Yet, the constructive value of his speech must be noted. The ethnic origin of our friend come directly into play. In my riding of LaSalle, there are three magnificent black communities: the Black Community Centre, The Caribbean Club, and the Negro Community Centre. These people are certainly very concerned with youth unemployment in view of the fact that the problem is more acute in communities which suffer from visible racial discrimination compared to the vast majority of Canadians.

Contrary to other criticism heard before, I think that in some parts of his speech he made suggestions which will certainly be welcomed by our Minister of State for Youth whose department is still in full swing having recently gone through a whole year of consultations, during International Youth Year. Obviously Liberals have trouble understanding this process, since they have never used it themselves. Some of his constructive comments will surely be greatly appreciated by our Minister of State for Youth.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I hope that my own race would not be an indication that we should be preoccupied only with the plight of black youth in Halifax, for example, where the unemployment rate is 70 per cent. We should not be preoccupied with the restrictive opportunities in the Hon. Member's own riding with respect to his black constituents, or the fact that blacks in Toronto have one chance in three as compared to white citizens with respect to obtaining jobs.

When we talk about the problems of youth we must address the particular problems of the visible minorities. This point is contained in our report. I believe there is no one in the Chamber who does not understand that the problems of the visible minorities have not gained as much attention as perhaps they should. This is also true with respect to the disabled who have not had their problems sufficiently addressed. They will only be addressed with the acceptance of the recommendations contained in the report entitled Obstacles. There are also problems of native youth which can only be solved when we have dealt with the problem of self-government by native people. We must ensure that there will be a smooth transition. Every effort must be made to ensure that the native youth will have an opportunity to determine their own fate, with the adequate resources, both in terms of experience and the other facilities necessary to do so.

There are a whole host of problems which affect youth and which, in turn, affect us all. There have been certain steps taken by the Government such as the implementation of the 3 per cent surtax on income tax and the increase in the federal sales tax which are not specifically directed at youth but which will hurt them, just as they will hurt others.

In considering youth we may argue that they should have increasing opportunities for participation. We should place greater focus on their problems. To say that does not mean that they are not affected by other measures which we may take.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it has become all too rare for the House of Commons to focus its attention, at least for a while, on the problems of Canada's youth. Therefore, I wish to commend most heartily my hon. friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), who has brought forward today this very important motion which gives us the opportunity to reflect on the difficulties being faced by a very major segment of our society. I do not believe the motion which is before us today really calls for very much in the way of partisan exchange. What it does call for is the need for some concerted action. It is to that issue I would like to address my remarks.

I wonder how many Members of Parliament there are who are faced every week with the necessity of signing scores of letters which state something like this:

This will acknowledge receipt of a copy of your resume.

While your qualifications are certainly of interest and your curriculum vitae is impressive, there are at present no openings in my office. Your name, however, will be kept on file.

I regret that my response must be negative. Please accept my best wishes for success as you seek suitable employment.

I wonder how many companies, firms, businesses and industries—employers generally—there are who have to sign letters similar to that every week. I am sure the people who sign those letters do not feel good about it. It is simply a fact of Canadian life since youth unemployment today in Canada is really of tragic proportions. I do not think it is being too dramatic when I say it is a crisis—it is a crisis. The unemployment rate was nearly 17 per cent throughout 1985. That is distressing beyond words. But it does not do any good, as I have heard earlier today, to throw back and forth statistics. We know that if the situation is improving at all it is only marginally, and then the statistics themselves may be false. I will come back to that point in a moment.

What are these cold statistics? Let us translate them into human reality and determine for a moment what they mean. In part, they mean lower self-esteem. I have been to youth conferences, some conducted in my own constituency. I have spoken with young people on the streets of the towns and villages which I represent. A lower sense of self-esteem is evident among the youth to whom I have spoken. I have been witness to social alienation because of youth unemployment, family conflicts, a dissatisfaction with one's own existence, a feeling of having no control over one's life, and, of course, one cannot fail to mention individual hardship. If one does not have the wherewithal for decent shelter and adequate nutrition, then there is personal physical hardship. There are some in our society who are much more affected than others. I wish to take just a moment to refer to native youth.

In the report of the Senate committee which was chaired by Senator Jacques Hébert, reference is made to the fact that native young people often try to escape their seemingly hopeless prospects. That was brought home to me today when I received a news report from the Province of Alberta indicating that three people from Peerless Lake in northern Alberta died yesterday. These people drank a mixture of Lysol and fluid from a photocopying machine. Six other people also drank the mixture. All were in the age group of 16 to 34. Doctors in an Edmonton hospital are now fighting for the lives of the survivors.

Peerless Lake is a poor and very isolated community of about 300 people, mainly Cree Indians. It is not a modern, urban area. The community leader—and this is the point of my bringing this to your attention, Mr. Speaker—said that it was just a matter of time before such a tragedy struck because, according to him, only one in seven persons in that community has a job. He says that there is no future for the young people there. He said that they are lost and are desperately looking for an escape. That is why I have said that the figure of 17 per cent for youth unemployment is a false one.

There are many thousands of young people in society who have simply given up on the futile effort of job hunting. Native people are not even included in the statistics provided by Statistics Canada. We all know that young people are usually the very last to be hired and that when there is some reason to slow down the operation of a plant or a business, they are the first to be fired. What many of them know best today is part-time jobs, minimum wages, unemployment insurance benefits if they can qualify or very often just simply nothing at all.

Canada and most of its western trading partners have been through quite a terrible recession. We are just now beginning to emerge out of the dark tunnel of economic downturn. For that we are grateful. For many in Canada, the situation is somewhat better than it was before and the future does look a little brighter, or at least it did before the recent Budget, and I am concerned that that Budget may have a very dampening effect on our fragile economic recovery. However, for hundreds of thousands of Canadian young people, there is as yet no sign at all of hope.

The Senate committee on youth stated that although young people are called the lost generation, they could still be saved through swift, vigorous initiative. Today's motion is calling for some swift, vigorous initiatives. We want government action to be focused on this problem. However, so far the Government has not done that much to assist the economic recovery. Whatever it has done has certainly not assisted youth. I do not hear very many young people saying: "Let the good times roll".

If we had to describe the age in which we live, and it is very difficult to do because we live right in the midst of it, perhaps we could describe this as being the age of human rights. We now have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms which is part of the Constitution of Canada. A report entitled Equality for All has just been tabled in the House of Commons. There is a great deal of emphasis on human rights and equality. Nevertheless, despite these endeavours, there is serious discrimination against a major segment of society, and that is youth. Young people are being discriminated against.

A witness who appeared before the Senate youth committee had this to say:

> Youth are . . . discriminated against when it comes to giving them the opportunity to make it on their own. When applying for venture capital, youth are discriminated against because of their age and inexperience. What is needed is a change of attitude toward young people who want to take the initiative in changing their lives.

That is very telling testimony. In my view, that is what is needed, but here is what we have. We have instead a professor from the University of Regina who said before that same committee the following:

> —many of the young people out of work today will be unable to find a job during their lifetime—

It should, therefore, come as no surprise to any of us in the House that there are many persons in society today who are feeling a sense of panic and despair regarding young people. These persons include parents, teachers, community workers, church ministers and priests, social workers, medical doctors and many others. Many young people in society are looking around them and seeing no doors opened. They are seeing no way to escape from their present situation. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that one of the definitions of hell is no exit?

What we need at the federal level today is a strong and very effective Minister of Youth. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could be made aware by Members of Parliament of how serious and urgent the situation is and that it is a crisis, he would choose from his frontbench the best and make him or her responsible for youth programs, both existing ones and new ones. Maybe he would reach into the backbenches for the most talented of the newcomers to Parliament and say: "We are giving you that responsibility and we are going to back you up because the Government has got to do something for the young people of Canada".

We need programs like Katimavik, First Chance, the Youth Jobs Strategy and many, many others. I do not want to harp incessantly on Katimavik, but I think it was a good program. The residents of a home for the aged called North Centennial Manor wrote me a letter to say the following:

> We are taking this opportunity to express our support for Katimavik, the federally-funded youth program which has enhanced the life of our residents.
> We ask that the Government reconsider its decision to end the Katimavik program which has proven to be a worth-while educational learning experience to the youth of our nation.

The letter goes on:

> Katimavik is a positive, enriching experience which demands the best out of young people. We need Katimavik to give our youth the chance to learn, to live and to work.

We need programs like that and we need many others besides.

We in this Party recognize that there has to be fiscal responsibility. We recognize that when the deficit was incurred in Canada, we were in a recession and we had to soften the terrible impacts of that recession. We recognize that, but now we are beginning to recover and we need economics of recovery. We have to enlarge opportunities for young people so that they may work in and serve the society in which they live.

The Senate report on youth directed its recommendations toward Governments. It did not say that Governments can be excused and that we must look to the private sector or we have to look outside the country or anywhere else. The recommendations are directed to Governments, both federal and provincial, and they say that Governments should recognize their respective areas of jurisdiction and accept their responsibilities by joining efforts to fulfil a common objective.

Dealing with the situation of youth in the 1980s must be done without any more delay, and it must be done by every means possible. It should be known by the House of Commons that 81 per cent of the young people in our society who have jobs today have expressed satisfaction with the work they are doing. When those without work are questioned, they have given having a job as their highest priority. There is a message for us. If we simply regard youth as being the casualties of an economic system, then there can be no spur to action.

The Senate committee indicated that instead of waiting for improvement in the economy to reduce unemployment, we should reduce unemployment to improve the economy. That is my kind of economics. It is the new economics which says that job-creation is not a cost to Government. It is not only an outlay or an expenditure; it is a stimulus for renewal and for economic recovery.

I conclude by saying that what this Opposition Day is all about can simply be stated by referring once more to the excellent Senate report entitled Youth: A Plan of Action, as follows:

> Despite the economic recession from which we have barely recovered, Canada is one of the richest countries in the world. We have at our disposal the means by which to help our young people. The public and political will to remedy the situation must be displayed without further delay. Each Canadian community must assume control of its own affairs and put its imagination to work so that we may improve the present and future lives of our young people. Just as in the event of a major national disaster, we as Canadians must concentrate all our energy to solve this serious problem.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the comments of the Hon. Member. I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member, and it is because of that that I was most interested in what he had to say. In addition, as a father myself with two daughters, one of whom is about to graduate this year from university, a daughter who has no job at the moment, a daughter who has tried until now to find a job for herself for after graduation, I understand the concerns about which the Hon. Member spoke from personal experience. However, I want to tell him that four years ago, when I served as the mayor of one of the six municipalities in Metropolitan Toronto and served on Metropolitan Toronto Council, I was appointed to head a task force on youth unemployment. The task force was set up specifically at a time when youth unemployment was astronomically high. It was set up at a time when there were problems generally with unemployment for youth, particularly with that portion of the youth population who were school drop-outs, who had difficulty understanding how to make application for a job, who had difficulty knowing how to dress properly when they went to a job interview, and who had difficulty getting up in the morning to go to the job once they had one. The task force was set up to try to get around or deal with those types of problems. We set up a program and we approached all levels of Government for some financial assistance. At that time we found great difficulties in obtaining help from the federal Government of which the Hon. Member was a supporter and sat in the House supporting.

In August, 1982, I led a delegation from Metropolitan Toronto to Ottawa to see the then Minister of Employment and Immigration who continues to sit in the House, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We came to him and we put our case on the table. The Hon. Minister at that time was very sympathetic. He indicated to us that he understood our concerns and that he wanted to get immediate action. That was at the beginning of a week. He turned to his assistant and he told his assistant to go down to Toronto on the Friday, solve the problem on which we wanted an answer and get the thing on the rails.

I left office as a mayor in November, 1982, to run for Parliament because at that time there had not been any action as a result of my pleas to the Minister and to the former Government on the whole question of youth unemployment. I ran for Parliament and was elected in September, 1984, as the Hon. Member knows. Two years had passed since I had been up to Ottawa before the then Government, and there was still no action.

I understand what the Hon. Member is saying and I know that he understands. Notwithstanding his comment, his concerns go back a long way. They do not start in September, 1984. His concerns go back to the days when he was a member of the governing Party and the problem was shaping up, being created and going on to be a dramatic and desperate problem in the country.

I know the Hon. Member is a sincere Member, so I should like to ask him a question. What would he and his Party do differently today? The Liberals had a chance for 20 years to make sure that the problem did not happen. Once the problem had occurred, they had a chance to solve it. They had a chance for three or four years when the problem was very severe. Only 18 months has passed, but the Hon. Member has been stating this afternoon that things should be different and that different things should be done. I assume that if his Party were in power again, different things would be done. I would sincerely like to know what is the specific policy of the Liberal Party in respect of youth unemployment today. What specifically would it do aside from reinstating Katimavik?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member gave me a great deal of help in answering the question. He is quite correct in saying that over a very long period of time I have seen Governments, different administrations following different elections, respond to a wide range of problems including the problem of youth unemployment. During a number of Liberal administrations over the time I have been here, I saw a very creative approach to programs for young people. They were very creative; sometimes they were too creative. I can remember when the Secretary of State announced some of those programs, and I recall the days when youth unemployment was nothing compared to what it is now. For example, a program was brought in known as Opportunities for Youth which went wild in many places. I remember members of the Opposition screaming about how government money was being ill spent on some of those projects. I investigated a few of them myself, called a halt to them and found myself in trouble with the then Secretary of State. However, those programs were modified.

The thing which impressed me about the Liberal administration is that they had a creative approach to the youth situation, and I think young people recognize that. What happened in the latter days of the last Liberal administration is that we were hit with a serious recession. It was not caused by that Government. That Government tried to counteract it.

Mr. King: Oh, come on!

Mr. Penner: It was a world-wide recession, and if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) does not know that, he has not even—

Mr. Mazankowski: I didn't say a thing.

Mr. Penner: Oh, I am sorry. I thought my friend, the Minister of Transport, was challenging me; I nearly jumped down his throat.

Mr. King: It was me.

Mr. Penner: It was you, back there.

Mr. King: Yes.

Mr. Penner: Even apple growers had problems in that terrible recession. All around the world apple growers had trouble.

Mr. King: What did you do about it?

Mr. Penner: In that recession the youth were affected more severely than other segments of our society. Additional money was provided by the last Liberal administration to the maximum extent possible.

• (1710)

The point I am making is that we are now in a recovery. The young people are not participating in that recovery to a sufficient degree. That is why I do not remember in my remarks in any way casting condemnation upon the Government. What the Government needs to do now is to spur itself into action, recognize that there is a crisis, and put the best people, best minds and best programs into helping the young people of Canada. That is what the motion is all about. Youth are not able to take advantage of whatever recovery we have. That is what we want today, now.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the world-wide recession. Of course, that is quite correct. There was a world-wide recession a few years ago but, as the Hon. Member is aware, it was much more severe in Canada than it was in virtually every other industrialized country in the western world. In my view and in the view of most, that was because of the specific types of policies followed by the Government of which he was a member, including the high interest policy, the National Energy Program and things of that sort. That is why youth unemployment in those years reached pretty close to 20 per cent.

Since the present Government has taken office, while no one is suggesting the problem is solved, there has been a drop in youth unemployment. The situation is not perfect as yet by any manner or means, but I think the Hon. Member will admit that the economic climate created by the Government since it took office has been of assistance in helping to get our youth back to work and to get the unemployment rates down.

Having said all that, Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member talk about what he thought in general terms the Government should do. I had asked him specifically what the policy was of the Liberal Party with respect to youth unemployment. Are there some specific programs which the Liberal Party would institute if it were the Government today? I would like to hear what they are.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, one of the things I would not do, facing the situation we have at present, is to have cut-backs in youth programs, and that is what we have had. This is not the time for cutting back, but for recognizing that we have a serious problem.

Even with a deficit reduction program in effect across the board, I think the Hon. Member who raised the question will have to recognize that there have to be some exceptions. We have a segment of our society that is suffering to a greater extent than other sectors. Our young people are not participating in the recovery and they need special attention. There should not be cut-backs.

We need Government job-creation programs of a variety. A lot of thinking has been going on with respect to the kinds of programs that can be initiated. Attention should be given to them until our young people are able to participate in the recovery and until the situation is no longer fragile. They can then get into the real world of work and we will no longer need Government job-creation programs.

The Member is on very slippery ground when he begins to analyse statistics and says things are getting better. I doubt whether the throwing of statistics by Members at each other will convince a single young person that the situation is getting better. There is a crisis. To argue about a point and a half or two points, knowing the statistics are probably false anyway, is not very helpful.

I cannot sit down without reminding the Hon. Member, who had to throw in the National Energy Program, that perhaps the Tories would like to have some aspects of that program alive and well today in western Canada—

Mr. Dick: Not on your life.

Mr. Penner: —especially that part of it which provided for a floor price.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Clifford).

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on the motion today. I believe the Government's record is an enviable one, enviable because everybody on the benches opposite would like to be in that position. They may have a little trouble admitting it, but I really believe that is true.

I think it is important to mention a little bit about my background as my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has done. I have spent a lifetime working on a daily basis with the youth, as a high school principal concerned with their future and their education. There is no question that over this 25 year period I have seen a tremendous increase in the fears and worries of young people as to what part and what role they will play in our future.

In the mid-1970s youth unemployment was probably first recognized. By 1984 there had been 100 per cent increase in youth unemployment from the mid-1970s, and it was then recognized as a major problem in Canadian society. I think also it is important to see what people in educational and youth roles were thinking in the mid-1970s and the early 1980s.

I can recall representing a rather large group of my former colleagues before the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who was a Minister in the previous Liberal Government. I can remember, as my colleague from York East did, trying to implore the Minister at that time to make some changes on behalf of our youth. Today the words used were "swift, vigorous action". We tried to get that in the mid-1980s as youth unemployment soared, but the words fell on deaf ears. Nothing happened except that it motivated a few of us to get into politics.

Since 1984, the Government has chosen the right course. There are, however, many things I would like to say today to set the record straight. Dramatic steps have been taken since September, 1984 on behalf of the youth, and they should hear about them here first.

We are now coming to the time of opportunities for young people to be in the workplace during their summer recess. It is a very important time for them, so let me begin by talking about it.

We have the Challenge Program in place. Challenge '85 last year was the first, and we are well ready for Challenge '86 this year. I think Members opposite are having difficulty understanding the fundamental difference that our Government sees in the philosophical development of young people and in preparing them for their future in the world of work.

In the late 1970s and the early 1980s our young people in school were wondering about the value of their education, how realistic it was and how it was tailored to the world of work which was surely to follow. They were having serious doubts about that education.

What role was the federal Government playing in all of this? When those doubts became apparent and submission after submission were made to the various Ministers in the previous Government, what were the young people being told? What solutions was the Government of the day coming up with? As unemployment soared to 18.4 per cent and seemed to be going out of sight, the country, and particularly the youth, demanded a new Government and a new focus.

Let us examine some of the things the young wanted and see whether the Government has them in place today.

First, we talk about the need in the late 1970s and early 1980s for work experience, the fact that young people have to have some opportunities in the real world to find out what work is all about in order to make better career choices and to develop their educational plans for their future. That was a very important statement in the late 1970s and early 1980s right across the country. What has our Government done about that? I think it is very clear. First and foremost and built right into the philosophy of the Challenge programs is the opportunity to provide of real life experiences for students while they are still in school, Mr. Speaker. They must be tied into their educational package. Therefore, the Government has tailored the Challenge program to work with the businesses and workplaces in Canada which have been encouraged to work with students and the Government to develop those opportunities.

The figures from 1985, which is the first year for which we can report anything, indicate that, in spite of a late start, we improved the rate of summer jobs for young people by 100,000. That is quite an increase. Not only did the number of jobs increase, but so did the quality of the experience. For the first time in the many years in which it has been traced, we found a dramatic growth in the involvement of the private sector in giving students jobs. That involvement jumped to 25 per cent in 1985, which is very significant because that is where the real jobs will be found upon graduation. That is where the real future of the country is. Almost 600,000 jobs have been created, the majority of them in small business in the private sector, which is exactly where we target these work experiences. It is very important to see the philosophy working. I want young Canadians to know that the Government cares and has tied that in.

I have taken a personal survey of over 400 businesses in my riding. I asked about their involvement and how they feel about Challenge 85 and the potential for Challenge 86. Eighty-five per cent of those polled said they want to be involved in Challenge 86, which is again a very significant increase. In London, 1,200 businesses have come forward which want to be involved in providing young people with these opportunities. There has been a tremendous increase in the interest expressed in aiding young Canadians while they are still in the educational process. That is a very significant change from how the previous Government looked upon youth and youth development.

As a former educator I listened to stories of woe from many young people during the 1970s and early 1980s about the lack of opportunity and teachers who, in the views of the students, were out of tune with the educational requirements of the day. It became apparent that the Government had to show some leadership in the on-going education of young Canadians in the schools. Co-operative education provided that key. While still at school, young people were afforded the opportunity, for extended periods of time, to pursue an avenue of work experience, a slice of the reality of life. With that opportunity they can grow even further and make even wiser choices about their futures.

Since we took office we have seen tremendous financial growth in this area. In one year the figure has gone from $1.89 million to $2.86 million. Those are dollars well spent. We have been able to increase the number of participating school boards, universities, and colleges over tenfold. Even further increases are possible in the future which will help young Canadians make those critical decisions. I think we have underestimated the importance of this.

Another statistic which is vital to every educator in Canada is the drop-out rate. About 250,000 young people every year, for one reason or another, become disenchanted with our educational system and leave prior to graduation. These young people are at a tremendous disadvantage in the working world. We must find ways of keeping them in the educational system so that they will become better qualified to handle the demands of Canada's productive workforce.

I think we have started to find some of the answers. We realize that the problem exists and will not go away. Within the Canadian Jobs Strategy we have developed the Job Entry Program. This provides the opportunity for hundreds and hundreds of young people to get their first experience in the workforce, which is so important to a young Canadian. The experience they gain from an employer and the opportunities they have to speak with workers in the real world will influence them. It will provide the counselling and guidance which so many of our young people need. The Job Entry Program is now providing that opportunity.

It is only because we have tied our philosophical development into businesses and encouraged their participation that any of this will work and affect our young people. It is important that people understand that. The Job Entry Program is geared specifically for young people who have never had a job and find themselves very much disadvantaged in the workplace and in society. Our workplace is very demanding today. Our cost of productivity must be lowered so that Canada can be competitive nationally and internationally. Our youth will best learn that lesson in the workplace and must have the opportunity to work in the private sector to get that opportunity.

Members opposite should try to assimilate that working philosophy. They should try not to be antagonistic to free enterprise and the private sector. I ask them to go home to their ridings and take a realistic look at the Canadian Jobs Strategy to see whether it will give tremendous opportunities to young people. I dare say that it will.

I do not think it need end there. One could go on and on listing real life examples of how the Job Entry Program has helped various young people, disabled groups, and young female workers trying to enter the workforce. Throughout the ridings of Canada one can see good and positive examples of that. In London there are 13 job entry projects on stream with over 320 young people getting their first opportunity to work. I have visited those projects and talked to the young people. From listening to them and watching them work I know they are getting experience which was not available in the past and which will help them to be of service in the future to another employer. I ask my colleagues to visit projects under the Canadian Jobs Strategy and see how it can enrich the lives of young people in their ridings.

There are other avenues for reaching not just the youth but the other unemployed and disadvantaged. Quite often we might find ourselves working with an entire family of unemployed. We work with the mother, father and the children, trying to get them to take an active role. We know how hard it is. This program, with its philosophical roots in the dynamics of our work structure, really cannot go wrong. There have been no cut-backs here. It has been very efficient.

At the start of my remarks I talked about the Challenge '85 and Challenge '86 programs. In my area alone we saw an expenditure of approximately $2.9 million. It was down this year to $2.6 million. At first one might tend to get angry about that. However, I am not at all angry because of the increase in the private sector's involvement. That meant a decrease in cost and we will get more summer jobs in that riding for less money than last year. That is what this Government is all about: Efficiency and a whole new way of doing things. That is what Progressive Conservatives stand for. As I said, that is what propelled me into this life.

One of the most exciting things for Members opposite to stop and consider is the innovation theme of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. This represents nothing but pure opportunity to create solutions to problems. The Liberals were asked today how they would solve this problem for young people. How would they more quickly lower the unemployment rate? They were hard-pressed to give us any new solutions. I say that the road is through innovation. Go to your ridings and put this program to work. The Minister would like to hear about that. I have found the Department and the Minister most helpful.

The people in London-Middlesex, and I am sure this is true in many ridings across Canada, are as concerned about youth unemployment as anyone else. They have banded together and come up with some solutions to the problem. They have come up with an action plan, a new way to help young people. It has been said today that the plight in which young people find themselves could cause severe disruptions and alienation among youth. There has been criticism of our Government on this issue. Yet the people in London-Middlesex took on the challenge of innovation. They have worked hard and seriously with me on this issue. I hope and expect that I will stand in my place in a month or so and announce some very forward-looking innovations which will help Canadian youth get the kind of career advice they need to stay in the mainstream of Canadian life. They will learn about themselves, their country, the world of work, and how they can participate. I say to my colleagues that if they look in their own ridings I am sure they will find great solutions to the problem of helping young people. We all know that they are our future and with their help Canada will become the country of the 21st century.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me today to speak to the motion presented by the Official Opposition. First of all, I would like to make it clear to the House that I regret this motion is necessary. Although I welcome this opportunity to speak, I am sorry it should be necessary for the Opposition parties to speak to the situation in which Canada's youth finds itself today.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the subject of this motion, I would like to say first of all that I am glad this motion is couched in general terms, so that it gives us an opportunity to analyze the youth situation, not just from the employment point of view, although this is one of youth's priorities, but also because it gives us a chance to look at other questions that are equally relevant.

Mr. Speaker, for Canadians or for any nation in the world for that matter, youth is one of the most important times of our lives. When we are young, we form habits that will serve us during the rest of our lives, we develop our attitudes, our opinions and in a democratic society, even our political affiliations. It is in this season of our lives that the individual's potential is most obvious, but it is also a time when the gap between the individual's potential and what the individual can accomplish is greatest. Mr. Speaker, we must realize that even if our potential is at a very high level when we are young, our chances of achieving something with that potential are surrounded by all kinds of obstacles, owing to the fact that when we are young, we are still in our formative years and must still go through a process of education and training. This means it is when we are young that we are most susceptible to the influence of others, including the influence of the State, the Government, the political environment in which we grow up and start to explore the world to which we belong.

Mr. Speaker, in discussing the general situation in which Canadian young people find themselves today, I would like to emphasize the role of employment in the lives of our young people. Getting a job is probably one of the highest priorities of most young people in this country.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are other priorities to be considered and analyzed in this debate. I am thinking of education: the education of the individual and the education that individual acquires by being a part of the Canadian community. There is also the future: What kind of future are we building for our children, for the children of our fellow citizens, for the children who tomorrow will be the youth of Canada, and for the youth which tomorrow will be the adults, the citizens, the voters of this country?

There is also the matter of welfare, and I am thinking not only of the very specific connotation of social assistance programs for the unemployed but also of the other sense of the word, the welfare of the individual.

Mr. Speaker, there is also the question of leisure and culture peculiar to an individual, either an ethnic culture, or a native culture, or let us say a strictly Canadian culture, an integrated culture or, as one might say without negative connotation, an assimilated culture.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, priorities can be found in the major actions, the major measures, the major policies of a Government. The attitude of a Government towards the young people of this country, today's specific issue, can really be found in Budget measures, in white or green papers, in major studies published and endorsed by a Government, in its policies.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would like to review some of the measures taken by this Government since it came into office 18 months ago, namely cut-backs and, unfortunately, financial restraints which force us to reduce rather than improve the type and quality of opportunities we can now offer to young Canadians.

Among others, Mr. Speaker, the reduction of transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education. Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Budget restraints implemented by this Government mean that, between now and 1990, there will be a cut-back of $1.5 billion in the amount originally proposed.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the elimination of the Katimavik program.

As a former mayor who was once in a position to launch a Katimavik program in his community, as a former Indian Affairs and Northern Development district manager who could have encouraged native communities to implement programs like Katimavik, Mr. Speaker, I consider this a tragic loss because so many good things were done for small Canadian communities under the Katimavik program. I will have more to say about it in a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the budget of the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) was eliminated, so she is left with a ghost department, the squeleton of a department without a budget and without programs. Naturally we are wondering what kind of role this department will play.

Then, Mr. Speaker, less money available for the Canadian Jobs Strategy program, something like $100 million, and this turned out to be one of the points raised in the secret letter sent by the Minister of State (Youth) to one of her Cabinet colleagues.

If I may quote the English version:

• (1740)

[English]

The Minister has not actually given us the French translation as yet. It states: "Public expections created by International Youth Year require careful management". Note the words: "careful management". It goes on: "—especially in light of the significant diminution in youth related spending, close to $100 million since the election".

Mr. Speaker, this means the Department, which is itself responsible for youth admits of course that funds for our youth have been reduced. There is also, Mr. Speaker the $6.2 million cut in the program Challenge 86, and that kind of transfer, that kind of musical chair game that was done with the $30 million which have been transferred from that Challenge 86 program to the Canada census program for this year, under the guise of new funds for the young.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, the budgetary measures show what this Government's priorities are, and another important indication of those priorities are the major studies published by the Government. Looking at the notorious Nielsen Report, we see indeed that the situation of the young in Canada is not a part of their analysis structure. It seems, Mr. Speaker, that all the headlines, the goals, the objectives of the studies do not fit within the context of improving services to the young, but within the national context perhaps, let us say in the context of programs and departments so designated and structured. But clearly, what we see is a lack of emphasis on the youth situation, and we find that most of those studies tend to promote budgetary cuts rather than the priorities of the young people.

I would like to come back, Mr. Speaker, to the importance of employment among the young people. I would like to share a few personal experiences I had when I was 19. I was unemployed for four months. I can very well recall the emotional difficulties, the problems faced by young people when they have no jobs, when they see they have deserving assets and abilities to contribute to Canadian society. I would like to say that with a Government that is promoting private enterprise, when one has a job, private enterprise is a paradise. This is the best possible example of private enterprise because with jobs young people can look after their own future, their own budget, their own career. But clearly this is impossible when they have no jobs, because they are then dependent upon other people.

If we compare the situation now with what it was 20 years ago, it is clear that for people of my generation, there were a great many more job opportunities which no longer exist. And I feel I was privileged to have access to these job opportunities which do not exist now in such large numbers as they did in the past.

Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate which was at some 18 per cent among young Canadians rose again last month, which I feel is an indication that the Government relies on the private sector to create jobs for young people. As to the programs which will continue to exist, we will see that the situation of young Canadians has a lower priority than before. We have seen that the affirmative action in the Challenge 85 and Challenge 86 programs has been reduced; within the framework of the programs, there are no guarantees for young women; there is no assurance of a fair sharing of jobs before young men and young women; that the wages paid to young women is fair compared to those paid to their male counterparts: that is where this program fails miserably.

Let us go back to Katimavik, Mr. Speaker. As I have already said, this Program has provided many opportunities and had good results in our small communities. Indeed, in my own city of Sioux Lookout, we saw people from Quebec, for instance, who did not speak English before, come to a mostly anglophone community and learn to speak English after four months. I even saw, in native communities, unilingual French or English-speaking people learn a bit of the Native language, Cree, in addition to the other official language. The result has been to create a group of young people who have a better knowledge of Canada, of our transcontinental community than their contemporaries who have had the same opportunity. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that Katimavik was successful if only because those who took part in this program studied for four years and 60 per cent of what we could call the Katimavik graduates found jobs, 27 per cent in a school or university, and less than 7 per cent of them were unemployed at a time when the unemployment rate among young people generally reached 18 and even 23 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the situation in education. There is now an educational anemia in our universities because some people who go to university cannot find a job and take courses without any purpose and without knowing why they attend university.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will examine the situation of young native people in this country, young native people who, as my colleague from Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) said, find themselves in a sad and disastrous situation with respect to employment, with respect to educational opportunities, and with respect to their future as native people in a modern society that hardly appreciate their plight and, in too many cases unfortunately, is not quite prepared to accept them. Mr. Speaker, these young native people are the ones who stand indicted in the Nielsen report where, on page 13 of the English version, one can read the very misleading statement that 70 per cent of those young native people will land in jail before the age of 25. I cannot explain it, it is not up to me to explain it, Mr. Speaker, but I think this refers only to those who are put in institutions, who are re-incarcerated. Such figures are really demoralizing. This being a Government report, I can hardly believe that they are accurate.

So, Mr. Speaker, the whole series of Government measures include precious few programs which promote cultural co-operation between young people and the elderly, programs which in either the native or the majority culture would draw inspiration from the knowledge, the experience and the strong points of elderly Canadians so as to meet the needs of young people in our society who might indeed benefit from the experience of their parents and grandparents.

Mr. Speaker, I see that I have very little time left. I wanted to make a few remarks concerning our Party's task force on youth. I would urge all Hon. Members of the House to read and study the report. The ideas contained in the report are not necessarily our own, for most of them came from various people from coast to coast who are interested in youth programs. Should Hon. Members have any questions, I would be delighted to give further explanations.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? If not, we will continue debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is not much time left to speak to this important issue, and it is rather unfortunate that under the new Standing Orders, Opposition Days start at three o'clock in the afternoon, or even after three o'clock, which means there is very little time to spend on an issue that is to important to the people of Canada.

It is even more unfortunate that the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) could not find an excuse to stay in the House. After making her speech a while ago, she said she had to leave because she had work to do.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are aware that the Minister has a budget of one million dollars up to April 1. This is a million-dollar budget for a non-existent program, for running a department that has no mandate from the Government and really only a spokesperson for the Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, do you know how the young people of Canada refer to the Minister now?

[English]

Do you know what the new nickname of the Minister is, Mr. Speaker, the Minister who did not even see fit to stay in this House for this extremely important debate? They call her "bubbles". The reason they call her bubbles is because she sparkles—

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is customary that Hon. Members do not mention either the presence or the non-presence of Hon. Members of this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member is correct in his point of order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has the floor.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, they call her bubbles because she shimmers, she sparkles, she cuts balloons. She spent $24 million during the International Youth Year running around the country. Yet, she is hollow. She has no interior. She has no guts, no heart.

We heard speakers from the Conservative Party today speak time and time again about the private sector. That is the new credo of the Government. What those Hon. Members do not understand—

When the Minister was appointed, she said she was here to speak up for the more fortunate among the young people of Canada. What she fails to understand is . . . for instance in my riding, there are a lot of young unemployed workers who do not have the resources to get into the private sector and start their own business, who don't even know how to read or write, who don't know how to live and behave in the community. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative creed says: the private sector saves, the private sector will take care of everything, but this means ignoring the problems of the young people in our communities who feel lost in our society. It is true they were lost under the Liberal Government when we were in a world recession, but now they are looking for a glimmer of hope.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter about Katimavik, because that was one of the useful programs. There were 20,000 people who became involved in Katimavik, some of whom didn't know for instance what they were going to do after they finished school. We should realize that not everybody in Canada goes to university. And we are here to fight for those people who don't have the financial or mental resources to go to post-secondary institutions and university. We are here to fight for all the young people of Katimavik.

On behalf of the Senator who was laughed at by the Conservatives because they fail to understand the problems of the poor of Canada, I would like to conclude by reading a letter I received from a Katimavik participant.

[English]

I think the letter is clear and I would urge Hon. Conservative Members of Parliament who believe in help for the young people of Canada to listen to this very brief letter, and I quote:

> I was very disappointed to hear that Katimavik was being cancelled.
> My daughter who is living in England with her sailor husband was in Katimavik some five years ago. She graduated from Grade 13 but wasn't sure what she wanted to do. She heard about Katimavik and decided to go. I can only say that she learned more in nine months about her fellowman, country and many crafts. She was in British Columbia, Rainy River and Quebec.
> I'm sure that living with 12 other young people and getting $1 a day and meeting a cross-section of Canadians has certainly made her a better person.

That is the message of Katimavik. That is the message of this motion. I would urge Government Members to listen to Senator Hébert and to reinstate that program and bring some hope to the young people of this country instead of the kind of private sector nonsense we have heard from the Minister, "bubbles" Champagne.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 12 and Standing Order 82, proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

SELECTION—TWENTY-THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Twenty-Third Report of the Selection Committee. If the House gives its unanimous consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later today.

SELECTION—TWENTY-FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of tabling the Twenty-Fourth Report of the Selection Committee.

[Editor's Note: For above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe Hon. Members know that the rules require that the report be read. I am told that the report is quite long. Would it be reasonable to dispense with the reading of the entire report?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting but I want to make sure that the rules are well understood. If we are not going to read it, will it be printed in its entirety?

Mr. Speaker: That is understood, of course. The only request was that we save time by not reading the report.

Mr. Gauthier: It may sometimes serve our purpose to go through that reading.

Mr. Speaker: That is why it requires unanimous consent.

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed with petitions, I must once again remind Hon. Members that petitions must be certified as to form and content before they can be presented to the House. Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) presented a three-page petition that had been certified and was in order. However, it was accompanied by two boxes of additional signatures which had not formed part of the petition which had been certified. This additional material was, therefore, out of order and has been returned to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from a number of constituents from my riding of Grey-Simcoe, particularly from the City of Owen Sound, who are deeply concerned that the Harbord Street abortion clinic in Toronto still remains open in blatant disregard and defiance of the law and want to see this clinic and all such clinics which take human lives closed.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House on behalf of 39 residents of my riding of Oxford. My constituents are protesting the continued operation of the Morgentaler clinic in the City of Toronto in violation of Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

POST OFFICE—BROOKSBY, SASK.

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Brooksby, Saskatchewan who ask Parliament to ask Canada Post not to close the Post Office because it would greatly affect this rural community.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When petitions were being presented yesterday, it occurred to me that if the Table were to keep a record of the petitions that it certified and provided you with a set list, you might be in a better position to determine whether they were certified as they were presented.

Mr. Speaker: There are two problems. First, we may have a list of Members who have petitions that have been certified but we have no way of knowing whether it is that petition a Member is presenting when he rises.

Second, we now have quite a long list of Members who have certified petitions but we have no idea of what day on which that Member will rise.

The procedural difficulty we face is not knowing, on the spot, or in advance, whether a Member is presenting a certified petition. The Chair can only remind Members of the obligation to have petitions certified, and frankly hope that the message will get through by pointing out when petitions have not been certified. I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution.

DEFECTIVE MOTOR VEHICLE (LEMON LAW)

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-284, An Act respecting Defective Motor Vehicles and to enact the Canadian Lemon Law.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, in a way this is an historic occasion because the Bill I have presented to the House of Commons enacts Canada's first lemon law. A lemon law is an enactment that defines a lemon as a motor vehicle that, through continuous defects and malfunction, is useless for the purpose for which it was intended.

The object of the law is to provide the purchaser with a remedy, namely, the right to return to the motor vehicle for a refund of the purchase price.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members are aware that the House has been operating in accordance with previous standing orders in relation to Private Members' Business until now.

[Translation]

The reason for this is that a special order of the House adopted on Friday, February 14, 1986 provided for the new Provisional Standing Orders to take effect on the day following the adoption of the report of the Striking Committee.

[English]

Since the Striking Committee report has now been concurred in, notice for the Draw for an order of precedence will be sent to all Members who have items on the Order Paper. Once the Order of Precedence is established, the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business is required to select not more than six items which shall be designated as "votable items".

Until the Committee makes its report to the House, the business of Private Members is subject to the provision of Standing Order 37.

[English]

Accordingly, after today—I repeat, after today—there will be no Private Members' Business and the House shall continue with Government Orders until the report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business is deemed adopted by the House.

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between the Parties. Accordingly, I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, a disposition to allow the following motion to be received with unanimous consent and to be passed without debate:

That the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration be empowered to investigate possible means of streamlining immigration policies and procedures for reunifying families, and in particular,

1. to examine the sources and historical patterns of family class immigration, by component;

2. to identify and assess the procedures, by the various departments and agencies that are involved in family class processing, and examine the co-ordination of those functions;

3. to recommend strategies for shortening family class processing durations by improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the family class processing system; and

4. to recommend, where desirable, changes in procedures in order to streamline the reunification of families;

That the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside and outside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the Committee, or members of the Committee, as the case may be; and

That the Committee submit its final report to the House of Commons no later than May 30, 1986.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADJOURNMENT—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE NATIONAL CONVENTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been further discussions, and I had a longer motion to present but I have reduced it slightly. I am sure you will find a disposition to receive this motion by unanimous consent and have it passed, not only without debate but with great elation:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House adjourns this day, it shall stand adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m. Monday, March 17, 1986.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be on the record that we are agreeing to this motion in order to enable our Progressive Conservative colleagues to attend their national convention which begins tomorrow. Our agreement is also on the understanding that a similar courtesy will be extended to the Liberal Party when we have our national convention next November.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I had not intended to say a word. I thought my colleague might have indicated a similar courtesy to be extended to either or both Opposition Parties should such be requested. I just hope the Government can come up with a better policy at the convention than it has now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, for someone who has decided to quit politics, I do not know whether I should take his advice, but I wish him all the best in civilian life.

Mr. Deans: I'm not leaving today. Give me a break.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a serious note, Mr. Speaker. The point is well taken with respect to the House Leader of the Official Opposition and also the first part of the remarks of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. We are certainly prepared to accord a similar arrangement to the Opposition Parties. In fact, I point out that we adjourned on the last sitting day of June, 1985, in order to allow the New Democratic Party to attend its particular annual meeting, and look what it did for them.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

The House resumed, from Tuesday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to resume my remarks which were so rudely interrupted by the five o'clock whistle a couple of days ago. We are talking about Bill C-99, introduced by the Government to request borrowing authority for some $22.6 billion so that it can carry on what it calls its "program".

I want to be very clear about our opposition to the Government's program because I do not believe that that program at all serves the interests of the country. We see that very clearly in the kind of Budget which was presented two weeks ago. It is a Budget which completely fails to deal with the staggering problem of unemployment. British Columbia has the highest percentage of long-term unemployed people anywhere in Canada. Victoria, British Columbia, which is represented by two Conservative Members of Parliament—one of whom is in the House—has the highest unemployment of any major metropolitan centre in Canada. This Budget completely fails to address that situation and I outlined some of those concerns when I last spoke.

In addition, the Budget loads unfair tax burdens on ordinary Canadians. That means it is taking money, not only out of their pockets but out of their communities, which will have a further depressing effect upon local economies.

When I previously spoke I referred to our goals for official development assistance. I pointed out that the Government had now reneged a third time on its goal for an Official Development Assistance Program. We will not now reach the goal of 0.7 per cent of our GNP for official development assistance until the twenty-first century. On February 28, after this was announced, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) called a meeting of the ambassadors of different nations to Canada and attempted to explain. He tried to put the situation into perspective by saying:

—our deficit in four or five days was comparable to the total yearly GNP of Lesotho. In a month, it was about equal to the combined GNPs of Liberia, Mauritania, and South Yemen. And in a year, using figures from the lastest World Development Report, it amounted to the combined total GNPs of Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Zaire, Malawi, Burkina Fasso, Burundi, Tanzania, Rwanda, Benin, Guinea, Togo and Sierra Leone.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs was attempting to justify Canada's cut-backs in its goals for ODA by saying that our deficit was as great as the yearly GNPs of all these nations combined. Somehow he seemed to feel that that justified these cut-backs. I would like to say that it is quite to the contrary.

The fact that these nations have such small GNPs should underline for all Canadians the desperate needs which they have for development assistance. For us to cut back in the face of that type of need is nothing short of criminal. It underlines the reason why our aid is needed and why we have to move as quickly as possible to the stated goal of 0.7 per cent of our GNP right away instead of postponing it to the 21st century. We do not want to see a repetition of the famine in vast parts of Africa which we saw in 1983, 1984 and 1985.

There were warnings with respect to that famine. Action could have been taken in time to have averted a great deal of the tragedy. But countries such as Canada were too slow to move. We have to move more quickly. By cutting back in our goal for ODA we are removing the capability of our development agency to move and prevent future crises such as this. These cuts prohibit further action. It seems we will have to wait until there is some future crisis. We will then step in and wonder why we did not take action earlier.

I wish to stress that development assistance is not a frill but a necessity to world security. The cut-backs which we have seen in our goals will ultimately perform a disservice, not only to the needy people of the world but to Canadians, since our security depends upon a world which is free from the hunger, want and underdevelopment which characterizes so much of it today.

I wish to say a few words about programs for Indian people because the Government is completely failing to meet their needs. Just a few days ago an article in The Globe and Mail pointed out that the Yukon Indian Development Corporation had been denied its application for funding under the Native Economic Development Program after 18 months of foot-dragging by the Government. It was clear that the reason they were denied the funding was a letter written by the Hon. Member for Yukon, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), who wrote to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) asking that the project be shelved. He said: "This matter should receive no further consideration at this time."

When we look at the Estimates for the coming year we see that there will be a cut of some $25 million to the Economic Development Fund in 1986-87. The Conservatives are as good as anyone else at deploring the terrible conditions which exist on Indian reserves. Yesterday the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development acknowledged that conditions on Indian reserves are deplorable. Yet the Government brings in Estimates which cut by some $25 million the Economic Development Fund, the very thing which Indian communities need in order to get out of the welfare dependency trap.

The Nielsen task force report deals with native programs. It is a report which breathes a very mean spirit. It is completely ignorant of the real situation facing Indians, the Inuit and the Métis people of Canada. It is a report which was obviously written from a Bay Street perspective. It breathes a bottomline mentality. It shows no awareness of the needs of Indian people. It talks about user pay for standards. It talks about minimal standards for small bands, in terms of housing and community infrastructure. It admits that in having these minimal standards less than minimal standards for health will result. What type of situation have we when this type of report can even be tabled in the House of Commons in the year 1986? How can we even begin to consider recommendations which talk about less than minimal standards for health for our native people? We are talking about the year 1986 and not the year 1786.

Just last week I heard tragic news concerning four young teen-agers who were burnt to death in a fire in the Kitimat Indian village. I have particular feelings with respect to this matter since I spent four years living in that village. I married the parents of some of those young people.

The fact is that what happened in Kitimat is not unique to Kitimat but is endemic among Indian villages all over Canada. The federal Fires Commissioner said last week that Indian homes are time bombs just waiting to explode. He said that every year, on average, some 12 Indian people lose their lives in Indian communities as a result of fire. Yet, we have a report tabled by the Deputy Prime Minister which talks about minimal standards for Indian housing and minimal standards for community infrastructure. How can we consider that when we see this type of tragic loss of life?

The Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish) when he was in opposition two or three years ago conducted a study of some of the needs of Indian communities in terms of fire protection. I remember him taking his study and passing pictures around showing some of the deplorable conditions in Indian communities and in Indian homes. The photos depicted some of the fire traps in which Indian people have to live. I urge Members opposite to consult their colleague and ask him to dig out this file in order to show them some of these pictures of Indian homes which are nothing more than fire traps. I would then ask them to go to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and say: "We will not stand for these types of conditions on Indian reserves. We want to see things better".

I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have given the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) an extra two minutes. The time allotted for questions and comments will be limited to eight minutes. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for my colleague. As he knows, I was a representative on the Government delegation which went to Nairobi last summer to the Decade of Women Conference. At that time I must say that I was proud that Canada put forward motions and provided leadership with respect to increasing development funds, particularly funds which are so urgently needed for women and children in Third World countries. We now see that the Government is going back on its own commitment. We signed resolutions to improve conditions for women. I hope that we would show some real leadership. I would like the Hon. Member to comment further in this respect.

It seems to me that this is a serious matter. Cutting these programs means that Canada is condemning women and children in Third World countries to die earlier, or to barely survive under appalling living conditions, much less have any opportunities for moving toward equality.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would elaborate somewhat further on the subject to which I know he has such a deep commitment. I hope Members of the House will listen. I refer to the question of what the Government is doing and not doing for native people in Canada.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) is quite right when she refers to the Canadian commitment to development assistance. Canada does not have such a bad record when one compares Canada with other nations. However, it is not that good. There are a number of other nations which are doing much better than is Canada in this regard. However, we are not that bad.

What I wish to emphasize is that we are not living up to the commitment which we made. I refer to the commitment we made to the needy people of the world. It is not just a Conservative promise to the people of Canada which the Government is breaking, but a commitment of Canada's people made through our representatives, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is a commitment he made to the needy people of our world. We are going back on that commitment.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East referred to the situation of women and children throughout the world. We can look to the fact that in Africa, for example, some 90 per cent of the agricultural work is done by women. Yet we are cutting back on the support that is being given to Africa. We are cutting back on programs that could help provide safe, potable water that will reduce disease. We are cutting back on health facilities and I am very concerned about that.

• (1130)

I am pleased to see that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is in the House this morning. I would like to answer the second question put by my colleague about my concern with the Government's policy with respect to Indian people. While on the one hand the Government talks about self-government, on the other it has made cut-backs to such things as economic development. There has been foot dragging and then a denial of the grant to the Yukon Native Indian Development Corporation, a corporation that was trying to get some money so it could help move its people out of this downward spiral of dependency upon welfare and grants and help them get some economic development.

I mentioned the fact that there has been a $25.5 million cut from economic development funds in the Estimates for 1986. We are not seeing anything happening there. Perhaps the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might want to comment on some of these things.

We have now seen the very mean-spirited task force report on native programs that talks about minimal standards. I do not see how a report can be tabled in the House that talks about minimal standards of housing and infrastructure, something which it acknowledges could lead to less than minimal standards of health. I do not understand how such an outrageous report could even be tabled in the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. As the Hon. Member knows, the task force report on Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated that the Government has created modern suburbs on Indian reserves and the Minister made somewhat of an appropriate response to that yesterday. I would like to ask my colleague what additional amounts of money he feels we should have in the borrowing authority in order to meet the requirements of Indian reserves for housing, economic development and other projects. What additional borrowings does he think would be needed each year beginning with this year in order to start doing a lot more on the Indian reserves in Canada?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. I think the Minister himself would acknowledge that there is a continuing backlog that goes back well before his time as Minister of some 10,000 houses that need to be built in Indian communities. We have been very slow at attacking that backlog. In addition to that, there is a backlog of houses that are urgently in need of repair. The Senate Committee report on youth that was just tabled talks about the fact that some 23 per cent of housing on Indian reserves is urgently in need of repair.

While I cannot give an exact figure to the Hon. Member, I would like to suggest the process that the Minister would agree, I am sure, is the process that should be followed, and that is for the Minister to meet with representatives of the Indian community to develop an appropriate budget for housing, housing repair and economic development. It should be a budget that will address the needs of the Indian people rather than the interests of a group that does not really understand what is happening to Canada's Indian people and does not understand the relationship that has existed and should exist between Canada and the Indian, Inuit and Métis people, but rather is only concerned with the bottom line. There should be a process by which the Minister would meet with Indian people to develop a proper formula that will address the needs of the Indian people, rather than the so-called needs of those with a bottom line mentality.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words with respect to Bill C-99, an Act to provide for borrowing authority. This Act provides that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), with the approval of the Governor in Council, may raise money under the Financial Administration Act by way of a loan to the extent of $22,600 million. That is an awful lot of money but, unfortunately, it is in line with the Government's requirements which came about as a result of the situation that was created through years and years of mismanagement and misspending.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have already approved in principle the Budget of February 26. This Bill is the first of a series of Bills necessary to implement the provisions of the Budget that has already been passed in principle. The principles that were set out in the 1986 Budget are the same principles as those followed in the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in November 1984, and the Budget that the Minister of Finance brought down in May 1985. The Budget of 1986 and the borrowing Bill designed to implement the Budget of 1986 follow a consistent pattern of economic principles that have always been the policy and strategy of the Government since it took office in September 1984.

When the Government took office on September 4, 1984, it was faced with two gigantic and enormous conflicting problems. The first, of course, was unemployment. The unemployment rate had been in excess of 13 per cent and at that time it was 11.7 per cent, the highest unemployment rate we have had in Canada since the Great Depression of the 1930s. The unemployment rate had devastated the country and continues to be a problem. The second conflicting problem the Government faced at that time was an enormous spending deficit. Not only did it face an enormous national debt load, it faced an annual federal spending deficit which was reaching at that time $36 billion per year.

In the economic statement of November 1984, in the Budget of 1985 and again in the Budget of 1986, the Minister of Finance has adopted a delicate balance of policies which are designed to try to deal with those two conflicting problems. First, the policies have been aimed at encouraging the private sector to create jobs and to solve that enormous unemployment problem. The private sector has been utilized in this strategy as the engine of economic growth. No longer are we looking to the Government to spend money and try to create these jobs on its own, because that is virtually impossible with a spending deficit that was already in the vicinity of $36 billion. The policies are aimed at creating a climate to encourage the private sector to create the jobs necessary to get Canada growing again.

The second prong in the consistent strategy which has been followed throughout by the Minister of Finance is of course to try to put a hold on the deficit, try to stop its growth, and try to start to cut into and reduce it. Just stopping its growth was a problem in itself. At the time the Government took office in September, 1984, we did not have a deficit that was finite and identifiable with a closed end. We had policies in place at that time which were causing the deficit to continue to grow. The Minister of Finance had to find a way to stop its growth and a way to start reducing the deficit itself. That is what all the policies since the election of 1984 have been aimed at.

Last year, in the Budget of May, 1985, the Minister of Finance spelled out policies which were designed to try to encourage the private sector to create jobs. First, he allocated $900 million for job training and for job creation. In addition, he introduced other provisions which allowed for venture capital financing of small business out of pension funds and Registered Retirement Savings Plans. Aside from that, he introduced a 100 per cent tax credit on the first $2 million of qualifying research and development activity in each year. All those measures were aimed at having the private sector expand, invest and create jobs.

At the same time in last year's Budget, the Minister introduced a series of policies which were aimed at reducing the deficit. In November, 1984 and again in May, 1985, he announced major spending cuts in each and every Department of the federal Government, spending cuts which amounted in total, up to the present time and apart from anything done this year, to $5.8 billion.

Part of that effort was the commencement of a program of reducing the numbers of people in the Public Service. For a number of years the Public Service had been on an upward cycle of growth, continuous growth without any check or balance. The Minister of Finance put in place, in last year's Budget, a policy aimed at reducing the Public Service by 15,000 people, not just by eliminating jobs and putting people out on the street, but by a policy of planned attrition.

In addition, there were measures in that Budget aimed at closing tax loopholes. That is a concern which has been raised in the House on many occasions. It was a concern raised by Government Members when we were in Opposition and by other Opposition Members in the present House.

Also in that 1985 Budget and Minister of Finance eliminated once and for all the scientific research tax credits. In the last few days there has been quite a bit of publicity about that in the press. On Tuesday, in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, we dealt with this problem and found that an enormous amount of money, about $2.8 billion, had disappeared from the government Treasury in order to fund scientific research credits. A lot of that money was siphoned off to private investors, some of it apparently fraudulently but some of it quite legally under the terms of the legislation. However, it was siphoned off in such a way that it did not provide any scientific research whatsoever. That loophole was closed in the last Budget.

Other loopholes were closed in that last Budget as well; the tax shelters for investments in hotels, yachts and recreational vehicles and the family income splitting between husbands, wives and children. They were brought to a halt. In addition, there were provisions to prevent trusts from distributing tax-free investment income. All those loopholes were closed in the May 1985 Budget.

At the same time that Budget increased taxes on corporations, on the banks and on alcohol and tobacco, and it introduced a minimum tax. All those policies were aimed at getting a handle on the deficit.

All those policies in the 1985 Budget were subjected to very, very substantial criticism on the part of the Opposition. The Right Hon. leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) stood in the House and told us that the impact of all the measures in the 1985 Budget would be a very substantial reduction in consumer spending, a reduction which would have a dreadful and terrifying impact upon employment. A few months ago the Leader of the Official Opposition stood in the House after the 1985 Budget and told us that the Budget would cost Canadians 50,000 jobs.

Not to be outdone by the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the New Democratic Party stood in his place at the same time and said that the Budget would cost Canadians 100,000 jobs. That was the sort of criticism which the Minister of Finance and his Budget received last year.

What happened during the past year, in the ensuing months since the May 1985 Budget? If we look at the facts, we find that we had an enormous increase in consumer spending. Interestingly enough, we probably had a record amount of consumer spending at Christmas-time last year. What did all that spending do? It did not reduce the number of jobs by 50,000. It did not reduce the number of jobs by 100,000. In fact, it increased the number of jobs by almost 600,000. The vast majority of those jobs were full-time jobs, not the part-time jobs which had been created in smaller numbers by the former Government in the months previous to the last election. The fact, almost 600,000 new jobs have been created since September 4, 1984.

In addition, unemployment for the very first time has fallen below the 10 per cent figure. It has not fallen enough, and everyone on the Government side of the House realizes that. However, for the first time since 1981 unemployment has fallen below that 10 per cent level.

As well, bankruptcies are down, the Gross National Product is up, manufacturing orders are up, building permits are up, and the Canadian economy has been moving along at a rate in excess of the American economy and at a rate equal to any other economy in the industrialized world with the possible exception of Japan. If Japan is in the same ballpark as the Canadian economy, it is almost in a dead heat.

In addition, the Budget of 1985 was not only effective in creating a climate for the private industry to create jobs, but it was also effective in respect of budgetary deficit reduction. What happened is that the deficit not only stopped growing, but in fact it has actually gone down by about $2 billion in this last year.

That is not satisfactory either, Mr. Speaker. Nobody is suggesting that we have the problem licked. Nobody is suggesting that everything has been solved by any manner or means, but we have gone a long way in starting the process of putting the country back to work and getting the deficit under control. The Government has done that, notwithstanding the criticisms of the Opposition. The Opposition raised enormous criticisms after the last Budget, but all the criticisms amounted to very little. We have had job growth and we have had deficit reduction.

Mr. Nunziata: On the backs of the seniors.

Mr. Redway: In this Budget, the Government is following exactly the same game plan that it followed in the last Budget. The Budget was aimed at encouraging private business to invest and create more jobs. It was also aimed at trying to get the deficit down and reduced further still. In this Budget there are things once again aimed at encouraging private business to invest and create more jobs.

First, the Minister of Finance has allocated an $800 million fund for job training and job creation on the part of the Government itself. He also provided a provision for eliminating the dividend distribution tax. It has reduced the corporate tax on small business by 3 per cent starting July 1. The Budget has extended the current tax rules to provide deductions for business investment losses and it has increased the lending ceiling on small business loans under the Small Business Loans Act by $1.5 billion to a total of $2.5 billion. All of those measures, Mr. Speaker, as you know, are aimed at encouraging the private sector to create more jobs.

The other aspect of the Budget is aimed at deficit reduction. Here we have more measures to reduce spending on the part of Government. The day after the Budget the spending estimates for this coming fiscal year were tabled. You will remember, Sir, that those spending estimates indicated that the non-statutory or the discretionary spending, spending that excludes social service programs and payments we have to make on our national debt, has been held to a less than 1 per cent increase. Last year's discretionary spending was held to 0.2 per cent, less than 1 per cent, and this coming year it will be held to 0.2 per cent again. This is the first time since the Korean War that we have had two consecutive years in which the increase in government discretionary spending has been held to less than 1 per cent. As well, there was a reduction announced of $500 million in spending estimates as part of the Budget itself. Once more, the Minister of Finance has tackled the whole question of Government spending and tackled it in a very forceful way, in a way that has not occurred since the 1950s.

At the same time, the Minister has moved to close more of the loopholes that none of us like, loopholes that allow individuals and corporations to avoid paying taxes. This time loopholes have been closed on corporate inventory allowance, on the general investment tax credit, with respect to tax deductions for limited partnerships, dealing with deferred salary payments and marriage exemptions. As well there is a requirement to report treasury Bill income and treasury Bill interest, something that has not been done in the past. In addition to that there have been tax increases, tax increases on corporations, on alcohol and tobacco. There was a federal sales tax increase and there has been the 3 per cent surtax increase.

We have heard a lot from the Opposition that those increases impact unfairly on the middle class. There is no question that it is a tax on all of us. This means the more tax you pay the more surtax you pay. The people who do not pay a great deal of federal income tax do not pay surtax. In the last Budget we introduced a minimum tax. Those who earn more income and those who pay more taxes will pay more surtax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired. We now have questions and comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the speech made by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). It was a very good speech. However, he may have omitted telling Canadians something. Perhaps I could assist and remind him of it. He said that his Government had done a great deal to plug loopholes in a tax system, or something to that effect.

Could he comment on an article that appeared in last week's Financial Post, not a newspaper which many of my poor constituents subscribe to, but perhaps the Hon. Member will be familiar with this article. It states that if a person makes $40,000 a year comprised of $35,000 in salary, $4,000 in dividends and $1,000 in interest his tax goes from $9,145 in 1984 to $9,409 in 1986 and to $9,957 in 1987. That is a clear increase. At the same time, for an individual earning $150,000 a year, comprised of $100,000 in salary, $15,000 in interest and $5,000 in capital gains, his federal and provincial income tax combined for the province of Ontario, a province in which the Hon. Member and I live, dropped from $53,448 in 1984 to $48,000 in 1986 and to $47,978 in 1987. That is a decrease of $6,000 in income tax for a wealthy Canadian while the middle-class Canadian saw his or her income tax increase by $800 over the same period of time.

Does the Hon. Member think this constitutes plugging loopholes in the system so that ordinary Canadians now pay more and wealthy Canadians pay less? Does he think that is fair under this Budget?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's inquiry. Unfortunately, unlike the Hon. Member, I have not read the article in The Financial Post. I suppose it is the capitalists among us who are the readers of The Financial Post.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: We know where the Hon. Member sits in that category. When we talk about tax loopholes, we have to bear in mind that Hon. Members of this House point out almost on a daily basis a series of one loophole after another. We have to remember though how those loopholes got into the Income Tax Act. We have to remember that the Hon. Member is a supporter of a Party that governed this country for 20 consecutive years or so. During that period of time those loopholes crept into the Income Tax Act, and that is where they all came from.

• (1200)

Since the present Government took office, we have been quite busy plugging a vast number of those loopholes. It may be that we have not plugged them all yet, in fact I am sure we have not. In one case we found the little Egypt bump, or the Chicago bump, which took place a few months ago in connection with the purchase of one oil company by another. That situation was made possible by loopholes which were placed in the Income Tax Act by the Government of which the Hon. Member is a supporter. That loophole was plugged as soon after it became evident as possible.

As we all know, there are other loopholes. The Minister of Finance is addressing those in an orderly fashion and we are eliminating them as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on a question or comment.

Mr. Redway: I am not finished, Mr. Speaker. I was going to go on for quite a while. I still have remarks to make on this very important subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There are only four or five minutes left, and I would like to fit a couple more questions and comments in. I will recognize the Member for Comox-Powell River for a short question or comment and then I will recognize the Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions the previous speaker mentioned the 1985 Budget and talked about unemployment and unemployment insurance. The Member knows that the Government has created an injustice against members of the Armed Forces and retired members of the Armed Forces. Their pension payments have been declared income and they cannot collect unemployment insurance after having paid into the fund for 20 or 30 years. They have no choice but to leave the Armed Forces after a specified period of time, often at a time when their family expenses are the highest. They often have to move and buy another house. Their children are going to university and eating them out of house and home and they must spend a lot of money to clothe them. The transitions are generally extremely difficult.

The Government changed the ground rules. As well, the Government does not permit those retired members who find employment later on to be exempt from paying unemployment insurance premiums. This is completely unjust, because they will never be able to collect unemployment insurance. The Government also proposes to reduce the indexation on their pensions.

Would the Member explain why he and other Conservative Members are supporting that provision which has been put forward by the Government? Would he exlain why he thinks that is fair?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am again very pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's question. As he is well aware, unemployment insurance has not been subject to any review for about 20 years. As a result, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has appointed the Forget inquiry to study the question of unemployment insurance. The task of that inquiry is to straighten out a great problem which has existed over the years. There have been allegations made by a great many people that some people who should not get unemployment insurance do receive it. There have been allegations that people decide not to work, but rather to claim unemployment insurance benefits rather than take an available job.

I am sure the Hon. Member agrees with me and with the Government that it is time to take a very serious look at the unemployment insurance system to ensure that it is operating efficiently and effectively, and doing the job which the Canadian people want it to do.

Hopefully the Forget Commission will help us to decide whether unemployment insurance is like a life insurance policy which we pay into and must get our money out of at some time, or like a fire insurance policy which we pay into and only claim from if we have a fire. That is one of the big issues which we must debate and solve. Part of the Hon. Member's comments relate to that issue. I do not for a moment suggest what the answer is. Perhaps unemployment insurance should be like life insurance in that we pay into it and when we die, retire, or whatever, we get all our money back. I think that would be great, because I have paid into it all of my life and have never received a cent from it. Hopefully I will not have to get money out of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is such a popular Member that I think I should allow another popular Member to ask another short question or make a short comment. I will recognize the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: You are very kind, Mr. Speaker. I want to say how popular we think you are as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I have known the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for a number of years. He and I were municipal politicians in another life. I have always known him to be a fair and reasonable individual. In fact, I always thought he was a Liberal until he ran for the Conservative Party in the last election. However, I have always known him to be fair.

Does the Member think that the cumulative effect of the tax increases on individual Canadians through the two Wilson Budgets is fair? Does he think it is fair that the cumulative tax increase for an individual earning $15,000 a year is 23 per cent while the total tax increase for someone earning $100,000 a year is only 1 per cent? Does the Member consider that result of these two Budgets, which he has spoken so highly of, to be fair? Does he consider it fair that the Conservative Government should try to reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged in society: namely, the seniors, the unemployed, the young, and the disabled? What is fair about that?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, we have known each other for many, many years. I hope it was not in another life, but in this one. He may have thought I was a Liberal, but we all knew he was a member of the New Democratic Party, until very recently.

Mr. Parry: Spare us.

Ms. Mitchell: Don't be so mean.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am just getting into it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has the floor on debate.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we all followed with interest the carefully prepared speech of the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) in which he advanced a good defensive position on behalf of his Party and Government. I was struck by the selective memory he displayed this morning, and by the fact that he, albeit not deliberately I am sure, forgot to mention in his analysis of the reduction of the deficit the measure that was introduced in the Budget which allows those who can afford it to enjoy a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption which will have a profound impact on the revenue of the Government of Canada. That measure is certainly not consistent with the goals expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). In fact, it is in plain contradiction of the policies which the Government has been propounding over the last year and one half.

One must also observe that the Member for York East, again I am sure inadvertently, in analysing the tax bills and putting forward their positive features, forgot about three instances of deindexation. The deindexation of senior citizens' pensions was at last repealed by the Government. The deindexation of the personal income tax deduction will increase the income tax burden on every taxpayer in Canada in the future. Finally, the deindexation of family allowances is now before the Senate and is the source of a considerable number of complaints from the women of the country. I am sure the Hon. Member for York East will understand that in the long term, when this measure comes into full effect a few years from now, it may also cause an increase in the burden of the social budgets of municipalities and the provinces.

One must also comment on the neglect of the environment as a result of its treatment by this borrowing Bill. The thesis I am putting forward today is that the Government is derelict, insensitive and penny wise but pound foolish in the way it is cutting back on the Department of the environment and its programs. Let me outline the areas in which these measures are unjustified.

First, the total budget of Environment Canada in the last two years has risen by 0.5 per cent while conservative estimates show that inflation has gone up by 8 per cent in two years. Therefore, the budget of Environment Canada has been eroded by 7.5 per cent. That is the net effect on the culpability of the Government in answering the growing concern that Canadians are expressing in a variety of ways over toxic chemicals, acid rain, wildlife management, water quality and other environmental issues. According to predictions that have been made, inflation will continue and therefore erode the base of that Department. If it continues to erode at the same rate of 4 per cent, the damage a year from now will be even greater than the 7.5 per cent damage which I mentioned earlier as a result of the Government's policy in the past two years.

Let us look at the specifics of the Department of the Environment estimates for this year. For instance, we see a decline between 1984 and 1986 of some $8 million in contributions to the provinces for sewage treatment construction programs. The figure was approximately $10 million in 1984 but has dropped to $1.9 million in the estimates this year.

Let us consider the inland waters programs which includes the implementation of federal-provincial programs and the implementation of international water policy agreements. We see a cut of some $5.9 million in the capacity of the people in charge of those programs—whose number has been reduced by 14, incidentally—to do their jobs in the inland and international waters on behalf of Canadians and to implement the international agreements that we have made.

If we examine environmental protection we see a cut of $12 million between 1984 and this year. There are 25 less people in charge of that particular function within Environment Canada and the House is aware that this environmental protection section also covers the federal role in the management of PCBs, toxic chemicals and issues related to lead in gasoline, pesticides, acid rain and dioxins.

Wildlife conservation in an important program in relation to the health of Canadians in the long term because the observations that we make about wildlife will also indicate the human effect of some of the substances that are passed on to wildlife through discharges from dumps and other industrial and domestic activities. These studies may tell us about the long-term effect on humans. However, in the past two years we have seen a loss of $4.7 million to the Canadian Wildlife Service and a loss of some 168 people who were active in that particular service. Furthermore, the Minister of Finance in his Budget statement, promised a 2 per cent cut in non-statutory spending. The impact of that cut is not yet known to any Department, I understand, but when it is applied it will diminish the effectiveness of Environment Canada because I am sure that Department will not be spared the axe of that 2 per cent cut. It could even be a greater amount, depending on how it will be applied by Treasury Board.

In concluding this analysis on environmental cuts in the Estimates for this year, I must also draw to the attention of the House that the Department of the Environment, under the guidelines of the present Government, is also losing sight of priorities.

When one compares the priorities being adopted by the Department this year with the priorities of previous years, we see an astonishing declaration concerning acid rain. The priority of the Department this year is to implement agreements and programs that are aimed at reducing the effects of acid rain. At first sight, this may seem to be rather harmless, but reducing the effect of acid rain is totally different from the previously adopted policy priority to reduce the acid rain depositions. That priority is not in the latest Estimates.

There is a big difference between reducing acid rain depositions and reducing the effects of acid rain. Reducing the depositions means going to the source, controlling the emissions and setting specific targets and dates to ensure that they are reduced over the years. The new policy priority to reduce the effects means accepting the level of acid rain depositions or emissions in the environment and trying to cure the effects of these depositions. This means that these priorities are shifting attention from controlling the emissions at the source to treating the depositions and their effects on the environment. I submit that this is a very serious shift in policy and I cannot understand why all of the efforts that so far have been aimed and focused on prevention should suddenly be abandoned, by virtue of this priority as stated in the Estimates, and replaced by a policy to reduce the effects. I cannot express it any other way than to say that this shift in policy disturbs me profoundly and I cannot understand how or why it has happened.

In order to bring to your attention the fact that Environment Canada is losing sight of its priorities, let me raise another point. This year the water quality in the Great Lakes Basin, Lake Ontario and the other Great Lakes is not listed as a priority. There is no reference to the St. Clair River or to the Niagara River. That is a serious omission if one considers that the concerns of Canadians who live along the St. Clair and Niagara Rivers are at an all-time high. Second, we must consider the fact that we have an international obligation to discharge, by virtue of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Here, again, for the life of me, I cannot understand the Government's position with the upsurge of public interest and concern and with the hundreds of questions which have been asked in this House during Question Period by Members of all Parties, including the Hon. Member for York East, who has been a tower of strength in this debate. It just defeats my ability to understand why these priorities do not emerge in the Estimates of Environment Canada in 1986-87.

What we are witnessing here is the Government losing sight of priorities as expressed in the Estimates. We have witnessed over the years 1984 to 1986 a number of cuts applied to Environment Canada. In addition to that, the purchasing power of that Department is losing ground rapidly in relation to inflation. That is not fair, it is not desirable, and it is not in the public interest.

In his Budget, the Minister of Finance included a measure whereby there would be a three-year tax write-off on wind energy equipment. That raised a lot of questions because one wonders why there would be just a measure to favour wind energy equipment. I am sure there is a very good reason for it, and that there are people who will, hopefully, take advantage of it. But there is nothing for other renewable sources of energy like solar energy biomass, and so on. This narrow approach to renewable sources of energy is a puzzle.

In analysing the measures which should have been introduced by the Minister of Finance, but which were not, in relation to environmental issues which are emerging with greater frequency and importance, one wonders why the Minister of Finance did not provide, in the light of what is happening on the St. Clair and Niagara Rivers, some measures for an accelerated tax write-off which would be applied on pollution abatement equipment and which would give the industries along the St. Clair and Niagara Rivers, an incentive to clean up, so to speak, their act. Evidently, these are old fashioned, outdated, operations. The equipment is getting old. The incidence of accidents and spills are becoming more and more frequent. There are measures available to the Minister of Finance to encourage and entice the industries which are engaged in these operations every day to do their part and to clean up their act. I was looking forward to finding some of those measures in the Budget, but they were not there.

Another initiative which the Minister of Finance will sooner or later have to take into account and apply in his Budget is a change in the tax structures on gasoline. You have heard me before, Mr. Speaker, express my view about the necessity of changing our design of the taxes as they apply to leaded and unleaded gasoline so that the price at the pump will be equal for both. The revenue to the Government would remain the same but the demand for unleaded would be greater than now and the demand for leaded would be less. In doing so, we in North America would be pioneering, although not globally, a measure which was introduced in Denmark and Austria. The public buys at the pump either leaded or unleaded gasoline at the same price. That would once and for all do away with the practice of misfueling. We would also reduce the amount of lead in the air and on the ground which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, harms the health of humans, particularly children. We can then do our part in facilitating the purchase and use of cars which run on unleaded gasoline, which have a catalytic converter installed to prevent the emission of certain gases which contribute to acid rain. Therefore, we would be taking a considerable step in the right direction. We will try to do this with the new car models in 1987, but at the present time there is a disincentive to Canadians at the pump to go for unleaded gasoline because the spread in price is around three cents, and in some cases even more.

The application of the taxes on gasoline is reinforcing and widening this gap. That is something the Minister of Finance has to face. He has to bite the bullet in order to eliminate this differential in price at the pumps.

In the Budget there was no reference, unfortunately, to reinstating the Guelph Toxicology Centre. We in this House, from all Parties, who are engaged in matters which relate to water quality, know how important it is to maintain the momentum of our research on toxicology, and particularly on the impact of certain substances in water. Our standards are acceptable for certain substances and not yet acceptable for others. There is an enormous new territory which has to be explored in terms of toxicological research. Yet, a measure which was announced in 1983-84, to become a reality in 1984-85, has been wiped out. Despite the representation being made by the academic and scientific community and despite the representations made by environmental groups, and all of those who are concerned with human health, the Guelph Toxicology Centre is still a dead letter. It is only an idea on paper which does not seem to catch the imagination of the so-called Progressive Conservative Government.

I wonder sometimes about the Government because that is not the way to protect the public interests, by neglecting the basics which relate to public health. We should develop the instruments which will put to work the scientists we have and prevent them from leaving Canada to go abroad, enticed by other opportunities. This Government can provide them with opportunities at home in the field of research in which they are competent and for which there is a future and a necessity for the protection of the health of Canadians. I despair sometimes about this lack of sense of direction on the part of this Progressive Conservative Government.

I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that in the Budget—and I do hope the Government will pay attention to this at the next opportunity—there is no attention being paid to the plight of municipalities to modernize sewers, to separate where necessary their sewer systems. As Hon. Members know, sewer systems have an impact on the quality of water downstream if they are incomplete or non-existent. This is a measure which the Government of Canada will have to re-examine in order to bring back some basic infrastructure program to help municipalities in their daily battle to maintain and protect water quality in their jurisdictions for the safety and sake of their own citizens.

I see that Your Honour is indicating my time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) because I have a great deal of respect for him and for his interest in environmental matters. I understand his interests with regard to matters of the environment and I share in them. However, I know the Hon. Member is also aware that we have other substantial problems in the country as well. We must address these problems in the over-all context and not just in the narrow sense of one particular program or other.

I know he is aware that we have a very substantial unemployment problem. I know he is aware that we have a very substantial deficit problem. Both of these problems came about while he was a Minister in the former Government. I know the Hon. Member is aware as well that in the last year in which the Government of which he was a Minister was in office it had to borrow some $29.8 billion in order to pay for all of its expenditures. That was after the Government had collected all the revenue it could from all the sources it could and applied those revenues to its total expenditures. His Government had to borrow some $29.8 billion in order to pay the bills for those expenditures. Fortunately, in the Bill which is before us we do not have to borrow that amount of money; we have it down to $22.6 billion. At any rate it is still a great deal of money. It is hard for any Canadian to understand just exactly what billions of dollars are.

We know what happens when we have to go out to finance companies or banks to borrow money in order to pay for our groceries in any particular week. We know that cannot go on in our households day after day, month after month and year after year. We know that it will eventually catch up with us, and it will catch up with us sooner than it will catch up with us later. So I know the Hon. Member is aware of this great deficit problem.

In his opening remarks he mentioned some concerns he had with respect to my comments which related to the Bill and to the Budget in general. One of them had to do with the question of the capital gains tax exemption. He indicated that it was simply a tax loophole.

Mr. Caccia: It is forgone revenue.

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Member mentioned that this measure was put in place to try to encourage job creation in the country. I wonder if the Hon. Member is suggesting that we should do away with this measure. If he is not suggesting that, then what does he suggest we implement to create some jobs in the country?

I know the Hon. Member is aware of the scientific research tax credit measure put in place by his Government in January of 1984. He is aware that this measure cost the taxpayers of the country some $2.8 billion. This is money which could have gone to reduce the deficit. It could have gone to pay for environmental programs. Instead of going for scientific research the money was drained off by investors who did quick flips, put the money in their pockets and walked away with what was essentially taxpayers' money, instead of using it to pay for the deficit and the programs which the Hon. Member would like to see. What does the Hon. Member suggest in place of those programs?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, first I have to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words. At the same time I draw to his attention that the capital gains tax is not a loophole but a forgone revenue. In addition, that particular measure is not focused on the creation of jobs at all. It is left wide open without any specific intent. It can involve capital gains incurred outside of the country through such measures as the buying of yachts or even a piece of property in Venezuela, for example. Therefore, its specific purpose is not job creation. If it were geared to job creation then the Hon. Member and I would be speaking the same language. Unfortunately, the measure is not so directed.

The distressing thing about the application of cuts is that some departments have escaped them while others are able to keep up with inflation in their budgets. There is not only that to consider but the fact that some departmental budgets have increased by more than the rate of inflation. Is that fair? Why is it possible for some departments to command such muscle within the system while others are left to slip and remain behind? This is why I raise the matter in those terms.

As Hon. Members are aware, the Department of the Environment deals with matters which in the end affect our economy in the long term. The Department deals with matters which, perhaps, affect our daily health. This is not just a romantic notion which is being nurtured. It disturbs me, as I am sure it disturbs the Hon. Member, who I know has an outstanding and distinguished municipal past, to see the Department of the Environment slipping badly behind, particularly in relation to provincial grants for sewer and similar infrastructures.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a matter with the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) which is of serious concern to many people. It deals with borrowing, budgets and the financial policy of the Government. I refer to the matter of Armed Forces pensions and the denial of this Government to permit members of the Armed Forces to collect unemployment insurance during a time of transition. This is also a serious matter for members of the Armed Forces who are retired and who are forced to pay unemployment insurance premiums for something which they will never collect. I also wish to deal with the Government's proposal in the 1985 Budget to partially deindex the pensions of members of the Armed Forces. As far as I can determine, and as far as others can determine, this is an incredible injustice perpetrated by the Government on present members of the Armed Forces and those members who are retired. I would appreciate a comment from the Hon. Member for Davenport in this regard.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) we are speaking the same language. There is nothing wrong with that. Several of us who have made appeals before the Forget Commission have expressed our profound concern with the Armed Forces pensions and the cut-off until payment is exhausted before one qualifies for unemployment insurance. I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has made interventions during Question Period in this regard, as has the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and others on our side. This is a matter of great concern to us. We see it as a convergence of measures on the part of a Government which calls itself Progressive Conservative but which does not even understand the basics of the meaning of the word "progressive", and which is actually regressive. This move has to stop. I do not think society can continue to impose these penalties on people who have accepted certain rules of behaviour on behalf of their Government, and who are all of a sudden told: "Sorry, you do not qualify for unemployment insurance because your employer is giving you a lump sum payment. Use up your lump sum payment first, or your pension, and you will then qualify for unemployment insurance". We say that is unfair.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, it is really sad for a young Member of Parliament such as myself to have to listen to this type of speech by a Member of the House who has such experience here. I have listened with great attention to everything the Hon. Member has said. He was supposed to talk about the borrowing authority but he touched on issues of environment, a portfolio which I believe he occupied in a previous Government. Yet when looking at the record of the previous Government in environment, we are able to see what he did. Everything about which the Hon. Member complains is the legacy of that Government.

It is a matter of public record that the leader of the Hon. Member's Party, previous to the election, was telling Canadians how imperative it was that we reduce the deficit. Yet in the House, the Liberals oppose any tax increases and are opposed to every single cut to a program that has been contemplated by the Government. This leads us to think that Liberals simply want to continue to further increase the Government's debt.

Regarding Bill C-99, is it the position of the Hon. Member that we should further increase the national debt of Canada? Liberals oppose cuts and they oppose tax increases. What can we do?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that there are ways of reducing the debt of the Government and there are also times for reducing it, but we do not do it by cutting down services to the public; we do not do it by freezing the civil service; we do not do it by reducing the payments to the provinces and we do not do it the way the Government has done it in this primative, backward and almost barbaric manner.

Mr. Valcourt: How do you do it? Answer that.

Mr. Caccia: The way to do it is to make sure the economy expands and that revenue increases. It is done gradually through increased revenue, not through cutting down the Government. There is a role for the Government to play. That is the profound difference between the Tories and the Liberals in the way we approach this matter.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on his fine speech. What a difference a year makes.

In the North Bay Nugget, a fair paper, there is an editorial which says that there may be a lot wrong with the federal Budget but it is the first time in 15 years that somebody has done something to reduce the deficit. It goes on to say that the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) just wants to spend a lot of money, but if they had saved us some money we would have good times now. It also says that the Leader of the Opposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Let us get to the question.

Mr. Mantha: I am sorry. When the Hon. Member was a Minister, it is a known fact that all Liberal Ministers of the previous Government had slush funds. How did he spend his slush fund money?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. There was no slush fund.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, last Friday you will recall, on the eve of International Women's Day, Conservative Members ignored the agreement to put up speakers which had been arranged with other Parties and therefore closed debate on the Budget. This was done before I was allowed to speak on the impact of the Budget on Canadian women. I do not recall hearing any Conservative speaker mentioning the impact of the Budget on Canadian women. That is one of the things on which I want to concentrate my remarks today. I might say that the Budget was a typical act of discrimination.

It is difficult to determine just what the Government intends to do with the $22.6 billion it wants authorization to borrow under Bill C-99. I personally would be much happier to support this Bill if I thought the money would go toward positive measures that would improve the lot of ordinary Canadians, particularly Canadian women, children and young people. Unfortunately, because of the Budget which we have been studying and about which we are very concerned, we know that the government measures are very negative measures. We know that these funds will be used largely for those same negative measures.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House, and particularly Conservative Members, the fact that over the last month there has been the greatest surge of short-term borrowing in the history of Canada. This was concurrent with the time the Budget was introduced and was becoming known to Canadians and the international community. Of course, this happened largely because the Government had to put billions of dollars, I assume, into propping up the Canadian dollar. Along with that, we were paying and will continue to pay increased interest on the amount of money that was going to prop up the Canadian dollar.

This dramatic drop in the value of the dollar over the past month was directly related to the lack of confidence in the Government and its Budget. Not only does it cost us more in interest rates because of that lack of confidence, we calculated that each Canadian family would pay an average of $100 per year in increased food costs, something about which we do not always think. This borrowing Bill repeats the negative philosophy and negative use of borrowed funds which are costing us all much more in interest.

Of course, women share in the lack of confidence in the Government which was reflected by the drop in the dollar. There was no mention in the Budget of women at all, and certainly there was no reference to the very strong statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Halifax at the First Ministers' Conference. At that time he said that all Governments must give priority to economic equality for women. The Government makes no mention of this when it gets down to doing something in the way of a Budget. There was nothing in the Budget designed to deal with the inequities for women and other minority groups that must be redressed.

As I said, women were not mentioned at all in the Budget. On the other hand, when looking at the Budget closely, we realize that it adds another layer of financial burden on women. Women are already the poorest of our citizens and still earn just 63 cents on the dollar. Women carry double work-loads at home and in the workplace. As I mentioned yesterday, farm women often carry three heavy work-loads while there is no day care for their children. Women are the last hired and the first fired, particularly if they happen to work for the federal Government. Women are being pushed further into part-time, low-paid jobs that are not unionized and do not have benefits, or they are being forced to go on unemployment insurance. This is as a result of the policies of the Government, which is pushing for even more privatization and deregulation and for more government cut-backs in public services.

As I mentioned earlier when I spoke to one of my colleagues, we are very concerned about the Budget from an international point of view and how it will affect our pride in Canada's role in the world. The Budget cuts back on international aid, and this has a tremendous impact, particularly on women and children in developing countries. These women and children are indeed going to be condemned to die in many cases as a result of Budget cuts.

Before I return to the particular parts of this Budget about which I am concerned, and about which Canadian women are becoming increasingly concerned, I would like to mention a few other points. As we have said over and over again, the average family is grossly and unfairly taxed, to the tune of something over $1,300 in additional taxes over the last two years. On the other hand, wealthy families continue to benefit from the capital gains tax exemptions and there is nothing at all in the Budget to indicate that there has been real tax reforms such as those we have advocated.

As a British Columbia, I would like to say that I am very concerned. The Conservative Budget is a disaster for British Columbia. We need more jobs, not just more cuts and taxes on top of what we already have in the way of British Columbia restraint programs. Direct federal spending on job creation will be cut by an additional $100 million this year.

In many parts of B.C. unemployment continues to be as high, if not higher than in the maritime provinces. For example, unemployment in Victoria, the capital city of British Columbia, is the highest in Canada. It is over 16 per cent. I should like to warn the Conservatives in the Government that the Government of British Columbia practised the restraint the present Conservative Government is imposing federally, and it has resulted in 16 per cent unemployment in Victoria. No special initiatives were taken in the Budget to create new jobs in British Columbia.

We have heard many suggestions from New Democrats respecting concrete job proposals; investment in community development, enhancement of the forest and fishery resources, and reform of taxes to help pay for many things. Recently I received a telegram from a group in British Columbia, the Mothers Action Committee, which indicated that hundreds of thousands of Canadian women are struggle daily under terrible conditions of poverty to survive and raise children, and that deliberate Government policies make the rich richer and oppress women. They want money for child care, pensions for homemakers, reindexing of the family allowance and fair pay for their work. Of course the Budget and Government policies will do just the opposite for women. The tremendous tax load of over $1,300, which I mentioned, will have a much greater or disproportionate impact upon women. In effect, it will push more women and their children into poverty; there is no question about it.

The cuts to Public Service jobs have already affected women disproportionately. I have been told that in the translation department, for example, 63 per cent of the lay-offs were women, yet only 52 per cent of the staff are women. In the fisheries Department, many more women were let go, yet there are very few women employed in that Department. Over-all cuts to certain Government Departments will also affect women's jobs and services to women. For example, the Budget shows that $4.82 billion, a lot of money, will be cut from the Department of National Health and Welfare over the next four years. From where will it be cut? We know where it will be cut. It will be cuts in family benefits and in programs such as Planned Parenthood, the National Clearing House on Family Violence and non-statutory services. The Minister mentioned that discretionary funding would be at risk. It will be cuts to women's organizations and community non-governmental organizations which are already under funded. We have also learned, from the point of view of the Nielsen task force, that a cut of $9 million is proposed from Secretary of State women's programs. That is unforgiveable and intolerable.

The Budget also cut employment training programs which will have a great impact upon women. In 1984 women only had about 14 per cent of the training spaces. I raised this matter, along with a number of issues, with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) last week. There will also be a cut of over $100 million from the Canadian Jobs Strategy, at a time when we need more money for job strategy, particularly for women. Now the Nielsen task force is advocating more cuts.

The Government brags about helping those in need. I find that to be unforgiveable on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is bad enough that he does these things, but he tries to fool people, particularly those who are hurting and have no power to fight back. It is quite unforgiveable. He says that he is designing programs to help those in greatest need, but let us look at the actual facts.

The National Council of Welfare figures prove that the impact of the Conservative Budget, without even looking at the impact of the sales taxes, will result in the lowering of the disposable income of a family which is at three-quarters of the poverty level—a very poor family—by $118, while an upper income earner who receives over $100,000 will gain $422. The poor family loses $118, plus the sales tax increases which will be imposed, while the high income earner gains $422 plus tax benefits. How can one possibly say that it helps those in greatest need?

Let us look at the so-called child tax credit and the family allowance which have both been deindexed. The value is being eroded. The terminology is being changed. We no longer talk about universality; we talk about universal access. We know that means an erosion of universal family programs. The refundable tax credit will not cover last year's sales tax increases, much less compensate families for the loss of indexation on family benefits. It also penalizes single mothers who do not receive the extra $100 for a spouse.

The Government has allocated $100 million per year to new employment initiatives for social assistance recipients. I caution the Government. It should make sure that it consults with community people, including those from low-income organizations, on how the money should be used. We could really get into a bind if we are not careful here. We do not want punitive work for welfare measures as the Nielsen task force recommends for native people. If women on welfare are to take advantage of job opportunities, they must have training and child care, and there is nothing in the Budget in that regard. I hope that some of the new funding will go toward funding self-help programs and toward community development in low-income communities, which will provide double benefits in terms of improving community support services as well as providing paycheques.

I am extremely disappointed, as are Canadian women and men, particularly those who are parents, that the Government completely ignored the very urgent need for federal funding to begin to upgrade and expand many forms of child care. We need money now, according to the Cooke report which was tabled last week, to begin to upgrade existing services so that children are not placed at risk and many working parents at least begin to feel that there is some licensed care in communities.

The proposal of Katie Cooke was a very conservative one. It was far too conservative, from my point of view, but it made clear that the federal Government must put some good-faith federal grants into the system this year so that we can begin to build toward a much more comprehensive child care service in all communities in the future. Only 13 per cent of our families are so-called traditional families now. Eighty-seven per cent are families with two parents working, and in the case of 10 per cent of them they are families headed by women. We have a whole new society in Canada. The Conservative Government, especially the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), has to begin to accept reality. Fifty-two per cent of the mothers of infants are in the workforce and they do not have care for their children. Over the past eight years there has been a 60 per cent increase in the numbers of families that need child care. I could go on and on.

In 1984, there were almost two million children who needed care and we had only 171,000 licensed spaces for them. We have to begin to act on this. Even from an economic point of view, I hope Conservative Members realize that many mothers have to work. If they do not work there will be more poor families on welfare. The cost of investing in day care is not only essential to children, but it will also save both social costs and costs for women who would otherwise remain on welfare all their lives.

In conclusion, we are very disappointed, in fact very crushed by the federal Budget, particularly the lack of any recognition of the need for women to achieve equality and for low-income families to have the opportunities they deserve, which is their right in a rich country like Canada. We have to plan for economic equality. The Government is pushing people backward and is particularly penalizing women and children.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before calling it one o'clock, I should like to indicate that the Hon. Member has four minutes remaining for debate, if she wants to continue, plus the 10-minute question and comment period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, today approximately 400 Canadians from Montreal have come to Parliament to protest the cut-backs in unemployment insurance for those taking early retirements pensions. These Canadians range in age from 49 to 63. Many of them still have family responsibilities. Many have paid unemployment insurance premiums for over 30 years and never collected. Now they are about to collect for the first time and they have been cut off. They feel betrayed by the Government and they are angry. They want the Government to withdraw this crual, retroactive policy. If that is not done, they will not forget.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CALL FOR IMPOSITION OF ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Government of South Africa stands condemned once again when, on Tuesday last, police fired without provocation on more than 2,000 black children gathered to attend the trial of friends.

Across Canada, protests are mounting against the violence of apartheid.

Today, post office, airline, and communications workers will engage in a 24-hour job action in support of their repressed brothers and sisters in South Africa. Labour and community groups are gathered in protest in downtown Vancouver. The United Food and Commercial Workers are calling on all retail outlets, including those of the Department of National Defence, to refrain from the purchase and sale of South African goods.

The message to the Government is clear. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) must fulfil his promise at the United Nations to impose strong sanctions and end diplomatic relations with the Botha regime, if, at the end of the six months' deadline established by the Commonwealth, there has been no fundamental dismantling of apartheid.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

SHIPBUILDING

URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO TABLE NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, Canada is one of the few countries in the world that borders on three oceans and also has a very extensive network of navigable inland waters.

Our shipbuilding industry has developed over the years, and in this country we have state-of-the-art equipment and thousands of very experienced shipyard workers.

We must achieve a degree of self-sufficiency in the shipbuilding industry, while at the same time competing on world markets.

To maintain our work force and the kind of equipment we have in this industry and to further develop our skills, I think it is urgent, Mr. Speaker, that a national policy on Canadian shipyards be tabled here in the House.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

REACTION OF INTEREST GROUPS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the great Canadian tragedy is that once a Government program is in place it develops a constituency, which either continues to support it on principle or, worse, depends on it in practice. The dependency becomes addictive. The expenditures become entrenched.

The original purpose of the program is lost as the beneficiaries come to view the program not as a privilege but rather as a right. The tabling of the report of the Task Force on Program Review represents a giant step on the road to more efficient government. Yet already, Mr. Speaker, we are hearing howls of anguish from the interest groups vehemently denouncing any possible reduction or diminution of what they view as their particular entitlement.

I urge all Members carefully and objectively to consider the various recommendations put forward by this non-partisan public and private sector task force.

Canadians have a right to expect government that serves their needs at a reasonable cost.

PORNOGRAPHY

TRANSMISSION BY TELEPHONE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have received a number of telephone calls from furious parents who are demanding that the Government take immediate action to deal with the dial-a-porn epidemic.

One of the calls I received today was from Mrs. Angela Burgess of Russell, Ontario, whose nine and 11-year old daughters got the dial-a-porn number from a 10-year old girlfriend who, in turn, got it from her 12-year old sister, et cetera, et cetera.

Mrs. Burgess told me the dial-a-porn numbers are circulating like wildfire among children, and she is going to refuse to pay her phone bill until the problem is dealt with by Bell.

She said:

I am not going to support a company that supports pornography.

I would urge other parents who find themselves in a similar situation to do exactly the same thing, but I would also urge the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to introduce legislation as soon as possible to prevent this garbage from being transmitted through the telephone system. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) should also launch a criminal investigation to determine if charges should be laid against Ma Bell.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—REACTION TO MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is always sad when friends fall out. Today I read about Irene Porter of Nova Scotia, who is running for the presidency of the Young Conservative Party in Montreal this weekend. Miss Porter lambasted the infamous letter from the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and said: "I don't think any Government has a mandate to go out and recruit Party members".

Typical Tories that they are, two Ontario government Members are speaking up too. The Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks) says that Metro Toronto Tories "are not getting our fair share based on our size". The Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) says: "It doesn't come to mind that there has been anything".

Out in White Rock a B.C. pensioner, Jack Peake, said: "Mulroney promised all sorts of cuts . . . but not one word about his own fat indexed pension. In fact, the first thing he wanted to do was cut our pensions. If it weren't for old folks these people who throw stones at us wouldn't have what we've got today".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

INDUSTRY

LES MERCURIADES—PARTICULAR DISTINCTION FOR BEAUCE REGION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of this House the results of the Mercury awards held recently in Montreal. Organized by the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, this contest, which has how been held for the sixth time, is aimed at promoting and honouring the skills and excellence of our business people.

Seventeen Mercuries were awarded, as symbols of excellence and entrepreneurship in the business community.

Of all regions in Quebec, Beauce made a particularly good showing. In fact, three small businesses from our region won awards during this event. The businesses that received the Mercury awards were Cartem in Ste-Marie, Garaga in St-Georges and finally the famous Canam Manac group.

These achievements prove that when given a chance, the people of Beauce are capable of meeting the industrial challenge. We ought to be proud of regions that help themselves and do so very successfully.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS IN MANITOBA—PROVINCE'S SHARE OF FUNDING

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, as someone who has been a teacher for many years I fully appreciate the vital role which post-secondary educational institutions play in our society. Their function is even more significant in these times of high youth unemployment. That is why it is so essential that federal funding be passed on directly to our post-secondary institutions. Unfortunately, several provinces, including the Province of Manitoba, are failing to do that.

As the non-partisan Johnson Report documented, federal funding to post-secondary education in Manitoba rose by 101 per cent between 1977 and 1985. During that same period, however, Manitoba government support for post-secondary education rose by only 57 per cent. More recently, the federal contribution in 1985-86 rose by 6 per cent, yet my own Brandon University received only a 2.6 per cent increase in its operating grant. Mr. Speaker, we must ensure that federal funding reaches the institutions and the students for whom it is intended.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT'S MEASURES TO ENSURE STRICTER ENFORCEMENT

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words today about Canada's criminal justice system. This has been a concern of many of my constituents, including Mr. Tom MacMillan. Specifically they want to be assured that innocent people in society are protected, and that victims' rights are recognized. I have been proud to tell them about the progress made in the 33rd Parliament.

Tougher laws for impaired driving are better protection for innocent people. The street soliciting law has been welcomed in my riding and across the country. We have introduced legislation to stop the importation of hard core pornography, with more legislation planned. Changes to the National Parole Act will end the ridiculous situation in Canada whereby dangerous criminals are released on to the streets after serving two-thirds of their sentences. Changes in Canada's Young Offenders Act will end the obvious deficiencies in that law as well.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this Party and Government are committed to changes that emphasize the rights of innocent people and victims, something which the Liberals and socialists never understood.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland have become weary of the cruel and senseless cat and mouse game which is being played with the people of that province with respect to the future of the Newfoundland Railway. Over a period of some months the Government of Canada has been using every means at its disposal to pressure the people, the Government, and the Legislature of Newfoundland into agreeing to abandon the Newfoundland Railway.

As recently as yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), presumably speaking on behalf of the Government of Canada, said in this House that the Government of Canada will respect the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada. Those Terms of Union provide for the continuation of the Newfoundland Railway. At the same moment that the Deputy Prime Minister spoke those words in this House, his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) was putting the final touches on a proposal to be given to the Government of Newfoundland to abandon the Newfoundland Railway.

Mr. Speaker, we do not mind the Government making its choices, be they right or wrong. We do mind the Government trying to do both things at the same time, and misleading people in a cruel and senseless manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FRANCOPHONE OFFICIAL'S TREATMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister was preaching at the Francophone Summit for the preservation of French, DRIE has been using intimidating and ruthless schemes to destroy Mrs. Leila Tremblay, a young woman with four university degrees and a fine record of being published in the French media in Canada and overseas. She has a 12-year record of good work in the tourism branch.

Soon after arriving there, her DRIE supervisor, one Mr. Fyfe, sought her out, disciplined her over a trivial incident, suspended her for being at her own grievance hearing, and filed an unbelievably adverse appraisal of her. Then DRIE recommended that she be dismissed. She appealed. The Appeal Board and DRIE ignored six doctors' certificates and began the hearing without her being present.

Mrs. Tremblay presented four unchallengable outside witnesses who were beyond the Department's sphere of intimidation. These witnesses established her competence and cast doubt on the competence of her critics.

Now DRIE's representative, Mr. Kroger, has issued threats demanding that she withdraw submissions and documents, and that her priest's letter of February 17—

"LES CHANTIERS QUÉBÉCOIS DE BÉNÉVOLES"

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in Quebec we have our own Katimavik program, and I am referring to "Les chantiers québécois de bénévoles". It is a formula for socio-cultural activities that has been very popular in Quebec, in Canada and also in Europe in the last five years. The program, which is similar to Katimavik, works according to a team formula that responds to a very real desire for self-expression and community achievement among young Quebecers. The "chantiers québécois de bénévoles" are a way for young people to become acquainted with a variety of social environments in Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

FORECAST OF CAPITAL EXPENDITURES BY BUSINESS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the House should be made aware of the Conference

Board of Canada's 1985 fourth quarter survey of business attitudes and investment intentions. In this survey optimism abounds in the Canadian business community. Fourty-nine point seven per cent of senior business executives believe that now is a good time to undertake capital expenditures. This is an increase from an already strong third quarter in 1985. This represents the highest response of optimism in the past seven years. Moreover, it is a complete turnaround from mid-1984 when a full 46 per cent of businesses believed that it was a bad time to invest.

Also in the survey the highest ever number of respondents believed that the unemployment rate will continue to decline in the coming months.

According to a research associate with the Conference Board "Business members were also more positive with respect to general economic conditions". The results of this survey show a positive, upbeat mood on the part of the business community, and it is an expression of confidence in the performance of our Government as we enter 1986.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

RAILWAY SPEED LIMITS URGED WITHIN MUNICIPAL BOUNDARIES

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, recent railway accidents have emphasized the threat posed to human health and safety by the transportation of hazardous goods through populated areas. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has a special role to play in protecting the urban populations at risk.

There have been repeated calls for trains hauling hazardous goods to travel at slower speeds through built-up areas. When the 10-mile per hour limit was imposed in Vancouver it was taken as a good sign. However, it turns out that this limit only applies to a one-mile stretch of track along the Harbour Front because of Expo 86. I urge the Minister to enforce speed limits within municipal boundaries of all communities in Canada so as to minimize the risk to as large a number of people as possible.

The Government, in upgrading the safety of rail operations in Canada, must approve funds for the 36 safety inspectors requested by the Ministry of Transport instead of just the eight safety inspectors recently appointed. The Government must act to protect the health and safety of Canadians.

INCOME TAX

EFFECT ON FAMILIES WITH VARYING INCOMES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government talks of tax fairness. Yet according to the March 8 Financial Post we find out that a family with a gross income of $40,000 will pay, by 1987, $812 more than they would have paid when the Government took office in 1984 by way of income tax. At the same time a family with a $60,000 gross income will pay $1,200 less, and a family earning $150,000 in gross income will pay $5,470 less by way of tax since the Government took office in 1984. This does not strike me as an indication of fairness toward the lower-income taxpayers of Canada.

EMPLOYMENT

JOIE DE VIVRE PROJECT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, over 6,000 people signed a petition presented to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, in support of the "Joie de vivre" project, whose existence is threatened as a result of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The 6,666 petitioners, backed by 21 agencies, stated that no society with any self-respect can afford to ignore the basic needs of those who are ill. That is why we think it is so important that a project like "Joie de vivre" should continue to help our less fortunate fellow citizens.

The Conservative Government always attacks the least fortunate in our society, Mr. Speaker. This Government has no social conscience.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES FARM BILL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Is it your birthday, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He does not need the coaching of the Minister of Justice and, if he is wise, he will reject it.

The United States Farm Bill proposes the greatest threat in living memory to Canadian and, indeed, Australian farmers. The Prime Minister of Australia, Bob Hawke, has sought a special meeting with President Reagan. Yet, looking at the background papers issued last evening, there is not one word on the farm problem.

Why is this issue not a top priority for the Government and the Prime Minister in his meeting next week with the President of the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the House earlier this week, I have raised the question of the U.S. farm legislation in my meetings with Secretary Shultz, and the Prime Minister will be raising it in his meetings with the President next week.

I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that in the conversations between the Prime Minister and the President, this is a matter in which there is indeed the beginning of a common position because the President has already expressed his concerns and reservations about that Farm Bill. We intend, in the Prime Minister's meeting next week, to urge the President to continue in that course.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Notwithstanding the Minister's answer, there is not a single item on the agenda that reflects what the Minister has said, even though it means a potential 20 per cent loss of income as against 1984 prices for the Canadian farmer.

GOVERNMENT POSITION VIS-À-VIS UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is as follows: Yesterday, the Government caved in to U.S. pressure in the matter of the Canadian publishing industry. Today, apparently, the Government has already caved in to the Americans on the price of drugs for Canadian consumers. Why did the Canadian Government cave in, right before the Canada-U.S. Summit, and so lose its bargaining position? Why give up our whole position before the meeting?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is misinformed. There have been Canadian governments that lacked the courage to defend Canadian interests vis-à-vis the Americans, for instance in the matter Canadian sovereignty in the Far North. This Government has shown on many occasions that it is determined and has the capacity to defend Canadian interests. We are going to continue Canada's new approach that was introduced with the election of a proud and strong Conservative Government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Both questions and answers were a little long.

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, how brave that Government was last summer when the Polar Sea went through. It was only after it had gone through that the Minister got up and made his famous declaration.

Why yield so many key issues before going to Washington, when the major issue being raised by the Congress of the United States concerns softwood lumber, an issue that is fortunately on the agenda. Why throw away our cards when we have not really come to one of the prime issues affecting the whole softwood lumber industry in western Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the problem with regard to the Polar Sea was not a lack of courage. The problem was a lack of preparation for some 16 years by a Liberal Government that had left the Government of Canada with practically no way to defend or assert our sovereignty. We have changed that in the interest of a strong Canada that stands up for Canadian interests. We will do that on the forest question; we will do that on the farm question. We will continue to make progress to develop and protect the interests of Canada in our relations with the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—PROPOSED UNITED STATES MILITARY AID FOR CONTRAS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wonder where the Government was on the Prentice-Hall decision.

I would also like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the Minister will know, there are many Canadian church organizations, NGOs, and individual Canadians who are deeply concerned about the U.S. administration's proposed supplying of military goods and equipment to the Contras in Nicaragua. Yet we see nothing on the agenda.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us if the Prime Minister intends in his meetings with the President to register the very strong opposition of Canada toward proposed military aid? Will he also encourage the President to follow peaceful means of negotiation to solve the problems there, not the use of military force?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were more interested in having a positive effect upon the achievement of peace and progress—

Mr. de Corneille: Answer the question.

Ms. Copps: What about the Contras?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —in Central America, he would know that Canada can advance that progress best by pursuing and strengthening the Contadora process, as we have been doing, and by resisting the temptation to reduce our influence in the United States and elsewhere by offering gratuitous advice which we can neither defend nor enforce.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I have yet to hear a more gratuitous comment from a Secretary of State than the one we have just heard. There is nothing wrong in this country exercising its independent right to express its opinion when a country is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question, please.

NORAD AGREEMENT—ABT TREATY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, there has again been substantial confusion about what the position will be on NORAD.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question, right now, please.

Mr. Axworthy: My supplementary question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Prime Minister intend to ask the President of the United States for a joint declaration at the end of the meeting concerning their joint adherence to the strict confines, regulations, and guidelines of the ABM Treaty as it relates to the NORAD agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is the country's expert on confusion, and no one would challenge his title.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Leader of the Opposition would.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Don't take any advice from that guy. Don't hire him as your lawyer. I want to tell you, you would be in real trouble.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The position of the Government of Canada with regard to the integrity of the ABM Treaty and regime was outlined clearly in my statement in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member's predecessor as External Affairs critic for the Official Opposition responded at that time to that statement.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEATHS OF FOUR INDIANS ON ALBERTA RESERVE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At a time when one out of five young Canadians is unemployed, it is hardly an optimistic time for young Canadians to be growing up. But those who suffer most, without question, are young Canadians on our reserves. My question pertains to the tragic death of four young native Canadians on a reserve in Alberta the night before last with, I understand, the possibility of other deaths, perhaps one actually occurring today.

Given the federal involvement in programs for young native Canadians, and its commitment—and, indeed, I know of the Minister's commitment to these programs—will he undertake to make an investigation into these sad deaths and have a report made back to the House?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question put by my hon. friend, I think he should know that the Province of Alberta and the Minister of National Health and Welfare have taken steps to carry out such an investigation which, I believe, would yield the answers to at least some of the questions the Hon. Member is asking.

CONDITIONS ON RESERVES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering our housing standards, health standards, and educational standards, the experiences of people growing up on the reserves are, without question, the worst in Canada, I would ask either the Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister what plans the Government has to improve circumstances for native Canadians growing up on these reserves in all areas?

● (1425)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the second question of the Hon. Member, as he knows, is obviously a very complicated one, as it involved the tragic circumstances of the other day. As he well knows, in other reserves and in other Indian communities we also find the same type of circumstances which gave rise to the events of the other day.

With respect to the fixing-up, it took years to get where we are today in terms of reaching the level of inability to cope properly with a new generation of Indian people. It will take all the energy we can muster, both on the government side and on the Hon. Member's side of the House, and in all other institutions, to ensure that Indian people are able to join the rest of Canadian society so that they have some hope for the future, which those young people in that community demonstrated was not there for them in this generation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FUNDING OF PROGRAMS FOR NATIVE PEOPLES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, certainly on this side of the House we strongly favour doing whatever is necessary to improve the circumstances for native Canadians.

I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Considering the living experience of native Canadians on reserves, will he assure us that whatever else the Government may be doing with respect to the series of task force representations, these Canadians who have been so badly treated historically will not be badly treated in the future and that the Government will not cut back on the funding of any programs for native Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could respond to the Hon. Member's question. My hon. friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, may recall that last April 18, if my memory serves me correctly, the Prime Minister quite clearly indicated that, first, in all our negotiations and discussions with Indian people we will ensure that the relationship between the Government and the Indian people will be strengthened. Second, he indicated that he would not in any way cut program costs, in order that Indian people would be able to keep, at the minimum, what they have, and that in particular fields such as education we would see if we can find the resources to increase their opportunities.

I might also say that the Prime Minister made it quite clear that, in all of these matters, we would make sure that the discussions would be open to the public. That is one of the reasons why the reports of the Deputy Prime Minister's task force were referred to the standing committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that the Government is sending conflicting signals to Newfoundlanders with respect to the future of the Newfoundland Railway, with both the task force report and the Minister of Transport demanding it be shut down. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister said that the Terms of Union will be respected. Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure Newfoundlanders and this House today that the request of the Government and people of Newfoundland to maintain and upgrade the railway will be respected by the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. The Hon. gentleman is referring to an analysis and an option described by a study team which was engaged in the work of program review. I pointed out yesterday that the Newfoundland Railway is the subject of one of the Terms of Union between the Province of Newfoundland and Canada. There is no way that the Government of Canada will dishonour those Terms of Union.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND TERMS OF UNION—MINISTER'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Given that the Government of Newfoundland and the people of Newfoundland want to honour the Terms of Union, will the Minister assure the House that the proposal of the Minister of Transport to the Government of Newfoundland, which is now in the final stages of preparation and which recommends the phase-down of that railway, will be withdrawn by the Minister of Transport on behalf of the Government of Canada? Will he give the House that assurance?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the assurance which I can give to the hon. gentleman, those who asked the question yesterday, and all Members of this House is that the Government of Canada has no intention whatsoever of dishonouring any of the Terms of Union.

Mr. Tobin: That is not the question.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STUDY TEAM REPORT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Yesterday, and again today, the Minister suggested that the Nielsen report on native programs should be referred to the standing committee. Considering that the Standing Committee already has a full agenda and that the Assembly of First Nations has totally rejected the report, would the Minister, who has chaired a cabinet committee designed to look at this review, not submit to the Standing Committee a list of suggestions from the report that he considers worth-while so that the Standing Committee will not have to sort through all the garbage about modern suburbs in the bush and—

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is quite long.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why Hon. Members continue to put questions in the House that raise questions about actions that have been taken by the House. Last Tuesday, with the agreement of all Parties, a motion was passed referring all of the study team reports to the respective Standing Committees. That is an action that has been taken collectively by the House. Surely, according to our Standing Orders, we cannot entertain the opening up of something the House has already decided.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit the question again. Will the Minister submit to the Standing Committee a list of the reports' suggestions that he, in consultation with native leaders, thinks might be worth-while so that we do not need to sort through all the garbage about user fees, needs tests, and everything else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Manly: Let's have his suggestions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the Minister wishes to answer.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated the other day in answer to another question, now that the report is before the Standing Committee, as are all other reports of the task force—

Mr. Manly: But you've looked at it for a year.

Mr. Crombie: Now that the task force report is before the committee, I have already indicated to the chairman of the committee that when it considers what it wants to do with respect to that report, I am available, and I can make no other better offer than to meet with the committee if that is the committee's decision.

PENITENTIARIES

MURDER OF INMATE AT MILLHAVEN PENITENTIARY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General about the return of capital punishment to the Millhaven Penitentiary last month when inmate Niki Rivard was transferred to Millhaven and murdered by the inmate jungle justice system within six hours. The Minister knows that officials knew and predicted in the media that this would happen, yet none of the available precautions were taken for that inmate. I would like to ask the Minister why no precautions were taken, and whether or not the Solicitor General is taking the responsibility for this execution.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know as a former Solicitor General, inmates are put into protective custody with their consent for the most part. This was discussed with the inmate in question who rejected that possibility and preferred to be put in with the general population.

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE CONDUCTED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that the inmates are the ones who decide on their level of security? Will he conduct an inquiry to find out who was responsible for not providing security for an inmate whose death was predicted with such certainty?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know as a former Solicitor General, in any case such as this an inquiry is indeed conducted, both by CSC and, in a case like this, by the police as well. Again, as a former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member should know that in the case of protective custody institutions—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just tell us what you're doing.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Leader of the Opposition has a question. If that is so, I will sit down and let him ask it. However, if he wants a response to his colleague's question, I will give it. As the former Solicitor General should know, in the case of protective custody this is generally done at the request of the inmate himself. This was discussed with the inmate.

Mr. Kaplan: Not all the time.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member asks a question and then tries to shout down the response. Does he want a response? I would like to give it. This was discussed with the inmate in question who rejected it. As would be done in a case like this, an internal inquiry is under way in addition to a police inquiry.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

EXTENSION OF PATENT RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the Minister confirm that the Government is proposing to extend the patent protection law for drugs to 10 years, given that the present law saved Canadian consumers over $200 million in 1983, according to Professor Eastman? Will the Minister explain to low-income earners and elderly Canadians why he is caving in to pressure from the multinational drug companies?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first I want to tell the Hon. Member that there has been no caving in. Second, I want to tell him—excuse me, Mr. Speaker—that—

Mr. Nystrom: Speak up.

Mr. Orlikow: You need some drugs.

Mr. Crombie: The Minister of Health is not very well today.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, now you know why I am interested in the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I would say to the Hon. member that if and when a decision is made, he, as a Member of the House, will be informed along with the others.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm that the question of generic drugs will be on the agenda when the Prime Minister meets the President of the United States and tell us if this Bill, which we know is forthcoming, is being brought forward to appease the United States Government at the expense of ordinary Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is no.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW—REFERENCE TO NEW ACCOUNTING SYSTEM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, for the Nielsen task force report on agriculture, only one individual full-time farmer, representing four farm organizations, was consulted. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture can rise to say that the imposition of a new accounting system, which will cost farmers $1 billion on back taxes, is really in the best interests of the farmers.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, again, for as many times and as many days, I have to remind my hon. colleague that, when he refers to the task force, what we have been answering since the release of the documents is that they are not representations of Government policy but rather options. The sooner the Hon. Member accepts the reality of the situation, the better off we will all be, and perhaps we can dedicate our time, not only here in the House of Commons but perhaps elsewhere, to more productive questions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REJECT PROPOSAL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, with all the uncertainty that exists in farming today, does the Minister think it is really in the best interests of farmers to leave this option up in the air and add more uncertainty? Why does he not just come clean and say that this policy will not fly and he rejects it out of hand?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I identified a couple of options that were placed before us by the task force and when it came time to make a decision and to form government policy, both of those options were rejected.

Mr. Foster: Reject this one.

Mr. Wise: There are a number of good recommendations. I think it is inappropriate for me to reject them, simply because all of these matters have been referred to the appropriate Standing Committees. I think that is a proper, decent, and democratic process, one which I respect and I would hope the Hon. Member would respect it as well.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES FARM BILL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State is fully aware of falling grain prices that are having a devastating effect on Canadian farmers. Can the Secretary of State say whether or not the Prime Minister will be discussing the specifics of the important U.S. Farm Bill with President Reagan next week, so that the President will be fully briefed on the disastrous effects of this Farm Bill on Canadian farmers since it includes a more than $50-billion export subsidy for U.S. grains?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it will be a clause-by-clause study, but I assure the Hon. Member that the question of the Farm Bill and its implications for Canada will be raised by the Prime Minister when he meets with the President.

NEED FOR NEW INTERNATIONAL GRAINS AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in order to guarantee the farmers of this country a fair price, will the Prime Minister also raise with President Reagan the important need for a new and effective international grains agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that initiatives have been taken by Canada's Minister of State for the Wheat Board in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture of the United States, and with various others.

• (1440)

I will convey to the Prime Minister the representation that it would be useful at the summit for him to underline the leadership which is already being shown by one of his Canadian Ministers in this regard.

FINANCE

EFFECTS OF LOWER BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Following today's one per cent drop in the Bank of Canada rate, could the Minister of Finance inform the House what impact this will have on mortgage loans and loans for small and medium-sized businesses?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that we have had a drop in the bank rate today of slightly over 1 per cent—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: What about the Gallup Poll?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can see that that news is not greeted with favour by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. Yes, I expect that there will be some response in the market-place to the bank prime rate as well as to mortgage rates. I am sure the Hon. Member noticed that mortgage rates dropped earlier today. It is all very encouraging and a pretty good indication that our economic program is working.

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Today we have outside, in the snow and the cold, several hundred Montrealers who lost their unemployment insurance benefits because they had early retirement pensions. Why does the Government continue to justify this cruel and retroactive policy simply on the grounds that it was announced a year ago, when not one of those persons outside knew about the policy when they agreed to early retirement pensions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a question which should be posed to the company for which the individuals worked.

Ms. Copps: The federal Government, Canada Post.

Mr. Cassidy: It is your business, not that of the company. How callous can you get?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I don't know. You are the expert.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me respond to the question, if I may. The Hon. Member knows full well, because I think he has put the question in the House a half dozen times, that this matter has been referred to the Forget Commission. As I have said to him, again on a number of occasions, a wide variety of issues is before the Forget Commission now. If we start to pick and choose those issues or those particular problems which we feel should be changed, without awaiting the full report of the Forget Commission, I think we would be foreclosing on some of the options the Forget Commission might wish to put forth.

ADVICE GIVEN BY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION OFFICIALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, that is the problem. The Minister has implemented the measure while referring it to the Forget Commission. These people have already lost their unemployment insurance and have been cut back while it is being studied.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Allmand: Does the Minister realize that when officials in the Unemployment Insurance Commission were questioned on this matter, they indicated that they were not informed early in the year about it and could not give proper advice to these people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right off base with that statement, and he knows it.

Mr. Berger: You were told that by the people in the corridor.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member from Montreal is also way off base with his interjection. He does not know what he is talking about, either.

Mr. Tobin: Is the country off base? Is Wilson the only one who is right?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The fact of the matter is that this measure was introduced in November, 1984. I believe the implementation of the measure was deferred from April 1, 1985, to January 1, 1986. During that time the Department was well aware of the measure itself, as well as the deferral and the means for deferral.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Go outside and tell them that.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

KOREAN STEEL IMPORTS—IPSCO LAY-OFFS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As I am sure he is aware, up to 1,400 Ipsco steelworkers are being laid off across western Canada. Part of the problem is the importation of cheap South Korean steel. Could the Minister explain why we are the only country in the world which gives South Korean steel a preferential tariff when it has the most modern steel industry in the world and Canadian steelworkers are being laid off in droves?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows the reasons for preferential tariffs. Preferential tariffs are available to certain less developed countries of the world, and South Korea is one of them. Also I think the Hon. Member is aware that it is the option of the company to refer something to, I believe it is, the import tribunal, at which time a decision can be taken.

REQUEST FOR POLITICAL ACTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. How can he, in all good conscience, suggest that Canadian steelworkers should be content to go through a very lengthy bureaucratic maze while their industry in western Canada is being devastated? Does the Minister not agree that immediate political action is needed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is leaving a wrong impression, if I can be nice with him here. One of the reasons for the lay-offs of workers at Ipsco is the fact that there is a market slowdown in the oil and gas industry which is having quite an effect on the business of Ipsco. That is a matter which is outside our control, and he knows it. It is the drop in oil prices.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What about the recession?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition talks about a recession—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Things are out of control when you want them to be out of control—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Things are going faster in Canada than in any other country with the exception of Japan.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When you don't want to take the responsibility, you don't—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I invite Hon. Members to continue this conversation somewhere else?

APPOINTMENT OF TORONTO TASK FORCE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary. On December 4, 1985, the Minister of Transport advised the House that he would establish a task force on the transportation of dangerous goods through the greater Toronto area. Four months have now passed. Will that task force be established and, if so, when?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to the Hon. Member for York East. Largely because of persistent efforts by himself and by other Members from the greater Toronto area, tomorrow the Minister of Transport will announce the formation of a task force. It will be headed by Mr. Harold Gilbert, the very highly respected former Deputy Minister of Transport and Communications in Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Tomorrow!

Mr. Forrestall: It will be a two-year study and it will involve all sectors—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON MIDDLE-INCOME TAXPAYERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the Budget which Canadians have not seen, the special good news Budget which has been peddled from Canadian Embassies abroad. If indeed the Canadian economy is now as good as the Government would like to have foreigners believe, why is the Minister still playing the heavy with middle-income Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me explain to the Hon. Member that one of the reasons the Canadian economy had the best economic rate of growth last year, equalled only by Japan, is that we have been attacking our basic fiscal problem, the deficit. This is why interest rates were down last year. This is why economic activity was strong. This is why housing starts were up by something like 30 per cent. This is why investment activity was up by—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

ECONOMIC FORECASTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that of his two economic forecasts—the sunny one for foreigners and the grim one for Canadians—he is today asking us to accept the sunny one?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the statement which was issued in the United States and the statement which was issued in Canada, both in relation to the Budget, utilized exactly the same economic forecast, exactly the same fiscal forecast, and exactly the same approach to the economic problems of the country. She knows it, and she is trying to mislead the House with that statement.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. de Jong: Michael, you are in trouble.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Minister of Finance wants to withdraw the last part of that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to leave the implication that she was intentionally misleading the House. I just felt that she was misleading the House in the way she was putting the preamble to the question.

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: A withdrawal with regard to her purposes is what I was seeking.

SPORTS

VIDEO TAPES OF HOCKEY FIGHTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I wrote to the Minister several days ago concerning video tapes of hockey fights which had been edited from NHL telecasts and are being offered for sale across the country.

Does the Minister not agree that such video tapes are detrimental to efforts being made to clean up the violence in hockey, particularly at the junior level? Will he tell us what measures he has taken to get this pornography off the shelves?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, the NHL does not fall within my jurisdiction as Minister responsible for amateur sport.

Mr. Berger: Pass the buck again.

Mr. Jelinek: However, because of the large youth following which NHL hockey has, I took the initiative and approached the president of the National Hockey League some months ago on this matter. I am continuing discussions with people in the NHL to try to remove violence from the sport as a whole.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REMOVE VIDEO TAPES FROM STORE SHELVES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. As well as talking to people in the NHL, has the Minister spoken to his cabinet colleagues who have jurisdiction over copyright and justice to encourage them to act quickly to get this stuff off the shelves?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know also, the jurisdiction over video tapes rests with the provinces. Perhaps it would be a good idea for the Hon. Member to talk to representatives of the provinces.

LAKE ERIE WATER LEVELS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Residents along the Lake Erie shore have experienced considerable flooding and property damage due to the high water levels of Lake Erie. This situation is even more threatening now because of the expected heavy runoff. Can this threat of flooding be reduced and the Lake Erie water level lowered by allowing more water to flow through the Welland Canal and the Niagara River?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, 30 different international studies over the years have documented in worrisome detail the extent to which the body of water in question cannot be regulated easily.

There are, however, many steps that could be taken to deal with the problem in general. For that purpose I will be announcing soon the establishment of the Canadian Flood Control Centre, which will mobilize all the resources of the Government of Canada in one centre, probably in Burlington, stressing the dissemination of information and the provision of technical advice. The problem is serious, and the Government of Canada treats it with the utmost urgency.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

EXTENT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. Is he aware that Mr. David Star, a community development worker at Peerless Lake in northern Alberta where the recent terrible tragedy took place, said the problem at Peerless Lake is that young people have no hope and no economic future? Why then did the Minister is this current fiscal year expend less than 20 per cent of the Native Economic Development Fund which had been approved by Parliament?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, in the past twelve months, I received nearly 800 applications for the Native Economic Development Program, and 72 per cent have been processed. Over $40 million has been spent to help native peoples in all regions. Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the work done by my departmental officials in this respect, and we shall keep up the good work.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for Small Business. Will he assure the House and the native people of Canada that he will fight with all the vigour he can muster to get his full allocation in the next fiscal year, and not just 47 per cent as we have in the Estimates?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, like all other Ministers and Departments in this Government, we are working very hard to give all Canadians, including native peoples, what they have a right to expect, and we shall continue to do so.

NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES AID TO CONTRAS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, in a joint communiqué with the Foreign Minister of Mexico issued earlier this week, urged everyone to "refrain from committing acts that aggravate the present situation in Central America".

Since the provision of lethal aid to the Contras in such an act, will the Prime Minister be drawing this communiqué to the attention of the President next week in the course of urging him not to give lethal aid to the Contras?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly ensure that the communiqué is drawn to the attention of American authorities.

CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Secretary of State recognized that war and peace in Central America are our business. Will he, in the course of making sure that the communiqué is provided to the President by the Prime Minister, also assure that the Prime Minister speaks quite strongly on this matter of lethal aid to the Contras?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we believe that actions speak louder than words in Central America as elsewhere. Our Government has tripled its development assistance in Central America because we believe the problem there is an economic problem and not a military problem to be solved by military means.

Ms. Jewett: Answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have contributed constructively to the Contadora process. We have discussed the possibility of contributing constructively to the resolution of border disputes. We intend to take an active role—

Ms. Jewett: What about the communiqué?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —in working to bring peace and stability and development to Central America.

PARKS CANADA

JOB HIRING POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Parks Canada. I have here a letter from the office of the Hon. Member for Gaspé, addressed to the Parks Canada Director for the Gaspé, and it says: "We are enclosing a list of people who are interested in becoming part of your staff. We want these people to be considered for future jobs." How can the Government tolerate a situation where the staffing at Parc Forillon in Quebec will be changed to suit the needs of Conservative Members?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think I got the question correctly. The Hon. Member is suggesting that because somebody wrote to me recommending that I should consider a list of names for recruitment as employees in my Department, therefore I am responsible for distributing such largesse. This is without having received the letter and much less having made the decision.

Mr. Boudria: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is not what I said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is the fifth patronage issue that has occurred and been brought to the attention of the House in the last eight days, when is the Deputy Prime Minister going to get involved to ensure that this does not happen again? When is he going to tell his Tory members to take their hands out of the taxpayers' cookie jar?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question and the previous one are manufactured out of the usual raw material utilized by the Hon. Member in his questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is your material.

Mr. Gauthier: It's your material, the raw material.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is raw.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the recent changes in unemployment insurance.

In light of the fact that his colleagues rejected and condemned retroactivity as it applied to the recent Prentice-Hall sale, why is it that when it comes to pensioners receiving their UI benefits, retroactivity is quite in order, but when it comes to corporations retroactivity is a no-no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has got it wrong. It was not retroactive. In fact we delayed the implementation of the whole matter for eight or nine months.

IMPLEMENTATION OF REGULATION CHANGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): I have a supplementary for the same Minister. Could he give the House the assurance that he is going to reverse this change in the Unemployment Insurance system, now that the Forget Commission will not submit its report until this fall?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on a number of occasions, there are a wide range of matters which are under review by the Forget Commission. If we took decisions on these matters individually, we would be undermining the role of the commission. In fact, we might even be in contempt of that commission. We have said on many occasions that we are awaiting the results of the commission's report, after which we will take decisions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could the Government House Leader give us an outline of the business he intends to call next week and until the Easter adjournment?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. House Leader for the question. There will be no business tomorrow as, by virtue of an Order of the House of earlier today, we agreed to adjourn the House at the conclusion of today's sitting until Monday. On Monday we will proceed with the sequence in which we are now engaged, that is, the Bill with respect to the borrowing authority. Hopefully we can make progress on that. It is then my intention to call Bill C-91, an Act with respect to the establishment of competition tribunals. I now designate next Tuesday and Wednesday as allotted days for the Opposition. We will continue to consult and see what progress we make in order that we can call the rest of the business.

In summary, since the Hon. Opposition House Leader has asked me to list the business until the Easter recess, I would like to dispose of all the Bills on the Order Paper.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, do I interpret that last comment to mean that, if that were to occur, the Government is prepared to prorogue?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hypothetical question, and if the Hon. Member is still a Member of the House at that time I will let him have the answer.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall, that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are four minutes left in the allotted time of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), if she wishes to use them.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have completed my remarks and would be glad to respond to questions, if there are any. If not, we can proceed with the next speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on questions or comments.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on some of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and determine whether she agrees with my observations on the Conservative Government's current policy for members of the Armed Forces. The Government has eliminated the possibility for retiring members of the Canadian Armed Forces to obtain unemployment insurance. This is essentially changing the game plan in the middle of the game for these people who have served their country for many years. They have contributed to the unemployment insurance program for from 20 to 30 years. That insurance has been calculated as part of their pension to assist them in making the transition from their jobs to a much diminished income. They have actually been put out of the Armed Forces, because they do not have any choice whether or not they will leave.

This hits them at a time in life when their family expenses are extremely high. Their children are in their late teens and require support for post-secondary education. Children need much financial assistance just before they become adults. This is one of the most devious and under-handed things that has been done to members of the Canadian Armed Forces.

In addition, there are two other small things which the Government has done in the same vein. It has attempted to partially deindex pensions of retired members of the Armed Forces. The Government insists that those members who find jobs to help themselves over this very difficult transition pay unemployment insurance premiums, but that they can never collect unemployment insurance.

I would like to hear the comments of the Member for Vancouver East on this. Does she agree with me that the Conservative Government has been extremely hard-handed with members of the Armed Forces in this matter?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. There are a few conversations taking place in the Chamber. If Members have anything to say, they can go behind the curtain. I would like to listen to the Hon. Member.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to respond to the points my hon. colleague raised. I agreed with him very strongly when he raised them this morning.

While on a U.N. conference recently I had occasion to talk at some length with wives of members of the Armed Forces at the Lahr station in Germany. They indicated how unfair it was that after their husbands had paid unemployment insurance premiums all their lives they were no longer entitled to the benefits of that system. I completely agree with what the Member is saying and I hope the Government will take steps to improve that situation.

The Member did not bring up the point that services which should exist in every community do not exist on military bases. I think particularly of child care services. The wives of members of the Armed Forces have the right to have their own occupations and careers. They do not have that opportunity since they do not have adequate child care. The Cooke Task Force on Child Care recommended that there be some immediate action in this area of federal jurisdiction.

I am also reminded of the discrimination against wives of members of the military with regard to participation in events and organizations on the bases and of other discriminations which still exist in many areas of the Armed Forces.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, does the Member for Vancouver East agree with my perception, and that of many other people in the New Democratic Party, that the Conservative Party's continuous reference to the Forget Commission having any influence on the restoration of these rights to members of the Armed Forces is a complete farce? That benefit was chopped at the beginning of this year and the people retiring now are retiring without the benefit of unemployment insurance. The chance of that benefit ever being restored is about the same as that of a snowball in hell. Continued reference to that particular item with regard to the Forget Commission is nothing but hypocrisy and fails to take an adequate position on the question. Does the Member agree with my balanced perception of this problem?

Ms. Mitchell: The Member has made his own point in this regard. I wonder to what degree Armed Forces personnel and their spouses are involved in consultation on these issues. It is a most urgent matter and should be given top priority. The Nielsen task force involved so many business people, almost all of whom were males. Perhaps it should have involved a cross section of people who are directly affected by these policies, including those in the Armed Forces.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member and her sincerity. I was disturbed by her comments when she said in her remarks that she was disappointed, crushed and felt that some of the actions of the Government were unforgivable. I tended to feel the same way with respect to her remarks, particularly when she talked on one hand of the problems there were in society, and on the other hand about our large costs of borrowing. She talked about how there was a lack of confidence in the international money markets and our fallen dollar. I know that the Hon. Member realizes the reason for this is the lack of confidence because of our financial imbalance, our deficit and our enormous national debt. I know she is aware of that because she has spoken and asked questions about it in the House. I have heard about the NDP task force on the subject of how to deal with the deficit. I know that they have talked about increasing taxes to corporations and, of course, that is what the Budget does. I know they talked about closing tax loopholes and, of course, that is what the last Budget did and that is what this Budget is doing. I am just wondering if the Hon. Member has any other suggestions as to how to restore confidence in our dollar and cut down on our borrowing costs.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am sure in the time that is left it is very difficult to comment on all the policies that the New Democratic Party has advocated. I would be glad to send the Member a copy of the task forces that we have had. There are quite a number of ways that we would approach the deficit question very differently.

I must say I do not agree with him that the tax reforms he refers to are real reforms at all. There are many very major tax reforms that we had advocated. One is to go back to the pre-1982 marginal tax rates, a very simple one that would bring in well over a billion dollars, if my memory serves me right. What I am saying is that what the Conservative Party is tending to do is to follow the Margaret Thatcher, Ronald Reagan, Bill Bennett form of economics. If you look at British Columbia alone, where we have 14 per cent unemployment in Victoria, you will understand why that kind of economics of restraint does not work.

If we can get more people working through a positive program and through support such as day care and so on, then some of our social costs will be reduced. We do not object to taking a look at some ways of cutting costs that are legitimate, but from our point of view we do not think the way this Government is going will benefit Canada as a whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes. The Hon. Member spoke about the impact of the Budget on women, and of the Government's spending plans and so on. Is she aware that the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean) in his response last week in the House indicated that the Government has no plans to ensure that the cuts in Public Service jobs that are to take place over the next three or four years will not impact extremely unfairly on women? I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that women by far make up the majority of public employees in the federal Government earning less than $20,000 per annum, but there are only 7 or 10 per cent of employees earning more than $60,000 per annum.

When we asked about whether the Government had a plan to make sure that the cuts were not concentrated on low-paid federal employees, and therefore women, the Minister waffled, he looked embarrassed, he hid his face and he said, "Well, that is a problem that we ought to take very seriously. That is why we have Affirmative Action Programs in order to get women up into the top jobs".

Is the Hon. Member aware of the fact that there is not time to get women who are low-paid now up into the top jobs before they get their pink slips.

Ms. Mitchell: Yes, I did refer to this in my remarks this morning, and I agree completely, having sat in on the Estimates with the Member when we asked this question specifically, that there is no positive affirmative action to protect women in their present jobs within the Public Service, much less a mandatory employment equity program that will allow them to move into better-paid jobs at an equal rate with men.

What constantly astounds me is that it was possible to have the mandatory affirmative action which benefited so much the Francophones in our society who were at a considerable disadvantage a number of years ago. We do not seem to be able to apply this to other groups. We have proven it can work. We have had private companies in the United States telling us that they even like it. Yet we cannot really get an employment equity program with teeth, either with companies associated with the Government or within our own government service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is at least the fifteenth time I have spoken on borrowing authority Bills since I was elected in 1979, and returned to the House as the Member for Mississauga South. This is the first time I stand with pleasure to speak on the borrowing authority Bill, because in this Bill for the first time we have turned the corner, we have reduced the borrowing requirement of this country from $28.8 billion last year to $22.6 billion this year, a reduction of $6.2 billion. This is a truly massive reduction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: The fiscal plan produced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) only takes into account the history back to the 1977-78 year with respect to national accounts, financial requirements and the budgetary deficit. Looking that over, you can note the continual increase for every year, until the 1984-85, of the percentage of Gross National Product committed to paying the cost of borrowing. For the first time we are able to reduce the amount required to be borrowed from 6.3 per cent of the Gross National Product to 4.6 per cent of the Gross National Product. That truly is a remarkable change.

It is that kind of activity, as we take hold of this country and turn it around, that again will give this country hope for the future, for ourselves, for our children and for our grandchildren. The last two decades have been plagued with Governments going to the well to pay current bills, using a Chargex card to run the country, to buy the groceries. We have not been paying our way. We have been borrowing on the future of the country without any sense of responsibility. This has changed.

If you take a look at the projections in the Budget Papers you will see that the requirement to borrow goes down next year to $17.6 billion, and eventually, even on the most pessimistic basis, to no more than $11 billion.

I call Mr. Wilson the pessimistic Minister of Finance because his projections are all pessimistic. While last year he felt we would need the deficit we had, indeed, we will probably wind up spending far less than projected, despite the problems we had with banks in western Canada.

What is happening is that our Minister of Finance has taken a look at the country and has said: "Well, we can at least do this, and that is our Budget". I tell you that this Budget, in terms of deficits, in terms of projections, in terms of costs, is pessimistic. We are going to do better than we are forecasting. More of that later.

Let us get to some figures. The Minister of Finance says that growth will only be 2.7 per cent in the next five years until 1990-91. He also says that growth last year was only 4.5 per cent. In fact it was 4.9 per cent. Nobody has forecast growth over the next five years to be as little as 2.7 per cent. Indeed, if you ask the Royal Bank of Canada, they say we are pessimistic. If you ask Data Resources, we are pessimistic. If you ask Informetrica we are pessimistic. The growth projections in the Budget are pessimistic.

Let us consider the oil prices. The Opposition said that the price of oil stated by the Minister of Finance in his Budget was wrong and that his deficit projections would be far off the mark. The fact is that the Economic Council of Canada has said that the Gross National Product will increase, employment will increase and inflation will decrease if oil prices fall. That is all good news. The Minister of Finance projects the price of oil to be $22.50 a barrel. At $15 a barrel our year will be even better than predicted.

The Minister pointed out that we had a small flip in interest rates which pushed them up for a short term in order to protect our currency. However, interests rates are falling dramatically and will fall even further with the decline in the price of oil. Members of the House will note that on Monday the Government of the United States was able to borrow its treasury bill money at 6.5 per cent. Members will also know that on a 90-day basis the Eurodollar rate is less than 7.5 per cent, the LIBOR rate is less than 7.5 per cent and that our interest rates dropped 105 bases points today. I suggest that the projection of 9.5 per cent for interest rates in the fiscal year commencing April 1 is pessimistic because, with any performance at all that follows the United States, Germany or Japan, our interest rates will be dramatically lower than those forecast by the Minister of Finance. Therefore, it may not be necessary to call upon the borrowing authority required here.

The budgeted borrowing authority is $22.6 billion. I suspect that we will not borrow the total amount which we authorized last year, nor borrow all the money that is authorized in this Bill. I am optimistic. It is the first time I have been able to come to the House, since 1979, and say that we are doing a good job in coming to grips with the problems of the country.

It distresses me to see the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) suggest we are only optimistic when we talk to foreign Governments. Let me tell her that we are optimistic when we talk to Canadians and she should be as optimistic because she should be promoting Canada instead of being negative. We could make Canada grow while solving our problems. That is the attitude that should be taken by Members opposite. That is the kind of attitude Canadians expect and that is the kind of attitude we should have. I am proud that our Government and our foreign offices throughout the world are displaying that attitude.

In his speech last night the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asked investors to look at Canada closely for business opportunities. It is that kind of speech which we ought to be giving in selling our nation and promoting the possibilities that exist in our great land.

We have heard numerous comments about exchange rates. Let me expand on that for a moment. I do not agree with the use of interest rates to influence the exchange policy of the country. Frankly, I do not always agree with the Minister of Finance, and I profoundly disagree with this particular policy produced by the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In my view, exchange rates are determined by an active and aggressive market, buying and selling currency.

Our trading activity in the market-place with the United States is truly amazing. Indeed, we do well over $100 billion worth of trade with that country, which means the buying, selling and dealing in American exchange is truly phenomenal.

While speculation takes place, we should question why we have an exchange rate for our currency that perhaps is less than what it should actually indicate when we consider the price of goods and services as offered in the market-place. Members will know that the Economic Council of Canada, in making comparisons between goods for sale in New York State and Ontario, has indicated that the Canadian dollar should perhaps be worth 80 cents, on a market price for goods basis, in comparison to the American dollar. I believe that the Economic Council is right.

Some may ask why our exchange rate may drop below 70 cents, certainly not a strong and active rate. The reason is a phenomenon that has not existed in this country until now, and which some people policing our exchange rate have not recognized. That phenomenon is prosperity. There is an economic boom in this country, primarily in Ontario and Quebec. Unfortunately, that boom has not spread throughout the country because such a boom throughout the country would have been better for everyone. Huge regional disparities are detrimental to our economic plan, because we have to maintain certain programs in some parts of the country, yet they may not be necessary in other areas and could become anti-productive. Currently there is a strong boom in southern Ontario and certainly in Quebec. For the first time there are areas in this country where there is, in fact, over-employment. Businessmen are calling constituency offices asking why the Government does not bring in immigrants. They want to know why they cannot yet help when the Government is paying out unemployment insurance. These businessmen are prepared to offer from $8 to $12 an hour.

What effect does this have on the exchange rate front? For example, when Canadians are prosperous they go south in the winter. That affects our exchange because those Canadians convert Canadian dollars into American dollars. Canadians also import more goods when they are prosperous. While we still have a massive trade surplus, our imports are rising as a proportion of trade activity and this increase in imported goods effects our exchange rates.

Finally, as Canadian companies become more prosperous and increase their trade with the United States they have a dramatic increase in inventory in the United States. These companies are increasing their export financing and becoming more active in other countries. Last weekend, three of my constituents told me that their companies were becoming more involved in the United States. One is a computer organized company that was developed in Toronto and carries on research and development. It has had to open branch offices in New York and Los Angeles in order to get business. In order to open those offices and develop its programming it must remove money from Canada. However, it returns profits to Canada which benefits our country.

Another constituent is involved in a foreign exchange banking operation. That operation bought out the American company and is moving the head office from New York to Toronto. What does that do? It means that Canadian dollars have gone out to buy up that company, and that is good for Canada, but, unfortunately, that affects our foreign exchange. I have another situation in a manufacturing operation partly because of the problems we have with liability insurance. The Canadian manufacturer has had to open an American plant so there can be partial manufacturing done down there. In that way it will solve some of the tariff problems, the buy-American problems, the trade problems we still have with the United States and, in fact, the insurance problem. Again, that is an outflow of cash and investment but it is a profitable investment for Canada. It is good for Canada and for Canadian employment.

All of this prosperity affects the trade value for our dollar and we should not be upset with it. The market-place operates the way the market-place ought to operate. It is the discipline of the market-place and we cannot change it by jigabooing around with interest rates.

Mr. Boudria: Jigabooing?

Mr. Nunziata: Is "jigabooing" parliamentary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Ellis: Absolutely. It's a good Edmontonian word.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be a period of questions and comments for Hon. Members. I know the Hon. Member is a very popular Member, and you are very popular Hon. Members, so you will have your questions ready for him. If you would just let him finish, I would appreciate it very much.

Mr. Blenkarn: A lot of times we hear that foreigners are going to bring money into our country to develop business. That is not what we are looking for in Toronto. We are not looking for debt money. We are looking for equity money and new ideas. Businessmen do not just invest money, they invest ideas. When one has an idea or a capacity as a developer, or whatever, and one goes to a foreign country, one takes one's ideas and some money, but mostly the money is borrowed in that foreign country. That is how our developers who have built the office buildings in Houston, Los Angeles and New York and who have developed the subdivisions in Florida, have operated. That is how they have done it. That is our export of services. What we in Toronto are trying to do is to attract people who have the ideas and some of the up-front capital and they can borrow more money in Canada if they wish because Canada has lots of capital. Canada does not need just money, it needs ideas, entrepreneurship and new growth, and we will get that in a trade operation such as is in Toronto right now.

If our people are out doing things, that is good for Canada and if we attract new business into Canada which will make use of Canada's capital, that is all right. We need the new business and the growth. We need the new entrepreneurship. That's how it works.

I would like to speak for a moment about the amount of our debt and the way the debt is held. At the present time, a great deal of our debt is held in what I call "current account" debt, that is, in Canada savings bonds and in Treasury bills. Indeed, about 65 per cent to 70 per cent of our debt is held in that fashion. One of the problems of holding debt in that fashion is the kind of problem the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) faced two, three or four weeks ago when in order to prevent people from cashing Canada savings bonds, he was forced to increase the interest rates on them for a short-term period.

Something we have to do in the management of the national debt is to convert more of that debt into more long-term debt. We must, therefore, as this year goes by, rely less and less upon Canada savings bonds for our debt pattern and more and more on long-term debt instruments. Second, we have to take a look at the whole question of T-bills and stop borrowing as much as we are on T-bills. Some of those people with those high interest T-bill accounts in Canada Trust had better understand that they should load up in a hurry because interest rates are going to drop as we make this economy grow. The Budget is pessimistic in terms of our debt requirement. The Nielsen task force report with its ideas, the Forget Commission which will probably revamp and cut down on the cost of the unemployment insurance scheme, and other things which are going on, will make Canada grow again and grow well. I am happy to speak on this borrowing Bill because for the first time we have turned the economy around.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will agree that the bottom line in any Budget is fairness and equity. We as legislators and as parliamentarians ultimately will not be governed by whether or not books balance but we, as a nation, will ultimately be governed by how we treat the disadvantaged in society and how fair we are to the various sectors. The Hon. Member is chuckling but what we on the Liberal side speak of when we speak of fairness, is economic justice. If one is concerned about reducing the deficit, we believe one must do so in a fair fashion. One should not do so on the backs of the disadvantaged in society.

The Hon. Member referred to some "jigabooing". Perhaps he was referring to the Conservative Party. Perhaps he can advise the House whether the Conservative Party was jigabooing during the last election campaign when it spoke of fairness and equity, when it made so many promises in its thirst for power. Does it mean that the Conservative Party is permitted to make promises during an election campaign—for example, a so-called "sacred trust", the protection of the pensions of senior citizens—and then after the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) came to power, try to deindex the pensions of senior citizens to reduce the deficit? That was one broken promise.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he could tell us what is fair, what is just and what is equitable about a Government trying to reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged, the senior citizens, the disabled, the unemployed and the young and then almost in the same breath—in the same Budget—give a lifetime cash bonanza to the wealthy to the tune of $500,000 in capital gains exemptions? The Hon. Member claims to be a fair and reasonable individual. Would he tell the House what is fair about a Budget or two Budgets which result in a massive tax increase of 23 per cent for someone earning $15,000 a year compared to a tax increase of 1 per cent for someone earning anywhere from $100,000 to $200,000 a year? Has the definition of "fairness" changed or are we now referring to "jigabooing"?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing how the Hon. Member can be so confused. I am surprised that he, as a Member of Parliament, could come into this House and be so confused in his presentation over a five-minute period in discussing my speech.

First, when we have an increase in employment—at least 580,000 jobs—when we promise "jobs, jobs, jobs" and we deliver them at a rate far in excess of the job creation in all of Europe, it is surprising to be asked questions about fairness. The Hon. Member knows that the programs in terms of social transfers are in place. They have not been injured or harmed. Indeed, they are more fair. For example, I refer to the program with respect to children. We have taken the tax relief away from the well-off and given increased child tax credits to the relatively poor. Not only that, we have made these child tax credits available in November instead of making them available to some tax discounter after income tax returns have been filed.

I do not know what the problem of the Hon. Member is. He talked about the problem with the capital gains tax, on which there was a provision in the last Budget. It has already shown how it can improve the investment growth of the country. The cost of that capital gains tax relief was minimal. One can see just how minimal it was in terms of the tax collections which were made this year and by the way the Government has been able to perform and come right on track with its Budget. One would think that the Hon. Member would stand up and say: "You've done a tremendous job. You've turned the country around. No longer will we borrow against the wealth of our children because that is not fair". However, the Hon. member seems to have some idea that it is fair. The whole question of Liberal policy has not been concerned with fairness. It has been to borrow, steal, print or do whatever one can to spend money which one does not have. Members of the Liberal Party treat that as some kind of fairness. If that is fairness then I just do not understand members of the Liberal Party. Perhaps the Hon. Member's concept of fairness is to go out and spend money which we do not have and which we have not earned.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) sent to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with respect to taxation. It reads:

Dear Michael

As you are aware I sat in on most of the hearings in connection with Bill C-80 and have been the recipient of most of the representations made by industrial groups and others in connection with this Bill—

The allegations made by the steel people and by the concrete people are correct and accurate. The observations made by your staff—the same staff that provide scientific and research tax credits and other horror shows conceived in an ivory tower by persons without business experience is no place to receive advice.

I think it is essential that there be a rethink of all of these taxes in your Budget of February. I think that you ought to treat all of the representations made by organizations like the Canadian Prestressed Concrete Institute as a representation with respect to the February Budget.

My question is this: What does the Hon. Member think of the 8 per cent federal sales tax which has been imposed on the construction industry over the last eight months?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that my friend has brought up that piece of correspondence. I do not know how he got hold of my correspondence. However, I suppose he has his ways.

Mr. Nunziata: Wouldn't you like to know!

Mr. Blenkarn: Having said that, I think he will know that that is exactly the type of representation that I as a Member of the House made to the Minister of Finance. He will know that it is a hard-nosed representation. He ought to make the same type of hard-nosed representation. Let me give him the answer to his question. It will be found in the new business transfer tax which will replace what I call the most inequitable kind of tax. I refer to the manufacturer's sales tax which passes on a tax and which carries with it gross margins on top of tax which reach the consumer in many cases. The rate of that tax is not 12 per cent but more in the order of 16 per cent and sometimes 17 per cent.

The Minister has answered the question. He answered it in the Budget. The representations were heard. I am surprised that the Hon. Member cannot make representations about the indecency of measures such as the scientific research tax credits which were put into place by the former Liberal Minister of Finance, the Hon. Marc Lalonde.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member on setting the facts straight and for making sure that the Canadian public know what the real facts are. The Hon. Member knows that after the Economic Statement of 1984 and the Budget of 1985 the Opposition was highly critical. It was critical when it said that that Economic Statement and that Budget would destroy the country. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said it would put another 50,000 people out of work. The Leader of the New Democratic Party said it would put another 100,000 people out of work. In fact, as the Hon. Member knows, the result of the Economic Statement and the Budget is that we have almost 600,000 more people employed, all of the economic indicators have gone up and the deficit has dropped by about $2 billion. Now that members of the Opposition find that their approach will not work in convincing Canadians—since it is difficult to argue with success, and the last Budget was successful—they are now shifting their ground. They are now trying to say that the present Budget is unfair. They have been citing examples which have been reported in The Financial Post. I know that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is an avid reader of The Financial Post. I know he would also like to put the record straight with respect to this subject. I would like to give him the opportunity to do that right now.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) used the word "jigaboo" in the House. In a question to the Hon. Member, I used—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member used the word "jigabooing" which means dancing, fooling around or an end-around type of thing. I heard the statement. I do not think it had anything to do with any word which I really know. I did not think it was a racist remark, which is what I think the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is trying to say. It is a colloquialism. It was used in the 1930s and the 1940s when they were doing a little bit of jive.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, if I may finish, I used the same word. To avoid any possibility of there being any suggestion whatsoever of anyone misinterpreting the use of that particular word, at this point I would like to withdraw unequivocally the word which I used on a number of occasions during my question to the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is perfectly fine. Would the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) like to say the same thing?

Mr. Blenkarn: No, of course not, Mr. Speaker. I do not know what kind—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is ridiculous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate.

Mr. Redway: What about the question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am afraid that too much time has been taken up now. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) now has the floor on debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon. For the information of Hon. Members I call to their attention that Bill C-99 is a very thin Bill. It is a bit like the policy of the present Government in that it has only one page. The Bill asks this House to give to the Tories across the way $22.6 billion as may be required for public works and general purposes.

The first thing I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is: Would you give $22.6 billion to a bunch of Tories? The answer is obviously quite clear. The public has already decided that the majority Government no longer has its confidence. In testimony of what I am telling Hon. Members I would like to cite the results of public opinion polls which were released this morning. I am sure Hon. Members will agree that they are indeed wonderful and accurate. The public opinion polls found that only 36 per cent of the Canadian people want to have this Government in charge of the country. Only one out of every three Canadians think that the Tories know what they are doing. This is only a little over a year and a half after the Tories were elected with the largest majority on record.

As a matter of fact, since April, the popularity of the Tories has decreased from 54 per cent to 36 per cent and the popularity of the Liberal Party has practically doubled in that same period of time. What should that tell us? That should tell us that the people no longer believe that the Government should be governing the affairs of our country. Why have they come to that conclusion? I think we have clearly established that right now, it is the popular opinion that the Tories should not be in charge. Why has this happened?

First, during the election campaign the Conservative Party made several promises to the Canadian people. As a matter of fact, I just happen to have a copy here of a little booklet entitled 338 Tory Promises. If you want a copy of this booklet, Mr. Speaker, or if anyone who is listening to this wants a copy of 338 Tory Promises, I would gladly send one. All one has to do is write to me here on Parliament Hill. No postage stamp is required and there is no charge. I will gladly send a copy of 338 Tory Promises, most of them promises which have been broken.

I see that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is here. He is obviously making giant strides in revamping the Public Service and Parks Canada along with his colleagues.

Let us see what the Tories promised for the young people of Canada. I am turning now to the page on youth unemployment in the booklet entitled 338 Tory Promises. The Tories promised to supplement the Ministry of State for Youth with a Canada Youth Advisory Council. Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker? The Ministry of State for Youth has disappeared. The only thing left is the Minister and her chauffeur.

The other day, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) asked the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), very eloquently, of course, what she could do for the young people of Canada with only a chauffeur and a limousine. I responded to that by saying that the only thing she could do is to hire a young chauffeur. There is only one job that she can offer to the young people of Canada. In fact, that chauffeur would probably end up being a young Tory chauffeur. We have heard of the policy the Minister is trying to advocate for the rest of Cabinet, the policy of promoting young Tories with hard earned taxpayers' dollars. She wanted the Government to dip its hand deep into the taxpayers' cookie jar to dispense funds by giving employment to young Tories over others. That is shameful. That is one of the reasons why the people have lost confidence in the Government.

Let me share another reason with you, Mr. Speaker, because I know that you are very interested in this. In my view, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself does not have faith in the workers of Canada. Why do I say this? I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Fortune magazine of March 4, 1985, in which there is an interview with the Prime Minister of Canada. Let me read an excerpt from this interview. It reads as follows:

> On the charge by political opponents that Mulroney "has put Canada up for sale": Who wants to buy it? What is there so compellingly attractive about Canada that causes us to think that anybody is going to rush in simply because someone says, "I'd like to do business with you." We do not have a very good track record. Our products have not been of the highest quality. Our deliveries have been lacking in reliability. Our expertise has been in large measure borrowed. Our technology has been purchased. What the hell makes us so special?

Mr. Nunziata: Who was that?

Mr. Boudria: That was the Prime Minister of Canada. He was saying that about the workers of this country.

Mr. Nunziata: That's disgraceful.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has said that that is disgraceful. It is shameful that the Prime Minister of Canada would have that to say about the workers. Is it any wonder that the workers of Canada do not want to have anything to do with this Government any longer? Is it any wonder that two-thirds of them would turf these Tories out if they had a chance right now? Believe me, they will have a chance in the future and that is exactly what they will do. The people of Canada no longer have confidence in this Government.

The Prime Minister of Canada said to the people that our package of social programs was a sacred trust. Then he turned arond along with the same Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who brought down this Budget and tried to deindex the pensions of our senior citizens. it was the senior citizens together with opposition Members who rallied and fought for this issue. It was Mrs. Solange Denis who came to the steps of Parliament Hill, as she came this week to support our colleague from the other House, and said very clearly to the Prime Minister: "You have lied to us, Prime Minister".

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member is an experienced parliamentarian and I think he knows that when one refers to statements with that wording, whether they are made by someone else or are verbatim quotes, it is unparliamentary. I am sure the Hon. Member, being an experienced parliamentarian, would like to reconsider his words.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order, if I may. I have reviewed the jurisprudence on this particular matter and I beg to differ. The Minister laughs. It would be my submission that it is quite appropriate to say that Mr. Average Canadian is a hypocrite but it is inappropriate to call a Member of the House of Commons a hypocrite. I think it is quite appropriate for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) to quote someone who has referred to the Prime Minister as a liar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I am going to take a look at the "blues" before I make a decision on this particular issue, but I really feel that when the Hon. Member uses a quotation like that, he is almost using it as his own quotation. I would appreciate it if he would withdraw it and carry on with debate.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will gladly withdraw that reference. When that senior citizen was here, she told the Prime Minister what she thought of him, and every Canadian remembers when she said to him: "Goodbye, Charlie Brown," because he had not lived up to those promises he had made to her and every other citizen of this country. Whether we quote from her directly or indirectly, all Canadians know what it means and they will all remember it the next time around.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just to set the record straight, I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to confirm the fact that the person he quoted was not in fact a senior citizen.

Mr. Boudria: That's not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not really a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Before I was so rudely interrupted, I was just about to say—and by the way, thank you for recognizing that that was not a point of order. I am sure you wuld agree with me that it was not even a good point, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to tell the House about the budgetary policies of the Government and why the Tories should not receive $22.5 billion. If some Hon. Members believe that I am not being 100 per cent objective today, although I am trying to be, let me tell them what others have to say about this Budget. On February 27, The Toronto Sun said: "Wilson mugs middle class". Shirley Carr of the Canadian Labour Council said: "The average Canadian has been hit between the eyes". That is plain enough. Marlene Carr, a working mother quoted in The Gazette of Montreal on February 27, said the following:

> We work hard to feed our kids and pay back the mortgage. We make an honest buck. Why don't they get after the people who earn over $100,000 who have big expense accounts?

I should like to refer to what others had to say about the Budget, because I know that you are interested in this topic, Mr. Speaker. Bill Nevis of the Canadian Construction Association said that the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax, effective April 1, presented a severe problem for the construction industry. The Hon. Member for Saint Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) referred to that earlier today. Of course he was quite right, as is usual. Let me quote further.

Here is another reaction to the Budget, Mr. Speaker. I quote Mr. Fernand Daoust of the Quebec Federation of Labour:

> Middle income earners are the hardest hit. Ottawa's contribution to job creation is minimal. The Budget is a disappointment.

That is what he had to say.

Let me quote some more just in case you are not quite convinced that I am taking a non-partisan approach. I will have you believe me in two minutes, Mr. Speaker. Here is something from La Presse of February 27, and I quote:

> In the end Michael Wilson decided to clobber Canadians with taxes and surtaxes to solve the Government's financial problems.

