, it is for all other commodities. It was and is recognized that the two railways, one public and one privately-owned, cannot separately or together generate enough capital to upgrade and modernize their plant on their own. They require public financing. There are no ifs, ands or buts about it. It would not matter what party is in power, that is what would have to be done. I find it extremely unfair that the Government would count that as some kind of subsidy to grain producers when it is meant to upgrade our railway transportation system in western Canada for all shippers, receivers and producers.

Another $1 billion in the form of a self-liquidating debt should be added to this Bill by way of a deficiency payment for grain producers in western Canada. I described earlier how this and previous Governments, Liberal or Tory, going back long before the Canadian Wheat Board existed, expected individual farmers to compete with the treasuries of nations which were much larger than Canada. I find it strange that the U.S., the European Economic Community, Australia and the Argentine go to extraordinary lengths to make sure their grain producers can compete on a reasonable and equitable basis in world markets, but we do not.

Surely it is long past time that this nation as a whole share in the cost of making our agricultural producers able to compete with those other nations. If the U.S. support prices are somewhere in the order of $5.50 or $6 a bushel, and they and the EEC are selling wheat in the international market at from $2.50 to $3.50 a bushel, while Canadian producers, given the announcement on initial prices, will get about $3 a bushel. While their competitors are getting an additional two or three dollars a bushel from their respective Governments or economic organization, every single one of our farmers is expected to compete with that and lose money while raising grain. Everyone recognizes that the cost of production of a bushel of grain at the moment exceeds its selling price. I am sure my hon. friend from Red Deer could give us chapter and verse of individual and classic instances of that.

The Government says that payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act will be announced on Monday. Unless I miss my guess, that will likely put the fund in a deficit position. Fair enough. It makes no difference under the legislation whether the fund is in surplus or deficit. The Government can and will at its whim make payments out of the fund. It is the farmers' money, including the two-thirds portion which the Government put in. I suppose in some respects it is something like a pension fund, only this is an income stabilization fund. However, it is their money. Yet the Government suggests that this is some kind of free gift or hand-out when the law of the land requires that the fund make payments whenever prices fall below a certain amount. It is the farmers' money. They kicked in hundreds of millions of dollars. It has nothing to do with what is happening today or for the rest of this crop year or the next crop year. It is because of their experience over the past year. That is why a deficiency payment is required at a minimum of $2 a bushel for all export grain. We need a two-price system. The presumed domestic grain should be at parity prices. It was Mr. Diefenbaker in the 1940s and 1950s, along with the CCF, who said: "We need parity, not charity".

The other bad thing about the Western Grain Transportation Act is the way it is set up. My friends from the Conservative Party were with me when we fought Otto Lang to a dead stop on his first grain stabilization Bill. We went to court, myself and four farmers, and won $100 million for western grain producers. We forced him to withdraw his first Bill. He then brought in a second one, the one we have now. Well, Sir, the trouble with it is that the farmer who sells the most grain gets the highest payment.

We could not figure that out in the early and middle 1970s either. We said to the Government that if it ran the national hospital and medicare Acts on the same basis, once illness passed a certain level it would trigger a payment from a national health fund, and the person who was not sick a day in their lives would get the highest payment. If you were to set up the Unemployment Insurance Act on the same principle and unemployment passed a certain level, which would trigger a payment from the UIC fund, the fellow who worked full-time would get the highest payment. That has been on the statute books of this country for these past 10 years or so on grain stabilization. Aside from that, it is still the farmers' money and it is designed for income stabilization over the previous year.

What is needed is a deficiency payment which provides a minimum of $2 or $2.50 a bushel for export grain. That means grain producers get the same price as their counterparts in the U.S. or the EEC. Now what could be fairer than that? That places our farmers on what Tories like to call a level playing field. Surely that is the least we can do as a nation. If you pay a parity price for domestically consumed grains it may well mean a three, four, five-cent increase in the price of a loaf of bread. Grain prices have been falling every damn year for the last five years and bread prices did not go down, they went up.

Even if there are legitimate increases in the price of a loaf of bread that is not the time to talk about subsidies to farmers, that is the time to talk about a subsidy to consumers, for the poor and the sick. That is the time you pay a consumer subsidy, whether it is by way of food stamps or through the income tax system or whatever.

Surely to goodness if we are going to keep western grain producers, those in central and eastern Canada, the Peace River country of British Columbia as well, if we are going to prevent any more of them from going out of business, a deficiency payment is the only way, and the only way to answer what the United States Farm Bill and what the European Economic Community is doing to us.

Even the Government of Argentina for the last several years has not charged their farmers anything by way of freight charges to ship grain to export position. Admittedly they do not have to ship it more than a couple of hundred miles at the most and we have to move ours, on the average, a thousand miles. Australia produces its grain, 90 per cent of it, within 200 miles of salt water. We are in the middle of the northern part of the North American continent. To expect our agricultural producers, not only of grain but livestock and other products, with that kind of geographical disadvantage to compete on an even basis with the United States or the other exporting countries is not only obscene and harmful to the national interests, it is totally unfair to our agricultural producers.

Therefore, if the Government can get up now and say that it will increase that borrowing bill from $22.6 billion to $24.6 billion, and a billion of it goes into housing and cleaning up our environment and a billion of it goes into agriculture, they will have the support of everybody in the House and the nation as a whole. I believe Canadians know that all of us together—it is called co-operative federalism—have to share in the cost of being a nation in which all of us are treated fairly and equitably.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, as one who represents an urban riding it is always of particular interest to hear the problems of the wheat producing area described by a veteran Member who knows that area, has represented it very well and understands the issues. I would like to ask the Hon. Member who has, in fact, suggested some additional expenditures for the Government at this time, whether he is in favour of some kind of bond issue for farmers who are in particular difficulties at this time, e.g. the agri-bond that was part of the Conservative political platform in the last election?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the lady for her kind and complimentary remarks. I have one problem with it though; whenever a Conservative or Liberal does that I wonder what it was that I said that was wrong. It is like getting a favourable editorial in the Leader Post; I must have done something wrong. I do thank the lady for her remarks. Not knowing too much if anything, about it, I think the idea of agri-bonds is sort of a desperation gasp, a last gasp effort put forward as some way or mechanism of helping the agricultural community. That does nothing more than increase debt cost on the Government which in turn will pass those costs on to taxpayers without having really solved the problem, not only of income equity, but income stability of the agricultural community. I am not suggesting I am opposed to them. If they are put forward in some concrete legislation my colleagues and I—my colleague from Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) is much more expert on that than I am—would be prepared to look at them with some consideration, sympathy and objectivity. I cannot say that we might end up agreeing. If it were to help the agricultural community in a positive manner then okay. It is like a rabbit track that runs off on a side direction, and really still does not deal with the point I just made about the stability of income, and being in a position to compete with grain producers in other countries, what is the point?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it seems clear in the House those of us who represent central Canada really have to be very much more concerned with the difficulties of grain producers than at any other time, because quite clearly the international pressures are worse than they have been in many years. Recognizing that, has the Hon. Member any suggestions on how to make Canadians in general more aware of the need for greater sharing, and possibly for remedial programs for western Canadians?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. That is a good question. I thought we had made some headway in that regard. I remind the Hon. Member, and the Government House Leader will recognize too, that during the debate on the abolition of the Crow's Nest Pass rate I was very pleased and proud of the fact that members from my Party, from British Columbia and Ontario got up and spoke two, three, four times to fight to preserve the Crow rate for western grain producers, as did members of the Conservative Party from eastern and western Canada. I know there was some sympathy from Members of the Government side at that time for that same thing. I do not think for one moment that the people in downtown Toronto, or Montreal, or Vancouver would oppose for one moment any kind of a measure that would provide equitable treatment for their fellow citizens in other parts of the country. We never have. If there is any one thing that has made this country work as well as it has, it is the fact that we have, in many instances, by way of various kinds of programs and legislation brought in regimes that took into account our geography and our climate, where our people are located and where they produce and manufacture their goods. Whether it involved transportation subsidies or programs of other kinds in other parts of the economy, they were designed to hold this nation together, but also to keep us in the marketplace internationally. That is why I submit there is a need for a deficiency payment on grain, and from time to time it may be necessary on corn, beans, fish, barley, livestock, chicken, or for any product in respect of which our international competitors treat us unfairly. It is totally unfair to ask our agricultural producers to compete with those countries' treasuries. They are more than willing to compete with the farmers of other countries. We have tens of thousands of farmers in this country who have been more than efficient. They know how to produce efficiently. They are the best farmers in the world. However, when they are victimized by the treasuries and consortia of other nations, it is up to this country to pick up the difference so that they can compete on what the Tories like to call a level playing field.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

LOWER GRAIN PRICES—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Before resuming debate, earlier today the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) requested an emergency debate under Standing Order 29. I deferred my decision at that time. I am now ready to rule on the matter.

Members will be aware that the House adopted an order on March 26, 1986, by unanimous consent, setting up a Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat and its Products, with wide ranging powers, to report to the House not later than Friday, May 9, 1986. Members will also be aware that the membership for this Special Committee was struck yesterday and that the committee is organizing today.

Standing Order 29(5) states that the Chair must consider: "The probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means". I must therefore reject the application.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Barbara McDougall: That Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to speak in the debate on Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

After he brought down his Budget on February 26 of this year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled a Bill asking the House for a borrowing authority of up to $22.6 billion for the financial year 1986-87. According to the Minister, that amount corresponds to the net financial requirements of the Government as estimated in its financial plan for 1986-87.

However, my conclusion is that this Bill demonstrates the Government's failure to provide leadership in conducting the economic affairs of this country. We all know how, during the election campaign, this Government accused the previous Government of putting an undue debt burden on Canadians and how the Conservatives criticized that Government's deficit. However, the present Government's request for a borrowing authority of another $22.6 billion to add to our national debt and to the Canadian Government's deficit, now means—and it is important to mention this, and one wonders whether the Conservatives were really serious when they said that the previous administration had mortgaged the future of our people, of our children, by the debts it had incurred—that at this very moment, 25 per cent of our national debt has been directly incurred by the Conservatives since they came to power, if we consider this request by the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), who are seeking the permission of the House to borrow another $22.6 billion.

We already knew how inexperienced the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance could be, and I would even say incompetent, when we saw how they reacted to the bank crisis in this country. I have no hesitation in saying that the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance are to blame for the way western banks have been disappearing. It is because this Government reacted the way it did and took the wrong kind of action for the wrong reasons and at the wrong time, that we had this bank crisis which, unfortunately, is continuing to have an impact week, after week, after week. We realize not only that two western banks had to file for bankruptcy but that other Canadian banking institutions are in trouble owing to the incompetence of the Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his colleague the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

When I was young my parents taught me that Conservative Governments invariably meant bad news for Canadians.

[English]

"Tory times are always tough times".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: I think it is clear that those Tory back-benchers feel the pinch when I say that Tory times are tough times because their reaction is very eloquent.

Let me bring to their attention an article published by Don McGillivray in The Citizen which clearly indicates what I am saying. The article states:

> Richard Bedford Bennett would feel right at home in today's House of Commons. So would William Lyon Mackenzie King and James Shaver Woodsworth.
> Bennett was the Brian Mulroney of his time, the Tory prime minister from 1930 to 1935.
>
> King was then in the role now played by John Turner, a former Liberal prime minister reduced to leading the opposition.
>
> And Woodsworth was the 1930s' version of Ed Broadbent.
>
> All three would feel at home because the 1986 Commons is starting to sound very much like the parliaments of the Great Depression.

[Translation]

It seems obvious to me that we are in a bind, given all the difficulties our country is experiencing. Never in the past did Canada's banking institutions walk a tightrope, but our banking system was shaken down to its foundations with the advent of a Progressive Conservative administration. Not since the days of the Great Depression did the agricultural community have to cope with the kind of problems it faces now. Interestingly enough, in his column, Mr. McGillivray points out that we must now strike a committee to study domestic wheat prices—and the Chair has just ruled on that question.

As we know, and I quote Mr. McGillivray:

[English]

> And Opposition Leader John Turner opened the question period by telling Prime Minister Mulroney that the Western provinces, "already reeling from lower oil and gas prices find themselves in a wholesale crisis" because of a 19-per-cent drop in the initial grain price to be paid by the Wheat Board.
>
> When the 1930s Commons talked about inflation, it wasn't trying to find ways to fight it. It was trying to get it started, to get prices rising.

[Translation]

Unmistakably we are again beginning to see the signs of a great depression in Canada, very difficult times ahead for consumers, farmers, workers and retired people.

Again I emphasize that the current situation coincides with the advent of the Progressive Conservative Party in office. The similarity is too striking not to mention it. It seems clear to me that the Government has already shown its true face to the people.

Mrs. Mailly: That is why Canadians support us.

Mr. Ouellet: It has demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt that it has no social conscience with respect to destitute Canadians, the underprivileged in our society.

As evidence, there is a reply given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) yesterday to the Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the Opposition rose in the House to ask that the Minister make the necessary adjustments to her employment program so that an organization which has been distributing food to the people most in need in Vancouver can continue to receive assistance from her department under a program aimed at creating a number of jobs in Vancouver and which, most importantly, can be useful during a period of special economic difficulty for hundreds and even thousands of poor Canadians. What did the Minister answer?

• (1510)

The Minister simply said no, that the poor in Vancouver, who were at least able to feed themselves thanks to this organization, would now have to find employment and food elsewhere because the Canadian Government has no money to help them. This shows a heartless attitude, but I am not surprised at the answer of the Minister because, a few weeks ago, I asked her department to re-establish an assistance program which used to exist in my constituency of Papineau to help senior citizens and the most destitute families. The idea was to create a number of jobs under a make-work program so that people would, once a week, bring hot meals to senior citizens living alone in Montreal apartments, or else, during the summer, to allow young people to do cleaning jobs in the homes of the poorest people, who are often very old and who do not have the health or the ability to clean their apartment properly. These programs to help the oldest and neediest among us in their own homes had existed for a number of years and they provided hundreds of jobs in the Montreal region to people who would not have found any work otherwise and also provided a very important social service to the most disadvantaged in our society. Once more, the Department of Employment and Immigration refused to maintain this program and said no to the destitute in our society.

Mr. Speaker, when we relate this to the absolutely horrendous amounts this Tory Government is handing out to the multinational oil corporations, those big corporations which were provided with information or with an interpretation of the Income Tax Act such as to avoid billions of dollars in tax payments—we are not talking about a few hundred or a few thousand dollars but about billions of dollars that were given to those big multinationals and those rich Canadian families—it is beyond me how this Tory Government can go on ignoring the weak, the underprivileged, the poor in our society.

This is a major discrepancy in the basic interpretation, the basic philosophy that we should be expecting from a Government. The Tory Government is there only to help its friends, to help the strong, the rich in our society. It does not care about the others. This is done on an on-going basis: this week, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) tabled a competition Bill in which he completely abdicates his responsibilities for the benefit of the larger Canadian corporations, and at the expense of Canadian consumers. I am also told that very soon, according to the media and their speculations, he will be tabling in this House a Bill that will favour the multinational pharmaceutical corporations at the expense of Canadian consumers, at the expense of the aged who have to purchase drugs.

Where is the decency, where is the very basic concept of good administration? We do not want to prejudge that legislation, but certainly if the Minister has failed to secure from the multinational pharmaceutical corporations guarantees on employment, investment and price control, we will have no other choice but to oppose a bill that would be detrimental to the interests of Canadian consumers.

What I find most unfortunate in the Bill is that this Government's economic strategy does not work. The Bill now before us is the most striking evidence. Indeed, the Government wanted to regain the confidence of the financial world, of both the Canadian and the international financial communities. And one way of measuring the confidence shown by the international financial community is to look at the rate of exchange of our dollar, and also whether Canadian interest rates are stabilizing or going down. Well, the first reaction of the international financial community was not a positive one, as must be recognized. In order to regain ground, the dollar had to be supported by an absolutely unbelievable effort, a massive intervention by the Bank of Canada. And had it not been for that massive intervention, involving additional Government expenditures, our dollar would have sunk below 70 cents, which I understand has never happened in the past, in all of Canada's history. At one point, its value even fell to $0.69 U.S., a damning record for this Conservative Government which claims to be the most capable to deal with economic issues in Canada.

Although this Conservative Government can brag that interest rates went down recently in Canada, we find that interest rates on international markets are still much lower than in Canada. We need only have a look at what happened recently in Germany and what is happening now in the United States to realize that interest rates in Canada are still much too high and demonstrate the lack of credibility which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has on international markets. The real interest rates in Canada are excessively high. Although they never exceeded 4 per cent between 1960 and 1979, they now fluctuate around 8 per cent in real terms, namely, interest rates less inflation.

This situation is suddenly very embarrassing for the Government when compared with that in the United States, where rates are 3, 4 or even 5 percentage points lower than ours, while the inflation rate is about the same.

For that matter, the gap between the interest rates in Canada and the United States is also excessive. While the difference between the lending rate of the Bank of Canada and that of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York has traditionally been between 1 and 3 per cent in favour of the United States; as recently as in mid-March, the rate was nearly 5 per cent lower in the United States. More specifically, on March 6, 1986, the lending rate of the Bank of Canada was 11.74 per cent, while that of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was only 7 per cent.

Clearly, this situation which cannot be explained is unacceptable. It is clear that the Conservative Government which had told business people: "Once elected, we are going to reduce the national debt and make a major effort to help the economy recover", has failed miserably. The Government is now not only responsible for 25 per cent of the whole national debt, but because of a series of incredible blunders which have cost billions of dollars, it has not delivered the goods, so that business people have now lost all confidence in the Government's ability to deal efficiently with economic issues in Canada.

• (1520)

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) knows perfectly well that what he just said is utter nonsense. For instance, he knows very well that the Progressive Conservative Government was not to blame for the bank failures. We had to pick up the pieces of an energy policy in the West that had been created by the Liberal Government and supported by the New Democratic Party. We picked up those pieces, and we did the best we could to protect, not the big banks and not the multinationals but the depositors, who had placed their trust in these institutions when they believed the economy was really going to take off in the West, once the Liberal Party's energy program, which had been so detrimental to the West, had been amended as it indeed was.

The Hon. Member for Papineau likes to quote a columnist whose philosophy resembles his, so I would like to draw his attention to what Jeffrey Simpson, a columnist, said in today's Globe and Mail, and I quote:

[English]

The double whammy of falling oil and grain prices could not have come at a worse time for the three Prairie provinces.

Just when oilmen had escaped from the National Energy Program—

[Translation]

The Liberal Party's energy program, which was supported by the Hon. Member—

[English]

—the international oil price tumbled. Gone were the Government's fond hopes of making energy the "engine of economic growth"—

[Translation]

He doesn't say it was the Conservative Party that caused the crisis. It was the circumstances that created the crisis. He goes on to say:

[English]

Canada's 140,000 grain farmers are also suffering. International grain prices are falling fast, and the Chicago Futures Market predicts they will go lower—perhaps much lower—

[Translation]

He goes on to say:

[English]

Ottawa, too, should continue to show the faith it exhibited in assisting the ongoing work for the heavy oil upgrader.

[Translation]

In other words, we have already taken steps to help the West with its problems by proceeding with the development project.

So when the Hon. Member says that the Progressive Conservative Government is the cause, in fact he knows perfectly that it is the effect, and that this Government is trying to provide ways to cope with the situation.

Furthermore, he also knows that today the bank rate is 9.33 per cent, the lowest level we have had in a long time. He also compared our situation with that of other countries.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, traditionally, the spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States has been about 2 per cent. However, during the 4-year term of the previous Liberal administration, there was a 4 per cent margin. We were 4 per cent behind the United States. We are now .33 per cent behind them. This indicates that we have taken the necessary steps.

Therefore, I say that the allegations made by the Member for Papineau really fall short of his experience in Government.

And before I conclude, I should like to make a last comment. The Member referred to a program meant to help older people at home. He knows quite well that there are provincial programs which can provide similar services and this is why as a result of an agreement between Quebec and Ottawa, the duplication of services has been reduced more specifically because we do not have enough funds to waste them as the Liberal Party has done in the past.

In conclusion, I should like to ask him a question. He says that Tory times are tough times. How is it that the Quebec Liberal Government has just adopted precisely the same guideline in the statement made by the Minister, Mr. Gobeil, in which he took exactly the same steps in the same economic areas? He has cut housing programs which he thought ineffective as we have done. He has also dealt with the deficit. Taxes will probably be increased. This is exactly the same guideline.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we have set an exemple for Quebec's Liberal Government which is intelligent enough to realize it and act accordingly.

Now could the federal Liberal Member say something in reply to that question?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to answer, because what that very long statement finally boils down to is two small items. The first is that the Hon. Member is trying to give herself some credit for what the Quebec Liberals are doing, the premise being that Mr. Bourassa's Government somehow would be aping the Mulroney Government. I must point out to her that she is badly mistaken—the moves made in Quebec are quite different from those that are being forced upon all of us Canadians by this Tory Government.

Mrs. Mailly: That is absolutely not true.

Mr. Ouellet: There is a big difference looking especially at this Tory Government's prejudice in favour of the big multinational corporations—

Mrs. Mailly: Please, let us have an example.

Mr. Ouellet: —as opposed to the favourable attitude of Quebec's Liberal Government towards the most in need. The difference is so striking that one must be blind not to see it.

Secondly—

Mrs. Mailly: By cutting de-indexation.

Mr. Ouellet: I listened politely to the Hon. Member, I gave her a chance to make her long statement. I would hope that she would extend the same courtesy so I can answer without her interjecting and blowing her top.

Mrs. Mailly: Give me an answer, not a speech.

Mr. Ouellet: I am telling her that her statement showed . . . and indeed she quoted a Globe and Mail report that clearly illustrates my point, namely that "Tory times are always tough times". It is an obvious truth which the Hon. Member finds embarrassing, but it is true nonethless and everyone should recognize it: Since the Conservatives have been in power, things have been bad. They are bad for people in the oil industry, for the farmers, for the over 1 million workers who cannot find a job and for all the young people who still expect to find the jobs they were promised during the last electoral campaign.

Finally, I can tell her that I shall take great care to quote the sentence she used in her short intervention when she spoke about the money wasted by the Liberals for programs to help people bring food to the neediest in our society, and—

Mrs. Mailly: It was a duplication.

Mr. Ouellet: —and to have young people do cleaning jobs for the poorest families. If the Hon. Member thinks that this is a waste of money—

Mrs. Mailly: A duplication, a duplication!

Mr. Ouellet: —I am convinced that the public will judge her as she deserves.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Papineau knows very well that I spoke about the duplication of programs and not about a waste of money on social programs. He also knows very well that I quoted from the article of Jeffrey Simpson who said, and rightly so, that the international situation is at the root of the problems in the oil industry and of the price of wheat. He also knows very well that, as you announced earlier, Mr. Speaker, a special committee of the House on which one of his colleagues sits will examine the domestic price of wheat, precisely because the international situation is creating problems in Canada and not the opposite.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, even though the Hon. Member sits with the Official Opposition, he has not learned virtue. He still has a tendency to make very dramatic and political comments which are very far from the truth when all is said and done.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I accept the retraction of the Hon. Member. I am aware that she realizes that she made a mistake in calling these very important social programs a waste of money. She now wants to call them a duplication.

Mrs. Mailly: Just read the blues.

Mr. Ouellet: This is quite typical of the Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker. Each time that a program is cancelled, the Conservatives say: "There is no need to do this because others will do it for us."

We have here a Government which was elected to solve problems, but its way of solving them is to pass the buck.

This program was working well, but the Government no longer wants any part of it. The provinces are expected to take over and assume all responsibilities. These were job creation programs, but the Progressive Conservative Government does not want to create jobs. It hands them over to private sector interests and tells them: You do our work, you create the jobs. This Government is shirking its responsibilities and does not deserve the confidence of Canadians.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak against the Bill that would have us borrow $22.5 billion for the general expenses of this Government. I speak against it because this summarizes, or it is an opportunity to summarize, what I think is most deeply wrong with the policy of this Government.

Most people in the country, including me, do not have experience with billions of dollars, but most of us have had experience with being in debt. We know that it is really often easier to get into debt than to get out of debt. We have had a series of the old line politicians saying, "Vote for me and I will get the country out of debt". We vote for them, and they get the country further into debt. I think it is time that the matter was examined more deeply.

Three years ago we had a statement from a commission of the bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Canada, a statement about unemployment which went beyond statements that are sometimes made by public spokesmen, including leaders of the churches. It went beyond simply saying that unemployment is unfortunate, that unemployment hurts people. It said further that the unemployment we have is not necessary, that we have the unemployment because we have a bad way of arranging our public affairs. Of course, some people got upset and said that the bishops should not talk about public affairs; they should just talk about heaven or hell or some place that does not matter to politicians. In fact, the bishops won a great deal of attention in this country for their statement. They won a great deal of attention for declaring a principle which has been part of the teaching of their church in recent years called the preferential option for the poor. The general principle is that when you have a choice between helping the rich and the poor, you help the poor.

An Hon. Member: The rich get richer.

Mr. Heap: Somebody beside me here, on my nominal left but obviously much to the right in terms of politics, advocates the rich getting richer. What the bishops advocated was to make the poor a little richer, even if it means that the rich become a little poorer or, as is more likely, they do not become any richer quite so fast. This is a principle that was made more famous in other countries than Canada, and I will come to that. In general they argued that it is not only better on moral grounds—that is because the poor need the money or need the food or need the housing more than the rich do; that is obvious—but they also argued that it is better on practical grounds because what the poor would have to get would be, for the most part, necessities rather than luxuries. This even applies more deeply in a country that is developing its savings, its capital resources. It develops it for providing the necessities for a broad market, it is more stable and can more reliably provide and pay for employment than a country that focuses narrowly on the needs of the rich, whether it is their consumer needs for the price of a second yacht or another trip around the world, or whether it is their capital preference which is to invest in the highest rate of interest, even if it means shipping the money out of the country so that it is no longer of benefit to the people who did the work that made that money possible. They defend the preferential option for the poor both because the poor need it immediately—there are people dying now in Canada who should not be dying and they are dying because they are poor and they should not be poor—and because, for the general health of our country including our economy, looking after the bottom end means that everybody in the long run benefits more than if we look after only the top end.

This Government's policy has been the opposite as its predecessor's policy was the opposite. Money is found to bail out a bank. We heard a sob story a few minutes ago from a Member opposite about the poor depositors of a bank. Those depositors, for the great part, were people who knew well that they were investing in a risky operation at high interest rates. They were doing it because they were greedy. They knew that the law, as it was, did not protect them over a certain level. When their greed led them into trouble, they asked this Government, which talks about private enterprise and not intervening in the economy, to bail them out and pay the debt which they incurred with their eyes wide open, and this Government agreed to do it.

It is the same in another way with the oil companies. When they want to be paid to explore for oil and then claim ownership of the oil that the public paid them to find, this Government wishes to give them even more of that free gift that the previous Government did, and it is doing that. The same thing applies generally to the large corporations in this country, whether they are in transportation or communications or extraction of raw materials or manufacturing. The Government argues that it will give the most to those who have the most in a rather perverse twist of an earlier teaching which said that of those who have much, much will be expected. I refer to the result of this policy, not just in this Government's time, but during its predecessor's time, and during a predecessor Government led by this same Party 20 years ago or 25 years ago. For the whole period since World War II and increasingly as people get farther away from the "dirty thirties" or the Great Depression, the whole principle has been what some people call "trickle down"—give it to the rich, they will spend it; it will come to the affluent, they will spend it; it will come to the lower middle class, they will spend it; and it will come to the poor. This is supposed to benefit everybody, but it does not because those who say "pour it in at the top and it will trickle down to everybody" are careful not to say where they got that stuff they poured in at the top. They do not take that money from the rich to pour it to the rich. They take that money from the working people, even from people on unemployment insurance. Those are the people who have to pay the great bulk and personally pay the great share of the taxes that are now used and are poured in at the top. The Government tells people: "Hold on, tighten your belt. If you live long enough, some of this that we took from you will come back to you, and we will ask you to thank us for giving back to you a few years later a little bit of what we are taking from you now". That is the very opposite of what the Roman Catholic Church and other churches have been teaching in this country which calls itself Christian.

I said that the principle of the preferential option for the poor has become more prominently taught in other countries. I am thinking particularly of Central and South America where the question of rich and poor is much sharper than it is in Canada, not because they are worse than we are but because a general trend in the world has progressed farther there than it has yet in Canada. We would do well to look at those countries to see whether that is the road we are heading down, whether that is the road we want to head down.

When I was in Chile last summer, our then Ambassador told me that the Government of Chile was right to lower the incomes of the people of Chile so that they could compete better in the international market, and he said that Canada must do the same thing. In other words, it is a deliberate policy of reducing the incomes of the people of Canada, so that Chile can sell its copper cheaper and Canada can sell its copper cheaper. Chile must now produce three tons of copper to get the dollars that it got six years ago for one ton of copper. Is that supposed to make Canadians or Chileans better off? It is nonsense, except for a very small privileged minority.

• (1540)

What we have, Mr. Speaker, is very clearly shown in Guatemala. Three Members of this Parliament visited that country last week as an all-Party observer delegation to the Latin American Parliament that met in Guatemala City on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. I was privileged to be the representative of our Party. I was there also on work for the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee. I learned a little bit more about what has happened in Guatemela.

Ninety per cent of the farms are less than one hectare of land, less than is necessary to support a family. Eighty per cent of the children are malnourished. I have seen farms before at a 45 degree angle, up on hillsides in Honduras. I wondered how the farmers could do it. In Guatemala I saw farms, I swear I didn't have a protractor with me, but some of them were at a 60 degree angle. A journalist told me that the farmer sometimes falls off his field or ties himself to a tree so he can work in his field. Those are the farmers who have been driven into the hills by the large landowners who have taken over by force—not only in Spanish times but in modern times—the fertile flat plains. They have driven the campecinos and the Indians up into the hills where they cannot make a living.

Those landowners are backed by their brothers, cousins and nephews who are the army's generals who cause people to disappear if they disagree. This is an infamous fact about Guatemala that may or may not be coming to an end. When I was told that the freely elected President of Guatemala sleeps in a different house every night with 20 bodyguards, I wondered how deep democracy goes in Guatemala.

Behind and alongside the landowners and the military are the foreign banks which have now brought Guatemala into debt bondage, to external debt, and the U.S. arms industry and the U.S. aid to the Guatemalan army, which army is not being used and for 32 years has not been used to defend Guatemala from outside intervention but only to suppress the hungry campecinos and Indians.

Mrs. Mailly: This has nothing to do with the Bill.

Mr. Heap: I have been there, Mr. Speaker. I have seen the fields. I have read the reports by our Department of External Affairs and from many other sources. The Hon. Member across the way can giggle and chirp, but what I am saying is true. I challenge her to investigate and show otherwise. The result of all that is death squads, disappearances and a growing danger of international war in Central America. An international war if it starts will not stop with Central America.

Against that, what I am asking for is that we look and see what the options are when it can happen that the rich can take a country to destruction so that we stop in Canada before we go any farther down that road.

What I am asking is that we respect this principle which is being taught by more and more of the leaders of the Christian church and of other religions in the world, but in our country particularly the Christian church, that we respect the principle of the preferential option for the poor. Instead of focusing on making corporations richer and instead of finding ways to give tax breaks to lure foreign capital into Canada while Canadian produced capital is shipped out by the billions to New York, or God knows where else, instead of kowtowing always to the people with the most money, we should be directing our programs immediately toward feeding the hungry, clothing the people who haven't got clothes, housing the people who are not decently housed according to our minimal standards, improving the education system instead of starving it as at present it is being done, and improving medical and health care instead of creating a crisis as has been done in the health care system in Ontario at this time.

We should also be giving working people a voice in their own decisions. By working people I mean anybody who makes his living by his work rather than getting his livelihood exclusively from somebody else's work. That includes most Canadians who are now mostly excluded. It would mean workers in a factory would have something to say about that factory and whether the factory will shut down next year, as did the factory where I worked for 18 years. A few years after I left it was bought by another company, it was shuffled around and men and women 50 and 60 sixty years old were thrown out on the street because they were redundant.

That sort of decision would not be made if workers had some voice in how this country's work is done. I believe the decisions would be made in a way that could produce efficiently but without destroying human lives. We would have better morale in the workforce, better public co-operation, less crime.

If you want to see what unbridled competition produces, look at a country that has more armoured cars per capita than any other country in the world. I am speaking of Guatemala where the streets are not safe at night. If you visit there, the Canadian Embassy will tell you so. You can look at how the Canadian Ambassador and his staff drive about. They drive in an armoured car with a guard carrying a machine gun. There is free enterprise. There is the option for the rich. You cannot move around the city without a gun. That is where they are heading. Do we want to go there?

If we concentrated on producing for people's needs instead of producing for the profit of a very few, we would also be able to open up our trade relations with many more countries than just the United States where we have our problems. We would find also that we are in a much better position to work with other countries for world peace. There are a great many benefits for all the people, even the rich, who do not like to be killed in war and who do not like crime on the streets. All the people in this country could benefit if the Government and this Parliament and the other Governments of this country would begin to choose the preferential option for the poor. In other words, we should think of the use of the world's natural resources and the use of human labour to produce the things people need to use rather than producing only what will produce a profit for a few.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: When I listen to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), Mr. Speaker, I can easily understand why the December 30, 1985 Globe and Mail's headline read: Bob White Asked to Lead New Democratic Party. It would appear that current Members do not qualify, so they have to look outside Party ranks. I find it hard to understand why the Hon. Member should speak against this Bill, considering that the socialist Party likes to spend money freely. He ought to be in favour of still more borrowing because their policy has always been to spend more in order to get less. I wonder just how their comments can possibly reflect the philosophy of the socialist Party.

Today, they object to the House granting us money to finance our programs; "yesterday or tomorrow" they will ask the Government, instead of allowing the private sector to create 560,000 new jobs, to increase the number of civil servants on its paylists; yet, they do not want to grant the Government the sums of money required to create these jobs. "Tomorrow or yesterday", they will ask the Government for more programs for needy people, more pensions, more social assistance. Yet, they will not let the Government borrow. We can't afford it. Tomorrow, they will ask the Government to keep a great many civil servants. When it wants to retrain employees and streamline the Public Service, they will object, saying that it would result in 5,000 or 15,000 jobs being lost. Yet today, they do not want the Government to have the money to finance its programs. Where is their philosophy then? Have they anything consistant to say? They will turn their attention to corporations, when the time comes to adopt new legislation. They will ask the Government to impose more constraints on corporations, to increase their costs and reduce their benefits, resulting in a loss of income tax. And they do not want the Government to borrow, while at the same time they want to reduce the income tax. Where is their consistency, Mr. Speaker?

They are going to ask us to expand the Government apparatus. It will be great. Everybody will work for the Government. But where is the money going to come from? And they will still object to the Government's borrowing. What kind of logic is that?

Mr. Speaker, as soon as we have programs to deal with specific problems in business and industry, they will get up and tell the Government: Subsidize the automobile industry, the shipyards, the textile industry and the agricultural industry. They are going to say: Let's pay even more. Where do these socialists think the money is coming from? They don't want us to borrow, and the way they are going, business won't be paying taxes at all. Mr. Speaker, they want business to pay more. When it comes to legislation, they will want business to pay their employees even more. But that means business will not be as motivated, will make less profit and thus pay less income tax. Where is the money going to come from?

What kind of logic is that, my socialist friends? You are in favour of uncontrolled expansion of programs, and you want our businesses to die. Have you ever considered that we need money to finance Government programs? I wish you would explain once and for all what your philosophy is, if you have one. If you do not, I think you should try and disappear from the political map. I hope you succeed.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for his question.

• (1550)

[English]

I wish the Member had been here at the beginning of my remarks. Perhaps he was, but was busy doing something else. He apparently missed my opening point, that being that I oppose this Bill because of the spending policy of the Government, that of its predecessor, the predecessor of that Government being the Government of the late John Diefenbaker, and that of its predecessors. I oppose the policy of spending primarily to satisfy the whim and greed of the rich rather than to meet the needs of the people.