That is what those taxpayers had to say.

[English]

Do you want to know, Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Finance said about the Budget in May, 1985 just prior to it being brought down? It really proves that we should never believe what a Tory tells us. He said:

> I don't want to increase taxes ... A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy and I don't want to see us do that.

The 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax which we will all have to pay, is it not a general tax increase? Is that not exactly what the Minister of Finance said he would not do on CTV's Question Period in May, 1985? If we cannot believe the Minister of Finance, who can we believe? Let me read further.

One thing for sure, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will have to pay more and more as a result of the expenditures of this Government and the approach of the Conservatives. For example, youth unemployment—I talked about youth earlier today—stands at 16.5 per cent, yet the Conservative Government has just reduced its Jobs Strategy budget by $100 million. Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker: 16.5 per cent of young people are idle and the Government slashes budgets right and left. Worse still, the Government intends to reduce education transfer payments to the provinces. And then, as you know, Katimavik has been axed yet this program opened all kinds of opportunities for young Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, what is the impact of this Budget on middle income Canadians. I will tell you. An individual who earns $35,000 a year and who has three dependents stands to lose $835 over the next two years as a result of this Budget. Here is how it works out: $637 less this year, $198 less next year, a total loss of $835 for a family of four trying to make ends meet on an annual income of $35,000. In other words, a middle income family.

Now let us talk about low income earners. A family of four with $10,000 a year. Yes, $10,000 a year, Mr. Speaker, for a family of four, if you can imagine that. How can they manage!

You know, Mr. Speaker, a lot of my constituents earn that kind of money. Well, that family will lose $83. Do you think that a person who is trying to support a family of four on $10,000 a year can afford to lose anything? That person simply cannot do with any less.

Mr. Speaker, a similar family of four earning $15,000 a year will lose $392. Try to imagine a Glengarry-Prescott-Russell constituent earning $15,000 a year and barely able to support a family of four, yet the Conservative Government wants $392 more from them. That is altogether intolerable, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

I want to talk about the fairness of the whole system. Of course that should not take long because there is no fairness in the Budget. I will concentrate, therefore, on the unfairness of the present Budget. That should take much longer because there is much more unfairness than anything else in that Budget. I should like to refer to The Financial Post of last week. Of course it is not a newspaper which is widely read by my constituents because most of them cannot use the advice given in that newspaper as they are not in those tax brackets. Nevertheless, I think it is an interesting contribution to the process. The article which I have before me is from The Financial Post. It is not Liberal material; it is not partisan in any way. It is an article by people whom the Tories, the Minister of Finance and his friends like very much. The article refers to a family earning $40,000 per year. The earnings are comprised of $35,000 in salary, $4,000 in dividends and $1,000 in interest income. In 1984, such a family paid $9,145 in taxes. In 1986, the same family will pay $9,400, and in 1987 it will pay $9,900. That average Canadian family is being zapped by the Tories. Also the article describes another family struggling to get by on $150,000 per year! That income is comprised of $100,000 in salary, $15,000 in dividends, $5,000 in interest and $30,000 in capital gains. One would expect that these folk could manage to pay their taxes; they would be doing all right in my books. In 1984, that family had to pay $53,448 in taxes. Guess who will receive a tax break this year, Mr. Speaker? Will it be the poor people? No, you have guessed wrong, if that is what you guessed. It will be the rich people who paid $53,000 in taxes in 1984. They will be paying $48,000 in 1986 and $47,000 in 1987. They are receiving a tax break. We have a Government of Robin Hood in reverse—take from the poor and give to the rich; take from the middle-class and give to the rich. Why is the Government zapping everyone in favour of the rich? Is that what the Tories promised to Canadians last year in their book of 338 promises? No, the Tories never said: "Vote for us and we will zap you and give it to the rich".

I have come to the conclusion that happiness is never having to say you are Tory. I have come to the conclusion that Disraeli was right when he said that a Tory Government is an organized hypocrisy; that is what Disraeli had to say about the Tory Government. Obviously he was right. He knew best. He knew that such a Government would be unfair. It was unfair then and it is unfair now. Tories have a policy of taking from average Canadians and giving to those who have the most. It is unfair, and the Government should be booted out of office.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about fairness and unfairness in terms of the Budget. It devastates me to hear the Hon. Member talk in those terms. The Party of which he is a supporter, the former Government of which he was a supporter, introduced a tax system which was loaded with one tax loophole after another. It was because of those tax loopholes that we did not have a fair taxation system. It was because of those tax loopholes that the people of Canada decided on September 4 to toss out the rascals and bring in a new Government. It was because of all of those tax loopholes that we did not have a fair system.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) set out in the last year and a half to create a fair tax system. Let us take a look at this, Mr. Speaker. First, we had scientific research tax credits in the former tax system. The people of Canada knew that that was unfair. We have done away with them. We had tax shelters on yachts, recreational vehicles, hotels and the like. Those were put in place by the former Government of which the Hon. Member was a supporter. Those were unfair and we have done away with them.

Mr. Boudria: No, you have not.

Mr. Redway: There was income splitting through interest free loans put in by the former Government. We have done away with that. That was unfair. There are the carve out provisions for transactions in the oil and gas sector. They were unfair, and were put in place by the former Government, but we have done away with them. There was the use of trust to distribute investment income. That was unfair. We have done away with that.

Supporters of the former Government now tell us that they want to see the deficit reduced. Every time we suggest a method of doing that by cutting some sort of expenditure, they say: "Don't do that. That is wrong". Every time we suggest a tax change, they say: "Don't do that. That is wrong".

Could the Hon. Member tell me specifically today exactly what the Liberal Party policy is at this moment about reducing the deficit?

An Hon. Member: The Liberals haven't got one.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to answer a question raised by the Hon. Member to my right—

Mr. Nunziata: Who criticized his own Government for the deindexation issue.

Mr. Boudria: —to my extreme right, I may say.

The Hon. Member talks about loopholes that are unfair. That is a very nice thing to hear from a Tory. The Government in its last Budget tried to remove benefits from seniors and to give a tax break, would you believe it, to those selling off capital gains. In other words, the Member said two loopholes are wrong so let us have more of them. That is the Tory policy.

What he is telling all of us is that under a previous administration buying a yacht was not taxed properly. But do you know what the Tories have done, Mr. Speaker? They are not going to tax them at all. You can sell your yacht, your condo in the south, your castle in Spain, your horse in Kentucky, and there will be no tax at all, no tax at all for the rich people who have those kinds of investments. You can sell off expensive paintings and so on, make oodles of money doing it, and there is no tax at all. That is the Tory policy of fairness. We have just heard it. The Member to my extreme right told us earlier today that he considers loopholes to be unfair and, therefore, to avoid loopholes the Tory policy is to remove all taxes from the rich.

Mr. Horner: What is your policy?

Mr. Boudria: Let me come back to the second part of the Member's question very briefly. He said the Government is trying to tax the rich people, by plugging the loopholes so that they will pay their faire share. Why is it that the rich person making $150,000 a year will be paying $5,000 less in taxes while the average Canadian will be paying thousands of dollars more? Those are the questions which the Member should be asking his own Minister of Finance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and then the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I ask Members to govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I noticed the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) did not answer the question put by my colleague as to what the Liberal policy is and where the Liberals would reduce the deficit. I am sure the Member will address that when he has the opportunity, much the same as his Leader has. To paraphrase another Liberal Leader, one revered by most Canadians, deficit reduction if necessary but not necessarily deficit reduction.

The Member continues to talk about patronage. I know that the Hon. Member had the opportunity and availed himself of that opportunity to put forward a contact person in his riding regarding the 1986 census. I know that person was put forward and has been selected as a census commissioner. This is the Member who talks about Tory patronage.

This is hypothetical, Mr. Speaker, but if someone who worked in the 1981 census and the 1976 census did not pass the written part of the test, but passed the verbal part and was selected as a census commissioner, does the Hon. Member feel that that is unfair or that that is patronage?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question and I will answer it very quickly to make sure the Hon. Minister understands.

Mr. Nunziata: Write it down for him.

Mr. Boudria: And I will write it down if the Minister wants me to.

The Minister and his colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), when I complained to this House that unqualified people were being appointed, responded by saying that they had appointed an unqualified person in my riding and that that made it right. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this only proves that the problem is worse.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, it has nothing to do with the subject under discussion. I wish you would—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am willing to give the Hon. Member an opportunity to ask a question and make a comment.

Mrs. Bourgault: On the Budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are on Bill C-99, the borrowing authority. If the Hon. Member has a question, she may now put the question. First, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Hon. Member's comments are entirely beside the point. The Member was answering a question put to him by his colleague. I don't know whether she realizes or understands this, but what my colleague, the Member, was saying was relevant to the debate, although she seemed to think otherwise.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member now realizes what the process is here. I would like the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau to ask a short question so that I can recognize two other people in this Chamber.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) spoke earlier about the Budget. He said that this Government's Budget was not fair, and so on and so forth.

I would like him to answer a question, with a simple yes or no. I know his riding very well. I know that since September 1984, a number of industries have opened their doors in that riding, I am thinking of Hawkesbury—and created many new jobs.

Could the Minister inform the House today, with a simple yes or no, whether the projections he and his party were making at the time of the November economic message and the May Budget of 1985, that 100,000 jobs would be lost in Quebec and Canada, and even more, have come true now that 600,000 jobs have been created?

Could he inform the House that he made a mistake when he made his prediction when the economic message was tabled? Could he say whether or not he made a mistake?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing up the subject of unemployment in Hawkesbury. I was going to refer to it later on. I am really glad she brought it up. In fact, it was the Conservative Government, in last year's Budget, that abolished the CIRB, the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board Program, that was helping the town of Hawkesbury in my riding and made it possible to create a number of new jobs. Now we will not be able to continue. The program was set up by the Liberal Government, and I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing this to my attention. I hope she will help me persuade her Government and her Minister to re-instate a program that has been so beneficial to her region and mine.

● (1620)

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, does the previous speaker agree with my observation about the Conservative Government's treatment of members of the Armed Forces with regard to the unemployment insurance issue? Has the Member received any explanation from the Government on this issue? The Forget Commission is not studying the issue of members of the Armed Forces losing their unemployment insurance and having to pay premiums. That benefit has already been lost. The Government is involved in hypocrisy here.

Through the Armed Forces the Government has issued an order to its members that they cannot sign petitions on this matter. This matter is essentially politically neutral. It simply involves family income which has been taken away from members of the Armed Forces and retired members. This kind of hypocrisy must end. Members of the Armed Forces have the right to sign petitions and make representations on politically neutral issues.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would have some difficulty explaining Tory behaviours. I am not too familiar with the way in which they determine things. Their methods are not always consistent or logical. However, I do think that those actions of the Government are most unfair. A citizen of this country should have the right to petition Parliament regardless of what he or she does for a living. On the forms for petitions which we use in the House there is reference to the ancient and unalienable right of all citizens of Canada to petition Parliament. Why is the Government trying to take that right away from some citizens? That is unfair and should not be happening. I would love to elaborate further, Mr. Speaker, but I think you are indicating that my time has expired.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does the Member from the Liberal Party understand that the same hypocrisy existed within the Liberal Party which absolutely refused to allow members of the Armed Forces to do the same thing?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) may ask a very short question.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has mastered the art of hypocrisy. I would like to congratulate my good friend, the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), on one of the finest speeches I have ever heard in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I see Hon. Members opposite applauding as well. I know that in their heart of hearts they agree with the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Does my colleague agree that the Government has frittered away the mandate which was given to it on September 4, 1984? Today, 18 months later, the Conservative Government is appreciated by only one in three Canadians. Does that dramatic decrease in support for the Conservative Government have anything to do with its policies? The Government has been in office for 18 months and has the audacity to speak of the Liberal record. It has a record of its own now, and that record consists of bank failures, tuna scandals, ministerial resignations, and an attempt to deindex senior citizens' pensions. Does the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell agree with me that the Conservative Government has lost the support and respect of the people of Canada?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that the Conservative Party has lost the favour of the large majority of Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member's time has expired. The period for questions and comments has expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At this time, pursuant to Standing Order 55(2) speeches will be a maximum of 10 minutes with no time allotted for questions or comments.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, through this Bill the Government is requesting authority to borrow about $22 billion. I, along with the other members of the New Democratic Party, are opposing this Bill because the Government policy of taxation and spending is so unfair to the people of Canada.

I recently received a letter from the Manitoba Anti-Poverty Organization in Winnipeg. This letter is with regard to the Budget of the Government, for which the Government is now seeking authority to borrow money. The letter reads as follows:

> The Manitoba Anti-Poverty Organization is greatly alarmed at the steady increase of federal taxation. We are also concerned with the carefully hidden chipping away of social programs and dollar value for the poor.

That sums up not only the Budget, but the programs which the Government is engaged in. The letter continues:

> In using a cut-off level of $15,000 income for tax benefits, the federal Government has shown a complete disregard for the 1985 poverty lines estimated by the National Council of Welfare (March, 1985). These figures show that a family of four with an annual income of $20,000 is living on the poverty line. These families are today's working poor, not middle-income earners.

The point is that the people living below that poverty line ought not to be taxed. This point was made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) last week when he pointed out that Members on all sides of the House know that, if we were to be fair, no person living in poverty would be pushed further into poverty by being made to pay taxes when there are people in the country who pay no taxes at all because they are rich enough to hire lawyers and accountants to fiddle their reports.

Countries such as Scandinavia have ensured that people who live in poverty pay no taxes. If they can do it, we can do it here. Three decades ago individuals and corporations each paid about half of the income taxes which were collected. After the new Budget individuals will pay 80 per cent and corporations will pay only 20 per cent. That is grossly unfair. In fact, the new Budget has imposed upon working people rates of taxation 10 times higher than those imposed upon corporations. The 3 per cent surtax, the 1 per cent sales increase and the other sales taxes that the Government has imposed will take about $350 per year extra over and beyond the Government's previous $1,000 bite, $350 per year extra for every working family, whereas for the corporations there is a continuation of $500,000 capital gains tax—and for a married couple that is a $1 million. There is no return to the 1981 marginal rates, which charge the rich a higher rate of their income than they charge the poor, and there is no bringing in of a tax expenditure account so that the public can see how much goes to rich individuals and to corporations through the Government's tax expenditures, that is to say through the taxes they owe that the Government remits to them for reasons that are never fully examined in the actual practice.

There are cuts in badly-needed services to the people of Canada. Regional, industrial expansion will be cut by $2 billion. The service to unemployed people, including services for which they have paid by their contributions will be cut by $1.75 billion. Assistance to farmers who are going broke and out of business at a record rate not equalled since the Depression days will be cut by half a billion. Health and Welfare will be cut by $4 billion. Transport, particularly rail and road transport, the sort used by the majority of this country, the poor people, the low-income and low middle-income people in this country, that will be cut by over $3.5 billion.

It is the services to the ordinary people of this country that this Government is cutting, and yet it wants those ordinary people to pay extra taxes to pay for the Government's borrowing.

The Government keeps preaching about the deficit, yet it will do nothing to take the most direct route towards increasing the economic health of this country by increasing employment. There are tens of thousands of jobs that should be created in the reforestation of this country before our wonderful forests have become totally denuded.

There are thousands of jobs also to be created in restoring health to the fisheries of this country. There are farm mortgages for farmers who have not yet gone broke and out of business, farm mortgages which need to be assisted. The Government is not addressing those questions, and yet when the farmers go broke the Government will wonder where the taxes are because the corporations that buy the land will not be paying the taxes at the rate the farmers are, not with the tax system the Government has put in place.

Housing is in a state of crisis. I asked the Government a few months ago to consider a five point housing program. For example, what we need is that all Canadians should be assured of decent, affordable housing. We also need to be assured that publicly-owned and privately-owned rental housing will be rent controlled so that the poorest people and the low middle-income people who have to rent it are not forced to subsidize the rich.

The third principle is that Canada should create a national home-building program to create 50,000 social housing units per year because the Minister of Labour's (Mr. McKnight) housing program is not going to come near to meeting the need of the neediest.

The fourth principle is that there should be renovation of substandard housing, including tens of thousands of apartment units in cities like Toronto and Montreal which have been downgraded by the greed of their owners who did not do the maintenance and whose apartments now stands in need of renovation or destruction. The Government must step in there to prevent the loss of tens of thousands of housing units or else the landlords will jack up their rent from the average of 25 per cent to 30 or 35 or 40 per cent in order to pay for the further enrichment of the owners.

These are some examples of what ought to have been done by this Government to put money into the hands of Canadians who will keep it in Canada instead of what they are doing, which is to transfer money to the banks, to the insurance companies, to the large industrial corporations of this country which are more and more transferring their wealth out of Canada where it makes no jobs for Canadians. That is the essential unfairness and the essential economic folly.

When I visited Chile last year I found what happens when a country pursues the policy of cutting wages, cutting benefits to the poor. The people in Chile are suffering physically. Nearly half the children under the age of six are malnourished. That country is a long way farther down that road than Canada is, but the rate of poverty in Canada is rising, according to the Government's own statistics, and will continue to rise if this Government continues the same policies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate?

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on a Government request to borrow money, most of which has already been used to repay wealthy people—people who had $60,000 or more in western Canadian bank accounts—and to enable this Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make Canadians carry a heavier tax load.

We must keep in mind that in its previous Budget the Government went after the elderly, the sick and the children, but this time the Progressive Conservative Government's targets are families and workers. The Government has devised it would penalize all Canadian men and women who keep our economy going, be it in plants or in offices. All workers, men and women alike, are penalized by a 3 per cent surtax. All those men and women are penalized by a 1 per cent sales tax hike.

Mr. Speaker, on the subject of sales tax, you will recall that last year, the same Government, the same Prime Minister, the same Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided—it is all in the papers prepared by Mr. Nielsen's task force—to levy a 10 per cent tax, now 11 per cent, on drugs. This amounts to taking advantage of the state of health of Canadian citizens to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time, this very Government decided to spare its friends, the corporations, the multinationals. If the Prime Minister, and today's poll is eloquent . . . and in Quebec the Conservatives have been completely wiped out for several months. They have lost all their credibility. The people don't trust this Prime Minister anymore. They don't trust his word. Today, we have a poll that shows that across the country, even in Western Canada, people are starting to see the true face of this Progressive Conservative Party, this Party which, when it was in the Opposition, Members from that part of the country could tell the people all kinds of stories. But now, the people know the truth. Now, people are starting to draw comparisons between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and they realize that the Leader of the Official Opposition has a strong point: intellectual honesty. He is always truthful, and he repeats the truth day after day, never contradicting himself.

Mr. Speaker, Conservative Members are probably going to say: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is making a partisan speech.

As an example of what is being said about the Budget, by reporters and by various people in our society, I have here . . .

the Quebec Minister of Finance who says: "A timid attempt at controlling the deficit at the expense of the provinces. I am not impressed."

Mr. Bob Erb, Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Automobile Association: "We are very disappointed that the Government failed to remove the excise tax on gas".

Mrs. Sandy Hall, President of the Consumers' Association of Canada: "The Government is doing the exact opposite of what it should have done to promote consumer spending."

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Government is firmly resolved to pick the pockets of all Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has decided to take your dollar, and it says: There, another 3 per cent. That is what the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government have done.

Mr. Speaker, what the Government has done is appalling, and I understand why Conservative members are upset. I understand why the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is indignant. But it is true. And I realize that when we tell the truth, it tends to shock the people in power. They would rather keep the truth from this House and from the Canadian people. But it won't work. The people do not go along with that kind of attitude.

Every week, every two weeks, every month, 3 per cent will be taken off our pay cheques to pay for the unbridled spending of this Conservative Government and encourage its friends.

Mr. Speaker, I have here Mr. Gérard Docquier, Canadian director of the American acid workers: The Minister of Finance is blinded—

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that literally thousands of Canadians will be witnessing this debate on television and in view of the fact that it is a crime to destroy the currency of the Crown, perhaps the Hon. Member would want to assure everyone that what he ripped up was not in fact real currency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not believe that is a point of order. However, let me say that we are not to use props in the House. Therefore, whether or not it is real money, I hope the Hon. Member will not use props in the Chamber.

Mr. Malépart: Mr Speaker, it is appalling and insulting indeed to see the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) show such concern about the kind of paper being torn, yet he wants us to vote in favour of a measure to siphon off 3 per cent of the money of his constituents every week.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister and his Conservative colleagues rise to ask whether I tore up a phoney bill or just a piece of paper, yet they have decided to steal 3 per cent and add 1 per cent to the tax on goods bought by most consumers.

That is where we find out whether those people have any guts. Who are the defenders—

[English]

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will take his seat, I might recognize him.

Mr. Valcourt: I am in my seat, Mr. Speaker. Is it permissible in the House to accuse Conservative Members of stealing money from Canadians? Is that parliamentary?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not believe that that was a specific allegation. That is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: To go on with the debate, Mr. Speaker, I would like to show that the Conservative Government has acted deliberately, unless the Hon. Member who has just spoken has decided to vote against the Budget of his Government. All Conservative Members are accomplices and guilty of deciding to exploit the Canadian people and take off 3 per cent of their income every week.

Mr. Speaker, I will quote Alain Dubuc, an economist and a man whose reputation and credibility in Quebec are second to none. He wrote in La Presse: "Wilson has failed. All observers stated that the second Budget would be a major test for the Conservative Government. Perhaps the most important Budget of the last twenty years. What a disappointment! After such expectations, the Minister of Finance has almost pulled a tour de force by tabling a stupid and unimaginative Budget."

Mr. Speaker, the man I just quoted is Alain Dubuc and his article was published in La Presse of February 27, 1986. He is not a Liberal, a Conservative or a New Democrat. Quebecers know him well.

Mr. Speaker, I will produce figures so as not to be accused of partisanship and so that the people who are listening to us will realize that week after week and month after month every Canadian worker will lose 3 per cent of his or her purchasing power. In addition, Canadian mothers have lost the indexation of family allowances. These people have been penalized.

Mr. Speaker, Alain Dubuc, still in the newspaper La Presse, on March 4, had an article entitled "Wilson Budget—Taxes at least $500 higher per family". A worker who received a pay increase of 4 per cent this year should have had enough to protect his purchasing power. However, the income tax, and especially the increases imposed by Mr. Michael Wilson, will take away three-quarters of it. He will therefore be 3 per cent poorer in 1986.

Mr. Speaker, this was not said by a Liberal. If you ask the Quebec Members, they will tell you that Alain Dubuc is a man who has some credibility at La Presse. I understand why the Minister of the Environment is angry when we tell the truth in this place. What can I say? We are Liberals. We tell the truth; we are not Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, always according to Alain Dubuc, a family with an average income somewhere between $20,000 and $40,000 will have to pay $500 or $650 more in taxes in 1986. Mr. Speaker, I have also these words from the Quebec Premiers: The financial situation of Quebec is still of concern and the federal Budget brought down Wednesday did nothing to improve matters. I see the Minister in charge of housing. It is obvious that the poor will suffer. Unfortunately, his only duty as Minister is to cut the ribbons because the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has already made all the decisions as concerns housing. What will happen?

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that, even though it is increasing taxes for middle-income Canadians, the Government will try to seem a bit more social conscious by providing a $300 prepayment so that people will not have to go to the tax discounters and the loan sharks. Even in this case, Mr. Speaker, the Government was unable to be fair and decided to grant this privilege only to those with incomes under $15,000, thus penalizing 358,000 families.

Mr. Speaker, I would have had a lot more to say, but unfortunately, my time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) is in the House. I hope he will relay my remarks to some of his colleagues.

With respect to this borrowing authority, I urge the Government to amend the Bill next Monday to increase its borrowing by at least $1 billion. Let me explain why. The Government is deluding itself if it believes it can rely on the private sector to provide essential public and social needs at minimum or no profit. It never has happened and never will.

That is why Governments at all levels must intervene to provide those essential public services and facilities at cost.

Let me say at the outset that I and my Party are fully in favour of efficiency in the administration of Government programs and obtaining full value for every tax dollar spent. However, most of what the Government borrows is used to pay interest charges to banks, investors and foreign lenders. I want us to return to borrowing for those things that are self-liquidating, constructive debts that fulfil the needs of the nation.

Perhaps Hon. Members watched the television news in the past two days and The Journal last night on the CBC. If so, they saw concrete evidence of what is happening. In every city of this country there is a waiting list as long as your arm for senior citizen housing, co-op housing, municipal housing, homes for the aged sponsored by church and volunteer agencies, chronic care beds and hospital beds. I had an experience today in the emergency wing of a hospital in this city. There are not enough beds. There are people filling chronic care beds in hospitals. We need a massive investment in this area by federal, provincial and municipal Governments. Even if it requires borrowing for construction of those facilities, and to purchase the equipment needed, it will put tens of thousands to work and the debt will be self-liquidating. The amount of money which could be collected from income taxes, sales taxes and other kinds of revenues available to the three levels of Government could retire those borrowings in one or two years. That is a positive and constructive kind of deficit.

This nation needs the modernization and expansion of those areas. The construction industry alone affects the entire economy. The forest industry, the steel industry, those who manufacture appliances, carpets and drapes, those who install wiring and plumbing as well as those who do the construction of the buildings, are all put to work and all pay taxes. I would like to urge the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing to ask his colleagues for an additional $1 billion of borrowing in the coming year, in a joint effort with other levels of Government and with church and volunteer organizations, to give us what we are sadly lacking. There is no excuse for allowing people to sit in a wheelchair in an emergency wing for an entire day and then lie in a bed in an emergency room for three days waiting for a hospital bed. There are people who are chronically ill, who do not require full-time hospital attention, but do require a chronic care bed. There is a chain of terrible treatment and behaviour, and I believe every Hon. Member of this House of every political Party could justify borrowing for that kind of investment if this nation is going to be a little more decent, civilized and humane.

We have to use sound business sense in what we borrow money for. We should have borrowings which are self-liquidating rather than just dead weight in a vicious circle of interest upon interest paid to those who have not contributed anything. That is what is needed. I hope that the Government will amend its own Bill because I cannot do so, nor can my Party.

If there are any borrowings unused from the previous year in excess of $2 billion, the Government should use it for the kinds of things I have just mentioned. We had a debate on Wednesday, an Opposition Day, about youth and youth employment. With another $1 billion worth of borrowing over a five-year period we could put a quarter of a million people, most of them young, to work doing nothing more than cleaning up our air and water. That is an investment. Anyone who sits in this place and thinks for one moment that the private sector will do that on its own, by reducing its profits, is dreaming in technicolour. It cannot and will not do it because of the bottom line syndrome: maximize profit, and the benefits to the shareholders take priority over the welfare and good order of this nation. That is why Governments must intervene. Of course, we can try to persuade the private sector to join in and make their fair share of contribution even if it means some shareholders will have to take 25 cents or a dollar less in dividends on their shares for a year or two. We could pay off our deficit in a much shorter period of time and the private sector should be challenged to do that.

I would like to speak about some of the things I watched on television in the last two days. It costs $5,000 to fly a heart from London, Ontario, to Ottawa for a transplant. I am not sure how much of that is picked up under our present medicare plan. I would be very surprised if it is all picked up. But all of that cost should be picked up. The price one has to pay to hire a private jet to save a life, surely, is perfectly legitimate and must be a cost which is shared by the entire nation. All of us, through our tax system and all levels of Government, have to share. Surely that is what co-operative federalism is all about. Surely, Confederation means that we treat one another fairly and equitably no matter where we live in this nation or what our standing is in the community. That is what this borrowing should be about.

In addition to paying off the interest on the interest on the interest, we should make some constructive borrowings like we did in wartime. If we could do in peacetime what we did in wartime, we could borrow and have deficits for life and for construction instead of for death and for destruction. We can put our people to work and pay off our deficits in two or three years with the returns on those borrowings. That is sound business sense.

I want to say to my colleagues in the Conservative Party that I made the same kind of argument to Ministers of Finance in previous Liberal Governments.

I want to appeal to the Minister in charge of Canada Mortgage and Housing. If he has any weight and muscle in his Cabinet, he will bring in an amendment to the borrowing authority Bill next Monday for an additional $1 billion to put into place the items I have just mentioned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the hon. Member's time has expired. May I say that there is a Private Members' Hour to come. We are just going to go on until five o'clock so the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) can use his own discretion. We have about one minute or so left, so perhaps he would like to call it five o'clock.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Thank you for your suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the House would agree to call it five o'clock so we can go into Private Members' Hour and I would be able to give my speech on this important Bill without interruption on Monday?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Windsor West has used no time, and he will be the first one to be recognized on Monday, or whenever Bill C-99 comes up again for debate as far as the Orders of the Day are concerned.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF STANDARDS FOR RATING AND LABELLING

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to study the question of consumer standards for rating and labelling in the entertainment industry, particularly with respect to videos, records, cassette tapes and compact discs, and that in undertaking this study, the committee focus on the question of sexually explicit lyrics and the negative moral effect this may be having on the youth of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on December 3 of last year I had the occasion to make a statement in the House decrying the violent and sexually explicit lyrics in certain types of today's music, music which is directed not so much at the population at large but rather at the most impressionable and vulnerable of our population—the teens and preteens. As I mentioned in my statement, this had been brought to my attention by the New Brunswick Federation of Home and School Associations.

Frankly, as I had to admit at that time, I had not been paying attention to the music and was, therefore, ignoring the words, the words with their almost subliminal message of torture, degradation, rape, rebellion and even suicide. Thankfully, others had been listening, people from coast to coast, parents, teachers, church groups and students who have written to me and who have said quite simply to the recording and video industry and to the provincial and federal representatives: "Enough is enough".

This is not a new issue in North America. I am not crusading for a new cause, a new platform to introduce censorship of any kind. I recognize not just the difficulty but the futility in that, an attempt by anyone to deny anyone what they perceive to be their legitimate rights and freedoms. This issue has been raised before by a number of organizations. Most noticeably and most recently it has been raised by a group of Washington wives of U.S. Congressmen and Senators who have organized themselves into the Parents Music Resource Centre.

What is it that they want? What is it that the New Brunswick federation wants? It wants the recording industry to start policing itself with the same standards along the lines of the film industry's rating system. An industry which will not police itself will be policed. It will be regulated to some degree if it flauts the mores of a society or of a country.

A disc jockey called me in December and told me he had made a point of listening to the words, to the message, of some of the recordings he had been playing for months and months, artists to which I had objected. He admitted quite frankly that he was absolutely shocked at what he had been playing and would therefore refuse to ever play them again. This was not a radio station in a small rural area but, indeed, a radio station in a rather large urban centre.

Whether by coincidence or by design, on December 3, 1985, the same day I brought this matter up in the House originally, the Canadian Recording Industry Association announced new guidelines for its members on the subject of explicit lyrics in sound recordings. The President of the Association, Mr. Brian Robertson, said that the guidelines which had been accepted by all its members will recommend that future recordings, where contractually admissible and that in the opinion of the record company contain explicit language or lyrics, will carry the inscription: "Explicit Lyrics—Parental Guidance Advisory".

This is a responsible step. I applaud the association for taking it. However, there are still questions which must be asked, questions which must be answered. In the association's press release it was stated that its research had shown that the number of records that might fall under the category requiring a warning label was less than 1 per cent of the recordings released. One would ask: What number of that 1 per cent would be covered by the caveat "contractually permissible"?

Of course, it is not just the recording industry itself which must be brought into perspective here. What of the radio stations which will continue to play these records with the objectionable lyrics warning or not? Indeed, one could well ask: What is the air time of these records which make up less than 1 per cent of the recording industry? Also, and unfortunately so, many of the recording artists who have record sales of several million and fall into this category of sexually explicit music record for companies which do not belong to the Canadian Recording Association.

When we speak of the right of self-expression, the right to express oneself is not always absolute. It is generally acknowledged that some forms of regulation are appropriate and necessary in a democratic society. Other people have a correlative right not to be exposed to certain types of expression if they do not wish to be so exposed. Certain vulnerable members of society, such as children, should be shielded from some types of expression. These limitations on expression are particularly important with respect to certain recorded forms of entertainment such as video cassettes, discs and records. They can be purchased without a full knowledge of their contents. The implication of the potentially wide distribution of such materials was recently reviewed by the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, the Fraser Committee. The report of that committee described the concerns that had been expressed to it on video recordings thus:

> There was strong support at the public hearings for review and classification schemes applicable to video recording sold or rented for private use. The major concern of advocates of this proposal was for the young people. Worried about the kinds of violence, degradation and explicit sex which children might be seeing on videotapes parents and others were concerned that they now have almost no effective way of monitoring children's viewing.
> We were told that the covers and advertising of videotapes often do not give accurate clues about the nature of the film. The merchants who rent tapes may not be as vigilant as many would hope in ensuring that young people avoid the worst material. Even where the retailer is watchful, young people may be getting videotapes in the same way that they traditionally got liquor or cigarettes: having an older youth obtain supplies for younger peers.

The ease with which videotapes can be duplicated means that they will be widely and readily accessible. Outlets have proliferated, with videotapes being available anywhere from the largest department store to the corner gas station to the specialized video outlet, be it an adult video club or a neighbourhood family store. Video recorders are now reasonably widely available in private homes across Canada and home viewing means a consumption of the materials can take place in private. For many young people this means away from parental supervision.

The committee found real merit in having a regulatory scheme for sold or rented video recordings. The scheme would include only classification of tapes and their clear designation but not prohibition of sale or deletions. Such prohibition would be reserved for only the most seriously offensive films under the criminal obscenity standard. Accordingly, the Fraser Committee recommended that each province should establish a system of review and classification for video recordings.

The rationale for classification of video recordings would be equally applicable to audio recording. First, there is the concern that people may be offended by the contents of certain recordings of which they have no warning. Further, there is the perception that young people may be harmed by some types of video or audio entertainment. There is the general harmful effect that the depiction of explicit violence or sex is said to have in the development of those who are not sufficiently mature to deal with such forms of stimulus. Unregulated access to materials by children could seriously impair proper socialization and a growth of responsible attitudes and behaviour. Moreover, there is the more disturbing contention that some recordings have the potential to cause direct harm and that already some youth have reacted in a violent fashion to the images and ideas to which they have been exposed as a result of the indiscriminate distribution of such materials.

If these concerns have substance, it is surely arguable that review, classification and labelling of recorded materials is not an over-reaction. This would seem to be one area in which a careful review by the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee of the effect of the broad distribution of video and audio recording could indeed be of use. Such a study could focus the attention of the public and legislators on the specific issue of recorded entertainment and serve to investigage and analyse the supposed harms that flow from its distribution, particularly among youth.

Classification of film is not something that is new in Canada. Eight provinces already have film classification boards which rate films and which, in some cases, have the power to order deletion or forbid the exhibition of films. The two remaining provinces rely on the findings of the boards of other provinces. The power of these boards, however, extends only to films being shown publicly in theatres. Constitutionally, the regulation of such exhibition is considered to be within provincial competence over matters of a local or private nature in the province and the Supreme Court of Canada has upheld the exercise of that power.

It seems clear that the extension of a classification system to the distribution of recorded material for private use would similarly be within provincial competence. This is not to say, however, that it is not possible for the federal Government to become involved in the matter, principally through the use of the criminal law power.

The classification of privately used video and audio material is becoming a significant issue in other jurisdictions as well as in Canada. As I mentioned earlier, in the United States this issue has also been raised by a number of groups and organizations. A subcommittee of the U.S. Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee recently held hearings into a proposal to require the labelling of phonograph recordings with warnings as to explicit lyrics or certain types of subject matter dealt with in the recording. Witnesses who had supported the proposal acknowledged that popular music has always been disapproved of by other generations but submitted that recently such music has undergone a serious shift in emphasis into so-called porn rock, the glorification of such things as sado-masochism, incest, bondage, indiscriminate killing and, as I have already mentioned, suicide.

Similar concerns have been expressed with respect to video presentations of popular music. Some witnesses urged legislation on that matter while others submit that self-regulation may be possible and that the recording industry should start policing itself along the lines of the film industry's rating system. For example, it could establish a voluntary rating system such as the Motion Picture Association of America has with respect to film.

Two Canadian provinces have taken steps to classify video recordings. In Nova Scotia, the province's Amusements Authority Board has been empowered, pursuant to the Theatres and Amusements Act, to regulate film exhanges, retail outlets which sell, lease, lend, exchange or distribute films to the public. Such exchanges must be licensed before they are permitted to operate. In addition, every video film including video cassettes, video discs and video tapes must be marked with a classification assigned to it by the board both on the container in which it is kept and on any container used for display purposes. That classification can be "general", "adult" or "restricted". The regulation contemplates that some video films may be distributed without having been classified and requires such video films to be marked "unclassified".

Theoretically, through the use of the criminal law power, the federal Government could impose a national system of review and classification of recorded material. However, this would involve significant costs and could serve to alienate the provinces. The federal Government is not limited to a direct role in this area.

An airing of these issues at the national level could serve to encourage the development of review and classification systems across the country. It could also lead to the development of minimum standards of acceptability and uniformity of procedures. In addition, the federal Government has a clear role to play in dealing with the importation of recorded material by virtue of its jurisdiction over customs.

Possibly the most significant federal interest in this matter is to ensure that if a system of review, classification and labelling of recorded material is necessary, it applies in one way or another throughout Canada and in accordance with the Charter. Although the direct participation of the federal Government in the administration of such a system may not be practicable, it is possible for Ottawa to establish a structure whereby the provinces eventually become obligated to act in this area subject to minimum standards.

It is with these thoughts in mind that I bring this matter before the House and ask that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to study the question of consumer standards for rating and labelling in the entertainment industry, particularly with respect to videos, records, cassette tapes and compact discs, and that in undertaking this study the committee focus on the question of sexually explicit lyrics and the negative moral effect this may be having on the youth of Canada.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of remarks to make on this motion. It is too bad that I cannot ask the Hon. Member questions about his speech so I will pose some of my remarks in terms of questions that I would ask. I do not pretend to be an expert on this subject. I am speaking as an ordinary Member of the House, but I do have some questions.

I should first declare my biases, and I am speaking personally here. I believe in free speech and I do not like censorship. Justice William O. Douglas, the great judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, once gave a judgment when he was defining, as the American Supreme Court had often to do, the notion of free speech. He said that free speech means free speech, period. That was the entire decision. He struck down the law that went against free expression.

The Hon. Member is correct when he says that we do have limits on self-expression in Canada. There are the laws of libel and there are even limits to free speech in this House where libel laws do not apply. However, Canadian libel laws are very restricted, as the Hon. Member knows. For example, one may make comments about a group of people unless it goes against the Criminal Code hate literature sections.

At common law, libel and defamation was very restricted to actually affecting an individual person, his reputation and his standing in the community. Our laws were very restrictive because in a democracy, we want to have as much freedom of expression as possible. That is what a democracy is all about and that is what we believe brings human happiness and progress.

When I looked at this motion, I asked myself what were sexually explicit lyrics. I am a little out of date in my music as I am getting older, but I remember some John Lennon tunes and I have one particular song in mind. I will not sing it but other Hon. Members may. It is the song entitled Imagine. I recall some of the lyrics of that song—"a working class hero is something to be; you are all f-blank peasants as far as I can see". Then the lyrics went on to say: "If you want to be a hero, just follow me". At least the lyrics were to that effect. Is that sexually explicit? It sounds like it. Would that be in fact censored by the Hon. Member? Would some kind of Big Brother federal committee go in and grab the records and discs of kids and say that they could not have that kind of music? I do not like that, and I think it leads to a great deal of abuse. In the long run it is worse than the problem which the Hon. Member is trying to attack.

I agree with some of the comments of the Hon. Member. Obviously parents must have some direction and control over their children. There cannot be pornographic materials, what I prefer to call pornographic materials. That has to be tightly defined, and there is no definition of that in the motion. It would have been better to talk about pornographic material rather than sexually explicit material. Quite frankly, I am not bothered by sexually explicit things. Sex is a part of life. Sometimes I wonder whether in our puritanical traditions in western Canadian society we are a little afraid or Victorian in many ways. I speak as a Scot, and a Scot should know. Scots are pretty Victorian. I know that some people in the other cultures of Canada are less Victorian than we Scots who can be a bit dour and Victorian. Sometimes I think it is a fault. Some of my forefathers, such as John Knox and so on, would have defined everything as sexually explicit, and we would not have been able to make the least reference to things which concerned sex. In any event, it is not a good expression. Pornographic is a better expression but it has to be defined as talking about the exploitation of a person or a group, for example women, by others, usually to make money, to degrade or to exploit. That is worth classifying and worth censoring, if we have to censor, and I have already told the Hon. Member that I do not like the notion of censorship.

The committee already has before it the Fraser Report and I believe the Badgley Report. There is some good material on pornography in the Badgley Report. That is what the committee should be looking at. Also the motion indicates the negative moral effect this may have on the youth of Canada. That sounds like Jerry Falwell of the Moral Majority, speaking about negative moral effect on American youth. Of course he would exclude anything left of Attila the Hun. He would say that any political expression has negative moral effects on the people. I have been told that at one point the White House wanted to bar the music of the Beach Boys, until Nancy Reagan intervened because she liked and knew the Beach Boys. Would this motion ask the committee to make legislation to ban records such as those of the Beach Boys? The Sex Pistols were banned; their song "God Save the Queen—It's a Fascist Regime" was banned in the United Kingdom. How far do we want to go? Do we really want to ban things because they make commentary on our political institutions or our leaders? It seems to me that that should not be done in a democracy.

In Canada we have the notion that the provinces look after this matter. I know the Hon. Member dealt with it somewhat in his speech, but traditionally the provinces have looked after classification and censorship. I acknowledge that there is a Customs problem in the federal Government, that the Criminal Code exists and that it is a federal statute. However, do we really want a federal censorship board to guard over our young people? I look at some of the younger people who assist us in the House and I wonder whether they really want a country where mainly a bunch of old men and a couple of women decide what the youth will see. No, I do not accept that, and I do not think the young people of Canada would accept it either.

When I think of the negative moral effect on Canadian youth, I think of the 24 per cent who are unemployed and about the tragedy of young people who are unable to obtain jobs in the Province of British Columbia. I think of the tragedy of a lost generation out there, for some people; I think they are the really bad moral things. I do not really care what young people over a certain age are seeing or hearing in the privacy of their own apartments or homes. Are we to have a Big Brother who will go in and look at their record collections and take away some of them? What kind of warning will there be on these discs? Will someone have to listen to them? Will there be different kinds of warnings? At some point will they be taken off the shelves and so on? I believe in free speech, but I think it is dangerous to use expressions like "sexually explicit lyrics" and "negative moral effect". Those are the words which were used in the motion. I do not impute bad intentions to the Hon. Member. I suspect he is responding to some of the trash and pornography which society seems to throw up. However, we must be careful. It is easy to step over the fine line to censorship, which I think is backward.

Let me conclude by saying for myself that it is good the committee is considering the problems of various forms of pornography—violent pornography, pornography against women, exploitive pornography, sado-masochism and exploitation of children. Yes, the committee should consider those matters. It has the benefit of material from the Badgley and the Fraser reports, but I do not think we have to send a motion such as this one to the committee. The motion talks in broad terms which in the past could have resulted in the censorship of some of the most interesting music that has come to be accepted in our society.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on Motion No. 251 in the name of the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine). When I first toyed with the idea of speaking on the topic, I was of a mixed mind. Instinctively I have a natural aversion to government intervention, to excessive Government regulation and to very hard censorship. However, I began to study the issue and realized the sincerity with which the Hon. Member is approaching the particular topic. I viewed a few of the videos currently on television and thought back to the days when I was a school teacher and realized how impressionable are our young people. As a result of that process, I decided to speak in favour of the Private Member's Motion of the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Obviously it is not a new thing for parents, home and school associations, educators, church groups or others, to express concerns over the lyrics of songs which are popular with young people. In the 1930s, the lyrics of Cole Porter's song Love for Sale caused a bit of a furor. I cannot remember that, Mr. Speaker; perhaps your fond memories will go back that far. It was not vastly unlike what is happening today and when people expressed concern with regard to a visual presentation which I can remember when Elvis Presley first appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show. There was a concern that his physical motion was not suitable for a mixed audience. We had a limited form of censorship which was imposed by the cameramen themselves.

Today there is a new development to which we must direct our attention. Over the last few years our Canadian youth have been increasingly exposed to a new form of musical entertainment, the music video. Indeed, there is now a pay TV station that presents these rock videos on a 24-hour a day basis. These videos can be imaginative, colourful and may involve highly technical special effects, in some cases, incorporating computer technology. Many are excellent visual presentations that compliment positive lyrics that convey a certain idea of the entertainer. However, there is increasing concern over the sexual content, and particularly over the elements of violence so graphically displayed in rock videos of today.

It is time to ask ourselves what the effect of these rock music videos is on Canadian youth. Only this week, a national newspaper featured a story on the front page questioning whether teenagers are the top consumers of pornography. It reported that a survey conducted by a Canadian researcher found that young people between the ages of 12 and 17 are the primary consumers of pornography in Canada, and that 37 per cent of them watch sexually explicit videos at least once a month.

There is not only considerable sexual content in these videos, but also elements of violence which may or may not involve a sexual component. We must ask ourselves whether we are monitoring the content of these videos closely enough, and do we know enough about their impact on our children.

Complaints have been brought to my attention about videos that, for example, portray women as animals in cages, fed, kept and led around on leashes by men. Recently I had the misfortune to view one of these videos, one by a group called "The Twisted Sister" that shows a young boy being harangued by his father with clenched teeth. Eventually the boy throws his father out of the bedroom window. Is this the kind of content we want our young children to see, our young children who are relatively impressionable, who enjoy music? Is this the kind of message we want them to get in our society?

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the existing obscenity provisions of the Criminal Code require the undue exploitation of sex or sex and violence, or sex and cruelty, in order for a matter to be obscene. Depictions outside of a sexual context do not fall within the controls of the obscenity provisions. Many of the videos, while they do not contain sexual content, definitely are violent in nature.

In 1978, the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Justice and Legal Affairs in its report on pornography concluded:

> A society which holds that egalitarianism, non-violence, consensualism and mutuality are basic to any human interaction, whether sexual or other is clearly justified in controlling and prohibiting any medium or depiction, description or advocacy which violates these principles.

The Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, the Fraser Committee, was appointed by the former Government to study the problems of pornography in our society. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) tabled the report of the Fraser Committee in the House of Commons on April 23, 1985. Officials in the Department of Justice are reviewing the recommendations of this committee, and the Minister of Justice has indicated recently that he intends to announce the Government's response to these recommendations this spring in the House of Commons.

The Fraser Committee recommended repealing the present obscenity provisions in the Criminal Code and replacing them with a three-tier classification of pornography. As I have said, these proposals have been the subject of extensive review by officials in the Department of Justice, who have consulted widely with non-governmental organizations across Canada and with the provinces. The Fraser Committee also recommended that any amendments proposed to the Criminal Code with respect to proscribed pornographic material should be incorporated by reference into regulations passed, or to be passed, by the CRTC pursuant to the Broadcasting Act with respect to all broadcast media. I understand that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), who has the responsibility for the Broadcasting Act, is considering this issue.

There is another recommendation made by the Fraser Committee, which I believe merits our attention. The Fraser Committee was not given a mandate to study the issue of the control of depictions of violence outside of a sexual context. The Fraser Committee did recommend that the federal Government should give immediate consideration to studying this problem of representations of violence in films and through the broadcast media.

The problem of violence in the media has been an issue which parliamentarians over the years have recognized warrants attention. The Royal Commission on Violence in the communications industry, headed by the Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh was established by Order in Council in May, 1975, and published a report in January, 1976. That report took about seven months, a short time frame when you look at the time frame it normally takes task forces or royal commissions to present reports. Obviously the commission felt it was a crucial matter. It is now 10 years later. The past Government took very little action with regard to that report.

The present Government, our Government of today, has announced it is taking action to deal with the long-standing problems associated with pornography, including pornographic depictions through the broadcast media.

Many Canadians have expressed their concerns, both to the Fraser Committee and through their Members of Parliament, about the increasingly violent content of television shows, rock music videos and phonograph records. This issue should no longer and must no longer be overlooked.

I realize that censorship in the media is a complex sensitive issue involving constitutional questions of division of powers between the federal and provincial Governments and determinations of what constitutes reasonable limits on the freedom of expression guaranteed by Section 2 of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We are at present seeing co-operation between all levels of Government and among all federal Departments to combat the adverse effects of the pervasive burgeoning pornographic influence in our society.

We must also channel this co-operation into looking at the equally pervasive burgeoning depictions of violence in our society, the effects of which on our youth have not been adequately assessed to date.

I urge this House to give the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the mandate to study the effects of pornographic or simply violent depictions and descriptions in videos, records, cassette tapes and compact disks, available for sale or rent or through the broadcast media.

By suggesting that I support this, I do not criticize nor condemn the industry that has built up in Canada with regard to rock music videos. It is an important industry and, in many cases, gives Canadian entertainers a vehicle to express their talents and to show their abilities. Certainly in no way would I want my support of this recommendation to be construed as an effort to detract from that viable industry, but instead to add to the credibility of that industry and its product by making sure that we can attempt to monitor exactly what the young people of this country are going to see as a result of watching our entertainers and entertainers from other countries in the presentation of their talents.

This study by the committee should include the question that has been introduced by the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi concerning consumer standards for rating and labelling in the entertainment industry. The recent increase in the numbers and popularity of the rock music videos viewed by so many of our Canadian youth warrants the attention of the Members of Parliament. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi for bringing the matter to our attention and introducing his Private Members' Motion so that we as Members of Parliament may address it. I hope that Members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will be able to give this very serious issue the attention it warrants.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, this motion was moved by the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) who, while representing the Northumberland-Miramichi riding, knows the Chambly riding very well, having lived there for several years. As the elected representative of the Chambly riding, I am pleased to tell the House what I think of this motion on a basic issue which affects Canadian people generally and, of course, my Chambly constituents. However, I would not waste the time of the House by discussing the substance of the motion which seeks to authorize the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to study various aspects of the pornography problem.

It's a fact that the pornography problem today is extremely serious and affects all Canadians, including my Chambly constituents.

We are all aware that this question is important and arouses much interest. I am convinced that my colleague's initiative stems from his conviction that a study of this aspect of pornography is necessary for the well-being of the Canadian public. Concerning the well-being of the Canadian public and, especially, that of my Chambly constituents, it is clear that through the Budget it has just tabled, our Government is trying to improve the well-being of this and future generations, since by reducing the deficit, it is automatically easing the burden our young people will have to bear tomorrow. It is therefore evident that the purpose of our Budget and this motion is to improve the well-being of our society, our population.

I do not intend to discuss the validity of this conviction, not because I lack strong feelings about it. Quite the contrary! Just like my fellow Canadians, recent events such as the publication of the Badgley report on child abuse, as well as the Fraser report on pornography and prostitution in Canada have caused me to reflect on the pornography issue.

During the next few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal generally with the pornography problem which, as I said earlier, is very serious. In fact, the Criminal Code of Canada makes it an offense to write, publish, distribute or posses obscene material. Of course, contrary to my friend the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I lack the necessary training and experience to address the House with ease and eloquence. But surely, Mr. Speaker, my comments now are quite relevant.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, a publication is deemed to be obscene if its main feature is the undue exploitation of sexual aspects of one or more subjects such as crime, horror, cruelty or violence. The Canadian courts have been using a test that reflects common moral standards to determine what must be viewed as "undue exploitation", based on what the Canadian public as a whole is willing to tolerate.

The decisions rendered by Canadian courts have proved that current Code provisions concerning obscenity are difficult to enforce. The result is generall public confusion and disarray.

Retailers, distributors as well as police officers, sollicitors, defense counsels and judges, consistently find it difficult to enforce a statute directly.

The current uncertainty concerning the interpretation of the law has helped change the current nature of pornography and widen its market. It can therefore be observed that in recent years we have seen an alarming growth in the availability of violent, degrading and increasingly explicit pornographic material. The means by which that material is made available also are much more varied. Video cassettes, films and satellite broadcasting have come to supplement traditional media like books and magazines. I would not want to overlook Mr. Speaker, the records and audio cassettes we hear today. As we know, Mr. Speaker, in the Montreal area, we had a teenager who unfortunately took his own life after listening to a cassette recording, and if you will forgive me, its title is Heavy Metal. After listening to a cassette of that kind of music, that young man committed suicide. I think this also could be considered as a kind of pornography available to our Canadian youth.

All that is now available in an ever increasing number of shops and stores. The public expressed their concern about the use of children in new forms of pornography and the availability of that kind of material to the young.

Mr. Speaker, the example I just gave of that teenager who could very easily obtain a cassette from a Heavy Metal record, shows how easy it is for these young people to lay their hands on that kind of material.

Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me, I would like incidentally to emphasize the exceptional community work done by organizations in my constituency of Chambly to protect our young people against all kinds of pornography, and especially all kinds of kidnapping.

Indeed, with the support of the Lions' Clubs in my constituency, some of the municipalities, in co-operation with the police forces in the constituency, have set up program, a voluntary one of course, for the identification of our young people, by means of an index card system that is kept by the parents, with the fingerprints of their own children. And so, if a child does disappear, which is something families cannot easily deal with at the best of times, with the fingerprints, finding these children will be easier and quicker, and as a result, we may be able to keep these children from getting caught up in the child pornography network.

An Hon. Member: Excellent proposal, Chambly!

Mr. Grisé: While considering the problem of pornography, the Committee decided to make a distinction between two broad categories of pornography that have aroused public concern: sexually explicit productions, characterized both by sexual content and by the stated or apparent intention to bring about sexual stimulation of the customer; and productions characterized by sexual content, combined with violence, degradation or exploitation in such a way as to give these aspects legitimacy.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider what I just mentioned, and a study was published this week, it is this kind of pornography that is aimed most often at young people between the ages of 12 and 17. Mr. Speaker, it is our teenagers who are most interested in this kind of pornography. It is incredible and unacceptable in a modern society such as ours today.

As for the impact of pornography, the Committee noted that most of the intervenors at the hearings shared the following concerns: pornography degrades women, deprives them of their dignity as human beings and equal partners within a human relationship, and treats them as instruments of pleasure for men. The violence of men towards women is judged socially acceptable, and the spectator becomes insensitive to the sufferings of others.

Mr. Speaker, to deal with the unfortunate situations that result, in my riding, the riding of Chambly, thanks to our Government's job development programs, we have been able to set up two shelters for battered women, and I can assure you that when I met with the directors of these agencies and when I visited their premises and met with these women and heard them talk about their experiences . . . It was incredible, Mr. Speaker. I felt I was not in the twentieth or twenty-first century. I felt I had gone back to the Stone Age. And again, thanks to our Government's action, we will be able to . . . That problem has not been solved but at least we offer shelter to those people, mostly women who have been beaten up, have walked out of their home and have lived in squalor until they are left with only one possible source of income, Mr. Speaker, prostitution of course, the oldest trade in the world. Once in the prostitution racket, the next easy step leads to pornography.

Again I say that is the kind of programs we can set up to help women who find themselves in such dire straits.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, such serious problems as violence at home and battered women have a very harmful and very negative impact on the children and the family, and then the principle of family life does not last very long.

An in-depth study of the problem was deemed desirable. A special committee was established by the Department of Justice under the chairmanship of Mr. Paul Fraser who was asked to report on matters related to pornography, among others. The committee released its report in April last year. The Fraser Committee recommended a full review of provisions on pornography and their replacement by a classification based on the type of acts depicted. Three levels have been set, each with its own penal provisions and a control mechanism.

The most severe penal sanctions would apply to first level productions which include visual representation of an individual under age 18 taking part in explicit sexual activities.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that if we want to solve those problems we should not begin by directing our efforts towards the adult population. The way to proceed is to strike at the root, and by that I mean the young people of today who are directly involved in pornography. The first level would also include productions which promote, endorse or depict as being normal any sexual attack against children, as well as others that could not have been produced without inflicting severe physical lesions on the individuals portrayed.

Mr. Speaker, these words do not need to be explained further. It is clear that these young people will have recorded in their subconscious these acts of extreme physical violence and they will develop them into some sort of automatic response, a means of defence, release and expression, something unbelievable for those who will have to administer our society of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, the productions of the second level should be subject to less severe penalties. The second level would comprise material or shows which describe or represent violent sexual behaviour, bestiality, incest or necrophilia. When I say less severe penalties, I do not mean full absolution, for is there any human act which is more bestial and degrading than incest? It is aberrant and inexplicable. Mr. Speaker, as the happy father of a son and daughter, I just cannot accept that parents could be involved in an incestuous relationship with their children.

Mr. Speaker, the productions of the third level would be subject to penalties, because they are exposed in public, without warning, or sold or made available to people under 18 years of age. This third level would comprise visual pornographic presentations or shows not involving people under 18 years of age.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—IMPACT ON CANADIAN FARMERS OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION. (B) REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) concerning the situation which exists in the Canadian farm community with regard to the United States farm legislation bill that was passed a few weeks ago.

A recent study by Chase Econometrics indicates that it will cause a net reduction of 20 per cent for farm incomes across the country due to the lower prices of grain, corn and other commodities. I asked what action the Minister would take in light of this American farm bill. Of course, the impact of the Bill is not only the reduction in the commodity prices. It will also have a negative impact because the legislation has a massive system of bonuses for export sales.

The response I received from the Parliamentary Secretary was very inadequate. He never indicated what action would be taken to assist the farmers in this country as a result of the very adverse and negative impact of this U.S. farm bill. He did not seem to realize that it would reduce farm incomes 20 per cent below the 1984 level.

In my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), I asked if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would personally intervene with President Reagan this weekend at the Washington Summit to ask that some consideration be given to Canada in the way the U.S. Farm Bill is applied. I received essentially no response or commitment from the Minister that the Prime Minister would personally intervene to ask that the American $1.5 billion bonus program for export sales would not be used in markets into which Canada has traditionally sold grain. The Secretary of State simply said that the Prime Minister will speak for all interests of Canada at the Summit with the President.

Last evening, I received this background paper entitled "The Washington Summit March 18-19". The very disconcerting result I expected took place because there is nary a word on the agenda of issues to be discussed by the Prime Minister and the President this weekend about this U.S. Farm Bill which will have the greatest and most severe impact on Canadian agriculture of any initiative taken in the United States. The agenda includes other important issues such as softwood lumber; the fish countervailing duty investigation; sugar-containing products; steel; asbestos and others under Section 201. However, the whole question about the negative impact of the U.S. Farm Bill is not even included on the agenda. Therefore, we are continuing to seek assurances.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary, in responding this evening, will be able to give an ironclad commitment that the Prime Minister will raise this matter, and that he will push it as forcefully as possible with the President this weekend to ensure that the negative impact of the United States Farm Bill, with its commodity prices, will be lessened, and that the United States will not use a subsidy bonus program for sales of wheat and grain into Canada's traditional markets.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to reply to my hon. colleague on behalf of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, who would have liked to reply himself, but who is unfortunately unable to be here. He is on his way back from Japan, where he discussed this important matter with his foreign counterparts. This, by itself, is a very good indication of the will of this Government to remain competitive on the market and to ensure the best possible share of the international market for our grain.

The Minister wants our market to remain competitive and to continue to develop. He is quite familiar with the U.S. Farm Bill and intends to discuss it with his counterparts. This is the way that our Minister has decided to handle the issue.

[English]

For instance, we know the loan rate to American grain producers has been lowered 27 per cent, from $3.30 U.S. to $2.40 U.S. per bushel. This will result in downward pressure on the world price of wheat, which is essentially set by the United States, the world's largest grain trader.

We also know that American grain growers will be protected from falling prices. Subsidies will cushion the blow. Some predict that farm subsidies, overall, will cost the U.S. Treasury as much as $70 billion over the next three years. A large part of this amount is earmarked for export programs. The United States intends to recapture its market share and reduce its burdensome stocks.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that, each year, the European Economic Community countries spend $18 billion, or 70 per cent of their budget, to support their grain industry as well as stocks which are becoming increasingly large.

In the short term, Mr. Speaker, neither the American legislation nor the action taken by the European Economic Community are useful in the present situation.

However, our Minister has decided to sit down with representatives from Australia, Argentina, the United States and the European Economic Community with a common purpose to find an equitable solution. I can assure you that this matter will be raised during the coming week when our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meets with the American President.

REFUGEES—DRAFT LEGISLATION INQUIRY. (B) CONTENT OF ALLEGED DRAFT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on February 6 during Question Period, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) whether she would confirm that she recently approved a draft authorizing immigration officials to expel within 72 hours most refugee claimants who, in fleeing their country, passed through another country. She evaded the question. She would not confirm nor deny that there was such a document authorized by her. She said I was wrong, which was an evasion of a direct answer. Yet, I have it on the best authority that such a draft was circulated with ministerial support.

That draft would exclude from Canada most refugees who might arrive once the draft was adopted. There is a known crisis in the matter of refugee claimants within Canada. The crisis has been created by the misconduct of the immigration bureaucracy and the neglect of a succession of Ministers.

In addition to people who came here claiming refugee status, there were others who claimed other types of hardship under the humanitartian and compassionate sections of our immigration law. They were quite improperly put into the refugee stream, and thus they bloated the refugee stream.

There were other delays caused by the staff simply not providing typists to type the transcripts after the interviews. The length of time between each stage of the refugee process lengthened. What once took a year took two years, and it now takes five or six years.

The Immigration Appeal Board was slow and often incompetent. It was the cause of many appeals. It was finally the cause of the grand appeal to the Supreme Court one year ago next month, which finally made clear that a person is entitled to an oral hearing before his life is to be jeopardized by being deported as a refugee claimant.

The delays have caused hardship to refugee claimants and their families, and cost to the Government. Yet the Minister herself caused delay a year ago when she delayed for six months the reception and publication of the report of Rabbi Plaut, which had been asked for in the previous year by the then Government. She stalled further the action on that report by asking the committee to study it. When the committee studied it and tabled its reports in Parliament in November and December, after many hundreds of hours of painstaking work, instead of acting on it, even within the rules of the House, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) violated the rules last Friday by refusing to respond to the report of the committee which was tabled in November in the House. On the 120-day limit, he was supposed to give an answer, and he just refused to do it. He said instead that he would couple it with an answer to a later report some weeks down the road. That report which he refused to answer was the report that would have provided a legislative plan for correcting the errors and weaknesses of our present refugee system. Therefore, the errors and weaknesses continued to accumulate.

What has happened during this past year is that certain sharks, certain shysters, consultants and some lawyers brought in hundreds of Portuguese people last year, and more this year, to abuse the situation of backlog and delay. They claim they are Jehovah's Witnesses and would be persecuted if they returned to Portugual. Nobody believes the claim. It does not matter. By making the claim, they must be allowed to stay for the refugee process because the Minister and the bureaucrats have delayed any action to correct the law to close that loophole.

These claims could still be expeditiously disposed of by a report our committee delivered in December, just before Christmas. It is not 120 days, but no law prevents the Minister from acting upon the report before 120 days. That report showed ways that could be followed without legislative change on the basis of the present Immigration Act. By some adjustment of regulations to meet the crisis, most of the claimants, whether they are Portuguese, Guyanese, Iranian, Sikh, Bangladeshi, African, Latin American, no matter from where they come, most of them, according to the officials' admission, could be settled here on grounds of family reunification, on grounds of effective integration into Canada, or on grounds of extreme hardship and compassionate consideration. That would have saved untold human hardship and would have saved many millions of dollars to this Government. Instead, the Minister still delays, is building up the hardship and the cause and building up bitterness. Unscrupulous journalists are using false figures to slander these refugee claimants. They are likely to destroy Canada's good refugee determination system which needs improvement, but not destruction. Perhaps what is sought is a way of bringing in cheap, illegal labour for the labour market in Canada and returning to the bad old days of the worst immigration policies we have had.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to reply to the question on behalf of the Minister.

However, I would like to start in a lighter vein. Last week I accused my Liberal friends and colleagues of being a "bottoms-up gang" because they could always be found burrowing in some waste basket or other, looking for letters and papers to bring before the public eye. I think my hon. colleague has caught the same habit: it must be contagious on that side of the House. And always the intimations that a series of assumptions and documents will be forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker, from my experience as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. MacDonald) for almost a year, I can say that every week, the Minister receives tens, and when it is really busy even hundreds, of proposals varying from the most complex to the most farfetched.

We signed the Geneva Convention, and according to the Convention which was in fact ratified in 1951, it is strictly prohibited to expel anyone before entry. We signed the Convention and we intend to observe our international commitments.

Regarding the crux of the Hon. Member's question, Mr. Speaker, it is absurd to imply that the Canadian Government could be endangering the lives of refugees by expelling people who, in fleeing their country, pass through another country.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that in the legislative committee and in this House we had a debate on a Bill to increase the number of appeal commissioners from 18 to 50, which was vehemently opposed. Keep in mind that we now have 20,000 cases. Admitedly these are not all refugee cases, but you know there is no distinction between refugee cases and regular immigration cases. Twenty thousand cases are pending and we simply must find a way to give them a hearing.

With respect to the implementation of the Geneva Convention, as I said a moment ago there is a well established principle whereby the summary expulsion of a refugee to a third country which in turn deports the refugee to his or her country of origin constitutes an expulsion. The expulsion or forced return of a refugee to the country where he was persecuted is a procedure to which convention signatories are not allowed to resort. Canada happens to be among the signatories, Mr. Speaker, and it has no intention of using such tactics. Obviously we have never authorized the drafting or publication of proposals which would breach that non-expulsion principle and which would be unfair to Canadians and others who may wish to become Canadian citizens.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—COLLECTION OF BENEFITS BY BRICKLAYERS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to expand on my question regarding unemployed Metro Toronto bricklayers. I feel that the issue raised in the question is one which goes beyond bricklayers and hiring hall agreements to the very core of the unemployment insurance system. The issue is now to ensure that only those who are genuinely unable to find work receive benefits.

My intent is not to single out bricklayers as abusers. In fact, I would think that the ratio of abusers among bricklayers is likely no higher than that among any other occupation. I merely wish to illustrate the problems that exist within the program.

According to recent reports, 1,400 bricklayers in the Metropolitan Toronto area are presently receiving unemployment insurance benefits. Yet builders have set up an emergency manpower committee to try to locate qualified bricklayers to fill the urgent demand for their services.

Bricklayers have countered charges of abuse by stating that weather conditions are such that they cannot perform the work. When builders are asked about this, they state that tenting building sites with tarpaulin creates adequate conditions for laying bricks.

If the builders are correct, then some 1,400 individuals are collecting benefits to which they should not legally be entitled. If they are wrong, then bricklayers' work would appear to be seasonal and under unemployment insurance regulations, they would be required to seek work in other fields during those months when they cannot work in construction.

I am not questioning the bricklayers' belief that working conditions are not adequate during winter months. Only an investigation of conditions could determine the validity of their concerns. However, assuming that their concerns are valid, I am anxious to be reassured that adequate checks are being made to determine that claimants covered by hiring hall agreements are actively pursuing work in other fields during those winter months. I believe that any investigation by departmental officials should address these questions.

If one accepts the builders' belief that working conditions are acceptable, then there appears to be no adequate reason that these jobs are going unfilled, and benefits should be cut off to anyone not accepting the work offered. The Chairman of the Emergency Manpower Committee set up by the Toronto Home-Builders Association has stated that if even all 1,400 of the individuals now collecting benefits reported for work, there would still be a shortfall.

These jobs are not just statistical figments of someone's imagination. They are very real, and the current housing boom has made builders desperate to locate skilled workers. The jobs are there. The labour to fill the positions is and should be available, yet jobs go vacant. This is a major problem which needs to be resolved before taxpayers are asked to pay out one more dime in benefits.

It must be determined if working conditions are acceptable or not. If they are not acceptable, then I would like assurances that adequate measures will be put in place to determine that claimants are actively seeking other employment during the winter months. If conditions are found to be acceptable, then I request an immediate stop to benefits for anyone found unwilling to accept work. Should the problem prove to be one of communication between the builders and the hiring halls, then installation of an effective communications system should be a first priority.

The integrity and credibility of the entire unemployment insurance system in Canada is at stake. Taxpayers have been asked for an ever increasing share of their hard-earned dollars over the years to finance the program. All that is asked in return is that those dollars be effectively directed to those who are willing and able to work but cannot find it. If funds continue to be directed to individuals who do not work by choice, the entire system cannot help but fall into further disrepute.

Since its inception, the Unemployment Insurance Commission has helped millions of Canadians to stay afloat until they were able to get back on their feet and working. However, financial resources are limited, and it has become increasingly important to ensure that available resources are directed only to those who are genuinely deserving of assistance. It should be remembered that unemployment insurance is an insurance against loss of job income and is designed to bridge the gap between one position and another, and it should be treated as such.

While I expect the Minister's investigation will deal with these immediate problems, I look forward to the report of the Forget Commission to address the wider range of problems which plague the Unemployment Insurance Commission. While the unemployment insurance system must remain flexible in order to accommodate compassionate circumstances, we must be rigid in our efforts to prevent abuse. I look forward to the reply of the Parliamentary Secretary. I am sure it will shed significant light on the problems I have outlined.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, you should say the Parliamentary Secretary speaking for other Parliamentary Secretaries who are at the convention in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reply to the question asked by my hon. colleague, especially as I worked in this Department for nearly a year. All Canadians, as well, naturally, as the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Employment and Immigration, recognize the collective agreements between labour and management which are at the basis of certain general working or hiring conditions. In this particular case, the employers had agreed to make job offers through the union hiring offices. Thus, the workers under the jurisdiction of a designated union hiring office are exempt from registering at the employment centre for periods of employment of up to sixteen weeks, and this is the cause of the problem.

In the Toronto region, 1,400 bricklayers have applied for unemployment insurance benefits. On the other hand, there are three union hiring offices to facilitate the placement of workers. According to these offices they are having problems referring workers because of a shortage of bricklayers in their sector.

Four employers when to the Canada Employment Centre to fill vacancies. Beginning on February 24, 1986, all CEC's in the Hamilton and Oshawa regions started to contact their clients with bricklaying skills. Those who refuse a job without a valid reason will have their entitlement reviewed.

On March 7, Department officials visited the three union hiring offices in the Toronto region to ensure compliance with the terms of the agreements signed with the union.

These offices of the Bricklayers' International Union are keeping to the terms of the agreement between the Commission and the hiring offices. However, the Commission is also checking to see whether the independent union of bricklayers is complying with its agreement.

The purpose of all this is to ensure that the Unemployment Insurance Plan works adequately and that the agreements signed are also working.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

INTERIM REPORT OF CANADIAN SECTION OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour, as co-chairman of the Canadian delegation, to table in the House in both official languages, the interim report of the Canadian section of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group, which met in Tucson, Arizona, from February 27 to March 3, 1986.

The report summarizes the discussion in the plenary meeting of the two delegations which was devoted to the subject of enhanced trade with the United States. As Members are doubtless aware, Congress presently holds the key as to whether or not President Reagan will be granted authority to negotiate such an agreement with Canada. The U.S. Trade Act establishes a rather complicated procedure. If, within 60 working days, Congress does not explicitly act to deny the President such authority, negotiations between the two countries may commence. The 60-day period expires about mid-April, so our meeting was held at a critical phase of the Congressional review. Adding to the significance of our discussion, the Congressional delegation included Members of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee who have the principal responsibility for reviewing the request.

Many Hon. Members of the House will be aware of the vigorous campaign which has been mounted in the U.S. Congress to restrict Canadian softwood lumber exports to the United States. Voices have been raised in the Congress arguing that the President should be denied approval to negotiate a comprehensive trade arrangement with Canada until Canadian lumber exports have been cut back. Our delegation warned our American counterparts of the very serious consequences of adopting such a procedure. If Hon. Members have the time to read the report, which I encourage them to do, they will see that we got our message across, we believe, to the American participants.

The report I am tabling today deals only with the plenary discussion. We had extensive discussions in three committees on subjects as varied as softwood lumber exports, the U.S. Farm Bill, the proposed U.S. oil import tax, acid rain and Arctic sovereignty. The detailed report of the three Committees' discussions will be made available to all Hon. Members as soon as it has been completed.

Canada has no more important relationship than our relationship with the United States. The U.S. Congress has a direct and substantial influence on the development of that relationship. These annual meetings, which were initiated in 1959 by Prime Minister Diefenbaker, provide an exceptional opportunity for Canadian Members of Parliament to put Canadian concerns directly to Senators and Congressmen. I believe that the House can be proud of the effective way in which our delegates represented Canadian interests.

BILATERAL AID PROGRAM

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty, particularly on this day, to honour St. Patrick, a man of peace, to present a petition from the Rideau Park United Church in my riding signed by 92 of my constituents who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to assign a high priority in its bilateral aid program to small-scale agricultural projects which build the confidence, skills and material resources needed to overcome hunger, and to commit itself to gradual and steady steps to untie its bilateral aid program.

OPERATION OF MORGENTALER CLINIC IN TORONTO

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to this honourable House this morning, four petitions. Three petitions are signed by some hundreds of residents of Balmertown, Red Lake, Madsen, Emo, Dryden and Barclay, in my riding, and call upon Parliament to do everything in its power to prevent the operation of the premises known as the Morgentaler Clinic in the city of Toronto.

LOWER GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): I have a fourth petition which is again signed by some 100 or so residents of my riding. It calls upon Parliament to ensure that Petro-Canada passes on lower prices to consumers of gasoline in Canada.

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-285, an Act to change the name of the Electoral District of Verdun-Saint-Paul.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chartrand: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that considering the fact that my riding consists of three very distinct areas, namely, the town of Verdun, a part of Montreal which is called Côte-Saint-Paul, and third, the very controversial area of Île-des-Sœurs, I believe it would be normal to give the people of Île-des-Sœurs the right to have the name of their area included in the riding of Verdun-Saint-Paul, which as I hope, would then become Verdun-Saint-Paul-Île-des-Sœurs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 495 will be answered today.

TOBACCO SMOKE

Question No. 495—Ms. McDonald:

Has the Canadian Transport Commission, taken measures to protect the public and employees against tobacco smoke, pursuant to (a) paragraph 227(1)(l) of the Railways Act (b) sub-section 16(6) of the Aeronautics Act and, if so, what measures?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

(a) Although there are no Railway Transport Committee orders or Canadian Transport Commission regulations which purport to protect the public or employees against tobacco smoke, CTC 1985-1 Rail, Regulations respecting Hygiene in relation to railways, Section 2(b) requires the maintenance of proper ventilation in passenger carrying cars. Operating Employees' Safety and Health Regulations, CTC 1983-7 Rail, Sections 57 to 61 inclusive, apply to employees engaged in the running and operations of trains and deal with airborne contaminants. Railway companies have their own bylaws which are pertinent to this issue.

(b) As smoking on board aircraft may affect the health and safety of passengers, the Air Transport Committee is of the view that the matter more appropriately falls under the jurisdiction of Health and Welfare Canada and Transport Canada. Accordingly, the committee has not initiated any action in respect of this matter under subsection 16(6) of the Aeronautics Act.

STARRED QUESTION

*SMOKING IN THE WORK PLACE

Question No. 480—Ms. McDonald:

1. Are measures being taken to eliminate toxins due to cigarette smoking from (a) the Department of National Health and Welfare buildings (b) the Ottawa Airport expansion (c) other federal buildings and, if so, in each case, what are they?

2. Are measures being taken to ensure that separate ventilation is given to smoking areas and, if so, what are they?

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the question put by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), namely: Are measures being taken to eliminate toxins due to cigarette smoking?

In answer to (a) of the first question: An opinion survey of all employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare was carried out in August 1985 on the matter of cigarette smoking by employees. Subsequently a new "Smoking in the Workplace" policy was approved. In essence, the policy designates the workplace as a smoke-free area, provides specific locations in which smoking will be permitted during break periods, and provides a phasing-in period during which smoking employees will be offered cessation programs, a policy in force since January 1, 1986.

As for Ottawa Airport, the Department of National Health and Welfare has held extensive consultations with the air carriers and their associations and the provinces regarding smoking in public places. Air carriers have voluntarily designated separate areas for smokers and non-smokers. The proportion of non-smoking seats continues to increase. With respect to the Ottawa Airport, it is our understanding that Transport Canada is considering designating air terminals primarily "non-smoking" areas.

As for other federal buildings, two other departments, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Auditor General, have smoking policies in place at this time. Treasury Board has indicated they are in favour of smoking restrictions and have asked the Medical Services Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare to provide smoking cessation programs for federal employees.

As for the question: Are measures being taken to ensure that separate ventilation is given to smoking areas? The provision of separate ventilation for smoking areas is a complex issue because of the costs involved, the variation of building design and the fact that buildings are often shared with other departments. Officials of National Health and Welfare have been directed to investigate the possibility of separate ventilation systems in department facilities.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

CANADIAN FORESTRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in receipt of an application under Standing Order 29 from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my letter was delivered late. However, it being Monday, and with the changes to the Standing Orders, it made it a little difficult for us.

As Your Honour knows, we filed with you the following letter:

Mr. Speaker:

Given the impending action of the U.S. Congress, scheduled for Wednesday of this week against the interests of the Canadian Forestry Industry and the inevitable crisis such action poses, we believe it imperative that the House of Commons make its views known immediately to the U.S. Congress.

We request your permission, under Standing Order 29, for a special debate.

If I could, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add one comment to the end of the letter. This would be a matter which might normally be delt with under opposition day motions. However, my concern in that regard is that because a motion put on an opposition day is inevitably a motion of non-confidence, it would be extremely difficult to encourage members of the Government to support such an action. As Your Honour knows, it is not possible to waive the non-confidence nature of a motion on an opposition day—at least it does not appear to be, even though the Standing Orders might allow it. Although it is possible to have a debate, it is not possible to have it concluded with any type of action taken by the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: First, I would like to say to the Hon. Member that the application was received somewhat late. For reasons which will become clear in what I have to say, I chose to accept it and say something today precisely because of the reason the Hon. Member raises. That is to say that if the Chair is to say something it seemed useful to say it today, before tomorrow and the next day, given what I think is the accepted importance of the subject.

I think the Hon. Member anticipates what the Chair will have to say in this situation, that is, the Chair has to cope with two issues. First, there is the genuine emergency of the subject. Second, there is the urgency of debate for Members; or, in other words, the opportunity for a debate on the subject. As the Hon. Member well knows there are two days scheduled—tomorrow and the next—for the Opposition to determine the subject of debate.

While I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying about a votable opposition day, he will know that an application under Standing Order 29 merely produces a motion to adjourn. Therefore, it seems to the Chair that even with the constraints imposed, perhaps on a votable opposition day, even a non-votable opposition day is a better proceeding for the Hon. Member's purpose than is a simple motion to adjourn.

On that basis and, more important, on the basis of the question of the urgency of debate, the Chair is inclined to reject the application under Standing Order 29.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a related but separate matter, then, will the Chair permit me to request of the House of Commons its unanimous consent to move the following motion:

That this House express its grave concern over the action proposed to be taken by the U.S. Congress against the importation of Canadian softwood and request the Prime Minister convey our concern to the U.S. administration.

If there were unanimous consent for such a motion to be moved, then I would be pleased to move it.

Mr. Speaker: That is apparently a request to revert to Motions. The Hon. Member knows that I appreciate his dilemma since he had to wait for a decision with respect to his request under Standing Order 29. There is a request of the House for unanimous consent to revert to Motions.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we on the Government side have great interest in the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I think he would expect me to consult him in advance of such a motion asking for unanimous consent, as well as consulting with the House Leader of the Official Opposition. Under the circumstances, I think that would be the more appropriate way to proceed prior to giving unanimous consent. Accordingly, I am not in a position to do that since I have not had a chance to discuss the matter with the Hon. Member.

The House resumed from Thursday, March 13, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us asks Parliament to authorize the borrowing by the Government of $22.6 billion. I wish to ask the House the following question. How can we of the Official Opposition, or Members generally, support this Bill when its purpose is to enable the Government to borrow money in order to have the Government carry out its budgetary and general economic policies?

As the months go by what is wrong with these policies is becoming increasingly and painfully obvious. During the last general election campaign the Conservatives made a number of promises to win the support of Canadians. I would say that the Economic Statement of last November, 1984, and the two Budgets of this Government, have not in any positive way reflected the types of promises the Conservatives made in order to win the support of Canadians. For example, during the last election campaign the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made an explicit commitment not to increase income taxes. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pledged to reform the personal income tax system. He said that he wanted to make it "more fair, more progressive and more productive". However, it is clear that, in spite of these promises by the Minister of Finance and by the Prime Minister, middle and lower-income Canadians have become the victims of the most unfair, regressive and economically stifling tax increases on record, brought about by the Budget of last May and the Budget of last February presented to the House by this Conservative Government.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) spoke very forcefully in the House of Commons debate on the Budget a few days ago. In that debate, he said:

> We will take this Budget as the second phase of the Budget last May. Phase one was the Budget of last May and phase two is the Budget of February. Together these two Budgets constitute the greatest, cumulative, hidden, regressive tax increase in Canadian history. They attack the average Canadian family earning between $15,000 and $40,000 in a brutal fashion.
> We have reached the stage . . . where the person between 35 and 55 years old finds himself or herself in a position, with the added burden of tax slapped upon him or her, that it is . . . impossible to maintain a standard of living because the cash flow available to the average Canadian has been absolutely crippled.

This is confirmed as each individual Canadian looks at his or her pay cheque each week.

An indication of the growing concern of middle and lower income Canadians is the fact that just one request by the business editor of The Toronto Sun, a paper which is generally supportive of the Conservative Government, has in the course of only 10 days brought into that newspaper some 15,000 coupons protesting vigorously the unfair increase in the burden on middle and lower income Canadians caused by the Budgets of this Conservative Government.

After only one request by a newspaper which is supposed to be a supporter of the Progressive Conservative Government, 15,000 coupons from individual Canadians were sent to the newspaper.

Any objective measure of the impact of these two Conservative Budgets on middle and lower income Canadians shows the undeniable reality of their unfairness and injustice. The tax burden is not equally distributed. Over the next three years, according to the Budget figures of the Minister of Finance, the federal Government will impose an additional $12.5 million in personal income taxes, and corporate taxes will increase by only $1 million. Over the next four years, a family of four living below the poverty line on an income of only $15,000 per year will suffer a 23 per cent tax increase, while a family of four with an income of $35,000 will suffer a 13 per cent tax increase. Yet a family of the same size earning $200,000 will suffer only a 1 per cent tax increase. This is not fair.

The $500,000 unconditional lifetime capital gains tax exemption provided by the May, 1985 Budget is still in place and middle and lower income Canadians are still hurting. That hurt is going to increase as the measures proposed by the Budget of February click into place and show up over and over again in the pay cheques of middle and lower income Canadians. The Leader of the Opposition provided a clear example of this continuing inequity when he said in the House the following:

> An individual with an income of $40,000, based on a salary of $35,000, plus $4,000 in dividends, plus interest of $1,000 faces a tax increase from 1986 to 1987 to 9.4 per cent. An individual with an income of $150,000 . . . based on a salary of $100,000, $15,000 in dividends, $5,000 in interest and $30,000 in capital gains, in the same period has an overall tax decrease of 1.4 per cent.

Again, this is not fair.

Since the Conservative Government has been in power, the federal sales tax has increased from 9 per cent to 12 per cent.

Not only has this particularly regressive tax been increased, but its application has been broadened to include non-prescription health care products, soap, shampoo, candy and even pet food. These measures hit hardest at lower income Canadians. The truth of the matter regarding the proposed $50 sales tax rebate for low income Canadians is that the Conservative Government is providing the false impression that it is granting these lower income Canadians an escape from the negative impact of its sales tax increases. This paltry political gesture is completely overwhelmed by the much greater increases in sales tax, on gasoline for example. In fact, sales taxes are increased on cigarettes and alcohol and the sales tax portion is increased on every larger ticket item required to furnish a home.

For example, a poorer family needing a refrigerator, a stove or a washer costing approximately $600 is going to pay 12 per cent in federal sales tax and that amounts to $72 for just one item. That is a lot more than the sales tax rebate for which the Conservatives are trying to take such credit as being something that will wipe out the negative impact of these unfair increases in sales tax. Obviously the sales tax rebate, this sales tax credit, will only help wipe out the negative effect of the sales tax increases to a very minor degree.

Furthermore, only income earners below the $15,000 level are eligible for this tax credit. A four-person family living below the poverty line with an annual income of $15,000 to $20,000 will not receive this $50 sales tax rebate. In other words, the federal Government has unilaterally redefined the poverty line. Statistics, Canada, the federal Government's own objective statistical analysis agency, has said that the poverty line is in the area of $20,000 to $21,000 annually. What is happening to families earning between $15,000 and $20,000? Why are they not getting the sales tax rebate? Poverty exists at the $20,000 level whether or not Conservatives are willing to admit it. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are exhibiting an unparallelled insensitivity and profound carelessness about the economic plight of middle and lower income Canadians.

The May, 1985 Budget inflicted such gross injustice on senior citizens that the Minister of Finance and his heartless Conservative Government were forced by public outrage and the pressure exerted by Liberals and other Opposition Members to back down and withdraw the measure to deindex the Old Age Security benefits system. Just as it was our duty to protect Canadian pensioners, it is now our responsibility to protect Canadian families and indeed the entire middle class from the Conservative Government's contemptuous disregard for the principle of fairness.

With the continued presence before the House of the unfair and regressive Conservative Budget of last May, and with the voting into law by the Conservative majority of the unfair and regressive measures in the Budget of February, we should not allow the Conservative Government to get the authority to borrow sought by this Bill, because it will only use it to carry forward economic policies which have already been demonstrated to be unfair and heartless to middle income Canadians. We should reject the Budget of last February and we should reject this Bill which is so closely linked to it in its unfairness and regressive impact on middle and lower income Canadians.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on the Borrowing Authority Bill, particularly because it was brought before us last week, as was the Nielsen Task Force Report, presented by the Government as one of the means by which it intends to counter the deficit and bring down Government spending. I wish to comment on that because of a couple of things which concern many Members of the House and people across the country as well.

One of these things is a matter which touches on the credibility of all of us. I speak specifically of the fact that all of us participated in the election campaign of 1984 and perhaps in previous election campaigns. We made promises. When I and members of my Party make promises we do so with the intention of keeping those promises. But when the Nielsen Task Force Report came out last week we found that it contained many options and recommendations which directly conflicted with promises that were made by the Progressive Conservatives when they were running for office in 1984.

We asked in the House whether the Government would be prepared simply to announce or indicate that options put forward by the task force which conflicted with Conservative promises would not be put on the table or would not be proceeded with. We asked that because we wanted to try to find out the worth of a Conservative promise. We are greatly concerned about the speed and the degree to which the Government has appeared to have forgotten promises which it made in 1984; in fact, it has gone directly against them. Unfortunately, rather than saying that it understood our concerns and that any options which conflict with announced Conservative policy would not be proceeded with, the Government remained silent. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) indicated that everything was on the table, that all these matters would go before the parliamentary committee which would consider the various recommendations of the Nielsen report. This means that the Conservatives, no matter what they promised in 1984 to gain power, are prepared to throw it away and think that the Nielsen task force has a better idea.

I raise this almost as a matter of privilege. When a Government breaks promises, as blatantly and as wantonly as has this Government, when it indicates that any promise is up for grabs if a bunch of outside, non-elected experts from the private sector and from Government think they have a better idea, it puts into jeopardy the credibility of promises made by any politician. Also it leaves the public increasingly up in the air and increasingly cynical about politics. People are justified in thinking that when they elect a Government, they give it a mandate to do certain things or not to do certain things. If the Party for which they vote makes particular promises, they are justified in feeling there is a good chance that the promises will be fulfilled. The electorate is realistic enough to realize that circumstances change and that perhaps some promises cannot be fulfilled. However, it is reasonable for them to feel that for the most part the promises made will be fulfilled, or that a Government elected to fulfil certain promises will do its utmost to fulfil them, even if all of them cannot be fulfilled within the four-year period between elections. Unfortunately we see something quite opposite as far as the Government is concerned.

I should like to turn to the question of services and subsidies to business, the most substantial part of the Nielsen task force report. The task force indicated that that one area accounted for about $16 billion of tax expenditures and of direct Government expenditures, a major part of Government spending. As we pointed out, the concessions and tax expenditures made to business in fact exceed by about $7 million or $8 million the amount which is now being received from the corporate sector in tax revenues. It seems to me that this puts the whole situation of Government topsy-turvy. One would have thought that they would have been making a contribution to other services rather than taking away from it.

I should like to refer to another important matter. Even though the figures of the Nielsen task force are somewhat suspect, it is estimated that some $36 billion in tax expenditures is made by the Government of Canada every year and should be very seriously considered in looking at ways of restoring Government revenues or bringing down the deficit. On behalf of all New Democrats I should like to say that we, like most Canadians, favour means which present themselves for eliminating inefficiency in Government and for saving money.

I have been an alternate member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. On matters such as defence contracting and government management of its real estate in Ottawa, this non-partisan or all-Party committee has been very tough and effective in terms of protecting taxpayers, working with the Auditor General, and finding ways by which things can be done more efficiently and effectively. However, last week we had the recommendations of the Nielsen task force, which was supposedly to promote efficiency and effectiveness. Instead, it seemed to devote itself mainly to cutting services, which affected a wide range of Canadians, such as a number of grant programs, among other things, that benefited small and medium-sized businesses. At the same time it ignored a lot of tax expenditures and major concessions which, for the most part, benefited very large corporations. We have some real difficulties with those matters.

I should like to refer to the process by which opposition Parties were given a chance to comment upon the Nielsen task force report. I do not find it to be satisfactory. It contained 15,000 pages and goodness knows how many zillions of words. I think we received two copies of the report in my caucus an hour before the documents were tabled in the House of Commons. In that period of time we had to look at these matters and try to come up with some early conclusions. Realistically, we all know that the press looks for response from the Opposition Parties and that because of its deadlines it is not prepared to tolerate an opposition Party which says that the report is very interesting and that it intends to lock itself up for two or three days in order to look through the documents before returning with a reasoned response; we could not do that. The Government is just as aware as members of the Opposition of the way information passes through this Parliament. It should have been aware that effectively it was aiding and abetting; it was encouraging what inevitably had to be a somewhat superficial and sketchy overview of the Nielsen task force report when the opposition Parties first had a look at it.

Since last Tuesday I have had a chance to look at the documents a bit more carefully. I want to comment on the portion relating to services and subsidies to business. Some of the press and academic commentators have suggested that we New Democrats were perhaps a bit quick off the mark in condemning the particular report because of its general comments suggesting that grants and tax concessions were piled on top of each other, that Canadian businesses had become program junkies and that something should be done about reducing the over-all level of the various subsidies to a more reasonable amount. When it comes down to the evaluation of specific programs, some of them are matters with which we as New Democrats agree. Now that I have had a chance to look at the report in more depth, I should indicate that our problem is that it was a task force review, a study team which looked at the mote but not at the beams, if I can use the biblical analogy. It looked at the small things quite carefully and in some cases quite helpfully. For example, I cite the study team's review of the Government's real property management. I found it to be quite constructive and in fact to contain a great deal of useful suggestions.

However, when it came to subsidies and services to business, we began with the major programs of tax expenditures which are devoted to accelerated depreciation, investment tax credit and a number of other areas. In those areas which are worth many billions of dollars, the study team simply did a job that in my view was inadequate. For example, on page 73 the task force admitted in relation to accelerated depreciation: "We are advised by the Department of Finance that there are no accurate means of measuring the incremental effect of this tax measure. While most difficult for Finance to evaluate, our impression based on discussions with them is that they believe this objective is reasonably satisfied". That is the sum total of the scientific evaluation evidence on which the study team made the following decision: "The study team recommends to the task force that the Government consider retaining the concept of accelerated depreciation". According to its figures which are in fact mostly out of date, it reckoned that in 1980-81 that particular concession cost taxpayers about $5 billion. It used six or seven pages to deal with that particular concession. The study team looked at it in a superficial way but did not really consider whether there were better ways of doing it more efficiently and more effectively.

I know my time is up, but I come back to my comment. If the study team had dealt as seriously with the big programs that have made program junkies of big business as it dealt with grants and subsidies, which if taken away would jeopardize regional development or small business, then I think the report could be taken much more seriously. We intend to be pursuing these themes in the coming weeks as we get a chance to look in more detail at the Nielsen Report as one of the ways to reduce the Government's need for deficit financing.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals cannot let this Bill go by without doing everything possible to bring to the attention of the Canadian people what is wrong with the policies of the Government in this area.

This Bill is to authorize the borrowing of $22.6 billion. Of course, a borrowing Bill cannot be examined as an item alone, but with two other streams; one being the Budget in which the Government indicates how, through the tax system, it intends to raise money, and the second being the plans of the Government to reduce its spending by cut-backs in social and other programs. When you look at these three streams together, I think you can see the difference.

I hope it will not pass unnoticed by Canadians the important differences between the way in which the Liberals and the Conservatives would operate and the way in which the Conservatives are handling the responsibility they have to govern the country.

To begin with it should be recognized that we are in a period of economic growth in Canada and in the United States. While the Canadian Government today would want us to believe that it is totally the result of its own activities and policies, I think more moderate and reasonable observers would have to say it has quite a lot to do with the economic cycle in general and with international development. In any event, at a time of economic growth it is appropriate for a Governmnt to address its deficit and to try to bring in policies to assist in managing the deficit.

We see in this Budget, in this borrowing Bill and in the announcements made about cutting back programs, that the Government is addressing the problem of bringing down the deficit. At this time, a Liberal Government, if there were a Liberal Government in power, would also have to put forth programs to address the problem of the deficit that would tend to control it. However, the way in which the Government is reducing the deficit needs to be noted. What the Government is attempting to do through the tax system is to bring in a very large tax increase.

I began by indicating that if there were a Liberal Government in office there might also be a need and a recognition of a need to increase taxes, but the kind of tax increase that is being brought in by the Government is one which could never be brought in by a Liberal Government. It is a tax increase which bears very unfairly on middle and lower-income Canadians, while at the same time it has the effect of reducing and progressively reducing the tax burden on those in the Canadian economy who are the most able to shoulder an increase.

It is as if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had taken his philosophy of there not being enough rich people in Canada and using the tax system to assist the rich to get even richer. How else can the Government explain the across the board capital gains tax exemption of $500,000 per taxpayer introduced in the previous Budget? The Minister of Finance tried to defend that measure by saying it would add to job creation, and that if it helped the rich it would also help the poor by creating more jobs.

Mr. Blenkarn: It has.

Mr. Kaplan: As our leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) noted, this measure also benefits the individual who wants to sell a home in Florida or on the Riviera or who wants to sell oil paintings. The tax benefit is so broad that it almost discourages job creation by providing an incentive to the person to take advantage of a capital gains exemption. I see the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) disagreeing with me, but I think he too would have to agree that that measure is more of an incentive to sell a business, if you own one, than to build one. When the statistics are available I am sure they will show that, far from creating jobs, the exemption encouraged people who could benefit from it to sell and convert their assets into less productive assets than business assets and the kind of assets that would increase the number of jobs in Canada. That is why the Liberals can say to Canadians that the tax increase introduced by the Government, however necessary a tax increase was, was not a fair one.

I want also to point to a second element of that tax increase, which was to increase the sales tax from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. Economists agree about very little, but they do agree that a sales tax is a regressive and an inflationary tax. The lower your income, the higher the proportion of your income you have to devote to consumption, to maintaining your family and yourself. Because this tax burden is on sales and is increased so dramatically, it too falls more heavily on middle and lower-income Canadians. People who want to buy a refrigerator or a washing machine, the ordinary things of life for middle and lower-income Canadians, will be more heavily taxed by the increased sales tax. An unacceptable burden is placed through the increase in sales tax from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. The tax also bears on gasoline. It has already been indentified that gasoline is a commodity which is too heavily taxed in Canada. Rather than recognizing that, the Government has stepped right in and increased the burden. It may at one point in our history have been viewed as a kind of an excise tax, a tax on luxuries, but tax on gasoline cannot be viewed in any sense of the word as a luxury. Automobiles have been scaled down over the last few years so they consume much less gasoline than they used to. Even the larger automobiles consume less gasoline that they did. In Canada the automobile is mass transportation. You tend to think of mass transportation as public vehicles, buses, streetcars and subways. But that is only true for a very small minority of Canadians. For most Canadians, and for the average Canadian, an automobile is mass transportation. To increase the cost of gasoline through the sales tax increase is to increase the cost of living for average and lower income Canadians. Cars are a necessity of life for most Canadians.

There is an increase in the sales tax on diesel fuel as well. Food, products in stores, all of these things have a large transportation component and the Government is watching inflation escalate and multiply as it increases the tax on gasoline and diesel fuel.

Perhaps most recently identified is the impact that gasoline prices have on tourism. The Government has launched a fresh initiative to try to attract more tourists to Canada. We wish the Government well with that initiative. With gasoline in Canada so much more expensive than it is in the United States, how can the Government hope to attract the level of American tourism which it feels we need without recognizing that what the Government has done to the price of gasoline will be a very big factor in making it difficult to sell Canada as a tourist destination.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the borrowing Bill is not acceptable because it is part of a package of measures which decreased the burden on those who are better off and increased the burden on the rest of Canadian society. That is unacceptable to the Liberals.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I do not stand before this House to support this borrowing Bill. The reasons for that have been indicated by previous speakers in varying degrees. It is necessary to once again call attention to the general thrust of the Government's policy as reflected in its Budget and Estimates. They indicate the degree to which it has failed to fulfil its responsibilities to the Canadian people. As a new member of the House I am greatly concerned to see so much evidence of the fact that politicians are driven with too much momentum to respond to immediate concerns in the short term and fail to regard the importance of long-term policy for the future of the country.

The Government rushes to develop policies which will attract attention and gain immediate plaudits, yet fails to consider the future. The Government constantly claims to be concerned about Canada's destiny. Yet, among the important considerations for the future of a country are the problems of young people. The Government has not seen fit to develop a positive focus of policy for youth. To the contrary, it seems to have chosen youth as a target.

I do not intend to belabour points which have previously been made and which are now being dramatically illustrated by other events, a process which I hope will continue. Due to all that has happened over the last few weeks, perhaps at long last the Government will be driven to provide the focus on youth policy which so many young people in the country are seeking.

It is important to work with, and not on, young people. It is necessary to develop a sound educational system in the country and to develop a policy with respect to the funding of post-secondary education. There is an urgent need for the federal and provincial Governments to work out a means by which funding can be provided to create a university system which will reflect the intended status of the country in the economic world, and will as well ensure that all young people in the country have the opportunity to develop skills which will provide them with a role in our economy, and a basis upon which they can contribute to that economy and achieve personal success and achievement.

Instead of arriving at a reasonable understanding with the provinces, the Government has in fact cut back its over-all contribution to post-secondary education over the next five years, by reducing the rate of escalation of transfer payments. This issue has been discussed in other contexts to which we gave some attention in our previous intervention.

This morning I want to discuss the utter failure of the Government to live up to its promises with respect to the funding of research and development. I indicated previously that perhaps the Government is on a hastened trek to become second to Monaco in international research. We are already far behind all other industrial nations in the world in our commitment to research. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized this. He said long ago that it would be necessary to double the proportion of our Gross National Product which we contribute to research. Over the last several months a number of sources have articulated the need for Canada to do much more to provide an educated and trained workforce and, as well, to ensure that the research community in the country can play its proper role in ensuring that Canada will achieve the economic development which the Government claims to be pursuing.

The Government is concerned about the deficit but, as has been indicated so frequently, has taken the wrong route to dealing with it. Our deficit will continue to exist for as long as we fail to achieve the level of economic growth of which we are capable. In fact, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that for 100 years we depended upon our resources and in the next decade we will have to depend upon our wits and intelligence. It is too bad that the wit and intelligence of the Government does not reflect what is required for the future.

Numerous studies have identified our short-comings in the area of research. If we are ever to achieve first-rate status as a country beyond our resource-based past, we must develop educated and trained personnel in a number of areas. We must make a far more significant effort to ensure that our universities are capable of supporting excellence in scientific social research.

The response to this has been illusion, delusion, and prevarication. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced grandiosely that the Government was going to provide an additional $1 billion for research. This is against a background of the National Science and Engineering Research Council alone identifying, in its five-year plan, a need for an additional $1.4 billion. The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council identified the need for an additional nearly $200 million.

In fact, the National Sciences and Engineering Research Council was provided with an additional $126 million up to 1990. Where is the additional $1 billion for research to come from? The Government has provided a pig in a poke. It has committed itself to trivial amounts. If industry provides an additional $350 million, the Government will add another $350 million. Adding that to the basic increment which has been promised, the total is $1 billion. They are not going to get it. While all this is going on, science and technology research grants to universities have been cut by 4 per cent. Equipment grants have been cut by nearly 50 per cent. Our best university has now been described as almost second rate.

This Government is failing to live up to the very needs it has articulated. It has to fulfil its promises and come to grips with the need as it exists. If it does not, it will have disgraced this country and, as has been said by so many people, we will become a Third World nation economically, and the deficit we will have then will make today's deficit blush in comparison.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, through Bill C-99 the Government is asking permission to borrow $22 billion. I really do not think we can trust this Government with $22 billion. When it comes to money this Government gets very confused. Members of the Government really do not know where they are or what they want. They do not know how they are going to get it, where they should get it, where they should spend it or where they should cut it. They do not really know why they should cut it. They do not know what they are doing. Look at the numbers on which this Government has based its budget forecasts. Dare I say it, it is a bit of the Minister of Finance's and Prime Minister's blarney.

In the budget document entitled Towards A Sustained Expansion: Canada's Economic Prospects, 1986-1991 the Government has contradicted itself. On page 23 the Government says:

> In the Economic Outlook and Fiscal Plan documents presented with this budget, the assumption made is that the average selling price for a barrel of oil of quality equivalent to Sauda Arabian light will be U.S. $22.50 over the rest of 1986.

However, if you look at page 20 and Table 4 entitled "International Economic Prospects", under the column 1986 oil price you see the price for Sauda Arabian light crude petroleum at U.S. $23.88 a barrel. Within four pages of the same document the Government has predicted two different prices as the average price for 1986. Aside from that, the price has already been much lower than those figures. We are almost one-quarter of the way through 1986, so in order to get that U.S. $23.88 a barrel price, it will have to be much higher on average for the remainder of the year. Today, March 17, we are looking at oil at U.S. $12 a barrel. These figures are completely out of whack. They are ridiculous, and this from a Government which is asking us now for another $22 billion. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, can we trust this Government with any money, let alone an additional $22 billion?

Members opposite should check today's newspapers to find out what the current predictions are for the price of oil. As I am sure many Members are aware, the OPEC countries met over the weekend but were unable to agree on a way of stopping falling world oil prices. The Sauda Arabian Oil Minister, Sheikh Yamani, has predicted oil prices may go down to U.S. $8 a barrel, a far cry from the estimate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented in the Budget Papers. That price would mean the Government is underestimating the deficit by billions of dollars.

As well, on page 27 of this same document it says:

> —it is assumed that the recent downward pressure on the Canadian dollar will be temporary so that, in conjunction with the widespread view that U.S. interest rates will decline somewhat in 1986, the level of short-term interest rates is assumed to average 9.5 per cent in 1986—

Interest rates today are considerably higher than that. Once again, he is saying that for the balance of the year interest rates are going to be considerably below 9.5 per cent in order to average out at that figure. However, that is not going to happen under the policies of this Government.

What does all this mean? It means the inadequacies of this Government will exacerbate our financial problems and reduce even further the confidence other countries have in the Government and economy of Canada. The results will be disastrous for Canada.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Government has taken some action on the procedures this House follows in dealing with the Budget, borrowing authority and our financial structure. Bringing in the Budget, the Estimates and Borrowing Bill all at the same time is something that seems worth while and does give Canadians in this Parliament a better opportunity to look at the structure of finances. The Government is to be congratulated on making that move.

Having said that, I and other members of my Party have supported this move and feel that it will be of some value. It becomes obvious that you can put the procedure in place properly and not have much effect on the actual structure of financial planning that the Government makes. In this particular case it is not helping us a great deal that we have gone through the procedure of putting the Borrowing Bill before the House at the same time as the Budget and the Estimates. We still do not have in place the policies and the financial planning necessary to eliminate the deficit, which this Government has so obviously made a central issue in this case.

When the people of Canada can look at the whole package they are better able to judge the cause and the effects of the measures taken by the Government. That might be a very good thing when the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and other members of the Government are moving across the country attempting to sell the Budget, to sell confidence in what the Government is doing. The Government has been travelling across the country selling its product, but that selling of its product has become a little suspicious.

A couple of Cabinet Ministers have visited my constituency in the last few weeks, giving probably more attention than Prince Albert has gotten since that unsuccessful invasion during the last election when 57 members of the Conservative caucus appeared in Prince Albert, several of them several times. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of External Affairs (Mr. Clark) were in my constituency several times during the election.

This time the Government is trying to do two things. It is trying to sell the Government decision. It is trying to put across a fairy tale about the effect of its Budget. The Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) visited Prince Albert and several other Saskatchewan points, and in Prince Albert he announced the construction of a federal building, a project for which no money is provided in the Estimates and for which no plans are apparently ready. However, it is going to proceed. There is a commitment anyway, and I thank the Minister for that commitment. It may proceed in 1987-1988, and we hope he gets the money in the Estimates at that time. This move is obviously an attempt to sell something the Government didn't really have. It made this move in Saskatchewan to indicate that it had something for Saskatchewan, something to sell. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was in Saskatchewan also, again to sell the Budget and to apologize for the great increases in the deficit; again, to tell the fairy tale about how much he has done for farmers.

The Conservative manifesto which came out of that Prince Albert visit by the caucus before the election stated very specifically that there were some things the Government intended to do. There were three points basically. It was to abolish capital gains, which it has done to some extent, but which it is suggesting it might renege on. In fact, the Nielsen report suggests maybe the Government has gone too far and it should start backing up. The second was that the Conservative Government would reduce the price of farm fuels by 20 cents per gallon by removing the federal sales tax and not collecting the current excise tax. The Government did start a rebate system of 3 cents per litre, but there is now approximately 9 cents per litre federal tax on gasoline, so it has touched approximately one-third of the taxes levied on farm fuels. Again, the Nielsen report suggests that it should back off on this.

We are getting very different signals from the Government, at the same time and even from the same people. It has been saying it is going to give the farmers a better deal by eliminating taxes. The Government promised that in 1984. The Government gave a 3-cent rebate, but it added four and a half cents in taxes over the same period of time so the farmer pays a cent and a half a litre less than he did before.

The Government also promised agri-bonds in the election. Those were shuffled under the rug. The Government promised that the Progressive Conservative Government would expand and revitalize the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. Just the other day when the Nielsen report was tabled in the House one of the recommendations was the dismantling of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, passing it off as much as possible to the provincial Governments. The record shows that in respect of these three promises the Government made back in 1984 it has only done something about one, and it is now attempting to renege.

We have been told very often that 20 per cent of farmers are in financial trouble. If you will pardon the use of the word, I think that is a conservative estimate. There have been many words from the Minister of Agriculture and other members of the Government about the survival of the family farm, about what would be good for the family farm, but it is obvious that the Government is not going to do anything, or has not thrown any support behind the family farm. What is in the Budget actually indicates that the Government has thrown in the towel as far as the family farm is concerned. It would much rather spend money on getting people out of agriculture than helping them stay in.

Another Conservative promise was tax reform. There is not a word in this Budget about tax reform, because that would mean less taxes paid by the people who can afford it and more taxes paid by those who cannot afford to pay. That progressive movement of taxation is what we all looked forward to when the Government said it was going to have a simple and fair tax system.

The Financial Post gives three examples. The first relates to an income of $40,000 comprised of a salary, dividends and interest. It shows an income tax increase of $812 for a $60,000 income. It shows an income tax decrease of $1,201 for a $150,000 income, with a decrease in income tax over the next three years of $5,470. This is an indication of what the Government thinks is a fair tax. There is an increase in taxes for the middle-class and the lower-income people and a decrease in taxes for the higher-income earners. Therefore, it may not be a good idea to pass a Borrowing Bill at the level of $22.6 billion.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, whenever a Government comes to the House of Commons to borrow a very large sum of money, I believe it is appropriate for Hon. Members to ask how this money is going to be spent and whether we are going to receive value for our money. It is on that basis that I would like to say a few words about Indian and native economic development.

If we examine the departmental Estimates for 1986-87 we will discover that economic development has been determined to be a priority of the Department of Indian Affairs; that is, strengthening Indian economic development programs aimed at improving self-reliance and reducing the need for maintenance-oriented programs. In other words, what the Government is saying to the Department is that it wants to get people off welfare and social assistance and into a work-oriented situation or environment. Everyone agrees with that. It is what the Government wants and it is what the political Parties, represented in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, want. It is what the Indian people themselves want. They have stated on more than one occasion that they want to break free from this dependency cycle which gives the Government of Canada, through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, so much authority and control over every single aspect of their lives. It is what everyone wants, but we somehow cannot achieve it despite the fact that large amounts of money are being spent.

Last year, for example, in fiscal 1985-86, $56.5 million was set aside by the Parliament of Canada for Indian economic development. This year there is to be an increase to nearly $63 million. I believe the people of Canada would be interested in knowing that out of that designated $63 million, $50 million will be transferred in the form of grants and contributions for economic development, but there is another $13 million which will be held by the Department for its operating costs in economic development.

Economic development through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is really a story which fails to deliver much in the way of success. It has a discouraging and depressing record. We begin to wonder whether in fact the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should be involved in economic development at all.

While not much of value can be found in the reports of the study team or task force on Indians and natives—the so-called Nielsen Task Force—they do make this passing observation. In talking about the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Devrlopment, it is stated, and I quote:

> In a department which assumes responsibility for womb-to-tomb care, the pressures to provide social assistance are more irresistable than the economic ones.

For a long while there has been in the minds of the Parliamentarians who sit on the standing committee a suspicion that the Department probably would prefer to have the people under its domination and control in a state of dependency rather than to have them set free through successful workable economic development programs. When the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government travelled across Canada some years ago, it received much testimony which indicated that Indian people want to get out of this dependency cycle, out of this welfare society, but at the same time that every turn they appear to be frustrated in all of their efforts toward economic development.

Perhaps Hon. Members would be interested in just one example which the special committee encountered in the province of Alberta. We learned from testimony that Indian Governments should be allowed to establish their own priorities and guidelines. One of the leaders gave us this example. An Indian band in northeastern Alberta took over the social development program, that is the welfare dollars. They received the dollars and they were going to administer the program. They were told to undertake the program according to the guidelines established by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in consultation with the provincial Government. The Indian people of that reserve, instead of wanting welfare, per se, wanted employment. When that particular band council undertook the program, it established its own guidelines based on its own priorities. It made people go to work, for instance. If an individual was entitled to $100 worth of welfare a month, the band asked that the individual be put to work. The council, in its wisdom, put those people to work on community improvement projects. The implications were far reaching. They extended even to the children themselves. When the children saw their parents going to work the attendance rate of those children in school increased dramatically. This went on for quite some time until someone in the hierarchy of the Department told the band that it could not make people work for welfare. What a contradiction in terms!

At the federal level we have job creation programs so that people will not have to ask for social assistance. We have had these programs for a long while and they continue to exist under different names. But when we come to deal with Indian people and transfer social development dollars under their care, we then disallow them from having the job creation programs they want. With respect to the particular Indian band in Alberta, it was told by the Department that it was violating Treasury Board guidelines and to cease and desist. It stopped the program. The contract for the transfer of social development dollars was ripped up, and once again the cheques just came automatically in the mail from Ottawa to the individuals in that particular band. That is an example of how economic development is constantly frustrated at the reserve level.

That is why a number of years ago, before the current administration took power, there was a lot of debate in this country about what we could do to break out of this poverty cycle in which Indian and native people found themselves. It was suggested that a significant amount of money expended over a relatively short period of time—in this case it was five years and the amount was $345 million—was to be put in a native economic development program. It took a long time for the previous administration to make up its mind. There was delay after delay after delay before it was finally agreed that the program would go forward. There were one or two carefully determined rules about the program. The first was that we should get it out of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I think I have given some clues as to why we wanted to get it out of the Department entirely. The program went to the Ministry of State for Small Businesses. Then it was thought that it would be a good idea to get it out of Ottawa altogether, because there is sometimes a kind of mentality and approach in the nation's capital which does not fit the regions of the country. So the program was to be administered out of Winnipeg. It was to have a Board of Directors made up of Indian and native people. It was to have a degree of independence which had not been practised in economic development up to that time.

I wish to conclude by telling Hon. Members what happened. Last year Parliament, under the new administration, allocated $110 million to the program. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) expended only $20 million of that allocation. Out of that $20 million $11 million was spent on operating costs, overhead and administration. Only $9 million actually went to Indian and native projects in the country—only $9 million.

In the next fiscal year there is supposed to be some $57 million allocated. We do not know how much of that amount will be spent for administration and overhead. We do not know how much will actually go to Indian people and native development projects. We simply do not know. However, I wish to tell Hon. Members that in speaking to this borrowing authority measure the people of Canada should know that we are doing a terribly poor job in getting economic development for Indian and native people off the ground. They want it to work. We should want it to work because this welfare syndrome is destroying them heart, soul and mind. We need something better. We had better face up to that quickly and move ahead.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government has before us today a proposal to borrow some $22.6 billion. That is an enormous sum of money to be asking the House of Commons to approve for borrowing purposes. By implication the Government is asking for an approval of its budgetary and economic policies. It is as a result of its economic policies that it is forced to come before us today asking for authority to borrow some $22.6 billion.

I would like to ask Hon. Members to consider the Government's economic policy, particularly the policy as outlined in the Budget brought down just a few weeks ago. Consideration of the matter will give us an indication of whether or not the authority which it is seeking today should receive approval, or that this request should be turned back to the Government calling upon it to re-examine its economic and budgetary policies.

The last Budget raised the taxes of the average Canadian family by about $350 a year. This is on top of the previous increases in taxes which the Government imposed in its last two budgetary measures. This is also on top of $1,000 a year in additional taxes which families were hit with in 1985. The total comes to $1,350 a year of additional taxes, just since the Government came to office in 1984.

How do ordinary Canadians view this increase in taxes? The Government asks us to take the perspective that this is the price which has to be paid, that the Liberals created a large deficit and the Conservatives will pay it down. Thus ordinary Canadians will simply have to pay through the nose in order to get the deficit down. If ordinary Canadians are being asked to pay we have to ask who else is paying the burden with respect to the deficit. Who else has the Government chosen to pay for this burdensome deficit?

What we find is that taxes imposed on individual Canadians are increasing four times faster than those imposed on corporations. The last Budget actually imposed measures to lower the tax rate of corporations. As a result of the economic, taxation and borrowing policies of the Government taxes for individual Canadians are rising four times faster than those of corporations in this year alone. This means that individual Canadians will be asked to pay $1.1 billion more compared to the $380 million which the corporations are being asked to pay. How can the Government present such a policy expecting approval when it is asking individuals to pay four times as much as that paid by corporations? How can the Government justify such a move?

An increase four times greater sounds pretty bad. However, if we look into the future we will find that by the year 1990 the Government will be taxing individuals ten times as much as it taxes corporations. This is to say that individuals will be paying an additional burden of some $2.9 billion. That is almost $3 billion, whereas corporations will be asked to pay an increase of just $295 million.

We must fundamentally question the economic policy the Government has put before the House. We have to question the Government's temerity in coming before us today asking for authority to borrow some $22.6 billion, particularly in light of the fact that it lowered the corporate tax rate in its last Budget. In one breath it has asked to borrow billions of dollars and lower the tax burden on corporations.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Keeper: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is a shame. It is simply unfair.

In the most recent Budget the Government continued the capital gains write-off measure whereby if the capital an individual owns increases in value up to $500,000 that individual does not have to pay any tax on it. This capital gains write-off has been continued in the latest Budget. How can the Government advocate a tax write-off for wealthy Canadians while at the same time it hits ordinary Canadians with a tax increase of $350 per year and is asking ordinary Canadians to support and approve its borrowing of some $22.6 billion? It does not make sense.

If the Government wishes to borrow money we must ask what it is borrowing it for. Is it borrowing this money in order to put ordinary Canadians to work? Is it borrowing this money so that the unemployed—now well over one million—can obtain useful employment, a decent income and make a contribution to society? The facts indicate that that is simply not the case.

The Government is actually borrowing this money in order to continue the types of tax write-offs which I have already mentioned. The Government lowers the corporate tax rate while at the same time it cuts back on funds which are allocated to employment programs. In the last Budget the Government cut a couple of hundred million dollars in terms of employment programs over the next two-year period. The significant fact is that in this time of high unemployment, the Government is cutting back on employment programs so it cannot be borrowing in order to support those programs.

Is the Government borrowing money to support the youth of Canada? Clearly not, Mr. Speaker. It has taken the heartless action of cutting out the Katimavik program, a program which offered a real opportunity for young people to serve in communities across Canada, to gain some work experience and to see the country. It was a way of extending opportunities to young people. Yet the Government has chosen to cut that program, and it still remains deaf to the needs of young people in spite of the fact that one of the members of the other place has chosen to undertake a hunger strike in order to bring the message home to the Government that young Canadians have needs and that any program that exists to meet those needs should be supported rather than undercut.

Could the borrowing be justified because it is helping out those who are unemployed or retiring? Clearly not. The Government has recently announced that those who retire can no longer receive the unemployment insurance benefits to which they were once entitled. Having paid into the unemployment insurance fund for 20 or 30 years, one should expect to receive unemployment insurance benefits for a period of time upon retirement. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that I have one minute left. I will wind up.

I really question why the Government is coming before us to ask to borrow $22.6 billion, not because I am against borrowing in principle but because of the reasons for which the Government is borrowing the money and because of the economic policies it is following, economic policies which favour corporations and place a heavy tax burden on ordinary Canadians while at the same time services to ordinary Canadians are being cut back. That is simply unacceptable to members of this Party.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is keeping Canadians in the dark about its legislative program for this year, next year and the year after. It is also keeping Canadians in the dark as to the exact figures that relate to borrowing and the national debt.

When one looks at the figures from the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last month, and when one reads the booklets that came with it, one begins to wonder just where the Minister of Finance is getting his figures and how he draws his conclusions. It is an inescapable fact that the Government is simply floundering. It is wasting money here, there and everywhere. There was the bank fiasco and there have been examples of exhorbitant spending in Ministers' offices. There have been numerous examples of waste in spending the taxpayers money. Yet the same Government says it has an enormous problem on its hands, but does not revise its spending patterns at all.

When looking at the actual figures it is interesting to note that as of today the Government, since it came to power 18 months ago, has been responsible for accumulating some 24 per cent of the total national debt that is on our shoulders today. If that were not bad enough, the projected deficit for this coming year and the year after indicates that they will be not only the highest deficits but the second highest deficits, and the third highest deficits. According to the projections of the Minister of finance, by the year 1990, if the Government remains in power, which it will not—it would have been responsible—

Mr. Kilgour: Wait and see.

Mr. Baker: Now Government Members do not like what I am saying because I am using the words of the Minister of finance. The Government would have accumulated 50 per cent of the total national debt of Canada. All the deficits since Confederation would be accumulated throughout the term of the Government which is presently in power.

We know where the waste is. We all know about the $2 billion here and the $1 billion there. We all know about the attempted bank bail-out and its outcome. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) was totally responsible, and on her shoulders lies the blame for the $1 billion sum in this year's Budget for pay-outs to uninsured depositors. We know all about the Government.

We begin to wonder about the Government's projections. When we look at the actual figures released just last week we find that the Minister of Finance is really not on target at all. The deficit is the same as it was last year for the first nine months of this financial year, give or take a half a billion dollars, and that sum means nothing at all to the Government. So the Government has decided to make Canadians pay for it. It will punish Canadians because of its own mistakes.

If that were not bad enough, there was a ministerial task force composed of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). These were the four Ministers who, when the Budget was presented last May, presented their Cabinet decisions on the first five reports of the study groups. They told us what the Government was doing with the recommendations of the study groups.

What did we see happen the other day? We saw only 21 reports of the study groups presented. That makes 26 books altogether. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are 26 books in the New Testament. However, today I am referring to the 26 unholy books that were presented by the Deputy Prime Minister.

We do not know what the ministerial task force has done because it will not tell us. I can assure you of one thing, Mr. Speaker. The task force has already sent all of its recommendations from the study groups to the Planning and Priorities Committee of Cabinet. In other words, the Cabinet approved the last set of recommendations this past Thursday. The Government has decided what to accept from the 21 most recent books presented by the study groups. Now the Government of Canada wants us to approve its borrowing pattern, and for what, we do not know.

I have it on good authority that some of the recommendations of the study groups have been followed. Let me outline very briefly what the ministerial task force has recommended as it relates to Newfoundland. It recommended, for example, that the Government cut the entire coastal boat service along the Labrador coast. It recommends the ending of all subsidies to Canadian National in Newfoundland. It decided—

Mr. Blenkarn: Good.

Mr. Baker: I hear an Hon. Member from the Conservative benches saying that that is good. Then it recommended to seek judicial clarification on federal constitutional obligations concerning all subsidies to Newfoundland and the provision of the Newfoundland and Labrador coastal services. They have actually said they will obtain a judicial decision on the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada after making the reductions they are to make. It is a slap in the face to all Newfoundlanders.

● (1250)

Let us look at the recommendations which the federal Cabinet has accepted, for example, in environment. They recommend the closure of the weather office in Gander through the transfer of the weather centre to St. John's. Air Canada made an application to move its international flights to St. John's. If the Government approves, it will mean that St. John's airport would require about $4 million or $5 million of expenditure just to meet the standard federal requirements of space for security reasons. The Department of Immigration and the Customs Department have told the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) that he cannot approve the application unless the Government spends $4 million or $5 million.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) threatened Air Canada by saying: "You go to St. John's or else". Now the task force is recommending moving the weather office from Gander to St. John's, which will result in an additional cost to the federal Treasury. Is it any wonder that one of the persons on the ministerial task force was the Hon. Member for St. John's West in whose riding St. John's airport is located? We see throughout the documents the vested political interest and the short-term political gain. The Government is trying to obtain some political influence for the former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, and is trying to prop up the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The Government of Canada will not get away with it. It will be put on the spot on every move it makes in an attempt to rob from Newfoundland for the benefit of its Members' ridings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on debate.

An Hon. Member: Him too?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I hear a voice from the wilderness on the other side. Let me say to him: "Yes, me too".

I have listened to the debate the last few times this matter has been before the House. As I heard the arguments being made, I thought to myself how it reminded me of the arguments made during the period from 1980 to 1984. At that time Conservative Members sitting on this side of the House, when the previous Liberal administration was in power, rose one after another, ad nauseam, arguing that there was no necessity for that amount of borrowing, that the borrowing was founded on wrong information and misguided policy, and that the borrowing was inappropriate. In fact, any number of arguments were put forward, each one of which has been advanced again during the course of this debate. As I thought about that, I could not help but feel that the Conservative Party in its new capacity has not changed very much. The only thing its Members have not yet done, though I warn you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not outside the realm of possibility, is muster their numbers to charge the Speaker's chair during this Parliament. That is about all that has not been pursued.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not yet.

Mr. Deans: As the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) just said, it has not happened yet but it may. I would not be at all surprised if he led the charge, after having listened to him, without fully understanding the undermining effects such a charge would have on the authority of the Chair. That is what the Conservatives did in the early 1980s when they attempted to intimidate the Speaker of the day with their obnoxious, boorish behaviour.

However, I see in the Government much of what I saw in the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition. Its Members argued on both sides of every issue, just as they are doing today. In fact, I remember rising in the House at one point and making some comments about that very fact. It made no difference what was before Parliament or what issue was being discussed across the land, people could find a Conservative Member to speak for them no matter what side of the issue they were on. At one point—and in fact I am not even sure now, but I thought it was by design—they had decided that since they did not have a clear policy on anything and since they did not really stand for very much, they would find out on purpose what was the public view on each issue. There is always more than one view held by the public at large, so they would make sure that every aspect of the issue was covered by one or another of their speakers. Then if a Canadian asked for the Tory view on almost anything—

Mr. Riis: Give me some examples.

Mr. Deans: I hear my colleague; I will in a moment. However, if a Canadian wanted to find out where the Conservatives stood on the testing of the Cruise missile there would be a Conservative who had spoken in the House of Commons against it and one who had spoken in favour of it. Then they could check to find out what side the person was on and ship out the appropriate piece of propaganda. If one happened to be in favour of the universality, for example, there would be a Tory speaking for him or her. If one were opposed to universality, one could find a Conservative who had spoken on that side of the issue, and therefore be provided with the appropriate piece of propaganda. This seems to continue all the way into Government.

I remember when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood in the House of Commons and argued vehemently against the necessity for borrowing. In fact, the Conservatives put up speaker after speaker—perhaps as many as 90, sometimes—to castigate the then Government for its audacity in introducing time allocation to terminate the debate and to argue against the necessity for borrowing. What did they do after assuming office? They brought in borrowing Bills at least as large if not larger than those brought in by the previous administration.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you will be fascinated by the following. I remember a debate in the early part of the 1980s when the then finance critic, the present Minister of Finance, said that interest rates were okay at the high level. He went to Montreal and made a speech to its board of trade. He said there was nothing the Government could do about high interest rates, that they were just a product of the economy and that we had to live with them. At the very same time, Conservative Members sitting beside him were rising in the House of Commons and demanding of the Government of the day that it bring down interest rates. If some poor soul from the outback in Canada wanted to get the Tory position, he or she could either have the "Michael Wilson" position on interest rates, being high out of necessity, or some other position put by another Conservative Member, requiring that interest rates be brought down. This tells us something about the Government.

No sooner did the Conservatives move into Government and we were confronted by the spectacle of the argument over universality. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), my good friend and colleague, will remember this well. On the one hand, we had the Minister of Finance arguing that we could not afford universality. On the other hand, we had another fellow who was saying that universality was a sacred trust. Who was that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Deans: I will be back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, several sectors have been hit hard by the Wilson Budget, particularly the tourist industry. At least ten-odd measures will affect tourism: the excise tax increase, 4 per cent on alcohol and 6 per cent on tobacco; the 1 per cent sales tax increase which again applies to alcohol, tobacco and, in addition, gasoline; the air transportation tax from 9 to 10 per cent; the $100 million cut-back in VIA Rail's budget; the new 3 per cent income surtax, which erodes the purchasing power of Canadian tourists; $100 million less for the Canadian Jobs Strategy program and Challenge 86 and their many tourism-oriented jobs.

Those are so many measures which will drive into the ground an industry which happens to be vital to Canada's economy and whose progress entails untold efforts to overcome all obstacles—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The 60 seconds have expired.

DOMESTIC SUGAR INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, producers have been waiting for over a year for a strong commitment to maintaining a domestic sugar industry in Canada.

We recognize and appreciate the efforts made by the Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board) (Mr. Mayer) which finally resulted in a commitment, however vague, and a preliminary announcement. But it is only a preliminary announcement.

What about the $30 million in stabilization still owed to Alberta producers? What about the variable levies and temporary floor prices? What about the corn syrup industry, which was barely mentioned? What about the details of the stabilization scheme that has still not been negotiated? Surely this vague pronouncement is not the final result of 18 months' work.

We look forward to a genuine long-term commitment to the industry, and we hope that today's optimism will not have been misplaced.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the need to reduce the deficit. Here are statements made by a senior member of the Liberal Government during the election campaign.

In July 1984, he stated: "Government expenditures must come down. There is a lot of room for cut-backs in expenses and duplication. I think those reduced expenditures would enable us to save billions of dollars."

He went on to say: "Some programs are sheer duplication, others are not profitable, and certain administrative activities are a complete waste. Some programs are no longer of any use at all and I will axe them."

Here is what he said in May 1984: "We must find ways to restore a more efficient public administration."

Mr. Speaker, I just quoted the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner). Canadians heard him loud and clear, so they elected the Progressive Conservative Party in September 1984, and they were right. We should not talk about it anymore, that is exactly what the Government has done.

MAINTENANCE OF GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, we are putting our financial house in order. Since we became the Government in September, 1984, we have seen a steady change toward fiscal responsibility. Not only are we spending less but we are spending smarter. The recent Budget is a clear indication of this.

My constituents, who are owners of small businesses and are agricultural producers, understand the necessity of controlling the deficit. They welcome the provisions for increased employment opportunities as well as the programs for hard-pressed agricultural producers.

Confidence is growing daily as the provisions of the Budget take effect. Look at the falling rates of interest and unemployment, Mr. Speaker.

We said we were going to set Canada on a new course. We have kept that commitment. We said we were going to reduce runaway spending. We have kept the commitment. Indications are that we will have eliminated the deficit by 1990.

My constituents join with me in congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

THE PRIME MINISTER

ALLEGED COMMENTS CONCERNING FORMER MEMBER FOR SAINT-MAURICE

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the comments made on the weekend by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about the circumstances of the resignation of the former Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) really cannot be taken seriously.

No one in the political history of our country can equal the Prime Minister's expertise in back-stabbing. Just ask Joe. He can show you the scars. Compared to the Prime Minister, Judas who as innoncent as a newborn babe. Poor Brian, he is trying every possible trick to win back the ground he lost in Quebec, and he is prepared to stab anyone who gets in his way. Mr. Prime Minister Brian, this is pitiful but not very smart.

AIR TRANSPORT

CITY EXPRESS—FAILURE TO PROVIDE SERVICE FOR HAMILTON-WENTWORTH

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as you know, Hamilton-Wentworth has a brand new air terminal. However, a terminal without a proper airline makes very little sense. Last Thursday I arrived at the air terminal in an effort to come to Ottawa at 6.30 in the morning hoping to catch the City Express, a non-stop flight. I discovered when I got there that the City Express had not sent an aircraft to Hamilton, that in fact there was no aircraft there, nor was there likely going to be any.

We ended up having to be trucked, as usual, from Hamilton to Toronto by taxi in order to try to make connections.

City Express not only does not provide an adequate service, it does not even have the courtesy to inform its passengers that the airline is not going to be operating on certain days of the week. I suggest that the Government take a serious look at the mandate given to that airline to see if it cannot be changed.

INVESTMENT IN ENTERPRISES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in the fourth quarter of 1985, the optimism of heads of businesses was at record levels, according to a survey by the Conference Board of business attitudes and investment plans.

The percentage of entrepreneurs who feel that the current period is favourable for investment has risen abruptly from the previous high rate of 42.8 per cent in the third quarter to 49.7 per cent in the fourth.

This is the highest rate of optimistic responses since the second quarter of 1979. According to the Conference Board, business heads are also more optimistic than they were before about the prospects for our economy.

Mr. Speaker, what a change since the last quarter of the Liberal administration in 1984, when in fact 45.9 per cent of respondents to the same question did not think it was the right time to invest in Canada!

CURRENCY

INTRODUCTION OF NEW BANK NOTES—CONSIDERATION FOR VISUALLY IMPAIRED

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, there are probably many reasons to introduce a new series of Canadian bank notes at this time. However, none is more important than the opportunity this gives the Bank of Canada to make the different denominations of those notes distinguishable by the blind and visually impaired. The visually impaired welcome the larger, more distinct numerals, as well as the distinct dominating colour of each denomination.

For years the sightless have wanted these notes made distinguishable by the use of Braille, an economic system which they will all use. They do not need to speak to the note, nor do they have to be burdened with the use of a separate electronic scanner. It is to be hoped that the machine-age for the handling of our money does not, in itself, become the major deciding factor. In the end result, the Bank of Canada is to be commended on its consideration for this disadvantaged sector in our Canadian populace.

EXPRESSION OF CONFIDENCE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday's 1 per cent drop in the bank rate is further evidence of the strength of the country's economy and the success of the Government's policies. Together with lowering interest rates, a quick survey of today's economic indicators will reveal further good news: 4 per cent inflation, 9.8 per cent unemployment, and 5 per cent GNP growth.

Numbers alone cannot truly reflect the true spirit of confidence and optimism that has swept the country from coast to coast. Last weekend I had the opportunity to meet many Canadians from every region of the country. In one way or another each one of them expressed to me the same message—Canada is working again. That, Mr. Speaker, is an economic indicator which cannot be assigned a number, but nevertheless speaks volumes of the confidence Canadians have in their economy and their Government.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

EFFECT OF PUBLIC SERVICE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about employment opportunities for the disabled in the federal Public Service. It is hard to find a permanent job these days, and it is even more difficult for the disabled. In 1984-85 the vast majority of disabled persons hired by the Public Service Commission were hired in limited or term positions. With Tory Government cut-backs, term positions are among the first to go, thus leaving many disabled unemployed. I personally know of some of these disabled people being laid off at the end of this very month.

It is obvious that all the Tory Government does about employment equity is talk about it. Once again the Government continues to place a higher priority on the deficit and statistics and numbers, as did the last speaker, than on people.

THE PRESS

IMPORTANCE OF WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—COMPETITION POSED BY CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, no sector of the media is as cherished as our weekly newspapers. They have served rural Canada for a century. Filled with tidbits of local interest, most weekly newspapers stay in the house until they are completely read from front to back. Unfortunately, the small entrepreneurs who provide the nation's weekly newspapers are in a mean and unfair fight with Canada Post.

Community newspapers are perpetually losing subscriptions because the Post Office cannot deliver the papers in a respectable time. Yet in spite of that, and irrespective of the fact it causes financial hardship for publishers, Canada Post has the gall to assume the privilege to undercut these papers in marketing ad mail. How legitimately angry the publishers must be to realize that their tax dollars are used to subsidize Canada Post in an unfair competition for ad mail services.

FINANCE

TAX TREATMENT OF LAID-OFF NORTHERN MINERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, workers at Stelco's Griffth Mine in the Ear Falls-Red Lake region of northwest Ontario have suffered a double blow. First they were told the mine would close at the end of this month. Secondly, they cannot get an answer from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Minister twice in this House committed the Government to give tax relief to laid-off workers in isolated communities. He said this on November 8, 1984, in the economic statement, and in the May 23, 1985, Budget. The Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) specifically promised equal treatment for Griffith Mine workers on November 16, 1984.

At a meeting in June, 1985, nine months ago, Stelco executives met with Ministry of Finance officials to present the need for a tax remission. Yet as of today no remission order has been issued. The mine closes in two weeks. When will the Minister make good his word and spare the workers of the Griffith Mine this unfair and frustrating delay?

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—BENEFITS OF FREE TRADE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, some Liberals, the NDP, and some labour leaders are trying to frighten Canadians by saying if we have free trade with the U.S. the Americans will dominate us, or we will lose our sovereignty, or our social programs will be in jeopardy. Such statements are sheer nonsense.

The Canadian red meat industry has had, and still has, virtually free trade with the U.S. in finished products. We have not lost one social program. We have not lost one iota of sovereignty. We have not dominated. In fact I know of no adverse results, only benefits for Canadians and Americans. The Western Stockgrowers Association supports free trade with the U.S. as well as the rest of the world.

As the Irishman said: "When we get free trade I will be thankful for the rest of my life, if I live that long."

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, there are several hundred disabled persons employed by the federal Government who are currently being cut through the public service freeze and downsizing actions of the Government. Most of these people are in term positions, some after going through the Government's Access Program for Disabled Persons. Several have already received notice of the Government's intent not to renew their terms, some as early as March 27 of this year.

The Government committed itself not to hurt disabled people and make the Public Service of Canada more representative of target groups. You will be interested to know that of the six employees in the Minister of State's Department's program for disabled employment opportunities, two are disabled and both are about to be terminated at the end of this month. If the Government has a real commitment toward the disabled, those are the last people who should be attacked in its fiscal restraint program.

YOUTH

PROVISION OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) is wrong when he claims that he needs weeks and months before he can produce a policy on youth employment. The Minister had time during the whole of 1985, during Youth Year, to prepare a policy for youth. A whole year. Yesterday on Cross Country Check-Up he had the nerve to say that he needs more time to come forward with something. In addition, while he had been warned that the Senate report was going to recommend projects like Katimavik in the future, he still had the nerve to kill Katimavik.

● (1415)

The Secretary of State said there is no money to provide youth programs. The money was found for the Nielsen Report which cost millions of dollars, it was found to bail out the banks which cost hundreds of millions of dollars. We are asking the Secretary of State—

Mr. Speaker: Please, 60 seconds.

NICARAGUA—AID TO CONTRAS—PLEA BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I note the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not in the House. I hope he would be, given the summit beginning today. In the absence of the Prime Minister I will go to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is the Deputy Prime Minister able to tell us what the Government's response is to President Reagan's national television message to Americans last night? What is our response to his plea for increased aids to the Contras in Nicaragua?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The immediate response, Sir, is that the activities of the U.S. Congress on this question are a purely domestic affair. It would be inappropriate for there to be a response. Having said that, let me repeat what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said on the thirteenth of the month as reported at page 11507 of Hansard:

—Canada can advance that progress—

That is the process of seeking a peaceful solution in Nicaragua—

—best by pursuing and strengthening the Contadora process, as we have been doing, and by resisting the temptation to reduce our influence in the United States and elsewhere by offering gratuitous advice which we can neither defend nor enforce.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): My next question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If the policy is to strengthen the Contadora process, then the response surely has to be to President Reagan in the strongest terms that Canada disagrees with this initiative. That view certainly should be expressed—I would hope the Prime Minister would agree—now that the Prime Minister has the opportunity of sitting down with the President in Washington this evening. Can he give us some assurance that the Prime Minister will make sure that item is on the agenda and that Canada's views are made known.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anyone in the House who is unaware of the fact that the discussions between the President and the Prime Minister are going to be very broad ranging indeed. Again, let me point out to him the response of the Secretary of State for External Affairs of last March 13, to the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam:

> We believe—
> That is this Government,
> —that actions speak louder than words in Central America as elsewhere. Our Government has tripled its development assistance in Central America because we believe the problem there is an economic problem and not a military problem to be solved by military means.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Surely a summit is a time for straight talk, and we hope to see some from the Prime Minister to the President, not only on the Nicaragua issue, but on other major issues such as the countervail on Atlantic fish products, where there has been a modest reduction of 1 per cent. If the Government does not agree with that decision, namely that 1 per cent is insufficient, surely the Prime Minister will take this opportunity of advising the President that that countervail has to be removed.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): There is no question that will be a subject of discussion, Mr. Speaker.

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON—ACID RAIN DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister and it has to do with the summit meeting. What we want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister is whether the Prime Minister will be asking the President merely to endorse the acid rain envoys' recommendation for five more years of research, or whether he will instead formally request that an emission control program be instituted in the U.S. rather than more research.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that that is high on the agenda for discussion in the United States. He will recall, as well, the response which was given by the Minister of the Environment, in answer to one of his previous questions, that more has been accomplished by this Government in the area of acid rain in 18 months than by the Hon. Member's Government in 18 years.

● (1420)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I was expecting a more serious reply on this kind of subject from the Deputy Prime Minister than the one he just gave.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): We want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister will explain to President Reagan that more research over the next five years is unacceptable to Canada, especially so because the proposal of the acid rain envoys is simply one which leaves the initiatives to the industries which are the source of acid rain pollution. Will this be what the Prime Minister will put to the President?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Twist as he might, the Hon. Member must recognize the fact that there has been no more eloquent a supporter of the elimination of the acid rain problem on this continent and in this country than the Prime Minister. The Hon. Member knows full well that those views, which have been expressed so often, and publicly, will be expressed by the Prime Minister in his meetings with the President.

NICARAGUA—VIEWS OF CENTRAL AMERICAN COUNTRIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns President Reagan's proposed escalation of military involvement in Nicaragua. I would like to say that, unlike the Deputy Prime Minister, most Canadians do not think such action is purely a domestic matter, just as we did not think action of a similar kind in Afghanistan and Vietnam were domestic matters.

Considering such countries as Costa Rica, Colombia, Peru and Mexico have made it clear that outside intervention of the kind now being advocated by the President of the United States is entirely wrong, will the Government of Canada, specifically through the Prime Minister in the meetings he is about to have on the eve of an important vote in Congress, also indicate clearly that this proposed action by the President of the United States is wrong?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is attempting to misconstrue what I said. If I did not say it clearly, let me do so now. We do not believe, as a Government, that the affairs, as they are developing in South America, are domestic in that international sense. What I did say referred to the last part of the Hon. Member's question when he was speaking about a vote of the Congress in the United States. That is a domestic affair. We are just as vitally concerned about political and military unrest in any South American country, indeed, around the world, as he is.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, what really is domestic is what goes on in Nicaragua, and the President of the United States should understand that it is a domestic matter and that he should keep his nose out.

FUNDING OF MILITARY ACTIVITY AGAINST NICARAGUA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Following what the Deputy Prime Minister has now said, which is to clarify the position of the Government of Canada, namely, that we presumably would oppose any escalation of military activity in that region or anywhere else, and since the Deputy Prime Minister has said that, and since an important—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a very long preamble. Is there a question?

Mr. Broadbent: Given the importance of this issue to world peace, would the Government of Canada now make its views publicly known that it opposes the funding of military activity directed against the existing Government of Nicaragua?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government has been made abundantly clear on more than one occasion. However, just to refresh the memory of the hon. gentleman, let me quote from Hansard of March 13, 1986. In reply to the Hon. Member's own critic, the Secretary of State for External Affairs had this to say, and I quote from page 11515:

> We have contributed constructively to the Contadora process. We have discussed the possibility of contributing constructively to the resolution of border disputes. We intend to take an active role in working to bring peace and stability and—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The answer is too long.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Government will not criticize the proposed action, will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm whether or not it is the Government's view that the proposed action by the President of the United States constitutes a violation of international law?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not purport to provide legal advice with respect to international law to the hon. gentleman on the floor of the House of Commons.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

LICENSING OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who, on Friday, told a coalition of groups representing consumers, senior citizens, women and labour that, as a concession to the United States, his Government will repeal our present law on compulsory licensing of prescription drugs, a law which saves consumers some $200 million a year. Will the Government be repealing this law? If so, how will it protect Canadians against higher drug prices if this law is changed?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer quite simply that we are concluding our consultation process. As soon as the Government has considered the various views that were expressed, we will submit a decision to Cabinet for consideration, and as soon as it is ratified, we will make an announcement in the House.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not say now whether the Government will change the law? If so, will he limit any changes to those recommended in the Eastman Report, since those recommendations, according to Mr. Eastman, will protect both consumers, something which is important, and the industry?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I have said many times that whatever the policy will be it will not be carried out on the backs of the consumers but we will ensure that it creates jobs and brings investment to Canada.

ENERGY

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who will know that just a few hours ago the Saudi oil Minister said that oil prices could conceivably move to $8 a barrel in the months ahead. Recognizing the crisis situation which is now developing in the West, particularly in the Province of Alberta where there have been hundreds of lay-offs and where there is a potential for thousands, will the Minister explain to us what she plans to do? What policy does the Government have to come to the rescue of this ailing industry and the thousands of people who face impending lay-offs?

Mr. McDermid: What a bunch of hypocrites!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that we are experiencing disruption caused by a global price war which is being carried out for political reasons by Saudi Aradia and other countries. It is affecting the world price of oil. With respect to what I am doing about it, as the Hon. Member has asked, I am in constant touch with the industry and with the Ministers and the Premiers of the producing provinces to ensure that we are kept informed of what is happening.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all well informed on what is happening. My question to the Minister who is responsible for this industry is simply this. Right now the Government is asking hundreds and perhaps thousands of Albertans to bleed, while it sits back in inaction. Rather than sitting back and letting the free market forces destroy the Albertan economy, thus putting thousands of workers on the unemployment rolls, what does the Minister of Energy plan to do?

Mr. McDermid: NDP flip-flop!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the free market forces to which the Hon. Member refers were responsible for record drilling being undertaken in western Canada last year after we brought in the Western Accord. As I have told—

Mr. Riis: Let's talk about the future.

Mr. Broadbent: That was when prices were high. What about now?

Miss Carney: I am really amused by the spectacle of the NDP supporting the producers.

Mr. Broadbent: It's your own ignorance, lady!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. The Nielsen Report flatly stated that there is no evidence that post-secondary education is underfunded. As the Government's expert in these matters, and in justification of his recent cut-back to the formula for federal funding of Canada's universities and colleges, does the Secretary of State agree with the assessment that post-secondary education is not underfunded?

• (1430)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as you well know, these study team reports have all been referred to the respective standing committees. That is where the voluminous options of the study team reports should be examined. That is where the kind of question put by the Hon. Member should be asked of whatever witnesses the committee deems to call before it, in whatever mode it wishes to examine the reports. That is the opportunity in which he is invited to participate.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his reply, but that does not cut it off at the pass. I am asking the Secretary of State a simple question. Does he agree that the post-secondary educational system is not underfunded?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister has said several times, as he did just now, that the reports will be referred to the committees concerned. Furthermore, the task force's recommendations contain a number of items that we will take time to consider, if you don't mind, and subsequently, we will be able to inform the House how they will be implemented, which will basically depend on the results of the studies that will be made.

YOUTH

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Does the Government intend to announce a program for youth before Easter, as promised by the Prime Minister a few days ago, yes or no?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister said that we would be announcing a new program for youth, which, incidentally, is not necessarily a job creation program, since the two are not necessarily connected, he never said that he would announce it before Easter. The time frame for announcing Government programs is determined not by chance or by pressures from outside but by the Government itself, which will decide when these new programs are to be announced.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State not aware that the Prime Minister said that there would be programs introduced for youth before the beginning of March and that the Minister of State for Youth said that, after studying the Senate committee report on youth and the New Democratic Party report on youth, there would be programs introduced by the Government in spite of his contradiction of that fact some days ago? Are we dealing with the promise of programs or mere propaganda?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That was three questions.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I just said, since the question is the same. We said that we were going to announce a new program for youth, but again, we will do so when we feel the time has come to announce the program.

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State. I may remind him that the Special Senate Committee was unanimous in its recommendation for setting up "Youth", a national community service volunteer program, for all young Canadians between the ages of 17 and 24, a program very similar to Katimavik. I would like to ask the Minister, since this was a unanimous report, if he is now prepared to reconsider his decision,—a controversial one, I may add,—to terminate the very popular Katimavik program.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have said time and time again that reversing this decision is out of the question. However, I am glad you referred to the Senate Committee. The Committee's first recommendation is to create jobs and provide appropriate training, something the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been doing so well, and that is what you should keep in mind, and no matter what you say, the Government's priority is to create jobs, and this kind of question is not going to make us change our minds.

SENATE RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING RESTRICTIVE MEASURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Senate Committee's first recommendation is as follows: that before implementing restrictive measures, the Government should examine their immediate and indirect impact—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A question only!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —is that what led the Government to make those drastic cuts in the last Budget? Is that following the recommendations of the Senate Committee?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques mean that investing $700 million in job creation is a restrictive measure? I find that hard to believe! We are investing money in job creation, and just because we have terminated a $20 million program that was costing $10,000 per young person, you are accusing us of taking restrictive measures. Measure for measure, I think I prefer those I am implementing to yours which have made hundreds of thousands of young people jobless in this country.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT—AMOUNT OF WRITE-OFF

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and concerns the Scientific Research Tax Credit. We learned last week that only 172 companies have been audited out of a total of 1,800 and that the Department has already written off some $900 million. Why has the Government so quickly written off $900 million, and what special measures is the Government taking to minimize the public rip-off and recover as much as possible?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, as a knowledgeable critic, the residue of this program has created tremendous problems. The Deputy Minister of National Revenue recently appeared before the relevant committee and gave a very good account of the current situation.

I can assure the Hon. Member and the House that our Department is not writing off any of these accounts for which there is a reasonable chance to protect the taxpayers' interests and all appropriate measures will be taken to make sure the taxpayers' interests are protected.

GOVERNMENT APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I want to know why the Government approved some $3 billion in SRTC applications after October 10, 1984, when it knew that many of the deals were at least suspect?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Again, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member probably realizes that much of the program which lacked so much control was beyond the specific knowledge of the Department because in many cases the Department had no record, because of the way the program had been set up, as to who had taken advantage of it. When it was necessary to terminate the program there had to be a certain element of fairness involved because within the program, which that did contain so many fraudulent schemes, or unfortunate instances of people taking advantage of the public purse, there was a certain modicum of proper investment. We could not be arbitrary because we would have disadvantaged innocent taxpayers who had acted in good faith.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

NON APPLICATION TO PLEASURE BOATS AND CANOES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Canadian Council for Boating Organizations in Canada and many thousands of individual Canadians are very concerned about amendments to the Canada Shipping Act. Could the Minister tell the House whether or not every individual boat and canoe will be levied with an annual fee and whether or not single boat owners will have to meet the standards of the Canada Shipping Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is no. I am aware of the statements that have been made by pleasure boat operators and members of the boating public arising from some erroneous and misleading statements perpetrated by the boat lobby. I think it is fair to say that the vast majority of pleasure boats will be excluded from those provisions of Bill C-75. I was before the committee to make that clarification, and I am sure that the Hon. Member will see that in the final legislative form.

Mr. Shields: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

ENERGY

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister said that she wants to wait and see what happens to world oil prices before she takes action to help the Canadian oil industry. While she is waiting, western companies like Husky Oil, and Ontario companies like Algoma Steel, are laying off hundreds of employees. What does the Minister plan to do to save these jobs and to save the Canadian oil industry now facing devastation?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will not engage in the kind of knee-jerk reaction to price changes in which the Liberal Party engaged when it was in government, a reaction which led to the National Energy Program which devastated western Canada.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is the Minister's own policies that have created this uncertainty and feeling of panic in the energy industry.

• (1440)

Mr. MacLellan: Is she now going to turn her back on the energy industry and set it up for take-overs or even closure, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the kind of panic and hysteria which the Hon. Member is exhibiting is just the kind of hysteric reaction the Governments of the producing provinces and our Government are attempting to avoid in this price war.

May I point out to the Hon. Member that neither the Governments of the producing provinces nor the industry are asking us to reregulate the industry as the Liberals did. None of them are asking us to go back to reregulation because deregulation of the industry has led to record drilling, record activity, and lower prices for consumers.

Mr. Blenkarn: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—STATEMENT MADE BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister have any information which would lead the Canadian Government to agree with the President of the United States when he says that Nicaragua poses a mounting danger which threatens the security of the United States?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have to repeat the previous answers that I gave to the Official Opposition and to the Member's own Leader. I can do no better than refer the Hon. Member to Hansard for March 13 and to prior occasions with respect to the official position of the Government vis-a-vis Central America.

SUGGESTED THREAT TO SECURITY OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I asked the Deputy Prime Minister to bear in mind that this statement was made last night by the President of the United States.

I ask again: Does the Canadian Government have any information of any kind which would bear out the suggestion by the President of the United States that Nicaragua poses a mounting threat to the security of the United States and, presumably, if that be the case, to the security of Canada? Have we checked that out? Do we have any information in that regard, and if so, what is it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it does not make any difference to the formulation of Canadian policy, made in Canada by a Canadian Government, whether the President of the United States spoke last night, last week, last month or a year ago. Our policy has not altered one iota. It is as I have stated it today, and as has been stated by the Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on so many previous occasions.

BANKS AND BANKING

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. When the Bank of Canada rate was going up in January, the chartered banks put their lending rates up very quickly. Now that the Bank of Canada rate is falling, the chartered banks have been very slow to drop their lending rates. Will the Minister lean on the chartered banks to get them to bring their rates down?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that last week the chartered banks' prime rate moved down in anticipation of a Bank of Canada rate cut. I do not think the situation is quite as uneven as the Hon. Member is suggesting.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there was a full percentage point drop in the bank rate. From what I read from corporate analysts and banking analysts, I am sure that rates will come down further, which simply proves that our budget policies are working in the market-place.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Having followed the strong objections expressed by Conservative delegates in Montreal over the weekend to many of the equality recommendations which were already endorsed by the Government, can the Deputy Prime Minister give his assurance that the commitment of the Government will not be weakened by that convention, especially on matters dealing with affirmative action, with women in the Armed Forces, and with sexual orientation?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the response of the Government has been tabled. It is there for the hon. gentleman to read and for the public to see.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Lead your Party; don't follow.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the Government's response.

WOMEN IN THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Government intends to ignore the Conservative Party, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us when there will be a clear statement by the Government on its policy about what changes will occur for women in the Armed Forces? When will we get that statement clearly from the Government as a result of the agreement it made to implement the equality provisions?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first the Government's response has been tabled. Second, the internal consideration that has to be given by the Department of National Defence with respect to reconciling its policies with that response is under way, and will be announced as soon as possible.

TAX ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Budget has increased farm costs considerably through the imposition of taxes on most farm inputs. The Budget did announce an extension of the 3 cents per litre fuel tax rebate, but this rebate is a far cry from the Conservatives promise to eliminate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question.

Mr. Hovdebo: When will the Minister be bringing in legislation to eliminate taxes on farm fuels?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House of Commons sound system is working more effectively than my own voice is today. I want to correct the Hon. Member and remind him to reread our campaign commitment. We did not make a commitment to remove all of the tax on farm fuels.

I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, because of the substantial package in the Budget, that the Hon. Member is still critical of the financial transfer from our Government to the farming community.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is unwilling to bring in legislation for the elimination of farm fuel taxes, will he support my Private Member's Motion, which would require the Government to do just that?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Save your voice and say yes.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): The short answer to that question would be no, Mr. Speaker.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS' INVESTMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Expansion.

It is reported that General Motors will be making an investment of $2 billion to automate and improve the Oshawa assembly plant.

Mr. Broadbent: It is more than $2 billion.

Mr. Reid: Since jobs in the auto industry are basically located in the auto parts manufacturing sector, what proportion of Canadian content will go into parts sourcing for that assembly operation?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct. General Motors is planning to make an announcement later this month. The tone of the announcement will be very upbeat. It will be talking about the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars in Canada.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that some of that investment may also spill into his area, and I will be very pleased to see that.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

HOUSING CONDITIONS ON RESERVES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is he familiar with the view expressed in the task force report on Indians and natives that government housing programs should not serve as an incentive to encourage Indian people to continue living in their communities?

Does the Minister think that Indian people should be forced out of their communities and into cities where for them prospects for employment are next to nil, and where for them adequate and affordable housing is nearly impossible to obtain?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member may want to look at that section again to see the context of it. Having said that, I think the Member is well aware that he has the opportunity to bring his views before the committee when that matter is discussed.

TASK FORCE'S VIEW

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the Minister's views. He is the man responsible.

Does he accept the task force view that isolated Indian communities should be satisfied with substandard quality in their housing?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware that this Minister does not believe that Indian people should be satisfied with substandard quality in anything.

LUMBER EXPORTS—PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Forestry. He will know that the Gibbons Bill is presently before the U.S. Congress with a very good chance of passing before the summer.

In view of the fact that this measure will have devastating consequences for many British Columbia communities and, in particular, for hundreds of thousands of forest workers in the IWA and other forest unions, when will the Minister get behind the forest industry in British Columbia and show some decisive leadership to ensure that Canadian softwood lumber exports will enjoy continued access to American markets?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been. He must be aware, of course, that even as late as last week our officials were working with the U.S. administration officials. There is an additional meeting in the middle of April. We have been working with provincial Governments, with industry and labour in dealing with this issue for many, many months.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fundamental importance of this question to B.C. forest workers, as well as other forest workers across Canada, will the Minister assure the House and the people of Canada that the matter will be raised directly by the Prime Minister with the President of the United States during the upcoming summit meetings in Washington?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that ithas already been raised with the Secretary of Trade of the United States, with various officials in the U.S. administration, and with Congressmen. It will be raised by the Prime Minister and the President.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—TREATMENT OF SKYCAP EMPLOYEES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He is aware of the 17th Century feudal labour practices of All Cap Baggage Service being practised at Pearson International Airport in respect of skycaps. What is the Minister doing to put an end to this modern day feudal experiment being conducted on the property of Canadian taxpayers by a company at Pearson International Airport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, regional officials are looking into and investigating the matter. I should also advise the Hon. Member that some 30 of 40 of the individuals involved sent a petition to me in support of the arrangements which have been made there and did not want to be associated with the dissenting group to those arrangements.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport telling the Parliament of Canada that he endorses or supports a policy at the airports or in any other field where individuals have to pay hard cash, up front, for the right to work?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not say that at all. I was just trying to provide the Hon. Member with some information. I wish he would pay attention to my answers.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW—LAY-OFFS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Ten days ago employees of the Public Service Staff Relations Board were informed that Cabinet had decided to cut 35 jobs in their agency "following recommendations made by the Nielsen Task Force on Program Review". Will the Minister inform the House how many additional public service jobs are at risk as a consequence of the Nielsen task force report on top of the 15,000 public service jobs which were announced to be cut last spring?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has failed to listen to many of my answers to the very same question over the last few months. I return to a press release which I made public on January 17 and on which I stand firm. At that point I said: "Reductions resulting from the implementation of recommendations of the ministerial task force on program review are included in the 15,000 person-year reduction figure over five years". That is what I have been saying to the House ever since, and before. I wish the Hon. Member would pay attention to my answers.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could nail this down. Is the Minister aware of the widespread concern among members of the Public Service because of the cuts and compression in public spending, the $500 million in cuts announced at the time of the Budget, and now the Nielsen task force review? Could the Government give us an unequivocal guarantee that there will be no further job cuts in the Public Service as a consequence of the Nielsen task force beyond the 15,000 cuts over five years announced last year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the widespread unease comes largely from the Hon. Member opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: That is panic politics. It is gutter politics. We have said all along that we would reduce, since last May—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: Bad language; you made a mistake.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The comment I heard was about politics, but I think it was inappropriate. Therefore, the next question.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

JOB ENTRY PROGRAM—TRAINING OF YOUNG PEOPLE FOR EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With reference to the Minister's Canadian Jobs Strategy, she has a Job Entry Program.

Ms. Copps: What about the Canadian unemployment strategy?

Some Hon. Members: Sh-h-h!

Mr. Blenkarn: Would the Minister tell us how much money she has in the Job Entry Program in respect of young people who desire to enter the workforce, and how many young people will be involved in that program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Job Entry Program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy to date has approved 285 projects involving some 9,000 young people. These are projects in places like St. John's, Newfoundland, where young people are being trained for jobs in the broadcasting industry; in Sydney, Cape Breton, where young people are being trained for jobs with a local electronics firm; in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where black youth are being trained for jobs in the computer industry—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

IMMIGRATION

VISA FEES—REQUEST FOR REVOCATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. On January 27 I raised opposition to the Government's imposition of new immigration visa fees. The Canadian Helsinki Watch Group has now stated that this contravenes and violates the Helsinki Accord. Given that the imposition of fees has met with disapproval here at home and now threatens our standing within the international community—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a very long preamble.

Mr. Marchi: —will he immediately revoke the imposition of fees and return to a policy based upon compassion and some sense of progressiveness?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I assure my colleague that the user fees do not in any way violate the intention of the Helsinki Accord which, as the Hon. Member will know, provides for freedom of movement of immigrants. The fee is only a portion of the cost, approximately a quarter of the total cost. Also, the Hon. Member will know that it does not apply to refugees or those in designated classes.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister care about what Canadians are saying and what the world is trying to tell us before next month's international conference? If so, is he prepared to have the courage to revoke immediately these fees which are contrary to the spirit of the conference we will be attending next month?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that the principles of universality and non-discrimination are key to our Canadian policies and are not in question. I should also inform him that within the Helsinki signatory countries there are in many cases fees which are greater than those imposed by Canada, including those of our neighbour, the United States, and of West Germany.

CHILD CARE

FUNDING OF SERVICES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Given that 75 women's organizations are meeting in Ottawa today with the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, would the Minister not agree that this event provides the Government with the perfect opportunity to fulfil its election campaign promises to provide additional funds for child care services?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter and drawing to our attention that the Government has made funds available so that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women can bring together some 75 leaders of national groups to talk about the economic impact of policies in Canada on the lives of women. I assure the Hon. Member, having attended the opening session this morning, that the vital economic importance of child care was signalled.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, that is nice to hear, but would the Minister not agree that in order to keep some semblance of good faith with Canadian families, now is the time to fulfil election campaign promises by providing additional moneys for day care and child care?

• (1500)

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that today the task force named by the House is opening its hearings in Atlantic Canada. We have before us a substantive document in the Katie Cooke Task Force Report, and we will have recommendations from the House task force before the end of the year, after which the Government will be in a position to look at a number of options to deal with this vital issue.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During Question Period the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said: "That is gutter politics", in response to a question which I asked. I find that unparliamentary and I believe that you did too, Mr. Speaker, because you asked the Minister to desist from completing his answer. I ask you to review the matter and, in effect, ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw the unparliamentary language which was used in the House.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, whether they are unparliamentary or not, I will be very happy to withdraw the words.

SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, with all respect, I would seek clarification of the situation when a Member stands for a supplementary question and yells "supplementary", and the Speaker is not inclined to give him a supplementary question at that time, and the Member sits down. Are we now changing the rules such that if the Speaker looks at a Member when he is sitting, encouraging him to stand up, the Member should then stand? Are you going to call the shots?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) claimed a supplementary question. At that time I had already begun to recognize the Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). As it seemed to me appropriate, I looked to see if the Hon. Member for Athabasca was rising again. The Hon. Member for Athabasca chose not to rise again. Therefore, I recognized another Member. The Hon. Member for Athabasca knows that Members rise continually seeking the eye of the Chair if they wish the Chair to recognize them for a question.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, just before the lunch break I was pointing out that there was a certain consistency evident with regard to what the Conservative Party was like when it was in Opposition and what it is now like in Government. The recent comment of the Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) is consistent with what I was talking about. I was expecting that at any minute he would be joined by other back-benchers who would charge the Speaker's chair in anger over something which was, in fact, done quite properly.

There is a necessity for the Government to establish for itself some consistency in the way in which it approaches public policy. It cannot have it every which way. The Government cannot on one day be for the concept of universality, and on the next day argue against it. The Government cannot, through the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), claim that universality is a sacred trust and then, in its very next Budget, say that universal access is really what it is talking about. I think it is fair to say that those of us who have followed that debate are able to distinguish quite clearly between universality as it has been practised in Canada, and something called "universal access", which may or may not make available to those who need it the kind of help they need.

This Bill ought not to be passed now, Mr. Speaker. It is based on information contained in the budget papers which is clearly faulty. They contain references to interest rates and oil prices which are clearly not sustainable in today's society. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme):

That this Bill be not now read a second time but be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: The debate will now be on the amendment, it being in order.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place in support of the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who was his normal articulate self for the minute or so that he took to complete his debate.

There is a very good reason why Bill C-99 ought to be given a six-month hoist. As a matter of fact, inasmuch as the Bill is symbolic of the Government's financial plan, more than the six-month hoist, it ought to be given the boot.

The Government of Canada today has a fiscal plan which represents the vision of the Party in power. The other day, with a great deal of exasperation and disbelief, we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say, while appearing before some of his friends in Montreal: "I have a vision". He went on to talk about that vision. He assured us that if we would be patient until the year 2020 or 2030, he would get around to delivering on that vision. I do not think the Government's vision will not be realized until the year 2030. I think the vision is much more short-sighted. It is a very clear vision which they understand and have mapped out. However, they are not prepared to talk about it in plain language with the people of Canada.

This reminds me a little of the kind of frenzied paranoia of Howard Hughes locked away in the penthouse of the hotel he bought in Las Vegas, Nevada. He was shut away from the real world, refusing to acknowledge its existence, but attempting to pull some strings to shape that world in the way in which he thought most appropriate. That is the kind of bunker mentality which has gripped the Government after a shockingly short period of time. The Government has a vision which it discusses only in the back rooms, locked away from the light of day.

If one looks closely, one can begin to discern that vision in the February 26 Budget. That Budget imposes upon middle and low-income Canadians the largest single tax increase in the history of the country. Inasmuch as deficit reduction is real rather than manufactured in the Minister's mind, by playing with the numbers the Budget takes fully two-thirds of any deficit reduction there is out of the pockets of consumers and only one-third out of the Government's own pocket through controlled spending. While the Government is accomplishing a highwayman's raid on the pockets of middle and low-income Canadians, it has given the corporate sector a 22 per cent reduction in its tax rate over the next four years.

While all of this is being achieved, the Government continues the vulgar policy of the capital gains tax exemption, which policy gives a new definition to the meaning of "greed". That exemption gives a new definition to the meaning of "vulgarity" and "greed", because it gives $125,000 of taxpayers' money tax free to an individual with the wealth required to go to the Barbados, Florida, or Europe, and to speculate in real estate without creating a single job in the country. That is why it is vulgar and represents a brand new dimension of greed.

It is a policy which does not reward success but abuses the concept of free enterprise. That policy spoils the basis of capitalism practised in a sound and responsible manner. I am a Liberal. I believe in the free enterprise system.

• (1510)

Mr. Tobin: I believe in a system which allows individuals to achieve their full potential. I believe the free enterprise system does that. However, as much as I defend that system, I recognize as well that it has to work for all of our citizens. When you have a Government which represents an elitist minority, which abuses the system in a vulgar manner and rips off the taxpayers, then the intrinsic support which our citizens should have for a free enterprise system, because it ultimately is the best, is going to be dissipated.

Mr. Redway: There is no rip-off.

Mr. Tobin: When you abuse people, when you ask them on one hand to accept the biggest single tax increase in Canadian history—

Mr. Redway: What is your philosophy?

Mr. Tobin: —as part of their share of reducing the deficit, and at the same time continue this vulgar—

Mr. Redway: What is your policy?

Mr. Tobin: —capital gains tax exemption and a $125,000 gift to those who need it least, then you lose support for the free enterprise system. I come to this House in defence of the system. I come to this House to speak on the Budget in defence of average Canadians. I do not see a free enterprise system as something to benefit only those who have the most wealth. I do not find it necessary, as do Members opposite, to below like a jackal in the night when someone dares to stand up and suggest the system works best when it benefits all of our citizens, not just those who already have. Members opposite would do well to speak to the working men and women who continue to build this country. They should pay less attention to those who, through their own hard work, God bless them, have achieved success and who now, in some paranoid frenzy like Mr. Howard Hughes in his last years, God rest his soul, want to devise a means to reduce the deficit. You have to do it, but God forbid, do not touch this colossal arsenal of wealth I have acquired. It gives them the power to send Conservative Members of Parliament to protect their interests. That is what is going on and it is time to call a spade a spade.

The people of this country have a vision, not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They have a vision of a free enterprise system which rewards success and hard work. They and their children can progress. Through all the ups and downs, domestically and internationally, we can build a Canada that all Canadians can be proud of. They have a vision where they are prepared to do their part to improve the economy; yes, even to reduce the deficit, even in my own riding with 25 per cent unemployment. We are prepared to do our share but we will be damned if we are going to be taxed with the biggest single increase this country has ever seen at a time when Members opposite gloat and smile and laugh at a vulgar tax exemption which gives those who already have an unfair $125,000 tax gift. It raises my Irish ire on this sacred day, St. Paddy's Day. It is a wonder I can stand still.

What about the hidden agenda this Government has? The Nielsen task force report is the hidden agenda. The Government, even though it released the report in the House of Commons bearing the seal of the Government of Canada, does not have the courage to call it as its own. What does it recommend? It recommends the abandonment of regional development policy, the treating of Atlantic Canada as if it were some Third World appendage, stuck off at the end of Quebec. It recommends that services be cut and people be penalized for choosing to live in that part of this country. It recommends that people who live in the North, who do far more to protect our interests and sovereignty than a $500 million polar ice-breaker, be cut off from the services they now receive from the Government. It is a short-sighted policy, one which will destroy our sense of national unity and pride of country from one end of this land to the other.

I beg Members opposite to go out and put your finger on the pulse of the land. Talk to our citizens where they live. They will see that a revolt is brewing because taxpayers are saying: "I have had enough and I will not take it anymore."

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to join in the debate on the amendment to delay the borrowing authority for some six months. The Government is asking this House to allow it to borrow some $22 billion. We have often heard, particularly from Members opposite, about the importance of tackling the deficit and the evil sub-deficit. In many ways I agree. The deficit is harmful. Certainly the billions of dollars we have to spend every year just to pay interest on our debt cuts back on the ability of Government to provide the goods and services so badly needed. Yet I am very disturbed by the way government Members, and I must say a fair number of newspaper columnists, present the debate.

The Government is talking about options. The Nielsen task force report, the Government claims, deals with options. We will have to decide which of these options to accept. The Government has also presented Parliament and the public with two options on how to deal with the deficit: Cut back on our programs and Government expenditures, or increase taxes. In this Budget the Government cut back on a variety of programs the effects of which we will feel in years to come. As well, walloping new tax levys have been added to the average wage earner. When you take out your pencil and little calculator you will note that those in the higher income brackets and the larger corporations are not being called upon to make the same kind of sacrifices. Again the wage earners are being asked to fork over a little more in the name of fighting the deficit. When we add all the new taxes this Government has levied they come to close to $1,300 a year for your average family.

Of course we are beginning to hear the hue and cry across the country that this is unfair. We are beginning to hear the rumblings of a tax revolt by middle-income earners. They are telling the Government that it is asking us to tighten our belts, why doesn't it tighten its belt? What I am afraid of is, by presenting this limited option the Government is setting up the Canadian people. By suggesting there are only two choices, either increase taxes or cut services, the Government is hoping to get middle-income wage earners so upset that in the next Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will drastically reduce government expenditures, meaning mainly social programs. I am really afraid we are being set up. The option is not just between more taxes or less government programs and expenditures, particularly on social programs.

There is a third aspect which, on the whole, the Government continues to ignore. That is the hidden tax breaks, the government expenditures that never appear on the books. In my speech on the Budget I went into this in some detail. I related how there are some $30 billion in deferred taxes. I suggested to the Government that it should charge 10 per cent interest on that to be able to bring into the public coffers an extra $3 billion a year and reduce our deficit by that amount. I related the situation of where we see the Royal Bank of Canada in 1982, having some $358 million in profits and assets of over $85 billion, not paying one cent of tax. The teller that works for the Royal Bank of Canada in 1982 paid more dollars and cents in taxes than did the Royal Bank of Canada.

The Royal Bank of Canada is just the tip of the 'iceberg. The kid that pumped gas for Shell Oil in 1982 paid more taxes in terms of dollars and cents than did Shell Oil. I suggest it is these tax breaks, this hidden side of our Budget, the figures that we never see on Budget night, the lost revenues because of the tax breaks and tax loopholes, that is the cause of the deficit being as high as it is.

If the banks of this country had paid their legislated tax rate of some 49.5 per cent the public treasury would have been richer by some $4 billion. From 1977 to 1983 most of the banks, even though they had billions of dollars in assets and earned hundreds of millions of dollars every year, paid a very small amount of taxes. In fact some of them, like the Royal Bank in 1982, paid no taxes at all. In fact, they even got a tax credit that year and the Government gave them some $26 million as a tax credit. Can you believe it? We have given them money.

This is why I suggest to the Canadian public that the debate should not be between more taxes on your middle-income earners, or Government cut-backs, but that there is a third aspect to this, the tax breaks that the wealthy and the large corporations have been receiving in this country year after year.

If the Government, and the previous Liberal Government, had practised a policy of fair taxation we would not have the deficit which exists today. The suggestion that as Canadians we are living beyond our means, that our social programs are too fat, that we have got to tighten our belts, I find is so much untruthful rhetoric.

If you compare what we in Canada spend as part of our Gross National Product on social programs you will find that it is one of the lowest of the western industrialized nations. It is lower than France, Germany, Holland, Italy and England.

To say that we as a country cannot afford our social programs, that the money we spend on health and education and unemployment insurance and on pensions is too high, to say that a country as rich as Canada cannot afford those programs while Italy, Holland, France, Germany and England, Denmark and Sweden all can, I say is to be false. The debate today should be on whether we have fair taxation, or whether we should allow the rich and the large corporations to continue having tax holidays in this country. If the Government is serious about solving the deficit, let it bring in fair taxation through tax reform in this country. We will solve our deficit and this country will be on a sound financial footing. That is why I support the motion before us today, to hoist this Bill for six months.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the amendment to Bill C-99, the Borrowing Authority Bill. It is also a pleasure to express my support for the amendment in the name of my hon. friend from Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans), seconded by that tireless knight of federal policies, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Speaker, there are two points I would like to raise in the House today. The first one concerns what is happening in the National Capital Region to federal public servants, who always seem to end up bearing the bount of the cuts the Government is making or will decide to make. As we all know, the National Capital Region has a much higher density of public servants than any other area. There are about 102,000, I believe.

It is therefore obvious that the cuts announced by the Government will have an impact on this population, which I would call a second class population considering the way these people are being treated by the Government. The upshot is that several thousand Public Service employees are going to lose their jobs, and this will have a major impact on the National Capital Region and will depress the economy of the Ottawa-Hull area. Mr. Speaker, when I refer to the Ottawa-Hull area, I am in fact referring to the territory covered by the National Capital Region, Ottawa-Hull.

Mr. Speaker, what I find surprising is that with all this concern in the Public Service today, and especially in the Ottawa-Hull region, no one seems to be defending these public servants who are either losing or about to lose their jobs, and meanwhile, there are people in the Government who are doing everything in their power to urge them to leave, to resign. People are being harrased in the Public Service today, in order to reduce the number of public servants in the Ottawa-Hull area, and I am sure that this is happening across Canada as well.

I am surprised that the Public Service Alliance has not reacted to these goings-on. I wonder whether it is really concerned about protecting the interests of public servants and about the fact they are disturbed about employment cuts in the National Capital Region, but in any case, the Public Service Alliance does not seem to be moving on the subject at all.

However, I remember that when the Public Service Alliance had problems, these people would come and see us and ask us why we didn't do more to protect public servants.

At this point, I think I ought to ask them the same question: What are you doing about the fact that your public servants are about to lose a considerable number of jobs and about the harassment that is becoming the rule throughout the federal Public Service?

Mr. Speaker, there is another problem, which brings me to the Nielsen Report tabled a few days ago, and it concerns the National Capital Commission. When I consider what has been said or written about the National Capital Commission I have the impression that somebody wants to belittle the capital of Canada, in the sense that, for all practical purposes, the national capital of Canada would simply become a dull city like so many others in this country.

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that the capital of a country is the centre of the national soul. Apparently we in the National Capital Region are unable to realize that there has to be a national centre where all Canadians will feel at home. Unfortunately it would seem that the Nielsen Commission wants to abolish the National Capital Commission and make it a part of the Department of Public Works.

In the House of November 8, 1985, Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat wary when I asked the following question to the Minister of Public Works concerning the possible abolition of the National Capital Commission: "In view of the fact that there has apparently been no announcement as to future responsibilities of the National Capital Commission, would the Minister tell the House if there is any truth to the rumours that the National Capital Commission will be abolished or that its operational responsibilities will fall under the Department of Public Works." That is exactly what has now been proposed in the Nielsen Report. The Minister replied at that time: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is worried by rumours, I wish to tell him on one hand that I think he has nothing to be worried about. Mr. Speaker, I think I had reason to be concerned. On the other hand, the Minister went on to say, the Nielsen Commission, as everyone knows, should bring forward a rather comprehensive report by the end of the year. In the context of this report, I am much more optimistic than the Member for Hull-Aylmer as regards the future of our beautiful capital.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the cat is out of the bag. They are more or less violating the capital of Canada through what amounts to the abolition of the National Capital Commission.

Mr. Speaker, people are deeply shocked because according to the task force report, the National Capital Commission has shown a lack of concern for public money when it signed opened agreements. For instance, there was this agreement with the Province of Quebec calling for road construction with cost shared equally, without spending limits or time schedules.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, section 10(2)(e) of the Act states that the National Capital Commission must "cooperate or engage in joint projects with, or make grants to, local municipalities or other authorities for the improvement, development or maintenance of property of the National Capital Region."

Mr. Speaker, ever since Queen Victoria decided in 1899 that Ottawa would be the capital of Canada, some 20 years after Ottawa had been designed as the Canadian capital, the Government set up the Ottawa Improvement Commission with a mandate to provide the capital with a national character and atmosphere which it had great difficulty to maintain over the years. This institution, the forerunner of the National Capital Commission, gave the National Capital is true identity through arrangements with both Ontario and Quebec sides of the Ottawa River. It had greatly favoured the Ontario side when, in the 1930's the then Prime Minister had a vision, just as had Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the 1900's, of a capital which would reflect the heart and soul of all Canadians.

Again, each time a prime minister failed to get involved directly in the future of the National Capital of Canada, there has always been an unfortunate delay, because the vision of Canada and the national capital that prevailed in 1899 was momentarily abandoned. And each time a prime minister got directly involved in the development of the National Capital Region, things changed a great deal, Mr. Speaker.

What I want to say is that the Nielsen report has simply deprived the Capital of Canada of any future meaning. It would destroy perhaps 100 years of achievement on the part of the National Capital Commission. I am sure that my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) will have something to say on behalf of the National Capital Commission in favour of the development of the Canadian Capital. Just as I do, he represents a riding which is proud to belong to the National Capital Region. I am aware of the problems which my hon. friend is having with the American embassy.

I know that there will be problems with the National Capital Commission, but I must say one thing, Mr. Speaker, as I have just pointed out, in the national interest, only, whether the decision is favourable or not, the Prime Minister should become directly involved and deal with this important problem.

This is what I wanted to say to this honourable assembly, and I am certain that there will be a rather lengthy debate on this matter because the National Capital comes under legislation which will have to be abrogated or amended, unless we simply maintain the status quo.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part once more in this debate, this time to discuss the motion to hoist the bill for a six-month period.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to authorize the Federal Government to borrow $22 billion. However, we have to ask ourselves why the Government wants the authority to borrow such an amount. The borrowing policies of the Government are linked with its budgetary policies and it is on these budgetary policies that this request for more money is based.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has focused its economic strategy on the deficit. According to the Government, the deficit must be reduced if we are to have economic recovery. The Government decided to increase taxes for ordinary Canadians while reducing the taxes paid by the wealthy. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is using the deficit to scare ordinary Canadians into supporting its economic policies. Instead of scaring the public, the Government should be using reason to urge the public to support its economic policies. If it is seriously committed to deficit reduction why make gifts to the well-off and provide tax exemptions for people who make large capital gains?

Mr. Speaker, if the Government wants to reduce the deficit, why reduce the taxes of large corporations? It seems to me that the Government is not really serious in its efforts to reduce the deficit. It is certainly not going about it the right way if it wants to convince ordinary Canadians to support its economic policies. We must also wonder about the approach of the Government to deficit reduction. I would like to give an example. There was an analysis of the recent Budget in The Financial Post of March 8, 1986. Three examples were given to illustrate the impact of this Government's budgetary policy on the Canadian taxpayers. For instance, if someone has an income of $40,000 a year including a work income of $35,000, investment gains of $4,000 and interest gains of $1,000, his taxes will increase by $8,000 a year. That is the impact the Budget will have on such a taxpayer. However, someone with an income of $60,000 a year will pay $1,000 a year fewer taxes. That seems extraordinary, Mr. Speaker. It is difficult to understand how the Government can increase the taxes of people who earn $40,000 a year while reducing the taxes of people with an income of $60,000 by over $1,000 a year. That is extraordinarily unfair!

The third example given by that newspaper to show the impact of the budget on people earning $250,000 per year indicates that their tax rate will be reduced by $5000 per year. This is really unfair, Mr. Speaker.

How can this Government justify a $5000 yearly reduction for people earning over $100,000 while increasing taxes for ordinary Canadians earning $40,000 per year? This is definitely unfair and useless, this is also ineffective where the economy is concerned because the Government will be taking huge amounts of money from the middle class, the people who buy all those things to meet their needs. The reduced income of the middle class will slow down economic growth. It will have a negative impact on economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential for the Government to reconsider its economic policy and its unfair approach to taxation.

Mr. Speaker, it is unbelievable for the Government to say . . . and I am coming to a close, Mr. Speaker—that we should all pay for the deficit, for the waste of recent years, while distributing the burden in a most unfair way.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather surprising that the Government should continue to ignore the pleas of the people and ask the Members of the Opposition to approve the Bill to finance the Government without even giving us the chance to examine its current expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, if this is a meaningless matter for the Government which is spending billions of dollars, it is not a meaningless matter for the unemployed. We know that this Government has reduced the budget by $200 million at the expense of young and older unemployed in Canada.

[English]

I arrived in my constituency office in Hamilton this morning to pick up a stack of applications concerning the so-called summer seed program, the Conservatives' answer to job creation in Canada. With the applications was a little notice from the Department suggesting that within literally the next six hours I was to determine whether or not these were valid projects which would contribute to the Canadian economy and to the assistance and education of our young people.

I wish to tell Hon. Members that when I see the Government talking about its new form of job creation and I am faced with consultation concerning literally dozens of applications from the Dairy Queen, I hardly think this is the new method of privatization for Canadians. I have nothing against the Dairy Queen. I had a summer job working at a Dairy Queen when I was a young student. Yet we see the same members of the Government standing here in the House of Commons day after day justifying the cutting, the virtual assassination, of the Katimavik program. This was a program which reached out to young people across the country. The Government cut it on the grounds that it would cost $10 million. I think that is an utter disgrace.

I am happy to see that the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) is here in the House. As well, I received a note, and I think the public should be made aware of the so-called job-creation program, which states that the Hon. Member for Burlington announced this week a grant of $38,515 to train two unemployed individuals, one as a kennel assistant and the other as an animal control licensing officer. The announcement appeared in the Burlington Post of Sunday, March 2. It is a big announcement, part of the Government's new job-creation program.

Essentially, this announcement refers to the spending of more than $17,000 per job for the creation of a position of dog-catcher and licensing agent. This at a time when Government Members have the gall to stand in the House of Commons and argue that the Katimavik program had no merit because it took unemployed young people who had no hope and sent them on job experiences across the country. The Government now plops down close to $38,000 to hire a kennel officer. The Government's priorities are totally skewed.

I realize I should not be so concerned about this. I cannot believe that the Government is asking us today to pass the borrowing authority Bill in order that we can turn over billions of dollars to the Government which is supposedly bent on the new focus of privatization and job-cutting. In one area the Nielsen task force report was right in that it pointed out the $16 billion in giveways to corporations. One can see that the corporations are hot to trot. They will be in there at the public trough. With respect to these new government programs, the Oshawa group has applied for summer job-creation programs throughout the whole of Ontario so that it can teach people how to stock grocery shelves. The Government is cutting and slashing Katimavik and forcing a Senator to his knees in the lobby of the Senate at the same time as—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Ms. Copps: —at the same time as the Government is telling the public we should pay the Oshawa group so it can teach people how to stock grocery shelves.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, grow up.

Ms. Copps: I am being told by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) to grow up. I would like to tell him, if he is interested in job creation for young people, that he had better take a second look at these programs—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We've done more for your people than you turkeys did in 20 years.

Ms. Copps: —these programs that are supposed to be reflective of a new Conservative approach to privatization. I see that the Dairy Queen, 7-Eleven or another multinational conglomerate will be getting hundreds of jobs paid for by the taxpayers so that people can work for $4 per hour or the minimum wage, whichever is less, because, according to the Government program, they have to pay minimum wage. We see that we will be hiring people to work as clerks in stores. If the people of Canada could go through these job-creation programs, which were plopped on my desk and which I was given approximately six hours to analyse—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That's all I got.

Ms. Copps: That's all you did get. I would like to know from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) why she is calling upon Members, through this farcical consultation, to approve the hundreds and indeed thousands of projects just so that she can rise in the House to announce them when in fact there has been no planning. Hon. Members were given approximately two weeks. My original letter to the Minister on the new Challenge '85 program crossed my desk some time around February 28 and I was advised at that time that I had approximately seven days to contact every employer in my riding so that they could take advantage of these programs.

I suggest that there are some good private sector programs here. There are some private sector employers who have taken the time to analyse and develop a program that will be for the good of the workers involved. For example, Provincial Kitchen Cabinet Custom Woodworking Limited is run by a gentleman by the name of Louis Tonellotto from my riding. He has put together a project that will give a young person a chance to learn custom woodworking. That is a viable and well directed private sector program. However, people are looking for summer help at the Dairy Queen, help paid for by the taxpayers, as the new example of Conservative privatization, this at a time when the Ontario Museums Association is being told that it cannot hire summer curators because the museums are currently receiving money from municipal Governments, and that means that they are only eligible for the difference between the municipal sector contribution and the minimum wage. If someone is working in a museum in Ontario, he or she is only worth the minimum wage, but if he or she is working at the Dairy Queen, that is the kind of private sector summer job that the Conservative Government feels should be supported and supported in spades.

I am frustrated, Mr. Speaker. I am frustrated because the Government was supposedly elected to consult. I hardly consider it consultation not have literally dozens of job programs plopped on my desk with six hours in which to analyse them and tell the Government to go ahead with them.

I say that the Government should rethink the Katimavik program. It was a program which clearly demonstrated—the Hon. Member shakes his head and laughs because it was a Liberal program. After all, no Liberal program could be a good program. Of necessity it had to be a bad program. Who on the Conservative side cares that 20,000 young Canadians had a chance to experience that program at a cost of only $10,000 per person? We would prefer to spend $38,000 to hire a couple of dog catchers in the City of Burlington and call that Conservative job creation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Burlington has a lot of dogs.

Ms. Copps: I am sure Burlington has a lot of dogs and a couple of them are elected here to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Ms. Copps: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if that type of interjection carries on, we are going to get more of the same.

There are people who are extremely concerned about the Government's direction and who believe that job creation is a little more than a $4 per hour job working as a clerk for the Oshawa group stacking grocery shelves or working at the Dairy Queen. If that is this Government's idea of a summer job creation program and a summer experience for young people, then I say that the Government is in very difficult straits because it does not understand that the young people want an opportunity to experience life and to have a chance to build for future careers. They want the kind of experience that was given to them through Katimavik and which has been denied by a Government that is so wedded to the credo of privatization that it is prepared to accept the Dairy Queen over Katimavik. I think that is a national disgrace.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, An Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 11570).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to expound further on the desire of the Government to sell the Budget and the borrowing Bill to the public of Canada. When the Government came to power, one of its promises was to do something about the tax system. It promised tax reform. There has not been one word in the Budget about tax reform, but the Government said that it would simplify the tax system and reduce the deficit, thereby reducing the need to borrow. If that tax reform had been brought in early in the life of this Government, then we would not have the great deficit that exists and we would not be debating the borrowing Bill.

If anything, the Budget increases the complexity of the tax system. I must say that it goes against the promises that Government Members made before they came to power. A simpler tax system has not appeared. It is no wonder that Government Members are trying to sell fairy tales about a simpler tax system, a deficit that is going away and an economy that is changing for the better.

Conservative Members promised a fair Budget and they are telling the world that they have a fair Budget. Fairness in taxation is, in the minds of most people, usually equated with progressive taxation. Perhaps we have to teach this lesson more often than we have in the past. Progressive taxation means that people who can afford to pay the most get taxed the most. It means that the higher the income, the larger percentage of it is paid in taxation. Rather than that, the Budget imposed more sales taxes, and sales taxes are regressive.

There is no difference between the amount paid in sales tax on a loaf of bread if one makes $1 million per year or is on welfare. We pay exactly the same amount of sales tax on any given item. The sales tax is a regressive tax. In both this Budget and the previous Budget, the Government increased the sales taxes, and that means that everyone has to pay it regardless of ability. The sales taxes and the excise taxes are paid equally by welfare recipients and millionaires, and that is a regressive tax. That is not a fair tax move.

Excise taxes are also regressive for the same reason. The rate at which those taxes are paid is the same for a person making very little money or a person making great deal of money. Income taxes are supposed to be progressive. Government Members are out there selling the fairy tale about equal taxes and fairer taxation. However, we realize that those in the higher income tax brackets will not have to pay as much. The best example of that would be the fact that a 3 per cent surtax was placed on everyone in the last Budget. At the end of the year the 5 per cent tax placed upon those with incomes of over $40,000 will be removed. The people in the $40,000 and over bracket will actually receive a reduction in the area of straight income tax because they will be required to pay the 3 per cent surtax rather than the 5 per cent. When the Government included the 5 per cent provision in the last Budget, it was a progressive movement, but it has been eliminated in the present Budget. Although many of the provisions do not appear to be regressive on the surface, they actually are. If one receives income from a source other than salary, one has the benefit of tax breaks which are not available to salary earners. Although it has been indicated that tax breaks are acceptable and worth while, the increase in the RRSP level and the capital gain for speculative increases are not progressive. In fact, they are regressive in the sense that they are breaks available to people who have the money with which to speculate and make money from that process, or to people who have income from dividends and are able to afford increased RRSPs. The middle-income person is quite happy if he can make use of the $5,000 which he can have in pension and in RRSPs, but he does not have money available to make use of the higher levels of RRSPs and does not receive that break.

We see a theme running through the two most recent Budgets, that if one makes more money, one pays less taxes. Unfortunately that theme appears in the Nielsen reports. The Government thinks that if its investments in services which should be available to Canadians do not have some return of money—and I am not referring to some return of service to the community or the people—it should not spend those funds. We find themes running through the task force reports which indicate that persons with the higher incomes pay the lower taxes; that if persons need services, they should pay for them; and if a service does not bring back something to the Treasury, it should be eliminated because it does not provide that return on the investment.

Earlier today I spoke about the Government being out there trying to sell a fairy tale about it having done so much for farmers. I went home last weekend and saw that the actions being taken by the Government are reducing the ability of farmers to continue to produce and to survive. Every necessary input cost faced by farmers who want to seed in the spring has been increased from at least 2 per cent to 5 per cent as a result of the taxes in the last Budget. The system being as it is, a 2 per cent taxation increase ends up being a considerably larger increase by the time it reaches consumers. That is the kind of theme which follows through the Budget and therefore suggests to me, as well as to the people of Canada, that perhaps the Government does not need the money it has and should improve the tax system so that it will receive more money for the effort it is making.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, today we have before us another borrowing Bill. It contains at least three paragraphs and will cost the Canadian public $22.6 billion.

We have heard much about the so-called tremendous increase in employment which the Government has brought about. I should like to say a word about it because the Government uses figures which do not make sense. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) travels across the country and uses the figure of 580,000 for the number of new jobs created in Canada. At the same time there is a trend to part-time and temporary work, a trend which is increasing at a phenomenal rate. As was mentioned before in the House, Statistics Canada counts a person as employed if he or she works one hour or more in the target week of its survey. The increase in the employment figures includes those part-time jobs. When the Prime Minister stands in the House of Commons, travels across Canada, attends conventions in Montreal and brags about the 580,000 jobs created by his Government, he is talking about people who work one hour a week, two hours a week or half a dozen hours a week. To him that is the way Canadians should live. The definition of part-time employment as far as the Government and Statistics Canada are concerned is employment of one hour to 29 hours of work per week; that is their definition. The average hours worked per week by part-time workers amount to 14.8 hours. That brings in a tremendous income! I suppose it is the Conservative Government's idea of employed Canadians. Part-time employment has risen from 11.19 per cent of those employed in December, 1975, to approximately 20 per cent, as admitted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on February 7, 1986. For women there was a 27 per cent increase up to January 1986 in part-time employment. Approximately 18.4 per cent of all new employment since September 1984 has been part-time. That is what the Prime Minister is bragging about. Yet he stands up and tries to convince the Canadian public that he is creating full-time jobs.

Temporary employment as defined by Statistics Canada is employment for less than six months. It can be part-time or full-time. It is distinct from permanent employment which is for a term of more than six months. Unfortunately, in its survey, Statistics Canada does not inquire whether a person is employed in permanent or temporary employment. Employment figures cannot be broken down to employment for two hours a week or 40 hours a week. You are in the same bag and you are all counted among the 580,000 figure about which the Prime Minister brags.

Statistics Canada produces unemployment figures for the Government. One day the Prime Minister stood in this House and used those figures. I went home and picked up the local paper to see that unemployment had increased dramatically. In my riding, the Government is paying people sums of money to quit work. It is called incentive retirement. Not only is the Government paying people to quit work, but the Government is doing away with a job every time it does that and that increases unemployment.

Parts of Canada are suffering from such cut-backs. Other parts of Canada are not experiencing those things and think we have the greatest thing since sliced bread. This is something which I cannot possibly find words to describe. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has absolutely refused since May 23, 1985 to meet with a delegation of business people, municipal leaders, professional scientists and labour leaders from my riding who are very concerned about the cut-backs and the loss of jobs at Atomic Energy of Canada in Chalk River.

Sums of money are being offered to people to retire. They are being offered to people below 55, even those in their early fifties. Every time this is done, jobs are cut.

Here we are in this House talking about the progress of Canada at a time when the Government is cutting back on some of the finest technology Canada has ever had.

There is no better time than in a finance debate to talk about the contribution the Government is making to the field of national defence. We remember all those promises in the last election campaign. The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre) came to my riding and said that the Government was going to increase the defence budget by 6 per cent in real terms, after inflation. Do you know what the Government has done, Mr. Speaker? It has not quite sunk in yet in people's minds, but the Government has kept its promises so well that in the present fiscal year it has not even met the rate of inflation. There is negative growth in the defence budget this year of minus 0.2 per cent.

We sat for days in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. You would think there was no tomorrow because of the way the Conservative Members talked about all the wonderful things the Government was going to do for national defence. They even said that we should increase our budget up to the average of our European allies. Right now, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar amount going into defence is 2.1 per cent of our GDP. If we increase that to the level of some of our European allies, that budget would have to go up to 3.8 per cent of the GDP. Do you know what that would mean, Mr. Speaker? An increase of over $7 billion in the defence budget. How serious can you be? At a time when you have a total committee going gung-ho for that kind of an increase in defence expenditure, the Government comes up with less than the rate of inflation.

We have a frigate program to complete. We have an order for 138 fighter planes to complete, which are coming on stream well. We have 81,000 small arms coming on stream. We have 2,761 five-tonne trucks that have come on stream, all of which orders were signed by the previous Liberal Government.

What is going to happen to the low-level air defence systems? An article in Le Devoir this morning said that the system might be cut in half or pushed aside for a while. I mention all of this because this is the Government that for years condemned the Liberal Government for not carrying its weight in NATO.

Mr. Blenkarn: It didn't carry its weight.

Mr. Hopkins: If that is all the math the Chairman of the Finance Committee knows, we should get a new chairman because he cannot add and subtract.

Mr. Blenkarn: You didn't carry your weight.

Mr. Hopkins: In 1979 there was an agreement to increase the defence budget in real terms by 3 per cent on the part of all NATO countries. I tell the Chairman of the Finance Committee that in 1980-81 the increase was 3.2 per cent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why didn't you do it before?

Mr. Hopkins: In 1981-82 there was a 3.1 per cent real increase. In 1982-83 there was a 5.3 per cent real increase after inflation. In 1983-84 there was a 6.4 per cent real increase. In 1984-85, the last term for Liberal budgeting, the defence estimates increased by 8.9 per cent in real terms. In the first year of the Tory Government, defence spending growth in real terms was minus 0.2 per cent. The Chairman of the Finance Committee—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has now expired.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to say a few words regarding the borrowing authority Bill which the Government is asking our permission to pass. The Government is asking us to borrow $22.6 billion, which is a considerable amount of money to borrow. It is the largest borrowing request ever brought before the Parliament of Canada at one particular time. It deserves fair consideration and a fair debate.

I have had the opportunity to spend the last number of days in my constituency. I had reaction from people of all political persuasions, not of any one political persuasion. In fact, I have no idea of the political persuasion of most of the people with whom I spoke. People were asking a lot of very interesting questions. For example, I spoke at a number of college and high school gatherings. People asked what the Government has done to help young people find employment and pursue educational opportunities because they had not noticed any change for the better. As a matter of fact, there was a good deal of indication that matters had actually worsened in the preceding months.

The number of young people who are unable to find employment, to take training courses at community colleges, or afford university education, is actually growing in my constituency. Many young people now have a sense of hopelessness and feel that there is no point in continuing to look for work day after day because they have received no encouraging news and most of their colleagues have given up. They may find a job for two or three hours now and then in a fast-food outlet, but nothing permanent, and nothing like the kind of job young people should have to begin their careers and the establishment of a home and family.

I travelled to communities in my constituency including Falkland, Westwold, Sorrento, Notch Hill, and Silver Creek, which are in farming and cattle producing areas. The cattlemen and small farmers asked what there was in the last two Budgets which would be of assistance to them. They had not noticed any improvement. I said that there was a program to assist people to get out of agriculture, and there was perhaps some relief for those who were in financial crisis and happened to be doing business with the Farm Credit Corporation. However, there was no help for those doing business with traditional lending institutions.

By and large, Mr. Speaker, the situation in agriculture continues to worsen. The family farm is increasingly becoming a thing of the past. The maintenance of a family ranch, as they are known in my constituency in western Canada, is becoming more difficult with each passing month. The price of cattle continues to fall and the prices of other commodities are falling or remaining stable, while the costs of doing business continue to increase. This makes the future of agriculture extremely problematic and highly questionable as a viable way of life.

I visited a number of communities in the parts of my constituency which rely upon the forest industry. I visited Clearwater, Barrière, the North Shuswap area, Malakwa, and Sicamous. Those communities are harder pressed today than they have ever been. Levels of unemployment are higher than they have ever been. There is a sense of hopelessness. They thought that during the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and others promised that there would be programs for reforestation, assistance in the modernization of mills, and many other programs to assist this hard-pressed forestry sector. All they have now is the threat of countervailing duties or quotas being imposed by the Americans, which will result in the closure of a number of sawmills in the interior of British Columbia.

By and large, the forest industry remains in an extremely depressed condition. No one with whom I spoke was aware of any initiative by the Government to alleviate these situations. They were aware of no improvement, only of a number of problems pending in the future. We are now under the real threat of the United States imposing a countervailing duty on our exports to the United States.

I went on to visit a number of tourist operations. These people are waiting for Expo 86 and the bonanza which will occur in their operations, whether they run small marinas, motels, hotels, camp grounds, or fishing camps. These people are simply hoping that things will improve. There is very little concrete evidence to indicate that life for the hospitality industry will become any better than it is today in its present deteriorating situation.

One could talk about mining, but there is no point in it because, in a sense, mining in western Canada has ceased to exist. The future looks anything but bright for those mines which continue to exist, be they in the coal sector or the copper molybdenum sector, which makes up about 70 per cent of mining in British Columbia. There are a number of reasons why one would expect new initiatives by the federal Government to encourage activity, particularly for small mining operations. There is almost a feeling of hopelessness with regard to the mining sector.

One could talk about the small business sector and the small and medium-sized manufacturers. However, the Government has done very little to encourage these sectors. There have, instead, been increased interest rates, increased fuel costs and expensive costs of doing business. Quite frankly, lending institutions are very reluctant to lend money to small businesses, particularly in the service sector, unless they are prepared to put up huge amounts of collateral. Even then, it is very difficult indeed.

I think it is fair to say that the Government has done virtually nothing for the cattle industry, the farming industry, the tourism industry, the fishing industry, young people, the small business sector, small manufacturers, those in the service sector, and native communities hoping to laungh economic endeavours. The initiatives taken by the Government are either non-existent or minor.

Before the change of Government there was a outcry about Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which differentiates between a bona fide food producer and a part-time, or hobby, farmer. The assumption during the campaign was that this would be cleared up very quickly. It still has not been cleared up. There has been no indication that this section of the Income Tax Act will be changed to encourage small ranchers or small farmers to expand their businesses.

Let me say in conclusion that, having just completed a major tour of my constituency, I found that people are puzzled, when they hear that the Government has done good things for various groups, by the fact that no sector of the economy with which they are familiar is able to determine what good things have happened to it. I suggest that the Government has used myth, smoke, and mirrors with regard to assisting various sectors of the economy in various communities of Canada.

The people of Kamloops-Shuswap are asking the Government to take some special action in recognition of the fact that the economies of British Columbia are especially hard hit and are having problems. Just as the Government recognized that there are special difficulties in Atlantic Canada and took special initiatives there, the people of my constituency ask that such initiatives be taken in western Canada.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we now have before us an amendment by which it is propose to postpone for six months consideration of this legislation. I rise both on the amendment and on the Bill itself.

Mr. Speaker, this is borrowing authority legislation and the Government is now trying to seek authority to borrow $22.6 billion, which is a lot of money, and in examining the Bill, two other things must also be considered. On the one hand, with its Budget the Government is borrowing here, levying taxes there, and also slashing its programs because the Government has decided to do its housecleaning in those three directions. Looking at those three directions, those three aspects, one will appreciate the reason why the Official Opposition is raising such strong objections. We oppose this Government's housecleaning operation because it puts an increasingly heavy load on middle-income people and on the most in need.

Mr. Speaker, I would like Canadians to look at the previous Government's history of tax measures and programs, as against this Government's own attempts at setting programs and housecleaning. Everybody knows that when there is economic growth, as is the case today, it is the right time to arrange to pay for the social programs we have in this country. Canadians are well aware that social programs are not free, that they are expensive and must be paid for, and this is the time to take steps to pay for them when we have economic growth. Under whatever Government, Conservative or Liberal, program costs must be paid, but the difference between a Tory and a Liberal Government is, who shoulders the burden of paying for the programs. After two Tory Government Budgets, we can clearly see that the rich are paying increasingly less, and in the future, with the Budget now before us, they are going to pay increasingly less, while lower income people, the poor, are going to pay more.

Mr. Kilgour: That is not true.

Mr. Kaplan: There is now an interjection by my colleague for Edmonton-Strathcona, and I am quite happy that he is interested in what I have to say. But I would suggest to him and to any other interested Canadian that if they look at the rate of increase or change in the tax burden borne by Canadians, during the 20 years previous to September 1984, they will see that an increasing share of the burden was transferred from the shoulders of the most in need to those of other groups of Canadians, middle-income Canadians and the most affluent. Gradually, the burden was taken from the shoulders of the poor and transferred to other Canadians. It can be said that what we experienced during the 20 years previous to September, 1984, was a shifting of the tax burden to those who could pay. This situation has changed since the last election, and the direction is now for the poor to pay more. One thing is clear: it is the de-indexing process that was initiated by our leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition and the then Minister of Finance. All this has been changed by the last two Budgets, and put an end to the process whereby Canadians obtained some measure of relief from the effects of inflation through the tax system. Now the poor are going to pay more, including income tax, and we are opposed to that, and that is one of the reasons behind our amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to talk about sales tax and what the present Government thought of it before they came to power. They were always very vehement about the fact that sales tax is a regressive tax and has a greater impact on middle and low-income Canadians. The impact is greater because these groups have to spend the greater part of their income. Canadians who are better off can afford to save and invest and travel abroad. Middle and low-income Canadians cannot and must spend the majority of their income. By raising the sales tax from 9 to 12 per cent, the Government has put a heavy burden on poor and middle-income Canadians. We object to that.

We believe that even if this is the price we have to pay for social programs, the Government is being too hasty and it is not the right time for such high tax increases, especially those that affect people on middle and low-incomes.

I could quote a host of press articles and commentaries, all of which argue it is not the right time to introduce such substantial taxation. Yes, it is time to deal with the deficit. Yes, we know it is not fair and not feasible to have social programs without paying for them but if this means that middle and low-income Canadians must suffer, Liberals see this as as unfair and unacceptable. The timing of this measure will not be acceptable to the market and may affect our economic growth. It may take away money the economy needs.

Mr. Speaker, if the Liberals are drawing out the debate, if on the basis of our responsibilities in this House, we have decided to delay the vote, it is because we want to draw the Government's attention and that of Canadians to what is wrong with this Government's policy. I am looking forward to the day before the next election when we will be able to give Canadians a survey of this Government's tax policies since the election. We will see increased taxes for middle and low-income Canadians and tax reductions for the rich in our society. And we will then see how the situation under this Conservative Government compares with the past, when the tax burden on middle and low-income Canadians was reduced on removed altogether.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part again in the debate on the sixth-month hoist motion on Bill C-99 entitled an Act to provide borrowing authority.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you that authority is being sought under this Bill to borrow $22.6 billion, an amount equivalent to the total deficit, to be borrowed during the fiscal year 1986-87.

When I spoke on this issue earlier today, Mr. Speaker, I commented on the fact that, regardless of the many recommendations of the Nielsen Report, the Task Force on Program Review, nobody has really dealt with tax expenditures, particularly those which benefit large corporations in this country.

Mr. Speaker, that was my starting point because if the Government really wants to justify its expenditures we must review all of them, not only selected expenditures and particularly those related to social programs.

Mr. Speaker, we are amazed to find out that the Task Force did not examine the expenditures of the Treasury Board, nor those of the Privy Council. They did not examine the expenditures of the Department of External Affairs, nor those of the Department of National Defence. In other words, some of the major public expenditures have been ignored, but at the same time they focused on private sector subsidies and social measures.

Some of the studies may have dealt with tax expenditures, Mr. Speaker, but no major changes have been recommended.

I would refer to the remarks of the study on services and subsidies to business, page 97 of the English version: This study group does not recommend significant changes to the four tax expenditures related to corporate income.

Mr. Speaker, instead of looking for ways to save some of the money now spent in the form of tax expenditures, the study groups ignored this source of financing.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, they criticized existing programs, saying that we give very generously to the major companies. In spite of that we are not doing anything to make sure we will be far less generous with those major companies.

As I was saying in English earlier today, Mr. Speaker, if the Government is really serious about reducing the deficit, it will be dead serious about both tax expenses and Government spending.

I notice that instead of reducing the tax expenses, it has increased them since it came to power in September 1984. For instance, there is the lifetime $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for single taxpayers, $1 million capital gains tax exemption for a man and his wife who benefit from the advice of a financial consultant. This family could avoid paying taxes on $1 million in capital gains while a family with a $30,000 yearly income would have to pay between $150,000 and $200,000 in taxes at the current rate over a 30 year period.

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Is it fair for affluent people to benefit from such a tax break ranging between $150,000 and $200,000? It is not, Mr. Speaker, absolutely not.

There are other examples, Mr. Speaker. For instance, the oil industry is getting a tax break of up $3 billion a year. Because this tax break has contributed to the deficit by reducing the Government's receipts, it has affected all of us. That is why tax revenues from major corporations will increase only by a small margin, while taxes paid by individuals will increase by 15 or 17 per cent during fiscal year 1986-87.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has set up a discriminatory system, because it favours major corporations at the expense of ordinary people.

[English]

When you have tax expenditures, and they have been identified by the study groups as being a serious problem, when the study groups suggest that the programs of subsidies and tax expenditures for business amount to giving with both hands and are making business into a group of program junkies, it is very hard to say why the study group will then conclude, as they do on page 97 as follows:

—the study team does not suggest significant changes relative to the four corporate income tax expenditure items covered by this overview.

Those four are the investment tax credit, the accelerated depreciation, the mining tax credit and the reduced rate of tax on manufacturing. They do not suggest any change.

The rationale in many cases is not adequately spelled out. In many cases they say, "Well, these are things at which we are going to have to look at some later time". The recommendations for people on the Staff Relations Board and many other parts of Government to be fired are taking effect right now. As my friend from Prince Albert pointed out, there were cutbacks taking place in terms of program delivery in regional offices in the east and west end of the region of Metropolitan Toronto where offices are actually being shut down.

Those are real cuts. It seems to me to be grossly unfair, if the Government is concerned about efficiency and effectiveness in Government spending, as we certainly are on the side of the New Democratic Party, that it should be so lenient when it comes to spending by large corporations at the same time that it is so rigid in going after much smaller quotients of expenditure by individuals and by small business.

All of the evidence suggests that the task force bought the bias of the Government in terms of what it felt should be done relative to tax incentives as compared to the kind of incentives that can be given by grants. It said on page 19, and I quote:

On policy, the team is in general agreement with expressed Government preferences for non-interventionist (i.e., tax) assistance, for setting a better business climate through removal of impediments to growth, and for concentrating federal assistance on the classic public goods of better information and service to the small business community.

In other words, the task force was biased against the grant programs that in many cases provided a much better modicum of public assistance to the Atlantic provinces, to northern Quebec and to Gaspé, to depressed regions now in parts of British Columbia and Alberta. It was against those kinds of things and in favour of tax assistance, which had the effect of helping companies in southern Ontario, in the region around Montreal, and in particular companies which are already making a profit and therefore are in a position to be able to benefit from tax expenditures.

We have said again and again that we feared that the Nielsen task force review would, in fact, enunciate a Conservative blueprint. It would come along and simply mirror what the Government would have a chance to say if it had the time to work it all out. That is effectively what has happened.

I accept that there are some things that make some sense in the report. They point out, for example, that when you are looking at a new economic activity which is created by Government grants you should also look at the fact that those grants have to be paid for by Canadians and may be affecting economic activity elsewhere.

If you are going to make that point you should also make the point, when you take dollars from ordinary Canadians and put them in the pockets of big businesses, allegedly to make them more competitive, that neither your task force nor the Department of Finance has any means of knowing and has not the least idea of whether or not these tax expenditures are effective I think that deserves looking at as well. We have the right to know whether or not these various expenditures are effective.

I note that in 1977, 1 per cent of the largest corporations got 64 per cent of corporate tax breaks. By 1981, that had risen to 72 per cent of the corporate tax breaks that went to 1 per cent of the largest corporations in Canada. I am sure there is no reason why that has changed since 1981, since we have had "Visa" and "MasterCard", two Governments that are essentially in agreement, although a lot of the essentials benefit the corporate sector in Canada.

Why was it that the study groups in the Nielsen task force did not look at that? Why did they not ask themselves whether a part of those tens of billions of dollars of tax benefits going to big business might be taken away? Of course, big business would say that that would be a tax increase, but all it would be would be a restoration of taxation which it has been forgiven for many years. There is no hope of getting the money back which was given in the past, but if we are talking about bringing the deficit down to a more livable level and giving Government more freedom to maintain vital social services, such as the support of universities and other things which are of particular importance to the regions, surely, then, these things should have been looked at. I am afraid that neither the Nielsen task force, nor the Government, has had the intellectual rigour or political courage to confront its adversaries, its friends in the corporate sector, and say: "We are sorry, boys and girls, but we are going to have to do this to you". That should have been done, and if it had been, it would have made us much more comfortable in terms of the whole deficit-cutting exercise.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue where I left off this morning with respect to Bill C-99, the borrowing Bill. As I said then, I really do not feel we can trust this Government with another $22 billion when it cannot even tell us exactly what the average price of crude oil will be for 1986 in U.S. dollars. Page 23 of the booklet Towards a Sustained Expansion: Canada Economic Prospects, 1986-1991, states, and I quote:

—that the average selling price for a barrel of oil of quality equivalent to Saudi Arabian light will be U.S. $22.50 over the rest of 1986.

On page 20, Table 4, "International Economic Prospects", under the column "1986", states under "Oil Price" that Saudi Arabian price for light crude oil petroleum will be $23.88 a barrel. So the Government cannot even tell us what the price will be. Not only that, but it is saying in one case that the $23.80 will be the average price for all of 1986, yet the $22.50 will just be the average price from the date of the Budget to the end of 1986. So not only do we have two different prices, but we have two different time spans during which these prices are supposed to be the average. In either case, we are going to need oil prices at either $22.50 or $23.88 in order to bring down the average price to the amount stated, because oil prices throughout the world have been down to around $12 or $13 a barrel for most of the first quarter of 1986, certainly around the $15 a barrel level. Therefore, these figures are way out of whack and this, along with the 9.5 per cent interest rate for an average in 1986, indicates that the Government has greatly underestimated what this deficit is going to be.

The Government certainly has not told us—perhaps because it is not capable of getting its act together economically—exactly what we are up against in 1986. It is an extremely serious situation because the energy sector is predicting prices as low as $8 U.S. a barrel. This $8 U.S. a barrel in comparison with the projections in the budget papers, particularly the book, from which I quoted earlier, Towards a Sustained Expansion: Canada's Economic Prospects, plus the fact that interest rates could very easily be 3 per cent on average over what has been projected, could mean a difference of about $4 billion over what the Government is predicting for the deficit.

Only the Government seems to believe the figures it has given as to what oil prices will be in 1986. What do other people think of the Government's finesse with numbers? Robert Reid, an oil industry analyst for McLeod, Young, Weir Limited, says: "Wilson's oil prices are wishful thinking". Gint Berius, an analyst for Merrill Lynch, says: "The unrealistic prediction about oil prices is probably one reason why the Canadian dollar has slipped on international markets". Don Braid, a columnist with the Edmonton Journal, says: "The Finance Minister has based his Budget on an oil fantasy".

What is happening in the oil industry? While the Government lives in a fantasy world with a Budget based on blarney, you might say, the oil industry in Canada is facing a disaster. Seven oil companies have announced lay-offs or staff cut-backs which total about 1,500 jobs. IPSCO, a steel pipemaker for the oil industry, will itself eliminate 695 jobs.

Don Herring of the Canadian Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors says that 4,000 jobs will vanish this spring and he believes the worst is yet to come. Dale Tufts, President of the Petroleum Services Association, says that the total job losses this year will reach 6,000 and could go as high as 15,000. One government official in Alberta says: "There is fear in the streets. Every major oil project is threatened". The Government says the average price for crude oil will be $22.50 on one page of its booklet and $23.88 on another page. So, obviously, either the Government is right and the world is wrong, or vice-versa.

The Government says there is no need to worry. In spite of its attempts to calm the nerves of the energy sector and the country, we are worried a great deal about the catastrophe to which the Government could be sending the country economically. Can we honestly give the Government another $22 billion in view of the fact it is completely off base in what it says in the Budget and what it says it is going to do?

What about the East Coast? What about the promise of jobs there? Even Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia has finally admitted there is some reason for concern. He even went so far as to admit that an $8 a barrel price would be a very severe blow to the East Coast. He ignores the fact, of course, that Petro-Canada is ready to abandon five wells on the East Coast, and Husky-Bow Valley—thanks to the reneging of a commitment by the Government—has dropped three wells from its modified drilling program. At the request of the Government, it had already dropped three wells from its original forecast. So it has dropped six wells from its drilling program because the Government is in fact implementing regulations under the Petroleum Incentives Program Act with respect to Bill C-85, and doing it retroactively.

It is not the industry we have to look at because it is leading a downturn in activity and exploration. It is the Government which is panicking and causing the uncertainty about the oil and gas sector in Canada. What does the reality of a lower oil price mean to Government revenues? Every one dollar drop in the price of oil means at least a $100 million loss in revenues to the Government. Instead of going to Washington, perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should go to Ireland and kiss the blarney stone because with figures like this, he certainly is going to need all of the good luck he can possibly get. Only a complete turn-around from what is perceived by the industry and by the economists at the present time can save the Government's Budget from leading this country into a very serious economic crisis. But that is just in the energy sector.

What has the Government done in other sectors? The net taxes will increase by $1.5 billion while net spending will fall by $800 million. The extra $1.5 billion in taxes means an average of $145 for each household. Canadians earning less than $15,000 a year will receive a sales tax rebate of $50 per adult and $25 per child. Corporations will pay a 3 per cent sales tax in 1987. Basic tax rates for corporations, manufacturers and small businesses will be reduced as of January 1, 1987.

What the Government has done on St. Patrick's Day is to emphasize the "sham" in shamrock.

Mr. Blenkarn: We've got blarney coming from you!

Mr. MacLellan: The sham goes very deeply into the economic forecasts and the economic thinking of the Government.

What is this Government doing for the areas of the country where regional disparity is such a tremendous problem? It is doing very little. It is hiding. It is saying that it will bring forward these programs which have no bearing whatsoever on the real problems of Atlantic Canada and other areas undergoing regional disparity. In fact, what it does is to put the areas undergoing regional disparity in a Catch-22 situation by saying that any economic upward mobility has to be through the private sector. Yet it stacks the deck against the private sector so that it cannot possibly make use of this avenue to increase expectations.

It is a gloomy Budget which presents a gloomy picture to Canadians. I hope it is not the case in reality. It certainly gives little hope because the Government does not seem to know what it is it wants to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Malone: He has already spoken.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We want to go out and enjoy ourselves.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we are listening to parliamentarians who are supposedly more experienced than I. They should know that I can speak to the amendment. I would ask them to search their memories in order to see that they are quite incorrect to suggest that I cannot rise to speak again.

I was really intrigued—in fact, I was taken aback to some degree—when I initially heard the word "blarney" issuing from the mouth of my colleague in reference to the Government. I could not quite understand how that was possible. However, I then realized that this is St. Patrick's Day and blarney does come to mind. In his lighter moments I suppose the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) exhibits some elements of what could be characterized as blarney. As I understand it, blarney is a type of good-natured circumlocution which, of course, characterizes the Prime Minister. Blarney is characterized by some good-natured colouring of what is being said in order to make people feel good, perhaps even better than they ought to feel in the circumstances. The Prime Minister has done that. Indeed, I think that even the most committed Irishman would have to admit that blarney is occasionally characterized by slight untruths but that those untruths are intended to make people feel good about their circumstances and about the person uttering the blarney. That, too, characterizes the Prime Minister. In fact we have heard something more than blarney from the Prime Minister, especially when he mentions sacred trusts. Then he steps on the people of the country in a most objectionable way and destroys their hopes. It is more than blarney when the Prime Minister says that we will double expenditures on research and development and then fails to do any such thing. In fact he has cut back on the rate of expenditures for such research and development. That is more than blarney; it is an untruth.

No, the Government is not characterized by blarney. It is characterized by an utter failure to live up to its promises. More important, it is characterized by its failure to live up to the needs of the country in terms of its Budgets and policies. I see Hon. Members opposite smiling in good humour. They recognize the truth.

I was reflecting on the speech given by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), in which he cited the many instances in which Members opposite took positions on both sides of the question when they were in opposition. Of course, that indicates the perfidy of members of the Tory Party. I began to think about that and I realized that it is not necessarily so. It might be an immoral approach to politics, but it might also represent the fact that whatever the government policy may be now there may well exist within the Party opposite sufficient diversity of opinion and sufficient opposition to stupidity that they may be listening to what we have to say. Perhaps Members opposite would like to hear a case presented in such a fashion as to encourage them to combat some of the errors being made by the Government.

I have only a few minutes in which to pursue this discourse. I suppose it should be pointed out that it is my tendency when asked to speak in such circumstances to relate my remarks to the four major issues which constitute my critic area. They are youth, post-secondary education, science and technology and human rights external. As I have indicated before there is within these areas a relationship in terms of the policies generated with respect to them and to the future of the country. It bears emphasis that in recent weeks there has been an emphasis on the concerns of youth through unfortunate circumstances. I have to say that I find that what the Government is not doing as opposed to what it is saying is deeply offensive.

I can understand that the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and the Prime Minister may see within the demonstration by the good Senator some type of offence to the parliamentary process. That is understandable. However, what we have heard is something more than that. We have heard the Secretary of State utter remarks which are only consistent with the notion that the Government will refuse to act in response to the strongly articulated needs of youth simply because there is a Senator in the lobby of the Senate engaged in a hunger strike. We can say, as we have said before, that there is something sick loose in the world when 700,000 young people are unemployed. Many of them are the prostitutes off our streets. Many of them are without food and meet in the missions of this country. Many are driven to crime. Many are alienated to the point of never being able to return to society. There is a need that cries out with a tearful voice and a relentless voice. That all of that would fail to get a response would certainly indicate that the Government, under no circumstances, will respond to what could potentially be the death of one man who is demonstrating concern. Why would the Government refuse to act in a responsible fashion simply because this dramatic demonstration is occurring?

We have heard the Prime Minister rise in the House to promise that there would be some action taken with respect to the development of youth programs in addition to the many things he claims to have already done. We heard the Minister of State for Youth say that she had read the New Democratic task force report and the Senate committee report and is working on a program that will be implemented pretty soon. Then we heard the Secretary of State say last Friday: "Oh, God, I don't know anything about it. As far as I know, we are not going to have any programs for youth".

The perfidy, the prevarication and the misleading exercise this Government is taking, along with its failure to respond represents a poor model for anyone but, most of all, a poor model for our youth. The Budget constitutes a traitorous response to the needs of so many young Canadians, and that should change and change fast.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned on speaking in this debate on Bill C-99 asking for a borrowing authority of $22.6 billion, but I cannot remain silent when I hear the comments made by the Members of the Opposition. Indeed, I find it very unfortunate that some Members opposite would attempt to project such a negative and irresponsible image to the population even though our Budget shows a lot of imagination and coherence in view of the financial situation which we inherited, as well as sensitivity to the problems of the most needy among us.

It would be very easy to do like the previous Government and increase our expenditures. We could also increase the size of the Public Service and the number of Crown corporations. We could reduce taxes and increase family allowances and old age security pensions. In the short term, this would certainly please Canadians, but we would be on our way to a financial deadend.

Instead, our Government has opted for a reduction of its expenditures and asked Canadians to make another effort to put our economy back on its feet as soon as possible. Mr. Speaker, this is truly a responsible Government.

We are keeping to the two objectives which we set ourselves as a Government and as good administrators. The first is to fight against the deficit, as we are continuing to do, and the second is to encourage business investments as its direct result is to create employment. A short while ago, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), said this: "You do not have to be a genius to increase taxes". Mr. Speaker, the man who said that was once Minister of Finance. He is the father of the Canadian deficit. He gave the Government a deficit of $56 million within 43 months. This is what he did. For our part, we took over a Government with an accumulated deficit of $200 billion which still increases by $35 billion to $40 billion a year. With a 10 per cent interest rate, we would reach $100 billion in 20 years if this were to keep up, I repeat that, with an interest rate of 10 per cent, we would be paying $100 billion in interest each year. However, we now have a budget of about $116 billion. This means that nearly all the budget would be needed to pay the interest on the debt. That would be ridiculous and we could not accept it.

For the benefit of the Canadian public, I would like to quote a few comments of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, who said in December 1985: "Discussions on the deficit are disconcerting and the facts are not encouraging. In 1983, the International Monetary Fund stated that in relation to the size of its economy, Canada had the largest deficit of the seven industrial powers of the Western World. An increasingly huge drain of federal Government funds is the price to be paid for servicing the public debt resulting from deficit accumulation."

And they added, concerning public reaction: "Whatever theorists may say, whether in support of or in opposition to serious government deficits, it is undeniable that the general public is concerned with the federal Government deficit. This was shown by a survey made in 1983 by Decima Research Limited. As was shown by that survey, the public feels that when times are hard, the government should restrain its expenditures and manage its finances as prudently as any average Canadian family. Although such a household view of the economy may not be very subtle, it shows deep interest in the country's economy and its impact upon present and future generations. It now seems clear that aside from all considerations, government deficits are a cause of concern to the people. Such concern indeed is undermining public confidence in the economic and political institutions and, in the long run, will no doubt affect this country's economic yield.

Mr. Speaker, it was so serious that Mr. Kenneth Dye stated: "The deficit for fiscal year 1982-83 in the case of the Liberal government showed a $5.3 billion underestimation." This means they literally hid the deficit at that stage.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe we have a Budget that is both responsible and realistic. It is realistic because it reflects the disastrous economic and financial situation we have inherited. Because, among other things, we are sticking to our goal of reducing that deficit by some $4 billion a year, from the original $38.2 billion to $33.8 billion this year, and in our projections to $29.8 billion.

Why is this also a responsible Budget, Mr. Speaker? Because it is directed to job creation. And in that area, there is tremendous confidence in the small and medium-sized businesses. We brought the taxation rate back from 15 to 13 per cent, and we put our trust in private enterprise. There are 700,000 small and medium sized businesses in this country, and they generate most of the jobs.

Also, we help the most in need in our society with our $300 tax credit per child, per family. This is another measure that will enable families most in need to manage more easily through these difficult times.

Also, our Government is injecting $300 million in research and development.

There are also employment programs for social welfare recipients. For the first time, our Government is earmarking $100 million for the poorest people in our community.

We are also helping the cultural sector with $75 million.

Now, that is a set of measures that will enable the poorest Canadians to meet their needs while creating additional jobs. Our performance in a year is rather impressive. We have created 585,000 jobs and have reduced the unemployment rate to 9.8 per cent which is a creditable performance even if the effort must be carried further.

Our first year is a token of confidence and success which Canadians should continue to take into consideration.

Our inflation rate has also been controlled at 4 per cent which is also another very good performance which should be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to refer to the comments made this morning by the Hon. Member for Windsor who said that we were not sticking to our commitments. I am rather surprised to see the Members opposite trying to lecture us.

I remember a few years ago and, no doubt, you do also remember, Mr. Speaker, an election campaign during which the then Liberal Government had bragged throughout the country that they would never freeze salaries. You remember it because we heard about it for so long. However, once elected a few months later the Government did freeze wages and salaries. Therefore, I think that before lecturing others they should consider what they have said and done.

Mr. Speaker, we told Canadians that we wanted to restore the health of the economy, reduce the deficit and create jobs. This is the policy we are maintaining, and I believe our results have been excellent so far.

• (1720)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is an interesting challenge to talk to the borrowing Bill, Bill C-99, because it is really a statement on the philosophy and policy of the Conservative Government in respect of where it believes the country should go. The Government has every right to state it that way, and I think we in the Official Opposition have the obligation to raise our concerns about the direction in which the Government is going.

Let us look at the results of the last two Budgets. Canadians have been inundated with tax charges on an individual basis. It is not a very pretty picture. Not unlike the May Budget in which the Government introduced a borrowing authority Bill requesting $18 billion, this time it is asking for an additional $22.6 billion for the 1986-87 year. I see an unfair allocation of funds in the borrowing Bill induced by the Government's lack of policy direction and its buckling to the dictates of Bay Street and Wall Street which forecast for it the need to decrease the deficit.

In the Budget, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) claim that they can reduce the deficit below the $30 billion level. However, it will be quite some time before we see what really happens. Canadians will have to wait until next October for proof that the deficit has been reduced even to the $33.8 billion which the Minister of Finance forecast for the current fiscal year ending March 31. It is not until then that public accounts, which give the final deficit figure for the previous year, are available. Canadians will then have to wait another 12 months, bringing us to the fall of 1987, before they will learn whether or not the deficit really comes in below the $30 billion mark. So far the public really has estimated forecasts of what the tax increases and spending cuts might bring about. I stress the word "might" because the end result which will be provided is not a definite one. We may be looking at a lot of wishful thinking. If it is brought in this way, all the better, but it should not be on the backs of poor people or those who are in need.

Federal forecasts are just suggestions. There is no sure thing, and we do not know what will intervene. For example, we do not know—and hopefully we will never have to live through it—whether there will be another bank fiasco out West, which would add an unexpected $800 million or $1.5 billion to our spending estimates, therefore requiring us to borrow more funds. I suggest that we should not count our chickens before the eggs are hatched.

The public has some sense of suspicion right now as to the ability of the Government to determine exactly where it is going. We must wait to see if the deficit will go below the $30 billion mark. In the meantime, while politicians play "guess the deficit", average Canadians can only hope they are not too badly marred by political strategy as they attempt to pass "Go" and collect $200 if their jobs are still available. At the same time, a limited number of corporate Canadians, those who have a better chance of passing "Go" and making money from their hotel property investments, receive a better tax break.

The 3 per cent corporate surtax will be applied on a lower tax base. For example, it drops from 36 per cent to 33 per cent in the next three years for certain levels of income or profits from corporations. The theory of corporate tax breaks is that profits will be reinvested and will create jobs. Will businesses expand knowing full well that Canadians will not have the disposable dollars which they had before and will not run out to spend money on the purchase of their products? It is a good question, one which is causing all of us some concern.

When the Minister of Finance brought down his last Budget, he described it as the "most significant and far-reaching program of expenditure control over undertaken by a Government in Canada".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: That is fine, but let me indicate that it is significant. I would consider a Budget which taxes its way out of a deficit by attacking middle and low-income Canadians as significant and certainly something to note at election time. "Far-reaching" is another good adjective to describe the Budget since most of us will be reaching far into our pockets to accommodate the extended tax measures provided in the Budget. Of course, for a small fee, found in the form of increased interest rates, banks and loan companies will be happy to loosen money from our pocket-books for us and to ease our whitened knuckles.

It would be hard for Canadians not to understand from the Budget that the big bucks required to knock down the deficit and cut the Government's annual borrowing authority in half by 1990 will come from taxes on individuals. Again the middle class has been hit. Average people such as the ones in my riding of Mount Royal will not find life to be as smooth as it was before. Average Canadians will continue to be squeezed for more tax revenues. Ordinary Canadians who hoped that Government spending cuts would ease the burden of the national debt were disappointed when the Minister of Finance announced his method of deficit reduction by way of personal income tax increases from $38 billion to $44.7 billion in 1985-86, up to $49.3 billion in 1986-87, and to a record high of $54.8 billion in 1987-88. Most of us cannot even think of the number of zeros involved in those figures. Most of us deal in pennies, nickels and dimes; maybe in dollar bills. We are looking at an over-all 44 per cent personal income tax increase which has been incurred in the 18 months the Conservatives have been in power. It is the largest increase in personal taxes going as far back as we can go in history.

One of my concerns is about the way the Government has been attacking the 4.5 million people who live below the poverty line. There were measures in the last two Budgets which push our poor people right into the ground. Where is the balance which is supposed to be maintained between the rich and the poor? Personal taxes have been deindexed. Unemployment insurance for Canadians taking early retirement has been cut back. We have seen the distress, unhappiness and serious financial implications of some of these moves.

Some of us in the House met with the earlier retirees who were in Ottawa last week. Some of them were in their late forties and early fifties and still had major responsibilities in terms of raising their families. They took early retirement, anticipating that with the money they had paid into the unemployment insurance they would have an opportunity to go out with some support measures, be able to look for another job and thereby assure the well-being of their family over the interim period. That is not what happened, Mr. Speaker. We heard a lot about the suffering and the disaccommodation by the Government taking such a retrogressive step.

Last week's Budget reports an increase of $1.9 billion in taxes, with $1.5 billion of this amount being placed on individuals while only $380 million will be placed on corporations. Do you call that justice when $1.5 billion in placed on individuals and only $380 million is placed on corporations?

Last year's Mulroney-Wilson Budget reported tax cuts for companies but increases for individuals of $1 billion for the coming fiscal year, 1986-87. The combined Budgets provide a personal tax increase of nearly $30 billion for the years 1985-86 to 1990-91 inclusive, while corporate tax increases for the same period will amount to just over $6 billion. Is it fair to have a personal tax increase of $30 billion while the corporate tax increase will be only $6 billion? In other words, personal tax increases will be five times as much as corporate tax increases. Can the Minister of finance explain why those at the lower end of the income spectrum are facing taxes higher than those sitting comfortably on the top? Can he explain in particular while those earning $40,000 are expected to absorb from 1985 to 1987 a tax increase of 9.4 per cent while those earning $150,000 get a tax decrease of $1.4 per cent? What kind of nonsense is this? Canadians do not find this fair.

I object to this borrowing Bill.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again on this Bill, this time on the amendment. I have expressed my deep disappointment with the policies of the Government for which it is asking us, in three short paragraphs on one page, to ante up $22.6 billion in order to carry out policies with which the Canadian people have become disenchanted.

My concern right now is for the young people of this country, a very large number of whom are unemployed and can only look ahead to being a generation being passed by.

I am very disappointed, as are most Canadians, with the repetitious replies given by Members on the Government benches when asked and challenged about the tragic unemployment situation. The Conservatives cites statistics to show that they have improved the situation very much in the past year. Indeed, the statistics may suggest that the situation has improved, and well it should, but what the Conservatives fail to mention is that their unemployment figures are still well above what they were before the recession came about.

The level of jobs that existed before the recession came has not yet been achieved. Instead of talking about how much they have done in the last while under circumstances of huge, burgeoning stock market results in the United States and the very healthy economy throughout the world instead of boasting about employment, the Government should be ashamed of the figures when seeing them in relation to the situation before the recession.

The figures in any case are of no use to them. When they talk about the million and a half peole who are still unemployed, and are still boastful about that great employment achievement, there is no achievement to the million and a half unemployment when they can still find no jobs.

Another aspect, which has not been dealt with by the Government and for which it will have to account to Canadians in due course is the whole matter of how it has dealt with the voluntary sector. By the voluntary sector, I mean charitable and community organizations. This sector, which has been proven to be the largest job creation sector in Canada, one of the most labour intensive sectors, which provides services to Canadians at the least possible cost and which the Government could never duplicate, where our young people might find jobs and a place to serve and feel useful, has been given no incentives and no recognition.

Over the past few years, the percentage of people and companies contributing to charities unfortunately is declining, as is the size and the percentage of their gifts in terms of income. The National Voluntary Organization has for years been advocating new incentives in income tax to increase charitable giving. More specifically, it has advocated the so-called give-and-take program which would provide a 50 per cent tax credit for charitable contributions.

This is what the present Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) promised before the Government was elected in 1984. When in opposition, the present Minister of State for Immigration made the give and take proposal his, if you might call it, pet crusade.

Let us look at a few of the promises he made. I can hardly do justice to all of them, but when in Opposition, the Minister of State for Immigration, who prior to this was the Secretary of State, said:

> We are committed to a fundamental realignment of the tax treatment for charitable giving—the principle of a charitable tax credit—which will offer equitable incentives to all taxpayers to support their charities.

In other words, he said that he was entirely in favour of the give and take proposal. When he became Secretary of State, under whose area this particular subject falls, we know that nothing took place. He also said that the voluntary sector was the largest employer of lower and middle-class Canadians. He was right when he pointed out its importance.

In addressing the voluntary sector, the Minister of State for Immigration said:

> You offer many less advantaged Canadians a bridge to employment. Canada's voluntary sector is an untapped resource that not only can reduce government spending but can actually create jobs in the process.

The Minister said that not only would there be more jobs but that the voluntary sector would also reduce spending, two apparent objectives of the Government.

Because the Conservatives are committed to more jobs for young people and because the Conservatives are committed to reduce spending, he said before the election:

That is why we are committed to a principle of a charitable tax credit, to a tax environment which will offer equitable incentives. Give and take is on the agenda.

The Minister said that give and take was on the agenda along with the other statements I cited so far in a speech addressed to no less than the National Voluntary Organization convention. That was before the Tories were elected. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) also, before the election, promised to the National Voluntary Organization and the 52,000 voluntary organizations, that is charitable organizations, churches, community organizations, the following:

We are committed to implementing a tax credit equal to a percentage of donations made to registered charities.

Those are the words of the Prime Minister himself. Is it any accident that the Prime Minister has done nothing to fulfil this promise? We know that he has done nothing to fulfil this promise because we have already received from his Government one set of financial statements, two Budgets, and two sets of Estimates. The Government has had plenty of time to honour what the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) solemnly promised just before the election that they would to if they came to power. They said it was logical to bring in the give-and-make proposal because it would help create jobs and save money, two admirable objectives.

Because nothing is done to increase the level of charitable donations by widening the potential number of contributors and the size of their gifts, the voluntary sector is now less and less able to assume responsibilities for social work and the serving of social needs. This means either increased Government programs, which will cost the taxpayer money, or less adequate or deteriorating services for the community. It seems to me that the latter is what we are in for. The vital area for job creation in the voluntary sector will soon be lost to the young people of our country. Another door will have been slammed closed because of Tory policies and this Tory Budget.

One can get a sense of the way in which the Tory mind works when we see what they have done to Katimavik. For nine years this organization has proven its mettle. It establishes relationships between human beings, edifies young peoples' concepts of citizenship, and gives them a chance to understand one another's linguistic backgrounds through exchanges between Francophone and Anglophone peoples. Yet, the Government has taken the axe to this program in the name of youth employment. For God's sake, there is more than just employment involved in Katimavik. It involves character and citizenship and goes beyond the question of employment.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the motion being debated at the moment is one for a six-month hoist of the Government's Bill to borrow the astounding sum of $22.6 billion. In considering this measure and the grave and far-reaching implications which it has for the Canadian economy, I would like to remind Hon. Members of the disgraceful antics which we saw last year attendant upon this very same legislation.

My purpose in rising is not to criticize the borrowing of money either on grounds of principle or on pragmatic grounds, nor even to state that this is something which should or should not be done. Rather, my purpose is to look at the way in which money is borrowed and the purposes for which it is used. Last year, to remind Hon. Members, we had a charade in which that non-elected body that sits like a canker at the very heart of our democratic society—I refer, of course, to the Senate—decided, in some flight of fancy, that it might some legitimacy within Canadian society and some relevance to the processes of democratic Government. It took it upon itself to delay the Government's borrowing Bill for 1985.

That was an historic abuse of what passes in this country for power. It was an historic abuse which was encouraged, I very much regret to say, even by some elected members of the Liberal Party of Canada who sit in this Chamber. I believe that the use of the Red Chamber in the obstruction of last year's Government borrowing Bill, whatever we might think of the legitimacy of the purposes, the relevancy of the exercise, and the appropriateness of the amount, was something that we would not hope to see repeated and something to which the Government and the House could put an end forever if it were to abolish the Senate. We spent approximately $27 million on the Senate last year. It is true that in the context of $22.6 billion that is not a very large sum, but nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, a sum which could have been saved.

I could instance some other ways in which sums could be saved in order to reduce the amount of $22.6 billion which the Government proposes to borrow to a sum which we might find a little more reasonable. I am referring, of course, to that great pork barrel orgy, that great swilling in the sky, which the Progressive Conservative Government instituted when it came to office in September of 1984. At that time, in both quantity and expense, the Canadian people saw an unprecedented expansion of ministerial staffs. There was a totally uncalled for recruitment of hacks, flacks, and bagmen to positions which now paid up to $80,000, sums which could only be dreamed of in the previous administration, except, of course, by those who were privileged and fortunate enough to hold more than one post.

To give it credit, the present Government decided to go the high road and make this blatant patronage orgy at least something which those of us who were scrutinizing the accounts and reading the reports of recruitment could see with our own two eyes. Ministerial expansion went hog wild in 1984, and we have not seen any restraint introduced in that area of government operations since. As an example, there is one ministry in the Government, which I do not propose to name, which is known to every Member of the House, which has no programs—

Mr. Marchi: Go ahead.

Mr. Parry: My colleague, the Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Marchi), encourages me to go ahead, and I would like, at least in this detail, to oblige him. I am speaking, of course, of the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) who has no programs, no budget, and nothing very much to say when she is given the opportunity in the House. Nevertheless, on her payroll she is maintaining a chief of staff, a limousine, and presumably a driver, and an executive assistant. We have received no bulletin which states that there has been a reduction of staff or reassignment of responsibilities, which any organization in the private or public sector, under the circumstances, would find quite appropriate and reasonable. As far as we know, there is still that ministerial encumbrance—

A staff that oviously does nothing and is utterly useless in a department that has no program and no budget . . . But nevertheless, these people keep their jobs and remain employed and they keep on being a burden on the taxpayers—

[English]

The taxpayers of the country must support them in the style to which the Government has made them accustomed.

Although I could continue, I will turn away from the matter of ministerial staffs and the way in which they have swollen from the Prime Minister's Office on down. I would now like to turn to what the Government uses the money for when it gets it. The prime example from last year was bank bail-outs. A couple of Canadian banks failed and, quite gratuitously, without any great urging on the part of their advisers, and without any great pressure in the ranks of the Cabinet, the Government decided that it would be like the little boy at the dike and put its finger in to plug the hole. That particular hole and that particular finger cost the taxpayers of this country $1 billion, or so it would appear from the accounts presented. I doubt very much if the final bills are in.

Let us go now to the topic of tax loopholes. The Government often says that the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) is the father of the deficit. It must be admitted that there is some justice to that allegation. However, I think we should look at the way in which the deficit has been built up. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) pointed out, it has been built up through a gradually shifting balance between the personal and corporate tax contributions to the cost of running Government. Over the past 30 years we have seen personal taxes gradually rise and corporate taxes gradually fall. That is something the Progressive Conservative Government should be working to reverse rather than reinforce. Yet the Government is going to allow corporate tax contributions to drop to less than 20 per cent of total taxes raised this year.

The Government also introduced a capital gains tax break, and allowed the little Egypt bump in the case of Gulf oil. Concerning indirect taxes, we see the Government's major preoccupation is not with imposing taxes in such a way that the economy will not stagger under the load; it is simply concerned with the revenues which can be yielded through tax increases. Therefore, in the last Budget, even with an outcry against taxes on gasoline, we saw taxes go up four-tenths of a cent a litre at the wholesale level. The federal sales tax increased by 1 per cent, following on the previous increase of 1 per cent for which this Government tried to evade responsibility by saying it had been foreseen by the previous Government. Perhaps worst of all, we now have a VAT by another name in the form of the business transfer tax which the Government is now promoting across the country. We know what the agenda is. It is simply to get more out of the economy for government operations. We have not seen the Government differentiate between this business transfer tax and the hated value added tax which imposes such an enormous accounting burden. The Government has not addressed that point at all.

Finally, if I may, I would like to—you are giving me the time signal, Mr. Speaker? I cannot believe it. I was really just getting started. However, I will close by stating my opposition to this borrowing Bill and I thank the House for its attention.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am very pleased to participate in the debate on the borrowing authority. Any discussion of this subject cannot, of course, he carried on in isolation. One naturally has to link it to the Budget handed down last month. Also, of course, one has to link that Budget to the May, 1985 Budget. When Canadians do that, they ask whether the Budgets are appropriate and fair. In both Budgets we got a mountain of documents, figures, graphs and all the rest of it. We as parliamentarians have to break those documents down to their lowest common denominator in a way which can be understood by average Canadians from coast to coast. When that is done, Canadians can then distinguish the true colours of this Conservative Government.

This Government has been going across the land saying these Budgets are tough but fair. They are not. They are simply tough and unfair. We realize very quickly just how unfair not only the imposition of new taxes is, but how and to whom the new taxes are directed. If you earn between $15,000 and $20,000 a year, by 1990 you will be paying a tax increase of some 23 per cent. If you earn $30,000 to $35,000, the increase drops to approximately 15 per cent. If you earn $100,000 or $200,000, the increase is only 1 per cent. I ask you, Canadians are asking themselves, and in 1988 will be asking the Government: Is that fair and equitable? The obvious answer is a resounding no. You cannot expect Canadians to see that kind of disparity as being fair. You cannot ask the individual earning $15,000 to tighten his or her belt more than his neighbour earning $100,000. All Canadians, regardless of income, regardless of region, are prepared to make the necessary sacrifices to enhance the economic wealth and prosperty of this country. What they are not prepared to do is to make sacrifices that other Canadians are not being asked to make. Therein lies the injustice and unfairness. We are asking one economic class in this country, the lower-income groups, to pull more weight than their wealthy friends. That will fuel the fires of disparity.

Canadians perceive the gulf of disparity to be widening under this Conservative Government. There is a line between the rich and the poor, between the various classes in our society. We have had struggles in this country between federal and provincial Governments. We have had struggles between the East and the West. We have had struggles along linguistic lines, between French Canada and English Canada. We have found ways to resolve the struggle. However, what we have never had in this country, and what Canadians hope will never happen, is a struggle based on class stratification. Yet that is becoming more pronounced. It is not like what we see on our television sets in Great Britain and other parts of the world, but it is beginning to happen on our own doorstep. When we have people lining up at churches for food vouchers and hand-outs there is something wrong. We cannot afford to put in place programs which will fuel class stratification. Yet some of the programs in these two Budgets are doing exactly that.

I see that you are telling me my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue with unanimous approval of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I'm not too sure, but I do not think there is unanimous consent.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS FOR GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT. (B) REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, there are 67,500 Guaranteed Income Supplement applications to be processed in the regional Health and Welfare office in Regina. In January of 1986 we were informed that the usual 27 temporary staff would not be available this year to make sure that the job was done by the time the April cheques were to be issued. I raised the issue in the House on February 4, 1986, and the Minister did not deny the fact that fewer people would be available for this processing. He indicated that an inset would ensure that no one went without their GIS cheques in April. Since February 4, however, most of the temporary help has been made available, and it appears that most of the applications will be processed, but a few will be disappointed by not receiving their cheques in April.

However, the concern about service has not gone away. Just today we were informed that the two client service centres in Ontario, one in Scarborough and one in Oakville, have been closed or are to be closed from March 31. They are to be closed permanently. The employees of Health and Welfare, like other members of the Public Service, are being told that they cannot have job security. The result is likely to be further disruption of service in the form of strikes and possibly other labour action.

The real reduction in service is not from action on the part of the employees, but because the Government is embarked upon a process of reducing and cutting service. The Nielsen report probably embodies the main theme of this Government in cutting. If there is not a monetary return on investment, an investment should not be made. That theme is cutting into the service which the country has learned to expect from the Government of Canada. I ask the Minister to review his process of reduction of service by cutting, as he did in Regina and other service centres across the country earlier this year. Recognizing the folly of his ways, I suppose, he refilled those positions so that the GIS applications could be processed. I ask him to provide enough people to minimize the hurt of the people for whom he is responsible, the old people, the young people, and the ailing. Those are the people for whom the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is responsible. Every time he cuts a program, every time he cuts a centre, he is reducing the service that is provided to that group, the old, the young and the ailing.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to give the Hon. Member and all recipients of the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the Spouse's Allowance and their families, the assurance that the current number of employees is sufficient to process all renewal applications on time.

As the Hon. Member pointed out during the February 4 Question Period, the number of temporary staff hired this year to process the annual renewal applications is lower than last year's. However the figures he gave are inaccurate and I would like to correct them because the Hon. Member's statement may have left the impression that the Department will be hard pressed to process the renewal applications on time. The Hon. Member claims that this year the Regina income security programs regional office has hired only two temporary employees as compared with 27 last year. In fact, 18 temporary employees were hired this year as compared with 22 last year.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is convinced that such small staff reductions will not prevent the Department from processing renewal applications on time. However, we are seriously looking at the situation, and if difficulties should arise, I can assure you that full-time employees will be temporarily redeployed so that no application is delayed. The Minister is aware that recipients of the guaranteed income supplement and the spouse allowance depend on regular payment of those benefits. He has asked the Department to make sure that each application for reinstatement of the guaranteed income supplement and the spouse allowance will be processed in time.

The Minister also has asked me to emphasize to recipients the importance of submitting their reinstatement application as soon as they have relevant information on their income. Each year, a number of recipients fail to submit their application forms on time and have their benefits interrupted. This unecessary interruption could easily be avoided. The recipient only has to submit his reinstatement application as soon as possible.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED—EFFECT OF BUDGET MEASURES. (B) SITUATION OF THE HANDICAPPED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, 1986, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about a certain increased deduction in income tax for the handicapped.

I wanted to make the observation that the two Budgets and the Economic Statement of the Government amount to the largest tax increase in the history of Canada, including in time of war. That is a development in itself which we feel is a criticism of the Budget and what, I believe, Canadians find hardest to bear. We have a lot of social programs which have to be paid for, but when they are paid for at a rate which can damage the growth of our economy, I believe that is going overboard. More and more economic commentators are observing that this is a Budget which can kill or damage growth in the Canadian economy and, therefore, is counter-productive.

When we complain about how heavy the increase in taxes in the Budget is, the Government always comes back to us saying: "Yes, but we have taken care of those who are the worst off". The Government points, for example, to the allowance which was introduced in the Budget with respect to sales tax so that Canadians who are the poorest can claim a rebate or deduction from their income tax for the new heavy sales tax they will have had to pay pursuant to these Budgets. We have demonstrated, and I do not want to take too much time to do it here, that even for the poorest of the poor, the relief which is given in the Budget is far from the increased burden which the individual will have to pay in sales tax. Therefore, even for those who are worst off, the tax relief is tiny. I recall figures of a $7 billion tax increase after five years and a $300 million sales tax relief. That is peanuts compared to the heavy burden which middle and low-income Canadians will be paying.

Tonight I wish to focus attention on what the Minister of Finance has offered to the handicapped, who will also be paying increased sales taxes and increased taxes. They will receive an additional $250 per year deduction for their extra expenses. A deduction means nothing to most of the handicapped since about 1.8 per cent of the disabled earn incomes which place them in taxable brackets. Therefore, if the Government wished to do anything for the disabled, it would be something in the nature of a credit such as was provided to mothers looking after children at home. This was a credit introduced by the former Government which put money into the pockets of those most in need. That is not accomplished here. Nothing is done for those, if I can put it ironically, but the best-off among the handicapped, the ones who have to pay income tax.

This is a measure introduced by a Minister who bragged about being proud to help the very poor and that this was what his Government was all about. As I was looking at what was done for the handicapped, my eye fell on the chart at page 42 of The Fiscal Plan which shows that the cost to the Government of the measure which was introduced in its first full year of operation, that is 1986-87, is zero. Therefore I asked the Minister about it. I asked him how he could say that he was helping those handicapped who pay income tax, that very small percentage of handicapped who are able to earn an income which puts them in a tax bracket of zero. The answer he gave was that the effects of the change this year will not be felt until the next taxation year as the tax returns come in. I reject that answer because 1986-87 is the first fiscal year in which these tax changes come into effect. That is the year which begins at the end of April and includes the end of the 1986 taxation year of all individual taxpayers. Therefore, it includes the handicapped. If this benefit shows anything, it should show some cost to the Treasury as of the end of that taxation year, which is included in the Government's 1986-87 fiscal year.

This is why I wished to draw this matter to the attention of the House and of the country. I do so in order to show just how cheap the Government is. It does this in an attempt to disguise the heavy burden of this Bill and the former Budget on taxpayers, especially the poor and those toward the bottom end of the scale. The Government has thrown them little concessions which in this case amount to nothing and, in the case of the sales tax credit, very little. I wish to expose the Government for what it is doing, which is taking with one hand and taking with the other.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with respect to some of the comments made by the Hon. Member, I point out to him that the one legacy which the Liberal Government left to the Canadian people was this horrendous burden of debt, the result of which made it necessary to increase taxes. In these circumstances, 33 cents out of every dollar which is sent to Revenue Canada is for the purpose of paying off the interest on the debt. That is the legacy which has been exposed time after time. Indeed, there is a certain degree of hypocrisy in complaining about increasing taxes when we are trying to act in a responsible manner.

With respect to the specific question regarding the handicapped, I point out to the Hon. Member that it was this Government which broadened the definition of "disabled". That was done in the 1985 Budget to include all severely disabled Canadians, including those who are markedly restricted in their activities of daily living as a result of blindness, diseases of the circulatory system, mental disorders, diseases of the musculoskeletal system and connective tissues, diseases of the nervous system, sense organs and the respiratory system. Previously, in order to qualify for the disability deduction, an individual would have to be blind for a year or substantially confined to a bed or a wheelchair throughout that year.

The new definition is to be administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare and comes into effect in the 1986 taxation year. The total population expected to be eligible for the disability certificate is 185,000, up from the 165,000 before the May, 1985 Budget. I think this is an incredible step forward for the disabled and shows the Government's commitment to the disabled. I would point out that the cost of the $250 increase in the disability deduction is $10 million per taxation year.

CRIMINAL CODE—BOMB THREAT HOAXES—REQUEST FOR STIFFER PENALTIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you will recall, no doubt, as well as I do, that a few short weeks ago in January of this year, there was an alleged bomb threat at the Ottawa airport, the Toronto international airport and the two airports in Montreal. This bomb threat caused a tremendous amount of additional security to be put in place at all four of those airports and cost the taxpayers something close to $1 million in extra security costs. That occurred just a short time ago and since that time, there has been a tendency for all Canadians to forget the fact that there was this bomb threat hoax and to forget that from time to time we have been subjected to bomb threats and terrorist activities. We tend to think that those things happen in other countries, perhaps in the Middle East, Asia or Africa, but that they do not happen right here at home. In fact, as you are quite well aware, Mr. Speaker, they do happen right here in Canada and they happen to our fellow Canadians.

Over the last 15 years or so, there has been a very large number of terrorist activities occurring right here in Canada or to our fellow Canadian citizens. Back in 1972, letter bombs were sent from Amsterdam to the Israeli legations here in Ottawa and also in Montreal. The same year, four other letter bombs were sent to Canadians Jews in Toronto. In 1973, another letter bomb was sent to a rabbi here in Canada. In 1976, two armed terrorists bound for the Olympic Games were arrested by Canadian police. In 1979, two Canadians were injured by bombs which exploded in Rome, Italy.

There were three terrorist activities affecting Canadians or Canada in 1982. A Turkish diplomat was shot and wounded here in Ottawa. The same year, the Turkish military attaché here in Ottawa was murdered. Two industrial plants, one in Toronto and one in British Columbia, were bombed.

Last year, there were five different terrorist activities involving Canada or Canadians. A Canadian security guard was killed at the Turkish Embassy here in Ottawa. As well, there was a bomb threat which severely affected the Toronto subway. It has now been confirmed by an inquest held in India that the Air India flight was destroyed by a bomb that killed some 329 passengers, 90 of whom were Canadian children. Last year as well, two people were killed in Tokyo as a result of a bomb that exploded after it was found in baggage that was taken off a Canadian Pacific flight.

There was also the killing of Valinda June Leonard and her 16-month old son from Alberta by commandos who stormed the hijacked Air Egypt flight. Just this year, in addition to the case which I cited earlier, there was an attack on the Romanian consulate in Montreal by an armed gunman.

How do we deal with the terrorist activities which have been going on in our country? I was very pleased to hear the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Beatty) announce the formation of the anti-terrorist squad of the RCMP. Apparently it is to be a crack commando team which will be under police control, not under military control. It will be used to rescue hostages. Also, there was an indication from the Solicitor General that he would be beefing up security at our embassies, consulates and airports. At the same time, he indicated that Canada was making it quite clear that there would be no deals, no pay-offs, no ransom or no exchange of hostages with terrorists. As well he indicated that he intended to discuss with the media the question of ensuring that terrorists did not receive any special treatment or special publicity as a result of their activities.

In addition, I was very pleased to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) come out with sanctions against Libya after the attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports. However, other things can be done as well. The North America Jewish Students Network in Canada has suggested the establishment of a parliamentary committee and the idea of barring terrorists and their organizations from the country. Those are good suggestions but, as I indicated to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) on February 4, I think that we should also review the Criminal Code, look at new penalties, look at new offences and look at the whole idea of restitution. At that time the Minister of Justice said that he agreed with me and that he thought we should be doing something about it.

I fervently hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will shed some light on the whole situation tonight and tell us that there will be some new penalties, some new offences, and that the whole question of restitution will be considered seriously within the context of terrorist activities, bomb threats and bomb hoaxes.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, when this question was originally asked, it was as a result of the bomb threat at the Ottawa airport, as my hon. friend pointed out. The circumstances of that case were very peculiar, but no doubt it alerted my colleague to the larger problem of terrorism. I should like to refer to the specific facts of that case. The comments of the originator of the alleged threat were later misinterpreted. He made no remark which should or could be the subject matter of a criminal prosecution. The individual misinterpreting and passing on the so-called threat did so in an honest but mistaken belief that he had heard the first individual disclose a plan to plant a bomb on an Air Canada flight. As a result of this confusion, although it was not in any way illegal and no charge could be laid, my colleague has pointed out before in the House the tremendous expense Canadian taxpayers had to endure in order to ensure safety of the Canadian travelling public.

I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's concern about terrorism. Nobody with any sense of wisdom cannot be apprehensive that terrorism will arrive on our shores and that we have to be prepared for it. I know the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is concerned about it. There are provisions in the Criminal Code right now in respect of false threats and in terms of circumstances where a person passes on a false threat to blow up an airplane or such. It may very well be the penalties are not sufficient, but they are being reviewed at this moment. I give my friend the assurance that we will take his submission seriously in order that we might head off any future problems.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind all Hon. Members that all petitions must be certified prior to presentation.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament who is dedicated to protecting the lives of unborn Canadians it is both my privilege and honour today to present a petition signed by 349 individuals from Kitchener. These petitioners are deeply concerned and protest the continued operation of the Morgentaler Clinic in blatant disregard and defiance of Section 251 of the Criminal Code. My constituents request the Government of Canada to require the Government of Ontario to remove any and all restrictions which have been placed upon the police force of Metropolitan Toronto in laying the appropriate charges against the operators of this clinic.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition, certified as required under the new rules, and signed by myself. It is from a group of Canadians who support Katimavik. They urge that the Government reinstate the program in sympathy with Senator Hébert.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present a petition that has been certified as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions and is signed by a large number of constituents from the riding of Gatineau who are asking for re-instatement of Katimavik, for the sake of the youth of this country.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition certified as acceptable by the Clerk of Petitions. The petition states, that in the opinion of the number of people who have signed this petition, the federal Government's decision to cancel the youth program Katimavik is a short-sighted budgetary measure taken at the expense of Canadian youth. The petitioners pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate, with full funding, the Katimavik program for the young people of Canada.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a similar petition signed by me and duly certified as being in order. It calls upon the Government to change its view with respect to Katimavik. It points out that the cancellation of the program, as I might say Senator Hébert is so eloquently pointing out—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When your leader Pierre Trudeau comes to town you guys stand up, don't you?

Mr. Johnston: —himself, through his personal sacrifice, is a short-sighted budgetary measure at the expense of Canadian youth.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to present a petition that has been certified as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions, in which petitioners ask the Government to reconsider its decision to drop Katimavik. This petition supports Senator Hébert in his effort to make the Government see reason.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I also have a second petition which is duly in order as attested to by the Clerk of Petitions. It asks that the Government reinstate the Katimavik program in support of Senator Hébert's public protest against its abolition.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition that has been certified as to form and content. The petition also concerns Katimavik and states that the program was a success in training 20,000 young people who took part in the program in the last decade.

Petitioners are asking the Government to reconsider its decision to terminate Katimavik.

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the House of Commons in accordance with the new rules. It is signed by 29 people. The petitioners express regret with respect to the short-sighted budgetary measure which is being taken at the expense of Canadian youth through the cancellation of the Katimavik program. It calls upon the House of Commons to reinstate the funding of Katimavik in support of a program for the young people of Canada and in support of the demonstration which Senator Hébert is carrying out in the other place in support of youth.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition addressed to the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled. It has attached to it the certificate of examination. The petition has been signed by 50 young people who describe themselves as the "Friends of Katimavik". They are all from the Kitchener-Waterloo area, an area where there are many students. They are protesting the Government's cancellation of the Katimavik program.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition which has been duly signed and certified in which constituents from the ridings of Gatineau, Chicoutimi, and certainly a number of areas across the country, call upon the Government to reinstate the program Katimavik, not "PC-mavik", which the Government seems to be intending.

• (1110)

—which was a success, because it was an education for 20,000 young people who took part in the program during the last decade and because of the important community projects that were carried out by these young volunteers in Canadian municipalities during that period.

[English]

I have a second petition also calling upon the Government to reinstate the Katimavik Program rather than PC substitutes, because all Canadians will be the lesser for the loss of a program that gave young men and women a chance to fulfil their potential and show leadership while helping others. I think this petition certainly moves in concert with the battle which is now being fought by Senator Jacques Hébert.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-286, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (Parliamentary institutions).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, to remove all doubts and restore a measure of justice, I would like to introduce a Bill that is aimed at making the Official Languages Act apply specifically to Parliamentary Institutions, which according to an age-old rule as interpreted by certain people, are not bound by general legislation unless provision is specifically made otherwise.

According to this provision, the Act would apply specifically to the Library of Parliament and the permanent offices of the Senate and the House of Commons, while the private offices of Members and Senators would obviously be exempt.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PURCHASE OF CANADIAN ENCYCLOPEDIA

Question No. 381—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Since September 4, 1984, has the Department of Secretary of State purchased 27,500 sets of Canadian encyclopedias and, if so (a) at what cost to the taxpayer (b) for what reasons (c) to whom were they distributed (d) what was the name and position of the highest authority who approved the purchase?

2. (a) Was the contract let by public or invited tender (b) what were the names of the firms who submitted bids and, in each case, what was the amount of the bid (c) what was the name and address of each successful bidder?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State and the Department of Supply and Services as follows:

1. In July, 1983, Treasury Board gave authority to enter into a contract with Hurtig Publishers Ltd. and subsequently a contract was awarded by the Department of the Secretary of State in March, 1984 to Hurtig Publishers Ltd. The Contract called for the supply in September, 1985 of 20,000 sets of The Canadian Encyclopedia (English version) to the Department of the Secretary of State. However, the Secretary of State has subsequently approved Mr. Hurtig's request to buy back at the original purchase price, 9,500 of the 20,000 sets purchased by the Department of the Secretary of State. A second contract was awarded to Les éditions internationales Alain Stanké Ltée. for the supply in 1986-87 of 7,500 sets of L'Encyclopédie du Canada (French version) to the Department of the Secretary of State. Payment for the encyclopedia is to be made upon delivery.

(a) The English version costs $62.50 per set and the French version $125. The total anticipated cost of the purchase and delivery of the 18,000 sets of The Canadian Encyclopedia is $1.7 million.

(b) The Deparment of the Secretary of State is committed to promoting a sense of belonging among Canadians of all cultures. The encyclopedia will make available a record of our achievements, environment and people in a comprehensive Canadian reference book. It will serve to increase knowledge about ourselves.

(c) Hurtig Publishers Ltd. requested that the encyclopedia not be distributed until the official release date of The Canadian Encyclopedia by Hurtig Publishers Ltd. on September 6, 1985. The encyclopedia will be donated by the Secretary of State as a comprehensive Canadian reference book to departments and agencies of Government, to university and college libraries, to Canadian studies organizations and to Members of Parliament and Senators. A number of copies will also be made available to the Government of Canada Gift Bank as gifts for dignitaries. It will further be distributed to youth organizations by the International Youth Year Secretariat, to foreign universities, libraries, consulates and embassies by the Department of External Affairs. The distribution plan is currently being finalized by officials of the Department of the Secretary of State.

2. (a) No, the encyclopedia, which is Canadian in content, was developed, printed, and published by Hurtig Publishers Ltd., who possess sole proprietary rights; Stanké was authorized by Hurtig to publish the first edition of the French version, as a consideration for doing the translation.

(b) and (c) Not applicable.

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice of this point of order prior to the commencement of proceedings this morning. I think this is our first opportunity to bring the matter to your attention. I would ask that you review the remarks of the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) contained at page 11558 of Hansard, remarks which were originally enunciated in French and therefore difficult for those of us who are not bilingual to pick them up. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you may find those remarks to be unparliamentary.

We are in some difficulty here. The Hon. Member has complained recently about remarks that are alleged to have been made about him. I suggest that all of us have to come to the House with clean hands and clean language. I do not think the Hon. Member for Bourassa has done so in this case. I think there were two infringements, at least in the English translation, of parliamentary procedure and parliamentary language. Naturally we are in your hands and you may decide whether or not you find them to be unparliamentary.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I'm up on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of privilege then.

Mr. Lewis: All right, I will yield the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Could we at least know what page we are talking about? It is not normal for the Hon. Member to go on at length without telling the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member has indicated—

Mr. Gauthier: It's only one rule—

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member indicated the page and I am listening to his point of order. I do agree that he should come to his point of order quickly. I believe he claims that it was on page 11558.

Mr. Lewis: I believe I began my remarks by saying that it was on page 11558. If I did not, I am sorry, but I—

Mr. Deans: You did.

Mr. Lewis: I think so.

Ms. Copps: Apologize, that's what you should do.

Mr. Nystrom: Resign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we are naturally in your hands as to whether or not the remarks are parliamentary. I would suggest that to say: "No one in the political history of our country can equal the Prime Minister's expertise in back-stabbing" is unparliamentary.

Ms. Copps: Ask Joe Clark.

Mr. Lewis: I suggest that using the comparison to Judas Iscariot is also unparliamentary. Mind you, if you find the remarks to be parliamentary, then it would be open to those of us who want to use that kind of language to use it. I would ask the Chair to rule now or later at the Chair's leisure as to whether or not that kind of language is parliamentary.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. I certainly would be fascinated to hear your ruling, but I had thought that perhaps the Hon. Member was rising to complain about the fact that the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) was making reference to Members by their names as opposed to by their constituencies or titles.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's an additional point of order.

Mr. Deans: That clearly is out of order. I would be interested, and in fact fascinated, to hear just whether or not those kinds of references are considered to be out of order. They may not be kind or pleasant, but I was wondering if they were out of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. There has been a representation made with respect to whether or not the statement made by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) was unparliamentary. It would have been nice had the Government Member had the courage to wait until the Hon. Member for Bourassa was in the House but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. I would be glad to hear the Hon. Member on the point of order. Perhaps the Chair should explain that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary indicated that he wanted to raise a point of order with regard to language. The Chair advised the Hon. Member that the proper procedure is to do this as early as he is aware of the situation. Therefore, there is only one time that it could be raised, I must say to the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: That is exactly my point, Mr. Speaker. I understand the Standing Orders to read that an Hon. Member is to raise the matter as soon as he or she is aware of it, unless I am misreading the new rules. The statement was made some time early in the day yesterday in French and unfortunately if the Hon. Member did not avail himself of simultaneous translation that is his problem. It seems to me that he should have raised the issue when it was stated yesterday and not today in some political sham to try to take away their own blame on the issue of slighting Italian Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it there are two points of order. One is with regard to referring to Hon. Members by name and not by constituency. There are two practices toward which we are moving and that is regrettable. One is the practice of calling Hon. Members by name. I must remind Hon. Members that that is contrary to our traditions and rules. I might take the opportunity to say at the same time that we are beginning to move closer toward referring to people as "you". This is a good time for me to remind Hon. Members that questions and answers should be put through the Chair.

Our practices with regard to complaints about language arising out of Question Period, whether they are in English or French, is that they are supposed to be raised at the end of the Question Period. Notwithstanding the representations made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, I therefore would have to find that the reason we have the translation is so that Hon. Members will be able to do that and will be able to know what is going on. I must therefore find that the point was not raised at the time when it should have been raised which was at three o'clock yesterday. I am afraid that is all the Chair can do with that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, am I then to understand that the official translation of the House is when I hear it or when I read it?

Mr. Speaker: No, no. The issue of unparliamentary language or of disorder that is caused by unparliamentary language, in order to be dealt with by the Chair, has to be raised at the time. The issue of language, aside from what one thinks, and I have said some things about that, is whether a disorder is caused by that language at that time. That is the issue the Chair has to resolve. It is for that reason, in order that it be fresh in the mind of the Chair, that the matter should be raised as close as possible to the time it occurs. Otherwise, it is difficult to argue that a disorder occurred, if I may put that to the Hon. Member, because a disorder is not caused in print; a disorder is caused at the time, if there is a disorder.

Mr. Lewis: If you condone it, that is fine.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is asking the Chair to condone the language. The Chair would never condone unparliamentary language whenever it was used. However, the Chair has been asked to rule whether it is in a position at this point to cope with a matter which may or may not have been unparliamentary at the time. Because of our practices, the Chair finds that it is not in a position to make a comment on that. Those are the rules.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—VIABILITY OF FORESTRY AND AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order at this time because I believe this is the first day on which we will move a motion under the new rules dealing with opposition days. I put to the House that our intention in moving the motion today is in the hope that the Parliament of Canada might in fact agree that these issues are vital and that we could transmit the view of Parliament to the Congress of the United States.

The motion was written in traditional form; it condemns the Government. However, if during the course of the day it were deemed advisable by all Hon. Members that such a message could be transmitted to the Congress of the U.S., we would be willing to withdraw those words in condemnation or work out some other satisfactory wording in order that the message could in fact be sent as a clear message from the Parliament of Canada to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The House is aware that that is not strictly a point of order.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That this House recognizes the dire circumstances faced by Canadian forest workers by impending legislative initiatives of the U.S. Congress and the equally dire circumstances faced by Canadian farmers as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill and condemns this Government for its failure to adequately protect the viability of these two vital sectors of the Canadian economy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on the forest issue in particular. Many Canadians forget from time to time that it is the largest industry in Canada by far. In terms of the agricultural industry, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) will lead off by referring to the problems which are likely to emanate from the legislation presently before the United States Congress.

I am pleased to see the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) present in the Chamber because they at least in so far as the government side is concerned, are aware of how dire the circumstances are becoming in the United States in relation to the forest issue. I am sure you are aware of the situation as well, Mr. Speaker, having attended similar meetings with our counterparts in the United States.

It appears that most Members of the U.S. Congress, both Republicans and Democrats, have now dropped the positions which they had historically taken on subsidies and on Canadian stumpage. It looks like the Seven Veils of Ali Baba are gone now. In fact, the Americans have made quite clear that they intend to move unilaterally with some kind of embargo action, very likely in May, this being a mid-term election year. I should like to deal with some of the things which have been said both in the American Senate and in the House of Representatives. However, before doing so, I want to talk a little about what has been happening on our side of the issue here in Canada in relation to the Estimates first, because it is symptomatic of how federal Governments and provincial Governments, one after another, have dealt with Canada's largest industry and have basically treated it as a milking cow. They have used it as a cash cow rather than reinvest any substantial amount of capital back into it.

We see in this year's Estimates that in 1985 the forest industry produced $25.9 billion and that the total for forestry in the 1986-87 Estimates is $217 million. That amount is far less than a 1 per cent return by the federal Government on the value of the industry to our economy. If we look at any other sector in the Canadian economy, we find that it is dramatically higher. The forest industry alone has again been chosen to bear an unfair burden in terms of the Canadian economy. Also in looking at the Estimates we see that there is in fact $14 million less for 1986-87 than there was for 1985-86, and that there has been an actual cut in person-years from 1,337 to 1,266. I think this indicates the priority which the Government places upon the forestry, even in terms of its own campaign promise in 1984. As recently as just a few weeks ago, it was again brought to our attention in Montreal in a story entitled "Name Minister, Forestry Group Asks Government". In part, it reads as follows:

The President of the Canadian Institute of Forestry says the federal Government should fulfil a campaign promise and set up a Department of Forestry. Jack Toovey said better forest management was a 1984 campaign pledge of the Conservatives but the industry is still awaiting the creation of a ministry.

"Many people resent the fact that we have only a Ministry of State for Forestry tucked away, like a franchise farm team, under Agriculture," Toovey said.

I certainly agree with that. It was an issue on which the Government campaigned strongly and forecefully in British Columbia. It was believed that in fact there would be some kind of new move in Canada toward a full ministry and toward bringing in a national forest act, something which has not been done as yet. However, at least I have a copy of the one which is circulating in the Department. There were many proposals. We should move ahead rather than spend five cents out of every dollar collected in taxation in relation to the forest sector on reforestation, silvaculture and so on. In fact, as we see in the 1986-87 Estimates, we will in fact move backward. It will be worse than it was under the years the Liberals ran our federal forestry.

I should like to return to the axe which is falling in the United States. It is really an ominous move, coming from both the Republicans and the Democrats. It has become a very bipartisan issue, whether we are talking about how it is being handled in the Senate or in the Congress. In relation to hogs and fish, we have seen how the United States plans to move. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is down in Washington supposedly talking about free trade, freer trade or enhanced trade on these ever-shifting grounds of the trade issue. However, our American colleagues have advised us that they have no intention of moving with any speed on the issue of free trade. It will be several years in negotiations, as they pointed out. In fact, Sam Gibbons indicated that it will be 10 years, if they go ahead, before there is any substantial move in terms of free trade.

There are 300 protectionist Bills in the United States. The issues in respect of what is happening with Gibbons' Bill, Bonker's Bill, Larry Craig's Bill, Baucus' Bill, and all forestry related protectionist measures, should be receiving a much greater degree of attention by Members of the House in a multi-partisan way rather than the ad hoc approach of a little of this and little of that from our Embassy in Washington and through various trade connections in the United States.

I see the Minister for International Trade leaving the Chamber. I am sure he will be right back to hear me tell him very soon how to save the forest industry.

We have to get down to the brass tacks as a nation and deal with these protectionist Bills. The forest industry and its workers have spent $10 million down in Washington fighting the Section 332 investigation, dealing with the Department of Commerce, dealing with Members of the Senate, dealing with Members of the Congress and trying to do the job alone, while the Government of Canada is sitting idly by.

Just a few days ago I attended a Canada-U.S. meeting and Senator McClure from Idaho gave me a letter. I think it is worth reading part of it into the record today because it gives Canadians some idea of how deeply felt is the issue of Canadian penetration of soft wood forest products into the U.S. market. It is dated February 27, 1986 and read in part as follows:

Dear Mr. Fulton:

As we gather this weekend to discuss issues of mutual concern, I wish to bring to your attention a problem that is straining the long-standing relationship between our two countries: the record level of lumber imports from your country that is severely depressing the timber industry throughout the United States.

Talks between your Government and mine on this issue do not appear to be moving toward any acceptable conclusion. The longer that such negotiations continue without any resolution, the more likely it becomes that the Congress of the United States will take action to restrict your country's exports of lumber.

● (1130)

The day before that, I think as you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, in the U.S. Senate some very hefty proceedings took place, all related to Canadian wood. I must say that I do not take too seriously this particular process that went on in the Senate. I think what the Senate is saying and the steps it is taking have to be taken in the context of the manoeuvring the Americans are taking us into in May. In May when they do drop the guillotine, which they tell us they are going to do, they will point back to these kinds of things and say that they gave us lots of opportunity to do something. I know what we should be doing, Mr. Speaker, and I will be coming to that in a moment.

Let us take a look at what the special order in the Senate was on February 26, 1986. Senator Baucus was the first to speak. In a Special Order Session on Canadian Lumber Imports, he said:

Mr. President, today is a historic day for several reasons. One of them is because today the largest number of Senators are assembled here this morning in the history of the Senate to speak out under the special order section of the today's proceedings on one issue: that is, subsidized Canadian lumber imports. I repeat: The largest assembly of Senators to speak on one issue in the history of the Senate — 41 Senators.

It includes the leadership on both aisles: Senator Doyle, the majority leader; Senator Byrd, the minority leader.

It lists Senator Packwood, Senator Danforth, Senator Long and 11 members of the Finance Committee. He points out not only are there members from the Northwest, from Washington, Oregon, Idaho and California, but from every region.

We have that kind of information and material coming out through the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House, and we have a long-standing Bill of Sam Gibbons, which I hope I have a chance to deal with this morning because it proposes something that I think will be very difficult for us to deal with should the Bill be passed.

A year ago now, Dan Smith, the President of the Canadian Lumberman's Association, estimated the loss of 75,000 jobs should we cut to 25 per cent of the U.S. market, which was a proposal put forward by several members of the U.S. Congress.

Let us now take a look at how seriously the Government side takes this issue. I know the Minister of State for Forestry takes it seriously, but let us take a look in the Estimates at how serious is serious. On page 4-18 under the Canadian Forest Service, it reads:

Of particular concern during this period will be the current threat of United States' trade sanctions on Canadian lumber and the need to assure that access to this key market is not restricted. Approximately $500,000 and 14 person-years will be used for this purpose in 1986-87.

That is the kind of bell-ringing support we see coming from the Government side when Canada's largest industry is under attack from the United States.

There are two real problems at issue here. There is the supply crisis on our side, and the issue of what the U.S. may, or hopefully may not do in May of this year. Let me quote again from the Minister's Estimates: It reads:

The lack of systematic forest management in the past has resulted in a depletion of the forest resource. Canada's total area of productive forest land is about 220 million hectares. Of this amount, approximately 12 per cent has not been adequately restocked and this is increasing by 200,000 hectares, or almost 1 per cent per year.

It goes on:

Canadian exports of forest products are highly concentrated in a few market areas with 72 per cent going to the United States, 12 per cent to the European Economic Community, and 6 per cent to Japan. Consequently, Canada would be particularly vulnerable to the imposition of protectionist measures which would jeopardize exports and the Canadian share of the international markets.

The next is crucial, Mr. Speaker:

> Over the past 10 years, the rate of unemployment in forest industries has dramatically increased from 19.4 per cent to 36.4 per cent and has increased from 21.3 per cent to 41.5 per cent in forestry and logging operations, compared with the current national average of 10.4 per cent.

I went back through the rest of the Estimates to find out whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) or the Ministers responsible for Finance or the Treasury Board have bothered to read these vital statistics from the Minister of State for Forestry. There are no new programs to help those loggers who have been laid off or to help those saw-mill workers who are in a state of transition. There is no new money to help with the dire statistics which the Minister put on the record in terms of the growth of NSR land, not satisfactorily restocked lands.

Mr. Benjamin: It is something like the Department of Youth, no department.

Mr. Fulton: There are a few other figures we should have a look at. One-fifth of the forest land in Canada is in British Columbia, but one-eighth of the productive forest land in Canada is now NSR. It is not growing anything but a few weed species, perhaps there are cobblestones or the soil is running away or whatever. We have an area almost the size of the productive forest land in B.C. that is now NSR. That report comes from the Science Council of Canada.

Sweden, Finland and Norway, with one-quarter of the productive forest lands of Canada, produce the same amount of timber. We have to start asking ourselves what is going on. We are now getting our telephone poles from Finland, and our railway ties from Malaysia. We have three million hectares of NSR land in British Columbia growing at a rate of 50,000 hectares a year. Not only that, and let me say both to this House and to the U.S. Congress about one of the problems being faced in the largest timber producing region of Canada, British Columbia, we have lost 20,000 permanent forest industry jobs in B.C. due to hydro flooding and the setting aside of reserves for further flooding. We are going to lose, between now and the year 2000, 30,000 more jobs in the forest sector because of log exports at new and unprecedent heights. We have already lost 31,000 jobs as a result of the one-third fall-down effect we have had already. We are going to lose more as we face further fall-down effects because our reforestation process is so bad, so dismal.

Let us take a look at an article called "Canada's vanishing forests". Let us take a look at the history of what the federal Government response has been to the largest industry in Canada. I quote:

> In 1983 forestry accounted for an $11.7 billion foreign trade surplus, twice as large as the revenue produced by agriculture and exceeding the combined revenue from mining, coal, petroleum and natural gas operations.

But what went back? Less than 5 cents on every dollar did. That is true at the provincial levels and true at the federal level, Mr. Speaker.

Under a section headed "Lunatics", a good strong parliamentary word, we find the following:

> According to the Science Council of Canada, between 1979 and 1984 the federal Government spent only $80 million on domestic reforestation and $430 million for reforestation aid to the Third World. Said Jack Walters, a professor of forestry at the University of British Columbia: "They are lunatics."—
> Currently, there are 50 to 60 million acres of logged and unreforested land in Canada. And that figure is growing. Indeed, each year Canadian forests are reduced by almost 2.5 million acres—an area approximately the size of Prince Edward Island.

We have an incredible growing crisis of supply right across Canada.

Let us take a look at where the Government is going and how we should be responding to the threat on the fast track south of the border. We know that the Prime Minister is not on a fast track anywhere in Washington today. There will be nothing new on acid rain. As a matter of fact, if that particular pact is signed, it will not benefit our forests at all because it is just for further research in the United States. That alone is costing us several hundred million dollars a year in lost forest resources in Canada, and that is not even talking about sugar bush and other associated things, just forest growth.

We have lost 20,000 jobs in the industry since 1982 in B.C. Twenty per cent of British Columbia's labour force is in the forest industry and service jobs, 75 per cent directly in falling, bucking and hauling and so on, and 150,000 in forest industry service jobs. Seventy-five cents out of every dollar paid to forest industry and service workers in British Columbia comes from exports. That figure stands true in a number of areas in Ontario and the country.

Let us deal with the U.S. issue. Presently we hold 34 per cent of the U.S. softwood market. That is 60 per cent of B.C.'s production. It is an issue of penetration. If one spends enough time talking to Sam Gibbons, Max Baucus, or any of the other Americans, after a while they finally admit that the issue is penetration. It is true that the amount of the market which we hold has increased marginally in the last few years. In 1979 we held 27.5 per cent of the U.S. market. However, as the Canadian dollar has fallen, it has tracked exactly the increase in the amount of the U.S. market we have to 34 per cent of today.

We should be getting the message to our American friends not to go the Smoot-Hawley route, the protectionist route. We should mobilize a large force of Canadians through trade consulates throughout the United States where Americans are running on this issue at a grass roots level. We must remind them that two million Americans are directly employed producing export goods for Canada. In the last eight years they have increased their share of our market in home appliances from 45 per cent to 95 per cent. The Americans are penetrating the markets for semifinished and manufactured products at an unprecedented rate.

We should be getting the message to Democrats and Republicans throughout the United States that if they start blocking our wood products they will unfairly, and illegitimately, under international law, punish Canadian workers and the Canadian economy. We must get our people to the United States to explain to the Americans that they are getting good dollars out of our economy and should allow us to get our fair share with our raw resources as well.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House today and for raising it as forcefully as he has. He has done a service, not only to his own province and the people employed in the B.C. forestry industry, but to the country. Forestry has far too long not been given the recognition it deserves in terms of its contribution to the economy of the country.

One of the matters which has troubled me with regard to this debate during the last number of years, and particularly during the last 12 months, is a long-standing attitude of the Government that there is protectionist pressure south of the border vis-a-vis Mexican oil, Japanese cars, and many other products, and that Canadian lumber was caught up almost by accident in the protectionist flight of fancy which is occurring south of the border. For a long time that was the Government's position, both within this country and in its posture with the American administration and legislators.

As recently as July, 1985, the Minister of International Trade was talking about a possible exemption for Canadian lumber in protectionist legislation. He put the case publicly in the business section of The Ottawa Citizen that Canada was simply being caught up in a protectionist trend and that we should not worry because it has not been targeted at us. The Americans now have a Bill entitled "Limitation on the Importation of Canadian Softwood for Five-Year Period". I do not know what could be more direct.

Does the Member believe, as I do, that we have been fiddling while Rome—being the jobs in that industry—has been burning, and that the Government's posture has been much too soft?

Mr. Fulton: The Member has asked an important question. There is every variety of Bill one could possibly want. Larry Craig has proposed a tariff of 10 per cent. Jim Weaver has proposed a 25 per cent limit. I think the U.S. Congress will use the vehicle of Sam Gibbons' Bill, H.R. 2451. One of the main concerns which Canadians had was that handling the transportation costs were going to be included. Sam Gibbons always liked to talk about leveling the playing field. As a result of the 332 investigations and the work done by the Canadian forest industry in providing good quality material to the various trade people in Washington, he realized that was unfair because of the nature of our two forestry regimes.

The politics of the issue is changing. The Weavers, the Bonkers, the Baucuses, and the Craigs are no longer alone. They have some very strong spokespeople who are no longer silent, including people like Sam Gibbons who says that something is going to happen in May. All 300 of these protectionist Bills will not move, but lumber is very high on that agenda.

I said a year ago in this House that we should be hiring a major group of well-informed Canadians related to the forest sector to be spanned out through the United States to deal with the issues of subsidy, stumpage, and so on. It would be basically on informational process. We can identify very quickly those 2 million Americans who are employed full time producing goods which come into the Canadian market. They are a good group to target.

We did a good job in targeting the National Home Builders' Association which pointed out that the cost of homes in the United States would go up if there was an embargo on Canadian SPF because it is consumer preferential in the United States. American contractors and home builders preferentially buy SPF because it is stronger, better for rafters, joists, studs, and most basic construction. It is certainly far better than southern yellow pine for most of those processes.

As the Member who asked me the question knows very well, in some areas of the United States this is a very hot domestic issue. Mack Mattingly, the Senator from Georgia, made that very clear to us at our recent meeting. He indicated how difficult it would be for me to stand up during an election campaign and say that it is good that 50 per cent of the housing starts in Prince Rupert are being built with southern yellow pine from Georgia when I have buckers, fallers, skidder operators, and independent truck-loggers lined up outside my constituency office. Fifty per cent of the wood used in the State of Georgia in 1985 was from British Columbia. That is a tough grass roots issue for a Senator or anyone else running in the American political system to deal with.

However, an intelligent approach by Canada with regard to our largest single industry would be to fan out respected trade representatives through those states and get the information to those workers who produce goods and have penetrated Canada's economy. We must remind those people in Dallas who make coffee pots, toasters, and refrigerators of what happened with Smoot-Hawley, the wood related issue which brought about the depression in the 1930s.

We must get quality information into the United States, and we have very little time left. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) has allocated 14 person years to deal with it. That is not enough. We have to deal with the false, albeit well-intentioned, representations of people like Bonker, Craig, Weaver, and Baucus who are mis-stating the facts with regard to subsidies, Canadian stumpage policies, and the rates of penetration. There is all kinds of good, bilaterally agreed upon information available, but if we do not disseminate it, and if the U.S. Congress proceeds in May, even if they intend it to be only for a short term, it will do no good. The Canadian Lumbermen's Association says 75,000 jobs will be lost.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the three political Parties in this House are not taking this issue nearly as seriously as it has now been presented to us as Canadian legislators. They have told us point blank out front, and these are Republicans and Democrats from the Senate and the House who are friends of Canada, that this is a powerful domestic issue. There does not seem to be any quick and easy way to handle it, and that they are going to legislate it, and are going to do so in May. They say that we may as well know they are going to do it. They are not going to give us any more steam and hot air on subsidies and stumpage. The seven veils of Ali Baba are gone. It is a hungry, nasty, political face that we are looking at down there in terms of looking for ballots to go in boxes. The way we can stop it is by a highly mobilized—it may be very expensive but we have a couple of months to do it—good group of forestry representatives in every state in the United States; get them in Alaska as we do not need to worry about Hawaii right now. There are 49 states we have to deal with and only about a dozen that are very, very serious. It is the only way we can do it. It is an issue of penetration, it is a bilateral issue, and if we do not do something pretty soon our largest industry that now employs a million Canadians may very quickly become our smallest industry.

Mr. St. Germain: My greatest concern, and as the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) knows, is that the issue we are addressing logically has to be first and foremost in the minds of all Canadians, but especially British Columbians. The thing that I question is that the Hon. Member has this concern and speaks of a balance and gaining the confidence of the Americans, but as a Member of Parliament from western Canada I feel we have to deal with the United States of America in a broader spectrum, and quit criticizing them. I am asking him why his Party and a lot of his Members who sit over there, as well as some of the Liberal Members like the Member from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) are so critical of the Americans, criticizing them on every issue that they possibly can. I have run businesses and have never criticized my customers. These people are our best customers. I would like a short answer from the Hon. Member as to why they continue to knock the Americans when they need the Americans so badly?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): A very short answer.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my view is that Canadians should never be a door mat to the United States. If you look, for example, at the boundary issues in my constituency you realize pretty quickly that the nicer we are the less we get. What have they ever done on acid rain? What have they ever done on toxic waste in Niagara? They do not do anything. If you do not legitimately criticize people you get nowhere.

Mr. St. Germain: There you go again criticizing. Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the midst of the echoes of the conflict across the floor of the House of Commons with respect to what our position should be, vis-a-vis the Americans, I would attempt to make a few comments on this motion today by the New Democratic Party in the name of the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I said a moment ago that I supported the motion. I think all Members would support a motion recognizing the dire consequences faced by Canadian forest workers as a result of the pending legislation in the U.S. No matter what side of the House we sit on we would endorse a motion that would seek to draw the attention of the Members of the House, indeed all Canadians, to the importance of that industry to workers in this country, a million people in all, directly and indirectly. I had not intended to address the matter raised by the Member opposite, but I cannot help but say a few words.

It seems to me that if Members of the Government are suggesting to Canadians that the way we do business with the United States is to take a position of simply echoing in every circumstance U.S. foreign policy, and therefore they will buy more lumber, then that is precisely the suggestion that has been made, that Canada sell her sovereignty, give it up totally in exchange for our ability to sell goods and services. I do not think many Members of the House, including Members on the government side would support that kind of approach to our relationship with the United States. It must be a relationship of mutual respect, mutual interest, and at times we must mutually agree to disagree. I do not think we can begin this debate by saying the reason we are having trouble with lumber is that we occasionally disagree with the U.S. position. I do not think Members in any of the Parties in the House would endorse that kind of position. That is not the debate here today.

The Government of Canada has been slow initially to recognize the seriousness of the situation we are seeing develop now in the U.S. Congress. They either have been slow to realize the seriousness of the degree to which U.S. legislators are prepared to go or, if they had recognized how serious the problem was they were slow to publicly acknowledge it. Whether or not they were slow, at this stage I think that as Members of Parliament we can say that all Members of the House on all sides, including Ministers of the Crown, recognize we have a problem.

As many as 75,000 jobs in Canada's lumber industry, primarily in British Columbia, are now in jeopardy. The assessment of the Member for Skeena is that as the snow melts and as the weather warms up we can expect to see a deep freeze placed on Canada's ability to export to the United States. That is a serious and sober assessment of what is happening south of the border. The Member has made an appropriate recommendation and suggestion to the Government. This may not be the most palatable comparison, but as a Newfoundlander I remember well the debate on the seal hunt. I remember well going to Europe with facts and figures. We left our hearts on the doorstep at home, left our emotions and went with a series of statistics about numbers, people's livelihood, the irrational trade view approach being taken by the EEC parliament and being confronted, after the committee meetings were over and we were having a glass of wine together over a meal, by European parliamentarians saying to us about the seals: We know you are right, we know that our Bill is irrational, we know the seal hunt is not in danger of extinction, but brother, my voters think it is. My voters are going to send me out of this place unless I vote to ban your seal hunt and the import of seal fur.

The same kind of situation occurs in the United States. I think we can go down as parliamentarians and engage in a discussion in that country with other legislators and we can set out the parameters of this problem. We can deal with it in rational terms. We can dredge up the report of the International Trade Commission, which properly investigated the whole matter and came to a determination that, indeed, there was no unfair subsidy existing. We could set aside complaints by the U.S. industry and legislators that Canada's forest lands are owned by provincial Governments and that that constitutes some kind of subsdidy by pointing out that that is a jurisdictional question and a question of sovereignty.

We could look at the position of the Canadian dollar vis-a-vis the American dollar and see logically that that has given us an increased opportunity these last number of years to export our products, be it lumber, fish or iron ore. As legislators we could agree that the Bills that are being put forward by Mr. Weaver and Mr. Bonker and others are not well founded in fact. They are a political response to their constituents at home. They represent shortsighted one-dimensional trade position that ultimately could have the kind of ramifications that the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) suggests, that is, a trade war, the restriction of products from U.S. into Canada and from Canada into the U.S.

What the House needs to do, and what the Government of Canada needs to do, is continue to make the U.S. administration aware that we view this issue as not just a serious issue, but an extremely critical issue in this country. It is an issue for which there can be no negotiations in this country. We are not prepared to trade off 75,000 jobs in the forest industry to get a free trade agreement. That is not on the table.

In addition to doing that, we have to go to the constituents of those legislators who have put this draft legislation before the U.S. Congress. If the Government of Canada is not prepared to put its money where its mouth is and allow a non-governmental coalition to do an education job, because that is what we are talking about, then it will have refused to fight the first battle and will have lost the war.

The Canadian forest industry, in its contribution to our balance of trade, represents more than the fishery, the agricultural industry, the mining industry and, now more than ever, the oil and gas industry put together. Directly and indirectly it represents one in 10 jobs. Once you move away from the manufacturing belt along the border, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, the forest industry becomes the backbone of regional and local economies. Those who are listening to this debate and who live in the pulp and paper town of Stephenville in my riding, or in the pulp and paper town of Kenora in northern Ontario, or similar towns in Quebec, should not kid themselves that this is primarily a British Columbia issue. It is not. The workers of British Columbia are on the front line of a trade protectionist stance being adopted south of the border. If that stance is not blunted now, then those of us who make our living in the pulp and paper industry outside of British Columbia are going to be next. If they can rationalize this stance based on the stumpage system in this country, provincial ownership of forestry lands and a low Canadian dollar, the Americans will be very quick to come to the conclusion they can rationalize restricting all other Canadian forestry products in the same manner.

This House needs to adopt a non-partisan approach to this issue. As I say, I believe the Government was slow—perhaps many of us were slow—in recognizing just how serious this issue is. We were slow in recognizing just how determined this lobby south of the border is, just how bereft of real information American citizens are about the consequences of setting up these kinds of trade barriers.

Having said that, surely it is the responsibility of the Government to provide the means, that being money, and the responsibility of all parliamentarians to provide the support, for representatives of this industry to go down to the U.S. and begin the intensive education process among American citizens so that they can take the political pressure off the legislators who are putting these Bills forward. The stark reality is that those legislators fear for their political lives. This legislation is not motivated by or grounded in a sound trade position. It is motivated by and grounded in a desire on the part of those U.S. legislators to be re-elected. Those of us who have had the opportunity to go to Washington know that. They acknowledge it privately.

I view this issue as being important enough that I would rather spend my time in this House endorsing a Government policy to provide the means required. I understand the nervousness on the part of the Government about being accused of politicking in another country's jurisdiction and so on. Yet the previous U.S. Ambassador, Mr. Robinson, was never reluctant to let Canada know how the U.S. administration, let alone the American people felt about FIRA, or our defence policy, or our providing incentives to business, or our regional economic policies. If the representative of the U.S. President in Canada can exercise that right, sometimes on matters that were purely domestic Canadian issues, then surely the Minister of International Trade would agree that on a matter which directly impacts on Canada and as many as a million Canadians we ought not to be nervous or reluctant to make the means available to go directly over the heads of the U.S. administration and legislators to the American people. We have to make them fully understand the consequences of an attempt by the U.S. Congress to pass this kind of legislation.

There is a constituency which exists in the U.S. and which can assist us in making our case. There is a coalition of U.S. home builders, a number of newspapers, unions, railroad companies and others who have already announced their opposition to this kind of trade legislation. We have other allies there. It is the job of the Government, in a more substantial way than has been the case, to go down and work with that coalition. It is our job to put whatever resources are necessary at the disposal of an appropriately developed organization to make Canada's case. If we do not, the lumber industry in this country will suffer the same irrational fate as the seal hunt. There is not a thinking, honest Member with an ounce of integrity in this House of Commons who truly believes, given the facts, that the seal hunt had to be banned to save the species. There is not a thinking, honest member of the EEC Parliament with an ounce of integrity, given the facts, who believes the seal hunt had to be stopped to save the species. There is not one member of the EEC Parliament who, given the facts, believes that the seal herd was in any way in danger. But those EEC parliamentarians voted to ban the hunt nevertheless, because that was the view being expressed by their constituents who had heard only one side of the debate.

I was a member of the previous Liberal administration that in my view was wrongly advised to confront the protest organizations on that issue head on rather than going over their heads to the people who were being targeted by those protest organizations. Instead of a name calling exchange with Greenpeace, or whoever it might have been, the Government of the day would have been much wiser to go directly to the public of Europe with solid information and unemotional appeals. That approach was not followed vigorously enough in order to blunt what happened.

We learned a lesson as a result of that, despite our good intentions. Let us apply that lesson to what is happening with our forest industry today and take whatever means are necessary to speak directly to the American public. It is only in that way, with the determination to do the job right and use whatever means are necessary to make the case, will we be able to lift this cloud of uncertainty from over the heads of Canada's forest workers and, inded, an industry that has not had the best returns in the last six years that one would like to see.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, today I heard the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) defending the interests of our forests and the forestry industry in Canada. I wonder how he can reconcile his party's attitude over the last twenty years with the statements he made today.

When the Liberals were in power, they promoted rapid and uncontrolled harvesting of our Canadian forests. At the time, you were granting subsidies aimed exclusively at supporting the cost of cutting, transporting and sawing lumber. At the time, it did not occur to you that Canadians would be better off with having the right balance between harvesting and renewal of our forests, but renewal was not one of your concerns. Reforestation provides a return in sixty or eighty years, and so it was not politically attractive. Here, as in other areas, you preferred to be consumers of our natural resources. You failed to consider the need for renewal.

I would therefore ask the Hon. Member why this Government failed to respect the natural balance, except in a few marginal cases, and why his Government, and this cannot be denied, always promoted exports of our raw materials and never helped to establish, on a national basis, the processing plants we need to upgrade and enhance the value of our forest resources in this country.

It is useless to protest against the U.S. threat. You should have done so years ago and planned for the future, because in forestry, one must plan 60 years ahead.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the only word I can use to describe the Hon. Member's intervention is "sad". We are in the House today to discuss a motion which simply states:

> That this House recognize the dire circumstances faced by Canadian forest workers by impending legislative initiatives of the U.S. Congress and the equally dire circumstances faced by Canadian farmers as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill and condemns this Government for its failure to adequately protect the viability of these two vital sectors of the Canadian economy.

We stand in the House today in the hope of sensitizing Canadian parliamentarians and, through them, the people of Canada, to the situation facing Canada's forestry workers and to the real dangers to an industry that employs a million Canadians.

It is tragic that when I give a speech asking the Government to allow this to be a non-partisan issue so that we may work together to develop a means to prevent this threat, a Member who obviously knows little if anything about the forest industry is only motivated to stand on his feet and simply berate us and question what we did for 20 years. It is tragic that the Member, having heard the discussion, could not address the plight of Canadian forestry workers or what action we ought to take as a Parliament to find a remedy to that threat, but could only ask what we have done for the last 20 years. Is it not possible, in the so-called spirit of reform, that there are some issues of national importance about which Members could stand and participate in a constructive debate in the House? Is it not possible that we could put aside our partisanship on some issues, as we are learning to do in legislative committees, in order to write better Bills and assist the Government in formulating policy to deal with problems, rather than worrying about being blamed for mistakes?

It is not my purpose to stand here today and assign blame. Despite the comments of the back-bencher, I believe that the Ministers who are sitting in the House today are aware of the gravity of this problem and do not dismiss our concern as mere criticism of the Americans again. I believe Ministers are so aware that they probably spend much of their time trying to address the problem. I hope the reason they are in the House today is not to defend themselves—at least as far as my comments are concerned, because I do not intend to attack the Government—but to sense the consensus and the will of Parliament and the people of Canada to use all the legitimate means at our disposal to support our forest industry and the people employed in that industry.

Therefore, the Hon. Member's question is not worthy of comment except to say that he ought to pay more attention. Perhaps, as he spends more time in the House, he will sense the tone of Parliament and that on occasion Parliament can be a place where we can work together in mutual recognition that Canada's interests are at stake, and that we ought to make our best effort as parliamentarians to defend Canadian industry and Canadian employees in their time of need.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that our Government needs to be lectured by the Hon. Member in regard to the gravity of the situation. I firmly agree with the Hon. Member that this should transcend all political barriers and should be dealt with in a manner that is beneficial to all Canadians. I only want him to do one thing for the House. I want him to speak to his leader and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and ask them to stop criticizing the Americans.

If we are going to make any deal it will have to be done through conciliation, consultation and good sound business acumen. The actions of his leader and some members of his Party, as well as some members of the socialist Party, essentially destroy anything that could be construed as good business acumen. I simply ask him to speak to those Members so that we may get on with establishing a good sound footing to deal with softwood lumber and whatever other products may be involved.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the Hon. Member who has just spoken, and to repeat what I said a few moments ago, any type of relationship, in particular a relationship between sovereign nations, is based on mutual respect. Running the Government of Canada is not like running a corner grocery store where one gives the guy who delivers the bread a break on a pack of cigarettes and he counters with a break on transportation costs for delivering the bread. That is not the way it is done. Canadian foreign policy is not negotiable or subject to blackmail on the basis of trade laws in the United States. We do not make foreign policy based on what actions may or may not be taken in the United States vis-a-vis our trade practices. The second one walks around with that notion in one's mind one has gotten rid of the whole question of sovereignty and the fact that we are a sovereign state. The second it is believed that that is the way business is done, even with respect to the question of threatened restrictive practice by way of legislation to Canadian lumber, we might as well make an application to become the fifty-first State. I would suggest that even some States maintain more sovereignty than that.

I do not believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), if he were here in the House, or the Minister for International Trade, or the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) would endorse the comments which have just been made by the Hon. Member opposite. With sober second reflection, and after having examined the proposition which he has just put forward, I do not believe the Hon. Member would say that sovereignty is a barter proposition.

Mr. St. Germain: No one said that!

Mr. Tobin: I do not believe that with sober consideration he would even endorse his own comments. Canada is not up for sale; we are a sovereign nation. As the Hon. Member for Skeena said, we are not a doormat for anyone. It is not just a question of being someone's doormat; we are a sovereign and proud state whose policy, foreign or otherwise, is made with our conscience and with what best represents the views of Canada in terms of the criteria, morals and principles of the country in mind. It is not made in terms of what will get us another buck because of a threatened boycott south of the border. That type of politics is cheap and is below any suggestion seriously made by any Member of Parliament who has any notion of sovereignty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Resuming debate with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher).

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say with some certainty that nobody in this House is more aware than I am that Canada faces serious and continuing problems in preserving our access to U.S. markets for our lumber and farm products. I have spent a good part of the past year and a half fighting a running battle to keep that market open. So far it has remained open.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: I am more than a little surprised that Members on the other side of the House can maintain straight faces when they accuse the Government of ignoring the issue of access to the U.S. market. We are the only Government in recent history to give it the attention it deserves. We are the ones who proposed bilateral trade talks with the United States for the express purpose of securing and enhancing that access. Where is our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today? I believe all Hon. Members know that the Prime Minister is in Washington at the Shamrock II Summit talking about, among other thing, access.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: So I suggest that it is this Government which is moving to resolve our problems of access. We are doing so in spite of, and certainly not because of, the efforts of the Opposition.

Perhaps I should start out by explaining a few facts of life to Hon. Members who have just honoured us with their comments. The first fact is that despite its great dependence on Canada the United States is still a sovereign nation. We are not yet in a position to dictate to its Congress on trade matters. The second fact is that the United States Government is organized somewhat differently from ours. Down there they have a separation of powers; Congress acts independently of the administration. The third fact is that Canada does not have diplomatic relations with the U.S. Congress. We have informal relations which are, for the most part, warm and friendly. However, our only formal diplomatic relations are with the administration, and those are excellent. The fourth fact is that the U.S. administration is known for its opposition to protectionism everywhere, including the U.S. Congress. However, that protectionism still exists, and it threatens Canada on a great many fronts.

Let us consider some of those fronts. In recent years maritime potato farmers have had their access to the U.S. market threatened by an anti-dumping action. The U.S. Department of Agriculture is currently considering a proposal which would reduce by more than one-half the number of customs ports on the Maine border through which potatoes can be exported. This action is transparently protectionist in its intent.

Canadian hog farmers are faced with a countervailing duty on their exports to the U.S., a measure which depresses prices for all sales on the Canadian market, thus reducing returns to the farmers. There is not only that to consider but one of the states, the State of South Dakota, has arbitrarily imposed what amounts to an outright embargo on the imports of Canadian livestock into that state.

Manufacturers of food products containing sugar have had their access to U.S. markets severely curtailed by quotas. British Columbia raspberry growers have been hit in succession with anti-dumping duties, the threat of countervailing duties and an assessment imposed by the State of Washington. Over the years our beef producers have had their access to the U.S. market curtailed as a result of trade restrictive action under the U.S. Meat Import Act.

As regards lumber, Members of the House are all too aware of the intensity of the protectionist pressures in the U.S. aimed at restricting our access to a $3 billion per year export market. These threats are not new. In recent years our lumber exports have been subjected to two investigations by the U.S. International Trade Commission, and yet another one, of extraordinary complexity, by the Department of Commerce. None of these investigations by U.S. agencies under U.S. laws provided any substantiation for the persistent myth that Canadian lumber exports are subsidized. They all found there was no subsidization and that Canada was trading fairly.

This Government came to office a year and one-half ago determined to put our relationship with the United States on a better basis. The record is one of solid achievement. Trade featured prominently in the Prime Minister's discussion with President Reagan in Quebec City. The trade declaration which was released one year ago today reflected a firm commitment to halt protectionism in cross-border trade in goods and services and established an ambitious work program aimed at reducing and eliminating existing barriers to trade. While protectionist pressures are strong in both countries, both Governments can take some satisfaction over a creditable performance in avoiding introduction of new trade barriers.

In addition, we have made some progress in resolving irritants and removing impediments to trade. For example, we have made fundamental changes in foreign investment policy and the national energy policy. The U.S. has moved to terminate restrictions on exports of oil to Canada permitting a more rational allocation of energy resources. Both Governments have taken action to eliminate tariffs on computer parts. This record of achievement provided the basis for the Government's decision, announced in the House by the Prime Minister last September, to pursue a new trade agreement with the United States.

I would suggest that the resolution we are debating today is evidence that the "New Dinosaur Party" or, if you will, the "New Demagogue Party" is desperately trying to have it both ways. They accuse us today of not doing precisely what they attacked us for doing yesterday, trying to secure and enhance access for all Canadian exports to our most important export market.

Maybe a good sign, from which I can take some encouragement is that Members opposite are waking up to the fact that the constant threats of trade restrictive action are extracting a heavy price, not only in the legal costs to defend against these actions but in the investment climate in Canada. May I also take it that this resolution reflects a belated recognition of the fact that we need a better set of rules for the conduct of our trade and economic relations with the United States, or is that too much to assume?

I might add that the protectionist threat extends beyond lumber and agriculture. Other products currently threatened by trade restrictive actions include fish, shingles and shakes, castings, fork-lift arms and uranium. The Government is taking each of these threats seriously and is working closely with the affected producers and provincial Governments concerned to safeguard our access to the U.S. market.

Let me talk for a few moments about the specific threat posed to lumber by Bills before the U.S. Congress. My colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew), will discuss other aspects of the lumber issue. It is quite obvious that Bills now under consideration in the U.S. Congress would, if implemented, impose unacceptable costs to the Canadian economy. Indeed, they could imperil the whole Canada-U.S. trading relationship. I can understand the basis for the concerns of the U.S. Congress, and my hon. friends have alluded to that.

The American lumber industry has experienced a protracted period of unprofitable operations. The result has been closures and layoffs. These problems are not unique to the U.S. There have been shutdowns and layoffs in Canada too. Only a market turnaround will provide a solution to that problem. In this environment, it is easy to understand the concerns of the U.S. Congress for the American lumber industry. What I cannot accept is that Canadian lumber should be made the scapegoat.

Our access to the U.S. market has been bought and paid for in previous rounds of miltilateral trade negotiations. It has taken time for Canadian producers to establish their position in the States. They have done so by being competitive and providing a product the customer wants.

There are now about a dozen Bills before the U.S. Congress designed to restrict entry of Canadian softwood products. The one that is the most serious threat is the one introduced by the representative from Florida, Mr. Sam Gibbons, the Chairman of the House Sub-committee on Trade. The Gibbons Bill is most likely to be rolled into an omnibus trade Bill.

The Gibbons Bill and a companion Senate Bill sponsored by Senator Baucus would modify U.S. countervail law to deem that a subsidy existed where Canadian stumpage prices, the price a lumber company must pay the Government for cutting down a tree on Crown land, fell short of an arbitrary figure based on American stumpage prices.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is taking the threat posed by these Bills very seriously. One of the things we have been doing is dealing directly with the author of the Gibbons Bills. I first met with Representative Gibbons in Washington in June of last year and set out our position with respect to his proposed legislation and the situation facing the North American lumber industry. At my invitation, Mr. Gibbons and a Congressional delegation visited Vancouver for a briefing by industry and Government, both federal and provincial, on Canadian forest management policies. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is well aware of this meeting. He was there along with other Members of the House.

In response to a suggestion made by Representative Gibbons at the conclusion of the meeting, I provided him with detailed written comments on his proposals. That critique clearly demonstrated the basis of our opposition to the concepts embodied in his proposed amendments to U.S. countervailing duty law.

In addition, a comprehensive and well co-ordinated Canadian campaign of private and public diplomacy has been maped out and has been under way for some time. This strategy runs along the following lines. First we are trying to neutralize the U.S. campaign of misinformation. We are doing this by actively disseminating in the United States the Canadian perspective on this issue, by ensuring that the administration understands our position and by conducting a co-ordinated campaign in Congress.

We are also gaining allies in the U.S. by alerting American constituencies that would suffer from restrictions on lumber imports. Among those, of course, is the housing industry. The campaign involves the co-ordination of a large number of players including the Embassy, all 13 Canadian Consulates and the Washington representatives of Canadian industries and federal and provincial government Departments.

The Canadian message in the U.S. has been a firm one. Our arguments are that we are fair traders, that we are not benefiting at U.S. expense and that our success in the U.S. market is based on competitive market factors including a favourable exchange rate, consumer preference for Canadian wood products and superior productivity. These arguments, by the way, were essentially supported by the U.S. International Trade Commission's recent Section 332 report. This message has been and continues to be communicated through slide presentations to Congressional staffers, press briefings, speeches, testimony to Congressional committees, information kits and briefing sessions with Congressmen and administration officials.

The strategy we have been employing has enjoyed a number of successes. For example, we have received strong editorial support from major newspapers across the U.S. We have an excellent organization in place that links the federal Government, industry and the provinces. We have mobilized U.S. interest groups including transport interests, lumber dealers, home builders and the like, and they have coalesced in clear and vocal opposition to restraints on Canadian softwood lumber. We have, in other words, succeeded in stalling the momentum for Congressional legislation that would affect Canadian lumber exports.

We also have the support of the administration in resisting linkage between the lumber issue and bilateral trade negotiations. Nevertheless, there still remains a very real threat of Congressional action or a trade remedy petition. The Canadian Government is working with the administration to help manage the lumber issue. To that end, Canadian and U.S. officials have recently resumed a new round of talks at the request of U.S. trade representative, Ambassador Yeutter, to review the factors affecting competition in the North American lumber industry and to clarify Government policies and practices in Canada and the U.S. that affect lumber trade. The first meeting was held in San Diego on January 20, 1986. A technical session took place in Prince George on February 12 and 14 and discussions took place again in Washington on March 12. A further meeting will be held in Ottawa next month.

The Canadian Government will continue to commit the resources that are required until this, our number one trade problem with the U.S., is resolved. The Prime Minister is addressing this issue in his discussions this week with President Reagan and the Congressional leadership. I can say with some confidence that no Canadian Government has ever mounted a campaign as broad, as intense and as persistent on any previous Canada-U.S. trade issue.

Mr. Kelleher: I am equally confident that our softwood lumber campaign is yielding results. The American lumber industry has been trying to restrict our exports for several years and the Gibbons Bill itself has been before Congress for more than a year. Yet our lumber still crosses the border unrestricted and we believe that talks between our two Governments on the matter will, in the long run, produce a satisfactory resolution to this issue.

The Opposition is quick to criticize but offers no concrete alternatives other than the status quo and ad hoc responses to rising American protectionism. Unlike the Opposition, the Government believes that it is neither very self-respecting nor very sovereign for Canada to run down to Washington hat in hand every week to appeal against yet another protectionist threat. We believe that the best way to resolve the trade dispute with the United States is to negotiate a binding agreement backed up by a joint dispute settlement mechanism, a mechanism in which we will have an equal voice.

It is now six months since the Prime Minister informed the House of the Government's intention to pursue a bilateral trade agreement with the United States. Opposition Members have been railing loud and long against this approach. They have been railing and they have been wailing but they have also been failing. They have failed to come up with any viable alternatives because they have none. Indeed, Canadians are still not clear where the Liberal Party stands. Its external affairs critic says that he agrees with the recommendation of the Macdonald Commission that Canadians negotiate a comprehensive trade agreement with the U.S. However, its trade critic disagrees. Who knows where the Leader of the Opposition stands on this critical issue? Some day I assume he will let us know. As for NDP Members, they appear to be leaning toward a policy of heavy-handed Government intervention in the economy, nationalization of some industries, central planning, import controls, price controls and currency exchange controls—a policy of economic barricades. It would isolate Canada from the rest of the world. It would decimate our trade with the rest of the world and throw many Canadians out of work. Policies such as these have never worked in the past and they would be catastrophic today in a world in which countries have becomes interlinked by trade and investment. A state controlled economy is repugnant to a majority of Canadians today.

Finally, let me reiterate for the benefit of Hon. Members opposite that the Government has launched a major initiative to negotiate a better framework for the conduct of our trade relations with the United States. If those Members are genuine in their concern for lumber workers and farmers, they will lend their support to this important endeavour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I do not know who wrote the Minister's speech, but I found it to be both naive and nasty. Certainly one could have put it together by reading press clippings. I expected something more. As the Minister read it, I was surprised that he could not go on the record with a few of his own words. I could tell that he had not listened to what had been said on this side of the House. I gave my speech in what I thought was the good interests of the country, looking for some kind of multi-Party support to do something in the United States. I do not think the Minister truly understands even what he just read.

He said that he did not have any direct relations, diplomatic or othersie, other than with the administration of the United States. I attended the meeting in Vancouver when the Minister offered to provide amendments to a Bill before Congress. I have read the document which was sent to the United States. It dealt with handling and transportation. It did not deal with the issue which is now very clear in the minds of both Republicans and Democrats in the U.S. Senate and in the House of Representatives. They have a grass roots political issue; they are concerned about the degree of penetration, and they want to put their workers back to work. They have dropped the stumpage issue and the subsidization issue. The Minister is probably well aware of what are the implications for British Columbia of the section on competitive bidding and the rules for removal rights in HR-2451.

I should like to hear him comment on whether he agrees that it is high time to get a major delegation of well informed Canadians down into those areas of the United States where there is a continuing dissemination of inappropriate, misleading and at times false information about the issue, and to deal with the two million Americans who produce commodities which come into the Canadian market. We know the reason for the editorials in the U.S. newspapers. Approximately 57 per cent of the newsprint used in that country comes from Canada. Obviously they will protect their own vested interest of $3.4 billion last year in Canadian newsprint. We know why home builders will continue to be publicly supportive of Canadian SPF. It is because they buy it competitively and they know that it is a better quality product for construction.

We as a Parliament and as a country are not dealing with a matter with which Members of the U.S. Senate and House are prepared to deal. I am referring to the grass roots politics of the matter. Short of doing what I suggested in the House today, I should like to hear what else the Minister proposes. A continuation of the model of simply going through Washington, our 13 trade outlets and our provincial trade outlets in the United States will not get to the grass roots issue in the U.S. and will not get the political signal back to the Republicans and Democrats before they go on the floor of their House and pass a protectionist Bill. I think the Minister agrees that it will be based upon Sam Gibbons' HR-2451 model. It will have more in it related to various other commodities such as natural gas. However, the issue is not being dealt with by the Government, and I find it incredible that the Minister's speech was nasty—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I point out to him that neither I nor any member of the Government ever offered or gave to Mr. Gibbons and Congress suggested amendments to his Bill. In fact, what we sent down and submitted to him was a critique of the legislation, in which we quite clearly said that in its present form it was not acceptable to the Government of Canada. I am sure it would not have been acceptable to the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Also I point out that perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware of what arose from our last meeting in Washington. I should like to advise him directly that the Americans have not abandoned, nor have they dropped their claims about our stumpage practices or their claim that our industry is subsidized. I want the Hon. Member to know that both those claims by the Americans are alive and well.

Also I would point out that indeed we are attempting to do something. I have already listed for the Hon. Member and for other Hon. Members opposite the number of meetings we have had and are continuing to have with the U.S. administration in attempting to resolve the problem. We are continuing to meet on an individual basis with influential Members of the House of Representatives and of the U.S. Senate. We are continuing our efforts. We are meeting throughout the United States with lobby and pressure groups. For the last six months we have already been doing the various things which the Hon. Member suggested. Obviously, since we are doing them, I think the Member should be agreeing with our efforts and assisting and applauding us, not sitting here and being critical of us for doing nothing.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions for the Minister. It is with a great deal of disappointment that I rise today. The Minister was given an opportunity to take this issue out of the narrow confinements of partisan debate and to respond in the manner in which the matter was raised by opposition Members. It was not raised in a way which would warrant attempts at amateur poetry, talking about opposition Members railing and wailing and often failing. My goodness, a grade two student would receive an F for that attempt at being poetic. That attempt shows that the Minister has failed to grasp the opportunity to put aside partisanship this day, to seek and to build some consensus on what ought to be the Canadian position.

How can the Minister continue to cast the resolution of lumber difficulties and of threatened walls to be put up in the context of a comprehensive free trade agreement? It is time that we faced reality. A comprehensive trade agreement for all intents and purposes is dead. The U.S. Congress has said repeatedly, even specifically on the narrow issue of lumber, that it will not enter into and will balk at a comprehensive free trade agreement with Canada until the lumber issue is resolved.

The Minister tells us that he wants to resolve the lumber issue in the context of a comprehensive free trade agreement. Whether the Minister likes it or not, and whether I like it or not, it is becoming more evident every day that there is a lame duck president in the United States. How can the Minister continue to relate the resolution of a problem that threatens one million jobs directly and indirectly in Canada to a free trade agreement that is dead?

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat chagrined and saddened to hear the Hon. Member suggesting that I of all people am partisan in replying to this matter. I would only ask the Hon. Member to refer to the resolution before this House. It seems awfully partisan to me. It ends by saying:

—and condemns this Government for its failure to adequately protect the viability of these two vital sectors of the Canadian economy.

That does not sound to me like a message delivered at a tea party. It sounds very partisan to me.

I am trying to tell the Hon. Members in a non-partisan manner about the steps we have been taking to look after this growing threat to our lumber and agricultural economy. It is well known that we are trying to combat it.