I am in favour of spending for the needs of the people. I am clear on that. I would be happy to sit down with the Member and talk about what the people need. Hundreds of thousands or millions of Canadians lack basics such as food, clothing, and a place to live where they won't freeze in the winter. We need a program in Canada to find out what people in Canada need, how to meet those needs, and how to divide the work up among ourselves. I would be happy to discuss that with the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) at any time.

I have spoken against a policy which ignores human need. Instead, we say that if we give money to the rich, some day the rich, including the blabbermouth who is standing in the aisle and interrupting me, will let some of that money come down to the poor. I wish the Hon. Member had not totally missed the point of what I was saying.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It's "Mr. Blabbermouth" to you.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, could the Member inform the House whether the policy of the New Democratic Party in the next election campaign will be to cut wages of workers all across the country? Does the Member think that rather than an increase in wages, Canadian workers should experience a decrease in wages? Is that the new policy of the NDP?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party will not be asking for a wage cut. We will be asking, as we have in the past, for a selective degree of control on prices. The power of a few companies to raise prices without any competition or negotiation, as Bell Telephone is doing, is almost unlimited.

Bell Telephone may be slowed down for a year in its efforts to raise the price of telephone services but, by hook or by crook, it will get what it wants. Before there is any talk of wage limitations, we would want to see the promises, made in the past by certain Governments with regard to price limitations, become a reality.

Although the Hon. Member did not say so, possibly what he has in mind is the difference in wage levels in Canada and Guatemala. If we had a program in Canada which was addressed to meeting the needs of Canadian people, I would certainly favour using a much larger share of our Gross National Product to help countries such as Guatemala to recover from the economic ruin into which European conquerors have led them for the last four centuries. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that we should use more than the one-half of 1 per cent which we presently do to help those countries which we have wronged in the past, I fully agree with him.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member endorse the call of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the Province of Alberta for a reduction in the proposed deficit of that province?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on the Hon. Member's statement because I have not read the statement of the New Democratic Leader in Alberta and do not know the context in which he made it. I do not believe that either increasing or decreasing the deficit has any universal or absolute meaning. I find that Hon. Members opposite and Hon. Members in the Liberal Party are quite happy to increase the deficit to benefit their friends and quite happy to invoke deficit reductions with regard to unemployment insurance payments for working people. I would like to know the context in which the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Alberta made his statement regarding the deficit.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I will address my remarks in debate today to Bill C-99. Clause 2 of the Bill brings to our attention the fact that the purpose of the Bill is to authorize the borrowing of $22.6 billion. Through the three short paragraphs in the Bill we are being asked to give the Government the authority to borrow that amount of money. Clause 2 says in part:

— as may be required for Public Works and general purposes.

I would like to address my first remarks to the amount of money which the Government is asking to be allowed to borrow. One must ask whether these figures are well calculated. The Government projections, as given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the Budget and elsewhere, suggest that the price of oil is calculated at $22.50 per barrel. For every $1 drop in the price of oil it is estimated that the Government loses $110 million in revenues. Of course, that is not an exact figure, but an approximation which gives us a mark by which to assess the impact of the declining value of oil in the international market. If this is the case, and we can see that presently the spot market for oil has been ranging over the last week or so somewhere between $8 and $13 a barrel, then we can see that this assessment of $22.50 a barrel is not realistic. That suggests that the revenue estimates are also not realistic. In short, with present prices, the deficit would be $1 billion higher than anticipated. That suggests the Government will be coming back asking for more money to borrow against the future.

• (1600)

The second point I would like to talk about concerns investment intentions in this country. The Minister of Finance in his Budget Papers foresees a 7 per cent increase over last year. suggests it will be a 2.5 per cent increase. The difference is some 4.5 per cent. If the difference is only, say, 2.5 per cent, that will have a considerable impact on the growth of the economy. We are told that a decrease of 1 per cent in economic growth will result in a deficit increase of $1 billion. It is not hard to project that if investment intentions are somewhere between those figures and not nearly as optimistic as those of the Minister of Finance, it could add still another $1 billion to our deficit which the Minister of Finance has not anticipated.

While I will not go beyond a third factor, there are certainly many other factors which financial analysts and specialists have brought to our attention. However, the third factor is that of interest rate projections. The Minister of Finance projects interest rates of 9.5 per cent in the Budget. Apparently the Conference Board does not quite go along with that. They believe it is going to be higher and suggest there is, again, another $1 billion to be added to the deficit. While the public has been lulled to sleep or brought to a state of euphoria in thinking that the deficit will be brought down, perhaps the Government should re-examine its figures on the basis of those three factors alone, if not the others, be honest with us and tell us it is going to be back for more money later. That is just the light commentary. I am sure this has been explored in committee very thoroughly and repeatedly. This matter has been looked at in the media as well as in the studies I have referred to.

I would now like to turn to the second part of this phrase in Clause 2 of Bill C-99. It asks for $22.6 billion as may be required for public works and general purposes. It is that part dealing with public works and general purposes that concerns me greatly. What is this money being used for? How is it being spent? What is the vision of the role the Government of Canada is to play on behalf of the people of Canada?

One thing we can say without contradiction is that the spirit of the Tory Conservative Government is certainly not that of the Statue of Liberty. Enshrined on the statue's base is the call to send the weak, the sick, the needy from around the world. People from all over the world were called upon to come to the U.S. and populate it, to make it a great nation. It would be a nation made up of the poor, the weak and the ragtags, those who were rejected by the rest of the world, those who escaped fighting wars as cannon-fodder for princes, those who fled from oppression in the Old World. That was the idealism of the pioneers who established this part of the world. That certainly is not the philosophy of the Tory Government. As it goes about establishing its policies on immigration, for example, it emphasizes that the welcome mat is out for those who have money to invest. Let the rich come. Our doors are thrown open. Let those who can invest mightily in our nation come here. That is the kind of person the Tory Government has in mind to populate and enrich this land. There is nothing wrong with inviting the rich, but there is not a comparable call to the poor, to the refugee. In fact, the policy of bringing to this country those related to those already here, the policy of reuniting families, is not part of the philosophy of the Tory immigration policy.

When I think of how the Tories are going to spend this money they want to borrow, I know they will certainly want to spend it to publish advertisements throughout the world to entice the rich to come here and invest. Perhaps Mr. Marcos might be a good candidate. He would have lots of money to invest. People of that type, after all, have money and would fulfil the qualifications. However, I think there are other things which indicate how hungry the Tories are for money. They have also increased citizenship charges. If you want to become a citizen it is going to cost you more. Of course, under Tory philosophy that is good because it means those who are successful become Canadians. Those who are not will have to wait a little longer. After all, financial success is how you judge people according to Tory philosophy. Of course, if you want to come over or have your friends and relatives come over, visas cost money, a great deal more money. Tories make sure there are user-fees. They want to make sure those who can afford it come over, and those who do not have a lot of money to spend will be discouraged. We really want to reach out for the wealthy. We certainly do not have a Statue of Liberty philosophy on the subject of immigration.

I cite that as just one example of the kind of philosophy which underlines the Tories' approach to spending this money. Let us go to another example, that of multiculturalism. You only have to look at an article in one of today's newspapers written by Margaret Polanyi entitled "Multicultural Groups Feel Threatened". They feel threatened by the policies of this Tory Government towards multiculturalism. Right at the present time there is, as is described in this article—I am not using some kind of pejorative term. He quotes:

—a slick conference on multiculturalism and business opening today in Toronto—

So nearly everything the Tories are doing is related to business. Talk about immigration, it is whether or not you are going to get businessmen over here. Talk about multiculturalism, it is whether or not it is business in multiculturalism. Everything ends up with the dollar figure. It certainly is not a nation that is throwing open its doors to the needs of humanity. It is a nation that is throwing open its doors for its bank vaults. That is the philosophy upon which this nation is now being reorganized.

• (1610)

What does this article say? Well, it says:

A group of community organizations, representing 208 groups in Canada, is banding together today to voice its opposition to announcements of possible policy changes on multiculturalism.

It is based on this conference. It goes on to point out as follows:

Most of the organizations that came together are under funded, so that when an additional freeze or reduction is added to this existing under-funding problem, then it leads to quite a precarious situation.

The following is in quotation marks and it says:

"Brian Conway of the Ontario Council of Agencies Serving Immigrants in an interview.

Now, that gives us an idea of what the inclination of the Government is as perceived by the multicultural groups. The article goes on to say that the new direction will hurt many at the expense of a few ethnic entrepreneurs who have already established themselves. Again it is the entrepreneurs who will get the assistance and the attention. It is the multicultural entrepreneurs, the guys with the money who are going to be our new multicultural direction. We are expanding to reach out for them with our hands of love.

So this leads me to Daiva Stasiulis, Professor of Race and Ethnic Relations at Carleton University in Ottawa, who said:

To have this emergent theme, which tries to confirm this connection between ethnicity and profit—

And that is spelled p-r-o-f-i-t, Mr. Speaker.

—sits uneasily beside current efforts to reduce ethnic inequality and racism.

The professor continues:

I think it's going to hurt the least advantaged segments of the community. I think it's probably going to be done at the expense of crucial concerns like fighting racism.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are going to borrow money for the Government of Canada to carry out more of these unenlightened policies which give encouragement to the entrepreneurs and the rich, and which discriminate against the weak and the poor. It is going to cost more money to come to this country. Only the rich really have the welcome mat laid out for them. It costs more money to get a visa, and it costs more money to become a citizen of Canada. That is a tragic retrogressive direction this country is taking under the Tory Government. If we see these policies now in immigration and we see these policies now reflected also in the multicultural policies of this Government, we have to say that we find them, in fact, in almost every area of concern.

The third area where there is one of the most tragic repercussions of this unenlightened policy of the Government is what this policy is doing to the young people. It is the priority of this Government to see that banks can be bailed out, that capital gains of $500,000 can be given to those who have that kind of money to invest for themselves, that there is more money for armaments and the armament makers, and there is plenty of incentive to bring over the Thiessen Company to Cape Breton Island to manufacture armaments which the German Government will not let it manufacture, but there is no money for the young people. You take the money away from the young people in order to feed those needs. That is the policy of the Tory Government, and that is what it is trying to borrow money for, to help the rich so that the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. The number of people who are going to places where food is handed out to the poor, to soup kitchens in Toronto, where no soup kitchens existed years ago, are back now in business and there are not one or two, not ten or 20, but dozens and dozens and dozens of places where the poor now have to go to find food and shelter in order to exist. That is how the rich are getting richer. In a city like mine, in Toronto, the poor are getting poorer subject to the policies of a Government that is insensitive to those that are weak and in need.

It does not have to be against the rich, but it does not have to be at the expense of the poor. When we look at what has happened to the young people and how the money has been spent, we see that this Government has, first of all, cut off $2 billion in post-secondary educational grants as projected by the formula. We see that this Government has cut funding for research councils, and yet it says it is concerned about research. It is incredibly hypocritical. The money it is giving to the research councils will amount to little more than inflation. It is so kind as to offer incentives to businesses to come in and involve themselves in financing research. Imagine any business financing research in the social sciences, or in pure sciences for that matter. Business has to go where there is a profit. It is inevitably a death sentence for research in any other field except in the short-term profitability range of science and technology.

The Government has cut 40 per cent of the seats in the community colleges that were being used for training and retraining of young people. That is 40 per cent gone from those community colleges and the ability of the provinces to provide education in its totality for their students.

The provinces are the ones that are suffering the war against the deficit because the federal Government cuts away the money and loads the responsibilities on the provinces' backs. It is not eliminating any deficit, it is just passing the deficit on to the provinces, in the junior colleges, in the community colleges, in the universities. It is shoving off its responsibilities onto the provinces and onto the backs of the poor. That is the charge I am making.

A further concern about what it is doing to students is the fact that this Government has cut student loan levels, held them frozen while, as we know, inflation continues. It has cut out the Katimavik Program, a $20-million program which has proven its merit and is of international reputation. People are sending letters constantly, even to this day, to me in my riding, to the Members of this whole House, pleading that that program be continued. It is of value to young people and cannot be replaced by job-training programs, which have their value. Yes, they should be done too, not instead of. The Government has cut the First Chance Program for the young people. It has cut the budget of the Youth Minister as well as cut the help for foreign students. We stand condemned as a nation for having a Government that is shortsighted and does not call out to the world, as our forefathers did of old, to send us their people who are in need, and from them we will forge a mighty nation, the kind of nation that is made now of their descendants, the scientists, the entrepreneurs and the humanitarians that inhabit our land.

• (1620)

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I am forced to rise because I can hardly believe that the Hon. Member represents the same Party that was in power in 1982 when unemployment went up 3.5 points and that Government put 400,000 people on the bread lines. It is that same Party that was in power through those many years with Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Prime Minister St. Laurent when we saw the heart they showed for the refugees of Europe in those dark days of post-war years.

Those of us who have spent our lives building a caring community are particularly sensitive to accusations that we do not have a heart and do not have a conscience because we will win the next election on social justice. That will be the direction of our Party.

The Hon. Member's speech contained a number of inaccuracies. An immigration policy that has increased the immigration level to 115,000 this year—up by some 25,000 or 30,000—is showing much more heart and openness in all areas. Almost 50 per cent of that immigration will be family reunification. Refugees are our highest priority, and the Hon. Member knows that.

We have spent considerable time in the last year exploring ways to try to do something about deplorable human rights in all parts of the world, whether it is in Central America, South Africa, the Soviet Union or elsewhere. We are sensitive to that need and we are a model for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, who looks to us for policies that are fair, open and available to all who need them.

With respect to the comments made about the Canadian Jobs Strategy, as Parliamentary Secretary I am willing to make myself available to those Members who would like to have a special briefing. We have put in place a program that gives training and real work experience. We want young people and others to have that practical experience which can be put on a curriculum vitae. We do not want the make work projects of the past or some short term effort that will ultimately put people back on unemployment insurance. The name of the game is to put people back to work, and that is what we are doing.

The Hon. Member talked about multiculturalism. We are cognizant of the need that people must have support for their culture, heritage and traditions, but we are even more cognizant of the fact that they need real jobs. The Hon. Member was here when his colleague told us about 70 per cent unemployment among Jamaican youth of our community between the ages of 15 and 24 and 40 per cent unemployment for those between the ages of 25 and 35. That is intolerable. Those people and all other target groups must have an equal opportunity in this country because only then will we become more productive.

That is the message we will send. It is a message of hope, confidence and inspiration.

One only needs to read the newspaper to see what is happening in this country. Housing starts have risen dramatically and there are more building permits. Retail sales have greatly increased. Unemployment has risen with 574,000 new jobs being created in the last 19 months. Five year mortgage rates have gone down 2.75 points. That is a savings of $92 a month on a $50,000 mortgage. These are the steps we are taking to instil confidence in the people of our country. They will be there in 1988 or 1989 when the cornerstone of what we have accomplished will not only be national reconciliation and economic renewal, but social justice as well.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely delighted to have the opportunity to deal with some of the points which have just been put forward by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

First, one of the tragic things we see taking place in the House of Commons day after day during Question Period, when members of the opposition Parties express their concern about an unacceptable level of unemployment among young people, is that we are simply given comparisons to what the unemployment figures were during a world-wide recession.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Corneille: We are not told about the unemployment figures before the world-wide recession. The Government continually tells us what the unemployment figures were in 1982 and what they are now. The fact is that the Government has not returned us to the level of unemployment that existed before the recession. The Government should be absolutely ashamed that this country still has not got off its knees when the rest of the world is in incredible prosperity. That is no record to be proud of.

According to the Senate report on youth, there are 750,000 young people still out of work, but the Government does not lift a finger to provide more money for programs. It wants to cure the deficit on the backs of young people while claiming it is trying to help them by eliminating the deficit. Such hypocrisy is unequalled and unmatched anywhere.

Second, I agree with the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary when he said that the record of Mackenzie King—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Hon. Member accused us of hypocrisy. I believe that is unparliamentary language, if I am not mistaken.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member used the word in general terms.

Mr. de Corneille: Quite correct, Mr. Speaker. I was not accusing any individual in the House. I hope the Member will soon become a more accomplished parliamentarian and more familiar with the rules of the House instead of interrupting and taking the time of another Member with such nonsense.

I was saying that the policies of Mackenzie King—a Liberal Prime Minister—toward the refugees from Germany who wanted to come here was unacceptable and an appalling policy. He was acting on the bad advice of his advisers, but he should have known better, whatever their advice was. I personally have no pride and in no way defend his position or policy.

However, because he was wrong in that case does not make the present policy of the Government right.

The Hon. Member said that his Government has a heart in social policy. I wish the Government would begin to show more heart in this area. I am not saying that it is not continuing some of the programs that were in place, but it is placing emphasis in the wrong area. Its concern is not where it should be in terms of social policy. This does not mean that it is not showing any concern but, as I pointed out in the examples of young people, immigration and multiculturalism, the Government's emphasis is on the rich. As 208 multicultural organizations have pointed out, when the Government spends money on multicultural entrepreneurs, it is taking money away from those weaker, less well off organizations and giving it to those who have money. It is another typical Tory policy.

In conclusion, I want to make it very clear that I certainly do not identify myself with the policies of Mackenzie King on refugees.

Mr. Gervais: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to direct a question to the Hon. Member who just spoke. He stated that the number of jobs being created in Canada today is a result of our coming out of a recession, and that the reason his Government did not create many jobs a few years ago is that there was a deep world-wide recession. I must concede that we were in a world-wide recession and Canada naturally suffered, but prior to the recession the unemployment rates in Canada and the United States were about equal. During the recession, the unemployment rate in Canada shot up to being about 3 per cent or 4 per cent higher than in the United States.

The Hon. Member states that we are creating jobs because the recession is over. Will he explain why we are outstripping the U.S. economy and creating employment at a higher rate by 2 per cent or 3 per cent than in the United States?

• (1630)

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I believe our unemployment rates for young people are far in excess of what they are for young people in the United States. But I do not want to totally take away credit from the Government totally because I am so happy to see any recovery happening at all. I would also like to point out that it is a false approach, a sham, for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to throw figures at us when we bring our concerns about the existing unemployment rate for young peple to him.

That is what I am talking about. It is not fair to throw figures at us about what happened during the recession to show how things are now. It is not a decent answer in the House of Commons to a question as to what the policy of the Government is going to be in dealing with present day unemployment for youth. We cannot accept the present levels of unemployment. Something must be done or we will lose a generation of young people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, when I decided to speak during report stage of this Bill, the one thing I did not want to do is to get caught in the middle of a spitting match between the Bobsy Twins from Bay Street. That little exercise is in fact a portrayal of two sides of the same coin. We do not have to go back to Mackenzie King. We had the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who came in with a lot of good will, charisma and intelligence in 1968. He had written books, taught at a university and had a radical background of fighting for justice for workers in Quebec. But after a very short time in office, we in the Sudbury Basin as well as my colleagues in British Columbia, had the spectacle of the then Prime Minister of this country giving the finger to unemployed workers at Salmon Arm and Sudbury and, indeed, right across the country. He is a man whose respect for his colleagues in the House of Commons led him to state that Members of Parliament were nobodies once they were 200 yards away from Parliament Hill. In his book entitled Up the Hill, a former Cabinet Minister of the defeated Liberal Government tells us that the former Leader of the Liberal Party really was a one-man show in making decisions.

Mr. Heap: How about "fuddle-duddle"?

Mr. Rodriguez: He was the same person who said "If you think 6 per cent unemployment is high, you just watch me". We saw that former Prime Minister fight inflation on the backs of the unemployed. He was the man who said at Banff that it was still possible to scare the hell out of Canadians with high unemployment. That is just in the recent past. We are not going back to Mackenzie King. We are just going back to the Liberals' former Leader.

On the Conservative side, we have a man who ran in an election campaign in 1984 promising that he would not reduce the deficit on the backs of poor people. He made all sorts of promises about things he said were sacred trusts. Everything was a sacred trust. He is now the Prime Minister. I recall that when interest rates were rising during the initial time of the Conservative administration we were being told: "Well, there is really nothing that we in Canada can do because our economy is so closely tied to the American economy. Naturally, if its interest rates are going up, ours have to go up". How is it that members of the Government can rise and take credit when rates are falling? Of course, they cannot. Our interest rates are falling because American interest rates are falling. If American interest rates start rising, Canadian interest rates will rise. That indicates to me that there is still no difference in the economic policy of either the Liberals or the Conservatives, the "Lib-Cons". There is no difference between the "Lib-Cons". We still do not have a "made in Canada" interest rate. We still do not make economic decisions based on the needs, hopes and aspirations of Canadians.

It does not matter whether it is the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau or his clone, the present Prime Minister, they both have brought the same basic ideological mentality to the job of leading the country. I heard the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) say: "We created 500,000 jobs". I was reading the other day in one of the journals that in fact what has happened is that the bulk of the jobs the Government is calling new jobs are really part-time jobs. I hear groans. Well, I want to put on the record a specific example from my riding. We have a Sears Company in my riding. Sears had full-time workers. What it did was simply to take five full-time workers and cut their hours down to less than 15 hours a week. It then went out and hired five more part-time people. So on paper 10 jobs were created, but there are really no 10 jobs. I have known of miracles, and being of that tradition I know that two loaves and five fish could be made to feed 5,000 people, but for the Government to take five full-time jobs, create 10 part-time jobs and call it creating "a lot of jobs", I find hard to believe. They are not the kinds of jobs which existed before because they are part-time. Of course, the reason that was done is that once these people are on that minimum number of hours a week, the company does not have to pay unemployment insurance premiums and a lot of other benefits. Statistics Canada has reported an increase in so-called jobs, but most of these new jobs are part-time jobs.

Mr. Weiner: Eighty-three per cent are full-time.

Mr. Rodriguez: And they are low-paying part-time jobs.

We are faced with three serious problems. Unemployment is one problem. We still have over one million people unemployed. We have to face the whole question of the base of one of our western provinces, namely, the energy sector, the oil industry in Alberta. That is a very serious problem. This Government went to sign the Western Accord saying: "The private sector is the engine of growth. We have to go to the market-place". But we have heard all of that before. It is like phoning the Bell Telephone Company, finding the line busy and a recording saying: "This is a recording". We have heard that recording before.

Look at what has happened in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. We have the reality of an economy which could very well be devastated. But what does the Government announce? It is going to study upgrading the heavy oil upgrader again. What is the direct action the Government intends to take? We have lost 6,000 jobs in the oil industry in Alberta already. We in the riding I come from want to know what the Government intends to do with respect to resolving that very serious problem for the people of Alberta. There is no selfishness in this part of the country which says that just because eastern Canada can obtain cheap oil it is all right to destroy the Albertan economy. I do not think there is a Canadian in central Canada who would ever accept such a proposition. I think it is the responsibility of the federal Government to show some leadership. The Government of Alberta is faced with a very serious problem in that the underpinning of its economy is being completely destroyed. Perhaps that is what the Government wants to see happen.

• (1640)

In my hand I have a copy of an article from the Report on Business from today's The Globe and Mail. It is written by George Linton who points out the danger of what could happen to the small oil producers in Alberta. He says that they will be forced to sell out to the large operators or be forced to fold up. What will really happen is a reassembling and the establishment of new oil monopolies in the Province of Alberta and in the country. Mr. Linton describes Canada's oil industry. He says that it is in a state of shock. The world price for oil is at less than $15 U.S. per barrel. We must ask the Government what it is going to do about this situation. To judge by its actions to date it will do nothing at all.

The PGRT has to be looked at in terms of its removal. The Government is locked into the view that it has to reduce the deficit. It is taking a blinkered approach to bringing down the deficit. In fact, the Government is forced to do nothing about one of the more serious problems facing western Canada, particularly Alberta, in terms of its oil industry.

Anyone who watches the proceedings of the House of Commons knows that Government Members ask set-up questions of Ministers from time to time. Why do they not ask tough questions of Ministers? Why do they not ask what the Government plans to do in terms of eliminating the PGRT immediately? If the question were to be answered honestly, we know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would have to forgo $1 billion in revenue. Of course that is what he would have to do. However, that is the commitment the rest of the country has to make through the Government to the people of Alberta in order to protect the economy of that province.

I know I speak for many people in central Canada when I say the following. I do not want to drive a car on 15-cent-a-gallon gasoline in the tank when brothers and sisters in Alberta are going down the tubes. The situation is ludicrous. If we bring the deficit down, then the whole economy of a province will be wiped out. I think members of the Government once said that they would bring a different view to the federation of Canada. They said that they would bring about a sense of cohesiveness, co-operation and collegiality, not only between the federal Government and the provincial leaders but between the people of the country and their Government. If ever there was a Government which had the opportunity to do such a thing it is this Government.

We are no longer talking about the bulwarked Trudeau years when all Government support came from one part of the country. In the years when the previous Prime Minister and the Liberals ruled Canada they had very little representation from the West. In fact, it was a Government which was central and eastern-based. Today, the Government has a golden opportunity since it represents people right across the country. Why is it giving up this opportunity? Why is it missing such an opportunity?

We are now faced with another problem. It is to do with the wheat farmers in western Canada. The price for their product is dropping through the floor. I am told that they are now faced with the lowest wheat prices in 25 years. In fact, they are faced with the lowest prices since the "dirty thirties"—since the Bennett buggies. It seems that we have gone from "Tory times are tough times" to "Liberal high unemployment". We are caught in a spitting match in which I said I did not want to become involved. Yet here it is, another problem facing the Government. The farmers have to have some assurances in order to make their plans. Yet what has the Government responded in answer to our questions? "Wait and see". I think that the Government has again locked itself into the view that it has to reduce the deficit. Again, it is reacting to all these problems with its blinkers on.

However, when it came to the situation involving the CCB and the Northland Bank, somehow or other that blinkered philosophy was shelved. "Squander Woman" came up with a billion bucks for the banks. There was no problem at all in doing that. No one said that paying out that sum of money would raise the deficit. We were told that it was essential to secure a western bank. We were told that we have to develop western banking interests. Do Hon. Members remember that argument? An Hon. Member opposite gets out his violin. He will have to play it low and soft. Is it important that our wheat farmers continue to exist? Is it important to our economy? The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) nods his head and says, in effect, of course it is important. The Minister is dressed in red today. What he says is right. Is it important to the country that the oil industry continue to exist and prosper? Everyone would say that of course it is. It should not exist in the hands of just a few large oil companies. According to the philosophy of the Government it is important that the small producers also have an opportunity to exist since, after all, what has happened is beyond their control.

What is happening to the farmers is as a result of a spitting match between the European Common Market and the United States. The western farmers are caught in the middle. Thus we cannot hold to the principle that we have to reduce the deficit come hell or high water. It seems to me that when members of the Government lock themselves into that type of philosophy they cause great harm to the people of the country. In effect, they have tied their hands with respect to dealing with their problems in a realistic fashion.

Yesterday evening I was out in New Brunswick. My trip had to do with another aspect of deficit-cutting. I was out at a place called Oromocto. I met with about 200 people, men and women, who have been affected by the recent change to the Unemployment Insurance Program. All of these people were very upset and angry. Their own Members of Parliament did not attend the meeting. Their own Tory Members were nowhere to be seen.

Mr. Manly: They were out talking to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Rodriguez: I told them that in order to see one Member they would have to go to South Korea to do it.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the Hon. Member does not want to mislead the House intentionally. I think that for his benefit alone it is important to point out that the Tory Members to whom he alludes were both in Ottawa because they had not received an invitation to attend the meeting. However, they attended a meeting some two weeks ago at which the Hon. Member was not in attendance. I wonder why.

• (1650)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I know that one of the Members who was supposed to be in Ottawa was at the opening of the New Brunswick Legislature two days ago in Fredericton.

Those people were very upset because in fact it was the same principle of cutting the deficit. The Minister of Employment and Immgiration (Miss MacDonald) has written to them indicating that the Government had to reduce the deficit and therefore had to cut the deficit in the Unemployment Insurance Program. This is why $100 million will be taken out as a result of the pension change. Those people found that to be unfair and unjust. They think that the Government has picked on them. In the same breath, the Government gave a $500,000 capital gains tax break to the wealthy people of Canada, a break which will cost taxpayers $1.5 billion by 1990-91. Those people found that very difficult to comprehend, and I do not blame them. The Liberals used to display the same reaction when they were in Government. Their friends always had their ear, their friends from Bay Street got all the breaks, and ordinary working men and women were shafted every time. I can assure Hon. Members opposite that just as the people across the country brought them in on a wave, they will put them out in the next election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I think I have to give him some credit for saying that for the first time in several decades, we now have a truly national Government.

As for the rest of his speech, it is not terribly significant. The Hon. Member compared the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party. He said their positions are similar. I can inform him that the Conservative Party consists of administrators whose objective is to legislate a balanced use of our resources. It is an objective people have forgotten. The Liberals were socialists. Their philosophy was to pay people's grocery bills and spend more by borrowing more and making this country carry a debt load of $240 billion.

Your job is to criticize. You always criticize but never suggest anything constructive. It is about time you did, which would be something new.

When we want to spend more you say no. When we want to save more you say no. When we want to raise taxes you say no. When we want to reduce taxes you say no. When we want to borrow more you say no. When we want to borrow less you say no. The pattern is becoming quite clear.

You quoted The Globe and Mail because you feel it has some credibility, so I will quote it too. Your leader is looking for a replacement. He is tired of playing an actor's role, but he does not think that any of the 30 others sitting there can pass muster. There lies your problem. You are unable to raise important issues. Think about it. You are unable to raise important issues and marshal a consistent and enduring defence of your own theories. That should be your role as legislators, but you are still asleep and never did anything constructive.

This is just a reminder. Do explain your theories if you can.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that the Conservative Government is made up of administrators, bankers, accountants and tax lawyers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Ordinary people.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, the Government is made up of ordinary rich Canadians. I do not know how consistent the Conservatives are. I am not impressed with their ability to administer. For example, a Budget came down in May, 1985 which was to deindex pensions. They were all over the ballpark on that one. They were telling us that the National Energy Program was a bad thing. They brought in the Western Accord. They could not even project what oil experts were saying six months down the road. They could not project what the experts were saying, telling or writing about the oil industry. They exposed the whole Alberta economy to the whims of the Sheikhs of Araby. Now they have a new sheikh—Sheikh Getty of Alberty. He is attempting to climb in the tent, and they are all sitting around. However, they recognize that he is not a true sheikh because his eyes are blue. They knew that he did not really belong there. They told him to go out and cut his production and then come back to join them. I do not know where they are in that ballpark now, but they are dealing with wheat prices. I want to know how they are administering it. What are their views? What do they intend to do? What are their projections?

We in the New Democratic Party have done constructive things.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I remind the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) that since the fall of 1984 we produced a document called Canada Unlimited. That document is composed of opinion and thoughful analyses of the economic situation. It contains very concrete and specific proposals in respect of dealing with Canada's most serious problem—unemployment. Then we put a youth task force on the road and produced a positive document which makes recommendations to the Government. There was Tax Probe 86 in which we made some concrete proposals to the Government about a more fair, just and distributive income tax system. They sit on their fins and what do they say? They say that they believe in the private sector. I think they have all gone to kindergarten and have repeated that the private sector is the engine of the economy. I think they have been programmed to spit that out. The people of the country will remember in the next election, and they will be spat right out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

Some Hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday, April 14, at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 4.59 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 493 and 506.

[Text]

BELL HELICOPTER/TEXTRON LTD.

Question No. 493—Mr. Dingwall:

1. Did the Government announce on October 7, 1983, that it would be assisting Bell Helicopter/Textron Ltd. in establishing, at Mirabel Airport, a light twin helicopter manufacturing facility and that Pratt and Whitney would also be asked to produce the engines for the new model of helicopter and, if so (a) what was the total cash value of assistance offered by the Government (b) what amount has been spent to date by the Government?

2. What is the estimate of additional assistance that will be provided to this project and what is the schedule for these payments?

3. Is the Government to be repaid in the form of royalties on all sales of helicopters, Step engines, spares and accessories made by the companies during the life of this project and, if so, what is the expected time frame for repayment?

4. (a) What is the current number of employees at Bell Helicopter Canada's Mirabel operation (b) what are the plans for the recruitment of additional workers to bring the workforce up to the original estimate of 2,700?

5. To date, how many Model 400 helicopters have been ordered?

Hon. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. Yes. (a) $126 million 1982 U.S. (b) $64.0 million 1982 U.S. as of October 31, 1985.

2. $62.0 million 1982 U.S. over the period of fiscal year 1985-86 through to 1991-92.

3. The Government will be repaid in the form of a royalty of 2 per cent of total net sales over a 25-year period of the Model 400, 400A and 440 helicopters including derivatives, accessory kits and spare parts (payments commence in 1990).

4. (a) As of December, 1985, 239 employees, which include 80 engineers receiving training and participating in the development phase of the Model 400 helicopter in Fort Worth, Texas.

(b) The company plans to commence hiring production workers in early 1986. The long-term build-up employment will depend on future production levels based on international market requirements.

5. As of December 3, 1985, Bell Helicopter have obtained approximately 200 options for Model 400 helicopters but none of these have yet been converted to a firm order.

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Question No. 506—Mr. Rodriguez:

In the Budget of May 23, 1985, under the heading "Other Tax and Tariff Changes" the Government outlines changes to northern allowances and severance pay in isolated communities (a) to date, how many communities and/or employers have applied for relief under this budgetary provision (b) if communities and/or employers have applied for relief, list them (c) it is obvious that this provision conflicts with the earlier change by the Government with respect to severance payments and the UI Act. How is this obvious contradiction being applied in remote communities where the principal industry closes?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Employment and Immigration as follows:

(a) and (b) The issue relates to the statements made by the Minister of Finance in his Economic Statement of November 8, 1984 (p. 10) and Budget Papers of May 23, 1985 (p. 81). The matter is primarily the concern of the Department of Finance. Review mechanisms have been set up by the Department of Finance to deal with applications for relief under the statements of the Minister and to date seven applications have been received from employers in northern Quebec, northern Ontario, northern British Columbia, northern Manitoba, Cape Breton and the Yukon. One application from Sidbec Normines involving Gagnon, Quebec has been approved and relief granted under Remission Order 1985-1359 of April 19, 1985.

The remaining applications consist of one which is under review and five preliminary requests. Since no decision has been reached on the application under review or the preliminary requests the rules regarding confidentiality of taxpayer information prevent us from releasing the names of the applicants at this time.

(c) The changes referred to in the Budget of May 23, 1985 with respect to northern allowances and severance pay in isolated communities refer to tax changes and would have no effect on the application of the UI legislation. The UI legislation has set up a social insurance scheme which by its very nature must be applied uniformly across the insured population. There is no provision in the UI legislation which grants the Minister of Employment and Immigration the discretionary authority to consider special circumstances and allow benefits in situations where it is expressly denied by legislation.

Since the amendment of the UI regulations pertaining to income and earnings which became effective March 31, 1985, severance pay which is paid or payable after March 31, 1985 is considered to be earnings for benefit purposes. Transitional exemption from this regulation can be found provided these moneys are paid as part of a separation package paid pursuant to an employer's written policy, a formal labour-management workforce reduction agreement or collective agreement that was in force before December 31, 1984 and had not expired before the payment of the money.

"Northern allowances" have been determined to be earnings arising out of employment and are allocated as same. It is considered that this is a benefit which is regularly and customarily paid by employers in the North to compensate for the higher cost of living and thus, the payment cannot be considered anything other than earnings arising from employment. It is clear that this payment does not continue beyond the complete termination of employment, but may continue during a period of sickness or maternity leave in which case it is definitely earnings without the performance of services. The northern allowance is a benefit of a kind received by a claimant from or on behalf of the employer in respect of the employment and falls squarely within the definition of moneys to be considered earnings for benefit purposes. All northern allowances are allocated accordingly.

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

DISABLED VISITORS TO PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Friday last you will recall that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) wrote to you, and the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) also raised with you the difficulty that those with wheelchairs have in entering the House of Commons for the purpose of viewing the proceedings. You indicated, Sir, that you would give the matter some consideration and report back. Do you have any report on that question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I do. The Sergeant-at-Arms advises me that he can handle, on a rotating basis, up to 10 wheelchairs at a time today and will organize his affairs that way.

The original request I had, of course, was to allow the use of the Chamber. I cannot do that, as the Hon. Member knows. I may say to the House that I have also asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to look at this problem. Anytime these things occur, we discover our limitations. We are looking at different ramps that are possible for future use to allow the entire galleries to be used better in future.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 10, consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are certain procedural arguments with respect to Bill C-62 which we wish to make. I want to indicate to my colleagues opposite that we are prepared to make them at whatever time you should decide, or when they are prepared to go ahead.

Mr. Speaker: May I say to the House that I had indicated that I wanted to hear those arguments now. Is there some suggestion that they be delayed? The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on Motion No. 1. If you are ready to pronounce on these—

Mr. Speaker: I was interrupted by a point of order from the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

The House will remember that when I first gave a ruling on the amendments I indicated that in respect of procedural arguments about the motions on which I had made procedural comments, as opposed to the issue of being in committee, I was prepared to hear them at this point, if anybody wished to do so prior to resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and then the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on procedural debate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I looked for your guidance on this the other day; maybe it was not the right time. I made some representations and I would make the same arguments at this time. They are on the record, so I do not think it is necessary for me to repeat them. I hope that they are taken into consideration.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if it is in order I would proceed with points of order with respect to two of the motions.

We have had an opportunity to look at Bill C-62, and there are two procedural arguments. First, with respect to Motions Nos. 13A and 15. In our opinion, these motions appear to be trying to introduce irrelevant matters into the Bill and are essentially redundant to it. In our view these motions are partly dependent upon the acceptance of Motion No. 10, about which the Chair has expressed some reservations in its preliminary ruling. In other words, it seeks to import the principle of equal pay for work of equal value into a Bill which concerns itself with the participation of certain groups in the workforce. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we feel it is irrelevant to the Bill.

In addition, you have indicated that it was because it was attempting to introduce a substantive amendment by means of an amendment to the interpretation clause of the Bill that Motion No. 10 is out of order.

Inasmuch as Motion Nos. 13A and 15 are at least partly dependant upon the adoption of Motion 10, because the definition contained therein gives meaning to the phrase "equal pay for work of equal value", and without that definition neither of these motions is intelligible with respect to that principle, we would argue that they ought not to be put to the House, since to do so would not be consistent with Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(4)(a):

An amendment is inadmissible if it refers to, or is not intelligible without, subsequent amendments or schedules, or if it is otherwise incomplete.

While this citation would argue the inadmissibility of that provision referring to equal pay for work of equal value, I believe that Citation 428(2) would also apply in this case. In Beauchesne's Fifth Edition that citation states as follows:

When an amendment is irregular in one particular, the whole of it is not admissible and must be ruled out of order.

Since these motions are dependant on a motion which is out of order, it follows that they too ought not to be put to the House.

The second motion I wish to discuss is Motion No. 21A. Motion No. 21A seeks to provide for enforcement of the Act by extending the powers of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I feel that you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that by putting this motion to the House we would violate our usual custom, since we would be, in effect, amending the powers of the Commission which should properly be included in the Canadian Human Rights Act which deals with those powers.

In addition, these motions would appear to be incomplete inasmuch as they refer to the "Human Rights Commission", and nowhere is it made clear that this refers to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. This may seem to be a small technical point, but as there are provincial human rights commissions, there may be confusion as to what is meant by this amendment. If the motion were to be adopted, the clause would be rendered partly incomprehensible and, therefore, it would be contrary to our practice outlined in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 773(4)(b):

An amendment may not make the clause which it is proposed to amend unintelligible or ungrammatical.

On these two grounds, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that the motion ought not to be put to the House.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary argues that two of my amendments should be ruled out of order. Amendment 13(A) attempts to spell out what employment practices are. The purpose of this Bill is to prevent employment practices which act as barriers to employment equity. We must define what those employment practices are. There is no definition of "employment practices" in the definition section of the Bill. Consequently, if the Bill is to have any meaning whatsoever, a definition should be spelled out to some extent in Clause 4 of the Bill. The clause now reads:

An employer shall implement employment equity by (a) identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices . . .

It does not say what "employment practices" are, and my amendment attempts to list the employment practices which should be subject to the Bill. I do not see how that contradicts any rule of the House of Commons or any interpretation of those rules.

With regard to Section 21(a), the Minister and the Government have brought the Canadian Human Rights Commission into the act through an amendment they made in committee. If that is the case, we must ensure that the Canadian Human Rights Commission is in a position to enforce this Act. I agree with my hon. friend that the human rights commission should have been defined as the Canadian Human Rights Commission. If he believes that this is a required amendment, he should be willing to amend that through agreement of all Members in the House, and I would move that. However, he seems opposed to any kind of amendment, which I find unfortunate. Nevertheless, I argue for the principle of that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. These are arguments about procedural admissibility rather than arguments one way or another about the points and substance of the matter.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to make only a very brief argument. In your ruling the other day you reserved judgment on certain motions and quoted a new part of our rules as follows:

. . . a motion, previously defeated in committee, will only be selected if the Speaker judges it to be of such exceptional significance as to warrant a further consideration at the report stage.

I argue that Motion 15 is such a motion. It is the motion with regard to equal pay for work of equal value. This is a very significant motion because it is a concept of importance to all groups. This breaks new ground in the House and the House itself should make a judgment on this very important issue. The committee has already made a decision on that particular issue. I think it is a motion of exceptional significance which would warrant a decision by the House itself. I think it is a very good example of "exceptional significance". The same argument could be made for some of the other motions, but I feel that the motion with regard to equal pay for work of equal value is the most exceptional of them all.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in summary I would ask my colleague to strike the word "any" from his remarks about what motions we are prepared to consider. No one doubts the importance of the issue of equal pay for work of equal value. However, the Bill, as passed at second reading, did not encompass that concept. That is the reason we are arguing it is inadmissible at report stage.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will reserve, consider all of these arguments, and come back to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), namely that Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 6 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"2. The purpose of this Act is to promote and encourage".

employment equity, and we know what that means as far as the wording is concerned. The Hon. Member wants to amend this Bill because according to him, and we agree, the Bill does not go far enough, does not have enough teeth to provide any assurance or guarantee that employment equity will be achieved, and I quote the present wording of the Bill in Clause 2, which describes the purpose of the Act:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or . . .

. . . benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the debate last Thursday, and I thought the comments made by Members supporting this amendment were rather important, and I would like to recall some of them, since we are starting a new week and in a debate like this it is good to put things into perspective.

The House will recall that the Government was not very receptive in committee to the amendments presented by the Opposition. At the report stage, parliamentary procedure allows certain amendments to be laid on the Table of the House for consideration.

To the Members on the Government benches I would like to say that a refusal to amend Bill C-62 and give it teeth and real power will look like they are not taking this Bill seriously. In fact we do not think Bill C-62 will help to achieve employment equity but, and this is something on which everyone will agree, that it will help further employment equity, but it inch by inch is a typically conservative approach, inch by inch and step by step. We say that a Bill as important as this one which affects the four target groups we want to help in their search for employment, and I may recall that these four target groups are women, the disabled, native people and what are referred to as visible minorities, these four target groups have asked and are continuing to ask the Government to amend the Bill and give it teeth so it will not be a paper tiger.

Unfortunately, until now, the Government has been saying: We refuse. So let us be honest and change the purpose of this Bill. Let's not say it will achieve employment equity but that it will gradually encourage employment equity, someday or other.

Mr. Speaker, that is why some of us are going to wait until the end of this debate to see whether this Government has the good will to amend this Bill and whether they can show they are taking this debate seriously and demonstrate their good will by amending the Bill to give it teeth and give us something we can take seriously.

Last week I listened very carefully to the comments made by some of our colleagues. I remember one in particular, and I forget who made it, which referred to Judge Abella, who chaired the Royal Commission on Equality and Employment in 1984, at the request of the Liberal Government at the time. After it was tabled, her report became the subject of public debate. I remember that in her report, Judge Abella said, substantially, that rights that are not respected are no better than rights that are not granted. These may not be exactly the words she used, but it means that existing rights that are not respected are no better than rights that do not exist at all.

And I think this certainly applies to Bill C-62, which they would have us believe will truly encourage and in fact give us employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, in her report Judge Abella said four things: She wanted federally regulated employers to be obliged by law to adopt employment equity programs. If I have time later on, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you what happens to our employees in the federal Government. I think that there we have a very striking and very clear example of what can be done with the requisite good will.

Second, she said: Persuade the provinces to adopt similar legislation in areas under provincial jurisdiction. That is an important point.

Third, that respect for the contractual obligation be legally mandatory for all federally covered employers.

And fourth, the establishment of an organization whose mandate would be to enforce employment equity.

Those are the guidelines, Mr. Speaker, but what do we have here? What we have is Bill C-62 which attempts to make employment equity a reality, a principle which we all endorse. But we all agree that it is nothing more than an expression of goodwill, in our opinion a toothless measure which does not give us the necessary power and authority to make sure that employers will indeed abide by employment equity standards concerning groups which we know have long since been discriminated against, be they women, aboriginal peoples, visible minorities, or disabled Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I want to focus on what the federal Government is doing these days, if only because Members opposite keep saying that nothing was done for 16 years under the Liberal administration, which is utterly false, and they know it. Perhaps they should read the remarks of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), as reported on page 12113 of Hansard where she relates the events of 1971 and the achievements of the Liberal Government, particularly with respect to women's rights. As for me, all I want to do is talk about what the Public Service Commission of Canada has done about employment equity.

In 1971, Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago, the Public Service Commission set up a service to protect women's rights.

In 1975, according to Cabinet decision 564-75 which I will read, the federal Government came up with a policy to offer employment opportunities to men and women alike, and to ensure that within a reasonable period of time the representation of men and women within the public service would be roughly proportional to the number of interested and qualified applicants of both sexes. Proportional is the key word, Mr. Speaker.

The goal then was quite clear, but now Bill C-62 falls far short.

In 1977, pursuant to Cabinet decision 144-77, the federal Government adopted a policy to increase Indian, Metis, non-status Indian and Inuit participation and representation in all occupational groups and at all public service levels. I urge Hon. Members to see for themselves that it has been done, Mr. Speaker. All those groups are now represented within the public service.

In 1977, the Liberal Government adopted the Canadian Human Rights Act to ban discrimination based on sex, another fair and constructive achievement.

Under Treasury Board decision 775694 of 1981, Mr. Speaker, we implemented a policy to ensure that more physically and mentally handicapped Canadians would be able to join the public service at all levels. This was done because the political will was there, because we wanted to see results, and we did that with our own employees. I fail to see why Bill C-62 should be so weak and not reflect the same political will to make sure that all Canadians feel at home throughout this country and all employees are given fair treatment.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks at report stage of Bill C-62 with respect to Motion No. 1 affecting the purpose clause. This motion attempts to bring the purpose clause in line with the reality of the Bill. Like so many other Conservative measures, this Bill uses the right rhetoric but does very little to achieve the stated goals. For example, we hear a great deal of talk from the Conservatives about fair taxes. They discovered that concept in the middle of the leader's debate in the last election. They talk about tax reform but we have seen nothing which will lead to tax reform. In fact, we have seen quite the reverse. More taxes are being loaded on low and middle-income people while upper-income people are getting more of a break. We have had a legislation which is supposed to introduce more competition in the market-place and result in the protection of the consumer, but when you look at the legislation closely it just does not materialize in the way the rhetoric says it will. In other words, we have Bills with a lot of talk but very little action.

In Bill C-62 the talk is about employment equity. Judge Rosalie Abella, in her Royal Commission report Equality in Employment, defined the larger context in which employment has to be seen with regard to each of the four target groups, women, visible minorities, native people and the disabled. Concerning native people she said on page 4:

> For native people, equality in employment means effective and relevant education and training, accommodation to cultural and geographic realities, a primary voice in the design of the education, training, and funding programs established for their benefit, meaningful support systems, and the delivery of services through native-run institutions.

When we look at specific measures for employment equity she emphasizes that they all require enforcement. On page 10 she says:

> Equality demands enforcement. It is not enough to be able to claim equal rights unless those rights are somehow enforceable. Unenforceable rights are no more satisfactory than unavailable ones.

In spite of good intentions, Bill C-62 lacks the concrete steps necessary to achieve its goals. It has absolutely no enforcement mechanism.

There is an interesting passage in the letter of James in the New Testament where James asks if someone sees a brother or sister who is hungry and lacks clothing and shelter and tells them to go in peace, be warm, be clothed, God bless them, more or less, but does nothing to actually put clothes on that person or food in their belly. What good is that? What we have here are good intentions, but there is nothing to put clothes on the backs of people, nothing to put food in their belly, nothing to give them any real chance for employment equity. Obviously the Conservatives believe that the road to re-election is paved with good intentions.

This House is a place where we should speak the truth, a place where we should call a spade a spade. Motion No. 1 calls a toy shovel a toy shovel. Instead of pretending, as does the present wording of the Bill, that the purpose of the Act is to achieve equality in the work-place, the amendment says that the purpose of the act is to promote and encourage equality in the work-place. I am sure the Government would like to promote equality in the work-place. That is not enough given the reality of today's situation for women, native people, visible minorities, and for the disabled. It is not enough to encourage employment equity. It is not enough to encourage employers to do away with discrimination. There has to be some measure of enforcement.

What the Bill does is call on employers to identify and eliminate those practices which create employment barriers. It calls on employers to put in place positive policies to give designated groups at least proportional representation in their firms at different levels. It calls on employers to draft a plan outlining the goals and timetables by which they seek to do this. There is no enforcement mechanism for any of these practices. The only part of the Act with any sanctions at all calls for employers to file annual reports with statistics indicating what they have been doing. The first of those reports is not even due for another two years, June 1, 1988.

If the Bill passes in its present form we can be sure of one thing and one thing only, and that is, employers who have federal contracts and have more than 100 employees will be filing annual reports. That is the one thing we can be sure of as a result of this Bill, and that there will be more help for the pulp and paper industry because more paper will be needed for these reports. There is not going to be the kind of help that is needed for women, for native people, for visible minorities or the disabled.

I would like to contrast what we have in this Bill with what Judge Abella said in her recommendations. Recommendation number two spells it out very clearly. She says the following:

> Employment equity legislation should have three major components: (a) a requirement that employers implement employment equity; (b) a requirement that employers collect and annually file data, by designated group, on the participation rates, occupational distribution, and income levels of employees in their work-forces; and (c) an enforcement mechanism.

Without that enforcement mechanism this Bill is really of very little assitance to the target groups.

When the Assembly of First Nations came before the committee that was studying this Bill they talked about some of the problems they are having right now. In native communities across Canada there is an average of 35 per cent unemployment. In many native communities unemployment is as high as 80 and 90 per cent. is expected that up to 20 per cent of the growth in the labour force in the next few years is going to be amongst native people. The lack of adequate statistics for the participation of native people in the labour force is something that makes it very difficult for us to get a real handle on this. This is an area where the Government has to take action to give an adequate statistical base so we know from what base we are trying to operate.

I am reminded, in conclusion, of the story of the old man who went to hear an evangalist, and the evangalist was waxing very eloquently about the day of judgment. He said, "there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth". The old man thought a while and said, "I'm afraid that I'm going to have to gum it". He did not have any teeth. This Bill is going to have to gum it, it lacks teeth, it is not able to do the job at hand. Thank you very much.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise following that conclusion of my colleague. I have, however, managed to secure my teeth for the balance of this intervention.

I am compelled to rise because I can recall during the second reading debate on the Bill making the point that had been made on a number of occasions prior, and has been made on a number of occasions subsequent to that intervention about the toothless, to use my colleague's phrase, nature of this legislation. I want anyone who happens to read, or listen to, or watch this debate, to understand what this Bill is intended to do. And why we have moved the amendment that we are now debating.

It says in Clause 2 of the Bill under "purpose" the following:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work-place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfillment of that goal, to emeliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

I do not think there is anyone in the country who would disagree with that objective. I think it is fair to say that every single member of this Party, in reading that particular purpose, could come to no other conclusion that was a worthy goal to set. The problem with it is that having said that it stops, it goes no further.

What is going to happen is that over the course of five years there may or there may not be changes in the work-place, depending on the whim of the many employers in Canada. Clause 13 states:

> Five years after the coming into force of this Act, and at the end of every three year period thereafter, a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of this Act including the effect of such provisions, shall be undertaken by such committee of the House of Commons as may be designated or established by the House for that purpose.

That is the extent of the requirement that is conveyed by this piece of legislation. It says at the beginning that it is our desire to have employment equity. It says at the end that after five years we will take a look and see if it has happened. In the intervening period of time there is absolutely no requirement on any employer in Canada that does not now exist. That is what I find most difficult to understand.

There is no employer who, with good will, could not have done what this Bill requires prior to its introduction. There is no change as far as the legislated requirements for employment by any employer in Canada that flows from this Bill. What we have is a situation where, up until now, employers could, and ought to have, created within their employment the opportunities for all of the groups that are mentioned. There ought to have been employment equity in the work-place. We all agree. Now we have written down that we have not required it to happen but nothing that could have taken place previously is mandated by this legislation. Nothing that could have been avoided previously is required to occur.

What we have now is the most unusual of situations. Any employer who cares about employment equity could at any time in the history of this country have established within the place of employment the opportunities for women, for those who are visible minorities, for aboriginal peoples, for people who are disabled, but that did not take place. They refused to do it. Somehow we believe that by virtue of saying that it is the desire of the House of Commons that that should take place, that will alter the mindset and employers will automatically admit they were wrong. It is absolute nonsense to believe that they will automatically change their ways as a result of this piece of legislation.

The Bill sets out a very decent and supportable principle. However, it provides no way of ensuring that anyone who has not conformed with that desirable principle within the workplace will do so as a result of this Bill.

Frankly, I believe this is a backward step. Our Party believes, as I think other Parties in the House do, that in the 1980s and the last quarter of the 20th Century employment equity is not only desirable but necessary. If that is the case, we should not pass legislation that simply sets this out as a good principle without requiring that people conform to it. That would be like saying it is our desire that everyone drive on the right side of the road, but if they do not like that, they can drive on the left side. It would be like saying that it is our desire that people ought not to steal, but if they do they should not worry about it. We will be unhappy and monitor the situation in the next five years to see what they are doing. That is wrong.

I know that most Members of the House believe as I do, that there should be fairness, equity and equal opportunity in the workplace to all. Therefore, why do we not say that it is the law of Canada and penalties must be paid if it does not happen? Why does the Government not decide that it is appropriate at this point in time, given the increased knowledge of people about the nature of discrimination, to say that discrimination is not only bad, we will not tolerate it. Why do we not say that discrimination in this country is not only undesirable, it is unacceptable socially because it does not reflect the way we evaluate the worth of individuals here and it will not be tolerated in the workplace?

It should be made clear that we will not allow women to be paid less than men, people with disabilities to be denied job opportunities by virtue of that disability, aboriginal people to be denied fairness and equity in the workplace by virtue of being part of the aboriginal society of Canada, and we will not permit people who can be identified by virtue of colour or background to be discriminated against in Canada. That is what we ought to be saying.

I say to the Minister that the Bill is a sop. It does not reflect the will of the Canadian public. It does not reflect the changes that have taken place in the way society judges discrimination. It does not reflect the changing standards which have been set in the last 20 years.

Let us change this legislation together and mandate that there will be no further discrimination in Canada. Let us make the decision now that we are not simply going to add yet one more voice to the cry from the wilderness that we ought not discriminate against people. Let us make sure it cannot happenj because the Parliament of Canada not only wants to see change but demands it.

That is why we have suggested that if the Government refuses to accept that as law, making those who discriminate subject to certain penalties, the Bill could be changed to simply reflect the somewhat frivolous nature of the legislation.

I believe that most Members of the House, including the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), want to see this happen in five years. She wants to be sure that we will not have to go through this exercise again in five years. She wants to be sure that people are not discriminated against. I have heard her say that. Therefore, why not change the Bill in the House to ensure that those who refuse to conform with the will of the Parliament of Canada should have to pay the penalty for non-conformance?

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the amendment suggests that since the Bill will not achieve equality in the workplace it should state that its purpose is to encourage and promote equality in the workplace. Frankly, I would have worded the amendment differently to say that the real purpose of the Bill is to delay the achievement of equality in the workplace by putting up a smoke screen hiding what the Government is actually doing to further the needs of women, handicapped, native groups and minorities in achieving real equality in the workplace.

As the Treasury Board critic in my Party, I am particularly concerned about what is not being done in the Government of Canada. For instance, this Bill does not apply to the Government of Canada since its provisions do not apply to federal Government departments, but only to employers outside the federal Government. In other words, while the purpose of the Bill may be to achieve equality in the workplace, it does nothing about achieving equality in the federal Government workplace. Therefore, I suppose one must presume that this equality has been achieved. However, I can tell the Minister and my colleagues in the House that that is definitely not the case.

Let me give the case of one of my constituents as an example to demonstrate how far we are from achieving equality in the workplace in the Government of Canada. This constituent is handicapped. She was hired on term some time ago as an affirmative action co-ordinator in her Department. It was her job to seek out ways to implement affirmative action in her Department for people who are disabled or handicapped.

As of the end of March, her term employment came to an end and my constituent was out of a job. In fact, rather than affirmative action, it was affirmative inaction that left her out of a job. She found that in spite of her work in that particular Department she could make no progress at all.

The reason is very clear. It is extremely difficult to implement any kind of affirmative action program in an atmosphere of cut-backs as a result of the Nielsen report and a Government which is determined to cut and slash, regardless of the impact on the services provided to Canadians by federal Government employees. It is extremely difficult to create new positions and ensure that systemic discrimination against handicapped people is eliminated.

Furthermore, there is tremendous pressure within the public service to try to make room for those employees who are being displaced. In other words, if there is a choice between making a position available to someone who is being displaced from a Department and an applicant who is handicapped but is not known and has not worked in the federal Government before, the federal Government will tend to take care of those who are already on board, as in any other institution or organization. Since handicapped people have traditionally been disadvantaged and have suffered from systemic discrimination, it becomes extremely difficult to overcome that situation.

• (1150)

The provisions of Bill C-62 will not of themselves assist that much. It is such a lousy Bill. However, at the very least the Government should indicate some good will by making applicable to its own Department the provisions which are being applied with respect to large employers in the private sector. I think it reflects hypocrisy that the Government not only has brought forward such a weak Bill, which is why this amendment is proposed, but in that it is not even prepared to make the Bill apply within its own employ, and I am not sure whether or not it applies to Crown corporations. That is one of the reasons the Bill is such a disgrace, particularly when we consider the solid promises made by the Conservatives when they were in opposition.

You may have read recently, Mr. Speaker, a number of remarks by journalists who are perhaps growing cynical beyond their years. They remark on the fact that when Conservatives are in opposition they make promises which they forget when they come to power. That is certainly the case in terms of the commitments made by the present Government to affirmative action when it was in opposition. The journalists also remark that when the Liberals were in opposition they made promises which they were not prepared to implement when they came to power. We can witness what is happening in the province of Quebec now that Premier Bourassa is in office. He is finding that suddenly all of that room for spending he claimed existed when he was fighting in the provincial election campaign magically disappeared the moment he got to look at the books.

I would like to suggest that the Liberal and the Progressive Conservative Parties are giving politics a bad reputation because of the way in which they so cynically break promises when they come to office. They have led journalists to the view that Canadians cannot trust promises made by political Parties when they are in opposition because these Parties are prepared to promise everything but not prepared to deliver once they confront the reality of power.

I represent a Party which has demonstrated in Manitoba, in Saskatchewan, at various times in British Columbia, and now in the Yukon, that when we make promises we do in fact implement those promises. I am getting a bit sick and tired of the Liberals and Conservatives, tweedle dum and tweedle dee, giving politics a bad name in this country because of the way they break their promises. That is why I am concerned about this Employment Equity Bill. We have made some solid promises, yet when we make solid promises about such things as equal pay for work of equal value and affirmative action for the handicapped and disabled the journalists say all politicians are all the same, and, therefore, they do not rely on our Party to implement those promises when we come to power. As one politician, I would like to say that I am determined that we do, and that we continue to keep those promises. Certainly I have kept that commitment since becoming an Hon. Member of this House in terms of the promises I made to my constituents over the course of the election campaign of 1984.

I would comment to the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), who seems to be making comments, that his Party promised to give political rights to public employees over the course of the last election campaign, which was 18 months ago. I had to spend all last week in court trying to get the courts to enforce that promise because the Conservatives were not prepared to deliver once they came to power.

Mr. McDermid: Grandstanding as usual.

Mr. Cassidy: What a bunch of cynical hypocrites those Hon. Members opposite are, Mr. Speaker. Whether it is the promise about affirmative action, political rights or the promise of "job, jobs, jobs", the Conservative Party, now the Government, is not prepared to deliver. I suggest that it is about time those Hon. Members went back to the book of promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the course of the election campaign. Rather than implement them they introduce measures in the way so cynical that we have to come up with these kinds of amendments to a Bill which essentially does nothing. The Government should come up with direct implementation of the promises made to the people of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: We will put our record up against yours any day.

Mr. Cassidy: In conclusion, I want to suggest that it is a sad day in this House when we are finally considering employment equity, that we have before us a Bill which is demonstrably so weak and ineffective that, rather than bringing forward the day when employment equity is a reality for minorities and the handicapped, it essentially delays that day by several years until the true weakness of the Bill is demonstrated. As it is now, it will not do a damn thing to ensure that equity arrives for the people it is meant to benefit.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I came here to listen, but I was provoked by the last speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to rise and say a few words in response to his and his Party's position, as he would seem to indicate. How self-righteous that group of individuals of the New Democratic Party are when it comes to some type of labour legislation. They purport basically to represent one group in our society, and that is labour.

Mr. Cassidy: Ordinary Canadians. We represent 20 million Canadians. Twenty-six per cent in Quebec.

Mr. Holtmann: So the Hon. Member jumps up and tells us that his Party represents ordinary Canadians. He also said the NDP Government has demonstrated in Manitoba and Saskatchewan that it never breaks its promises. He tells us that New Democrats are the kind of people who never break promise. I want to tell the House something interesting. We had an election in Manitoba recently. The Premier of Manitoba said: "We are going to enact laws and take action on April 1 to bring gas prices down by at least nine cents". Almost a week after he was elected he said: "Oh, we will have to postpone it." That was a direct promise to take action on April 1 and he has since postponed it until June.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Holtmann: How can the Hon. Member jump up and say that if his Party promises to do something it will act? The Hon. Member of Parliament for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) should live in Manitoba how they and read the papers which tell the people in Manitoba have been led down the garden path, how they have been fooled by that type of activity.

Mr. Cassidy: You are a sore loser.

Mr. Holtmann: No, I am not a sore loser.

Mr. Cassidy: You dropped by 20 per cent in the polls in the last year and a half. You had it in the bag two years ago and you blew it.

Mr. Holtmann: While I was listening to what the Hon. Member said I thought about how the NDP portrayed itself as representing the labour force. I was flipping through Private Members' Bills which were put forward by Members of the NDP and found that his Party did not bring forward any type of legislation with respect to equality. In fact, they talk about Nicaragua and places around the world, but not Canada. That Party has not introduced any legislation on employment equity, which it has the ability to do, but it has addressed all kinds of other subjects.

I wonder why the Hon. Member rises in his place and criticizes the first type of legislation which moves employment equity in the right direction, something which could not be done by the previous administration? He says the legislation has not gone far enough. I ask him what has gone further than this? The Hon. Member could not comment on that because he just wants to criticize. The legislation is moving in the right direction. We cannot legislate every type of scenario which could occur in terms of equality. That Party would like us to, but it must understand that people are only human. I am sure everyone in this House would admit that it is not a perfect world. There is some discrimination in this country and always will be, I suppose.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a lousy Bill as well. Admit it is a lousy Bill.

Mr. Holtmann: I do not admit that it is a lousy Bill. The Hon. Member should have the decency, I think, to rise and admit it is moving us in the right direction.

Mr. Althouse: It doesn't move us anywhere.

Mt. Holtmann: Never before have we gone this far.

Mr. Cassidy: It doesn't move us an inch.

Mr. Holtmann: The Hon. Member says it doesn't move us an inch. Well, I will ask him what he has proposed in a Private Members' Bill which would move us further? What has he proposed? Nothing. When does he intend to propose anything, if ever? He might be provoked into doing something now because he knows that we have found out that he has not even thought of anything. Today all that Hon. Member wants to do is criticize.

Mr. Cassidy: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Holtmann: He is probably going to run back to his office to draft something up.

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member alleged that I have not only done nothing but I have not thought at all about this issue. In fact, I would point to my record over the past 13 or 14 years.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe that is a point of order.

• (1200)

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please repeat what he said?

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member disregards the fact that when I was Leader of the Ontario New Democratic Party, my Party—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think that what the Hon. Member is saying is more a matter of debate between Hon. Members than a question of privilege.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us why they kicked you out!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann).

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to continue.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's hear about your promise regarding political rights. Where is the action from the Conservative Government?

Mr. Holtmann: As a matter of fact, it was our Government which introduced some study on exactly that point.

Mr. Cassidy: Where is the action?

Mr. Holtmann: We are the Party which put a book together entitled Equality for All. It presented these topics for discussion, not necessarily as our policies.

Mr. Cassidy: Where is the action? Some 18 months have gone by.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre cannot stop talking to listen. He keeps his jaw jiving, whether or not he has gums in his mouth.

Mr. Cassidy: Why haven't you put forward a Private Member's Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Taylor: You made your speech when you were standing up.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Holtmann: The point is that we have gone further in this particular Bill than was ever anticipated. It certainly is not perfect. We admit that.

Mr. Cassidy: It is far less than you promised. You promised and you did not deliver.

Mr. Holtmann: Well—

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It relates to the unparliamentary conduct of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I wish to listen to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), and I am being prevented from doing so by the unnecessary interruptions of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. I think the Chair has a responsibility to stop the Hon. Member from interrupting or to name him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not believe that is a point of order.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I will not dwell on this matter much longer. I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is being so provoked that he cannot stand his position and he will probably jump up again. That will cause the debate to deteriorate. The Hon. Member has had an opportunity to speak.

I would like to say that the Government can stand proud with respect to the introducing of legislation which will move us in the right direction. Some people think it is not enough. We will examine how it will effect equity in terms of employing people who are not as fortunate as the rest of Canadians. This is a matter which needs to be considered fully. That is what we are doing here today. I would like to listen to good and adequate representations from members of the New Democratic Party and not this rhetoric—

Mr. Cassidy: Where is your Bill on political rights?

Mr. Holtmann: —of promises and broken promises.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with respect to Bill C-62. The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) calls a spade a spade. It has been put forward to point out that Bill C-62 is weak. Therefore, we would not be too concerned if the motion were defeated, if the Government would allow the remaining motions to pass. If that were to happen then the defeat of this particular motion would not mean a thing.

The Hon. Member who just resumed his seat said that the Government has done a lot. He spoke about the book presented by the previous administration, which happened to come out during the administration of the present Government. God knows that the previous administration did not do too well in the area of equal opportunity.

It must be understood that the philosophy of equality is not the philosophy of the Party in Government. That Party does not feel that equality should be part of its responsibility as a Government. It has shown this in almost every area in which it has brought forward legislation. It is a word which members of the Party like to use but which does not fit their philosophy. Consequently, they use it in vain at every opportunity. They have suggested equal taxation for all people, while moving in the opposite direction. They have suggested equal opportunity with respect to training; yet they have reduced the amount of money which they pay to colleges and training institutions. They have suggested equal opportunity and assistance for small business. What have they done in this regard? They have given assistance to big business instead, in order to keep it in place. They have said that they would give equal opportunity to civil servants, yet they have cut back in this area, both in terms of pay and in terms of the opportunity to work. Members of the Government have suggested they would give equal opportunity to farmers. What has happened is a degeneration of opportunity in terms of farmers being able to stay alive and survive on this earth.

The point I wish to make is that if this particular motion is defeated, and the reason for it being defeated is the passage of the other 59 motions, then we will be happy to vote against it. However, what we can expect is the defeat not only of this motion but a defeat of all the others. The motion before us would amend the Bill to state exactly what it is. It is a Bill which has no teeth in terms of any kind of equity being achieved. So if members of the Government wish to defeat this motion and pass all the others then we will go along with them. If that is not the case, then at least let us be honest and pass this motion in order to say that this is what the Bill really does.

This motion encourages equality. The Bill does nothing to make equality a fact.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too have a few words to say with respect to Motion No. 1. It relates to a serious problem in the workforce today, or perhaps one just outside the workforce. I refer to the problem of those in their forties and fifties who have been laid off, whose jobs have been terminated or those who have lost their jobs because the plants or factories in which they work have been shut down. At this stage of their lives they cannot find gainful or meaningful employment. In other words, Governments at the municipal, provincial and federal levels are telling these men and women that they are too old for the workplace. They are being told that they are no longer needed. That is the impression with which they are being left. These people should be recognized just as we recognize other minorities in society who are in critical positions with respect to gaining employment.

I think it is absolutely tragic for men or women, who started work in their late teens or early twenties and spent 25 or 30 years in the workplace only to find that they no longer have jobs. They have worked hard for their employers. They have attempted to save a few bucks. They have tried to educate their children and to pay off their mortgages. They try still to provide a fairly decent standard of living for their families. Then all of a sudden they receive the pink slip. Or perhaps through no fault of their own, the factory in which they work goes belly-up, or the business in which they are employed shuts down and their jobs no longer exist.

We cannot stop progress. We cannot stop scientific and technological development in the workplace. However, we can surely devise means by which to put these men and women back to work. If we can put men on the moon then I think we can spend the time and make the effort to develop careers for people in their forties and fifties.

It is a fact that the private and public sectors have devised all types of interesting pre-retirement schemes. All types of incentives have been devised to encourage an employee to leave his or her place of employment at the age of 50 or 52 instead of waiting until the age of 60 or 65. By taking such action what are we really doing? We are telling these people that they are no longer required. We are saying that they are no longer important in terms of input into the workplace and in terms of earning a living and looking after themselves. We are saying: "Here is the golden handshake, goodbye and good riddance". We are saying that we do not need them anymore; they have become redundant because of their age. That is a growing tragedy not only in our country but in the United States and western Europe. Governments at all levels are really not putting their minds and hearts toward some kind of effective solution to this problem.

I do not think that there is anything more emotionally distressing or depressing than for a person who has been used to being a useful contributor to his community to be laid off, forgotten and bidden farewell at the age of 50 or 55. We just do not care about those people anymore. This is one of the great problems all Members of Parliament face daily in their constituency offices.

I am not trying to be emotional about this, but I have had visits from men in their 50s who were weeping simply because they had been out of work for a year or two, their unemployment insurance benefits were gone and their children were probably trying to help them financially. That is something which they almost resent because it embarrasses them. A few of them have actually had to go on welfare or take jobs on a temporary or part-time basis, something which again is very degrading. Surely, with the amount of money this Chamber expends in the name of the Canadian taxpayer we should be able to devise programs, policies and retraining schemes to assist these people.

I cannot prove this, but I am convinced that in virtually every employment centre in Canada, those who are given the last opportunities for retraining are those who are in their 50s, those who no longer have dependent children. They are being discriminated against because of their age. We seem to think that the last 10 or 15 working years of a person's life are no longer important. They may no longer be important to the state but those last 10 or 15 working years are still very, very important to the person. Even with some kind of generous pre-retirement program, he or she does not want to go home at the age of 50 or 51 to sit there and stare out of the window for the next 15 or 20 years.

Politicians in Canada range in age from 21 to 60. This present generation of politicians is supposedly in control of things, but politicians are going to be held morally accountable some day for the way they are treating those in their 40s and 50s who cannot find work. We cannot provide training and expertise for these people so that they can live out the rest of their working years in dignity and security by paying their own way. That is all they want.