The U.S. Congress has not said there will be no U.S.-Canada trade talks until the lumber issue has been resolved. There have been some members of Congress who have been saying that, but there is no word from Congress as a whole, nor do we expect any. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Government has been moving ahead very forcefully on all fronts and it is doing an excellent job. I just wish that once and a while the Opposition would recognize the good job we are doing in our Canada-U.S. relations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is one minute remaining.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Let it be known that there is no praise like self praise.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question. The Minister concentrated to a great extent on forestry in his speech today. I want to ask him about the American farm Bill.

In the House last Thursday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) what our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would be saying to President Reagan about the American Farm Bill. Can the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) enlighten the House as to exactly what the Prime Minister will be saying to the President about the U.S. Farm Bill? It is a question of great importance to farmers across the country, but particularly to those in western Canada.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that speakers from our Party who will be following me will address in particular detail the concerns and the aspects of the Canada-U.S. agricultural trade. I did not think it would behoove me to cover all areas in one speech. I thought that it would be best to leave that to our agricultural experts.

I can tell the Hon. Member that the Prime Minister has been extremely well briefed on our concerns respecting Canada-U.S. agriculture and the various Bills presently pending in the United States which pose a threat. The Prime Minister will be addressing those with the President and will be reporting to the House in due course.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The 10 minute period for questions has expired. Resuming debate.

Mr. Fulton: Could we call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. St. Germain: Continue with questions and comments.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. St. Germain: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Could we possibly get unanimous consent to continue with questions and comments?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House. Is it the will of the House that we continue until one o'clock with questions and comments?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is no unanimous consent. Debate.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, perhaps with the concurrence of the House, because of the lateness of the hour we could deem it one o'clock and continue the debate after lunch.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has had a request to call it one o'clock and it has been refused. The Chair has had a request to call questions and comments for a further period and that has been refused. Resuming debate. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew).

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I welcome the opportunity to debate an issue like this. I do not mind debating with the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), because he has been knowledgable and supportive generally. I have to state however, that this motion today is perhaps opportunistic and is an exploitation of a very sensitive issue, and is perhaps ill timed because of what is going on in Washington today.

My colleague, the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), has told this House that our officials are currently involved in very delicate discussions with their American counterparts. These discussions have been very frank and have included a comprehensive investigation of the factors affecting our lumber exports to the United States. But, by the very nature of these discussions which I must remind Hon. Members are being held at the official level, I cannot give in detail what has transpired until they are concluded.

I think it is encouraging to note, Mr. Speaker, that the next meeting will be held in mid-April. The meeting will be very close to the final deadline for Congressional approval of the U.S. administration entering into negotiations on a comprehensive trade agreement with Canada.

Unfortunately, we now have on the floor of the House a motion from the Opposition which is motivated, in my view, for transitory partisan advantage. The most offensive part of the motion, and I think I must put this on the record, is that part which reflects adversely on labour and on the work done by our provinces and industry. It is a bogus allegation that nothing is being done on this issue.

Before I get into that, Mr. Speaker, I want to—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure the Minister has the motion, worded as required under the rules of the House of Commons, before him. It does not refer to anything he has just spoken about.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure what is that point the Member has raised, but he has not yet raised a point of order.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with that. I have been speaking on the comprehensive trade negotiations and the kind of circumstance that exists today.

The Hon. Member for Skeena alluded several times to the efforts of the Government regarding forestry. I think it is important we set the record straight.

I was appointed some 18 months ago. The scenario we found was that the Canadian Forestry Service was buried in the Department of Environment. There had been a series of Ministers who really did not care or know much about forestry. During the 1970s we had a Department, an agency of the Government, that was essentially cut apart, had its Budget reduced and person-years cut almost in half from what existed in the previous decade. It was demoralized. There were modest forestry agreements with four or five provinces. Basically haphazard part-time attention was paid to Canada's largest industry. I have talked to many in the industry and all provincial Ministers. They felt that there was no one in Ottawa speaking for their sector around the cabinet table. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in September, 1984, corrected that situation. There is somebody at the cabinet table speaking for that sector and speaking very forcefully.

Through the appointment of an associate Deputy Minister, we have increased the ERDA agreements, that is our commitment in dollars to the sector, from $223 million to $1,057 billion. That is an increase of over four-fold. Surely that gives an indication of the kind of attention the Government is paying. We had laboratories and equipment that had been run down. The Government was able to encourage the Treasury Board to increase funds by 1,500 per cent. We were able to continue an $80 million expansion program. We formed a forest sector advisory committee which reports to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and myself. We continue to show a continuing commitment to the human resources program, and we have shown a continued commitment to research and development. It seems to me that we have made a very strong commitment to the industry—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

INCOME TAX

IMPACT IN 1984 AND 1985

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter from Mr. Thomas Booth to my Leader. It reads in part as follows:

Having just received my income tax forms for 1985, I was curious to compare them with the ones for 1984. I find that on a taxable income of $4,000 in 1984, the federal tax was $332 on the new ones, and for 1985 it is $426, an increase of $94. On a taxable income of $24,000, the tax in 1984 was $4,439, but in 1984 it was $4,477, an increase of $38.

Now I ask you which taxpayer is in a better position to pay a larger increase, the taxpayer who has a taxable income of $4,000 or the one with a taxable income of $24,000?

Thousands and thousands of Canadians are today doing their income tax returns, comparing both years, and asking the same question.

CHILDREN

SEXUAL ABUSE—BADGLEY COMMITTEE FINDINGS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, after three years of study the Badgley Committee on Sexual Offences against Children and Youths released its report over a year and a half ago. The national tragedy which the Committee documented in its report has still not been addressed by the Government. The Committee's findings were very disturbing. They presented appalling statistics showing the extent and nature of sexual abuses against children. The report showed that young people are particularly vulnerable to acts of sexual abuse and, therefore, require special legal protection.

Despite the clear need articulated by the report, the Conservative Government has still not seen fit to propose adequate protective measures for children. What is the Government waiting for? The Government has had enough time to study the recommendations in the report. We in the New Democratic Party have consistently been pressing the Government to protect children. It is long past time for action. Let us get on with it.

JOB CREATION AND TRAINING—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the present Government's record is quite remarkable for what it has done for young people, especially with respect to job creation and training.

Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous Government which not only was not concerned about young people but neglected them and let the number of youth jobs drop by 285,000 between 1980 and 1984, the present Government has taken steps to improve the situation. Seventy-three thousand jobs have been created since 1984, for young people between the ages of 15 and 24, and that is not all.

This summer, we will be supporting youth even more by spending $210 million on Challenge '86. This program does not offer young people some vague kind of work but gives them a chance to acquire experience related to their field of study or to their career plans.

Furthermore, 25,000 jobs out of 40,000 available for the Census will be reserved for students—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The sixty seconds are up.

TERRORISM

EXPLOITATION OF MEDIA BY TERRORISTS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, when announcing the recent formation of a new RCMP emergency response team, the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) spoke of the need for meetings with the nation's media to seek views and advice on how the media can deal with terrorist incidents. Most journalists and responsible news gathering organizations understand the need for self-enforced guidelines on the coverage of events involving terrorism. While responsible journalism must include the public's right to know, the media know that they should not be open to exploitation by terrorists who desire free publicity.

However, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), and other Liberals braying in the background, are quoted as saying that the Solicitor General, by wishing to consult, is contemplating press censorship. What absolute rubbish! The Hon. Member in the Liberal Party is the same person who sat in a Cabinet which considered Government-established press councils. He is one to defend a free press!

The media of Canada are, by and large, responsible, and through self regulation, can and should work with the Solicitor General to develop appropriate measures to deal with terrorism.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

LETTER FROM TRANSITION HOUSE IN ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read this letter. I think it is self-explanatory:

Dear Mr. Mulroney:

It is with deep concern that we learn you have not responded to a letter regarding Mr. David Nickerson (M.P.—West Arctic) dated 21 October 1985.

This lack of response is particularly distressing given the serious problem of wife-battering in Canada. You and Mr. Nickerson could take this opportunity to raise the level of public awareness on wife-battering. Instead, it appears that the Government of Canada is content to dismiss the issue without even the courtesy of a reply. This neglect conveys the attitude of tacitly condoning a criminal act.

Prime Minister, your silence is shameful. Your contempt for the women of Canada is implicit in your refusal to respond to straight-forward, constructive suggestions from a national organization—

This letter is from a transition house in St. John's, Newfoundland. I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to respond.

DISASTERS

BRITISH COLUMBIA CATTLEMEN—OMISSION FROM DROUGHT RELIEF PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the cattle producers south of Hixon, British Columbia, were, for some reason, omitted from the drought relief program offered to other western cattlemen. In many areas of southern British Columbia, especially at certain elevations, the feed losses related to extreme drought conditions were severe. The provincial Agriculture Minister has agreed to extent drought assistance to those drought-stricken areas on a cost-sharing basis with the federal Government. B.C. has offered $2 million and has asked the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to match that amount. To date he has not offered any support and has not responded to B.C.'s request.

These drought-stricken cattlemen are only requesting that they be offered what other western cattlemen have received, nothing more and nothing less. They ask only for fairness and equity. Show some concern and compassion for these cattlemen, as you have shown for others, Mr. Minister.

PRICE OF GASOLINE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted Canadian consumers are starting to get a taste of lower gas prices as a result of our policy of intervening in energy matters.

I hope that all those who criticized us, and others who adjusted prices of goods and services upwards as the price of gas rose, will follow our example and reduce their prices.

I hope these changes will not be too long in coming, because if within the next few weeks there is no downward adjustment in consumer prices, I will feel obliged to point an accusing finger at every one of those people who were so quick to criticize us at the time.

INDUSTRY

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY'S EMPLOYMENT CREATION POTENTIAL

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, a report prepared for the Petroleum Resources Communication Foundation indicates that over 650,000 Canadians from coast to coast are dependent upon Canada's petroleum industry for their livelihood. That is approximately one in every 20 working Canadians. Research undertaken by the Canadian energy Research Institute indicates that two jobs in Canada's petroleum industry create three jobs in other parts of Canada, primarily Ontario and Quebec.

Canada's petroleum industry maintains over 650,000 jobs. It produces our country's leading export commodities, generates billions of provincial and federal tax and royalty dollars, and explores for oil and gas in a nation where energy self-sufficiency is an important national objective. With these solid facts who can doubt the contribution of the energy industry to the nation's well-being?

PARLIAMENT

OPPOSITION'S ROLE

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I think it is shocking the way Liberal Members and Members of the New Democratic Party conduct insidious attacks against members of the Government, using language of the worst kind and taking advantage of their parliamentary immunity.

This is the kind of behaviour described by Lise Bissonnette in her article in Le Devoir last Saturday, and I quote:

Senator Allan MacEachen told a Toronto reporter about the advice he gave young Liberal members, advice he himself was given in 1958 by one of his predecessors in the Senate, Chubby Power. When one is in the Opposition, the best strategy is to "aim at vulnerable targets in the Government and shoot them down." This is not very subtle, but it works, as we saw under John Diefenbaker and as we are seeing now under Brian Mulroney.

Is that the Opposition's only role, Mr. Speaker?

YOUTH

EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS—PRIME MINISTER'S LETTER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in his letter to Senator Hébert the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) attempts to justify the Tory Government's betrayal and abandonment of our youth. He fails to mention that funds for youth programs went from $40 million last year to $17 million this year, and that employment offices on university campuses were cut by 30 per cent. He fails to mention that the LEAD program was eliminated, that institutional training was cut by 25 per cent, that the skills growth fund was terminated, that the critical trade skills training funds were cut in half, and the Government is examining a withdrawal of federal payments for post-secondary education.

● (1410)

To top it off, the Prime Minister forgot to mention the elimination of the Youth Ministry and proved his ignorance of what Katimavik is, the special role it plays for Canadian youth. Katimavik was not a job-creation program and therefore did not create jobs. It taught self respect and respect for others. It taught how to work as a team, how to be motivated independently. It taught social responsibility. In short, Katimavik prepared people for life.

Mr. Speaker: Sixty seconds.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF COMMUNITY VOLUNTEERS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, volunteerism and the voluntary sector are significant to Canadian life, not just because they provide opportunities for personal growth but because they also provide a direct benefit to our communities and contribute to social justice.

Volunteers and the agencies which they staff and fund generate an estimated five billion dollars in economic activity in Canada, which in turn would be equal to 2 per cent of our Gross National Product. A "wage bill" for work voluntarily rendered in one year alone would cost two billion dollars. Those figures illustrate the impact volunteerism has on Canada. Community minded people in Canada should be applauded for their dedication and commitment to helping fellow Canadians.

While a member of the other place sits to attract attention through undemocratic means, tens of thousands of unheard-of Canadians are receiving little recognition for their work and commitment. We applaud those volunteers and deplore unfounded opportunism.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF HAMILTON-WENTWORTH AIRPORT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I am concerned about the inability of the Hamilton-Wentworth Airport to provide adequate service. I want to suggest to the Government that it take into consideration three possible ways of making better use of the facilities.

First of all, I suggest that it offer to Air Ontario the opportunity to provide the service that it wants to provide; second, that it seek out the charter operators from among the major carriers and give them the opportunity to operate out of that excellent but under utilized airport; finally, that it make a determination that foreign carriers which have landing rights only in Mirabel be given an extension to Hamilton as a way of entering the southern and southwestern Ontario market.

TOXIC WASTES IN GREAT LAKES BASIN

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Royal Society of Canada recently released its study of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, prior to the awaited third biennial report of the International Joint Commission.

In its review the Society reports that the sources of toxic substances in the Great Lakes Basin are larger and more diverse than anticipated in the 1978 agreement, and concludes that control programs need to be much more comprehensive.

Given the serious nature of this issue and its probable effects on humans using the resources of the Great Lakes, and the clear danger to marine and wildlife, I urge the Canadian contingent on the Commission to press for the adoption of the Society's recommendation that components be put in place to deal with contamination at its source, and that compliance with any forthcoming guidelines be mandatory.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

RETIREMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the retirement of Mr. Jim Smith as chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission has recently been announced. I want to recognize the fine contribution of public service made by Mr. Smith in his capacity as chairperson of the Power Commission and previously as Commissioner of the Yukon.

With the change in leadership of the Northern Canada Power Commission, it is time for the Government to move ahead now with determination to relocate responsibility for the production and distribution of electrical power in the North in the form of two territorial power commissions which may, under certain conditions, enter into joint venture agreements with private companies. All of this would be in line with the recommendations of the report of the House of Commons subcommittee, tabled in Parliament on April 7, 1982, entitled Electrical Power North of 60°.

CANADIAN SOFTWOOD EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as I sadly learned in today's debate on the Canadian forest industry the Conservative Party still does not understand the nature of the protectionist sentiment in the U.S. on softwood.

Members of Congress in the House and Senate, Republican and Democrat, have spoken out one after another against Canadian softwood in their States, districts, and Legislatures. Now there are close to a dozen Bills variously proposing quotas, tariffs, and measurements for countervail. The facts of the matter seem to be incomprehensible to the entire Mulroney administration. Let me simplify the issue. Canada now holds 34 per cent of the U.S. softwood market. American politicians are running in the mid-term elections. It is popular to put workers back on the job and companies in the black. There are many closed mills in the U.S. that could reopen if Canada's softwood exports were restricted, thus driving up price and demand for U.S. produced softwood.

Our target to stop the protectionist urges of politicians running for election or re-election must be expanded to include those that produce goods in the U.S. for the Canadian market. The more than two million jobs—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES TO ASSIST YOUNG PEOPLE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. On February 6 in the House the Deputy Prime Minister promised special new programs "that will employ far more young people directly". On March 3 in the House the Prime Minister promised "very important" new job creation iniatives for youth.

Yesterday in the House the Secretary of State said that any new initiative "is not necessarily a job-creation program". Why would he, at this late date, contradict both the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister in respect to Government initiatives for young people?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the Government's priority has been to develop job creation through the programs introduced by the Department of Employment and Immigration, and we are now working on programs that will not necessarily,—although I do exclude the possibility,—be job creation programs, but in any event will reflect some of the specific concerns of youth. In any case, these is nothing here that contradicts previous statements by the Acting Prime Minister and the Prime Minister himself.

SUPPRESSION OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure I understand. My next question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why did the Government terminate certain youth programs without announcing new ones, at a time when 700,000 young people are unemployed in Canada today? Does the Deputy Prime Minister think our young people can be satisfied with a phantom Minister and an utterly confused Secretary of State?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Canadians love it when they hear the Liberal Party talk about employment. It is really something else!

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has created or introduced job-creation programs to replace Liberal programs that were aimed at only one out of forty young unemployed Canadians, programs that cost so much money it was impossible to use the money for the purpose for which it was appropriated: $6 million out of $20 million in the Katimavik Program was used to pay for administration costs. Is that what you call job-creation programs?

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister had the right instincts when he wanted to get up in the first place. I will give him another opportunity.

Will he confirm to the House that new programs for young people are being withheld at the moment for strictly political reasons?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have repeated many times that we are now working on a program that will cover a number of areas that are not necessarily related to employment. For a whole month you people have been screaming for a change from job creation. That is what we are looking at. The Leader of the Official Opposition referred earlier to the matter of programs. I am sorry, but as far as providing programs is concerned, before this Government introduces new programs, it must have consultation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

CANCELLATION OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State. The principal recommendation to cancel the Katimavik Program is found in the Nielsen task force report on job creation which was in the hands of the Government in March, 1985. Why was it not possible for the Government to have a new program if it had one year in which to develop it? Why was that not possible?

• (1420)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the cancellation of the Katimavik program has nothing to do with the Nielsen report. The program was too costly. Whether or not it is mentioned in the Nielsen report, we are trying to make you understand that our country cannot afford this kind of program, regardless of what the Nielsen may or may not recommend. That is all.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware that the same task force report warned of an adverse reaction if Katimavik were cancelled during International Youth Year and the funds were not redeployed immediately for a similar program? Why was action not taken on the warning in the task force report? Has the Minister even read the report?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): After Question Period, Mr. Speaker, I will be at the disposal of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce to give him the necessary information and make him understand that the decision concerning Katimavik and other youth programs flow from a policy whose aim is to stress job-creation. Katimavik is not a job-creation program, so it is excluded. However, we will soon come up with projects designed to fulfil some of the Katimavik objectives. But again I repeat that the cost of the program was not consistent with the number of young people out of work.

OFFER OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. Will the Minister of State for Youth make an attempt to clear up the confusion caused by her colleague and tell us precisely what program is being entertained to replace Katimavik? What other programs will be offered to the youth of the country?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, a great many different options are being looked at. When the Government is ready with programs, they will be announced.

Some Hon. Members: When?

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): The youth of the country are mobilized in response to your inaction. Will you not give them an answer?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McCurdy: Will you not give them an answer with respect to the recommendations of the report of the Senate, and other reports, which demand immediate action? Will you not respond to them now?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the youth of Canada have never been as well served as they are being served now by such good job-creation and training programs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Champagne: The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville suggests giving $5,500 per year to young people. He has said himself that $5,500 a year for an ordinary Canadian will not even pay for a decent holiday. I wonder what rich people do.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question through the Chair, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): My question is directed again to the Minister of State for Youth. Is it the policy of the Government to continue to sing its theme song, "Who's Sorry Now?, or will it respond to the needs of young people?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is responding to the youth of the country by creating jobs instead of seeing jobs lost. It will be helping young people to go through this part of their lives, which is very difficult following 20 years of Liberal administration.

REQUEST THAT KATIMAVIK PROGRAM BE REINSTATED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Youth. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown may think the hunger strike is a joke—we do not!

Does the Minister agree with Katimavik supporter, and P.C. Member of Parliament for Ottawa-Carleton, who has said this about the program:

—Canada will reap the benefits from the better understanding of this country that young people will derive from their nine months with Katimavik.

If the Minister does agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton, then will she reinstate the program today?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, no one takes a hunger strike without a great deal of seriousness and sadness. It is a sad example for the youth of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Champagne: Katimavik had some very good aspects. It has been said, and repeated many times, that in this day and age, in this country, it is not something that the Government can afford for one-twentieth of 1 per cent of our youth population.

• (1425)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. How can she talk about cost effectiveness in government programs when last week the Government announced a grant of almost $40,000 to train a dog-catcher and kennel assistant? Does she really believe that dog catching is more important than the future of the young people of Canada?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the project to which the Hon. Member refers, but if it creates jobs, I am for it.

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that the OPEC meeting in Geneva today broke down again and it now appears that the price of oil could quite realistically reach $10 per barrel. He is also aware that this will create rack and ruin in the western economy. Does the Minister plan to stand idly by and watch literally tens of thousands of jobs in the Province of Alberta and other parts of Canada go down the drain? What action does the Government plan to take?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question has been put in the House on a number of occasions before, and my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has responded to it. She has been talking in particular to representatives of the Province of Alberta. We have had meetings with the industry. Once this situation settles a bit more, then we might be in a better position to make decisions.

IMPACT ON ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. A senior official from the Government of Alberta was quoted today as saying that there is fear in the streets that every major oil project is now threatened. Do the Minister of Finance and the Government plan to stand idly by and simply watch the people of Alberta bleed while they do nothing about this tremendously horrible situation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned, as I and my colleague have said, about the impact of lower oil prices on the energy industry itself and about the peripheral impact on communities, particularly those in the Province of Alberta. However, as we have said, and as representatives of the Province of Alberta and the industry have said, during the very volatile situation in which we are right now, this is not the right time to make long-term policy decisions.

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. As a result of the evasive remarks he made in the House and to the media yesterday, and the alarm this is now causing one million people who are directly involved in post-secondary education, is the Secretary of State prepared to identify with the Canadian Federation of Students and the youth of Canada by stating clearly that Canadian universities and colleges are deteriorating and that post-secondary education is critically under-funded?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, a meeting with the provincial Ministers of Education is scheduled for Friday morning and the issue of provincial education financing may come up for discussion. The federal Government already contributes a significant share of the funding and, generally speaking, I expect the discussions to be very constructive.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, that is very helpful, but since the Secretary of State is not willing to support them is he then prepared to say that he disagrees with all of the student organizations and faculty organizations in Canada, and with the Premiers of all of the provinces who say that universities are under-funded?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the associations of students and universities have expressed their views.

I must remind the Hon. Member that there has been a considerable increase in federal Government transfer payments, and the established programs financing has not been frozen or cut back. It has been increased by tens of millions of dollars and, as a Department and as a Government, I think we generously support post-secondary education in Canada.

Of course it is always possible to spend more money for everything, but the funds must be there and, under the present circumstances, we consider that the funds made available are geared to the Government's financial resources.

REPORTED VISIT TO SOUTH KOREA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he aware of the fact that a delegation of five Tory MPs, led by the former President of the Conservative Party, left yesterday for a secret, two-week clandestine visit to South Korea?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murta: How do you know about it, then?

Mr. Rodriguez: If so, does the Deputy Prime Minister think it is appropriate that members of his Government should be accepting the largesse of the regime in South Korea?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the rather colourful circumstances described by the hon. gentleman. If Members of Parliament are on such a visit or trip, they are so without any sanction or approval or authority of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Do you disapprove?

COST OF VISIT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in all fairness to the House and to the people of Canada, will the Deputy Prime Minister undertake to have tabled in the House the total cost of the trip and who paid for it? What is the purpose and what is the quid pro quo of the visit?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I guess reforms have left the hon. gentleman behind, because he seems to be unacquainted with the requirement of the Standing Orders which fully cover this situation.

APPLICATION OF STANDING ORDER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader who is responsible for the general area of conflict of interest of Members of Parliament, and it follows on the question asked by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. The five Conservative Members travelling to South Korea have not declared their interests in the registry, as required by Standing Order 105. How can the Minister tolerate this obvious and contemptuous violation of the rules of the House which he himself introduced—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: It is a question. I said: "How can the Minister"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is in some difficulty finding that it is a question to the Government within the Government's responsibility when the Hon. Member is talking about the rules of the House. Does the Hon. Member have a question to the Government about the Government's responsibility, please?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am putting my question to the Government House Leader because he, as Minister, is responsible for conflict of interest in the House. How can he tolerate such an obvious breach of our rules and regulations?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has referred to the Standing Order which applies to the registry of travel by Members. If he reads it, he will understand that there is no requirement to register travel before one goes on a trip.

Some Hon. Members: That is obvious.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Standing Order is quite clear. There is a registry available for Members. The Standing Order speaks for itself. I am not aware of the circumstances in respect of private travel by individual Members of Parliament regardless of Party, but the Standing Order is there and they can register when they return or before they go.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, given the answer of the Minister, will he undertake at this time to refer the question to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for appropriate disciplinary action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not a governmental question. If the Member is raising questions with regard to a breach of the rules, he may want to raise a point of order at some point on the matter.

Mr. Gauthier: I give you notice.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

TEXTILE AND CLOTHING INDUSTRY—PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Since the Minister will be meeting with textile workers in Sherbrooke tomorrow, could he answer a very simple question which the Government has been avoiding for nine months? Is the Government now prepared to act upon the Textile and Clothing Board recommendations to stop the loss of thousands of jobs in that important industry?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the Hon. Member's comment as a representation. Of course my trip to Sherbrooke tomorrow is designed to meet with various industry representatives, union leaders, and company officials, so that we will be better acquainted in respect of the policy we hope to enunciate and what the industry and its workers would like to see us adopt as policy.

LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the workers in the industry have made it very clear that, having lost 22,000 jobs in the last four years, they want action to protect their industry. Will the Government take action to stop the loss of jobs in this industry, yes or no, and why the long delays?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised the Hon. Member did not mention that 112,000 jobs have been created in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Cassidy: Not in textiles.

Mr. Stevens: I remind him that the jobs to which he is referring were as a result of rather sensational increases in textile and clothing imports in 1982 and 1983, which went as high as 25 per cent jumps under the former Government that was aided and abetted by his Party.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

REQUEST FOR INTERIM PAYMENT TO PRAIRIE FARMERS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board and it concerns the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. With prairie farm incomes at a very low level this year, will the Minister tell us whether there will be a stabilization payment this spring and, if so, when?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that, as a result of the Government amending the Act last year, we were able to make quite a substantial interim payment prior to spring seeding. We are presently doing calculations to estimate what the payment might be, if any, for 1985-86. Indications are that there will be a payment and, as it looks presently with preliminary calculations, we intend to make another sizable interim payment prior to spring seeding, as we did last year.

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. It is increasingly obvious to all observers that the Minister keeps improvising about the programs. In fact, there are three Ministers and three different versions, that is how they react. Mr. Speaker, his colleagues are too noisy, the Minister can hardly hear me.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question, please.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, my question is quite simple. Since the Minister improvises as he goes along and since he has not done his homework, why does he not simply extend the Katimavik program instead of trying to dream up a program at the last minute?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I enjoy watching the Hon. Member for Shefford, the former Minister of Youth who did not accomplish anything at all when he held that portfolio. The Hon. Member for Shefford knows very well that when he suggests we should reinstate Katimavik and drop—I did understand what you said, you said we should forget about the improvised programs we are preparing. Let us be serious: either we establish the job creation programs wanted by young Canadians, or we do as you did—nothing!

Mr. Lapierre: I can tell the Minister I am not embarrassed at all, but I am one of the Department's godfathers . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A supplementary question?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE CLARIFICATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we know that the Secretary of State has asked employees to work overtime, but they have nothing to do and are just trying to save face. Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister not tell us right now: We have nothing else, so we will extend Katimavik for another year until I can do my homework. That is what he should say.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): The answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Unlike your Government, we are going to use those $20 million to create jobs, and that is what is important to us.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. In the event that the U.S. Farm Bill passes and there is a downward pressure on the price of domestic grain, will the Western Grain Stabilization fund be able to continue payments, even though there has been a large drain on it because of the drought situation?

Mr. Speaker: I think I have to find that that is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Blenkarn: He should have answered that question.

Mr. Malone: Yes, it was a good one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South and the Hon. Member for Crowfoot should go and have a discussion somewhere else about the quality of questions.

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why the Prime Minister would continue to undermine the credibility of the former Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, by stating to The New York Times that he, the Prime Minister, sought that Member's resignation when, in fact, the Member himself said in the House of Commons that he offered it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will remind the hon. gentleman that today is March 18, 1986. He is speaking about events that occurred in this House in September, 1985, and are long since behind us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIME MINISTER'S INTERVIEW REPORTED IN NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize that the Prime Minister himself raised the issue in an interview given to The New York Times recently, and in that interview he claimed that he sought the Member's resignation when the Member himself, a long-standing Member of Parliament, indicated to this House of Commons that he offered it? Why would the Prime Minister do that to that Member?

An Hon. Member: Because he is not a nice man.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter is of record. Last September there was published, from the Office of the Prime Minister, an exchange of letters between the former Minister and the Prime Minister. I do not see what is to be gained, except wasting the time of the House, by rehashing events of last September.

ST. CLAIR RIVER—TOXIC SUBSTANCES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. It has been reported that a private firm carried out a seismic survey of the bed of the St. Clair River and found what it believed to be large deposits of mercury as well as possible deposits of other toxic substances. What investigation is the Minister carrying out of these findings, and can he tell us today whether or not they are accurate?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making reference to a small Vancouver-based company called Thalassic that, quite independently, on its own, without any reference to my Department or to any departments of Government, undertook certain investigations into the bottom of the St. Clair River. The company is trying to sell technology to my Department and, for that purpose, is attempting to generate as much publicity as possible.

I have asked my officials to look into the report that the company tendered to the media and not to me. I understand the investigations were very hypothetical and tentative. Neither my Department's officials nor those of the Ontario Ministry of the Environment were impressed with those investigations.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister report to the House as soon as possible on whether the findings are accurate and, in particular, will he tell the House whether the findings indicate that mercury is on the bottom of the St. Clair River? If so, will the firm be allowed to mine or extract that mercury? If that is the case, what steps will the Minister take to ensure the health and safety of the public in the area?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the company in question has not made available to me nor to my Department, nor to any of my officials, the detailed results of its investigations.

I have a memo, which I would be quite prepared to share with the Hon. Member, from my officials outlining in considerable detail the weaknesses those officials found in the relevant technology. Until I can be convinced otherwise, I hold the view that the matter is not worth pursuing, but I have an open mind on the subject.

RELEASE OF RECIPIENTS' NAMES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have just been informed that the Minister and her Department went on a paper shredding binge just hours after the misuse of UI recipients' names was made public, that is, the giving of those names to the Peat Marwick company for a survey.

How could the yet to be completed studies and investigations by both the Privacy Commissioner and the Minister's own Department have full and complete access to all the relevant information when the paper shredder started just hours after the question was raised here in the House of Commons?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have said earlier, the material in question was recalled from Peat Marwick. That material is now awaiting the investigation of the Privacy Commissioner.

SHREDDING INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister precisely whether she could tell the House what material has already been shredded, and does that material include the information received from Peat Marwick, including the computer tapes?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to find out in detail about every single piece of paper. This did, of course, involve the names and addresses of some 30,000 people. It involved questionnaires that went to some 6,000 people, I believe. I will find out in detail exactly what has happened to every piece of paper and I will be glad to get back to the Hon. Member.

CARRIAGE BY RAIL THROUGH METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I understand the Minister met yesterday with officials of the Metro Toronto Residents Action Committee with regard to the lowering of speed limits for trains carrying toxic waste through Metropolitan Toronto. What action is the Government prepared to take in order to prevent he derailment of trains carrying dangerous goods through heavily populated areas?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes, I did meet with the officials to whom the Hon. Member has referred, including representatives of the MTRAC organization. I did undertake to advise them that we were actively looking at the issue of lowering speed limits of trains going through a particular section of Toronto to 25 miles per hour.

I should remind the Hon. Member that a special task force to look at the issue of the transportation of dangerous goods through the Toronto area has been established. This will clearly be one of the priorities which the task force will consider. I hope we will be in a position to have a decision on that matter very soon.

Mr. Benjamin: VIA Rail is already doing 25 miles an hour.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF MAXIMUM SECURITY PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN CONSTITUENCY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the construction of a maximum security prison in the Prime Minister's own riding.

In view of the fact that the Nielsen report recommended a moratorium on all future prison construction, would the Solicitor General not agree that, based on correctional considerations, it is inappropriate to spend $60 million to construct a prison in a remote part of the Prime Minister's riding and, indeed, anywhere in Quebec where there is no double-bunking?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will perhaps have to wait until tomorrow to get the translation of the Member's question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: As far as the Nielsen task force recommendations are concerned, those have been sent to a parliamentary committee. It would be inappropriate of me to try to pre-empt discussion on those.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION MORATORIUM

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the prison is under construction. In view of the recommendations coming out of the Nielsen task force, would he not declare a moratorium on the construction of that prison, which has been referred to as a misguided exercise in pork-barrel politics, and will he not redirect the $60 million to fund Katimavik for a further period of three years?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): That is a novel proposal which the Hon. Member has made, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether he feels it is appropriate for the Solicitor General to be funding Katimavik, but it would be something to which I would expect his colleagues to be very much opposed.

While we are waiting for discussion by the parliamentary committee, plans go on and continue to be made, and we intend to continue with business as usual.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It concerns what the Government is calling increases in cultural expenditures.

Would the Minister confirm that the $75 million mentioned in the Budget is an increase in lieu of the cost of living increases which were promised by the Conservatives in the election campaign, that there is no replacement of the monies cut last year for cultural spending and, therefore, there is a net decrease in the money available from the federal Government for culture in Canada?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are better with four-letter words.

● (1450)

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the additional $75 million allocation for the Government's cultural policies will be spent on programs on which consultations are already being held with the provinces and cultural bodies. The Canada Council, for instance will see a 22 per cent increase in its present budget, so that the Council will become the Government agency receiving the highest increase in funding under the last Budget.

DEPARTMENT'S BUDGET

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister confirm that the 2 per cent which is being cut from every Department will not, in the case of his Department, affect any of the cultural agencies, but will be absorbed by his own Department rather than affecting independent agencies?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for all the cuts imposed on cultural agencies by the previous Government. What I am trying to define is a new budgetary policy, in agreement with the provinces and the cultural bodies concerned.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN CONSTITUENCY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the answer which the Solicitor General gave to my colleague, is he saying that the issue of whether the prison will be built in the Prime Minister's riding is in the hands of the committee to which the Nielsen report has been referred? Is that still an open question, as he has just suggested?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): No, Mr. Speaker, it was his colleague who suggested that should be the case. I am not going to prejudge the committee discussion with regard to the recommendations of the study group. In the meantime we have a responsibility to continue running the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members opposite ask questions and then shout throughout the answers. Could they give us the courtesy of allowing us to respond to their questions?

We have an obligation to continue with our responsibilities in the meantime, and we intend to do that.

PAROLE CASE LOADS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, is that the reason why the Solicitor General is sabotaging the country's parole system by allowing parole case loads to have grown so large since he took office that parole officers themselves are saying that street supervision is presenting an undue risk to the Canadian people?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is the most tenuous supplementary question I have ever heard. There is no intention or action on the part of the Government to sabotage the parole system. Indeed, we are considering significant reforms to the parole system which I hope will help to cut the case loads. They will also help to ensure that the public is better protected.

FISHERIES

ALLOCATION OF CATCHES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and is with regard to the rapidly growing shortage of fish in Nova Scotia. Will the Minister tell the House what he plans to do to redress the unbalance in fish allocation between the inshore and enterprise allocations, and when he intends to do it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, an express concern by the inshore fishermen of the Southwest Nova area with regard to the allocation which was extended to the offshore fleet under the five-year enterprise allocation plan. When that plan was discussed with my provincial colleagues for the present fishing year, it was agreed by the Minister for Nova Scotia that that plan should remain in force. However, we are reviewing the division of access to that allocation, and I expect to have a response to the concerns of the inshore sector in Southwest Nova before Easter.

POSSIBILITY OF CONFRONTATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, last weekend there was the beginning of a confrontation between enforcement officers and the fishermen. Does the Minister plan to resolve this imbalance on a permanent basis, thereby attempting to prevent a clash between fishermen and enforcement officers in that area?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, our first objective is to determine if, indeed, there is an imbalance. There has been a suggestion that the inshore fleet is vastly over capacity and has been fishing beyong its normal allocations. We must look at that allegation in light of the important needs of those inshore communities. As I have informed the Hon. Member, I will be making an announcement soon with regard to a resolution of this problem.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR MINISTER OF EDUCATION

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members of the presence in our gallery today of the Hon. Loyola Hearn, Minister of Education of the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador.

YOUTH

JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Could she advise the House whether her Department has any programs dealing with the youth of the country? If so, how many programs are there, and how many young people are involved in those programs?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): See him in caucus tomorrow, Flora.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to respond to the Hon. Member. This year some $700 million is being expended on job-creation and training programs for young people. That is considerably more than was expended by the former Government at the height of the recession in 1982.

Mr. Allmand: Not true.

Miss MacDonald: At that time far less than $700 million was spent, although the unemployment rate was 21 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—HIRING OF PORTERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the Minister promised to investigate the $4,000 a year buy-a-job scheme implemented by All Cap Baggage Service at Pearson International Airport. Have the Minister's officials conducted private and confidential inquiries with the porters involved at Pearson to determine whether those porters who signed a petition in support of the company did so, as reported, under threat of losing their jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House and the Hon. Member yesterday, regional officials are investigating the matter in detail. As of this date I have not received a report. I repeat as well that 30 or 32 of the 40 have disassociated themselves from the dissenting view of the 10 or so who find the arrangements unsatisfactory.

REPORTED THREAT OF LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that a number of those who have signed the petition and, in the Minister's words, have disassociated themselves, have claimed that they did so under threat of losing their jobs if they did not support a company-written petition to associate themselves with the company's practices. Will the Minister reject this buy-a-job scheme in Canada's airports which is immoral and archaic?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the matter is being investigated is to look into the allegations which the Hon. Member has just made. I would not want to draw any conclusions based on the allegations made by the Hon. Member, because he has been wrong in this House more than once.

SKI TEAMS' INSURANCE COVERAGE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Does the Minister still think that the insurance industry has responded positively to his challenge with regard to coverage for Canada's ski teams since that so-called positive response has resulted in the coverage being cut in half while the rates have been increased by 500 per cent? Is he aware that those increased costs will result in a reduction in the amount of money used for the development of skiing in our country?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the critic from the New Democratic Party has finally awoken and is asking some questions. He is aware that the challenge which we put out to the industry has had very positive results. The ski team is now insured. In the meantime I have taken the initiative of establishing, for the first time ever, a special committee which is utilizing the best know-how in the industry to ensure that these sorts of problems do not arise in the future.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, that know-how has resulted in a 500 per cent increase in rates.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Is the Minister aware that in the past five years 50 national sports governing bodies have only had $23,000 in liability insurance claims awarded against them? Is it not time for the Government either to provide the funding for the ski association and the sports governing bodies, or to provide the required insurance coverage?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member cares to check with the sports governing bodies he will find out that they are delighted with the initiatives which this Minister has taken to help them in their efforts to get insurance. In the meantime, since most of the jurisdiction lies with the provinces, my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, and others, are working with the provinces on a more global aspect to ensure that the concerns of the sports and insurance industries are satisfied.

INCOME TAX

TORONTO NEWSPAPER READERS' RESPONSE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. What kind of message is he getting from the fact that over 15,000 readers have responded to an invitation from a Toronto newspaper to express their dissatisfaction with the unfair burden his Budget places on middle-income taxpayers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there are those who would like to have taxes not increase. However, I think the majority of Canadians recognize that we have a very serious deficit problem, which they know we are addressing predominantly through reduced spending. Seventy per cent of deficit reduction is through spending reductions. A portion must be borne through tax increases, and we are carrying that out in the broadest possible way.

POINTS OF ORDER

QUESTIONS POSED TO MINISTERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Point of Order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if you could give us your guidance on a matter which transpired in Question Period. Questions were put to the Government House Leader with respect to the Registry of Members' Foreign Travel. There was a suggestion that this could not pertain to a Minister's responsibility but was, rather, a matter of House Business. The questions were placed to the Minister because the travel registry concept was presented to the House by the Minister as a Government initiative. Under the circumstances, I respectfully ask for your guidance whether this would be, therefore, a matter that the Minister could be properly questioned about.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can deal with that. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wants to respond?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the point of order. This provision was announced some months ago and was ultimately adopted by the House unanimously. Whether or not it was initiated by myself or the Hon. Member, we all accept responsibility for it because there was no dissenting voice heard when the matter was put to a vote.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on the same point of order.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I ask for your indulgence in letting me finish because I think it could be helpful. You may remember I have always favoured this kind of registry. I find now there may be some difficulty in coming to terms with this provision because there is no time limit. Maybe now the time has come to re-evaluate Standing Order 105 to see whether we should not come together to arrive at a timetable. The Standing Order now says "shall register" and "shall maintain a public registry". It is very vague. Someone could register in a year and it would still be all right. The Standing Order was made in good faith, but perhaps the time has come to re-evaluate it because, as it stands now, it does not say when you should register. I hope that some day Your Honour would like to take some time to look into it.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) on the same point of order? We have to be clear. The Hon. Member is speaking to the point of asking the Government House Leader questions. It is not the question of order that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis said was the same, but which is different?

Mr. Prud'homme: A suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: On a different point of order? All right, on the same point of order with regard to questions? Then let me try and resolve that one.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) makes the point that the matter originated with the Government. But, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) says, it ceases to be a Government matter once the House adopts it as a House rule. It then becomes a rule of the House. Therefore, questions with regard to the implementation or application of the registry may or may not be questions of order, along the lines the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is putting, with regard to the registry. However, it is difficult for the Chair to find that questions to a Government Minister about the Government's administrative responsibility could apply to a matter which, by the rules, is under the administration of the Clerk. I instinctively found it difficult to find that question in order. Perhaps the Hon. Member may want to persuade me at some other time on that point, but that is why I ruled that way today. I am open to representations on that question.

S.O. 105—ALLEGED FAILURE TO COMPLY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to Standing Order 105, which was mentioned previously by my colleague from Saint-Denis. There is a strong desire on the part of all Hon. Members that these new rules be workable and serve the Members of the House well. Naturally, with new Standing Orders there is bound to be some looseness or loophole which was certainly never intended to be there in the first place. The way in which a matter like this can be handled is not to rewrite the rules every time we see an escape hatch or some possibility for abuse. The way we handle it is for the Chair, seeing a problem, to rule on the Standing Order and thereby build up a body of precedence which would have equal authority with the Standing Order itself. Therefore I would ask whether Your Honour intends to rule with respect to the time when a Member of Parliament shall register foreign travel which is not wholly paid for out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. Speaker: That is clearly a separate point of order. I have a feeling there may be some people who wish to address that matter prior to the Chair ruling. The only way it could be dealt with by the Chair would be for the Member to raise a point of order, claiming that somehow this rule had been breached. May I suggest, therefore, that is the proper time for the argument to be put, as opposed to the general way in which the Hon. Member is trying to put it right now. If he wishes to do that, that of course would be his right at an appropriate time. Can we end it there?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I entirely accept the point you make. I find myself in some difficulty in saying there is a breach. However, in the minds of many Members and observers of Parliament, it would seem there was a breach of Standing Order 105 if the registry does not take place prior to the trip. That is certainly the position I would take and I would hope Your Honour would rule that this registration should take place before, not after.

Mr. Speaker: We are now into the dilemma, because if that is the case, then I must hear argument. The Hon. Member is raising that as a point of order today and asking me to rule on that matter, therefore the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wishes to respond.

Mr. Penner: May I be clear on that?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the interpretation I would give to Standing Order 105 is that a Member of Parliament, upon accepting an invitation and making plans to go, before departure would place his or her name in the registrar. This should not be done at some later date, or even perhaps in some other Parliament, it should be done prior to the trip. I think that is the intention of the Standing Order and I would argue that there should be a clear and precise ruling from the Chair that that is the intention of Standing Order 105.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as much as I have respect for the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) and his reputation as a Member of Parliament, I am sure he would be the first one to acknowledge that, if he is making a specific suggestion that there has been a breach, whether in advance of travel or not, in all fairness he should first find out what the facts are before making any suggestion of a breach.

Point of Order—Mr. Penner

During Question Period I said, and this is the truth, that I am not aware of the circumstances with respect to the travel of certain Members of Parliament. I know, for example, that on many instances I travel with Members in the Opposition Parties during the course of parliamentary delegations I have, therefore, knowledge that people are on particular trips, and I am in a position to stand in the House and say that such a trip was under the auspices of an interparliamentary association, or paid for out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. That is quite a different proposition that standing in this place and, on the basis of a newspaper report, suggesting that something is taking place, without first ascertaining whether or not this travel is done at the expense of the individual Member of Parliament, which is exempted from this particular provision, or that there is, in fact, no obligation on the part of the Member to register. That is the important thing to determine at the outset.

The point I want to make in pursuing this particular matter is that I know that newspaper reports are very often the basis of questioning in the course of events, but it seems to me that the Standing Order is very clear. It requires and obligates Members under certain circumstances to enter certain details with respect to foreign travel into a registry maintained in your office, Sir. It says nothing more, nothing less. There is no imputation that it has to be done before, during or after. Indeed, it seems to me rather preposterous, if you want to get the fullest detail with respect to travel, to suggest that a Member before they take the trip give the full details of a trip that is yet to be undertaken. It would be far more appropriate in my way of thinking for the Member to come forward after returning from the trip to disclose the full details as required under the Standing Order.

I do not want to prolong this, because it is an Opposition Day as I respect the right of the Opposition to have the fullest debate. But let me simply say this. This particular provision has been on notice to Hon. Members who have had a chance to cogitate on its implications for some months now. It was accepted by unanimous resolution of the House as a provisional order of the House. The purpose of a provisional order, and rules adopted on an experimental basis, is for us to benefit from the experience that will transpire.

I recall when I first introduced this matter by way of resolution, if we want to bring this to its logical conclusion, that the resistance to this proposal for a registry was not from this side of the House, but rather from the other side. I find it rather curious now to find members of the Opposition complaining about this very reasonable proposition and now wanting to have you rule in advance of any particular allegation that this is travel that might come within this rule.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, please. It is clear that the matter was adopted by the House. Let me suggest—

Mr. Deans: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is a technical matter I must deal with before I hear more argument. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) has raised a point of order. I must go to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior and ask him precisely who has breached the rules and in what way? He has raised a general point of order. I am in a dilemma in that in order to investigate what the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior is claiming as a breach, I think I should have some facts.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we need to play cat and mouse in the House of Commons. We know that there is a delegation that has made a trip to the Republic of South Korea, and we know that one Member has placed his name on the registry and that others have not. This is a confusing, uncertain situation. It is one that I am sure Your Honour cannot tolerate, and it is one about which Members of Parliament should have some clarification. That is what the point of order is about and what I am asking the Chair to do.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) will be next. The Hon. Member will know that the Chair had to have that information in order to proceed.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I had not intended to even enter into this debate. However, having listened to it, there is some confusion that I want to try to clear up, at least in my own mind. As I understand it, after looking at the rule, the requirement is that if a person travels on other than parliamentary business paid for out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, it is necessary for that individual—

An Hon. Member: Or on his own account.

Mr. Deans: I'm sorry, or on his own account, I bet your pardon. You are correct. It is necessary for those individuals to list the trip together with the name of the sponsoring person or organization which paid for travel to and from Canada. That is a very simple requirement and, in fact, ought to be able to be adhered to in advance of the trip taking place. It is not necessary for the person to have taken the trip to know who is paying for it. Surely that question would be asked at the time the trip was offered. The decision as to whether or not the individual Member might accept the offer would be, at least in part, determined by the source of the funding.

I want to make just three points. The first is that it is the practice for parliamentary organizations to announce in advance that there is a parliamentary delegation going to a particular place. That practice has served us well, and I think that that practice should become the rule. It is not followed in every instance, but it has been a practice. The reason I say that is that there is circulated among the Members the announcement of the opportunity to take the trip. With that in mind, I think we ought to try to do two things. We should try to establish that as a practice for all trips that are paid for either out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund or funded by someone other than the Member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are debationg what the practice should be as opposed to hearing representations on a point of order, which is the Chair's dilemma at this point. Can the Hon. Member conclude on the point of order, please?

Mr. Deans: On the point of order let me then say that you will recall, Sir, that at the time the provisional rules were put in place there was an understanding arrived at among the Parties that as matters such as this arose the House Leaders would meet, they would attempt to resolve those matters and they would come back with some satisfactory solution. I was going to end by saying, I am confident that if the House Leader for the Government, together with the House Leader for the Official Opposition were to meet with myself we could easily enough determine how this could be arranged to meet the requirements of everyone in the House of Commons without asking the Speaker to make a ruling.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest, please, for the sake of everybody involved, that that suggestion by the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans) seems, from the Chair, to make the most sense so far. I take the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior's concerns seriously, but I think that given the newness of this and given the importance I think the House should place this on the experimental period, it would be wiser if the House Leaders were to discuss this matter prior to the Chair having to make a ruling, which the Chair may later have to do if there is no possibility of agreement. May I suggest, therefore, that I intend to leave it that way for the moment and wait for the House Leaders to meet.

If a Member wants to put a motion on the floor as to what the matter should be he has every right to do so, but not on a point of order. It would therefore be out of order now to do so. No motion is in order at this point. This is a point of order arising out of the Question Period. My view is that that is the wisest course of action. Did the Members want to object to that? Then I will have to rule, and I will rule now.

Mr. Gauthier: Since I am at the centre of this whole thing may I just put a point to you and to the House. Indeed I agree that this matter should be taken up by the House Leaders of all Parties. But I also think Members in this House should be able to put their points of view to the Ministers in question, in writing or verbally, otherwise it is just going to be a party of three persons navel gazing.

Mr. Speaker: They have every right to. The Hon. Member knows that we are here on a point of order. That is all that is before the House at the moment.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, in raising the point of order I was motivated by a strong desire to see the new Standing Orders work, and not to cast aspersions on any Hon. Members. Therefore, whatever route, whatever avenue will resolve the problem will certainly have my full support and agreement. I agree with Your Honour that if it can be done among the House Leaders, that is perfectly acceptable to me. If it is in order, Sir, at this time I would seek unanimous consent, if that is necessary, to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. No such consent is necessary.

• (1520)

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was going to seek the unanimous consent of the House. I was ordered, as Chairman of the Committee on Management and Members' Services, to write to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to refer this matter before it was printed. I realize that the matter that has been dealt with by the House is exactly what we wanted to study in the Management and Members' Services Committee. We wanted to adopt the rule and have a registry. I may say, with all indulgence, that I do not agree with some of my colleague's remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has representations to make and I believe he knows where to make them. Orders of the Day.

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 82—VIABILITY OF FORESTRY AND AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House recognizes the dire circumstances faced by Canadian forest workers by impending legislative initiatives of the U.S. Congress and the equally dire circumstances faced by Canadian farmers as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill and condemns this Government for its failure to adequately protect the viability of these two vital sectors of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, let me indicate to the Hon. Member for Skeena and all Members of the House that we welcome the debate on his motion regarding this issue. I am aware of his personal interest and the interest of other Hon. Members about this issue.

This is a sensitive issue at this time because of the negotiations and the impending decision in the United States about whether to proceed with the bilateral negotiations with Canada. However, I believe it is important to state for the record what progress we have made to date.

If the Hon. Member were to talk to Jack Munro of the International Woodworkers of America, or Mike Apsey of COFI, any of the mill management or labour groups, or the industry, he would find that they are very well aware of the Government's efforts to ensure that we work together in dealing with this very real threat.

Let me review for the House the strong united front that we have forged with all segments of the forestry sector in defending Canadian interests in this issue. I was involved in the 1982-83 countervail issue. In my opinion, the leadership shown by our Government is far ahead of what was shown in 1982-83 in terms of bringing together all of those interests who stand to lose from possible actions taken in another jurisdiction.

The lumber industry in all parts of our country have come together in CFIC, the Canadian Forest Industries Council. Of course, the provinces are key players, given the nature of the charges against their timber pricing and resource management policies. One of the first issues discussed by the Canadian Council of Forestry Ministers was Canadian response to the protectionist threats in the United States. We have closely involved the provinces during every step in dealing with this particular issue. In fact, in the recent meeting in the Hon. Member's Province of British Columbia, the provinces of British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec were directly involved in the second meeting of the series of current Canada-U.S. talks which were held just two weeks ago.

The International Woodworkers of America have made a tremendous contribution to a better understanding of this issue on both sides of the border by their comprehensive analysis of the productivity differences between American and Canadian sawmills, which is a major cornerstone of our argument that Canada's market share results from market factors, not some Government manipulation of the market-place.

Through our Washington embassy and our U.S. consulates, as mentioned this morning, we have undertaken a concerted educational effort to explain the Canadian case. I believe it is extremely important that we ensure that the arguments made on both sides are based on fact, so that this does not evolve into an emotional issue as a result of what is happening in those particular jurisdictions.

The Canadian industry has mounted a major defence in the United States against protectionist pressure in the Congress and with the administration. The industry has also worked closely with the federal and provincial Governments to ensure an effective defence of the Canadian case in the United States. I believe that our industry, through COFI, has effectively mobilized U.S. home builders, lumber wholesalers, shippers and other interests to lobby Congress against protectionist pressures.

All of the various members of the forestry community which I have mentioned, including the lumber industry and its workers, the provinces and the federal Government, have been working in very close harmony on this issue. Moreover, I do not see this changing in the very near future. Let me review some of the facts in this issue because I believe it is important that Hon. Members, Canadians and others understand the argument from our perspective.

The U.S. industry and some members of Congress are alleging that all of the problems associated with the North American lumber industry are due to our over-production in Canada because of our stumpage and forest management policies. Let me present our viewpoint on this issue arising from the recent fact-finding meeting held in Prince George in February.

It will come as no surprise that we disagree strongly with the intimation that certain provincial resource development practices may have a significant market distorting impact on North American lumber trade. It was our broad conclusion following the technical briefings in Prince George last February that there is no evidence of distortions as a result of Canadian provincial policies that could be said to be providing their producers with unfair advantage. Despite the attempts by the U.S. industry to discredit the argument, it remains our firm contention that market factors explain most if not all of the competitiveness enjoyed by Canada in the market-place. In particular, we would point to the exchange rate advantage enjoyed by Canadian mills over the past decade, and species preference that favours Canadian species in the North American stud-framing market. These factors have been the major determinants of Canadian competitiveness and of the growth in its market share over the past decade.

Let us briefly revisit the facts. The impact of the exchange rate can be viewed in one of two ways. On the cost side, the decline in the value of the Canadian dollar has more than offset a slightly higher rate of inflation in Canada. As the recent report from the U.S. International Trade Commission points out, the net result of this real exchange rate effect was equivalent to giving Canadians producers a production cost advantage of 11 per cent in 1984, compared with 1977.

It could be argued that it is more meaningful to measure the impact of exchange rate movements from the demand side. It is, after all, the different price signals sent to Canadian as opposed to U.S. producers that influences their respective decisions to produce. In this sense, the effect of the exchange rate movement has been to consistently send a higher price signal to Canadian producers than U.S. producers of similar lumber.

I have already referred to productivity studies by IWA and others. While we had severe reservations about the methodology employed by the U.S. ITC study, I believe it is important that Canadians are aware that the study showed that Canadian mills produce almost twice as much on average as do U.S. mills. Furthermore, the average Canadian worker produces 100,000 board feet annually, or 26 per cent more than each U.S. worker. Third, on an hourly basis, the average Canadian produces 29 per cent more than the average U.S. worker. Finally, the productivity increase between 1978 and 1984, both of which were peak years, was 40 per cent in Canada and only 26 per cent in the United States. We understand that the productivity advantage over U.S. sawmills may close and we will have to take steps to ensure that we maintain an advantage.

We must also deal with species preference. There is no question that in all markets in the United States, American consumers prefer Canadian spruce-pine-fir. There are many reasons why they prefer Canadian spruce-pine-fir over southern yellow pine. Even the Southern American Forest Products Association has recently confirmed that excessive warp, crook wane and moisture content are fairly common complaints from specifiers and users of southern yellow pine. I think there is a preferential issue which must be dealt with in respect of the fact that they would prefer our species rather than theirs.

We must address the issue of whether or nor there are any Government policies which have had a significantly distorting effect on north American lumber markets. The technical briefings which were held recently with the U.S. administration will bring this issue out. In terms of Canadian provincial policies and practices, it is important to note that while unique institutional arrangements have been developed in Canada in response to ownership patterns and a resource base which differs markedly from that in the United States we share with the United States certain fundamental resource management objectives. We are not that far apart in terms of our objectives. There are common elements in our approach to resource pricing.

With respect to resource management, all provinces are committed to sustained yield. It has been brought to our attention that perhaps we do not have a sustained yield. We adhere to that policy while recognizing the difficult transition from an over-mature resource which we have in Canada to what might be termed, perhaps, a normal forest. There has also been an increasing commitment to reforestation in Canada over the past decade to ensure sustained yield in future years.

Besides that our producers have extra costs and much more difficult access to our resources, for example, in terms of road building activities. Even if there are allowances for that they are additional costs to our producers. I think it is significant that in both countries reforestation expenditures are viewed as an investment to be recouped from future stumpage and other revenues. We would conclude from the written and oral answers provided by the provinces to the U.S. question that there is no basis to suggest that provincial Government policies or practices have a market-distorting effect.

I could dwell on some of the U.S. policies but since time is at a premium I will not. I could deal with some of the American legislation and policies which have negatively impacted on their industry. Because of time constraints I do not think that I will get into that issue at this time. However, it is a major concern of their own producers that some of their own legislation works against their interests. Both Canada and the United States agree that there is clear evidence of significant tariff and non-tariff barriers in Third World markets which restrict access of North American lumber products offshore which can be dealth with on a joint basis. We agree that this is the way we should go with respect to this issue.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) mentioned this morning the political dimension. Their points are well taken. It is a regrettable truism that it is the squeaky wheel which gets the grease. While the levels of rhetoric by Canadians on the lumber issue has been much more restrained than that of certain elements in the U.S. industry and its Congressional allies, it would be a mistake to underestimate the degree of political sensitivity and depth of political passion in Canada which would result from any untoward U.S. actions by its Congress or administration.

We are talking here about an approximately $3.5 billion industry on the lumber side alone. It is a big stake which Canadians have in this industry. Our forest products earn $15 billion annually for our economy. When one considers that the contribution of the forest industry to GNP is five times larger in Canada in proportionate terms than it is in the U.S., that there are 300 communities which are solely or almost solely dependent upon it for their livelihood in the forest product sector, and that there are about 300,000 jobs directly at stake in the forest products industry, it can be readily appreciated just how sensitive the issue is to all Canadians. It can be recognized how important it is to try to deal as carefully and as judicially as we can with the protectionist sentiments in the United States. It is important to point out how extremely disruptive they would be to the future course of Canada-U.S. relations.

In conclusion, the Canadian viewpoint is being presented to key Congressional and U.S. administration people at every opportunity. It is done on a political level, as the Hon. Member knows, through our parliamentary committees, private meetings, tours of our facilities, our Members going to see theirs, and through our industries sharing information. Moreover, we have brought together all of the sectors of the lumber industry including labour, government, industry and the provincial Governments in order to bring their talents to bear on the common defence of the Canadian position in the United States.

I would like to conclude by saying that our Government has put all the facts to the U.S. It has made a major effort to educate Americans on this issue. The question is—and I know it has been brought up before and will probably be brought up again—to what extent will they listen? Hon. Members must realize that this issue is a political one in the United States. As members of the Opposition have pointed out, some U.S. Congressmen are up for re-election. They are responding to the concerns of their constituents by trying to protect them against what they pereceive to be injustices. Therefore, it is my view, and the view of the Government, that the best strategy we have in dealing with this issue is to continue to put forward the facts as clearly and as concisely as we possibly can, as we have been doing, jointly and collectively with our partners. It is important to build good relations with the U.S. administration, relations which were seriously damaged by the previous Government. That is how we will protect our efforts and our jobs. Hopefully, we will succeed. The next few weeks will be crucial for all of us. I know we can count on the best efforts of all Members of Parliament as we try to deal with this very sensitive issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the remarks of the Minister. However, I am afraid I have the same comment for him as I did for the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher). That is to say that he seems to be looking too closely at the facts. Because of the ruling with respect to 332, the update with respect to it and investigations which were made by the Department of Commerce for the International Trade Commission, the Americans seem to have dropped their ongoing arguments in relation to subsidy at our most recent meeting just 10 days ago. They seem to have dropped their ongoing arguments in relation to our stumpage programs. I am sure the Minister has taken a close look at Sam Gibbons' latest Bill and what it means, for example, in terms of bidding up in British Columbia. The most recent wood that was released under one of the small business programs there brought about a price per unit ten times that of what the forest company right next to that same sale was paying in terms of stumpage. The direction which the Gibbons' Bill is taking is quite different from the direction taken in the past. It has deleted the handling and transportation costs.

The question I wish to put to the Minister is this. Does he not think that now is the time, the only time, that we have to go to the United States, not we as parliamentarians but instead well trained and well-informed people who can deal with those 2 million plus Americans who derive their jobs directly from trade with Canada? This is the only window, as it has been said, which is open to us. We are the two largest trading partners in the world. The Americans tend to forget that. I think we should target them as a group. We should get the house builders, contractors and newspaper companies which receive 57 per cent of their newsprint from Canada on side. The forest industry, the workers and the Governments have done a good job—a damn good job—in mobilizing that type of factual material with respect to the differences between our two forest operations. What is at stake here is politics. It boils down to the lowest common gutter denominator in North America. It is politics and mid-term elections. The Republicans and the Democrats are figting for control of the U.S. Senate. They will do almost whatever is required to gain that control. Do you not think, Mr. Minister, that since in your own Estimates you have 14 more person years and $500,000 and since a $26 billion indusry is at stake, now is the time to deal with this issue? Do you not think your cabinet colleagues should say to you: "Gerry, go for it? Take the money and staff and whatever you need. Open a trade consulate in every single one of those States"? In this way we can get to those other target groups. We can get them going to save the Canadian industry from the slaughterhouse which I think we will see in May.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I do not share the pessimistic view that there will be a slaughterhouse in May. The indications we have been receiving are, of course, that the administration is still very sympathetic to moving in. It will not let the lumber issue and the whole negotiation be held hostage in terms of settling this dispute.

I do not think I need to remind the Hon. Member that in this case we are a sovereign nation. That is a political reality of which we are aware. I have been dealing with these issues since 1982 or 1983. We are aware that the type of debate is changing. We are aware that the 332 investigation and the ITC have proven that we are not giving undue assistance to our industry to make it more competitive.

I wish I could share the Hon. Member's view that everyone listened and learned from those two investigations. However, we think it is important that we continue to make sure we have well established, proven facts and that representatives are brought here to examine our industry through and through from every aspect. We must make sure that every decision they make in their Congress, as a sovereign nation, will be based on facts.

The Hon. Member suggested that we intensify the lobby. Believe me, the private-sector and political groups from Canada have been intensifying their efforts on the widest possible basis as they try to deal with this particular threat. We have tried to point out to the Americans that the kind of protective legislation they may very well bring forward will probably have a far greater job-loss effect in their country than in ours. That must be pointed out. Members of the House of Commons are pointing that out, as are members of industry, labour and provincial Governments. We are doing it as effectively as we can and at some considerable cost.

I might point out to the Hon. Member that we do share with two or three different Departments the costs and efforts put forward in order to deal with this problem. We are expanding the trade consulates in the United States and will continue to do so. We have to make a very broad based effort to put forward the facts as we know them in order to make sure that the Americans make their decision on the right basis.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a small supplementary question. I wonder if the Minister could touch on the point to which I found 25 Members of Congress responding just 10 days ago while they did not respond to a lot of ongoing, well researched evidence in relation to the forestry sector that we have continued to put forward. We simply reminded the Americans that in the home appliance industry, their market penetration increased from 45 per cent of the home appliance industry in Canada to 95 per cent in just eight years. It is an issue of penetration. They are concerned about the 34 per cent of the market we hold in the United States but when they are reminded about some of the degrees of penetration they have achieved in the manufactured and semi-finished products sectors, it seems to take them aback a little. I think we might be able to focus on that and get the American people themselves to have the legislators shift ground, because they have definitely dropped the seven veils of Ali Baba. Does the Minister think that that might be a way of helping to remind Americans of what our huge trade relationship is all about?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to respond very quickly to that. We are very much aware of the political reality of what is going on and the changing nature of the discussions between our two countries, particularly at the political level. The kinds of facts the Hon. Member brought up along with other Members of Parliament are the kinds of facts we have to bring up with the Members of Congress in the United States. I believe those Hon. Members are serving a very useful purpose and will continue to do so. I very much appreciate that kind of help.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make to the Minister, who I know is very interested in his job and is looking out for the best interests of forestry. Perhaps the Minister could tell us whether or not the tougher fibre of Canadian softwood is a big plus when it comes to competing with the softer texture of the fibre of trees which are rapidly grown in the southern part of the United States. Will that factor help negotiate the free trade deal? What measures are in place to help promote the sales of Canadian sotfwoods to the United States?

My second point is in relation to the research facilities in Canada. The Hon. Minister from Sault Ste. Marie, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), knows that the Petawawa National Forestry Institute is a sister operation to the research facilities located in Sault Ste. Marie, and the two work very closely together. Does the Minister see us putting more money into Canadian forestry research facilities in order to promote further the quality, texture, and more rapid growth of our own forest products so that we will be in a position to compete even better with the United States on the basis of quality products?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I did touch upon the issue of consumer preference, and there is no question about that. The American consumers think that our spruce pine fir, because of its fibre and strength, is preferable to their southern yellow pine. I do not think that there is any question about that. We have to continue giving that kind of message to the American consumer because it is important.

The second point the Hon. Member brought up was whether or not we could find some mechanism through which we could help to promote and find new markets. We are prepared to do that with our American neighbours. We recently signed an excellent renewal of the Co-operative Overseas Market Development Program agreement, an agreement shared by the Province of British Columbia and two other provinces. It was signed along with the Council of Forest Industries. The first thing I heard when I went there was how important that program is as we try to find new markets. In the last 25 years, our trade with the European Economic Community has dropped by half and our trade with the United States has increased dramatically. We have to find new markets out there, so we put together that particular program and will continue with those kinds of initiatives.

The last point the Hon. Member made was to do with the importance of research and a continuous commitment to that. We are committed to research. It is very difficult in times of restraint to put all of the money we wish into that, but we are helping the private sector through FERIC, Forentec and PAPRICAN, and four laboratories out of six are undergoing expansions. I have tried to upgrade the minor capital programs of these laboratories and in fact we have been remarkably successful and have upgraded by 1,500 per cent. We are trying to direct our attention to improved research and to direct that research to the kinds of things the industry really wants.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—VIABILITY OF FORESTRY AND AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House recognizes the dire circumstances faced by Canadian forest workers by impending legislative initiatives of the U.S. Congress and the equally dire circumstances faced by Canadian farmers as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill and condemns this Government for its failure to adequately protect the viability of these two vital sectors of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in debate on what I think is a very important issue facing our country today. The motion talks about the problems we are having with trade in the forest industry and in the agriculture industry.

The problem in the forest industry is a bilateral one with the United States because our trade is taking place with the United States and our problem is protectionism in that country. Regarding agriculture, the problem is slightly different because the United States Farm Bill subsidizes exports of American grain and it subsidizes American farmers. The problem with the Farm Bill is that it will disrupt world agricultural markets. Those are the two problems we face.

Today's motion speaks directly to a very important issue our country is debating today while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is in the United States, and that is the whole issue of free trade with the United States. I want it to be very clear that I oppose a comprehensive free trade arrangement between the United States and Canada because it is more than just economics. A free trade arrangement will create a level playing field where economic integration will mean that the same rules that apply in Alabama will apply in Saskatchewan, and that will eventually lead to cultural, social and political integration.

Free trade is a question of independence for this country. It is a question of our sovereignty and our very nationhood. If we have a problem now with so much of our economy owned by the United States and 77 per cent of our trade with the United States, just think of the problems we would have if we had a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. We would always be going cap in hand to Washington.

When the Prime Minister was running for the leadership of his Party, he said in Thunder Bay that he opposed a free trade arrangement with the United States. He also said that the Liberals tried it with Laurier and lost an election, and that a free trade arrangement with the United States was like a mouse going to bed with an elephant, in that the mouse might feel very secure until the elephant rolled over. I agreed with the Prime Minister of the country when he said that. I think he was right then but he is wrong now. It is really a question of the mouse and the elephant.

And that is why, Mr. Speaker, this motion is extremely important. It is very important in the forestry industry, a sector vital to the creation of jobs here in Canada. It is also very important for Canadian farmers across the country. The problem for us in Canada is the protectionist policies of the United States. With protectionism in the U.S., we have unemployment here in Canada, a lot of it in the forestry industry and among our Canadian farmers. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said three years ago, it's like a struggle between a mouse and an elephant, because the population of the United States is now over 200 million, while Canada's population is only 25 million.

To me, free trade is not just a matter of economics. It is also a matter that involves Canada's independence, Canada's sovereignty, and forestry is a vital industry. I hope that today and tomorrow, our Prime Minister will have a serious discussion about this matter with President Reagan in the United States. It is important for Canada. It is important for Quebec and British Columbia and Ontario. It is important because 300,000 people work directly in this industry. There are also 700,000 people working indirectly in the forestry sector here in Canada. There are many lumberjacks and a lot of other people that depend on this industry. It is Canada's most important export industry, and last year, its economic value to Canada was $25 billion. Mr. Speaker, the Wilson Budget contains a cut in Government spending on the forestry sector.

[English]

The other issue is the U.S. Farm Bill. I cannot help but use the rest of my remarks asking colleagues on all sides of the House to rally with us in trying to point out to the Americans the danger of that Bill to Canadian farmers. Let us look at the headlines which have appeared in newspapers over the last few days and weeks. An article in the Manitoba Co-operator was entitled "U.S. Farm Bill will hurt". One in The Globe and Mail was entitled "U.S. Farm Bill could hurt Canada". In a story in The Toronto Star, the following was indicated: "Moves toward U.S. export subsidy may prove worrisome for Canada". Finally, an article appeared in The Western Producer which was entitled "Situation may lead to subsidy battle". Newspaper after newspaper are starting to tell Canadians about the danger of the American Farm Bill to our country.

I should like to spend a few minutes talking about that Bill. It became law in the United States toward the end of 1985. It is to become effective in June, 1986, or in about two or three months. It is a big threat. Why is it a big threat? What will it do? It will allow the American Secretary of Agriculture the power to reduce the export price of American farm products to other countries around the world. Also it will allow the American Secretary of Agriculture to increase subsidies to American farmers. Why are the Americans doing that? It is because of their sagging exports, because of their increased inventories of grain, particularly wheat, and because of massive subsidies by the European Common Market in what is amounting in reality to an all out trade war between the Treasury of Europe and the Treasury of the United States of America.

What will be the cost of this American Farm Bill? Mr. Speaker, even though you are not from a western Canadian riding, I am sure you will realize our problems. Over the next three years a conservative estimate, if I could use that word, of the cost to the United States will be $52 billion. That is what the Americans will be spending to subsidize the export of American farm products and to subsidize the income of the American farmer.

Mr. Benjamin: So much for free trade.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Free trade for whom? We are living in a fool's paradise if we think seriously that the Americans want free trade with Canadians. I think the Prime Minister is starting to realize that. Now he talks more about enhanced trade than he talks about free trade. In any event, the Americans will spend $52 billion in the next three years, and perhaps more. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is estimating that it will be over $60 billion in the next three years. What will the Americans do? First, they will subsidize the export of American food products to various countries around the world.

Second, they will subsidize the price of a bushel of wheat and the price of other farm products to American farmers.

Who will suffer? It will be the farmers of Canada, Australia, Argentina and New Zealand; they will be the victims of the American farm Bill. Our Treasury cannot compete with the Treasury of the United States or with the Treasury of the European Common Market. It is important for the Prime Minister to take a message to Ronald Reagan saying that the farm Bill is wrong and that the problems of the international grain economy or of the farm economy cannot be solved by building huge protective walls around the United States and having a trade war with the European Common Market.

How will the Bill work? The system in the United States is similar to ours in terms of advancing money to farmers before they sell their grain. In Canada it is called cash advances. In the United States it is called a loan rate. The only difference is that the American Government takes possession of the grain, whereas we just make an advance on what a farmer will receive when his grain is sold. The loan rate for wheat in the United States this year will probably be set, according to agricultural economists, at $2.40 per bushel. The loan rate automatically becomes the floor price of wheat, not just in the United States but on a global basis, because the Americans have 25 per cent of the world share of wheat production and we have only 5 per cent. If the price of wheat falls to $2.40 per bushel, how many Canadian farmers will survive? We do not have a program to subsidize our farmers like the one of the Americans. The United States now has a support level for wheat of $4.38 per bushel. If the world price is $2.40 per bushel on one hand and the support price is some $4.38 on the other hand, there is a difference of $1.98 which is made up by the Treasury of the United States. In other words, a subsidy of about $2 per bushel will come from the Reagan administration to the grain farmers of the United States. The victims of this will be the farmers of Canada because the Canadian Wheat Board cannot compete under any circumstances with $2.40 per bushel wheat anywhere in the world. Many of our importing customers will be waiting until June until the American farm Bill becomes law. Asian countries, African countries and even the Soviet Union will be looking to the United States where they can buy grain for $2.40 and $2.50 a bushel instead of paying a higher price here in Canada. We are in very serious difficulty, Mr. Speaker.

I checked the Chicago futures market for the price of wheat. In the month of March wheat is quoted at $3.40 a bushel. Do you know what it is for the month of July, Mr. Speaker? It is down to $2.50 a bushel, a drop of 90 cents a bushel. I ask you, how will farmers survive with the price of grain at $2.50, $2.40 or $2.60 a bushel, which is what the indication now is from the U.S. farm Bill and the Chicago futures market?

The Canadian Federal Grain Marketing Bureau spokesperson, Gary Moore, said recently that we can anticipate a drop in the price of wheat of between 20 per cent and 30 per cent in the calendar year 1986-87. You can anticipate a drop in the income of wheat farmers of $1 billion in the next crop year because of the American farm Bill. This farm Bill applies not only to wheat but to many other commodities. They are all listed in those summaries that we have seen accompanying that legislation. It works the same way. For example, there will be a subsidy of about $1 a bushel for soy beans.

What is the purpose of the farm Bill, Mr. Speaker? It is to try to drive down the price of grain in the world because the Americans feel that the European subsidy is too high. The Americans are trying to drive down the price of grain to break the backs of the European countries, a bit of a daredevil's war of who is going to say "uncle" first, the Europeans or the Americans. It is a battle of two Treasuries. It is a bidding war between the Europeans and the Americans.

The farmer in Kamsack, the farmer in Lethbridge, Yorkton or Kindersly is caught in the middle of this bidding war between the United States and the Europeans. The question is, what can we do about it? There are a couple of things. The Prime Minister is in Washington today. He must look at Ronald Reagan eyeball to eyeball, square in the eye, and tell him that his farm Bill will bankrupt thousands upon thousands of farmers across Canada and that he must not proceed with the U.S. Farm Bill. Second, the Prime Minister must initiate discussions with the President of the United States toward the beginning of an international wheat agreement, an effective and comprehensive international grains agreement where the price of wheat will have some reflection on the cost of production for farmers around the world.

We used to have such an agreement. It broke down in 1969 when the United States of America started to sell wheat below the agreed upon floor price. Because the Americans are the biggest producers of wheat in the world, they broke the agreement and destroyed the whole guaranteed pricing system for farmers around the globe.

What we have now is the law of the jungle. What we have now is the law of Rambo. If you are big and strong, if you are muscular and have all the devices of a massive Treasury behind you, you can subsidize your farmers and screw farmers in other countries. That is what we are seeing with the United States Farm Bill. This Parliament must speak as one, loudly, clearly, emphatically and aggressively. We must say that that is not good enough.

We have to support agriculture in Canada because if the farmer is better off, then we are all better off. If the farmer is better off, there are jobs in towns and cities for the young people of Canada. If the farmer makes $2 or $3, he will spend $7 or $8. That is why we have to defend agriculture.

This is a very important debate today. This Parliament must say to our Prime Minister, as this country said to Laurier many years ago, "We don't want a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. We know that a free trade agreement between the two countries will affect more than just economics, it will affect our very political sovereignty, our very independence as a nation". Our vision of trade in the world must go beyond the shores of North America. Our vision must include China, the developing world, Japan and the Pacific Rim. Our vision must include as well increasing production for Canadians. If we have free trade with the United States of America we will see a loss of jobs and a loss of some of the social programs that we know and we will see a loss of the very autonomy and the very nationhood of our country. We will see it affecting the farmers, the Canadian Wheat Board, the poultry industry and the dairy industry.

The time has come for Canadians from coast to coast to rally behind the flag of this nation, this great country of Canada, to stand up and to fight for ourselves with the patriotism that other countries such as the U.S., France and Britain have shown for years and years and years.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter that involves Canada's sovereignty and Canada's independence. It is time to act.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gervais): Are there any questions or comments? If not, we will continue debate. The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that the debate taking place in this House today is of the utmost importance to Canada and to our future. Ever since the pioneer days of Canada, agriculture and forestry have been two major staples of the Canadian economy. Fewer and fewer people are participating in agriculture now, but the industry has certainly grown in great bounds of production right across the country.

We have had other staple crops, such as, for instance, fish and fur. But to drive the point home as to why today's debate on forestry today is of extreme importance let me say that 11 per cent or more of the Canadian labour market work in the forest or forest related industries. There is no way we can go into trade negotiations thinking that we are going to come away with a pat on the back and everything will be all right. We have to do our homework ahead of time. Hard bargaining is simply good business. The U.S. understands that very well. The Americans have been good bargainers over the years and that spells their success.

I suppose bargaining can best be illustrated by using the case of the cattle drover. He goes out to buy cattle and he goes to those farmers from whom he got the best deal last year. If we as a nation end up being a poor bargainer, then we will be had and more people will take us for a ride.

The Americans will not respect Canadians any more if we are the soft-touch in any free trade agreements. They understand hard business bargaining and will respect us more if we are tough than if we take everyting with a smile.

In relation to the jurisdictional structure of the forest industry in Canada it is important to point out that in my view one of the greatest weaknesses of the Canadian Constitution is the fact that the national Government in Canada does not have direct control over the natural resources of the country. They are, rather, under provincial jurisdiction. In the United States natural resources are under the jurisdiction of the national Government in Washington. That allows more direct action. Can you imagine having to deal with every state in the United States if those resources were under the jurisdiction of the various states?

On the very basis of our Constitution we have great difficulty dealing with forest-based industries and the management of our forests. The management of our forests in crucial to this entire argument. We must have good quality timber in the years ahead to compete favourably.

This morning during a question and comment period the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) condemned the Government for not having reforestation programs and for selling lumber without putting the proceeds back into the Canadian forest industry. He was saying that natural resources in Canada are under federal jurisdiction, which they are not. The forest resources in Canada are under provincial jurisdiction. I wonder what the Quebec Government would have done if the federal Government had gone into the Province of Quebec and started doing the work which legally belongs to the Department of Natural Resources of that province. We would have a real constitutional wrangle.

Let us get it straight. The provinces have always been in charge of managing the forests of the country. We all realize that some of them have done a very poor job. Based on its forest resources, British Columbia should be in far better shape than it is today. The forests in the Province of Ontario were the milch cow of a Conservative Government for over 40 years until the recent change. The money made from the forests were not used for the renewal of natural resources in the Province of Ontario. I suspect that you will find the same situation in many other provinces of Canada. In order to compete favourably, we must have our own house in good order.

The free trade issue is one of the most critical issues facing the Canadian economy today. There is no sense in denying it. There is a great deal of concern within the farming community across the country. There is a great deal of concern among sawmill operators, lumber dealers, and all forest-related industries. There should be concern in the labour community of Canada as well as in the business community. As I just said, over 11 per cent of the labour population of Canada works in forest-related industries.

The Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) must sell their ideas to the forest-based industries of the country. They must talk to the farmers of the country who are very ill to ease and need real assurances. Free trade has implications for all regions and all economic sectors of Canada. How well we conduct the negotiations and how well we achieve the objectives of those negotiations will have an enormous impact on all of us for years to come. A closer analysis of a free trade agreement shows that some Canadians would gain and some would lose. It shows that some of the losers would be the textile and the agricultural industries.

A previous speaker in this debate talked about the problem between the European Economic Community and the United States. It certainly is a battle in dollars between the United States subsidization of their agricultural industry and the subsidization by the European community of their farmers. It remains to be seen who will win that dollar battle. We suspect that it will be our neighbour to the south. The European countries are already suffering from the high cost of subsidizing their agricultural community. They would desperately love to get out of that situation and lower those subsidies, but they do not dare to do so because the Party which does it will lose the next election. Farms in Europe are still small and farmers have a lot of clout. With so many political Parties, every vote is important.

Paula Stern, the United States' chief watchdog on trade, is not sure of the benefits of free trade with Canada. Free trade is clearly not supported by a majority of Canadians. Liberals have always supported freer trade, but not free trade, that is, a reduction of both tariff and non-tariff barriers, but not at the expense of our sovereigty, cultural identity, or ability to make our own economic decisions. If our economy is such that we are the captives of an international agreement, we will certainly be giving up a large part of our sovereignty and the right to make major economic decisions.

Any discussions must recognize the unique needs of the Canadian economy and Canadian society. The danger of being railroaded into a hasty decision now might later prove to be damaging to Canadian interests. Can we trust the Government's negotiating abilities? That question is on the mind of many Canadians. Time and again we have seen the Government cave in to the slightest pressure. The meeting in Quebec City between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) one year ago was seen as a meeting of total agreement followed by a good bash. Canadians reacted to that with suspicion of this very close liaison. They were worried about what was really being given away. The facts are there, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing which started the spirited national debate between the United States and Canada in recent months was the issue of the Polar Sea. When the Polar Sea was going through the Northwest Passage there was no comment from the Government of Canada. That led Canadians to believe that the Prime Minister was indeed too cosy with the President of the United States. It again comes down to good business bargaining. You cannot have good business bargaining if you are willing to give anything away just to be a friend.

To date the Government has not provided us with an assessment of the costs by sector and region. Hundreds of questions remain to be answered. Some of the provincial Premiers have caused the Government to accept provinces as part of the negotiations because the provinces have too much at stake. They have too much at stake for the very reason I mentioned a while ago. The forest resources of the country are under the jurisdiction of individual provinces. That is a big source of income for provincial Governments and naturally they are going to be very concerned about what type of deal this Government strikes with the U.S. on the forest industry.

Farmers throughout the country are strongly opposed to free trade. The cultural industry is in a state of confusion and concern over free trade. Thousands of jobs could be lost if negotiations are not handled carefully and with resolve. If we look at the possible effects on agriculture, we have to look at the subsidization of some sections of the industry such as the dairy industry. We must make certain that agriculture is not on the negotiating table. How do you prevent this? I suspect the Government will put it on the table. If I heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) correctly, he recently said that if there was not a good agreement on agriculture with regard to free trade, there would be no agreement. Those are very brave words and I hope he means them. Farmers throughout this country will be watching the Minister very carefully to make sure he backs up those words.

Federick Stokelo, Director of International Business Relations for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said:

> I hate to say this, but U.S. business with Canada is treated as business in California.

He means that Canada is indeed treated like the 51st state. That statement comes from an American, not a Canadian.

The potential loss of supply management and agricultural marketing boards would prove disastrous. Twenty-five per cent of all Canadian farmers are in serious financial difficulties and the industry needs to be protected. Not only that, it needs to be supported. In the recent Budget we saw $700 million set aside for loans to the agricultural community. At the same time there are from 50,000 to 60,000 farmers who are facing financial risk if not bankruptcy. In farming today $100,000 is not very much when it comes to equipping the farm and putting it on a solid footing. Even if you lowered the amount of a loan to $100,000 on average, that money set aside will only go to service about 7,000 farmers. There will still be more than 50,000 with the same problems.

This is indeed a big challenge and it must be looked at seriously. Agriculture in Canada can no longer be looked upon as a way of life where people live on the farm because it is their home. It is not only their home, it is a place of business. Agriculture today is serious business. You can drive along a country road and see a large farming operation and not realize that there is more money invested in that farm than perhaps in a factory that you had just passed going through the local town. I use that example in order to emphasize the fact that we have to protect the agricultural industry as well as the forest industry in these negotiations. Until the Government gives those two industries some realistic responses to these problems, the people concerned cannot have any real faith in these negotiations. People who have been working for years to build up a farm or a sawmill operation are really going to be behind the eight ball if they see that these negotiations could mean the failure of their operation.

The Prime Minister said that sleeping with an elephant is terrific until he twitches or rolls over. Perhaps that phrase has been used enough. He also added that this is why the question of free trade was decided in the election of 1911, when it was defeated. It affects Canadian sovereignty, and we will have none of it, not during leadership campaigns or at any other time. That is what he said. Canadians are going to be watching closely to make sure he lives up to what he says.

I will not go over the time allowed me but I wish I could take a minute to talk about the U.S. Farm Bill and how some of its provisions will affect Canada. However, the bottom line is that those provisions are certainly going to affect Canada's trade. They are certainly going to affect our capacity to maintain a strong base in the farm industry. Hopefully we will be able to upgrade our forests and get some good research going in Canada, but the bargaining in that sector will have to be tough.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gervais): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) who talked about international trade and the particular implications concerning our neighbour to the South, the United States.

Surely the Hon. Member knows that 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is now duty free. The Hon. Member also knows that the discussions we are having now with our southern neighbour have to do mostly with the irritants which developed on either side of the border when the previous Government was in office. All those irritants can be traced back to the Liberal Government, and that is why today the American Congress is questioning American imports of Canadian products.

The Hon. Member ought not to forget that those irritants are due to his own Government. I would like to hear his opinion on the difficulties we experienced when we tried to export pork. If our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had not intervened at that time, our pork exports would have gone down.

Because you failed to take proper action when those irritants were developed, we have to pay additional taxes on salted fish, not to mention the fact that they create problems with respect to manufactured goods generally and forest products.

I would therefore ask the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke if, in the document he got from the Liberal Party research service, he can find an answer to the healthy climate they created for the development of the irritants which, to this day, hamper our trade with the United States.

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, my researcher is upstairs. However, having been here a number of years, I know some of the incidents about which the Hon. Member speaks. I will say to him that as this Government goes along you are going to find that everything is not a bed of roses. You are going to run into a few irritants too.

• (1630)

The Hon. Member mentioned the question of the fish. That was a battle to protect the fishermen of Canada. I see nothing wrong with that. I originally mentioned in my speech that the Americans are tough bargainers and that this is why they are successful. They are not going to consider us anti-American if we are tough bargainers. If someone is complaining because we are too tough to deal with, I do not think that is a complaint, I think that is a plus factor.

If you want to talk about irritants, let me point out that because we have bought a lot of defence equipment from the United States our defence-sharing agreement ledger shows today that Canada is behind by $2 billion on defence trade.

An Hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Hopkins: Why? I will tell you why, because the former Liberal Government purchased 138 fighter aircraft from the United States and because we purchased a considerable amount of other defence equipment from the United States. The Americans have always had their defence-based industries. You might say, "Well why don't we?" Well, my answer would be that, in order to maintain a full capacity shipbuilding industry in this country, we would have to build at least one ship per year to keep everything in place. However, this Government is not even able right now to find the money to build an icebreaker.

You ask why? I say it is because the former Liberal Government bought a lot of defence equipment to build up our conventional forces, contrary to what we have heard from Members opposite, and certainly contrary to the defence budget that the Conservative Government has come out with lately and the estimates of the past year, which show a growth of minus .2 per cent in the defence budget of Canada after its promises in the election campaign of a 6 per cent growth.

To finalize my answer to the Hon. Member I say, sure, there are irritants. I would like to find out where there are no irritants at all between two countries that do so much dealing over the years. Do you think that if you are going to have 70 per cent of your trade with one nation in the world there are not going to be irritants? There is no great, pure society out there. You are going to have these irritants and you can debate them, but in debating them you are not going to get rid of the debate simply by giving away the kitchen and the dishes in it as well. If the other person is going to be tough on some of those points you have to be tough too, otherwise you are not representing or protecting the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gervais): Further questions and comments?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) can compare the enhanced trade negotiations that we are trying to undertake with the United States with the reciprocity of 1911. Right now 85 per cent of all the goods that flow from Canada into the United States are tariff free. Sixty-five per cent of all the goods that flow from the United states into Canada are tariff-free. It is a completely different situation. We are trying to get along with the United States, we are trying to make a deal.

I heard him bring up the matter of the Polar Sea. How can he have the nerve to bring up the Polar Sea? How can we be expected to defend our sovereignty in this country when we do not have a canoe or a peashooter to do it with? He spoke about his researcher being upstairs. I think he had better get his researcher down here.

I know the Hon. Member would not try to mislead this House, but he has misled the House. He talked about 50,000 to 60,000 farmers facing bankruptcy. The latest figure I got was that there were 1700 farmers facing bankruptcy. I do not know where he got that number of 50,000 to 60,000. I would like him to explain that, please.

Mr. Hopkins: Well, I thought I was being sufficiently above-board and drew a fair enough picture for the Hon. Member to understand, but obviously it went right over his head. I did not say that 50,000 to 60,000 farmers in this country were facing bankruptcy.

Mr. Horner: Check the "blues", that's what you said.

Mr. Hopkins: I will check the "blues", I certainly will. I said that 50,000 to 60,000 farmers in this country are having serious financial difficulties, and some of them are facing bankruptcy.

Mr. Horner: We are all having financial difficulties.

Mr. Hopkins: I am just answering your question. Mr. Speaker, can you call the Hon. Member to order? He is getting a little over-enthusiastic here. He says he does not know how I can bring the matter of the Polar Sea into it. Well, my goodness, it is part of U.S.-Canada relations and I simply did it because the arrival of the Polar Sea was only debated in this House months after the event. I said that there was no comment made on the Polar Sea at the time and that that simply gave Canadians another reason for saying that the Prime Minister of Canada was cosying up too much to the President of the United States. That is certainly a basis for some of their suspicions today on free trade, because they feel that if he is cosying up too much to the President of the United States then we are going to get a bad deal on free trade. That is on the minds of Canadians.

The Hon. Member mentioned the Polar Sea issue. I would like to ask him to stand up in the House at this time and tell us what Government Department is going to build an icebreaker and who is going to manage it. We want to hear that too.

Mr. Mantha: I think the Hon. Member is deceiving the House and the Canadian people. He said they bought 138 aircraft, or whatever was the figure he used. They might have bought them, but we had to pay for them.

I also want to remind the Hon. Member that our Armed Forces, 83,000 strong, if I might say to him, were professional fixers of used equipment, and they have medals for this. The purple Voodoo that is in North Bay is on loan from us to the Americans. Can he tell us the purpose of that purple Voodoo? What does it do for our defence?

The military, as you know, have always supported the previous Government. Last September 4, as you are well aware, between 71 per cent and 80 per cent went completely against you people because the previous Government did not give any equipment or any assistance to our Armed Forces as far as modern high-tech is concerned.

I know that the Hon. Member going to say that we are all in a fog, and I don't want him to do that. I just want him to answer the question: Why did you not keep up our defence? Is it so that you could use a truck to travel across the country and pour out the money for different assistance, for different beautiful buildings and everything?

Mr. Hopkins: I use the trade with the United States in defence matters in order to talk about the balance of trade. Now the Hon. Member from Nipissing is getting all mixed up with his Voodoos and he wants to go on. He said that nothing was done. We have the long-range patrol aircraft in this country which were purchased by the Liberal Government and produced at that time. The tanks that we have in the Canadian Armed Forces today were purchased by the former Liberal Government. The 138 fighter aircraft were purchased by the previous Liberal Government, and you said you are paying for them? A large amount of that money had gone into the deal before you even got into power. Let me remind the House that it was a Conservative Prime Minister of this country who cancelled the Arrow. If it had not been for that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gervais): I am sorry to advise the Hon. Member that time for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade, I would like to make a few additional comments on the motion introduced by my colleague from Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

With respect to the American Bill on agriculture, the Farm Bill, the Government is seriously concerned about the unfavourable impact this legislative measure might have on the Canadian agricultural community.

Just for the record I would point out that President Reagan signed the Farm Bill last December 23 when it became law after a protracted debate in Congress.

Basically the Bill deals with the levels of price support and income for various products, and some of its provisions are trade related. As in the case of a number of domestic American legislative measures, the Farm Bill has had a serious impact on Canada's agricultural community. Our Government conveyed to the American authorities our deep concern about these provisions which will have negative repercussions on Canadian exports and farm income.

Generally speaking, we expressed concern about the over-all approach of a legislative measure which is likely to isolate American producers from the international marketplace.

The Bill guarantees support prices above market levels for American producers while exports would be subsidized in certain cases. We are concerned about American measures aimed at stimulating production artificially and overemphasizing direct export assistance to such an extent that it would depress world prices even more and perhaps be detrimental to Canadian exports.

We have expressed our deep concern about the extensive use of export subsidies to increase American exports of agricultural products. We are especially concerned about the Export Premium Program and the Targeted Export Assistance Program, both of which we consider direct export subsidies. Under the first, $2 billion in surplus public stocks must be placed at the disposal of American exporters at no cost as premiums to promote business sales and the development of export markets. The second program requires that $325 million in cash or in surplus public stocks be used for targeted export activities.

We have indicated to the American authorities that we believe these programs to be inconsistent with the support given by the United States to multilateral initiatives aimed at bringing about agricultural subsidies under control, and especially at preventing export subsidies for unprocessed agricultural products. In addition, to the extent that these programs would apply to processed agricultural products, they would be inconsistent with the commitments of the United States under GATT.

We have expressed our concerns about various other forms of export assistance which could have a detrimental effect on world markets, such as the continuation of short term export credit guarantees; the creation of a renewable credit fund for farm exports; the extension of intermediate credit for exports; and the development of pilot program to barter farm products for strategic resources.

We have also spoken about the dairy herd reduction program, which could cause an upheaval on the North American processing beef markets.

We have strongly protested against a number of provisions in the Bill which could eventually restrict access to the American market. In the case of sugar, for instance, we have expressed deep concern about the provisions which would have removed the Canadian allocation in the American quotas for sugar imports. We have told the American authorities that we consider these provisions inconsistent with the commitments of the United States under GATT. We have raised the issue of a possible application of the regulations on chemical residues to limit Canadian cattle and cattle product exports. We showed concern about prescribing discriminatory assessments on some cattle imports. We made it known that such measures did not conform with United States commitments under the GATT. Finally, we raised objections to a provision which was definitely aimed at restricting the potato trade by requiring spot checks and ongoing inspections of Canadian potato shipments entering through Northeastern ports.

The U.S. Government shares some of our concerns respecting the trade provisions in the Farm Bill and has attempted to have them removed. In some cases, efforts made by the Administration and our representations have been successful.

For instance, we succeeded in obtaining the removal of a provision that would have resulted in the loss of Canada's quota of sugar exports. Furthermore, we are convinced that the provisions concerning chemical residues will not hamper Canadian exports of cattle and cattle products.

The Administration has indicated it still is concerned about some of the trade provisions. Upon signing the Farm Bill, on December 3, President Reagan expressed some reservations. He indicated: "This legislation commands export subsidies that could well turn against the United States". The President added that he intended "to try, in conjuction with Congress, to correct those problems, especially in the area of trade".

In response to those efforts, the Congress has now passed the Food Security Improvement Act of 1986, amending some provisions of the 1985 Farm Bill. The President should be signing the new Act soon.

On the trade level, amendments to some provisions in the Farm Bill are now under way. For instance, the value of Government surplus commodities required for the grants in kind program is reduced from $2 billion to $1 or $1.5 billion. The value of Government surplus products or monies required yearly for the targeted export assistance program is to be reduced from $325 million to $110 million during fiscal years 1986 to 1988. Although those reductions are a step in the right direction, subsidizing levels still are high and we will maintain our pressures for a more satisfactory solution.

This Government continues to make representations to the U.S. Administration suggesting that they look with Congress for a solution that would alloy our concerns.

The concerns raised by the Farm Bill once more show that bilateral and multilateral trade talks are important if we are to study those issues and, more importantly, prevent other protectionist bills from coming into force.

As it has been indicated by American authorities, a major part of the trade provisions in the Farm Bill are based on the inability of the Administration to reduce what is perceived as unfair trade practices on the part of the United States major trade partners. In that respect, one of the goals supported both by the United States and Canada, which is sprucing up before entering into bilateral and multilateral trade talks, is improving on the rules governing farm trade and strenghtening the access of farm products to markets.

Mr. Speaker, let us hope that this Government can rely on the support of the Opposition parties when it enters into those negotiations.

Turning to lumber, my colleague the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) referred to a criticism levelled in the House of Representatives against Canada's Natural Resources Subsidy Bill, a criticism that was referred to the Chairman, Mr. Gibbons. In view of the particular concerns expressed by Members of the Opposition regarding the proposed legislation, I think it would be useful to advise them of the Government's views concerning it. Since the criticism is short and to the point, I will read it in full.

The dual pricing provision of the Bill would amend the countervailing duty law of the U.S. to expand unilaterally the definition of subsidy to include situations in which a natural resource is made available to foreign producers of downstream products at a price lower than the world market price or export price. The dual pricing provision has the following main shortcomings. First, proposals to define dual resource pricing policies as countervailable subsidies represent a fundamental departure from longstanding U.S. practice under legislation reflecting agreed international disciplines. These recognize that domestic programs which are generally available to more than a specific enterprise or group of enterprises do not constitute a countervailable subsidy. A radical departure from this approach, such as envisaged by H.R.-2451, would establish a precedent which could be extended to a wide range of policies and programs which differ from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, for example, tax policy, education and other social programs, irrigation and conservation. Generally available benefits, such as controlled oil prices in the 1970s, have been defended by the U.S. as not constituting a countervailable subsidy. Canada and the U.S. share a common interest in ensuring that the general availability concept is not eroded.

Second, to require that resources be sold in resource rich foreign jurisdictions at international prices established by export cartels, or less competitive producers, would be anti-competitive and perverse in its consequences. For these reasons the dual pricing provision is unacceptable to Canada.

The removal rights provision would amend the countervailing duty law to permit a finding of subsidization where no subsidy exists. This provision is not intended to deal with dual pricing policies. Rather, a determination of subsidy would be based on a finding of whether a Government's price for the right to exploit a resource is lower than the fair market value of that right, arbitrarily defined. Fair market value would be determined by simply using the price paid for removal rights in the country with the largest number of arm's length sales of such rights outside the country under scrutiny. In the case of forest products, Canadian prices for trees would be compared to U.S. prices for trees. If the Canadian prices for a comparable right in a comparable region are not as high as U.S. prices, then the difference would be deemed a countervailable subsidy.

The key question is why the U.S. price should be the bench-mark. First, this proposal presumes to deny other jurisdictions their legitimate right to pursue policies which differ from those pursued by the United States. To suggest that such policies should be deemed to confer a countervailable subsidy simply by virtue of the fact that they differ from U.S. policies is neither reasonable nor acceptable.

Second, the price of a natural resource in situ in one country tells us nothing about what the price for the same type of natural resource should be elsewhere. In the case of softwood lumber, the U.S. Commerce Department's decision, after a thorough investigation, demonstrates why the proposal in H.R. 2451 would be unfair. The decision states that it would be "arbitrary and capricious" to compare Canadian stumpage prices with U.S. stumpage prices in view of, inter alia, "the wide differences between species composition; size, quality and density of timber; terrain and accessibility of the standing timber throughout the United States and Canada; and the additional payments which are required in many provinces in Canada but not generally in the United States". In other words, comparing the price paid for Canadian trees—which tend to be smaller, harder to log and less accessible—with the price of U.S. trees totally ignores the realities of the marketplace. Yet the removal rights section would require this comparison to be made.

For all the reasons outlined in this critique Canada concludes that the removal rights proposal is wrong in principle and unwarranted.

Mr. Speaker, this shows clearly that the Government has spared no effort to defend Canadian interests and that we will fight not only to protect existing jobs, but also to create new ones in our country.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today expresses our concern with respect to two resource areas which are important to many parts of Canada. In fact, every province of Canada has some investment in these two resource areas.

My constituency of Prince Albert is basically an agricultural constituency. However, in the constituency there is a pulp mill. A large proportion of the population of the City of Prince Albert have jobs related to that pulp mill. So we are talking about two resource areas which are directly affected by action, in this case legislative action, by the great friendly giant to the south. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), has covered the effects of the possible legislation coming up in Congress with respect to forests. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), expanded on the issue. He pointed out the effects of the U.S. farm Bill, which has just been passed, and which is just starting to affect the markets of the world. He also pointed out how it affects Canadian farmers. I, too, wish to spend a few moments on the effects of the 1985 U.S. farm Bill on Canadian farmers.

During 1985, U.S. farm commodities became uncompetitive in world markets. The declining farm income contributed a great deal to the already severe financial crisis faced by farms in the United States. This was a financial crisis which was matched, and which was perhaps even worse, than ours. As a result of sagging exports, since they were not competitive, large volumes of American grains were allowed to accumulate over a fairly long period of time. Those stocks, along with declining farm incomes, became an issue in the United States which forced the passage of the U.S. farm Bill. I suppose it should be pointed out that the farm Bill was not a favourite piece of legislation of the present administration. In fact, it was reluctantly signed by the President. The Bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce market prices to a more competitive level. At the same time it allows him to protect farmers' incomes by increasing the prices paid to farmers. In other words, even as the price of commodities is decreased across the world, the price paid to the farmer will continue to increase.

It would appear that Canadians are not the only program junkies. We see that the American farm Bill includes many very lucrative programs in some cases and programs aimed at reducing the amount of product on the market in other cases. It contains programs like the parity price programs, the soil bank, the acreage reserve, the conservation reserve, the payment in kind program, target prices and loan prices. These are all programs which are a part of the American farm Bill.

As I mentioned previously, the motion before the House is in two parts. One part deals with forestry and one with agriculture. There is one difference between these two industries as far as the problem is concerned, though both industries have a problem with trade and export. In the case of the forest industry, the problem is due to our penetration of the American market. We have increased our portion of the United States softwoods market to approximately 45 per cent. That is greatly resented by the lumber producing states and they have taken action against it. We feel a certain amount of compassion for that action. I hope that we would do the same thing if it happened to us.

The challenge facing agriculture is a little different. In agriculture, we are not penetrating the U.S. market to any extent except perhaps in the red meats area. Here the U.S. legislation is affecting the international markets. In the agriculture sector, Canada is a price taker rather than a price setter. In a great many sectors which concern us particularly, the United States is a price setter. Consequently, it is important that we deal with the United States and its relationship to the world market.

There are three points which should be made regarding the U.S. farm Bill. These are the three points which affect us. When looking through the technical Bill, we find that a number of products are affected, but a great deal of concern has been expressed about the use of land in the Bill and the attempts to reduce production by paying surprising subsidies under certain conditions.

The points in the U.S. farm Bill which affect Canada are, first, the way the Bill affects the price of grain overseas. The second point is that the aim of the farm Bill is to assist in the increase of U.S. exports to the markets of the world. This is done first by affecting the price. Lowering the price would directly affect the income of Canadian farmers. Second, because the Americans are increasing their exports to the markets of the world, they are moving into markets which we have traditionally accepted as being our markets. Therefore, that reduces the amount of commodities we may sell into those same markets.

Americans seem to be overwhelmed by the drop in their market share. They used to have about 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the world market. Beginning in about 1974, that share of the world market rose considerably and averaged something over 50 per cent for a short period of time. That share of the grain markets of the world has now dropped back to approximately 35 per cent to 40 per cent.

The third point with which we have to deal when looking at the farm Bill is that it reduces the cost of feeds in the United States and consequently reduces the cost of feeds in Canada. This will affect all meat producers. There is likely to be an increase in the production of red meats in particular both in the United States and in Canada as well as in the production of poultry and other so-called white meats. There is likely to be an increase in the production of livestock in the United States and that will reduce the amount of exports that we will be able to make of those products into the United States. It reduces our penetration of the U.S. market for those products and consequently we cannot expect to take advantage of the reduced cost for the price of feeds to increase income from the production of livestock.

How does the U.S. farm Bill affect the price of grains? I think that question has been covered to some extent previously so I will deal with it very quickly as it is a point which needs to be made because it is the basis of our concern. The U.S. loan price, which is technically a floor price for world grain prices, has been reduced by 27 per cent for wheat. It is down to approximately $2.40 per bushel. The price of Canadian red spring wheat can be expected to fall by an equal amount. These prices will probably fall by 30 per cent. This means that the price of No. 1 grade would fall to approximately $145 per tonne, a drop of $45 per tonne. The price of the lower grades will probably fall to $3 per bushel. The price of Ontario wheats may go as low as $115 per tonne. This price is far below the cost of production.

There is a further aberration in the export market caused by the American policy of increasing exports from the United States. As the previous speaker mentioned, last May the Government of the United States made available $2 billion to increase exports from the United States. Of course these subsidies were aimed at certain countries and certain markets, particularly the North African market. That United States grain was equal in quality to our No. 2 and No. 3 western spring wheat, and it was exported to Egypt and Algeria at approximately $100 per tonne. That is a level with which no farmer in the world can compete. I know it was aimed at the European market, but it had the effect of reducing the sale price of wheat around the world.

I could provide the same type of technical information on barley, coarse grains and corn. Corn will be reduced by 25 per cent on the loan rate. The effect on barley in Canada will be approximately the same. We can expect approximately $2 per bushel or $90 per tonne for western barley after the U.S. farm Bill comes into effect. Of course there will be slightly higher barley rates in Ontario. Oil seeds will not be affected because the soya bean reduction in the U.S. farm Bill was only 5 per cent. Soya bean and canola reductions will probably be 10 per cent or thereabouts. However, the producers of every one of those grains will experience a reduction in income.

The Bill will also affect the livestock industry. Chase Econometrics has indicated that possily the livestock industry will remain the same or be a little better. However, the statistics of the Government of Canada and those of the Government of the United States do not indicate that. Because of the lower price of feed and because of higher production in the United States and in Canada, the result will likely be lower prices in the livestock industry. There will possibly be less of a chance to sell livestock, which will also force down the price. The projected income of cattlemen because of the U.S. Farm Bill will either remain the same or be forced downward. The situation will be the same for hog production for exactly the same reasons. There may be an increase in the number of hogs, but the result will probably be a lowering of the price.

In summary, grain prices will be pushed down. Livestock prices may not be pushed down as much, but they will be affected negatively. The United States is putting some $52 billion into farm subsidization over a three-year to five-year period, and Canada cannot begin to compete with the Treasury of the United States.

What can be done? I should like to take a few minutes to put forward some possibilities. We must first recognize the problem immediately. We must ensure that the United States knows the effect of its actions on us. Also we must negotiate for more favourable action on the part of the United States. Then we must take action in Canada to ensure that we have adequate programs in place to allow for the survival of the family farm and the agricultural industry. They will be attacked by the effects of the U.S. farm Bill which was put in place to protect its farms. We must do something to protect our farms as well.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) was speaking, I could not help but think that the U.S. Farm Bill is important and vital to Canada and that it might be wise to get all three Parties together to come up with a unanimously supported joint resolution in the House expressing our concern about that Bill. I see that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) has just left the Chamber. Perhaps he could get together with spokespersons in the other two Parties to see if we can come up with a joint resolution. The wording of our resolution might not be exactly what the Minister wants. It has been worded in the parliamentary context of condemning the Government; that is the way we do things around this place. I see the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) across the way. Perhaps he is in agreement with what I am saying and could take the initiative before the afternoon is out to try to come up with something of that sort.

It is important to impress upon Americans that we as Canadians feel very strongly about the U.S. farm Bill, which will subsidize their grain and other agricultural exports by $52 billion over the next three years. This will hurt Canadian farmers, as will a war between the Treasury of Europe and the Treasury of the United States. When exported grain from the United States is subsidized massively in places such as the Soviet Union, Asia and North Africa, and when the American farmer at home is subsidized as well, the price of grain falls. As I mentioned earlier this afternoon, the price of grain on the Chicago futures market has already fallen to around $2.30 per bushel. It will fall by another 90 cents between the month of March and the month of July.

If I am not mistaken, shortly we will hear an announcement in the House by the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) of a drop in the initial payment to farmers. Farmers are in serious difficulty. They call upon the House to exert some leadership, to put aside some of our petty partisan differences, and to speak with a united voice to the United States of America and to President Reagan. They call upon us to say that when the farm Bill comes into effect in June it will hurt Canadian farmers. It will mean that farmers from one part of the country to another will go broke, and it will mean a loss of jobs.

I wanted to make those comments. I appeal to the Government across the way. Perhaps there is some way to come up with a joint resolution of the House. I see the Minister for International Trade is now present in the Chamber. For his benefit I repeat briefly that it would be very nice if we could come up with a joint resolution of the House to express to the American Congress and the American Senate how we feel about the American farm Bill. I know there is a consensus on the matter. Perhaps we in all three Parties, over the next couple of days, can come up with some way of expressing it unanimously to the American administration; it might be very useful. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Prince Albert could comment on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: On two occasions, Mr. Speaker the Hon. Member mentioned the fact that one of our colleagues was absent from the House. I point out to the House that first it is quite out of order under our rules, and second, that it is possible to follow the proceedings closely without actually being in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The point of order which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has raised is well taken.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with that approach. We owe it to the farmers of Canada, not only our grain farmers, but all other farmers as well. Every productive area will be affected. The United States took the action it took for exactly the same reasons that we are now asking this Parliament to do. First, we must recognize the problem. The farmers expect that of us. Second, we must make sure the U.S. knows what its Bill will do to Canada. We must then get together with the Americans. Either on an international or a bilateral basis we should come to some kind of an acceptable arrangement where we reduce hurt to both countries to the lowest possible level. We cannot start competing with the U.S. Treasury. We can certainly make sure by action on an international basis and on a national basis that our agricultural industry and our family farms particularly can survive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to see that the New Democratic Party is now starting to see the light of day. It is nice to see that the New Democrats know that all is not evil that comes out of the United States. For so long they have been critical of our neighbour to the south. When President Reagan came into office they did much talking about Reaganomics, but you do not hear New Democrats using that word any more because Reaganomics are working. It is good to know that the New Democrats are finally coming around. They even want to change the resolution which they tabled last night. They have seen their mistake. I hope they keep coming in that direction—

Mr. Benjamin: That is the only way we could do it. Read the rules.

Mr. Towers: —because that is the direction we should be taking. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) will perhaps lead his Party in a slightly different direction and give us all the support we need.

I am happy to have this opportunity to respond to the motion because I know the U.S. farm Bill is on the minds of many Canadian farmers. I am also pleased to have this opportunity to set the record straight on the inaccurate assumptions upon which the motion is based.

The last time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and Mr. John Block, former Secretary of Agriculture in the United States, met in Canada they announced the formation of a joint horticultural committee composed of representatives from Canada and United States industries to correct and resolve existing trade differences between the two countries. The process has already started.

We have to recognize that we are dealing with a new phenomenon today. The Opposition seems to be looking backwards, looking at things that have passed instead of looking to the future, a glorious future that we may have in world society. We do, however, have some problems which world society has not had to face before, the European Economic Community and also a very strong United States economy. We have to make sure that we are not hurt in the process. That is what this exercise is all about.

There is no question that the U.S. Farm Bill carries with it serious consequences, not only for Canada but for producers in other countries as well. I think it would be fair to say the provisions are aimed at the Europen Economic Community, yet countries such as Canada are bound to experience some fall-out. We have to make sure that that fall-out will do us as little damage as possible.

The United States is a huge trading nation. Thus it has the ability to influence world commodity prices in a way that Canada, and most other trading nations, cannot. It would be a mistake to assume anything different. We have neither the level of trade nor the treasury to compete in the subsidy war.

We in Canada, however, can benefit from being a good neighbour to the United States. Perhaps members of the Opposition are not aware that before you can have a good neighbour you must first know how to be one. Respect and trust cannot survive and last for any length of time on a one-way street.

The U.S. Farm Bill allows the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce U.S. loan rates per bushel of wheat and feed grains to a maximum of 20 per cent below the basic rate in 1986-87. The formula for setting loan rates in the following years is being finalized. In essence though the Secretary can reduce the loan rates a further 5 per cent each year. This has placed severe downward pressure on world grain markets. Further pressure is also resulting from the two export assistance programs.

In the longer term, the Farm Bill may tend to reduce U.S. wheat production toward the end of the 1980s. In the shorter terms, "payment in kind" from Government stock as part of deficiency payments and as export subsidies will maintain downward pressure on gain prices. U.S. grain stocks are expected to remain high for the balance of the 1980s unless export demand strengthens marketing.

The United States Government tried to control production somewhat, Mr. Speaker, by bringing in what they called the payment in kind or the PIK Program. The Government of the United States did not achieve the success it hoped it would under that program because farmers were paid to take a percentage of land out of production. The land they took out of production was the poorest producing part. They increased fertilizer and chemical use for weed control and produced just as much grain. That is why the PIK Program was not as successful as the United States Government had hoped it would be.

The Minister of Agriculture spoke with the former Secretary of Agriculture at considerable length about this Bill when he visited Canada recently. The U.S. administration is well aware of our concerns, and the lines of communication remain open. In fact, even as I speak, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is in the United States meeting with the President, and I am confident this issue will be raised.

I might just bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, an excerpt from Parliamentary Alert, a publication which many Members get. I would like to read it for the benefit of the House. Under the heading "Prime Minister in Washington", it reads:

> Ottawa interest will shift from Parliament Hill to Washington this week as Prime Minister Mulroney travels to the U.S. capital for talks with President Reagan. Trade and acid rain are the main subjects of interest on the agenda.
> The Prime Minister's Washington visit has been stretched to cover four days.

This is significant because when foreign diplomats journey to other countries visits are only for one day, but this one is for four days. The article continues:

> He arrives from Montreal Monday evening, to be greeted by Secretary of State George Schultz.
> Tuesday morning he meets with President Reagan for an hour in the Oval Office. Following lunch at the State Department he travels to Capitol Hill to meet members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The day will end with dinner at the White House. Wednesday morning he has breakfast with Vice-President George Bush, and then returns to Capital Hill to meet members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.
> Back to the White House he joins President Reagan for a working lunch in the family quarters. He will then visit Arlington Cemetery and end the day with dinner at the residence of the Canadian ambassador A. E. Gotlieb. A farewell ceremony will take place at the Reflecting Pool Thursday morning.

That makes sense to me, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure it does to a lot of Canadians. That is the way to deal on tough issues and that is the way to create understanding and goodwill. If there was ever a time in Canadian history when we needed good understanding with our friends south of the 49th parallel, it is now. There is no question that the subsidies contained in the Farm Bill are not helpful to Canadian grain growers, but the Government is doing all it reasonably can in response.

In that regard, I would like to commend my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), for the initiative he has shown on behalf of Canada's grain farmers. He has initiated a series of meetings with four other major grain and oil seed exporters: Australia, Argentina, the United States, and the EEC. Together, through negotiation, perhaps we can sort out the concerns about trade and subsidies that we are discussing today.

One fact that will always speak well for Canada in international markets is the quality of our grain. We remain committed to maintaining the highest standards. In doing so, we are protecting an international reputation which will continue to serve the industry well. It is still unclear how, or if, the Farm Bill's dairy herd termination program will affect Canada. We may know more by April as the administrative details are worked out.

At this time, however, we have obtained assurances from the United States Department of Agriculture that the program will be managed in such a way as to minimize disruptive effects on the North American beef markets. For example, the American Commodity Credit Corporation is required to buy 400 million pounds of meat under the program, half of it for domestic food programs. This should reduce the chances of a sudden massive glut on world markets. We are continuing to monitor this program closely and, as I said, are keeping the lines of communication open between our two countries. This is very important.

My colleague, the Member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mrs. Landry), mentioned the problem we have with regard to beef producers. Beef producers in Canada form one component of our agricultural industry which is competing well with its counterpart south of the border. This is why enhanced trade is so important to beef producers in Canada. One thing we can do is to produce beef well.

We cannot control world commodity prices. Canada certainly cannot win a subsidy war with the United States, or the European Economic Community for that matter. However, through domestic programs we can assist producers who are faced with low commodity prices. Of course, we must be careful to strike a balance between the need for assistance and the need to keep the borders open to our key export markets.

Our most recent domestic program to respond to low commodity prices is the $700 million Commodity Based Loan Program. This program recognizes the fact that a farmer's ability to meet his loan payments is tied to the rise and fall in commodity prices. This program was one of several important provisions for farmers contained in the last Budget.

One of the things which many people seem to forget is the benefits which will accrue to farmers as a result of the latest Budget introduced by the Government. It is our stabilization programs which primarily serve producers during periods of low commodity prices. Due to the Government's initiatives, our agricultural stabilization network is stronger and more effective than it has ever has been. For instance, we amended the Western Grain Stabilization Program to trigger a record initial payment last spring. We anticipate another significant pay-out this spring, as the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board mentioned today in response to a question during Question Period.

Tripartite stabilization for the red meat sector is now a reality and a success story in the country. That is again due to the leadership shown by the Government and the faith it puts in consultation. Stabilization plans for red meat now represent between two-thirds and three-quarters of a hog, fed beef, and lamb production in the country. I am confident that more provinces will sign for more commodities in the future. For the first time in Canada, thousands of red meat producers have the opportunity to participate in an equitable national plan which cushions them from downward price swings. Other types of producers also benefit from payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. In fact, since we have been in government more than $483 million worth of payments have been made to Canadian producers under this Act.

Now and in the future Canada's farmers will reap the benefits of the actions the Government has taken to strengthen the structure of the farm industry through better, more effective stabilization programs. This brings me to the second part of the motion. Far from failing to take measures for farmers, the Government has in fact introduced far more agricultural initiatives of far greater significance than Canada's farmers have seen in many years. I am going to take a minute to list a few in order to refresh the memories of the Members opposite.

We introduced a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption on the sale of farm property. The NDP fought that. It did not want to give farmers that break. We introduced farm fuel tax rebates. In the February 26 Budget we extended the rebate program to 1988, and we are getting rid of some of the red tape. Farm Credit Corporation interest rates have dropped to their lowest level since 1979. We extended the small business bond program. We earmarked $80 million to reduce interest rates on about 5,400 Farm Credit Corporation loans. We are establishing farm debt review panels and are supplementing them with effective legislation aimed at strengthening the farmers' negotiating position. We provided drought assistance to prairie farmers amounting the $200 million in 1985, and we are working with the provinces to improve crop insurance coverage for producers who have endured consecutive years of drought. This program is moving ahead for the benefit of farmers. Crop insurance will certainly be a great benefit to farmers in the future.

We placed a high priority on agriculture at the First Ministers' Conference, and there have been productive follow-up discussions with provincial Governments on ways in which we can work together to serve farmers more effectively, such as the crop insurance plan I just mentioned. If that plan is to work, it must be carried out in conjunction with the provinces.

We acted to halt the flood of subsidized beef from the European Economic Community in 1985 reducing imports to less than half of the 1984 level under the previous administration. We have taken further action on behalf of Canada's beef industry for 1986. We doubled the size of loans for advance payments on grains. We introduced a long-term dairy policy representing a federal commitment to Canada's dairy farmers of close to $300 million annually.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the Government has introduced nearly 200 agricultural initiatives worth more than $4 billion-since it has taken office. The Budget of February 26 singles out the farm sector, perhaps more than any other, for further assistance. That is action, that is delivering, that is commitment. We are going to keep on taking action, keep on delivering and keep on placing a high priority on agriculture because we are determined to see Canada's farmers through to better and more prosperous times. I thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Agriculture for their assistance in helping us to put those programs inplace for the Canadian farmer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to comment, given the importance of this debate, on the fact that there is not one Liberal in the House and, for the first time, three NDP Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I think the Hon. Member knows full well that such a question is not in order. Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dick: Here is one of the three NDP Members.

Mr. Nystrom: It is quality.

Mr. Dick: I know, and you do not have it.

Mr. Benjamin: It is not only quality but proportion. I think the hon. gentleman really should not say anything at all.

It escaped my friend from Red Deer that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), pointed out a few minutes ago that the only way under our rules that you can put forward this kind of resolution is to word it so that it is against the Government. That is the only way we can do it. The hon. gentleman has been here long enough to know that.

Mr. Nystrom: Old Conservative rule.

Mr. Benjamin: However, my colleague made an excellent suggestion. The agriculture and trade and forestry critics from all three Parties could get together and come up with a resolution that we can send out of this House unanimously to the Government and the people of the United States.

The argument for free trade which has been going around for the past couple of years is that if Canada can negotiate free trade with the U.S., then the Americans would cease bringing in protectionist legislation, as they have in the past and as they are doing now. Anyone who believes that, including my good friend from Red Deer, is either naive, ignorant or plain stupid.

Mr. Nystrom: Maybe all three.

Mr. Benjamin: How many times do we have to learn our lesson? Anyone who thinks that American producers, processors or manufacturers will hold still, along with their legislators, for either Canadians or other countries maintaining or obtaining a larger share of the U.S. market is dreaming in Technicolor. I want to remind my hon. friends opposite of the experience over the past 15 years with cattle and beef products. Do you remember 1969-1970 when the Cattlemen's Association and feedlot operators told us to leave them alone? They wanted a free and open market. They did not want anything to do with orderly marketing or market management. Yet when the Americans shut down the border—and I was here at that time as was my colleague—who were the first ones down here in Ottawa crying their heads off for help? Do you remember?

Mr. Towers: It was Trudeau who shut the border down.

Mr. Benjamin: No, no. The Americans closed the border. Then there were hog and pork products. We still have some of that going on. We had countervailing duties last year. In fact, an individual state in the U.S. can, for any reason under its jurisdiction, prohibit the import of a product from Canada. They are doing that with Canadian hogs right this minute.

Mr. Towers: Pork.

Mr. Benjamin: Pork, hogs, what is the difference? I think you make pork out of hogs.

There are a few other things. I have a little list here. They grow a lot of raspberries in Quebec and British Columbia. There is countervailing duty there. There is saltfish, lumber, steel and steel products. One often wonders, given this 4,000 or 5,000 miles of undefended border with our good friends and neighbours for over 200 years, whether a good fence would not make some good neighbours.

Mr. Comeau: Is that what you are suggesting?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, it is not a case of being anti-American. It is a case of being pro-Canadian. It is making a stand on our traditions, culture, experience and our ways of doing things. I remember someone who used to grace this House of Commons for many years starting in 1935. He was premier of our province for 17 years and then came back here in the early 1960s. He was accused of being anti-American. Tommy Douglas said: "I like Americans. They are nice people. They are good neighbours. They are good friends". He said: "I like my relatives, too. I like my friends. But I don't want them taking over my house and my having to live in the garage."

Canada, by itself, cannot do very much to stop any decision that the U.S. administration and Congress decide to make. We can, however, do more to remind our good friends and good neighbours to the south about our traditions and practices. They have said over the past number of years, in fact I think since my hon. friend from Red Deer came here, that the Canadian Wheat Board was somehow subsidizing to grain producers and therefore it was unfair. Bless his dear departed soul, although there was not much good we could say about him it was R. B. Bennett who started the Canadian Wheat Board. It was not put into practise until about 1939 or 1940, and that was just because of the war, but he started it. It was a principle of orderly marketing. Yet Americans are saying they want the issue of hog marketing agencies in our provinces on the table.

You can ask hog producers in Saskatchewan and la belle province about the system they have devised, totally under provincial jurisdiction, to help protect the marketing capacity and incomes of hog producers. That has always been questioned by our friends south of the border. Our dairy, poultry and egg producers have always been challenged by U.S. Governments on those organizations which they collectively and voluntarily set up for themselves through their provincial and national Governments to try to protect themselves. It was to try and make their industry and the results of their labour a lot more viable.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is in Washington right now. That is fine. We enjoy it. They are going to have him over for a steak dinner, and perhaps in the swimming pool tonight. Who knows? That is nice. It is good that leaders of countries get together in a friendly, informal manner. It is not a case of being anti-American; it is asking our national Government and this Parliament to remind the Americans and to ask them to show some respect, regard and understanding for our rights, traditions, history and methods of doing things, many of which are historically different from theirs, just as they would like to receive from us, our respect for them, for their nation and their people for exactly the same things, their rights, traditions and history. It is a two-way street. Just because they are bigger than us—if they really are, and I believe they are—a nation that gives first place to showing respect for the independence and the sovereignties of other nations, they have to be persuaded, by whatever means we can find, not to do the things they have done in the past and what they are proposing to do now. My colleague the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), pointed out very well earlier today just what is in store for us in the forest industry alone.

I believe that an overwhelming majority of the American public do not know or do not understand what is happening, and that is what we have been asking in this resolution. There are groups who think that you can negotiate a free trade arrangement between a small nation and a big nation. If one considers Canadian history and the history of other countries in the British Commonwealth, in the southern Pacific, in Asia and in Africa, one finds that in the days when we were colonies we all got what was called the empire preferential tariff treatment. Even after 1930, after the statute of Westminster, there were still countries in the British Commonwealth that were colonies that got that preferential treatment. Right up until the Second World War even Canada got that preferential tariff treatment. We had most of our eggs, at that time, in Great Britain, our trading eggs.

Up to and during the Second World War we provided Britain with most, if not all, but certainly the largest part, of their butter, cheese, bacon, ham and beef. When the war was over, so much for having all of our eggs in one basket. Most of that market we lost within a very few years. What are we doing? We are in the process of putting our eggs in one basket again. It seems to me—and I say this to the Minister in all sincerity—that we could do more on a commodity by commodity basis, bilateral agreements in terms of quantities, minimum maximum prices, and let the market play around from there for a given period of time by agreement with a number of countries in a host of commodities. We should not rely on the economy of some large power. Even the Hungarians have got out of being totally dependent on trade with the Soviet Union. There have been some very complimentary articles in the North American press about their moving out into trading with other countries of the world. We are in a similar position economically, not ideologically.

I get a little tired in the middle of February of paying $2, $3 for a head of cauliflower and a buck and a half or $2 for a pound of tomatoes at the supermarket. I went to Mexico for a couple of weeks about a year ago now. There is a country which desperately needs some hard currency. In this country you ought to see the tomatoes they grow and the cauliflowers. Those people may be poor but they are mostly not hungry and they produce.

Why do we not make a deal, perhaps a straight barter arrangement, with Mexico on things such as purebred cattle, dairy herds, apples or Canadian wine in exchange for fruits and vegetables, especially in the five or six-month period of the year when we cannot grow anything here except snowballs? You could make a deal with Mexico, the Caribbean countries and Central America.

I must even fault the co-operative movement, of which I am an ardent member and supporter. I found out that the Federated Co-Ops from Thunder Bay to the Pacific Ocean do not buy their own fresh fruit and vegetables; they buy them through Scott National. Who is Scott National? It is a subsidiary of the multinational corporation that has all those farms in Arizona, California and Florida. We could not even sell the fresh vegetables grown in the Qu'Appelle Valley north of Regina to the local supermarkets in Regina. We had farmers in the Qu'Appelle Valley up to here in potatoes, turnips, cabbages and corn who could not sell them 20 miles away. Why? Because somebody else controls what is coming into this country, at what price and when. How long are we going to hold still for that? I hope all my colleagues find that somewhat embarrassing in terms of what we can and should be doing ourselves, among ourselves and with many other nations in the world.

Caribbean and Southeast Asian countries grow things that we can use and there are things that we have that they could use. We do not have to be in a situation where 80 per cent of our exports are to the United States.

Mr. Nystrom: Seventy-seven.

Mr. Benjamin: Seventy-seven per cent, all right. Sixty-five per cent of our imports from Americans come here. The trouble is that the other 35 per cent that they do not export to Canada is handled by U.S. corporations in Canada, and the heads of the U.S. companies in Canada get their orders at the end of a telex. So much for your economic sovereignty and independence.

I believe very sincerely that the United States administration and Congress and the American people would fully respect and recognize Canada speaking up and standing up for itself in that full, frank, firm and straightforward manner, whether it is our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meeting with the United States President or MPs and Senators meeting with U.S. Congressmen and Senators, or businessmen here meeting with businessmen there. They will understand and respect that because they expect the same kind of understanding and respect themselves. They get that from us. They have no respect for this hands and knees syndrome in which we crawl down and plead and beg them to honour and respect us as a sovereign and independent nation. Again, it is what Tommy Douglas called many years ago, "this supine acquiescence". If the American administration and Congress tell us to jump, we ask how high. I find that demeaning. I don't blame the Americans for that, I blame us. The time is overdue that we told not only the United States but other nations that we are willing to negotiate, to bargain and make deals because we respect how they operate, but we expect the same from them.

I recall the years of the international wheat agreements that marked a milestone in international trade and understanding among many countries. Who killed those agreements?

Mr. Nystrom: The Americans.

Mr. Benjamin: Who killed the international grains arrangement? As soon as it infringed on what the Americans believed were their rights, they killed an agreement that was a milestone for the grain trade in Canada. We must continue to fight for our rights as a nation on behalf of Canadians and our national independence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being 6 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that in accordance with Standing Order 82(12), the proceedings on the motion have expired. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has the floor.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—EXPOSURE OF WORKERS TO CIGARETTE SMOKE. (B) SMOKE-FREE OFFICES—ECONOMICS SAVINGS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the question that I want to pursue at this time is extremely important. It concerns the health of Canadians, particularly those who work in areas under federal jurisdiction.

The question I raised with the Minister of National health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) specifically dealt with two studies which documented the extent of lung cancer deaths among people who are not smokers, but involuntary smokers. These are studies which show how very expensive smoking is in the federal workplace and how much money would be saved by introducing controls.

It is not only very interesting, but shameful that the studies were obtained by the Non-Smokers Rights Association under the Access to Information Act because they had not been published. The Minister said that at least one would be published. One of the studies dates back to January, 1984 and certainly could have been published. The sad fact of the matter is that the harm caused to involuntary smokers and the deaths among involuntary smokers as a result of smoking is much greater than imagined.

Let us consider that the so-called acceptable risk of developing lung cancer from involuntary smoking is 6 to 7.5 per 100,000 smokers every year. While I will not go into the details, that is a reasonable calculation. The amount of contaminant required to produce a rate above that acceptable level is reached when one person out of 60 smokes one cigarette a day. Consequently, it does not take an excessive amount of tobacco smoking to reach a level above what is considered acceptable.

One can understand the seriousness of the problem when we consider that the average level of exposure to smoke in the workplace is 270 times this acceptable risk level. The study concludes, in very cautious and conservative language, that habitual exposure to the smoke from one or more cigarettes per 60 employees per day would expose employees to risks of developing lung cancer from involuntary smoking greater than risks currently considered acceptable by American regulatory agencies for involuntary exposure to carcinogens in air, water or food.

That is the cautious and scientific way of saying that many people are being hurt. These include people under our jurisdiction; every federal employee of a Crown corporation or a company regulated by federal law. All of our employees at the House of Commons and the Senate are exposed to risks that would not be tolerated with other substances. The Government has suppressed this study. When I have raised the question, I have been told that either no legislation is necessary—that it will all be worked out in some type of friendly fashion—or that I should just be patient. I will not be patient with this level of damage that is being caused.

The other question is with respect to the costs. If the Government is not concerned about the health of Canadians, and it has shown precious little concern thus far, it should be concerned about the deficit. It should be concerned about the amount of money which is spent every year as a result of cigarette smoking. We know that $3 billion in taxes comes in every year from tobacco. However, the pay-outs are more than $8 billion a year to cover the costs of medicare, absences from work and so forth. In other words, every time a smoker pays $2.50 for a package of cigarettes, other people are paying $3.50 for the damage which is being done.

My concern is with the very specific costs incurred in the federal workplace. It is interesting to see that millions of dollars could be saved every year. The staff side of the National Joint Council has proposed to restrict smoking to smoking areas only with separate ventilation. One estimate has been done as a result of this proposal which assumes that there would be costs in doing these renovations. Such renovations would take five years to pay off. After these costs are paid off, the excess of annual benefits over cost would be $33 per employee. This comes to a total of $6 million a year for Government alone. If we add federal Crown corporations to this, it is another $12 million a year. If we look at the federal private sector, there is another $9 million a year to consider. Of course, if no smoking were permitted in the workplace at all, the savings would be enormous. One estimate in this respect amounts to over $2,000 per employee per year. There are others which are lower at $305 per employee per year and around $550 per employee per year. In other words, there are enormous costs involved. We are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars a year which could be saved by not permitting smoke in the workplace. These are just money savings. I am not even talking about the savings in terms of suffering and the harm which is caused to families of people who are hurt through tobacco-related diseases.

I call upon the Government to take this problem seriously and to bring in legislation to control smoke in the workplace. The level of 35,000 deaths per year from tobacco is unacceptable. A responsible Government would act promptly and vigorously to deal with this very serious problem. It is Canada's number one preventable health problem.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like you to know that when tobacco was first introduced in Europe in the 16th century it was recommended for medicinal purposes. But it soon became apparent that the smoking habit was harmful because it was associated with health hazards.

The fact that our diseases—lung cancer, myocardial infarct, peripheric vascular disease, and obstructive and chronic respiratory syndrome—have been directly linked to tobacco has caused deep concern among health specialists.

Tobacco smoke is a complex mixture in which more than 3,000 chemical substances have been identified. It is so complex that it is practically impossible to single out one specific substance as being the main factor with respect to any given disease caused by smoking. Still, a number of chemical substances known to be carcinogenic have indeed been detected in tobacco smoke.

In February 1985, the International Agency for Research on Cancer gathered a group of experts to assess the risk of cancer from smoking. In their judgment, there is enough evidence to say that smoke inhalation causes cancer in laboratory animals, and that it has been amply demonstrated that tobacco smoke is a carcinogenic agent in human beings.

With these findings in mind, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to point out that significant progress has been made in recent months to restrict smoking in the workplace. Employers realize that they can apply those restrictive measures at little or no cost, and that they stand to gain considerable benefits with respect to employee motivation and productivity in a saner and safer work environment.

The list of companies which apply a restraint policy is impressive and gets longer every day. Here are some of them: the Office of the Auditor General, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, Boeing of Canada Limited, Halifax Insurance, and Maritime Telephone and Telegraph.

In many cases, sections reserved for smokers are equipped with independent ventilation facilities.

In addition, some airlines have already banned smoking on all flights and VIA Rail has separate cars for non-smoking passengers.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has ongoing studies on the hazards of tobacco smoke. The Government will continue to rely on sound scientific data to draft its policies and plan its action concerning smoking and tobacco smoke.

CUSTOMS TARIFF—TARIFF PLACED ON PRODUCT NOT PRODUCED IN CANADA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, about a month ago, I raised a question in the House which essentially asked of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) why it was that central Canadian steel suppliers and mills like Stelco and Algoma were allowed, because of their industrial practices, to smother new technology and companies using new technology on the West Coast. Actually, the issue is much older than some of us might suspect. It is probably as old as Confederation. For me the issue is at least nine years old.

In approximately 1977, because these companies suspected and only suspected that there would be a glut on the market of wide-flanged steel, they applied for and received from the Government an additional tariff of about 30 per cent which had the effect of almost destroying the fabricating industry in British Columbia. At that time, because of those additional tariffs on imported steel, it was possible for fabricating companies in Ontario to supply that kind of steel to a building company in Edmonton cheaper than it could be supplied from Vancouver. The companies in central Canada, because they had an unnecessary paranoia about pricing, almost destroyed the industry in British Columbia. New technology has now been added to the industry in B.C. and that has added a new wrinkle to the problem.

There is a company in my riding called Titan Steel and Wire. It has up-to-date, state-of-the-art technology for creating the kind of wire that is used in bridges and concrete works. The company cannot get raw materials from the Canadian steel mills as the Canadian product is inferior for its requirements. If you do not accept my word for that, Mr. Speaker, let me read telexes from the supplier in question. A telex dated November 21, 1985, from Stelco to Titan reads as follows:

> Can meet all your requirements as specified except that we cannot guarantee tensile . . . our max coil weight is 1600 lbs—

Those are the two critical factors in the manufacture of this wire. A telex of November 26, 1985, from the same company to Titan reads as follows:

> As far as coil size is concerned Stelco's is admittedly below that of new rod mills. As you know the rod mill was in the forefront of technology when it was installed. Newer mills around the world use the Stelmor process and gain competitive advantage from the production of larger and larger coils. However I doubt there is a rod mill in North America that could both produce the steel grade you require and process 4000 pound coils. Bethlehem might come the closest.

There is not one mill in North America that can do it, yet these companies refuse to allow the Department to change a tariff item so that Titan Steel and Wire can get the product from offshore and remain competitive.

It is a fact that the eastern mills are not interested in supplying this product. There is not even a salesman out on the West Coast who is trying to sell products from the East. Second, the eastern mills cannot supply the product, as these telexes have pointed out. Third, these mills are expecting new production lines to produce inferior products to suit the supplier rather than the new technology. I find that offensive to the market system. Since when does the open market system allow the supplier to dictate to the user what kind of products he can use? How in the world can Canada be on the cutting edge of new product lines if the supplier can dictate to the user?

According to the notes from the mill itself, the benefits of foreign suppliers are as follows: A 4,000-pound wire bod bundle is more efficient to use and results in a better quality finished product because there are less welds in a length of finished product; aluminum killed wire rod provides a better grain structure in the steel which results in a better quality finished product; and the chromium addition in the wire rod reduces tensile variation in the steel and improves the inner structure of the steel. When it comes to quality, why should the user not dictate what should be the quality rather than the supplier?

I guess what I find most offensive is that the officers in charge in the Department go to the supply companies in question for direction because government Departments do not have the technological expertise to determine whether or not there should be a change in tariffs. They go to Stelco and they go to Algoma for a definition. I find that offensive. If it is not conflict of interest, why do the heads of the tariffs division go to the user for a definition rather than to the supplier? Why do they go to Stelco? Why do they not go to Titan Steel and ask what the definition ought to be?

If we do not do this, we will surely move into a period of industrial stagnation. If the supplier can dictate to the user, we will never come to the cutting edge of technology. I have been on this issue, as I said, for about nine years; I am not about to quit now. I am looking to the day when the Department will recognize that the regions of the country have special needs which either the tariffs or the mills recognize.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make regarding the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). The Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) who is responsible for tariff policy, as my colleague is aware, has examined the application made by the manufacturer of wire products in the Hon. Member's riding.

As my hon. friend pointed out, the company, Titan Steel & Wire Co. Ltd. in Surrey, has asked for a reduction in customs duty on the wire stock it imports to manufacture metal products such as strand screens, for use in pre-stressed concrete, and gravel screens. The Minister realizes that Titan wants to reduce its costs, and it would like to be able to help the company by granting it a tariff reduction.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now provide some general information that is very relevant to this particular case. Titan's request was considered in the light of legislation allowing the Governor-in-Council to reduce or remove customs duty on items imported for use as manufacturing stock in Canada. The legislation is aimed at reducing the cost of the materials Canadian manufacturers need, in the event they cannot obtain such materials from Canadian producers, and if they can prove they need a tariff reduction to increase their competitive position. However, Mr. Speaker, tariff reductions of this kind are not granted when other Canadian companies might suffer adverse effects.

Regarding the tariff change requested by the company in my hon. friend's riding, when the Department of Finance asked the opinion of the parties concerned, as is usually done in such cases, two Canadian wire producers objected to the request being approved. They informed the Department that they produced wire stock that was directly competing with the kind of wire imported by Titan. Moreover, both companies felt that since they were also manufacturing metal products using the wire stock they produced, it would not be fair to remove customs duty on imported stock.

According to these two companies, this would give Titan a competitive edge which would be unfair, as you will understand, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, they have offered to provide Titan with the type of wire it needs, and Titan has indicated its willingness to discuss the matter with them.

In view of these two points, the Minister of State for Finance has decided to reserve her decision following the request of the Hon. Member to give the parties involved enough time to examine the possibility that an agreement may be reached with Titan, which could then obtain the milled wire it needs from these Canadian producers.

The Hon. Member has indicated that Titan manufactures metal products mostly for export. In this regard, I must point out that, under certain provisions of Canadian law, companies can obtain a rebate or refund or fees paid on all material imported to produce goods for export. Titan can therefore obtain a refund of the duties paid on imported milled wire it uses in the manufacture of metal products for export. It seems to me that such a rebate does in fact reduce tarif costs as requested by Titan.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that you will recognize that the position taken by the Minister as concerns the request made by the company through my colleague aims at solving a difficult problem and finding a solution which will be fair and equitable for all parties involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands ajourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS' RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a worsening problem. Today many Members of the House received representations from Quebec maple syrup producers expressing concern about maple grove disintegration.

They indicate that 85 per cent of Quebec maple groves have sustained damages up to 51 per cent. Among other things, they reveal that losses incurred by maple syrup producers have been estimated at $87 million.

I would like to draw their recommendations to the attention of Hon. Members. First, to negotiate a genuine bilateral agreement with the United States so as to reduce considerably all forms of air pollution; to establish a work schedule for those negotiations; to dispatch research teams to find solutions; and, finally, to compensate agricultural producers for the losses and damages they have incurred.

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The 60 seconds have expired.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

RE-ELECTION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOVERNMENT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the people of Manitoba spoke, and spoke wisely. They decided to stand up for Manitoba by electing a Government that will stand up for Manitoba against unilateral cut-backs in federal transfer payments to the provinces, and against the federal Conservative strategy to destroy medicare by starving our health care system to death instead of either funding it adequately or having the courage to follow its hidden ideological agenda and openly advocating more opportunities for patient participation, as the CMA likes to call charging the sick. It is reassuring to know that there will be an NDP Government to stand up not just for Manitoba but for medicare as well.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, much media comment to the contrary, the NDP Government in Manitoba is not the only NDP Government in Canada. Yukon also has an NDP Government and that Territory is doing very well these days as a result.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my constituency, the great riding of Moose Jaw, has the distinction of having the lowest priced gasoline of any constituency in Canada. Last weekend the price of regular gas in Davidson, Saskatchewan, was 38.6 cents per litre.

In spite of this price I feel that there are many unanswered questions in the industry, and gas prices should be much lower right across Canada. For example, why have we seen such a small reduction in the pump price of gasoline when world level crude oil prices have dropped so dramatically?

The middle man in this arrangement is the refiner. I, and many thousands of Canadians, would like to know why the refiners' price decrease has not been passed on to consumers.

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the price of gas is following the drop in crude oil prices, for the greater benefit of the Canadian consumer. However, we cannot stop there. I think it is high time the big oil companies adjusted their stride and started cutting wholesale prices for heating oil and diesel fuel. When they do, the independents will be able to offer heating oil users a better price. It is now up to the big companies to show some respect for the small independents who often have to pay for this drop in prices out of their own money, in order to compete. I hope they will soon get the message and adjust their prices so that all consumers will be able to benefit from lower prices on diesel fuel and heating oil as well. It is time all Canadians were able to benefit from the energy policy introduced by our Government, whether they are buying gas, diesel fuel or heating oil.

EMPLOYMENT

LACK OF APPLICANTS FOR BRICKLAYING JOBS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to a catch-22 dilemma which Mr. Peter Zilli, the owner of Prill Construction in my riding, is facing. He is in dire need of 20 bricklayers. After nine months of repeated calls to Employment Canada, it has yet to meet the order. Moreover, he has spent over $1,000 placing national advertisements, informing Canadians of these $24 per hour job opportunities. On the other hand, Mr. Zilli has tried unsuccessfully to hire foreign workers, or to sponsor immigrants. Immigration Canada has prohibited these initiatives on the grounds that there are unemployed Canadians available.

Employment and Immigration Canada cannot have it both ways. There must be greater efficiency and precision in the system, for companies like Prill Construction find themselves in a precarious and frustrating position. In the meantime I urge unemployed bricklayers to call my Toronto office at 743-3153.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the rains fall, the waters rise, and much of southwestern Ontario, a landscape of sandbags and tenuous levees, awaits the inevitable deluge. The Americans are prepared; the State of Michigan has declared a state of emergency before the crisis. However, in Canada we have from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) an unfulfilled promise of a visit to the threatened communities, and the almost ludicrous announcement of an emergency weather warning system to tell us what we already know—the floods are coming. The floods are coming, not to the rarified laboratories of Burlington but to Windsor, Tecumseh, St. Clair Beach, and other communities in Kent and Essex.

Is it the result of legendary Tory ignorance of Windsor, traditional insensitivity toward this distant corner, or misplaced caution that the federal and provincial Governments together have failed to provide emergency flood damage control to avoid emergency flood relief?

MEASURES ADVOCATED TO ASSIST AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, agriculture is the historic root of the Canadian economy. We have what it takes—the land, advanced techniques, and excellent farmers. However, with all of this, the industry is in crisis. The Government of Canada recognizes this and has given agriculture a high priority on its agenda.

I want to offer three suggestions which I feel will help alleviate the problems faced by our farmers. The first is crop insurance. Crop insurance should provide coverage of real costs on a farm by farm basis. This would then cover disasters such as the recent drought. Second is commodity prices. The EEC and the U.S.A. Government must be persuaded to include agricultural commodities under GATT. This should eliminate the huge world surpluses caused by subsidies, and should result in higher prices. The third is domestic prices. We need to look at higher domestic prices on agricultural commodities in order to protect our agricultural industry and allow it to continue to be the base of the Canadian economy.

QUOTAS ON CARS IMPORTED FROM CERTAIN COUNTRIES

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, there is an unfair situation in this country that is affecting the automobile retail sector. More and more cars manufactured in so-called developing countries are imported without being subject to customs duty or to the import quotas set for cars imported from countries like Japan.

A Toyota dealer in my riding of Verdun-Saint-Paul is outraged at these discriminatory measures. He considers this to be unfair competiton, and he is right.

When some countries manage to sell nearly 80,000 cars a year in Canada at very competitive prices, it would make sense to put them on the same footing as industrialized countries and make them subject to the same customs tariff. We should also get rid of all import quotas on foreign cars in order to promote a free and competitive market that would certainly benefit the Canadian consumer.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION OF SPACE STATION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Canada's scientists and engineers were jubilant yesterday following the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) announcement of our involvement with the mobile service centre of the space station.

This project is designed to lead Canadian space activities into the next century through the development of strategic technologies involving a new generation of robotics and artificial intelligence. It is expected that up to 80,000 person-years and $5 billion in revenue will be created in Canada as a result of this program. Universities and industries in all regions of the country, and especially the high technology riding of Nepean-Carleton, will benefit.

When launched, the space station will be the most complex and visible technological achievement in history. The Government has ensured that Canada and Canadians will be central to that achievement. This decision is a further demonstration of the Government's commitment to science and technology.

SENATE DEBATE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the Senate, Senator Paul Yuzyk, a Progressive Conservative, said:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that it is out of order to refer to debates in the Senate.

CHILD CARE

PROVISION OF FUNDING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, a study released yesterday by the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association again shows the great need for, and the benefits of, additional funds for child care. The study showed that although there are almost two million children age 12 and under in Canada, there are only about 172,000 licensed child care spaces.

The Economic Council of Canada says in a study, also released yesterday, that "increased provision for child care and increased access to parental leave for child rearing" would help lessen occupational differences between men and women.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised during the election campaign not only to establish a parliamentary task force on day care, but also promised to allocate federal funds for day care.

The need has been shown again and again, and the benefits have been clearly demonstrated. The time has come for the federal Government to show its good faith to Canadian families. Now is the time to fulfil campaign promises. Now is the time to provide additional moneys for child care.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

PARLIAMENT HILL

DIEFENBAKER STATUE—SHOWING OF MAQUETTE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, just over one year ago the House gave unanimous consent to a motion that I introduced to have a statue of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker commissioned and placed on Parliament Hill. I am pleased to inform all Members that an artist has been chosen and that a maquette has now been completed.

John Diefenbaker served this House and this country with dignity, honour, and compassion. This statue pays tribute to the great contributions he made to Canada: the Bill of Rights, a vision of opportunity and prosperity, and a commitment to the freedoms we cherish so deeply.

I hope all Members will take an opportunity to view the maquette which will be on display in the Commonwealth Room today from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m. I hope Members, with all Canadians, will join in celebrating the unveiling of this statue next September. John Diefenbaker was a great Canadian, and I can think of no better way to commemorate his role in our nation's history than with a statue on the grounds he loved so much—Parliament Hill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES' LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the federal Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) yesterday that he has no intention of trying to influence the Government of Newfoundland to conform to national labour standards is indeed a poor reflection on the Government.

The Constitution, the Charter of Rights, and the principle of equal pay for work of equal value have been flagrantly violated by the Newfoundland Government in dealings with provincial government employees.

The same jobs with the same Government, with the same job descriptions, pay workers $3 per hour more or less depending upon which building they are working in. Yet the federal Government will not promote the Constitution, the Charter of Rights, or the concept of equal pay for work of equal value if the violator happens to be another Tory Government.

The federal Minister of Labour should ask the Newfoundland Government to negotiate the problem and stop the suspensions and fines so that people can get back to work.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NEED FOR IMPROVED SERVICE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the new President of Canada Post is going to need the patience of Job and the wisdom of King Solomon to get that organization turned around. The top priority is to improve the service.

I had a letter last week from J. Michael Clancy, a constituent of mine, in which he states that a letter he mailed on August 27, 1979, was received marked "Returned to Sender" on March 7, 1986. In other words, it took Canada Post six years and 192 days to return this envelope, which was mailed from Richmond Street West in Toronto to Spadina Road, a few blocks away.

● (1415)

The other key priority is the Government's request, announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that Canada Post reduce its operating deficit to zero by the end of fiscal 1987-88. Canada Post has been studied to death. It is time for sound co-operative action by management and all employees to improve service and productivity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

CONDEMNATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT'S LABOUR LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. On behalf of Canadians the Minister has been attending the regional meeting of the International Labour Organization and has been elected its honorary chairman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope that does not come off my time, Mr. Speaker.

It must be doubly embarrassing for the Minister, acting in that capacity, when the International Labour Organization condemns the labour practices in the Province of Newfoundland, with reference to the present strike, as not being up to acceptable ILO standards.

The Government of Canada has so far refused to uphold its obligations as a member of the International Labour Organization by persuading, or attempting to persuade, the Province of Newfoundland to bring its labour legislation into accord with those standards.

Why does the Government take this position, and what does the Minister intend to do about it, now that the International Labour Organization has recognized him in an honorary capacity?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the kind words of the Leader of the Opposition, but I knew there was more to come.

An ILO study mission came to Canada last summer and visited three provinces to seek more information on complaints filed by workers in four provinces. The Hon. Member is correct that the standards and structures in three of those provinces were found to be lacking as compared with those of the ILO.

The responsibility of the Government of Canada is to assist the ILO in transmitting that information to those provinces. I have transmitted it to them for their consideration. I have also sent a letter to those provinces offering my assistance in interpreting the intent of the ILO.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is virtually acting like a post office, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN LABOUR PRACTICES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Why does the Minister adopt this position of neutrality? Does he not realize that he is sending a message to the workers of the world that, while in the past our country has condemned labour practices in Poland, Chile, and other repressive countries, we have these practices here in Canada and he is doing absolutely nothing about it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Leader of the Opposition was serious in his request for information. It is simply rhetoric to compare the labour practices in Canada to those in oppressed regions which we are presently discussing in Montreal. I can assure the Hon. Member that not one government member, worker member, or employer member would compare the labour practices in this country to those of the countries which he just mentioned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): It may be coincidental, Mr. Speaker, that our federal Minister of Labour, who has the honour to head this organization at its hemispheric meeting, refuses to condemn a Tory Government in Newfoundland, a Tory Government in Alberta, and a Social Credit Government in British Columbia. Is that type of friendship more important than protecting the workers in those provinces and ensuring internationally accepted labour standards?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would not allow me the time necessary to explain labour relations in our country and the division of power to the Liberal Member of Parliament.

Mr. Gauthier: You cannot explain them, that's why.

Mr. McKnight: I have had discussions with the Government of Newfoundland and the Canadian Labour Congress. The Hon. Member should be aware that, when one is offering to solve a problem, the only discussions which are meaningful are those between the two parties.

● (1420)

APPLICATION OF ILO STANDARDS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He had better make up his mind and get his story straight pretty soon. He said yesterday at the ILO Conference in Montreal that he had no intention of urging the Government of Newfoundland to comply with ILO regulations. Will he tell us now whether or not he has urged the Government of Newfoundland to comply with ILO standards to which Canada is a signatory?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): I am not sure whether the Member came in late, Mr. Speaker, but I think I have answered that question. His premise is completely false. The statement I made yesterday was that I had communicated to the provinces, as we are bound to do, for their consideration. I have already said that I had discussions with the Province of Newfoundland. I had discussions with the Canadian Labour Congress. I am offering my services to assist in resolving a very difficult situation.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Pontius Pilate routine is not amusing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that kind of thing is not appropriate. Therefore, just a question, please.

Ms. Copps: What is wrong with that?

MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, how much further must Premier Peckford of Newfoundland go in destroying basic workers' rights and the concept of collective bargaining before this Minister finds his conscience and a sense of responsibility, and takes a leadership role in preserving workers' rights?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I find that very strange coming from a Member whom I have not heard raise his voice in concern about collective bargaining in his own province since I have been in this position. I assure him that, if he recognized federal jurisdiction in matters concerning the International Labour Organization, he would recognize that this Minister and this Government have gone further than the previous Government ever did in transmitting the concerns of a UN body to those partners in Confederation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the important discussions going on between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States.

In Kitchener, Ontario, on October 10 the Minister said we will not be discussing medicare, or unemployment insurance, or bilingualism. They will not be on the negotiating table. Yesterday in Washington an American official said both sides understand that there are no preconditions and that nothing is taken off the table. A Canadian official agreed with this. Will the Minister explain this obvious contradiction to the House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expressed the position of the Government of Canada on frequent occasions, including in Kitchener-Waterloo. The position I took then is the position of the Government of Canada.

PRECONDITIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a Canadian official was quoted in today's press as agreeing that there are no preconditions, that medicare, marketing boards, and a whole range of other matters will be discussed. Is the Minister now telling the House that the official is wrong and these items he listed in Kitchener will not be discussed? Will he assure the House that is the case?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if a Canadian official suggested that medicare was going to be discussed, that Canadian official is wrong. I speak for the Government of Canada on the matter. I have made it clear that medicare and the other matters referred to by the Leader of the NDP are not at issue in trade negotiations.

Mr. Broadbent: It is pretty clear that the American officials are saying one thing and Canadians are saying another.

Some Hon. Members: No!

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Will he assure the House that when a statement is made by the leaders of both countries on the important subject of acid rain, included in that statement will be a commitment not simply to research but to a specific timetable for cleaning up the acid rain mess on this continent?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Leader of the NDP has been the last 18 months. Our position is clear. We are totally committed to specific targets, specific schedules, and specific commitments of cash.

Mr. Broadbent: We are talking about the other side.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY CONCERNING SOCIAL PROGRAMS GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO MODIFY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his speech—

Mr. Masse: One of the big guns!

An Hon. Member: He doesn't look like Chrétien!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is sitting in the correct seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Move over one seat to your left!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Garneau: My hon. friend, like the Minister of Finance, seems to think that the closer you get, the better the target.

Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance is as follows: On page 12 of his Budget Speech, the Minister indicated his intention of proposing changes in the Government's social expenditures. Since family allowances have already been partially de-indexed, and since the Government has backtracked on de-indexing old age security pensions and the Nielsen Task Force has said the Canada Assistance Plan is a valid one, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what social programs he intends to change, as he said in his speech.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member on his promotion to the front benches.

[English]

In response to the Hon. Member's question, we have indicated that a range of the universal social programs will be under review this year in advance of next year's Budget. The four principles which I established in the Budget will be the principal guidelines under which we will be reviewing these programs.

CONSULTATION METHOD TO BE USED BY GOVERNMENT IN REVIEWING SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question, since the Minister has given no indication of what he intends to do. Could he inform the House which social programs he intends to review and what kind of consultation process he intends to use prior to making a decision?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, over the next little while we will be making clear the various social programs which are under review. As I indicated in the Budget Speech, we will be looking at the unemployment insurance system following the report of the Forget Commission. Universal social programs, payments such as family allowances and Old Age Security, will also be reviewed. This will be done under the guidelines established in the Budget whereby we will be using the tax system as a means to reduce the benefits of upper-income Canadians and directing more to those in greatest need. As I think the Hon. Member well knows, the consultation has started with a number of interest groups which have expressed an interest in discussing this with us.

NON OBSERVANCE OF CONVENTION BY PROVINCES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In light of the fact that Canada has signed an ILO convention, after consultation with the provinces, and in light of the fact that four provinces, Newfoundland and three others, have broken the convention, will the Minister of Labour tell us who speaks for Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is fully aware of the make-up of the Confederation of Canada. Canada has signed some 26 conventions of the UN, 11 of which impact solely upon the provinces, and the balance impact upon the federal Government. The decision which has been taken by this Government is that we will not sign conventions unless the provinces, our partners, are already in compliance, or agree to be the signatories of those conventions.

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, was it not the intention of Canada to live up to the convention? If it was not, why did you sign it after having consulted the provinces? Why are you allowing them to breach it?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that I did not sign it, and that this Government did not sign it. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that. I will say to the Hon. Member that Canada has not been found guilty—

• (1430)

Mr. Rodriguez: Who speaks for Canada?

Mr. McKnight: —of any breach of an international convention by the ILO. It is the provinces that have been found guilty.

We have, through our offices, delivered the message to the provinces that the ILO found them in contravention. As Minister of Labour, I have written to my colleagues in the provinces.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not good enough.

Mr. McKnight: I have discussed personally with them any assistance they may require in interpreting the ILO study mission's findings last year.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES' EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. While regrettably the Prime Minister is coming home empty handed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Open your eyes.

Mr. Crosbie: You're empty headed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just the question, please.

Mr. Caccia: It is reminiscent of the emperor's clothes. He is coming home empty handed, with no acid rain cuts, no program, and no timetable for emission controls, as the Minister will agree. We have agreed to wait for another five years of research. What will the Government do in the meantime to cut the 26 million tonnes a year of SO_2 coming across the border?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if Moses came down from the mountain and put the Ten Commandments on that table, the Member for Davenport would complain that not enough was done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: Since 1980, when the Hon. Member's Party was in government, until now, absolutely nothing was done by Canada and the United States jointly to move even an inch on the acid rain problem. Now we have the head of the United States Government accepting that acid rain is serious in both countries, and serious because it is a trans-boundary problem. He has committed himself to bilateral mechanisms to ensure that acid rain is not just a one-summit wonder. Furthermore, he committed himself to hundreds of millions of dollars of cash to abate acid rain in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McMillan: That is more than the Hon. Member's Party did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: We all know the adage that when you are on the defence you go on the attack.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it possible that everyone can cooperate to keep the noise level down today? The Hon. Member for Davenport.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is very simple, and I hope the Minister will reply to it. Will the Minister agree hat we have lost one year waiting for this envoys' report and now are locked in for another five years of research without any cuts being admitted, accepted, or implemented by the United States administration? Why was the Prime Minister such a chicken?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not go on the attack when I am on the defence; I go on the attack when I have a weak target.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: The Prime Minister has achieved a real triumph on behalf of Canadians and I suggest that, instead of being a bad news-boy, the Hon. Member should join other Canadians across the country in rejoicing over a major Canadian accomplishment. We have a commitment by the President of the United States to spend hundreds of millions of dollars, not on more research, not on more development—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear! More, more!

Ms. Copps: Add some time on to Question Period.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Take away one of their questions.

Mr. Speaker: Is everyone now ready for more questions?

Mr. Rossi: Tell them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: Why don't you tell them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: They are overdoing it, not us.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Everyone. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

ABATEMENT PROGRAM INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. Is he telling the House that the President has agreed not only to research, not only to endorse the Lewis-Davis report, but has agreed to an actual abatement program in the United States, with timetables for reductions of acid rain depositions? Is that what he is telling us?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member read the report of the Canada-U.S. envoys which the President of the United States fully endorsed today.

The report reads:

> In short, although the primary purpose of this . . . program is to demonstrate the kinds of technologies that would be needed for any future acid rain control program, it should also result in some near-term reductions in U.S. air emissions that affect Canadian ecosystems.

It is there in black and white. Read it.

ENVOYS' REPORT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if the President has not gone beyond the report itself, then that is clearly not enough.

Will the Minister say on behalf of the Government that, in spite of the endorsement by the President, the Government will push the Americans to go beyond that report, both in Congress and in subsequent administrations, to do more than what is obviously going to be done within the context of the envoys' report? The Minister himself has said that would not be enough.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is implicit in everything that was said by the President and the Prime Minister today. For example, they have established bilateral mechanisms to do the very thing that the Hon. Member has recommended. This is not the end of the road; it is the beginning.

VALIDITY OF CONVENTIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that it is a good thing we only have the blarney summit once a year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An Hon. Member: That's unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East on a question.

Ms. Copps: My question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He made an incredible admission in the House today when he said: "I didn't sign the agreement". Is he saying that all ILO conventions signed by previous Governments of Canada are no longer valid?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I presume I would not have to explain that to the Hon. Member. I said, in reply to a question from an NDP member who stated that the provinces agreed and concurred with the signature of the federal Government, that I and this Government did not sign it. I could not say whether the provinces concurred with the signing of that ILO accord.

I want to inform the Hon. Member that the Government and this Minister have acted in accordance with the ILO rules and regulations. The ILO itself and Director General Blanchard recognize the division of responsibilities between the federal and provincial Governments in this country better than the Hon. Member does.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The answer is getting long.

NEWFOUNDLAND LABOUR DISPUTE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): The Minister is putting into question the very existence of ILO agreements that have a history in this country dating back decades. Does he not believe that the Government's signature on the ILO convention means anything? If he does, why does he not follow the advice of the ILO and meet with Mr. Peckford to resolve the situation in favour of the workers of Newfoundland, as suggested by the ILO?

• (1440)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, in her last statement, made the suggestion that the ILO requested that the Minister of Labour meet with the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland. That is absolutely untrue. What this Minister has done was to communicate to the Province of Newfoundland on two separate occasions, one as late as yesterday. I have discussed with the CLC whether there is any optimism on its part that the good offices of either the federal Government or the Minister of Labour could be used in settling this dispute.

The Hon. Member should know that one can have a party, but unless the invitations are accepted it is not much of a party.

MINISTER OF STATE (YOUTH)

STATEMENT ALLEGEDLY MADE BY MINISTER ON HUNGER STRIKE OF SENATOR JACQUES HÉBERT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth), who stated yesterday that Senator Hébert's gesture was a very poor example for the young people of this country.

Whatever we may think of hunger strikes, what kind of example would the Minister prefer: an example that shows courage and a true commitment to young people, or the dishonesty of someone who abused her authority by acting as a recruitment officer for a political party—

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

APPROVAL OF MORTGAGES IN SINGLE-INDUSTRY TOWNS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing. In the past 12 months Cominco Limited in Trail, British Columbia, has been forced to lay off about 800 employees. One result of these lay-offs is that some banks have not accepted, or are now considering not to accept any new mortgages unless they are CMHC approved. Will the Minister reassure home owners in single-industry towns that they will not be subject to this arbitrary action taken by the banks? And may I ask the Minister what action he can take to prevent this?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the mortgage insurance provided by CMHC to high ratio mortgages, to the best of my knowledge will continue to be provided to the areas to which the Hon. Member refers, Revelstoke and Trail, British Columbia.

I should tell the Hon. Member and the financial institutions of Canada that CMHC is presently reviewing its mortgage insurance because at the present time it appears that the beneficiaries of that mortgage insurance happen to be the financial institutions with 100 per cent guarantees for their loans. As to the concerns of individuals who may be having difficulty, CMHC will be as flexible as possible and we will suggest to the financial institutions that they take that into effect in the same manner as CMHC.

RELEASE OF RECIPIENTS' NAMES—CONDUCT OF INVESTIGATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On March 5 and March 6 I asked the Minister if the Peat Marwick investigation, which she appointed, would cover her role and the role of her personal staff in the illegal release of unemployment insurance information. At that time she did not answer my question. Now that there have been allegations of shredding in her office, will the Minister tell the House who has been appointed to carry out that investigation? And will the investigator cover the role played by the Minister and her personal staff?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there is no shredding going on in my office. I would also like to say to the Hon. Member that all documents which have been returned from Peat Marwick are intact. They are in safe storage and available to the Privacy Commissioner who is, indeed, carrying out this investigation.

INVESTIGATION BY PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who is the Minister designated with respect to the Privacy Act. Could the Minister tell the House whether the investigation carried on by the Privacy Commissioner covers the role played by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and her personal staff, and whether the Privacy Commissioner will also investigate any allegations of shredding in the Minister's office?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman understands that the Privacy Commissioner does not report except through the Minister of Justice to this House, so I have no way of knowing at the moment exactly what the Privacy Commissioner is investigating. But I can make an inquiry for the Hon. Member if he is really serious and wants the information.

YOUTH

INSTITUTIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister keeps trying to tell us how much her Government has done for youth, so will she tell us today why she has instituted a 40 per cent cut in institutional training at community colleges over the next three years? And will she indicate how such a cut will help the young people of our communities?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to answer the Hon. Member. I can say that this Government is doing more in the field of training than any previous Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on. They will never learn.

Miss MacDonald: The funding which comes under the Canadian Jobs Strategy is now also available for the training of young people. That is taking place in project after project across the country. There are 9,000 young people presently involved in one single program alone, the Job Entry Program, which allows for young people who have not had those training opportunities previously, those people who are disadvantaged and who have—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Miss MacDonald: I would love to speak longer about that issue.

STATEMENT MADE BY NOVA SCOTIAN MINISTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister then explain why the Nova Scotia Minister for Skills Development told his Legislature on March 11 that the federal Government was cutting its international training by 10 per cent this year, 15 per cent next year, and 20 per cent the following year? Or is the Minister saying he was lying to his Legislature?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that question shows the Hon. Member's complete lack of understanding of what is going on. I will explain it to him step by step. Yes, there is institutional training and that will be continued. But there is now also access to training under the $900 million Canadian Jobs Strategy, and which was not available before. So Nova Scotia will be able to acquire more training for its students as, for instance, it is doing for black youth, as it is doing with young people in Sydney right at the present time, and as it is doing with project after project—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Miss MacDonald: —throughout Nova Scotia and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The answer is becoming long.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF MONTREAL AIRPORTS—PUBLICATION OF CONSULTANTS' REPORT

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The future of Montreal's airports, especially Mirabel, is in a way closely connected to the conclusions that the Advisory Committee on this question is about to disclose in its final report.

Could the Minister inform the House today exactly when the report will be released and whether our regional organizations, such as the Committee to promote Mirabel Airport, will be able to report to the Minister through a standing committee of the House of Commons?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the Hon. Member a precise date. I have not as yet received a report. My understanding is that it will be presented to me some time in April or May. Of course I will take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration, that being her suggestion that it be referred to the standing committee.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE CLAUSE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Media reports today state that Washington issued a statement to allay Canadian concerns about their adherence to the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972. Why would Washington and Ottawa not simply reinstate the ABM clause in the signed NORAD agreement itself in order to allay the concerns of Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, of course, is a member of a Party which took that clause out. It was one of the actions it took that, in fact, made sense because circumstances had changed. There was, however, a concern in Canada about the integrity of the ABM Treaty. It was precisely for that reason that, at the summit meeting in Washington, the Prime Minister of Canada secured from the President of the United States an explicit underlining to the United States of the importance of full compliance with the ABM Treaty and other existing arms control obligations.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Does the Minister not realize that by refusing to put the ABM clause back into the NORAD agreement, the return of which would simply protect Canada from becoming involved in active ballistic missile defences except on the Government's own decision, the Government is showing that it is not serious enough about its commitment to put that commitment in writing in the signed NORAD agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was right the first time when he supported the action taken by the Liberal Government to remove that particular clause from the treaty.

The point that needs to be underlined now, because there is concern in the country, whether legitimate or not, about the integrity of the ABM treaty, is that in full recognition of that concern the Prime Minister of Canada deliberately sought and successfully achieved an assertion from the President of the United States of the fundamental importance of the integrity of the ABM treaty. That should reassure any doubts that might exist, in the mind of the Hon. Member, or elsewhere in the country.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S SPENDING FREEZE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is she aware that, as a result of the federal Government's spending freeze, important job-development and Section 38 programs have been stalled and virtually curtailed, and important jobs are not being developed?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, some 160,000 Canadians have benefited from the Canadian Jobs Strategy in the first six months of its operation. That is an excellent record. I can assure the Hon. Member that the freeze has not affected the programs of this Department. If there is a specific area in question, it may be that the regional allocation to that area has already been used up. I will look into the question with regard to the Hon. Member's area and report back to him.

EXPENDITURE OF ALLOCATED FUNDS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee that allocations have not been used up and that ample funds are available. I want her to assure us that where the freeze has actually curtailed or stalled Section 38 and job-development programs, the freeze will no longer stall those programs, and those funds will be loosened up so that we may start creating much needed jobs, particularly in the hard pressed areas of Canada.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, projects, both under Section 38 and under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, are being approved every day. I have assured the Hon. Member that if there is a specific problem with regard to his area, I will look into it.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

RELEASE OF COOLICAN REPORT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister knows, the Coolican report on comprehensive native claims policy was released this morning. It urges the Government to get on with the job of settling these outstanding claims, and it takes a position different from the position taken by the Nielsen task force which indicates that the process should be deferred. Will the Minister endorse, accept, and support Coolican, and reject Nielsen?

An Hon. Member: Now you're in trouble.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if life were that simple, we would all be in trouble. Quite clearly, the Nielsen task force recommendations are before the Standing Committee and any views that any Member has may be made known to the committee.

With respect to my own responsibility regarding the so-called Coolican task force which I commissioned, the report will be tabled today at the conclusion of Question Period. I have already indicated, as I think the Hon. Member well knows, that there will be some weeks of public discussion. It is my intention to take recommendations forward to Cabinet by June following that public discussion.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF RIGHTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Is the Minister now prepared to tell the House that he can accept the recommendation of Coolican that the blanket extinguishment of aboriginal rights will no longer be a precondition for the settlement of a successful comprehensive native claim?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly repeat to the Hon. Member the assurances given to him by my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He was spot on. Led by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister, we will come to a consensus without too much time passing. We will then announce it to the hon. gentleman and I am sure he will be happy with it when the time comes.

FINANCE

ELIMINATION OF INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT FOR FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I would like to ask him about the phasing out of the investment tax credit for farmers contained in his Budget, a measure which will take about $150 million per year from Canadian farmers and approximately $50 million per year from Saskatchewan farmers. Why did the Minister eliminate the investment tax credit for farmers without replacing it with some equivalent tax benefit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member thinks back, he will realize that what he said is not true. We have provided farmers with an immediate lifetime capital gains tax exemption of up to $500,000. That happens immediately for farmers, while for other individuals it will be phased in over a four or five-year period. I would also draw to his attention the fact that we have put in a very major program to assist those farmers who are in trouble with major debt loads and, as well, we have extended the farm fuel tax rebate for another year. Those are three very important measures that are helping farmers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, for one of those measures to help, the farmer must quit farming. What Saskatchewan farmers want to know is why he did not bring forward an equivalent tax benefit that would be worth the $50 million per year that they will lose because of the elimination of the investment tax credit.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first the Hon. Member is way, way out of line as far as the numbers are concerned. Second, the capital gains tax exemption starts this year, 1986, only for farmers and not for other investors. For other investors it will be phased in over a long period of time.

FERRIES

SERVICE BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and is with regard to the service provided by Northumberland Ferries Ltd. between Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. It is extremely important to our economy that this service commence operations when the ice goes out of the Northumberland Strait. Can the Minister assure the House that his Department will negotiate the earliest possible start-up date rather than use a fixed date which does not reflect local needs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the date of May 1 was selected after very thoughtful and careful consideration, and in an attempt to provide some degree of certainty. If there are indeed some extenuating or compelling reasons to start service earlier, I would certainly be prepared to entertain them considering the recommendations made by the Hon. Member.

REVIEW OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the review of the eligibility for social programs that he is contemplating in the next year, is he now telling Canadian citizens that, in addition to a tax increase next year, they can look forward to a tax back for those above a certain level of income?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is jumping to conclusions. If he has any suggestions, though, on how he feels we should proceed with this review using the four principles that I have established, I would be very pleased to hear his suggestions or those of any of his colleagues.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON UPPER-INCOME GROUPS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Finance not agree that with the four principles upon which he is going to rest his review of social programs, he leaves open the possibility of tax or a drawback on those with incomes above certain levels?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I encourage the Hon. Member not to jump to any conclusions. The whole purpose for raising this matter in the Budget at this time is to allow for a full year of reasonable debate so that we could understand the various elements of this particular matter and then come to the House of Commons at budget time next year with some specific proposals. I encourage the Hon. Member to participate in this debate in a reasonable, objective way, rather then jumping to fast conclusions and getting things way off track.

GRAIN

DETERMINATION OF INITIAL PRICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Wheat Board. The Minister knows that the loan rates set by the U.S. Farm Bill will likely drive the prices of grain down by 30 per cent. In view of the serious financial situation faced by the farm community, would the Minister consider establishing the initial prices of grain at 90 per cent of the world price in order to alleviate the cash flow problems of farmers?

● (1500)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very serious situation as far as Canadian grain producers are concerned. He should know that presently the Government is going through the exercise of setting initial prices. We are looking at several things in order to show as much support as we can for prairie and other grain farmers. We will be going everything we can to keep them as high as we can, including looking at setting initial prices higher than normal in line with the intent of the question asked by the Hon. Member.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF APPROPRIATE LANGUAGE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, a while ago you were kind enough to bring before the House some good suggestions and guidelines regarding Question Period which have been useful to us. I need some clarification. I should like the Chair to review the "blues", and I will be doing the same, with regard to what happened when the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) rose in his place today to ask a supplementary question. He started by using a very short one-liner. At that point the Chair said that the Member was not allowed to say what he had said, if my memory serves me well.

All that I heard the Member say was that the Pontius Pilate routine was not amusing. I think these words are far from being unparliamentary. If a short one-liner is allowed before a supplementary question, certainly a seven-word one-liner is not a long one. I ask the Chair to review what happened and to provide us with more guidelines which we need, because I thought my colleague had acted properly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would be happy to review the decision which I reached on the spot; if the Hon. Member is asking me to do that, I would be happy to do so. The Hon. Member knows that the Chair has some concerns about what language is used in this place. While things may not be so unparliamentary as to require withdrawal, I think Hon. Members know that there are also times—and, for instance, the other day I took the same action with regard to a comment by a Minister—when those kinds of comments about people as opposed to actions move us closer toward something which is unparliamentary. That is the only reason I asked the Hon. Member to proceed right to his question. The Hon. Member has asked me to review what was said, and I will do that.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) asked me to review it, and I am happy to do it.

Mr. Tobin: I am just trying to be helpful.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of being helpful, I want to make clear that I talked about a Pontius Pilate routine. Those were the words, and when you review the "blues", you will find them—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am thankful that the Chair said it is willing to review the "blues". At the same time I should like the Chair to think of the right of a Member being able to rise in his place and ask a question which is not outside our rules, and not being interrupted while doing so. I would like the Chair to consider this at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure what the Hon. Member is asking the Chair to consider. Perhaps he would like to be more specific.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I can repeat what I said. While the Chair is reviewing the "blues" to determine whether what my hon. colleague said was acceptable or not, I ask it to consider the effect of interruptions on interventions by Members unless they are clearly out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I rose because it seemed to me that it was improper language. That is exactly why I did it. I will continue to do that if I think that something improper has taken place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

I have another petition with a large number of signatures, Mr. Speaker, both from the riding of Gatineau and from the riding of Champlain, in which Parliament is asked to reconsider the termination of Katimavik.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House. Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition addressed to the honourable House of Commons of Canada, in which the Government, considering that Katimavik was a success, both as a means of training 20,000 young people who took part in the program over the last decade and as a means of carrying out important community projects, reverse its decision to cancel this excellent program.

Petitions

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition signed by many people from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, which says that Katimavik was a great success and is asking for the decision to terminate Katimavik to be reconsidered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—ENERGY—FALLING WORLD PRICES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys) moved:

That this House regrets that the Government's energy policy has proven to be disastrous for both the industry and the consumer in its failure to give the consumer the benefit of falling world energy prices and in its confusion and lack of direction, creating uncertainty for the oil and gas industry in the face of the Government's inability to cope with changing international conditions and its refusal to fulfil its commitments.

● (1520)

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a shame that we had to move this motion, but the situation in the energy industry leaves us no alternative. It is becoming chaotic. The policy of the Government is benefiting no one, except perhaps the integrated oil companies. The policy of the Government is not benefiting the consumer, the producer, or the independent retailer.

There were drastic price reductions in world oil in January. These reductions have not been passed on to the consumer at the pumps. There were two price declines at the pump which are not, in any sense of the word, adequate for the consumers of the country. Consumers are being gouged. The first price decline of 2 cents a litre was only at the pump and not in the wholesale price. Therefore, independent retailers had to take 2 cents a litre off their profit margin in order to remain competitive. Independent retailers did not benefit from this first price decline which came grudgingly from the industry at the reluctant urging of the Government. Through the policy of the Government independent retailers are being squeezed by the large integrated oil companies to the extent that they may not be able to remain in business.

At the forefront of this policy is Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada's wholesale price to retailers in the United States is 4 to 6 cents a litre cheaper than it is to retailers in Canada. The people's own oil company is selling gasoline in the United States cheaper at the wholesale level than it is selling it to its own retailers in Canada.

With regard to producers, all Canadian-produced crude used in domestic markets has been undervalued since early January of 1986 by between $4 and $6 Canadian a barrel. That is because the integrated oil companies switched from a west Texas intermediate posted price to a west Texas intermediate spot price. The lowest possible price which could be paid for crude oil in the world is being paid by Petro-Canada to producers in western Canada. This is tragic at this time while we are trying to safeguard and foster this industry in an attempt to keep together what we have achieved in this country in relation to production and security of supply.

Canadian producers are losing up to $6.6 million a day based on deliveries to domestic markets of 1.1 million barrels per day. The 1.1 million barrels per day produced in western Canada amounts to nearly 80 per cent of Canada's total crude consumption of 1.4 million barrels per day, the rest being sold as imports, mainly to the United States. This 1.1 million barrels per day represents 85 per cent of Canada's total crude production of 1.7 million barrels per day.

What is all this nonsense the Government has been telling us about prices not being able to go down until it flows through the system? Eighty per cent of our oil comes from western Canada and is refined in the country. Still, there have only been two measly reductions at the pump and consumers continue to be gouged by an artificially high price. Producers are being gouged by being paid the lowest price for crude oil in the world. This is being done by the people's own oil company, Petro-Canada.

The price is being kept artificially high. Petro-Canada has done nothing for prices. It has not led price declines in the country. The first price decline was 1 cent per litre by Imperial Oil. The next day Petro-Canada followed with a 2 cent a litre reduction. The second reduction at the pumps was announced jointly by Imperial Oil and Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada is keeping the price of gasoline artificially high and it is being aided and abetted by the Government. The Government need only call the president of Petro-Canada and tell him to start acting in the interests of the Canadian consumer. The result of this is that in January alone Canadians paid $302 million too much at the pumps for gasoline. That does not include the extra which they paid for heating oil and other petroleum products.

The United States has not had this problem. Their prices went down at the pumps when world oil prices went down. The prices at the pumps in the United States reflected the price of world oil and the fact that refined gasoline is a separate commodity from crude oil, the same as crude oil is separate from pork bellies. In Canada we have had to listen to all this nonsense about a flow-through period which has just been a con of the Canadian people.

This is all because the Government is changing the role of Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada was set up to explore and develop energy sources in the country and to establish a security of supply on which we could rely. Petro-Canada is no longer doing this. In fact, it is backing out of five wells off the East Coast of Canada. It is reducing its exploration and development budget. It is no longer a window on the market for Canadians. Consumers cannot rely on Petro-Canada to act on their behalf at all. Petro-Canada is being told by the Government to make money at all costs, to drive up its profits in order to present the best possible picture so its shares will draw the best possible price at a private share sale. This is not in the interest of consumers, but in the interest of serving the policy of the Government, which policy is not in the interest of Canadian consumers.

The philosophy has changed with respect to Petro-Canada and the people of the country realize it. At one time Petro-Canada was a source of pride. We could buy from our own oil company and get a fair deal. People wanted to do that. Now they look upon Petro-Canada as a gouger, a monster out of control causing problems in the country which have never been experienced before, at both the producer and consumer levels. All of this has been exacerbated by the Government's policy with regard to Petro-Canada to do nothing to help the producer or the consumer. If the Government's policy was to act in the best interests of the industry and the consumer, we would not have these problems in the country at this time.

Not only did the Government change its policy to act against Canadians, it also purchased the down-stream assets, the refining and marketing capability, of what was once Gulf Canada in Ontario and western Canada. Now they have such a large number of stations they control the marketing industry. They have consumers by the throat. Not only that. There are hundreds of producers but only four major refineries. There are smaller companies with maybe one refinery, but just four major refineries. They pay producers the lowest price and then gouge the consumers.

What does all this mean? It means the Government has taken a good public-minded Crown corporation and turned it against Canadians. This party is diametrically opposed to using Petro-Canada to gouge the industry and consumer. Petro-Canada was set up for the benefit of the oil and gas industry as well as the consumer, not to act to their detriment.

Certainly the reduction in the price of oil will cause a reduction in oil exploration and development, the non-conventional sources in particular. It is not the industry that caused this cloud. It is the Government, through its jaundiced policies and crazed directions to Petro-Canada, which has caused the problem. It is the Government that backed away from the commitment to the Husky upgrader which was made by the former Government. Why? The Government says it is worried about world oil prices. It does not bother to consider for a minute the fact that when the upgrader is finished world oil prices will be higher. It does not consider for a minute that its own budget documents indicate the price of crude oil will be U.S. $22.50. Mind you, that is on page 23 of the document. On page 20 the Government says the price is going to be U.S. $23.88. On the one hand the Government says the price will average U.S. $22.50 this year, on the other hand it says it has to reconsider the Husky upgrader because of the price of oil. No wonder no one has any respect for this Government or its economic policies.

The Government is also applying retroactively regulations which have yet to be implemented under the Petroleum Incentives Program Act. As a result, Canadian companies, particularly Husky-Bow Valley, have been squeezed out of wells they wanted to drill on the east coast. Initially they wanted to drill 10 wells. The Government talked them into reducing that to seven. Then the Government, through the retroactive application of regulations which no one has seen officially, has reduced the number of wells to two. This is diabolical. The Government has also said that if Petro-Canada backs out of exploration it earned without cost through a back-in provision, the partner who replaces Petro-Canada will not receive funds under PIP for their interest.

Where are we going here? What is happening? Our energy policy is in shreds. Consumers are being taken advantage of completely, yet the Government is not moving. The industry even visited the Government yesterday to explain the dire situation facing them throughout Canada. The Government would not listen. The Minister is frozen to her deregulation switch. She is going to hold on for dear life. The industry is going to suffer regardless.

What is happening to the industry, and by that I mean primarily the small and medium oil companies? They are in a tremendously difficult position, teetering on the brink, because of the policies of this Government. They are ripe for bankruptcy or takeover by the multinational oil companies. They have proven reserves of oil and gas. The large oil companies are able to withstand this bad time because of their integrated nature. They realize the small companies are vulnerable, and if they wait until they become even more vulnerable they can pick up their reserves for practically nothing. They can steal it out from underneath this country. That is a tragedy. Yet, how can you blame them?

The Government is saying to its own Crown corporation: You do the same thing. Petro-Canada led the price increases last fall but did not lead the price decreases this spring. The multinationals have a shield; they just follow behind Petro-Canada's gouging and they are safe from criticism because Petro-Canada is leading the way.

What is going to happen? Producers presently receive a rebate of 75 per cent of royalties due, up to $3 million. That is a provincial responsibility. Similarly, they are exempt from the PGRT up to the first $500,000. At the current rate of 10 per cent that means $5 million worth of oil and gas production is exempt. The Government should consider increasing this threshold in order to protect the small and medium producer. It should use this policy as a lever to force the producing provinces to reduce their royalties. It has to be done. This Government has to move because everyone is suffering; everyone except the integrated oil companies. This is tragic. There has never been such an injustice in Canadian commerce like the one being perpetrated by this Government. The time to review the policy is not in five months, the time is now. The Government has to act now on behalf of the industry and consumers. We should not sell our oil and gas to foreign countries for less than we pay for it in Canada. That is not commerce in the interests of the Canadian public. The consumer deserves better from this Government. The industry, which put faith in the Government, deserves much better.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Friesen): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not hear the Hon. Member correctly. He suggested that the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, which is a tax imposed on the industry and which will be phased out by the Government, will give a dramatic increase in revenues to the oil industry. I believe he said it had a threshold of $500,000 in terms of income and that the smaller companies do not have to pay this tax right now. He suggested that the threshold should be increased. In other words, smaller oil companies should not have to pay the tax.

This is a big issue right now. The Canadian Petroleum Association, the voice of big oil, has been pushing for the elimination of the PGRT. I know that such a move will benefit the big oil companies since they are the ones paying the tax. I think the Hon. Member has quite correctly pointed out that some small oil companies do not have to pay this tax while others which are small but not the smallest have to pay some. To what would the Hon. Member increase the threshold?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question posed by my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I do not have a particular figure since I have not had an opportunity to thoroughly investigate the matter. However, I will be having meetings next week with the express purpose of finding out exactly what threshold could best service the industry in order to protect Canadian companies which are now just hanging on by their fingernails.

Mr. Waddell: We in the New Democratic Party do not believe that the PGRT should be eliminated with respect to provincial royalties. We feel that is a provincial matter. The pressure is coming from the big oil companies which will be able to survive no matter to what level oil prices drop. They are integrated companies with a great number of assets. They will be able to ride out the storm. It is the small Canadian companies which are in real danger. As the Hon. Member has pointed out this may result in the elimination of the Canadian industry completely. It is the perfect time for big multinational oil companies to take over small Canadian companies.

What is the Hon. Member's position and that of his Party with respect to a floor price for oil, or with respect to a negotiated price for oil? I have always believed that the real problem has been created by the ups and downs. As a westerner, Mr. Speaker, you know about the boom-and-bust syndrome in Alberta. That most recent boom lasted only about three to six months. It seems to me that the bust part of the syndrome is now coming on. I would like to see this situation levelled out so that we can have continued growth in western Canada.

Do members of the Liberal Party believe that there should be some sort of negotiated price if the price of oil keeps dropping dramatically? It seems to me that getting rid of the PGRT would allow better benefits to flow to small Canadian companies. In other words, they would receive a livable price for their oil and they would not have to sell it all out now at fire-sale prices.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to correct my hon. friend. I do not think he meant to say that we advocate doing away with the PGRT. What we are saying is that the threshold of $5 million should be raised in order to allow small and medium-sized Canadian companies to gain more benefits and relief from the PGRT. However, that would have to be linked to a commitment from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan in order to reduce the royalties so that a further benefit could accrue. There is certainly no need to do away with the PGRT, as far as I can see, since it would be allowed to move into higher amounts. It would only affect the larger corporations which I feel are better able to weather the storm. At least that is the way it looks to me right now.

With respect to a floor price, the Liberal Party is not prepared to advocate the setting of a floor price at the present time. No one from the industry has come to my Party requesting that a floor price be set. We are not about to go out to the industry and suggest that a floor price be put in place when no one in the industry has come to us asking for such a price. Why would we do that? If we were to do that we would be saying to consumers that they will have to pay higher prices for gasoline while we are advocating that the price come down. We would be saying that consumers get the benefit of the world price reduction in crude oil. We would also be saying to the business community, the manufacturers and the industries that they will have to pay more for oil for industrial purposes. This would be like saying to these groups that they must place themselves at a disadvantage with respect to competitors in other countries. We have not been asked to advocate a floor price. We see a definite downside to the imposition of such a price. We are certainly not advocating a floor price at this time.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to what the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) had to say. He talked about raising the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax credit to a figure above $500,000. However, he did not have a specific figure in this respect. Perhaps the Hon. Member can tell us from where this money would come. Would there be some sort of a dip into the Treasury? Is the Hon. Member proposing to raise the debt?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, it would give me great pleasure to address the Hon. Member's question. There will be nothing more serious to the country than the loss of our oil and gas industry. I think there is a definite possibility that we will lose it. I think we are being very kind to the Saudi Arabians and other countries. Not only does price reduction mean that these countries will be able to compete with other producers, it means that conservation will be relaxed while consumption will be increased. It will also mean that synthetic oil projects will no longer be economically viable. We must be mindful of these points. We cannot throw away everything that we have worked for in light of the policies of this Government and the former Liberal Government. I refer to the Government's goal to achieve self-sufficiency and Canadianization. That cannot be thrown away.

If the Hon. Member is worried about the cost, and of course there is a relationship with respect to what will be most harmful to the country, then I say to him: Go to the industry and tell it we will relax this measure now but when prices increase again they will have to pay it back to the Government of Canada. That is perfectly fine with me, if that is what the Hon. Member wants to do.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on behalf of my Party. I will not speak extensively on this matter.

I wish to say that we are in a crisis situation. Canadians should not be smug, thinking of it as being just an Albertan problem because it is a Canadian problem as well. It is somewhat ironic that we are in a crisis when oil prices increase dramatically and that we are in a crisis when oil prices decrease dramatically. As I said before, that is all part of the boom-and-bust syndrome. This syndrome is incorporated into the Western Accord as we follow world prices. It is a situation we have to get out of in Canada. It is not doing the country any good, and it could devastate Alberta. Right now Alberta is like the Titanic. It has a big hole in the side as a result of lower world oil prices. The lifeboats and preservers have been thrown overboard. The Province does not want to use them because of ideological grounds. The party is still going on.

Well, it has to come to an end at least. Perhaps that is somewhat unfair. Perhaps the party is grinding to a halt because of this recognition. We could face up to 40 per cent unemployment in Alberta if oil prices continue to drop. I saw the news at 11:30 this morning with respect to OPEC oil prices and they may, in fact, be stabilized now somewhat. However, I believe that is very doubtful because we are not sure what will happen. My Party believes that the way to protect the Alberta producer is to establish a temporary floor price until the market stabilizes.

The Minister accused us of living in a fantasy world because I and others have been leading advocates in the House for lowering the prices at the pumps. However, I suggest that is a different matter. The reason we are not seeing lower oil prices at the pumps is that our system is not competitive. There are a few companies, including Petro-Canada, that control the market and they are simply not quickly passing on the dramatically lower oil prices. In fact, at a time when the price at the pumps should be reduced by 10 cents a litre, these companies are creaming off profits.

The fact is that it could be a matter of Government policy to lower the prices at the pumps in order to benefit consumers, while being stabilized at the small producer level. However, nothing is being done and we are getting the worst of all possible worlds as a result of the so-called free market economy.

I was in Alberta and met with some small producers. They will be devastated by what is taking place in the Province of Alberta. Husky Oil, Petro-Canada, Suncor, Syncrude, Canadian Roxy, Sulpetro and Pembica Resources have formally announced lay-offs or staff cut-backs totalling 1,500. Ipso, the Regina-based steel maker, will eliminate 695 workers. The Canadian Association of Oilwell Drill Contractors predicts that 4,000 jobs will vanish in that sector this spring. Dome Petroleum has informed its bankers that it has no intention of making payments on its massive debt of $5.2 billion. We could face another banking crisis if Dome Petroleum goes under. The President of the 30,000 strong Petroleum Services Association says that the total job loss in that sector this year will be 6,000 and could go as high as 15,000.

The Alberta Energy Board has chopped the provincial allowable daily input by 300,000 barrels a day, which is approximately one-third of total production. One oil man is quoted as saying that it is Armageddon in Alberta and that every major oil project is threatened. Clearly there are problems in Alberta which we must address and I will make some suggestions about how we can deal with those problems.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) stated that the Government's energy policy is in tatters. Originally, the federal Government's energy policy was to get rid of the National Energy Program, go to world oil market prices and phase out the petroleum and gas revenue tax which provided a lot of money to the federal Government. The oil companies despised the PGRT because they had to pay tax for once. The Government's move to world oil prices gave the oil industry another windfall since it increased the price of their old oil which they obtained at very low rates. The oil industry was to become the engine of economic growth that would create 300,000 new jobs in Canada and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) stated that this would be the Government's major economic policy.

In March or April of 1985 the Government entered into the Western Accord with the oil producing provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan in western Canada. What has become of the Government's energy policy? It is in tatters because the price of oil has fallen dramatically in the so-called free market which is essentially controlled by OPEC. The result has been the lay-offs and cut-backs which I have just mentioned.

Now, the Government has changed its policy. The Minister of Finance has announced a new policy of consumer-led economic growth because of lower oil prices at the pumps. While that may be a legitimate policy, the Government has made a 180 degree turn from its original energy policy. I challenge the Government to tell me that it has not changed its policy. Furthermore, the Minister has not even been honest in explaining this policy. His Budget estimates the price of oil to be $22.50 a barrel for the rest of 1986 and he projected revenues according to that figure. Therefore, he has underestimated his deficit by $2 billion in order to bring the deficit under that magic figure of $30 billion.

The Government's original policy was to rely on the oil industry as the engine of economic growth, but its present policy is to rely on consumer-led recovery and growth through lower oil prices. While that may be a commendable policy, it is a complete change from its original energy policy.

The Government has created the worst of all possible worlds because the oil industry is suffering in Alberta and the consumer is not getting justice at the pump. Our system is so non-competitive that those lower prices have not been passed on to consumers, yet the Government has done nothing to make the system more competitive. In fact, it has closed a refinery in Montreal.

I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources why oil prices were not 6 cents a litre lower. I even introduced a motion in the House stating that the price at the pump should be 6 cents a litre lower. When I suggested that gasoline prices were cheaper in California and other states directly across the border, the Minister replied that our system is different from that in the United States. She explained that we do not have the refining capacity that exists in California, yet the Government has closed a refinery in Montreal.

I suggested that Petro-Canada could be used to set the pace by passing on lower oil prices through the system. Clora and George McAra in Gravenhurst, Ontario entered into a long-term contract with Petro-Canada and put their life savings in a gas station. They attempted to reduce their gas prices in order to be competitive and we saw that Petro-Canada locked their station. The Government oil company is attempting to restrain competition exactly as the big multinational oil companies have done in the past.

I asked the Minister about her policy for Petro-Canada. The Conservative's policy for Petro-Canada is to have it act like any other oil company. That is not why Petro-Canada was established. In my opinion it was established to be a leader. It was established to be a leader in the industry and it has been a leader in the opposite direction in this case.

● (1600)

In the column written by Diane Francis in the Toronto Star, she states:

> By my calculation, such a calamitous collapse means gasoline prices should be shaved by about 12 cents a litre.

She stated that last week U.S. posted prices fell to $20 a barrel while Canadian posted prices were as low as $15 a barrel, and by her calculation gasoline prices should be shaved by about 12 cents a litre. She continues:

> Instead, we have seen savings of a penny here or there and a great many excuses from Petro-Canada and its rivals.
> Why?
> "Because there are only four refiners and no competition in Canada", says Ron Greene, president of Renaissance Energy Ltd.
> By comparison in the U.S., there are literally hundreds of refiners competing viciously to buy oil, which means the prices often are upwards.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will address the Government's policy of expanding Petro-Canada to buy all those gas stations. Why did the Government do that? Do we really want Petro-Canada to own all the gas stations? Or is it more important to have Petro-Canada involved in heavy oil, the tar sands, exploration in the oil upgraders, and so on, which is going to be the real energy future for Canada? I do not want to put down individual retailers, but lots of different people can sell gasoline. Selling gasoline is not in the strategic nature of control of the energy supply. Importing, discovering, participating in some of the frontier resources, becomes strategic. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can tell us why the Government has acted this way with Petro-Canada? Again, it has the worst of all possible worlds.

Let me recap. The oil industry is in tatters. The consumer is not getting a break at the pump. Petro-Canada is out of control. So what is the Government doing? In western Canada it is very important to develop future resources. This is very hard to do when oil prices are falling. We have to look ahead to the future because in the 1990s we are going to have another oil shortage. One of our great projects was the Husky upgrader, a proposal entered into between the federal Government and the Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The upgrader is at Lloydminster right on the border of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan were to put up a $300 million loan guarantee to Husky, a Canadian private oil company, while Ottawa was to provide a $750 million loan guarantee and a $50 million grant. But the federal Government reneged on its promise.

Mr. McDermid: Not true.

Mr. Waddell: The Parliamentary Secretary says that is not true. Premier Getty of Alberta is quoted in the Calgary Herald on March 8 as saying he did not know what to do to make Ottawa uphold its commitment. He is quoted as saying: "What do you want me to do? Tackle them?" What kind of relationship is that with the provincial Government? What kind of policy is that towards the upgraders and the future of our energy sector?

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and I are members of the legislative committee on Bill C-85, a Bill to phase out the Petroleum Incentive Programs out in the frontiers. We were shocked when the Nova Corporation, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, Husky-Bow Valley, and the Canadian operators came before the committee to say the Government had sold them out. But that is for another debate. It was cutting back dramatically on exploration in Atlantic Canada.

The oil industry in Alberta is in disarray. The consumers are not getting the benefits of lower oil prices. Eastern Canada and the offshore has seen its oil exploration phased out. The Minister of Finance is misleading us in his budget papers, not intentionally, but in the sense of a different figure for oil prices. So where is the Government's energy policy? What has the much touted Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources been doing? We have the worst of all possible worlds.

I want to draw to the attention of the House what I believe can be done in this situation. There is an important article in the Calgary Herald of March 13 by Dave Speirs. He talks about the oil industry and says that the oil industry in western Canada is composed of a full spectrum of companies. On one end of the spectrum are a few large fully integrated major companies. They employ many Calgarians who participate in western Canadian exploration, work in the frontiers, in the tar sands in the in situ recovery megaprojects and refine and market oil. He goes on to state, and I quote:

> On the other end of the spectrum are hundreds of small independent companies, each employing from one to 50 Calgarians and participating almost exclusively in western Canadian exploration and development. Reducing provincial royalties or eliminating PGRT would benefit one end of the spectrum—the large fully integrated major companies.

But it would not benefit the other end. He further states:

> Across-the-board cuts in provincial royalties or PGRT would be of little benefit to the small to medium-sized independents already paying only 6 per cent royalties and sheltered from PGRT, but would place significiant incremental revenue in the hands of the major companies.

He then goes on to say that the major companies would simply buy out the small companies.

We should consider a negotiated floor price for oil as a temporary situation until the market stabilizes. We should consider measures in Alberta where a Crown corporation as the marketing agency could buy oil from the producers in order to ensure that they could sell their oil and would not just be gobbled up by the big companies. We should bring forward some real tough competition legislation and kick Petro-Canada and the other big oil companies into passing on those oil prices to consumers at the pumps, because those prices could go down another 10 cents a litre. Those are the kinds of things we could at least start to do.

Finally, I hope that we will consider this boom and bust situation in the energy industry because it is the plague of western Canada. I want to say that I agree with my friend's motion, that the Government's energy policy is in total disarray and it has the worst of all possible worlds at this moment.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has expressed some concern, as well he might, about the oil industry in Alberta. I am sure he will recognize that during the past four years when the prices were on the rise the industry in Alberta, had it been healthy, would probably have been able to attain some kind of resource base to endure some of the slump it is now facing. The Hon. Member was in the House at the time the National Energy Program was passed. In fact, I think he may have been his Party's spokesman at the time. His Party was, may I say, widely enthusiastic about the National Energy Program.

I can accept the fact that ideologically, in terms of theory, the Hon. Member at that time would have supported the National Energy Program. He has the benefit of history now and he has seen what that program did to the oil industry, particularly in Alberta and certainly in Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Now that he has seen what that policy did to the industry out west, would he now concede that the National Energy Program was a mistake?

• (1610)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times I have to say this.

Mr. Mantha: One more time.

Mr. Waddell: Okay, I'll say it one more time. The Hon. Member is an honest person. I invite him to check the record. The NDP did not support the National Energy Program. We voted with the Government—rather we voted with—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: You people, you're the Government now. We voted with the Conservatives just as much as we ever voted with the Liberals.

I rose in the House at the time to say that one of the big flaws in the National Energy Program was that in its effort to get political power for Mr. Trudeau, as opposed to Mr. Lougheed, the Liberal Government shifted the base of exploration from the western sedimentary basin to the frontiers. There were a number of reasons for doing that. First of all, the Government wanted to see what was in the frontiers. I had a plan and I accept some of that. However, the real reason for it was that under the Liberal notion of Canada the federal Government had power over the frontiers. I recall the fights that occurred between Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and the federal Government. A deal was never made with them and the Government said that the offshore belonged to the federal Government. I thought that that was one of the flaws in the National Energy Program.

Regarding the principles of the National Energy Program, the Conservative Party agreed with its principles as did our Party. We are all for energy security; we are all for fairness to consumers, a viable industry and Canadian ownership. I supported the thrust of Canadianization as did the Conservatives.

I see that the Associate Minister of Defence (Mr. Andre) is present. People used to give him a rough time by saying that he did not believe in Canadianization. He used to rise to point out that that was not true. As energy critic, he did believe in Canadianization, and he was right. An untruth was being told about him. It would be convenient for me to say otherwise, but the truth is that Conservative Members also believed in Canadianization of the oil industry.

Let us tell the truth. The truth regarding the National Energy Program is that I thought that it would not work and that the PIP grants were too expensive and would be abused. The Government spent about $8 billion on PIP grants. For $8 billion we could have bought Imperial Oil. We could have Canadianized the industry instantly.

Mr. McDermid: That would have done a hell of a lot.

Mr. Waddell: Regardless of whether he agrees or disagrees with that, and I suspect he disagrees, my position was that I was not in support of the National Energy Program.

Perhaps I can tell this to Hon. Members now since a few years have passed. I had a hell of a struggle within parts of my own Party on the matter of the National Energy Program. With the support of my leader and some other Hon. Members, I got the support I needed. We had people telling us that we had better support Lalonde because he was being attacked by the oil industry. The oil industry went on a capital strike by moving the rigs south and not spending money. Lalonde was being attacked and a group of Canadians led by Robert Laxer and Mel Hurtig supported the National Energy Program. I would not be part of that group because I thought the program was flawed. I invite the Hon. Member to check the record. We did not support the National Energy Program.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight. The NDP certainly did favour part of the National Energy Program and that was the 25 per cent back-in whereby Petro-Canada arbitrarily gained one-quarter of offshore acreage.

I would like to return to the Hon. Member's main point. He said that he would like to see a floor price for crude oil. Would he quickly and succinctly tell me what that price would be?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right. We did support the 25 per cent back-in. The National Energy Program consisted of 13 Bills and a whole group of programs, some of which Conservative Members supported, but we did not, and some of which we supported and Conservative Members did not. We did support the back-in because we thought for various reasons that it was only fair. After all, the resource did belong to the people and the people were entitled to a chunk of the resource. We did not see any problem with that. It was only the Hon. Member's American friends who browbeat the Government into backtracking on that proposal. In other words, the Government caved in to the Americans on that matter because the Americans did not like their oil companies having to suffer this 25 per cent federal Government back-in.

With respect to an exact price, that price has to be negotiated. It is as simple as that. I invite the Hon. Member to have a look at the Western Accord. There is a provision in Section 9 of the Western Accord that would allow the provincial and federal Governments to get together to negotiate such a price.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, now that he has proposed some sort of a price, would the Hon. Member tell us first how it is going to be funded, and second, how it will be organized with the 630,000 barrels a day that are being exported to the United States? The producer will not be selling to that market if he can sell to the Canadian market, and the American market represents three-eighths of our production.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there is a problem with exports. There are ways of getting around that. One is that the producer would sell more to Canadians, but that still would not take care of it all. Another way would be that a deal would be negotiated with the United States. There could be a joint export-import tax that could cover oil so that we would both have the same system. The third way, quite frankly, is to sell oil for export at lower prices. Regarding who would pay for it, it would be a shared cost. The Canadian consumer would in fact be paying part of the burden.

Mr. Gagnon: How?

Mr. Waddell: He would be paying higher prices at the pumps, quite honestly. That is not unreasonable. The price at the pumps would still come down since it has not yet come down as far as it should. The consumer would not notice any increase at all at the pumps but would be paying more than he would with a completely free market price.

Is that not what happened under the National Energy Program? The consumer got a break at the pumps at the expense of the Alberta producers. We are interested in fairness, fairness to the consumer and fairness to the producer. That is what Canada is about and that can be done.

The problem is that the Hon. Member has a notion in his head of the great so-called free market which is not a free market at all. It is a crazy world market that is manipulated by the Saudis. I will end by telling the Hon. Member about a public opinion poll that was taken in his own province which shows that there is a substantial minority, almost a majority, of Albertans who would favour such a system.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, I am a believer in private enterprise. I have a business—

Mr. Nunziata: No kidding.

Mr. Mantha: It's not an oil business, it's a golf business. I would like to ask the Hon. Member about less Government intervention. I was brought up to believe that a Government's job was to govern. Does the Hon. Member think that the Government should use the taxpayers' money in the way it did with Petro-Canada? To this day, even we do not know the price of Petro-Canada. Should we sell out Petro-Canada and put out shares so that Canadians could get dividends? The Hon. Member mentioned in his speech that Canadians received no money in return. By putting Petro-Canada out to shares, but leaving it Canadian owned, there would be dividends and the system would be streamlined and more competitive. Does the Hon. Member believe that Government should buy more of these companies?

• (1620)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of using Petro-Canada as an instrument of Government policy. In my speech I said that it should be one of the leaders in passing those cheaper oil prices through to consumers, which it is not doing. For example, I should like to see Petro-Canada looking at the difference in prices in northern Ontario where the Hon. Member lives and in Toronto where prices are so cheap. The Hon. Member should realize that the ordinary consumer or the ordinary guy needs a friend. He will not get it from OPEC, from Exxon, or from the other big multinational oil companies. Only the Government has that power and can do it for him.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House this afternoon, to take part in this debate on energy on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney).

The Minister's leadership and ability to negotiate and to appreciate the complexities of this country, are reflected in her truly magnificent record of achievements over the last fifteen months.

[English]

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has by her efforts and patience introduced goodwill into the relationships between provincial and federal Governments. More important, if we are to have the benefits of the jobs which result from investment, she has introduced confidence back into the Canadian energy industry.

The ill-conceived motion now under debate describes the Government's energy policies as disastrous. We have heard that word before. It is a word associated by investors, provincial Governments in Canada and, indeed, the world, with the National Energy Program. The NEP was conceived and inflicted upon Canada by the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government, the very hand which brings us today's motion.

Six years ago we were in the midst of an oil crisis. The Iran-Iraq war in 1979 had severely curtailed production from the Middle East and world prices were escalating. The Government of the day, which has now assumed its rightful role as the Opposition, was gripped by the kind of hysteria we are hearing from the Liberals today. It reacted in a knee-jerk fashion with a policy which cripped the Canadian oil and gas industry and pitted one region of the country against another. The NEP drove rigs south of the border. It drove away $17 billion in investment. It blackened our reputation in international investment circles. When people said that it was a disaster, they were being too kind. The Liberals have not learned their lesson. They are counselling us to panic again, to adopt politically expedient policies with little thought for the long-term implications for both the industry and consumers in Canada.

What is the situation today? The picture has changed considerably. We are facing a price was in international oil markets, and the oil and gas industry around the world is adjusting to lower prices and to uncertainty. The Canadian must make the same adjustments. Unlike 1980, when it was in the foot by the Liberal Government of the day, it now has under a deregulated regime the flexibility to adjust to market realities. No longer does it face administered prices and over-regulation. No longer does it face the uncertainties of federal-provincial energy wrangling. A stable policy framework is in place, supported by a new spirit of federal-provincial reconciliation.

The cornerstones of the new policy environment are the Atlantic Accord, the Western Accord, the agreement on natural gas markets and pricing, and the new frontier energy policies. These new policies were carefully developed in consultation with provincial Governments and with the oil and gas industry. We did not assume that Governments could predict the course of world energy prices. Our goal was to free the industry from excessive regulation and excessive taxation so that it could adjust and compete.

The overwhelming majority of voices from the oil and gas industry demanded relief from the NEP. The message was: "Remove the heavy hand of Government; we are willing to handle the lean times if we can reap rewards when there are good times". In 1985, the first year in which the policies were operational, the Canadian oil and gas industry expressed renewed confidence. The new environment was applauded by the industry, by investors and by observers abroad. An editorial in The Oil and Gas Journal indicated the following: "The Accord does all the right things, which means that it unravels a tangle of wrong things and does so in the right way". Salomon Brothers Inc. indicated: "In contrast to the NEP, the implicit premise of the Western Accord is that the objectives of stimulating investment and job creation in the energy sector and Canada's energy security can best be met by adopting a market-sensitive pricing regime for oil and gas within a fiscal regime of profit-driven taxation".

In response to the new policies, capital investment by the Canadian industry increased from less than $8 billion in 1984 to more than $10 billion in 1985. That year was one of the best in the history of the industry. Well completions in western Canada reached a record high of 11,600, an increase of almost 9 per cent over 1984. Exploration drilling was up by 20 per cent and development drilling was up by 25 per cent. Natural gas production was up by about 10 per cent and gas exports increased by 25 per cent. The policy framework put in place last year continues to have the confidence of the industry and of the Governments of the producing provinces.

Jim Gray, President of Canadian Hunter, recently told investors in London, England that whatever the price at which oil temporarily settles, "Canada will continue to be well positioned". He pointed out that finding costs for oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan were about half the costs in Oklahoma and Texas.

Imperial Oil President, Arden Haynes, told the same group that "investment in the Canadian oil and gas industry is, once again, a matter of business judgment rather than a political gamble". In other words, the price of oil may be changing, but the oil and gas industry is in a much better position to adapt to these changes than it would have been under the NEP.

Press reports earlier this week indicated that Poco's Petroleums Limited intended to double its capital spending in spite of the decline in oil prices and the resulting decline in the value of the company's assets. The president of the company mentioned increased marketing opportunities for natural gas after deregulation of the industry. He went on to say that Governments should not be encouraged to reregulate crude oil prices, and that "you can't say to a Government, step in when times are tough and stand aside during a boom".

I might add that British Columbia has just signed a new and substantial export sale of natural gas to California. It represents a 10 per cent increase in B.C. natural gas sales this year over last year. This is a direct result of the Western Accord and the new natural gas pricing agreement we reached with the producing provinces last year.

The oilfield service industry is extremely vulnerable to cutbacks spending by producing companies, but I should like to refer to the comments of a leading representative of that industry. Dale Tufts, President of the Petroleum Services Association, said:

> We fought long and hard for the Western Accord to reduce Government intrusion and we don'twant to go back to where we were just to save us today.

That position is widely held by the oil and gas industry and is supported by the Governments of the producing provinces. They agree that intervention in response to the oil price decline would be a mistake. John Zaozirny, Alberta's Energy Minister, has called it the worst mistake we could make. Our colleagues in provincial Governments have agreed to keep each other fully informed of developments. The oil and gas industry is important to regional economies.

● (1630)

We are concerned about the impact of falling prices, but we agree it would be a mistake to tinker with public policy based on the experience of three months of unusual trading.

I believe it is appropriate to illustrate just how volatile the oil market is at this time. In the last few days, the spot price has actually gone up. West Texas intermediate is currently trading at $14 a barrel and Brent crude has shown similar price changes, at one point reaching $16 a barrel. Most experts believe that this uncertainty will continue over the short term. That is why it would be foolish to move until the market settles down.

The best solutions for the industry's adjustment to lower crude prices are market led solutions. The changes made by the Government and by the Governments of the producing provinces have given the industry greater flexibility to adopt such solutions.

The ceiling price on so-called old oil has been removed. The petroleum and gas revenue tax is being phased out and has been eliminated on new projects and new productions. On older production it drops from 12 per cent in 1985 to zero in 1988.

Assuming, for purposes of comparison, a crude oil price of $15 a barrel, the net impact of the new policies will be to provide industry with more than $1 billion in cash flow in 1986 over what it would have been under the National Energy Program. That point bears repetition, Mr. Speaker. If the National Energy Program had been left in place and if average crude prices this year were at $15, the cash flow of the Canadian oil and gas industry would be more than $1 billion less than under the new policies.

Adjustments to the uncertainties of oil price changes may be difficult, but they would have been more difficult under the NEP. The new policies have given the industry the fiscal and regulatory room to adjust to changing market conditions best.

The new policies are consistent and stable. But they are non-interventionist and non-discriminatory. They will help the oil and gas industry to do what it can do infinitely better than Governments, that is, adjust to the realities of the market.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the new policies are helping energy consumers. We have deregulated crude oil. The price of crude oil has dropped, and as the newer, cheaper oil makes its way to refiners the cost of gasoline and heating oil is going down.

Canadian gasoline prices dropped another 2 cents a litre this week. The average total drop in gasoline prices since the first of the year is now 4.3 cents per litre for regular leaded at self-serve stations. In some areas of the country, market competition has seen gasoline prices drop by as much as 11 cents a litre, or about 50 cents a gallon.

The new energy policies are designed to avoid intervention and to allow market forces to set prices. Cheaper average gasoline prices show that the market is working and that our policies are correct.

The new policy also commits us to deregulation of natural gas prices. Industrial natural gas consumers are negotiating prices directly with producers or with distributors under competitive marketing programs. On November 1, 1986, all natural gas prices will be deregulated and all consumers will benefit from competitive gas prices.

In summary, the energy policy of the Government has stood the test. It is consistent with the goals our Party established while in opposition. It fulfils the commitments of the 1984 Prince Albert statement. It has restored confidence in energy investment in Canada. It has provided the oil and gas industry with the fiscal flexibility to deal with the inevitable price cycles of an internationally traded commodity. It has given consumers the benefit of a competitive market. In addition, it has shown that federal and provincial Governments can work together to allow Canadian companies to grow, to adapt and to compete.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Minister mentioned a price reduction of 4.3 cents a litre, and in some cases, a reduction of as much as 11 cents a litre. Let me say to the Minister that in a few isolated cases where prices have fallen more than 4 cents a litre, it is because of price wars and it has nothing to do with a reduction at the pump.

The Minister mentioned that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has introduced confidence. But the confidence is not there any more. That is why members of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada and the Canadian Petroleum Association came to Ottawa yesterday to speak to the Minister to ask her what she was going to do. They do not have confidence any more. They do not know where the industry is going. It is a very unfortunate situation.

The Minister mentioned the reduction in the spot price in West Texas intermediate crude. That is not going to matter. Petro-Canada, which does not have much of a source of crude oil itself, was paying, prior to December, the West Texas posted price for crude oil in western Canada. In January, the West Texas spot price went below the West Texas intermediate posted price. Then Petro-Canada decided it would pay the spot price, which was lower than the posted price. If the spot price goes up above the posted price again, Petro-Canada will just offer the producers in western Canada the posted price. Producers will get offered the lower of the two prices, which is the lowest price in the world for crude oil.

This is the country's own Crown corporation. It is supposed to be protecting the industry, securing a supply of crude oil and securing exploration and development, but here it is gouging the producers. How can the Minister defend this action? How can the Minister say that the industry must make adjustments? It is like somebody going into a store and asking for protection money off the top and saying to that storekeeper, "You have to adjust to this". It does not make any sense at all. The Minister is not advocating a responsible position for the industry.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised three or four points. First, the variety of prices that have developed with the falling of crude prices is the market-place at work. There will be, and constantly, a pressure on those who sell to find the price that will attract the market-place.

The fact that industry representatives visited here yesterday and will continue to visit, is an indication of the approach my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) takes to this process. She consults, she listens and she relates to the provinces. They come to inform. I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that the natural forces of the market-place are exactly what these people want as a guide, not government intervention.

• (1640)

Finally, with regard to the procedure of Petro-Canada purchasing at spot or medium prices, I would expect that, as an organism which must compete in the market-place, Petro-Canada would look for the best supply and price for its product. It will certainly take 60 days to go through the process from buying to selling. The first proposal of the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in this House in 1975 was for 45 days, which later changed to 60 days due to a later delay caused by freezing prices, and that was adopted by the Hon. Member's own Party. It is recognized that the material must be processed before it is sold at the pump, but the market-place will determine the final price.

Mr. Waddell: Canadians must wonder what their Governments have done for them. Alberta was like a guy who won a lottery a few years ago. It was getting all that money in its provincial Treasury and it did not really save or invest it properly. Now the whole province is in danger of massive unemployment and shut-downs. The Liberal Government introduced the National Energy Program which did not work, and then retreated from it. It was left with no energy policy at the end of its tenure. The Tory Government has brought in the Western Accord, which the Minister has the gall to tell us is of benefit to the consumer. I cannot see that the consumer or the producer is benefiting. Oil companies are gouging the consumer at one end and the small producer at the other.

Did the Government of Canada take into account that the price of oil was going to decline at the time of the Western Accord? No one complained about the Western Accord because everyone thought the price was going to go down. Did the Government foresee a de-escalation of the world price of oil? What is the Government's policy presently on the big oil industries' desire to get rid of the remaining petroleum and gas revenue tax? Is the Government going to phase that out more rapidly, or has it taken a decision on that yet?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I think Alberta acted very responsibly in recognition of its great resource by building up the funds it did during the period of good times. From all evidence there will be only a very temporary cycle of uncertainty in the pricing of raw materials and the end product.

Oil, gas, and coal are all non-renewable resources. When I was an engineer in the business world, there was a concern that we would not be able to fulfil the industrial and popular requirements for energy from our own resources. There was considerable uncertainty in everyone's mind about the future availability of this natural resource. Because of the surplus in latter years, much of our memory of that has faded. However, when addressing today's issue, we must remember that oil, gas, and coal are non-renewable resources. If we do not increase the price there will be waste. The entire world, and Canadians in particular, have learned that this is a precious asset. We must use it well, and a firming up of the price is inevitable.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Member did not answer my question about whether the Government is going to make further changes in the PGRT. Would the Minister not also agree with me that we are seeing no exploration or new projects now and our reserves are not being replaced? In fact, we are now depleting reserves, and the industry cannot be restarted that easily. Has the Minister considered that problem? Will he give me an answer with regard to the PGRT?

Finally, does the Minister really believe that there is a free market in oil, considering what the OPEC countries are doing? That is a cartel. Does the Minister want the cartel to get its act together again? Is there or is there not a free market in oil?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken with regard to changes in the Western Accord or the PGRT. As I announced in my remarks, there is a program in place which will remain in place. With respect to investment in the industry, in my remarks I referred to very specific investments. One organization is doubling its investment because of its confidence in the market-place in the future.

Is there a free market in oil? As I recall, when the oil crisis developed in the early 1970s, OPEC was responsible for the delivery of approximately 60 per cent of the world's oil supply. To the best of my knowledge, that has now decreased to approximately 35 per cent. OPEC does not now have the impact on world prices which it once had. There are other oil resources being developed around the world such as in the North Sea and Nigeria. As a result, mid-eastern oil does not have the effect it once had. I must admit that it is questionable whether this creates a free market in oil.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, OPEC does not have the clout it would like to have, but the Saudi Arabians are just playing a waiting game. Before long their clout will be increased quite a bit. The Minister talked about the 40-day and 60-day period before the price of oil would go up. That started in 1973 with the first oil shock when the oil companies wanted to raise the price the next day. They did not talk about a flow-through period at that time. They were not going to wait two months. The Liberal Government of the day said that they must wait 45 days and then 60 days before they could pass that price increase along. That was to protect Canadians against the oil companies. Now that prices are coming down, they say there is this flow-through period. That only shows their own inconsistency.

Mr. Layton: It's the same thing.

Mr. MacLellan: They are waiting voluntarily before reducing the price, but they wanted to raise the price the next day. That 60-day period—

Mr. McDermid: How did you arrive at 60 days?

Mr. MacLellan: That 45-day period, which was increased to 60 days in 1975, has been followed by every subsequent Government.

Mr. McDermid: How did you arrive at that?

Mr. MacLellan: It's a 60-day period to protect consumers.

Mr. McDermid: No, no.

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, because the oil companies wanted to raise the price right away.

Mr. McDermid: Why not 90 days?

Mr. MacLellan: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that if the oil companies could raise prices the next day, they could certainly lower them the next day. We need not talk about this flow-through period. Why does the Minister not just call the President of Petro-Canada and tell him to treat producers fairly, to pay them a fair price for their oil, and to reduce the price at the pumps? My learned friend, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), quoted an article which said that gasoline prices at the pumps are 12 cents too high. Why does he not tell the President of Petro-Canada to give consumers a break instead of going through this charade of waiting an arbitrary period of time?

• (1650)

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, all of us in Canada believe there is a place in the market for a large Canadian oil company. However, it has to compete. If we start to establish prices, then obviously we have to supply subsidies right down the line. We have set a goal for Petro-Canada to be a competitor in the market-place. It has to buy and sell in competition with all the others in this field. It is not for this Government to start directing any Crown corporation on the price of its goods and services. That has to be determined by the market-place. We accept this as the rule and I know most Canadians will accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make submissions on the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). The motion reads as follows:

> That this House regrets that the government's energy policy has proven to be disastrous for both the industry and the consumer in its failure to give the consumer the benefit of falling world energy prices and in its confusion and lack of direction, creating uncertainty for the oil and gas industry in the face of the government's inability to cope with changing international conditions and its refusal to fulfill its commitments.

The motion condemns the Government because, in the view of the Opposition and of Canadians in general, this Government has authored the mess which exists in the petroleum industry today. As my colleague pointed out, not only are consumers being gouged by Petro-Canada and the Government, so are the 600 odd small producers.

I would like to outline very briefly the state of the petroleum industry in Canada at present. It is in trouble. As my colleague pointed out, this Government has no definitive policy to deal with the industry's problems. We all know that the price of crude oil has fallen somewhat dramatically over the last number of months. In fact, as you know, there has been a 52 per cent decline in that price since the end of 1985, and a 57 per cent decline since November 1. As a result, Canadian producers are reducing capital expenditures and laying off employees. We are all aware that in excess of 25,000 jobs are threatened by the confused state of the energy sector. This Conservative Government has to take some responsibility for its inaction and hands-off policy in this regard.

As you know, Syncrude recently cut $200 million from its planned expenditures for 1986. Roxy Petroleum is reducing staff and has cut its capital spending in half. Syncrude and Suncor have announced lay-offs at their projects in Fort McMurray, Alberta. Texaco will also cut its experimental heavy oil project at Fort McMurray and put 200 Canadians out of work. Husky Oil will lay off 300 employees by the end of March, 1986. The Calgary Herald of March 12 announced that Petro-Canada has laid off about 300 staff members. Other Canadian producers, including Sulpetro and Sceptre Resources, have also indicated they will soon be cutting their employee rosters. On March 14, Dome Petroleum Limited announced that it had asked its creditors to forgo principal and interest payments of as much as $1 billion on its total long-term debt of $6 billion. The facts speak for themselves. The industry is in trouble.

What, pray tell, is this Government doing in order to assist the industry? The Minister stands up and, with her usual pomposity, says that the industry will take care of itself. As a result of deregulation everything will be hunky-dory in the months and years to come. The Minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are conning Canadians when they say that it will take time, one has to take flow-through into consideration. We on this side refer to that as the flow-through excuse. As my colleague indicated, it is an excuse for the major oil companies to rip off consumers. That is the bottom line. The consumers, those who have to go to the gas stations once or twice a week, are being ripped off, no question about it. We in the Opposition, in particular our energy critic, have led the fight for consumers in Canada. Our energy critic has pointed out time and time again that Canadians are paying an unconscionable price for gasoline in view of the world price of oil. Yet the Government just throws up its hands and says it takes time for the cheaper oil to work its way through the system.

At first blush one could possibly conclude there might be some merit to that argument. There is a delay from the time contracts are entered into and the oil is delivered and refined and works its way to the pumps. At first blush that might make some sense. However, if that were the case, then why do our friends in the U.S. pay so much less for gasoline? Why does a motorist in Buffalo pay anywhere up to 15 cents a litre less than a motorist in Toronto? It does not make any sense.

Where is the fairness? Where is the equity? Where is the justice? Surely if the flow-through excuse has some merit, then the same thing would apply to our friends south of the border. Yet it does not. So we say it is an excuse used by the oil companies to continue ripping off the consumer. As was pointed out by my colleague, when the price of oil went up the multinationals put the price of gasoline up immediately. When the Government of the day argued that it takes time to work its way through the system, the oil companies said no, they have to put the price up right away. In effect, the consumer is getting hit at both ends. When the price of crude oil goes up, the multinationals want to put the price of gasoline up almost immediately. When it comes down they say it takes time to work its way through the system. Neither I nor the Liberal Party believe that this Government recognizes the gravity of the problem in the oil industry.

Let me speak once again about the jobs which are at risk because of the Government's inaction. We can understand why the Government does not want to take any action. As the Hon. Member from North Bay indicated, it is a so-called free enterprise Government. Its motto is to deregulate and get its hands off the business of the nation. It advocates letting business regulate itself.

I have to laugh, as do a great many other people, when our friends opposite talk about free enterprise. It seems to me that when it is convenient to speak of free enterprise then, indeed, Members opposite speak of it. Hon. Members might recall seeing a few years ago full-page advertisements in the major newspapers of Canada depicting a dove in a cage. The caption read: "Let's free enterprise". It was a national advertising campaign paid for by the major corporations of Canada. They felt that some enterprise was not free. Some of the contributors to that campaign, some of the very people who argued for free enterprise, were the same companies to come to the Government cap in hand when they were in desperate need of Government support. I wonder whether the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Northland Bank, Massey-Ferguson or other corporations which have come to the Government cap-in-hand believed that when times are good we should "free" enterprise. I wonder whether they contributed to that national advertising campaign.

The point I am making is that the oil industry, when it is convenient, says to the Government of Canada: "Leave us alone. We don't want you or need you". However, when times are tough the industry is prepared to go to the Government cap in hand looking for assistance.

There are those who argue that there should be a floor price for crude oil. The Conservative Government of Canada is an accessory to the great Canadian oil rip-off being perpetrated by the oil multinationals. It is within the jurisdiction of the Government to take action in order to reduce the price of gasoline. It is a simple matter. Each and every one of us in the House—each and every Canadian—is a shareholder in a major oil company. We own that company and it is ripping us off when we go to the pumps. Canadians are asking why we have a national oil company. Surely we do not have such a company for it to be a party to a rip-off, an accessory to the greatest oil gouge in Canadian history. That is a breach of trust and a breach of faith. There is certainly a conflict here. Mr. Hopper sits in his ivory tower, wherever it is—presumably in western Canada—earning his in excess of $400,000 per year. He is saying to the people of Canada that, even though it is our oil company, Petro-Canada is not prepared to take action to assist the consumers. As Hon. Members know, Petro-Canada owns a great many gasoline stations in Canada. In fact, in Ontario, the province where I reside, one in three gasoline stations is owned by Petro-Canada.

Given the position this company holds in the petroleum industry in Canada it is in position to direct a downward spiral with regard to the price of gasoline. It has refused to do so because of a lack of direction, I suppose from the Government, or perhaps because it is receiving the wrong type of direction from the Government. The Government has said to Petro-Canada: "Maximize profit. Run your business like any other. Do what you have to do in order to make a profit". Normally speaking, a company has a duty to its shareholders to maximize profits. That is the bottom line in the private sector. If private sector companies do not maximize profits then they should not be in business. In my view, the bottom line for Petro-Canada is not only to show a profit. We shareholders are asking for more. Of course we would like this Crown corporation to do well. However, we are not simply asking for a profit at the end of the road or at the end of the fiscal year. We want to know that Petro-Canada has been used as a vehicle to further public policy in keeping with the best interests of Canada and Canadians. That is not the role that Petro-Canada is playing.

In days gone by when I had to fill up my gas tank I would make en effort to fill up at Petro-Canada. I had a feeling of pride. I had a feeling that this was our national oil company. Somehow I felt good about filling up at Petro-Canada. I am losing that feeling.

Some Hon. Members: Good!

Mr. Nunziata: I am losing that feeling because of the insensitivity of Petro-Canada. I am certain that a great many Canadians no longer feel proud about the role it plays because of this Government's policies. We know what the Government has in mind for Petro-Canada. We know that some six or seven years ago the Conservative Government under its former Leader decided to govern as if it had a majority. Back then it tried to indicate to Canadians that it wanted to privatize Petro-Canada. We know what happened to that Government when it mismanaged the energy industry. It said to Canadians that, notwithstanding the nature of its mandate, it was going to bulldoze through a substantial increase in the price of gasoline. Here we are seven years later and the Government has still not learned its lesson. It is still bent on privatizing Petro-Canada. It still refuses to allow it to take the lead in reducing the price of gasoline.

In his speech the Minister indicated that there have been some price declines in the cost of gasoline. He indicated an amount of four cents. I would have appreciated an opportunity to ask the Minister what he believes to be a fair decrease in the price of gasoline. In this respect it must be kept in mind that the price of crude oil is below $15 a barrel.

I have had the pleasure of knowing the Minister's son for a number of years. He is an alderman on Toronto City Council. He is a very progressive and forward-looking individual. The next time I speak to Jack I will have to ask him where he went wrong with respect to his father and the policies which he supports. Yes, the Minister's son, Jack, is a member of City Council in Toronto and a member of the NDP caucus on City Council. He believes, as we believe on this side of the House, that the Government's policies and those espoused by his father who represents the Government of Canada are wrong and that the people of Canada are being ripped off.

I note that you are indicating my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I had much more to say with respect to how the Government is mismanaging the oil industry, but I look forward to questions from Members opposite. I know that many of them will want to ask me a question on this very important subject.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I listened very intently to the Hon. Member's remarks. Does the Hon. Member recall December, 1979, as well as I do? I remember filling up my gas tank in this city on the day after the Liberal Opposition at the time defeated a very forward looking Conservative Government. The price of gasoline was $1.06 per gallon.

When the Liberal Government left office in the summer of 1984, the price of gasoline was approximately 50 cents a litre or $2.50 a gallon.

There has been a 10 per cent drop, which is 4 cents per litre or about 20 cents per gallon, while the price of gasoline under the previous Liberal Government, of which his colleagues were a part, rose by over a dollar a gallon in most parts of Canada. Would he comment on that discrepancy and indicate why he is so negative about the fact that gasoline prices have dropped at least 10 per cent under the present administration?

Mr. Nunziata: Canadians know that they are being ripped off today because of the Government and its policies. The Minister chuckles, but he knows that in January alone, Canadians paid over $300 million too much for gasoline. He knows that.

Mr. McDermid: Based on what? Where did you get your figures?

Mr. Nunziata: They have woken up across the way. The Parliamentary Secretary asks me where I get my figures. I would be pleased to share the figures with him.

The Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada have put in considerable research to conclude that "Canadian consumers overpaid $302 million in January, 1986, for gasoline". If he wants to dispute the position taken by the Petroleum Marketers Association, I suggest he do so.

However, getting back to the Minister, he knows, and his constituents and his colleagues know, that the price of gasoline in Canada today should be at least 10 cents a litre less than it is at the pumps. He knows that because the price of crude oil is less than $15 a barrel and should result in a further decrease of at least 10 cents a litre for the Canadian consumers.

Mr. Siddon: Does the Hon. Member not realize that what Canadians are paying for today is the tremendous burden of deficit which resulted from the National Energy Program and retrograde policy of the Government of which his colleagues were members?

He has not yet answered my question. The price of gasoline in Canada in December, 1979, was approximately 25 cents a litre. When the Liberal Government left office, the price of gasoline virtually doubled to about 50 cents a litre. It has dropped by an average of 4 cents a litre or 20 cents a gallon. Why does he not acknowledge that it was under the Liberals that this great burden of deficit and gasoline taxes were levied on all Canadians?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Minister claims to be a reasonably intelligent person. It seems to me that he is trying to con the House and the people of Canada.

He knows that the factors are different now. We were not dealing with a price of crude oil at $15 or $12 a barrel.

Mr. Siddon: That is not the reason.

Mr. Nunziata: May I take this opportunity to comment on how the Government finds it very convenient to look to the Liberal record and blame it on the Liberals when everything goes wrong? If it rains or snows, blame it on the Liberals. If the sun shines, interest rates go down or unemployment goes down, it is because of Brian and the good policies of the Conservative Government.

Canadians are not so dumb as to believe that. If anything, the Government underestimates the intelligence of the average Canadian. Is it any wonder that the Conservative Government has frittered away that massive mandate it received on September 4? Is it any wonder that the Conservative Government is now trailing in popular support?

Mr. Siddon: You still did not answer my question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend, the Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) for bringing this motion forward. It gives us an opportunity to clear up some of the inaccuracies that have been cast about by the Opposition this afternoon and to truly participate in what I consider to be a very legitimate debate in the House.

Of course, Canada is energy. Energy is the vast resources that this country has at its disposal. Energy is the millions of Canadians working to put the country back on a sound economic footing after the erosion of our economy by the previous Government.

I want to dwell on some of the comments made this afternoon by my friend, the energy critic for the Liberal Party. I believe that they were somewhat unfair and should be corrected for the record.

He said that the flow-through process was a con. He is nodding in agreement. I asked him earlier if the flow-through process was a con when oil prices were rising and the Liberal Government enforced a 60-day freeze before higher prices were permitted at the pumps. I do not understand why it was not a con then but it is today.

Let me quote from Hansard of June 23, 1975, at page 7031 when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Finance at that time, said:

> Against this background I would like to announce on behalf of the government and my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that on July 1 this year the price of crude oil and its equivalents will rise by $1.50 per barrel to $8 per barrel. We are again asking industry to refrain from reflecting this increase in their product prices until 45 days have passed. By that time—

I want the Hon. Member to listen to this carefully:

> —inventories held at the former crude oil price will, on average, have been used up.

Later he increased that to a 60-day period because he was convinced, after examination, that it took 60 days for it to flow through the system.

The Hon. Member stands up in the House with his self-righteous attitude to say that it was only on behalf of consumers that they arrived at that figure. That is not accurate. For him to stand up today and say that the flow-through is a con is not really to tell the truth. I wanted to correct that and I think the Hon. Member will agree with me that it is not really a con but in fact reflects what is really happening.

A drop of 2 cents a litre is equivalent to approximately $4 a barrel, in round figures, or a decrease of about 0.5 cents a litre per dollar. So what we see now are two drops in the price of gasoline, it has dropped 4.3 cents a litre so far, which reflects a drop of a little over $8 a barrel. If we are talking about the flow-through period, which we are, the average posted price at the end of December was $27.42 U.S. At the end of January, it was $24.32 U.S., which is a drop of $3 a barrel on average. The big crunch came in February, as we all know. The average February posted price was $16.78 U.S. If we go through March and into April, we can see we have every right to expect further decreases in gasoline prices at the pumps beginning early in April, at least, to my estimation. The average posted price now for the first two weeks of March is $12.44 U.S., which will be reflected further on down the road as the flow-through goes through.

● (1720)

The Hon. Member must be fair with the Canadian public. I understand what the Opposition is doing. It is making a big political ploy out of this issue and creating confusion in the minds of the public. When the public sees in the media that the price of a barrel of oil has dropped, they feel it should, therefore, drop at the pump tomorrow. I understand that. But I believe the Hon. Member, who has been the energy critic for the Opposition for a while, understands, and behind that tough-talking facade he presents to the House of Commons, he knows full well how the system operates. He has spent enough time with Husky-Bow Valley lately to know its corporate plans intimately by this time. He knows the system and how it works, that the domestic crude moving through the pipeline takes a three to four-week period and that the inventory of crude at the refinery is kept there for a week. The refining of crude, the blending of gasoline, storage and distribution take another six weeks before it gets to the retailer. That works out to about 60 days.

I believe the Canadian public should understand this. All I am saying to the Hon. Member is that I understand why he is making a political ploy out of this issue. It is great stuff to talk about the great rip-offs and everything else.

We talked not too long ago about the margins, the return on investment which the downstream operations were receiving, and the Hon. Member himself admitted that it was not spectacular over the last three or four years. So I would question this "great rip-off" that so many people talk about.

I just returned from the United States. Normally when I go on holidays or on a trip, the first thing I look at is the price of gas at the pumps, no matter where I am in the world. In the United States, Americans complained to me that the price of gas was not coming down fast enough for them either. The Hon. Member said today that as soon as prices dropped, the prices in the United States dropped at the pump. That is just not so. It has not shown up in any of the information, nor has it been indicated at the pumps that way. Companies in the United States are also using up inventories. They have the flow-through process to contend with, although I will say to the Hon. Member, to those watching the televised debate and to those Hon. Members in the House, that the American flow-through is a much quicker process than ours. There is no question about that. It is because of volumes and economy of scale. It is a shorter period, but there is still a flow-through period. We talk about a variation in prices. As of the very latest statistics we have, there is a differential of 13 cents a litre, after taking the American dollar and U.S. gallon into consideration, most of which we can chalk up to taxes—not all, but most of it.

A friend of mine who took the trip with me to the United States hurt his finger. He dislocated his knuckle. He had to go to a clinic to get it fixed. He was there ten minutes. He had it straightened out, splinted, and then had to pull out his plastic to pay the $150 bill. Had he bought the supplementary health plan for travellers outside of this country, he would have been covered. Had he been an American and had he not had a private plan, he would not have been covered. But a Canadian in Canada would have been covered. We have services here in Canada which have to be paid for. That is part of spreading the tax burden as widely as we can. Part of that tax burden is on gasoline. Yes, our prices are higher.

I mentioned the economy of scale. There are so many more people in the United States, its refineries are larger because of the economy of scale, and so on, and it can produce the product at a much more competitive rate. That is the difference. I believe we should be honest with the Canadian people. They must understand that we are concerned about what is going on in the energy field today, naturally, and we are watching the situation very carefully.

Some comments were made that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) was not concerned or involved. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that she has met with government officials and the Energy Ministers in the producing provinces, especially in Alberta where the problem looms the largest. She has met with the producers, not only the Canadian Petroleum Association but the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, made up of Canadian producers, and I can tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that these people are keeping her informed on a daily basis as to what is going on in the oil patch and the problems they are experiencing now or will experience over a prolonged period of time. At the same time, however, they are not asking for Government intervention. They do not want the Government to step in and set a floor price, as the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys suggested. Our friends from the New Democratic Party, the socialists, as usual, are at it again; interfere, intervene, dictate, tell them what to do.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said so many things today. He said we should bring in a floor price, negotiate a floor price. First, no one wants to negotiate a floor price. The producing provinces do not want to negotiate a floor price right now. The producers do not want to have one thrust on them. So who do we negotiate with? Second, the Hon. Member says we cannot negotiate right now, anyway, because the situation is too volatile. He says to wait until things settle down. That was his next argument. Then, towards the end of his speech, he said to my colleague from Calgary that we had better have a floor price right now. He was all over the map, which is typical of the New Democratic Party. It does not know where it stands on this thing.

If we set artifically high oil prices—and that is what we are doing if we establish a floor, and the world prices go before that, all of a sudden our manufacturers become uncompetitive, energy intensive industries are penalized, we have lost jobs across Canada and our exports do not look quite as attractive to the United States, for example, where over 600,000 barrels of oil go every day, especially our heavy oil. Now is not the time to panic. It is not the time for any major reactions on what is going on in the industry.

Yesterday, on the strength of the OPEC meetings, the spot price went up $1.25, and today, I understand, it is up $1.45 again. That is on the strength of what is going on there. Tomorrow, those talks could collapse and that approximate $2.50 could disappear. For the Government to step in now and dictate a floor price would be rather ludicrous.

I heard the Hon. Member say that we are paying an outrageous price for energy in this country. As a matter of fact, we have very highly competitive energy prices. The Hon. Member ought to travel to Europe and see what Britain, France, Germany and Norway are paying for gas at the pumps. All of a sudden, Canada would look pretty good.

I was pleased to learn today that tourism from the United States and Canada was up by 18 per cent in January. I think that bodes well for the tourism industry in 1986. I think there will be mammoth increases in tourism this year, not only because of Expo 86, that great show that will be held in Vancouver.

The theme of Expo 86 is transportation, and my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), will be playing a key role in welcoming people from around the world to beautiful downtown Vancouver this summer. Vancouver Centre, as a matter of fact, is the riding of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I am sure she will also be playing hostess to many people from around the world. I am sure she would want me to encourage the these people to come.

The price of gasoline is not discouraging tourism in Canada. If that were the case, we would see the tourism records falling rather than increasing. I think a lot of that credit has to go to the Minister of Tourism (Mr. Murta) for the excellent marketing job he has been doing in the United States. Let me say to those Americans who may be beamed in, we welcome you here with open arms.

Just for a moment, I would like to review what has happened in the 19 months since the overwhelming victory of this Government. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources set in place what is today a world-respected energy policy. It is a policy that puts Canada in a better position than any other country in the world.

I spent a considerable amount of time speaking to people from the energy sector. I was not speaking to representatives of the multinationals but to Canadian geologists, those fellows who have the expertise and are respected and work around the world. I spoke to the drillers, those fellows who do the tough and dirty work, and I spoke to the suppliers. Do you know what they told me? They told me that the new policy is magnificent and allows them the freedom to explore and to work. They are poised to go ahead.

Last year was a record year for the energy sector. It was a record year because of the new energy policy and because of the confidence they have in the Government and its policies. We saw record drilling and record finds last year. The energy industry took off. Certainly there are some concerns now because of falling prices, but if we were under an administrated price system at this time, there would be disaster in the industry because of all those taxes, the taxes that were removed once we got rid of the National Energy Program. Had those taxes still been in place, we would have seen a major disaster within the energy sector.

We signed the Atlantic Accord. The people from Newfoundland wanted to be equal partners in Confederation and they feel that they are now. In fact, Mobil Oil Canada plans to invest $4.2 billion in the Hibernia oil field off the coast of Newfoundland. That will create more than 14,000 person-years of employment in Canada of which more than 9,500 will be in Newfoundland and Labrador. The Atlantic Accord is going in the right direction and it has been applauded widely by all concerned.

Then we had the Western Accord. That set in place the freedom of an industry to do the job it is supposed to be doing and not to be fettered by all these weird taxes, regulations and PIP grants. Canada's oil industry is freed of all those excessive regulations and unfair taxes. As a matter of fact, the reaction in Calgary, as I know my friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon), will agree, was to celebrate. They were dancing in the streets. The oil and gas industry rejoiced because finally the market-place was back in vogue. That was most important. The Western Accord was a victory for all Canadians, though, not just for Calgarians and Edmontonians. It was a victory for the manufacturing sector in Ontario and Quebec.

I can say right now that Canadians are benefiting from the lower oil prices, and they will benefit further, there is no question about it. The recent study done by the Conference Board showed that an oil price drop to $18 U.S. would add about .2 per cent to the level of the real GNP in 1986 and .9 per cent in 1987. I suppose there are winners and losers in the province. I think that we will find in the short run that we will have some problems with falling prices, but in the long run they will recover and they will recover in the not too distant future. I do not think prices will skyrocket out of sight. Under the National Energy Program, prices today would have been $39 per barrel.

The Government's energy policy has set the industry free to do what it does best, respond to the challenges and opportunities provided by the market-place in the best interests of all Canadians. Consumers are benefiting from lower world energy prices. The petroleum industry and provincial Governments are content with the progressive energy policies now in place in Canada. The industry is prepared to weather the current market conditions as long as it is left alone to reap the benefits when the market trends reverse.

The Government has fulfilled the commitments it made to Canadian consumers and the petroleum industry. To say that the policy is in a shambles is not right because the consumers were always at the front of our policies when we discussed them. Canada now has a flexible and fair energy policy, one of the most attractive and internationally competitive in the world. The only confusion about that fact rests with the Opposition.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I suppose we will have to put the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary down as being doubtful in his support for this motion. With all due respect, I do not think that January is a good month in which to measure tourism. I do not think that there are a great many people who travel to Canada by car during the month of January. I believe the summer will tell the story, and if the summer season indicates that there is an increase in tourism, then certainly the Hon. Member will have a point.

I do not see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) as being concerned. I would have hoped that she would be here today to discuss this very important question. The motion before us is a comprehensive one and it really needs to be debated. I think her presence here was warranted.

The Parliamentary Secretary says that there is a shorter flow-through period in the United States and that that is the reason the price was able to decline more quickly. I do not agree. Eighty per cent of Canada's oil is supplied within Canada. We use about 1.4 million barrels per day and about 1.1 million barrels per day are produced here in Canada. There is quite a short flow-through period, certainly not justifying the two months that the Government says is necessary.

The Parliamentary Secretary referred to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and said that when he was Minister of Finance, he imposed a 45-day period before an increase in the price of gasoline. We must look at the fact that the industry wanted to increase the price the next day when world crude oil prices rose. At that time the Government said that there would be a transition period, that prices would not rise for a certain period of time in case it was an interim increase. It did not want consumers affected that way. I think it was a fair decision. Now, when prices go down, the industry wants to delay. We are still not sure what benefit the industry will give to the consumer or whether the consumer will receive the full benefit of the decline in world oil prices.

It is not a question of flow-through. As I said earlier, in the United States prices went down because retail gasoline is a separate commodity from crude oil, just as crude oil is a separate commodity from pork bellies. It does not relate to a flow-through period; it relates to the fact that there is a competitive situation and true deregulation in the United States. There is no deregulation in Canada when there are a few refineries, and particularly a Crown corporation, holding up the Canadian public and sticking a knife in the back of producers in terms of what it is offering. We are getting the worst of both worlds.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for jogging my memory on a couple of matters which I meant to mention in my remarks but did not. He can correct me if I am wrong, but I believe he said that there were four refineries in Canada.

Mr. MacLellan: No, I never said that.

Mr. McDermid: Well, somebody said it.

Mr. MacLellan: Four major ones.

Mr. McDermid: I can name about 10—Turbo, Chevron, Co-op, Petrosar, Ultramar, Irving, Shell, Texaco, Petro-Canada, Esso and Suncor; they all have refineries in Canada. As I understand it, there can be fair competition, and I think there is a fair number of them.

I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member when he talked about Petro-Canada earlier today. I am not exactly sure now where the Liberals stand; it is very confusing. They want Petro-Canada to lead the price down but, when the price rises, they do not want it to lead the price up. They want us to call the President of the company and tell him what to do and how to run his company. If that is the case, why does it not just become a Department or part of the Ministry of Energy and let the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources run Petro-Canada? We are not sure if they think it is too big now, if that was not intended in the first place, if we should sell it to the public or hang on to it. They are all over the map.

We must remember what was done by the Liberals, in conjunction with their NDP friends, in the minority Government of 1972-74. As one of the conditions of the Liberals maintaining their power in that period of time, they sold out their soul to their NDP friends to establish Petro-Canada, a window on the oil industry for exploration, to find out what was going on. What happened next? Then we find that it was into downstream activities by obtaining BP, Petrofina and so on, for which it paid exorbitant rates, according to any analyst.

Mr. Deans: It was kind of like the Sun Oil purchase.

Mr. McDermid: I disagreed with that one too. My hon. friend across the way has referred to the Ontario Government purchase of Sun Oil. I was not pleased with that decision. I still have not had it explained to me properly, either. In any event, Petro-Canada is now a major oil company with upstream and downstream operations. We are not sure where the Liberals stand. We know what the NDP wants.

Mr. Deans: Lower prices.

Mr. McDermid: The NDP wants to keep Petro-Canada and it wants to buy Imperial Oil. That is the first thing on its shopping list if and when it gets into power, heaven forbid!

Mr. Deans: That is not the first thing. What are you talking about?

Mr. McDermid: The other day the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said that Canada was the toughest country in the world to govern and that if it were easy, we would turn it over to the NDP to run. He was absolutely right. We know exactly where NDP Members stand, but we are not sure where the Liberals stand.

At the present time the Government is examining ways to maintain a Canadian presence and ownership in the oil industry and at the same time rid ourselves, "ourselves" being the Government, of what has grown into an oil company. It is just another oil company. I think it was the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) who said that he did not like going in there to fill up any more, so we know how he feels about Petro-Canada.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member care to explain from where he gets his information? He makes compelling arguments based on what now would appear to be information drawn out of a hat. From where did he get the information that the first thing the NDP would do, when it formed the Government, is to take over Imperial Oil?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member checks with his energy critic—

Mr. Deans: I am asking from where the Hon. Member got the information.

Mr. McDermid: I was about to say that if the Hon. Member checked with his energy critic, he would find out from where I got the information. He felt that we should be taking over more foreign companies in the energy industry and, in his words, "our first target would probably be Imperial Oil".

Mr. Deans: That is a different thing altogether.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to tell the Parliamentary Secretary exactly what is the policy of the Liberal Party on Petro-Canada. I think it is well known that we do not object to Petro-Canada being a vehicle of public policy. We feel that the Government should be able to direct Petro-Canada in its actions and act on behalf of consumers and producers. We are totally against the sale of any of the shares of Petro-Canada. When we said we wanted Petro-Canada to be a window on the market-place, we did not mean a whole hothouse. The purchase of Petrofina was to give its stations a presence in eastern Canada. The purchase of Gulf Canada is redundant because the window on the market-place was there. As I said, we now have a whole hothouse on the market-place. There is no competition because of the size of Petro-Canada and because of the Government's policy of gouging the producer and the consumer to try to boost the profit picture of Petro-Canada to make the best possible presentation in the market-place of an issue of shares to the private sector. It is ridiculous.

Canadians do not like Petro-Canada because of what the Government has done to it. Petro-Canada as a Crown corporation is perfectly acceptable and desirable to the Canadian public. However, Canadians do not want their own Crown corporation turned against them and gouging them, as the Government is doing in a cowardly fashion. Telling Petro-Canada to gouge consumers and producers, and then running, hiding and letting on that it had nothing to do with it, is not only bad economic policy or treachery to Canadians, but is downright cowardice.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that when the Liberals were in power and the prices of Petro-Canada were the same or higher than those of most other stations, it was not considered to be gouging the population then. Now, because the Conservatrices are in power and its prices are the same as its competitors' in the market-place, it is gouging the public. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. I, for one, do not believe that the Canadian public is that stupid.

Mr. Mazankowski: He agrees with that.

Mr. McDermid: Sure he does; he is nodding his head and smiling.

Mr. MacLellan: I am not agreeing with that.

Mr. McDermid: The Canadian public does not buy that. The Canadian public has come to realize that Petro-Canada has been, always was and will be just another oil company. The Liberal Government had a window on the oil industry. It knew what was going on. It taxed that industry. It knew its inner workings, how it operated and everything else. I, for one, do not understand why they ever brough in Petro-Canada in the first place back in 1972-74. I do not think it has served a useful purpose. I think the Canadian people are beginning to realize that.

• (1750)

I am for Canadianization. I am all for Canadian ownership and I am all for Canadian companies, but I like them to be owned by the Canadian people, in the private sector and not by the Government. I have done a tremendous amount of travelling in the last year in some countries where the Government owns everything. It is a disaster. I do not think that the Government should be in the oil industry peddling gas up and down the streets.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will have to be brief given that there are only nine minutes left. I say to my colleague to whom I indicated that I would leave a few moments for him, that it may be a few moments because I had not realized at the time that I would have only nine minutes. In any event, let me try to be as brief as I can.

I have for years felt that there was a singular lack of competition within the oil industry at the retail level. I have raised this matter not only here in the House of Commons but I can recall asking for an inquiry some years ago when I served in the Ontario Legislature. It was clear to me that it could not simply be by accident that every single gas station in any one area would charge exactly the same price for all of its products.

It was clear to me that if there was any competition of any kind that competition was solely the result of the effort of the gas station operator and his or her ability to provide a higher level of service and not a cheaper product.

I felt, I think probably now over 25 years, that some kind of action should be taken to bring about a competitive situation within the retail end of the petroleum industry here in Canada.

I can remember, at the time when the now Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources (Miss Carney) introduced the Western Accord, she said:

> Since the national energy policy was imposed . . . Canadians have suffered from a bureaucratic nightmare, a nightmare which has frightened away foreign investment, boosted prices at the pumps, and discouraged those who wanted to go out and find new sources of oil and gas. Those days are over, too . . . We are going to create the environment for market forces to operate with buyers and sellers involved. If prices go down, the product prices should go down.

This was the Minister's line at the time on March 28, 1985, when she brought to the House of Commons with great fanfare the Western Accord that she had been able to sign.

I must say that anyone looking at the events of the last few months within the oil industry would have to come to the conclusion that notwithstanding the intent of the Minister—and I do not for one moment doubt that she was serious and sincere in what she said—the result has been quite different.

We have not seen the kinds of reductions at the pump that ought to have been reflected as a result of the dramatic drop in world oil prices. We have, in fact, seen the continuation of managed prices, prices dictated by the major oil companies. We have seen the attempts being made on a continuous basis to strangle any of the independents who dared to step out of line. We have had examples of people and families who were in the retail oil business and who wanted to sell their product in a competitive market-place at a price that would have been somewhat below that charged by the major outlets, only to discover that they were either refused delivery of the product by those from whom they must purchase or they were told directly where there was any kind of contractual arrangement that they could not under any circumstances set a price that would, in their judgment, undercut or undermine the major outlets which were located in the immediate or same area as the independent operation.

Quite frankly, I say to the Minister of Energy, in her absence but through the Parliamentary Secretary, that even with the best intentions in the world, the structure that we have in Canada for the distribution of petroleum products to the consumer is managed in such a way as to make it virtually impossible for the competitive market-place, about which the Minister and her colleague speak so highly, to operate effectively, if at all. It is toward that end that we must address ourselves.

The Minister made much on the twelfth of this month of an announcement by Imperial Oil and Petro-Canada that they were going to reduce the price of gasoline by 2 cents per litre. The problem with it is that any reasonable thinking individual would have to agree that a reduction of 2 cents a litre, given the dramatic drop in the price of oil is miniscule. The drop from almost $30 a barrel to $12 a barrel should out of necessity result in something considerably more than a 2 cents a litre benefit to the consumer.

It not only is not enough, Mr. Speaker, there were areas in the country that did not even get the benefit of the 2 cents a litre drop.

Mr. McDermid: Where?

Mr. Deans: In Toronto. Yes, where there had been one of those fictitious price wars going on, one of those drops in the price that are the result of the back-up of petroleum in the system and the necessity to move it more quickly through the system.

Mr. Siddon: That is not fictitious.

Mr. Deans: It was not a price war in the sense that you and I understand it.

Mr. Siddon: A back up.

Mr. Deans: It was because there was a back up in the system and all of the majors decided to move it through the system more quickly that they had to reduce the price. That is all. It was nothing to do with the price war. It was a managed price again.

If it was necessary to do that, then clearly it was done for one set of reasons, entirely separate and apart from the dramatic drop in the world price of oil, and everyone in Canada should benefit from the actual reduction of cost to the oil companies themselves and should benefit from the reduction of world price.

I did promise my colleague a few moments. I am sorry it is only two minutes, but I yield the floor to my colleague in the Conservative Party.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I was saddened and disappointed to learn that the Hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Deans) has decided not to run again for election. I find him a real gentleman, a parliamentarian and one of the few who can logically develop an argument and articulate it. We have seen a good example of it. He talked about competition, and certainly we need more competition in the market-place.

One thing we, as the Government, have done is to remove any barriers for the transportation of petroleum and petroleum products across borders. This allows the independent dealers to import those gasoline products and not be locked in to the major refiners.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) talked about the need to change the PGRT tax credit. He has analysed that very well. It is something that has to be done, but I must emphasize that it is only 57 days since the price collapsed. It is premature to act at this time. One only has to look at the spot market for the last three days. Prices have been going up. To act now is too soon.

PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF SELECTION COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the twenty-fifth report of the Striking Committee.

PETITIONS

USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATION OF UIC BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and privilege of presenting to the House petitions signed by many residents of Montreal, Quebec City and Halifax, all protesting the recent change in unemployment insurance whereby pension income is now being considered as earned income in the calculation of unemployment insurance benefits. They call upon Parliament to withdraw that particular iniquitous provision.

[Translation]

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table in the House a petition I received from my constituents in Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, with a total of 1,762 signatures. Petitioners ask the Government not to consider pension benefits or severance pay received upon retirement as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling in the House a petition asking the Government to reconsider its decision to terminate Katimavik, and the petition is signed by people from Quebec City. And I have another petition from the province of Quebec.

[English]

I have a third petition from the Cornwall area and from my constituency. It asks the Government to reconsider its decision to abolish the Katimavik program and gives its support to Senator Hébert and his effort to try to reinstate Katimavik.

CANCELLATION OF UIC BENEFITS TO ARMED FORCES—CONTINUED PREMIUMS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility to place before the House a petition in which the petitioners protest the removal of unemployment insurance from members of the Armed Forces who are retiring. It also mentions a serious concern about the Government forcing retired members of the Armed Forces to pay unemployment insurance premiums when they are never able to collect them. Further, it points out that when members of the Armed Forces retire, they are forced to leave the Armed Forces; it is not a voluntary withdrawal.

FAMILY REUNIFICATION PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, a number of citizens in Metropolitan Toronto have signed a petition on the question of family reunification and on the necessity to retain the principle of the basic value of family reunification and have it reflected in Canadian laws. The petition is signed by a number of people in west Toronto, in my riding and in various other parts of Metropolitan Toronto, all asserting that basic principle.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in addition, I should like to present a petition which is signed by a number of people in Ottawa. They urge the Government to reinstate the Katimavik program for young people and would like to see it made available for future generations of Canadians.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. The first one concerns gas prices and it is signed by a few hundred people in my constituency. They call upon the Government to reduce gas prices by one cent for every $1 drop in world oil prices.

Order Paper Questions

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second petition concerns family allowances. These petitioners from my riding call upon the Government to reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowances.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by 1,192 Canadians who are resident in my constituency and in surrounding communities. They wish the federal and provincial Governments would have a meeting to come to an agreement to reduce the federal tax on gasoline to a fixed amount and to determine methods by which the provinces could reduce their taxes on gasoline.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 82—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—EFFECT OF CHANGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

That this House recognizes the unnecessary hardship inflicted on older Canadian workers by the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which cause pension benefits to be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, and since votes on opposition motions are no longer considered a question of confidence in the Government, therefore urges the Government to repeal those changes immediately.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have considered this to be an extremely important motion and I have waited until the appropriate moment to enter such a motion, waited because this House changed the rules. We are going to have an opportunity to vote under a new rule which says that these kinds of votes are not considered confidence in the Government. Members on all sides of the House, and I appeal particularly to the Government side, are perfectly free to vote their conscience on this question without any fear of bringing down the Government. The vote will not result in an election. I appeal to Government Members to listen to the debate and to be persuaded by the pointed arguments that we are going to present here today.

More important, Mr. Speaker, I know that within the Government caucus there has been a considerable amount of unrest about this whole question of the changes regarding pension income and unemployment insurance. I know as well from reading the press that Members on all sides of the House are being petitioned by their constituents to remove this inequitable change to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

When did this change come into effect? When was it announced? I think it is important to go back and trace its history. This change was announced on November 8, 1984 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), along with another change regarding severance pay and holiday pay, and it was done without any consultation. There was no consulting with Opposition Members; there was no consulting the people of Canada and there was no consulting the trade union movement. It was a unilateral decision taken by the Minister of Finance and it was supposed to come into effect on December 31, 1984.

Because of a considerable amount of pressure, not only from Members on this side of the House but from within the Conservative caucus, and a considerable amount of representation from Canadians, from the Armed Forces, for example, the Government announced that the pension change would take effect on January 1, 1986.

The Government said in its November 8 statement that it hoped to save about $30 million with this change. That was the purpose for the change, that the Government would save $30 million in the Unemployment Insurance Program. There was no consultation, Mr. Speaker.

In the spring of 1985 the Government decided it ought to take a look at the unemployment insurance program. The Forget Commission was set up. Mr. Claude Forget was made the chairman of a commission to study the unemployment insurance program. The Commission was supposed to report in the spring of 1986, but it will not do that until the fall of 1986 because of the considerable amount of response it has received.

The Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council tabled its annual report in August, 1985. There amidst its recommendations is this one:

> That the Government not proceed with the announced changes in the Unemployment Insurance Regulations scheduled to take place January 1, 1986, regarding the identification of pension as income for the period immediately following lay-off, until the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance has reviewed the issue and made recommendations.

The Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council has advised the Government it ought not to go ahead with the change until the Forget Commission has reported.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I personally have entered in this House petitions from across the country containing over 19,000 signatures. Other Members of this House have also entered petitions calling upon the Government not to proceed with this provision. One of the members of the Forget Commission itself, Mr. Roy Bennett, a former executive with Ford Motor Company, has spoken out. On February 14, 1986 The Winnipeg Free Press reported:

> "In hindsight, I think it would have been better had the Government not made those changes", Roy Bennett a former president of Ford Motors said in an interview.
> "While we understand the motivation behind them, the're not well founded. To the extent the changes were made, they should have been different from the ones that were implemented."

From the Forget Commission itself in February we have members of the Commission saying that the changes ought not to have been made, and if they were made they ought not to have been made in the form that they were.

From the government benches we have the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) who raised a question in the House asking the Government to withdraw the changes until the Forget Commission had reported. I quote from the article:

> Outside the Commons, Nowlan told reporters that most Conservative MPs had complained about the new rules and said he was disappointed by MacDonald's answer.
> "I just can't understand her opinion," Nowlan said. "Flora's either blinded because she's so busy with work or she has been completely captivated by her officials on this issue. It's not the Flora MacDonald who used to show compassion and concern for the underdog."

Hear, hear, Mr. Speaker. The Member was absolutely correct about that. We have letters from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen). The Defence Minister wrote to the Minister of Employment and Immigration on June 26, 1985. In the letter he said:

> After considering the options available, I have now concluded that the only reasonable and fair approach is to seek an exemption for the Canadian Forces from those provisions beginning 1 January, 1986 that will require pension income to be treated as earnings for purposes of determining Unemployment Insurance Benefits.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote this to the Minister of Employment:

> As you are aware, because of the unique requirements of military service, members of the Canadian Forces are required to retire at a much earlier age than people in other walks of life. Generally, military personnel qualify for an annuity after reaching twenty years of service. They may retire voluntarily at this point, or continue serving until compulsory retirement, which may occur as early as age forty or as late as age fifty-five.

Still young individuals, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to that, we have had hundreds of letters from across the country written to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) with copies sent to myself and other Members of this House in which people call upon the Minister to withdraw the particular provision.

I have one from a gentleman in Winnipeg, Mr. Elmar A. Duell. He wrote:

> I have attentively listened to the Budget, in the vain hope to hear the announcement which would rescind your barbaric changes, as implemented on January 5 with respect to the "pensions" being accounted as earned income for UIC purposes.

The P.C. Women's Association in Oromocto-Burton-Geary passed a resolution calling upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to withdraw the inequitable provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act. They gave the resolution to their Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) who was supposed to have delivered it to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. After all of the clear indication from the opposition and government sides of the House, from people across the country, including Conservative associations, and from Ministers of the Crown, the Government's response has been a consistent "no", that the changes would proceed. Indeed, the changes have been implemented.

The Minister's rationale is that notice was given over a year ago. What difference does it make whether notice was given over a year ago? The effects are still there and people are living with their effects. We know that the regulation was not drawn up until December of 1985. On December 13, 1985, the Minister wrote to me in response to suggestions I had made about the regulations. She said:

> At this stage, I can only inform you that no final decisions have been made by the Government concerning the specific applications of the regulations. However, I wish to thank you for your suggestion on this matter.

The date of that letter is December 13, 1985, and the change came into effect on January 5, 1986. At that point the regulation had not been drawn up and the Minister could easily have gotten off the galloping horse by simply withdrawing the regulation.

Canadians, including members of the New Democratic Party, are opposed to the change because it is unfair in its application. Not all pensions are treated in the same way. Only pensions earned as a result of work are affected. Pensions from RRSPs or annuities are not counted. Pensions from the American, British, or French army are not counted. Only pensions from the Canadian Armed Forces are counted, so the rule is unfair in its application.

Another point of unfairness is that people who are disentitled from receiving UI benefits still have to pay the premiums. If a person has taken early retirement and then gets another job, he will have to pay premiums but will never be able to collect unemployment insurance. In what sort of insurance program does one pay premiums but has no hope of collecting at all? A person who has taken an early retirement, is receiving a pension, takes another job, and then becomes sick, cannot get any sick benefits at all through the unemployment insurance program. That is highly unfair.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there are all sorts of opportunities to run around the ends of the change. For example, if you work for a large enough organization which is prepared to play ball with you, you can postpone receiving your pension for a year while you collect unemployment insurance benefits for 49 weeks. Of course, in the following year you can get an increase in your pension to make up for the year you postponed it. That does not seem fair to me at all. What we are really doing is means testing the unemployment insurance program because it is the pension which you receive which determines whether or not you get unemployment insurance.

Another reason we opposed this change is that it is contradictory. In the Sudbury Basin the price of minerals has not been very good. The major employees in a single-industry community, Inco and Falconbridge, told the workers that they wanted to protect the jobs of younger workers by offering an early retirement prorgram. The employees were told that if they took the early retirement program they would be eligible for unemployment insurance providing they were looking for, and available to work. By taking early retirement they would protect the jobs of younger workers.

Many older workers felt that was their opportunity to do something else which they had always wanted to do, so they took early retirement in the hopes of protecting the jobs of younger workers. We were pretty happy in our community that approximately 1,200 older workers took early retirement, because it protected the jobs of younger workers who were starting out in life and had all the high expenses of maintaining a young family. After these workers accepted early retirement there was an arbitrary and unilateral move to make them ineligible for unemployment insurance. Why does the Government on the one hand encourage older workers to consider early retirement to protect the jobs of younger workers, while on the other hand pulling the rug out from under them? That is extremely contradictory.

We also oppose this, Mr. Speaker, because we believe it to be illegal. The Supreme Court of Canada decided the Dallialian case with respect to a person who had been collecting unemployment insurance at age 64 and then turned 65. The Act said that when one reaches the age of 65 one does not pay premiums, but cannot collect benefits. The person had started the claim before turning 65, and the moment he turned 65 the Unemployment Insurance Commission cut him off. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled that a law cannot be made which retroactively takes benefits away from individuals.

Yet, in this particular case, all persons who were getting a pension and collecting unemployment insurance were cut off on January 5, 1986. I would extend the argument to say that anyone who was contributing to the unemployment insurance program at the time of the January 5 change ought to qualify for full benefits under the program. We argue against this because we believe it to be illegal.

We believe that the Government should immediately withdraw this provision. We believe that the purpose of the Forget Commission was to study the unemployment insurance program in totality and to make recommendations to Parliament with respect to how the program should apply. Changes are being made to the Act. The Minister says that this has been referred to the Forget Commission. In the meantime, thousands and thousands of claimants in the country are being denied unemployment insurance.

The Minister says that the Government can take a position when the Forget Commission reports in the fall. It could be months after the Forget Commission reports before Parliament passes a law. What will we then do about the people who did not get their benefits? They may not qualify. According to the Act you must have 20 insurable weeks in the preceding 52 weeks. By the time Parliament passes a law they may not qualify at all and will have been denied their benefits. It is extremely unfair to put people in that position.

At the National Economic Conference held here at the government Conference Centre before the Budget was introduced in May, 1985, 75 per cent of the participants, which represented predominantly the business sector and the trade union movement, signed a petition saying that the Government ought not to go ahead with these particular provisions. By not responding to what people are saying through their letters and petitions, the Government is harming people who have embarked in good faith on their unemployment insurance application and have been receiving benefits.

• (1130)

The only fair thing for the Government to do at this time is to withdraw this provision. I appeal to the conscience of Members on the Government side. You can vote freely knowing that it will not bring your Government down and cause an election. Under the new rules you can actually stand up and vote the way you have always said we in this House should vote, on the principal of an issue. Recognize the unfairness, the contradictory nature, and the possible illegality of this regulation. Let us put aside our partisan politics for the sake of the people who have in all honesty and good faith taken early retirement, or were forced to take early retirement as in the case of the Armed Forces. I say to Members on the Government side, put aside the partisanship for just 20 minutes this afternoon and vote for people who have been so brutally treated by this change which came into effect on January 1, 1986.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member relating to suddenly, at this stage, going back to where we were prior to January 1 and yanking the matter out of the purview, if you will, of the Forget Commission. As the Hon. Member indicated, there have been many comments from all sides, his party, the Official Opposition, and certainly by Government Members, who are most concerned about this issue and most sympathetic with the plight of the pensioners concerned. Suggestions on how to deal with the problem have come from the Government benches. I wonder what is the best way of dealing with the problem now that the regulations have been put in place and the matter referred to the Forget Commission in order to find an over-all solution, not only to this issue but all issues relating to unemployment insurance benefits.

I am sure the Hon. Member is supportive of the concept of the Forget Commission. I am sure he and his party are supportive of the approach of taking an over-all review of the problems concerning unemployment insurance. Three are many problems. Something has to be done to come up with a comprehensive position on this issue. The Hon. Member is a Member of a party which has long advocated global planning. The NDP is renowned for having advocated a planned economy in which all of the pieces are not examined individually or piecemeal but in a global context. The NDP has always advocated that unemployment not be looked at on its own but in the light of interests rates, exchange rates, monetary policy, the deficit and tax policy. The same is true of the NDP's point of view on the question of public ownership of various parts of the economy, whether it be the banks or the energy industry.

I would like to know if the Hon. Member feels that we should be looking at this in a global sense. Should the Forget Commission make some global recommendations to straighten out the problems? It might have been nice to have this beforehand, but since we do not, is it not now more logical to leave it to the Forget Commission to come up with some global recommendations, the kind the NDP usually likes, rather than piecemeal recommendations?

Mr. Rodriguez: I think the Hon. Member is absolutely right. He has described the NDP's overview exactly correctly. I wrote to the Minister to tell her that she had not drawn up the regulations until late December, 1985, the change came into effect in 1986, yet the Forget Commission was set up in the spring of 1985. So we said that she should stop making changes before we look at the over-all issue. You cannot go chopping away piecemeal, taking $30 million here and $100 million there. Let the Forget Commission look at the whole program and make recommendations. Then we can make changes with some intelligence and some understanding of how these things hang together. When you start chopping away piecemeal you drastically affect people's lives. You have not really prepared the ground for acceptance of the changes you want. That is why I appeal to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) to support us and vote with us on this motion today.

The Hon. Member raised another very important question. It is not improper for us to now tell the Minister to withdraw the regulation. It is affecting people, denying them unemployment insurance. It is an unjust change. Let us withdraw it, wait until the Forget Commission brings down its recommendations, and maybe it will have a better approach. If so we would not be adverse to a better approach to unemployment insurance. We would support it. We would have no objection.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the most unusual feature of this particular change concerns a person who may have retired early from the Armed Forces, for example. He or she is in receipt of an Armed Forces pension and they now hold down a job. They would be ineligible under these changes to receive sick benefits under UIC during the time they continue to be employed. Would the Hon. member care to comment on the injustice of denying a person who is sick the benefit that they otherwise would be entitled to under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. I did touch on that briefly. It was one of the unfair aspects of that particular provision. That is one of the reasons we oppose it. If a person retires early and goes out and gets another job, pays his premiums to the UIC and then gets laid off or becomes sick, he would not be able to collect the sick benefits he would be entitled to. He has paid the premiums, it is an insurance program, yet he would never be able to collect. We think that is the ultimate in unfairness. That is why we presented this motion today in the hope that Members on the Government side will see it the same way we see it.

Mr. Weiner: I was intrigued by the Hon. Member's overview of what the insurance scheme actually is. We all remember when it was first implemented and 97 per cent of the gainfully employed contributed, that it was intended as a calamity insurance for those people who found themselves in the unfortunate situation of having no income. In retrospect the Hon. Member would agree there must have been instances in the past where individuals reaching toward early retirement, 62, 63, would find the opportunity to be able to take a sizeable package of money and then still draw on a plan to which the entire community is contributing but which should be used only for that calamity.

The insurance scheme, in my mind, was not intended as a guaranteed value life insurance, or a mutual fund. It is a form of term insurance to which we are all committing ourselves. I would ask him to reflect on some of the difficulties seen by those of us who are very concerned about bringing social assistance to those who really need it. I would certainly be the first one to join him in that kind of an opinion.

The Hon. Member referred to Mr. Roy Bennett and what he may or may not have said. I would just like to assure Mr. Speaker that Mr. Bennett has been in touch with the Deputy Minister and the Minister, and what Mr. Bennett says is that he would not make any specific recommendations or suggestions until the complete report of the commission of inquiry is submitted. Without trying to get into a debate on what may or may not have taken place, we know that Mr. Bennett, as a member of that commission, will be supporting and waiting for the final report to be submitted.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, on the last point raised by the Parliamentary Secretary, I simply read his quote from a Canadian Press article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on February 14, 1986. I have been the UI critic for my Party from the time I was elected in 1972, so I am fairly well acquainted with the thrust and the over-all philosophy of the program. That is exactly why we said that they ought not to have made this change. It is out of place and it is out of context, and that is why it should have been looked at by the Forget Commission in totality. We do not insure individuals in the program, we insure their income. That is what we insure in the unemployment insurance program.

In the pre-1971 act, I may remind the Hon. Member, we used to pay one full year of unemployment insurance benefits on retirement. A person would collect a whole year of unemployment insurance benefits when he retired from his work. I say that to inform the hon. gentleman of one of the principles that used to be in the pre-1971 act.

What we were really doing here was insuring the income of the individual, and in fact we protected the jobs of younger workers when older workers took an early retirement program. It is the choice of having them stay on the job and the younger worker going on unemployment insurance, or we encourage the older worker to take the early retirement and be eligible for unemployment benefits, which means he has to look for work, be capable and available for work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by congratulating my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for putting down this motion dealing with the cut-backs in unemployment insurance for those on early retirement pensions. We have had an opportunity to raise this matter in the House before by way of questions to Ministers, by statements pursuant to Standing Order 21 and by petitions, but this is the first time we have had a chance to debate the issue at any great length and to vote on the issue.

It is rather shocking to consider that this important change in unemployment insurance was implemented without any debate initiated by the Government and without any vote. This is a very important change in unemployment insurance affecting thousands of Canadians without any debate sponsored by the Government or any chance for the House to vote on it.

What is also important about this resolution today is that it is the first time that we will be voting on an Opposition motion which does not express non-confidence in the Government. That is extremely significant because it gives all Members in the House, in the Opposition and on the Government benches, an opportunity to really represent their constituents. Their constituents will be watching them and will know the vote this evening will be one that cannot topple the Government, that does not express non-confidence in the Government. As a matter of fact the House urges the Government to withdraw the policy. That is what we will be voting on. We will be testing the sincerity of the Government with respect to these new rules. When the Government implemented the new rules it said this would bring in a new dawning, a new spirit in the House of Commons whereby Members will be able to express their views more readily and with greater freedom.

These changes in the unemployment insurance are cruel, insensitive, retroactive, inequitable and unfair. Unfortunately, I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary, who just asked a question, has read the Act closely. He just said that unemployment insurance was meant to help those people with no income. That is not what unemployment insurance is, and there is nowhere in the Act that it says that. Unemployment insurance is insurance for those who are unemployed. For example, if a person is retired early and collects rent, collects dividends, collects interest, has a partnership in a business and collects profits, they do not cut back their unemployment insurance. You could have somebody unemployed who does not have an early retirement pension but he owns a series of flats and he collects rent and he collects his unemployment insurance. But the poor fellow in the Armed Forces who is getting a pension, he has his unemployment cut back. So it is not, as the Parliamentary Secretary said, insurance against loss of income, but rather insurance against loss of employment. I would like to get that straight.

He also asked why people 62 and 63 should get unemployment insurance when they are getting a pension? I must point out to him that there are people being affected by this measure who are in their forties and fifties. In the Armed Forces you can be retired at 45 and have to go on pension. I have a file full of letters from people in their fifties on early retirement who were collecting unemployment insurance and were cut back. Many still have children in university. Many people were going to use these early retirement pensions to roll them over, at least part of them, into RSPs for the day when they really retired, because they had to go back to work or they hopefully were going to go get another job.

This change is retroactive, it is cruel, it is insensitive and it is inequitable. There are many people who have paid into the unemployment insurance system for 30, 35 years and never collected. Suddenly they are forced out on an early retirement and they are finding when they went to collect now they cannot do so. That is not fair. Unemployment insurance is not a welfare program and was never meant to be a welfare program. It is an insurance program, and I just made some arguments in that respect. We never cut back unemployment insurance for people collecting rent, interest, dividends or profits, and the Government has not done that yet. If they were being consistent they would do that, but I think the policy is wrong in the first place.

I also want to point out that a good percentage of these people who are being cut back are on early retirement pensions but are still looking for work. They have to look for work because some of them have children. These are people my age and the age of the Parliamentary Secretary. They have children going to school, and have family responsibilities.

• (1150)

Every time we put a question to the Minister about this policy her justification for it is that it was announced a year in advance. Even advance notice of one year does not make a bad policy good, or justify the program. That argument is unacceptable. Furthermore, these changes are illogical. The Government makes significant changes to unemployment insurance then sets up the Forget Commission to study the unemployment insurance system with a view to making recommendations for change. However, this is done after the Government has already made very significant changes. How, in the name of reason, can that be justified? What is the purpose of establishing the Forget Commission to study the system when the Government has already made unfair cut-backs in unemployment insurance to thousands of Canadians?

I would like the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary to respond to that. Incidentally, I suggest it is an indication of the importance the Government places on this matter when the Minister who is responsible is not even here to respond in this debate. The Parliamentary Secretary is here—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member has been here for a long time and knows that he should not mention who is and who is not in the House. I hope he will keep to debate.

Actually, I am interrupting him to give him an opportunity to rest his voice.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the kind gesture. I apologize. I was simply following the precedents set in the past by many Members in the House, but I accept your good advice.

If the Forget Commission recommends that the Government's change be reversed, will it suddenly retroactively pay all those who have been cut back since January 1 of this year? I hope that the Minister of the Parliamentary Secretary will confirm that it would.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), upon assuming her responsibilities, appointed a special commission on older workers. The commission reported in August, 1985 with its report entitled "Older Workers: An Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market". This commission which was set up by the Minister herself states in Recommendation No. 2 that the Government not proceed with the announced changes in the unemployment insurance regulations scheduled to take place January 1, 1986, regarding the identification of pension as income for the period immediately following lay-off, until the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance—that is the Forget Commission—has reviewed the issue and made recommendations.

That is very clear but the Minister completely ignored the recommendations made by the very people whom she appointed.

The policy to cut back unemployment insurance for people on early retirement pensions not only hurts the older workers who are being cut but younger workers who would have been given jobs by those taking early retirement. Many of these older workers between 45 and 64 who took early retirement pension did so in good faith in order to make lower positions available for younger workers.

While the unemployment rate for young people has dropped by 2 per cent since September, 1984, it is still unacceptably high at 16 per cent and, as a result of this policy, older workers are refusing to take early retirement and open up those lower positions. They might have taken early retirement prior to this change in unemployment insurance but will now wait until they are 65 before retiring. It is not a very wise policy on the part of the Government.

This change is particularly cruel to Armed Forces personnel and those in other occupations from which they must retire earlier than other Canadians. For example, Armed Forces personnel in certain ranks retire as early as age 45 and look for other employment. Some of them use part of that early retirement pension to relocate. Others use it to set up small businesses, while others would invest in an RRSP to be used when they retire at 65 or later. This is no longer possible.

This policy is unfair and insensitive because those who are losing their unemployment insurance or being cut back must continue to pay their premiums but do not receive unemployment insurance when they are unemployed. Once they find another job they must resume paying premiums but will not receive unemployment insurance if they are laid off because they have an armed services pension. It is only logical for the Government to either withdraw this policy or stop making them continually pay premiums when they can never collect. However, the Government is making these people pay premiums even though they may never collect unemployment insurance.

Protests from all over the country have been made against this policy. In Victoria, a group called the "UIC Repeal Group, 1986" has taken measures to sue the Government in order to declare this new measure illegal. The Legislature of Nova Scotia, which is dominated by Conservatives, voted unanimously to condemn this policy.

I have a clipping from The Daily Star in Halifax dated March 6 which states:

> The Nova Scotia Legislature yesterday unanimously condemned Ottawa's new policy of requiring unemployment insurance recipients to count pension benefits as income.

Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia stated that the unemployment insurance changes are wrong. The New Brunswick Minister of Labour, Joe Mombourquette, also expressed his opposition to these changes.

Furthermore, some members of the Government Party publicly expressed their dissatisfaction and opposition to this measure and we will see how they vote today. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) wrote letters to the Minister of Employment and Immigration asking her to withdraw the policy with respect to the Armed Forces. As my colleague pointed out, 75 per cent of the people attending the economic summit in 1985 signed a petition asking the Government to withdraw these provisions.

Many people who learned that this policy would be taking effect at the beginning of the year called U.I. offices to get more information. They discovered that many of the officials in the unemployment insurance offices were ill-informed about the policy. For example, a very well known hot-line show in Vancouver called three U.I. offices in the Vancouver area to ask this same question about the changes and received three different answers from those offices. A person who came to see me in Montreal twice visited unemployment insurance offices there in an attempt to get information about these changes and was given a different answer on each occasion.

I have a letter which was sent to one of my constituents by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is a large national company. It is dated December 11, 1985, just before the coming into force of these measures. This is a memo sent by CPR to its employees:

> Furthermore for your added information your CPR Company pension effective February 1, 1986, has been estimated—

And it gives the amount per month.

> —and upon your application for the Quebec Government Pension it is estimated that you would receive approximately $344 per month plus application for UIC Benefits presently available and estimated at $276 per week.

The CPR was not even familiar with the changes. It was telling its employees that if they take an early retirement pension they will receive $276 per week unemployment insurance benefits, which is not the case. The people who took up this offer found that they were cut off UIC and did not receive any benefits.

I want to repeat that the policy of the Government in cutting back on unemployment insurance benefits for those taking early retirement pensions is unfair, unequitable and retroacive. It is put into force at a time when the Forget Commission is studying the unemployment insurance system. I would hope that when we come to vote on this measure this evening we will see Hon. Members of this House united in supporting the motion which simply says that we urge the Government to withdraw this policy. We will test the sincerity of Hon. Members and we will see how well they represent their constituents.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seemed to have some disagreement with the interpretation of the Parliamentary Secretary. He said he views this as a situation of non-income. He went on by saying that his interpretation was that unemployment insurance was to be used for a financial bridging between jobs. Later on he talked about vision and what unemployment insurance is for. I guess I really have some problem in my mind in understanding where the Hon. Member is coming from. He is saying that people who, of their own volition, have taken retirement, as they do in the private sector and as they do so frequently in the military, should receive unemployment insurance. Yet he also said very emphatically that unemployment insurance was devised and developed as a financial bridge between jobs. I really do not know how the Hon. Member reconciles that when he is so emphatic as to what unemployment insurance is for. I would be interested if he would expound on that a little.

Before he does so, I would like to tell him a little story. About two or three days after I was elected, five older gentlemen, retirees, presented themselves at the door of my constituency office. They told me they had retired from Imperial Oil and, unbeknownst to them at the time, were entitled to receive unemployment insurance benefits for extended periods of time up to one year. They said what a deplorable and insane situation that was and that it should not be, that there is no way they should be collecting unemployment insurance. However, in sitting around at the golf club they were kind of pressured into doing so by their peers who had already taken it.

How do we reconcile that kind of abuse to a system which was set up with a lot of intelligence to allow bridging, and how do we ensure that workers and companies are not incumbered by that kind of thing happening in the future?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question. A key provision in order to collect unemployment insurance is that one must be ready and available to work. If one is not ready and available for work one cannot collect. I am not suggesting that we should pay unemployment insurance to anyone who is not ready and available to work. The point is that the great majority of these people on early retirement pensions which, in many cases, they have had to take, such as those in the Armed Forces, are ready and available for work. If an individual wants to retire and not go back to work, then, of course, the unemployment insurance should be cut off entirely. That is the law. No one is suggesting otherwise.

The point is that these people, for one reason or another, were let out of their present full-time jobs, sometimes by agreement and sometimes involuntary, and given early retirement pensions which in the most cases would be less than what the full pension would be if they worked until age 65. To collect unemployment insurance one must be ready and available for work, and the people I have been dealing with on this issue are ready and available for work. Some of them are in their forties or fifties and they have to work. They have family responsibilities. Some of them are going to roll over their pensions into an RSP fund so that they will have a worthwhile pension, because they still have 15 or 16 years to go. Even if there are abuses to the unemployment insurance system—and I would agree with the Hon. Member that there are some—that can be dealt with by the Forget Commission. The Minister has appointed the Forget Commission which is studying all of these abuses and it will make recommendations. However, we should not go ahead and make ad hoc changes before the Forget Commission reports.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member see anything of an obstructive nature if, for example, we pass this motion which simply urges the Minister of Employment and Immigration to consider withdrawing the provision? Let us say we pass the motion today and she did consider and withdraw it. Does the Hon. Member see anything obstructive in now having to go back and pay all of the people who may have been disentitled as a result of the change? Does the Hon. Member see that as some great bureaucratic obstruction, or can it be done in fairness and expeditiously?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I think it can be done without any obstruction or even inference of obstruction. The Hon. Member will recall that the Government, as a result of its Budget last year, was going to deindex old age pensions. After Canadians spoke out on the issue it came to its senses, realized it was a bad provision, and withdrew it. This is what we are asking. If those people in Victoria are successful in the courts and the courts say that this provision to cut people's unemployment insurance after they have paid premiums for years and years is illegal the Government will have to change it anyway. Why not do it as a result of the representations of millions of Canadians instead of being forced to do it by the courts?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in his remarks referred to the fact that there had not been an opportunity to either debate or vote on this particular issue. I think the Hon. Member will recall that this measure was first introduced in the Economic Statement of November 8, 1984, I believe. That was immediately after the Speech from the Throne on November 4. There was, of course, a lengthy period for debate on the Speech from the Throne so there was a considerable period of time in which this issue could have been debated. I suspect that if the Hon. Member goes back and looks at the Debates which took place at that time he will find that there were remarks addressed to this issue.

Ms. Copps: And you didn't listen.

Mr. Redway: That is exactly right. The Hon. Member apparently was not listening. It is significant that shortly after, in December of 1984, the Minister actually extended the date on which this provision would take effect to January 1, 1986. That probably had something to do with the remarks which were made in the debate on the Speech from the Throne at that time.

• (1210)

Another point which I draw to the Hon. Member's attention is that there have been numerous opportunities for votes on opposition day motions. To the best of my knowledge today is the first time that the Opposition has ever put forward this particular issue, notwithstanding that something in the order of 18 months have passed.

The Hon. Member mentioned the issue of unwinding this provision. As a former Minister of the Crown I would point out to him that we are not talking about revoking something which has not been put into place, such as the question of the indexation of Old Age Security. We are talking about a program which has already been put into place. Does the Hon. Member think it would be possible to unwind this situation for the three-month period in which it has been in place?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned that this issue was brought up around the time of the Speech from the Throne and that there was debate on the Speech from the Throne. He is quite correct. However, he knows that in the Speech from the Throne there were a large number of proposals put forward by the Government. He should also know that when one votes on the Speech from the Throne one votes on the general policy direction of the Government and not on any one particular policy. I recall in the last Parliament, when the Conservatives were asked to vote on omnibus Bills, when they were asked to vote for or against a great number of issues, some of which they approved and some of which they did not, they did not like that. That is why members of the Conservative Party started the bells ringing for 14 days. Because we had a chance to debate the Budget or the Speech from the Throne the Hon. Member should not say that we were really zeroing in on this issue and that we had a chance to vote on it separately from the other issues.

The reason we did not put this matter on for debate on an opposition day prior to January 1 is that the matter only came into effect on January 1. The Minister announced the proposal and we asked her if she would withdraw it. We were hoping she would use some good sense and withdraw the proposal. However, January 1 came and went and now the measure is being implemented. People are now having their benefits cut back. That is what makes this motion necessary. We have tried to use reason on the Minister in the House. We have asked her questions over and over again. We now have the debate to which we are speaking today and on which we will vote at the end of the day.

The Hon. Member asked me as a former Minister of the Crown whether I think it is realistically possible to reverse this decision now. I say it is. Obviously the Government also thinks it is because it has been saying, as has the Parliamentary Secretary, that the Government will let Forget give them some advice on the matter. If Forget says this is a bad policy and that it should be reversed then the Government will have to reverse it. The Government has almost promised to take Forget's advice, although it did not accept the advice contained in the report on older workers which recommended that this measure not be implemented. Perhaps it will not take Forget's advice either. Perhaps these commissions and studies are just a lot of window-dressing and sham.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. Resuming debate with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to speak on unemployment insurance. It is, indeed, a pleasure to represent the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) here today. The Minister has worked tirelessly for the first 18 months of our mandate to create real jobs in the country. She has dedicated herself to this cause 24 hours a day, seven days a week. We all recognize the great achievements which have been made—the 580,000 new jobs which have been created. These are real jobs, jobs which involve training and real work experience. In retrospect, when we discuss unemployment insurance, the more people we put into the workforce the less likely it will be to rely on the unemployment insurance system.

Unemployment insurance, or UI, has played an important role in the Canadian economy since its inception in the 1940s and, more specifically, in the last few years. It is a vital social safety net which benefits millions of Canadians every year. In 1985 the UI program paid more than $10 billion to over three million Canadians. This money was paid to Canadians who had lost their jobs and their incomes—Canadians who needed help.

The motion before the House questions changes we have made to the UI regulations. I am glad to see that so many Members are interested and concerned about UI. I think that the interest shown by the House highlights the urgent need to examine the UI program.

The purpose of UI is to help alleviate the effects of unemployment and to help people get back on their feet quickly. We are not sure that the present structure of the program does this. As most Hon. Members are aware, the Government has commissioned a complete review of the UI program. The Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance, chaired by Claude Forget, who, I might add, is a distinguished Canadian and who had the honour of representing in the provincial legislature the same riding which I represent federally, spent several months travelling across the country listening to the views of all Canadians.

We feel there is an urgent need to overhaul the UI program to make it responsive to the needs of Canadians and to take its place in the economic framework of the country. None of us can deny the beneficial effects of UI, especially during hard times. We must accept the responsibility of maintaining those beneficial effects, if not improving them. At the same we must not lose sight of our managerial responsibility.

In 1985 the UI program cost us over $11 billion. We must contain the costs of the program within reasonable levels to ensure that we can continue to afford it. We must ensure that the program survives. The basic premise of unemployment insurance is that people who lose their jobs can get money while they are looking for another job. This basic premise is not always easy to define.

The Hon. Member thought that I was wrong in what I said before. It is more than likely that I was not as clear as I might have been since I know I am right. I do not want to say that the Hon. Member is wrong in light of his distinguished service to the House. However, what I did say is that to have access to UI benefits a worker has to demonstrate that he has no earnings coming from his employment and that he has worked long enough to be qualified. For sure he has to be unemployed. This is something that he will have to prove for everey week he will be claiming UI benefits. The starting point is for a worker to be without work and without pay for at least seven days. This is called an interruption of earnings. While on claim these same people must be looking for work. They must be available at all times for work. These are the basic principles of unemployment insurance.

As originally conceived, the design of unemployment insurance was based directly on the principles of a social insurance program. Emphasis was given to limiting benefits to instances of unforeseen and unavoidable risk of unemployment. Coverage was limited to workers in this category and benefits were based directly on the concept of insurable risk. This meant that there was a direct relationship between the extent of attachment to the labour market and the eligibility for and duration of entitlement to benefits.

During the period of some 30 years between 1940 and 1970 there was a decreasing emphasis on strict insurance principles and an increasing stress on other social and economic objectives. In particular, coverage was extended to workers in seasonal occupations where it could not be argued that the risk of unemployment was unforeseeable. In fact, it was quite the opposite—a recurring yearly event.

In 1970 a new program design was introduced to make the program more relevant to the changed socio-economic conditions of the 1970s. This was embodied in the 1971 legislation. In part, this involved the establishment of a new relationship between insurance and non-insurance principles. For example, initial benefits were related to labour force attachment and extended benefits related to local unemployment conditions.

As it turned out a combination of the designed features of the 1971 Act and the changing conditions in the economy and labour market, particularly high unemployment, gave greater weight to the income transfer aspects of the scheme. These circumstances led to a significant extension of the program and its costs, as well as an increased proportion of total cost allocated to the government account.

In 1971 the Liberal Government reduced the eligibility requirement to just eight weeks of work during the previous year and lengthened the maximum duration of entitlement to 44 weeks. As a direct result UI expenditures leaped from $700 million in 1970 to almost $2 billion in 1972. Currently, unemployment insurance is the most expensive operating program of the federal Government, costing us $11.6 billion last year. To give a comparison, we spent $8.9 billion on defence.

• (1220)

Following 1971, a series of legislative amendments was introduced over several years to contain the expansion of the program, to redress the balance between insurance principles and income transfer considerations, and to ensure a more positive effect on the labour market. Despite these amendments, fundamental concerns remain about the objectives and design of the program in the context of dramatically changing conditions in society, the economy and the labour market. Since 1971 these many changes, both legislative and regulatory, have resulted in a progressively more complex program of patchwork. All the changes were attempts to make the UI program adhere more strictly to its basic principles, but many have had the effect of making the program more and more complex.

When the Government took office in 1984 it inherited the UI program and the responsibility to administer it. On November 8, 1984, the Government announced its intention to make changes to UI, and these changes were in response to its managerial responsibility. It was important that some action be taken quickly to help give order to the patchwork.

The changes were announced in the economic statement of November, and a press release was sent out in December, 1984, to a list of over 7,000. All media outlets were covered. The press release covered the announced changes and the implementation date. In March, 1985, a letter was sent out to 650,000 employers, all employers participating in UI, notifying them of the pension regulation change. It would seem to me that this was more than adequate notice.

UI is an insurance program based upon earnings and attachment to the labour force. All the Government has done is redefine the question of earnings to reflect the reality of the situation and has stuck to the principles of UI. There are those who seem to believe that unemployment insurance should operate like a savings plan or a prepaid pension scheme. However, UI is neither of these; UI is not a retirement fund and it is not automatic. All UI claimants must prove that they are eligible and must continue to prove that eligibility each week they are on claim.

As we can see in the motion before the House, even these basic principles of UI are open for discussion. Every Canadian has an opinion on UI. Many of these opinions are often in conflict. We have heard members of the business community tell us that UI is a disincentive to work and that the benefits are too high. They want UI to be more difficult to obtain and to be paid for less time. On the other hand, others have told us that UI did not pay enough and should be paid longer. Who is right? Seemingly there is no natural consensus.

This is why, on July 6, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a commission of inquiry on unemployment insurance. The Forget Commission was charged with a comprehensive examination of the UI program. I should like to read from the terms of reference of the commission of inquiry, its main responsibilities:

> The Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance will analyse the role of the unemployment insurance program as a means of improving the operations of labour markets in Canada, to more effectively support Canada's economic development as an equitable financing partnership of business, labour and government, and to provide new and better opportunities for Canadians experiencing temporary unemployment.

It is an all-encompassing review of the UI program. In addition, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has specifically requested that the Forget Commission look at the question of earnings. For this reason, we look forward to receiving the recommendations of the Forget Commission to continue the evolution of unemployment insurance in Canada.

As many of my colleagues are aware, the best solution for UI is to find jobs for people. We have accepted the responsibility of putting the country back to work. When our Government came into office in September, 1984, it became immediately apparent that dramatic changes were needed to the existing complement of federal job-creation and training programs. The programs in existence at that time were inadequate. We soon discovered that most of the job-creation programs were short-term and make-work in nature and did nothing to address the need for meaningful, enduring employment, not only for older workers but indeed for workers from all age groups, while much of the training being provided was irrelevant to the real needs of the Canadian labour market.

Facing record unemployment levels and rapidly escalating demands for skilled and reskilled workers, the Government was not prepared to stand still and watch more and more Canadians suffer from the humiliation of unemployment and underemployment. Accordingly, at the first opportunity during the First Ministers' Conference in Regina in February last year, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration jointly presented the outline for a bold new initiative which would represent a whole new approach to training and the provision of needed employment for Canadians, termed the Canadian Jobs Strategy. This exciting new approach represents a complete redesign of Government labour market programs and a fundamental change in the way in which we develop and invest in Canada's workforce. It is a change which gives ordinary Canadians suffering from lack of work or from lack of skills the opportunity to get relevant training and relevant experience for the lasting, meaningful employment they must have.

As a Government, we value the opinion of all Canadians. My colleagues have already made reference to the Forget Commission and to the intensive discussions and dialogue with Canadians as part of the thorough review of the UI program. Similarly, in developing the Canadian Jobs Strategy, we consulted with hundreds upon hundreds of individuals and groups across the country. We valued the opinion of the unemployed young person in Cape Breton. We valued the opinion of the older miner who was laid off because of a mine closure in northern Ontario. We valued the opinion of the older woman in Saskatchewan who wanted to re-enter the labour market after many years as a home-maker.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy ensures that federal resources are used effectively to bring direct assistance to those most in need. Many Canadians face severe disadvantages in the labour market or are more severely affected by changing technology and economic conditions. These include the growing number of women re-entering the labour market, the long-term unemployed, workers needing skills training to avoid lay-offs or job displacement, and workers in communities suffering economic decline who need new opportunities for long-term employment. All these groups include older workers to a large extent.

Job training, job creation and economic development are linked to provide these Canadians with valuable skills, practical work experience and meaningful employment opportunities. The re-entry option under the Job Entry Program is helping many older women who have been out of the labour force for at least three years and may require career counselling and instruction in job search techniques or skills upgrading due to new technology in the workplace to re-enter the workforce.

In Kamloops, British Columbia, under the re-entry option 15 workers are receiving class-room training and practical work experience over a period of 34 weeks, to prepare them for work in the automated business office. Of these, six are over 45 years of age.

In metropolitan Vancouver, 50 workers are being trained in management skills for business including computer applications, supervision and management skills, and computer literacy for 31 weeks. Of these 50 workers, 16 are over 45 years of age.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy is also assisting many older workers under the Job Development Program. Frequently, older workers are eligible for the Job Development Program because they have been out of work for 24 weeks of the past 30 weeks. In Quebec, a non-profit agency is giving 42 forestry workers an opportunity to develop specialized skills to improve their ability to adapt to changes in their industry.

Older workers are also finding assistance under the Skill Investmnet Program. This program is the first one to help employed older workers to plan for change in advance. They can train for the future before their existing skills become obsolete. For older workers it is a chance to get the skills they need for continuing employment. For employers it is a practical way to avoid laying off adaptable, capable older employees during times of change.

This is not the only way employers and employees can benefit from skills training under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The Skill Shortages Program provides much needed financial assistance for employers who must train workers in skills in short supply and high demand.

● (1230)

In Newfoundland, a company seeking to stay competitive in a changing market is modernizing its plant by installing a beam line conveyor system, a system which will help the company increase its productivity and throughput of structural steel. For this piece of technology to operate effectively, it is necessary for a number of employees to have developed skills as both fitters and welders. The Skill Shortages Program is assisting in this effort by providing training which will eventually permit eight employees to become certified welders. Two of these trainees were chosen from among the senior fitters in the company. They had 26 and 13 years of experience respectively, and despite the fact they were not the younger employees of this company they accepted the challenge with enthusiasm and dedication.

The Community Futures Program will also benefit many older workers in communities across Canada experiencing economic decline, chronic unemployment, plant closures, massive lay-offs or the disappearance of single industries.

These are some of the examples of what we have done for older workers. We have remained consistent with the basic principles of UI while introducing innovative programs to help older Canadians who are looking for work. We must continue to help individual Canadians adapt to a changing world while still providing assistance to those Canadians who need our help.

We are anxiously awaiting the recommendations of the Forget Commission so that UI can be more effective, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, my question is relatively simple. I listened with great interest to the Member. I know he is a person who shows considerable compassion to others in the country. If I am quoting him correctly, and I hope I am because I tried to write down what he said accurately, he said that unemployment insurance is by definition an insurance program based on earnings available to those who have attachment to the labour force. He may want to correct a word or two but I think that is what the Hon. Member meant.

I would, therefore, draw from that the following. First, to determine eligibility you would have to pay into and have an attachment to the labour force. Second, in order to be eligible for benefit you would pay the appropriate premiums out of your earnings. Third, having met those two eligibility requirements you would be able to claim benefit.

With that in mind, let me ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner) whether he thinks it fair that a person who has retired from the Armed Forces and who is, therefore, in receipt of a pension, but who may be in his or her early 50s because of the arrangements that exist in that particular line of work, should be rendered ineligible to receive sick benefits under the unemployment insurance plan, notwithstanding the fact that the person is employed, notwithstanding the fact that the person paid premiums and notwithstanding the fact that the person will suffer immeasurably as a result of the Government's action which would deny the person the benefits available to all others in this society?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I have had the honour and pleasure of spending the last few months listening to what ordinary Canadians have to say about the whole issue of whether pension income should be considered as earnings in considering the UI benefits.

Mr. Deans: Particularly sick benefits.

Mr. Weiner: In all of these consultations, what I have said, in fairness, is that I understood their plight and I think I will be able to represent it very fairly at the appropriate time.

At the moment we have a Commission of Inquiry. Maybe it should have had its report ready by now, so perhaps this whole discussion would have been academic, but the Commission will be reporting by the end of the summer. I am hopeful that when the whole review of the system is put into place there will be an excellent opportunity at that time for me to raise the concerns of my constituents, and the concerns of the people to whom I have listened on open line shows.

The Member is correct in saying that I am a man of great sympathy, understanding and feeling for people. I have lived and worked in the community side by side with them and I have assured them that at the right time their concerns will be raised in a fair and honourable manner.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, does the Parliamentary Secretary think the following example is fair? Worker "A" owns a triplex or a small apartment building from which he collects rent and clears about $500 a month. He is laid off. He is about 50 years old. He is still ready and available for work but he collects his full unemployment insurance despite the fact that he collects about $500 in rent. Worker "B" who worked for Northern Telecom is laid off. He is given an early retirement pension of $500 a month. His unemployment insurance is cut back because the income to him is in a pension—

Mr. Weiner: He is laid off?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, very often he is laid off.

Mr. Weiner: And 64 years old?

Mr. Allmand: He is 50 years old.

Miss Nicholson: Listen before you interrupt.

Mr. Allmand: He is given an early retirement pension on the lay-off. His unemployment insurance is cut back. The other fellow is laid off. Because he gets his income from rent, he is not cut off from benefit. Does the Hon. Member think that is fair?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I could easily ask whether the Hon. Member thinks this is fair. My father spent his entire life as a watch-maker. He was not allowed to contribute to the unemployment insurance scheme. He was a small businessman.

Mr. Allmand: That is not the question.

Mr. Weiner: The weeks when there was no money to take home were pretty dry weeks. There are things we have to look at through the entire system. When we are so close to receiving a complete and exhaustive report from a commission that crossed this country and met many Canadians from all walks of life, let us wait. Let us not allow this uproar to do something that may be piecemeal. We will have a wonderful opportunity to put into place something that will be fair and honourable for all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend referred earlier to the Forget Commission's role and terms of reference, and I am a little concerned because I heard no word about fraud. You know there is now evidence that Canada taxpayers are being robbed of more than $3 billion a year through the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I wonder if my hon. friend could inform the House whether this is going to be mentioned in the Forget Commission's report. Are we going to be told about all the scheming that goes on at various levels to defraud the Unemployment Insurance Fund? What does the Forget Commission . . . Are they going to report on the $3 billion the Government is losing each year? I heard no reference to this in your statement, and I think I would like some clarification.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. The terms of reference—and I can assure you they are quite clear on this—that we gave . . . we have given the Forget Commission of Inquiry the right to travel across the country and investigate all aspects of the program. When the report is submitted to the Minister, I am sure we will have an opportunity at that time to analyze all these aspects together and also to set up a system that will have tighter controls. I don't want to anticipate what is going to happen or the discussions that may follow, but I just want to repeat that we will soon have a chance . . . the report will be something we have been waiting for for a long time—maybe ten years—and I think it will now be a matter of just a few more months.

[English]

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment or two and then I will have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner).

I think the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) posed a good question when he brought up the example of Worker "A" and worker "B" and the real problems with this unemployment insurance regulation which the Minister has just brought forward.

I happen to represent an area where there are not many jobs. We do not have too many signs of all those jobs that are supposed to have been created, according to government officials. The unemployment rate in my area is going the other way. Even in good times agriculture, the fisheries, and tourism are the main industries in the Province of Prince Edward Island, and those are the main areas in which jobs are created, but they are seasonal.

● (1240)

Canadian Forces Base Summerside was established on Prince Edward Island and there are many Armed Forces personnel there who are forced to retire. We must realize that Armed Forces personnel are forced to retire at a certain age in most categories. They have also been forced to pay into the unemployment insurance system. Premiums are deducted at source. Many of them whom I have talked to have told me that their pensions are between $11,000 and $12,000 a year. I have talked to members who are 50 years of age. Their families are at most critical point inasmuch as their children are in university. If that person gets a part-time seasonal job in that area he will earn approximately $6,000 which, added to the $12,000 pension, amounts to $18,000 a year. That is his total income.

In many cases the only opportunity members of the Armed Forces have to buy a permanent home is when they retire. The Armed Forces, being what it is, requires people to be posted in different parts of the country and the world. They buy their homes in the last three or four years of service, knowing that they will be forced to retire, so they still have mortgages upon retirement. They have children in university and are not able to make ends meet. They rely on unemployment insurance for part of their income. The additional money they can make at part-time jobs is not sufficient for their survival. I think this is very unfair. Does the Parliamentary Secretary believe that it is fair for the Government to insist that these people contribute to the unemployment insurance fund and not allow them to collect at any time?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing forth an issue with which he and many Members on all sides of the House are concerned. We are still focusing on process rather than results. We want results. We are talking about the overhaul of an entire system. This will be accomplished very soon and there is no point in trying to justify or find ways to exclude or include certain groups. Give us an opportunity to hear what the commissioners have to say. They have had a chance to speak to Canadians and will certainly be raising this issue. At the appropriate time we will ensure that that concern is raised at the right level.

Mr. Henderson: Do I understand correctly from the Parliamentary Secretary that if the Forget Commission recommends to the Government that this measure should not have been enacted retroactively, all the people who have had their unemployment insurance premiums reduced, or are not receiving them at all, will be paid back retroactively by the Government?

Mr. Weiner: Before going much further we must recognize that universal payment of premiums has been a basic principle of unemployment insurance. What I as a Member or Parliamentary Secretary would recommend, based on a recommendation of the Forget Commission, may be different than what the Minister would recommend. However, knowing her strong concern for the fair treatment of employees in all parts of the country, I know she will weigh very heavily the findings of the Forget Commission and bring those findings to her Cabinet colleagues for consideration.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I, along with many of my colleagues in the House of Commons and elsewhere, have the greatest sympathy for early retirees who are forced from their employment and must accept a small pension insufficient to provide for their needs and, therefore, must rely upon unemployment insurance. As I understand the motion, it requires the repeal of the changes made effective initially in November of 1984, and subsequently delayed until January 1 of 1986.

If we pass this amendment and those changes are repealed, will people in higher income brackets then be eligible for unemployment insurance? I have great sympathy for a corporal who retires from the Armed Forces at age 45 and needs that unemployment insurance benefit. However, I say with no apology that I have no sympathy for a general who retires at an income of $60,000 or $70,000.

If Pierre Elliot Trudeau, who receives a pension in excess of $70,000 a year from the people of Canada, were to lose his job at the law firm in Montreal and apply for unemployment insurance, would he receive unemployment insurance from the system because of the repeal of these provisions? I do not mind paying unemployment insurance to a corporal, but I do not want to provide public funds to a general. The Unemployment Insurance Commission has a deficit of over $4 billion. Is the Member asking us to help the general?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the difficulty which we are in right now. If we try to make any changes piece-meal, we will favour a whole group of people.

Mr. Allmand: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Weiner: In an editorial in the London Free Press it is stated that in recent years millions of dollars of UI benefits have gone to employees who have taken early retirement within two or three years of age 65 and then applied for unemployment assistance, although they have no intention of seeking a new job. We must reflect on a system which will look at the entire operation fairly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to raise it, but in his previous intervention the speaker failed to recognize that there is only one general and thousands of corporals, most of whom vote in the Member's riding of Halifax West.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think I will reflect on the Hon. Member's point of order.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity given to us by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) through his motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I have listened carefully to the debate which has taken place this morning. I think it would be worthwhile to read the motion to the House again because there seems to be some confusion in the debate as to what the motion actually asks for. The motion reads:

That this House recognizes the unnecessary hardship inflicted on older Canadian workers by the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which cause pension benefits to be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, and since votes on opposition motions are no longer considered a question of confidence in the Government, therefore urges the Government to repeal those changes immediately.

I think this is a reasonable motion which is obviously well thought out. It is moved in the spirit of what is right and fair with regard to unemployment insurance premiums. It is also moved in the spirit of the new parliamentary reform of which every Member of the House is supportive. It gives Members on the Government side an opportunity to vote, based on the needs of their own constituents, without threatening the Government with defeat. It allows individual Members of Parliament to represent the interests of their own constituents.

As has already been pointed out, I and other Members have received numerous petitions from our constituents. There is a deep concern about what the Government has done to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It behooves all of us to express those concerns in a very clear way. The Government has indicated it does not feel that strongly about the measure. If the Forget Commission recommends that this measure be reversed, then the Government has indicated a willingness to do so. In fact, two Ministers of the Crown have made special pleas to the Minister to not proceed with this change in regulations. So there is a broad base of support for what this motion expresses.

Before I go on to some other remarks I feel I have to comment on two or three of the interventions that were made following the Parliamentary Secretary's remarks. I may be wrong in what I heard, but I understood one Member to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question concerning massive abuse of unemployment insurance. Apparently there are all kinds of people making fraudulent claims against unemployment insurance. Is the Government looking into that? I have had an opportunity over the years to look into this matter, and if there is an update on the data I would be pleased to hear it. It is my information that of all claims filed for unemployment insurance less than one-half of 1 per cent are considered to be fraudulent. People apply for unemployment insurance because they need financial support while they are unemployed. They do it honestly and forthrightly. If I am correct in my understanding of what that particular Member asked, that is totally unfair based on the facts as I know and understand them to be.

If you look at the insurance industry as a whole, whether it be car insurance, home insurance, fire insurance or any other kind of insurance, if they had a fraudulent rate nearly as good as one-half of 1 per cent, it would be outstanding. The unemployment insurance fund is well-controlled and well-policed. Sometimes it is policed too harshly. When the UIC throws a wide net to try and identify fraudulent users, very often many innocent claimants are caught up and quite unfairly denied benefits.

To get back to the motion itself, the reason the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and his colleagues in the NDP felt it was important to have this subject debated in the House was specifically because the Government did not make this change in that way. It was done by Order in Council. Members from all sides were not given an opportunity to debate what the Government did at the beginning of this year. We have not had a chance to vote on this measure. The unemployed were never asked whether they thought this was a good or bad idea. They have since expressed their opinion through petitions to Parliament; they do not like it. This is true of not only unemployed workers but also people who are working and who may face unemployment some day. They view it as a bad thing and for a very good reason.

Many of the people who are signing these petitions have worked hard all their life. Many of them have been in the workforce for 30-odd years. They paid unemployment insurance premiums in the expectation that if they ever did become unemployed they would receive some income. They had expectations and those expectations are being denied to them by what this Government is now doing. It is changing the rules in midstream and that is what strikes people as being totally unfair. It is not only inequitable, it is totally unfair.

The Government keeps telling us that it is taking a new approach, there is a process of consultation where there never was before. If that is the case, why were the unemployed not consulted? Why was Parliament not consulted? So far as we know there was absolutely no consultation, unless it was with the business community. It certainly was not with the ordinary Canadian. That is why we have this motion before us. Since that consultation did not take place we want to air the matter now in a very public way. We think there is broad general support for this motion in the country. Conservative Members who do not support the motion are going to hear very loudly and clearly from their constituents.

I recall the debate which took place on the Government's plan to deindex Old Age Security payments. The Government told us that there was broad general support from seniors for this program. After those statements were made I watched with great interest who the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was talking to. He did not talk to senior citizens. Even when senior citizens came to Parliament he did not speak to them about the impact that measure would have on them. Every time I observed the Minister he was in New York talking to U.S. businessmen, in Montreal talking to Canadian businessmen, or in Toronto talking to financiers. He never spoke to senior citizens or future senior citizens about what he was trying to do to their pension income. However, once the seniors caught on to what the Minister was about to do they consulted among themselves and voiced their concerns in a very concerted way. The Minister saw the justness of their arguments and reversed himself. That is all this motion is asking for. It asks the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to come to her senses, do the right thing by the unemployed and reverse the decision she made on January 1 of this year.

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, you may. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) will have seven minutes left and a 10-minute question and comment period when we resume debate. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I am aware of an understanding and I take it there is a desire to make some special statements. The rest of Question Period, including the statement period, will be commenced at the end of this special statement.

THE LATE HON. HENRI COURTEMANCHE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this morning I heard the sad news of the passing away of the Hon. Henri Courtemanche, lawyer and former politician. He became a Member of this House in 1949 and Secretary of State in 1958, under the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

[English]

After his service in this Chamber Henri Courtemanche served with distinction in the other place as a Member of the Senate of Canada.

[Translation]

Henri Courtemanche was a man who worked very hard for his country and who was known to all as intent on pursuing the goals he set for himself.

On behalf of the Government, I wish to express our sincere condolences to his immediate family and to all his friends.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, although I did not have the pleasure of knowing Mr. Courtemanche personally, I certainly read in the media about his work as a Quebec Member of this House, and I wish to endorse what was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to join the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on behalf of my colleagues in this Party in recognizing the passing of Henri Courtemanche. He served both the Government and the Parliament of Canada during his time as a member of the Cabinet of the late John Diefenbaker, and also as a Deputy Speaker. In both capacities he was able to influence the course of the events of the country. I am pleased to join with the Government in mourning his passing.

[Translation]

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the Hon. Henri Courtemanche, a great Canadian from my riding who died last night at the age of 68.

Mr. Courtemanche was a lawyer and a member of the Quebec Bar. He was elected for the first time as a Member of the House of Commons in 1949, and re-elected in 1957. He was appointed Deputy Speaker of the House in 1957, and became a member of the Privy Council and Secretary of State in 1958. He was a member of the Senate from 1960 to 1961.

Henri Courtemanche was a man who performed his duties with integrity and dedication. As a Member, he always represented his constituents to the best of his ability. He worked very hard for the benefit of all Canadians, and he continued to serve his fellow citizens after his return to the private sector.

On behalf of my constituents in Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle, I want to offer my sincere condolences to the bereaved family.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I suspect that the House would like to show its respect and sympathy to the family in the usual way.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

TRADE

TAX TREATMENT OF KOREAN STEEL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to an issue affecting hundreds of western Canada workers, and to this telegram I received:

● (1405)

[English]

Despite various requests Mr. Wilson's Budget did not contain a measure depriving Korea of the reduced tariffs on steel afforded them under the general preferential tariff. No other major industrial country gives Korea special treatment on steel because they recognize that Korea has the most modern steel industry in the world. Because of their proximity to the West Coast, IPSCO plants in Port Moody, B.C., Edmonton, Red Deer, Brooks and Calgary, Alberta and Regina, Saskatchewan are particularly vulnerable. IPSCO employment today is 1,400 compared to 2,200 in 1981.

We respectfully request you amend the ways and means motion on customs and tariffs to withdraw the general preferential tariff privileges from Korean steel and steel products—

It is signed by the president—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a year ago today the arts community marched on Ottawa to protest cut-backs in spending stemming from the Government's first economic statement. As a result of that and other protests across the country, the Government learned to listen. It has even responded by the appointment of numerous task forces to investigate various aspects of the arts, such as broadcasting, film distribution, museum and arts funding.

However, concrete support for the arts community is still inadequate, and the election promises made to it of increases at least to cover increases in the cost of living have not been respected. What the Government calls an increase in the Budget fails to replace the money cut back last year. Further, there has been interference by the Minister in the management of the supposedly independent agencies.

Policies announced by the Government such as those related to the publishing industry are ignored when actual decisions must be made, most notably in the takeover of Prentice-Hall.