I hope that the Minister responsible for employment will come up with programs which are much more effective for these people we are casting aside, people to whom we are saying, if not out loud then certainly by implication or inference: "You are no longer needed, you are redundant, you are just a UI number, a welfare number and that is it". Certainly that is the impression those people are getting. I hope that all of us will put our minds and hearts together and come up with some kind of legislation to assist these people

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Pending the Speaker's decision on Motions Nos. 2 to 6, we will now proceed with Motion No. 8.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 13 to 15 at page 2.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the House to support this amendment. It is an amendment that would include the federal Government itself under the provisions of the employment equity Bill, Bill C-62. I think it is a very reasonable amendment.

If we are passing legislation that is to apply to private companies operating under federal law or to federal Crown corporations, then why should the same law not apply to the Public Service of Canada? I appeal to Hon. Members of the Conservative Party to accept this motion which would make this Bill applicable to Canadian public servants. For example, when this law is passed, it will not apply to the employees of the Ministry of Employment and Immigration. I do not think that is right and proper.

In committee, the answer of Conservative Members to this question was that we do have Treasury Board guidelines. However, Treasury Board guidelines are guidelines and guidelines change as Ministers and Governments change. We have seen that all too often throughout the history of our country. This motion says that we should give those guidelines the force of law. We should put them into statute form and make it the law of Canada that employment equity is to be applicable to the federal Public Service, just as it is applicable to Crown corporations and the parts of the private sector that do business with the federal Government or fall under federal law like federal banks.

I would like Hon. Members of the Conservative Party to listen very carefully to the list of groups which have asked Parliament to support this motion, to make sure that Bill C-62 applies to public servants. These groups have said that they want federal Departments to fall under the jurisdiction of Bill C-62. The first such group is the Canadian Ethnic Cultural Council of Canada, an organization representing the many multicultural organizations. In my riding, many such organizations exist, particularly Ukrainian-Canadian organizations. These people are saying that the Department should be under the umbrella of Bill C-62. The second group is the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, a very important organization. The third very important organization is the Coalition on Employment Equity for Persons with Disabilities. I appeal to my Conservative friends to think very seriously about that.

At noon hour today there will be a demonstration outside the Parliament Buildings involving about 100 or more disabled Canadians. This may be the first time in the history of Canada that disabled Canadians have come to Ottawa to speak collectively to Members of Parliament. They will be asking us to strengthen Bill C-62, to make sure that a number of things occur to help disabled Canadians. For example, they have indicated that 70 per cent of disabled Canadians who work for the federal Government work on a term or contract basis.

I know that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has a lot of experience in Government. He was the Minister of Highways under the Social Credit Government of Alberta for years. He knows that in Government, regardless of political stripe, when there are cut-backs or freezes it is often the term contractors who are the first to be laid off.

Four weeks ago when disabled Canadians came to Ottawa to meet with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), I was personally very shocked to find that 75 per cent of disabled Canadians who work for the federal Government are on term contracts. That alone is reason enough to accept this amendment and to make sure that federal Government employees come under the purview of Bill C-62. Treasury Board guidelines are obviously not good enough. They are not good enough for disabled Canadians.

• (1220)

I appeal to this House now to listen to disabled Canadians who are in Ottawa today. I appeal to the House to try to accommodate what they are saying to us. They are saying, bring the Public Service under the purview of this Bill. They are saying, have a better definition, or a definition of reasonable accommodation and that there must be an enforcement agency. They are saying two or three other important things about which I will talk later this day.

The third group which says bring the Public Service under the Bill is the Organization of Persons with Disabilities. The fourth group is equally important, The Urban Alliance on Race Relations. Again, the visible minority is one of the four target groups for this Bill. They are saying to us, make sure this Bill applies to the Public Service of Canada.

Fifth, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, a very important union and organization for employees of the Government itself, is saying that the Treasury Board guidelines are not enough and that we must have the force of law in terms of promoting employment equity in Canada.

The next group, Mr. Speaker, is the supply and service union of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. That group has also asked us to amend this legislation to make sure that the Bill applies to the Public Service of Canada.

The next organization is one called BOOST the Blind Organization of Ontario with Self-Help Tactics. I had the opportunity in Toronto, along with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), about two months ago to meet some blind Canadians who came to a rally at City Hall to talk to those of us interested in this Bill, and they asked us to make certain amendments. One amendment they asked us to make to the Bill is Motion No. 8 standing in my name today. I am sure some of their representatives will be on the Hill right now demonstrating in front of Parliament. What better piece of evidence that we are listening to Canadians could there be than the acceptance of this motion?

Another organization that has asked up to accept this idea of having the Bill apply is an organization called Committee for 94. It is a very prominant, well known and articulate women's organization. Another is the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and finally, the Assembly of First Nations, the assembly of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. They are one of the four target groups to which this Bill pertains. They have asked us, as one of the four target groups, to make sure that we apply Bill C-62 to the Public Service of Canada.

I make that argument. I make my first argument as one that we should listen to the people, that we should listen to the organizations affected. They are all telling us to do the same thing. I appeal to Members of the Conservative Party to put aside some of the political partisan debate we have heard from time to time and listen very carefully to what the people of Canada are saying to us. They are telling us that they want the federal Public Service to be included, and I think we should move in that direction.

As I said before, the Minister had said at committee that the Public Service guidelines are enough, that Treasury Board guidelines are enough. I do not think they are, and nor do these organizations. Treasury Board policies on equity are totally management controlled. It seems to me if there is any Party in this House that has been critical of the way the senior public servants have sometimes handled and conducted themselves, it is the Conservative Party whose members have criticized the bureaucrats and mandarins in Ottawa. This is one way of making sure that the will of Parliament takes precedence over the management of the senior levels of the Public Service of Canada. That is another reason we should be making sure that Motion 8 carries.

Treasury Board guidelines in the past years have made the promoting of women to senior positions in the Public Service a very high priority. My understanding from women's groups is that they have often ignored the vast majority of women in the Public Service who are not in senior management positions but in middle management positions in the Public Service of Canada.

There has been no serious effort or initiatives taken to identify or to eliminate systemic discrimination in all aspects of Public Service employment practices. That is a very important part of what we are trying to achieve today, and Treasury Board guidelines are just not adequate, according to all the organizations that have come before our committee. Treasury Board policies on equity lack the force and the commitment of law. To me, that is very important.

Let me say that we have a lot of disabled Canadians who have made the effort to come to Ottawa to have a demonstration in front of Parliament at noon hour. That demonstration should be starting about now, if it has not already begun. First, they are asking us to listen to them and to govern on their behalf. They are joined by seven or eight other organizations representing native Canadians, visible minorities, women and others who say that this motion is important, that it should carry and that the Public Service must be included. Second, they are saying that Treasury Board guidelines are not enough. They do not have the force of law. It is important, as Governments come and go, as Ministers come and go and as Treasury Board Ministers come and go, that the force of law have some continuity and that the force of law be there. Be it Liberal, New Democratic or Conservative, be it the present Minister of the Treasury Board or some new Minister, it is important that the force of law in statute tell the public servants, managment, that we want employment equity in the Public Service along the same lines as we want it to apply in the private sector.

Finally, it is of particular importance for disabled Canadians. Seventy-five per cent of disabled Canadians now work on term contract in the Public Service of Canada, according to their spokespeople who were here four months ago. The Prime Minister said to them at that time that they could have a meeting with Geoff Norquay, a special policy advisor. They spent over half an hour in his office. He said to them that he would be letting them know what he could do by the time this Bill came back to the House. The Bill is now before the House, Mr. Speaker. What better day to say yes to disabled Canadians than today, because they are here with us, and saying it now in part by accepting Motion No. 8 now before the House.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my support for this amendment which would knock from the Bill those sections which prevent the Bill from applying to the Public Service. I had a similar amendment to that of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) but, because he tabled his first, mine was ruled out of order. In any case, I fully support his amendment. I want to put on the record our reasons for doing so.

The Government has said that such an amendment is not necessary, that it is not necessary for Bill C-62 to apply to the Public Service because there is already a program in place of employment equity applying to the Public Service under Treasury Board directives or guidelines. The Minister is correct in saying that. That program was introduced by the previous Liberal Government. When it was introduced it was not meant to be the last word. As a matter of fact, after that program of employment equity had been introduced into the Public Service by means of Treasury Board directive the previous Liberal Government appointed the Abella Commission to seek out advice and to report on how we could bring about employment equity in the labour market more effectively. We as Liberals were awaiting the recommendations of that report to proceed further.

On that very point, I hear many Hon. Members on the Government side pointing out that this is the first time any Government has brought in a Bill on employment equity. That is correct, but they do not mention that there were several steps leading up to this which had to be taken first.

• (1230)

The Canadian Human Rights Act was passed in 1977 by a Liberal Government. We then spent a long time bringing in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which entrenches equality for all Canadians in the Constitution. That entrenched equality prevails over all other legislation. Once that was completed in 1982 the Government moved on to the next step, which was affirmative action for employment in Canada for certain target groups including women, visible minorities, native people and the disabled. The Abella Commission was set up to study how that might best be done. Judge Abella recommended very strongly that, rather than leaving this to voluntary compliance and good will on the part of employers, it be legislated. She recommended that the legislation apply to the public sector as well as the private sector.

Judge Abella proposed that we use the term "employment equity" for what was previously described as "affirmative action". She recommended that it be legislated for the public service and for the private sector. The Government's response that it is not necessary to legislate, is no longer acceptable for two good reasons. If the employment equity program for the public service is in the form of guidelines rather than legislation, it can be changed at any time by the Government of the day without approval of the House of Commons. It can be changed by orders in council or directives issued by the Cabinet. If employment equity is legislated, changes must be made through a Bill passed by the House of Commons. In that way the principles which protect Canadians in employment equity are more firmly entrenched than they would be through directives, regulations or orders in council. That is very important.

In addition, how do we explain to Canadians in the business sector that there should be binding and entrenched legislation for them but not for public servants? They may sensibly ask why it is necessary to have laws for them if orders in council and directives are good enough for the public service. In order to be consistent we should put these principles in law for public servants as well as the private sector. By doing that we will entrench, in a more substantial way, the principles of affirmative action and employment equity.

Another good reason why this legislation should apply to the public service through a Bill rather than through simple directives is to set a good example for the provinces. As Hon. Members know, the federal Bill we are debating today will only cover the part of the private sector which is subject to federal jurisdiction. That is a very small percentage of the total businesses in Canada. In order to have widespread affirmative action and employment equity in Canada, similar Bills must be adopted by the provincial Governments to cover the approximately 80 per cent of employers who fall under their jurisdiction.

Over the years the federal Government has set a good example in labour legislation. It must set the same example in this case through legislation. If the federal Government introduces a Bill to cover the private sector and not the public sector, the provinces may do the same thing and may not even have any directives or guidelines under Treasury Boards in the provinces such as we have at the federal level.

I fully support this amendment. It is essential to entrench, in a substantial way, the principles of affirmative action and employment equity in order to establish equity between the private and public sectors. It is also important in order to set a good, solid example for the provincial Governments which should act on this matter as well if there is to be employment equity in the country.

I am sure the Minister supports this kind of principle. I am sure that she believes in more firmly entrenched affirmative action but, for one reason or another, is being handcuffed by dinosaur types in her Cabinet. I have known the Minister over the years and I know she is a fair-minded person who believes in employment equity. She has fought for a long time for employment equity and now she has introduced a Bill which has no teeth and does not attempt to do the things which she really wants to do. I feel sorry for her because she has fought so hard and so long for these principles. I hope that her Conservative caucus colleagues will support her against the reactionary and dinosaur- type elements in the Conservative Party. I hope they will give her the support she needs to put forward a good Bill to cover the private and public sectors. Only in that way will we do justice to this important issue in Canada.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Motion No. 8 affecting the employment equity Bill. It is clear to me that this motion relates to a very important matter of public policy; that is, that the public service should fall within the purview of the employment equity Bill. The intention of the employment equity Bill is to bring about greater equality in the workplace. On previous occasions in the House we have pointed out the weaknesses of the employment equity Bill. It does not have any enforcement mechanisms and is disappointing in that regard. However, if we are going to have an affirmative action program, it makes a great deal of sense that it should apply equally to the public sector and the private sector.

The legislation which the Government has presented is inconsistent to the extent that parts of the public sector are covered while other parts are not. Crown corporations fall within the purview of this legislation, but Government Departments do not. We have, therefore, moved that federal Departments should fall within the purview of this legislation. It is important not only to be consistent in the way in which we treat Crown corporations, private sector corporations, and federal Departments, but also to ensure that the federal government Departments set an example for the private sector. They should be leading the way and demonstrating the effectiveness of an affirmative action program.

Perhaps the Government feels it does not need to do that because there is already an affirmative action program in the public sector. We know that the Government has what it likes to call an affirmative action program in the federal Departments, but we know from its results that the program is ineffective. Taking the Department of Employment and Immigration as an example, while there may be one or two token women in top management positions, the vast majority of the senior civil servants who are running that Department are men. That comes as no surprise. Obviously these men are capable, but it is a sign of the unjust distribution of employment opportunity in the Public Service. It clearly demonstrates that the present affirmative action program is ineffective.

The argument that there is no need to apply the employment equity Bill to federal Departments because we already have an affirmative action program just does not hold water. With Government Departments themselves operating under guidelines it is possible for the Government to change those guidelines willy-nilly. If the affirmative action program were passed by this House into law, then the Government would have to live with those guidelines. Obviously a Government can change legislation. We have democratic processes for that purpose. However, it is much more difficult to change legislation than to change guidelines. Therefore, we recommend through this motion that the employment equity Bill apply to federal Departments.

While we are very skeptical of this legislation and point out its weaknesses, the Government could learn from the experience of applying this legislation to federal Departments. There would be a kind of direct window on affirmative action. Program weaknesses could be seen. Presumably the Government would then be able to change the program in this or that way. It might even come to the conclusion we have already come to from examining experience in other jurisidictions, such as the U.S. and Australia, that it is essential that any employment equity or affirmative action program be enforceable. Government must not only be able to set out the targets, it must also be able to demand that companies or Departments put in place programs to achieve those objectives. That is of course lacking in this legislation, and it would be lacking even if the motion we have before the House today were to apply.

If we apply this legislation to Government Departments, that would be a persuasive factor in our dealings with private sector companies. We could say that these are not just rules we are laying on you, we have applied them to the Government as well. The Government would be better able to lean on companies to get their act together on employment equity in the workplace.

In addition, the experience the Government gains from applying this to its own Departments would enable it to distinguish between legitimate concerns raised by private sector companies and those who are simply crying the blues. If a company came to the Government with the argument that it is an impossible burden to achieve the goal of equality between men and women in the workplace, it would know whether it was being faced with a legitimate concern which needed to be dealt with in order to achieve the ultimate objective of equality in the workplace, or whether it was something else.

This is an important motion, Mr. Speaker. If this program is to carry any weight it must be seen as being consistent. It cannot be seen as simply an imposition on the private sector. It must be seen as necessary for the economy, and obviously Government is a large part of the economy. Therefore I call upon the Government to realize the need for consistency, the need to set an example, rather than just laying the burden on the private sector. Doing that will bring closer the day when managers in the Public Service and not just clerks are chosen on the basis of their ability rather than on the basis of their sex or race or handicap.

This motion would add to the effectiveness of the program the Government is planning to put in place, even though I have very serious and fundamental concerns about the program as designed. However, with the passage of this motion the Government would more quickly learn the weaknesses of the program and could therefore improve it more quickly.

Whatever is done regarding affirmative action and equality in the workplace must be done quickly. Women will no longer stand for second place in the workplace. They are second-class citizens no longer. They represent a very powerful and legitimate lobby. The Government needs to respond to that lobby and have federal Departments set the example.

There are a good number of Members across the way who are not only here in their seats but are listening. I can see at least one Member over there who is listening intently. I hope he takes my arguments seriously.

Mr. McDermid: Say something serious.

Mr. Keeper: I hope he will be convinced by these arguments and bring them to the attention of the Minister. If he cannot stand up and refute those arguments, then I hope he will vote with us in favour of this motion so that we are able to bring about justice and equality in the workplace more quickly.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected in 1974 I remember speaking in this House on the issue of what was not called pay equity but affirmative action.

Mr. McDermid: All you Liberals did was talk.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): At that time I took the view that the Canadian style, which tended to be more of voluntary compliance and good will, really did not call for affirmative action. At that time I thought that as society was changing we would see changes in the employment practices of the public service, and in business. I had hoped that without anybody needing to legislate we would see more women, more visible minorities, more physically challenged people in jobs that they had not traditionally done.

• (1250)

Twelve years later one has to say that the progress has been abysmally slow and, reluctantly, one has come to the point that some legislation is necessary. The Bill before us, in fact, sets very minimal conditions which are not going to be any great hardship on firms that are doing business with the Government. They are only asked to record and report on their progress. At least there is an expectation that firms will question and examine their own progress.

It is disconcerting to find in the Bill that the public service is specifically excluded. That is why I would support the amendment before us which would, in effect, require the public service to meet precisely the same conditions that are being asked of the private sector when doing business with the Government. If the reporting requirement is considered onorous by the Civil Service then, surely, it is even more onorous for the private sector. Equally so, if the reporting requirement is considered a reasonable one for the private sector to meet, then surely it is more than reasonable for the public service to meet.

The advantage of having a legislated reporting requirement is that it is not easy for the Government of the day to change it on whim. When it is there in legislation any change would have to be brought back to Parliament and approved by Members of the House. The people who are in need of, not necessarily special consideration, but equal consideration under the Bill, are listed as women, physically challenged, native peoples, and visible minorities. I want to speak particularly about the physically challenged.

In my own riding I have a residence which has been turned into apartments for physically challenged people. Some of these people are very young and are really fighting against enormously difficult odds. It is typical of their spirit that the words they want to use are physically challenged and not physically handicapped. They want to contribute to society, as everyone else does. If that means making some arrangements to accommodate a wheel chair, to have larger doors, to have wheel chair ramps, surely this is the kind of accommodation that society is more than ready to make so that bright, talented able people can contribute to society in the same way as those who have been luckier with their physical health.

In the last Government five departments of the public service were asked to undertake special programs by way of employment equity, with the idea that this would spread over to the public service generally. The progress has been abysmally slow. The jobs are still going to able-bodied, and physically handicapped people are still having to tolerate patronizing and inappropriate remarks. The assumption that because of a physical handicap they are not able to meet the requirements of a job is an assumption that is made too often and too lightly. It is very wasteful in our society and we cannot afford it.

For these reasons, although my own taste and talent is always for a negotiated settlement where possible, rather than imposing things by law, I do approve of legislating employment equity in this area. I certainly think the public service should be included in anything that is required of the private sector doing business with the Government. The public sector employment practices set an example for the provinces, for the provincial Civil Service and the federal Civil Service should not be allowed in any way to escape any requirement for creating more opportunities for the less favoured in our society.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the occasion to rise in support of Amendment No. 8, which would have the public service included under the purview of Bill C-62. It is rather curious that the public service has been omitted when one considers the debate on the issue of affirmative action qua employment equity. There is no doubt from whom opposition comes. It has come primarily from employers. There have been a number of studies done about employer attitudes, employment arrangements, hiring practices, practices with respect to promotions, attitudes towards minority, women, disabled groups as well as natives, all of which testify to opposition to any strong action taken to ensure that job opportunities would be available to members of the target groups which are covered in this legislation.

The curious thing is that the employers in the public market-place are to be subjected to legislation, however inadequate that legislation may be. The Government finds itself in a very curious situation in which it is clear that, at least in some respects, it is behaving in a way which is consistent with the opposition the private employer has, and expresses; the Government has excluded itself. This is reason for concern, because in 1968 the public service of Canada initiated a voluntary program of affirmative action which was to be directed to visible minority groups. In the interim very little was accomplished, until around 1983 when there was some initiative to begin the process of data gathering for the purpose of permitting an analysis of the distribution of the target groups in the public employ. That report was supposed to have been submitted to the Treasury Board in 1984. By spring of 1985 no evidence that such a submission had been made.

What we have is clear evidence that the Treasury Board has not been very effective, indeed, perhaps not even willing to implement what slight steps towards affirmative action programs there have been in the past. One must have considerable doubt whether a Treasury Board will be any more effective when faced with the new responsibility of implementing affirmative action, or employment equity in the public service. It seems to me that there is increasing and mounting evidence that there needs to be the inclusion of the public service in this legislation. That evidence is the treatment that minority group members have experienced in recent weeks—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House the plight of the Lubicon Indian Band in Alberta. This band is still fighting, in 1986, for land that was promised to it in 1940. That promise was made by the federal Government and that promise has been broken by the federal Government.

Our failure to fulfil our obligations to the Lubicon Indian Band has had devastating consequences. Powerless to exercise any control, the band has had to watch its way of life being systematically destroyed by oil development on its Members' traditional lands.

The band's claim is a legitimate one. It has been substantiated by the report of the Minister's own special negotiator.

I call upon the Government now to fulfil its responsibility to stand with the band and to negotiate a just and equitable settlement without any more delay.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT—CALL FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this morning in Winnipeg the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) announced a $580 million pay-out to grain farmers under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This payment has long been anticipated by western producers and it is greatly appreciated.

However, a number of points should be made. First, part of the money being paid out to the farmers is their own money that has been collected over the last five years. The timing and the amount of the payment are set according to provisions of the Act and are not the result of the largesse of the Government. The size of the pay-out indicates that there was a shortfall of $600 million in the incomes of grain producers this year compared with the average of the last five years. Even knowing this shortfall, the Government has announced another 20 per cent reduction in the income of grain producers by the lower initial grain prices it has established.

It is imperative that the Government announce, in the next few days, a program of deficiency payments for the next crop year. Farmers are on the verge of seeding. They need to know their income prospects for the coming year so both they and their bankers can have some assurance that planting anything is worth while.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

ANIMAL WELFARE

TREATMENT OF ANIMALS USED IN RESEARCH

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of Members of the House that this week of April 14 to April 20 will be the second annual Animal Health Week. This occasion, sponsored by the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association, is to promote animal health care by means of good nutrition, hygiene, and preventive medicine, and to increase public awareness of the importance of animals in our lives. This Animal Health Week, as such, will focus on all types of animals, including food producing animals, work animals, research animals as well as pets.

It is particularly important to highlight the vital contribution of animals to agricultural and medical research. In this regard it is a fundamental responsibility of all researchers, particularly veterinarians, to ensure that animals used in research are humanely treated and well cared for.

If Animal Health Week can in some way improve the health and well-being of even a small proportion of the animal population, it will have served its purpose.

S.O. 21

ANIMAL WELFARE

PET FOOD CERTIFICATION PROGRAM

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, at this, the beginning of Animal Health Week, I wish to highlight a very special achievement to Members of the House. The Canadian Veterinary Medical Association has established a pet food certification program to certify pet foods in Canada. This voluntary program requires that manufacturers demonstrate their ability consistently to produce pet foods that meet an animal's nutritional requirements at all stages of life as established by both chemical analysis and feeding trials. The subsequent production of certified foods is monitored continuously to ensure product meets the standards established by the Veterinary Association.

The program is unique in the world. The small fee paid for the service generates significant moneys applied only to research for animals. Already half of all pet foods sold in Canada bear the seal of certification.

• (1405)

The Canadian Veterinary Medical Association has provided a standard for the multimillion dollar pet food industry. This is a remarkable achievement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, can terrorism be dealt with by moving a United States fleet into Libyan waters? Can Khadafy be isolated from the Arab world by way of an attack on him? With its latest move in the Mediterranean Sea, is the U.S. not encouraging further retaliation by terrorists? Is the threat to Lybia not going to enhance Khadafy's stand in the Arab world? The Lybia-U.S. confrontation in the Mediterranean poses a threat to peace in the world today. In addition, terrorism will hardly be eradicated by a U.S. attack on Lybia. There are more subtle ways to check terrorism.

Canadians would support the Government of Canada if it would speak frankly and openly in Washington about the danger to all in the escalation of the U.S. military threat off the coast of Lybia, if it would renew efforts at the U.N., as is our tradition, aimed at dealing more effectively with international terrorism, and if it would urge an end to gunboat diplomacy.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

USE OF NANOOSE TEST RANGE BY U.S. NAVY SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week the Canadian Navy fired four dummy torpedoes off the coast of Vancouver Island. Unfortunately the sensing devices failed to track properly and one of the four torpedoes was lost. The Navy had to post a $200 reward for the finder, dead or alive! It would be laughable if it were not so dangerous.

While officials tried to play down the incident, these failures of technology remind us of the potential danger from the presence of nuclear armed American submarines sharing the Nanoose Test Range.

Freedom of Information has forced the U.S. Navy to admit to 630 incidents or accidents involving nuclear weapons between 1965 and 1985. If we continue to let American nuclear submarines use our waters with no questions asked, we are the "dummies" in a very dangerous game.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST FARMERS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, farmers throughout western Canada are uneasy this spring. Not only are they having to fight their age-old battle with the weather, but this year they will have to contend with a drop in the initial price for wheat of some 19 per cent because of the total international situation.

The Opposition and the news media say that the Government has turned its back on farmers. University professors, lawyers, economists, and drugstore cowboys in the front benches of the Opposition are trying to tell those of us in the Government who are farmers that we do not understand the needs of farmers. Shame! It is the professors, the lawyers, and the economists who in the past put thousands of farmers into bankruptcy. They should be happy to remain silent now.

Our recent Budget cut the deficit, but not on the backs of the farmers. Western Grain Stabilization payments, capital gains tax exemptions, special drought assistance programs, fuel tax rebates—and the list goes on. We have delivered over $4.5 billion in more than 180 agricultural initiatives for farmers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

FORMATION OF MANPOWER RETRAINING COMMITTEE IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Last April 8, Mr. Speaker, Canada's Minister of Employment and Immigration and Quebec's Minister of Manpower and Income Security signed an agreement to set up a manpower retraining committee for Montreal East. The committee will be made up of officials of both Governments, the municipalities involved, unions and employers, and will take every step required to spur the Montreal East labour market and industry.

In addition to the two Ministers, the agreement was signed by several interested parties, including the Montreal Executive Committee Chairman, the Ville-d'Anjou mayor, the Montreal East mayor, the Quebec Conseil du patronat executive vice president, the CSD president, the Montreal Central Council president, the CNTU, and the QFL vice president.

Mr. Speaker, that is a good example of the kind of co-operation we now have among the various—

MULTICULTURALISM

COMMITMENT TO EQUALITY OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, over 700 delegates from ethnocultural communities across Canada attended the very successful Multiculturalism Means Businesss Conference held in Toronto last weekend. Over 1,500 persons heard the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) address on Saturday evening. This Conference launched a new dimension in multiculturalism. Heritage language, cultural enrichment, group and cross-cultural development, and race relations will all continue to receive strong federal Government support. In addition, new emphasis is being placed on equality of economic opportunity.

• (1410)

The conference focused on assisting individual entrepreneurs in our multicultural communities to promote their skills in business. Hand-in-hand with this, the Employment Equity Bill currently before the House is designed to ensure equality in hiring, promotion, pay, and training. We will not have true equality without equality of economic opportunity. The Government is committed to this goal.

AGRICULTURE

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ADVOCATED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I hope Members of the House will not take somnolent self-satisfaction with regard to the Government's announcement today of the wheat stabilization payment. It is not an answer to the problems of farmers in western Canada. As Members of the House will know, it is a payment for last year's crop, at a time when prices were 20 per cent higher than they will be this year. This means that farmers will still face major problems in the forthcoming crop year.

What are we expecting? A $1 billion pay-out from that stabilization fund next year? The fact is that we need much better answers. We need a comprehensive approach to the problem which will involve major initiatives in the international arena. This means obtaining the co-operation of the United States in a conference.

Most of all, we hope that all Members of the House will support a call for a major economic summit meeting of the provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to come to the rescue of the western Canadian farmer before the economy goes down the drain.

THE ECONOMY

PRIVATIZATION OF CERTAIN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Government has announced that it is now in the final stages of privatizing Quebecair, to guarantee regional services and to maintain and increase the number of jobs in this company.

Quebec realizes that in many cases, the private sector can provide as good a service as, if not better than, the public sector, and at less cost to the taxpayer.

I am surprised to see that our Liberal colleagues, who object to every step taken by our Government to privatize or enhance profitability do not have the same attitude where Quebec is concerned. Have they finally recognized that it makes sense to restrict Government intervention to areas where it is absolutely necessary?

Throughout the world Governments are re-assessing their policies in this respect. In France, more than thirty companies have been sold. In Spain, industries like the automobile industry, truck manufacturing and industrial products have been returned to the private sector with great success.

We have faith in the ability of our entrepreneurs to provide a good service to their fellow citizens. It is too bad that the Opposition does not.

MULTICULTURALISM

PROCEEDINGS AT TORONTO CONFERENCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, concern about the new direction of Conservative multicultural policy was not allayed by the Multiculturalism Means Business Conference in Toronto on the weekend. The conference was well attended, but the delegates were there as much to ask questions about matters the Government is not addressing as they were to celebrate the multicultural resources on which Canada can draw.

The conference itself demonstrated the shortcomings of the approach of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). Frank Stronach of the Magna International Group made an impressive conference chairman, but the featured business speakers were John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and Roger Hamel of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Multicultural business accomplishments received only limited recognition. Those who asked questions remained anxious about reduced grants to multicultural organizations, lack of Government action on employment equity, and the certification problems of foreign-trained professionals.

The Multiculturalism Means Business Conference was a good initiative but it will not serve as the new multicultural policy for our country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) in Winnipeg this morning is good news for western Canada. The $580 million interim payment is the largest ever made under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It will be placed in the hands of hard-pressed producers before they begin seeding the 1986 crop.

The payment, following the over $2 billion our Government has contributed to western Canada since September of 1984, very clearly demonstrates the high priority we place on agriculture. This interim payment will be made as a result of amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act made in February, 1985. It will give participating producers a return of $4 for every dollar they have contributed to the program from January, 1983, to July, 1985.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TREATMENT OF MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS CONDEMNED

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, minority shareholders require more protection from the self-serving schemes of powerful families.

Last week, Crown, an insurance conglomerate, asked shareholders to split their shares to create more non-voting stock. This favoured the largest shareholders, the Burns and Jodrey families. Fortunately the CN pension fund stopped this plan.

In another questionable scheme Trilon Financial said it is raising $102 million in a new stock issue. While the controlling shareholders own less than 35 per cent of the current shares, they are taking 50 per cent of this new issue, thereby diluting the rights of minority shareholders. The minority shareholders are also the losers with regard to the exorbitant $2-million underwriting fee on a risk-free deal. Great Lakes Group, 62 per cent-owned by Brascade, which also controls Trilon, will pocket the $2 million.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. At the end of last week the Prime Minister was obviously caught off guard by the reaction of key U.S. Senators to opening formal discussions on trade—

[Editor's Note: And the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) having entered the Chamber.]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I bid the Minister welcome on his return to the House. It is good to see him looking in such great shape.

May I start again, Mr. Speaker? That is the old Quebec way of interrupting a meeting. Someone comes in in the middle!

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was obviously caught off guard by the attitude of certain key Senators to the trade negotiations. Why was the Leader of the Government so surprised? Where was the 100-man trade office here in Canada? Where was the half-million-dollar consultant, Michael Deaver? Where was the briefing to the Prime Minister? Why is it that the Leader of the Government is so far behind on the facts of this particular issue?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the House that apparently this was a last-minute development which occurred—

Mr. Deans: There's the reason.

Mr. Kelleher: —in the Senate Finance Committee. As Mr. Yeutter himself explained, he too was very surprised and taken aback by the events. I can assure the Right Hon. Member that the people who assist us in these negotiations are very good people and are keeping on top of things for us.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we were really on top of that issue. Maybe the real reason is the Minister—I do not know.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my second question to the Minister.

According to the Prime Minister, President Reagan gave him the assurance that all was well in these negotiations and that the Administration would guarantee their success.

Apparently, somebody overlooked the fact there is separation of powers in the United States, the Senate and the House of Representatives.

My question to the Minister is therefore: Why has the Government conducted its business in such a way that we are now on the defensive with the U.S. senators?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly not on the defensive in any way, shape or form with respect to these negotiations. We have reminded the administration and the President of his commitment that there would be a clear launch for these discussions. We have asked the President to advise the Senate Finance Committee of that. This is presently a matter between the administration and the Finance Committee and we are awaiting further developments.

CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the new-style diplomacy down there was to keep in touch with Capitol Hill at the same time as keeping in touch with the administration. Despite this so-called special relationship with the United States, why is it that we have gotten ourselves into a defensive position? Will the Minister assure us that the Canadian Government will not make any concessions against the export of Canadian lumber in order to get that Senate committee back on track?

• (1420)

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): I would again like to reassure the Hon. Member, the Leader of the Opposition, that we are not in any defensive position whatever. The fact that these discussions at present have been stalled in the Senate Finance Committee will not in any way have any bearing on our ongoing discussions with respect to current trade problems or irritants.

PHARMACEUTICAL PATENT LAW

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. The amateur hour approach that has been taken to the trade negotiations with the United States has already led the Prime Minister to concede on energy, on publishing, and on foreign investment, and we have received absolutely nothing in return.

Will the Minister now give assurances to this House that the Government will not cave in to the pressures to change the pharmaceutical patent law? Will he make it very clear that that law will stay to protect the Canadian consumer and that we will not give in to the American multinationals?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member and myself have a different interpretation how events are going. I do not feel in any way that we have conceded or given in to the Americans at any time on anything.

Dealing specifically with pharmaceuticals, lumber, or any of those issues, they stand on their own merits. They will be dealt with on their own merits. They are not in any way tied to the present discussions as to whether or not there should or should not be trade discussions between Canada and the United States.

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the kind of approach that has gone wrong has just been exemplified by the Minister's statement. You cannot deal with issues one by one. They are part of a total package with the United States that has to be bargained effectively.

The Senate has said that the problem it has is that the Canadian Government has not made clear what the role of the provinces will be.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A supplementary question, please.

Mr. Axworthy: In light of the statement by the Senators that they do not know what the Canadian Government's position and the provinces' position will be, can the Minister tell us what steps will be taken to clarify what the role of the provinces will be so that the U.S. Senate and the administration will have a clear idea for the first time what our bargaining stance will be in the talks?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we will be notifying the Americans quite clearly, fully, and forthrightly about our position in the talks if and when the Americans decide they wish to have those discussions with us.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA—INQUIRY WHETHER UNITED STATES DISCUSSED PLANS WITH CANADA—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On the weekend, an American envoy discussed the situation in Libya with Governments in Europe, and he referred more specifically to the possibility of using military force against the Libyans.

My question for the Government is simply this: Did the Americans discuss the plan with the Canadian Government before the weekend, and if so, what did the Canadian Government have to say?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister assured the House last Friday, both in his press conference and in response to questions in the House, that the Government of Canada remains in very close continuous touch with the United States, and in so far as the safety of Canadians in Libya is concerned, the Prime Minister last Friday in the House of Commons again drew attention to his statement of January 10, and suggested that Canadians should once again take stock of the situation in Libya vis-à-vis, their own individual safety.

UNITED STATES PROPOSALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important matter, as I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister realizes, and he did not answer the question.

Since the Americans are discussing very specific proposals with the Europeans, were they discussed directly with the Government of Canada and, if so, what was our reply? It is an important matter that could potentially affect directly some 1,300 Canadians in Libya.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I differ with the hon. gentleman. I did answer his question by saying to him that the Government of Canada remains in close and continuous touch with the Government of the United States, particularly with respect to the safety of our citizens in Libya.

Mr. Ouellet: Tell us the truth. The answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. A supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we saw how close the Government was in touch on trade matters by the action in the U.S. Senate last week. I hope it has been in better touch, in advance, of an American decision on this matter.