It is time for the arts community to come back to the Hill to restate the case that the vital contribution it makes to Canada needs and deserves our full support.

IMPACT OF TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, biotechnology and genetic engineering will, without a doubt, make food production much more efficient in the years to come.

Technological advances will likely change the pattern of agriculture as much in the next 25 years as was the case in the previous 75.

A recent United States study by the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment predicts that only 50 per cent of that country's farmers will still be in business by the turn of the century. Large farms, in proportion, will be able to adapt to a much greater degree than smaller ones.

If we are to stay competitive, and if our remaining farmers are to enjoy a high standard of living, then Canadian long-term agricultural policy has to encourage the adoption of the new techniques and the changes of scale they necessitate.

WHEN IT'S SPRINGTIME IN NANAIMO

A PRESENT OF DAFFODILS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, today is the first official day of spring. In Nanaimo-Alberni it is sunny and 17 degrees. In Ottawa it is minus 10 degrees, with a wind chill factor reaching minus 40 degrees.

In British Columbia the grass is green and the flowers bloom. On Parliament Hill the only crocus in bloom, by the East Block, is a direct result of nearby underground heating pipes.

Not that we want to rub it in, but today all Members of Parliament have been presented with a daffodil, compliments of CKNW radio in Vancouver. In this instance CKNW stands for "Canadians know nice weather".

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been presented with a bouquet of daffodils because the first day of spring is also his birthday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: We, from the Canadian paradise we call British Columbia, wish the House the very best this spring—whenever it arrives in Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NUMBER OF CLAIMANTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, with the federal Government claiming that it has created 8,000 jobs in Newfoundland in the past year, and the provincial Government claiming that it has created 7,000 jobs in Newfoundland in the past year, I did some checking this morning and discovered that the only record set in the past year is that, for the first time in Newfoundland's history, over 100,000 people are now registered as unemployment insurance claimants. That is over 100,000 people out of a total workforce of 224,000. So Newfoundlanders are asking what is going on.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been conned, and conned badly, or he is trying to con the Canadian people himself. I am not sure which I prefer to be true. In any event the Prime Minister has done serious damage to the future of Canada and its environment by pretending that he has gained something from President Reagan when anyone who knows anything knows he has not.

Why this persistence of style over substance, of rhetoric over reality, of pomposity over progress? The Prime Minister has seriously undermined the real friends Canadians have in Congress by appearing to be satisfied, indeed orgasmic, about nothing, thus making it difficult for those who are trying to get an actual reduction of acid rain.

Instead of undermining our friends in Congress, the Prime Minister should have had the guts to tell his phony friend in the White House that five years of uncertain funds for research are not a substitute for the action which is possible now—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

RENEWAL OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the NORAD and acid rain agreements signed yesterday in Washington by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan are a source of real pride for all Canadians. NORAD and NATO are two key alliances within which Canada participates to help maintain world peace. The five-year renewal of the NORAD agreement is the decision of two autonomous nations to work in close co-operation to protect their sovereignty from the threat of airplane and Cruise missile attacks from the north.

By way of observation, yesterday's CBC Journal program was entirely devoted to an examination of the arms negotiation process. While this is a very important topic and an excellent program, it is lamentable that this program was not deferred to another evening. Canadians then would have been made more aware of the very significant events which were taking place in Washington.

ACID RAIN

STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as Member of Parliament for the constituency of Témiscamingue, the region of Quebec most severely affected by acid rain, I must voice my enthusiasm over the American President's statement in full support of the Davis-Lewis report recommendations.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, firmer financial and chronological commitments will have to be made later on, but the fact remains that an important step was taken yesterday in the fight against acid rain. President Reagan has acknowledged for the first time that acid rain is our common problem and that the United States are partly responsible for environmental damage in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the action taken by our Government in this field, and particularly of the leadership of our Prime Minister whose tenacity and determination were instrumental in convincing the President of the United States that it was important and urgent to do something. In 18 months in office, our Government has accomplished more in the fight against acid rain than the Liberals—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, the 60 seconds have expired.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, today Peter Booth, the owner of a Petro-Canada station in my riding, is selling regular leaded gas for 46.1 cent a litre, a decrease of only 10 per cent, while the price for world crude has fallen by 50 per cent. There are some indications that competition has been severely curtailed since Petro-Canada's acquisition of Gulf's retail stations in Ontario and the west.

I still agree with the public policy objectives of Petro-Canada which were announced in 1974, which were to provide leadership in frontier exploration and development with at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership. We must achieve energy self-sufficiency so that we are not held to ransom as we were in 1974. However, I do not agree that the Government should be in the downstream retail gas station business. I urge my Government to take steps to ensure that Canadians will pay the lowest possible prices at the pumps, and to deal harshly with any companies dealing in price fixing schemes.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

WORLD TOUR BY WHEELCHAIR ATHLETE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, March 21 is a very important day in the life of wheelchair athlete Rich Hansen, marking for him one full year on the road. Since March of last year Rick has travelled more than 13,000 miles, and has 11,000 miles farther to go in his quest to travel the world on his Man-in-Motion tour.

• (1415)

While he is raising money for spinal-cord research, he is also breaking down the barriers, both physical and mental, faced by the disabled throughout the world. So far Rick has visited 30 countries, with three more to go in the coming months. But nowhere on his journey did his heart cry out more for home than in Jerusalem at the sight of the Terry Fox Memorial Park.

Rick will soon be visiting China where he will be greeted in Beijing by the son of Chinese leader Den Xiaoping, who is also in a wheelchair. In the fall Rick returns to Canada for the final leg of his tour. I call on all Canadians to be ready to open their hearts to this brave and distinguished hero who has done so much to forward the cause of the disabled everywhere in the world.

ACID RAIN—ACCEPTANCE OF ENVOYS' REPORT BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it was not easy, but thanks to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) President Reagan has finally acknowledged acid rain as a serious transboundary problem. He has accepted the envoys' report and has pledged to kick off a $5-billion program over five years to tackle harmful long-range emissions. This is the same President who refused to recognize acid rain as a problem just last year. He has finally come onside.

The Prime Minister would have gained nothing by employing a wild-eyed gun-slinger approach with the President. It has long been said that an ounce of honey is worth a gallon of gall.

The federal Special Committee on Acid Rain can use the President's commitment to suggest a timetable to our counterparts in the U.S. where Bills are now being drafted favouring emission reductions of 10 million tons per year.

The Prime Minister has put us back on the road to environmental renewal.

REPORTED OFFER TO REDUCE OIL PRODUCTION IN ALBERTA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Conservatives' belief in the free market system in oil is beginning to unravel, as the free market system is no longer providing the petroleum industry with the high prices the industry had hoped to obtain.

The Premier of Alberta is apparently willing to join with the largest cartel in the world and cut production of oil in Alberta. He has agreed to go along with the world price-fixers, the apostles of non-competition in the world market—some free market! I also find it disturbing that Canada should join OPEC without discussion with and agreement from the federal Government.

There is an alternative. It involves helping the small producers in Alberta by setting a made-in-Canada oil policy, with negotiated floors and ceilings with respect to price. In this way we can protect both the consumer and the small Canadian producer. In my view cutting oil production does not necessarily help the small Alberta producers.

ACID RAIN

POSITION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to focus particular attention on the major agreement on acid rain that was concluded yesterday by the President of the United States and our Prime Minister.

For the first time, the U.S. President has recognized the problem of acid rain and its disastrous effects on our environment. We should welcome this agreement with relief and look forward to an unqualified commitment from the U.S. Congress to release the funds required to reduce acid rain. This agreement between our two governments should have a number of positive repercussions.

I am thinking of a region like Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean, where economic activity is very much dependent on our forests, and I am thinking of our pulp and paper industry, and the importance of the sports fishing sector, now that aquatic life is threatened in hundreds of lakes in my region.

We have the Prime Minister to thank for this agreement, and he is certainly the one who brought about this change in attitude within the U.S. Administration. It shows the difference between Conservative co-operation and Liberal confrontation tactics.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF THE POOR

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) likes to portray himself as being concerned about the disadvantaged in Canada. In the recent Maclean's-Decima survey, however, only 12 per cent of respondents perceived the Prime Minister as a champion of the poor. In fact 31 per cent said he is worse than any other Prime Minister.

His own pollster said it was the first time in six years of polling that "class-based" attitudes have emerged in Canadian public opinion. Indeed, 40 per cent of those in the low-income brackets said they felt the economy was not recovering.

In Metro Toronto alone, according to the Community Information Centre, the number of poor and needy is reaching "crisis proportions". It received 97,000 calls in 1985, with requests for food, clothing, and financial assistance. The number of calls for financial help went up by almost 50 per cent, as did the number of food banks. Unfortunately the February Budget, rather than addressing this phenomenon, only fueled the gulf of disparity which is growing across the land under this Conservative regime. That is most regrettable.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have been able to congratulate the Prime Minister—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): On what?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On his birthday.

An Hon. Member: He took the day off.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): For the second year in a row he has deprived us of that opportunity.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa and I are wearing spring flowers. It is coming up spring in the Ottawa Valley, but who would know it? Tomorrow is his birthday, and I want to wish him the best on behalf of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In the absence of the Prime Minister I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the subject of the Prime Minister's recent exercise in cosmetic diplomacy in Washington. Apparently the greatest achievement the Prime Minister claims is that he persuaded the President of the United States to recognize that a fact is a fact, namely, that acid rain is an environmental killer, that it is poisoning North American lakes and rivers, that it is wrecking our drinking water, and that it is destroying our farms. Would the Secretary of State consider this to be anything more than a hollow victory, a victory surrounded by rhetoric, but short and empty of any concrete action?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regard the accomplishments by the Prime Minister of Canada in the meeting with President Reagan in the last two days to be a very significant step forward on a number of fronts including, most important, the question of action with regard to acid rain. It is most important because the United States administration had the most distance to come.

As the Minister of the Environment said yesterday, it is only a first step. It is a step which was not capable of being accomplished by former Governments of Canada. It has been accomplished by the Prime Minister and this Government. We all looked forward to co-operation across the House, across the continent, and across federal-provincial relations to ensure that we continue to make progress against the enemy of acid rain.

OUTCOME OF DISCUSSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have to concede that that was a brave try in the circumstances. The Secretary of State for External Affairs knows, or he must have read about it, that there is no commitment to any real action, there is no commitment to money unless American industry acts first, there is no timetable, and there is no schedule. Will the Secretary of State acknowledge that what the President of the United States has acknowledged, at the expense of his own environment and of our environment is a five-year delay or a five-year moratorium—no action at all—postponing the problem into the future, while our rivers, lakes, and forests continue to be poisoned?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not for the first time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is out of date. There was a long delay in action on acid rain; that was when the Liberal Party was in government in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There is no need to rely upon the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition. Let me quote from the headline in The Baltimore Sun—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How long did it take you to find a good one?

Ms. Copps: What about quoting one from Missouri?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I could quote from newspapers in Philadelphia, Washington, and New York. The point is that the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that there has been no movement by United States authorities. That is not the view of observers in the United States. I quote only The Baltimore Sun and its headline: "U.S. Bows to Pressure by Canada, Agrees to Fight Acid Rain"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A short supplementary, please.

• (1425)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wish, Mr. Speaker, that the Right Hon. Member had quoted The High River Gazette. It would have carried more authority with this House.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Wrong again.

MANNER IN WHICH GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO PROTECT NORTH AMERICAN ENVIRONMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Last year, Mr. Speaker, a one-year moratorium was put on concrete measures against acid rain. This time, however, after the talks with the President of the United States—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please. The Hon. Member will please ask his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This time, instead of a one-year moratorium, the President managed to obtain a five-year postponement.

Could the Minister explain to Canadian men and women how this Government intends to protect the North American environment with negotiations and results like these?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as The High River Times is concerned, I will quote from it tomorrow.

Regarding the agreement in Washington, for the first time in the history of our two countries, the U.S. Government has shown its determination and has agreed to fight acid rain. This is thanks to the leadership and determination shown by the Prime Minister of Canada.

This is a real achievement for Canada, and I hope that for once the Opposition will concede that something was accomplished by Canada outside its borders.

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. President Reagan, when he addressed this House of Parliament on March 11, 1981, said:

> We want to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no borders.

Would the Minister explain to us and to the country why yesterday's announcement is such a significant shift in policy? Would he explain that to us, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the presidency of the incumbent, the President of the United States—

Mr. Caccia: He was already President.

Mr. McMillan: —has recognized the seriousness of acid rain.

Mr. Blaikie: That is more accurate than Joe.

Mr. McMillan: The President has recognized that acid rain is serious, not only in Canada but also in the United States. He has recognized that it is serious in both countries because of its transboundary nature.

The President has established mechanisms to ensure that the issue will be resolved and will not go away until it has been resolved. He has committed hundreds of millions of dollars for that purpose, and that progress is light years away from the case of the United States President when the Liberal Party was in government for 25 years.

RESULT OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, is it not true that, as a result of yesterday's endorsement, not one ounce of SO_2 emissions will be reduced as far as Canada is concerned?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker. The President of the United States has endorsed, without qualification, categorically, the full contents of the acid rain report tendered to the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada in which, on page 30 appears this sentence:

> —although the primary purpose of this . . . program is to demonstrate the kinds of technologies that would be needed for any future acid rain control program, it should also result in . . . near term reductions in U.S. air emissions that affect Canadian ecosystems.

Read the report. It is there in black and white. The President of the United States has endorsed it 100 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATURE OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister, on the same subject, a day ahead of my birthday, and I hope he will give me a present in advance by answering the question.

The Minister said in December last with reference to the Davis-Lewis report, before it came out:

● (1430)

—if it (only) talks about research and modernization and technology, it will be transparently superficial.

Since what President Reagan has now agreed to is not a timetable for emission controls, but for research, modernization, and technology, why is this agreement anything other than transparently superficial?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the reason is that on page 4 of the envoys' report the two envoys have recommended processes to lead to "a bilateral accord which will jointly address a common problem in the best tradition of U.S.-Canadian environmental relations".

In Washington yesterday and the day before, the President of the United States committed himself to a process designed to lead to targets, schedules, and commitments of cash. That agreement is well beyond research.

1980 MEMORANDUM OF INTENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we now have a commitment to a process. That is wonderful. I will try to minimize my rhetoric if the Minister will do the same in replying.

In 1980 an agreement reached between President Carter and the then Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, committed the United States to the view that there was a common problem with acid rain and to future research to deal with the problem. Therefore, why is the Government of Canada now saying, because President Reagan has finally caught up with the position which President Carter took six years ago, that there has been an historic breakthrough?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if I stripped the Leader of the NDP of his rhetoric, he would have nothing to say.

Mr. Broadbent: You can do better than that.

Mr. McMillan: The memorandum of intent between Canada and the United States was signed in August of 1980. Most of the negotiations which led to that MOI were completed then by the present Minister of External Affairs in the Progressive Conservative Government, when he was Prime Minister.

Mr. Broadbent: So what?

Mr. McMillan: The memorandum of intent was not moved one inch thereafter. It was pious statement of intent. What we now have goes well beyond an expression of intent.

Mr. Nystrom: It's Pious II.

Mr. McMillan: We have a recognition of the problem and of the transboundary nature of it, a commitment to a process, and a further commitment of hundreds of millions of dollars of cash from the American Treasury for acid rain abatement. That is well beyond what was achieved in 1980.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

COMPENSATION OF MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question concerns the fact that as a result of the disastrous effects of U.S. acid rain on forests in Quebec, maple syrup producers are going to lose millions of dollars in income this year.

My question is quite simple: Who is going to pay for this loss of income?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, all of us in society will have to pay the cost of abatement, because we are all contributing, through our respective activities, to the problem.

Mr. Broadbent: Are the Americans going to pay their share?

Mr. McMillan: For 25 years the Liberal Party was in office, except for seven or eight months. During all of that time successive Liberal Prime Ministers would not raise the issue even in the House of Commons, let alone in Washington.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SULPHUR EMISSIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of the Environment. A spokesman for the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters has called the Canada-U.S. acid rain deal a good PR campaign and a stall tactic. He said that we are no further ahead. Will the Minister not admit that specific targets for the reduction of sulphur emissions are significantly absent from the U.S. President's half-hearted and feeble commitment to the acid rain problem?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when the Government was elected in September, 1984, nothing had been done to push the acid rain issue even an inch during the quarter of a century that the Liberal Party was in power.

Mr. Gauthier: That's not true.

Mr. McMillan: When we took office in September of 1984 we started with a blank page as far as acid rain was concerned. The President of the United States was then attributing acid rain purely, or largely, to natural phenomena: volcanoes, trees, and even ducks. Within 18 months the Prime Minister of Canada, an Irishman from Baie Comeau, was able to do what environmentalists and legislators on both sides of the border could not do, that is, convince Ronald Reagan that acid rain was serious. That is a major accomplishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REACTION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that Senator Max Baucus of Montana said that he is surprised that the President did not come up with more, and that the Prime Minister let him get away with it? Why doesn't the Minister stop puffing himself up and agree that what we got out of Washington on acid rain was precious little?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is adept at quoting selectively. Yesterday the Governor of New Hampshire, who has been a very outspoken critic of the President's record on acid rain, hailed the accord as a landmark achievement by the Prime Minister in his relations with the United States, as did the Governor of Wisconsin, and the Governor of Illinois. Those are only three powerful critics of the President on this issue who have declared yesterday's accomplishment a major one.

ONTARIO FISHING LODGES AND CAMPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of the Environment. Even though President Reagan has accepted the report, we will not have any significant reduction in acid rain for at least the five-year period of research. The Minister spoke earlier about the cost of abatement. I want to ask him about the cost of non-abatement and non-action.

What contingency plans does the Government have for the hundreds of fishing camps and lodges in Ontario which the envoy report itself predicted would have to be closed by the year 2000 if nothing happened? At least several hundreds of those will certainly have to be closed in the foreseeable future as a result of no action. What is the Government going to do for those people whose livelihoods will be destroyed by the lack of action on the part of the American Government?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is totally false. Everything is not going into a deep freeze for the next five years as a result of what was achieved at the summit yesterday and the day before. In fact, as I said yesterday in the House, and as the President himself acknowledged in Washington, this is not the end of the road but the beginning of it.

There is an agreement on the seriousness of the problem and on the transboundary nature of it. There is a commitment to a process which will ensure that this issue is not a one-summit wonder. The issue will not go away until it is resolved. We are committed to that exercise, and finally, as a result of the actions of the Prime Minister, the President of the United States is, as well.

FUTURE OF AFFECTED CANADIANS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment says this is the first step on a long road. I agree that it is a long road. What is he going to do for the people whose livelihoods will be affected by what is going to happen in the next five years, rather than by what is going to happen at the end of the process which has been established now? What does the Government of Canada intend to do for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians whose economic base depends on the environment which acid rain is now eroding?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks what the Government of Canada is going to do. I will tell you what it has already done and what it is going to do. We have committed ourselves to an expenditure of $300 million, $150 million of which is directly related to acid rain abatement. We have signed agreements with seven provinces to reduce acid rain causing-emissions by 50 per cent by 1994, based on 1980 figures. We have introduced regulations which will slash, by one-half, allowable emission controls for motor vehicles. We are embarked upon a major program with the Heritage Foundation to address the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Government is justifiably mortified by the results of the acid rain discussions, so I will move to another subject to get it off the hook for a moment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: Did the Prime Minister raise Canada's concerns with respect to the President's policy on Nicaragua, that is, more military aid for the Contras? Can the Secretary of State explain why he was not at that meeting to press that case on behalf of the Canadian Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister raised with the President, as I, the week before, had raised with Secretary of State Shultz, the difference in view between Canada and the United States of the nature of the problem in Central America and, consequently, the nature of the solution.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Well, would the Secretary of State tell us what the nature of the solution was that was raised by the Prime Minister, and what the President said?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, let me take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member on his appointment as spokesman for his Party on external affairs. We will arrange for him briefings on matters relating to Central America and any other area where he has an obvious need for information.

● (1440)

Canada's position is that the basic problems in Central America are social and economic in origin. The solutions should be social and economic, not military. We have made that position clear on a number of occasions. We have backed up our views with action. There has been a tripling of development assistance by the Government of Canada for countries of Central America.

We have played a leading role in trying to make the Contadora process effective.

We have indicated our willingness to contribute to the solution of border disputes which might arise in that region.

That is Canada's position, and that is the position the Prime Minister outlined and which we intend to continue to follow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—EFFECT ON ATLANTIC REGION FISHERY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. American acid rain has poisoned many of the water systems in eastern Canada. The special envoys' report indicates that 90,000 jobs are at risk in the Atlantic commercial fishery. Will the Minister tell this House who is going to pay for the loss of those 90,000 jobs? Is the Canadian taxpayer again going to pay for American poisoning of our water systems?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Member should think that Canadians enter this room with clean hands. We are responsible for 50 per cent of the acid rain-causing emissions which destroy Canadian fish, lakes, rivers, streams, and forests. We bear some responsibility. Because we do so, this Government has made agreements with the seven most offending provinces to slash acid rain-causing emissions by one-half by 1994, based on 1980 figures. That is a substantial Canadian achievement. It is a credit to Canada and greatly strengthens our moral authority in trying to get a corresponding arrangement out of the Americans.

FORECAST LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the acidity of Atlantic Canada water systems is up 12 times over the last 30 years? This is killing off the Atlantic salmon at an enormous rate and many, many jobs will be lost. Will he now tell this House who the hell is going to pay for the loss of those jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That shows the lack of a vocabulary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The language—order, please.

Mr. Skelly: May I withdraw that?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member wishes to withdraw the last part?

Mr. Skelly: I wish to withdraw that, and ask who in heaven is going to pay for those 90,000 jobs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is probably as close as the Hon. Member will get to that place.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Which one?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is with the NDP; that is purgatory.

Mr. McMillan: The Hon. Member asks me who is going to pay. I will tell him who is going to pay. To begin with, the federal Government is going to pay $300 million over the next four years. The seven provinces concerned are participating in the great national acid rain effort, which was put together as a result of the initiatives of this Government. The total price will be $2 billion, of which industry will be required to pay about 50 per cent.

YOUTH

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. Senator Hébert has reminded us that there are over 750,000 young people out of work. The Minister knows there is broad agreement across Canada that the Government's efforts are inadequate. We must do something more to help this lost generation. Has the Minister understood this message, and what is she prepared to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is well aware that young people are facing tremendous difficulties. That is why we have set up job creation and training programs, to make up for—

Mr. Rossi: What programs?

Mrs. Champagne: —the long years of neglect. Mr. Speaker, we should recall that in 1983, youth unemployment was at 19.9 per cent, and the Liberals were not doing much about it. Since we came to power, youth unemployment has dropped more than 2 per cent, 50,000 jobs have been created, and more than 200,000 young people will be taking part in training programs this year.

Mr. Rossi: You certainly had nothing to do with it.

[English]

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Minister has obviously not read the Senate's plan of action.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have it upside down.

Mr. Berger: Will she read it and take immediate action to implement its recommendations, some of which do not call for spending money? Will she act now?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, if this Government had acted, let us say, in January, before this very important report was presented, even before the NDP report was presented, people would have said we acted before the reports were presented. Yes, we are studying this report very carefully and some of the recommendations will be implemented when this Government is ready to do so.

SMALL BUSINESS

NEED FOR WORKING CAPITAL TO ESTABLISH SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses).

[English]

Many Canadians have the desire to start a small business in the spirit of free enterprise, but cannot get financing. Can the Minister tell this House if he is contemplating any new programs which will help Canadians obtain the needed working capital to establish a small business?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. The Federal Business Development Bank and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion are working together to develop a program for venture capital addressed specifically to small business. We know that small business is undercapitalized and we are looking at options to solve the problem because small business can be an instrument of growth and, therefore, more jobs, jobs, jobs.

ACID RAIN—DAMAGE TO FORESTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Doctor Bruce Forster of the University of Guelph Economics Department gave evidence before a committee of this House in November that the reduction in forest productivity because of acid rain deposition at 5 per cent means an annual commercial timber loss of $197 million, and $1.29 billion for the disruption of wildlife habitat and recreation. Since 50 per cent of this damage is from U.S. sources, who is going to pay for the $1.5 billion plus damage to our forests?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, because of its transboundary nature it is imperative that the Governments of the U.S. and Canada join in a continental effort to resolve the question he has addressed himself to, and to pay the price for it.

CAUSE OF ACID RAIN

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the President of the U.S. used to say that acid rain came from trees. The study which is out now says it comes from bird droppings. Does the Minister believe in either of those?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker, but I suspect that the Hon. Member's question is akin to the latter.

YOUTH

MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). The Minister is trying to take the credit for certain figures. I want to ask the Minister: At a time when hundreds of groups and thousands of young people are organizing and all kinds of organizations are demanding action, how can she simply point to her record and ignore their demands for immediate action? What is she waiting for?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I think this Government has veen very active, and we shall continue to take action. If the Hon. Member for Shefford means to refer once again to the decision on Katimavik, I may remind him that on July 21, 1984, he himself said that we should not see Katimavik as more than it is, because although some young people were interested in working in the forestry sector, that did not mean everybody wanted to work there.

● (1450)

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister should realize that when we were discussing forestry, we were talking about Environment 2000.

Now that the Senator is into the eleventh day of his hunger strike, and all Canadians are supporting his gesture, is the Minister so heartless and her conscience so accommodating that he would refuse to announce new programs, for purely political reasons—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I don't think anyone is taking Senator Hébert's gesture lightly.

However, I don't think asking the Government to announce projects when it is not ready to do so is very worthwhile.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should recall that about ten years ago, it took only a single pencil stroke to abolish the Company of Young Canadians, the Opportunities for Youth Program, Local Initiatives—

Mr. Lapierre: They were replaced.

Mrs. Champagne: —sure, they were replaced.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please. The Hon. Member for Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the House, I know, will be very glad to know that we have just received the results of the vote in the U.S. Congress and that the House of Representatives has voted against military aid to the Contras.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Ms. Jewett: Two hundred and twenty-two to 210. I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he had, in addition to speaking with officials in Washington and to the Secretary of State, also talked with our friends in Congress about our position in Canada, namely, that there is not a military solution to the problems in Central America.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not done that. The Prime Minister had the opportunity to meet with Members of the Senate and Congress Committees on Foreign Relations the other day. I do not know if that question came up. There should be no doubt that the position of Canada is very well known by authorities in the United States, and I would imagine by many of the Members of the Congress and the Senate of that country.

IMPENDING VOTE IN UNITED STATES SENATE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I then ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would, in view of the fact that the Senate vote is tomorrow, be willing to talk to our friends in the Senate, and particularly some who might be waivering and who do not know what the Canadian position is? Would he do that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it curious that Members of the New Democratic Party, who object violently when there is any suggestion by any American about Canadian policy, would suggest that I, as the Foreign Minister of Canada, should go down to the United States and instruct United States Senators on how they should vote on a matter that is before their Senate.

HEALTH

PROGRESS IN CANCER RESEARCH

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, the daffodils that we are wearing today come to us compliments of the British Columbia chapter of the Canadian Cancer Society and are a reminder that April is Canadian Cancer Society month.

I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Health. What information can he give to the House and to the country on the progress that Canada is making in cancer research, given the fact that one out of three Canadians become victims of cancer, and one out of five Canadians will die of cancer?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House would want to identify with the Member's comments regarding the contribution the Canadian Cancer Society and the provincial chapters have made to cancer research.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that cancer research in Canada has been carried on not only by the Medical Research Council, the various cancer societies, but only NHRDP of the Department of Health and Welfare. We have first-class cancer research. For example, we get publicity on Interluken, out of the United States. That same kind of research is being carried on in Canada. While that research has to be continued we should make a point that diet and smoking are two cases where preventive methods should be used to prevent cancer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Important as it is, it is becoming a speech.

ENERGY

CRUDE OIL—REPORTED OFFER TO CUT PRODUCTION IN ALBERTA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Premier Don Getty of Alberta in a telephone conversation with Sheik Yamani has offered a cut in the production of Alberta oil to try to halt the world decline in crude oil prices. Was this telephone call made with the prior approval of the federal Government, and what is the federal Government's position with respect to the offer that Premier Getty has made?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I spoke to Premier Getty this morning after I had seen those reports. Premier Getty fully understands that the Government of Canada speaks for Canada on international questions. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Liberal and the New Democratic Party think that someone else should speak on international policy for Canada. We believe it is the responsibility of this Government, and we do it. I want to assure the Hon. Member, and through him others who are interested, that Canada will continue to co-ordinate our approach to international energy issues with other members of the international energy agency.

OPEC COUNTRIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if Canada has received any requests from any of the OPEC countries to cut oil production, and what Canada's position would be if such a request were made.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In reply to the Hon. Member the answer is no, we have not had that request.

REQUEST FOR BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my qestion is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who will have seen the estimates published today of the additional harm caused by cigarette smoking, namely, the 500 infant deaths and 6,000 miscarriages caused every year. Will the Minister, instead of wearing a daffodil to show good will, do what the Cancer Society and all the other health protection societies are asking, and that is introduce tough legislation, specifically to ban advertising for a product that is responsible for 35,000 deaths a year in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do think it is important to wear symbols that indicate to Canadians our thanks for the work that cancer societies and volunteers have done. I think that is important. Second, regarding the Member's request that further action be taken both on advertising, on smoking within public conveyances, on legislation relating to smoking in public places, as I have indicated to her before, when Cabinet has made that decision that matter will be coming forth. I think it will commend itself to the House.

AMOUNT SPENT ON ADVERTISING BY CIGARETTE COMPANIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not agree that since there are so many people dying from cancer every year the cigarette companies have to advertise, and the amounts they are spending of $200 million a year are indeed necessary to replace those people. Will he agree that we cannot compete with that by curing cancer afterwards? Prevention must be our goal. Would he not agree that we cannot do this without having an absolute ban on advertising, and would he undertake—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. This is long.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I had my way I would like to see Canada, let's say by the end of this century, smoke free. I would like to think that we should move as a society toward that goal when we have 30,000 deaths a year related to smoking. There is no single preventable disease that I know of in Canada that, in fact, we should pay more attention to, and that is why this Minister has done it.

In terms of advertising, in terms of the cigarette companies and the tobacco companies, I have asked them, for example, to pull advertising from Ontario's Wonderland. I have called them in to change some advertising on Tempo cigarettes. I am simply saying to the Member that further action is being considered along the lines that she suggests and I take her representation under advisement.

BROADCASTING OF HIGHWAY TO HEAVEN PROGRAM—EFFECT ON CANADIANS OF BALTIC ORIGIN

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications. Canadians of Baltic origin were horrified by the CTV network's broadcasting of Highway to Heaven, which defames and slanders Canadians of Lithuanian, Latvian, and Estonian origins. Does the Government intend to press charges against CTV under Section 281.1 of the Criminal Code which makes communication of statements inciting hatred against an identifiable group an indictable offence?

● (1500)

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC already has full authority to examine the question of broadcasting hate material that is contrary to law under the provisions of the Criminal Code. I would also like to point out that Bill C-20, now before the House, proposes an amendment to deal with abusive programming on the basis of race and national or ethnic origin.

I would remind the Member that responsibility for programming and editorial content remains that of the broadcasters who are answerable under the law.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON AT PORT CARTIER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In a Canadian Press interview in February, the Solicitor General said:

> A new maximum security institution would cost about $50 million. I have farmers in my constituency who are on the verge of bankruptcy and I would like to see that money go to them instead of going into building new prisons.

Will the Solicitor General have the courage of his convictions and tell the Prime Minister that the Port Cartier prison in Manicouagan should not be built?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, Parliament has been given the opportunity to look at the Nielsen task force reports. It will be looking at the issue of penitentiary construction for the future.

It is interesting to note that two days ago the Hon. Member took the position that there should be no construction of a penitentiary in Quebec. Could he indicate whether he was speaking for his Party, or was his colleague, the former Solicitor General, the Member for York Centre, speaking for his colleagues when, in 1984, he announced the construction of a protective custody institution in Quebec?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question for the Solicitor General is very simple. Does he, as Solicitor General, support the construction of a new prison that is proposed for Port Cartier in Manicouagan? Does he support the construction of the prison?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do. My question is also very simple. Who speaks for the Liberal Party? Is it the Member for York Centre who, as Solicitor General, announced construction of a facility, or is it the Hon. Member who is calling for it to be cancelled?

YOUTH

PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPING POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. She indicated that she was paying close attention to the recommendations in the Senate Committee report and to the New Democratic Party Task Force Report on Youth. Is she giving the same kind of importance to the participation of youth and consultation with youth in the development of policy affecting youth as was given by those two reports? In particular, what has been the role of her Youth Advisory Committee and to what extent has she consulted with other youth groups in the country in developing a youth program?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, consultation with youth groups has been ongoing since the fall of 1984. We have had regional forums. We have met with young people. I have an advisory committee composed of 24 young people from all across Canada and we are constantly in touch. We will be meeting again shortly. The policy of our Government is to have ongoing consultations.

REQUEST FOR FURTHER CONSULTATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, very little real consultation took place during the fora. The national forum was cancelled and not rescheduled. Therefore, will the Minister promise to the youth that she will begin far more intensive consultations with them now than has transpired so far? Surely cancellation of the national youth forum is a bad start—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is long.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville that there was very little consultation throughout the year. I have met constantly with youth groups and youth service organizations and we will continue to do so.

The national forum has been postponed for the time being, but consultation is ongoing. We will continue to meet with young people and our studies will take into account what they are telling us.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

POINT OF ORDER

PRESENTATION OF DAFFODILS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier I rose pursuant to Standing Order 21 to compliment a Vancouver radio station for the donation of daffodils to Members in this Chamber. It would appear that we have received two bundles of daffodils today, one from the radio station and another from the Canadian Cancer Society. I want to say on behalf of my colleagues in the Chamber that we appreciate the donations from both organizations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what business does the Government House Leader intend to call for the coming week, until the Easter break?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should say in response to the House business question that I have been trying to find a way to accommodate all Parties with respect to the scheduling of Bill C-85, An Act to amend the Petroleum Incentives Program Act. I believe there may be a disposition to call this Bill forward tomorrow as the first item of business. At that time, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) and the energy critic for the New Democratic Party, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) would have an opportunity to speak to this Bill at third reading. Following the speeches of these two Members, the House would then immediately revert to Bill C-99, An Act to provide Borrowing Authority.

Following the completion of Bill C-99 we will consider Bill C-91, An Act to establish a Competition Tribunal. Bill C-85 will then be called in order to permit the energy critic for the Liberal Party to speak at third reading. This will be followed by Bill C-100, the veterans affairs omnibus Bill and Bill C-62, An Act respecting Employment Equity.

It is my intention to designate Monday, March 24, 1986, as the final allotted day in this supply period. We will continue with the Bills, in the sequence that I announced earlier, on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I believe there has been some lapse on consultations. With respect to Bill C-85, I am not ready to agree to that approach. I think we will have to look into it further and perhaps speak to it later in the day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I thought there had been some discussion on the matter between the critics, but I am certainly quite prepared to meet and accommodate the Official Opposition with respect to dealing with that Bill.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, lest there should be any misunderstanding, I was aware that this was in the works, I am not quite sure what happened to the communication process but I hope we can work it out along those lines because it seemed to be the most satisfactory way to meet everyone's requirements.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—EFFECT OF CHANGES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodriguez:

That this House recognizes the unnecessary hardship inflicted on older Canadian workers by the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Actwhich cause pension benefits to be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, and since votes on opposition motioins are no longer considered a question of confidence in the Government, therefore urges the Government to repeal those changes immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue to speak to our motion which claims that the Government has been unfair in causing pension benefits to be considered earned income for the purposes of unemployment insurance benefits.

One of the arguments that has not been raised is that pension income is really deferred income. In other words, if an employee did not have a pension as part of a wage package until retirement, that individual would receive higher salary benefits during the period of time he or she is working. Therefore, I suggest that pension income is really deferred income. It is income that an employee would have otherwise received if he or she had not, by agreement or otherwise, delayed the payment of that income until retirement age. It is irrelevant whether or not that employee retires at age 65 or younger. If they had chosen to receive that income during their working life, they would have received it then and the Government would not have any claim today. It seems to me that in all of those cases, what this Government is doing is totally unfair.

• (1510)

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, has already pointed out, the total savings to the Government on the backs of unemployed Canadians will be to the tune of some $300 million. That $300 million which comes from the unemployed, who need the money most at that time, is simply just another rip-off when one considers what the Government has already done in the 18 months it has been in office. As pointed out during Question Period and other times—which has never been disputed by the Government—the average Canadian family has received a tax increase of something like $1,300 over the last 18 months since the Government was elected. What the Government is doing here is just simply another grab at the average Canadian taxpayer. Only this time, rather than going after the employed taxpayer, it is going after those who are unemployed. That is totally unfair and unjustified.

A lot of debate this morning dealt with military personnel. There are also other employees in the Canadian economy who are not in the military but who are affected by this policy. In Toronto, for example, the Massey-Ferguson Company has decided to close up its operation at its Strachan Avenue plant. Many of its employees are covered by a collective agreement which allows them to retire after 30 years' service. If they had not elected through the collective bargaining process to delay that benefit until such time as they retired, they would have had an increased salary during their working life. Those employees now find that because the company has decided to close up operations they will be laid off, and after all those years of paying into the unemployment insurance fund they will not be able to collect the benefits.

Some Members of the Government have taken issue with Members of the Opposition by saying that the Government did not act hastily, that somewhere or other it had this on its agenda. We are told this is why the Government asked the Forget Commission to look into these matters. If the Government was being fair, forthright and honest with Canadians and with this House, surely to goodness, rather than jump in and do what it did as of the beginning of this year, it could have delayed the process, referred the matter to the Forget Commission—if it felt it was advisable to do so—and wait until the report came down before it changed the regulation. That would have been the fair thing to do with respect to Canada's employees and to this House. At least in that way the Minister could have tabled the document in the House and allowed debate to take place around the document itself.

Rather than do that, the Government changed the regulation by Order in Council without any consultation with the people who would be affected, or their representatives, such as Members of Parliament, and we are forced in order to get the debate into the House to move a motion on an opposition day as was done by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. I am glad he has done so because he has given focus to this debate to which Canadians can listen. They can watch very carefully how Members of the Government decide to vote.

As I pointed out earlier, under the new system of parliamentary reform this motion will not necessitate the defeat of the Government if Members of the Conservative Party choose to follow their own conscience and the wishes of their constituents by supporting this motion.

I see my good friend sitting opposite, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). I can see in his eyes that he is in total sympathy with what I am saying. He comes from a constituency where there are people employed in the automobile industry who are subject to periodic lay-offs. Many of those people believed him and voted for him on the basis of "job, jobs, jobs". Now those employees are finding that the Conservatives did not follow through on the promise of "jobs, jobs, jobs". Instead, what they have is "taxes, taxes, taxes". The average Canadian family will have additional taxes to pay by this change in the regulation, in addition to all the other taxes they have had to endure in the last 18 months.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my friend and colleague. I am not saying I agree with him, but he put his case very well. I will confine my comments to the way the Government votes on the motion. I have two points to make; First, the precedent which we may be making with respect to questions of confidence and, second, I suggest that the House may have two questions before it at the same time. I point out that there is contained in the motion a comment on the practices of the House concerning votable motions.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would not only be interested, but fascinated to hear the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis). But as I listened to his preamble I sensed that he was about to speak of the technical make-up of the motion. I would offer to you, Sir,that it would be appropriate to discuss that under a point of order, if the Hon. Member believes there is something out of order or something which ought to be changed. If the Hon. Member is commenting on the merits of the motion or on the merits of the speech of my colleague, or if he is asking a question about the speech itself, I would say it is entirely appropriate for him to continue. However, if he is discussing the technical make-up of the motion, in other words, that the motion presents the House with a dilemma or a question other than the question of its merit, then I would suggest that that is a point of order and it should be dealt with separately. I would be delighted to enter into that discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to hear the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is trying to pre-empt the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis)?

Mr. Deans: No, I am happy to hear him if it is a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not feel at this stage of the game that I can consider the matter, as a point of order, until I hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young), towards the end of his remarks made the point that the Government benches could very easily vote against this motion because it was not a question of confidence. That is to what I was directing my remarks. I am separating my remarks from the issue at hand, which is a valid issue for debate.

There are two points I would like to make. First, by taking the reference to confidence out of the standing orders we tried to place a new focus on questions of confidence. If we are going to have questions of confidence designated, they should be clearly designated.

Mr. Deans: I agree.

Mr. Lewis: We have here a motion which does not clearly designate whether or not it is a question of confidence. We have no hesitation in saying that some day in the future we will move towards a situation where confidence can be a freer thing than it is right now. If you check the headings in the Standing Orders, Mr. Speaker, you will find it refers to questions of supply. "Supply" has always been a matter of confidence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If I may interject here for just one moment. I can now understand what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain was saying. I do not want to get involved in so far as what the motion does or does not state. I do not want to get into any argument or debate with any Hon. Member in the Chamber as far as the motion is concerned. The question and comment period is time set aside for Hon. Members to ask questions and make comments on other Hon. Members' speeches. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is coming to the close of his remarks.

● (1520)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wished to make two points. I have been able to make only one, thanks to some interruptions and some assistance. I will not specify from whom I receive the assistance and by whom I was interrupted.

The first point I wished to make is that the motion is ambivalent with respect to whether or not this is a matter of confidence.

Mr. Deans: It is absolutely clear.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain may not agree with me, but that is my opinion. That is the point I wished to make in direct reference to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Beaches toward the end of his speech. He also referred to the motion, and I appreciate that it is a motion which has been accepted by the Table. I have no difficulty with that. However, there are two distinct questions in the motion. I think something should be made clear on two scores when dealing with our first question of confidence. The first time the House has a motion before it on which every Member is free to break ranks it should specifically state in the motion whether or not it involves a question of confidence. Further, we should not be voting on two distinct questions. That is the comment I wished to make in response to my hon. friend's remarks.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, in turn, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member's comments. I wish to make it unequivocally clear that we in the New Democratic Party do not consider this a motion which would be in any way considered a non-confidence motion. It is our view that if members of the Conservative Party choose to vote for or against it, then that would not affect the standing of the Government at all. In fact, it seems to me that the motion is in the spirit of responses made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the House to questions concerning this matter. She has indicated that if the Forget Commission recommends that the Government rescind its decision with respect to this regulation, then it would be willing to look warmly upon such a recommendation. Therefore, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that in no way is the motion considered to be one of non-confidence in the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I entertain more questions or comments I would like to make a brief remark. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council did not think that the Chair was interfering in what the Hon. Member was saying. I am trying to recall whether the Hon. Member's interjection meant that the Chair interfered with the statement of the Parliamentary Secretary in regard to the speech of the Hon. Member for Beaches. I am sure that is not what he meant. The Chair does not interfere with motions which are before the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would not for one minute suggest that you are interfering with or interrupting me. I just wanted to come as close as I possibly could to complimenting my colleague who sits opposite for being so helpful.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) to comment upon the group of people who fall into the category of those who earn more than $30,000 inclusive of unemployment insurance benefits and who have the benefit removed from them. Will the Hon. Member comment on that in the spirit of the motion which is before the House?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to comment. I believe the Hon. Member is asking a question in response to an interjection made by a Government Member who said words to the effect that the Opposition is trying to protect generals from the actions of the Government. In other words, he seemed to suggest that we are interested in seeing $60,000-a-year generals receive unemployment insurance benefits. That is exactly the same argument which was used when we expressed our concern with respect to what the Government may or may not be doing in terms of universal social programs. I do not think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) would have done anything like that. Other Ministers of the Crown have suggested that members of the NDP were trying to protect bank presidents who may or may not receive family allowances or some such thing.

At this time of year most people will have their income tax forms and are probably in the process of filling them out. These people will realize that on incomes over $30,000 per year unemployment insurance benefits are taxed back. Therefore, while I may feel some sympathy in terms of bank presidents and generals now and again, the fears which the Government has about our motives with respect to this motion are not well founded at all.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) is well known for his compassion and concern with respect to an array of social services. I think that he would have appreciated the initiative of the Government in taking a comprehensive look at the unemployment insurance package. It has not been looked at in such a broad and comprehensive way for decades. Surely such an initiative deserves the Hon. Member's support.

The first part of the mandate of the commission of inquiry is to undertake a comprehensive examination of the unemployment insurance program in light of the Government's over-all economic objectives. I made a point of attending one of the commission hearings at the Plaza II in Toronto. I met five of the six commissioners there. I must say that I was very impressed with their thoroughness. In no way do they form a passive commission which just sits and hears evidence. I heard members of the commission ask very probing questions of some of the witnesses who appeared before it. Having visited the hearings first hand I am satisfied with the calibre of the commission and with the Government's intention to take a comprehensive look at a whole array of issues.

As was mentioned earlier in the debate by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), I hope the Hon. Member will not support a piecemeal approach to this issue. Rather, I hope he will support the Government's approach in order to let the total strategy develop. I am sure he will see fairness and equity in the final recommendations.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no objection at all to the Forget Commission or what it is trying to do. In fact, I am inclined to support the commission since it has also stated that it thinks that what the Government has done is absolutely wrong. I fully expect the Forget Commission, or at least members of it, to recommend that the Government do what this motion is asking it to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of general points as they relate to this question in the Province of Newfoundland. The first point is that all Armed Forces personnel in the Province of Newfoundland have been notified that they are not permitted to make representations to the federal Government in terms of disagreeing with this particular measure instituted by the Government of Canada. Members of the Armed Forces in the Province of Newfoundland are not allowed to sign petitions, to write letters or to make representations to Liberal Members of Parliament which in any way oppose this move by the Government of Canada. I do not know of any other example of that kind of action being taken by the Armed Forces in its dealings with its members or personnel in Newfoundland. It is not acceptable for people in the City of St. John's, in Gander or in Labrador to be told they are not allowed to sign a petition, write a letter, make a telephone call or make any representation to members of the opposition Parties. I do not believe this was ever done before by the Canadian Armed Forces. We do not live in a communist state; we have freedom of speech in Canada. For the Armed Forces to dictate like that to its personnel in Newfoundland is absolutely outrageous. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) should intervene. If he caused this particular action to be taken, he should withdraw it; if he did not cause it, he should reprimand the officials or whoever took that action. It is an absolute disgrace that Armed Forces personnel and their families in that province are not allowed to make representations to a politician because the politician happens to be a member of the Liberal Party or of the New Democratic Party.

• (1530)

Let us look at the effect of this particular measure of the Government of Canada upon Newfoundland. There will be an approximate loss of $65 million, affecting 6,000 Newfoundlanders. Newfoundland has more people per capita who qualify for veterans' benefits than any other Canadian province. That is a somewhat recent phenomenon, because it has been decided that those who were in dangerous waters during the war qualify for civilian war veterans' allowances. We all know the figure which qualifies a person for unemployment insurance as well as the maximum amount and the minimum amount. If we take into account the average amount and the fact that 6,000 Newfoundlanders are affected by this measure, we find out that the amount of money going into the pockets of Newfoundlanders has been decreased by $65 million. That figure is despicable, as are the actual cheques which are being sent out. When a person receives his first cheque for unemployment insurance, it is for the first week of benefits, and two weeks after that he receives his unemployment insurance. He is paid two weeks at a time. As the House knows, unemployment insurance is averaged out to the closest dollar. If we use the divisor of the Government, we discover that in the Province of Newfoundland about 400 people are receiving cheques in the minimum amount, that is, the first cheque for $1 and then cheques for $2 thereafter.

Mr. Rodriguez: How much does it cost to put out the cheque?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has just asked a good question. It actually costs $1.56 in Canada as a whole and $1.67 in Newfoundland to process one of those cheques.

Mr. Rodriguez: Shameful.

Mr. Baker: If we add in the costs involved after the cheque is cashed, we come up with another $1. It cost $2.67 to process a cheque worth $1; $2.67 to process a cheque worth $2.

Presently in the Province of Newfoundland there are 100,400 unemployment insurance claimants. In the month of January there were 100,668 unemployment insurance claimants, and there were 227,000 people in the workforce in that month. In the month of February there were 224,000 people in the workforce of the Province of Newfoundland. For the first time in the history of Newfoundland, over 100,000 people are listed as unemployment insurance claimants.

Mr. Henderson: Over 40 per cent.

Mr. Baker: That is correct. It is over 40 per cent; in fact, it is closer to 48 per cent.

The Minister rose in the Chamber and said that the Government had created 8,000 jobs in Newfoundland in the past year. The provincial Government ran an advertisement in a newspaper indicating that it created 7,000 jobs in the past year in that province. However, I checked with the unemployment insurance office in St. John's this morning at 10 o'clock and was given the figures to which I just referred. Who knows what is the unemployment rate in Newfoundland? If over 100,000 people out of a workforce of 224,000 are unemployed, how can the Government say that it created 8,000 jobs in the past year and that unemployment is going down? From where does the Government get its figures? From where does Statistics Canada get its figures? They indicate that the Province of Newfoundland has an unemployment rate of 20 per cent. Newfoundlanders are asking: "Where are all these jobs?" What is the Government of Canada doing with the unemployment insurance? Why is it acting as it has decided to act?

The Government of Canada announced that it would cut $200 million from unemployment insurance in the November 1984 Blue Book presented by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in the Chamber. Also the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said that the Government would save $200 million. Well, that did not happen. The Measures which the Government instituted did not result in that. What has happened since those announcements? As of today, the President of the Treasury Board will pay out of the Goverment's tax dollars a bonus to regional managers in the Government of Canada who save the Government money. It is a pay-off. Who will receive that money? Will it be the deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers or regional managers? Who will receive this monetary bonus? This matter did not receive any attention in the House when the President of the Treasury Board rose and said that he would make payments to public service managers to become good managers like those in the private sector. He said that he would pay them a bonus if they met the guidelines for reducing the number of person-years. Person-years mean people, men and women working for the federal Government. If a manager does better than what was said by the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), and the former Minister of Finance who is now part of the ministerial task force on program review, he will receive a monetary bonus. I did not hear anybody from the Government object. Not very many of those who formulate public opinion, the opinion leaders in this country, the editorial writers, commented much about it.

Just think of what will happen, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the Government of Canada will meet its figure of a $200 million reduction in unemployment insurance. Yes, the Government will meet it in Newfoundland, I would say, and in practically every province in Canada.

Provinces like Newfoundland where the regional office is in Moncton, New Brunswick or Halifax, Nova Scotia or some other province will have reductions in what you call person years. You will see reductions in the amount of money paid out by the Government of Canada. How, Mr. Speaker? The President of the Treasury Board says: "We are going to give money. We are going to pay from taxpayers' dollars managers in the Public Service, reward them with cash to reduce the payment of unemployment insurance and everything else, and we will cut back on the person years," that is, men and women.

I do not know why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is finding this amusing, but perhaps he will not in a moment. The ministerial task force, called the Nielsen task force, is made up of the Deputy Prime Minister, the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance and the former Minister of Finance, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Rodriguez: From Newfoundland.

Mr. Baker: A funny thing happened yesterday. The Minister of Justice said on the air, on CBC Radio in Newfoundland and on VOCM in Newfoundland, that he was not a part of the ministerial task force, that he was not party to the recommendations of the Deputy Prime Minister. He did not know what was in the recommendations of the task force.

Mr. Rodriguez: He will never know.

Mr. Baker: Why did he say that? Because there are things in those task force reports that you would not want to be associated with if you were a Newfoundlander.

The Province of Newfoundland, the great Tory Government that gets along so well with the present federal Tory Government—

Mr. Henderson: Did.

Mr. Baker: Did, as of yesterday. It said it needed time to examine the transportation study on cuts. But all you have to do is to look at the index and you will find that one of the chief people in the study group is a representative of the Newfoundland Government. Also in the group is a member of the ministerial task force review, the Cabinet Minister from Newfoundland, the present Minister of Justice.

Now they are washing their hands of the entire procedure. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because of some of the things that have been agreed to, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows that because he sits in Cabinet. He knows that every single one of those task force reports have been taken by the ministerial group, submitted as recommendations, with time schedules, to the Planning and Priorities Committee of the federal Cabinet. The last report went to the committee on Thursday afternoon. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will not deny that because he knows it to be a fact. He will not say yes or no because of cabinet secrecy, but he knows that to be a fact. The Ministers are trying to wash their hands of the entire issue.

I want to mention just a couple of other things. I have a letter signed by two former public servants, one from Aylmer and the other from Ottawa.

Mr. Redway: What about Newfoundland?

Mr. Baker: Not from Newfoundland. I think these people have outlined the matter fairly simply. It is a point that has probably been missed by a lot of people.

Mr. Hudon: $30,000 a year.

Mr. Baker: Yes, the Hon. Member across the way says $30,000 a year. Every Member of Parliament, I believe, received the recommendations of these two people.

Very briefly, the matter concerns a public servant who has to pay into superannuation versus somebody else in the private sector who pays into an RRSP or other retirement plan. The public servant when he has finished, perhaps taken early retirement, who had worked and paid unemployment insurance, cannot draw unemployment insurance benefits. On the other hand, the man who paid into the scheme can draw unemployment insurance benefits. The absolute unfairness of the system, which the Government of Canada has initiated, is obvious to all Canadians.

Before I conclude I want to say one further thing about Newfoundland. While Newfoundland has large numbers of people on unemployment insurance claims, the Government of Newfoundland is facing a reduction in the amount of money it gets from the federal Government. This is either intentional by the Government of Canada or unintentional because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, our equalization payments in Newfoundland, as they are in Quebec and in a great many provinces, are tied to various economic factors, one of which is the price of oil. If the price of oil goes down $1, the Government of Newfoundland loses about $10 million on its equalization payments.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Do you want higher or lower prices? Which way do you want to go, George?

Mr. Baker: The Minister of National Health and Welfare is interjecting. He says, "Higher or lower. George, what do you want?" I wish the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other cabinet Ministers would examine that formula. I just said that if the price of a barrel of oil went down $1, the Government of Newfoundland would lose $10 million on its equalization payments at the end of the year.

The Minister is saying "What do you want? Lower oil prices?" If that dollar in the decrease of a barrel of oil were passed on to the consumers of Newfoundland, the slate would be clean. You add up the consumption of oil and gas in the Province of Newfoundland, and you discover that an average $1 increase in the price of a barrel of oil equals about $10 million in increased costs in oil and gas consumption in Newfoundland. You can look at the equalization formula. It is really a form of indirect taxation. Every time the price of a barrel of oil goes up, the consumer pays about $10 million in the Province of Newfoundland, $1 a barrel averaged out. When the price goes up, the Province of Newfoundland then gets $10 million on its equalization payments. It is a form of taxation by the back door. It is indirect taxation. The Minister asks for my preference. I would prefer that the saving in the decrease in the price of oil be passed on to consumers. I would much rather see consumers in Newfoundland with that money than the Government of Newfoundland.

I want to refer to the Forget Commission. A great many Members have referred to it. Let me tell you who are the most knowledgeable people on unemployment insurance in Canada. It is not the Members of this Chamber, but if you added up all the knowledge on unemployment insurance, you would not come near to the knowledge of the judges, the umpires, in the Federal Court of Appeal. From time to time I review some of the decisions they make. I get them daily in the mail. Today I received decisions of Mr. Justice Dubé, an excellent umpire, Mr. Justice Addy, Mr. Justice Cattanach, Mr. Justice Walsh, Mr. Justice Rouleau, Mr. Justice C. R. Smith, and Mr. Justice Dubinsky.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. There is a period allotted for questions and comments and I am sure that, being a very popular Member, he will get a few questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: I have a few questions to ask, Mr. Speaker, but first I should like to make a comment.

On television recently the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) referred to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) as their new star. Quite true! I keep telling that to myself and to people around me, and the worst part of it is that it is true. That is not saying much about the others!

You have not earned the job of Minister of Finance today, Sir, because I have to tell you a few things.

First, how can you say that the measure under consideration today will result in $65 million cut-backs in Newfoundland? Your calculations are off: the Department of Employment and Immigration expects to recoup only $30 million from this measure throughout Canada.

Second, you have misled your constituents. Pensions paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act are not deductible as if they were unemployment insurance benefits. So there is no problem for all those who thought they were plying dangerous waters.

Finally, before asking my last question, I would like to make preliminary remarks. Today, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about people who want to retire one year before the normal retirement age because they are entitled to early retirement benefits. So I would ask my colleague how old were those Newfoundlanders, considering they had one year to go before retirement and yet took part in the 1939-45 war?

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of External Relations, and it is obvious that it is not for internal relations. The hon. gentleman is wrong when he says that veterans' allowances and pensions are not covered. In fact, every pension that is being received that was earned from work or service is being affected. However, a disability pension is not covered. That is the difference. The hon. gentleman is talking about someone on veteran's allowance who is receiving a disability pension. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have many letters from, and have spent an awful lot of time on the telephone talking to, veterans who have been receiving $2 cheques when they had normally received $260 cheques. That is not a very good reflection on our veterans.

The hon. gentleman referred to one year before retirement age. I do not know exactly what he meant by that, but everyone who is receiving pension income from work or service for any Government or enterprise in Canada is affected. Therefore, I do not know what he is talking about.

The Member said that this will cost the Government of Canada $30 million. I must say that I have never seen such a mess in the Unemployment Insurance Commission as I have since this was announced by the Government. They do not know what they are doing. They do not know the formula. They are not allowed to deduct dollar for dollar, but they were doing it for two weeks. The Government of Canada has instituted something which the Public Service cannot administer and there will be appeals to these very knowledgeable Justices who should have been asked for their opinion by the Minister and by the Forget Commission.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my hon. friend. He asked questions of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) with respect to withdrawing this particular invidious regulation. The Minister said that the Government gave adequate notice, that people were told in November, 1984, that this would happen and if they are only now finding that their pension income will be used to calculate unemployment insurance benefits, it is their own fault. How does the Member respond to that particular proposition of the Minister? Do the Member and his Party consider this motion to be a question of confidence?

Mr. Baker: No, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of confidence because the Government of Canada has already expressed its opinion on such matters.

In answer to the first question of the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration stood in their places day after day and said that the Government did not bring this measure in out of the blue, that Canadians knew about it ages ago. Yes, it was in a Budget ages ago, but the first time that 99 per cent of the people affected knew about it was when their cheques were reduced.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and then ask a brief question of my colleague, the Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I would like to congratulate him on a very eloquent, explicit and factual speech, such as we always hear from the Hon. Member in the House. It is for that reason that this Member continues to be returned with tremendous majorities in every election. Some of the people on the Government side will not be able to claim that because they are supporting a very ill-conceived regulation put forward by the Government.

Under the new rules they have a tremendous opportunity to show that they are concerned about their constituents and that they understand them. I plead with them to get up and vote against their own Government to help the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). When she was in opposition, that Minister demonstrated that she had a conscience for poor people in the country, which is more than she is doing now. However, it is some of the other Ministers who are controlling the Government. Mr. Speaker, the buck stops there.

I would like to ask the Member for Gander-Twillingate a brief question about the contributions of UIC which are taken from Armed Forces personnel. Does the Hon. Member feel that this is in the category of another form of back door taxation by the Government?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was absolutely correct in the first statement he made. It is good to remember the old saying: "If you sleep on the floor you can't fall out of the bed".

I agree with the second point the Member made. In fact, I believe we may have a case under the Human Rights Commission and under the Constitution. Taking money from people for an insurance policy on which they cannot collect is like buying public liability insurance on your car and then not being able to collect insurance when you have an accident. That is exactly the point. By law they are paying in and now, since the Tories took over, by law they cannot collect.

• (1600)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened in facination to the Hon. Member. Most of his comments did not deal with the motion at hand but they did deal with the question of unemployment insurance. The Hon. Member was highly critical of the UIC situation, not just because of changes made since the present Government took office, but before that. Specifically, what are the official policies of the Liberal Party that they would put in place to change the UIC provisions as they now stand? Secondly, how often did the Hon. Member stand in his place in this House as a member of the former Government and criticize his Minister on this very issue?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, let me say in answer to the second question that, I am sure that if he had been here over the past 12 or 13 years he would not be asking that question of this Member.

To answer question number one, I will just repeat that what the Forget Commission and the Government of Canada should do is to hear from all the justices of the Federal Court of Canada, the Appeal Court, and all of the umpires who handle unemployment insurance cases. Therein he will find real knowledge as far as the Unemployment Insurance Act is concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I intend to put on the record a few points regarding this motion on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). The Minister is in Saskatoon continuing a very impressive record of reaching agreements with various provinces on training programs. She has been most successful. I am sure all Members would want to commend her and the Government generally for the fact that since it has been in office Canada has seen the creation of 580,000 new jobs. This has come about largely through the efforts of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Many of those jobs are filled by peole who were on unemployment insurance. It is also important to note that of those jobs more than 80 per cent are full-time. That means that families caught in the cycle of unemployment and part-time or seasonal jobs can now rely on full-time jobs. I think all of us would want to commend the Minister for that kind of job creation.

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Unless I misunderstood, the debate today is on changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I wonder why the Minister, who is very knowledgeable in this area, does not stick to the subject matter.

Mr. Skelly: I have a point or order also, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I find that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) does not have a point of order. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: It was called to the attention of previous speakers today that it was not appropriate to indicate that Members were absent from the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was referring to the absence of anyone. We only have another hour and 45 minutes and there are a few other Members in the Opposition who would like to participate in the debate.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, is it not strange? Someone points out that there are 580,000 new jobs and a lot of people are no longer on unemployment insurance. Creating jobs is the best way to get people off unemployment insurance. It is the best way to reduce the cost of Government. It is the best way to contribute to society. Yet we have Members getting up and saying, "Oh, you cannot talk about that. Just talk about the program. You cannot talk about the reality of job creation". What poppycock!

Let us go back to the time of changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Minister then was the Hon. Bryce Mackasey. I remember him getting up here day after day and saying it is a good Act but we do not want people collecting unemployment if we can get them into jobs. The Act is designed in such a way that the taxpayer will pick up the shortfall if contributions from employers and employees are not sufficient. He was always arguing that we had to have this kind of coverage and it was always based on keeping unemployment as low as possible. In that ways the program would remain as efficient as possible. To have the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) make that kind of statement—maybe I should not even react because it is probably in keeping with the calibre of her other contributions.

I enjoy listening to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He gets up here and makes a number of points and does it with such conviction that at the end, if you did not know the weakness of the argument, you would almost want to believe what he said. For example, if the Government became more efficient, perish the thought, and costs could be reduced and managers became more efficient, the Government should not recognize that. It simply should not be done. He did not think it could work. There are a lot of managers in the Government, and I have met a lot of them, who are absolutely convinced that we can be more efficient and frugal with the taxpayer's dollar. Those men and women should not only be commended, they should be recognized. This idea is not too dissimilar from an approach used in a profession I was once in, namely teaching. I was one of the people who advocated merit rating. I did not really think tenure was that great an idea. We all had to cater to a certain common denominator. However, people were opposed to the merit principle because they simply did not want to be measured against certain standards. The Hon. Member has an open mind generally. I would like to think that he agrees that there can be a reduction in person-years and greater efficiency in the Government. We have allowed the light to shine in and we are going to do more. His own leader, if he still recognizes him as such, has said that had he been Prime Minister he would reduce the annual deficit by about 50 per cent in seven years. I would like to see him do it without going through some of the very exercises done by the study teams on program review.

He talked about the task force reports. Those reports were given to this House and its respective committees so we can do the work we were elected to do, that is, look at how tax dollars are spent, how they can be spent more effectively and efficiently in the future. That is the role of a Member of Parliament. We are not afraid of Members of Parliament being critical of the Government. The fact that people sit in the front benches, either in this Government or in previous Governments, does not mean that they know everything about all of the programs and that greater efficiencies cannot be effected. Canadians from all walks of life contributed their time, talent and experience so that we could do just that. The Hon. Member should keep that in mind.

I also want to take strong exception to a statement made by the Hon. Member that the Government of Newfoundland will suffer a reduction in contributions by the federal Government on established programs financing. That simply is not true. It is not true for Newfoundland, it is not true for any provincial Government and it is not true for any Canadian society. If he looks at Bill C-90 he will notice very carefully that there is a built-in inflation factor in that Bill which will increase EPF, both for health care and for post-secondary education, up to one percentage point above projected inflation. So for him to say that there will be a reduction is just not so.

• (1610)

Mr. Desrosiers: He's a liar.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What he should point out—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe I did hear an interjection which I do not consider to be parliamentary and I would hope that the Hon. Member would withdraw the remark. The Hon. Member will have to speak from his seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: I withdraw that remark, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, coming back to the EPF situation, I think it is important that Members in this Chamber, when they make a defence or say that they oppose a Government action, at least stay with the facts, and the facts are simply that EPF is going to rise over the next five years. I can give him figures that EPF is projected to go from the last five-year block of $65 billion for those two programs about $90 billion for the next five years.

If Members on the opposite side are fair they will have to recognize that that is not a reduction, that is an increase. I think what they are talking about is that if the present formula had been extended for another five years, the amount of money would have been greater than that which is now included in the legislation. If that is the argument they want to make, that is a fair argument on their part, and I respect that argument, but I do not respect an argument which simply does not square with the facts, because it does not.

Coming back to the motion before us, you will know that the UI program was originally designed in 1940 to promote the economic and social security of workers in Canada by providing them with an income protection from the time they left one job until they found another job. It was that period of time for which unemployment insurance was designed. It was meant to reflect the strict application of social insurance principles and social objectives. Although coverage has been gradually expanded, the adherence to social insurance principles was of prime continuing concern.

By the end of the 1950s I think most people would see the program as having been not only expanded, but generally being universally applied under those conditions or those provisions.

The 1960s was a period of greater legislative stability than the previous two decades. There were some changes made to the UI program as well during the 1960s, but they were in response to changes in earnings and living costs. At that time already there was a clear indication and a clear sign of the dissatisfaction with the program, and so in the 1970s some fundamental changes to the program were brought in.

In 1971, as I have already indicated, the unemployment insurance program was amended to include two important principles. They are the coverage of all employees who were in insurable employment and also incorporated in this concept was the necessity that workers who suffer an interruption of earnings be eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits.

It is in accordance with these two basic principles that it was determined that earnings arising from employment should be taken into consideration for unemployment insurance benefits. This, of course, was to prevent double-indemnification, which is a founding principle for all insurance schemes. That was the principle in 1971, and Members can go back to that debate and to the Bill to discover it.

The unemployment insurance program, it must be remembered, is not a savings plan, but rather it was to be an insurance plan. I must point out that unemployment insurance coverage should not be dependent upon an individual's likelihood of collecting benefits. I go back to the time when some of us were not in the House in 1971 and the changes that were made. I remember myself being active then in various teachers' organizations. We made the point at the time that we should not be included in the unemployment insurance program as the changes were being made. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) probably remembers that period as well.

We made the point that it was highly unlikely that that group of people would collect unemployment insurance, and the question that obviously followed then was, if we do not collect or are not eligible to collect—because we were not eligible to collect under the agreement with school divisions—why should we then have to pay the unemployment insurance premiums? One of the arguments that was made was that it is a universal plan, you do not know if you will be unemployed at some future point in time, which theoretically is correct. Second, because you were in the labour force you had to contribute to the risk, you had to broaden the base of the risk, and yes, there would be groups and professions in society who would have a lesser likelihood of collecting unemployment insurance, but that did not obviate their obligation to pay into the fund. That was a general insurance principle which was implemented at the time.

What is interesting is to take a look at whether or not that theory, in fact, has been borne out. I do not have the last figures, for example, for the teaching profession, but I do know there was a period of time when a number of people in that profession, as its numbers were being contracted as schools were being reduced because of a reduction in the number of children in school, took new training other than in their profession and were on unemployment insurance and, in fact, collected.

Some people made the argument during the mid-1970s, for example, that group would contribute to the general fund for unemployment insurance and that there would be a net benefit to the fund from that larger group. That did not happen, whether or not actuarially that can be proven, I am not here to argue the point. What I am saying is that, regardless of what happened in 1971 in terms of what much of it, I believe, was good intention in terms of a discussion of the Bill, in fact, what we saw in practice in the 1970s, as unemployment rose and as demographic changes took place in Canadian society, is that some of the arguments that had been made in 1970-1971 to sell the Bill, in fact, did not find their way into actual fact as we took a look at the implementation of the Bill itself.

It is important here to note that, yes, there were people at that time who were drawn into the unemployment insurance plan who previously had not been in the old plan, and who said very clearly that it was very unlikely they would collect any benefits from it. I must point out that unemployment insurance coverage should not be dependent upon an individual's likelihood of collecting benefits. That was the principle. Instead, UI is to be viewed as a pooled risk. Thus while the amount of certain individuals' pensions may reduce the amount of benefits to which they are entitled or may even preclude them from receiving UI benefits, they had been protected against the contingency of an interruption in their earnings during the whole time they paid contributions to the unemployment insurance program. It is essentially this protection that their contributions covered. I think that principle we understand, even though sometimes, as I said, it caught people in the net who earlier had not been in the net and might not have wanted to get caught under the changes of 1971.

Nonetheless, it is important to remember that, while collecting unemployment insurance benefits, workers who are unemployed can receive earnings of up to 25 per cent of their weekly benefit rates without those earnings affecting the UI benefits paid in any week of unemployment. As pensions are included under this 25 per cent rule, those with modest pensions will continue to be eligible for UI benefits thus not depriving unemployed workers of much needed basic UI support. Therefore, only those pensioners who receive a substantial pension, exceeding even the maximum amount of unemployment insurance benefits payable, may be precluded from receiving UI benefits when they retire.

I think an equally important issue in this regard is that in addition to providing universal coverage to all Canadian workers the UI program must remain affordable to the taxpayer contributing either through premiums or through taxation itself. That is a principle as well that we should not forget. The Government feels that a claimant with an income from employment should not be treated in the same way as a claimant who has no income when it comes to determining eligibility to unemployment insurance benefits and the amount that should be paid. I do not think we can abrogate our responsibilities for the control of the UI funds by paying benefits to those who do not have an interruption of earnings.

We have to make one or two other points on the motion we have before us today. The Government, in its last 18 months, has brought forward other plans as well for people exactly in that age group. For instance, the Canadian Jobs Strategy ensures that federal resources are used effectively to bring direct assistance to those most in need. The re-entry option, for example, is helping many older women who may require career counselling and instruction in job search techniques or skills upgrading.

● (1620)

The Skill Investment Program is also helping older workers to plan for change in advance. They can train for the future before their existing skills become obsolete.

The Community Futures Program will also benefit many older workers in communities across Canada—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to be difficult but there are a number of Members on both sides of the House who want to take advantage of the new spirit and rules to discuss the issue which has specifically been placed before the House by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

I have been listening patiently to the Minister and have heard absolutely no mention of the provisions of unemployment insurance income.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but that is not a point of order. The Minister has a couple of minutes in which to finish his comments.

If the Hon. Member wants to know the difference between a point of order and debate, she can come to my chamber later. I would like to discuss it with her.

Ms. Copps: I would be very happy to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Community Futures Program will also benefit many older workers in communities across Canada experiencing economic decline, chronic unemployment or plant closures about which we have heard so much.

Not only has the Minister of Employment and Immigration acted in these areas to help older workers, she is most conscious of the changes that are referred to in the motion before us today.

The two principles upon which the Minister has worked are the universal payment of premiums and that a person with no employment income or no job has been and will remain eligible.

The Minister stated that the notice of change was given well in advance. In fact, the notice of change was highlighted in the statement of November 8, 1984. It was given again in a press release on December 21, 1984.

It was stated a few minutes ago that the average Canadian who might be affected by this provision was not aware of this change. In March, 1985, the Minister sent some 650,000 letters to all employers participating in unemployment insurance to explain the provisions.

Finally, let me repeat that this question has been referred to the Forget Commission. The Minister has discussed it with the Chairman of the Commission, and although this does not fall directly within my ministerial responsibilities, I have had an opportunity to discuss this issue personally with the Commissioner as well. I know that he is sensitive to the issue and will consider it when making recommendations on the general approach to unemployment insurance and how it can be improved.

I suggest that the Minister has thoroughly informed Members of her approach concerning the recommendations which she will follow once they are given.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister is from Manitoba he will no doubt be familiar with the specific case of Rudolph Lange. This was, in fact, a test case in which the Board of Referees decided that the Government's action to interpret the use of pension and severance benefits as income was a violation of the law. The board ruled in favour of Mr. Lange. In the meantime, the Government has decided to appeal that decision and no money has been given to Mr. Lange. Why is the Government appealing that decision?

Second, does the Minister not believe that Mr. Lange should get his money in the interim, because it has been rightfully awarded to him in a favourable decision by the Board of Referees?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on the specific case but I can give the Hon. Member the general principle. The first step is that the Board of Referees has made a decision in favour of the person whom she has mentioned. That decision has been appealed and, being before the courts, is sub judice. I believe she recognizes that no decision will be rendered from here until all steps and decisions affecting both parties have been taken.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, it is with some sadness that I listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I thought there would be a new era and a new atmosphere in this place as a result of our approval of the reform and new rules introduced by the committee chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). One of the changes is that Opposition Day motions such as this one could be voted on freely, without involving confidence in the Government. It was in that spirit that I brought this motion forward.

What we have heard is the Party line being laid down by the front benches of the Conservative caucus. I was prepared to be a little conciliatory, but it seems that they have drawn the line and it is down the middle of that aisle. I appeal to those Members opposite who have a conscience about this matter, and I want to ask the Minister specifically—

Mr. Mayer: What a windbag.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why don't you go back to sleep? Why don't you get up and make a speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Mayer: Why don't you open your eyes and stop trying to suck and blow at the same time?

Mr. Skelly: When did you wake up?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I hope the Hon. Member has a question.

Mr. Rodriguez: When teachers and Armed Forces personnel were included in the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971, the Minister recalled the debate which took place with teachers and others who did not want to be included in that Act. Yet the Government announced in November, 1984, that this change to the UI provisions would be made by regulation. The Act was changed by cabinet fiat with no opportunity for a Bill to go through the House with the proper consultative process that it would allow.

I believe that rather than changing the Act by one announcement in November, 1984, the Government should have referred the issue of pensions and the issue of severance and holiday pay to the Forget Commission which was set up in the spring of 1985. Canadians could have had an input into that commission, a report could have been made to the Government and the appropriate changes could take place. I suggest that this would be the proper way to review the program. Does the Minister agree that this would be the proper procedure and, if so, will his colleagues support the motion before the House today?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt talks about a new spirit. I appreciate his recognition of that new spirit and I am sure that his response was given in that new spirit as well.

The Government made a decision and announced it through legitimate means. The Government has both the right and responsibility to make those changes, and they were announced on three separate occasions as well as in response to innumerable questions in the House. The Hon. Member asked a number of those questions.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration and I have given the Hon. Member the assurance that the Forget Commission has been given every opportunity to examine this part of the Act as well as others.

The decision of the Government stands and, as a member of the Government, I have reiterated it for him today.

I appreciate the Hon Member's motion and his intent, but I am saying to him that the decision of the Government stands until the Forget Commission comes back with its report.

• (1630)

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Minister say in his address that EPF funding has not been cut. In the Charlottetown Guardian on March 10, 1986, the Minister of Health and Social Services of Prince Edward Island, Mr. Fogarty, is quoted as saying that the Province of Prince Edward Island will get $11 million less than it originally anticipated over the next five years under the EPF formula.

Could the Minister clarify that, because there seems to be a tremendous misconception about EPF funding? The Government is saying there are no cuts and the provinces and departments within provinces are saying, yes, indeed there are cuts.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I know that as a former Member of a provincial administration he asks that question both legitimately and seriously. I do not know whether the Hon. Member was here at the time I gave an explanation, but I believe two points have to be made on the question of EPF. I believe Mr. Fogarty has looked at the last five years, the formula which just ended, and projected as if that formula had stayed in place over the next five years to 1990-91. Mr. Fogarty, when he makes the point, anticipated—and I think the key word is "anticipated"—the formula as if there had been no change. Again, I am not necessarily trying to be partisan, but I believe the Hon. Member will know that formula changes were made in the previous administration as well in view of the financial realities. Over the next five years, in Bill C-90, for example, there will be an actual increase in the amount of money the provinces will receive under the BLOC funding, the BLOC formula, which includes the federal Government's share of health care and post-secondary education.

During the last five years, about $65 billion was transferred from federal coffers to provincial coffers for those two programs, and it is projected under the new Bill that approximately $90 billion will be transferred in the next five years. It is obviously a substantial increase.

Ms. Copps: There has been a decrease. You are misleading the House.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am not misleading the House, and I wish the Hon. Member could see the point—

Ms. Copps: You are absolutely misleading the House. There has been a decrease in the increase of transfer payments.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): If the Hon. Member wants to start to make a speech, I wish she would at least make a speech which is both intelligible and true.

Ms. Copps: Well, tell the truth.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I am saying to the Hon. Member is that when the provinces made that point—such as was done by Mr. Fogarty—on something alleged or anticipated, it was on the old formula. The new formula does in fact have increases. It is not a cut of the previous amount of money they received. In fact, it is an increase.

I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, if she had any brains in her head, would understand that.

Ms. Copps: You don't know how to count, that's your problem.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware of the concerns—

Ms. Copps: Ask the Government of Manitoba what it thinks about your figures. At least tell the truth.

Mr. Redway: I wonder if I could have order, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I cannot seem to hear anyone talking in this Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member please ask his question.

Mr. Redway: I can understand that. I have been trying to talk and I can understand why you cannot hear me talking, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister is aware of the concerns of a great many Government supporters concerning the treatment of pension income as income for the purposes of unemployment insurance benefits. I know that he and other Ministers share that concern. I was interested to hear his comments relating to the Forget Commission. Of course, Government Membersare relying on the fact that the Forget Commission is reviewing this matter and that the Government has committed itself to act in the light of those recommendations. Since the Minister appeared before the Forget Commission—I understood from his comments that he had been in touch with it—could he tell us today exactly when we can expect to have a report from the Forget Commission. Of course, Government Members are re-expeditiously?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to clarify for the Hon. Member that I did not appear before the Forget Commission.

Mr. Nunziata: Why didn't you?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I did have a private discussion with Mr. Forget on this issue. I personally asked, as one Member of Cabinet and of the Government that he look at it expeditiously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. We are over the time now by a minute and a half because of the few interjections.

Mr. Nunziata: With unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, not this time.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for placing before the House what is probably the first resolution that can demonstrate that parliamentary reform can work.

I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) illustrated the problem very succinctly this afternoon. We have argued for the entire day, rationally, intelligently and without rancour, a motion to have this House urge the Government to withdraw an offending regulation. Government Members have heard our case. I am under the impression that all Liberals will support this motion. The New Democrats will vote for it. I suspect that some Government Members will weigh in their minds what the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as the representative of the Government, had to say today and they will weigh what the Liberals and the New Democrats have said. They will weigh in their minds the letter of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), the contents of the letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to that same Minister asking for modification of the offending regulation, and they will weigh what has been said within the Conservative caucus, I assume, by Members of Parliament on the Government side who have been listening to their constituents.

I would point out that the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), a Conservative Member for a long time, has the interests of the Armed Forces at heart. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton) also represents an area with a very large military area establishment, and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) has in his riding a military establishment at Nanoose. They must have been listening to their constituents. I am sure Hon. Members have listened to retired people from the Armed Forces, the RCMP and, indeed, the many other people who have been left out of the protection of unemployment insurance by this offending regulation.

I know Government Members are evaluating all this. They are under tremendous pressure from their constituents. They know what is fair and what is not fair. And even some of the most prominent members of their own Government have asked that this be changed. This is the essence of parliamentary reform. I do not envy the Government Members. They have two choices. They can support their constituents and fulfil their responsibility for which they were sent to this House, or they can toe the Government line.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that the Government has the right and the responsibility to make decisions and to carry out those decisions. He said: "We have made a decision on this and we will carry it out". I might remind him, however, that the same statement was made in the House week after week with respect to Old Age Security deindexing until the "grey panthers" of this country rose up in such numbers that the Government realized it would be shot into oblivion if it followed through on that ill-conceived decision.

I would point out to Conservative Members here today that they have a right to vote and they have a responsibility to support their constituents. They must make the judgment with respect to whether or not this move is fair. Indeed, we have made the argument that it is not fair. In fact, there was no consultation. It was simply done in the dark of night in some black cabinet meeting where Ministers decided, without proper guidance and input from their back-benchers with respect to the effect of such a move. Now that the decision has been brought forward in the light of day, constituents have had a chance to look at it. People see that they will be adversely affected by it and they say that it is a mistake.

The very softly worded resolution which would change this mistake is before the House today. I would again congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, for identifying this issue which allows an opportunity to Members of the House to vote on it. I think Government Members have not only to weigh the merits of the issue today, they must keep in mind that parliamentary reform is riding on it. It is an extremely unfair move, one which is not only the subject of this Parliament but that of provincial legislatures which will consider the question. The question has been dealt with in the Nova Scotia Legislature. A resolution was put forward from there to the Government of Canada stating that it is wrong and that it should be reconsidered. The British Columbia Legislature will soon have an opportunity to consider a motion such as the one which is before us. Since there are many British Columbians who will be adversely affected by it, I suspect they, too, will judge that it is a mistake. I believe they, too, will send a clear message to Ottawa stating that a mistake has been made. If there is such an unanimous decision reached in the British Columbia Legislature, then I think the Government in Ottawa must re-examine the issue. It would be a mistake for Conservative back-benchers, who must judge the issue and explain it to their constituents, not to support the motion today.

What does the motion ask? It asks that a mistake which has been made be corrected. It is a mistake which withdraws unemployment insuance benefits through the mechanism of declaring severance pay and pensions as income, thereby prohibiting the opportunity to collect unemployment insurance. This is something for which they have paid and which many people before them have had the opportunity to collect. Even today others who find themselves in a slightly different position in relation to the law are still collecting benefits. Examples of that have been put forward to the House. This is a measure which must be changed. The only way it can be changed is for government Members to support the motion. There is no shame in showing such support. I ask Hon. Members at what time they will accept the problem of parliamentary reform. There is no shame in acknowledging that a mistake has been made. The Government's position with respect to Old Age Security illustrates that point. There is no great political difficulty in saying that, perhaps, we should re-examine this particular problem, rectify it and recover the public revenue from other sources more capable of paying. Government Members will have to make this judgment.

The Forget Commission has been referred to many times in an attempt to get out from under the problem. Government Members realize they are in great difficulty with respect to this decision. They seem to say: "Let the Forget Commission report on it". The commission will likely come back with an optimistic view in the fall of 1986. By that time many thousands of Canadians will have lost their unemployment insurance as a result of this mechanism. It can be rectified right now. It can be rectified with very little dislocation to the Government since most of those who have lost their benefits are still in the appeal process. Indeed, boards of referees across the country are somewhat confused in terms of this matter. Some of them are handing down decisions which deny appeals while others are upholding them. For example, some 20-odd appeals have been upheld in Nanaimo. The process will be carried on to umpires. I imagine that at some point in time the Supreme Court of Canada will be required to make a judgment on it.

This regulation of the Government is unfair. It may even be illegal. It will generate enormous political heat because of its unfairness. Would it not be more simple for the Government to say that it will restore the rights removed and wait for the report of the Forget Commission? Would it not be better for the Government to say that it will develop recommendations from the report for Parliament and let Parliament make the decision as to which way we should go on this issue? That is the correct way to proceed. Again, I emphasize that there is no problem in suggesting that in the application of the regulation we have a problem. That problem can be rectified by withdrawing the regulation, restoring the benefits to the individuals involved and moving on.

I now wish to refer to a number of special cases. The first deals with members of the Armed Forces. In the constituency I represent I have an Armed Forces station at Holberg and there is another at Comox. There are thousands of people who have retired from the Armed Forces who have moved into the area. I estimate we are talking of something in the order of 6,000 people who are extremely upset as a result of the Government's actions. They are upset because of the unfairness of the move. As has been pointed out previously, members of the Armed Forces contribute through premiums to the Unemployment Insurance Program even though they can now never collect. That is unfair. Members of the Armed Forces are put out of the Armed Forces. They do not have a choice with respect to whether or not they are retired. They are put out and that is it. Therefore, because of that particular situation I think it is incumbent upon Parliament to make sure that they are entitled to collect unemployment insurance benefits in order to make the transition. Most members of the Armed Forces who retire do so at a time of life when the transition is extremely difficult and expensive to make. Their children are almost grown and they are usually eating them out of house and home. They are very expensive to clothe. The parents are looking at post-secondary education, whether it be vocational training, university or technical schools. These institutions are not found in close proximity to the areas which I represent. Children of the people in Comox who need to get to post-secondary institutions must travel long distances. They must board out. Their costs are much higher than those of other Canadians. The point I am making is that the House should seriously consider this situation and vote together on it in order to restore those benefits. In this way we can make the adjustment for the people a little more humane. Those people who are told that they must leave their jobs will at least know that there will be some security provided through unemployment insurance benefits.

Another aspect of the situation is that in planning pension income the unemployment insurance adjustment period is determined in the development of that for an appropriate level of pension. To withdraw it part way through the game is to do an enormous disservice to those people who have contributed and who have served their country. Through no fault of their own they lose their employment and have to go through a very severe financial adjustment. I am certain that all Members of the House feel that a redress should be made for those individuals. It would only be a misguided response to the Government's line which says: "Since you are members of the Government, you cannot vote in favour of this motion". In the spirit of parliamentary reform, members of the Government should be supportive of such a move in the form of the resolution before us today.

There is another issue which involves retired members of the Armed Forces. These people receive small pensions. To try to deal with the latter years of family life, in terms of children leaving home, purchasing new homes and trying to establish themselves in new employment, many of these people must take part-time jobs which pay the minimum wage. They are still required to pay unemployment insurance. When they become ill they cannot collect sick benefits. They cannot collect unemployment insurance when they pick up seasonal work. This is grossly unfair. We should provide individuals at that time of life with some security, and unemployment insurance was a satisfactory mechanism for doing that. It was fair, and it was a mistake to remove it.

• (1650)

The Government has attacked the Armed Forces, the RCMP and the Public Service on another front. When will the Government stop the attack? There was a proposal in the same recommendations of the Conservative Government to deindex the pensions of members of the Armed Forces down to the level of inflation. It is a mistake. Even the previous Government is not without fault here. When inflation rates were running at the 14 per cent level, it felt that an appropriate level of indexation would be down around the 6 per cent and 5 per cent levels. That was absolutely wrong. Those people on small pensions, who earned their qualification when the salaries of the Armed Forces were much lower, were seriously harmed and will probably never catch up on their pensions because of that attack on their pension income. If the Government compounds its mistake of denying unemployment insurance benefits to those members of the Armed Forces who are retiring by deindexing their pensions, a grievous insult would be inflicted on Canadians, and I do not think they will sit down and take it. Indeed, we in the New Democratic Party intend to support them to the fullest, to win back the benefits they have lost and to preserve the ones they have today.

My counterpart in the Comox constituency, Karen Sanford, will be raising this matter in the provincial Legislature of British Columbia. I would be very surprised if both sides of that House did not indicate to the Government of Canada that it made a mistake and request it to make that change. Karen Sanford will be raising that matter on behalf of her constituents, and the Government Members in this House should be raising it on behalf of their constituents as well.

Earlier today a Government Member mentioned that he could not support it because generals would be collecting unemployment insurance. I hope the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) made that comment tongue in cheek. He knows that there are thousands and thousands of non-commissioned officers who are in very serious financial situations because of what the Government has done to date. Because of one or two individuals, the Member would stop this measure from being retracted or removed so that the vast majority of affected people would be allowed to benefit from a program from which the Government intended them to benefit in order to solve their problems. It is a matter of serious concern. We share the concern about certain individuals with extremely high incomes being entitled to this benefit, but we will certainly not harm thousands and thousands of people because of the odd one who slips through. I hope that Hon. Member will in fact vote with us. I know he has many members of the Armed Forces in his area. Also I know that he is concerned about their welfare and recognizes with some apprehension the kind of harm which this measure could cause.

I should like to refer to another area of concern, there are so many. The Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that he had been a teacher in another life; I too was a teacher in another life. I know that it is a demanding profession. After a certain number of years, some teachers feel that they have made a significant contribution and would like to change fields. They opt for early retirement; they take a diminished pension. There is assistance from the unemployment insurance fund to make that transition. The nice thing about it is that someone else comes into the profession behind them. One comes off unemployment insurance while the other goes on it to make the transition into another occupation or another area of contribution. The net effect on the Government of Canada is zero. However, a young person is working and a senior person is retiring or moving into another area after having opted for a much lower pension. It would be deemed fair by most Canadians to say that that is a rational use of public funds—to allow more young people to obtain work and to allow older people who have made their contribution to retire or move into another area in which they would like to make a contribution, possibly at a much lower salary. That use of early retirement is very valid. Teachers are being discouraged from taking early retirement because of the unemployment insurance regulation which cuts the opportunity to make a transition with some dignity and with some financial stability; they are facing the same situation. The list of groups affected unfairly by this goes on and on. They were not consulted. The rules were changed on them part way through the game. All their plans were in place, and suddenly those plans went down the drain because the Government changed the regulation. It is grossly unfair; it is unwise.

Today we in the House have an opportunity to kick off parliamentary reform in a very meaningful way. Government Members can judge the merits of the arguments put by the Deputy Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and by those many Government Members who represent ridings in which there are large populations of retired members of the Armed Forces. They can weigh those arguments along with what their constituents and other individuals who will be affected have said. Also they can weigh what was said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope he re-evaluates his position on this particular matter. We as a Parliament could remove that offending regulation, replace those benefits which were taken away, and basically wait for the results of the Forget Commission to look at what should be done in a global and planned way to the unemployment insurance fund. That makes sense, and that ends my presentation this afternoon.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). I would like to make a comment and then ask him a question. I want to make it clear, though, to the Member and to other Members of the House that this is not a case of opposition to the principle of providing unemployment insurance benefits to deserving people. This is the debate of a motion before the House. While the motion might be acceptable in some ways, it is the role of the Hon. Members to point out its deficiencies, and that is what I want to do in making a comment.

I will not even mention the fact that this matter has been before the House of Commons since November, 1984. I will not even mention the fact that there have been supply periods and Opposition Days galore between that date and today, March 20, 1986. I will not mention the fact that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) could have raised this matter on numerous occasions when it was not cast in stone, when no action had been taken, and when all Members could have voted freely on the matter. He waited until it had become a fait accompli, until the action had been taken. Now he comes, after the horse has been stolen, and asks us to lock the barn door and participate in that process.

I want to tell him, very briefly, what is the matter with the process and with the resolution which he brought forward for those of us who support the fight of early retirees and recognize that there are people who need unemployment insurance benefits in addition to their pension income. Let me tell him what is wrong. He is opening the door completely wide. He is letting in the President of the Bank of Montreal, executives across the country, generals and so on. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River said that it would only be one or two generals. Let him produce the statistics and tell us how many people with incomes of $40,000 and more will benefit if this change were made today in the House of Commons. We are not here to protect bank executives. We are not here to protect those people who have earned a living over a 30-35 year working period and have retired at age 65 and want unemployment for a year after retirement. That is not the purpose of the fund. The purpose of the fund is to aid those people who need that income because they have lost their employment, not superannuates who are 65 years of age, not retired generals, not retired bank executives and so on. If the Hon. Member does not understand that and he cannot present that case to the House of Commons, no wonder he will lose; no wonder the motion will be voted down. They have not adopted the process.

I will not ask the Hon. Member why this matter was not raised a month ago or six months ago, before action was taken. What proposal does the Hon. Member have to pay for this? Almost $12 billion was spent on unemployment insurance in 1985. The income to the fund was in the area of $8 billion. There was a $4 billion deficit. He is saying right in this House of Commons today: "Pay the generals unemployment insurance. Pay the bank executive". Who is going to pay for that? The taxpayers of Canada? That will add to the deficit. Is the Hon. Member asking us to direct the taxpayers of Canada to pay that money?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there are three points which the Hon. Member for Halifax West has made. I hope that there is sufficient time for him to reconsider his position. First, the President of the Bank of Montreal—and I know this for a fact—has organized his affairs in such a way that he will be drawing his pension so that he will be able to collect unemployment insurance plus his pension income.

I have spoken with several generals in the Armed Forces who have arranged deferrals in their pensions and are drawing out RRSPs in such a way that they will be able to collect unemployment insurance, even though the corporals and the enlisted ranks will not be able to collect it. That is the basic unfairness which the Member's Government has put in place. It is a situation where generals and the President of the Bank of Montreal can still collect unemployment insurance while the corporals and the master warrant officers, the group who needs the money, cannot have it. That is the gross unfairness of the Government's position. It is my hope that the Hon. Member will reconsider his position.

The second point the Member made was that the barn door is already closed. It is not already closed. Virtually all of these cases are now in appeal before the Board of Referees. Some cases have been heard. There are 25 of them in Nanaimo in which the Board of Referees says that it is wrong, pay them. Now the Government is appealing. It is not too late to change.

Even though the Hon. Member for Halifax West is against members of the Armed Forces and other people from collecting unemployment insurance, many of the Members on the other side may have weighed his remarks and said, "I do not agree with that. I am going to vote on the side of fairness. I am going to vote for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt's position. He should withdraw this offending regulation and restore benefits to the people who justly need them".

Mr. James: First, I have a comment and then I will ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

The Unemployment Insurance Program was not designed to become a second income. It was to be the first payer. If a claimant received money from some other source, then that money was deducted. If a person had a job in a restaurant and worked as a waitress for a time, an amount was deducted from the claim.

It appeared very unfair to me if a pensioner did not have his UI deducted. Costs have escalated. The Hon. Member has been here a good long time. He would know that in 1983 the deficit in the UI account increased to $4 billion from $2.4 billion in 1981. Much of this increase occurred because of the add-ons that took place.

I am concerned about the speeches that have been made about the changes which the Government has made, because somebody else is paying. I was in small business and still own a small business. The worker, the employer and the Government pay. When the Government has nothing more than the workers or the employers, where does the Member thinks all this money comes from?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, first we are talking in the order of $30 million annually that is being saved. On the scale of the UI pay-out, that is minimal, but the hardship is very real and hard. It is unfair to allow this to go on for a period of time. The express intent in previous legislation was to create a situation to help people through the transition.

It is unfair to change that by regulation and not in the context of what we are going to do with the unemployment insurance legislation. I would hope the Hon. Member would see that. I would hope he would see that what has come to pass is unfair.

He diverted the conversation into an area that is very near and dear to my heart. When the UI account went so badly into deficit, this country went through almost the worst recession it has ever had. We helped an enormous number of people by having that unemployment insurance. If the Member was in small business, he would know that in my area of the country thousands and thousands of small business people benefited. During that period of income loss, the unemployment insurance fund was there to pick up that loss. It not only kept workers going but it kept small businesses going and the people they employ. Let us not make the mistake of thinking that the small business sector did not, through that recession, benefit profoundly.

There are areas of that unemployment insurance fund where we should be paying unemployment insurance to small businesses. I have had hundreds of contractors coming in to me over a period of time saying to me "My God, if they are laid off in the pulp mill they will get unemployment insurance—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt but the Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to question a few Conservative Members of Parliament. We know that today is the day we get a chance to test out the much trumpeted new rules. We also know there is a growing dissatisfaction among some Conservative Members of Parliament about the Government's cruel and unjust decision to include severance pay, vacation and pension benefit as income for the purpose of unemployment insurance.

A number of Conservative Members are pulling the wool over the eyes of the public. I look, for example, to The Daily Gleaner. The progressive Conservative women—and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, in every Party the women are the most progressive—passed a resolution saying the unemployment insurance changes were unfair. Not only did they pass a resolution but they organized a meeting, and over 500 people packed the hall, including the MP for the area. The MP was in total agreement with the stand taken against the change in UIC pension policy. He further stated that the petition circulated was now on the desk of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Where is the Member of Parliament for that area at the moment? Where is the Member of Parliament who did not even have the courage to come to the House today to speak on this issue?

Mr. Malone: Order.

Ms. Copps: Is the Member representing Gagetown in so cowardly a way that he does not come into the House?

Mr. Malone: Order.

Ms. Copps: He promised to fight for the issue, but he is not here.

I would like to ask why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tried to slough off the question I asked him as it related to a specific case in the City of Winnipeg.

I received a call today from The Winnipeg Free Press asking me why I was interested in raising this case when not a Progressive Conservative Member from the Province of Manitoba was prepared to fight for the rights of an individual constituent who had a positive finding from the Board of Referees. I was further asked what the Government is doing. Its Members are failing to speak out on this issue. I hope they will be here at 5.45 p.m. to vote with the Opposition on this important issue. Why is the Government silent when Armed Forces personnel brass are intimidating members of the Armed Forces to stop them from signing petitions against this measure?

I have information that the brass in the Armed Forces have contacted individuals at the local bases advising them not to sign petitions against this measure. Again, we see they are trying to cut off debate, the very lifeline, not only of members of the Armed Forces but of other individuals who have been hurt by this measure.

We heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare talk about how they were not prepared to move on this issue because they were waiting for the Forget Commission Report. I can give you chapter, verse and example of people who have already had to put their homes up for sale in Canada because of this measure, Mr. Speaker. If you are 58, 59 or 60 years of age and you are on an early pension, it is not enough to help you survive. If you happen to be raising a family, there is no way you can make mortgage payments. I can show you that this particular measure has driven people of Canada out onto the streets. It is a real shame that the Members on the Government side of the House do not demand that, at least in the interim until the results of the Forget Commission are known, the Government roll back this cruel, unjust and unfair legislation. If they do not, they will pay the political price.

• (1710)

This issue will not topple the Government today or next week, but it will fester. When organizations like the Oromocto P.C. Women's Association are challenging the Government on this issue, and suggesting that they are prepared to take their fight to the Canadian Human Rights Commission because they believe it is a violation of human rights, there is a pot of trouble brewing.

If the Government is interested, in the very least in listening to the responses of its own members, it should take heed and listen to the message of the women of Oromocto and, in particular, the women of the Progressive Conservative Association of Oromocto who have taken this issue on as their cause. They realize that the time when a person is being dislocated and forced into retirement by the Armed Forces, or dislocated from a job, is the time when they can least afford to pay the price for this change.

One of the Government Members said that the unemployment insurance scheme was intended to be applied to those people who have no income. The facts are that the unemployment insurance provisions were intended to be insurance against loss of a job. As was so ably pointed out by one of my colleagues, this particular measure strikes primarily at working poor and blue collar workers.

If you are an investment money manager who happens to have purchased a private money plan and have a self-directed RRSP, you are exempted from these provisions. When the Government instituted this unfair and cruel tax on the middle-income and poor people, it sent a little notice out with the first cheque on January 5 saying that if you have a private RRSP you are exempt. It is all right if you know how to move your money around, if you have become a landlord, and have investment income from other sources.

Through this particular measure the Government is turning unemployment insurance benefits into a welfare scheme. It is turning unemployment insurance benefits into a means-tested scheme, particularly for those salaried employees who are the middle and lower-income earners in the country. The measures quite clearly do not affect the self-employed and those who have their own private money purchase plans, but they affect those people who may have a small pension.

I can give you names of hundreds of individuals who have contacted my office. For example, Peter Benczi finds himself, through no fault of his own, out on the street. He filed an appeal with the Unemployment Insurance Commission and hopes it will rule in his favour. Unfortunately, if it does, it is highly likely that the Government will appeal the decision as it did in the case of the gentleman from Winnipeg to whom I referred earlier. He went to the Board of Referees which was established by the Government to determine who was right and who was wrong. He fought his case and won. He should have received his pay but, instead, the Government appealed it. The Government has the finances and resourcess to appeal this all the way to the Supreme Court, but this particular gentleman does not have those resources. Why does the Government not pay him in a show of good faith? Why does the Government not, at the very least, in anticipation of the results of the Forget Commission, say that it will declare a moratorium on this unfair law, at least until it has heard what the Forget Commission has to say?

Unlike the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I made a presentation to the Forget Commission. The commissioners were extremely sympathetic, but said their hands were tied. They could not force the Government to make changes in the interim. They were looking at the over-all structure of the unemployment insurance scheme and would not be ready to report until at least the fall of 1986. In the meantime, hundreds of workers are losing their homes, being deprived of benefits, and having their human rights stripped from them simply because the Government fails to listen to people like the P.C. Women's Association of Oromocto.

I learned a lesson when I was a member of the Liberal Opposition in Ontario. At that time there was a Budget introduced by Marc Lalonde. He decided in his wisdom that he would start to declare workers' compensation benefits as income for the purpose of calculating the guaranteed income supplement. I disagreed with him and wrote to him at the time. As a result of that particular small change in the Budget, hundreds, if not thousands, of workers who had perhaps a very small worker's compensation pension as well as their old age pension, had their guaranteed income supplement cut back.

I wrote to Mr. Lalonde saying that this may not be the most earth-shattering measure in his Budget, but that it would stick in the craw of Canadians for a long time. when I travelled in my riding and spoke with injured workers, they asked why the Liberal Government took this measure. The issue passed unnoticed for the most part, but some of us expressed our concern by sending a message to the Liberal Government of the day. We said that we knew changes were needed, but asked that they not be taken out on the backs of the people who could least afford to pay. That includes people who have been forced into early retirement, who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own, and who, in many cases, are looking for work but do not have a hope of finding another job.

Will you tell me that women and men who lose their jobs at the age of 59, 60, or 61 will have a chance for re-employment? Women come into my riding office who have been subject to lay-offs as a result of the closure of Allen Industries. One woman in particular who is 45 years of age is not eligible for LAB benefits because her age and her 15 years of experience do not add up to the required 80 years. Therefore, she is looking for a job. Since she receives a small pension, she is being denied the right to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Crosby: How small?

Ms. Copps: The Member asks how small. I will tell you how small. People are receiving pensions of $200 and $300 a month with which they are required to support families. It may be easy for us in this House to talk about it, but it is wrong for a person receiving a pension of $300, $400, or $500 a month to be denied unemployment insurance benefits. The Member shakes his head and says it is not wrong. I will table in this House the name of a man who has sold his home as a result of the changes which the Government has made in the Unemployment Insurance Commission. If the Member can guarantee me that that man should not have sold his home, that he was living high off the hog, I will withdraw my words and my position. I have received hundreds of letters on this issue, as have my colleagues, the Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) and the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

[Translation]

Quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, this Bill affects the more destitute, people who are getting older, who are forced to quit working at age 55 or 60 and who will be penalized by the Government.

There is a second consideration on which I would rather not comment because there is not much time left. I would just like to say that this measure will create even more unemployment among young people because older workers will no longer choose to retire. If they cannot draw unemployment insurance benefits they will refuse to retire and this will not free jobs for younger Canadians. This Bill is just one more insult to Senator Hébert who is now fighting in the Senate for young people. I think that the Government and Hon. Members themselves should realize that their constituents will consider that as their personal and individual decision.

[English]

I urge government Members, in the spirit of the new rules, to vote with their consciences rather than just following the Party line.

● (1720)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment on the Member's remarks concerning eligibility for unemployment insurance of persons with pension income. I call to her attention that she said that with a pension of $200 or $300 or $400 a month, a person would be ineligible for unemployment insurance. I ask her to check with a UIC office and check the formula which applies and find out who is wrong on that point.

I also have a question for the Member. She does not seem to realize that this argument concerning eligibility has been waxing for 18 months. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, Members of provincial legislatures, and other public officials have pointed out time and time agin that the Government responded to the concerns expressed publicly by Members and others and referred the matter to the Forget Commission. They are coming to the post too late. Can they get that through their heads? The decision has already been made. The matter has been referred to the Forget Commission. I do not remember the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and certainly not the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), appearing before the Forget Commission, as did the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) and myself, and asking it to make a recommendation now. We asked it to file an interim report and send it to the Minister so that a decision could be made now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe we have four points of order. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on a point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would not want to leave on the record anything that is misleading. He said I did not appear before the Forget Commission.

An Hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Listen before you decide. I did appear before the commission, and here is a copy of the brief which I will send to the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not consider that a point of order. Is the Hon. Member ready to answer?

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), my world does not revolve around Ottawa. If he had a chance to look at the hearing presentation for Friday, January 31, in the great City of Hamilton, he would have been aware that I made my presentation long before the travelling road show arrived in Ottawa.

He talks about people who are living off the fat of the land and getting pensions. Does he really think that the 9,577 widows and orphans who receive an average pension of $4,875 from the Canadian Armed Forces should not be allowed to receive unemployment insurance benefits to that amount? It is deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits. Does he feel these widows and orphans are living off the fat of the land? If he does, he is so out of touch that I am sure his electors will want to remind him of that in the next election.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) could clarify this point. If I understand the Government's position, it is that anyone who was concerned about this issue should have raised it years ago. Many Members of this House have raised this issue in letters to the Minister and in questions in this House. Members have appeared before the Forget Commission to make these points. Certain Members of the Government are participating in the debate tonight, although not many of the thinking and clear-sighted Members. They are saying that they are going to vote against this motion because we should have raised this issue some time ago. The fact that they are ignorant on this issue is not a reason to vote against the motion. Arguments have been made in this House today about the basic unfairness of this situation and the fact that the need for that transitional income is critical. Would the Hon. Member agree with that perception of the Government's role here today?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, who I know wants to speak on this issue but has not had a chance because Ministers have been ragging the puck on other issues, and others have been raising this issue ever since it was introduced in the Economic Statement in November, 1984. I have written letters and raised it in the House. I appeared before the Forget Commission. If government Members truly believe in the spirit of reform, then they will throw off their Party shackles and the notion that they are simply Party hacks or book-ends and vote as their individual conscience dictates. If they do, they will vote in favour of the widows, orphans, unemployed and older workers and against this cruel and unjust measure proposed by the Government.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the Hon. Member. She, like myself and all Members, particularly those on the government side, truly believe that the Forget Commission will provide us with very helpful recommendations in order to solve the entire problem. This problem has of course developed over many, many years, primarily during the time of the Government by the Party of which she is a supporter. However, like all of us, I understand she is truly concerned about those who might be suffering while we are awaiting the recommendations of the Forget Commission. I hope some Members of this House will calm down so she can hear me and I can hear what I am saying.

She has pointed out that she is aware of a number of individual cases where people have actually lost their home or are on the verge of it. She indicated she would be prepared to table that information. I would like to ask her if she would do that. Certainly all government Members would be most willing to be of assistance to anyone in that situation. We would be very eager to help to solve that sort of problem. Perhaps the Hon. Member would be kind enough to table names, addresses and other details so that members of the Government could be of help here, too.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am most happy with the spirit of goodwill expressed by the Hon. Member. However, unfortunately that same spirit has not been expressed by his Government. In my speech I neglected to draw attention to the fact that the Armed Forces pensioners of this country wrote a letter to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) on the issue because they were very concerned about superannuation as well as their pensions. They got a reply from his sidekick, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Andre), who first wrote a very glowing letter thanking them for their concerns about pensions and saying that the Government would take them into consideration. Subsequently he threatened to take criminal action against them if they continued to use the name Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners' Association. He claimed that the use of the words "Canadian Armed Forces" was a violation of military law. If they did not revoke that name they would be court-martialled or, in the civil sense, subject to conviction under the Criminal Code, which could result in a $500 fine or six months in jail.

• (1730)

So you can understand that while I appreciate the goodwill of the Member sitting beside, me, it is unfortunate that that same goodwill has not been expressed by that very Minister whose responsibility it is to defend the rights of the people and of the Armed Forces. I think that this is a disgrace and that the Associate Minister of Defence should know better.

Mr. Speaker: The time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate and to announce to the Opposition that I intend to vote against this motion, not because of party discipline but as a matter of principle, and because I believe that the Opposition has failed to provide sufficient grounds for this motion. Mr. Speaker, my stand on this particular matter, even if anyone threatens to tell it to the world—in any case, the debates in the House are public—my stand is as firm as the one I took when I announced in public that I was against all forms of indexation at any level whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that I am 44 years old, I have never been on unemployment insurance and I hope to spend the rest of my life without drawing unemployment insurance benefits. The message we get depends on whom you talk to. We hear people saying when they are 35 or 40, and I say they are right: Mr. Hudon or Mr. so and so, I would rather have a job than draw unemployment insurance benefits, because there is nothing more humiliating and distressing for a man or a woman to draw unemployment insurance benefits. And I heartily agree.

And now, all of a sudden, Mr. Speaker, one year before retirement, when they do have an income, it is no longer humiliating to draw unemployment insurance benefits, it is almost a right. And who are we talking about now? We are not talking about people in their thirties or forties, but about the individual who leaves his job, either voluntarily or involuntarily, although in 95 per cent of the cases, at 64 or one year before retirement, it is voluntarily because the companies oblige them to retire early, supposedly in order to create jobs for young people, which are often subsidized by the Government. So we are talking about that kind of person.

They have been telling us from the start: They will lose everything. For a person to lose unemployment insurance benefits altogether, that person has to have earnings of at least $371 a week. This adds up to an annual income of $19,000. So this individual is already earning $19,000 a year. He is losing $15,000 in income, so if we add up $19,000 plus $15,000, we get $34,000 a year, and this is the same person who is forced to sell his home.

If you have to sell your home when your earnings are $34,000, either your payments are too large or your house is too expensive.

Mr. Speaker, $371 a week is the norm. And these are the people we are talking about today. We are not talking about people below the poverty line. I agree that $371 a week is not great, but it is certainly not nothing.

And who is more to be pitied, Mr. Speaker? The individual who has a weekly income of $371, plus unemployment insurance benefits, or the individual who is getting unemployment insurance benefits only, totalling $297 a month? Who is the worst off? And those are the people we are talking about today, Mr. Speaker.

So we are talking about someone who has a weekly income or $371 and who leaves his job and wants to receive unemployment insurance benefits on top of that because, Mr. Speaker, it is a right. We are not talking about people who have less than $371 a week. No! Today, we are not talking about people who work less than 15 hours a week. We are only talking about this particular group. And they say it is a crying shame.

Mr. Speaker, all the retired and early retired Canadians I have met, who say they are not entitled to unemployment insurance, are people who have a solid income. We are going to help the needy.

Mr. Speaker, I will begin by reading an article by Alain Dubuc in La Presse of March 26, 1986, the last paragraph where he comments on another program. He writes: "Finally, to be as prosaic one can be, this entire story . . ."—he is referring to Katimavik— ". . . properly depicts the federal Government financial predicament. It shows how one can build up a $30 billion deficit, and it explains why it is so difficult to make cut-backs."

Mr. Speaker, it has been described as an underhanded approach, as a recent decision which is inequitable, unfair, contradictory and illegal. I will attempt to set the record straight because I think such comments are undeserved.

On December 21, 1984, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) tabled in the House a document announcing changes in the unemployment insurance regulations. I will give you some background information which should be kept in mind.

On November 8 that same year, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told the House there would be reductions, cut-backs, a new financial course. That is the day he said: "People drawing an income will no longer be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits." At least, the income was to be considered as unemployment benefits, as income in terms of unemployment insurance. It was said that we were taking everybody by surprise.

I was then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and I even received from Members opposite—I will find those documents—letters stating that we were taking people by surprise. This was on November 8, 1984. We did not stand still between November 8 and December 21, 1984 because we thought perhaps we were taking people by surprise, so we would do something about it. Mr. Speaker, that is why on December 21, before everybody, including the old doctor, we tabled in the House a document stating that income from severance pay would be considered as unemployment insurance income as of April 1, 1985, and income from pension funds would be so considered as of January 1, 1986. That is where we are now! It was announced on December 21.

People have told us that the decision is recent. Naturally, it is recent, but it was announced on December 21, 1984. Members of the Opposition spoke about it at the time and there were articles in the newspapers. In addition, a letter from the Employment and Immigration Commissionners for employers and workers, Mr. Doyle and Mr. Chafe, was sent in March 1985 to 650,000 employers telling them that lump sums received as separation payment must now be considered an income for unemployment insurance purposes. It was also announced even then that, from January 1986, pension from employment would be taken into account for unemployment insurance purposes. This had already been announced, Mr. Speaker.

We are therefore saying that there was no secret. This was public knowledge, there were articles in the national newspapers and even negative comments, but one positive thing was said at the time, namely that the Government was changing one of its rules to make it more equitable and that it wanted to give everyone the right and the time to adjust to this change.

Mr. Speaker, we have been told that this is unequitable. I heard people say this morning that this change is unfair and I have also heard some people say: "I have paid the premiums and I am entitled to the benefits." For my part, I do not consider this a good argument.

• (1740)

Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance plan is an insurance and not a registered retirement plan. It is not a savings plan.

Mr. Speaker, unlike what was said this morning, when my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) said: Is it fair that someone who owns a triplex is not cut off, while someone receiving severance pay or retirement benefits is cut off? Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Act provides it must be income received from the employer with whom there was an employment relationship. It is not any kind of income. It may be true that this should be extended to cover all incomes, but I will leave it to my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâces-Lachine East to apply that kind of formula. I can assure you he will have fun with it for a long while yet. Mr. Speaker, unemployment insurance is not a savings plan and it is not a retirement plan. They say this is unfair. What exactly is unfair about it, Mr. Speaker? An individual draws $371 a week, and on top of that he wants to get $15,000 in unemployment benefits for a whole year? That is what injustice is! That is not fair, Mr. Speaker. As a Government Member I have to be fair and help people who really are in need, and the needy are not people who willingly choose to retire a year in advance. The needy are men and women of 40, 45 or 50 who lose their job at a critical time in their career and who still have to cope with the education of their children.

This morning somebody said it is a contradictory measure. There is nothing contradictory about it, Mr. Speaker. It was first announced on November 8, 1984, and again on December 21 that same year. We are now in 1986, so everybody has had time to prepare for this. I know it is discouraging. Mr. Speaker, our problem today is that people are indifferent, and I am sure the public and everybody else will agree on that. When we talk about something which will take place one year down the road, people say they are not concerned, they will cross the bridge if and when they get to it. Mr. Speaker, the public servants who apply the legislation and who were given those directives are just as indifferent because, under the previous administration, things would simply change according to various pressures. that was the case with respect to footwear quotas: they removed them for six months, only to re-instate them under pressure. Our problem today, Mr. Speaker is a problem of indifference. The people who claim there is a problem today are those who did not listen to their Member of Parliament and their Government, or did not read the major newspapers when those measures were announced. There is nothing illegal about this. Some have said that this rule is illegal, but it is not. The Unemployment Insurance Act provides that regulations can be established and the Government was good enough to announce this change one year in advance, just as it announced that the Budget proposals would come into force not the next morning or the night of the Budget, but three, five or six months later.

Mr. Speaker, these are the people we are discussing today. We are talking about people who are not in need, whatever may have been said to the contrary. They are not wealthy, but they are not in need either.

Ms. Copps: What about the widows!

Mr. Hudon: We are talking about people with incomes of at least $19,000 a year who want to add another $15,000 on top of that. As for me, I prefer to speak about people with an income of $15,000 or $20,000 a year. It is for those people that we must take action and do something. You can take this speech to my riding; I would not be afraid to repeat what I am saying, Mr. Speaker, when I voted and took a position against indexation, I did so publicly and I repeated what I had said in my riding, and if your only threat is to say that I am going to lose the next election, I shall still keep to my position. As for you, you propose nice things in the hope of winning the next elections, but you will always be in the Opposition. This is not what the Government wants. The Government and those who watch us want us to reduce the deficit, but you cannot reduce the deficit by thinking small. Is my time expired, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) wanted to speak on the issue. Given that this is the first time we have tried the new procedure, I wonder if we could have the unanimous consent of the House to allow the debate to carry on.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that the matter is subject to a House order and, pursuant to Standing Order 82(9), the Chair is required to interrupt the proceedings at this time.

It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9). The question is the following one. Mr. Rodriguez, seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

That this House recognizes the unnecessary hardship inflicted on older Canadian workers by the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which cause pension benefits to be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, and since votes on opposition motions are no longer considered a question of confidence in the Government, therefore urges the Government to repeal those changes immediately.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Rodriguez), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, I shall abstain from voting on this motion. I am neither for nor against.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the welfare and good order of the House in the conduct of a vote. With full respect for the competence and beautiful conduct of the Clerks at the Table, when the voting has ended of those either opposed or in favour of a motion, could there be a reasonable 10-second pause before the votes on the other side of the question are called? The Hon. Government House Leader rose so fast today that I thought he was voting with us.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have been certified sane; I would never do that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 6.12 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPLAINT ABOUT NON DELIVERY OF MAIL

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, today I want to read a letter to the House from Mrs. Pagano of St. Léonard sent to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. She is complaining about not receiving mail at her house. She writes:

> Am I not a taxpaying Canadian? Do I belong to a different class of citizen? Why should I be deprived of a service enjoyed by every Canadian? Is it because I put in the extra effort to purchase a new home thereby encouraging the construction industry and helping to create new jobs?

In closing, she says:

> Mr. Côté, it has been 21 months since we had the pleasure of opening that mail-box, which we proudly installed on the wall of our very first home and find an envelope in there addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. M. Pagano". I think we have waited long enough!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—SALES OF SULPHUR BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, marking the twenty-first anniversary of the Sharpeville Massacre in South Africa, I bring to the attention of the House and of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) that Petro-Canada is supporting South Africa's racist apartheid regime through its continuing sales of sulphur to South Africa.

I call upon the Minister of Energy to instruct Petro-Canada to halt these sales. Let me point out that the Minister is in receipt of a March 7 letter from the Anti-Apartheid Network of British Columbia enclosing Petro-Canada's response on this issue. Petro-Canada's position is that it is continuing the sulphur sales because there is no Government policy to the contrary.

The irony is that today the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) is to announce that his Ministry has been designated as the Government's main tool in the second decade against racism, while another Government agency, to wit, Petro-Canada, is directly profiting from institutionalized racism by continuing to sell sulphur to South Africa.

MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS—ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, a number of regions in Quebec are being severely affected by the acid rain problem. Beauce, the world capital of maple syrup production which I have the honour of representing, is in one of those regions, and the decline of its sugar maple stands is seen as a major problem.

This week the UPA met with Ministers of our Government, together with a number of Members, and I was present at that meeting. They were encouraged by our comments and by the agreement on acid rain concluded by the U.S. and Canadian governments.

Yesterday we also heard that researchers at Laval University in Quebec City have found a way to stop this decline.

Canada's maple bush operators can take hope from the attention being focused on this problem by provincial governments, the federal Government, our universities and all other parties concerned who are seeking a way to correct a problem that is having such a severe impact on this natural resource.

Mr. Speaker, the leaf of the maple tree, of which Beauce is a prime habitat, is Canada's emblem. We will spare no efforts on this side of the House to preserve this national heritage.

TOURISM

PROMOTION CAMPAIGN IN SARNIA-LAMBTON

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as you and other Members of the House are aware, my riding of Sarnia-Lambton has been plagued with extremely negative press. Being known across the country as "the home of the blob" has done little for the country's perception of our home. Yet, once again the community, business, and industry in the Sarnia-Lambton area have banded together to overcome this negativism.

January 29 saw the kick-off of the "Celebrate Sarnia" campaign. The agenda for the upcoming year features numerous and varied activities to promote and attract business and tourists to the Sarnia-Lambton area. The "Celebrate Sarnia" logo is now featured on the letterhead of all mail emanating from City Hall, as well as appearing on the advertising and letterheads of various boards and agencies. Our Lambton College is using the logo as a major marketing tool to attract students to the college. Bumper stickers, balloons, and parades are all in the works.

My riding realizes that the time is long overdue to celebrate, publicize, and enjoy the multitude of positive aspects of our area, and we invite all to help us "Celebrate Sarnia".

YOUTH

CONSERVATIVE PARTY ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign the Conservative Party made several promises to the Canadian people. As a matter of fact, you will recall that I brought 338 such promises to your attention. Today I would like to read to you some promises which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made to the youth of Canada.

The Conservative Party promised to create, at the national level, a Canada Opportunity Development Board, and to examine the feasibility of allowing unemployment insurance and welfare benefits to be used as start-up funds for new businesses for our youth. It promised to encourage local youth to organize local youth councils voluntarily, and to supplement the Ministry of State for Youth. The Conservatives promised to create a national registry for exchange of job information for youth, and to place a high priority on the establishment of professional counselling for the youth of Canada. The Prime Minister and the Progressive Conservative Party have betrayed the youth of our country.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS BY IMPERIAL OIL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): It was with regret that I read this morning that Imperial Oil intends to lay off over 1,200 employees. On numerous occasions the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have stood in the House and said that the low world oil prices are a temporary condition; yet these people are being laid off on a permanent basis.

I call upon Imperial Oil, which has been making a good profit in the last couple of years, to be a good corporate citizen with regard to the way in which it treats its workers. I also call upon the Government to meet immediately with the company and representatives of the workers to avoid unneccessary lay-offs which will not only harm the employment prospects of these people, but will cause an unnecessary financial hardship on the people affected.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, since the election, 577,000 jobs have been created. The unemployment rate was 9.8 per cent in February, compared with 11.7 per cent on election day. In January it was the first time the unemployment rate dropped below 10 per cent since 1982. The rate at which jobs are being created in Canada is higher than in any major OECD country. Comparatively speaking, jobs are being created 75 per cent faster in Canada than in the United States. The number of jobs for young people has increased by 50,000 since the election, compared with a net loss of 285,000 under the Liberals. Today, the number of working women is 306,000 more than it was in September 1984. The number of unemployed has dropped by 1,000 since January and February 1986, and by 204,000 since September 1984, and the employment rate has gone up in all provinces.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ZIMBABWE—JAILING OF OPPOSITION MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Edward Ndlovu, an opposition Member of Parliament in Zimbabwe, is being detained against his will in jail and is gravely ill. In its annual report Amnesty International describes Zimbabwe as a nation in which enforced starvation, widespread detentions, beatings, torture and killings of civilians are the order of the day.

According to his wife, a Toronto woman of a former CUSO worker, Mr. Ndlovu's health is rapidly failing. Mr. Ndlovu's right side, where he received a new kidney in Ottawa in 1978, is becoming numb and requires dialysis treatment which cannot be procured in prison.

As fellow Commonwealth parliamentarians, we in this House must do everything possible to ensure that Mr. Edward Ndlovu is released. Democracy cannot tolerate such abuses.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I am very enthusiastic about the excellent news heard this morning: the economic growth continues unabated and interest rates are declining.

On election day in 1984 the Bank of Canada prime rate was 12.38 per cent, 11.84 the day the 1986 Budget was tabled, and it now stands at 10.11 per cent. The chartered banks' preferential rate was 13 per cent on election day, 13 per cent on Budget day, and 12 per cent today. Residential five-year mortgage loans were at 14.24 per cent when we were elected, 12 per cent on Budget day, and they are now down to 11.5 per cent.

For the first time in many months the deficit is going down. Mr. Speaker, all those indicators show that we are on the right track and that, as promised, the Mulroney Government is living up to its commitments.

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—SENATOR'S COMMENTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, of all the youth who appeared at the hearings across Canada, it was the young people trained under the national youth program called Katimavik who made the strongest impression. These young men and women unquestionably displayed the fine qualities of leadership which are so needed in our country at this time. We studied the Katimavik program and came to the conclusion it was a positive and constructive force in Canadian society. The Government should establish a young Canadians' community service program, either by using Katimavik as a model or by giving it the means to expand. It was most unfortunate, therefore, that the Government decided to cancel the Katimavik program a week before the Senate youth report was tabled. I believe the Government should have waited a week for the report before making its announcement to cancel the Katimavik program.

Those are the words of the Progressive Conservative Senator Paul Yuzyk, Deputy Chairman of the special Senate Committee on Youth.

AIRPORTS

CUSTOMS CLEARANCE DELAYS AT PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the service at Pearson International Airport must improve if we expect to increase the number of tourists and business people visiting Canada. A constituent of mine, Mr. Gordon Hinch of Wallingford Road, returned from an international trip on March 6 and it took him over an hour to clear customs. There were four international arrivals, yet only six people were working on Customs.

In other cities supervisors pitch in and help during peak periods when regular workers take breaks. However, when Mr.

Hinch suggested to one supervisor that he help, he was ignored. At the second stage of Customs only one person was on duty to clear everyone.

Having to pay for luggage carts is another annoyance unique to Canada. It is clear these issues need to be resolved so that everyone visiting or returning to Canada will receive courteous, fast service.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there has been more than one slap in the face in Washington recently. The poor old foreign minister, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), was not even taken along. He had to admit yesterday that he did not know what questions came up in the Prime Minister's meetings with Members of Congress, specifically, whether the Canadian position on military aid to the Contras was given. The Minister's place was apparently taken by the Prime Minister's wife's executive assistant and a couple of people from his own Department. Why is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) again systematically sidelining his Secretary of State for External Affairs? For that matter, why were other Ministers not there— the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? It was a Mickey Mouse delegation if ever there was one—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: —and proves once again that the Prime Minister wants to be the bride at the wedding and the corpse at the funeral.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, scores of communities throughout northern Ontario today are deeply apprehensive about the get-tough attitude of the U.S. Congress and administration toward Canadian lumber imports. What we need, Sir, are assurances that this essential U.S. market for our lumber will be maintained. The question being asked throughout northern Ontario is this. If the U.S. is open to a policy of free trade, as the Government suggests, why then, as we approach those free trade talks, is it taking such a hard line on Canadian lumber imports?

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAM

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which he has been given notice. Yesterday or today the Prime Minister received a letter, I understand, from Senator Jacques Hébert in which the Senator says in part as follows:

> My action is intended to draw attention to the desperate plight of unemployed youth—

Since the Government has said it is developing new programs for youth, will the Prime Minister make an announcement of these programs today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated on March 3 and March 11 in the House and in other circumstances to the press that at an appropriate time, at or about the end of the fiscal year, and in appropriate fashion the Government would be announcing new programs, including programs that deal with the problems affecting Canada's youth.

I am honoured to be able to say we have made substantial improvements. We inherited an unemployment situation that was at 18.4 per cent when we came in, and we reduced it to 16.4 per cent. Two hundred and eighty-five thousand jobs were lost for young people in the previous four years, and we have already created a net 50,000 new jobs. This is not perfection, but this is steady, considerable progress on behalf of Canadian youth.

SENATOR'S LETTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Prime Minister. Senator Hébert concludes his letter by saying:

> I am appealing to you, Prime Minister, to consider once more the purpose of my efforts and to exercise all the political will at your command to bring back hope to the youth of Canada.

I want to ask the Prime Minister will he exercise that political will and announce the action he is talking about not at the end of the fiscal year but today.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated publicly in this House on a number of occasions that it would be our intention to announce, at or about the end of the fiscal year, our intention in this regard. I will check with my colleagues and officials and see where we are in regard to that. I have not personally gone through the Senator's letter but I will be happy to do so after Question Period, and to respond as I did in the past.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we understand the Prime Minister's difficulties in this kind of matter, and I note what he has said. I would ask him again to do everything possible to look at the matter of timing with respect to the programs his Ministers have said they are preparing, and make an announcement if at all possible today or very soon thereafter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention of my hon. friend and I understand and sympathize with many of the motives. I do not think anybody in this House, irrespective of political persuasion, is happy with the youth unemployment situation, which has been improved under this Government. It is far from perfect and we have a lot to do.

I would point out to my hon. friend, and I think most fair-minded people would acknowledge, that the election, among other things, brought about a change in approach, not necessarily perfect, but a change in approach to some of these programs. On further reflection it is our belief that the private sector, under proper conditions, plays a vital job-creating role for youth as well.

I was deeply encouraged again by a drop in the CPI this morning by three-tenths of a percentage point. Yesterday the bank rate dropped more than half a point. In the last few weeks it dropped 1.75 per cent, and that is good for youth, and good for the economy and job-creation.

[Translation]

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister.

Now that the Prime Minister has admitted he will announce a program in a matter of weeks, by the end of the fiscal year, he could perhaps, in the name of human and Christian charity, visit Senator Hébert and perhaps take him into his confidence and give him the assurance that by the end of the month a program will be announced. I assume the program is ready?

Please, Mr. Prime Minister, isn't there a way to do this? I know how seriously you are taking Senator Hébert's gesture. This is a matter that is above all political partisanship.

Would it not be possible for the Prime Minister to go and give Senator Hébert his assurance, so that he can end his hunger strike, because I think everyone in Canada would like to see—

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend mentioned the absence of a partisan dimension, but on the other hand he started his question by saying that the Prime Minister admitted something today. I did not admit anything.

I said in the House three weeks ago, on March 3, and I said it again on March 11 and in other circumstances even before this matter was raised, that the Government intended to take action at a given time, towards the end of the fiscal year.

I answered the third question from the Leader of the Opposition in the House, saying that I would officially take note of the Senator's letter and that we would try and act on it as soon as possible. And that is all.

● (1120)

SENATOR HÉBERT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Prime Minister for his gesture, and I hope that thanks to his intervention, perhaps at some time within the next few hours we will be able to put an end to the situation now existing in the Senate. I urge the Prime Minister to meet with Senator Hébert and to take him into his confidence.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to make this kind of humane gesture?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in a column by Alain Dubuc that appeared in yesterday's La Presse, there was a reference to Katimavik, and to show you how widely opinions differ, it said:

Katimavik: Symbol of defeat.

In the column, and this is not necessarily my opinion, here is what the observer says:

It took a heavy blow: their unemployment rate jumped to 18.8 per cent in 1982 and 19.9 per cent in 1983—

Generally speaking, with the catching up done in the last two years, the number of young people between the ages of 15 and 24 who have jobs is higher—

—today—

—that in the seventies—

The process of deterioration was reversed in 1983 and 1984.

That is good news for Canadian youth, and I can assure my hon. friend that we are going to work harder to create permanent jobs for Canada's youth.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—POSITION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns his visit to the United States. Six years ago President Carter acknowledged on behalf of his people that acid rain was a problem common to both countries and said that something ought to be done about it. Regrettably for those concerned about acid rain, he was out of office within a few months.

Five years ago President Reagan said in this House that there was a concern about the problems of the same pollution and committed himself to take action, but has done absolutely nothing in the past five years. Why should we now believe that President Reagan, a lame duck President, will do in the next few years what he completely failed to do in the past five years?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think you would find some people in disagreement with the notion that President Reagan is a lame duck. He was looking well and vigorous the last time I saw him, and he asked me to send his affectionate regards to the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

My hon. friend referred to the views expressed by President Carter and Prime Minister Trudeau. He is quite right. He also observed that President Carter was out of office a few months later. When we came into office we were called upon to deal with a new situation and some facts.

Notwithstanding the view expressed, when we looked over the five-year period there was no progress in tangible terms.

Second, we were called upon to deal with an American administration that expressed a view in regard to acid rain and the environment that was at deep variance with that held by the Government of Canada. So we began two things; first, cleaning up our own act here in Canada and, second, dealing with the United States to obtain two important views, hopefully, (a) that this problem was transboundary in creation and must be so dealt with, and (b), a comprehensive program to clean it up. That was the Drew Lewis-Bill Davis report, and I believe the wholehearted endorsement of that report by the President, undertaking to seek the funds, and my meetings with Congressional and Senatorial leaders to help ensure that those funds are available, represent substantial progress by Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by complimenting the Government for its action here in Canada. I have said that before, and I repeat it. This Government has taken action on acid rain which was not taken by the previous Government. I compliment the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question pertains to what the Americans are or are not doing. Since the President of the United States said five years ago it was a common problem—that's not new—and since he said five years ago that something ought to be done and nothing has been done—and there is nothing new in that regard—and since the Prime Minister's own Minister of the Environment said: "What is good for the goose is good for the eagle", did the Prime Minister even ask President Reagan to make specific commitments to the reduction in levels of acid rain of the kind the Canadian Government is making here at home? Did he ask President Reagan to do that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): But of course, Mr. Speaker, and in fact the structures are now in place because of the Lewis-Davis report. I cannot persuade the unpersuadable—

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Mulroney: I acknowledge that. But perhaps other people can. I give the Hon. Member the view expressed last week by Adele Hurley, the co-ordinator of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. She was quoted in Maclean's of March 24, 1986, as saying:

The study found that acid rain is a serious problem and that Eastern Canada suffers from U.S. emissions—points the Reagan administration has never conceded. "If the Prime Minister can get Reagan to endorse that," said Adele Hurley,—"I'll tip my hat to him."

This is the first time it has been done. And to confirm Miss Hurley's view, I know the Hon. Member would not disagree with the view of the Washington Post which stated yesterday:

President Reagan bowed to strong—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney:

—lobbying by Canadian Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney:

—and acknowledged for the first time that acid rain, threatening the environment on both sides of the border—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney:

—is caused by man-made pollution.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to quote for the Prime Minister all kinds of American elected officials, as well as environmentalists, who believe the Canadian Government sold them out in their battle with President Reagan. That is what they think.

UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S COMMITMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that when President Reagan takes some political item seriously, as he did with funding the Contras in Central America, he goes to Congress with a very specific timetable asking for action and for funds, could the Prime Minister tell the House why President Reagan did not commit his administration to go to Congress with a timetable for reductions in the level of acid rain emissions in order to clear up this problem once and for all on this continent? Why did he not get that from the President?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I would ask my hon. friend to read the President's endorsement in the context of the full report and all of its recommendations. The Hon. Member referred to elected officials. He mentioned the President and the Congress. The Congress controls the flow of funds—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, yes.

Mr. Mulroney: —and I think the evidence of that is that the President was unsuccessful in his initiative in regard to the $100 million—

Mr. Broadbent: But he tried.

Mr. Mulroney: —and not only is he going to try, as indicated, but I myself went to meet with the leadership of the Senate and the leadership of the House, including the Speaker, Mr. O'Neill, and the Majority Leader in the Senate, Mr. Dole. We have their views that they will be helpful to Canada and to the United States on this issue. I said to the Americans: "Don't think you're doing Canada a favour, this is your problem as well". The United States Congress must fund this project. I received assurances that it will.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAMS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. I would like to pursue the questions of my colleagues. The Prime Minister recites the progress in bringing down unemployment. All of us who care about our country and our youth take heart in that progress. The Senate, though, said that even with the progress the situation of a great number of young people in Canada is intolerable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question, please.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Limit the other side, too, with their long answers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is true that sometimes questions and answers become too long by all of the Leaders. Question, please.

Mr. Berger: Seeing that the Prime Minister and his Cabinet recognize that more has to be done, why wait for the end of the fiscal year? Why will he not announce today, immediately, the programs which he said he has?

Mr. Speaker: Could the Hon. Member phrase a question which is not simply a repetition, please? I think he can ask that question in a way that is not exactly the same as the previous one.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, I think, recognizes the gravity of the problem. Why must he wait for the end of the fiscal year? Why can he not announce immediately the programs which he said he has?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not waited until the end of the fiscal year. We continue to take very substantial and serious action. For example, in the current fiscal year we have committed $700 million directly to youth employment and job-training programs, this at a time when we have been forced, because of the profligacy of our Liberal friends, to cut back and to bring some sense of sanity to the public finances. This $700 million represents 37 per cent of the entire budget of the Department of Employment and Immigration and 44 per cent of the clients served by that Department. Some 219,000 young Canadians will benefit from that. That is good news.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary, and not a repetition, please.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth said on February 3 in the House that there will be new programs announced very soon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Berger: My question to the Prime Minister is—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask a question immediately?

Mr. Berger: "Very soon" was six weeks ago. Will the Prime Minister immediately announce the new programs the Government says it has?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. When the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans resigned over the tuna matter—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —were the circumstances as were stated at the time, that the Minister offered his resignation and it was accepted, or is the new version the correct version as stated by the Prime Minister in an interview with The New York Times that "When it was brought to my attention, bang! Immediately the Minister's resignation was secured". Which is the right version?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know I am back in the House and members of the NDP have their priorities right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Yesterday the bank rate dropped another one-half point, down one-and-three-quarter points in two weeks. The CPI drops today and the boys are wrestling with something that happened, which was on the public record since September of last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CIRCUMSTANCES OF RESIGNATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, why did the Prime Minister state that the Minister's resignation was secured immediately after he discovered the matter, when he knows full well that he said in the House of Commons that the Minister offered his resignation and it was accepted with regret? Why does the Prime Minister embarrass that Member further by drawing his integrity into question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have never embarrassed any member of my Party—

An Hon. Member: Ask Joe Clark!

Mr. Mulroney: Nor have I embarrassed an Hon. Member on the other side. My friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, is an outstanding Member of Parliament.

Mr. Deans: That is right,I agree.

Mr. Mulroney: If the divergent—

[Translation]

And speaking of divergent views, where is Mr. Chrétien today? What a shame he left! You may be glad to be rid of him now, but I would be careful if I were you.

[English]

I acknowledge that there may have been divergences in regard to interpretations placed upon your resignation.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow up on the same question as that asked by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister obviously becomes very sensitive when he gets caught in his own trap of giving two conflicting reports. Will the Prime Minister now admit to the House—

Mr. Nunziata: He's a liar.

Mr. Henderson: —that the former Minister of Fisheries was pushed out of the Cabinet—

Some Hon. Members: Oops!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Henderson: —by a Prime Minister who is trying to cover up his own blunders?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Withdraw, Nunziata, withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members have apparently heard something which I did not hear. I was listening to the Hon. Member for Egmont.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: One of the jerks sitting next to him! Not that jerk, the one over there.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members may wish to raise something after the Question Period. The Hon. Member for Egmont.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said anything unparliamentary in my question. I wish to repeat my question. The Prime Minister gets caught sometimes in conflicting reports, his own reports. Will the Prime Minister now admit that the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was pushed out of the Cabinet by a Prime Minister who was trying to cover up his own mistakes and blunders?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is on the public record and it is resolved.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

INQUIRY OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it is nothing new for the Government to give one message to Canadians and a different message to Americans. Why does the Prime Minister continue to try to undermine the credibility of the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who has served this House for a number of years and who is a very credible individual? I may have some problems with the former Minister's judgment, but his character is A-1. I want the Prime Minister to admit that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

RENEWAL OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the President of the United States in separate written statements in Washington stated this week that the renewal of the NORAD Agreement is, and I quote, "fully consistent with the ABM Treaty". Will the Prime Minister elborate for us today? Does his statement in Washington clearly mean that Canada will not become involved through NORAD, or in any other way, in an active ballistic missile defence?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that has always been clear.

Mr. Broadbent: We couldn't hear you!

Mrs. Mailly: Use your hearing device!

ABM CLAUSE INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Prime Minister said yes, that that was the meaning of the statement in Washington, that is, that Canada would not become involved in any way in an active ballistic missile defence. Therefore, why was that clause—and I have used the exact words—not reinserted in the NORAD Agreement where it would really count?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be the day for repetition. The Hon. Member, and others in the House, have put that question on several occasions. She knows the answer is that the former Liberal Government—

Ms. Jewett: You weren't even in Washington!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —took that clause out of the treaty because circumstances have changed.

Mr. Broadbent: It certainly is a day for repetition!

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, just to pick up on the point raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, indeed the clause was taken out because the ABM was not in issue. It is now in issue again. Did the Prime Minister try to convince the President to reinsert that clause in the NORAD renewal agreement? Does the Prime Minister not consider its absence a serious omission?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was involved in those negotiations—

Mr. Lapierre: You were not there!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —I was involved in the discussions which resulted in the statement by the Prime Minister and the President during the Summit in Washington. The concern that existed in Canada was that there might be some question raised about the integrity of the ABM system. That was clear from the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence that was tabled in the House.

We took account of that and secured from the President of the United States through the direct intervention of the Prime Minister at the Summit the affirmations that were stated by both leaders.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN POSITION—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, with all respect to the Secretary of State, I am sure you would like to know, as we would, what actually transpired at the meeting at which the Secretary of State was not present. Let me ask the Prime Minister, after what he considers his triumph in convincing President Reagan that acid rain is a problem, did he try to convince the President that the Nicaraguan policy is also a problem, and did he tell the President that Canada is firmly opposed to military aid to the Contras? I know the Secretary of State was not there so I would like to hear the answer from the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I never said that the results of the acid rain discussions were a triumph. They just appear to be a triumph given the lack of action by the Liberals over five years. That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: What we said was that there was very serious and substantial progress made and that they will—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Just a giant step.

Mr. Mulroney: Our Liberal friends are mortified by their own record, as they should be, and I know—

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the NDP agrees. This is a rare day.

Mr. Broadbent: It's my birthday.

Mr. Mulroney: It is his birthday now.

This is solid and steady progress. This is a problem that has developed over many decades and is not going to be cured over night, but we have now in hand a mechanism that will deal with it—

Mr. Johnston: Nicaragua is the question.

Mr. Mulroney: He would like to hear from me on Nicaragua.

Mr. Johnston: That was the question.

Mr. Mulroney: The answer is that I, of course, raised Canada's position on Nicaragua with the President and with Secretary Shultz and others in Washington.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

BOUNDARY WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is reported in this weeks Maclean's that the Minister cut a backroom deal with George Shultz on the voyage of the Polar Sea through Canada's Arctic and in fact in Washington agreed on the terms for such a voyage three months in advance. Having perhaps not been entirely candid with Canadians about the Polar Sea incident, how can British Columbians find any reason to trust that the Government has not already cut a deal on the AB Line, the Beaufort Sea and the Strait of Juan de Fuca, in the interests of the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for asking that question because it provides me with the opportunity to place on the record the fact that the report in Maclean's magazine was totally false. With regard to the concerns of the Nishka people, the other day I had the opportunity, as the Hon. Member knows, to meet with representatives of the Nishka people who are concerned about their traditional rights to offshore British Columbia. I found it to be a very valuable conversation, and I think they found it reassuring.

OBJECT OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the article in Maclean's is not an editorial. It quotes Canadian officials. I wonder if the Minister would explain to the House why he and the B.C. Government are discussing the movement of West Coast Canada-U.S. boundaries like the AB Line. Dos not the axiom "if it isn't broken, dont't fix it" hold in the case of Canada's sovereign boundaries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is often difficult to know if opinions put forward in Maclean's magazines are stories or opinions. Whatever they are, this one was false.

With regard to why we are discussing with the Government of British Columbia whether or not it would be useful for us to discuss with the United States a negotiation to bring clarity to a situation about which there is now dispute, it is precisely because clarity is better than a lack of clarity. I made it very clear on several occasions that if it is not in Canada's interests to enter into those negotiations, we will not do so. If, once in those negotiations, we will not do so. If, once in those negotiations, it is not in Canada's interests to conclude an agreement, we will not conclude an agreement.

Oral Questions

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

USE AS COLLATERAL FOR LOANS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and deals with the procedure of selling Canada Savings Bonds. Residents of my constituency were approached by financial institutions and dealers in 1985 with the idea that the individual take out a loan for CSBs from the institution at a preferred rate of interest, using only the bonds as collateral. The individual signs over the bonds after the new year, realizing a tax deduction—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very long question.

Mr. James: Given that close to $3 billion in CSBs have been cashed in during January and February, 1986, could the Minister inform the House if the high redemption of CSBs can be attributed in any way to the CSB sales scheme that I described, a scheme that I know the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. This is far too long.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised this matter in the House before, and since he has raised it with me I have instructed the Bank of Canada to investigate it. That investigation is being carried on right now and I appreciate receiving this further information from the Hon. Member. I will ask the Bank to look into that as well. I should say that I think a large part of the redemption of the CSBs during this period has been related to the increase in interest rates.

ENERGY

WORLD OIL PRICES—LAY-OFFS ANNOUNCED BY IMPERIAL OIL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Imperial Oil has eliminated 1,800 jobs in the energy industry. If Imperial Oil has done that, you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, what is happening to small Canadian companies. Does the Government still want to wait and see what is happening to world oil prices before it takes any action? How many jobs have to be lost before the Government does something?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members of the House that ongoing discussions are taking place between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada, keeping a watching brief on the situation. It is not a time to panic or make knee-jerk reactions like the Opposition would have us do.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is likewise directed to the Prime Minister. With all due respect to the Parliamentary Secretary, this situation is becoming very serious. I would like the Prime Minister to treat it as such and to answer the question. What does the Government plan to do to save the energy industry in Canada?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this Government has done more for the energy industry in Canada in the last 18 months than any other previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member knows full well that we have been meeting with the energy industry, and the energy industry is asking us to maintain a watching brief. It is keeping us informed. It is not asking us to take any drastic action at this particular time. When action does take place, it will take place in co-operation with the provinces, the kind of co-operation that we have seen over the last 18 months but was not evident before this Government came to power.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES FARM BILL

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During his meeting with U.S. officials, we understand that the Prime Minister raised the issue of the devastating effects of the U.S. Farm Bill on Canadian grain producers. Did the Prime Minister receive any commitment from the U.S. that it would cease to disrupt the international markets in grain by giving away grain free, or by selling heavily subsidized grain on the world market?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had an excellent discussion on the problems of agriculture with both the President and the Secretary of State, and also with the Senate leadership at some length. The view of the Senate was expressed in large measure by Senator Kassebaum.

I indicated to the Senators that, in our judgment, Canadian farmers were not getting either a fair price or a fair shake, and we wanted to make absolutely certain that they got both, including the unfettered access to those new markets that would give them a fair break internationally. We said we were going to be helpful to them in that process, and we sought the understanding and co-operation of the American administration.

PRICE OF GRAIN

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since we did not get an commitment from the United States officials that they would cease to disrupt the international markets, will the Prime Minister give a commitment to the farmers of Canada that they will receive a price similar to that received by U.S. farmers when they sell their grain on the international market?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I said, we had an excellent discussion, one that I think was very helpful to Canadian farmers and will continue to be so. We have given this extremely high priority. We will continue to do so with the support of all Members of the House.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF EFFECT OF LOW INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Interest rates went down 1 per cent last week and 0.5 per cent this week. Here is my question. Can the Minister of Finance explain what this sharp drop in interest rates means to Canadians with a $50,000 mortgage, for instance? How do they stand to benefit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this downward trend in interest rates will spur Canada's economy. As to mortgage rates, they have declined from 13.25 to 11 per cent, which translates into a $1,000 annual saving for a Canadian mortgagor.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE SYSTEM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Recent media reports have stated that the low level air defence system may be scaled down by 50 per cent, or that the Minister of National Defence wants to eliminate the program or at least postpone it. This program is vital and important to Chatham, New Brunswick, and to our Canadian Forces bases in Lahr and Baden in Germany.

Mr. Speaker: A question, please.

Mr. Hopkins: Can the Minister confirm or deny these reports?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Actually, neither, Mr. Speaker. The reports are speculative and decisions on that are currently before the Government. They will be made in due course.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): When?

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question was when will the decision be made, and will the Minister give his absolute assurance that this program will go ahead as originally designed and in the timeframe originally announced?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add beyond my original answer. The matter is being considered, and a decision will be announced in due course.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—REPORTED CANADIAN ASSETS OF OUSTED PRESIDENT MARCOS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Will he confirm to the House that he has received inquiries from the new Aquino Government of the Philippines about the assets of Mr. Jose Campos of Vancouver and Manila, and other Marcos cronies in Canada?

Will the Canadian Government co-operate with Mr. Roy Sangil, representative in Canada of the Philippine Presidential Commission, to reclaim assets in Canada stolen from the Filipino people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that contact in that particular case.

I can tell the Member and the House that when I learned there were stories of an interest on the part of Philippine authorities in recovering assets that might be in Canada, I instructed our ambassador to the Philippines, Mr. Davidson, to meet with senior officials of the Philippine Government to indicate that Canada would co-operate fully within the constraints of Canadian law with Philippine authorities. That meeting has now been held.

My understanding is that an official request has not yet been received, but the Philippine authorities certainly understand that if such a request is issued by those authorities, it will be responded to positively by Canada.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that what the Filipino people need here in Canada is trained investigators, investigators whom they do not have.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs be prepared to make available the RCMP commercial crime squad, the Mounties, to help them investigate these assets?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would want, as the Hon. Member would expect me, to consider all of the precedents that would be involved in that kind of a response.

If those precedents allow a response of that kind, and if indeed there is a request of that kind from Philippine authorities, I think our disposition would be to respond.

The bottom line, Sir, is that we want to help the Government of the Philippines recover assets that are legitimately theirs that might be in Canada.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INCORRECT REPORTING OF GAS PRICES ALLEGED

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications, but in his absence I will direct it to the Parliamentary Secretary. On March 7, 1986, a reporter with CBC's Journal said:

> You can buy a gallon of gas in Detroit for 95 cents. That's about 20 cents a litre.

He neglected the conversion to Canadian dollars and he neglected the conversion—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Attewell: Yes, Mr. Speaker—from an American gallon to a Canadian litre.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Attewell: When will this Crown corporation be mandated to report to Canadians in an unbiased, balanced manner?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as one who has spent a little time in a press gallery I can understand how mistakes can happen. That is, however, a pretty big mistake.

As the Hon. Member is aware, programming decisions, including programs selected and new content are the direct responsibility of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation management and its Board of Directors. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and assure him that the CBC executive will be informed of his concerns.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

INQUIRY IF MEMBER FOR SIMCOE SOUTH OBTAINED AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL TO SOUTH KOREA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. It has been confirmed that six Progressive Conservative Members are now in South Korea, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works. We know why the Minister is not here. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South, had the authorization of the Government to travel, is he now on Government business in South Korea?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is a Member of Parliament, as any other Member of Parliament.

With respect to the question of the Government's sanction, I think the Deputy Prime Minister answered that quite adequately earlier this week.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again for the Prime Minister. Given that answer, will the Prime Minister do the honourable thing, ask the Member when he returns—or order him back and ask him—to resign his post, and name a Parliamentary Secretary who will do the job here?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like an understanding of why the Hon. Member suggests that that kind of request be made.

Does he suggest that he himself as Whip of his Party should be stuck here in Ottawa morning, noon, and night because he is an official of his Party? What is the basis of the Member's request?

Mr. Gauthier: He replaces the Minister.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Can the Minister confirm the statement he made in Sherbrooke last Wednesday, namely that he endorses the recommendations of the Textile and Clothing Board? Can he also confirm the statement to the effect that the four Departments involved have now agreed on the need to implement the measures suggested by the Board to ensure the survival of this major industry, regardless of the statements made last week by the Conservative caucus and the textile industry?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, once again the Member is admitting that he has made erroneous statements in the past. He has simly repeated what has oft been stated before as the government position with respect to the textile and clothing industry. We have the board recommendations. We agree in principle with those recommendations. We want a viable textile and clothing industry in this country.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister was made an honorary life member of the le Comité de survie du textile de Sherbrooke, and since he indicated that the relevant Ministries are now in accord with what to do and have reached a consensus, can he tell us when the specific measures to ensure the maintenance of this industry which will stop the potential loss of 50,000 or 60,000 jobs in Ontario and Quebec will be announced?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member has noted I am now a life member of that survival committee. It was an honour conferred on me obviously because of my role. It was not conferred on the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: I know Members are going to be very pleased with our policy on textiles and clothing, which will be announced quite soon.

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Cochrane-Superior. One question.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Right across northern Ontario today there is a great deal of apprehension about renewed reports that the U.S. Congress and administration will get very tough on Canadian lumber imports. Having just returned from Washington, can the Prime Minister give the House, and the region from which I come, any assurances at all that this vital U.S. market for our lumber importers will be maintained and not diminished?

• (1200)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did so in a number of ways and on a number of occasions. Some American Senators and Congressmen have been taking the position that an essential precondition to any trade talks was the resolution of lumber issues in their favour. The answer was that there would be absolutely no preconditions of any kind.

Second, I told them in the Congress, in the Senate, and in the White House, that with particular regard to the forest industry Canada was a fair trader. We met all the objective criteria of the GATT and any bilateral requirements. I said that we are competitive and want to compete more. I said that we wanted a bigger share of their market and that I thought the quality of our products deserved it. I said that we would compete fairly and expect reciprocity in return.

USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATION OF UIC BENEFITS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present which have been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. The first petition is signed by residents of Corner Brook in the riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe who are protesting the changes in the unemployment insurance regulations which cause pension income to be deducted from UIC. REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of the riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, specifically from the northern peninsula, protesting the elimination of the Katimavik program. The petitioners request that the Government of Canada re-establish this program as requested by Senator Jacques Hébert.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from residents of the federal riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe with regard to the Katimavik program. This petition is from the northern peninsula portion of that federal riding. It also requests that the Government of Canada restore the Katimavik program to its original funding level as requested by Senator Jacques Hébert.

I have a petition from residents of the Three Rivers area of the Province of Quebec. It is protesting the cancellation of the Katimavik program and asks that it be restored to its full funding level as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the Province of Quebec with regard to the Katimavik program. The petitioners again ask that it be restored to its full level.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that when he has multiple petitions with regard to one subject all he need do is say he has more than one petition. I think he can conclude briefly.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I have multiple petitions with regard to the Katimavik program from residents of the Province of Ontario. The first petition is from residents of the Ottawa region, the second from residents of the Ottawa and Toronto area, and the third is also from the Province of Ontario. They all protest, in large number and clear voice, the cancellation of Katimavik and ask the Government to restore it to its previous funding level.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Montreal region residents who claim that the Katimavik project was a success and want the program to be maintained.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-85, an Act to amend the Petroleum Incentives Program Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the Bill be read a third time and passed.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues from the Liberal Party and the NDP will also participate in this brief debate this morning on third reading of Bill C-85.

[Translation]

You will probably recall following my preliminary comments in this House at the second reading stage of this Bill that the phasing out of the Petroleum Incentives Program is an important element of the commitment of this Government to the Canadian people as concerns national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice.

[English]

The purpose of Bill C-85 is to provide a legislative framework for the orderly phasing out of the Petroleum Incentives Program, commonly referred to as PIP. This is but one element of our Government's new frontier energy policy announced on December 20, 1985. The Bill was referred to a legislative committee on January 27, 1986. Hearings were held and representations made by the Canadian Petroleum Association, the Independent Petroleum Association, and representatives from Canadian companies such as Husky-Bow Valley. The committee, under the very able chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), then reported back to the House on March 7, recommending passage of the Bill without amendment.

It should be noted that the phasing out of PIP comes at a time when the frontier is moving from a phase characterized by high levels of Government intervention, to one which relies more heavily on market forces and private sector decisions; a phase of wildcat exploration to one which is more development oriented. In Hibernia we are now ready to move into the start of the production phase, which is very, very important. The finds experienced in the Beaufort, which are very exciting indeed, will of course move to the development stage in the not-too-distant future. I do not think there is anything that will help exploration in our frontiers more than the development in our frontiers. In other words, nothing provides more of an incentive to further exploration than to see the fruits of previous exploration being realized in this great country of ours. Development of Hibernia is a priority with us. Construction of production facilities and drilling of development wells will have an important and positive impact on the economy of Atlantic Canada in general and Newfoundland in particular.

I had the good fortune to visit Stavanger, Norway to look at the offshore developments which will be comparable to some extent to what we will see off Newfoundland. I was impressed by the number of construction jobs created by this project. The platforms were very impressive and their immensity is very difficult to describe. They are huge. I visited one platform, about one-eighth of which contained a 200-room hotel fully equipped with theatres, exercise rooms and restaurants. You can imagine the immensity of these projects. This all bodes well for our future, especially the future of Atlantic Canada is general, and Newfoundland in particular, where the spin-offs will be tremendous.

To encourage this trend in development the Government has introduced a new frontier energy policy. The main thrust is to remove all the National Energy Program taxes, including the phased elimination of the PGRT. That tax has dropped to 10 per cent and will disappear as of January 1, 1989. We have implemented a royality regime which is more profit sensitive. We have introduced a royality investment credit and exploration tax credit to assist companies in financing their exploration activities. There is new legislation to simplify and improve the management regime for Canada's energy frontiers. This is reflected in the proposed Canadian Petroleum Resources Act, Bill C-92, which we hope will receive and second reading in the not-too-distant future. Since it was printed representations have been made by various private sector groups and organizations, and Governments for that matter, who will want to make representations on that Bill.

There has been some concern expressed that this Government is abandoning the frontier to the multinationals. I do not think that is a fair criticism. This Government has stated many, many times, and made it very, very clear, that we want both the multinationals and Canadians on the frontier. There is room for both. As a matter of fact, the multinationals have tremendous financial resources and a much broader base than our Canadian companies, so we need them. We as a Government welcome their participation and their investment because it means jobs. It is as simple as that. It means jobs in Canada. We have made it very, very clear that we want them to participate in exploration and development of our frontier.

There are now a number of sizable Canadian-controlled companies active on the frontier as well. We want a partnership of these two interests. We think we can have a partnership. Not only do we think, we know we can have a partnership between these two interests. The capital and expertise such a partnership can provide is important to the enhancement of frontier exploration and development.

Bill C-92, which we will be discussing later in the year, requires as a necessity 50 per cent Canadian ownership of post-1982 frontier discoveries once the production phase has been reached. We are encouraging the multinationals to join the partnership with Canadians to develop our frontiers. The Petroleum Incentives Program, the PIP regime, that will be in place from April 1, 1986 to December 31, 1987 is the result of extensive consultation with the oil and gas industry and honours industry commitments in place at the time of the Western Accord, commonly referred to as grandfathering.

We understand that on the frontiers the lead time for exploration, for planning and for commitments is much longer than that of conventional plants? Therefore we are allowing a period of time for those companies who have signed commitments in place at the time of the Western Accord to carry out those commitments. The Government will be spending in that period of time from April 1, 1986, to December 3, 1987 about a billion dollars. We are not talking about a small amount of money, we are talking a billion dollars. That will be spent for those firms which qualify through the grandfathering rules that form the basis of this new regime. We feel that it is fair. We feel there has been extensive consultation with the companies. During the committee hearings we read off the lists of the numerous meetings that the officials and the Ministers held with the industry on this particular grandfathering clause in the PIP regime.

Some companies have expressed concern that it is not enough, that they would like to do more exploration and they would like more money in that period of time. That is only natural. When a program is about to close everybody wants just a little more. I can remember when it was announced that the CHIP program would all of a sudden close a year early there was a mad flurry of applications. That is human nature. People tend to put off things until the very last moment and then all of a sudden they want more and more and more. I understand that, that is a way of life. I put off renewing my licence till the very last possible day, until my birth date. I know I am being chastised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) for doing that, but I think it is human nature and that is what we have seen here.