• (1425)

SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS IN LIBYA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister referred to the answer the Prime Minister gave on Friday in which he said: "—there is no immediate cause for undue concern for Canadians". How does he square that with the following, said by a spokesperson for the Department of External Affairs on the weekend: "We have twice advised Canadians to look to their safety"? Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if Canadians are in danger in Libya? If so, have they been informed directly of their danger? Has the Government of Canada taken action to get them out, if need be?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the short answer to that is absolutely.

Some Hon. Members: Absolutely what?

Mr. Nielsen: Those who ask the question "Absolutely what?" obviously were not listening to the question. If they read the question in the "blues" they will find that that is an adequate answer. I assure all Members of the House that we are indeed in very close and continuing consultation with the Government of the United States—

Mr. Ouellet: You're taking your orders directly, that's what you're doing.

Mr. Nielsen: —with respect to the situation in Libya and the safety of Canadians—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They don't consult us, they tell us.

Mr. Nielsen: —indeed, as recently as less than a half hour ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Will you share some of that with us?

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCE PROGRAMS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the unprecedented crisis facing agriculture, particularly western grain farmers at the moment, why did the Minister of Agriculture not announce programs for this year at the same time as he made his belated announcement earlier today with regard to last year's western grain stabilization plan?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have a little difficulty following the logic of the Hon. Member's question, but perhaps that is not unique. A couple of hours ago my colleague, the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, announced the largest interim payment in the history of the country under the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Mr. Axworthy: For last year's crops.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: For the benefit of my colleague, that was a payment of $580 million. It was possible for us to make that interim payment because of a decision taken by this Party and this Government to amend the Act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WESTERN GRAIN INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has told us that the payment was of that magnitude because of last year's situation. Now that we have the largest crisis in agriculture in the country, why will the Minister not announce what is needed for the western grain industry this year? What is he waiting for?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the last 18 months the Government has taken well over 200 initiatives—

Mr. Ouellet: No, no. Last week it was 100.

Mr. Wise: —which supplied over $4 billion to the agri-food industry.

Mr. Ouellet: What happened over the weekend?

Mr. Wise: About $2 billion of that was directed to western Canada. That is the record.

Mr. Boudria: It's a record of broken promises.

Mr. Wise: It's not a record of broken promises. If anyone is an expert on broken promises, it is the Hon. Member who sits across the way.

PETRO-CANADA

SENATE COMMITTEE EVIDENCE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. The Minister has frequently stated that the oil companies should be reducing prices and giving consumers a break. How can she explain the evidence of George and Cora McAra of Gravenhurst, Ontario, who today told a Senate committee that Petro-Canada not only padlocked their gas pumps when they tried to lower prices, but was in fact, in a general way, forcing prices up rather than down?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add to the answer which I have given before to that Member in this House. This is an issue between Petro-Canada and its agents with which it has contracts. I suggest that the Member address his question to Petro-Canada.

[Translation]

INQUIRY HOW GOVERNMENT WILL HELP CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. How does the Government intend to help consumers, if it removes the petroleum revenue tax and in its stead introduces a tax of two or three cents per litre of gas for the refineries, as reported in the press?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): That is not true, Mr. Speaker.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ASSISTANCE FOR OFFICIAL LANGUAGE MINORITY GROUPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, about official languages: "Alliance Quebec and Francophones outside Quebec criticize Ottawa's failure to act"; "Ottawa has failed to consult us on reforms: language minorities"; "Bilingualism: exasperation with Ottawa's hesitant attitude". Here is my question, Mr. Speaker.

When is this Government going to deal with the problems that concern official language minority groups, and when can we expect some solutions to the problems in Newfoundland regarding access to French in the courts; in Ontario, regarding French television; in Manitoba, regarding services in French, and throughout the province, regarding education and Section 23? When is this Government going to act?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague is aware, a full review is being made at this time of the Official Languages Program that was set up in both languages. The Task Force that is considering these matters should soon be reporting its recommendations to Cabinet, and we shall of course act as soon as possible.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am not talking about amendments to the Official Languages Act, which is what the Minister was referring to. I am talking about existing programs this Government hesitates to support, whether it is someone who wants to make himself heard in French before the courts in Newfoundland or someone who wants to watch French television in Ontario, I want to ask the Government: When are you going to stand up and do something to help the minority groups in the provinces? I think that is pretty straightforward!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at my hon. colleague's comments, because one of the first things we did as a Government was to clearly establish our full support for official languages policies in this country in October 1984, and this is a commitment we are meeting through substantial improvements in official languages programs across the country.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY BILL—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I think she is aware that today more than 100 disabled Canadians have come to Ottawa at considerable expense to tell Parliament they want positive changes in the Employment Equity Bill. Why did the Government not keep a promise that the Prime Minister's Office made to Beryl Potter and other disabled Canadians about three weeks ago and respond to three specific requests by disabled Canadians to strengthen the Employment Equity Bill before it came back to the House at report stage?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as you will be aware, Bill C-62 on employment equity is before the House this very day for debate. We are debating a number of items. With regard to the Hon. Member's question, the Right Hon. Prime Minister responded to Miss Beryl Potter by writing to her at some length regarding the legislation. He pointed out that, among other things, the Bill itself is the first piece of legislation ever brought before any Legislature in Canada dealing with employment equity and designed to improve the employment opportunities of disabled persons, visible minorities, native people, and women.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

PUBLIC SERVICE JOBS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker—

[Editor's Note: And a spectator in the gallery having interrupted.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

Mr. Nystrom: I think she said it for me, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Then sit down.

Mr. Nystrom: Disabled Canadians have asked me to ask when the Government is going to move on its election promise to provide full-time permanent jobs in the federal Public Service for disabled Canadians? As of now, 75 per cent of its disabled workers are on term contracts.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have had since 1983 an affirmative action program in the federal Public Service to help target groups, including the disabled. Each Department is required to develop and maintain non-discriminatory practices in employment. Reports have to be submitted to Treasury Board every six months for review to ensure that the affirmative action programs are functioning properly. To add to that, we have an advisory committee on the disabled at Treasury Board which meets three times a year to ensure that the program is proceeding as it should and full opportunities are given to employees.

Mr. Nystrom: Some 75 per cent are on term contracts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Recently the Prime Minister personally met Beryl Potter and promised her and a number of other disabled people that he would personally review his Government's employment equity policy. That is why they are here demonstrating on the Hill today and that is why that voice has been crying out. There has been no answer, no reply to their phone calls—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. de Corneille: Yes. My question is to ask the Minister what she has to say now to the hundreds of thousands of disabled Canadians who have called upon the Government to act, and to say that this Government's policy is toothless and phoney.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I find it ludicrous that a member of that Party who sat in this House on the Government side for a good many years did absolutely nothing about employment equity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: At least we are doing something.

Miss MacDonald: No legislation was brought forward—

Ms. Copps: You are a phoney, Flora.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Short supplementary question.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION—CONTRACT COMPLIANCE MEASURES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the one out of eight Canadians who have a disability want to know what the Prime Minister is going to do to fulfil the promises made in the election campaign that affirmative action programs would be carried on by companies which expected to get contracts from the Government. What has happened to that election promise?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that promise will be implemented just as soon as the Hon. Member and members of his Party cease obstructing passage of Bill C-62. That is what they are doing at present. The contract compliance measures are ready to go into effect in conjunction with Bill C-62.

Mr. Ouellet: It is not in the Bill.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for international trade. Many Canadians cannot understand why the Government is planning to change generic drug laws which have saved ordinary Canadians billions of dollars since 1969. Will the Minister confirm that these plans were all part of a strategy of concessions to the U.S. to try to get a free trade arrangement from that country?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not in any position to confirm any such arrangement because there never was any such arrangement. Neither was there ever any such strategy. It exists only in the mind of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Langdon: And very much in the statement of the Shamrock Summit itself.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will he now abandon this drug sell-out to the U.S. given the assault by the U.S. Senate Finance Committee on our thrust for free trade?

Mr. Stevens: You are getting worse.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we have already announced our position and when we unveil our policy it will be in keeping with the Government's approach which is to promote investment, research and development, and to create jobs in the pharmaceutical industry.

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I am afraid I am going to have to take notice of that question. I will ensure that the Minister of Justice responds to the Hon. Member on his return with respect to the details.

HEALTH

FUNDING OF NATIVE ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The no-win situation of many native young people was shown tragically last month when six young Métis died after a drinking party. I would like to ask the Minister, when so many young native people have difficulty with alcohol and drugs, why has the Government broken the Prime Minister's promise of last year and cut $4.5 million from the Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us recognize the difficulties that both drug and alcohol abuse create in many sectors of our society. In regard to the NADAP program the Member's information is not correct. The money was not cut from NADAP. There were some projects that did not go forward. There were a number of reasons, not budgetary nearly as much as whether or not the programs could be put in place and the agreements could be met with the sponsoring groups. He should examine that before he makes the statement he did.

CONSULTATION INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The fact is that there is less money in the Estimates this year than last year for this program, and it has been cut across the country. I would like to ask the Minister how he can square those cuts with the Prime Minister's statement of last year that policies regarding aboriginal people will be made after open, public consultation, especially at the grass roots level. There has not been that kind of consultation.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is not true. There is an advisory committee of NADAP made up of native people. They meet with the officials of the Department and they occasionally meet with me. What I am saying to you is they are representing the grass roots. The statement he has made simply does not stand up to the reality of what is happening.

MULTICULTURALISM

ESTABLISHMENT OF MULTICULTURAL BUSINESS CENTRE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. At the Multiculturalism Means Business Conference this past weekend concerns were expressed regarding discrimination in business and in employment. Is the new Multicultural Business Centre that is proposed by the Minister going to deal with this problem and, if so, how and when will this new centre be established?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the conference this weekend did provide a lot of new insights and new opportunities to the ethnocultural communities in this country which prompted me to announce the formation of the new Multicultural Business Centre. We are in the process, as I pointed out over the weekend, of establishing and setting out the criteria, beginning today. I would hope that within the next two or three weeks we would begin to have them put it in place. The purpose of dealing with these well founded recommendations would be for us to be able to keep this Government's commitment to provide equality of opportunity to all Canadians in all areas.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

FINANCING OF MATANE PAPERMILL PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and it has to do with the Matane papermill.

Now that Norwegian Sauburgs company officials have received the federal-provincial draft agreement spelling out the terms and conditions—it was sent to them by Quebec Minister John Caccia—can the Minister tell us if he will officially sign the agreement on behalf of the federal Government so that we will finally know whether or not the Government will participate financially in this project?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, I spoke to Mr. Etholn, Chairman of Saugbrugs, the Norwegian company, earlier today, and he indicated that not only had he not received the draft agreement the Hon. Member is referring to, but he had not heard that it was coming. In fact he did not know who I was referring to when I said: "I presume you received Mr. Ciacca's letter".

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT EXISTS WITH PROVINCE OF QUEBEC TO HELP MATANE PAPERMILL PROJECT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should have directed my question to the Postmaster General! Another one of this Government's departments which does not work.

So I would ask the Minister if he will ... Stop attacking your colleague from another department. Can the Minister stop beating around the bush and tell us if it is true that the Governments of Canada and Quebec have agreed to support the proposed Matane papermill? Yes or no, not maybe. What is the answer?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated several times before, the company in Norway—and this was reiterated again today when I spoke to Mr. Etholn about this matter—says that they cannot deal with the Canadian project until some time after April 24 when they will know who is in control of the company. They say at the present time their president and the board members are tied up on the rather hostile take-over bid that they are trying to fend off. Therefore they cannot consider any proposal from Canada until some time later this month or early in May.

We, as I have indicated before, at the federal level are very interested in a comparatively large project for Matane. That has been our position and will continue to be our position.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

SIZE OF PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Western Grain Stabilization Act has been in place for ten years and the announcement made this week indicates that there has been, in the last year, a $600 million shortfall in the income of grain producers. Does the Minister recognize that this pay-out is not going to help the income projections of those farmers, and that they need operating loans even if that money is out there?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not see how the Hon. Member, having the background and the knowledge of the industry that he does, can stand here in the House and indicate that an interim payment of some $580 million is not going to be of assistance to western farmers at this time. That is just sheer nonsense. My reading of the situation is that, indeed, it is. It is not enough, we admit that.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Will the Minister make sure the farmers do have enough money to get into operation this year? Will the Government make an announcement of deficiency payments which will give them enough money so the bankers and they themselves know they will have enough at the end of the year to make it worth-while planting this year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that it is impossible for me, as Minister of Agriculture, at the moment to stand here and make that commitment. I remind him of the commitments that we made and the action that we have taken since we have assumed office. I also remind him of the response by the Prime Minister a few weeks ago when he indicated this Government has passed more agricultural legislation and pumped more money into the agricultural sector than any other sector, with the exception of the gas and oil industry. He recognized that farmers have urgent and burning problems. The action that we have taken is not enough and we are quite prepared to do more. Those are the words of the Prime Minister. If that is not a commitment to the industry, I don't know what is.

FINANCE

ELIMINATION OF PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX—COST TO TREASURY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. Since the Government is negotiating with Alberta an early end to the PGRT, will the Minister tell the House how he proposes, or how she proposes, to recoup the $2 billion in revenue that this will cost?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take notice of that question and refer it to my hon. colleague, who, I am sure, will be in a position to give an answer to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Next question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

EMPLOYMENT

EXPENDITURES OF JOB DEVELOPMENT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I would like to know whether it is true that she has failed to spend all of the money that was allocated for job development in Manitoba during the last fiscal year. If it is true that those unspent moneys will be returned to the general revenue for deficit reduction purposes, how can the Minister explain that fact in light of the Prime Minister's commitment during the election that there would be no cut-backs in those areas that impact upon the lives of ordinary working Canadians?

• (1450)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will recognize that lapses are part of the ongoing administration. I can assure him that lapses have happened every year in the past, and that the lapses this year are consistent with the pattern in other years.

In the meantime I want to assure the Hon. Member that what we have been able to do that is different from the past is introduce multi-year funding into the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Canadian Jobs Strategy so that we will continue to approve projects on an ongoing basis as they come forward.

Mr. Keeper: Canadians elected a new Government to change the pattern, not to continue the errors of the past.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—CARRY-OVER FUNDING

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not carry over the unspent moneys from last year into this year so that those Manitobans who need work can have work?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is in place and working well. Projects are continuously being approved from the funding for 1986-87. We have seen a tremendous response to the program itself and its various components.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that indeed this is a successful program and I hope he will give it his support.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

LUBICON INDIAN BANK CLAIM—THREAT OF WINTER OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he aware that failure to settle the legitimate and outstanding claim of the Lubicon Indian Band in Alberta is attracting increasingly unfavourable international attention? There is even growing talk in Europe about boycotting the 1988 Winter Olympics. Does the Minister not agree that now is the time to honour the commitment to the Lubicon Indian people and not allow this claim to remain unsettled any longer?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I beleive all Members of the House would want to join me in indicating to all participating countries in the 1988 Winter Olympics that we know they will be a success and that this issue is not related to the Olympics. In the past these kinds of political issues have too often been linked to the Olympic movement and we would not want to see it happen in Calgary in 1988.

The Hon. Member should be aware that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been working on this issue and has taken it on as a personal issue which he wants to resolve. I will pass the Hon. Member's representations on to the Minister.

I think the premise that the Hon. Member is presenting is unfair to the Minister and to the actions he has taken so far.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO RESOLUTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he use the influence of his office and provide some effective leadership so that this outstanding aboriginal claim can be settled? I want him personally to make a commitment now that he will take some part in this and help to get it resolved.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made very firm commitments at the last conference regarding constitutional and aboriginal rights. He wants to resolve these issues. Another conference was scheduled for 1987 and the commitments have been made directly by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and other members of the Government.

I repeat what I said to the Hon. Member in regard to the specific case. He knows that the Minister has worked very carefully on this case. The issue before us concerns who will be at the negotiating table. If we can deal with that matter, the issue can be resolved. I know that the Minister wants to resolve it very quickly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CIA-FUNDED BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Documents which were published today reveal that the Canadian Government was not only aware of but collaborated closely with the United States Central Intelligence Agency in secret brain-washing experiments at McGill University in the mid-1950s. In view of the fact that the Canadian victims of this outrage are seeking justice in United States courts today, will the Deputy Prime Minister agree to co-operate fully with their U.S. attorney and immediately make public the George Cooper report on this very serious matter?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Justice, I will advise the Hon. Member that the Minister is presently seized of this report and is studying it. It is quite voluminous and when he has completed his review he will be reporting in due course.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF COOPER REPORT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Government has had this report for some time. I seek a commitment from the Minister that the Canadian Government will stop playing patsy to the United States Government and stand up for Canadian citizens. I ask him very specifically if he is prepared to give a commitment to the House and the victims of these brain-washing experiments that the George Cooper report will in fact be made public?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said in response to the first question. The Minister is presently studying the report. He will report back on it in due course.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has been studying the Cooper report for more than three weeks. If in fact the Cooper report corroborates reports directly linking the Canadian Government to the CIA brainwashing experiments, will the Minister tell the House if the Canadian Government will offer full and adequate compensation to the victims?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member is making some assumptions. There is no evidence to that effect before the House at this time.

I can only repeat that the Minister is studying the report. When he has completed that review he will report to us in due course.

CONTENT OF REPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had the report in his possession for more than three weeks. It is quite clear that he can table it. If the Cooper report corroborates press statements, which have not been denied by the Government, will the Government offer full and adequate compensation instead of forcing Canadians to seek justice through American courts?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member has repeated her original question. I suggest that it is completely hypothetical. We have to wait until the report has been reviewed and the Hon. Minister of Justice makes his report.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF ICEBREAKER

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He is undoubtedly aware that last September the Government promised to have a Polar Class 8 icebreaker built in response to the concern of Canadians about the assertion of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. When will the tender for the construction of this vessel be accepted so that workers can get busy at construction of this Polar Class 8 icebreaker?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only advise the Hon. Member that this is a subject currently before the Cabinet for consideration. I am sure that he would be delighted with the progress that is being made.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I am not yet delighted. This question has taken too many months of study and I am still waiting assurances.

FUNDING OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure us and all Canadians that the Government will find the money to get this project under way so that Arctic sovereignty will be defended by means of a vessel and not just by Bills in the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, major projects require lengthy deliberations. I can assure the Hon. Member that, as my hon. colleague here has suggested, the Government is breaking ice on that subject.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED SALE OF TELEGLOBE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Teleglobe is a very profitable high-tech, well managed jewel of a Crown corporation that the Minister is looking to auction off to the highest bidder. Will the Minister undertake to protect this high-tech Montreal based firm by assuring that only Canadian companies committed to maintaining the Montreal operation will be entertained and considered as purchasers?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this question is very similar to others that were raised earlier. I have always indicated that we would entertain bids from Canadians and would anticipate that, after privatization, the majority ownership of Teleglobe would certainly be Canadian.

• (1500)

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, he did not respond to the question on Montreal based firms,

INTERNATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS MONOPOLY OF TELEGLOBE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): While he is busy improvising these auction sales, can the Minister assure us that, in the negotiations, he will see to it that Teleglobe maintains in Montreal a lasting and permanent monopoly over Canada's international communications?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there has never been any question but that Teleglobe after privatization would remain, as far as its head office is concerned, in Montreal. In relation to the main thrust of the Hon. Member's question, I want to assure her that Teleglobe, after privatization, will remain an entity, hopefully, which will become more and more active in the field in which it has been so active up to the present time.

Points of Order

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre has indicated he wishes to raise a point of order arising out of Question Period.

[Translation]

POINTS OF ORDER

SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I tried to ask a supplementary, and I know there is a very long tradition of allowing supplementaries even when the Minister to whom the previous question was put is absent. In fact, my question was directed to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and dealt with the same subject. It concerned the Government's policy on bilingualism, which was the subject of my first question. And even if my first question was intended for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), I submit, with all due respect, for the Chair, that I had the right to ask my supplementary, to demonstrate its validity even without the answer to the previous question.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful for the Hon. Member's representions. I suggest in that situation he should start with the question which goes to the Minister who is present. The Hon. Member knows my difficulty in this matter. I have indicated to the House before that I have some problem—how shall I say this? This particular speaker has been reminded ad nauseam that it is the Speaker's responsibility entirely with regard to supplementary questions. I think I have to say that it does seem difficult to me to grant a supplementary question when all that has happened in the Government benches is that the question has been taken as notice.

Does the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) have a separate point of order?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): It is a similar point of order, Mr. Speaker, on which I would appreciate your guidance. I understand the point that if there has been no answer, it may not seem logical to have a supplementary question. However, on past occasions what has been accepted in the House is a statement such as: "Since notice has been taken of that part of my question, could you also take notice of something else?" That is what I would have wished to add today, if that had been possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order. These are not in fact points of order. As the Hon. Member knows, they are representations to the Chair, and I accept them as such. However, I think my view is pretty well known on this matter, although I would be happy to discuss these matters again.

DISABLED VISITORS TO PARLIAMENT HILL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Chair has anything to report with respect to the point raised last week by the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille). It was with respect to access to the Chambers by the disabled because—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That matter was raised this morning at 11 o'clock and was responded to in the House.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 8 (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Speaker: Before we resume debate I think I must deal with the procedural arguments. I listened carefully this morning to the procedural comments made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I now wish to make a final ruling, having expressed my gratitude to them for their contribution.

The Chair has no doubt that Motion No. 10A, as a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause of this Bill, is out of order. The Parliamentary Secretary has argued that Motions Nos. 13A and 15 are consequential to Motion No. 10A and, therefore, should also be ruled out of order. Since I intend to deal with those motions later on in my ruling, I will say nothing further at the moment.

The Parliamentary Secretary also argued that Motion No. 21A is enlarging the powers of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. The effect of Motion No. 21A is to make certain documents available to the Human Rights Commission on request. The Chair cannot in the context of this Bill envisage this amendment as an enlargement of the powers of the Commission and will, therefore, allow the said motion to be put to the House.

In summary, as I indicated to the House on Thursday last, Motions Nos. 3A, 4, 5A, 6, 10, 19, 19A, 20B, 23, 28, 29 and 33A are out of order and will be dropped from this day's Notice Paper.

The Chair is also ready to inform the House of the result of the private representations it has received on the motions that were moved and defeated in committee. Those motions are the following:

Motions Nos. 2A, 9, 11A, 13A, 14A, 15, 16A, 20A, 22, 24, 25A, 26A, 31 and 36A.

After consultation, I have decided to select for debate Motions Nos. 11A, 14A, 16A, 24, 25A and 26A. They will be grouped and voted on as follows: Motion No. 11A will be debated and voted on separately; Motion No. 14A will be grouped for debate with Motion No. 12A but will be voted on separately; Motion No. 16A will be debated and voted on separately; Motions Nos. 24, 25A and 26A will be grouped for debate with Motion No. 27A with separate votes on each of the said motions; Consequently, Motions Nos. 2A, 9, 13A, 15, 20A, 22, 31 and 36A will not be put to the House and will be dropped from this day's Notice Paper.

The House should know that in selecting motions already dealt with in committee at this time, the Chair has borne in mind the fact that all the motions in amendment to Bill C-62 were on the Notice Paper before the provisional Standing Order 114(10) was adopted.

Resuming debate on Motion No. 8.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might prevail upon the Chair; in the future when extensive rulings are being made perhaps the Table could provide us with a copy of the ruling in order that we could follow it?

Mr. Speaker: I apologize. Normally that is our practice, as the Hon. Member knows. I thought it had been circulated. It turns out that it had been prepared but because of a change in language which I added at the last minute before Question Period, it only reached my hand a few moments ago. Normally, absolutely that would be our process.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in the ruling you just made, the second paragraph, you refer to Motion No. 10A. In my Order Paper there is no such Motion No. 10A. I do not know what you are referring to. Could there be a typographical error?

Mr. Speaker: In Parliament, anything is possible.

I can see the confusion. The Hon. Member should know that Motion No. 10A which I referred to is Motion No. 10A in the original Order Paper which was put to the House and was ruled out of order earlier. The Parliamentary Secretary argued earlier today that two motions which were still available were consequential to that motion. That was his argument for Motions Nos. 13A and 15 if I remember correctly. The Chair indicated that it was dealing with the admissibility on procedural grounds of Motions Nos. 13A and 15 on the basis of their having been presented in committee, as a prior condition.

Resuming debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before we rose for luncheon, I had reviewed, at least in part, the record of the Public Service in respect to the application of affirmative action and what little success it has achieved, in particular, with respect to the implication of affirmation action programs for visible minority groups. Of course, it has already been said that in spite of a claim to affirmative action programs for the disabled, some 75 per cent of federal employees who have supposedly benefited from that program are on term or temporary employment. Similarly, where women have been the subject of what might be deemed a more effective affirmative action program, there is a considerable record of deficiency, a lack of uniformity and a lack of understanding of exactly what steps have been pursued in each department. In the last year in particular I have received complaints from members of the visible minority population with respect to the treatment of their job applications and, once employed, the failure to promotion which remind one of the experiences of so many minority group members in attempting to obtain jobs in the private sector. These are the types of experiences which led to studies by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations on discrimination in employment which were reported from Toronto. These reports indicated that visible minority group members have about one chance in three as compared to white applicants to obtain employment in that city. I have described that city previously as one which has a record of inter-racial understanding. On that basis it must disturb us all in respect to the situation which might exist elsewhere.

• (1510)

If there is any doubt of the need for affirmative action in the Public Service, one need only take note of the recent formation of a visible minority caucus in the Public Service of Canada which records a very serious situation evolving with respect to visible minority employees of the federal Government. This is as a result of the failure to have a strong affirmative action program, as well as the recent spate of lay-offs and the promise of further lay-offs in the Public Service. What is being said is that the old record of last hired and first fired is being played again in the federal Public Service. As lay-offs are occurring it is being said that since visible minority group members have been more recently employed they are experiencing lay-offs. More important, and I think more serious, are mounting complaints that visible minority group employees are being subjected to re-evaluation with respect to merit. They are having their grades altered in such a way as to promise the almost certain outcome that they will be laid off in the near future when the lay-offs penetrate into the departments involved in this Government effort to cut expenditures by dismissing employees.

There is also increasing concern among those seeking promotion that because of the threat of lay-offs, the lack of effective affirmative action and a lack of sensitivity, members of visible minority groups who are employees of the Government are becoming very concerned about the lack of effective protection for what status they have so far achieved. This is a record which is similar to that in the private sector.

It is clear that the amendment which has been proffered by the New Democratic Party should be postively entertained. It should be adopted to ensure that the federal Public Service is included in the legislation. If it is not, then members of the target groups, whether they be women, the disabled, visible minorities or natives, will be subject to the same types of threats, exclusions and inhibitions with respect to promotions and hiring as they are subjected to in the private sector.

I suppose there is one argument for excluding members of the Public Service from the legislation. We have been over and over this story. It is that it will do the target groups no good, even within the Public Service, if all we are to do is determine their numbers without having a positive affirmative action program or employment equity program in place which seeks to achieve targets and which has firm timetables. To include the Public Service within the legislation, however limited it may be, will at least provide some degree of security. Future Governments will not be able to turn back the clock to beyond a point which is improved to some slight degree, even though the types of targets and timetables which we would desire are not there. Beyond that, we can at least expect that the process carried out by means of the Treasury Board guidelines will proceed to establish targets and timetables, even if the private sector is not subject to the same types of provisions.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. colleague for stating the case as clearly and as fairly as he has. Certainly, we all understand and know the need for more participation at all levels of our society with respect to the full range of our potentiality. We will never really achieve our full potential as a nation until all of our citizens are brought into the vortex of all of our opportunities.

I am in somewhat of a dilemma. On the one hand I am told how the Bill about which I am so excited does not have enough teeth. On the other hand, in an area where we have already a stronger program in effect, that is, the federal guideline on affirmative action in the Public Service, the Hon. Member is now almost asking us to back-track and include it in a voluntary program. The Hon. Member will probably agree with the effectiveness of that program, certainly with respect to how all Canadians will recognize the need to make use of all of the energy of our society.

That being said, what I want to put on record is that I am totally against Motion No. 8. It has the effect of proposing that the Bill apply to all federal government departments and corporations as defined in the Financial Administration Act. Under Treasury Board direction, the employment equity program is mandatory. Therefore, this Bill excludes those departments and corporations. The Treasury Board has the authority under the Financial Administration Act to direct the personnel practices of these departments and corporations. The Treasury Board has directed departments and corporations to implement affirmative action since 1983. The March 8, 1985, announcement on employment equity reiterated that directive and clarified that the Public Service Affirmative Action Program was designed to achieve employment equity.

Under the Public Service Employment Equity Program, departments and corporations develop employment equity plans. The Treasury Board examines and approves those plans annually, which plans are available to the public. Departments and corporations submit annual reports of their results to the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board prepares an annual report on results. The report is made public. Enforcement procedures operate in a manner similar to that for Bill C-62.

As the Canadian Human Rights Commission testified before the legislative committee, it has access to the employment equity plans and the results of departments and corporations and can initiate an investigation if necessary. I quote from the proceedings of the legislative committee on December 19, 1985, at which Mr. Cocksedge of the Canadian Human Rights Commission said:

> —the Treasury Board has been fairly rigorous in the review of those plans. Some have been bounced back to the departments and the numbers significantly changed—there is a very clear accountability line.

The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) asked the following question:

> Just to be clear, you do have access both to the data and the action plans?

Mr. Cocksedge said yes.

• (1520)

Treasury Board employment equity directives apply to federal Departments and Departmental corporations listed as Schedules "A" and "B" in the Financial Administration Act. Bill C-62 does not apply to some Departments and corporations and I could deal a little further with that. However, all I really want to say at this point is that we want to see more visible minorities in highly visible positions of Government, not only in federal Government but in provincial and municipal Governments, as well as all of the agencies they serve, to say nothing of industry and commerce. It is the responsibility of this Government, the agencies and all other Governments to create that environment for opportunity.

We are fighting for the strength of Canada and its people, not the wealth of its resources. We are fighting for human resources above all. The message we are sending out loud and clear today is that with employment equity, with the program we are putting into effect and with the management of the 1983 federal Public Service guidelines which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and his consultative committee will continue to pursue, this program will have benefits and will bring about the participation of all the target groups. Therefore, I see no reason to weaken our existing position on the Public Service when my hon. friend is not even as sure as we are that the voluntary affirmative action program is all that Canadians are waiting for.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary. Because of the seriousness and importance of his remarks, I think it is worth while to put on record my views on this amendment which would strike out lines 13, 14 and 15 of Bill C-62, thereby including Government Departments in this Bill.

The Parliamentary Secretary has made the case that the exclusion of Government Departments in the Bill as it now reads is possibly justifiable since there are affirmative action programs in the Public Service and, as I said this morning when I was speaking to amendment No. 1, the Treasury Board does have a program in place and it is working. It is true that the example set by the public sector in dealing with employees since 1981-82 has been getting better and the public sector is trying its best to answer some of the pre-occupations of the four target groups, women, visible minorities, the handicapped and native people. However, it is because sometimes politicians like to fiddle with legislation that we are asking that the Government's program be entrenched in the legislation so that the public sector would be able to preach by example to the private sector. The Government should not ask the private sector to be subject to a law against discrimination in employment practices while the Government itself is not. In order to be fair to the private sector, the Government should accept graciously that it should also be included in the legislation so there is the appearance of fairness and justness.

[Translation]

That the appearance of justice and an element of fairness be perceived and understood by everyone.

Mr. Speaker, the provincial public sector, for instance, should be urged to follow the example of the federal Government. That is one of the things we hope to achieve, namely, that the provinces, which are I believe responsible for 80 per cent of Canadian workers, will emphasize employment equity and fairness in their policies.

Hon. Members will recall that the Affirmative Action Program, when it was at the developmental stage in 1982, was aimed at introducing affirmative action to various pilot departments. Hon. Members will recall this did not start with a huge comprehensive program but with pilot projects in a number of departments, and subsequently, these programs spread to other departments. This initiative was taken under the Liberal Government, and it was not until after the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was adopted, and especially Section 15, that the Government asked Judge Abella to proceed with a thorough study of the application of the employment equity principle, to find out whether it was possible to expand this concept to the private sector. And Judge Abella herself made the recommendation in her report that the federal Government should included into and come under the legislation. So this was not our idea. Judge Abella, an expert in this field, chaired a committee which sat for a year or more and whose report was tabled in the House in 1984, recommending that the federal Government and all departments be included in the legislation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if we are to follow the kind of logic to which I am used, if the expert tells us it should be included in the legislation, if logic dictates that to set the example it is imperative that the private sector have the impression of being on the same wavelength as the public sector, in the sense that the public sector does not do anything which is not expected of the private sector, or vice versa, it seems normal to me that we include departments as defined in the Financial Administration Act. Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length about that definition, how a corporation or a department can be defined so that the provisions of the Financial Administration Act do not apply to Crown corporations, not to mention other statutes which are amended as a consequence of that. Mr. Speaker, there would be practically no end to examples where the governor in council enjoys full discretion to exclude certain departments from Schedule B. Not all departments are covered by this exclusion provision contained in Bill C-62. No. I would imagine that some Crown corporations are affected by this measure and, hopefully, they will obey the law and abide by its provisions.

In 1983, Mr. Speaker, and I am saying this because it is important, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), who was then President of the Treasury Board, officially launched the Affirmative Action Program in the public service. The program was administered by the Public Service Commission and was aimed at promoting equal access to public jobs for all Canadians. The main objectives—I will repeat them, because they are very important—are: first, to help women plan their careers and maximize their opportunities for employment in the Public Service of Canada. Second, to promote equal access to jobs in the Public Service for native people, including Indians, Métis, non-status Indians and Inuit. Third, to increase participation by the physically and mentally disabled in the Public Service.

Mr. Speaker, all this to try and set an example, and act like a dedicated employer, a good corporate employer, by trying to set an example to the rest of the industry, by creating affirmative action programs that could, I image, be imitated by the private sector. Today, we have a Bill, the result of a Royal Commission of Inquiry chaired by Judge Abella who made a number of recommendations.

I said it with regard to Amendment No. 1 and I say it again with respect to Amendment No. 2, Mr. Speaker. It is not something we made up, it is something Judge Abella said, and I think the Government ought to listen: federal Government departments should be subject to the requirements of Bill C-62.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Motion No. 8 which would amend Bill C-62. I would like to comment on the few statements the Parliamentary Secretary made suggesting that the Government had in place an adequate affirmative action program. We recognize that the Financial Administration Act requires the Treasury Board to take some affirmative action. We also recognize that that has been put in place, but Treasury Board's policies on equity lack the force and commitment of law. The Member suggested that we would be going backwards. He said that there is no need for any Government, unless it wants to go backwards, to take away anything that is presently a policy of the Treasury Board and put in place what is in this Bill, because there is plenty of room to go beyond what this Bill does.

• (1530)

This Bill requires reports to be made and they will, therefore, be available in the House. We abhor to some extent the inadequacy of just allowing corporations affected by this Bill to report. The Bill does not force corporations to take any affirmative action. If we had Motion No. 8 in place we would be able to have a further reporting, and the requirement of that reporting would give it the status and commitment of law.

The federal Government cannot say at any time or cannot have said at any time that it is a good example of what should be done in equity employment. In the process of getting to where we are, the Government has not put in place the kind of solid requirements to make us believe that 10 years down the road we will have equality for all in employment in the federal Government any more than this Bill will force equality of employment in the corporation that will be affected by it.

Not too long ago, during the Leaders' debate in the election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment to affirmative action. In this case it was affirmative action for women. He said:

> The P.C. Party has had a long commitment to an effective affirmative action program within the federal Government to provide equal opportunity to women. Our Government will make sure the hiring and promotion practices give women the oppotunities they deserve. We will carefully and regularly monitor—

By accepting Motion No. 8, we would be sure that that monitoring was done and that reports would be available to Members of Parliament who would be part of the monitoring.

I want to put on the record for the House recommendations from the Boyer Report. Recommendation No. 60 on page 110 reads:

> We recommend that employment equity legislation apply to all federal public sector employers and to employers under federal jurisdiction, with necessary adjustments being made by regulation for small businesses and agencies.