We feel we have struck a fair deal with the industry on the grandfathering clause, that there will be activity in the frontier and this will cushion that period of time until we get into our new regime of exploration on the frontier. I am sure that my colleague from Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) will have more to say on that when he makes his contribution to the debate on third reading of this Bill.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I might thank the Hon. Member from Cape Breton-The Sydneys as I know that in order to be here this morning he had to make some special arrangements, and I do appreciate him doing that. I trust that he will take my best wishes back home to his mom, who I know is not feeling well. I am hopeful that she will be up and around in the not too distant future.

We are pleased with this Bill. It fulfils the campaign promises made by this Party before the election, and the policies of this Government regarding energy and dismantling the National Energy Program and to bring in a new energy program. We feel it is going to be far more receptive to the warrants and the requirements of a very vital industry. We are going through a period right now of low prices, a matter of great concern to this Government, which is affecting adversely one province especially.

I can tell the Hon. Members here that what we are talking about is frontier exploration. We are talking about bringing supplies onstream, probably four, five, six years down the road. As James Schlesinger, the former Secretary of Energy, said recently in Ottawa, projections are difficult, especially if they pertain to the future. What we have to do at this particular time is project what is going to happen in the world of energy, in the world of hydrocarbons, four or five years down the road. The industry is doing that. They have confidence in the frontier and have assured us that they are continuing their exploration and their development work.

I conclude by saying that we are extremely pleased that we have brought Bill C-85, the Petroleum Incentives Program Act, to this stage. We are seeing it pass through with grandfathering clauses in place to take care of those signed commitments that were in place at the time of the Western Accord. It is part of our over-all package which will be continued with Bill C-92 in the not too distant future. I look for speedy passage of this Bill so that we can send it on to the Senate and Royal Assent. Thank you very much, Sir.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his kind comments regarding my mother, and I appreciate it.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-85 is one that, as the Parliamentary Secretary has said, has gone through first and second readings and through committee. This Party has not agreed to the Bill. It feels that the Bill is particularly harmful to the energy sector and to the people of Canada. Not only that, this Bill is harmful to the credibility of Governments in general. I think we have a situation where this Government is not honouring commitments made by the former Liberal Government. It is going to speak very badly for continuity of investment in Canada if the energy sector and, indeed, the business community look upon Canada as a place where you have to get in and get out before the Government changes. That is going to be very unfortunate, but that is what is happening, and that is what foreign companies, multinational companies, and Canadian companies are looking at.

This Bill also does a great deal of harm to frontier development. I will speak considerably more about that as I continue in my speech. What we are doing is really very harmful for the future. We are literally sabotaging our security of supply of oil and gas in this country. We are going to be very sorry and we are going to regret the day that we allowed this Act to pass.

What is going to happen to the very important question of Canadianization, to Canadian companies that under the Petroleum Incentives Program were able to receive 80 per cent funding even if they were in a non-taxpaying position? Under this Bill they will only get 10 per cent financing. We are going to have Canadian companies that will not be able to participate. It is a very serious situation. I would like to just go through, if I may, some of the things that were discussed in committee, some of the points that this Party feels must be made so that this Government if it passes the Bill is forewarned that it is passing something completely unpalatable to this Party, unpalatable to the energy sector, and I think unpalatable to Canadians who know about the situation.

One company in particular, Husky-Bow Valley, filed a drilling program with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in 1983. It believed at the time that, on the basis of that plan and its acceptance by the federal Government, it could drill the wells it anticipated. In the belief that it was assured of these wells, that it had an agreement and the support of the federal Government, Husky-Bow Valley took upon itself to build two drilling rigs that would be designed exclusively for East Coast drilling, although they could be used in other parts of the world. These two drilling rigs cost the Husky-Bow Valley consortium $430 million, which they paid in anticipation of being able to drill the proposed wells it laid out in its program, and to which the Government agreed.

The proposed wells in this program were identified as a result of a law passed by the then Liberal Government. According to this provision, Canadian companies—with their benefits—could be encouraged to farm-in on lease holdings of other companies. In this case the company was Mobil Oil, which was operating off the coasts of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Mobil Oil would sublease its well drilling rights obtained from the federal Government to other companies like Husky-Bow Valley. In other words, it would be a sublease, but in return for obtaining this sublease Mobil Oil and other companies giving the sublease or farm-in would often require those companies to drill additional wells besides those for which they had obtained rights.

In the case of the Husky Oil and Mobil sublease, the drilling of additional wells was a requirement of the farm-in provision. While Husky-Bow Valley agreed to these requirements, it wanted the right to back away from these additional wells if the initial wells drilled showed no likelihood of oil or gas in those areas. It would not proceed with the other wells, even though it could get 80 per cent funding. I believe that such an arrangement was a benefit to the Government and the Canadian people because the companies would not be drilling dry holes.

Other companies that granted these sublease rights required that additional wells be drilled regardless of whether the initial wells showed any likelihood of oil or gas.

According to the regulations introduced by the Government after the Western Accord, those companies which had an agreement that they would not have to drill additional wells unless the initial wells indicated that oil and gas deposits may be found were placed in a detrimental position. Since these were not firm commitments to drill wells, the Government said those companies could not receive funds under the Petroleum Incentives Program. Therefore, companies that acted in a business-like manner were being penalized and prejudiced under the regulations of the Petroleum Incentives Program. That is unfair because it was prejudicial to companies like Husky-Bow Valley. It had submitted its drilling program and acted in a business-like manner. It stated that it was interested in the frontier off the East Coast of Canada. It even spent $430 million on two drilling rigs as a show of its good faith.

Furthermore, the federal Government indicated that any penalty expense would not qualify for grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program. A penalty expense refers to those companies, Petro-Canada in particular, that were given particular rights, through a consortium, to a particular well through the back-in or Crown lands provision. This back-in provision would enable Petro-Canada to obtain 25 per cent of the drilling rights to a particular well and its production. If Petro-Canada backed out of the consortium, the new partner or remaining partners that would have to pick up the 25 per cent would not qualify for grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program. In other words, the remaining partners or new partner are being put into a prejudicial position.

The Government is asking companies in financial difficulty, particularly during this time of declining oil prices, to take on an extra 25 per cent with no assistance from the federal Government other than the minuscule 10 per cent provided according to this Bill. It is incredible that the rules of the game are being changed retroactively.

Let me return to the case of Husky-Bow Valley. At the time of the Western Accord it was in a position to drill 10 additional wells, pursuant to the Petroleum Incentives Program. These wells were to be drilled in 1986 and 1987. The company owned two drilling rigs which enabled it to drill a limited number of wells at one time. If it did not use these rigs, worth $430 million, it would have to rent additional rigs at a cost of millions of dollars, while the repayment and recapture of its investment on its own rigs might go completely unreplenished. Therefore, the company wanted to make use of its own investment in order to drill the wells which they acquired on their own behalf and on behalf of the people of Canada.

The Government makes matters worse by stating that the Petroleum Incentives Program grants are only available under the primary term, which it is limiting to the period from the Western Accord, approximately a year ago, to the end of March, 1986. Since Husky-Bow Valley would have to stagger its drilling in order to use its own rigs, that provision completely rules out the possibility of Husky-Bow Valley being able to drill its 10 wells with its own rigs. This was done by the Government, with full knowledge of the drilling program of Husky-Bow Valley because Husky-Bow Valley had to file its drilling program and did so in 1983. You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, the concern of a company which spends $430 million, plans to drill 10 wells to recapture the money invested and then finds out it cannot drill these wells.

The company immediately started to talk to the federal Government about drilling the 10 wells. In the fall of 1985 it met with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Finance—and we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) here today—and was asked if it would accept seven wells. Husky-Bow Valley said it would accept seven wells at the urging of the federal Government. It agreed to reduce the number of wells to be drilled from 10 wells to seven. I think that is a quite a magnanimous move on the part of Husky-Bow Valley, even though it felt it should be able to recapture the expenditure by drilling the seven wells instead of 10.

Then in January of this year, the Minister of Finance put pressure on the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, saying the Government could not afford to let Husky-Bow Valley drill seven wells, so changes were made in the regulations under Bill C-85. But no one has seen the regulations. No one knows what they are. Certain regulations have been made known to Husky-Bow Valley and Members of the industry but no one has ever seen them in their entirety. No one knows exactly what they are going to be. They could be changed yet again.

By saying that it could not afford to let Husky-Bow Valley drill seven wells, the federal Government has taken these regulations which only it knows—and perhaps even it does not know or perhaps it will change them yet again—and applied them retroactively, because they are going to be put into effect no sooner than April 1, 1986. That is when the grandfathering period begins. The regulations cannot come into effect before then, but the federal Government has taken these regulations and applied them retroactively, using cohersion through the Department of Finance to have the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reduce the number of wells because the Government wants to save money.

The Government is not worried about its commitment, or about the proposition in which it is putting Husky-Bow Valley and others. It is not worred about the future of offshore drilling and drilling on the frontier. The Government wants to reduce its Budget, a plan which it has had in its since it came to power on September 4, 1984.

For the Government to believe it does not have to honour the commitment of a previous Government is ludicrous and despicable enough, but, after it has been in power a year and a half, to say it is going to change its mind again on a program which was implemented and filed in 1983 is ten times worse.

What are the results of the regulations we have not seen? We did not see them in first and second reading or in committee. We are told by Husky-Bow Valley that instead of the seven wells—which it has reduced from 10 in order to be co-operative—it can now only drill two wells. That is all these new regulations will allow. What a stab in the back of this consortium. And the negotiations continued. By the time we had dealt with this Bill in committee we were told that it was probable that the federal Government would up the amount of wells drilled to four. It seems like there has been a flip of the coin or throw of the dice, but we were told that Husky-Bow Valley would be able to drill four wells. That is still down six from what it wanted and down three from what it agreed to in previous negotiations with the Department of Finance and the Department of Energy Mines and Resources. That is literally treachery.

After the last meeting of committee the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources decided she would throw a few nickels and dimes into the hat as well. She said that Husky-Bow Valley could go for four wells. It is still four. That is the most consistency we have seen for quite a while. It has been a whole two weeks with the same number of wells. Now the Government is going to throw in $20 million as a sort of sop because the company is going to get stung under the penalty expense, and because Petro-Canada is going to pull out. Petro-Canada is urging the cutting back on its expenses, and on the original commitment and intention of Petro-Canada to explore and develop energy sources, at the urging and instructions of the Government. But the Government tells Husky-Bow Valley that because Petro-Canada is going to back out and leave it high and dry, taking with it its 25 per cent right to funds under the Petroleum Incentives Program, the Government is going to allow the company $20 million as a sop. That is incredible.

It is no wonder that foreign companies which are watching the Government's actions are inactions, whichever way you want to look at it, are completely befuddled as to what is going to happen to our Canadian energy policy. This is no way to run a Government. It is no way to run our energy policy. This is not way to deal with an important economic sector.

What will happen now? Where do we go from here? We have the Estimates. According to the Estimates the Government is reducing the funding under the Petroleum Incentives Program for the fiscal year to $950 million. Husky-Bow Valley told us in committee that to drill its seven wells would cost in funds under the Petroleum Incentives Program approximately $300 million. The Government is allowing $950 million under the Estimates. The Government said initially the company could drill two wells because of the retroactive regulations. If we assume the first two, which were agreed to under the clandestine activity of the federal Government, there are still five wells. The additional five wells would probably cost $225 million. The Government has allowed $950 million. The world oil price has completely skuttled whatever intention was left on the part of companies to come in and participate. Why could the Government not fit this into the $950 million? What the Government is doing is throwing out $950 million as Petroleum Incentives Program funds for drilling in the frontier, and then snatching it away by regulating the industry so that it cannot qualify. Even if it cost Husky-Bow Valley an additional $300 million for its wells, we could say that it would be half of what would be spent on the East Coast. Why do I say half? Because Husky-Bow Valley said in committee that on the average between April 1, 1986, to the end of the grandfathering provision on December 31, 1987, there would be an average of four drilling rigs, and that two of those drilling rigs would belong to Husky-Bow Valley. So we would assume it would be using half of the Petroleum Incentives Program funds. The other companies at the most would be applying for $300 million and, as a rule, 40 per cent of the Petroleum Incentives Programs funds go to the Beaufort. That takes us to $1 billion. We have $950 million allocated for this fiscal year. However, this fiscal year ends on March 31, 1987, which means there is still from April 1, 1987, to December 31, 1987, for the rest of the drilling program, when other funds could be allocated. It is a diabolical plot to frustrate activity on the frontier, to hold out money to Canadian companies and then snatch it away by not allowing these Canadian companies to qualify.

Husky-Bow Valley was the only one to testify before the committee. But there are other affected companies. Because they do not have an investment in drilling rigs, for which they have to recoup funding, they do not face the prospect of losing so much money. In this way they can walk away without suffering the tremendous financial loss which a company such as Husky Bow Valley will suffer.

The treatment which has been dealt to the industry in exploration and the frontier development area is unacceptable to my Party. In no sense of the word can the Government possibly say it is interested in increasing our country's security of supply because it is clandestinely working against what it said it would do.

We heard yesterday that the Premier of Alberta telephoned Sheik Yamani to voluntarily put a limit on production in Alberta. What the Government is doing is exactly the same thing, but through different means. It is placing a limit on production in the country as a result of its policies and the way it is implementing them. It gives policies on the one hand, and on the other it takes them back; through the back door by regulations which are to be used and retroactively applied.

We are in a very vulnerable position in Canada because our conventional supply of crude oil will last only a few more years. Unless the Government recognizes that, and unless it is prepared to take a stand, then the country's future supply of oil will run out very soon. I believe today is the day the Minister of Finance said he would hold meetings regarding the Husky upgrader. This is an important project in Western Canada. It would provide a means to develop synthetic oil which can be refined and used in the same way as we use conventional crude at the present time. It is vital that the Government agree to go ahead with the original commitment of the former Government to provide the loan guarantee of $780 million and the $50 million in grants in order to help this program.

It is not the industry we are seeing backing down in terms of development and exploration. What we are seeing is the Government backing out of the commitment to the exploration and development sectors. It is the Government which has weak knees in terms of planning for the future in order to provide what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has called the engine for growth. Well, the wheels have fallen off that engine. How have they fallen off? Not as result of the falling price of oil and not as a result of the industry backing away. They have done so as a result of the Government backing away from its commitments. Where is the policy now? There is just so much contradiction. Not only is there contradiction in terms of policy but there is contradiction in terms of dealing with the industry. This creates what I think is most damaging of all, uncertainty. No one in the country knows where the Government is going, least of all the Government.

What is this doing? There is a range war out there in the energy sector. What we see is vigilante law in the energy sector because the Government is afraid to make a call or send a telegram asking for prices to come down. It is afraid it will be accused of scrapping deregulation. It is saying, in effect: "Goods heavens, don't let us be perceived as having said anything to the industry". I cannot call the President of Petro-Canada and tell him that he must pay a fair price to Canadian producers. I cannot tell him to give Canadian retailers the same wholesale price he is allowing American retailers. Right now the wholesale price from Petro-Canada to American retailers is seven cents a litre less than it is to retailers in Canada.

This is our rapidly depleting resource which the Government is selling. There is nothing wrong with that. It is important that Canada carry on in this regard. However, we have to replenish what is there. We have to plan for the future. The Government is not doing that. Not only is it not doing that, it is allowing the product to be sold to American retailers more cheaply than to retailers in Canada. The Government is allowing the consumer to be gouged at the pumps. The Government is allowing Petro-Canada to pay producers in western Canada the lowest price in the world for crude oil. It was paying the west Texas intermediate posted price up until January of 1986; but then in January of 1986 The west Texas intermediate posted price became higher than the west Texas intermediate spot price. Instead of sticking with the posted price, Petro-Canada offered producers the spot price, which is the lowest price in the world for crude oil. So at a time when small and medium-sized Canadian companies are going bankrupt laying off employees the Crown corporation is gouging them with the lowest price possible. This is reprehensible. It is not what we want.

Why is it happening? Because the Government wants the Canadian people to hate Petro-Canada so much that there will be no flack whatsoever when it is offered to the private sector in a share issue. It wants Petro-Canada to make as much profit as it possibly can so that these shares will be as valuable to wealthy Canadians as they possibly can be, regardless of the fact that Canadians already own the corporation. What will happen is that Canadians will have to pay a third time for Petro-Canada. First, they will have to do it through the takeover of corporations of which Petro-Canada is now formed. Second, they are paying inflated prices at the pump. Third, there will be a share issue which will have Canadians, or ones who can afford it, buying the company which they not only own but which all Canadians own.

I would like to ask the House and the Government to reconsider this Bill and the damage it will cause if it becomes law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) now has the floor. It is close to one o'clock. Shall I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Waddell: Let us call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was given the floor.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Mailly: Stand up.

Mr. Waddell: I am standing up. I will tell you a Friday afternoon story, Mr. Speaker. The first time I ever gave a speech in the House I was sitting way back in the far corner of the Chamber. I was the last Member in the House because my name starts with a "W". Before I went into the House to make my first speech I said to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme): "I need something to make me appear taller in the House," and he said: "Here, take this". It was the Ottawa-Hull phone book. I put it down on the floor and stood up on it and it was just perfect. Then the Hon. Member rose on a point of order and said: "Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is speaking on a Liberal platform".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Of course, that has changed, has it not?

I do want to speak on Bill C-85, the Bill which ends the PIP. It is a short Bill. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) dealt with the Bill in some detail. I would like to illustrate in a different way how the PIP worked by using a concrete example and illustrating some of the problems that exist.

In committee we dealt with the fairness of the provisions for grandfathering out the Petroleum Incentives Program, the grants to oil companies for exploration in the offshore and the Arctic. I made my position on this fairly clear in the House on Monday, April 19, 1982; on Thursday, June 10, 1982; and on other occasions in the past. On those occasions, I spoke against the Petroleum Incentives Program. Normally I would be in favour of a Bill phasing out the program since I was against the program in the first place. However, the position of NDP Members is that we oppose this Bill. We opposed the program in the first place because it was an expensive means to Canadianize the industry and it was open to abuse.

As reported in Volume 1, page 1:17 of the committee hearings, I asked how much the PIP cost. The answer was that in 1982-83 it cost $1.4 billion; in 1983-84, $1.5 billion; in 1984-85, $1.9 billion and the expected cost for 1985-86 was $1.5 billion. As well, it was expected that the grandfathering period would end with a cost of a further $1 billion. That means that almost $8 billion has been spent on the program. I thought it was too expensive and open to abuse and I will show how it was open to abuse in a moment.

We are going to oppose the Bill, albeit reluctantly, for four reasons. The Government has not given the program a decent burial and is not grandfathering the program honestly. There was one advantage to the program. It permitted medium-sized Canadian oil companies to play with the big majors on the frontiers. The top recipients of PIP grants were Petro-Canada, Dome Petroleum Ltd., Husky Oil, Bow Valley Industries, Canterra Energy, Norcen, Home Oil, Gulf Canada, Scurry-Rainbow and Trillium Exploration. Those grants enabled these companies to go out to the frontiers. We should treat them fairly now that we are ending the program.

I was convinced by the evidence presented at the committee hearings that the Bill is unfair to the Canadian companies that invested and worked in offshore. I would like to read an article from Oilweek of February 24, 1986. The article quotes Robert Blair of Husky, probably Canada's leading private oil man. It reads as follows:

> "We lowered our sights to seven wells," Blair said. "Now we're fighting for our seven wells." He was referring to separate meetings the day before with the same two ministers in an attempt to confirm that the seven remaining wells would be grandfathered for full PIP grants under C-85. "Through December, 1985, Husky-Bow Valley believed these wells could be fully 'PIPed' if drilled between April 1, 1986 and December 31, 1987," he said. "But, starting in January, we heard the number of wells we could drill would be reduced to two." If true, he said, it would devastate the companies' program.
> "As of this morning, we have been assured there will be four fully 'PIPed' wells." This would keep the consortium going for several months but "we still need the seven wells to salvage the program." He estimated the PIP eligibility of the seven at $290 million.

What we saw in committee, and this is the hub of the problem, is that if a company under these new regulations is brought in to replace one that drops out of a well under the existing drilling program, that company cannot receive PIP grants for its work. We were told by some of Canada's leading oil men who testified before the committee, including Robert Blair, Art Price and Doc Seaman, that they would lose the end of the program and it would be very difficult to restart. As a matter of fact, there would be bad blood between the Government and these private oil companies and the programs could never be started again.

The second reason we are opposed to this Bill is that most of the Bill is in fact in the regulations. Without seeing the regulations, we cannot judge the Bill. We were offered telexes by the Parliamentary Secretary but these telexes were not really of much help. Why should we pass this Bill when we do not have the regulations? We will simply be giving the Government carte blanche.

We have passed Bills containing regulations that are to be made later, but in this case the regulations will be so broad and all encompassing that there is really not very much in the Bill itself. All the Bill does is deal with a few definitions and phase out the PIP.

The third reason we are opposed to this Bill is that exploration off the Grand Banks and the Scotian Shelf would be killed too abruptly which would be too much of a shock to Atlantic Canada. There has been a strange silence in committee. We did not hear from the Nova Scotia Government and we did not hear from Petro-Canada, even though we asked them to appear. I think this Bill means trouble for the East Coast. In fact, in my view it means the end of gas and oil exploration activities in Hibernia and in the Venture gas field in Nova Scotia. When this Bill is combined with the lower oil prices, it creates a double whammy and it will end exploration. I think the people of Atlantic Canada are just beginning to realize this.

The fourth and final reason we are opposed to this Bill is that I am not satisfied that we heard the real story behind the PIP grants in committee. I would like to tell the House a little bit about that story and I will dwell on one company, East Coast Energy Corporation. I referred to this matter in committee a number of times.

The evidence of the committee meeting of February 6, 1986, as reported on page 1:21 of the minutes of the committee, show that I asked how much money East Coast Energy got in PIP grants. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) replied that it had received $1,726,466. Then, at the end of the committee hearings, I tried to get the committee to subpoena Mr. Edward Chaisson and Mr. Fred Doucet, the principals of East Coast Energy. This was voted down by the Conservative majority. I want to tell the House a little bit about—

● (1410)

Mr. McDermid: You said Fred, you meant Joe Doucet.

Mr. Waddell: I meant Gerald Doucet and Edward Chaisson.

East Coast Energy was the only private Atlantic Canada company that got involved in the coastal exploration. All the other companies were from Alberta. It is very important why this company failed and why it was unable even with the PIP grants to continue its program. This failure tells us something about the PIP grants. It also tells us something about what I call the St. Francis Xavier gang and the cronies who operate the PMO. They are real operators, Mr. Speaker.

East Coast Energy got a piece of the offshore from its friends in the Nova Scotia Government. The company paid $8 million for 1 per cent of the Venture field off Nova Scotia. The principals in the company were the Doucet brothers, Fred who later became the chief of staff of the then Opposition Leader, Brian Mulroney and Gerald.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I should not use a Member's name. I meant the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Mr. Doucet is on the Prime Minister's staff.

Last Friday I was in the court house in Toronto and found some interesting documents. I would like to quote from the case of Walter Wolf versus Jean Alfred Doucet. Wolf is the plaintiff and Doucet the defendant. This action is in the Supreme Court of Ontario, court file No. 6354/85. On page 4 of the statement of claim it reads:

> The Defendant, Jean Alfred Doucet, is a senior advisor to the Prime Minister of Canada, resident in the City of Ottawa, in the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and was until in or about the autumn of 1983 the Chief Executive Officer, Vice-President, Secretary and a director of ECE.

The Prime Minister in the early 1980s had been in St. Francis Xavier and had raised some money. Actually, Mr. Doucet had done most of the fund-raising, about $11 million for St. Francis Xavier University, but the present Prime Minister got a lot of the credit.

Just after this, Mr. Doucet called back in some of those favors. He got a number of the Prime Minister's friends, including the Prime Minister, to invest in East Coast Energy. The Prime Minister invested $15,000.

In December, 1982, there was a share issue because the company was undercapitalized in drilling holes off Nova Scotia. Even with the PIP grants and with a 1 per cent share it cost lots of money. According to the court documents, Mr. Doucet was approached by Michel Cogger, another of the Prime Minister's cronies and a Quebec solicitor, and he got Walter Wolf, who says he is a friend of the Prime Minister, to invest $500,000 in East Coast Energy.

According to further court documents, Mr. Speaker, and a related law suit, the suit of McLeod Young Weir Limited plaintiff against Michael Cogger and Walter Wolf, Supreme Court of Ontario court file No. 1654-84.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is a pre-trial hanging.

Mr. Waddell: I am being very careful and only reporting from court documents that are public. The investment firm of McLeod Young Meir handled the shares and Don Ripley, another old crony of the Prime Minister, handled this deal for McLeod Young Weir.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I suppose that is in the court documents?

Mr. Waddell: Who is Walter Wolf and why is he important to the story of the PIP grants and East Coast Energy? He is the mysterious offshore money that came in, according to Mr. Dalton Camp, to fund the downfall of the former Conservative Leader, Mr. Clark. Mr. Wolf said publicly that he gave $25,000.

In fact, my sources tell me that a sum of $6 million was spent by the present Prime Minister in 1976, 1983 and 1984 at conventions in order to win the leadership of his Party. Up to $2 million was invested by Mr. Wolf. Up to $2 million was invested by Paul Desmarais of the Power Corporation, and another $2 million came from other sources.

Mr. McDermid: Wouldn't that be nice if it were true? It would be nice if fund-raising were that easy.

Mr. Waddell: Why is Mr. Wolf suing Doucet? According to the court papers, the shares Wolf said he bought were never listed on the stock exchange. In other words the share issue fell flat. Fred Doucet then decided that East Coast Energy needed more than just PIP grants, but conventional oil production and immediate cash flow from it. Mr. Doucet then had East Coast Energy buy Petroleum Royalites Limited, an Alberta company. This was a dreadful mistake. He tried to merge the two companies and go to the market with a huge equity issue to wipe out the joint debt. The deal fell through, of course, because no one wanted to buy the shares of companies that were so indebted.

Last July, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce called the loans of East Coast Energy to fold East Coast Energy. Mr. Doucet is now one of the senior advisors to the Prime Minister of Canada.

What did Mr. Wolf get for his investment in East Coast Energy and in the Mulroney campaign? The answer is not much, although there was the matter of a contract for $363,- 000 from Petro-Canada to Wolf Sub-Ocean Ltd. which is part of the offshore play.

Wolf Sub-Ocean was owned by Walter Wolf and Frank Moores. Gerald Doucet, who is Fred's brother and formerly of East Coast Energy, is now a partner with Moores in a lucrative consulting firm in Ottawa. Members are well aware of this firm. Also in the company is Gary Ouellet, an important Quebec organizer for the Conservatives. Eric Dorion, President of the Young P.C.s of Quebec and an organizer for that Party, worked for Mr. Moores, Quellet and Gerry Doucet.

What was done with Wolf's offshore money? It went to buy Quebec bodies to send to the Winnipeg convention. At one meeting, for example, 1,000 people were paid $10 each to choose six delegates who were paid $1,000 each to go to Winnipeg. You can see why this committee should have heard from East Coast Energy and its principals. You can imagine how this would be treated in the United States by a committee there if the Americans were examining PIP, offshore and the way moneys were spent, Mr. Speaker.

The first Wolf case was set down for trial July 10, 1985, but there is a 16 to 18 month delay in Ontario. The trial will be December, 1986 or in 1987. Then maybe we can hear a little bit more about what is going on. Wolf is suing Doucet for $300,000. McLeod Young Weir is suing Wolf and Cogger for $200,000. There is no honour among thieves.

There should be a royal commission appointed in this country to investigate East Coast Energy, its use of the PIP money, its connections to Walter Wolf and to the Prime Minister's office through Fred Doucet, and the extent to which East Coast Energy money or Wolf money went to purchase, first a Party leadership, and ultimately the control of the Government of Canada. Who says Canada is a banana republic?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there or is there not a 10 minute question and answer period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is not a 10 minute question and answer period. I have given ample time to speakers.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe we are entitled to a ten-minute question period for the Hon. Member who is the New Democratic Party energy critic. I think we are allowed ten minutes of questions.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I was a little fast on the draw, I must admit. Standing Order 55(1) states that the first two speakers have unlimited time and the last Member has 20 minutes plus a 10 minute period for questions and comments. Therefore, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on a question or a comment.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I know that was just an honest slip on your part. The rules have been changed so often since the convening of this Parliament that I do not know how any Speaker can fulfil his function to meet these changes that have been made by the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —since it took office. I listened with interest to the hon. gentleman's speech. I want to ask him about the first couple of minutes of his speech which had nothing at all to do with East Coast energy companies or individuals.

• (1420)

He stated correctly that he and his Party, in this Chamber, opposed the Petroleum Incentives Program. Over the years New Democratic Party members labelled the program as a massive giveaway to large oil companies. The Member now recognizes that Canadian companies based in Alberta, other than the company to which he mainly referred in his speech, are now saying that they cannot continue drilling without those incentives, regardless of the price of oil. Given that fact, would he not agree that the incentives which were in place prior to this Government assuming power should be reinstituted for the next two or three years?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Member is perhaps politely asking whether I am not being inconsistent, having spoken and voted against the PIP and now speaking against this Bill which phases it out. I said honestly in my speech that I did that and I gave the dates when I spoke in the House. I said at the time that I thought the PIP was too expensive. What have we got for $8 billion? Do we have a barrel of oil or any gas from the offshore or the Arctic? We got a token shipment of barrels from Bent Horn. We got some exploration and a little bit of knowledge of what was out there. However, I thought it was pretty expensive and I am not sure it was worth it. I recognize that some Canadian companies were involved, and I gave a list of them. The problem is that we are now going to leave them high and dry.

The program had two purposes. The first was to Canadianize the industry by giving breaks to Canadian companies. The second was to find out what existed in the frontiers. The real reason for the program was that the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, was having a war with the former Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, and he wanted exploration to be shifted to the frontiers which the federal Government controlled. You will recall that the federal Liberal Government always insisted that it had power in the offshroe. That was part of the energy battle. It was a tremendous waste of money.

I wish we could examine the amounts of money which were blown on this program. For $8 billion we could have bought Imperial Oil and that would have instantly given us 50 per cent Canadianization. We could have invested it in the tar sands or the heavy oil where results were guaranteed. I think it was a waste of money.

To answer the Member's question specifically, I do not think the program should be extended, but we owe it to those companies to have an orderly phasing out. It is a great surprise for the NDP to stick up for Canadian oil companies, but they are being treated unfairly and this program should be phased out differently. Therefore, it is consistent for me to say that and oppose this Bill.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago the hon. gentleman said that he felt his Party owed it to the companies. I think perhaps he meant they owe it to the workers in the offshore and the companies which keep those workers employed.

In view of his party's position, does the Hon. Member believe—Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) to listen to the questions and answers because he would learn something. It is unfortunate that questions were not allowed after his speech because that would have been a most enjoyable ten-minute experience after hearing the statements that Member made in the Chamber this morning.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would be happy to answer any questions the Hon. Member may have. I was in committee for a week and I did not see him there once asking one question. He is show-boating.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Order! The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate has the floor for a question or a comment.

Mr. Gauthier: That is going to cost you. That's a dumb move.

Mr. Rossi: He is dumb anyway.

Mr. Baker: Does the Member believe that the oil companies which drill in the offshore and frontier lands actually made money from the PIP? This is a very important question, Mr. Speaker. The Member has considerable knowledge in this field. Does he believe that these companies actually made money drilling under the PIP? In other words, regardless of the price of oil, would they have drilled under the PIP?

I ask this because he knows that companies from western Canada are now saying they cannot drill in the offshore, not because the price of oil has gone down but because they cannot get the PIP money. They say that if they got an 80 per cent return on their dollar they would continue drilling. With the present income tax structure the return is about 30 per cent, and they say they cannot drill under those circumstances. Regardless of the price of oil, does the Member believe that with the PIP in place the companies would have drilled? In other words, is he saying that the companies actually made money under the Petroleum Incentives Program?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I will first say that the Member is right in saying that we owe it to the workers employed by the companies on the East Coast to not let them go just like that. That is what will happen if we do not phase this out in an orderly fashion. That was the evidence in committee.

With regard to whether the companies are making money or could continue, I will quote Mr. Allan Ruffman, the Vice-President of Geomarine Associates Ltd. He told a business conference in Halifax, Perspective '86:

> Based on the stated intention of East Coast explorers, there will probably be a 40-to-50 per cent reduction in drilling and a 70 per cent drop in the number of active rigs for a 50 per cent decline in over-all activity.

That was before oil prices fell. He said:

> With the elimination of the replacement of exploration grants by tax breaks, however, the smaller companies may be out of "the offshore game".

We had other witnesses who said that without the grants they would not be in there. Oil companies will go if you give them big grants or super depletion allowances. Of course they made money under the Petroleum Incentives Program. I wish the committee could have studied some of the abuses which I heard of under the program. Money was transferred from company to company. There were a lot of abuses, but they made money and they drilled. There was activity there, there is no denying that. However, if you put enough money in front of anyone, they will take it as encouragement to go ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to discourage anyone from speaking on this Bill, but there were discussions between the parties on the basis of rearranging the scheduling of Business of the House to accommodate the Liberal Party energy critic and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I had a clear understanding that in order to accommodate the critics we would have one speaker per party. I would like to know if the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) was aware of that understanding and whether the Liberal Party is going to continue speaking on this Bill.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was here yesterday when the Minister made a proposal concerning Bill C-85. My House Leader said he could not give his undertaking to whatever the proposal was because we did not understand it. There was a lack of communication. There must be another lack of communication because I understood that the Member from our party who spoke this morning on the Bill did not tell us there was an agreement that there would be only one speaker. He did tell me that the Bill would be voted on today sometime but I never understood there would be a restricted number of speakers.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I was involved in the discussions and the initial agreement was that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and I would speak today. Because of an illness in the family the Liberal Party critic would speak on Tuesday. As it turned out he very kindly said he would stay this morning so we would have one speaker each. I made that agreement with the critics who in turn spoke to their House Leaders. The Hon. Member filled his commitment this morning and has since left for his riding because of an illness in the family. If they are going to break the agreement, then we will be very disappointed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am at the disposal of the House. I would like to help the cause but I see that there is going to be debate—

Mr. Baker: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. This Bill ends the PIP program and exploration off the Newfoundland coast.

Mr. McDermid: No!

Mr. Baker: I am going to put my words on the record here in this Chamber this afternoon regardless of any agreement. I do not know of any agreement, but regardless, I am going to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that basis, then, debate. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member—

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am here on a Friday afternoon when I generally go to my riding because I expect this Bill is going to be coming to a vote.

Mr. McDermid: Speak to your House Leader.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is not a point of order, it is debate. I appreciate what the Hon. Member has just said.

Mr. Tobin: They are trying to shut us down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is debate and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what transpired in a discussion by various Members of this House, but before I start my speech on Bill C-85, perhaps I should mention that this morning I was talking to my hon. friend from Cape-Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) about my speech this afternoon and along what lines it would be. He never indicated there had been an agreement on limiting the number of speeches.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that today we are beginning a very important phase in the way this country is going to manage its limited and non-renewable gas and oil reserves.

In fact, Bill C-85 is an almost definitive step towards the abolition of a national energy policy. This policy, with its weaknesses, strengths and shortcomings, had three objectives. The first was exploration; the second was to achieve increasing Canadian control; and the third was to protect producers and consumers against substantial price fluctuation.

Mr. Speaker, this objective was perhaps too ambitious. And it was perhaps difficult to achieve, not only in the North American context but also in the world energy context. The fact remains there was at least one very specific objective which was to provide for increasing Canadian control over exploration, distribution and Canadianization.

But why should we have a national energy policy in the first place, with, granted, its strengths and its weaknesses? First of all, because the market theory was no longer workable. In fact, since the middle seventies, a group of producing countries had decided to use production control as a means of artificially raising prices. So there was no more free market as we know it, that is, freedom for both buyers and sellers. Furthermore, the number of participants in the market was becoming increasingly limited. And the impact of the activities of this cartel was considerable in terms of excessive profits being enjoyed by an increasingly limited number of participants.

I want to get back to the national energy policy. It did have its weaknesses, which could have been corrected, I will not deny that. The national energy policy was perhaps too ambitious. If the Conservative Government had been willing, it could have limited the scope of the policy through legislation and Government programs. It could have changed or adjusted the policy.

But now, Bill C-85 creates a situation where there will be no Government of Canada to oversee the administration of this limited and non-renewable resource, which is now in the hands of a very limited number of producers.

Mr. Speaker, there will be no more national energy policy. And as for the law of the market, when people say: "Now the market will determine the price", do we really have a free market when producing countries decide to cut production in order to control prices? Do we really have a free market? Can we talk about market laws when four or five producing countries can determine the price millions of consumers will have to pay for this very important commodity? Is there a free market when independent producers are at the mercy of four or five buyers? Can we say the market place is working when we find ourselves in a situation such that the Premier of a province gets in touch with an Arab leader in an attempt to control production so as to boost prices?

Mr. Speaker, if we are to have an energy policy established by a few countries or a handful of producers, why should that policy not be set here in the House by the elected representatives of all Canadians? Mr. Speaker, do we want energy prices and exploration methods to be determined by OPEP members who may or may not agree among themselves? Is all that going to depend on the odd phone call between the Alberta Premier and Sheik Yamani?

Mrs. Mailly: No, no!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may take the floor anytime she wants, but she should refrain from interrupting Members who are serious about this matter. She should speak to her friend the Premier of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, nobody can tell me that the dictates of the market place will prevail with respect to energy when we are facing a cartel and when a handful of foreigners can affect the price Canadians pay for their gasoline or heating oil.

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker, I would say allright, for I believe in free competition and in marketplace, but only when it works. That is why I agree with the marketplace, but I reject the interference of the cartel. If indeed foreigners can decide the future of Canadian consumers and independent producers, I say that if foreigners can do that the Members of this House not only can do the same thing but they must give it top priority. That is why I am a bit upset and quite concerned about the Conservative Government approach, and again I repeat that our national energy policy could have been amended and changed. Some of those benefits could have been limited if they had been deemed excessive, but because of the current world situation, I suggest that a joint intervention of the federal Government and producing provinces is not only desirable but necessary.

Mr. Speaker, why could we not decide ourselves to ensure that oil resources exploration and development—at least most of it, if not all of it—is carried out in Canada by Canadians? As representatives of the Canadian people as a whole, could we not decide democratically here and now, through our tax system and budgetary measures, what is good for our country, our consumers as well as our producers? Mr. Speaker, why could we not, through consultations with the producing provinces, achieve a consensus governing the exploration, development and distribution of these limited and non-renewable resources?

[English]

Mr. McDermid: That's exactly what we have done.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) has said: "Exactly what we have done". What is it that they have done? They have turned over the whole administration to the private sector under the pretext of a free market system, something which actually does not exist. I challenge the Parliamentary Secretary to argue today that competitive forces are at work in this country and are determining oil prices. I am going to use against him his own argument. It is said today that Petro-Canada is buying oil at the lowest possible world price and selling it to Canadians at the highest possible price. What is the purpose of this policy? To get rid of independent producers and gouge consumers of this country.

Mrs. Mailly: That is not true!

Mr. Garneau: What is happening is that . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please!

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, we will be entitled to a 10-minute period for questioning and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! Order, please . . . !

Mr. Rossi: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is interrupting all the time.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Order, please. Order, please. There will be an opportunity for questions and comments after the Hon. Member finishes his 20-minute speech. I know it is Friday afternoon and everybody wants to go back to their constituency but I would like to hear the Hon. Member's speech. I would also ask you to hold your questions and comments until after the Hon. Member finishes debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I submit that Bill C-85—

[English]

An Hon. Member: Did you learn that in Quebec City?

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has insulted the Province of Quebec when he said that—

[English]

Did you learn that in Quebec City? Mr. Speaker, we will not stand for that kind of rubbish.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is not a point of order. I don't know what happened there but I know that the Hon. Member has the floor. I would appreciate very much if Hon. Members would allow him to finish his debate and then I will recognize Hon. Members for questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, what I wish to emphasize is that . . . I understand, Mr. Speaker, that it hurts the Conservative Members to realize that they are giving away something very important, namely our oil and gas resources. They are giving them away by allowing foreign interests to gain control over them, not in terms of ownership, but in terms of development because the present price of oil lets the cartels control the energy policy of Canada, even though this policy should be set by this very House.

Mr. Speaker, I submit with all due respect that by virtually cancelling all exploration programs and abandoning any national energy policy, we are placing this country at the mercy of decisions made outside Canada. I also submit that, to the extent that there is no competition because of the number of companies involved, what the Conservative Government is now doing is to crush independent Canadian producers as, sooner or later, especially if the prices go down, these producers will have to sell out to the larger companies which have the required cash flow because of the fact that there is no competition and that prices at the pumps are high. Because of this and the attitude of Petro-Canada in this sector, the large companies will be able to liberate the necessary cash flow to buy out independent producers, who will be caught in a trap. Why are these independent producers now caught in a trap? Because one of the larger companies, Petro-Canada, must purchase 60 to 70 per cent of its oil from them. It buys this oil at a low price and resells it at the pump where it can control prices.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I think that if decisions have to be made logically and democratically, it should be by this House and by the Government on the other side and not by players outside this place.

I would like to add another dimension to this debate and speak about Canadian unity. When international oil prices were high, the Liberal Government at the time naturally disagreed with the people opposite and said that it was abnormal for Canadians in general to pay excessive prices for heating oil and gasoline and for Canadian businesses to pay such high prices for their energy products because three or four producing countries had decided to set up a cartel. Naturally, at that time, certain producing provinces were asked to make sacrifices for the rest of Canadians. What I am suggesting today to the Government is that in that same spirit of Canadian unity, a point in time will come, if the situation continues to change, where the central provinces, Quebec, Ontario and other regions will have to send the elevator back to the Western producers because we cannot accept that for the purpose of allowing for a kind of free competition that does not actually exist they should tear down in a matter of two to three years' time what has cost so much time and money to build up, that is the Canadianization of our companies which are engaged in oil exploration and production. This is exactly what the OPEC cartel is trying to do, disrupt as much as possible our national self-sufficiency policies. And once they are disrupted, they will jack prices back up and we will find ourselves, in a few years from now maybe, with oil at $40 or $50 U.S. a barrel. And by eliminating with Bill C-85 important elements of the National Energy Policy, by completely deregulating a "free" market that is not actually free, they are trying to bring to an end the Canadianization of our companies and they will push Canada into a situation in which it will again have to depend on foreign producing countries for our supplies, if all exploration is to be stopped.

This is why I am arguing today, not so much to defend the petroleum incentive program as it existed. My aim is not at all costs to defend every aspect of the National Energy Policy. My aim is to tell the Government: "Watch out! Make no mistake! The approach you are taking might be the one that will kill free competition. It might prove to be the most damaging approach to private enterprise that could exist. And it might probably place this country back into situations of conflict between the East and the West."

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker, considering the reduced international price of oil and the fact that Petro-Canada because of its purchasing power is crushing independent producers, would the government intervene rather than withdraw from the management of that resource which is generally known as being limited and non-renewable.

I see all the Tory Members from Alberta. I understand that they are in a difficult position. However, I say today, having travelled throughout Quebec and part of Ontario, that you have supporters not only in Alberta but everywhere in Canada who realize that at a given time there should be a reversal.

I do not know when one should intervene, but I am concerned each time the minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney) says that we will have no intervention but free competition.

I am concerned and I say to the Tory Members, especially those from the West that they may have made some representations in their caucus. However, these will not be entirely inconsistent with mine because I do not want to take a partisan approach. However, if they want me to, I could well do so.

But when I talk about Canadian unity, will the Tory Members tell me that I am being partisan? When I say that there is no competition in the oil industry, am I being partisan? When I say we should help Canadianization and protect our producers, am I being partisan?

Mr. Speaker, at what point should I consider comments as insulting to my colleagues? I would invite them to understand that we are not talking about the corner store but about an industry where four or five major companies control product distribution. When there are only three, four or five buyers, how can you expect independent producers to survive if there is no Government to protect competition.

In fact, how can we have a free market when producing countries are openly getting together to try and limit production and make prices go up? I say that if anyone should set prices for oil and gas within Canada's borders, it should be the Government of my country, not the member countries of OPEC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Questions and comments.

The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, it is really too bad that in his first major speech since he was appointed, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) should serve up another one of those speeches full of lies and exaggerations. I would like to comment on certain points. However, he raised so many, Mr. Speaker, that in spite of ourselves, we reacted rather violently to what he was saying. For instance, when he said that we were letting this country's oil policy being determined by the premier of one of the provinces . . . He knows perfectly well that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said that Canada's policy is created by the Government of Canada. He did not say that the Premier of Alberta had no voice in discussions on international policy or even the national policies of our Government. And he knows that. And that is why I maintain that what he said was a tissue of lies.

Second, he said we wanted to let the market decide the future—

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Member opposite is not only conducting herself in an unlady like fashion with her "vomitting" phrases, she has now referred to lies. That is clearly unparliamentary and she should withdraw it as quickly as she should withdraw herself from the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: Withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. This is not The Young and the Restless. I realize that this is Friday afternoon. I have not head the Hon. Member because of the amount of conversation that is taking place.

Mr. Tobin: She said "fabric of lies".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member is are intimating this, I think you should withdraw your statement. I find that that is not parliamentary.

Mr. Tobin: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One moment. I did not hear the translation and I would ask the Hon. Member to say whether she used unparliamentary language. If she has, I would as her to withdraw it and if she has not, we will carry on with a short question and short comment. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I did not use unparliamentary language because according to the Standing Orders we cannot call somebody a liar, but we can express doubts about the true meaning of the remarks of Hon. Members, and that is what I did. I pointed out that the remarks of the Hon. Member were a fabric of lies. I did not say he was a liar, I said his remarks were a fabric of lies.

Mr. Speaker, if I may—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gatineau should wash her mouth with soap because her comments are absolutely . . . She is indulging in semantics. If she says that the comments of the Hon. Member are a "fabric of lies", it is the same thing as saying that the Hon. Member is a liar. She must withdraw those remarks.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is a borderline case. The Hon. Member for Gatineau is causing the Chair a lot of difficulty by getting as close as she is to unparliamentary language. I hope she will refrain from that and carry on with a short question and comment, please.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: So, Mr. Speaker, I will continue. I was saying that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) . . . Mr. Speaker, I was saying—

[English]

Mr. Tobin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) clearly indicated to the Speaker and the House that she used the words "a veritable fabric of lies". Those were her words, referring to the speech of the Hon. Member who spoke from this side of the House.

When she goes further and tells you that she is doing it in that way because it might be an indirect and permissible way of calling someone a liar, her intention is clear and the Speaker ought to rule decisively.

Mr. Gauthier: You cannot do indirectly what you cannot do directly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member used unparliamentary language, would she please withdraw and carry on with her question.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I went on to say that in his remarks the Hon. Member had claimed—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw—

Mr. Tobin: Name her.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member please withdraw her statement and carry on with her question or comment.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, since you are asking me to make a concrete gesture, I am pleased, to save you from an embarrassing situation, to make that concrete gesture. I regret having said it was a "fabric of lies" and I will simply rephrase by saying that he stretched the truth more than can reasonably be expected.

So, there you are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mailly: Now then, Mr. Speaker, to get back—

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am ruling that the Hon. Member has withdrawn the statement she made. If the Hon. Member has a point of order, I will hear it.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that when the Speaker orders a Member to withdraw, the rule is that there be an unequivocal withdrawal. That was not an unequivocal withdrawal and the Speaker knows it. If we want to set new precedents in the House, we can.

• (1500)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): An unequivocal withdrawal is very hard to get in this Chamber, I must say to the Hon. Member, who has been here for a long time. What the Hon. Member has done, as far as I am concerned and the Chair is so ruling, I consider to be a very fine withdrawal in this regard, particularly on Friday, March 21.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: For instance, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is wrong when he says that we let the market place set Canada's oil policy and that it was harmful to the consumer. Indeed, had we followed the energy policy of the Liberal Government the consumer would not now be able to benefit from falling prices because the Liberal Government had set up a system of administered prices which would have prevented them from dropping since there was a compensation charge.

Second, he said that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) did not intervene in this case, but apparently he forgot—perhaps he was not in the House at the time—that when world prices first began to come down she told the oil companies' representatives that they would eventually have to pass on to the consumer any savings resulting from declining crude oil prices. Therefore it is not true to say that she did not intervene in this case.

On the other hand, when he talks about canadianizing the industry—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope that the Hon. Member will come to a question, please.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have been interrupted so many times that it is difficult for me to carry on with my question. However, I should like to mention for instance the fact that under the previous Liberal administration, the purpose of Canadianization was to force small Canadian companies to join huge foreign oil consortia to become eligible to the tax breaks under the National Energy Policy, which meant that instead of developing under a free market system, the small businesses were crushed by the foreign oil corporations.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member has had ample time. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) may reply or rebut.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just spoken has failed to understand what is at the heart of the debate, as evidenced by her questions . . . or rather her comments. She submits today that the Minister has intervened, while the Minister herself has indicated on several occasions in the House that she would not intervene in order from now on to allow free market forces to operate. She would weekly suggest to the oil multinationals to lower their prices, at a time when she herself, as a Member of this Government, is a shareholder of the company which refuses most stubbornly to lower its prices at the pumps, the same company which is paying our small producers the international price instead of the average Texas posted prices as before.

Which means that the Government, because of its decision not to intervene, will turn over the whole management of Canadian energy resources to four or five Canadian companies equipped with refinery facilities and a distribution network, and also to a foreign cartel which, through production control, may impose, more or less successfully, the prices which Canadian consumers will have to pay at the pumps, which brings me back to the gist of my remarks. If someone in this country is to determine the price which Canadian men and women will have to pay for gas at the pumps, it should be the Government of my country, because if I am dissatisfied, I may, together with other Canadian voters, change the Government; however, there is nothing anybody can do against the OPEC cartel or for that matter, against the presidents of Petro-Canada or Imperial Oil.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow another two minutes or so with regard to questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. I would like to call upon the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and then the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Will they make it brief, please?

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the finance critic of the Liberal Party. He has referred to Canadian unity and to problems between Eastern and Western Canada. Would he be in favour of a floor price for oil producers in Western Canada?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that at a given time there should be some intervention. I have not referred to a minimum price and the Member should know that there are other means. Taxation can be used but I do not want to suggest that this is the only approach. However, if the international price of oil keeps going down, if at a given moment we do not want to destroy something which has been so costly, as you and other Members have said, it has cost billions, of dollars to build up a Canadian oil industry controlled exclusively by Canadians. If we do not want to see that destroyed, there will have to be some intervention. It could be setting a minimum price or something else. This is why at present, I do not want to personally endorse a minimum price, because there could be some other solutions and I would like Government leaders and other authorities to suggest some sort of policy.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Very briefly, as you said, Mr. Speaker, to correct the record, the fact is that American companies are purchasing oil from Canada cheaper than the refineries are purchasing Canadian oil. Canadian companies are then buying back a refined product and selling it in Canada cheaper than Canadian refined oil is being sold to Canadians. That is the bottom line. Canadian oil and gas are being transferred across the border and still end up being cheaper than what Canadians are paying for their own oil and gas. That is the question the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) should have to answer when she speaks to Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-85 because of its profound implications for the country in general and for my home province in particular. What the Government did in its head-long rush to satisfy the whims of people in the corporate office towers and around the boardroom tables a year and a half ago when life was presumably a bit rosier in the oil patch than it is today, was to write an energy policy for them, which essentially made them very happy because it put back into their hands billions of dollars in tax revenues which, up until the election of this administration, belonged to the Government of Canada. At the same time, the Government's policy took away substantial amounts of taxpayer dollars which were being used as an incentive to develop Canadian oil and gas self-sufficiency. I am talking about the Petroleum Incentives Program, which is absent from Bill C-85, which was used to begin exploration on the offshore Hibernia in Newfoundland, my own home province, Venture in Nova Scotia, the Beaufort Sea, and so on. What has happened? When the Government announced its policy to abandon PIP, when it took that first Draconian step to destroy the notion of energy self-sufficiency and the development of frontier oil reservoirs, it said to those companies operating in the offshore of Newfoundland: "Don't worry. We're going to honour our commitments made in 1983 through to 1987". That was in reference to drilling programs which were already in place, which were contingent upon receiving those Petroleum Incentive Program grants. That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said. That is how he reassured this House about offshore Newfoundland when he brought in his May, 1985 Budget.

What has happened since? Oil patch people and people concerned with the offshore in terms of development said that although it was not good news, they still had until 1987 to adjust. What happened in the interim? In the interim the Government decided that as of January 1, 1986, it will not honour its commitments through to 1987. It will no longer make available PIP grants to the offshore.

What was the reaction to that announcement in the offshore of Newfoundland? By the time they get around to the offshore drilling season they will be lucky to have any activity left at all. That was the reaction. Every major player involved in offshore activity in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia has told the Government publicly that their programs have been destroyed. They have told the Government that the commitments they made a number of years ago based on the notion that PIP grants would be in place and maintained through to 1987 have been shattered. There will not be a drilling program worth calling a drilling program this year in the offshore of Nova Scotia. The Government has destroyed the offshore play. It has abandoned the notion of self-sufficiency.

What does that mean to an area such as Nova Scotia? What does it mean to a province such as Newfoundland? What does it mean to the riding of Western Arctic where the Fraser is used as a major transportation artery? What does it mean to the towns of Pine Point and Hay River from where goods and supplies are moved into the Beaufort? It is the equivalent of having one's heart ripped out while it still beats in one's breast. That is what it means.

Many people across the country involved in frontier exploration made commitments. These were commitments made not only of heart, fibre, soul and mind—not just commitments to a bright new day, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) likes to say—but commitments made in terms of dollars and cents. They were commitments made which involved substantial amounts of money. This money has been spent in anticipation based on the Government's word, which melts like snow in the spring.

In my riding of Humber-Port au Port-Ste. Barbe, one company, North Star Cement Limited, in anticipation of moving to production in Hibernia, has spent millions of dollars upgrading its plant. It is the only cement plant in Newfoundland. It has spent several millions of dollars developing a terminal on the other side of the island in St. John's in anticipation of being able to participate in concrete form development. What has happened? The Government which gave its word, which set out the ground rules and the promises for tomorrow, has changed the ground rules dramatically. It has walked away from offshore Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. This plant, in an area where there is 30 per cent unemployment, and which was able to acquire the financing from the banks in the first place, now passes every single day in dread of the news that the development which was promised will now be shelved. Because of the fiscal policies of the Government there is a sense in offshore Newfoundland that there has been a death in the family and that no one has bothered to announce the date of the funeral. That is the sense which pervades in the Province of Newfoundland. It is in that type of environment that 6,000 civil servants are in the streets in the Province of Newfoundland as we speak today.

The Government of Canada is not responsible for world oil prices. I do not blame it for something which is beyond its control. It is not responsible for the turn-around in the economy. That is also as a result of world economic factors and not as a result of the good policies of the Government. While it is not responsible for decreased prices, it is also not responsible for positive factors which have been generated by the world economy.

Let me tell Hon. Members for what this Government is responsible. It is responsible for changing the rules of the game. It is responsible for withdrawing funds which were committed and promised as recently as in the May Budget. It is responsible for breaking commitments which were given and upon which substantial investment in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia was made. That is what this Government is responsible for.

The Government continues with a market-place doctrinaire-driven mentality which would see the Government stand idly by while the oil industry of Alberta is destroyed. It is responsible for the market-place free enterprise philosophy to the extent that it will stand by to see the play off Newfoundland and Nova Scotia destroyed. It is worse than that. It is worse when one comes from a province in which we saw 84 men go down on the rig Ocean Ranger, 84 men who drowned at sea in an accident which was preventable. It is worse coming from a province in which we saw a federal-provincial royal commission on the disaster recommend certain changes and improvements at a cost of $20 million of taxpayers' money. It is worse coming from a province in which we have seen excellent recommendations designed to provide every possibility of rescue in the event of a disaster at sea. The Government has not moved on the major recommendations of the royal commission which looked into the Ocean Ranger disaster.

There was a Bill tabled in the House today, Bill C-75, a transportation Bill which contains within it the seeds of insanity. Despite the recommendations of the royal commission and the results of two Federal Court of Appeal cases, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has refused to pass the jurisdiction with respect to rigs operating in the offshore over to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). Why has she done this when the Minister of Transport has jurisdiction for every other vessel or type of equipment which floats in the nation's seas under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act? Why should he not also have jurisdiction over such an area? Why should the Minister of Energy maintain jurisdiction over such rigs? What sense does it make? There is a political personality fight brewing in Cabinet. The other day I had to sit through a spectacle in the legislative committee on Bill C-75 where I saw a phrase added to the Bill which states that with respect to questions of safety—those questions regarding the life and limb of people who work in the offshore—there will be unprecedented joint jurisdiction between a power-mad Minister of Energy and an empire-building—

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I really wonder whether or not the address being given by my hon. friend is relevant to Bill C-85 which deals with the phasing out of PIP grants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is right. I believe the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-Ste. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) will return to making his comments relevant to the Bill before us.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal more particularly with Bill C-85. I am sure the Hon. Member from Alberta will appreciate my emotional response in which I have taken the opportunity to express my disgust at what is obviously a ridiculous situation resulting from petty personality politics.

Let me say to my colleague from Alberta, who has reminded me to speak more particularly to Bill C-85, that it must be frustrating for her—indeed, for all Hon. Members from Alberta—to see thousands of jobs, particularly in the last four or five weeks, disappear in the Province of Alberta quicker than the snow disappears in the spring, while the Minister of Energy says nothing more than—

• (1520)

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My hon. colleague's remarks are still not relevant to the Bill which phases out PIP grants.

Mr. Tobin: They are very relevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member still has a few moments to speak and I know he is going to get back to Bill C-85. I think he is trying to get to Bill C-85.

Mr. Tobin: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. It is relevant to Bill C-85 because it is part of the total fiscal regime for the energy plague. Whether PIP grants exist or not, what happens to the oil industry in the frontiers is very relevant to what happens in Alberta.

Perhaps the Hon. Member does not understand that it is part of the total fiscal regime, but I admire the Hon. Member. She is genuinely serious and sincere. I have heard her express her great concern for the lack of action on job loss in Alberta. If she does not understand what I am saying, then I ask her to take my word for it that it is relevant. It is indeed relevant because the same kind of attitude is being expressed toward the Province of Alberta by the administration as is being expressed by it toward the Province of Newfoundland.

We have a fiscal regime that is a recipe for inaction in the event of a made-in-Canada oil industry. Canadian companies operate in Newfoundland and those same companies operate in Alberta. Their ability to operate in Newfoundland, whether they make or lose money, impacts on their ability to make investments in more traditional kinds of exploration in Alberta.

Canadian oil companies are being destroyed because this administration has a non-interventionist policy at a time when the industry is very weak and susceptible to takeover by American concerns. The net result for Newfoundland is a denial of promise, a denial of opportunity, a denial of potential and a loss of hope for the future. In the case of Alberta, it is a loss of tangible jobs that already exist, not promised jobs. It is a loss of the backbone of the economy that keeps the whole fabric of Alberta society together.

As I see the promise of my province destroyed, I feel great empathy for those people in Alberta who are not losing just promises but are losing their bread and butter. There has been not a whimper, not a peep and not an indication on the part of the administration that it is going to intervene in any way, shape or form beyond slapping the Premier of Alberta on the wrist.

In desperation and frustration, because he sees no action taken on the part of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Premier of Alberta, called Sheikh Yamani of Saudi Arabia. What does it tell us when the Premier of one of Canada's provinces is ready to jump into bed with OPEC and is ready to join a cabal in desperation to try to stop the outflow of economic blood from his province? What does it tell us about the leadership at the federal level when the Premier of Alberta, a member of the Conservative Party, presumably a personal friend of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, gets on the phone to Sheikh Yamani Looking for answers to problems in Alberta, answers that he cannot find in Ottawa? The imagery is incredible.

Mrs. Mailly: The price of oil is too low, that's what it means.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member opposite says it means that Premier Getty has not got a good mind, if that is what he does.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, this is definitely not what I said and he knows it.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: I'm not sure what she said. Maybe I misheard it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be questions and comments after the very personable and popular Member finishes speaking.

Mr. Tobin: I am not sure what she said. It was another unintelligible sound.

Mr. Rossi: She's a dumb dodo.

Mr. Tobin: When a premier finds it necessary during a time of renewed federalism, as advertised by the Prime Minister, to take his problems to Saudi Arabia and tries to find sympathy, empathy or understanding for his difficulties in Saudi Arabia, when he goes to the heart of OPEC, a cartel operated in a despicable manner that is desperately trying to find solutions to the problems it has caused for itself, rather than picking up the phone to talk to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who comes from Alberta, rather than talking to the Prime Minister who claims to have brought the West into Confederation, rather than talking to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who comes from British Columbia, that surely is an indication that we have a serious problem. All we are hearing from the Government is that free market forces shall dictate.

Let me say to Government Members that in their obsessive, doctrinaire approach to the lack of regulation and lack of management of the oil and gas industry, they are destroying the promise and potential of future generations of Canadians, particularly those in some of the poorest parts of this country. I speak in particular of Newfoundland. The Government has broken faith.

The Government signed an Atlantic Accord that turns out to be nothing more than a shallow, farcical bit of theatre designed for an election campaign that occurred in Newfoundland a year ago. The people of Newfoundland shall not forget. The people of Newfoundland shall not forgive. Before the last act of this sorry play has been presented to a desperate people, the Government shall rue the day it took its orders from the barons who occupy the ivory towers of New York and Holland rather than those people who are trying to build a Canadian oil industry in Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member and I would like to ask him one question. Does he think we should keep the PIP grants or not?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I come from a province where there is a very simple philosophy. When you give your word, Mr. Speaker, when you say to somebody: "I shall be there, I shall do something", then, providing you have legs to walk with and hands to work with and tongue to speak with, you deliver. In my province, it does not take an Act of legislation, a recording on tape, an announcement in the House of Commons or something cast in blood or stone, it simply takes one's word. In the case of the Government, its word has been cast in stone, said in the House of Commons, recorded on television and published in the newspapers, but it has all been shattered, crushed and thrown away like a word that was never seriously given at all.

Do we keep the PIP grants? Yes, the Government of Canada made a commitment upon which thousands of people rested some hope for the future, upon which thousands of young people based a notion of their place in Newfoundland society, upon which hundreds of small business people relied to mortgage businesses and homes. They had the expectation that a word given would be a word kept. For all of those people, the Government should keep its word.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about that comment about tongues, hands and legs. In my province, if it has a tongue like a duck, hands like a duck and quacks like a duck, it is a duck.

Perhaps the Hon. Member was being a little less than straightforward in some regards. His former Leader, Prime Minister Trudeau, was, in the words of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), dancing sheikh to sheikh with Sheikh Yamani when he visited Saudi Arabia.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member about this East-West thing. What does he expect the Premier of Alberta to do right now considering that the Alberta economy is falling apart and there is 40 per cent unemployment there and even double that in Newfoundland? Industries are collapsing. This guy seems a bit desperate. I know he is not as sophisticated as Premier Lougheed but what does the Hon. Member expect the Premier of Alberta to do in this present situation?

An Hon. Member: Dance.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I find that an amazing comment from the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who is quoted yesterday as having said that he believes the actions of the Premier of Alberta to be totally improper. In my province, if it has a beak and claws and scratches around and cannot make up its mind to speak clearly, we do not call it a duck, we call it a chicken.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Let me respond to the Hon. Member by saying that I did not, I am proud to say, participate in the election in Alberta of a solid wall of Conservative Members provincially and a solid wall of Conservative Members federally. The net result is that very few people were elected in Alberta to provide an effective Opposition.

As a Canadian who is concerned about my fellow Canadians in Alberta, I expect that what Mr. Getty really ought to do as Premier of Alberta is to put aside his Party loyalties and affiliations for a moment, and ask himself whether, as Premier of all the people of Alberta versus the Leader of the Conservative Party in Alberta, federal current fiscal policies and the notion of letting the market-place determine how low the price drops and how many people get laid off is acceptable to his people versus his Party.

He should ask himself whether his problems can be resolved by the late night desperate call to Yamani in Saudi Arabia or whether they are better solved by standing up as an Albertan versus hunkering down quietly as a Conservative and asking the Government of Canada, "If the price goes straight through the floor and every job be lost and every back be broken in the oil patch, is this philosophy really right?" Is this a long view approach to developing energy policy in this country? Does this in the long view ensure some sense of energy self-sufficiency? Does this in the long view ensure that there shall be a Canadian energy industry? Those are the kinds of things that I would be saying to Mr. Getty.

I hope that Mr. Getty will put aside phone calls to Sheik Yamani. I understand those are phone calls made in frustration and made by a man who does not know where else to turn. I know he is frustrated, but I am saying to him that the way to resolve the problem is by sitting down and doing some tough nosed bargaining and negotiation with the Government of Canada, speaking frankly as an Albertan and not as a Conservative on behalf of the people of his province.

Mr. Waddell: I have a short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the Hon. Member then favour a floor price so that the price of oil for the Alberta producers, to use his phrase, will not go through the floor?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member favours a made-in-Canada energy policy—

Mr. Waddell: You have to stand for something.

Mr. Tobin: —and as is suggested by the finance critic for the Liberal Party, Mr. Garneau, there are a variety of ways, either through the tax system or through other means that we can use. We can sit down together and talk and not be locked into a doctrinaire position. We can develop ways to assist the industry in Canada. It will not be done, Mr. Waddell, by walking away from the problem and shaking—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) for the excellent presentation that he made. I can understand why he made the point, why he got rather riled up and why he became, at least so far as I detected, somewhat emotional. His voice was raised, and I believe that the reason the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe does that on occasion on certain issues—and I am being perfectly serious—is that he spends most of his day in his office doing constituency work on behalf of people who are either on welfare or on unemployment insurance, who are seeking pension income, are disputing a decision of the Government or are begging for a job at $200 a week.

That is a fact. This is what people have got on federal job creation programs for the last couple of years, $200 a week. You see a family man seeking a job and trying through every means possible to get work.

The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe—and I suppose it is true for all Members from Newfoundland—saw the great carrot hung out in front of the people in Newfoundland, that is, offshore oil, and saw an announcement made by the oil companies that there will be practically no drilling this year, not even a guarantee of one well, because the oil companies claim that the federal Government has discontinued PIP grants under the Bill before the House. You can then understand, Mr. Speaker, why the Hon. Member from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe would speak sometimes as loudly as he does and get so emotionally involved.

As he so correctly pointed out, the Minister of Finance in this Chamber last May presented a Budget. In that Budget the Minister of Finance said—and I am sure if you check the Budget Speech you will find this to be practically exactly what he said—that the Government of Canada will honour all commitments made under the Petroleum Incentives Program and will not phase out those grants until those commitments are met.

We have the major oil companies in western Canada in the news media in the Province of Newfoundland saying "We cannot drill. This is 1986. We had a drilling program up the the end of 1987 but we cannot drill now". You have 1,000 people working in that industry. Somebody might say that it is only 1,000, but it just so happens that they are well paid people. On thousand families are affected.

The Hon. Member from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe also spoke about the business community that made investments. He mentioned the disaster in the offshore while this drilling was taking place.

Newfoundlanders are now asking where is the carrot? Where are the jobs now? People are asking, why, after all of this hoop-la by the Conservative Government in Ottawa and the Conservative Government in Newfoundland, are we looking at no jobs? What about the Ocean Ranger disaster? What about all of the statements that were made after that? Some politicians claimed that we had to come to grips with the problem, that that is the danger of working at sea. Some politicians said that these people worked for a great, glorious and bright future for all Newfoundlanders and Canadians. The Bill now before the Chamber, and the decision of the Government, mean that there will be no more drilling. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of Newfoundlanders today know that you just cannot find a job any day of the week, any month of the year, or any year.

They also remember what the Premier of Newfoundland said and what the federal Government said prior to getting elected. The Government promised a great new era of federal-provincial co-operation and that the great offshore would be developed for the benefit of all Newfoundlanders. They were told that there would be enough jobs, that they would not need to work in the seasonal plants, look for part-time work, or count on direct program delivery.

The Premier, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and certain Conservative Members complained that the Liberals created jobs for four months of the year paying $200 a week for 40,000 Newfoundlanders a year. The Conservatives said that they would create long-term jobs through the offshore agreement. They said they would give Newfoundlanders a great and prosperous future.

What is happening today with this Bill? What has the Government done recently? Well, it has done some incredible things. It introduced this Bill and a policy statement saying that it will not honour a commitment made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to honour the PIP grants. It is immaterial whether you think PIP grants are a waste of money, or whether you feel the companies will not drill without the PIP grants because they were actually making money on them, when you consider what is happening in Newfoundland.

The other policy for the offshore which really burns the people in Newfoundland who have read the legislation is the Atlantic Accord which the Government introduced in this Chamber relating to the offshore and offshore drilling. It should be called the Atlantic Discord. The Bill stipulates that the oil cannot come ashore to Newfoundland to develop any jobs. It cannot be used for refining purposes in the Province of Newfoundland. It cannot be used for petrochemical industries in Newfoundland.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why not?

Mr. Baker: The Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) asks why not. I will tell him why not. There is a clause in the Bill, which I believe meets the Conservative philosophy, which says that if an offshore drilling company has sales contracts for offshore oil anywhere in the world, those contracts must be honoured before any oil can come ashore anywhere in Canada. It says that anything in excess of that will go to existing refining capacity. Quebec is excluded from that Bill. It refers only to existing refining capacity in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Nova Scotia. The first contracts which must be fulfilled are those for sales anywhere outside of Canada.

Let it be clear on the record that there is to be no drilling because the companies are not going to get any money. Under the new income tax system, the companies will get back about 30 per cent of what they invested. They previously got back 80 per cent. The Canadian oil companies are saying that they cannot drill this year. It is those companies that actually employ people in this country.

The Government of Canada then said that perhpas it would allow them to drill two wells or four wells. When one looks a the contracts of these companies one can see that they must drill five to seven wells in order to retain their rights to the drilling permits. In other words, if they do not drill the wells by the end of 1987, they will lose their leases for over 2 million acres offshore.

This Government and the Government of Newfoundland are like two peas in a pod. They promised so much. If Newfound-landers could eat promises they would all weigh 400 pounds. Those two Governments approved a Bill to be introduced in this Chamber which says that any oil from the offshore of Newfoundland must first be used to fulfil any contracts which the drilling companies have. You know, Mr. Speaker, who those drilling companies would be.

When we review the record we see that the oil companies and the Governments were saying that it was necessary to receive $40 per barrel in order to exploit Hibernia. A year went by and then they said they really needed $35 a barrel. Approximately a year and a half ago the break-even price decreased to $28 a barrel. It later decreased to $24 a barrel, and the other day the break-even price went down to $24 per barrel. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, where the truth perhaps lies.

The Government of Newfoundland said that it was a good idea to discontinue the PIP grants because the Conservative Government would have a better scheme when it assumed office. The PC Party handbook said that there would be more money through the taxation system and incentives built into it. When the new Atlantic Accord was presented and the new Bill on the offshore was introduced in this Chamber, the Premier of Newfoundland said it was a bright new day for Newfoundlanders. If you are a Tory Premier, Prime Minister, or cabinet Minister, you must never disagree publicly.

Now, of course, all Newfoundlanders know the truth. They have read it in the newspapers, seen it on television and heard it on the radio. They have been told there is to be no drilling. The great Tory Government promised the oil companies that it would not renege on its commitment. The oil companies believed they had a commitment for a drilling program from 1982 to 1987.

• (1550)

We now see the aftermatch of the great promises that were made for the Newfoundlanders who actually believed what the Government was saying. I do not fault them for that. If you were to sit down in front of a television set and watch the Prime Minister campaign and watch him on other occasions, you would just have to believe what the man was saying.

Mr. Tobin: Used to believe.

Mr. Baker: You would have to believe what the Premier of Newfoundland was saying. He was elected at least three times on the same issue of offshore oil, drilling and jobs. Yet we knew, and we dare not object, that the policy was completely misplaced. We knew that Newfoundland, for always and a day, exports all of its raw materials.

So what is new about this Bill before the House not allowing any development in Newfoundland? We send 80 per cent of our fish to the U.S. in a frozen state to be thawed out so as to create jobs. We have always done that. We send away most of our minerals and forests and other raw materials. It is the same old story, and Newfoundlanders today are grabbing after jobs which pay $200 a week. Then their Governments turn around and agree to do away with the only incentive to drilling for oil in the offshore. Newfoundlanders watch their Governments sign an agreement which says there will be no industrial development for all time on everything on the continental shelf around their province. They watched the champagne celebrations of their Governments as they clink glasses and try to convince everyone it was a great deal.

We are here to tell you today, Mr. Speaker, that it was not a great deal. We are here to tell you that this Bill is not a great deal. We are here to tell you that the policy of the Government as it relates to this Bill and its regulations is not such a great deal at all. Newfoundlanders are thinking about something else. I will tell you what they are thinking about. They are thinking about the day when they will have the opportunity to vote out that Tory Government in Newfoundland, and the day, hopefully soon, when they can also vote out this federal Tory Government.

I notice you are giving an indication that I have only one minute left. I suppose Members of this House from Newfoundland will go back to their offices in a few minutes, sit down and start working on unemployment insurance appeals for the weekend.

Mr. Holtmann: Go to the Press Club, more likely.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member over there does not really understand what I am talking about because he does not represent the ridings we represent. Perhaps when someone phones him about a welfare problem, he says, no, phone the provincial Government, that is their responsibility. The fact of the matter is, as the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe knows, we are the ones who have to go before the umpires and federal judges on unemployment insurance appeals. The people concerned cannot afford to pay for lawyers and legal aid will not pay for it. We are the ones who get phone calls every single day from someone who got only nine stamps. A lot of Members would not know what nine stamps are. We know.

Mr. Henderson: Nine stamps, nine letters.

Mr. Baker: They think it is nine letters. It is, of course, unemployment insurance stamps, as you would know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: This is a very long minute.

Mr. Baker: The bottom line is that this Government has betrayed the offshore workers of Newfoundland and other parts of Canada. The Government has also betrayed the hopes, wishes and dreams of Newfoundlanders on offshore oil for a long time to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, as a colleague of the Hon. Member who just spoken and a fellow citizen of Newfoundland, I have never heard—

Mr. McDermid: A mutual admiration society.

Mr. Tobin: It is not a mutual admiration society, it is a mutual survival society. Though we are few in numbers on this side, particularly from my province, let me say that when I hear the Hon. Member speak I learn something. Although we are few in numbers, we shall speak with a loud and clear voice on behalf of our people.

Mr. McDermid: Well done, Brian.

Mr. Tobin: Members opposite would not understand that, Sir, because they spend more time exercising their lungs saying, "Aye, aye, boss" when it comes time to vote than they do exercising their minds to develop their own points of view or exercising their lungs to make their voices heard to represent the views of their constituents. I understand Members opposite because they get most of their exercise running back and forth to the House at the crack of the whip, voting the way the Government tells them.

Mr. Holtmann: What is this, a question or a comment?

Mr. Tobin: This is a comment and a question as allowed under the Standing Orders. Members opposite would not appreciate that either because they sit there to provide a peanut gallery for those of us who are serious about debate. I want to say to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate that he has very accurately and with great eloquence—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: —outlined the dilemma facing not only the average citizen but the business community in Newfoundland who put a great deal of stock in a promise or commitment. Does he believe at this time that the business community in Newfoundland should have or can have any confidence in the word of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the future with respect to the offshore? Can they have any confidence in the Atlantic Enterprise Program announced in the Budget, given the brutal and callous manner in which the Government broke its commitments? What bothers me is not that they broke their word, because I am used to that from this crowd. What bothers me is the ease with which they broke their word. What bothers me is not that they walked away from a commitment. What really bothers me is that they have not even bothered to pause and say, "I am sorry". What advice would the Hon. Member give to those people in Newfoundland who may see any prospect of benefits from something like the Atlantic Enterprise Program announced by the same Minister whose word on PIP grants was broken?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, it is a very, very serious question. He is asking if there is any real future in Newfoundland with this Government and the Government of Newfoundland. I suppose my few remarks now would apply to most of the areas which are far from the centre, but I would say that the cut-backs presently taking place, along with those recommended in the task force review, as well as the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) that he will give bonuses to managers who cut more people from the Public Service, will have a greater effect on Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island than they do on any other province in Canada. The reason for it is that we do not have regional offices or central offices, although we have a couple but nothing worth talking about. Usually when cuts are made they are passed down the line. The very programs the federal Government is cutting back on are the ones that affect the extreme rural areas.

• (1600)

When you ask about the future of Newfoundland as of today, there are 100,686 people who are what they call UI claimants in Newfoundland out of a workforce of 224,000 people—that is 48 per cent whom they classify as UI claimants. Now that does not mean they are collecting unemployment insurance. That means they have claims to the unemployment insurance. When you look at the decrease in the workforce from December to January to February that went down $3,000 a month, you will know that the definition of Statistics Canada, if you are in the workforce, means that you have been unemployed for 26 weeks and have not found work, but when you go beyond 26 weeks you are taken out of the workforce by Statistics Canada. So there is a drop in Newfoundland of 3,000 a month now.

When you look at the future and you look at all the cuts that have been made, the cut-backs in the direct employment programs, cut-backs in direct payments to individuals, it is not a very bright future that Newfoundlanders have to look forward to. The only thing that I can see is some sort of a massive demonstration or a general election.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Hon. Member a question. At a Commons committee meeting on this Bill the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), a PC Member on the Government side, was quoted as saying that it does not matter when the PIP grants are removed. He suggested that companies will soon be drilling wells without the aid of the PIP. Does the Hon. Member agree with that Conservative Member on the Government side that this is going to happen?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. It certainly reflects the obvious answer that the hon. gentleman gave who asked the question in the committee. Yes, of course, you can drill in the offshore and we will have those offshore companies drilling. There would be no problem at all if the price of oil had continued going up. You would have had economic development in the offshore if you could have convinced the financiers, the people who had some in with the sheikhs, as the hon. gentleman referred to them, to find out which side of the bed they get out on in the morning. There would be no problem if you had some in with the international financial community, which would then risk the money that is needed for the long term for the development of the offshore. It is the same problem that the hon. gentleman who is the energy critic for the New Democratic Party has in British Columbia with the great hydro projects that keep getting proposed in that particular province. When you are talking about that kind of investment, you have to have a financial community that says yes forever and a day. You have long-term contracts that mean that that money is going to be returned.

The same thing applies in the Province of Quebec where our critic on finance is from, the hon. gentleman in front of me. We have a $30 billion proposal by that Government for hydro development. That money is dependent upon the same expectation and facts in the international financial community. So if the price of a barrel of oil were increased maybe to $50 a barrel as the Conservatives would like to see it, no doubt about that—I do not know a Conservative Member who would not like to see $50 a barrel—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say that questions and comments are now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Monday, March 17, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall, that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 11570).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part once more in the debate on the Government's borrowing authority Bill and on our proposed amendment to give this Bill a six months' hoist, something that is totally justified by the completely inept economic performance of this Government as it faces the challenges of 1986.

Perhaps the ineptitude, the lack of knowledge, the basic ignorance with which this Government approaches economic policy has been nowhere better demonstrated than in the area of its free trade negotiations, which it seeks to carry forward with the United States. In particular, I was transfixed by a speech made last night in Sherbrooke by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who demonstrated his general lack of knowledge, both of the free trade argument and of the constituency from which I come.

This Minister, who is supposed to be one of the primary economic spokesmen of the Conservative Party announced, first, that we can all feel faith in free trade because the auto pact had proved itself to be such a great success, not recognizing that the auto pack is the very opposite of free trade. Within the auto pact there is, first, a commitment by the companies that benefit from the auto pact that they will sell as many cars in Canada as they produce in Canada; and, second, and more important for the jobs of Canadians, a promise that 60 per cent of the value added of each vehicle made in Canada will come from Canadian value added. It is, in short, a trade pact with safeguards, exactly the sort of thing that we in this Party, and the trade union movement in this country and the thousands and even millions of people across the country who oppose bilateral free trade, are looking to achieve. They are safeguards in sectoral trade which will give Canadian workers guarantees of jobs for the future.

Unfortunately, the Minister did not seem to know that. That level of ignorance was accentuated in his net statement as reported by the Journal de Montréal from Sherbrooke. The President of the Treasury Board indicated as well that the strength of the auto pact was also shown by the fact that: "Windsor in Ontario, where the auto pact has succeeded so well, was a city where one found the lowest rates of unemployment in the country".

Unfortunately, the President of the Treasury Board had not bothered to consult his own Government's statistics. If he had, he would have found, according to the most recent month, that 9.5 per cent of the workers of Windsor are out of work. He could have compared that the Halifax where 8.7 per cent are out of work; to Quebec City where 9.2 per cent are out of work; to Ottawa where 8.8 per cent are out of work; to Toronto where 5.5. per cent are out of work; to St. Catahrines-Niagara where 7.7 per cent are out of work; or indeed to Kitchener-Waterloo—where I spoke on free trade last week—where 6.8 per cent of the workforce are out of work.

In fact, no fewer than nine Canadian cities across the country have lower unemployment rates than Windsor. The Government has again demonstrated its complete lack of sensitivity and knowledge as far as my City of Windsor is concerned. It is no wonder that the Conservatives never manage to win constituencies in Windsor. If they succeeded in getting one fact about my city correct, they might be taken seriously by some of the people of Windsor. However, so long as they perpetuate ignorance and an incapacity to understand reality they will continue to be the laughing stock of my community.

The communities of my constituency have recognized both the severe dangers of the free trade thrust of the Government and the complete lack of knowledge of the Government with respect to my community. Let me quote from two documents. The first is a resolution from the town council of Amherstburg, the second largest community in my constituency, which was passed on February 14. That is the day that groups representing over 8 million Canadians met in Ottawa to protest the Government's approach to free trade with the United States. On February 14, the Town of Amherstburg passed a resolution against free trade.

The resolution states that all members of the community would be affected by a free trade agreement. Second, the infiltration of foreign products into our market-place would result directly in an increase of the unemployed, and under a free trade agreement with the U.S. we would be unable to retain our social programs and our cultural heritage and, most important of all, the sovereignty of Canada as a nation. The resolution concludes that the Municipal Council for the Town of Amherstburg fully opposes any bilateral free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

This week the City of Windsor indicated its opposition through Resolution 1099/83 to such a free trade agreement. It states that such a free trade agreement is expected to cause severe and widespread dislocation of industries, as well as placing hundreds of thousands of jobs in jeopardy. It suggests as well that negotiation for a free trade agreement will include demands from the United States for the elimination or weakening of vital social programs and that U.S. demands for a "level playing field" will mean an end to Canadian government programs which encourage regional development and job creation.

In short, the opposition to free trade is growing as the lack of knowledge and sensitivity of the Government continues to be demonstrated. It is for this reason that we believe the vote to give the Government yet more borrowing authority for future use must be put off as long as possible.

The Government has retreated to insult instead of reason in its attempt to sell free trade to Canadians. We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who travels across the country talking about free trade opponents as being timorous and fretful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I apologize. I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Langdon: May I finish my sentence, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Certainly.

Mr. Langdon: We regret the sense of insult on the part of the Prime Minister and have called on him to attempt to treat the serious question which greatly affects the future of our country with the honesty and openness which he has so far lacked in presenting his case to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to say a few words this afternoon in the debate on the Government's Borrowing Authority Bill.

First of all, I would like to draw a parallel with the situation where a person goes to the bank to borrow money. The first thing the manager does is the analyze the facts and information he is given to ensure that those facts and that information are not just a façade and that they have real content and substance.

Today, if this Government had to undergo the same kind of test and examination it would fail. And this is because we are dealing with a Government that is terribly concerned about appearances, and when we look behind the façade, behind the public relations act, there is nothing, no content, no substance.

All you have to do is analyze the Nielsen Report. In the fall of 1984, it was announced with a great deal of fanfare that a group of professionals, Canadian businessmen working without remuneration, would carry out a study to examine the Government's programs, and we were told that this was a really serious study. And now, after nearly a year and a half, we have twenty-one volumes, not one book but twenty-one books, and after some quick scanning—it would take months to read them all—we found there was nothing new. We knew it already, even before the study got underway.

The sad thing about this report, Mr. Speaker, is that most of the so-called options or recommendations have already been adopted. Just look at Bill C-80, which arises from the Nielsen Report and which was in the May 1985 Budget, and a Bill that was passed not long ago. I can name at least two items from this legislation, including removal of the sales tax exemption for drugs. Today, if we don't have medicine and we need aspirin, we have to pay federal tax. It is no longer exempt. This measure, for instance, raises $510 million.

And what about construction, Mr. Speaker? In three years, construction materials . . . They are going to bring in this new tax, and in eight months they got an 8 per cent tax increase which is going to give the Government $1.5 billion in three years.

Of course, the report dealt with the possibility of taxing footwear and clothing, but they could not deal a new blow to the industry every month. In November, they had abolished the quotas on footwear, and if they had also imposed a sales tax on footwear and textile, I wonder what would have happened to the industry.

That it is all, Mr. Speaker. In the Budget of February 1986, the Minister announced new taxes. There had been a preliminary study on the value added tax. Its name has now been changed to business transfer tax, but if we look closely, we find that it is the same thing. Only the accounting has changed a bit, but we shall be able to examine all this in detail when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presents his great White Paper, which, thanks to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), we now know will be tabled on April 15, and as soon as October 1986, we can expect a new 7 or 8 per cent tax.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Minister announces what will happen bit by bit, but it is always the same. It is quite easy. The Government says that it is reducing the deficit. However, when we look at how this is going to be done, some serious questions should be raised. There are two major sources of revenue. First, there is oil, for which the Budget gives an estimated price of $22.50, and we all know how low prices have fallen. As for interest rates, the Minister expected them to be at 9.5 per cent and they are still at 12 per cent. Again yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I received from the Minister of National Revenue a communiqué announcing that, from April 1 to June 1, 1986, interest rates on taxes payable by Canadians will be between 9 and 11 per cent, which representes a 2 per cent increase. I therefore imagine that we must expect interest rates to remain at the present level and I wonder how the Minister of Finance will be able to reach his objective of bringing the deficit down under $30 billion.

• (1620)

Mr. Speaker, another absurdity concerns the Federal Business Development Bank. Members of all three parties spent several evenings at the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs examining the whole situation of the Federal Business Development Bank to determine whether to recommend that the Government change the mandate of the Bank or do something else. Of course, all Canadians agree that the mandate of this Crown corporation, which was established a few years ago, should be adjusted. The Minister responsible for Small Businesses said before the Committee that the Nielsen Task Force on Program Review was also considering this matter and had asked the Committee not to publish its report immediately. Mr. Speaker, as for me, on April 23, as shown on page 4023 of Hansard, I asked when the Minister would announce whether there would be any change in the Federal Business Development Bank. And the Hon. Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) is telling me that this would have happened around late June or early July 1985.

Not later than yesterday, indeed, Mr. Speaker, a Government Member asked him whether there were new programs to help people who want to start up small businesses but lack financing facilities. And the Minister said that in conjunction with the Federal Development Bank and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, they were lookding at the various programs.

So we have the Nielsen Report proposing certain changes, and Ministers announcing new programs. What then is the direction? Are they going to change it or not? Are they going to refer once more the whole issue to the Committee on Finance and Economic Matters? As you see, Mr. Speaker, there is no direction, there are no contents, there is no substance. It is a mere public relations exercize. They bring forth a 21-volume report and say: "All right, we looked into the matter, we know where we are going". But no action is taken.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record part of what Alain Dubuc had to say immediately after the Budget in La Presse, and I quote:

> Workers who obtained a 4 per cent wage increase this year should have enough to maintain their purchasing power. But taxes, and especially the tax increases brought in by Michael Wilson, will take back three quarters of that. As a result, they will be 3 per cent poorer in 1986!
> A middle-income family in the $20,000 to $40,000 a year bracket, will pay $500 to $650 in additional federal taxes in 1986. That is a very significant amount, and indeed a major tax grab.

Going through the Budget, experts did not see how horrendous the increase was, because it is chopped down in a number of small increases that individually are marginal. For instance, that famous 3 per cent surtax will only cost $54 to a person earning $20,000 a year. It is just about meaningless.

However, the total tax increase is high because taxpayers get it in a double whammy—last week's Budget, but also last May's Budget, whose major measures only hit the taxpayers in 1986. Altogether, consumers will pay out this year five new tax increases that will bring Ottawa $3.6 billion.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to participate in the debate on the motion of the New Democratic Party with respect to Bill C-99, a Bill which will allow the Government to borrow $22 billion. As I listened to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), give some of the unemployment figures for southern Ontario, I thought, in a sense, how lucky those towns were as compared to our situation in British Columbia. The figures are still too high, there should in fact be full employment in southern Ontario, but those figures are double in British Columbia and sometimes triple.

My main criticism of the borrowing Bill, and of the Budget before it, is that my Province of British Columbia does not benefit enough from government economic policies. We are in real trouble in British Columbia. We have not recovered from the last recession. Because we have a resource economy we are still subject to these booms and busts which in the future, I hope, with good economic management, we can learn to level out as we become perhaps less dependent on raw resources and more into technology, education, and into businesses reaching into the Pacific Rim. The 1990s should belong to British Columbia. It does not matter from which political Party one comes, I am sure we would all like to make the 1990s belong to British Columbia. We need some policies to change the Government's view. We also need some policies to change the Government's view. We also need some policies to do that in the Province of British Columbia where we probably have seen the worst economic management in the country. What did Premier Bennett of the Socred Government do when the economy started to go down? He applied the brakes of restraint. In applying them he put the economy into a nosedive. We are also seeing bad economic policies there. They are what I call cruel policies.

Let me give Hon. Members an example of this cruelty. We have all heard of Expo 86. No matter from what political Party we come, provincially or federally, we all want it to be a success. That does not mean that we have to evict poor people from their residences in the east end of Vancouver. These are people who have lived in cheap hotel residences, including the Patricia Hotel, which has a bad record on this and other matters. Why do these older people have to face this cruel situation? Why do they have to be thrown out of their hotels in order to make room for people who are coming to visit Expo 86? I do not think that is right. I do not think Canadians believe it is right.

In order to give a bit of flavour with respect to what things look like in British Columbia I would like to read to Hon. Members a letter which was sent to me by one of my constituents, Ms. Trish McKeen. She is a young woman who lives at 3234 Vanness Avenue in Vancouver. She writes:

May I take a few moments to air my grievances about our present Conservative Government with you, my elected representative? I have grown increasingly dissatisfied, dismayed and angered since their assumption of power in Parliament.

I wish to speak of Canadian unemployment, in British Columbia in particular. I was working at my job, performing a routine task, when I heard of the election being called. I was also working when Brian Mulroney was sworn into office. A short while later I wasn't working.

Under the last provincial NDP government in B.C., and with help from my NDP MLA, I, a grade nine junior high school drop-out, was able to attend post-secondary educational institutions.

I lacked four years of public school, and after seven years of hard work in universities and colleges (and subsequently seven years' worth of Canada Student Loans) I became a professional. I studied engineering and petroleum chemistry and, at my discretion, filled out my academic background with heaping doses of oceanography.

I am really not sure what heaping doses of oceanography are. It is obviously an interesting course.

Before, and during, my studies I had worked as a veterinary assistant, small business manager, a chemical technologist and a dog groomer. Just before my graduation I went to work as a research assistant to an associate professor in the Dept. of Oceanography at the University of British Columbia.

There I applied and expanded my knowledge in chemistry, geochemistry, geology and geophysics. After several months I transferred as a research assistant to the Head of the Dept. of Oceanography, UBC. I was busy on that latter position when Brian Mulroney was sworn in.

● (1630)

Mr. McDermid: The Prime Minister.

Mr. Waddell: I am reading from a letter. It continues:

I have not worked in over a year now.

I was laid off from UBC in August 1984 due to lack of research funds. All did not seem hopeless though, as I received a job offer from a small consulting firm within a couple of months. I took the position, poor-paying as it was.

After 3½ months with the firm, and 3½ months of humiliation, degradation and abuse from my superiors (so much so that Employment and Immigration Canada called me in to make a report) I was "dismissed". Had I belonged to a union I could have protected myself; I did not.

Since February 1985 I have been seeking suitable work. By "suitable" I mean that I am not qualified as a waitress or telephone solicitor, having done neither in my life. In any case I have been to two interviews (for "professional" positions). Both were for government positions (one federal, one municipal). In each case my "overqualifications" were made very apparent to me and both governments expressed a fear of quickly losing me to something better. The municipal interview strongly impressed this point. The municipal agents asked me about my feelings towards field work.

Quite simply, I love field work. I told them just that but one of the MEN interviewing me told me that because I was a "girl" (exact word used) I was probably saying that I loved field work (there and then) but should I get the position I'd whimper and whine until I could get one of the MEN to do (it) for me (the field work) so I wouldn't have to physically exert myself and get dirty. This was my first taste of blatant sexual discrimination.

So she is in a Catch-22 situation. She cannot get lower paying jobs because she is over-qualified. She cannot get proper paying jobs because they are just not there. It is also evident what some people have to go through in job interviews in terms of the discrimination they face.

Shortly after that, Ms. McKeen was in a motor vehicle accident which made things more difficult for her. Her letter goes on to read:

Meanwhile, I have nearly exhausted my 18-months interest relief on my Canada Student Loan.

She has student loans for university which are now due.

My bank is getting restless. I have only until July 31st 1986, then my UI runs out. I have not had so much as a job offer, much less a job, and I have little to look forward to but welfare and creditors knocking on my door (very shortly). The only thing the Tories have done for me (as of January 1, 1986) is deduct another $2 off each week of my unemployment benefits.

The new 1.5 per cent increase in personal income tax announced February 26, 1986 in the federal budget is effective July 1, 1986. It is little consolation to me that the "Tories" will only get the increased tax out of me for one month, should I still be unemployed. It is even less consolation that I cannot be taxed on welfare.

That is where she thinks she is heading.

Thank you for your loan of a "shoulder', to cry on. It is not crying as such, it's complaining and protesting. To use a famous line, "I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take it anymore."

She closes with a P.S. which states:

Tell Mikey Wilson not to spend my $2 all in one place!

This is but one example of the frustration which is being felt out there. This letter sets out the case of a young woman who has gone back to school to get a good education, who has taken out student loans, and who tries for different jobs only to be told that she is over-qualified. She has experienced discrimination because she is a woman. However, she is realistic. There are hundreds of people such as this in British Columbia. We can now see why Senator Hébert is fasting down the hall. There is a type of quiet desperation here.

When one is in Ottawa it is hard to understand this. I thank this young woman for writing me this letter. I hope, when I get out of here, to go back to British Columbia to talk to her personally. I wish I could do miracles for her. I wish I could produce a job for her. I know I cannot. I can give her some leads with respect to government jobs. I can make some suggestions and so on. Most of those government make-work programs are pretty low paying jobs.

We have to get the economy moving again, especially in British Columbia. There is a real tragedy out there. We cannot have this type of wasted resources. I would approve of the Government borrowing money here if I thought it were going to do something important with it. I do not see any economic strategy on the part of the Government. Some two months ago it was going to create jobs in the oil industry, the so-called engine of economic growth. This month the direction seems to be consumer-led recovery through cheap oil prices. It is a complete contradiction. And then we hear about free trade. I say to the people of Canada, especially those in British Columbia, let us wait and see whether the Americans impose countervailing duties on our lumber products. We will see how good the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) relationship is with the Americans at that point.

My remarks have not been very encouraging for a Friday afternoon. However, I am an optimist by nature.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I am of the view that Hon. Members will listen to this woman. I am of the view that we will get together and enact co-operatively policies which will put her and people like her back to work.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a very encouraging picture to paint either with respect to the actions of the Government. I do have a few suggestions to make. I would like to remind Hon. Members of a couple of campaign promises made by Government Members which, if implemented, might justify giving the authority to borrow that is sought.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Senator Hébert has reminded us that there are almost 700,000 young Canadians who are unemployed today. If this were not enough, the Senate Committee has described this situation as "intolerable". The Committee has emphasized that this "intolerable" situation does exist.

In their action plan which they tabled last February, the Senate Committee members indicated that their public hearings throughout Canada has changed their way of thinking, adding that they had realized that a great many young people were living intolerable situation and they had to convince all Canadians of that.

When we examine newspaper articles across Canada, when we read the letters which we are getting in our offices, when we study the petitions signed by thousands of Canadians, we realize that the Senate Committee has indeed succeeded. Senator Hébert and his colleagues have managed to raise Canadians' awareness of the situation and convinced them of the need to solve the unemployment problem among young Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we are told that some progress has been made. It is a fact that the economic situation in the world has much improved over the past couple of years, and that the employment picture in Canada has improved since 1982.

But does this mean that we have to be satisfied with the current situation? Can we live with 700,000 young Canadians being unemployed?

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the consensus is that no, that the situation is "intolerable". I could quote a passage from the editorial of La Presse listing the misfortunes of the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne), and we all know the sad story about the way the Government axed the Katimavik program even before getting the plan of action of the Senate committee. Then the Minister found out she no longer had a budget when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled the main estimates. Editorialist Jacques Bouchard wrote in the March 5 issue of La Presse that time had come to transfer the responsibility to somebody who would tackle urgent problems with more resolve. According to the editorialist, young people have every right to look forward to playing a more challenging role in our society.

[English]

Even the Toronto Globe and Mail, which has supported the budgetary policies of the Government, reported favourably on the Senate report. It asked where a society begins to address the dilemma, and went on to say—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, all I need is an indication from the Chair. Are we in the House supposed to comment on the debates and problems of the Senate? I am simply asking that question.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Perhaps I may say a few words here. I am sure the Hon. Member is going to get to the borrowing Bill. I know that he is getting to the point.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, in general I am addressing the budgetary policy of the Government. I am addressing the lack of any kind of a coherent strategy to deal with the economy, and I am also trying to address the specific point of youth unemployment, which is certainly related to the actions of the Government and to the reason that we should not have any confidence in the Government and should not approve the budgetary policy or the request to borrow further money for the implementation of its misguided policies.

I was saying that The Globe and Mail, in an editorial of March 5, spoke approvingly of the report of the Senate and outlined in some detail some of the solutions that had been suggested by the Senate.

The Government seems to be at a total loss as to how to respond to the problem of youth unemployment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said several months ago that the Government has a program and promised to introduce a new program very soon. "Very soon" was the phrase used by the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) last February. Six weeks later, we have yet to see these new programs that the Government was going to announce.

I would like to suggest to Government Members a few items that they might consider. First, they have before them the Senate's plan of action. I would simply remind Hon. Members, as I said yesterday during Question Period, that a number of the Senate's recommendations do not even call for the spending of money. Even the penny-pinching Tories might find it within their imagination to implement some of the recommendations which do not call for the spending of money. If they wish to implement some of the recommendations that do call for the spending of money, they might look at a speech the Prime Minister made at the Montreal Chamber of Commerce in March, 1984. This speech was made even before the election campaign. At that time, the Prime Minister indicated how money might be found for some of the other initiatives. He said the following:

> We must cast a critical eye on the subsidies and grants going to business.
> The Government currently collects $8 billion in taxes from the corporate sector, and hands $8 billion back.
> We have to see who is winning and who is losing; whether robbing Peter to pay Paul helps, or hinders, job creation and economic growth.

Ironically, the Nielsen Report which was tabled last week identifies some $16.4 billion in support for business which was described as giving with both hands through an overly rich, overlapping industrial incentives system. All I can say is, what is the Government waiting for?

The Prime Minister said two years ago that it should cut business grants, subsidies and tax incentives. The Nielsen Report repeated that. Rather than cutting them from their friends in the business sector, the Tories cut training programs for youth. They do not even follow the advice the Prime Minister gave two years ago. They do not follow the advice of the Nielsen Report. Why do they not act now? Why do they not cut some of that overly generous and overlapping spending and free up some money for youth training initiatives?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. He may wish to just finish up.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would finish up by suggesting that members of the Conservative Party might also like to take a look at the youth employment strategy which was announced by the Prime Minister in Sherbrooke on July 26, 1984, during the election campaign. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, not a single undertaking which the Conservative Party made in Sherbrooke on July 26, 1984, has been immplemented by the Government. If it is looking for some ideas, the Government might have a look at the promises it made during the election campaign and consider implementing some of them. Then, Mr. Speaker, we might consider providing the Government with the borrowing it is asking for.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments. Debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I see my time is constrained, not only by the 10 minute limit but also by the fact that the motion we have before us ought to come to a vote this afternoon before five o'clock.

I saw the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and his bosom buddy, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), scheming away on the other side as to how they could use up the time of the House to prevent a vote from occuring this afternoon. I am sure that within five minutes I will be able to convince them to withdraw that strategy and allow the vote to take place and, indeed, in all probability, to vote against the proposal for the six months' hoist.

There are basically three points I want to make. First, with respect to the fiscal cycle, we have the Budget, the Estimates and the timing of the borrowing authority Bill that came before the House. You will recall, Sir, because you were here in the bad old Liberal days, that all these items were out of sync, so to speak. They did not fit together. We would be presented with a Budget at any time of the year, the Estimates would come down at another time, invariably late, and the borrowing Bills could come at any time. If you looked at the amount of money asked for under the borrowing Bill it would not coincide with the amounts mentioned in either the Estimates or the Budget. We had figures springing up out of thin air.

If there is one area where this Government excels, it is in the financial area. I am very proud to be associated with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) who have done so much in this field.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: We are now timing the cycle correctly. You will notice that this year, Mr. Speaker, the Budget, the Estimates and the borrowing authority all came down at about the right time. The figures coincide. We asked for $22.6 billion in borrowing authority and it says precisely in the Budget and precisely in the Estimates why that money is needed, how it is arrived at, and the figures balance, Mr. Speaker.

The second related point is that there is no slush in this request. If you recall a few years ago, the borrowing authority Bill used to come down and the Government would ask for $25 billion, for you knew from the Budget that there was a financial requirement of $25 billion, but the Government would ask for $35 billion with no real explanation. The Government wanted some slush in case some things went wrong, and invariably they did go wrong because of Liberal mismanagement.

If you look at this borrowing Bill, it says accurately and precisely what that money is needed for. I might add that a good portion of it is needed to pay the interest on debts incurred as a result of excessive borrowing in the past.

Third, I would like to recommend, to Hon. Members opposite in particular, to read the document because evidently they have never read it. If they peruse the Fiscal Plan tabled in February as part of the budget documents it will become quite clear that we are on the right financial track.

It is interesting to note that in this fiscal year, the one we are talking about with respect to this borrowing authority Bill, revenues for the first time in many, many years will exceed program expenditures. That is the expenditure of Government less the amount required to service the existing debt. This is a major turn-around, Mr. Speaker.

If you pursue this trend through the fiscal plan to the year 1990, and that is the kind of date we are looking at, you will see even before that time that revenues will be twice the amount of program expenditures. By doing that, we will be able to stabilize the amount of debt in percentage terms regarding the GNP. We are on the right track.

It is interesting also to note that this borrowing request of $22.6 billion is 25 per cent less than it was for the previous year when financial requirements were running in the $30 billion range. We have things under control.

Again, if you look at the financial plan, you will see that by fiscal 1990-91 the financial requirement, the amount of money to be borrowed, will be down to $10 billion, something that we, at that time, should be able to handle quite comfortably.

I want to express my congratulations to the Minister of Finance on what he has been able to do in the short time we have been in office. He has been able to get under control what many people thought was a completely unmanageable situation that had been left by the Liberal Government.

I would urge Hon. Members of this House to vote against the nonsensical amendment offered by the New Democratic Party and to get on with the job and pass this necessary borrowing authority Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as I look at this borrowing Bill, I feel like a mosquito in a nudist colony. I do not know where to start.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Do you know that yesterday the swallows returned to Capistrano, Mr. Speaker? That is a sure sign that spring has arrived. I look across and I want to know where the Alberta Tories are in this House at a time when the people of Alberta, the ordinary working men and women of Alberta, need them.

Mr. Towers: Right here.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where?

Mr. Towers: Right here. What about the Speaker?

Mr. Rodriguez: Where is the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour)?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to tell the New Democratic Party that every single Albertan is worth two or three New Democrats any day of the week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Rodgiguez: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) has woken up. Members are here but they do not speak for the people of Alberta, the ordinary working men and women of Alberta. Where are they?

This is a time when their voices should be heard in this House. They are going to allow the Sheikh of Araby to make oil prices for Canadians. Is it not about time that we had an oil price made in Canada?

Mr. Waddell: The Energy Minister got going.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Energy Minister did what?

Mr. Waddell: She got going.

Mr. Rodriguez: Here we have 120,000 people working in the oil industry in Alberta. That province is bleeding and suffering, as you well know. I notice you are pointing to yourself, Mr. Speaker. Yes, they are suffering and yet there are 21 Members, all Tories represented here. They cannot claim obstruction in this House anymore. You have got it all. You have your way with us. What are you doing for the people of Alberta?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think we will stop right there. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will have five minutes remaining.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the shortest speech I ever made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: We could extend the time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 5 o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1). Good Night.

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order at the outset of the proceedings today with respect to the language used by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) during the Question Period on Friday, March 21. When I called for a point of order at that time with respect to the language of the Hon. Member, you responded that you had not heard the language to which I had taken exception.

In light of the seriousness of this point of order, I felt obliged to await the publication of the official record of the day so that I could determine whether the words had been captured by Hansard during the course of Question Period.

Mr. Speaker, if you will look at page 11745 of Hansard of last Friday, you will see that the Hon. Member made an interjection while the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) was asking a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). His reference to the Prime Minister is on the record. You will no doubt recall, Mr. Speaker, that his interjection led to disorder in the House at the time, which is an appropriate indication that unparliamentary language and disorder in this House should be dealt with in the usual way.

I can draw your Honour's attention to the many precedents set by yourself and your predecessors in office with respect to the unacceptability of the use of the word "liar" in the House of Commons. That is founded in a very fine and honourable tradition in this House, inasmuch as it is a protection of the use of free speech in the House without the interjection of character assassination of any Member of the House. We are all Hon. Members and should regard each other as such.

This is a matter of such importance that it must be dealt with so that it does not occur again and is not condoned. I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that if the Hon. Member absolutely withdraws this remark when he arrives in the House, that will close this particular incident.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Page 11745 of Hansard was brought to my attention early this morning as well. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), to whom the saying is attributed, is neither in the House nor on the Hill today. I would like the Chair to wait until the Member returns, and at that time to ask him whether or not he uttered the words attributed to him, and then to see what the Member would like to do with this. I, personally, would like to have had the point raised when the Member was in the House last Friday when the event allegedly occurred, or at another time when the Member is here. I do not think it is worthwhile for us to speak of a would-be situation when the Member involved in that particular situation is not present. I would like to say no more than to ask the Chair to wait until the Member returns.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the comment attributed to the Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) at the time. I have also had the opportunity to review Hansard as a result of comments made over the weekend in the media. I think the request of the Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) is appropriate. The Member must surely first be asked to affirm whether or not words attributed to him are in fact words which he is prepared to be responsible for, since the action taken at the time by the Government House Leader did not result in the Speaker admonishing the Member at that moment.

I want to say two things. I think that from time to time there is a tendency on the part of Members to say things which ought not to be said, and to use language which would be better not used. I hope that every Member pays attention to that. It is possible to raise difficult questions without resorting to slander or other kinds of character depreciation.

However, in reviewing this matter I find that the Speaker has on a number of occasions made it clear that not only must the offensive word have been used by the Member, but must have resulted in some form of disorder. I am not at all certain that that applies in this case. Nevertheless, it goes without saying that it becomes the responsibility of the Speaker to request that the Member for York South-Weston indicate whether he accepts responsibility for the words appearing in Hansard. Having accepted that responsibility, I would hope the Member would accept the further responsibility of withdrawing that allegation in order to avoid any disorder now occurring, which could well be the case if he refused to take that appropriate step.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, but this time on a more technical matter. You did not hear the comment and neither did I, but we all know that the proceedings of the House are now recorded both electronically, which means what is said in the House is taped, and by the stenographers who are here in the House and who also record what are called interjections.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the problems we had in the House when you failed to hear comments made by other Members, if the electronic Hansard as reproduced in the proceedings for the day is correct, then that is where the comment was read, because I did not hear it, and it is quite possible that the microphone picked it up. But are we to conclude, considering the decision you made recently when you said: "The Chair did not hear it", that no such comment was uttered in the House? Someday we will have to decide whether we want an electronic Hansard, transcribed from the tapes in the House, or a Hansard that is both electronic and also contains the interjections commonly made in the House. The problem is, how do we know which one is the official version? Is it the comments heard by the stenographers or the comments picked up by the recording machine?

Mr. Speaker, another question I think is just as important is what is referred to in English as "body language"—

• (1110)

—body language. Someone could make a gesture to you, and it has been done, which is quite unacceptable in our society today. That will not appear in Hansard. Yet you have seen it. How one describes that in Hansard is difficult to say. When a group of hon. gentlemen or gentlewomen get together they should avoid these kinds of gesture, but if one uses a gesture which is unacceptable in a society like ours, then there must be some way for you to bring it to the attention of the House and settle the question. The same applies to comments which you or I have not heard but which some electronic media recorded.

We are having a problem with a new development. Electronic recording is new in our system. It used to be that what the Hansard reporter heard was reproduced and checked against the tapes. Now I am taking it that it is what the tapes hear that is checked against what the Hansard reporters hear and that is the record. I would like you to maybe think about that and give us some instructions or directions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Whoever said them, there are unparliamentary words recorded in Hansard. The House knows that the Chair is no more delighted in seeing those words in Hansard than anyone else. In fact, it is quite appalled to find them there. That does not change the Chair's procedural difficulty. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows that when this matter was raised on Friday in the House there was a disorder created. I could see that. Has the question of disorder been met? The answer to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is, yes, it has. At least at the time. It was precisely for that reason at the time that the Chair in fact invited some comment at the end of Question Period. Hansard will show as well the Chair said specifically that Hon. Members may wish to raise something after Question Period, if Hon. Members had heard something.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am raising it after Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair's technical difficulty is clear in the comments that were made in response to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council the last time this was raised. I must invite the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to look at those. At the same time I sense from the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) that there is a desire to wait to see if this matter can be resolved in precisely the way the Hon. President of the Privy Council indicated that it would be best resolved. I therefore propose to reserve for the moment.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—TREATY TO CUT ACID RAIN-CAUSING EMISSIONS

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), since this is the final allotted day the House will go through the usual procedure to consider and dispose of the Supply Bills. In view of recent practices do Hon. Members agree that the Supply Bills be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government of Canada should, before the next Canada-U.S. summit, negotiate a treaty with the Government of the United States to cut acid rain-causing emissions from sources within the United States, which cause damage to our economy because such emissions are transported across the Canada-United States border.

That this treaty should be in the spirit of international co-operation exhibited by the Helsinki Protocol of July, 1985, already subscribed to by the Government of Canada and should include:

—the reduction by 1994 of transboundary fluxes of sulphur dioxide by at least 50 per cent by 1994, using 1980 as the base year;

—a specific timetable of emission reductions in order to meet the 1994 deadline;

—a specification that such reductions will be applied to sources of sulphur dioxide emissions which will yield the greatest benefits to Canada; and

That failure to enter into urgent negotiations for such a treaty would demonstrate a blindness to the long-term economic interests of both countries, considering the damage caused by acid rain to human health and to forests, lakes, streams, fisheries, agriculture, wildlife, the maple sugar industry and to buildings, monuments and structures.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Angus: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I may have missed it but did you call Petitions?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Angus: I am sorry, I did not hear you.

Mr. Hovdebo: I did not hear it either.

Mr. Speaker: I am in the hands of the House. Is that a request?

An Hon. Member: We all heard you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, this motion, as you just read it, is a constructive motion. It protects Canada's interests. It puts forward a policy option which, I submit to you and Members in this House, is far better than the one pursued by the present Government. It is based on two principles. The first is that we have to clean up our act, and we have done so. As you will recall, in March, 1984, we agreed with the provinces that we had to go it alone. When that understanding was brought about, the then Minister of the Environment for the Province of Ontario, Andy Brandt, while being interviewed, made it poignantly clear by saying we have cut our umbilical cord with the Americans and we will have to start to demonstrate our political will.

• (1120)

In cleaning up our act we also started to solicit and elicit the support of the international community. That is why in the same month of March, 1984, we invited nine European nations to Ottawa. We then signed an understanding, a commitment, saying that we would cut emissions, independently from each other, by at least 30 per cent by 1993. In doing so we implicitly said that this is an international issue, that there are global interrelationships in dealing with this issue because of the damage that is caused by one nation to another by the transboundary movement of this type of pollution. There are also continental interrelationships, and it was for that reason that we invited to that conference as an observer in March, 1984 a representative from the Environmental Protection Agency.

We decided to go it alone, we cut the umbilical cord and we started cleaning up our act. We did so assuming an economic cost that eventually we hoped and trusted would also be taken up by our neighbours in this very important form of pollution clean-up, which in the long-term turns out to be an investment for future generations and their ability to operate economically, as they have to, within a clean environment.

Canada as a sovereign country has the right to the protection of our national resources, including the right of not being dumped upon. The same right, of course, applies to our neighbours, namely, their right not to be dumped upon by our pollution when it crosses boundaries and falls on their soil.

To put things into perspective, the United States generates some 26 million tonnes of sulphur annually of which at least 5 million enters Canada. We generate four and a half million tonnes a year. It is against this background that I say to you that we should not be gratified by President Reagan making what would seem to be great concessions in recognizing what turns out to be the necessity to carry out further research. God knows, we have research coming out of our ears.

The damage to our resources, be they water, forest, fisheries, agriculture, the farmers whose income depends on the revenue from the sale of maple syrup, is increasing and is becoming staggering. The issue here is the prevention of damage in Canada, and the solution is in Canada-U.S. relations in order to remove what is becoming a common environmental threat. To remove that common environmental threat I submit to you we do not need further research. We do not need another five years waiting for something to happen that has not yet been discovered. We know the damage is there every day.

No matter how many times the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) engages in mutual backslapping with President Reagan the U.S. Government will not move. It will not take action, but it will take action the moment it recognizes and understands that there is economic damage. Until they realize and come to grips with the fact that the cost of inaction is greater than the cost of cleaning up, we will be facing this stark reality, the solution of which will have nothing to do with special relationships, Shamrock summits and the like.

What is so distressing to the Canadian public and to us here in the Opposition is to realize that the Prime Minister failed to make, when he was in Washington, the economic case for Canada. He failed also to make the economic case for the United States. He failed because he, like the envoys that he agreed to appoint, does not understand the importance of pointing to the economic loss that is being incurred and will be incurred as a result of the acid rain damage in the forest industry, in agriculture, in tourism, in fishing and to building and structures across the land.

As you know, we in Canada are increasingly looking upon the environment as an element within which the economy functions. We do not see the environment as an option to the economy, but we see the environment and the economy as one unit; an economy that can only grow well and function well in the long term provided that the environment within which it functions is properly cared for.

At the two summits the Prime Minister did not protect the interests of Canada by way of a subservient attitude, by way of being afraid of saying things as they are, by not pointing out that it is unacceptable to continue to have dumped upon us millions of tonnes of sulphur every year, by not pointing out that the decent responsible behaviour in the international family of nations dictates this practice to be stopped, whether it is between Canada and the United States, the United States and Mexico, Scandinavia and the U.K., or Chezkoslovakia and the western Republic of Germany.

The Prime Minister brought the situation upon himself when he suggested or agreed to appoint the special envoys without realizing that they might end up recommending something that is against Canada's interest, namely, more research, as it turned out in the end.

Once the report was published in early January the Prime Minister did not have enough wisdom or sense to distance himself from the envoys' recommendation. Instead, he embraced the recommendations, thus, I submit to you, taking Canada back to the time preceding the Memorandum of Intent of August, 1980, where we find ourselves nowadays.

The Prime Minister has not achieved a victory. In actual fact he has played into the hands of President Reagan. Having left in Ottawa both the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who could have given him good advice, I submit, he bought the argument in Washington that the solution lies in waiting for the polluting industries to come forward and make the first move as recommended on page 29 of the envoys' report. Even had the Prime Minister mustered enough courage at that time to remind President Reagan of what he said in this Parliament on March 11, 1981, it would have been too late for the Prime Minister. President Reagan said, on March 11, 1981, as reported at page 8155 of Hansard:

> We want to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no borders.

How ineffective can one be in handling Canada's public interests in Washington with respect to acid rain? He had no position to put forward to the President based on the staggering economic damage caused to Canada and the United States as a result of inaction. He was left with a consolation prize of five years of commercial demonstration projects, if and when industry is willing to come forward. What a sham.

The Prime Minister did not have the guts to make a strong case for Canada on acid rain. The result is that now Canadians, every day for the next five years, must sit and wait while these commercial demonstration proposals by the polluting industries may or may not see the light of day, depending on whether the polluting industries are prepared to put money on the table. That is the position we are in.

While we wait for the coal-burning electric utilities to decide on whether or not to spend their money—and they have already indicated they have no intention to do so—our forests, lakes, buildings and monuments, our health and the interest of farmers will continue to be subjected to the corroding rain and we will suffer increasing economic damage. That Shamrock Summit was a sham.

Furthermore, along with the extravagant claims that the Prime Minister made in Washington last week, he raised the expectations of Canadians almost to the sky, creating false impressions. Only the years ahead will gradually, but inevitably, reveal the naked truth that in reality, not only with matters concerning acid rain, the emperor has no clothes. We will not benefit by one ounce of sulphur reduction in acid rain coming across the border.

The Prime Minister has pulled the rug from under Senator John Kerry and other American Senators and Congressmen who are presenting acid rain Bills. In the case of Senator Kerry, his Bill aims at reducing sulphur by 12 million tonnes a year, but as a result of the Prime Minister throwing his weight behind the Reagan research plan he is helping to kill any possibility that Congress might have of reducing emissions by way of senatorial or congressional Bills. In doing so, the Prime Minister has regrettably been led down a blind alley.

Therefore, we have the motion before us today. I invite Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament to support this motion because it is supportable by any independent thinking MP who recognizes the necessity to look for a solution which can only result from a process of frank exchanges with the Americans, particularly the Reagan administration.

There are millions of Americans who believe like us that it is intolerable to continue to absorb the damage that is taking place. Therefore, we have an important economic theme to put on the table and an important mission to convince the Reagan administration that the cost of inaction is greater than the cost of action. We must engage them on that economic plane and, in order to be convincing, we must be equipped with the quantitative analyses that are necessary. The latest study which was carried out in 1981 by Tom Crocker, an economist at Wyoming University, indicated even then a yearly cost to the American economy of $5.5 billion. That cost is now greater. It is on this economic plane that we will make our point in Washington, not by engaging in this false hope that launching another round of research, as was launched in 1980, will enable us to achieve the kind of emission control program we need.

Canada has done its share, as have 21 other nations that belong to the EEC. That is why there is a reference to the Helsinki agreement in this motion. It involves a group of industrial nations that decided to address the problem in this manner, by commiting themselves to a 30 per cent cut at least by 1993. Unfortunately, the United States, the United Kingdom, Poland and Turkey are major industrial nations which are not part of the agreement.

We face a situation in North America whereby we are intimately intertwined in finding the solution to the economic damage caused by acid rain. Just as the United States and Canada cause each other damage, the same can be said for the United States and Mexico.

The economic approach is the key to the solution to this issue. The approach followed by the Government of Canada by way of two summits has set us back. It has created false expectations. Canadians are being asked to wait another five years to see whether or not some action will take place. There will be no agreement, no program or deadlines to cut one ounce of sulphur emission until this research binge over the next five years is completed in 1991.

I regret to say that the Government has failed on the acid rain front. The Government may have thought that good public relations could convince President Reagan to agree with its policies, but it has failed. We are wasting valuable time and have lost another year. The second Shamrock Summit provided another opportunity to make a strong economic case to convince the Americans that their damages are equal to, if not greater than ours. The Government did not have the guts to advance our theme. The major player in Cabinet with respect to this subject was even left at home.

I hope that enough Tory MPs will see the merits of our approach we are proposing today, which I submit is the only one that will bring about the solution to the acid rain problem we are facing in North America.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) accuses the Government of being shortsighted about the long term economic interests of our two countries, I think that, if we consider the number of years his party was in power without ever doing anything about the environment, they could be accused of being farsighted.

What did they do during all those years? They were a bunch of amateurs. In fact, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), one of their number, in an article appearing in The Ottawa Citizen this morning appears to be just that when he tells us, for instance, about Mirabel, a matter that was decided with a snap of the fingers, or when he tells us that the National Energy Program proposed by Mr. MacEachen was in the Budget and that all the ministers were put before a fait accompli. More amateurism.

The Hon. Member for Davenport was a minister at the time, but if we are to believe Mr. Johnston's statements, he did not have access to Cabinet directly because it was a group in the Prime Minister's Office that was running the country. And they are the ones that engineered the Petrofina purchase.

So why didn't the Hon. Member for Davenport stand up at the time and argue about protecting the environment, when there were plenty of smoke stacks spewing forth pollution and trees that were losing their leaves? Didn't he notice them until now?

It is strange that he should notice all this on the very day that for the first time, our Prime Minister managed to elicit an official position from the President of the United States, who formally admitted the existence of serious acid rain problems and the existence of transboundary pollution.

He is saying all this today. He is making a big discovery, when our own Prime Minister has come back to this country with the assurance that $2.5 billion will be appropriated by the U.S. Congress to fight acid rain. These are the positive aspects the Hon. Member for Davenport conveniently forgot to mention in the House today.

I wish he would talk to us about his own achievements within the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Caccia: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do that, particularly considering the fact that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) first came onto the political scene on September 4, 1984. He does not know the history of Canada before that date, and that is a serious handicap.

As I said in my remarks, before he was elected we signed with the Americans an agreement dated August 5, 1980 to promote and increase research on acid rain; it was also aimed at drafting and concluding an international acid rain agreement between our two countries. That agreement dates back to the last year of President Carter's administration in the United States.

In subsequent years, especially from 1983 to early 1984, we tried to expedite negotiations with Mr. Rucklehaus, who was responsible for the United States Environment Protection Agency, so as to set up a reduction program concerning acid rain from the United States. On several occasions Mr. Ruckelhaus approached the White House with various programs, but to no avail. In February 1984 it became obvious that Mr. Ruckelhaus just did not wield enough political clout to obtain President Reagan's approval, so the provinces and the federal Government met here in Ottawa on March 6, 1984 and decided to proceed with an acid rain reduction program in Canada, without American participation.

That was when the Ontario Government Minister of Environment—a Conservative Party member—made this statement familiar to all those who know the history of acid rain in Canada. I will quote him in English:

[English]

We have decided to cut our umbilical cord.

[Translation]

At the same, in March 1984 here in Ottawa, we hosted an international meeting with nine European countries to establish a common front program, as I indicated in my remarks. In June that year there was a follow-up meeting in Munich where 21 countries joined this world-wide movement to fight against acid rain. Again in June 1984, the two Ministers of Environment of Quebec and Ontario as well as their colleagues from other eastern provinces attended a second federal-provincial meeting here in Ottawa to confirm the decision to combine their efforts in an attempt to reduce acid emissions in Canada between then and 1994.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what our Government achieved before September 4, 1984.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin).

[English]

Mr. Gurbin: I appreciate the explanation of failure given to us by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Liberal critic for the environment. I have a simple, short question. We all know the memorandum of intent was signed between Canada and the United States in August of 1980. We have also heard the explanations of the Liberal critic for the environment as to what the second subcommittee on acid rain has described as "time lost". How many millions or billions of dollars was the Hon. Member's Party successful in getting the United States Government to commit to acid rain abatement and pollution control during the period between 1980 and September of 1984? Second, how many times was the subject of acid rain ever the major single item at the summit meetings between Canada and the United States during that period of time?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's second question on the summit is one which is very important. I recall very clearly that issue was raised by former Prime Minister Trudeau during the 1984 Summit meeting. It was item No. 7 on the agenda and it had a full paragraph.

Mr. Daubney: Item No. 7?

Mr. Caccia: Yes, item No. 7. Canada's initiative was fully developed at that particular Summit meeting and it was subsequently enlarged upon in 1985, both at the London meeting of Ministers of the Environment and at the Summit meeting in the same year, 1985.

With respect to the Hon. Member's first question, we had to proceed alone because it was evident that the efforts of Mr. Ruckelshaus of the Environmental Protection Agency were not successful in obtaining a program of emission reductions in the United States by February of 1984. As of that moment, we pursued the matter with the Americans in informal meetings, including the meeting in Munich in 1984, and we provided them with the economic arguments which would make it necessary for them to agree to the adoption of a program, but evidently the Americans were not ready to do so.

If the Parliamentary Secretary is implying that the Accord which has now been discussed in Washington at the second Summit includes an amount of money which is earmarked for a reduction of emissions program, with a deadline, then I would like him to say so. This question remains, despite all the dancing which has taken place, despite the two summits and despite the promises made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign. I know that right now the Parliamentary Secretary is looking at page 30 of the envoys' report. That is contingent upon the industry coming forward and upon commercial demonstration programs. That is not a cutting program at all. He is confusing apples and oranges.

Therefore, we have not made progress on the side of reduction, of cuts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I am pleased—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I failed to notice that the Minister was rising to speak. I have already given the floor to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I would only ask him if he would consent to yield the floor to the Minister.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Minister would want to hear the comments of both opposition Parties before he responded. If the Minister tells me that he wants to speak now and not pay any attention to what we have to say, then I suppose I would be willing to yield the floor to him on that basis. However, if the Minister cares about what both opposition Parties have to say with respect to the matter, then perhaps he would like to listen and then respond to both at the same time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. McMillan: Do I have the floor, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deans: You don't want to hear what we have to say?

Mr. McMillan: I will listen.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you respond to both at once?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of whether or not I wish to listen to the Hon. Member or his Party. I am entirely in the Chair's hands with respect to who has the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. Deans has the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to think that we are going to deal with this matter in as non-partisan a way as we possibly can. I wish to say to the Minister that I appreciate him giving us the opportunity to put our views on the record in order that he might respond to both the motion put forward by the Official Opposition and our position in this regard.

At the outset I want to say that I note with interest that the motion is written in such a way as to be non-inflammatory, as best as one can be in situations such as this. I think the motion is put forward with the best of intentions in an effort to try to advance the cause of the battle against acid rain, as opposed to taking on some direct and narrow political interest.

In saying that I wish to make it clear that, frankly, we do not care to listen to the ongoing battle of whether the Conservatives or the Liberals have done more or less. That does not seem relevant at this point in time. It makes very little sense to point a finger across the floor at the previous administration and claim that somehow or other the problem was created by it. In essence, the problem is everyone's. It is the problem of every Member of Parliament. Whether the Liberals, the Conservatives or, for that matter, the NDP were in Government, I suggest the same course of action should be followed in trying to come to the satisfactory conclusions which must be reached.

In looking back over the recent history of the whole question of acid rain it brought to mind arguments that we have had going back 20 years about various different kinds of pollution. I was reminded of the problems that confronted Governments at every level in trying to introduce legislation which would adequately deal with the devastation that results from the disposal of noxious, or even obnoxious, wastes. I remember spending a great deal of time on the question of the disposal of liquid industrial waste. I remember arguments taking place over many years with respect to the deep well process which was being advanced and which carried with it significant problems. There were the risks to the water-tables to be considered, particularly in areas surrounding major municipalities. The problems were serious enough to justify not pursuing that particular course of action. It was felt that the highly pressurized deep well operations being recommended were not suitable in many areas, if they were suitable anywhere, because of the faults in the rock structure which allowed the pressure to drive the poisonous liquids into the water supplies of municipalities. While that could not occur overnight it would inevitably happen over time. Therefore, it was felt that that type of solution was not adequate. It was a solution that was embraced to a large extent by industry because it was a simple and cheap solution. It offered a short-term way of dealing with the problem. I said then, and I say now, that it will prove to be disastrous in some areas in the not-too-distant future. The metropolitan Toronto area is one of these areas. The water-table there is somewhat north of metropolitan Toronto and it feeds much of the area, as well as feeding the northern, western and eastern outskirts of the city. The water-table is detrimentally affected by the allowing of liquid industrial waste to saturate the earth in areas north and northeast of Toronto. Having said that, I recall people telling me not to worry about it because the problem would be resolved in time. I was told that a solution was being worked on, and I waited.

There is also the question of nuclear waste, the disposal of it and the inappropriate ongoing manufacture of it in areas where there is no necessity for that to occur. I consider that there are many long-term problems associated with it which will affect not only Canada's disposal of it but which will affect Canada in the way the U.S. determines how it will dispose of its nuclear waste. We are now faced with serious questions on the borders of a number of our provinces, Manitoba being one which comes quickly to mind, where the U.S. administration is looking at disposal of nuclear waste in areas immediately adjacent to, if not right within, certain Canadian jurisdictions.

I say to the Government that that adds up to another serious problem which we have to confront. It is a problem which we have not yet been able to confront because technology is not now available to deal satisfactorily with this particular question. Yet we continue to develop more and more of the waste product while waiting and hoping that someday the technology will be in place to deal with it. There is no evidence to show that will be the case.

With respect to the question of acid rain, it is quite different. To a large extent the technology to deal with it is in place. There are methods available to deal with the spill of acid rain over the environment. There are ways available to cut back on emissions. There are ways to clean up those emissions. In fact, there are ways to bring the matter into conformity with what most of us would agree are limits which could be lived with in the short run, and which would even reduce emissions in the long run.

In reading over the memorandum of intent of 1980, I thought that was the first step toward the recognition of what was becoming a very serious problem. I thought that, although there was no clear solution put forward, the memorandum set out the process which was to be followed. In fact, that process was followed with the general support of a great number of people from all political persuasions in every part of Canada. In fact, it was even followed by similar like-minded individuals in the United States.

● (1200)

As a result of that Memorandum of Intent, they set up the working groups that did the necessary research, that sought out solutions and that quantified and qualified the acid rain components and made recommendations. The Minister knows what the recommendations were so let me read them to Hon. Members of the House. When the final reports were put in on the Canada-U.S. working groups in February 1983, they concluded on the following six matters:

—acid rain occurs in eastern North America within, and downwind from, major industrial regions

That allows us to isolate to some extent the source of the problem. They went on to say:

—damage in both the short and long term is occurring in areas vulnerable to acid rain as a result of sulphur deposition

—wet sulphate deposits greater than . . . (18 pounds per acre per year), in moderately sensitive areas, cause damage in lakes and rivers; in areas with deposits of below 20 kg/ha/yr no damage has been recorded

That gave us a sense of the important areas that were being affected. It gave us a sense of where we were to put our emphasis and where we could treat the problem with long-term but less immediate actions. They went on:

—the damage is primarily caused by sulphur deposits and the solution is to reduce them

—technology does exist to reduce emissions substantially

—if there are no changes in abatement programs it is forecast that emissions will increase through the remainder of this century.

We in Canada took that seriously. I say to the Liberal critic, the former Minister of the Environment, that while I am not entirely happy with everything he ever did, he at least did take the problem seriously.

Together with the jurisdictions most affected provincially, the Government did in fact move to try to put in place in Canada an adequate or at least an interim response to the problem. However, the problem continued because our friends in the United States refused to accept the findings. The administration of the United States, though it paid lip-service to it at the time, refused to accept that strict measures consistent with what were then being put in place in Canada should also be put in place in those areas of the U.S. that created the acid rain problem.

Since that time, though Canada has tried, I can say truthfully that our friends in the United States administration have done virtually nothing. Notwitstanding substantial expenditures, we continue to suffer. When we put acid rain on the agenda for yet another summit meeting I anticipated not a further statement of concern, because we received a Statement of Concern and a Memorandum of Intent in 1980 and we received a Statement of Concern in 1981 when the President of the United States visited Canada and stood here in the House of Commons to address the House. He himself said at that time, if not in these words, certainly in words very similar to these, that he recognized the serious transboundary environmental problem that exists as a result of acid rain. I admit that those were not his exact words but that was his intent as I understood it at the time, and I still feel that that was his intent in rereading it.

The President of the United States, rather than continue with his somewhat farcical view that somehow acid rain was the result of bird droppings, did acknowledge that there was a serious problem. One might have expected that as a result of that acknowledgement, he would bring forward substantive programs designed to help ease the problem, but no, no such programs came forward.

We then advanced ourselves through to the Drew Lewis-Bill Davis era. I was willing to accept that the appointment of those two fine gentlemen was intended to achieve some solution to the impasse that existed between Canada and the U.S. administration on acid rain. I do not doubt for a moment that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in appointing Mr. Davis, whom I have known for years, and Mr. Lewis, whom I did not know but have come to understand was concerned, intended not simply to have them restate the obvious but rather to advance the cause beyond the stage of rhetoric. Unfortunately, that simply does not seem to have happened. The report that was tabled by Messrs. Davis and Lewis in essence reidentified the problem but it did not, as the Minister himself alluded to some time ago, set out how the problem ought to be dealt with. Neither did it demand from the participants that there should be some clear and easily defined course of action followed.

In order to have this understood by those who might be watching, I should quickly point out what acid rain is. It is not something for which one purchases an umbrella, although an umbrella may keep acid rain off one's head. Maybe your hair will not turn the colour of mine if you have an umbrella to keep acid rain away from it, Mr. Speaker. I do not know.

Mr. McMillan: It's too late.

Mr. Deans: It is too late for the Minister and I, but not for everyone else.

What is acid rain? Environment Canada put out an excellent document which sets out in pretty clear and unequivocal terms what acid rain really is. I read from that document as follows:

Acid rain has been called the greatest environmental threat that Canada has ever faced. The rains and snows that were once cleansing and pristine have now become, as a result of human activity, dangerously acid and destructive.

Two common by-products of our modern industrial lifestyle—sulphur oxides and nitrogen oxides—cause acid precipitation. When these pollutants are discharged into the atmosphere, they can be transformed into sulphuric acid and nitric acid respectively.

They can be carried along by winds and fall to earth as acid rain or snow many kilometres from the original source of pollution.

Environment Canada then goes on to ask the question, as many people watching might want to ask, what are the sources of acid rain. The answer is as follows:

The main sources of sulphur oxide emissions in North America are coal-fired power generating stations and non-ferrous oil smelters. The main source of nitrogen-oxide emissions are automobiles and other vehicles.

Environment Canada has identified not only what acid rain is and how it happens but in essence from where it comes.

The next question is what is the impact of acid rain and the answer is as follows:

Acid precipitation can have many harmful effects. It can increase the acidity of lakes and streams to a point where fish and other aquatic creatures such as frogs and salamanders cannot reproduce—

We have seen evidence of this. One need not be an expert to see the clear evidence of the destruction that has taken place in the lakes of eastern Canada. The document goes on:

—ultimately, they become extinct in overly acidified bodies of water. Acid rain can also increase the acidity of soil and, particularly in combination with other atmospheric pollutants such as ozone, is suspected of slowing the growth of trees or making them more vulnerable to disease.

It is quite clear that acid rain also erodes buildings and destroys monuments. It has a tremendous effect not only on the quality of life and the cost of maintaining buildings, but it has a tremendous effect on our food production and a tremendous negative effect on forest production. It affects our lakes and waters. Quite clearly this is a serious matter. Of over two million lakes in Quebec and Ontario, 43 per cent are vulnerable to acidification, and 10 per cent of the salmon rivers in Nova Scotia can no longer support salmon and another 10 per cent are becoming acidified. They go on at some greater length and go into the details of it.

However, the interesting point, which is obvious to anyone who looks at it, is that acid rain is the result of industrial activity and that that industrial activity is ruining the rivers, the lakes, the forests and even the soil upon which it falls. There are ways readily available to us to stop it. That last point is the crucial point. It is not some phenomenon which no one understands; it is not some phenomenon for which there is no solution. This is clearly understood by the scientific community and probably clearly understood by the overwhelming majority of Members of Parliament.

We now face the crucial and crisis period. We have lakes and rivers which are no longer capable of sustaining wildlife. We have forests which are being destroyed by the continuous raining down upon them of sulphuric acid. We know how to stop it and, therefore, it is not sufficient to have from the President of the United States yet another statement which clearly takes only one tiny step toward the ultimate solution. In endorsing the Lewis-Davis report, the President of the United States does not—and I say it categorically—commit himself to a course of action. All we ask of him, at least in the first instance, is that he go forward today with a course of action, if not identical, at least similar to that which we in Canada have already adopted, not only in our best interest but in his best interest.

I know my time is up, but I ask the Government to acknowledge that another motherhood statement, albeit acknowledging acid rain as a serious problem, does not do anything for future generations or even for the generations which are now here. We need some clear course of action. We need a timetable. We need a commitment, and we do not have it in what came out of Washington. Although there is intention to do something, I should like to think that we in the House could speak as one voice in saying to the United States administration: "You do not have the time for another study; what we need now is action".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Question or comment. The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins).

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I paid close attention to the remarks of my colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), but I must tell him that perhaps it would have been more appropriate if he or his Party had introduced the motion now under consideration. To me anyway, it might have been more credible than a motion sponsored by the environment critic of the Liberal Party. I would suggest that he has introduced this motion and expects us to take action simply because he and his Party were unable to do anything when they were on the Government benches, beginning in the early seventies when the acid rain issue was growing ever more significant. What he is advocating in this proposed bilateral treaty is precisely what he himself was unable to achieve.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is right in saying that there has been a lot of rhetoric on the question of acid rain. However, that is not our fault. We have been in power only 18 months and we have already taken practical action. We have affected funds and developed programs during this 18 month period. It is not our fault if some people believe that the problem of acid rain has existed for too long without any solution being found. We came to power only in 1984, but since 1968 or 1970, when the acid rain problem was already important, they have done nothing except make speeches.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain says that we are still at a rhetorical stage, but does he not believe that the whole issue of relations with a friendly foreign country is very sensitive? Indeed, what Canada has done as a country and what the Prime Minister has done to show some leadership was the most that we could do, namely clean up our act. You yourself have recognized that the Canadian Government took important action; you had the honesty to say that we took important action in our own country to improve the environment. Will the Hon. Member not have the honesty to recognize that we have cleaned our act and that the Prime Minister went to Washington to meet calmly with President Reagan and to tell him: "We have done our duty in Canada and we are now asking you to do the same." President Reagan gave his answer the day after the second summit, as evidenced by the newspaper, La Presse which published an article with the headline "Reagan endorses fight against acid rain". Maybe this is still rhetoric, but the Americans at least recognize in fact or implicitly that the problem concerns them.

The Hon. Member said that there has only been rhetoric on the side of the United States and that nothing was happening. He was afraid that it would remain the same for quite some time. I would like to ask him whether he knows, as he probably does, that the American Congress is now considering Bill S-54 sponsored by senators from New England among others. This Bill, now before the American Congress, is being examined by the Committee on the Environment and Public Works. We have been informed that this is the most important Bill to have been debated by the United States Congress in the last 10 years. We have been told:

> The Senate Bill goes further than the recommendations of this report and is in many respects different from many bills tabled in Congress in the last 10 years to fight against acid rain. In addition to the negotiation of a North American treaty on pollution—

This is what the motion debated today proposes.

> In addition to the negotiation of a North American treaty on pollution, it proposes the adoption of an import tax on foreign products whose manufacturers are not subject to anti-pollution standards as stringent as those in the United States.

I would also add for the Hon. Member's information that Mr. Victor Maerki, assistant to Senator Stafford, who is sponsoring this Bill, says that this legislation has a better chance than the previous bills because of the Mulroney-Reagan meeting.

For the first time, the American President has recognized that acid rain is a real problem. This should remove one of the major obstacles to passage of this Bill by Congress.

This is what I would like to hear my colleague say, namely that major progress has been accomplished since we have been in power and practical action is now being taken in the United States. This was supposed to be a non-partisan debate and I therefore hope that the Hon. Member will have the honesty to make this admission.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, when my colleague was asking me all these questions, I thought that he would not leave me any time to answer them. Quite frankly, I said I felt it was a desire, at least on our part and I suspect on the part of most people, to find a common voice. Therefore, I was a little disillusioned when the Prime Minister appeared to be delighted with President Reagan's response, because in truth the response of the U.S. administration has not advanced much in the last five years or six years. However, if the President of the United States had approached the acid rain problem with the same degree of resolve with which he approached the Nicaraguan problem, then I might be impressed. If the President of the United States were prepared to put his reputation on the line in the battle against acid rain, then I might be impressed. My worry is that I do not know if the President really cares. From reading the reports—I was not there and I am only going from hearsay, quite frankly, and I admit that—I know that our advisors, our embassy people in Washington, had some difficulty in getting the President to do even what he did with regard to acid rain. He did not even want to endorse the Lewis-Davis report in actual fact. He had no interest in pursuing the acid rain question. It was only because we, the Canadian side, insisted that something be said about it that he even went as far as to endorse the report, albeit without setting out any clear way of dealing with that endorsation.

I do not know if the President of the United States understands it, but out of the 16,000 fishing camps and lodges in Ontario, 600 will be closed because of acid rain by the year 2000, and that will cost us $28 million and 600 jobs. One hundred and seventy-five million acres, which is almost half of Canada's productive forests, generate $14 million worth of product per year. These forests are affected detrimentally by the high levels of acid rain that is falling on them. Fifty per cent of the soil in Ontario and Atlantic Canada, and 87 per cent of the soil in Quebec is sensitive to acid rain. The value of the crops that grow in eastern Canada is $3 billion. I am concerned that over 86 per cent of Canada's population lives in areas of high acid rain. Given that similar statistics can be worked out for the geographic areas affected in the United States, I would have thought the President would have recognized, as we have, that immediate action is needed. We need a program now.

This is a nonpartisan issue. We do not differ on this. I am sure that the Minister agrees we should clean it up. I am sure the Minister agrees that the action taken by the Liberal administration was useful in the pursuit of that clean-up. I am sure we all agree that the major problem is the U.S. administration's inability, first, to understand the problem, and second, to move forward. I think we all agree on that.

Therefore, I do not know why we are arguing among ourselves about who did what to whom. Why are we not arguing about how we can get the best possible result from the administration of the United States? Why can we not send them a message that we are not satisfied with further discussion, investigation, and research? Let us do it by all means, but let us put minimum standards in place and let us enforce them so that we will not constantly have acid rain falling on everything that is important to us while they sit around waiting for the next presidential election.

Mr. Gurbin: Has the New Democratic Party House Leader read the Drew-Lewis report?

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this motion, coming as it does from a Party that did virtually nothing to advance Canada-U.S. progress on acid rain when it was in power, is as credible as a sermon on sexual morality by Fanny Hill. When the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) moved his motion he ignored history, refused to give the new Government due credit for a solid achievement in the environmental area, and demonstrated yet again a truism, namely, the Liberal Party never looks sillier than when it is attacking the present Government in a policy area where its own record in office was so appalling.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: Despite the Cassandra opposite, the hon. gentleman who moved the motion, the course undertaken by the present Government on acid rain is bearing fruit and will bear even more results in the future, results which the previous Government was unwilling to seek and, therefore, unable to achieve. Their attitude to the issue is evident in everything the Hon. Member's Party did or failed to do when it was in power.

On November 18, 1980, the then Minister of the Environment assured this House that: "We are acting within our own jurisdiction to the fullest extent and exploring every possible avenue to press the United States to co-operate with us in this very important venture". I urge the Hon. Member who sponsored the motion, and all Members on all sides of the House, to use that statement as a measure against which to judge what the previous Government did or, to be precise, what it did not do on acid rain.

One thing it did not do was place acid rain on the agenda of any summit between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States, CBC's Terry Milewski notwithstanding. There have been claims, the CBC's among them, that acid rain was first put on a bilateral summit agenda in 1981. However, Sir, by every reliable account, acid rain was not in fact on the agenda as a separate and major issue. It was only mentioned in passing, virtually after the fact.

The Hon. Member for Davenport takes issue with me, but according to a description of the 1981 summit contained in The Canadian Annual Review of Politics and Public Affairs published by the University of Toronto press:

> Mr. Reagan said that the United States favoured a prompt completion of the Alaska Gas Pipeline (and) said the United States wished to co-operate in studying and controlling transboundary pollution. His conclusion was positive and up-beat focusing, not on the differences between the two countries, but on their shared likenesses—

Geoffrey Stevens, now managing editor of The Globe and Mail, and then its Ottawa columnist, dismissed the entire meeting as a "triumph of style over substance".

On June 17, 1982, I had occasion in this House to quote the words of a distinguished former American chairman of the International Joint Commission who blamed Mr. Trudeau for Canada's failure to achieve a bilateral accord on acid rain. These are the words of Mr. Robert Sugarman to a Canadian audience:

> There has never been a statement in the United States by the highest official in your Government—
> —in other words, the Government of Canada—
> —to the American people that has reflected the seriousness with which Canadians take the problem.

A week later Canada's Minister of the Environment, John Roberts, instructed Canadian officials, his scientists, to break off negotiations with the United States on the grounds that the Americans were not willing to work out bilateral emission standards with us. That, Mr. Speaker, was the former Government's idea of "exploring every avenue to co-operate".

Almost a year later, shortly after the Williamsburg summit between the then Canadian Prime Minister and the President of the United States, I asked Mr. Roberts, the Minister of the Environment, in the House of Commons during Question Period whether acid rain had been on the agenda of the Williamsburg summit, or whether the Prime Minister had raised the issue even informally with the President of the United States on that occasion. All I, the Parliament of Canada, and the people of Canada received was a statement that Mr. Roberts did not "know whether the acid rain issue was touched on in an informal way". The Minister of the Environment for Canada did not even know whether the Prime Minister of Canada had raised the issue, much less as a major agenda item at a bilateral summit between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States.

I pressed him on that occasion by asking, first, whether Williamsburg might not have been an ideal occasion for raising the matter and, second, whether he thought that putting the issue forward might not assist in the acid rain campaign. I asked the then Minister of the Environment for Canada whether he, as Minister of the Environment, did not think it would have been a good idea for the Prime Minister of Canada to have raised the issue of acid rain at Williamsburg on the occasion of the summit.

Mr. Roberts' reply was astonishing for its insensitivity, even from a member of a Government which was giving insensitivity and arrogance a bad name. He dismissed my call as "an absurdity". He said it was an absurdity for me in Opposition to even suggest that it would be appropriate for the Prime Minister of Canada to raise the issue of acid rain with his counterpart, the President of the United States, at the summit meeting.

On April 13, 1983, I asked a question of the then Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, now a member of the Senate, Allan MacEachen. I asked whether he had made progress on the acid rain issue under the 1980 Memorandum of Intent at a meeting he had just had with U.S. Secretary of State Shultz. He said: > —that idea was tossed around at our meeting and it was abandoned because we finally concluded it would not lead to any further progress.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McMillan: That is the vigour, Sir, with which the then Deputy Prime Minister of Canada viewed the urgency of the acid rain question in connection with meetings he was having with his U.S. counterpart. On that occasion I was astonished, as were other Members of Parliament, to learn that the then Deputy Prime Minister of Canada had no concrete idea of how to proceed. All he would say was that he hoped the next time he and his counterpart met they would be joined by scientists and officials from both countries:

—to try to move this very difficult problem forward.

Seven months later the Hon. Member for Davenport, then Minister of the Environment, gave Parliament a genuinely frightening insight into the weakness and aimlessness of his Government's attitude to the vital issue of acid rain. When my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), asked about the possibility of U.S. acid rain legislation, as recorded at page 28983 of Hansard, November 18, 1983, he was told by that Hon. Member that the issue was one that:

—the President of the United States must resolve himself in order to come to a decision.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: In January, 1984, immediately following President Reagan's State of the Union address in which he said that he would study the problem, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), asked the Member who moved this motion today whether he could respond as to what the Government intended to do in view of the stalemate with the Americans on acid rain. The answer was that our approach is "to continue to make representations."

Clearly the real environmental problem was that the Party opposite was in a fog, had no idea what to do, and lacked the desire to find out. The Hon. Member's inability to deal with the issue may simply have reflected, with all due respect to him, his former leader's insensitivity to the importance Canadians placed and still place on the environment in general. Let me quote from Hansard of June 11, 1984, page 4528, when Mr. Trudeau rose in this House and tried to defend the recession his policies had brought to Canadians:

Now we are seeing Governments everywhere, provincial, federal, and in other countries, trying to balance this with the need to keep jobs going and the workers at work. High unemployment figures would be affected adversely if we were to close down some plants because they had not moved as quickly as we would like in reducing their levels of emissions.

Set aside for the moment the aspersions that those words cast on provincial Governments which have shown themselves ready to co-operate on environmental policies, at least as far as acid rain is concerned. Apart from that, the statement also slanders Canadians who have shown consistently that they care about the environment and are prepared to make reasonable sacrifices to protect it.

The present Government, working co-operatively with the provinces and industry, has already proven how miserably Mr. Trudeau underestimated what could be done by Canadians. Over the past 18 months the new Government has put in place the most comprehensive environmental protection program in Canadian history. At the same time it has created almost 600,000 new jobs and pulled Canada through the most grim economic times since the 1930s. All this it has done while whittling the massive deficit the Liberals bequeathed to Canadians.

In other words, the Government has demonstrated that it can pursue economic and environmental objectives in tandem without a trade off between the two objectives.

It is pitifully easy to list what the Liberal Government of the day did not do. It had no domestic acid rain control strategy in place. There were no specific goals by which each province would cut emissions, and no attempt to identify which specific sources in each province would be expected to reduce emissions. There were no plans to finance reduction programs.

Mr. Caccia: There were.

Mr. McMillan: There were studies of vehicle emission standards, and some go back as far as 1975, but there was no program for actually doing anything about them. Furthermore, acid rain had never been a top priority in bilateral discussions between the U.S. President and the then Prime Minister. Indeed, negotiations on the issue had been broken off altogether by Canada in 1982. The whole abysmal story of the previous Government's ineptitude and lack of concern was contained in the two reports of the parliamentary subcommittee on acid rain. I remind you that a majority of that committee's members were from the Government party. The second report of that committee was aptly titled Time Lost, symbolizing the time which had been lost in getting progress with the Americans on acid rain in the years the Liberals were in office between 1980 and late 1984.

The first step taken by this Government, after it was elected in September of 1984, was to categorically reject practised indecision, Yankee bashing and woolly commitments. We promised action, and we have been delivering, on the acid rain question as on others in the environmental field. We have in fact made more progress on the acid rain issue in 18 months than the Liberal Party was able to achieve in 18 years in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: We obtained specific commitments from the seven eastern provinces to reduce emissions by 50 per cent, or more than 2 million metric tonnes, by 1994, based on emission figures prevailing in 1980. Ontario and Quebec have already announced specific regulations to achieve the reductions necessary in those provinces. Other provinces will follow suit in a very few weeks. Negotiations have begun which will provide co-operative federal-provincial funding to implement these programs. As much, Sir, as $150 million will be provided for direct acid rain abatement from the federal treasury alone. Tighter light-duty vehicle emission standards will take effect for the 1988 model year beginning in September, 1987. Allowable levels of NOx emissions will be slashed by 45 per cent, equalling the American standards which were three times more stringent than those prevailing in Canada when the Liberals were in office. Specific technology projects designed to demonstrate promising new technologies at non-ferrous smelters have already begun. The Government is spending more than $50 million researching new, cleaner methods of burning coal in Atlantic Canada. The lessons learned from the projects will help industry across Canada meet emission reduction targets.

Sir, last year, before the Quebec Summit, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told Canadians that we would have to put our own House in order before we could expect the Americans to move themselves on the acid rain question. That is precisely what happened. In the process the moral authority that we Canadians bring to the table when we negotiate the issue with our American friends has been greatly strengthened. Less than a week ago the Prime Minister secured President Reagan's powerful and unequivocal endorsement of the findings and conclusions of the special envoys' report. If Members opposite devoted a little less time trying to tell themselves that the report will have little effect, perhaps they would have a little more time to grasp its importance.

• (1240)

Let me summarize, since I have about two minutes left, what that agreement means. It means that the President of the United States has acknowledged that acid rain is a transboundary problem with serious implications for both countries. He has acknowledged the underlying scientific arguments. He has committed the United States to developing a bilateral accord—read it, it's on page 4 of the Envoy's report. He has committed the United States to establishing the bilateral machinery necessary to achieve such an accord. He committed the United States to implementing a technology demonstration program in the United States which is expected to result in near-term reductions in U.S. emissions affecting Canada. He committed himself and the American people to placing acid rain on the agenda of future summits.

In other words, he has committed himself to a process which will ensure that the acid rain question will not be removed from the bilateral agenda until the question itself is resolved.

I stress that these are solid accomplishments. They are not the whole solution, but a major part of the solution. These are solid specific gains in the fight against acid rain. I would urge the Hon. Member and his colleagues to read what the Prime Minister of Canada said to the U.S. people through the media immediately after the conclusion of his meeting with Mr. Reagan. He told them that "the acid rain issue has been kicked around, debated to death in Canada and elsewhere. We think that we have a reasonable plan in place to solve it, not perfect, but well on the way to an effective resolution. And that is what we're going to do."

Sir, I conclude on this note: Yesterday The New York Times described the Prime Minister's success on acid rain with the United States President in Washington as "the turning point on acid rain".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: It is a turning point not because the problem has been resolved, but because both countries now finally have placed themselves firmly on a course to resolving the issue. In that sense it is not the end of the road; it is the beginning of the road, but it is an important beginning. I urge all Members of the House on all sides, in the words of the President of the United Stated himself in a different context, "to stay the course".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments?

Mr. Althouse: Having listened quite carefully to the Minister's excellent speech I wonder with reference to the motion that is before the House today, which essentially calls for recognition that it is something that we would all agree to, that in the opinion of the House Canada should negotiate a treaty with the Government of the United States to cut acid rain-causing emissions from sources within the United States. It goes on to spell out the amounts of these reductions that we should aim for. Is the Minister prepared to support this particular motion and this particular outline of intention which is put before the House today?

Mr. McMillan: I think it would be premature for any Member of this House to make a decision on the relevant motion before he or she has heard all the points of view expressed on all sides of the House on the substantive question. For me to stand on my feet and say that I am going to take a hard and fast position on a motion in connection with which the debate has only begun would be the height of arrogance.

Mr. Althouse: Perhaps I could rephrase the question then. Does he, as a Member of this House, believe that we should be negotiating a treaty with the United States to reduce acid rain emissions as this motion says?

Mr. McMillan: Yes, we are in fact negotiating with the Americans towards the achievement of an accord. I draw to his attention the relevant sentence on page 4 of the Drew Lewis, William Davis envoys' report, which both the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States have endorsed. It that says what remains is to borrow from the precedent of bilateral progress over the years on various environmental questions and "build upon those foundations a bilateral accord which will jointly address a common problem in the best tradition of the U.S.-Canadian environmental relations."

In accepting the envoys' report we implicitly accept the principle upon which the Hon. Member has based his questions.

Mr. Caccia: May I ask the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) whether he has ever seen a copy of the May, 1984 report that deals with the modernization of non-ferrous smelters, which is available to him and which will provide him with an important component on Canada's plan of action in reducing our own emissions, considering his statement earlier that there was no planning before September, 1984? Would the Minister like to confirm whether it is incorrect to say that the process of consultation with industry on car emissions was launched in the spring of 1984.

Finally on the question of summits, there is terminology that is causing some confusion. Regarding the question briefly touched upon earlier by the Parliamentary Secretary on the summit, I realize now that he was referring to a bilateral summit. To correct the record, I have to inform you that my reply to him dealt with the seven industrial nations summit of 1984. I realize now from the speech of the Minister that he was in his question referring to a summit in 1984 between Canada and the U.S. That was not the subject of my reply. In my reply I was referring to what was in 1984 I believe the Bonn summit between the seven industrial nations where acid rain was, and quite properly so, on the agenda, because these are the major industrial polluters in the world.

Mr. McMillan: I certainly did not wish to imply, nor did I, I think, that no planning has preceded the decision by the Government of which I am a part to make much more stringent the allowable emission levels for light duty motor vehicles. Clearly a lot of scientific work and some considerable thought by Government, including previous Governments, had been devoted to the issue, but no progress had been made beyond the actual preliminary work. It took this Government to bring that preparatory work together and give effect to the controls to which I addressed myself in my speech.

The emission controls on light duty vehicles take effect in September of 1984 for the 1988 motor vehicle year. They will be 45 per cent more stringent than those that prevailed before, bringing out standards to the level of the Americans, which until now have been three times more stringent than ours.

On the second question, I think it is significant that—I don't mean to be partisan here—the Official Opposition comes into this House and brings with it a laudable motion. But implicit in the motion is a criticism of the Government of Canada for the way in which it handled the acid rain question in Washington through the bilateral summit between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. When that Party was in office it absolutely refused to put the issue on the agenda, much less deal with it effectively once it was on the agenda.

When my Party was in opposition we asked repeated questions in the House during Question Period, following a meeting between the then Prime Minister and the President. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), myself and others would ask the Prime Minister and other Ministers if they had raised the acid rain issue and if so, what agreement was reached. We asked if an understanding had been reached, and every time, without exception, we were told, to our shock and disappointment, and that of the Canadian people, that the issue had not even been raised. Not only had it not been put on the agenda, it had not been discussed even informally. We would say: "Surely you took the occasion of meeting with the President of the United States in Williamsburg to express the concern Canadians have about the effects of acid rain on our environment and on the environment of the United States?" If this issue was not on the agenda formally, we thought that the then Prime Minister would at least have put it on a hidden agenda, raise it at a cocktail party or while walking the President to his car. The only response was that it had not been deemed appropriate.

No one occasion I was attacked by the then Prime Minister for even suggesting that it would have been appropriate for him to raise the acid rain question when meeting with the President of the United States in Europe for multilateral discussions. The Prime Minister said: "We cannot raise everything. When I see the President of the United States at a summit meeting of different countries, I cannot raise everything".

Acid rain is more than just another issue. It is the most important environmental issue ever faced by the United States or Canada. It is not just another bilateral issue, much less just another environmental issue. Acid rain is destroying our lakes, our streams and rivers. It is killing our fish and undermining our agriculture. It is devastating our forests and has even been demonstrated by science to have an effect on human health.

Members of the Liberal Party did not think it was important enough to raise the issue with the President of the United States even informally, much less formally. Now that Party has the gall and unmitigated temerity to come to the House and attack the present Prime Minister for the way he raised it in Washington. I do not know what you call it in your riding, Mr. Speaker, but in my riding and, I suspect, in Davenport, the attitude is called hypocrisy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by commending the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for giving the House and all Members of Parliament the opportunity to direct our thoughts toward this urgent issue. I am sure every Member of Parliament recognizes that there is an urgent need for joint U.S.-Canadian action on the problem of acid rain.