Many witnesses told the committee that this approach was necessary. What is the Government's response to that requirement? It is almost exactly the same as the response of the Parliamentary Secretary, namely, that the Government considers it unncessary to make federal Crown Corporations subject to the legislation because Treasury Board has already taken the lead in employment equity.

If we could believe that, if we could see it happening, if we knew it was there, it would mean something, but as it is, we cannot see it. Even if this Bill is inadequate, it does require reporting at the end of the period of time in which it is to take effect. When we show the report to the world we will then be able to say, "here is an example of what we in the federal Government are doing in the civil service", because the report would be available to all.

We recognize the program that is in place, but we believe that it should be given the force and the commitment of law. It would in that process be an example to the people we are asking to provide the affirmative action in their particular corporations, and it would also provide the world with a substantial recognition of progress that has been made within the Government of Canada.

A number of organizations have made a specific request in this area. Again, many of them request action by the federal Government. The aim is not so much, if the Bill passes as it is, that the Bill give them the opportunity for jobs and further equality in employment, but rather that it show that one part of the Government was living up to its rhetoric.

There are good reasons why we think this clause should be in place and force the federal Government to abide by its own laws. Treasury Board policies are totally management controlled. If management decides it wants to have affirmative action and to operate in the particular ways suggested, it may do so. If it does not, and it appears from the past record of federal civil service that management has not indicated any particular pressing desire to abide by the regulations, management will not do so.

The Public Service Staff Relations Act, which controls a certain amount of the affirmative action program, exempts that area from collective bargaining. Consequently, that can be used for an excuse for less action than is adequate. Treasury Board guidelines were made to suggest the promoting of women to high management positions. There is a tendency for those guidelines to be used for token promotions in those areas and not to recognize the majority of the women who need to be recognized and who need jobs on an equal level with men in the community. The requirements of the Treasury Board guidelines can be fulfilled without effectively doing anything about the entire population of the workforce. The Government has taken no serious initiative to identify and eliminate systemic discrimination in the Public Service. The passage of Motion No. 8 will force the Government to study the structure and do something about it, because what it has and has not done will be publicly reported.

• (1540)

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Motion No. 8 is to eliminate certain words from the Bill in order that the Government will not be exempt from complying with the intentions of this legislation. The legislation is so lacking in teeth, compliance, and requirements, that one wonders whether it is worthwhile continuing with debate unless the Government is prepared to listen to the people who are affected by this employment equity Act, and to provide the assurances for which they ask.

It is fairly obvious why we want the Public Service to comply with this legislation. Through the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Abella Report, and the Obstacles Report, a lot of work had been done in an effort to alert, study, sensitize, and act in order to ensure that people have access to the courts to enforce their rights. Despite the fact that we have laws on the books as well as the Charter of Rights, inequities continue to exist, even in the Public Service.

As recently as March 17 I made a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 to call to the attention of the Government the fact that in 1984-85 the vast majority of disabled people hired by the Public Service Commission were hired on limited or term positions. When cut-backs come into effect, term positions are among the first to go, leaving many disabled as the first victims of unemployment. We cannot, therefore, look lightly upon this amendment.

We want to ensure that the Government is sensitized and forced to comply with the same standards with which it expects others to comply. Unfortunately, in addition to large parts of the Public Service, the House of Commons is not under the jurisdiction of this Bill. There is no provision to ensure that we practice employment equity in the House of Commons with regard to women, visible minorities, the handicapped, and native peoples.

We are addressing a serious matter. The Government should ensure that, by enshrining them in law, the provisions of this equity Act will apply to the Public Service. If another Minister, administration, or point of view comes along, these policies may be simply swept under the rug. There is no law to protect employment equity because it is simply a regulation at the present time. We are not confident that it is good enough to enforce it through regulation. It must be put into law.

We had the same argument with the Conservatives over the Constitution and the Charter of Rights. They argued that it was sufficient to leave it with British common law or tradition. We said that that was not good enough.

We have seen what happened to Japanese Canadians and what happened with the padlock laws. We have seen miscalculations and miscarriages of justice in the past. Therefore, this must be enshrined in law, in the Constitution, or in the Charter of Rights.

Now that it has been passed, our Conservative friends are hailing the Charter as part of their thinking. We had an awful battle trying to convince them that it is important to enshrine in law protection for people in order to secure their rights. Surely it is time to ensure that minority groups, the handicapped, native peoples, and women have guarantees by this time. Now that we have the guidance of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it is time to put into effect the legislation which makes the Charter something other than merely a piece of paper to which people resort in order to ensure their rights.

The Government has left the Opposition with no recourse but to fight at every level because this legislation is too weak and does not cover enough. How do we expect the provinces to pass legislation applying to provincial Public Services when the federal Government is unwilling to apply it to its own Public service? We have proposed dozens of amendments to the Parliamentary Secretary for consideration and revision. We have told him that we want a comprehensive Bill which will meet the needs of the people.

Today disabled people came to the Hill at great expense, with some pain, and with tremendous effort in order to express, in democratic fashion, their protest against the inadequacy of this Bill. They called it phoney and toothless. They are the ones who suffer. They do not want to wait for long processes to be undertaken only to discover that companies are not complying. That is not good enough.

Mr. McDermid: Where have you been for the last 20 years?

Mr. de Corneille: We must provide them with something which is concrete and immediate. My hon. colleague across the way in the Conservative Party asks what the Liberals did about this.

An Hon. Member: Good question.

An Hon. Member: We want to hear the truth. Don't lie.

Mr. de Corneille: He does not want to hear the answer. They are yelling and screaming over there. I have already cited what has been done. We had to fight them tooth and nail in order to get the Charter of Rights and Freedoms through to provide protection for these people and to ensure that at least they could go to court. The Conservative Party was kicking, screaming, yelling, attacking the Chair, and mounting every kind of obstruction to prevent the Charter of Rights and Freedoms from going through and to prevent the handicapped from having their protection and rights, at least in court. It is about time the Government straightened this out and came up with a Bill which shows its good faith and puts some action behind its pious words.

• (1550)

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 purports to deal with employment equity. As you have heard from members of my Party, it does no such thing. One aspect of the Bill, which has given rise to this motion, points out one of its major weaknesses. The Bill excludes Government Departments from the protections this Bill claims to give minority groups. I will return to that, but I specificially want to address the inequities in this Bill as they affect disabled Canadians. They are really severe. This is especially so in light of all the things we in this Party, organizations of the disabled and individuals across the country have been saying to Governments at the federal level over the years, and particularly since 1980. It was then that the former Liberal Government established the special task force on issues concerning the disabled in preparation for the International Year of the Disabled. It was recognized very quickly that the key issue—in fact it was named as such by the UN—was going to be independent living for disabled persons. This Bill does not even touch on that key area.

As weak as the Bill is, including the fact that it has specifically excluded Government Departments from its coverage, we are not even practising what we preach. In other words, despite the recommendations made in the report Obstacles, in the Abella Report and by organizations of the disabled over the years, Parliament itself is not even prepared to give leadership in this area.

The argument has been made that leadership has to be given by the public sector to encourage the private sector to open up employment opportunities for disabled Canadians. Yet this Bill, as I said, specifically excludes Government Departments and Parliament. Parliament would not be required to bring in affirmative action programs to employ the disabled. What does that say to the private sector employer? We require them to hire disabled people but we will not do it ourselves. That in essence is what we are saying to the private sector. It flies in the face of everything that has been said to Governments for at least the last six years. We do not practise what we preach.

I know that you will be interested to hear that the Coalition of Provincial Organizations for the Handicapped, COPOH, sent a questionnaire to the candidates during the last election campaign. They asked those candidates whether or not they supported the recommendations made in the Obstacles Report. One of the candidates, the then Leader of the Opposition, now the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), responded to that questionnaire and said specifically that he agreed with the recommendations in the Obstacles Report concerning employment opportunities for the disabled and the influence the Government should have on that process. Since the election, COPOH issued two responses to the Government's lack of response. They were called report cards. The first one was issued on August 14, 1985, and the second on March 14, 1986. The reason this organization was forced to issue those report cards was the lack of movement by the federal Government on promises it had made nearly 18 months ago. In the key area of employment, the COPOH report card gave the Government an F grade. On the key issue of income security, the Government got a D. On the special parliamentary committee, we got a B, and there are specific reasons why we are so high there. Human rights and freedoms got a D minus. Disabled refugees got a C. Independent living got a C minus. Transportation got a C plus. The average grade was D, for a very poor performance. That is an absolutely horrible reflection on a Government that promised so much during the election campaign while it was looking for votes. I do not think it should be satisified to respond to criticisms of the Bill by saying it does not have to do that because Treasury Board has its own affirmative action programs. Previous results from Treasury Board clearly indicate that the affirmative action program does not work.

It became very clear last month that some 76 per cent of disabled individuals hired in the federal Public Service were hired on term contracts. What that means, of course, is that when there is a shortage of work or a downsizing, when Government has made a decision to reduce the size of the federal Public Service, those term contract employees are the first ones to be let go. That is not my idea of affirmative action. For the disabled concerned, it is not simply a question of downsizing Government Departments and laying people off. For the disabled it means a threat to the security of their immediate and future income. A disabled person who has held a job for a period of time has tremendous problems earning an income after his release. Most disabled rely on a public pension, which requires that they have an income at a certain level in order to qualify. When they are laid off it could be several months before they requalify.

It seems that we, the parliamentary committee that was party to this Obstacles Report, did not do our job right the first time around. We should have policed what the federal Government was doing when it was hiring disabled individuals. I was not aware, and I know other members of the committee were not aware because I have discussed this with the members of that previous committee, that that is what the previous Government was doing. It was showing a large increase in the number of disabled individuals being hired into the Public Service. What it did not show was that they were all temporary employees.

• (1600)

I see my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I have many more points I wish to make. By the way, one of the key players on that issue, Jim Dirkson, is sitting in the public galleries, I believe, and he also may have some things to say about this subject over the next several weeks.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few brief words with respect to Motion No. 8 dealing with an amendment to this Bill, Bill C-62, the employment equity Bill. The effect of the amendment, as you know, would be to delete a particular part of the Bill, and that would in effect mean that the Bill would apply then to Government Departments. The Parliamentary Secretary has quite rightly pointed out the fact that there is already in place, and has been since, I believe, 1983, an affirmative action program in federal Departments put in place under a Treasury Board regulation which does in effect require affirmative action and includes certain targets for Departments.

The Parliamentary Secretary, I am sure, has in his possession information relating to the way in which, to date, that program has been implemented and how it has worked in the Public Service.

As a member of the Public Accounts Committee I have, in my possession, as do all members of the Public Accounts Committee, a report from Madam Huguette LaBelle, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, indicating what has happened with respect to the implementation of this program in the senior levels of the Public Service.

That report, to my mind, is rather shocking. This program has been in place since 1983. I must readily admit that there is some progress being made with respect to women. With respect to the disabled and visible minorities it appears that there has not really been much progress at all. I would like to direct my comments particularly to the visible minority category, because therein, as I understand it, lies a difficulty. In the past, all employment regulations, legislation, and all of the human rights legislation that we have had in place, have in fact said that you are not required to reveal the colour of your skin, your race or anything else. It has made it virtually impossible, when you want to implement a program of this sort, to identify, other than by looking around and just by sheer personal observation, who falls into this category of a visible minority person and who should be identified for this affirmative action program.

Perhaps, as a result of that, the program so far does not seem to have been effective at all. In fact, the figures I have seen and have in my possession indicate that there has been virtually zip as far as progress is concerned in the visible minority category in the senior area of the Public Service.

That program was put in place, as I understand, in 1983. We are down the road about three years. It is interesting to note that the Bill that is in front of us, Bill C-62, has a provision in it that provides for review. I think this is an important provision. It says in the Bill that we are not going to be satisfied to just put the law into place, Bill C-62 on employment equity, but in five years time we are going to look at it and see how it works. Then every three years thereafter we are going to take another look at it to see how it works and make sure it is doing the job it is supposed to be doing.

As far as I can see, with respect to the Treasury Board regulations, three years down the line after they were put in place they are not working. At the end of five years I definitely hope the Government will publish, if it does not start publishing immediately, reports from the Public Service Commission as to how these affirmative action reports are working in practice, and that we will be able to judge for ourselves as parliamentarians whether affirmative action is working in the Public Service under the Treasury Board guidelines. It seems to me that five years is a good review period. It is enough for the Public Service to identify the problems, get the program working and make sure that it is starting to show some effective progress.

We are running out of time, as far as a five-year review is concerned, for visible minorities and for the disabled. Although women are making some progress, I am sure that much more should and could be made. I hope that we will have a commitment from the Government sometime during this debate that, whether or not Motion No. 8 is passed—whether or not the Public Service is included in the provisions of this Bill—the Government will publish reports from the Public Service Commission on how the existing Treasury Board guideline or regulation with respect to affirmative action is working. That would enable us to take some further action if, in fact, that is not the answer. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Pornography—Request for tighter customs and excise laws; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Consumer and Corporate Affairs—Request that warning label be placed on drug ASA; and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Trade—Canada-United States negotiations—Negotiator's views on water exports.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 8 (Mr. Nystrom) (p. 12176).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): There seems to be some misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker. So perhaps it might be necessary, although not in the nature of a history lesson, to clarify and elucidate for certain Members across the floor the history of affirmative action and how we come to call this a sad day. In fact, it was a black day as the members of the handicapped community came in large numbers with black balloons and called it Black Monday. I think that is truly what it is. The Member for York East (Mr. Redway) put into focus quite well the fact that there was a need for affirmative action for women, the handicapped, native people and visible minorities. The Treasury, through the action of the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) when he was head of the Treasury Board, brought in the guidelines in 1983. At the time that those guidelines were brought in, the question was so serious and the situation of such great concern that the Abella Commission was also set into motion.

That commission carried out a mandate to study what the real problems were around what was then called affirmative action, which Judge Abella then named employment equity, but only after having studied, at great length, the particular problems that faced these particular constituencies. If the Members across the way had read the Abella Report they would know that it became quite apparent that the Treasury guidelines were not enough. They were not acting quickly enough. As the Member for York East pointed out, although women have moved forward somewhat, there has been very little forward motion for those of the other three groups who are of concern to us. The employment equity report by Judge Abella followed the 1982 Charter of Rights and Freedoms being entrenched in the Constitution guaranteeing a series of equality factors for all sectors of our society, and in particular equality for the four groups concerned. Following that, in 1983 we had the Treasury Board guideliens; in 1984 the Abella Report; and in 1985 the Equality For All Task Force went out.

Again, we learned the discrimination and difficulty with which these particular target groups in our society must live.

I will remember today as Black Monday for a long time. Members on this side of the House posed questions with respect to the demonstration by the disabled community that was taking place outside of the House. They had come into the gallery to hear the proceedings. I was saddened, disheartened and turned off by what was, without a doubt, the most inappropriate interjections on the part of the Conservative Party both during the questions from this side of the House and particularly following the interjection from the gallery by Beryl Potter, who had made a most eloquent speech on the Hill. I can accept and understand differences in the philosophical approach, particularly with respect to the economic vision of how a society should be organized, but I never would have thought it possible to witness such lack of respect and unnecessary reaction on the part of members of the Conservative Party when it comes to misery and unhappiness. I find that most regrettable.

I have already given a short history lesson about what has been done for women, visible minorities and the handicapped and the fact that many of the recommendations in a series of six reports were put into action. Subsequently, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) issued a Blue Paper entitled Declaration on the Decade of Disabled Persons 1983-1992. The issue of integrating disabled persons into our society as full partners is a fairly new phenomenon. The Prime Minister decided to issue his Blue Paper which would bring to the attention of society—particularly during the electoral period when there is a constituency which he felt could be captive—a series of wonderful pronouncements and rhetoric which essentially mean very little.

In this declaration, the Government of Canada recalled the resolutions of the United Nations General Assembly, the declaration of the United Nations on the rights of mentally retarded persons and the rights of disabled persons, and also recalled Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which prohibits discrimination on the basis of any mental or physical disability.

The Prime Minister emphasized in this declaration the objectives of the World Programme of Action and bore in mind the distinction made between impairment, disability and handicap and the resulting conclusion that a handicap is a function of the relationship between disabled persons and their environment. He bore in mind a number of other aspects of the World Programme and recognized the significant loss to the Canadian economy when the full potential and abilities of persons with disabilities are not utilized, and recognized the real cost upon the economy due to segregation. I raised that point recently when I attempted to point out that it was in the best interest of the corporate sector to include people based on their ability rather than exclude them based on their disability.

The Prime Minister went on to enunciate 11 principles, all of which are laudable in words. However, nothing has happened. Let me cite Principles Nos. 4 and 7 for the record.

Principle No. 4 states:

Persons with disabilities shall be ensured involvement in decision making which pertains to the design and organization of programs and services considered necessary for the integration of disabled persons into all facets of society. In this respect there shall be a particular emphasis on rehabilitation.

Principle No. 7 states:

The development of self-help organizations of persons with disabilities shall be encouraged so as to provide those citizens with a means of self-development and a voice of their own to articulate their needs, views and priorities.

One would presume that action would follow the articulation of these bons mots and bons voeux. Unfortunately, that is not the reality.

Today there was a most eloquent demonstration on the Hill, at a time when we are debating an amendment to Clause 3 of the Bill which in effect exempts Government Departments, the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament from the provisions of this Bill. Since these are places where disabled people could best find jobs, the Government should take the lead in this area rather than follow.

I want to read into the record what Beryl Potter said during her eloquent speech calling for understanding. She said:

When Flora MacDonald was appointed Minister of Employment, we thought things might get better. When discussions were started to legislate an Employment Equity program we were very encouraged. But that's as high as our hopes went. What came out of those talks and meetings was Bill C-62, a condescending piece of paper that has no strength—no teeth—no proper enforcement mechanism for non-compliance—no penalties. It is simply not worth the paper it is written on.

Two weeks ago, we came to Ottawa to confront Brian Mulroney. We took him by surprise and held on to his hand till we told him what we were driving 600 miles to tell him—that Bill C-62 was far too weak and could even be detrimental to disabled persons.

We asked him to take a close look at the Bill before it went through for its third reading in the House. He told us he was very open to our comments and to prove it he introduced us to his Chief Policy Advisor, Geof Norquay. He directed Mr. Norquay to have an immediate meeting with us and to report back to him. This was even brought up in the House that afternoon. He even waved to us and gave us that big smile of his as he went into the House for Question Period. The meeting lasted for half an hour. All of our concerns were recorded by Mr. Norquay, and he promised to get back to us within two weeks before Bill C-62 went in for the third reading.

We have heard nothing, they even refused to return our phone calls this week, but the Bill had its third reading last Thursday. Are we going to stand for this?

He promised to keep an open mind. He promised to take a serious look at the Bill. They promised to get back before third reading.

These promises have been broken. The Bill is nothing more than an information Bill for employers. Are we going to leave it at that or are we going to keep fighting for what we know are our rights? We must stand together and fight for a repeal of the Bill so that the necessary amendments can be made.

The disabled must stand and be counted in this country.

I finish with her last words:

So let us fight, fight, fight for our rights.

I hope that the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and those who have a possible role in the decision making will listen to that group of people in our society who need the opportunity to demonstrate how much they can help us grow, develop and become economically more viable.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this amendment is simply designed to ensure that when the federal Government enacts legislation to apply to corporations in the federally regulated private sector—even if it is weak legislation like this—it should apply to the federal Government itself.

There have been many criticisms about the mechanisms in this Bill. For example, it does not ensure effective action but simply proposes to measure what has been done. It does not even require the setting and achieving of targets.

However, the Government has told us on many occasions that it intends to follow this course of action because one must walk softly in order to achieve affirmative action for women, the handicapped, the disabled, natives and minorities. If the Government is convinced that this is the proper policy, it seems to me that at the very least it should demonstrate its conviction by ensuring that the provisions of this Bill apply to federal Government Departments. We are not talking about an insignificant number of people.

[Translation]

There are about 250,000 people in the Canadian public service, and in many cases these are women, native people, disabled persons and members of minorities who are all supposed to be covered under Bill C-62.

Now then, if the Government really intended to show it is committed to affirmative action we might suppose that the Government would want to make sure that the measure applies equally to public service employees and to other private sector employees who come under federal Government jurisdiction. Such is not the case, unfortunately.

Mr. Speaker, in this respect perhaps I might quote some of the answers given to the Saskatchewan action committee on the status of women. During the last election campaign they sent the three Party leaders a questionnaire containing eleven questions concerning women.

[English]

In response to the the questionnaire from the Saskatchewan Action Committee on the Status of Women the New Democratic Party talked about affirmative action in the Public Service in very explicit terms. I would like to put that on the record and then go to the promises made by the Conservatives and compare that with what they are doing in this particular case. We said, and I quote:

> The New Democratic Party is committed to an aggressive affirmative program within federal Government departments and Crown corporations.

This was in response to a question addressed to each Party Leader which was:

> Would you, as Prime Minister, implement and monitor for effectiveness, an aggressive affirmative action program with the Federal departments and Crown corporations?

The New Democratic Party said, and I quote:

> The current affirmative action program in the Public Service must be strengthened and subject to rigorous monitoring. The mandate of the program must be expanded beyond its focus on women already in senior management positions. We would revise the guidelines of the program to make it relevant to the 95,000 clerks and secretaries in the Public Service by including measures such as bridging positions, comprehensive skills training and a non-traditional occupations program.
> The affirmative action program for Francophones in the Public Service under the Official Languages Act resulted in equal representation for Francophones in all job categories, at all wages levels proportionate to their presence in the population—

If that is the case, why can the Government not do the same thing with respect to affirmative action for women, and in this debate I would extend that to the other groups covered by Bill C-62? We had indications that the Government saw results coming from the affirmative action program for women by the year 2000. We said that that was unacceptable and that is why we would seek to have the same results for women as have been achieved for Francophones in the civil service.

• (1620)

We called for the extension of mandatory affirmative action to Crown corporations as well as to companies in the private sector under federal jurisdiction. But all we have here is mandatory counting, nothing more. We called for the support of the establishment of targets for all affirmative action programs and stated that that should also apply to appointments to federal boards, commissions and agencies. Those were the promises the New Democrats were prepared to make and we have stood up for them during the course of this debate on Bill C-62.

The response to the questionnaire from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was, and I quote:

> The P.C. Party has had a long commitment to an effective affirmative action program within the federal Government to provide equal opportunity to women.

That is a laugh, given the way in which women are finding themselves turfed out of the Public Service because of the layoffs now taking place. The Prime Minister continued, and I quote:

> Our Government will make sure that hiring and promotion practices give women the opportunities they deserve.

Women feel, Mr. Speaker, that they are getting the short end of the stick right now and I suppose they have to conclude that those are the opportunities they deserve as far as the Progressive Conservative Government is concerned. The Prime Minister continued:

> We will carefully and regularly monitor those practices because too often in the past, women have not been considered, even though there are competent and capable women available.
> We support the need for effective human resource planning within the federal bureaucracy which includes goals and objectives to achieve parity for women at all levels if Government operations commensurate with thier skills and expectations. Numerical goals are one of several measures required. Training and retraining are others.

That policy left a fair amount to be desired. Nevertheless, it is a lot more explicit than what is occurring in Bill C-62. What it comes down to is that not only does Bill C-62 not involve setting goals and objectives that the now Prime Minister promised during the election campaign, but it does not even apply to federal Government Departments unless the Government is prepared to accept the amendment which is now being proposed and which is currently under debate. I find that disillusioning and disappointing. Of course, what applies with respect to women, applies equally to the other minorities which are affected.

Experience has shown that we cannot achieve equality with respect to disadvantaged groups just by means of pious wishes, nor can we achieve it by pious counting, which is now the current Government's position. I would like to suggest that this question is going to come back and haunt the Progressive Conservative Party, as will many other things, in the course of the next federal election campaign. The Government made promises because of the commitment, which I think is genuine, of the wife of the Prime Minister, the wife of the Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and some other people in the Conservative Party. There was an impression that the Conservatives were serious about affirmative action. Now we know it is not. I say to the Minister of State for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) as well as to other Conservatives, this is going to come back and haunt their Party.

[Translation]

This is going to haunt you in the province of Quebec, because people were under the impression during the last election campaign that the Conservative Party would not be satisfied only with making broad statements on the status of women, as private companies were doing, but would fully support affirmative action, would implement and enforce equality legislation for visible minorities which are discriminated against, such as women in the Public Service and the private sector.

I will tell the Minister directly and openly that this Bill is doing nothing in this respect. The fact that it does not apply to the federal Departments which are specifically excluded, as opposed to Crown Corporations, which are included, is a clear proof that the Government has forgotten its commitments of the last election campaign.

[English]

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that encouragement, incentives, good wishes and those kinds of things are simply not good enough. Today, at a time when we are suffering enormous cutbacks in the Public Service, it is the people who are in the disadvantaged groups who are most likely to be victimized by the cut-backs. They are the term employees who cannot get full-time employment. They are the people who, for various reasons, are judged to be lacking in merit and, therefore, are dumped because of the reverse order of merit system which is applied within the Public Service. I note that the Minister of State for External Relations is making some notes. I hope she will rise and try to defend the indefensible with respect to this particular Bill. I hope she will explain.

[Translation]

Why is the Government not making sure that this Bill applies to Public Service employees? Why continue to discriminate against people in the Public Service? Why is not the Government showing leadership to the private sector by making sure that this Bill, however weak it may be, applies both to the Public Service and the private sector?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 8. Mr. Nystrom, seconded by Mr. Althouse, moves

That Bill C-62; be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 13 to 15 at page 2.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 11A.

Mr. Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 24 at page 2 the following:

"reasonable accommodation" includes, without restriction, the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups, including the special needs of a qualified disabled person, through provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to add to the Bill a definition of "reasonable accommodation". The Bill already uses the term "reasonable accommodation" in line 37 of page 2 in the section which deals with the obligations of the employer with respect to employment equity. In summary, Clause 4 states that an employer shall implement employment equity by:

(b) instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodation as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation—

In the Bill there is already an imposition on employers to implement reasonable accommodation. However, nowhere does it state what "reasonable accommodation" means. When witnesses appeared before the legislative committee, in particular those from associations for the disabled, they argued strongly for a definition of reasonable accommodation. They said that if there were not such a definition included then it is likely that the type of employment equity for which they are looking would not be achieved. The definition is almost verbatim to what was recommended to us by COPOH, and other organizations of the disabled in committee. It reads as follows:

"reasonable accommodation" includes, without restriction—

The words "without restriction" are very important because they mean that the definition is not limited to what we are suggesting. It continues:

—the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups, including the special needs of a qualified disabled person, through provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services.

It is my understanding that disabled groups have recommended to other parliamentary committees, in particular the Subcommittee on Equality Rights and the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, which sat in the previous Parliament, that this definition of "reasonable accommodation" be accepted in our legislation and that a policy with respect to it be adopted.

While this amendment is a rather technical one, it is extremely important for the target groups, in particular the disabled people who are supposed to be helped by this legislation. So when it is said in Clause 4 that an employer shall implement equity by "instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodation as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation" we will then know what is meant and progress will be made.

There are others here, including members of my own Party, who are more au courant with the technicalities involved. I plead with the Government to accept this definition. I cannot understand why it will not accept it since it is so important. When the amendment was made in committee and the Conservatives voted against it, they said it was too limiting. The words "without restriction" have now been added. Thus members of the Conservative Party can no longer use that argument. It will not limit. It will give guidance to employers, to the Government and to the Canadian Human Rights Commission when it makes judgments as to whether or not progress is being made in terms of employment equity.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will take this request seriously. I wish to repeat that many of these amendments are not amendments which we in the Opposition have drafted simply to embarrass the Government. Nearly every one of these amendments come from the target groups which are supposed to be helped by the legislation. They come either from the disabled, the visible minorities, natives or women's associations. They are the ones who have told us time and time again in committee that they want amendments such as this. They are the ones who have told us that they will not be happy with the Bill unless such amendments are made to it. When I put forward amendments such as this I am not doing so in a partisan way. I am doing so in order to achieve something that is required and needed by the target groups.

I ask that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister, who was here earlier but who is no longer here, take this into consideration and not respond in a defensive or partisan way to our amendments. The amendments have been made with great feeling, sincerity and intelligence by the very people who are suffering from discrimination. We are their instruments in putting them forward. I hope that they will be listened to by members of the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words to support the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). It is a very important motion for handicapped people in this country.

Motion 11A provides a definition of "reasonable accommodation", Mr. Speaker.

[English]

This is very important for disabled Canadians. As the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has already pointed out, under the definition of employment equity there is a reference to "reasonable accommodation". What the motion before us calls for is a definition of "reasonable accommodation". I wish to read to the House and to members of the Conservative Party the definition of "reasonable accommodation" which is so important to disabled Canadians. I plead with them to include it in the Bill. It states:

"reasonable accommodation includes, without restriction, the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups, including the special needs of designated groups, including the special needs of a qualified disabled person, through provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services.

This is what disabled Canadians want. This is what they have said to us as parliamentarians. This is what they have said to members of the Conservative Party. It seems to me that members of the Conservative Party said in September of 1984 that if they were elected they would listen to the people of Canada.

Bill C-62 was designed with four different target groups in mind. Why does the Government not listen to disabled Canadians? I am sure that a long-time Member of this House such as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) must be getting pretty restless with his own Cabinet and Government when he sees disabled Canadians come to Parliament Hill asking for things such as this and the Minister says no. He must get pretty frustrated when he sees, as we saw today, 100-plus disabled Canadians come to Parliament Hill. In this very institution they found out that accommodation is not as great as it should be. There are only 10 places for wheelchairs in the galleries. Some people who were in wheelchairs had to be helped by the guards into seats in order for them to be able to watch the proceedings of this place. The Bill before us does not even include Parliament Hill. It also excludes the Public Service of Canada. Is it any wonder Beryl Potter interjected from the gallery today during Question Period to say that the Government had not done enough? Is it any wonder that she feels betrayed by her politcal Party? She has said publicly that she is a supporter of the Conservative Party. There are not washrooms on the same floor as the galleries to accommodate persons in wheelchairs. That is not reasonable accommodation. In the House of Commons, there are washrooms with doors that are not wide enough for people in wheelchairs to get into them. We do not have enough ramps, wide enough elevators or the facilities required.

• (1640)

Mr. Thacker: Why did you keep the Grits in for so many years?

Mr. Nystrom: That is a very good question. That excuse is wearing rather thin. That is the only excuse members of the Conservative Party have been able to come up with in the last 18 or 20 months. They blame everything on the Liberal Party.

Mr. Merrithew: Blame it on you.

Mr. Nystrom: I'm not a Liberal. The people of Canada voted for the Liberal Party just like they voted on September 4, 1984, for the Conservative Party. In fact, some of those disabled Canadians worked and organized campaigns for the Conservative Party of Canada, but when they come here they get snubbed by the Conservative Party of Canada. The Hon. Member from Alberta may laugh if he wants, but he is not a disabled Canadian. Perhaps he does not understand what some of those people go through.

Mr. Thacker: Why so late? Where were you in the last 15 years? You haven't said a word in 15 years.

Mr. Nystrom: Where were we? We were proposing amendments on behalf of disabled Canadians. Motion 11A contains their definition. In a smart—I had better watch my language in the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Smart-ass.

Mr. Nystrom: It was said by an Hon. Member back there. Perhaps old loose lips across the way can rise to say why he is saying no to disabled Canadians. He could tell us why he is saying no and why he is laughing at them.

I was just saying that today was a good example of why we need "reasonable accommodation" defined in law. Right here on Parliament Hill we do not have reasonable accommodation for disabled Canadians, and a Tory from Alberta laughs about that. It is utterly disgusting and disgraceful that that could happen in this country in the 20th century.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just happened to be in the Chamber listening to the Hon. Member, who usually understands the appropriateness of relevancy in debate and obeys that particular constraint on us. He is making reference to the facilities of the precincts of the House of Commons. As the Hon. Member and you will know, Your Honour, the Board of Internal Economy is in control of the facilities and operates the budget for the House and is composed of representatives from the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party under the new arrangement. It seems to me that if the Hon. Member has complaints about the facilities in the House, he might use the appropriate opportunity to bring those complaints forward through his caucus representative and make sure that these matters are addressed in the proper forum.

The legislation is one thing, but the precincts of this place are a matter for the Board of Internal Economy. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has long been a proponent of having all-Party representation on the Board of Internal Economy. Because the matter has not been raised as yet, to my knowledge, by the Hon. Member's Party except on the floor of the House of Commons, perhaps he will bring it to the attention of the proper forum so that we can take a legitimate look, through the chairmanship of the Speaker of the House, at the facilities here in the House of Commons and Parliament generally. As the Hon. Member will admit when he recommences his remarks, no one has been more forthcoming and supportive of facilities for the disabled than the Progressive Conservative Party which has shown leadership in this area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has the floor.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not disagree with my colleague from Saskatchewan whatsoever. Obviously we need to try to improve this place through our Parties. However, the point I was making that is very relevant to the legislation is that this legislation does not pertain to Parliament Hill or to the federal Public Service. Handicapped groups have asked us to pass an amendment that would make this legislation pertain to Parliament Hill and the federal service. I think that my approach is a fairly relevant one to use in this debate.

I was pointing out that we saw a good example of why this legislation should be applicable to Parliament Hill today when over 100 handicapped people from across Canada came to Parliament Hill to demonstrate and to tell us why they wanted this Bill improved. I ask Members of the House to listen to disabled people and accept an amendment that would call for "reasonable accommodation" to be defined in the legislation and to make sure that this legislation is applicable to the 3,000 employees on Parliament Hill and the several thousand employees of the Public Service of Canada. I do not think that that is asking too much.

The disabled people who came here today made three requests. One is that this legislation be applicable to federal Government Departments. The second is that the penalties in the legislation be made broader and more all-encompassing. The third is that "reasonable accommodation" be defined in the legislation. I do not think it is asking too much to implement that.

In the few minutes remaining, I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, an excerpt from the testimony given before the legislative committee on Bill C-62 by Beryl Potter, the lady who interjected from the galleries today. She was one of the most articulate spokespeople for disabled Canadians and really objected to the answer the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) gave to my question in the House. She appeared as a witness before a special committee on Bill C-62, and I would like to read to the House what she says about "reasonable accommodation", which is as follows:

Reasonable accommodation is essential to job accessibility for disabled people.

This is recognized by the Government in s. 2, the purpose section, which states "that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way, but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences." Accommodation means the reasonable adaptation of the workplace or the job description to accommodate the special needs of a qualified disabled person. Let me give you an example of reasonable accommodation:

Let's suppose I am hard of hearing and wear a hearing aid. I am well trained as a secretary but will not be able to use a telephone unless it is compatible with hearing aid equipment. If I apply for a secretarial job and am qualified in all ways except for my limitation in using the phone, the employer could be required as part of employment equity to make his telephone hearing aid compatible. All this requires is the insertion of a small, very inexpensive coil into Bell Canada receivers. But many employers do not know this and without a requirement to provide this accommodation, might not be willing to hire me because of my disability.

Reasonable accomodation is so crucial to employment equity for disabled people, that it should be adequately outlined in legislation. Section 4(b) make reference to reasonable accommodation but does not define it.

We recommend that reasonable accommodation be spelled out in the Bill to include provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services. Since reasonable accommodation is so central to employment equity for disabled people and since disabled people themselves and others can assist in devising creative approaches to accommodation, we recommend that employers be required to have in their workplaces employment equity committees consisting of representatives of management, labour and the designated groups.

That was an excerpt from the testimony of Mrs. Beryl Potter of Scarborough and the Scarborough Action Awareness Group of the Organization of Disabled Canadians. I think she summarized very well why Parliament should include a definition of reasonable accommodation in the employment equity Bill.

This is not an economic matter that should be dividing socialist, Liberal and Conservative Members of Parliament. This is an issue that deals with human hurt and human misery. Surely to goodness we should be united on this kind of question. It does not matter whether one is a neo-Conservative like my friend from Alberta, a social democrat like me, or a Liberal like others. This is the type of thing that should unite us.

I appeal to my Conservative friends to listen to those disabled Canadians who came here today in their wheelchairs or with their crutches. They came here at considerable expense. Many of them had to use specially designed vehicles and buses for the handicapped to get here. Some of them had to come here last night and stay at very expensive hotels because some of the hotels in Ottawa with more reasonable rates do not have reasonable accommodation for wheelchairs. I was not aware of that until it was pointed out to me outside of the Parliament Buildings this afternoon.

• (1650)

Most of us are very fortunate in this House not to be disabled. We do not realize these kinds of problems, but when you start talking and dealing with these people, you start to understand why it is necessary to say in the law of Canada that we have to have a definition of "reasonable accommodation", otherwise those of us in the vast majority will tend to ignore their problems, hoping that the problems will go away. The problems will not go away because that is the way they are. The handicapped are asking us to listen. I plead with my Conservative colleagues to do that.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right. This is not an issue that divides us. We are together in our understanding of what the Member is attempting to do. All of us want to be as helpful and as useful as we can. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), says the purpose of the phrase "without restriction" is to give guidance. That, I will say, will be done through the guidelines and the regulations.

All Members of the House accept the principle of reasonable accommodation. The only question is, what is the most effective place for this definition? For reasons discussed, we believe the best place is not in the legislation itself. I know that we had a discussion on whether or not it is limited.

Certain target groups are already left out in what has been placed before us, but that is not what we are trying to do. We understand the process. I think we can do all that with the guidelines. We have an evolving process here. We have a definition that through technology we will undergo rapid change. The Bill itself, while cast in a little more firmness, can have guidelines that may have to change from time to time. I think all of that is understood. We know those are essential elements in implementing any employment equity program.

There are measures that have to be put into effect, remedial measures, special training programs, support measures, things like career counselling, internships, day care and flex time. All of these things will be essential in carrying out employment equity programs. Those are still matters of process. Philosophically we can spend days, weeks and months going through a definition. For practicality, we want the Bill and we want the Bill now. A lot of those matters can be tackled in the guidelines and in the regulations.

I might say that the Department of Justice is presently reviewing the Canadian Human Rights Act and, in view of recent Supreme Court of Canada decisions, will be considering the best way to amend the Act to include the concept of reasonable accommodation. However, there is a body of application for the term "reasonable accommodation", including the results of Human Rights Tribunal decisions. The Canadian Human Rights Commission provides an interpretation of the meaning and application of the term in the bona fide occupational requirements guidelines with regard to employment practices.

To insert a definition of "reasonable accommodation" in legislation at this juncture I think would not be helpful and would probably be inappropriate.

We have certainly listened. We share the concerns of all Members. All I can say very positively is that those concerns will be addressed in the guidelines and regulations.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the amendment on reasonable accommodation. It is a very important amendment if the wishes of the Minister are to be met. I think I have said from the very beginning that I know the Minister is of good will and that she would like to see this Bill have the needed impact. Although the Bill has a number of holes and a lacune, this is a particularly serious one on reasonable accommodation.

Reasonable accommodation is very important for religious minority groups as it is for the handicapped. The whole concern was expressed in a case which came before the Supreme Court. A decision has been rendered. What is sad is that the Conservative Government cares to move only when the court decisions are rendered. The decision was rendered. There is no reason not to meet the wishes expressed by the disabled.

The Government can just follow the court's expression on reasonable accommodation and how it is used as a bona fide occupational undertaking. I do not think it takes very much creativity to have the lawyers in the Department of Justice develop the language required to define what reasonable accommodation is all about. The Government has had the landmark decision rendered by the Supreme Court. I think that that should be good enough to direct the Minister and her staff.

When you do not apply "reasonable accommodation" and define it, you economically deprive people who have a handicap from the potential of having the workplace make small adjustments to accommodate their differences. They are not necessarily major. The Bill can accommodate that because the human rights code covers the aspect under what would be considered a bona fide or a justifiable occupational change.

As disabled people suffer from an extraordinarily high unemployment rate, and as it is against our principles and practices as Canadians to discriminate based on religious preference, that clause on reasonable accommodation becomes even more important.

I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, our own Equality for All Report. The committee listened to many groups and supports one of the wishes the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) outlined in his promises to the disabled. It was during the course of consultation with many of these groups that they pointed out the need to adapt that phrase, "reasonable accommodation" to serve them best.

I bring to your attention, Sir, that the Canadian Human Rights Act does not now impose a duty of reasonable accommodation in so many words. Mr. Fairweather pointed out that the Canadian Human Rights Commission has introduced the concept as part of its guidelines on the application of the bona fide occupational requirement defence to a complaint of discrimination in employment. Essentially it says that if you cannot be unreasonable in your quest to serve the disabled in society, there are reasonable barriers that can be removed, escalators, elevators, the height of the toilet seat, the size of the bathroom, the accommodation of the rails, the hearing aid and certain accommodations for the handicapped who have a visible disability. They are in many instances small and insignificant, but even in one of the Minister's programs she offered a $10,000 subsidy. If you wanted to accommodate a handicapped individual, you could ask for renovation funds in your building. What a nice incentive. Too bad the Bill is not prepared to back it up in a more substantive way.

As I said at the time we were hearing the 250 groups who came before us and spoke in the name of 1,000 signatures and for tens of thousands of people, the Binder decision had not been rendered on the Canadian National Railways Company. It has now been rendered.

Reasonable accommodation is an important way of according the full benefit of the law to disabled people as well as to religious minorities. If you want positive action, employment equity, affirmative action, then we need to respond to the special needs of disabled people in the workplace. Our Employment for All Report in Recommendation No. 80 reads:

> We recommend that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended so that employers are obliged to make "reasonable accommodation", that is, such special provisions as would not cause undue hardship to the employer—

You can see how considerate we were of the employers. Too bad we do not have contract compliance in this Bill as well. It continues:

> —in response to the needs peculiar to those classes of employees that are protected from discrimination by the terms of the Act.

• (1700)

In essence, I have been trying to say that we have a moral and legal responsibility to put "reasonable accommodation" into this Bill. It is inherent and implicit in the application of Section 15 of the Canadian Constitution. That section, in essence, defines the character which we wish to see in this wonderful Canada of ours. If we want to have the multicultural and bilingual nature of Canada expressed equally by men and women in such a way that all members of our society can participate, we must insert "reasonable accommodation", keeping in mind the bona fide occupational justification.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to appeal to my Conservative colleagues with regard to the suggested amendment which calls for some definition of "reasonable accommodation". We discussed this in committee. The Parliamentary Secretary has again expressed his misgivings about this matter. He feels that there may be problems with the legal aspects, that if we define "reasonable accommodation", it may restrict other factors. This resolution was modified in order to meet that objection. He may say that if it is too defined it may put too great a burden on a company or organization and, therefore, we should not be too precise. There has been some effort on the part of the courts to begin to define this matter. With the assistance of the Department of Justice, such a modification could be worked on before this Bill is passed.

Some people may see this legislation as a vehicle to ignore its real intent. One could provide reasonable accommodation for a person who has lost part of one finger and call that person disabled. One could look after a large number of people with very slight disabilities and then claim to have dealt with a lot of disabled people. That would make one look good, but one would not really be dealing with disabled people.

This amendment is really only providing examples and guidelines. It would provide, in the legislation, an indication of the direction in which Parliament wants to go. It wants to deal with genuine disabilities. Numerous reports over the years have indicated a requirement for clarification as to what is meant by "reasonable accommodation". That is in the spirit of what is intended by the Government. Some will say that it will cost lots of money. Specifying the requirement for very expensive equipment would put an organization into jeopardy.

A very high percentage of disabled people are on welfare or out of work. Is it not a good idea for the Government to assist companies to provide facilities for the handicapped so that they may work? When the handicapped were on the Hill today they chanted that they wanted jobs. They do not want welfare. They want equity, employment, jobs.

Instead of passing a Bill which says that companies should do something about this, why does the Government not put in place a financial program to give support to companies and organizations to provide those facilities? The Government should provide incentives to companies to make them feel it is worthwhile to use the skills and resources of the handicapped.

We are told that one in every eight Canadians has a disability. That amounts to millions of Canadians. We are not talking about a small or insignificant group of people. This is a major need in the country. One in eight potential workers has a handicap. A high percentage of that group cannot hold a job because of a lack of the required facilities and access. They do not have reasonable accommodation.

I plead with the Parliamentary Secretary to attempt to have his Department and the Department of Justice work out a solution for this concern. The Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) gleaned his definition from handicapped groups which have given a great deal of thought to the matter. Perhaps it can be improved, but to ignore this request, which provides a direction or guideline, seems to me to be most unfortunate.

Clause 4 of the Bill says that:

An employer shall implement employment equity by

(b) instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodation as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation—

It does not say what kinds of handicaps and needs must be fulfilled. What does this refer to? Unless we have an indication that we are talking about provision of physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification and human support services, it will not be implemented. This Bill is so vague that it is hard to even talk about it. It contains too many vague good wishes and too little in terms of specifics. I would once again like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to reflect on this with his colleagues and determine whether "reasonable accommodation" could not be specified more clearly.

• (1710)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the right of the disabled to equal employment opportunities has a necessary prerequisite. This amendment will put that prerequisite into the Bill. Although the Bill recognizes the need, it does not make it a requirement and does not define it in such a way that people covered under the Act will know exactly what they have to do. Again I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to look at the need. It makes much more sense to put it in the Bill than leave it to the guidelines. That often means leaving it to the bureaucrats to decide.

Over the years, and I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes this, regulations have often been used to weasel out of the commitments made in the Bill. Regulations are worded in such a way that some of the best legislation loses its effectiveness. We as parliamentarians only get a marginal look at the regulations and very little opportunity to make sure their wording is acceptable. In the end they do not have the weight of law. They can be changed in many cases by Order in Council. In some cases that is not a bad thing, but they are interpreted by the bureaucrats rather than the courts.

This amendment says we should define reasonable accommodation and put it in the law so that everyone will know what it is. As was expressed on many occasions, particularly by a number of witnesses who came before the committee, although Clause 4(b) makes reference to reasonable accommodation, it does not define it. The report Equality for All makes specific recommendations but they were not taken into consideration when the Bill was drafted. I guess it was not even in place at that time. However, that is no reason for not using it now. Recommendation No. 80 says:

We recommend that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended so that employers are obliged to make "reasonable accommodation", that is, such special provisions as would not cause undue hardship to the employer, in response to the needs peculiar to those classes of employees that are protected from discrimination by the terms of the Act.

We are in the process of passing a Bill which is supposed to require certain groups to put in place affirmative action and in some cases we should require that the necessary facilities for the hiring of disabled people be put in place so that the job is not beyond their reach. It is too late to provide the facilities and accommodations after the person has been turned down.

It is very discouraging for disabled persons to apply for job after job and then find that the reason they are not being hired is that the particular office or plant is not able to accommodate their particular disability. Therefore, it seems quite logical to require by law reasonable accommodation facilities in those companies that are or should be able to hire the disabled. We call on the Government to make the necessary changes to put this into law so that the disabled can apply for a job with some hope of being accepted.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Unless you add a definition of reasonable accommodation, the term is hollow. Everything needs to be defined. That is why we have dictionaries. Even the job of Parliamentary Secretary needs to be defined. If we did not have a definition, then Parliamentary Secretaries would not know what they are supposed to do. You must have a definition of everything that is meaningful. If not, you have something that is meaningless. I think it would be beneath Parliament to allow a law to go through when it has meaningless terminology.

My second point is that if we do not define the term, the courts will. If we allow that to be done, we will be dropping out. We were sent here to legislate thoroughly and define legislation accurately so that we say clearly what we mean. It is not the job of the courts to define legislation, it is their job to refine legislation, to reflect on nuances and rule on them, but certainly not to rule on the primary definition of what we mean.

I want a definition of that term because this Parliament and this country has a record known around the world. We are well known and well respected simply because we are able to reach accommodation in our legislation. That is the secret of our success. Canada is successful because it has a record of reaching accommodations or compromises between minority groups and regions. Surely if we have been good at anything, it has been tha,t and people around the world know it. Whether it is bilingualism, accommodation of language groups, disadvantaged minorities or disadvantaged regions, Canada has a record of dealing with the problem. I say to my colleagues here that unless we continue that record in this legislation presently, we will not be living up to what I believe is a very enviable reputation.

• (1720)

The time allotted to us is very short, but I was struck by the words of the Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), that we do not really understand what it is like to be disabled. We do not understand because most of us in this Chamber have been blessed with good health. He said, and I agree with him, that we should listen to those people who fully understand what it is like. When they say that this phrase does not suit their purposes, then we must give some credence, some credibility and some weight to what they say. I agree with him that in light of our limited experience in understanding this situation we should, indeed, listen to what they say. They have asked for a clear definition of what that means.

Is the cost too great of defining that and putting some responsibility on the private sector and the public sector? Has the Government costed out pride? Has it costed out dignity? Has it costed out fulfillment? Has it costed out all those things? What is the price of human life? What is the price of self-fulfillment in this country? I do not think that the cost is too great. More than that, I think it is incumbent on us today to listen to the request of the disabled community and to accede to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, and to define very clearly what we mean by reasonable accommodation. We have a chance now in this Parliament of living up to what I believe is a great record throughout the world. If we lose this chance I think we will be casting a blot on this Parliament.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a word or two in connection with Motion No. 11A, the motion to move a definition for the words "reasonable accommodation".

I have been listening very carefully to the comments and interventions of Members this afternoon with respect to this whole issue of reasonable accommodation. In particular, I listened very carefully to the words of the Parliamentary Secretary on this Bill. I heard him very clearly say that there was going to be a definition of "reasonable accommodation". It was going to be set out in the regulations to the Act in accordance with the provisions of the Act. That is not the only thing that is going to be set out in those regulations. It has been said in this House on debate on second reading—and I am sure it was said in committee many times—that there would be other things in those regulations, particularly the specific goals, the specific requirements and time limits for meeting the whole purpose of this Act.

The reason they were going to be in the regulations and not set out in black and white as part of this Act was so there would be flexibility, so we could make changes when it was shown they were needed. The debate on this Bill has proved very clearly that legislation is very inflexible. It is virtually impossible to make changes without going through a debate that has lasted from June of 1985 to April 14 of 1986 on this Bill. If you call that flexibility then there is something strange going on.

When you put it in black and white in the legislation in the Bill, there is no flexibility, there is no way of making those changes. When you put it in the regulations, there is. That is what the Parliamentary Secretary said and that is why I expect we are going to see flexible regulations or regulations in a way that are flexible and can be changed to accommodate the needs of disabled people, and can be changed to deal with this whole question of reasonable accommodation in a logical way.

When municipalities start defining the requirements for reasonable accommodation for disabled people they do it in a very detailed way. They tell you how many inches or how many metres or centimetres wide the opening has to be in a washroom, they tell you about the slope on a ramp and they tell you the kind of lock you should have on a door. All of those things are set out in municipal by-laws relating to the sorts of accommodation to be made for disabled people.

I am sure the Hon. Members in the Opposition, whether they be the Official Opposition or the NDP, would not expect to have all those things set out in this Bill in such a way that it would take almost a year of debate and another amending Bill to get them changed. They want to see some sort of flexibility, and that, of course, is what the Government has said.

What I personally would like to see is more evidence of commitment to make changes, not only in the physical accommodations in this House on Parliament Hill, but also in all of the Government offices that we have in every part of this country.

When I was serving in my municipal previous life 1980 was the International Year of the Handicapped. In 1980 various provincial Governments put in place funding for municipalities to make changes in their physical accommodation to make sure that they were accessible to the disabled. That happened back in 1980. As far as I can see, a vast number of local Government buildings were changed to accommodate the disabled that far back. The same has happened with provincial Government buildings. What astounded me when I came to Ottawa and what I wondered about was why we have not moved along as fast as municipalities. Why have we not moved along as fast as the provinces with federal Government action to change the accommodation for the disabled?

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) is in the Chamber at the present moment, and I know he is committed to making those changes in Government buildings and in Government locations to accommodate the disabled. I am sure he is going to take that message back to the Minister and before very long I am sure we are going to see those changes because I know that both the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary are committed to it.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support this amendment put to us by the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), which asks the House to add a definition to line 25, page 2 where we will define "reasonable accommodation" as follows:

Reasonable accommodation includes, without restriction—

I say this to my friend from York East. It goes on as follows:

—without restriction the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups, including the special needs of a qualified disabled person, through provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services.

That is a clear definition, without restriction. I fail to understand the logic of my friend from York East, who has great experience in the municipal field and is a good politician but cannot tell the difference between a regulation and a policy. We are talking policy here, we are talking politics. We are talking objectives. We are not talking regulations. The Member for York East (Mr. Redway) said that regulations should be flexible. Well, damn it, they should not be flexible. Regulations have to be specific, they have to be directed to a specific case and they must say black on white what is right, what is wrong. A policy can be almost anything we talk about around here, it can have just about any objective you want to set. That is what a policy is all about, and that is what politics is all about. We talk about objectives to be set. Anybody in this room who can tell me that he knows all about regulations in any subject matter is incompetent, unless he specialized in one field some time ago. As politicians we have never applied ourselves to being specific about regulations.

As a matter of fact, we adopted a metric policy a year ago. We have not got those regulations as yet. Who is complaining? Nobody that I know of in this House because the policy was set by the politicians. The regulations will come because they are the work of the professionals in the trade, the professional public servants. Those are the ones I want to address because they have been leading the pack in terms of accommodation and in terms of reasonable accommodation.

I had a conversation not very long ago with Madam Suzanne Azzi. Madam Suzanne Azzi, for those of you who do not know who she is—

—she is co-ordinator of the Public Service Commission employment service for the disabled in professional positions. Under federal programs which have been in place for many years, she finds jobs for people with physical or other handicaps who sometimes need special assistance to find paid employment in our Canadian Public Service.

Mr. Speaker, I could give you a multitude of examples of problems, beginning with the lowering of the buttons in the elevators. Even here in Parliament, we cannot receive physically handicapped people because we do not have the necessary facilities yet, but we have lowered the call buttons in the elevators even though we have not yet put in sound for the blind. There are many things to consider as concerns physical accessibility to a building.

I remember a case in my constituency where the Department of Public Works finally had to do something after being told that the handicapped need a ramp to have access to a building. Otherwise, they had to use the backdoor, not because the authorities did not want to accommodate them, but because no one had thought about it. Telephones have now been installed for the handicapped. I invite other Members to visit as I did seven or eight years ago the National Research Centre to see what the federal Government is doing to help give the handicapped access to an adequate working environment. Research has been done to provide transportation and technical or physical assistance needed by the handicapped, such as typewriters. I even saw a mouth- operated typewriter. This typewriter would work rather well in this House because there was a little mouthpiece in which to blow to operate the keys. I saw things which surprised me because I was not more aware than anyone else about the needs of the handicapped. It is essential for politicians who want to be understood and heard by the Canadian public and by the people who will be affected by Bill C-62 that there be a definition of the term "reasonable accommodation". It seems to me very important that the employer meet these requirements.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too long because I know that this matter concerns other Members of this House who also want to speak. Regarding access to employment, I just want to say that for the disabled it may be humiliating at times. I remember I once had to accompany a person on the Hill because the elevator doors closed too quickly and she didn't have a chance to get in before the doors shut.

We will have to be more sensitive and we may have to be more specific about what we want in the way of facilities and adequate job environments for people. I know some people have back problems, and as a chiropractor, I certainly know what I am talking about. There are an incredible number of people, even Members of this House, who have bad backs because they are not sitting properly, either too low or too high, or the chair is too soft. Well, if someone has a bad back and cannot function properly, we must do something. Mr. Speaker, I would say to these people: You should remember that the job environment is important, including the height of your desk and the height of your chair. For the physically disabled it is even more important, because they cannot work if the job environment is not adapted to their needs, and that is why this Bill must be amended, and why we insist there must be a definition, not because we want it to be more specific than a regulation, but because we want a clear and specific policy aimed at a group of people who have special needs and who naturally need special assistance.

I may remind the House that in five years nearly 400 people have been hired by various departments and agencies here in the National Capital. That is a lot, and these are people who in the past had been unable to find the right job or the right job environment.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore support the Hon. Member's amendment, and I hope that this House will not concentrate on drafting regulations but on more careful definition of a term that is important within the context of this Bill, namely, reasonable accommodation in the job environment including all the "adaptations" that are necessary to enable the disabled to have access to their place of work.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I hope the Government will accept proposes to provide a more adequate definition of reasonable accommodation in Bill C-62. The Government has said that this has been left to the regulations.

I have had an opportunity to read the Government's discussion paper on information and proposed contents of regulations. One of the proposed definitions that has not been implemented is that there should be a reference to making appropriate accommodation for members of designated groups to enable entry to areas from which they have previously been excluded. That concerns accessiblity rather than reasonable accommodation. For example, does someone who is disabled because of a hearing loss have the right to have a simple device to carry out a job or will that person in fact be denied a job because the employer is not prepared to pay $500 to provide that device that is required to do the job properly? It is situations like that which are covered under the definition of reasonable accommodation.

We know that access is still a problem in many areas under federal jurisdiction. It is my personal experience, and I am sure that of other Members in the House, that we are the most likely culprits in terms of providing reasonable accommodation for handicapped people who wish to see us in our constituency offices. Now that the weather has changed, we are about to build a ramp and install a communications device at our constituency office. Unfortunately, my riding office has rather high steps at the front and disabled people will have to use a ramp at the rear in order to enter the building. However, although it has been a year since we moved into those premises, we are aware of the problem and are rectifying it this spring.

I suspect that more than half the Members of the House have constituency offices which are not physically accessible to many handicapped people. I suspect there are virtually no Members who have communication devices that enable them to communicate with the hearing impaired. While improvements will be made as our awareness of these problems increases, it will take more than increasing awareness on the part of many employers in the private sector and the federal Government itself, I suggest, that has shown itself to be incredibly obtuse in the past on this particular issue.

I return to my point that I believe we have great human potential. Many people who are disabled or otherwise suffer from employment discrimination could be doing a good job. Charlotte Whitton and many other women have said that women succeeded when given employment because they had to be twice as good as the men with whom they were competing in order to get there in the first place. It is a sad fact that such a comment was probably true.

Ms. Copps: It is not too difficult. That is what Charlotte said.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) says that it was not too difficult, but it is a sad commentary on the loss of resources and human potential as a consequence of discrimination which still takes place.

The proposed amendment has been developed carefully and thoughtfully by the Coalition of Provincial Organizations for the Handicapped. They have given some thought to it, and I believe it is a reasonable proposal. Instead, we are told that this will be dealt with in the regulations.

Furthermore, the Government's document dealing with what the regulations might say does not speak to that question at all. We are basically left to trust the Government on this particular question. I have no grief for the former Government with respect to this issue because the only thing worse than this particular Bill on employment equity is having no Bill on employment equity. It is a sad fact that the previous Government did not even try introducing legislation in this particular area. However, now it is being done and surely it is possible to do it right. It does not necessarily mean that we can cross all the "t's" and dot all the "i's". I am sure there will be some experimentation, evolution and development in this particular area.

I read the very excellent report called Obstacles, which was put together by a House of Commons committee over the course of the last three and a half to four years, with a great deal of interest because I thought it was one of the most thoughtful and constructive documents at a parliamentary level or otherwise in terms of what needs to be done in public policy with respect to the physically handicapped. In that report—and I do not have the citation in front of me—the concept of reasonable accommodation recognized that different people have different needs and employers should not discriminate against someone because in order to do their job they have to have some instrument to help them. Employers, unfortunately, have been very obtuse about this. For example, it would be extremely difficult to work at a lathe, which is designed for a man of a minimum height of five-foot-six or five-foot-seven, if one is a woman and less than five-foot-six, unless she uses a small platform to enable her to reach the required height. Yet, because that platform would interfere with the sweepers, something as simple as that is resisted by the foreman and senior management because it disrupts the way things are done.

"Reasonable accommodation", in many cases, is as simple as putting down a small platform so a person of either sex who happens to be short would be able to work at a lathe. I have worked at a lathe. I know that the work, while demanding, is not physically so exhausting that it cannot be done by a wide variety of people. One does not have to be a 200-pound male in order to do the kind of work which is done at a lathe with the increasing use of computer controls, numerical control and that kind of thing. So why the devil would the Government resist a provision to ensure that in federally regulated businesses there is resasonable accommodation in that particular area?

I would like to say that I think the Government is hypocritical on this issue as it is on so many other aspects of the question of employment equity. I suggested earlier that this Bill would probably be just as useful in delaying equity as it would be to advance it. It gives us numbers and nothing more. It asks employers to comment or report, and then relies on public opinion. For God's sake, we know what public opinion says in terms of employment equity. The people of Canada want it. There is something wrong in the structure of our society when employers in the private sector, the people who own capital in many cases, are not prepared to implement what the people of Canada want.

I would like to say that when we get to the kind of economic democracy which I would like to se in our country, we would be in a position where working people would be involved directly in making those kinds of decisions rather than having arbitrary and thoughtless decisions made on their behalf by those persons who happen to be the managers or owners of capital. I note as well that what is regrettable about our society is that in certain cases the people who are the owners or managers of capital will be very busy in their private lives working for the Diabetes Foundation or for some other group which raises funds for some particular critical and disabling disease, but they will not see the inconsistency between that and the fact that at the workplace the company for whch they are responsible in setting policy does things which involve systematic discrimination against people who are physically handicapped.

The reason we bring in laws in this particular area is that we now have generations of experience which indicates that of its own volition, the private sector, whatever other benefits or costs it may have, has been prepared to do those things voluntarily. One of the reasons, quite simply, is that the private sector wants a level playing field. It asks why it should spend $5,000 to ensure that a job will be available for a particular handicapped person when the company down the street is not required to do the same thing. When we put in a definition of "reasonable accommodation" which covers everyone, we create that kind of level playing field.

So I appeal to the Government in the kind of a language which perhaps it can understand, because we are hearing it from the businesss community, to create a level playing field and ensure that all private sector employers are covered by Bill C-62 so that they will be required to provide reasonable accommodation rather than possibly disadvantaging one employer who wants to do justice and eliminate systemic discrimination while the employer down the street does not.

God knows, the Bill is weak as a whole and this would be one way to strengthen it. I hope the Government listens to the coalition of the physically handicapped and for once stops listening to the people who pay election contributions to the Conservative Party. Listen to the people of Canada on this particular issue.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to rise to join in on the debate and the request to the Government to reconsider its rather narrow view of "reasonable accommodation" as it relates to this particular amendment. I know the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) had an opportunity in committee to suggest a number of changes to the Government. Unfortunately, for some reason the Government chose not to be more specific about the issue of reasonable accommodation.

We can look at the question of reasonable accommodation within this Chamber itself. It was clear today that the potential for participation in the democratic process of the Parliament of Canada was impeded because this Chamber does not have reasonable accommodation. I hope that in the next election campaign, we will be forced into reasonable accommodation by the very fact of electing a person to Parliament who may in fact fit into one of the categories of the disabled, that is, a person in a wheelchair. The ruling of the Chair was to allow 10 wheelchairs into the Chamber following the demonstration this afternoon. I appreciate the logistical problems with which the staff is faced in either removing chairs or permitting more people into the House. But we know that one Canadian in eight has some kind of a handicap. Granted, all of those people are not in wheelchairs. However, if we take that as given, we can estimate that there are hundreds of thousands, indeed millions, of Canadians who suffer some kind of handicap. Yet we only had ten chairs availalble in the House of Commons on an extraordinary day when there were literally over 100 pepole from across Ontario, Quebec and other parts of Canada who were demonstrating in front of Parliament.

Quite clearly, we cannot leave the issue of "reasonable accommodation" to the regulations and to the bureaucrats because it speaks to the fundamental issue of access. If we in our own Parliament, in these hallowed halls, do not permit access to the physically disabled who happen to be in wheelchairs, and when we do permit it, it is in such limited numbers, then we must realize we cannot leave the job of that definition to a bureaucrat. I think the other reality—

[Translation]

—the other reality is that if we really believe in regulations that will accommodate everyone who wants to work in the community to the best possible extent, if we only want to give the right to regulate, regulations can be changed overnight, without prior notice to the Parliament of Canada. I think that if the Government is really serious about integrating the disabled in the Canadian labour market, one of the fundamental principles is to accommodate them with respect to access to buildings and to certain guides and tools they need in order to work.

[English]

Without reasonable accommodation, all the greatest wishes and good intentions in the world are without purpose. For example, the amendment before us deals with the issue of how many people we can integrate into the workforce. If one works in a building which is not accessible by wheelchair, as is the case in the House of Commons, then a Member who is elected who happens to be in a wheelchair would have to have the system changed around in order to accommodate him or her. We would have to make reasonable accommodation. More often than not employers choose to turn a blind eye to those people from the handicapped community because they do not want to be put in a position of having to make even the most minimal of accommodations. Unfortunately, in many respects, society is still deeply embedded in the prejudice which says that people who have a handicap may not be as productive as other working people. We know that the converse is exactly true. In fact, when handicapped people are given a chance, the only handicap they have is in the way they are viewed by their fellow men and potential employers. We have heard a number of good arguments this afternoon for having a more precise definition of "reasonable accommodation". The defintion as suggested by COPOH is fairly broad in that it does not restrict. It states:

> "reasonable accommodation" includes, without restriction, the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups, including the special needs of a qualified disabled person, through provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services.

Motion No. 11A is an attempt to clarify a principle which the Government claims to already endorse. The Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and other representatives of the Government have stated that they endorse the principle of reasonable accommodation. If they endorse it then they should have no hesitation in including it in the law. They should not leave to regulation more precise definitions which would ensure, for example, that accommodation includes the notion of physical accessibility. We too often say that these things take time. I know they take time.

• (1750)

In the context of Governments, I saw not too long ago in the Province of Ontario a detention centre that was opened in the riding of Hamilton—Wentworth. When I asked about accessibility I was told: "We have no need for accessibility. People in wheelchairs are in hospitals". I asked whether or not it was conceivable that somebody in a wheelchair could at some time commit a crime which could necessitate him or her being put into prison. In the mind of the official to whom I was speaking this notion seemed incomprehensible. It was felt that if one is in a wheelchair then one is supposed to be in a hospital. This official just could not make the connection that one can be a productive and competent person in society, also be a criminal and be in a wheelchair. In order to be a criminal one does not have to be necessarily robbing a 7-Eleven store. It seems that where Governments are concerned we too often ignore the potential for accessibility, as is the case with the Chamber itself. Without a more precise definition of "reasonable accommodation" handicapped persons will continue to be denied jobs simply because they do not have access to them.

It was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that many Members of the House have offices which are not able to be entered by people in wheelchairs. It seems to me it should be a prerequisite in constituency budgets of Members of Parliament to make constituency offices accessible to those who are in wheelchairs as well as to those in the general population. If there is not reasonable accommodation in the context of constituency offices then, quite clearly, two-hundred of the constituents in one's riding do not have the right to come and visit his or her Member of Parliament. They are not able to lay out their grievances in the same way as grievances can be laid out by every other Canadian.

Let us first start in the context of our own backyard, here in the Chamber of the House of Commons, as well as in our constituency offices. We must ensure that reasonable accommodation is more than a principle. It must be laid out in practice in the precise definition suggested by COPOH which speaks to some of the concerns raised by government Members. Let us not leave it to regulation. We know that regulations come and go. We are the ones who have to decide that accessibility is a right and not a privilege. By including this particular definition in the Bill we will ensure accessibility to jobs. We must have a level playing field. The opportunity to compete equally must be available to all. The fact that one person happens to enter employment premises in a wheelchair and another comes in on his or her own two legs should not be a factor in obtaining a job. At the moment it is a key factor. It should not be one. The only way to eliminate it as a condition of employment is by including this definition of "reasonable accommodation" in the Bill.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the five minutes remaining I would like to express my own wish that the Government adopt the amendment and make it part of the Bill. Our attempts are to bring to the attention of the country the significance of this point. The failure to add such a reasonable and sensible amendment on a day when the disabled have come in such large numbers to plead with the Government for legislation that has teeth in it and clear definitions gives us the greatest suspicion that what the disabled and other critics of the Bill are saying is true. The fact is that the Government has failed to respond legislatively.

As the justice critic for my Party I have tried again and again to bring to the attention of the Government and the country that we are not here creating rights. What we are doing with our legislation is implementing, or trying to implement, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which has been established as the basic law of Canada. In my opinion, Bill C-62 falls short of delivering the rights established in the Charter. We are going through the motions here of producing legislation which will not fill the bill. It is legislation that will be challenged, as we already know, by the very people whom it was intended to help. The Government is bringing forward inadequate legislation. It is making pious statements instead of implementing legislation. It is turning over to the courts of the land the responsibility for giving rights, in this case to the disabled and other designated groups. I am disappointed that the Government is taking this position. Of course, in the Opposition, being disappointed is almost a way of life, especially with the present Government. For disabled Canadians it is far more serious.

I have noted the important impact that the Charter has had in our country in creating a feeling of dynamism in a great many places where it has never been felt before. For example, the women's movement was very much a motivating factor in the process of creating the Charter. The Charter has given a new sense of legitimacy to groups which are receiving less than equal treatment, groups which feel the Charter is there for them. They are calling on us in this place to try to do justice here and not leave it to them to take their cases to court to fight for the funding which the Government has promised. After seven months those funds are still not forthcoming to groups which want to challenge present legislation. Instead of doing that as legislators, why can we not address ourselves to what we really owe the disabled and disadvantaged groups under this legislation and do it? It is not that difficult.

In criticizing the definition which is before us, members of the Government are saying that it adds nothing to the legislation. They are saying it does not mean much more. I would point out to them that that is an argument for adopting the definition. If they do not feel that they are giving away anything by putting the definition into law, and if the disabled out there in front of the House of Commons are saying that they want it, then what is the problem? I urge members of the Government to think again and to let us have this important amendment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PORNOGRAPHY—REQUEST FOR TIGHTER CUSTOMS AND EXCISE LAWS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) when the customs and excise laws were going to be tightened to prevent hard-core, violent pornography involving women and children from entering Canada. Almost all pornography in Canada is imported; 85 per cent from the United States and 12 per cent from Europe. Only 3 per cent of it is domestic. These figures make it obvious that tighter customs and excise laws are required to keep this filth from entering Canada.

Police estimates have placed the annual Canadian market in pornography at $300 million. There is increasing concern in Canada that more pornographic material is available than ever before and that it is in character more explicit and violent than it has been in the past. Another estimate is that 30 per cent of all Canadian news-stand sales consist of periodicals which would have been illegal 20 years ago, so relaxed have community standards become.

The Fraser Committee, the special committee on pornography and prostitution, was established by the Department of Justice. Its mandate was to investigate the current system in Canada with respect to pornography and prostitution and make recommendations for legal and social reform. The committee made several significant findings about pornography in Canada. It strongly submitted that there is a definite harm associated with much of what is pornographic, that it exhibits and encourages attitudes and activities which are detrimental to the quality of the lives of men and women and that it presents demeaning images as being normal. The concerns of most witnesses at the committee hearings were that pornography degrades women, that male violence against women is treated as socially acceptable and viewers are desensitized to suffering and that there is a strong negative influence on children and the family.

The Fraser Committee also conducted research in several countries with social and cultural traditions similar to Canada's. Their research revealed three trends: first, in all jurisdictions, there is a movement toward a less restrictive approach to sexually explicit material; second, there is a growing concern about child pornography; and third, there is a growing concern about the video explosion and the introduction of legislation to regulate the distribution, sale and rental of videos.

The Fraser Committee proposed a thorough revision of the criminal law in relation to obscenity. The term "obscenity" and the offences related to it in the current Criminal Code would be dropped to be replaced by a three-tiered system of prohibitions to define and categorize pornography. This would replace the subjective community standards test now used by the courts to determine obscenity.

The first tier, under which offences would be the most seriously punished, would involve the making, printing, publishing or distribution of visual pornographic material which was produced in such a way that actual physical harm was caused to the persons depicted. This tier would also include visual representation of persons under 18 participating in explicit sexual activities or material which presents as normal the sexual abuse of children. This offence would be punishable by 10 years imprisonment.

The second tier would apply to sexually violent and degrading pornography, including sexually violent behaviour, bestiality and the like. Its production or distribution would be punishable by five years imprisonment. The third tier would involve the display of pornographic material in a public place. It would be an offence to sell these materials to persons under 18 years of age. This tier might perhaps be an appropriate one in which the test for community standards apply.

Since most of the pornographic material in Canada is imported, it is important to note that Canada Customs has jurisdiction to examine all goods entering Canada. If, in the judgment of the examining customs officer, the materials constitute explicit pornography, they are so classified and are prohibited entry. The importer is advised of this and can appeal this decision. If the appeal is denied, the importer can appeal further.

At the Fraser Committee hearings, concern was expressed about the increased availability of pornographic material and an implied increase in the number of people who are exposed, willingly or unwillingly to such material, and the resulting harm to individuals and society. This trend is truly cancerous in so far as its impact on the morals of the country and the quality of life in which we take so much pride. A recent poll by two leading U.S. experts found that people who have repeatedly been exposed to non-violent pornography develop a preference for more exotic material, and that includes violence. In other words, it is addictive. Hard core comes from soft core and this process goes on until we completely desensitize people who are afflicted by this problem.

There are, however, a few positive actions being taken. The 7-Eleven convenience stores have recently announced that they will stop selling magazines such as Playboy, Penthouse and Forum after the May issue. We applaud the management of that company for such action.

In my riding of Don Valley East, hundreds of people are extremely concerned about this issue. Many have written to me, including Mrs. Michaeline Bennet, M. E. Ward, H. C. Frawley, J. Looby, Mary B. Desautels, Mrs. C. Kennedy and Clare McKee. On Saturday, April 26, we will convene a policy conference at which we expect 100 to 200 people. Sergeant Wendy Leaver of Project P, Metropolitan Police, will lecture and show us the type of garbage and filth that is now all too readily availabe in different stores.

I look forward to obtaining the views of the residents of Don Valley East and their recommendations. I intend to come back to Ottawa and recommend those thoughts, whatever comes out of that meeting on Saturday, in the strongest possible terms to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) so that we do not commit the crime of inaction of not taking this subject seriously enough.

We honour and take very seriously the responsibility we have as legislators to protect society from these insidious trends that we have seen eroding the quality of life in Canada, eroding the values of people and eroding family life. It is one of the most important topics I have ever dealt with. I hope and pray that we are successful in our recommendations and that a proper piece of legislation will be forthcoming from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's concerns regarding obscene material entering Canada which depicts women and children in a sexual context and the proposed reduction of person years within the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, as some people link both issues. I can advise Hon. Members of the House that the Department of National Revenue shares their concern with regard to the importance of prohibiting child pornography and material which appear to degrade and dehumanize women.

The Department of National Revenue is responsible for administering tariff Item 99201-1 of Schedule C to the Customs Tariff which prohibits the importation into Canada of certain materials. Materials suspected of being treasonable, seditious, obscene or hate propaganda is inspected thoroughly by customs officers, and if it is judged to come within the terms of tariff Item 99201-1, it is prohibited from entering Canada.

Regarding the matter of cut-backs within the Department and the control of pornography, I can assure Hon. Members that measures have been selected to allow the Department to streamline its operations, improve productivity and, at the same time, maintain its level of service to the public. None of the reductions will affect the Department's capability to carry out its mandate, including the interception of pornography.

One of the measures is the centralization of the examination of international mail in order to improve service to the public while substantially reducing costs. Customs' ability to screen the mail entering Canada will not be affected by this centralization. Customs inspectors will be concentrated in 12 screening centres. Their functions will not change. Customs inspectors will continue to examine the mail, assess duty and taxes owing, and prohibit the entry of such goods as drugs, pornography, and firearms.

• (1810)

The prevention of such contraband will be aided by the use of X-ray systems in the primary screening centres. Furthermore, sophisticated detection equipment now being developed by the Department will be utilized to screen incoming international mail for drugs. Customs' efforts to intercept pornography, both through the mail and at border crossings, will not be diminished by the person-year reduction.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the general question of control of such materials, Hon. Members will be interested to learn that department officials have been meeting ever more frequently with the various groups that have expressed great concern about this matter. As a result of those meetings, we are now considering a number of procedures designed to tighten up control of this kind of imports.

In addition, the Government's legislative response to the Fraser/Badgley reports will give customs officials more power to control pornography.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I might emphasize that the department will maintain its essential role in preventing imports of child pornography and materials which degrade and dehumanize women, materials which are unacceptable in Canadian society.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—REQUEST THAT WARNING LABEL BE PLACED ON DRUG ASA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, at the end of February or the beginning of March of this year, a 15-year old girl became ill with what her mother thought was either a cold or the flu. She was treated with a drug such as Aspirin or Anacin which contained acetylsalicylic acid. It has been a long time since I have had classes in chemistry, Mr. Speaker, but we know that drug as ASA. About 10 days after the girl took this type of medication, she died. The cause of death was identified as Reyes syndrome.

That girl was the daughter of a well-known citizenship court judge. That highlighted the problem and put the spotlight on a concern which people around the world have been aware of for the past three years, that is the concern about the possible link between ASA and Reyes syndrome. In spite of the fact that that concern has been known for the past three years, the manufacturers of drugs containing ASA have not put a warning label on their products. They have not indicated on their labels that there is a potential problem connecting ASA with Reyes syndrome.

I understand that the Department of National Health and Welfare has been carrying on discussions with the pharmaceutical manufacturers for the past several years about this problem. The industry has now voluntarily agreed to place a warning label on their products. I have a letter from one of the well-known drug companies in the country dated May 30, 1985, indicating that it is going to put a warning on its labels in the following terms: "Consult a physician before giving this medicine to children or teenagers with chicken pox or influenza". They indicate as well in this letter that they will have these labels in place by the fall of 1985.

That did not happen, as you know, Mr. Speaker. The labels were not in place by the fall of 1985. There is nothing in the letter referring to the potential problem with Reyes syndrome. In spite of the fact that the industry indicated it was going to do this last fall, in spite of the fact the industry indicated it had nothing to do with Reye's syndrome, the Department of National Health and Welfare has not moved in any way to make this sort of warning compulsory and the fact that it refer to Reye's syndrome. The U.S. has made it compulsory to have such a warning on the labels in this situation and it has made it compulsory to refer to Reye's syndrome and that problem.

What is Reye's syndrome? It is becoming more and more well-known to us. It can attack all of us, but generally speaking it attacks children 18 years of age or under. It occurs equally in boys and girls. It usually occurs toward the end of an illness such as the flu or chicken pox. After a brief period of what appears to be recovery, the patient develops certain symptoms. They start to vomit violently, their hands and feet become cold and clammy, they suffer from extreme sleepiness, disorientation and hostility toward those who are looking after them. They are combative. Then they lose consciousness and lapse into a coma. This disease can be fatal or it can leave people with various degrees of learning disability.

I understand that somewhere between 30 and 300 out of every 100,000 children infected with influenza B will be stricken by Reye's syndrome. About 20 per cent to 30 per cent of those do not survive. About 10 per cent to 25 per cent suffer either minor or major disabilities due to brain damage. The disease requires hospitalization and treatment in intensive care, either in a children's hospital or university medical centre. The cause of Reye's syndrome is really unknown, but it has been suspected for the last three years that there is a link with ASA. It seems to me that, given that suspicion, we should not just be sitting calmly and coolly and urging the industry to voluntarily put some sort of warning on their labels, that we should require them to do it. We should require them to refer to the problem with Reye's syndrome.

I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that at last the Government is committed to doing just that and will announce that this sort of warning and reference to Reye's syndrome is going to be made compulsory in this country.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that I understand the concerns of my colleague. I want to assure him that the Department of National Health and Welfare has continuing concern over the safe and wise use of all drugs, including analgesics or pain-killers.

The Department has consulted widely with members of the health professions and the pharmaceutical industry in order to bring about changes to the way that analgesics are presented to the public, including changes to labelling and advertising. Most of the improvements result from the recommendations of a non-governmental expert advisory committee established by the Department. These changes are being introduced so that consumers can make more informed decisions about how and when to use analgesics.

[Translation]

For security and efficiency reasons, a number of analgesic products can no longer be sold without a physician's prescription. They have to be prescribed by a physician. The concentration of analgesic drugs sold over the counter has been standardized at 325 miligrams per tablet to enable consumers to compare products more easily and avoid taking overdoses or underdoses.

Advertising concerning nonstandardized drugs is now subject to stricter regulations.

The provinces have been urged to ban the sale of large-size or nonstandard concentration analgesic tablets outside drugstores so that the consumer may consult a health specialist before buying large quantities of such products.

The labels of drugs containing acetylsalicylic acid must warn the consumer to consult a physician if the product is to be used during more than five days. These drugs sold without prescription are intended only to relieve temporary symptoms. All salicylate-based adult products must bear a label urging breast-feeding women or women in their last three months of pregnancy to consult a physician before use so as not to endanger the health of the fetus or newborn child.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned about the security of our children, just as we all are. That is why bottles of analgesics for children which are sold over the counter cannot contain more than 24 tablets. Under recently implemented regulations, analgesics for children are sold in containers which children cannot open. Moreover, the pharmacist who sells salicylate-based products for adults must offer them to the public in containers which children cannot open.

The Department is aware of the possible link which may exist between the use of acetylsalicylic acid, also called ASA, and the development among children and teenagers of a rare and serious illness, often fatal, called Reye's syndrome. In October 1983, as a warning to the parents, we sent to all Canadian households, together with the family allowance cheque, a guide to the treatment of fever. Methods other than medicine were suggested to treat fever among children, and the possible link between the use of ASA and the subsequent development of Reye's syndrome was emphasized.

This guide was published again in 1985 for distribution among consumers. The Department and the manufacturers of over-the-counter pharmaceutical products in Canada have studied together the issue of warnings printed on salicylates' labels. These changes of course compelled manufacturers to change their products' labels and packages.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Attewell): I wonder if I could ask the Parliamentary Secretary to summarize.

Mrs. Bertrand: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) recently stated that the Government will certainly consider the mandatory labelling of products should the industry fail to comply with its voluntary program.

TRADE—(A) CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—NEGOTIATOR'S VIEWS ON WATER EXPORTS (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on the question of the Government's stand with respect to the Grand Canal project, a matter which I have raised in this House on a number of occasions. Most recently I became concerned about the Government's attitude toward the project when I heard the words of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) a week ago Sunday on the program Question Period. With respect to the question of massive water exports and diversionary schemes like the Grand Canal project, he was asked whether he was fighting these kinds of plans. He said he was fighting them now. I wonder who he is fighting.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has indicated a number of times—in fact, he has become irritated with me on occasion as he has had to indicate it more than once—that the question of water exports is not on the table in the controversial free trade negotiations. However, the Minister of the Environment indicated that he was fighting to keep them off the table. Who is he fighting? Is the Government's decision not as firm as the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated to the House on occasion, or is the Minister of the Environment simply trying to make an impression? That was my most recent question.

• (1825)

I have another concern with respect to the Grand Canal project. It involves a dimension of this project that I do not believe has received enough attention. It coincides with another long-standing interest of mine in the House dealing with the whole question of nuclear energy.

I wonder how many Canadians are aware that this Grand Canal scheme to move water uphill from James Bay to the upper Great Lakes would require 10,000 megawatts of electrical power for the pumps, according to the originator, Mr. Tom Kierans. That demand for power equals half of the demand of the Province of Ontario at peak hours.

Let me illustrate what is involved with this project. In order to supply 10,000 megawatts, it requires approximately 12,500 megawatts of generating capacity, which is more than that required for the entire James Bay project. It appears that the originators of this project contemplate supplying this power through nuclear powered generation.

Indeed, AECL indicated in an article in the Ottawa Citizen on Tuesday, January 14, that it is studying a proposal that calls for the use of nuclear powered pumps to lift water from James Bay for export to the United States. Of course, I am not surprised that AECL is in cahoots with the Grand Canal project originators. AECL is always looking for a reason to justify its nuclear reactor program, and I am not surprised they would see this as a great opportunity.

Let us be clear about this. According to a researcher at Energy Probe, the proposal would require 17 Bruce-sized nuclear reactors. The scheme would also require a major transmission system that would be a megaproject in itself. In almost every respect, this Grand Canal project should be regarded as it was a number of years ago—an environmental Frankenstein. I believe that is an appropriate description. Until recently it has been regarded as an idea held by kooks. Now it has been given a sense of credibility by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the new Premier of Quebec and others who I believe have the responsibility of saying that this is not an option. Instead, a grant under the auspices of the NRC has been given to a group to study the feasibility of this project. Indeed, it is the very group that is interested in carrying out this project. Rather than an independent objective study, the money is going to the very people whose objectivity is suspect in this regard.

I am very concerned that the Government has been ambiguous in saying that this matter is not on the free trade negotiating table. I have given the Prime Minister and the Government a number of opportunities to say that it is against this proposal and that it is not part and parcel of any future Conservative Government policy for Canada.

This is an opportunity for the Government to say so. Perhaps it would help if I pointed out that this project is backed by a lot of high powered Liberals, both in the private and public sector. Perhaps, for no other reason than partisan concern, the Government might be more suspect of this proposal than it has been to date.

Surely, when it comes to a proposal that has such alarming environmental and economic consequences, the Government has an obligation to be honest with the people of Canada and state its real attitude toward this project.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in recent months a number of attempts have been made to link the issue of massive water exports by means of river deviations, with the Canada-U.S. trade talks. Many a time the Government has emphasized its position on the matter. As early as September 30, 1985, when the federal water enquiry commission published its report, the so-called Pearse Commission, the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) indicated he saw no relation between water exports and free trade.

Mr. Speaker, I hope you will please let me have a minute to conclude, because I think the issue raised by the Hon. Member is important.

Since then, the Government has repeated that the Canada-U.S. trade negotiations would deal with nothing else but trade and were not aimed at relinquishing any part of Canada's sovereignty on our own natural resources. The Government of Canada has received no representations from any American state or federal Agency on the issue of water exports, and neither does it expect to raise that issue in the context of the free trade negotiations. Much has been said recently about Mr. Reisman's ideas on the subject of water exports to the United States. Mr. Reisman clearly stated he made no comment and proferred no statement concerning water exports since his appointment as negotiator. Mr. Reisman will be following Government instructions, and this Government has clearly stated that Canada will always retain control over its natural resources.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT CHANGE IN POLICY ON ASBESTOS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, today, on April 15, I wish to present to the House a petition signed by several dozen workers in the asbestos industry, who are asking the House of Commons to review the entire asbestos question. Petitioners claim, and rightly so, that to market this natural resource outside Canada, we will first have to learn to maximize its use in this country.

I have a second petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by people from all over the Eastern Townships, and these petitioners respectfully ask the House to review the policy on asbestos.

I have a third petition, Mr. Speaker, where again, several dozen families are asking the House, for the sake of the welfare and economic survival of the Eastern Townships, to provide a new, sound and sensible policy on asbestos.

Mr. Speaker, all three petitions were duly certified.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

U.S.-LIBYA CONFRONTATION—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of an application under Standing Order 29 from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, consistent with the requirements of Standing Order 29, I informed Your Honour today of my intention to call for an emergency debate on an extremely important matter. Also consistent with that Order, I will read to you the letter I sent to you earlier this morning. It reads:

The reason for the motion concerns the critical situation in Libya which potentially affects the lives of an estimated 1,300 Canadians.

In response to terrorist attacks, the Government of the United States launched an air attack yesterday against a number of locations including the capital city of Libya. The situation in the area, which has potential risk for Canadians, remains critically serious.

For this reason, I believe an emergency debate is required.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I have examined the Standing Order and the application has been made in conformity with procedure. I am, therefore, prepared to find that the application meets the requirements of Standing Order 29.

Does the Hon. Member have leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House having given its consent, leave is granted and debate is set down for eight o'clock p.m. this day.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 528.

[Text]

QUALITY OF DRINKING WATER

Question No. 528—Mr. Caccia:

1. Since the publication of the 1978 drinking water quality guidelines, what new drinking water standards have been developed and/or implemented in Canada?

2. By the end of 1986, what standards will be developed and/or implemented for chemical substances?

3. Does Canada subscribe to the drinking water quality guidelines developed by the World Health Organization and, if so, for what substances?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No national guidelines or standards have been developed since the "Guidelines for Canadian Water Quality: 1978" were published (in 1979). Officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have, on request from provincial governments, developed interim guidelines for a number of additional parameters, including 2, 3, 7, 8-tetrachlorodibenzodioxin (2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD), and octachlorodibenzodioxin, and the pesticides simazine, cyanazine, metribuzine, metolachlor, 2, 4-DB, dicamba, prometryn and alachlor (for Ontario), the pesticide bromoxynil (for Manitoba) the pesticide aldicarb (for Quebec) and the pesticide carbofuran (for Alberta).

The Province of Ontario has also included an "interim limit" for polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) in its 1983 drinking water objectives and the Province of Quebec has included the additional pesticides carbofuran, diquat, fenitrothion, paraquat and picloram in its Drinking Water Regulations under the Environment Quality Act.

2. A federal-provincial committee is revising and expanding the current "Guidelines for Canadian Drinking Water Quality, 1978". The following substances are being examined with a view to establishing guidelines:

asbestos	tetrachloroethylene	chlorobenzenes
arsenic	lead	gasoline
benzene	copper	PCBs
carbon tetrachloride	cyanide	benzo(a)pyrene
dichloromethane	hardness	dioxins
dichloroethylene	turbidity
1,2-dichloroethane	trichloroethylene	trichlorophenols
trihalomethanes	1,1,1-trichloroethane	fluoride
PAHs	nitrate/nitrite	uranium
toluene, ethylbenzene, xylenes		42 pesticides

It is expected that recommendations for approximately half of these chemicals will be finalized by the end of 1986.

3. The Department of National Health and Welfare played an active role in developing the 1984 World Health Organization's (WHO) guidelines for drinking water quality. These guidelines specify values for a number of organic chemicals not included in the 1978 Canadian guidelines, these are benzene, benso(a)pyrene, carbon tetrachloride, chlorobenzene, chlorophenols, 1, 2-dichloromethane, 1, 1-dichloroethene and tetrachloroethene. However, much of the information used as a basis for these guidelines was published and received much earlier that 1984. More recent information may indicate the need to revise some of the WHO recommendations, and this need is being carefully considered by the federal-provincial committee. Nevertheless, Canada would subscribe to those WHO recommendations for which Canadian guidelines do not now exist, until they are superseded by the new Canadian guidelines now being developed.

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, April 14, consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Commmittee; and Motion No. 11A (Mr. Allmand) (p. 12204).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 11A. Mr. Allmand, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, moved:

That Bill C-62 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 24 at page 2 the following:

""reasonable accommodation" includes, without restriction, the reasonable adaptation of the workplace, hiring practices or the job description to accommodate the needs of designated groups, including the special needs of a qualified disabled person, through provision for physical accessibility, assistive devices, flexible job design and modification, and human support services.".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1110)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

Motion No. 12A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 30 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"ing agent, or with such persons as have been designated by the designated groups to act as their representatives, implement employment equity by".

Motion No. 14A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 33 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"except those in conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act, that results".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to require employers implementing employment equity to not only consult with persons who have been designated by the employees to act as their representatives, or with the bargaining agents where there are unions, but also with persons who have been designated by the designated group to act as their representatives.

When this clause was originally submitted to us in the original Bill it did not require any consultation whatsoever with unions or employee representatives. In committee we moved an amendment which required employers to consult with unions or employee representatives. To the credit of the Government it agreed to the principle and it amended the Bill. I want to thank the Minister. She is not here today, but I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for that openness and flexibility in recognizing that there should be consultation with unions and with employee representatives.

Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it seems as if there are all sorts of other meetings going on in the chamber.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order. I bring all Members to order and remind them that if they have other discussions they can hold them elsewhere.

Mr. Allmand: I want to thank the Speaker for that.

I give credit to the Government for agreeing to an amendment which would oblige employers to consult with unions and employee representatives in implementing employment equity. We presented another amendment as well, which to this point has not been accepted, that employers should also consult with the target groups, or their representatives, because very often the target groups do not predominate in being in the unions or in the employee associations.

As you know, the target groups under this legislation are women, visible minorities, native people, and the disabled. The purpose of this Bill is to provide affirmative action programs for those four target groups. The Bill in Clause 4 says that employers shall implement employment equity in consultation with bargaining agents and with employee representatives. Very often those unions and official associations are dominated by white anglo-saxon men; I am not critical of that but that is the way things are. I was speaking to a woman employee last evening who tells me that she is in a work unit which is overwhelmingly male. If I was to meet with the union executive I would meet with all males and it is very, very difficult for me to get a sense of the problems of the women in that working unit by talking to the official union or to the official bargaining agent for those employees. One could give other examples of that.

In many workplaces there are no disabled people whatsoever, so to speak to the official representatives in implementing employment equity with respect to them would be a lost cause. The same thing with visible minorities. There are some workplaces where you will not see anything but white faces.

The amendment that I put to the House now is to add to the consultation process in implementing employment equity. My amendment would require that employers, if it is required, consult with such persons as have been designated by the designated groups to act as their representatives. It is an alternative, it is not an add-on.

This means that the employer would have to consult as well in implementing employment equity with representatives of the target groups; women, visible minorities, the disabled or native people, where that applies. In some parts of Canada that entire mix would not apply. There are some parts of Canada where native people are in great numbers; in other parts they are not. There are some communities in Canada where they have good fortune and there are not be too many disabled people, but there are other communities, the larger cities, in particular, where there are a great many.

In any case, the purpose of this amendment is to require that consultation. Just as the Government accepted the other amendment, that there should be consultation and implementation of employment equity with unions and bargaining agents and employee associations, I would hope that it will see the good sense in having consultations with the representatives of the target groups as well.

Since we only have ten minutes I must discuss two amendments at this time. I also have to discuss Amendment 14A because it has been grouped with 12A. The clause says that employers should implement employment equity by:

(a) identifying and eliminating each of the employers' employment practices, not otherwise authorized by law, that results in employment barriers against persons in designated groups—

We want to change that part which states that they must identify and eliminate each of the employers' employment practices not otherwise authorized by law as follows:

"Except those in conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act, that results.

It seems to me if you are going to provide for exceptions, the only exceptions should be those set out in the Human Rights Act. This is more of a technical amendment; it fine tunes the legislation, and I cannot see any good reason why the Government would not accept that amendment.

To terminate my remarks at this time let me say just one or two things that also apply to these two amendments. Every time we propose amendments to this Bill some Members on the Government side ask, sometimes shouting from their seats and sometimes when they give their speeches, "Well, why wasn't this done earlier?. Why didn't previous Governments do these good things?". I want to explain why this was not dealt with earlier.

You know that in 1977 this House, under a Liberal Government passed the Canadian Human Rights Act, and that Act, within the federal jurisdiction, outlawed discrimination on the basis of sex, racial origin, ethnic origin, disability and so on. It outlawed discrimination at that time within the federal jurisdiction.

• (1120)

The Government then went to work on an entrenched Charter of Rights. That took a long time and many federal-provincial conferences. It was not completely within the ambit of the federal Government. Finally, the Charter of Rights was agreed to by enough provinces in 1981-82, and it came into effect in 1982. Section 15(1), the equality section, only came into effect in 1985. I think it is very important that we refer to that Section. It says:

Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

That Section outlawed all kinds of discrimination and was put in the Constitution so it would prevail over every other federal and provincial law. However, in doing that we had to provide some means for affirmative action. Affirmative action is a sort of reverse discrimination. It is discriminating in favour of those groups who have been traditionally discriminated against, so they can catch up. We had to put in Section 15(2) which reads:

Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

That Section provided for affirmative action programs.

As soon as the Constitution was accepted the Government appointed the Abella Commission to study ways in which affirmative action could be brought into operation. That Commission reported in 1985 when the new Government came to power; that is why that issue was dealt with then. I think it is completely without foundation for the Government to continue asking: "Why was it not done earlier?" It was not done earlier because we did not have the entrenched provisions to provide for affirmative action. We appointed the Royal Commission, but discrimination had been outlawed as far back as 1977, and again with the Charter of Rights in 1982. I think it is important to bring that to the attention of the House.

I would like to hear from other Members on the two amendments I have just put forward. I hope they will not be objected to simply on the grounds that they should have been done years ago. They could not have been done years ago.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that we are not going to object on those grounds. We fully realize the good sense in what has been said. However, what I would like to ask is: Who are the designated groups? They are listed but not defined. I can see technical and administrative problems with that. We have something that is already working and this would not be helpful to a process already under way. I have numerous examples of consultation now taking place with target group organizations by employers. I will refer to that in a minute.

This motion has a disjunctive drafting error. One or the other of these groups, or perhaps both, should be specified. To give the apparent wide range of choices, as the proposed amendment suggests, would give employers the latitude to avoid or ignore this clause of the Bill. Definition poses a separate problem. Difficulties may arise in deciding who are the representatives of designated groups, and whether such representatives are acceptable to either employers or designated groups. Do such representatives come from within or outside the employers' workforce? Any such amendment would have to be clearly delineated in the Bill, and the present phrasing of the suggested amendment does not give employers clear direction to interpret the Bill's intent.

Regarding employer consultation with target group organizations, many examples exist where employers who are implementing employment equity have consulted with target group organizations. These include the Co-operators Ltd. of Regina. In order to attract native candidates this company seconded a staff person to work on a six-month assignment with Regina Native Outreach. The Disabled Persons Employment Service of Regina has been called upon to assist several Crown corporations and the Co-operators with a physical-demands analysis to ensure the elimination of systemic barriers. The Canadian Bankers' Association has indicated its intention to initiate contacts with the major target group organizations. Westinghouse Ltd. of Hamilton has approached organizations such as the CNIB and the Association for the Hearing Impaired. Amertek Ltd. of Woodstock is in liaison with the local paraplegic association. The Weston Hotel in Toronto solicited referrals from the Ontario Mental Health Association. VIA Rail has contacted disabled agencies. CN Telecom is involved in native programs. It wanted information on the Northwest Territories/Yukon, Newfoundland and Labrador native organizations. I could go on. What all this shows is that there is an excellent intent on the part of all employers to do the consultation with the designated groups.

As far as the second motion is concerned, we have to state that we are categorically opposed to that as well. The bona fide occupational requirements of the Canadian Human Rights Act are described as guidelines setting forth the extent to which and the manner in which paragraph 14(a) of the Canadian Human Rights Act applies to employment practices. All contingencies covering employers' practices may not be covered in these guidelines, therefore a broader wording of the Act continues to be more desirable. Furthermore, the broad wording takes into account the possibility that a legal employment practice may be challenged by a group or individual who may feel that the practice under question creates a real or possible barrier to employment but is not a prima facie discriminatory employment practice as defined by the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the first of two amendments presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). This motion is to amend Clause 4 which reads:

> An employer shall, in consultation with such persons as have been designated by the employees to act as their representatives or, where a bargaining agent represents the employees, in consultation with the bargaining agent, implement employment equity by—

It then outlines a series of procedures by which employment equity should be applied. Of course it does not have an enforcement mechanism, but does include a very poor monitoring mechanism.

What my colleague is essentially recommending here is that the employer who wants to improve the potential for his company to improve its profits and direct its energy in the best interests of all Canadians, and therefore open up his employee base by removing the barriers to discrimination so that the target groups can have a better chance, be able to do so.

One of the concerns we have is that quite often a union, which is the bargaining agent, is an all-male union which may not have the handicapped, visible minorities or indigenous Canadian people among its ranks. That is part of the systemic discrimination which manifests itself in the union structure. That is changing, but not quickly enough.

I would like to see the unions implement an affirmative action program as well. The fact that the unions are non-representative is the reason my colleague has recommended the amendment that consultation shall take place:

> —or with such persons as have been designated by the designated groups to act as their representatives, implement employment equity by.

We know there is a significant number of handicapped in our society today. The union is not always in the best position to indicate the nature of changes that might be needed. For example, let us assume we are dealing with a scientific and research milieu as opposed to the manufacturing sector. I suggest one could anticipate that the best results could be achieved if the industry was in a position to consult directly with the people concerned because they are best able to give guidance and suggestions that would be in the best interest of the employer in the long run. Therefore, this amendment is bascially in the interests of the employer because it adds to the ability to facilitate employment equity in a constructive way.

That is why I suggest adoption of this amendment. It would reflect that spirit of consultation which the Government has used as its guiding light in its decision making. The Government says it believes in consultation and open Government, so why would it not apply that same principle when dealing with a major Bill that is meant to focus on the change in society and bring about equality for the target groups in the best interests of all Canadians?

I do not understand why the Minister and the drafters of this Bill would not have provided for automatic consultation with the designated groups, because they know what is best for them. Such a provision would only make consultation binding, not their suggestions or guidance. What is wrong with speaking to those groups?

Yesterday, the handicapped indicated three major areas where they wanted change. I believe they demonstrated good citizenship in the relations between organized community groups with special interests and their attempt to have the legislators who they elected reflect their concerns and put those concerns into law. My colleague's recommendation should be seriously considered for enactment by the Government.

The second amendment we are discussing is Motion No. 14A. This concerns authorizing those issues which would be authorized by a law.

If I understand the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary correctly, he objected to this change because he believes it might be too restrictive to name only the Canadian Human Rights Act as the decision making guide for employers. I suggest that definitively stating which Act is the guide would give employers a far better indication of the rules of the game. Rather than having a loosely worded, non-applicable escape clause, this stipulation would clearly define the intention of the new law. What is the purpose of formulating a law with specific goals when that legislation contains wording that allows for escape clauses? The Government must either believe in what it is doing and codify and quantify it in law so that it is clear, or it should not bother putting it in law.

In this instance, the problem with the phrase: "not otherwise authorized by law" is that future legislation could in fact exempt more employers from this Bill or force a Charter challenge or amendment. Rather, only affirmative action programs designed to redress the imbalance should be exempted from action taken to conform to this Bill.

The National Action Committee spoke to this point. It is quite obvious that it is the commission's responsibility to apply the treasury directives which are found in the Canadian Human Rights Act. I suggest that we are only being fair to the business people who must apply these conditions with respect to employment equity.

Incidentally, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could bring to the attention of the Minister that according to the Human Rights Act the commission has the responsibility to look at all changes and applications with, I might say, en sous du lieu with the qualification of bona fide occupational requirement so that it is not punitive to the business community. If a business community can demonstrate that it is not in the best interest of either the worker or the industry, then it would have reasonable cause not to accommodate that particular party or issue within its business structure.

If the Government would act with reasonable accommodation—keeping keeping in mind the bona fide occupational requirement—in conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act, it would be working in the best interest of the employer. It would enable the groups concerned to work toward the goals of this Employment Equity Bill.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with two motions that are somewhat different. Motion No. 12A in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lacine-East (Mr. Allmand), deals with consultation. The motion states:

> That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 30 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:
> "ing agent, or with such persons as have been designated by the designated groups to act as their respresentatives, implement employment equity by."

This amendment attempts to improve the consultation process provided for in Bill C-62. All groups have been very concerned about the lack of consultation.

My main point is that the Canadian Labour Congress and representatives of trade unions in this country also appeared before our committee. They said very clearly that in the case of a plant that is organized, consultation is not enough. They need the right to negotiate employment equity with the employer. It seems to me that this is a very important fundamental principle in the Bill.

If this country is to have any semblance of economic democracy or any semblance of participatory democracy, surely trade unions that represent workers in a plant should not only be consulted but should be involved in the process of negotiating employment equity as part of the collective agreement between the workers and the employer. I believe that is the sensible way to proceed.

For example, many federally regulated businesses, many of which come under this Act, are unionized. Let us involve the trade unions that represent the workers in negotiating employment equity. Who would know the problems of the plant better than the workers in that particular plant? Who would know the way of producing the product and who would know about the discrimination and barriers in that particular industry better than the workers in the industry who are represented by a number of trade unions in the country?

If this is not the appropriate place for such a clause, I call on the Government to include a clause in the appropriate place to ensure free and open collective bargaining between trade unions that are representatives in a federally regulated industry and the employer. We can then negotiate employment equity. We want to have harmony in the workplace and a semblance of co-operation, commonness of goal and objective. It is very important, in my opinion, to have the unions involved in negotiating employment equity.

I am not sure why my friends in the Conservative Party are afraid of making this Bill a bit more democratic and participatory. I remember many months ago when the Conservative Party was in opposition it complained day in and day out about the Liberal Government not opening up its institutions, Parliament and Bills to ensure there was more participation from the grass roots. But once that Party got into office it forgot where it came from and what it stood for. Here is another opportunity for the Conservative Party to put into practice what it preached many months ago, to ensure that the trade unions are represented in the Employment Equity Bill, Bill C-62.

What is the good of holding public hearings and having consultations if at the end of the consultative process the Government has not listened? Why do we go through the expense, take up the time of Members of Parliament and the staff of this institution, if we are not going to listen to the people who come before parliamentary committees?

A very good example of this is that the Conservative Party ignored the handicapped who came here yesterday. Over a hundred handicapped persons came here yesterday at considerable sacrifice and expense because they felt they had not been listened to by the Conservative Government. Beryl Potter on the National News last night said that she was a supporter of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). She told of how she had worked for him and that she was a Conservative but had never been so disappointed in her life as she was yesterday at the non-response of the Conservative Government. She is not one of my constituents, although she is a friend, but I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if I treated my constituents in that way I would not deserve to be re-elected to this Chamber.

Mr. McDermid: Come on.

Mr. Nystrom: We are now getting complaints from Members of the Conservative Party who are betraying their own supporters and friends. Once again, they are starting to laugh at some of the people who came here.

Mr. McDermid: What nonsense. We are laughing at you. You are nothing but a big clown.

Mr. Gauthier: Go get them.

Mr. Nystrom: There are a lot of different ideas in politics, but to laugh at the disabled who came here to demonstrate is another matter.

Mr. Lewis: We are laughing at you.

Mr. Nystrom: Just yesterday in Question Period a Member of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), mentioned the disabled people in the galleries. Some of those Hon. Members started to laugh and interject in what I thought was a very inappropriate manner.

Mr. McDermid: That is a lie.

Mr. Lewis: That is a lie.

Mr. Nystrom: Is it appropriate to call me a liar, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: We didn't call you a liar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I think the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) may wish to retract that word.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will retract those words. I will say, however, that no one on this side laughed at the handicapped people here yesterday. It was very unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made those statements.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to retract my comments as well, Mr. Speaker, but I would reiterate that no one on this side at any time laughed at the plight of the disabled.

Mr. McDermid: That was very unfair, Lorne.

Mr. Lewis: We were laughing at the point the Hon. Member was trying to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I can understand Hon. Members wanting to qualify their retractions. I can appreciate that.

Mr. McDermid: It's cheap politics.

Mr. Deans: However, you know, Sir, I am sure, that the requirement is that the retraction be absolute and without qualifications or explanation.

Mr. Lewis: It was.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Before the Hon. Member resumes debate may I draw to the attention of all Hon. Memebrs of the House that we should keep in mind the subject matter of the amendments. Bearing that in mind, perhaps we could avoid such situations.

Mr. McDermid: Clean up your act.

Mr. Nystrom: If Hon. Members of the Conservative Party do not believe what I am saying, why do they not give Beryl Potter a call? If they were not laughing, they certainly were not treating them with much respect, with all kinds of hooting and hollering and interjecting during Question Period yesterday when questions were put about disabled people.

Mr. McDermid: Cheap shot.

Mr. Nystrom: They can continue saying that as long as they want. The more they say it, the merrier. It just shows where they stand when it comes to an issue like this. Those people came here at considerable expense—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. McDermid: You know better.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I think the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) knows full well that he is far away from the subject.

Mr. McDermid: Off the wall, as usual.

Mr. Nystrom: Hon. Members opposite are very upset. I must have hit a tender spot.