I do not see any reason why the motion being debated today cannot be accepted by all Hon. Members in the House, particularly under the new rules by which the House now operates. There is no condemnation or question of confidence expressed in this motion. It is an outstanding way for the House to send a strong message to our counterparts in the United States Congress and the United States administration that while we have begun serious and concerted action in our country we know that the problem of acid rain will not be solved until they take some action themselves.

Canadians have known for a very long time that the acid rain problem is serious and is getting worse. As far back as 1981, our reputable, distinguished and accomplished National Research Council concluded in a very credible scientific report that acidic depositions, or acid rain, was a major environmental concern in many regions of North America and that it was a transboundary problem.

It was during the first session of the Parliament of Canada previous to this one that a subcommittee of the House tabled its well-known report, copies of which are still in great demand. That report is called "Still Waters: The Chilling Reality of Acid Rain".

One of its recommendations called for Canada and the United States to reach an agreement on the necessary legislation and mechanisms to substantially reduce transboundary air pollution as it relates to acid rain. It recommended that something be done by the end of 1982.

In this respect I want to take my stand, not for or against a Government, but with an all-party parliamentary group that understood the problem well enough to make a recommendation as forthright and vigorous as that. It reminds me once again that Parliament does have a role to play in leading Government rather than following it, cheering or jeering, as the case may be. If more parliamentary reports were adhered to and taken seriously, the kind of acton taken by governments would not be so open to criticism or challenge by the people of Canada.

I am delighted that the new rules we recently adopted will finally give Members of Parliament the opportunity not simply to follow, but to take the lead on certain crucial issues such as the issue of acid rain that we are debating today. It enables us to debate how we may encourage the people in the United States to convince their Government, their Congress and their administration to do a great deal more than they have in the past.

We know that the result of the recent meeting between our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States was no big deal. That is not just my opinion, because the Prime Minister himself said in the House that the agreement on acid rain was not a triumph, but represented progress. That is what we are debating today.

How much progress was made? I am not interested in the historical debate about whether it is more progress than was made in the past. I am more interested in the problems we face today and the damage that acid rain is causing in my region of the country. I suggest that an agreement which simply calls for more research but no real cuts in the level of sulphuric and nitric oxide emissions is not enough. It is certainly no triumph. It is certainly no big deal to recognize that acid rain is a problem and perhaps some money will be spent on it. That money will be spent if Congress agrees, and it is no easier to get money from Congress than it is to get money for new programs from our Government when we are facing a serious fiscal situation. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

CALL FOR STABILIZATION PAYMENTS TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FARMERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is not acting wisely regarding stabilization payments for Prince Edward Island potato farmers. Island farmers fear the auctioneer will be long gone by the time the Government gets around to helping them out. Far too many farmers are on the brink of bankruptcy.

Farmers asked for help last fall. Here it is very close to spring planting season and there is still no word. Island potato farmers need cash in their pockets to pay last year's bills before they can start planning for the coming season. They need an assurance that help is on the way.

I call upon the Government to exercise wise judgment and approve funds for stabilization payments immediately. That is not all. The market price for potatoes must be restored to reasonable levels. To do that, the Government must also approve a diversion program to remove potatoes from the market. Our primary producers must be guaranteed a healthy return for their crops, and stabilization payments to cover their losses.

INDUSTRY

FLEET INDUSTRIES—QUALITY OF PRODUCTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, early in January I was contacted by an individual who had been a quality assurance supervisor at Fleet Industries, a company which makes aircraft and other military components. He told me many horror stories about unqualified personnel and improper inspection procedures at its plant, so I pressed both the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence to investigate.

These investigations have now been completed and it is apparent that their findings, as far as they went, have substantiated the allegations which were made by this individual. It is to be hoped that the company and these two Departments will now move quickly to correct the problems and guarantee the quality and safety of their products.

If these matters had not been raised by this individual, how much longer would they have gone unnoticed by the DND on-site inspectors, and the Department of Transport audits which had failed to notice them in the past? There is something seriously wrong and grossly unfair when an individual has to lose his job, jeopardize his entire career, suffer death threats and other harrassment, and be sued by the company, all to bring some serious problems to the attention of those who should have been dealing with them all along.

THE SENATE

MOVEMENT FOR REFORM

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, while we are reforming the House of Commons let us not forget about the reform of the Senate. Ontario and Quebec have, and will have for many years, a majority of Members in the House of Commons as representation is based on population. Senators, on the other hand, should represent their province or region. With a majority in the House of Commons, the central provinces do not need a second advantage by having a majority in the Senate.

The Triple E movement, which stands for an elected Senate with equal representation from each province bringing about an efficient "other place", is growing right across our nation. Triple E carries with it the judgment of the most critical, as it is fair to every part of Canada. Triple E promotes a Senate which is answerable to the people and which assures every region that our laws will be fair. A Triple E Senate could be a powerful force in holding together the Canada we have and love today.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the Task Force on Program Review recently made public its assessment of the many agricultural programs and tax benefits in force at this time. Now that we know that there is a bottom to the taxpayer's pocket, even agriculture must take up the challenge to spend wisely. The task force encourages this by exposing all programs for scrutiny and justification.

If continued funding is indeed inappropriate for some specific programs, we should perceive this as an opportunity to liberate these wasted dollars for more necesssary work such as research and market development. Evidently this challenge is too difficult for the NDP. In Saskatchewan their leader has responded with pathetic and hysterical bleatings about specific options from the report. True to form, that Party is trying desperately to manipulate the fears of western farmers rather than co-operate with this magnificent opportunity to create an effective, forward-looking agriculture for the 21st century.

ENERGY

COAL TECHNOLOGY—FUNDING REDUCTION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the Government to reconsider a move that it made in the recent federal Budget to reduce the amount of moneys for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for coal technology.

Under the previous Government, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources had budgeted approximately $30 million in this regard. However, as a result of the Budget this amount has been slashed by $20 million. This will have devastating effects on those provinces in the country which utilize coal as their primary source of energy. I am thinking primarily of the Province of Nova Scotia, which utilizes coal as its first and foremost resource with regard to electrical generation.

The fact that the Government has now destroyed the coal technology program will have devastating effects on our economy. As we look for additional uses for coal, not only for electrical generation but for coal liquefaction plants, we see, the carbogel project which was to take place in Cape Breton has been cancelled as a result of this cut-back. I hope the Government will reconsider this decision and reinstitute the coal technology program.

HONDURAS—TRAGIC DEATH OF FATHER WILLIE ARSENAULT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, thousands of Hondurans and Canadians mourn last Thursday's tragic death of Father Willie Arsenault near Tegucigalpa in Honduras.

Father Arsenault was a humble and dedicated missionary who built homes for handicapped and abandoned Honduran children to whom he devoted his life.

Children, Quebecers, his relatives and friends in the Gaspé Peninsula will all feel the void left by the death of this man of peace.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the murder of Father Arsenault is not an isolated incident. The people of Honduras have lived through years of terrorism and abuse of human rights. They are the victims of the violence and armed aggression inherent in Central America's ongoing militarization. They are the victims of their country's destabilization which has been abetted and encouraged by the policies of the Reagan administration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

TAKEOVER PROPOSAL AFFECTING CANADA TRUST

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, this morning at 9 a.m., Imasco, the old Imperial Tobacco, offered to buy 100 per cent of the shares of Genstar at $54 a share. Genstar controls Canada Trust, one of Canada's largest financial institutions following its merger with Canada Permanent.

In the Finance Committee's report on financial institutions released last November members of the committee recommended stringent ownership restrictions on large financial institutions controlled by non-financial institutions. At that time the committee singled out Genstar for special restrictions because of its relatively small non-financial holdings. It now appears a single company with massive non-financial holdings could gain control of Canada Trust.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) should make it clear that she will block any attempt by any non-financial institution to gain majority control of Genstar. She should quickly indicate to the House her response to the ownership representations of the Finance Committee.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DISCONTINUANCE OF UNDERGROUND TESTS ADVOCATED

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, like any other kind of explosive, nuclear explosives can be used for good or evil. Civil uses of subterranean nuclear explosives might include large-scale excavations, permeability enhancement of gas reservoirs, and fracturing in preparation for in situ leaching of mineral deposits. However, continued, primarily military underground testing by powers such as the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. are interpreted as hostile acts and lead to increased instability in an already unstable world.

Therefore might I suggest that further unilateral tests be discontinued and that the nuclear powers, together with other interested countries such as Canada, co-operate under the auspices of the United Nations to develop nuclear explosives for peaceful purposes which can be used—

THE ADMINISTRATION

POSITION OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): For over a year now, Mr. Speaker, we have been facing a decimated Liberal contingent which has no policy, no vision into the future and no hope.

Members of the Opposition systematically refuse to endorse any constructive proposition made during the debates in this House, preferring instead to belittle the programs advocated by our Government. Nothing meets with their approval, be it job creation for young people, increases in veterans' allowances, or agricultural assistance programs.

Worse still, Mr. Speaker, they will go to any length to put off the adoption of measures from which the most destitute of our fellow citizens would benefit.

The Globe and Mail's Jeffrey Simpson was quite right when he wrote recently, and I quote:

> The Liberals' response to the Wilson Budget offers further depressing evidence that intellectual inconsistency, hypocrisy and political opportunism are thriving on the Opposition benches.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF HERRING QUOTA IN ST. LAWRENCE GULF REGION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the fishermen of New Brunswick are impatiently awaiting a decision by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) on herring quotas in the Gulf region. Several weeks ago, Government representative, fishermen and processors met in Montreal to discuss and suggest changes. It will soon be April, when the fishermen start getting their boats and fishing gear ready. As you can imagine, these fishermen must know now what their fishing quotas will be, so they can plan accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister has all the facts before him and there is no reason for him to delay his decision. Furthermore, the crab fishing industry is also impatiently awaiting a decision by the Minister. I wonder why the Minister is so reluctant. Why is he making the fishermen wait so long?

THE ECONOMY

PERFORMANCE OF PREVIOUS GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in today's Ottawa Citizen, an article about the book "Up the Hill" by a former minister of the federal Government, the present

Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) gives an entirely non-partisan impression of the lack of attention given by the Liberal government to major economic decisions.

According to the author, the Petrofina purchase was never approved by the entire Cabinet.

The National Energy Policy, whose disastrous effects we are still feeling today, was forced on Cabinet by a very small group, of which the present Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was a member.

The decision to build Mirabel was made in a most cavalier fashion, without any consideration for present and future needs.

It was this team of irresponsible megalomaniacs, Mr. Speaker, that plunged this country into the worst economic mess we have seen in this century.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Government uses any occasion, however unjustified, to indicate any possible good statistics. That is part of its news-management scheme. However, the Government has ignored the plight of homeless Canadians about whom the Ottawa Citizen wrote this week. It has refused to deal with the problems of unemployed youth. It has refused to recognize that churches and other centres have overflowing soup kitchen facilities; in other words, there are too many people for the facilities that exist.

The Government, through the Nielsen task force report, talks about modern suburbs in the bush but is blind to the real conditions of native Canadians. It ignores the deplorable housing situation of Indian people and it ignores the fact that there are no water and sewage systems for them. It refuses to acknowledge the fact that there is a higher rate of disease occurrences among native Canadians. The Government is not a good-news Government, it is a bad-news Government.

YOUTH

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are concerned about the problems of young people. That is why the present Government is spending $734.6 million during the current fiscal year to provide training and job-creation programs for youth. This year 222,600 young Canadians will participate in these programs.

Between 1980 and 1984, under the former Liberal Government, 142,000 young people lost their jobs. Since September, 1984, 75,000 new jobs have been created for young people, and youth unemployment has fallen, not enough as yet, but it has fallen.

Katimavik was established to provide young people with employment, training and life experiences. The present Government's youth programs are doing exactly the same thing in a different way but are helping more people with the same amount of money.

YOUTH

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. He is probably aware that last Friday, the Prime Minister promised the House he would check with his ministers and senior officials in order to accelerate the process or do everything he could to announce a new youth program. Could the Secretary of State inform the House whether the Prime Minister consulted him or whether they intend to take action today?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member for Shefford that the Government of Canada is going to define policies on public administration and will announce them at the appropriate time, and obviously, without being influenced by the kind of question he is asking me today.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE MEASURES BEFORE END OF SESSION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I think the Secretary of State should show some respect for this institution and answer the questions that are put to him. On Friday, his leader promised he would read officially, as he said, the letter from Senator Hébert. He promised to consult with his ministers in order to announce a program and thus try and put an end to the situation that exists in the other place, in the Senate. Could the Secretary of State inform the House whether or not they intend to take action before the end of this session?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Shefford say that the Prime Minister announced he would make a decision in terms of what is happening across the corridor. The Prime Minister of Canada has never established any connection between a decision on youth policy and what is happening on the other side. A decision on Katimavik or any other program will never be made in terms of what is happening across the corridor.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ACT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State can put his head in the sand as much as he likes, but the fact is that today, there is one senator who is into his fifteenth day of fasting. What I am asking the Secretary of State is this: Do they intend to let him die or are they going to act as they are supposed to act, which is as soon as possible?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Senator Hébert, to whom the Hon. Member is referring, made a decision that I respect, but it is his decision, it is not a decision by the Government of Canada. I am very sorry, but this Government will not respond to this kind of gesture by changing fundamental policies on which the administration of this country depends. That is true today, and will continue to be a week from now.

HONDURAS—MURDER OF CANADIAN MISSIONARY PRIEST

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. All Canadians have been saddened and shocked by the reports of the tragic death of a Canadian missionary priest in Central America in the past week. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what action the Government is taking in response to this terrible incident? Are External Affairs officers presently in Honduras involved in an inquiry? Have we asked the Honduran Government for an official report on the circumstances surrounding this tragedy?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Of course, Mr. Speaker, we deeply regret the death of Father Arsenault in Honduras. We have taken the necessary measures this morning and asked our embassy in Guatemala to find out exactly what happened and why the murder took place. Naturally our embassy provides the required support in such painful human situations, and we have assured the family that immediate action will be taken to bring back the remains of Father Arsenault.

[English]

SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in view of this incident and of the wide variety of turbulence which is taking place in that region, is the Government prepared to re-evaluate or reassess the risk to the security and safety of many Canadians who are now working in that area as missionaries of as volunteers? In fact, is the Government looking at the necessity to increase substantially its diplomatic presence and have more embassies in that region, in view of this increased activity and the risk which Canadians will be facing?

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we already have programs in Central America. As we said on several occasions, very specific and special measures are being implemented to meet the standards of that country.

As to our embassies, we have increased our presence in Costa Rica and Guatemala. We can say that the two embassies that represent us are doing outstanding work and, of course, we keep a very close watch on the situation.

INCOME TAX

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Is it her Government's view of fairness that a person who had a taxable income in 1984 of $2,040 and who, as a result of that, paid no tax, should, as a result of the changes introduced by the Minister of Finance, now be required to pay $190.30 tax on that selfsame taxable income in 1985?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have spoken about fairness in this House many times. There is no question that the Budget and the budgetary implications of what we have done with regard to the deficit through taxes and expenditures have been well received by the country, and that Canadians do believe that the Budget is fair.

LEVEL OF TAX PAYMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Would the Minister care to answer the question? Is it reasonable that persons with a $2,040 taxable income should be required, in 1985, to pay $190.30 in tax when in the previous year they were required to pay no tax because we believed that they could not afford to pay tax?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have done more for the lower-income people than other Governments have done, and we intend to continue doing that. However, we are not doing Canadians any favours if we do not get rid of the deficit. The country knows that, and I wish the Hon. Member would admit it.

Mr. Deans: Where does the Minister propose that people with taxable income of $2,040 should find an additional nearly—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ask the Hon. Member to ensure he does not simply repeat the question.

Mr. Deans: Perhaps if you listened, you would find out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Where does the Minister propose that a person with a taxable income of $2,040 should be able to find $200 more in a year to pay tax, when she knows full well that at that level of income they do not have that kind of money?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order! That is exactly the same question.

YOUTH

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It seems that the Government is going to shut this House down on Wednesday for a 10-day holiday without announcing a youth program—

Some Hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He doesn't even know the Standing Orders.

An Hon. Member: He doesn't understand the rule of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Question, please.

Mr. de Corneille: —ignoring the fact that Canadians of every age are focusing on Senator Hébert, who is still on a hunger strike on behalf of Katimavik and the youth of the country. Why does the Government not have a youth program ready for us now, or is it playing a political cat-and-mouse game with Senator Hébert and the young people of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I responded earlier, and again I repeat our position: the Government of Canada will not hastily create a program, notwithstanding the famous reports which you have released and which you want us to take into consideration. We will not create a program because somebody is on a hunger strike.

[English]

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT BEFORE EASTER RECESS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If the Government has a program which is at all worth-while, why does it not bring it before Parliament before the holiday, instead of ducking and stalling until the House shuts down?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. gentleman has been living with his head stuck in the sand. In the short time that the Government has been in office it has focused $700 million on direct youth employment related programs. It has created 50,000 more jobs for young people. There was a net loss of jobs for the entire time during which that hon. gentleman sat as a member of the Government on this side. There has been more action since the change of Government with respect to youth employment than there was in the combined history of the Government when the Member was sitting on this side of the House.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REPORTED SEIZURE OF CONVALESCENT'S BED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. As he might know, last Thursday officials from his Department forced their way into the family home of Bill and Anna Rijswijch of Delta, British Columbia. Mrs. Rijswijch, recovering from major surgery, was forcibly removed from her bed and his officials then seized the bed. Can the Minister inform us the section of the Taxpayers' Bill of Rights this action comes under?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform Members of the House that I am naturally very upset at the newspaper reports of this incident. We are looking into the matter to see whether the circumstances are as described. If they are and, if appropriate, I will personally see that the bed is returned with appropriate apologies from Revenue Canada Taxation.

APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister change the regulations which allow his officials to carry on these storm-trooper tactics and make those changes public? We understood this was supposed to have changed with the change of Government.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would caution my friend opposite not to jump to too many conclusions on this matter. As he knows, the Department is in a bit of a dilemma because we are charged by law with making every effort to protect the taxpayers' interests, particularly when it comes to SRTC investigations, of which this was a part. The actual seizure was effected by sheriff's deputies. I am trying to find out for certain what part Revenue Canada officials played and whether they failed to exercise proper judgment. If they did, and if it is appropriate that there be redress and apologies, I repeat that this will be done.

PROPOSED UNITED STATES FARM BILL—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Prime Minister's meeting with President Reagan last week. Can the Minister tell us what agreements were reached with the President of the U.S. concerning the U.S. Farm Bill which will have a devastating impact on Canadian farmers by reducing net farm income by some 20 per cent? What actual agreements were reached between the President and the Prime Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister, as is obvious, is not in the House today. He is in Oshawa. I was in Europe attending a NATO meeting and our paths have not crossed since. If the hon. gentleman wants an inventory of agreements that have been reached, if reached, he will have to await the return to the House of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, or when the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs is in his seat.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great national concern, especially in western Canada. Is the Minister saying that the Government is satisfied that it did not get a commitment from the President of the U.S. that their bonus program for grain would not be used against Canada and its traditional trading partners?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): One thing I am satisfied of, Sir, is the vigour with which our agricultural interests are being put forward in the U.S. by the Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is a very refreshing increase in activity over what we saw in the two decades prior to our taking office in 1984.

FINANCE

CLOSURE OF GRIFFITH IRON ORE MINE—TAX TREATMENT OF LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister of Finance announced in Hamilton last week that he does not intend to extend to the people of Ear Falls area, caught in the closure of the Griffith Iron Ore Mine, any of the tax relief which he promised to these workers in his 1985 Budget Speech as well as his 1984 economic statement. Will the Minister of State for Finance tell the house if the statement in Hamilton represents the Minister of Finance's final decision and, if it does, what justification could he offer for reneging on these promises to provide tax relief on severance pay and other closure benefits paid to laid-off workers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has reached his decision on this. I think it is important to point out that these cases are considered on a case-by-case basis. They are treated equally in that the same criteria are brought to bear, but since there are frequently different facts it can lead to different results on a case by case basis.

PLIGHT OF WORKERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if then it is the Ministry of Finance's position that the Ear Falls area is not isolated and that there are other jobs in the area, and if that is the position it takes will the Minister of Finance go up to the area and tell the people where the jobs are, because they sure cannot find them?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that it is a mine that is being closed, it is not a town that is being closed. The same criteria were brought to bear on this as have been brought to bear on other cases of this nature. There are a number of programs, federal and provincial, that have been specifically designed to help in such a situation.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TRANSFER PAYMENT TO QUEBEC CREE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Could the Minister explain to the House and to the Cree people of Quebec why he unilaterally reduced an Indian self-government transfert payment by 50 per cent, a payment that flowed out of an agreement signed between the Cree people and Canada, an agreement that was part of the Cree-Naskapi Act and signed in conjunction with that Act passed by this Parliament?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member. I think one fact would be useful to note: there was an increase in the original payment of over $800,000, which is only half the request. The Treasury Board note also indicates that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be approaching the Treasury Board with respect to further opportunities.

AGREEMENTS WITH ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister well in his representations. I want to ask him when we are going to stop breaking agreements that we sign with the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I say this with all the compassion I can muster. It would have been most useful if the previous Government had made opportunities available to the northern Cree which would have allowed us to proceed with the agreement. In fact, what we have had to do is pick up where the agreement left off, provide the funds that are available to us now, and come back later. I can assure the Hon. Member that this Government intends to maintain agreements, and indeed make agreements which are maintainable.

YOUTH

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, a lot of urgency has been attached to the fact that one man is on a hunger strike, but not enough to the fact that 700,000 young people are in serious difficulty. My question is directed to the Secretary of State. Can we get a straight answer? Is it that we are going to have a program by the Easter recess, by the end of March as the Prime Minister says, or mañana like the Secretary of State said?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State): I can repeat in the other official language repeat what I said in French. I said that when we will be ready to propose to young Canadians any other policy we will do so, but not necessarily at the time when you want. The Prime Minister never said that we will propose a policy before such and such a date. We will propose something when we are ready.

Mr. McCurdy: Speaker, is it not amazing that the Prime Minister was so prompt in retrospect about the dismissal of a Minister, but there is so much delay in dealing with the problems of young people? Can we not trust the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. This is the same question again. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

ENERGY

WORLD OIL PRICES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Today the OPEC meetings broke off without reaching an agreement on how to stop the decline in world oil prices. Is the Government still prepared to play the waiting game while even more jobs are lost in our energy industry?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are in constant contact with the producing provinces, we are in constant contact with the producers themselves in discussing this particular issue. When a decision is made as to what action, if any, the provincial and federal Governments will take, that announcement will be made jointly in complete co-operation, like we have seen over the last 18 months, with our provincial counterparts.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. A large number of Canadian companies have laid off employees and the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada has said the time for waiting is over. Will the Government admit that the time for waiting is over and take some action now?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Well, the Hon. Member has been standing up asking for action, but he fails to mention what kind of action should be taken by the Government. If he has some ideas we would be more than happy to listen to him, but to stand up there and just say take action is completely irresponsible.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

EMPLOYMENT OF WELFARE RECIPIENTS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. On September 19 the Minister of National Health and Welfare spoke of a joint agreement with the Minister of Employment and Immigration to set aside 30 per cent of the jobs in the major component of the Canada Jobs Strategy Program for welfare recipients. Can the Minister explain then why, according to this memo that I have here, that is marked confidential, from Mr. John Edwards, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration, why he, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, allowed the employment officials to undercut his target of 30 per cent by one-half in negotiations with the lead Province of Saskatchewan? Why did he allow himself to be undercut like that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there was no undercutting. There have been discussions by the Minister of Employment and Immigration as recently as last week when she was in Saskatchewan. This program with the provinces to have people who have been on welfare, who have been in that difficulty where they want to get out of welfare, where they needed some training or flexibility in the program—that has been put together with the federal Government and those provinces that have wanted to enter into those types of agreements. That was further enhanced by the Minister of Finance's Budget. I want to say to the Member that that program is going well and we continue not only to proceed with it but to enhance it.

EMPLOYMENT TARGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): On September 19 in the House of Commons why did the Minister of National Health and Welfare talk of a target of 30 per cent when in these negotiations, according to Mr. Edwards, in the Province of Saskatchewan the target now is set at between 14 and 18 per cent? Why did he tell the House it was 30 per cent when, indeed, the negotiations are about half of that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if he takes a look a little further in terms of those negotiations the target will be as high as possible. If you take a look at Nova Scotia other targets have been met there because of negotiations that have taken place. If he takes a look, for example, at the Throne Speech of the Saskatchewan Legislature just a few days ago, there was a reference to that issue. What we are saying is yes, we want to get people off welfare, but we will do it on the basis of where it is meaningful work rather than "workfare".

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF CANADA TRUST

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): My question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In Section 48 of the draft amendment of the Trust Companies Act the Minister proposed measures to prohibit transfers of ownership of financial institutions which the Minister considers to be against the public interest, effective November 29, 1985. Will the Minister state categorically, in view of the proposed takeover of Canada Trust by Imasco this morning, that she will block any attempt by a non-financial institution to gain majority control of Genstar, or is she prepared to see Canadian ownership policy for financial institutions decided by default?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly am not prepared to see financial institution policy decided by default. This particular proposal came to us only very recently. There are many ramifications to it, and I am certainly taking a very close look at it, or I will when the documentation is prepared.

Mr. McCrossan: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is not ready to announce an ownership policy now, will she give an undertaking to the House that on our return from the Easter break she will make a statement to the House on government policy for financial institution ownerships before this takeover can be completed?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the draft Bill suggests that any potential takeovers after November 29, 1985, must meet with my approval. As soon as those decisions are ready, I will certainly make them public.

YOUTH

HUNGER STRIKE BY SENATOR JACQUES HÉBERT—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I would like to raise an issue with the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, following the extremely harsh attitude which the Secretary of State demonstrated a while ago concerning the events which are taking place at the other end of the corridor where a senator is continuing his hunger strike on behalf of young Canadians.

Considering that there appears to be no link whatsoever between the announcement of new programs and the hunger strike, could the Deputy Prime Minister indicate whether the Government has at least a contingency plan to prevent the worst from happening on the Senate side?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is extremely sad that a man like Senator Hébert should take such an extreme measure to try to influence the Government into changing its direction as to essentially political choices in the area of job creation for young Canadians. From the political and humane point of view, it is absolutely unacceptable that a person should use such a method on which I will not comment as harshly as most Canadians. I cannot object too strongly to this attempt at making political gains at the expense of young Canadians.

INQUIRY IF PROGRAM REPLACEMENT PLAN EXISTS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I fully understand that the Government is entirely "divorcing" the announcement of programs from the hunger strike. Therefore, I ask the following question: Has the Government a plan, irrespective of the programs, to put an end to what is going on at the Senate before it is too late?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): On many occasions this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I indicated that the policies of this Government are not decided according to the decision of this or that Canadian to go on strike. Such a method has never been a basis for governing a country, and we are going to start using it today.

Senator Hébert has made his own decision. He has never asked anybody for the permission to go on a hunger strike. He does not have to ask anybody for the permission to stop. And it is certainly not by changing the Government policy that we could cause Senator Hébert to change his mind.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—JOB-CREATION OFFER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the Minister is aware, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association circulated a letter to MPs claiming that it will quadruple R and D jobs if the Minister curtails generic drug manufacturing. Does the Minister agree with that claim by the manufacturers and, if so, will be explain to the House how that can possibly happen simply by doubling R and D expenditures?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we have said many times that we intend to revise the legislation on the pharmaceutical industry. We have launched a major consultation process across the country, and we intend to announce a policy whose aims will be along the same lines as previous policies announced by the Government, namely to create jobs and promote investment in this country.

[English]

COST OF LEGISLATIVE CHANGES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not agree that those false claims will cost Canadian consumers and elderly persons some $211 million a year if he goes ahead with those legislative changes? Will he ask the drug companies to table in the House letters substantiating those claims?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we have repeated many times that when the decision is announced, it will not be at the expense of the consumer, and furthermore, and I repeat, it will have the advantage of creating jobs in Canada and generally promoting investment in the industry.

PUBLIC WORKS

PROPOSED SALE OF OTTAWA PARKLAND AS SITE FOR UNITED STATES EMBASSY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, which we can understand, and in the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary who, in this case, is AWOL in South Korea—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gauthier: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is in order, but I am sure the Hon. Member knows that commenting on the presence or absence of others is not.

Mr. Gauthier: I said my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he tell the House if it is federal policy to sell federally owned parklands? NCC Chairman, Jean Pigott, recently said that she wants to sell part of an Ottawa riverfront park known as Mile Circle, to the United States of America for an embassy compound. Is the Government in favour of selling our natural parklands?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question has been answered several times before and I simply refer the hon. gentleman to the records of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the question was put before, but we never got an answer.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT DIRECTIVE PROHIBITING SALE OF NATIONAL PARKLAND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether he intends to act responsibly and give clear and precise instructions to all those who are responsible for our national parks, indicating clearly that none of our national parks are for sale?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, usually the view of the Opposition is that they get no responses to their questions simply because they choose not to accept the responses. On our part, however, we believe that they are responses to the questions and should be accepted from the Government. Again I invite the Hon. Member to refer to the records of the House.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

RIGHTS OF JAPANESE-CANADIAN WARTIME INTERNEES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last Friday the Minister of State for Multiculturalism tabled a progress report on Equality Now which recommends at point 33 that the Government of Canada undertake negotiations to redress "these wrongs" namely, the mistreatment accorded the Japanese in Canada during and after the Second World War.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm my information that the Cabinet has instructed the present Minister of State for Multiculturalism and his predecessor not to negotiate such a redress with the National Association of Japanese Canadians?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should know better than to expect an answer to a question which is directly motivated by a desire to obtain knowledge of discussions from within Cabinet. He knows very well that that is simply not the practice and tradition of this House. Cabinet discussions are not disclosed on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Deans: Neither is anything else.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): The evidence certainly confirms the question which I put.

REDRESS AGREEMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Does the Government intend to betray the expectations which the Prime Minister, then Leader of the Opposition, aroused in the summer of 1984 about a redress agreement with the National Association of Japanese Canadians?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to the question is: Not at all.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). Everybody knows that in the last two weeks, interest rates dropped nearly 10 per cent as a result of our good Government. Could the Minister of State (Finance) inform the House what effect this substantial drop will have on small and medium-sized businesses?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, for a business with a debt of $500,000, this means a savings of $5,000 per year. The drop in interest rates should provide a stimulus for this very important sector of our economy.

WESTERN ACCORD—REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY SMALL OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He knows that the provisions of the Western Accord allow the Government of Canada to take appropriate measures, particularly in these times of fluctuating international oil prices.

In keeping with the Prime Minister's commitment of openness and civility, is the Parliamentary Secretary prepared to table in the House copies of representations which have been made to him by numerous small Canadian oil and gas companies, particularly the memorandum which has been submitted to the Government by Petro-Canada, outlining the various options open to the Government?

● (1450)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am unaware of a memo forwarded by Petro-Canada to the Government. Perhaps the Minister has received it I do not know. I have not seen it. As far as the other representations which have been made to the Government are concerned, the energy critic for the Liberal Party had the representations made to him, as they were made to us, and I suggest the Hon. Member get them from his colleague.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Other than just listening, which is very commendable, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary how many jobs have to be lost and how much economic havoc do western Canadians have to sustain before the Government will provide to Parliament the options it is considering with the producing provinces, with respect to a very difficult issue affecting western Canada?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are as concerned as anyone about the falling oil prices and what is happening in Alberta. We are in constant contact with our partners in the Western Accord, the producing provinces. They have not requested a renegotiation of the Western Accord. They do not want another fiasco like the National Energy Program which was a knee-jerk reaction by the former Government to pricing in the oil industry.

We are working very closely with the provinces and when we have something to announce, or if there are any amendments to the Western Accord, they will be made jointly. However, to date there have been no requests for amendments to that wonderful Accord about which westerners are cheering.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CHEMICAL WARFARE INQUIRY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Would he tell us whether or not he was asked at the NATO Council Meeting last week in the Federal Republic of Germany to commit Canadian troops in any way to chemical warfare preparedness or participation within the NATO command?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, without setting the precedent of commenting on discussions which go on within the four walls of NATO meetings, I can tell the hon. gentleman: Of course not. The question is right off the wall and is intended to establish something in an area where the Government is simply not involved.

I do not know how many times I have to repeat that the Canadian Government is not involved in any form of chemical warfare.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I find that answer rather strange in view of the fact that it was on the agenda of the North Atlantic Assembly and it is presently on the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give a categorical statement, a clear statement, that under no circumstances—and I am not talking about the production of chemical weapons—will Canadian troops anywhere be involved in the use of chemical weapons or chemical warfare?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the reason of everyone in focusing on that question. How on earth can any reasonable and sane individual predict that our troops will under no circumstances be involved in whatever kind of warfare which might break out? I can give no such assurance. We are certainly not planning to get involved. We are planning on peace in this country and our every effort is directed toward the achievement of a lasting, stable world peace.

PENITENTIARIES

RECOMMENDED ABOLITION OF MANDATORY SUPERVISION RELEASE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On Friday a coroner's jury investigating the death of an alleged murderer who was free on mandatory supervision, recommended very strongly, again, that mandatory release be abolished. Will the Solicitor General advise the House how long it will be and how many Canadians are going to die before we pass the legislation abolishing mandatory release which was reported back to this House almost two months ago?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to see the report of the coroner's jury myself as yet. However, I have seen press reports. According to the press reports I have seen, it is not calling for the abolition of mandatory supervision but rather for passage of Bill C-67.

As the Hon. Member will know, that Bill is currently in prestudy before the Senate and is at report stage here in the House with the New Democratic Party having filed, I believe, over 30 amendments to the Bill. I believe this Bill is important for public safety and I call upon Members of Parliament to pass the Bill without further delay.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER—TOXIC CHEMICAL DUMP SITES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As the Minister will recall, last October his American counterpart came to Ottawa to submit a proposal for a plan to clean up the toxic chemical dump sites along the Niagara River. We have asked the Minister to indicate to us his decision. Now that six months have gone by, the people in the Niagara Peninsula would like to know what is the position of the Minister?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Lee Thomas, met with me here in Ottawa on October 17 at which time, among other things, he gave to me, and through me to the Government, an action plan for the cleaning-up of the Niagara River.

It was to be a four-party action plan involving the U.S. Government, the Canadian Government, the Government of Ontario, and the Government of the State of New York. Our respective officials have been working on it non-stop since then, but I must confess to the Hon. Member and to the House that there is much less progress than I had hoped, simply because the Canadian and U.S. Governments do not see eye to eye on the ultimate solution for the disposal sites on the American side of the Niagara River. We think it should be excavation and incineration. The U.S. Government thinks it should be containment.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Will the Minister tell the House when he will make a public statement to let the people in the Niagara Peninsula and those who draw their water from Lake Ontario know what their future is going to be?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thought I just did. I did state categorically on behalf of the Canadian Government that we think the only solution for the disposal sites on the American side along the Niagara River is excavation and incineration or, at the very least, the removal of those toxic chemicals to somewhere else that would be less vulnerable. In the meantime we are doing our best through our different officials to get agreement from the Americans on their own action plan, which will not do the job which needs to be done until there is increased accommodation by the Americans to our position.

YOUTH

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT IS PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE IN FINANCING RE-ESTABLISHED KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Would the Government be prepared to participate in the funding of Katimavik if the program were to be maintained through financial support shared by the Government and the private sector, and donations from Canadian individuals, as is the case with Youth Canada-World?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, I explained the Government's position concerning Katimavik. Whatever the program, the Government of Canada has reviewed its priorities, particularly with respect to job creation. I would fail to understand if the Hon. Member were to raise objections, because day in and day out his Party keeps saying that we must create jobs for young people. That is what we are trying to do, and I would think the Hon. Member will not attempt to convince me that Katimavik is a job-creation program.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Spaker, is the Government prepared to participate in the re-establishment of Katimavik? Is there any way Katimavik might be maintained with the Government's full or partial support, or is the Government bent on eliminating Katimavik because it is not a Conservative program?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is simply the same question repeated.

FERRIES

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE SERVICE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the Nielsen task force report which stated the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service was recognized as being constitutional. However, the report also recommended that the Government of Canada ask the courts to decide whether or not the Government of Canada is obligated to subsidize that service. Will the Minister of Transport tell us today if he will once and for all say, no, we are obligated, and not allow that to go to the courts?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is fully aware that the proposals contained in the Nielsen task force are options for consideration. The Transport document will be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and at that time individual Members who want to express a point of view on all of the options outlined therein will have an opportunity to do so.

● (1500)

GOVERNMENT OBLIGATION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point. I do not want that to go any further. Will the Minister put a stop to it right now and admit once and for all that, yes, the Government of Canada is not only obligated to providing the service but obligated to subsidizing it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the process is in place. I certainly would not want to interfere with the work of the standing committee.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to apologize to the Chair for my intemperate comment during the Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—TREATY TO CUT ACID RAIN-CAUSING EMISSIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government of Canada should, before the next Canada-U.S., summit, negotiate a treaty with the Government of the United States to cut acid rain-causing emissions from sources within the United States, which cause damage to our economy because such emissions are transported across the Canada-United States border.

That this treaty should be in the spirit of international co-operation exhibited by the Helsinki Protocol of July, 1985, already subscribed to by the Government of Canada and should include:

—the reduction by 1994 of transboundary fluxes of sulphur dioxide by at least 50 per cent by 1994, using 1980 as the base year;

—a specific timetable of emission reductions in order to meet the 1994 deadline;

—a specification that such reductions will be applied to sources of sulphur dioxide emissions which will yield the greatest benefits to Canada; and

That failure to enter into urgent negotiations for such a treaty would demonstrate a blindness to the long-term economic interests of both countries, considering the damage caused by acid rain to human health and to forests, lakes, streams, fisheries, agriculture, wildlife, the maple sugar industry and to buildings, monuments and structures.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, when we reached one o'clock I was referring to the agreement signed by Canada and the United States with respect to the acid rain problem. Using the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) own words I was pointing out that the agreement was certainly no triumph, although it was progress of sorts. Because it was not a triumph, and although it represented a certain amount of progress, that is what makes the motion before us today in the name of my friend, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), so meaningful and relevant, and appropriate that it should be absorbing the time of the House.

We will have more research. We will see the expenditure of some money. If Congress will agree and if industry will lead the way by spending its $2.5 billion first. But there is no guarantee that that will be the case. We are receiving an endorsation of the Lewis-Davis Report. However, I have to point out, using the words of a well-known conservative columnist: "The Lewis-Davis Report is not as cogent as the Canadian Government would have liked. While it stirs the waters it creates no waves. It is of modest recommendations".

It is true that the U.S. President signed an agreement. But later on, in talking to the United States press corps, the President made this comment: "Serious scientific and economic problems remain to be solved". When I heard and saw that comment I could not help feeling that this rather smacks of hedging, backing or fudging on the agreement. A columnist in the United States of the conservative persuasion has made the statement that the "greening" of President Reagan on the issue of acid rain should not be begrudged by those who understandably want more sooner. He says that the President has come a long way. In his speech this morning, the Minister made the same comment. But then this columnist goes on to say:

Down the road somewhere between Shamrock II and IV, we may yet have a treaty establishing emission reduction targets. What we need to do meanwhile is to keep on trucking.

I do not even know what that means, to keep on trucking. To those who are advocating and suggesting that what we have is a giant step forward in terms of a serious problem and to "keep on trucking" while acid rain keeps on falling means that we will continue to kill our lakes and streams, continue to destroy our fish life, ruin our forests, decay our buildings, harm our economy and endanger our health.

The recent agreement with the President of the United States made a contribution to his education. That is fine. I am all in favour of enlightenment. That is wonderful. It is wonderful to know a little more about anything. We can now say in the House that the President of the United States sees, in a mirror dimly, and now he knows in part. Our concern is, when shall he understand fully, even as we in Canada have understood fully? That is the message that this motion is trying to carry forward. It is that we have understood, and we have acted, but it is a transboundary problem. We cannot solve it on our own. We need action from the United States of America.

Surely a motion such as this can be supported by every Member in the House. We in Canada have understood. Why should we not have understood when one-half of our forests are receiving high levels of acid rain? We cannot afford to see our forest industry in any way undermined. We must have a vigorous industry in order to protect our national economy. Canada's lakes, rivers and streams constitute almost 8 per cent of the country's total surface area. What a resource we have, one of the world's greatest sources of fresh, clean drinking water. We have a fishing industry, both commercial and sport, which is vital to our economy. Yet 43 per cent of the lakes in Ontario and Quebec—a total of two million lakes—are suffering today from pollution as a direct cause of acid rain.

Four-fifths of all Canadians live in areas of high acid rain. And there is the possibility that 90,000 jobs could be lost in the very near future as a direct result of acid rain. In the region of the country which I represent, where the tourist industry is so important, we could see 600 lodges and fishing camps close down between now and the end of this century in a period of only 14 years.

We have talked about forests and we have talked about our streams. We have talked about human health. We also know that damage to our buildings is costing us almost hundreds of millions of dollars every year. Over the weekend I read with great interest an article written by Martin Weaver entitled "The Rain that Eats our Cities". The article was published in the Canadian Heritage magazine in the February-March, 1985, issue. Along with the article there appeared an illustration of a knife passing through the once tough granite walls of the Palais de justice in Quebec City. The caption underneath read: "Acid rain, by triggering chemical reactions is reducing this stone to the consistency of cheese".

The Hon. Member for Davenport has quite correctly described the agreement which the Prime Minister brought back from Washington as a hollow victory. We did not get very much. We got a little more research, but we did not get what we wanted. We want what the parliamentary report in the last Parliament wanted. We want a timetable for implementing reductions of sulphuric and nitrogen emissions.

The Globe of Boston made the comment that President Reagan, the consummate manager when he wants to be, knows that the way to stifle an unwanted program is to call for a fresh study. There is nothing wrong with research, but that is not the approach we need at this time. Research will have to go on, of course, but something much more is needed. The same editorial pointed out that in the face of mounting evidence that waterways, lakes, forests, fields, buildings and people are increasingly the victims of human abuse of the environment, we need targets and we need goals for the reduction of sulphuric dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions. There is in fact a Bill before the U.S. Senate that would do just that. It is a Bill put forward by a leading senator from one of the New England states which proposes that sulphur emissions be reduced by 12 million tons per year and that nitrogen emissions be reduced by 3 million tons per year. That senator wants this to be achieved by federally mandated standards paid for by electric utility fees. That is encouraging. However, one commentator from Canada, knowledgeable about Canada-U.S. relations and about how the U.S. Congress functions, made the comment that by throwing its weight behind the tepid Reagan research plan, Canada may actually be helping to kill any possibility that Congress will bring in a Bill reducing emissions. The columnist went on to say that the Prime Minister has allowed the President to lead him down a blind alley.

The Boston Globe expressed puzzlement that Canada's Prime Minister could be jubilant at the President's endorsement of the Lewis-Davis report on acid rain. The editorial called it no more than a minimal effort and said that it was no call for jubilation at all. It said that what the President fails to appreciate is that loss of life in lakes, ponds and streams and damage to valuable forests must be reduced quickly. In other words, we do not have time for more research and for nothing but research. That is the bottom line of the motion that was put before us by the Hon. Member for Davenport. Any effort at all to cut down on emissions of sulphur and nitrogen oxides is worth while, but what we got from the President was a bit of motion.

The Globe article went on to say that the Canadian Prime Minister will have to prod the President often to get him to take the next small step of implementation. I ask you, Sir, can you or any of us in the House imagine the Prime Minister prodding the U.S. President? I doubt that very much. I think he stands too much in awe of the President to do that at all.

One very prominent U.S. Senator from a border state expressed surprise, when the agreement was announced, that the President had given so little and had offered to Canada such a minimal amount. He went on to say that he was surprised that the Canadian Prime Minister let him get away with it.

The provincial coordinator of the Fish and Wildlife Services for the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) but the 20-minute period has now expired.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Ricard: This morning, Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) concerning the meeting of the Prime Minister with President Reagan on acid rain.

Mr. Speaker, I also heard the Hon. Member for Davenport say that in 1980, under Mr. Carter, an agreement had been signed, but that subsequently it had been quite impossible to discuss the matter with the Reagan administration.

I have just been listening to my colleague who made a similar statement.

Mr. Speaker, one can readily understand why there were no negotiations with Mr. Reagan: Mr. Reagan and Mr. Trudeau simply did not get along. When Mr. Mulroney came on the scene recently, Mr. Reagan himself said: "At long last the Trudeau era is over, we shall be able to discuss with the Canadians."

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Opposition cannot teach us anything new with respect to negotiations on acid rain. I also believe we must be very careful not to adopt such a motion, because our hands would be tied and we would not have any elbow room to negotiate with the Americans.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague who just completed his speech if he would elaborate for a moment on the position taken and views expressed by the Ontario Association of Anglers and Hunters. It might be very important for us to learn about them and he was not able to elaborate on them in his speech.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, on the day the Prime Minister returned I asked him about the agreement and reminded the House that the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, an association which monitors this situation very carefully and has for a long time, concluded that the agreement brought back from Washington is a good public relations campaign. It described it as being another stall tactic and the federation said that we are no further ahead.

The great pity about so much of the debate today is that we are concentrating on the record of four or five years ago and are saying that nothing happened then. The point is that this motion indicates that time is moving on and the problem is getting more and more serious. We did have an opportunity to bring our case to Washington and to get something more than what we got, but we came back with something that was described by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters as being very little more than public relations or windown dressing.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in what the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) said because I know that he is sincere in his concern for this issue and has been for a number of years, as have members of all Parties. I know that he will not be surprised when I indicate to him that I would be astonished if there were anyone in the House of Commons who did not want to have an agreement with the Americans to eliminate the emissions of acid rain, at least to the point where we would be effectively diminishing the damage that is being done to our waterways and possibly our forests.

I tend to agree with the Hon. Member that we should all be able to express the same objectives. What I do find astonishing, listening to not only the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) but the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, is that one would think that we were debating today in the American House of Representatives or Senate. I think Hon. Members had better realize that what we have to debate today is what we can do to influence an administration that up until now has been extremely intransigent on this issue. I would leave that comment for now because I will enlarge upon it later.

I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member and to the Hon. Member for Davenport, who is honourably known to me, that I would hope that for the rest of this debate Hon. Members would try to zero in a little bit on what it is we can do in this Chamber, and would not concern themselves too extensively with what was done or what was not done in the past.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my good friend that the point he made is a relevant one. At the beginning of my speech I did make reference to that point. What I want the House to do is to join together in sending a collective message to the United States Congress and the United States administration telling of our strong united feeling regarding the need for a timetable for the reduction of emissions. Of course we cannot debate on behalf of the Americans a problem that we have recognized as being serious, but we can send a message to them.

When I read the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport and decided to enter the debate, I thought that the motion was relatively fair. It did not condemn the Government but it did say that this is how we in Canada feel and we believe that these steps ought to be taken. I believe that a motion, either this one or one similar to it, really ought to be passed unanimously by the House of Commons, and that our friends in Washington ought to know that it is the feeling of all Members of Parliament. That is what we did when we wrote the report on acid rain, and my hon. friend was a very important and valuable member of that subcommittee.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that fishermen, forestry workers and so on were greatly concerned about this matter. How is the timeline affecting these industries or particular areas? Is there a basic understanding of the maximum effect or how greatly these industries will be affected in the future? Is there some kind of timeline to which the Hon. Member could refer?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the only one I have readily available is a careful analysis which was done for the tourist industry. It indicated that within the next 14 years, by the end of this century, we can expect that some 600 tourist lodges and hunting and fishing camps will have to close down, directly because of the effects of acid rain. If we take that as a clue, it seems to me that we have a good guideline. What we really have is just a decade and a half to solve the problem. However, a decade and a half is much too long because by then much of the damage will be irreversible and we will have paid an extraordinary price for our negligence.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the other day maple syrup producers visited Ottawa and suggested that there was already a 20 per cent reduction in the amount of syrup produced. Does the Hon. Member have any idea of how much the production of timber is being reduced and how long it will take before the next 20 per cent disappears, for instance?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members need to realize that we are dealing with an accelerating problem. In other words, over a period of 10 years there has been a 20 per cent reduction in the production of maple syrup. We can be sure that in the next decade it will not be just another 20 per cent, it will accelerate. Probably in another decade, or certainly in a decade and a half, there will be no production at all. What is applicable to maple syrup certainly applies to other aspects of the forest industry—the production of lumber and the production of pulp and paper. In fact we are very quickly destroying our forests because of neglect in dealing with acid rain.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this opposition motion dealing with the problem of acid rain, particularly transboundary crossing of acid rain and, as was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), what the House can do about the problem and its effects on Canada's environment and economy. I echo the words of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) when he talked about this motion being couched in reasonable terms and one which could and probably should be passed unanimously by Hon. Members of the House.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who has had a continuing and enduring interest in this and other environmental problems, on the way in which the motion is framed. As was mentioned, it is not a motion which wildly or even mildly condemns the Government. It is not framed in terms of criticism or disgust for a record, but rather it is a motion which looks toward the future.

As the previous speaker mentioned, the timeline is getting short. We talk now of 1994, in terms of geological time and the way in which damage accumulates in the environment because of the absorption of acid rain and the build-up of levels of chemicals in our lakes, rivers, trees and even buildings. Maybe the problem has been going on for over 100 years now, but if action is not taken soon, indeed the damage will be irreversible and will affect the economy and environment of Canada.

Shortly after I became a Member of Parliament in 1984 I received letters from numerous communities in my riding dealing with the acid rain problem. I received letters from people in Dryden, Longbow Lake, Fort Frances, Ignace and Sioux Lookout, all telling of their concern about the problem of acid rain and the long-term environmental deterioration acid rain has the capacity to initiate in the country and across the continent.

The people in my riding are in a way somewhat more fortunate than those who lie to the east of them, because of prevailing winds and the lack of pulluting industry in the western United States, at least at any sort of distance which allows for heavy deposition. My riding is not as badly affected as some of those in northern Ontario, in Quebec and in the far northeastern United States. Even so, there are problems. Research is going on in my riding at the moment regarding acidification of lakes. There are pockets where acidification is believed to be quite advanced. There is never a cause for complacency, simply because a problem has not yet fully visited itself upon a particular area. We can always look at the areas where the problem is fully evident and draw our conclusions.

I should like to refer to a letter sent on July 31, 1984 by the then Leader of the Opposition to the executive co-ordinator of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. In that letter the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "It is our intention to proceed with constructive action as a priority following the September 4 federal election. We believe that with an effective plan of action which could be produced within six months, we can at least meet and should be able to surpass the objective of a 50 per cent reduction in Canadian acidic emissions by 1994". I should like to ask Government Members, with this commitment framed in very clear terms and in a way that is absolutely inequivocal, how they could come out and vote against this opposition day motion. How can they say that the matter has changed, that needs are different or that necessarily the Government has a different perspective? Obviously the Prime Minister, in his days as Leader of the Opposition, specifically and very firmly endorsed the very goal which is included in the motion we are discussing today.

As my Party's spokesperson on tourism I should like to talk about the effect acid rain is having on hunting and fishing tourist lodges, particularly as I know them in northern Ontario, but I am quite sure throughout the Province of Quebec and in those parts of the Maritimes where such industries are carried on.

The rate at which lakes are dying in Canada is believed to parallel that of Scandinavia where the sources of pollution are as intense, and I believe even closer. The Northern Ontario Tourists Outfitters Association represents several hundred tourist operators engaged in sports fishing and hunting across northern Ontario. They are very conscious of the problem of acid rain. In fact, that association was a major driving force behind the formation of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. We are not talking now about a major industrial grouping. We are talking predominantly of small operators, many of them employing only family members and most of them, if not all, being of a seasonal nature. We are not talking about a force which can contend on an equal basis in the economy with the interests that are creating the pollution.

This organization, which runs largely on voluntary energy, enthusiasm and commitment, contributed $35,000 to the initial formation of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. It has added to that contribution because it has a commitment to the industry and a real concern about what acid rain is doing.

There have been experiments with dropping lime into lakes which have suffered very high levels by virtue of acidity. It is good that those experiments are taking place, but rather than neutralizing acidic damage, it is much better to prevent the problem in the first place.

The tourist outfitters of northern Ontario know that the accord which has been reached between our Government and that of the United States will not clean up Ontario lakes and rivers. That is a major point of concern. We are really only talking about a holding action. This action will allow pollution to continue and will allow acidic levels to continue building up in bodies of still and flowing water.

This agreement is only the first line, even if fully implemented, in the struggle to rehabilitate the Canadian environment from the depredations of acid rain. Preservation lies in the reduction and elimination of acid rain, rather than in further research. Further research is, after all, only an interim measure. It is a proxy goal. It is not something we can speak of in terms of a solution. Those who say, as does the President of the United States, that they would like to have this problem taken off the bilateral agenda, perhaps believe that longevity will continue to break all previous records. I do not think that this topic could, should, or even can be removed from the bilateral agenda until well in the next century.

On December 16, before the Special Committee on Acid Rain, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) stated: "The report will have to be judged by the standard of how it addresses the main source of acid rain-causing emissions in the United States. If it talks about research, modernization, and technology, it will be transparently superficial".

There stands the condemnation from the mouth of a Government Minister. I do not want to interpret that in too harsh a fashion, or be too critical. I simply say that in view of those words everyone in the House and in the Government must be very conscious of the degree to which progress must still be made, and very conscious of the degree to which that which has been reached is no milestone in this struggle, but a mere hiccough in the progress of the anti-acid rain fight.

On March 11, 1981, the President of the United States said: "We want to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no borders". Those are the words to which the Government must attempt to hold the President of the United States and his administration.

In rising to address this topic I do not seek to speak out against the United States because I am well aware of the commitments and sincere and determined efforts which are being made at several levels in the United States in the cause of preservation of the environment against the depredations of acid rain.

Congressman Henry Waxman, head of a House of Representatives committee responsible for considering that sort of legislation, has some very real criticisms of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) celebration of this agreement. He feels that it may undercut the efforts which Congress has been making over the last five years to get real measures, real research, and real cut-backs in the pollution levels as they presently stand.

We note that there are interests in the United States which are against any measures to control acid rain, or would only support those measures which are so obvious and so economical as to be virtually derisory in their effect, both on the debate and on the problem itself. Apparently the head of the United States National Coal Association likened environmental activists to terrorists from the Middle East and said that a deal will be good because it gives the Prime Minister a pay-off for his friendliness toward the United States.

That sort of attitude cannot be allowed to continue. It is the sort of attitude which will continue to create problems in bilateral relationships. If the Prime Minister cannot overcome the patronizing and paternalistic attitude of people, even those who have no place in the United States Government, obviously Canada will continue to have problems with acid rain in the future.

Before he was elected President, the President of the United States dismissed environmental concerns by saying that trees pollute more than cars. He may have been talking about the nocturnal emissions of carbon dioxide, but even so, that is the sort of statement which, very unfortunately, sticks in the public mind and was likely to convince people that all is well when in fact we have an incipient environmental disaster affecting, not only eastern and northeastern Canada, but the New England states where, in addition to American-based environmental pollution, Canadian-based pollution crosses the border and affects their environment.

Canadians owe it to themselves and to the Americans whom we are seeking to influence, to acknowledge that Canada is a major contributor to its own acid rain problem. We owe it to ourselves to ensure that we not only take action on the bilateral front, but also on those problems which are entirely within our own jurisdiction and which we are entirely capable of handling on our own.

I will conclude by saying that to celebrate what was agreed on last week is, at worst, totally unrealistic and, at best, highly premature. We stand on the road of a problem which will stretch a great distance into the future before a real solution can be reached. I believe that we owe it to all Canadians to recognize the little progress which we have made on that road to date, and to bend the efforts of everyone in the country to further progress toward solutions of these very serious environmental problems.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I hope my remarks today will not have to be overly lengthy, but I do want to make some comments. Along with others in this House, I have been engaged in the battle to end acid rain for a good many years. Some of my friends on the other side will remember that I had the responsibility, as Minister of the Environment under the Government of the Right Hon. Joe Clark, to enter into the first high level discussions with the Government of the United States and the administration of then President Carter. Those discussions led to the presentation of the memorandum of intent which was eventually entered into between President Carter, in the last weeks of his administration, and the then Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Trudeau.

Remarks have been made today about what happened after that. All Hon. Members know what happened after that. Certain advisers to the President and his Cabinet took the position that there was no acid rain problem, or, if there was one, it came from natural causes, or, if there was some problem from other than natural causes, it was not doing any damage, or, even if it was doing damage, we did not know enough to do anything about it.

● (1540)

Remarks have been made today that would indicate that the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has accomplished nothing. Some of those Hon. Members were not here, and some have very properly learned about this issue since they came here, so let me just read something to you to show you how much the attitude has changed among our friends in the U.S. The Edison Electric Institute issued what was called a perspective on acid rain in 1981. This was part of the campaign to stop the campaign, to put it bluntly. I quote:

It is not surprising to find tomatoes are acidic but most people are surprised to learn that a delicious pear can be more acidic than a tomato or that bananas and carrots are nearly as acidic. All of these have pH values well in the range of the rain that is the subject of scare headlines in the popular media.

I do not quote that to try to persuade anyone that there is any truth to it. I am reminding us all that that was common propaganda in the U.S., its Senate, Congress and administration only a few years ago. A similar statement was made by Consolidation Coal Company in 1980. It reads:

There are a host of natural as well as man-made sources of these compounds (sulphates and nitrates) including lightning, volcanoes, sea spray and the organic decay of vegetation.

I do not quote that just to have some shallow amusement with the hacks and flacks who were paid hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars to grind out that kind of unintellectual, specious and wretchedly foolish nonsense. I have said all those things where it was appropriate, to audiences in the U.S. What I am saying to my hon. friends opposite is that for anyone in this House to pretend that something has not been accomplished is to admit to everyone how little those who criticize in that manner know about how far we had to come.

I went to the U.S. and met with Douglas Costle, the head of the Environmental Protection Agency under President Carter. I was at what was probably the first press conference held by a Canadian in Washington on this issue. I can tell you they knew nothing about it. They barely knew where the Adirondacks were, let alone that there were lakes in the Adirondacks dying as a consequence of their emissions and ours.

We said at that time to our American friends that we were not saying we were perfect. Fifty per cent of the emissions landing in Canada are from our own sources, but 50 per cent are from theirs. We went on to point out that 15 per cent of the emissions in the New England states were from Canada, and it was 25 per cent in the Adirondacks. With the information we have now we suspect it is perhaps higher than that, especially down the coast through to Florida. I said then on behalf of the Government of Canada, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister has repeated it over and over again during the last 18 months, that we did not go down there with clean hands.

To make a long story short, what happened? After 1980, with the best will of the then Minister of the Environment, the Hon. John Roberts, and then later the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), it was impossible to move certain people in the U.S. administration. However, it was not impossible to move people in both the Congress and the Senate from both the great and historic Parties. A great deal of movement took place. Hon. Members have properly referred to the fact that there are a number of Bills in both the Senate and the Congress, and there will be more. However, it did not just happen overnight. It happened because Canadians in this House from all Parties were able to get together and go down and talk to Americans as friends, not as enemies. We were able to meet privately with both Republicans and Democrats and speak with dignity and friendship about a North American problem. That is why we made the progress we made.

The Hon. Member for Davenport will remember that in this House from 1980 on, after the defeat of the Government in which I served, there was a bipartisan approach in this Chamber on acid rain. He knows full well, and I am looking right at him and watching him smile, that there were plenty of times when we were in opposition that we went pretty easy because we did not want to put him, as the Minister responsible, in a position that would make it difficult to deal with those people we knew we had to deal with in the U.S. I do not want to turn on some of my friends in this Chamber who, I know, are as concerned about acid rain as I am, such as the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). No one can put out more words in one minute, minute after minute, 10 minutes after 10 minutes, hour after hour, about the scourge of acid rain than he can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: He has the honour presently to head the Subcommittee on Acid Rain. Neither do I want to say of my opposition friends that they do not care, because I know they do. However, someone has to say this. It does not do any good, as an Hon. Member did the other day, to go after our Prime Minister in this House and say that he should have the guts to tell his phoney friend in the White House, mumble, mumble, mumble. It does not help. They may think it makes them feel better, but I have gone down there and debated with U.S. Congressmen and Senators and I have been doing it for a number or years. I have spoken in front of some of the most prestigious environmental and conservation groups in the U.S. I can tell you this: Attack the President of the U.S. in the U.S. and most of the time you are not going to win friends. We have to remember that we are dealing with the Government of the United States.

It is one thing for us to say, and everybody has said the same thing today, that we need an accord or agreement between Canada and the U.S. to end this dreadful business. Goodness' gracious, look at what the Prime Minister said, and I quote Carol Goar from The Toronto Star:

Mulroney stressed he would not give up his acid rain crusade until the United States did agree to emission controls, but he gave no indication how soon or how he would press his case. "This is a front-burner issue," was all he would say. "It is not going to go away until it's solved."

In the name of heaven, what more do you want our Prime Minister to do? We have now an admission by the President of the U.S. and his Cabinet that we have a problem. It is a transboundary problem caused by emissions. We have a commitment to meet and a structure set up in which to carry on discussions. That is not perfect. The Prime Minister said, and I quote from The Globe and Mail:

"I never said our position and results on acid rain were a triumph," . . . "They just appear to be a triumph given the lack of progress . . ."

We have the subcommittee on which a number of Members have served over the years. There are the titles of the reports, Still Waters and Time Lost. There is no question about what this House believes. It believes we have to have an accord. However, I ask Hon. Members to recognize, as I said a few minutes ago, that this is not the floor of the U.S. Senate or the floor of the House of Representatives. This is a Canadian Parliament trying to determine how we influence most effectively a country which happens to be our best friend, and which we know has in its Senate, in the Congress and in the White House Republicans and Democrats who support our view. Let us also remember there are some Democrats as well as some Republicans who do not support our view. That is the task that is before us, and that is what I ask Hon. Members to take into account when we discuss this matter here.

There comes a point where our own people will not take us seriously if all we want to do is to nitpick and to ask, "Who did the most when and why didn't you?" That does not do us any good. I do not expect perfection around here, and I will never make the mistake of one Hon. Member who said, "The trouble with this place is it's getting too political". One of the groups in this country that has done the most magnificent work for us all is the Canadian Coalition Against Acid Rain. Adele Hurley and Michael Perley and those who have worked with them, including some of the associations that have been mentioned here today, deserve our praise and our support.

The Canadian Coalition Against Acid Rain has not said, "Well, because we have this understanding now with the administration of the United States there is nothing further for us to do". We are not saying that, neither are the outfitters and the guides, or the provinces that have entered into the arrangements.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) read out a letter that the Right Hon. Prime Minister sent out during the 1984 campaign. It will surprise nobody in this Chamber to know that I know something about that letter. What the Prime Minister said was that in six months we will have a domestic plan, under which we will act unilaterally along the same lines that the Hon. Member for Davenport when he was the Minister finally said in 1984 we would have to do. He had the support of all the members of the Acid Rain Subcommittee and many members who were not part of that committee.

What I am getting at, my hon. friends, is that there is much we can do here together, and when the Prime Minister said in the campaign, "We will put our domestic house in order in six months", that is exactly what the then Minister of the Environment of this Government, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) did. Within, I think it was, two days of the six-month promise, she had in place the agreements necessary with the provinces. Now that is progress.

The effect of taking the unilateral action on our part had a great deal to do with giving the Prime Minister the moral impetus that he needed to go to the President and say, "Look, I understand how far apart we are. We are not coming to you with clean hands, but we believe it is so bad economically for both our countries that this is the money that we are prepared to spend, these are the steps that we are going to take. We are giving that leadership as a federal Government and we have persuaded the provinces, all of those affected, and all Parties in this country, to support us."

Until we did that we were topped by our opponents in the United States who said, "This is all a conspiracy theory, the Canadians want to get your mind off energy problems or they want to sell us electricity. It is all phoney". I have argued with the lawyers who advance those causes in the United States. I have shown them for the fraudulent efforts they were. Until we can get our hands a lot cleaner and until we can say we are making this effort, those arguments will be used continually against us.

It is the same thing with automobile emissions. The Hon. Member for Davenport knows perfectly well that several years ago when the Acid Rain Subcommittee was sitting in Toronto he could not even get the Department of Transport to send a witness to us on automobile emissions.

Now it is not my purpose to go into all that. It is my purpose to say that if ever there was a cause in this country, short of having a fight for our very existence in which all Hon. Members should be able to come together it is this. We should send a message, but do it in such a way that we remember that the object of the exercise is to send a message effectively. We should remember that we are in this Chamber, we are talking with another sovereign country who is our ally and our friend. We do not have to agree with them on all things, we may disagree with them on many, but we have to live together and we have to have our discussions in such a way that we recognize their dignity and their self-respect. And that I think is what the Prime Minister tried to do. So I hope Hon. Members will give credit where I believe credit is very much due.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)): Questions and comments.

Mr. Penner: Well, I have no question except that I want to say this to the Hon. Member, that the quality of his speech, I think, exemplifies the best in debate in this House of Commons. It is exactly the kind of speech that we expected to hear from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) in his response to the motion from the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). We have heard quite a different kind of speech. I am not going to go into detail describing for Members how they should make the contrast, but I just ask all Hon. Members in the House when they have time, to go back over Hansard and make their own comparison and they will see the contrast.

I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) has made a tremendous contribution today to the problem of acid rain, a problem that we want to see solved and I believe is going to be solved. There are some instructions, some advice and some wisdom that he has transmitted in this House, and if it fails to find fertile ground and grow, I think it is going to be a great loss indeed. I end by commending the Member for the quality of his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on the eloquence and relevance of his comments. Personally, I think that in his speech he gave a good description of the fundamental aspects and the complexities of the acid rain issue.

Perhaps I may ask him a question. Of course the subject of a country's external relations with another sovereign country is a delicate one, and I think we should be delighted with the excellent ambassadorial role played by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in discussing the acid rain problem with our neighbours the Americans. Does the Hon. Member agree that he succeeded in making them understand and assume their responsibility in the matter and act accordingly? That is my question, because I think that in the person of our Prime Minister, we have the best ambassador this country has ever had to promote discussions on the acid rain problem with our U.S. neighbours.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, it will be a pleasure to answer my hon. colleague's question. I think we may not be able to reach full agreement with the President of the United States on the position of Canadians on the acid rain issue. There may still be a problem with certain members of his administration regarding their understanding of scientific problems, including the causes of acid rain, but I think the Prime Minister of Canada has clearly obtained an understanding for the causes of acid rain as seen by Canadians and especially, the seriousness of the problem for this country.

Consequently, today I think the President of the United States has a better understanding of the fact that acid rain is a very serious problem between Canada and the United States. And I think this is a position that did not exist before the Prime Minister's visit.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, there is never enough praise for a statesmanlike intervention in the House of the kind just given by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). I certainly want to join the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) in thanking him for that intervention. It is the expression of a sentiment that is based on sound political judgment and a profound experience on the subject matter that has led him to make a speech that we have applauded on this side of the House. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that is quite a rare occasion.

I want to tap the knowledge and experience of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and ask him to map out the stategy that ought to be followed in Washington in the months and years ahead, particularly in relation to Bills presented by Senators and Congressmen that are waiting to be debated. How should we pursue them, as parliamentarians, in order to heighten the likelihood of their being approved by Congress, when such legislation converges with the Canadian public interest?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, when I was in the Opposition I was always prepared to give advice to Ministers. I am not quite prepared to give as much advice or give it so lightly now that I sit on this side of the Chamber.

However, I appreciate the comments of my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and my hon. friend, the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). Let me say for the benefit of new Members that those of us who have been here a long time and have fought hard for the same issues establish a rapport and friendship that is not always fully appreciated by the public or even that estate which reports our deliberations to the public.

I can make some comments, and I am sure that is all the Hon. Member would expect me to do. First, I do not think that the arrangements which have received the endorsation of the President are the only arrangements that can exist either between ourselves and the administration or between ourselves and the Congress and the Senate.

While I believe the accord that has been endorsed should be used intelligently and sensitively to advance the cause, we must keep in mind that it is quite clear in the document itself that the object of the exercise is to achieve an accord within which our two countries can solve the problem.

Again, I refer to page 4 of the joint report of the special envoys on acid rain. I would argue strenuously with our American friends that this paragraph forms part of what was endorsed. It reads:

> The new initiative resulting from the appointment of the Special Envoys significantly further the development of a bilateral response to the North American transboundary air pollution problem. The foundations of that response—the Joint Statement and the Memorandum of Intent—are already in place. A precedent for that response already exists—

I know my hon. friend is fully aware of this. It goes on:

> —in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreements. What remains is to borrow from that precedent and build upon those foundations a bilateral accord which will jointly address a common problem in the best tradition of U.S.-Canadian environmental relations.

I believe that the Subcommittee on Acid Rain is now in a position and has an excellent opportunity to pursue what I believe is the substantive intent of the paragraph that I just read because that committee sometimes has almost more diplomatic freedom than the Government in its dealings with Senators and Congressmen.

I believe that we may have a two or three track approach to this problem and I believe it can be dealt with in a number of ways simultaneously. While we are grateful for what is in the envoys' report, it would be most emphatically in the interest of this country if appropriate steps were taken to ensure that we point out to the House of Representatives and the Senate that this is a means to solve the problem finally but it is not an end in itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for his excellent motion. I also want to commend the members of the Acid Rain Subcommittee of the House of Commons for the excellent work it has done on the acid rain question over the past couple of years.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Member who just spoke, the debate on acid rain is certainly non-partisan because it is a subject about which all Canadians are concerned. Acid rain is perhaps the most difficult of all the environmental contaminants that the Government of Canada must try to tackle under its mandate.

This is an issue that involves industries on both sides of the border. Perhaps that is where the major problem lies. Progress has been made over the years, beginning with the Helsinki Agreement in November, 1979 when some 32 countries, Including the United States and Canada, agreed that there was a problem and that each nation must make a commitment to solve it over a period of time.

I believe that the Hon. Member for Davenport, the former Minister of the Environment, deserves some credit in this Chamber because he called together some 10 nations to sign an agreement. They became known as the "30 per cent Club". Unfortunately, the United States did not sign that agreement, but I think we can look back in a non-partisan fashion and say that progress was made in this particular area. I believe that this progress was demanded not only by the people in most provinces of Canada but by the provincial Governments as well.

It is interesting to note that no matter what study one reads, one can see that approximately half of the acid rain problem in Canada originates in the United States. According to scientific research, 65 per cent to 75 per cent of the acid rain problem in the Toronto to Quebec City corridor is due to fall-out from industrial interprises in the United States. Some 15 per cent to 25 per cent of the acid rain problem in the north-eastern United States is due to acid rain originating from Canada.

There are incredible figures with respect to problems which have been created over the years. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency of the federal Government takes samplings from approximately 500 lakes a year. It has discovered that 40 per cent to 45 per cent of those lakes have what it calls an "acid problem". In Ontario and Quebec there are approximately 14,000 lakes which are said to have a problem with acidity. Most scientists would say that no self-respecting fish would swim in these 14,000 lakes. That is a very serious problem. There are, as you know, Mr. Speaker, some two million lakes and ponds in that same area.

Scientists are now telling us that 14 rivers in Nova Scotia which normally had a salmon run do not have a salmon run any longer. It is claimed that one third of all the salmon rivers in Nova Scotia have been affected by acid rain to such an extent that there is no longer any salmon swimming up those particular rivers. So we do indeed have a problem.

It is actually a problem of chemicals entering our environment at different points, at different times, at different levels, having different effects. For example, I am told that in the southern part of Ontario there is prevalence of limestone in the soil, which has a neutralizing effect on the acid rain. But the entire Appalachian region is made up of granite, which does not have that neutralizing effect and there is a serious problem there.

I think it should be recognized during this debate that acid rain is one of several environmental problems caused by chemicals coming into the environment. We have the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Environmental Contaminants Act and the Fisheries Act. Each one of these acts has been used over the years to try to solve a particular problem. We went through the struggle with polychlorinated biphenyls when the present Governor General, who was then the Minister of the Environment, outlawed the use of polychlorinated biphenyls with electrical conductors. But once that chemical was outlawed, there was no way of disposing of it. If we disposed of it in the normal way, it would simply go up into the atmosphere and then fall to earth again. Polychlorinated biphenyls are not destroyed once they enter the environment. I do not believe it is a very good reflection on ourselves as a federal Parliament that we have not yet devised a way of getting rid of polychlorinated biphenyls.

I suppose one could say that it is a provincial responsibility. One could interpret the Constitution as saying that under the provincial administration come all of the various aspects of controlling that particular problem. There are varying degrees of pollution caused by chemicals and various solutions are sought. I think it should be kept in mind that although acid rain itself is a very serious problem, there are other serious problems with respect to chemicals in our environment. Sometimes we allow pollution to continue for economic reasons even to the point of encouraging pollution in our environment. One need only look at what is happening to our forests to discover why I made that statement. Our forests and wilderness areas are affected by acid rain and by chemicals which were intentionally deposited in the forestry area to get rid of insects, and because of the recent direction in forest management, there is another chemical used to encourage the development of softwoods and discourage the development of hardwoods. This is a problem which must be addressed.

Perhaps I could be a little political and say that in addressing these problems, the Government of Canada should not do what it did in 1984 and 1985. I am sure the Hon. Member for Davenport would have to agree. We cannot, on the one hand, profess to be trying to cure an environmental problem caused by chemicals no matter what those chemicals are and, at the same time, decrease expenditures going to the scientific community which is trying to get to the root of the problem. The Government of Canada should not be permitted to do that. Yet that is what happened in the fall of 1984. We had a reduction in the numbers of scientists and biologists who were working with various problems having to do with acid rain and the use of chemicals in our environment. It did not make much of a news story in western Canada, I am sure, that certain biologists who were examining the effects of herbicides on the birth of ducklings were laid off or that in the Province of New Brunswick there was a reduction in the amount of moneys set aside for the examination of the effects on wild life of the use of insecticides sprayed from the air. I must say, however, that the cut-backs which were made to the study of herring-gull eggs in the Great Lakes did make the news.

When we examine the total effect of Government action or inaction as it relates to the presence of chemicals in our environment, we should realize that it is not just a problem of acid rain or the presence of chemicals in our lakes, streams and waterways, accidentally or intentionally dumped there by industries, and not just a problem of trying to rationalize the future of the forest industry versus the concerns of environmentalists. I think the Department of the Environment and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) should take the attitude of the former Minister of the Environment, as I have observed him over the years. He provided a buffer for the Government of Canada in its limited jurisdiction in the area of controlling chemicals in the environment. He also placed a check on other Government Departments.

For example, the proposition could be made that the provincial authorities should not embark on a program of chemical use as a forest management tool as is presently the case in several provinces. I am referring to the aerial use of chemicals to decrease the undergrowth in hardwood forests. I believe that matter bears some observation by the Chamber. I know that it falls under provincial government jurisdiction, as does acid rain in the real sense. However, let us not forget what has happened over the last year-and-a-half. The federal Government signed an agreement with other foreign Governments, but it is the provincial legislatures which must put legislation forward and have it approved, as did the Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec recently. The federal Government certainly has some direct jurisdiction in this area. We cannot have the federal Minister of the Environment forever in agreement with the provincial Governments, which perhaps have other ideas about what affects the environment and what does not. I do not think that the Department of Agriculture's Pest Control Division should just give simple approval with respect to the use of certain herbicides for aerial spraying without some investigation or check having been conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare or the Department of the Environment.

In summing up I wish to congratulate the mover of the motion. I thought the Minister of the Environment was rather political in his remarks. I do not think the previous Liberal Minister of the Environment really deserved some of the comments which were thrown his way during the debate. If there is one great environmentalist in the Chamber, it is the Hon. Member for Davenport. In proof of that statement all one need do is to look back and consider the record of the Hon. Member and the actions he took when he was Minister of the Environment. Let us hope that the Government will carry through on the groundwork which was established between 1979 and 1981 by the previous Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, although it is a bit late, the plan proposed by the Liberals is basically worth considering, and contains many positive aspects. However, as far as its structure is concerned, I wonder whether it is the right time, and whether it would not be dangerous to establish a legislative framework for continuing our negotiations with our U.S. colleagues.

We could expect the Americans to parry new arguments and ideas on our side with: "But you already have a framework, and besides, you are not going to negotiate since you have already made up your minds about one area."

It may have been a favorite ploy of the previous government, to use negotations as window dressing for decisions that had already been made but I think this Government is far too open to work within a previously established formal framework. In fact, we must be very open and very flexible in conducting our negotiations. That is the way we were able to re-establish national unity: by being very open and by having discussions before we made our decisions. I think this is why the motion presented by our Liberal colleagues is hard to accept, would also raise some doubts among the Americans as to our credibility.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the hon. gentleman's remarks would have some credibility were it not for the fact that the European Community signed an agreement regarding transborder air pollution in November of 1979, as did the United States and Canada. A period of five years passed and nothing concrete happened, except that the former Minister of the Environment called together representatives of 10 countries here in Ottawa and had them sign an agreement which is now referred to as the "30 per cent Club". Another five years has passed. Without putting them in that historical context the Hon. Member's remarks have no justification. But when one looks back at what happened with respect to this particular issue then I am sure anyone would conclude that the motion before the House is perfectly acceptable.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I was listening very closely to the remarks of my colleague opposite and I thought he was making sense—until he took a partisan approach.

The acid rain issue did not crop up overnight, it dates back to the seventies when it became a serious problem here in Canada. So here is my question to the Hon. Member: beginning in the early seventies, what concrete measures, what concrete policies did the previous Liberal administration—your Government or your Ministers of Environment—put forward to find real solutions aside from its empty rhetoric which has never solved anything?

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I suppose one would have to take into account the Clean Air Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act. One would also have to take into account a whole host of legislative measures taken by the previous Government.

Considering where the Hon. Member is from, I believe he would agree that some of the work carried out by the previous Liberal administration should be encouraged and continued, including some of the work in the Hon. Member's riding with respect to getting rid of the use of chemicals as a forest management tool. This is something which is going on in the Quebec region of the Forest Protection Service. If one went back over the years one would find that there were efforts made by the previous Government. All of the initial efforts were made by the previous Government. If it appears that at that time the previous Government was not in agreement with the United States and said that on certain issues the United States was not acting fast enough, then one would discover that the previous administration was absolutely correct.

When I consider now the reports with respect to cancerous tumours in fish, and when I look at our laws as compared to U.S. laws and examine where these incidents occurred, then I have to say that perhaps the previous Government did not grant enough. However, it certainly granted its fair share—certainly more than the United States of America did in its legislation.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the discourse of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He pointed out that acid rain is certainly not the only environmental problem with which this nation is faced and it is not the only problem which shapes the prospects for today's youth. He called attention to the numerous jurisdictional problems that exist with respect to creating policies that would allow us to address a whole host of environmental issues.

We need not dwell too long on the contamination that goes into our shared lake at the Niagara Peninsula from the American side. That contamination has produced the horrendous state of those waters. Conversely, in our neck of the woods, Canadian industry is dumping significant quantities of toxic chemicals into transboundary waters. When we attempt to deal with these problems, the federal and provincial Governments have considerable difficulties dealing with them in a coherent, deliberate and productive fashion. It can be no wonder that we are faced with serious problems when it comes to transboundary pollution, whether it be acid rain or anything else, though acid rain is a little more ethereal.

In initiating my intervention, I want to do what others have quite justifiably done, and that is, to recognize not only the merit of the motion we have before us but the deep concern demonstrated now and in the past by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I should like to make reference to the fact that the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate was accused of being political in his speech. I thought I heard him say that some of the efforts of the previous Minister of the Environment were to some degree impeded by the failure of the previous Liberal Government to act for financial and fiscal reasons. I thought it was a rather even-handed treatment of concerns that we must all share.

I would also have to share in the recognition of the quality of the intervention made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). As described by others, it was a constructive intervention that asked us, as I understood it, to give some recognition to the fact that at least some progress has been achieved. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has obtained an agreement from the President of the United States.

One must consider the fact that the previous attitude of the President toward the acid rain problem was that he had all kinds of rather peculiar notions about how acid rain might have originated and felt that we should engage in much more research to demonstrate that acid rain even exists and that it exists by virtue of sources that can be controlled. With that in mind, I think I would have to say that indeed there has been some measure of achievement, perhaps almost akin to the legendary achievement of having 20,000 monkeys succeed in writing a poem.

It should also be noted that we dare not have the notion that very much in any objective sense has been achieved apart from a pedagogical lesson. We have what seems to be an agreement on the part of the President to accept the report that was issued by the special envoys on acid rain. This report sought to provide for the expenditure of $5 billion, shared between the federal Government of the United States and industry, on research and development of techniques and mechanisms by which acid rain pollution would be cut down.

Others have made reference to the fact that the Subcommittee on Acid Rain made its report and issued its judgment in most complete agreement on the special envoys' report. The committee pointed out that the report did not address the costs of inaction. It did not set down targets and dates. It did not set out a program of action that matches the deadlines and targets adopted in Canada of 50 per cent by 1994, using the year 1980 as a base. It did not even mention or address the levels which were considered to be a reasonable goal in the 1980 agreement, the so-called Helsinki Protocol. It did not see acid rain as being primarily an environmental transboundary issue, considering it to be more of an irritant in Canada-U.S. relations. Of course, it must be a very fundamental issue in the Canadian-U.S. relations.

Perhaps I might highlight the consequences of transboundary acid rain. Fishery, tourism, agriculture and forestry resources are at risk due to acid rain, and these resources sustain about 8 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product. Forty-three per cent of the two million lakes in Quebec and Ontario are vulnerable to acidification as they are poorly buffered and have no way of controlling or reversing excess inorganic acids poured in from the sky.

We have already taken notice of the nearly 15 per cent of salmon rivers in Nova Scotia which can no longer support salmon and another 10 per cent which are rapidly becoming acidified. We are talking here about $8 million and 90,000 jobs at risk. Some 600 fishing camps and lodges are fated to close by the year 2000, resulting in a cost of $28 million to the Ontario economy and 600 jobs.

About 175 million acres of Canada's productive forests are in areas receiving high levels of acid rain and $14-billion worth of forest products are at risk. About 50 per cent of the soils in Ontario and 87 per cent of those in Quebec are at risk due to acid rain at a prospective cost of $3 billion. Eighty-six per cent of the population lives in areas which are subject to acid precipitation, and there is a prospective danger of respiratory problems. If one looks around, one finds that many of the buildings which are made of carbonate rocks are themselves dissolving rather rapidly in some areas, subjecting us to a loss of heritage and mementoes from our past which ought to be of significance.

What are the dangers involved, even though we recognize that there has been some slight progress made and that the President has seen a slight glimmer of light with respect to the issue? He has begun, to some slight degree, to recognize that there is an issue of importance between our two countries. It is one of deep concern not only in Canada but in many of the states of the United States. I suppose the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain in Canada put it in a perspective which may be offensive to the Government. However, in the absence of additional action, it is a perspective which would have to be regarded as meritorious. "We have a triumph of public relations over environmental protection", says Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. From the American side, we have a Democratic Congressman saying: "Those who are struggling to achieve some decent standards for emissions have been betrayed". Mr. Waxman went on to say: "The Prime Minister's grasp of empty rhetoric as a victory will make our efforts harder". On the other hand, in order to obtain an additional perspective, we should listen to the laudatory statements of those whose profit depends upon a continuation of the present situation. The U.S. National Coal Association thinks that the agreement is great. The Vice-President of the Edison Electric Institute says that it is a sensible way to build on the U.S. record of pollution control.

In response to an earlier question, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South said that we should not abandon other efforts. If we were to adopt the position taken by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the position which would have us believe that the agreement was almost revolutionary in its accomplishment, and then wait quietly to see what will be the results, we would be very much like the dog who saw the mirror image of his bone in the water and dropped the bone to chase the reflection in the water.

The other side of the coin is the necessity to give every possible support to those in the United States Congress and Senate who are trying to protect their own environment, who are trying to protect the inheritance of their people, and who are seeing that they cannot continue to profit by the killing of the environment whether slowly or quickly. We should not hesitate or mince our words in providing that kind of support.

The resolution which is before us today for adoption is significantly non-controversial and studiously non-partisan. In recognition of the new Standing Orders, it is attempting to achieve some degree of serious consideration from all sides, with perhaps all sides agreeing. It does not say that the present situation is bad or that nothing has been accomplished. It only says that something more must be accomplished. Surely there must be some sequel even if the agreement is lived up to in detail, and there is some considerable doubt in that regard. We have no evidence that the President of the United States is fighting or will fight as hard for the $5 billion necessary here as he has fought for the $100 million he is attempting to obtain to kill people in Nicaragua. Let us assume that he accomplishes what we hope he will accomplish by virtue of the agreement. Then, surely, by the time of the next summit we should be prepared to go the next step and insist upon a recognition of the real need as delineated in the resolution. It is nice to have research. It is nice to have the thought that maybe $5 billion will be spent to do something. However it would be far nicer and far better to have a secure understanding between two sovereign nations that one will not do something at the expense of the other, and that we will not be subservient to a nation which might refuse in the future to meet our standards for our own protection. If we do not tell the Americans clearly what we want, expect and is necessary, then I can tell the House, having lived close to that nation, that we will never get anything. It is a nation, a country or a people that understands when it is told unambiguously and with certainty what is wanted. In that event it will respond clearly. If we concede to lukewarm, vague agreements on a continuous basis, we will make no progress. Progress therefore demands specificity. This resolution provides specificity, a course of action and the basis for a reasonable agreement to address the issues in a way which will accomplish an end that is satisfactory to all, not only Canadians but indeed those in the United States who share our view, our allies in the Senate and the Congress, whom we should not and must not desert by virtue of this agreement.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I left the House on Friday afternoon and drove back to my constituency. I did not reach there until fairly late, and I did not go into my office until nine o'clock on Saturday morning. At that time I learned that my office had been notified that there would be a debate on the agreement of the President of the United States and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I was absolutely flabbergasted, when I could have thought of so many other topics, economic and otherwise, to which the Opposition could give a much higher priority.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In light of what the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) just said, I should like to ask him whether he read the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I think the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) knows full well that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I will admit that I had not read the motion on Saturday morning. I was just told that there would be an Opposition Day on it. Certainly I read it when I returned to my office in Ottawa last night. I appreciate the concern of all Canadians. I appreciate the concern of the Opposition. I have been a Member of Parliament for close to 14 years and, sadly I must say, most of it was spent in opposition. I am aware that we are in an adversarial system. I am well aware that the Hon. Member for Davenport states that this is a non-controversial motion. I certainly agree 100 per cent with some of the items contained in it. The agreement has been torn apart by members of the Opposition since it was made public last week.

I have been involved in the acid rain problem. I represent a riding which is probably the most seriously injured by acid rain. It is a riding where the great majority of acid rain comes from the United States. If anyone has a vested interest and a great interest in trying to get something done, I can assure the Hon. Member that it is the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, in that 70 per cent of all the acid rain falling in my riding comes from the United States.

When the envoys' report came out on January 8, or whenever it was, as a Member representing an injured area, I did not jump for joy; I wanted much more. As a member of the Subcommittee on Acid Rain I wanted more, along with the six other members of that committee. However, in this world one does not get everything one wants. Are some members of the Opposition saying that in order to get what we want we should declare war on the United States? Would the Prime Minister have been further ahead to go down there and raise hell like a gun-slinging westerner? Would he have been further ahead to tell the President of the United States that he did not want anything to do with it and walk off in a huff? He certainly would not have obtained too much by discussing a very, very serious environmental problem in that way. There is a lot more to the old story that an ounce of honey is better than a gallon of gall.

• (1650)

The Opposition will be aware that until the President of the United States made that statement, he did not even agree that there was an acid rain problem. He was absolutely mum on the issue. All Members in this House have friends in the American House of Representatives and Senate who are just as involved with and worried about acid rain as Canadians are. I have contacted some of those people, and they are all saying: "Amen, at least he has admitted there is a problem". I contacted the office of Senator Robert Stafford early this morning. The Senator was not there, but I spoke to his chief of staff, Neal Houston, who stated that the Senator was very happy that something had been accomplished, even though it was not what they wanted.

As the Hon. Member for Davenport will know, Bill S-52, sponsored by Senator Stafford, was presented in the House last Monday. That Bill requests that there shall be achieved a reduction in annual emissions of sulphur dioxide in the acid deposition impact region established under Section 181 of this Act of 10 million tons from the total actual annual level of such emissions between January 1, 1980 and December 31, 1980. Such reductions shall be achieved pursuant to a phased reduction and be completed no later than January 1, 1994.

That Bill will be up for discussion, having been introduced in the Senate last Monday. Senator Stafford has been a great exponent of more reductions of acid rain. I believe he is the senior Senator representing the State of Vermont.

Another very important member of the Congress is Congressman Gerry Sikorski. Congressman Sikorski has been working with Congressman Henry Waxman in an attempt to produce a Bill which will be endorsed by a great many members of Congress.

We must admit that we were dealing with a pretty tough nut in the President of the United States. Despite that, we can say that he is a convert now. The Prime Minister of Canada can take a great deal of credit for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I also spoke this morning with Professor Thomas Barnes of the University of Southern California who spends most of his summers in Nova Scotia. He is a great environmentalist, a professor of history, and an expert on Canadian history. I assumed that everyone in California thought that President Reagan was wonderful. Professor Barnes says that is far from the truth. The poor people in California think he is wonderful, but academics and many other people are very unhappy with him and some of his environmental vies. They all said "amen" when this agreement between the two Government leaders was announced publicly. This demonstrates that there is a great groundswell throughout the United States and that something is finally going to be done. This is all-important.

It is also interesting to recall that California is the spawning ground of some of the great environmental organizations. The Friends of the Earth and the Sierra Club have their head offices in San Francisco. There are many dedicated environmentalists there. Despite this anti-Reagan movement in California, of which I was informed, the results of the meeting were very positive.

Last Friday morning Lee Thomas, the Director of the Environmental Protection Agency, was interviewed on Canada AM with regard to his reaction. Lee Thomas is the approximate counterpart of our Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). He was also very positive on this issue. He said it was a positive step for the President to have recognized this, having never done so before. Members of the Opposition have pointed out that $5 billion is nothing unless industry contributes. I will concede that it is on a contributing basis and that the Government will match the money which industry puts up to try to reduce emissions. Mr. Thomas said that industry is very much on side and will move forward on this.

Another important consideration is that over the past 10 years the United States has spent $75 billion on environmental improvement and control. That is a lot of money. Of course, we in Canada want them to start spending money to reduce acid rain and other pollutants coming across the border, because pollution knows no boundaries.

As a member of the Subcommittee on Acid Rain I have had the privilege of visiting the United States and talking to people. On January 22, the Minister of the Environment addressed the New York Board of Trade during a symposium on acid rain control and the environment. I was amazed at the positive attitude of people in the United States and at how hard they are working to try to reduce these emissions. One organization in attendance was Americans Against Acid Rain. This group has 10,000 members in the New York area and is a branch of the Sierra Club. They issued a special letter which began: "We know where it starts. Where will it end?" They list the following problems which must be faced:

Thousands of lakes and streams in North America are already dead and scores of thousands more are threatened. There is a 6 to 7% agricultural productivity loss annually due to ozone, which is composed of many of the same components as acid rain;

Forest dieback and retardation is a scientifically documented fact from Georgia to Quebec and the leading cause is acid rain;

$5 to $7 billion worth of building and materials damage occurs each year in just 110 Eastern cities in the U.S.; As many as 50,000 increased mortalities may occur each year in the U.S. and Canada because of dry sulphate depositions; Acid rain leaches toxic metals into drinking water supplies.

With people in the United States working hard to do the same things we are, I think we can be optimistic with regard to what will happen. It is all very well for members of the Opposition to say that nothing will be done for five years. I am much more of an optimist than that.

I wish to commend my colleague, the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), for his outstanding address. He is one of the most knowledgable people in the entire country, if not in North America, and acid rain. He was an outstanding Minister of the Environment, and I certainly appreciated his comments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: The current Subcommittee on Acid Rain is the Third such committee. I want to pay tribute to the two previous committees under the chairmanship of a former Member of this House, Ron Irwin. These committees have worked very hard and procuded reports outlining 39 regulations which should be adopted. Then when the first committee had fulfilled its mandate it ceased to exist. Members asked why this should be. The problem still exists and is growing. As a result, a new committee was formed and produced a second report which went into detail on many aspects of this issue which the first report did not cover. I believe that report made 16 recommendations. Again, members of that committee are to be commended, one of whom is our present Minister of the Environment.

When this Government came into power in September, 1984, I was one of many Members who said that acid rain is a serious problem. I said to the Prime Minister that there may be a lot of other things on his plate which he thinks are very serious, but acid rain is a real gut issue. I pleaded with him and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) from January to February, 1985. I said they were inviting the President here but what do we have to show him when we mention acid rain? I said we have done nothing and something has to be done. I will tell you that I was sweating blood because it was getting on into March, and then the Minister of Transport said, "Don't worry, Stan, you will be delighted". I said, "If I am going to be delighted, I want to be delighted in a hurry. It is certainly no good the way it is now.

As the House is well aware, on March 6, the then Minister of the Environment came up with some very strong recommendations, for which we give him full marks, to reduce SO_2 emissions by 50 per cent by 1994, along with new automobile emission standards for the 1988 model year. I will admit that I was not too happy, I wanted those standards for the 1987 models; but you do not get everything you want in this world, even in this Parliament, and the Opposition should know that. We also provided $150 million for smelter emission controls, and $25 million for technology development. There is $70 million in connection with the use of cleaner coal. There is an additional $18 million for research and monitoring. So we can see that something positive has been accomplished. Certainly I and other members of the committee have not got all that we want. However, we can be sure that this committee will continue to work hard. We do not have to sell just the President of the U.S. on this issue. We have to go and talk to those in power, the 100 Senators and 435 or so Congressmen. Those are the people whom we have to sell in this issue.

The great majority of people in the U.S. are well aware of the acid rain problem. They are on our side 100 per cent. There are literally millions of people involved in environmental organizations, hunters and fishermen, and other sportsmen. I have told the people I have talked to to put the pressure on their Senator or representative. If they can get the message across, we are going to accomplish something. However, if we are belligerent and obnoxious, they are going to tell us where to get off. Even the most rabid member of the Opposition would hardly suggest that we should declare war on the U.S. and invade the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives and rant and rave, telling them they must do this by such and such a date. While I am not happy that we have been unable to get much farther than we have, I am very optimistic that eventually we will and within a reasonable time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall anyone having suggested that Canada invade the U.S. over the issue of acid rain or anything else. That kind of characterization of the differences of opinion regarding how firm or otherwise we should be in presenting our case on this issue is certainly not something that would elicit very much understanding. It is quite contrary to the spirit of the resolution we are considering.

We do not deny that there has been some progress with a President who seemed to have only the slightest understanding of the issue. He has now declared that he recognizes that there is an issue and certainly that is a step forward. However, one of the things that concerns us is the characterization of this agreement as being virtually revolutionary in its content and ultimate result. If the Hon. Member is not familiar with the United States, let me tell him that where I come from we read American newspapers and hear American news broadcasts daily. We are submerged in them. No one over there is talking about this agreement. Not a soul.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Why not?

Mr. McCurdy: Because they do not care.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Are you kidding?

Mr. McCurdy: This is not offered as criticism, it is simply reality. It may be true that there are those who communicated to you their pleasure that some measure of achievement was reached in these conversations. However, let us not go too far in expecting too much from it. There is still concern over there that we are knocking the Senate and the Congress, at least those members of those two bodies who need as much help as they can get, that we are disarming them to some degree if we make too much out of what in essence may turn out to be awfully little.

● (1710)

Mr. Darling: I appreciate the Member's comments and I am well aware of the riding the represents and its proximity to the United States. I would also point out to him that there is more to the United States than the City of Detroit. Despite the fact that he says there was absolutely no comment in the Detroit papers, and I am somewhat surprised at that because it certainly has made the headlines, here in Sunday's New York Times, in a lead editorial, it states as follows:

> With the President's acknowledgement of the acid rain problem, procrastination is no longer so justifiable. A wider constituency now favours control because the first signs of acid rain damage are beginning to appear in the west and southeast.
> Congress at last has the chance of finding a way to reconcile opposing factions and protect lakes and forests across the country.

I would also point out to the Hon. Member that I also spoke to people in Florida on the weekend, and again there were positive reactions there. The members of the United States Congress have at least got something to go on now with the admission and the endorsement of the President of the United States. He said in a communique, "I am pleased to say that I fully endorse the report and will shortly issue a press statement to this effect". So at least it has been acknowledged, and again it is the first step, or maybe the first couple of steps, on the road to recovery and on the road to helping our acid rain problem and also the American acid rain problem.

Five years ago, when our committee first went down to Washington and mentioned acid rain, they looked at us in a strange way. They wondered what the devil it was. It was the best kept secret in the United States. But it is certainly not that any more. It is getting tremendous publicity from various organizations. I attended a special event on March 13 in New York. I was invited down with the Minister of the Environment for Ontario, the Hon. Jim Bradley. They had various people with high profile names who were going out on this invitation list. Among them was the Attorney General of the State of New York, the Hon. Robert Abrams, our own Minister of the Environment, as I said, Dick Cavett of TV fame, Tony Randall, a movie star, some Congressmen and so on. They expected 70 or 80 at that event, but there were 200. I was absolutely amazed. Every one of them were enthusiastic and working for acid rain abatement. That is just one area. Right across the country in the United States you are going to find the same thing. The steady rain soaks in and the power of the people is going to be felt because they are going to get the message to the United States Congress, and, I can assure you, something is going to be done on it.

I was disappointed that in the last presidential election the acid rain problem was not considered to be a really serious problem and that it was not used by the Democrats against the incumbent Government. I am quite sure that it is certainly going to be high on the list in the 1988 election, of that I am very sure. That will certainly add impetus and also pressure the powers that be to find the money for it. I know that this is difficult because the United States of America has a staggering deficit, as do we. Nevertheless, we are certainly both going to have to find the money. As was mentioned here at the present time, it is estimated that doing nothing is costing the United States $5.5 billion in damage to buildings and various other things as well as to the health of the people. It is about time that we all got on side and did something. We might as well spend the money in a positive way to reduce acid rain.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): A very short question, please.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, could the Member tell us what the subcommittee on Acid Rain is doing just at the moment?

Mr. Darling: Well, the Subcommittee has been holding hearings. At our last hearing we listened to people from the Department of National Health and Welfare pointing out what acid rain is doing to the health of people. We are hoping to have another individual come before the committee on the same basis. The committee has issued a statement on the shortcomings, shall we say, of the report of the envoys. We were asked to have a brief prepared for a special symposium on acid rain, which is going to be taking place, I believe, in May of this year, and we are working on that. The subcommittee has also been in touch with Congressmen in the United States, individuals in the United States and officers in our embassy, to try to arrange a meeting in Washington at the most advantageous time.

We do no want to go down there and just be brushed aside. We want to go down there when we can be heard. We want to meet with members of the Congress. We want to meet with the guys on the other side of the street, members of the coal lobby, members of the utilities, to try to promote our suggestion to reduce acid rain. We are hoping, in the course of the next couple of months, to be able to go to Washington and have some meaningful contacts and meetings there with the very influential people in Washington. Of course, high among those will be members of the House of Representatives and members of the Senate. I just received a letter from Senator Stafford last week who said that he looks forward to seeing us when we come down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate on the motion submitted by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I too do not want to be argumentative. I too would like to be constructive, if I am allowed in this particular debate, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the subject matter to be of great importance. I hope that the Government will respond in a favourable way.

The motion, as put forward by my colleague from Davenport, does not in any way, as I believe was suggested by Members who have spoken previous to me, put blame on any one individual or group of individuals, but rather suggest a very reasonable course of action that the Government of Canada ought to be pursuing on behalf of all Canadians. In reading through the motion as set forth by my colleague from Davenport, I believe that a treaty in the spirit of the international co-operation exhibited by the Helsinki Protocol of July of 1985, with the three conditions as listed in the motion I think, is indeed appropriate for such a subject matter as acid rain. For in this particular suggestion that is being put forward he is calling for the reduction by 1994 of transboundary fluxes of sulphur dioxide by at least 50 per cent by 1994, using 1980 as the base year, a specific timetable of emission reductions in order to meet that deadline, and a specification that such reductions will be applied to sources of sulphur dioxide emissions which will yield the greatest benefits to Canada.

I do not think Members on either side of the House can disagree that such a suggestion and a framework for a treaty would not be in the best interests of Canada or indeed the various provinces.

In going back and reviewing some of the history associated with this whole subject matter I was interested and somewhat hopeful, if you will, that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed a special envoy in the person of the former Premier of Ontario, Mr. Davis, and likewise the President of the United States appointed Mr. Drew Lewis, perhaps something very specific, something very concrete, would result from their deliberations. I do not think Members would disagree if I suggested that there were many platitudes exchanged on both sides of the border about this subject. However, as my colleague, the Member for Davenport has said, unfortunately the joint report of the special envoys on acid rain contains no control program, target dates, percentage cuts in emissions or where to apply them in a manner most favourable to Canada. There is no $5 billion program if industry shows no interest, and there is no reference to the cost of inaction. There is no effort to build on the memorandum of intent signed in 1980.

• (1720)

Recently, the Prime Minister travelled to Washington for talks with the President of the United States. Again, there was no written agreement with regard to emission cuts or timetables. It is somewhat disappointing when one considers that acid rain has a devastating impact throughout this country.

With regard to my Province of Nova Scotia, the Government of Nova Scotia, to be fair, has taken upon itself to rebut some of the conclusions reached by other environmentalists in this country. In fact, some reports indicate that Nova Scotia rivers are the most acid in North America. The provincial Government has responded that these environmentalists are alarmists. However, the fact is that there is a very serious problem in my province.

It may not meet all the requirements of the groups at the National Water Research Institute which released its study as to what has taken place in Nova Scotia, but I suggest that there are many rivers in Nova Scotia that are seriously affected. The waters in the southern and eastern parts of Nova Scotia have been labelled as being perhaps the most acid in North America. Commercial salmon fishermen and sports fishermen tell me that the acid rain situation in our rivers is appalling.

It may be fine to suggest that there is understanding, co-operation and a meeting of the minds, but when there is no real action or money being spent to curb or attempt to improve the problem, it makes it difficult to applaud the efforts of the Government. I say very sincerely that the rivers in my Province of Nova Scotia, particularly as it relates to salmon, are in terrible condition and there appears to be no program in place to rectify the situation in the short, medium or long term.

I would have hoped that money being spent under an agreement with the United States, as suggested by my colleague from Davenport, would have been a way to get at the root of the problem.

Dean Jeffries of the National Water Research Institute released a report in Ontario in September saying that Nova Scotia has the worst acid water problem in North America. The provincial Government stated that this was not the case, and the provincial Minister went on to state that a provincial report found that only 27 lakes that were studied had dangerously high levels of acid. I suggest that 27 is a very large number. I would have hoped that the Government would have had somewhat more tenacity in trying to arrange concrete proposals with the United States in regard to the whole issue of acid rain.

Acid rain in my province is eroding monuments in the City of Halifax. Dr. J. Ogden, an ecology professor at Dalhousie University, said that the problem is terrible and the situation will get much worse. Again, no specific action has been taken by the federal Government and indeed very little action has been taken by the provincial Government.

The situation in my province is serious and we hope that the Governments of Canada and the United States—Canada in particular—will give serious consideration to the proposal being made by my hon. friend from Davenport. It is the obvious route to follow in order to alleviate the fears we have about Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada. We ought to pursue a proposal that provides for reductions by 1994, with a specific timetable regarding those reductions.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), who is a former Minister of the Environment and former Minister of Fisheries, stated that we should be united in our fight against acid rain. I agree with him. I believe that this motion can draw Members from both sides of the House together in a fight against acid rain. However, I would debate with him very vigorously the notion that the fact that there may be differences of opinion as to the best route to pursue gives us an opportunity to place our individual suggestions or indeed our Party's suggestions before Parliament.

Our nation has a beautiful frontier. We have rich forests and numerous lakes. In our nation of some 25 million people, Canadians can fish in the east or the west, can participate in mountain climbing or hike through the woods. All of us must be concerned about the magnitude of the acid rain problem.

I do not believe that mere acknowledgement of a report made in early 1986 will be sufficient to address the problems of acid rain in this country and indeed in the United States.

My colleague's motion does not in any way attribute blame to the Government of the day, but it provides an alternative. Hon. Members who have spoken previously have congratulated the Hon. Member for Davenport for providing an alternative solution to this problem. However, as a Nova Scotian and one who is particularly concerned about my province and its fight against acid rain, I am a little disappointed in the progress we have made with the United States.

There are others who are disappointed. For example, Bernard Duval of the Province of Quebec outlined his position in a submission he made to our caucus and members of our Party. He stated his disappointment with the lack of action that is taking place.

I would only hope that in the few minutes remaining, indeed in the subsequent deliberations that will be taking place in our respective caucuses and with members of the Subcommittee on Acid Rain, Members will give serious consideration to this motion. The Parliamentary Secretary would perhaps agree with me that the Prime Minister made the commitment with regard to openness and civility. The suggestion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport, in this particular motion would seem to meet the spirit, if not the letter, if you will, of the Prime Minister's assertion, and it ought to be reflected upon. I cannot find any rationale for the Government to dispute the motion. I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary would avail himself of the opportunity in the time which remains to ask a question or, indeed, to make any comments he would like to share with my Party and I as to why we should not proceed on that basis.

• (1730)

I have heard all the platitudes of Government Members as to what a historical moment it was for Canada and the United States, but I believe the Parliamentary Secretary has to be candid enough to admit that it does fall very short of a comprehensive treaty or agreement, as has been suggested by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will give us his comments on this subject because I know he believes, as I do, that the problem of acid rain is of particular importance to my province and it ought to be of importance to the Government of Canada, particularly so early in its mandate.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments and some of the tone of the remarks of the Hon. Member who just contributed to this debate, a good debate, I think, all things considered.

What really impressed me as I sat and listened to the Hon. Member and other members of his Party is not so much the gap in any real constructive action for a period of five years, the lack of commitment in real dollars, the lack of a solid program of agreement with the provinces, what really impressed me was the approach offered by the Hon. Member and his colleague, the Liberal critic for the environment. Forgetting for the moment that Party's failure to accomplish anything in that regard, let us look at its approach to the future and how we are going to reach an agreement and get the job done, because that is what we are here for. We are here to accomplish things where accomplishments are necessary. Everyone knows that acid rain is the prime environmental problem facing us. It is a bilateral problem and one on which we have to get an agreement with the United States in order to reach an effective solution to our problem. The approach taken by the Liberal Party over 18 years—but let us just talk of the last five years—is that the United States is all wrong and the way to get it to do something, to accomplish an objective, is to go out and bash the United States. That Party seems to believe that the only way we can be effective is to burn our underclothing in front of the White House.

Mr. Dingwall: Burn your bra.

Mr. Gurbin: I refrained from being specific, Mr. Speaker. I think that is an important point because it goes right to the motion. The motion is redundant. There is no question about that. The arrogance of the Liberal critic for the environment shines through. He speaks brave words here today, but he spent nearly five years in government without anything to show for it. If the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) will read the specifics of the report, he will find that there are things in there which will in fact reduce acid rain even in the short term. There is a specific commitment of money. But that is not the end, and we have never claimed it was. We do not feel we are going to accomplish that ultimate objective, the important and necessary objective of reaching a satisfactory conclusion and agreement with the United States, by bashing at every opportunity any constructive efforts which are made between our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States and between such vehicles as the Acid Rain Subcommittee and various Senators in the United States. It does not matter whether the problem is acid rain or a number of bilateral issues, because, as a result of the position which was established by the Liberal Government, including the present Liberal environmental critic during his time in office, it has taken a fantastic amount of energy just to overcome the disposition to argumentative, confrontational type of politics. That is something which nearly split this country when the Liberal Party was in government.

The Hon. Member should look to our previous relationship with the provinces. We now have that relationship back on track. We have agreements with the provinces which the present environmental critic could not achieve. It has taken a lot of our energy just to establish a relationship so that we could get the agreement with the United States that the former Government could not.

Has the Hon. Member anything good to say about the United States? How would he like to approach the problem of reaching agreement with the United States? Would his approach be insults, confrontational politics, or what?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Hon. Member on previous occasions on different subject matters. He is usually—and I say "usually"—a pretty fair and objective individual when it comes to debating certain subjects. There was absolutely nothing in my comments, being a reasonable individual, that anyone could take as bashing the United States.

Mr. Kilgour: What about your friend beside you?

Mr. Dingwall: Listen, mouthpiece, we will get to you next.

Mr. McDermid: Shame.

Mr. McLean: Shame.

Mr. Dingwall: Well, that is the arrogance of government Members. There was nothing in my comments about bashing the United States. There is nothing in the motion which was laid before Parliament which can be interpreted as bashing the United States. No one has said that.

Surely the issue process for us as Canadians should be to try to consummate a deal which is in our interests. In 1986, the special envoy for Canada, the former distinguished Premier of Ontario, ought to have made an economic case with regard to reduging the emissions of acid rain. When one looks through the report, one finds that it is not there. There has been a total failure on the part of the Government of Canada to make the case with regard to the economic benefits. The Government of Canada should have gone to the United States and demonstrated quite clearly the economic impact of the failure of Governments to take concrete and specific action, not only in the short term but in the long term. The Government should have been able to provide that cost-benefit analysis. It was not provided by our envoy and it was not provided when the Prime Minister and the President met in the United States.

So I say to my good friend that we are not bashing the United States either in the motion or in our comments. Surely if he agrees that this is a reasonable motion, which I am sure he will, he will lend us his support in a constructive way and let us proceed on that basis.

• (1740)

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, very clearly, beauty is in the eye of the beholder, which is a very common expression. In reading this report the Opposition chooses not to see the constructive efforts which have been established, including the specific reductions which will flow from them, including the recognition factors with respect to the economic cost of not doing things. The report only has to be read and understood for Hon. Members to see that. It must be understood as a building block for what will be the ultimate solution, which will be the agreements we are now working on and which have already been established in terms of a foundation, as is set out at page 4. I also refer the Hon. Member to page 29. I will not read it since I do not have much time and I am sure he will want to make a comment. We are doing what the opposition motion asks us to do. We intend to continue to do it.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes mention of these great efforts which are taking place. I remind him of a statement made in the House of Commons on March 11, 1985 as follows:

> We want to continue to work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no borders.

That was a comment made by the President of the United States. As I did in my opening remarks, I suggest to my colleague that the joint report of the special envoys on acid rain has no control program, no target date, no percentage cuts in emissions, no reference to the cost of inaction and no efforts to build on the memorandum of intent of 1980. There are significant omissions, not only in the report, but in the recent agreement which the Prime Minister and the President entered into. I say to the Hon. Member, and to Members of this House, in the spirit of civility and in the spirit of openness why can you not accept a motion which is not bashing the United States but which is saying we want something to benefit Canada and the United States? It is a positive alternative that this House ought to consider, and consider forthwith.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not have much time. However, in the time that I do have I would like to place a couple of points on the record.

Our aim in this debate is to get as many Members of the House to agree that we need to establish a particular point of view and that as a Parliament we need to back that point of view. If all we get out of this debate today is a recognition and a commitment by all Parties in the House that we need to be together on this issue, then the debate will have been worthwhile. I hope that this will be the net result of it. I have no doubt that the power of the people, both here in Canada and in the United States, can make a great deal of difference. I think they can change the points of view of their elected representatives. Some of these people will get to their Congressmen and Senators to force the Congress of the United States to move in such a way as to force the administration to take the type of action on which we were all hoping the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would be able to reach agreement when he went to the United States. Instead, we saw inaction. If a Bill can get through the House of Representatives which would require the administration to put money on the table and to start action, then that is all we can hope for. Consequently, we should be trying to make the population of Canada and the United States knowledgeable about pollution and the dangers of acid rain and how it is damaging our land and our heritage.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 82(10), to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House.

Therefore, the question is as follows. Mr. Caccia, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, moves:

That, in opinion of this House, the Government of Canada should, before the next Canada-U.S. summit, negotiate a treaty with the Government of the United States to cut acid rain-causing emissions from sources within the United States, which cause damage to our economy because such emissions are transported across the Canada-United States border.

That this treaty should be in the spirit of international co-operation exhibited by the Helsinki Protocol of July, 1985, already subscribed to by the Government of Canada and should include:

—the reduction by 1994 of transboundary fluxes of sulphur dioxide by at least 50 per cent by 1994, using 1980 as the base year;

—a specific timetable of emission reductions in order to meet the 1994 deadline;

—a specification that such reductions will be applied to sources of sulphur dioxide emissions which will yield the greatest benefits to Canada; and

That failure to enter into urgent negotiations for such a treaty would demonstrate a blindness to the long-term economic interests of both countries, considering the damage caused by acid rain to human health and to forests, lakes, streams, fisheries, agriculture, wildlife, the maple sugar industry and to buildings, monuments and structures.

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CANADIAN CURRENCY

PRODUCTION OF CANADIAN ONE-DOLLAR COIN

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the Government has decided to produce a new Canadian one-dollar coin. As a consequence, I will be introducing amendments to the Currency Act at the earliest opportunity.

[Translation]

As the Minister responsible for the Royal Canadian Mint, I have asked the Master of the Mint to strike a one-dollar coin that will be in circulation by January 1987.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of a one-dollar coin is not new. The Members of this House will recall that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates held hearings on the subject last year and published a report recommending that a coin of this denomination be issued.

[English]

The Mint will initially produce 300 million one-dollar coins. Each coin will be made of an aureate bronze plated on pure nickel. This will mean a one-time requirement for five million pounds of nickel coin blanks, and an annual demand for half a million pounds. We believe this requirement will have a positive impact on jobs in the Canadian mining industry.

The coin will be struck at the Royal Canadian Mint in Winnipeg where all of Canada's circulating coinage is presently produced. The technology involved in this type of production run will continue to keep Canada in the forefront of the coinage production industry, resulting in enhanced opportunities for offshore orders.

The coin will be 11-sided, slightly larger and heavier than a quarter, and gold coloured. Because of its shape it will be easily distinguishable from other coins, thus greatly beneficial to the visually impaired.

I also wish to advise the House that the Canadian one-dollar bill will be phased out of circulation following the introduction of the new dollar coin. This measure alone will result in savings of over $175 million in currency production costs over the 20-year life span of a circulating coin, as the existing dollar note has to be replaced each year.

Several organizations have called for a circulating dollar coin for years. The Canadian Urban Transit Association, representing the public transit authorities from across Canada, looks forward to the tremendous cost savings once processing of paper money used for fares is no longer required. Other groups, including vending machine operators and the visually impaired, are also strong proponents of this coin.

In summary, the Government is proceeding in this direction because we believe everyone in Canada stands to benefit. The circulating dollar will be of great importance to the mining industry, result in a tremendous saving to the taxpayer, and make cash transactions easier and more efficient for all concerned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased at the announcement made today by the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services. A parliamentary committee had extensive hearings on this topic approximately one year ago. If there is any criticism I could make over the decision, it is that it took so long before the Government finally arrived at its conclusions.

Mr. Murphy: It took you guys 16 years to even think about it and you turned it down.

Mr. Boudria: The parliamentary committee reviewed this proposal and came out with a very good, thorough report, as I am sure the Minister would agree, regarding the striking of a dollar coin here in Canada. The coin is modelled on the Susan B. Anthony coin in the U.S. The reason for that, we are told, is because it has to match that size in order to be accepted in vending machines. That is of course the way it should be, otherwise the people in that business would have to bear a considerably higher expense in order to obtain coin acceptors to do that task.

I have a few questions I would like to raise in the House concerning this decision. First of all, it is of course a good Liberal initiative started back in 1978.

Mr. Rodriguez: What took you so long?

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps the Minister inadvertently forgot to mention that, so I thought I would remind you because I am sure you remember that vividly.

The Canadian Bankers' Association had suggested that the initial cost of distributing the coin to various banks be borne by the Government. I would like to know at the appropriate time if that will be the case and what will be the cost to the taxpayers if such is undertaken. I believe those questions remain unanswered. The other thing we should know is whether or not there will be new distribution centres for the coin as has been requested by Canadian bankers.

Do I have only one minute, Mr. Speaker? There are many issues here and I find it unfortunate that we are limited to so short a period of time. Finally, there is something symbolic I would like to raise with the Minister, and I would like to get an assurance on the part of the Government. The picture on the reverse side of the one-dollar bill is that of the Parliament Buildings of our country. I would like an assurance from the Government that in fact a new denomination will bear the same picture, namely, the picture taken from the City of Hull of the Parliament Buildings. Perhaps the Minister will undertake to ensure that it will be placed on the two-dollar bill, or some other bill, so Canadians can look at their currency and see the picture of our Parliament Buildings.

• (1110)

The new dollar coin will be beneficial to the blind and to many other people in this country. I would like some assurances from the Government of Canada that the phasing out will be done in such a way as to not run out of dollar currency, either coins or bills, and, of course, that jobs will be protected in some way for the people working in the bank note production industry.

Again I wish I had more time because there are many other issues I wanted to raise with you this morning.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party caucus are pleased with the announcement by the Minister with respect to moving to a dollar coin. I suppose instead of having a 72-cent dollar we will have a 72-cent coin. We are pleased with the decision. We believe it represents convenience and saving to the consumers. I think the time is right.

The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) expressed grave concerns about the effects of moving to a dollar coin, the effects it would have on those workers who produce the dollar bill. We satisfied those concerns in the committee and I see the Government has recognized it in the statement that in fact we will phase in the dollar coin over a three-year period and phase out the dollar bill over a similar period. This would also reflect an increase in demand for the two-dollar bill; it is expected that there will be a 50 per cent increase in demand for the two-dollar bill and the higher face value currency.

There was a concern that I, and my colleague from Ottawa Centre expressed regarding the choice of finish on the dollar coin. We are pleased to note that the dollar coin will be made of a 100 per cent pure nickel, but the covering will be the aureate finish, which is tin copper alloy. It tarnishes, and we did express concern that maybe we should have gone to the nigold finish, which is a process developed by Inco in the Sudbury Basin. The nigold finish wears and is much more attractive and offers an opportunity for an industrial diversification in the Sudbury Basin.

I have a concern which I must express to the Minister, and I hope he will take note of it. In the committee we recommended that the nickel which will be put into the dollar coin should be made from 100 per cent Canadian mined and processed nickel. That will ensure that the contract for the nickel to produce the dollar coin will go to the Canadian mining industry and jobs will be kept in Canada, particularly in the areas where we mine nickel.

I am also concerned that there was a recommendation, and I do not see anywhere in the Minister's statement a follow-up to the recommendation, that a special coin might be struck of the nigold finish in commemoration of the Calgary Olympics. I note that that is absent from the Minister's statement. That was one of the compromises the committee had come up with to assist Inco in developing the nigold process which they hoped to convince the Americans to apply to the Susan B. Anthony coin, and maybe then it would start circulating in the United States.

I noticed in the statement of the Minister that there was no mention of seigniorage. The committee recommended that $60 million of seigniorage on the dollar coin ought to go to the Calgary Olympics. There was no mention of that $60 million of seigniorage on the dollar coin. I hope that over the ensuing days the Minister will clarify those particular concerns.

All in all, I salute the Government for taking this step. I know the people in the Sudbury Basin are looking forward with anticipation to bidding on the contract to supply the five million pounds of nickel in the first year and the half million pounds in subsequent years for the production of the coins.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF DELEGATE TO NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present the official report, in both official languages, of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) who represented Canada at the following North Atlantic Assembly meetings. On February 12 to 13 he visited the Special Committee on Nuclear Strategy and Arms Control in Geneva, Switzerland, and on February 14 and 15 a political committee in Brussels, Belgium. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for his participation at the meetings and for his excellent report of the proceedings.

Section 101 of our new Standing Orders calls for reports within ten sitting days after return to Canada of a delegation. There have been some difficulties with this time limit. The ten-day limitation creates difficulty for Private Members who do not have priority access to our official translation services.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his representation.

SELECTION

PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Twenty-Sixth Report of the Striking Committee, in both official languages.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later this day.

PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Twenty-Seventh Report of the Striking Committee, in both official languages.

PETITIONS

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions asking the Government to reconsider its decision to terminate the Katimavik program, and to deal immediately with the pressing problems of Canadian youth and the 700,000 unemployed young people we have in this country.

I have several petitions from Ottawa-Vanier. I have a petition with 540 signatures, again from the Ottawa area and Kingston.

I also have another petition from my riding of Ottawa-Vanier, which contains several dozen signatures.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions dealing with the same subject, that is, reinstating the program Katimavik to look after the serious problems of youth unemployment and to try and persuade the Government to change its mind on the question of youth unemployment and Katimavik.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I also have a petition signed by probably several hundred people from various parts of Saskatchewan about the high price of automobile fuel in this country. They are calling upon the House of Commons to reduce the federal taxes applied to gasoline; that is the excise tax and also the federal sales tax.

They are suggesting in this petition that there be a federal-provincial first Ministers' conference called on this particular issue to explore ways to reduce the federal and provincial tax on gasoline in Canada. It is my honour to present this petition. It is unique in the respect that it comes not from one community but, indeed, from several dozen communities throughout Saskatchewan.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to table a petition signed by several residents of Nickel Belt who call upon Parliament to require the Government of the Province of Ontario to remove any restrictions which may have been placed on the police force of Metropolitan Toronto in regard to the laying of charges under Section 251 of the Criminal Code against the operators of the premises known as the Morgentaler Clinic.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present two petitions that have been found to be in order pursuant to Standing Order 106. The first is a group of petitions from the residents of Atikokan, expressing their concern about high gasoline prices. They indicate that they pay anywhere from 53 cents to 67 cents a litre at the gas pumps and call upon the Government of Canada to use Petro-Canada as a tool to drive prices down.

My second petition is from 86 individuals of the community of Thunder Bay who indicate that they are paying anywhere from 50 cents to 57 cents a litre at the pumps in Thunder Bay. They are concerned that Canadian gasoline can be purchased in the United States for much less than in Canada.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions. The first petition states——that the Katimavik Program was a success because of the training received by the 20,000 young people who took part and the important community projects that were carried out.

[Translation]

[English]

The petitioners are asking the Government to restore this program.

The second petition also deals with the question of Katimavik. It asks the Government——that this program gives Canadian young people an opportunity to become better acquainted with their country and the language and culture of the people that live in it. That is why these petitioners humbly pray Parliament or the House of Commons that the decision to terminate Katimavik be reconsidered.

[Translation]

[English]

I have another petition on the issue of Katimavik. Since the program has been a great success in relation to 20,000 young people who have participated in the last 10 years and for the community works that have been carried out, the petitioners call upon the Government to reconsider its decision to terminate the program.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from constituents in the riding of Hamilton East in the Province of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your humble House will therefore provide a remedy.

The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to require the Government of Ontario to remove any restrictions which may have been placed on the police force of Metropolitan Toronto in regard to the laying of charges under Section 251 of the Criminal Code against the operators of the premises known as the Morgentaler Clinic and to express to the Government of the Province of Ontario the displeasure of your honourable House in witnessing the refusal of the Government to do everything in its power to enforce Section 251 of the Criminal Code as enacted by your honourable House.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of petitions dealing with Katimavik. They ask the Government to recognize the short-sightedness of its budgetary measures in cancelling Katimavik and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full funding of the Katimavik program for the young people of Canada. The petitions come from Prince Albert, as well as Birch Hills, Shellbrook, Pathlow, St. Brieux, which are communities in the area of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petitionon on behalf of a large number of residents of my constituency of Burnaby who point out that the telephone is essential for communication, that rental costs must always be affordable and that the telephone pricing scheme known as local measured service, or charging for each local call, would mean that having a telephone would cost significantly more per month for most people and would have a very detrimental impact on the voluntary sector, senior citizens, the handicapped and many other Canadians.

My constituents call upon Parliament to direct the CRTC to deny to telephone companies, such as BC Telephone Company, the right to charge for each call and order the retention of monthly rental for telephones.

EQUALITY RIGHTS—DISCRIMINATORY POLICIES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I have the honour to present a petition signed by many citizens of the Calgary, Alberta area as well as from Saint John, new Brunswick; Guelph, Ontario; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Hamilton, Ontario and a number of other large and small towns across Canada. They call upon the Government to implement the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act to add sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination, to end the discriminatory policies of the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP, to amend security clearance guidelines and to amend the Criminal Code to ensure a uniform minimum age of consent.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions that have been found to be in the proper form. The first petition from citizens of Thunder Bay-Nipigon protests the continued operation within the city of Toronto of the premises known as the Morgentaler Clinic and calls upon Parliament to require the Government of the Province of Ontario to remove any restrictions which may have been placed on the police force of Metropolitan Toronto in regard to the laying of charges relating to its operation.

REINSTATEMENT OF KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): My second petition comes from residents of the City of Thunder Bay as well as Dawson Creek, British Columbia. The petitioners protest that the federal Government's decision to cancel the youth program, Katimavik, is short-sighted. They point out that a 1985 study found that 59.8 per cent of Katimavik participants over a four-year period were employed; 27 per cent in school or university and only 6.7 per cent were unemployed at a time when country-wide unemployment rates for youth were at 18 per cent to 23 per cent. These citizens call upon the Parliament of Canada to re-establish Katimavik with full funding for the young people of Canada.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am proud and honoured to present a petition with respect to the cutting of Katimavik. The petitioners request that I bring to the attention of the House the fact that Katimavik helped thousands of young Canadians to develop social skills and employment options while providing an opportunity to do useful work in different regions of Canada. The petitioners are calling upon the Government of Canada to reinstate full funding to the Katimavik program in order to give a great number of young people in Canada the opportunity to further their ambitions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of presenting to this House another petition, in which petitioners ask that the Government of Canada reinstate the Katimavik Program.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of several hundred Canadians asking the Government of Canada to immediately restore the very worthwhile Katimavik program.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair must advise the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that the petitions they have submitted are uncertified and will be returned to them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The petition that I entered today is certified and this is the certificate of certification.

Mr. Speaker: It is not of much use to us if it remains in the hands of the Hon. Member and is not submitted with the petition.

POINT OF ORDER

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Speaker: The Chair was asked yesterday to reserve on a point of order and is interested in knowing whether any further comment will be made to the Chair.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in response to your invitation to make comments on the matter on which you reserved yesterday, it would appear that yesterday the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) raised a point of order with respect to: "The language used by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) during the Question Period on Friday, March 21".

I think it is clear from our rules and precedents that points of order or questions of privilege cannot be raised during Question Period. When the matter in question came up in the House during Question Period on Friday, Hansard shows that you, Sir, specifically invited Members who had anything to say on this matter to raise their concerns after the Question Period. I checked Hansard very carefully and I find no record whatsoever of the language allegedly used by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) during Question Period on Friday being raised in any way, shape or form immediately after the Question Period on Friday.

● (1130)

The precedents on this matter are clear. I draw your attention to page 114 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 323, wherein paragraph 1 states:

Point of Order—Mr. Hnatyshyn

> Unparliamentary words may be brought to the attention of the House either by the Speaker or by any Member. When the question is raised by a Member it must be as a point of order and not a question of privilege.

Paragraph 2 of Citation 323 states, and I draw your particular attention, Mr. Speaker, to these words:

> The proper time to raise such a point of order is when the words are used and not afterwards.

As I have said, this matter could not have been raised during Question Period on Friday but it could have been raised immediately thereafter. In spite of your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, during Question Period as to the procedure which could be followed if Members wished to do so, it was not done.

In Hansard of Monday, March 24, the Government House Leader is reported to have said that he called for a point of order at the time with respect to the language of the Hon Member for York South-Weston. I respectfully submit that the Government House Leader was in error, inadvertently, I am sure, in this regard. The record of Hansard for Friday, March 21, shows that no point of order with respect to the language allegedly used by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston during the Question Period was raised by the Government House Leader, or by anyone, at the time it should have been done according to our precedents, which was directly after the Question Period on Friday.

Therefore, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the precedents are clear that whatever may have been recorded in Hansard for last Friday with respect to language attributed to the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, it was too late, according to our clear and established precedents, to raise the matter yesterday morning as a point of order.

I submit, therefore, the Chair should not be put in the position of being called on to rule on the parliamentary or unparliamentary nature of the words alleged to have been spoken last Friday during Question Period by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am probably out of order according to strict rules, which Your Honour would like to see observed here with respect to formality, in speaking a second time to this matter, but I simply will say that I have addressed myself with respect to whether or not I tried to bring this matter to the attention of the Chair during Question Period. It is quite true that I did not rise again after Question Period with respect to the statements on the part of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) which have now been clearly recorded.

Rules of procedure, as any one of us who have practiced in a court of law know, are there as technicalities. What I was trying to get across, and what I did indicate at the end of my presentation yesterday, is that I thought the honourable thing for a person who had respect for the House of Commons as an institution, about which a feeling of goodwill would prevail, would be to take it upon himself or herself to rise, if there are parliamentary offensive words spoken, and categorically and unequivocally withdraw those words, not as a reflection with respect to any technicality but rather because it would demonstrate, it seems to me, respect for the institution of the House of Commons. I simply base my submission on the fact that if the Chair wants to review Hansard again it will find it was raised at the time the incident occurred. Your Honour indicated you did not hear any offensive language. Upon checking the record at the first opportunity, I did come forward and raise it the first time I had an opportunity to do so, which was at the beginning of the proceedings yesterday.

The matter, it seems to me, could be resolved from the point of view of the House of Commons if the Hon. Member, who is in the House today, stood up and withdrew the remarks. It seems to me that would be the honourable thing to do.

Mr. Speaker: I will reserve on this matter and think about it a little further.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is a point of order, but I wonder if the Government House Leader could clarify for us his comment or statement, and I quote from Hansard of March 21, 1986, at page 11746:

> One of the jerks sitting next to him! Not that jerk, the one over there.

Would the Government House Leader clarify whether that constitutes his impression that he raised the issue at the time?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, just to show you what I am talking about, I unequivocally withdraw and apologize for that particular remark. I just want to set an example for the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, March 21, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 11570).

Mr. Speaker: May I advise the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 11 minutes beginning at one o'clock today.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to take up where I left off on Friday when I had asked the House this question. In light of the problems facing Alberta vis-a-vis the collapse of the oil industry, and the fact that all the federal seats in Alberta are represented by Conservatives, where are the voices for Alberta in this House? Where are the Tories from Alberta? They are extremely silent, as silent as a cemetery at midnight. They are great ones for getting up and pushing things like capital punishment and other social issues, but on the most important issue facing Alberta today, the collapse of the oil industry—120,000 workers in the oil industry in Alberta are affected—we hear not one sound from the Government benches. It is shameful. It is despicable. It cannot be claimed any longer that there is a Government in Ottawa which is of a different political stripe from the Members who represent Alberta. They all share the same blood. At the moment they are all blue bloods. Yet they have not made one sound in the House about the most important issue facing the people of Alberta. The economy of the Province of Alberta is collapsing.

• (1140)

We heard the other day that Imperial Oil will lay off 1,800 workers. Where are the representatives from Alberta? Where is the Hon. Member from Strathcona? Where is the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)? Where are they all? Have they all flown south and forgotten to fly back north? Where are the Hon. Members from Calgary? Where is the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone)? Where is the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards)? Where are they all?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member not to mention the presence or absence of any specific Member, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am sure they are present. I am not mentioning their absence from the House. It is the absence of their voices which I am mentioning. They are absolutely silent.

Mr. Holtmann: Talk louder!

Mr. Rodriguez: Now they seem to have their voices back.

Mr. Holtmann: Do you want us to yell at you, too?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is the voice of Manitoba. One would think he would be quiet. I think he should be silent.

There is a new Premier of Alberta. How does he see the resolution of the oil crisis in Alberta? What he does is pick up the phone. Whom does he phone? Does he phone the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney)? No, he phones Sheik Yamani. Yes, he phones the OPEC sheik. He phones the sheik who calls the tune in OPEC. So we have Sheik Getty phoning Sheik Yamani and leaving Sheik Carney out of the whole picture. Here is Sheik Getty sneaking into the tent of the OPEC sheiks. And what are they doing? Are they committed to some sort of competitive market for setting oil prices? These are the people who said they wanted free enterprise in the oil industry. Was he phoning up Sheik Yamani to say: "Let's compete"? No. He wants to back into OPEC. That is what he wants to do. The situation is ludicrous.

So what does the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) say? He says: "You can't phone Sheik Yamani. I speak for Canada".

Mr. Manly: Who speaks for Alberta?

Mr. Rodriguez: The point is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not speak for Canada either since Sheik Getty very clearly said: "I don't intend to inform Mr. Clark when I call the sheik".

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is not the Wayne and Shuster Show. If the NDP would like to have a meeting of its caucus, I would ask Your Honour to give them some direction on this debate. We are a serious Government and the figures speak for themselves. If members of the NDP want to act like comics, I would ask Your Honour to throw them out of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker as the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) used to say: "They are dancing sheik-to-sheik". What we have in Alberta is a situation which requires some leadership and direction from the federal Government. There is a Conservative Government in the Province of Alberta, just as there is a Conservative Government in Ottawa. All 21 Alberta seats in the House of Commons are represented by Conservatives. Yet they are allowing the oil industry in Alberta to go down the tubes. In fact, 120,000 jobs are in danger because of their inaction.

Mr. Nystrom: They are "sheiking" their responsibility.

Mr. Rodriguez: My colleague says that they are "sheiking" their responsibility. That is true. They are doing just that. More than that, they have locked themselves into the whole business of having competition and allowing the market-place to determine the price. I do not hear much talk about that these days. I do not hear much talk these days about having competition and letting it set the price. Where are those voices now?

I ask members of the Government to give us some direction. Can the Government not tell us what it intends to do to ensure that these jobs in the oil industry do not disappear? Can the Government assure us that the oil industry is important to Canada and, in particular, to western Canada and that something should be done? After all, the Conservative Government cancelled the National Energy Program. It said that it had all sorts of faults and it came in with the new Western Accord. What has happened since the introduction of the Western Accord? Members of the Government found out that in fact the oil prices are controlled by the cartel and that there is no competitive base. Prices have been dropping and the bottom is falling out of the industry in Alberta. They are the leaders across the way. What do they intend to do about it? Where are the voices from Alberta speaking up for the people of Alberta? Who speaks for Alberta? Who speaks for Canada? It seems to me Members opposite are extremely silent.

Then there are the consumers who are paying through the nose. The 60 days is up today and they are still paying very high prices for petroleum.

I notice that you have given me the signal, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate I do not have enough time to continue in order to explain the whole situation.

Mrs. McDougall: It's fortunate.

Mr. Rodriguez: "Squander Woman" says that it is in her heart to give me unanimous consent to continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to continue his very illuminating speech?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimous consent. Therefore, are there questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: No, you asked for comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but at this stage there is no period for questions and comments. We shall therefore continue debate with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to say a few words following the magnificent address by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the intervention to the effect that perhaps he was making fun of the federal Government, and was not all that serious. I would like to get serious for a moment and refer to the borrowing authority. I would also like to refer to the Budget of the Government and to what the Government seems to be hanging its coat on.

For your benefit, Mr. Speaker, I will refer to a publication put out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) entitled Restoring Canada's Financial Stability. As Hon. Members know the Government of Canada has been claiming that the deficit is the major problem facing the nation. What does one see when one picks up the Minister of Finance's booklet and a copy of his Budget Speech? We see that he said that in 1984-85 we had the highest deficit ever at $38.2 billion. The present Government was in office for half of that year and it must assume some of the responsibility. The Minister of Finance also says that he expects the deficit to be reduced from $34.3 billion this year—that is the year after we had the highest deficit. So now we have the second highest deficit in Canadian history. Lo and behold, when we look back at the times we are talking about here we discover that this Government is in power not only for the highest deficit in Canadian history, but also for the second highest deficit in Canadian history.

Then we go on to find that the Minister of Finance said the deficit will go to $29.5 billion next year. Going back over the record again we discover, lo and behold, that that will be the third highest deficit in Canadian history. When looking at the facts presented by the Minister of Finance, we discover that the Government, which is claiming that the deficit is the biggest problem facing this nation, has while it has only been in power for 18 months run up the highest deficits and is projecting continuing high deficits.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? The Minister of Finance has asked how we can solve the problem of the national debt. In the first 18 months of Conservative rule a full 24 per cent of the total national debt has been accumulated by this Government. Taking the projections of the Minister of Finance to the year 1990, if the Government remains in power, which it will not, we see that it will have accumulated a full 50 per cent of the total national debt of this nation, the total accumulated deficits of the Government of Canada since confederation.

We all know where the money has been going. We all know about the mistakes made by the Government. The point is—

Mr. Redway: Do we cut the expenditures in Newfoundland to cut down on that deficit, George?

Mr. Baker: An Hon. Member is saying something. I cannot comprehend him completely. Perhaps he might repeat it while I am saying my next sentence and I might understand what he is saying.

Mr. Redway: We understand how you can't comprehend, George.

Mr. Baker: If that were not bad enough, the Government has been propagating a great misconception in this nation, the misconception that it was the previous Government that was responsible for the financial mess this country is in, when by the Minister of Finance's own words we see that it is the mistakes of this Government that has gotten us into the supposed mess in which the Minister of Finance claims we are.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) are now asking for borrowing authority. Borrowing authority for what, Mr. Speaker? I have not seen one program introduced by the Government in a way that made any sense. For example, Mr. Speaker, you know about the ridiculous change made by the Government when it decided to treat pensions as earnings for unemployment insurance purposes.

I have to hand the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) a congratulatory note today because he objected to that change so much that today unemployment insurance offices received a memo indicating that war veterans' allowances will not longer be treated as earnings for unemployment insurance purposes. That memo was sent because of the objections of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

The Government of Canada announced that all pensions that were received because of service or work would be treated as earnings for unemployment insurance purposes, so veterans' allowances received by people who were overseas and served during the War were initially treated as earnings for unemployment insurance purposes. But the Government forgot one thing. It forgot that veterans' allowances are based on means tests. The unemployment insurance benefits for those people were cut. But automatically the allowances rose, and then the unemployment insurance benefits were cut again. It was an administrative nightmare. The Minister of Veterans Affairs intervened, and he was successful over the past couple of days. I think he deserves the credit for correcting such a stupid rule brought in by the Government.

Perhaps I only have time to make one further point, but I think it is a very important point. Members of the House and the Canadian people do not know what measures the Government has instituted from the Ministerial task force on program review. When the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) tabled all those task force studies we were not told what recommendations for program cuts went to Cabinet and were approved. They have gone to Cabinet. All of the recommendations from the task force report went to the Planning and Priorities Committee of Cabinet and have been decided upon, and a timetable has been set for the various changes that are to be made.

In May 1985, the Government did not bring in the results of the studies but it brought in the actual decision of the Government based on the Ministerial task force on program review. The document tabled in this Chamber indicates that the task force was under the chairmanship of the Deputy Prime Minister and that other members of the task force were the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). Those Ministers took the flak for those cuts, but then the committee under the chairmanship of the Deputy Prime Minister decided not to take the flak any more, but to present the task force reports to the House without telling the House or the Canadian people what recommendations it had taken from those so-called task force study groups.

Why should the House grant borrowing authority to a Government that has completely misled the Canadian people on the facts regarding the deficit and the debt, a Government that will not tell the Canadian people what it has implemented from the recommendations of the study groups? Incredibly enough, we have even heard members of this Ministerial task force say in their ridings through the local news media that they did not have anything to do with the Ministerial task force on program review, and that they are not responsible. They said that all of these study teams have reported to the House of Commons and they will be discussed over a period of time.

Should we grant borrowing authority to a Government that does not know what it is doing, a Government that has implemented measures on which it has had to go back when it saw the error of its ways? Are we going to grant borrowing authority to a Government that is over-taxing the people of Canada and destroying social programs? It should not be given authority to borrow any money to do anything.

Borrowing Authority Act

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the debate on the motion to delay the approval of borrowing authority. Earlier today I had the opportunity to present petitions from residents of the communities of Atikokan and Thunder Bay and surrounding areas, petitions dealing with gasoline prices. The petitioners pointed out that, in the case of Thunder Bay, they were spending anywhere from 50 cents to 57 cents per litre for gasoline about two weeks ago, while in the case of the community of Atikokan, 120 miles to the west of Thunder Bay, they were spending anywhere from 54 cents to 67 cents per litre for gasoline. That was at a time when the Government was promising that gasoline prices would come down as the market forces would prevail, and that after 60 days had passed gasoline prices at the pumps would be reduced. That clearly did not happen, certainly not to the degree that the price of oil on the world market has decreased. This was at a time when Canadian gas companies were selling their petroleum products in the United States at seven cents to nine cents per litre less than they were selling them to Canadian distributors.

• (1200)

If one lives in a community such as Fort Frances, which is in the riding of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), and there is only a few feet between the gas stations in Canada and those in the United States, one knows that the business of selling gas to Canadians will occur on the American side of the border. That is a loss to our economy and it is a loss to Canadian revenues. For every gallon purchased in the United States, as opposed to being purchased in Canada, the federal Treasury and the provincial Treasury lose revenue.

It is for that reason, as well as others, that we in the New Democratic Party moved a motion to deny the Government the right to borrow for six months, to give it time to get its act together and to ensure that revenues in Canada were properly reviewed and considered.

One group which submitted petitions to me indicated that since the price of oil began to drop Canadians had been overcharged to the tune of $302 million by Canadian energy companies, by those gas giants. It will be interesting to hear the announcement of the Government today or tomorrow with regard to a campaign to eliminate the use of leaded fuels. The rumour is that the Government will not provide a financial incentive to consumers who have cars which use leaded gasoline to convert those vehicles. There will be no financial incentive to discourage owners of cars requiring lead-free gasoline from converting them illegally to leaded gas, because the price at the pump for leaded gas is much cheaper than that for unleaded gas. Supposedly the Government will mount an advertising campaign. It will spend $1 million or $2 million convincing people of the error of their ways. If unleaded gas was cheaper at the pumps than leaded gas, even if it were only one cent, we would find that Canadians would not be converting their cars to use leaded gas and that more Canadians, when considering buying a new automobile, would choose one which used unleaded gasoline. We would do two things if we took that approach. First, we would reduce lead auto emissions, a very serious compound. At the same time we would generate new revenues for the Government of Canada. It is important to do that in a way which makes environmental and economic sense, and to deal with the realities of human nature.

During the debate on the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) we on this side of the House pointed out that the policies of the Government and the application of those policies over the last 19 months had cost the average Canadian family $1,304.50. I will not go into the details of that, as we have raised them time and time again in the House. However, it is very clear that the Government is very expensive for ordinary Canadian families. The kind of change to which they were subjected in September, 1984 has become very expensive. Their purchasing power has been reduced. The ability of consumers to regenerate employment has been reduced because they have less money to spend. Ultimately there has been a very negative impact upon the Treasury of Canada.

Even the cost recovery philosophy stands to be challenged. During the debate on Bill C-75, amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which would allow for cost recovery for the Canadian Coast Guard, we learned that any amount imposed as a fee would be deductible from taxes owing. Canadian steamship lines presented evidence which indicated that if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) were to charge users of marine services $10 million, while the bottom line of the Coast Guard would look good—we would see a $10 million figure on its revenue side—on a global scale the net gain to the Treasury of Canada would be considerably less.

In the marine industry on the Great Lakes, taxes are effectively paid at the rate of 52 per cent or 53 per cent. If we apply that to the $10 million figure, we find that from those companies which have been profitable—and if the Bill passes later, there may be some question about that—the net gain to the Government of Canada would only be $4.8 million or 48 per cent. From that $4.8 million the Government has to pay for the inspectors and the cost of administering that cost recovery regime. The benefit to the federal Treasury is considerably less than the proposed figure.

What I am trying to point out is that the Government has not yet come to grips with the reality of some of its philosophies. It cannot bring in cost recovery without understanding the benefits, both in terms of the bottom line to the Treasury of Canada and their impact upon communities, industries and individuals.

It is time to take another look at the borrowing authority and to say that there are more efficient ways of ensuring growth in our revenues. One of those ways would be by ensuring that we maximize the number of jobs created, so that more people are paying taxes and less people are collecting unemployment insurance and more money is coming into the federal Treasury to wipe out the deficit about which the Government is so worried.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-99, an Act to provide borrowing authority to the Government so that it can borrow $22.6 billion as may be required for public works and general purposes.

We in the House know that the Government needs money in order to operate. However, we should look at just how much is $22.6 billion. It is very difficult and almost mind-boggling for the ordinary person to understand what it really means or how much it really is. I have conducted some research. Of course $100 million is $1 billion—

Mr. Althouse: It is 10 times that much. What are you talking about?

Mr. Henderson: If $1 billion in $1 bills were piled one on top of the other they would reach about 85 miles into the air. What we are looking at here is $22.6 billion would be a stack of $1 bills piled on top of each other and reaching 1,955 miles into the air. Of course, if they were laid end to end, I am sure they would go around the world many times. I think that puts what we are talking about into perspective. It is a huge amount of money which is mind-boggling to many of us here in this Chamber. I am sure it is mind-boggling to people from my part of the country, Prince Edward Island, the Atlantic Coast, northern Ontario and northern Quebec; in fact, to people from all over this great country. What is $23 billion is a question sometimes all too quickly asked. I wanted to give what we are talking about in Bill C-99 a little perspective.

• (1210)

I am asked, as is every Member of Parliament, to approve the amount set out in Bill C-99. As a representative from a poor riding, the riding of Egmont in Prince Edward Island, I have to look seriously at not only why the Government needs to borrow $23 billion and have the authority to go to the bond market or wherever to get that money, but will the Government borrow it all in one chuck? I hope it will not. The interest, however, on that amount of money will add up significantly, and even further increase our deficit.

What benefits, and I thought about this the other day, are the people from Prince Edward Island going to get from the Government borrowing that money. I looked at job creation. What happens to a province like Newfoundland which has the highest unemployment rate in the land? Its rate, according to the last figures, was hovering around 18 per cent. My province of Prince Edward Island has an unemployment rate of almost 15 per cent.

Most Members of Parliament send out congratulatory messages to high school students. At any rate, I do. I send out roughly 800 of these messages to students from Grade 12 going into university. I do not think that as a result of the budget presented to this House, with all the papers we have seen coming from the Government and from different departments, the Government will be instrumental in creating, any more than 150 jobs in my riding. I do not see any great benefit for the people I represent in supporting the Government's request to borrow this money.

I look at our agricultural industry in Prince Edward Island that is almost if not at the brink of disaster. Potato prices are 2 cents a pound or $2 a hundredweight. That means a bag of PEI Canada No. 1 potatoes pays for about two chocolate bars. We know that the cost of production is, roughly 5.5 cents to 6 cents a pound. We know what farmers lost by growing potatoes last year. They have been asking the Government of Canada for assistance to help them out through this most difficult year, but since last November until today there has been no assistance from the federal Government or from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). We hear promises that something is coming, but I need not remind the Minister of Agriculture and the Government that planting season for potatoes is only four weeks away. The wolf is at the door. There is no way that these people will be able to get enough money to put another crop in next year even on a reduced scale. The farmers admit there needs to be some sort of management supply system, but the Nielsen Task Force report is strictly against supply management systems.

I have looked at the fishery. I saw $76 million cut from the fishery by the Government. I have seen the vessel subsidy program, about a $9 million to $10 million program cut. It helped small inshore fishermen improve their vessels so they could bring in better quality product to the market and thereby net a better return.

We have just had a new Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) appointed. Upon his appointment I heard him say to reporters that his objective was to grow more fish. That is a very admirable objective.

Mr. Nystrom: Grow more fish?

Mr. Henderson: That is what the new Minister of Fisheries said he was going to do, grow more fish. A lot of biologists and scientists and those who really understand and know the fishery know that that was the most ridiculous statement ever to come from a Minister. I realized that the Minister knew nothing about the fishery when he was appointed, but I hope over the next few weeks or months he will gain some experience from the fishery. If he had some sort of magical wand to grow more fish at the snap of a finger, then he should have made provision for the fishermen to bring more fish to shore in top quality, which would increase income.

Let me talk about user fees. Other Members have pointed out the user fee problem. The Government is not only increasing taxes across the board to the ordinary working Canadian, but it is also using what I call the back-door tax method of user fees. We have inspection fees on potatoes and increased ferry rates to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The Nielsen Task Force had the audacity to suggest that while the ferry service from Borden to Cape Tormentine in Prince Edward Island and from Port aux Basques to North Sydney, Cape Breton, was constitutional, the whole issue should be referred to the courts for a decision as to whether or not the Government is obligated to subsidize such a service. That sort of mentality and thinking scares me. It scares people from PEI and Newfoundland as to where the Government is heading and where they fit into Confederation, how they see themselves as Canadians. I think we should get that nonsense out of the Government's head forthwith.

Many Members will say that it is fine for the Opposition to say we need more money for this and that and that we need to reduce the deficit. I want to remind the citizenry of the country of some of the things the Government has been doing since it was elected. We have the largest Cabinet in the history of the country. Right now we have 39 cabinet Ministers. It was a Cabinet originally made up of 40 Ministers. That is an extremely heavy Cabinet for Canada. We see well over 100 people on staff in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) office, the largest staff ever in that office. We have seen the bail-out of depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank to the tune of almost $1 billion. We have seen a number of programs the Government has initiated which give no future or hope to the ordinary Canadian.

I cannot support this borrowing authority Bill. I cannot trust the Government with this kind of money. It has not proved to me in its year and a half in office that it is able to manage the economy for the good and benefit of all Canadians.

• (1220)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-99, the borrowing authority. I do so with some pleasure since this is an important matter of public policy, particularly given the country's economic circumstances. Of course, the debate is not now on the Bill itself but on the six-month hoist motion proposed by my House Leader and seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). That motion is designed to kill the Bill. Let me explain why I am pleased to speak to that amendment and why I think the Government should not have the borrowing authority it seeks.

As I said a moment ago, the economic circumstances we are experiencing are such that not only are many people unemployed, the increase in jobs which the Government talks about does not actually reduce the number of unemployed by very much at all. The percentage is declining very, very slowly. As the labour force continues to grow and more people seek jobs, the actual number seeking work remains at about the same level. In those circumstances, with so many unemployed, with so much of our economic capacity not being used, any Government would expect to be running a deficit in its operations and be compelled to come to Parliament to seek authority to borrow money to cover those operations.

The difficulty is that the Government continues to live with a deficit situation which is years old. It was created by predecessor Liberal Governments and this Government has failed to come substantially to grips with the difficulty. The result is that it is forced to seek authority to borrow, in this case, $22.6 billion, or something over one-fifth of the Government's expenditures in the coming fiscal year. It is possible that before the fiscal year, beginning April 1, is concluded on March 31, 1987, the national debt will be in the vicinity of $150 billion. It will surely have reached $145 billion. That is the enormous national debt which the Conservatives decry so intensely.

Why has this happened? Why are Canadians burdened, not with just the absolute amount, which if you were sensible about these things could be borne, but with interest payments which in the coming year will take about 75 per cent of income tax revenue? Why has a Conservative Government, which has been in office more than 18 months, done so little to change the situation? The difficulty is that policies have been developed in the Ministry of Finance and implemented by Revenue Canada which have produced one of the most inequitable tax systems in the world. Individual Canadians in the lower and middle-income groups find themselves more and more heavily burdened with taxation. On the other hand, rich Canadians and big companies continue to escape taxation on all kinds of income. It is not that the country does not have the wealth needed to move the Government closer to a balanced budget. The fact is that this Government, very much like the previous Government, does not want to come to grips with the problem. Instead it creates the deficits which Bills like this borrowing authority have to cover. Tax expenditures which reflect notions from the early 1970s, that if we can only encourage investment we will have a prosperous economy, are at the very root of our difficulties. It is quite obvious by now that those policies have not had that effect.

If we look back to the middle 1970s we can see on the one hand policies of encouraging investment, and on the other hand Governments anxious about revenue shortfall beginning to restrain expenditures. From that time onward deficits have risen sharply while our economic situation has not improved at all. Unemployment has grown.

This is the situation in which lower and middle-income Canadians find themselves. They are more and more heavily burdened with taxation and less and less capable of maintaining economic activity. On the other hand, those who should be encouraging prosperity by using the money they do not have to pay in taxes for investment purposes are not doing what they should be doing. They are using the money to buy existing operations so that our economy becomes more and more concentrated in about seven different control centres, seven different family and other groups, controlling more and more of our economic life. They use their power to reduce competition and put people out of work because they do not need as many employees. None of this is in the economic interests of Canadian consumers, workers or taxpayers, or for that matter those who sit on the front benches across the way as the Government of Canada. Yet the Government goes along this misguided, dead-ended path and pursues these policies without any really significant change.

Certainly some of the worst abuses have been dealt with. The Scientific Research Tax Credit, which proved to be rife with fraud, has been closed off and the Government will have to pay precious dollars to lawyers involved in the prosecution of people who took advantage of that rip-off of the Canadian taxpayer. However, the really significant thing, aside from the abuses, is that there has not been any readiness to come to grips with the whole issue. Tragically enough, the Nielsen task force report, which talks about assistance to business being given with both hands—dollars being shovelled out in various ways—does not come to grips with the issue of tax expenditures. The argument is that we should get rid of the grants while increasing tax expenditures. That suggestion is the most stupid one of all. If there is one deplorable aspect of the tax expenditure system it is that there is no way the people of Canada and their representatives in Parliament can deal with these matters, because the information is not in their hands.

• (1230)

The Nielsen Task Force has failed us grieviously in this absolutely fundamental area involving a heavier burden of taxation on individual Canadians, and the continuing large deficit which the Government tries to finance. These failings indicate the bankruptcy of the Government when it comes to the will required to come to grips with these matters.

For those reasons I support the six month hoist of this Bill. It is not a borrowing authority for Public Works, as the Bill itself suggests. It is instead being used to cover the day-to-day operations of government, because the will is not there in the front benches to take the action required to get this country on a sound fiscal and economic basis.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a few moments talking about the proposal before the House today, Bill C-99, which is a request for borrowing authority by this Government of a sum in the amount of $22.6 billion. This is just an interim request to the House to cover up some of the deficit that will be accruing because of the budgeted plans by this Government for the coming fiscal year.

The exact motion we are looking at today is for a six-month delay in implementing this Bill, to provide some time for the House to get acquainted with the Government's expenditure program. I think it will take at least six months to thumb through the estimates we received this year. It becomes very uncertain exactly what the expenditure program is. It becomes a question of which set of figures do you take, and the variance between those figures is quite dramatic.

For instance, we have this year been presented with our expenditure program set out on the old accounting basis and on a revised accounting basis. If we use the forecast on the old accounting basis for 1985-86, the coming fiscal year, the Government intends to spend $103.944 billion. If we use the revised accounting basis they are proposing on the same budget to be spending $112.250 billion, a difference of some $8 billion or $9 billion just in the form of accounting used. They explained that that comes about because they are trying to include the Exchange Fund Account, the Unemployment Insurance Account, the Western Grain Stabilization Account and other similar unstated accounts, all of which apparently amount to $9 billion or $10 billion.

These are the estimates the House is asked to pass. In order to cover some of this vagueness in figures we are asked to set down for the Government the authority to borrow in excess of $22 billion, in case the figures do not work out under either the new or the old accounting systems.

The deficits we have accumulated have been of a concern in this House. I just want to go back into the accounts to make a few comments about this. The current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in one of his first budgets, his economic and fiscal statement for 1984, and I refer to page 4, said that by the end of 1984 the accumulated deficit of Canada would be in excess of $190 billion. That was his estimate to the end of 1984. Since we added in excess of $30 billion to that deficit in 1985 I think we can assume that the accumulated deficit for 1985 is in excess of $220 billion. Indeed, in his economic and fiscal statement of 1984, on page 4, the Minister of Finance estimated that by 1990 we could be having an accumulated deficit approaching $410 billion.

What that means is that in each year in the expenditures that we set out for ourselves, whether it is $103 billion, $112 billion or $107 billion—and you can find all of those figures, being the expenditures for the coming year, in our estimates for 1986-87—the question arises as to what these deficits will cost us. Again, we only have estimates, but in these same papers the Minister of Finance points out that the total public debt charges, essentially to cover the cost of carrying the deficit for 1984-85, was in the area of $22.5 billion. At the end of 1985-86 it is estimated that those carrying charges will be in excess of $25.6 billion, and are estimated by the end of 1986-87 to be in the neighbourhood of $27.4 billion. If you compute the interest rate, it reinforces that the deficit is certainly in excess of $200 billion.

What has changed in the past few years that is somewhat disturbing to me, because I tend to come from the school that says deficits, if they can be used to provide jobs and constructive activity within the country, are not a burden on the country so long as they are financed from within the country, is that we have moved recently to more reliance on foreign debt.

At the end of the 1984-85 fiscal year we were paying interest on debt payable in foreign currency, that is foreign debt, of just over $600 million. The accounts say $608 million was paid out to carry our foreign debt requirements at the end of the 1984-85 fiscal year. The estimate for the end of the 1986-87 fiscal year is more than twice that. The estimate of what we will be paying is $1.380 billion to pay off our foreign debt.

We are putting ourselves at the mercy of foreign borrowings and will have very little negotiating room out of that. I think when we look at the deficit with a common sense approach, one that my Party has followed when in provincial Governments—I assume it would be a policy we would follow if we were in federal Government—we must look at the expenditures that are required, and decide how to raise the money for those requirements. As it is, we have gone the last couple of fiscal years spending about 30 per cent to 35 per cent more money than we intended to collect. We have been spending about $100 billion and we have been running deficits in excess of $30 billion, which means that we have only been collecting a bit over $60 billion for expenditures in excess of $100 billion. That does not make sense and has to be addressed.

If we look at the method we use for raising those revenues any observer would agree that we do not do it very equitably. We have in this countrya society where the lowest income people are carrying a far higher and heavier burden than are the higher income people. We ask them to bear a lesser per capita part of the debt. We do not have a system which permits them to have equal access to the country's resources. For instance, the lowest paid 20 per cent of our population works with only about 4 per cent of this country's assets. While 20 per cent of our population can manage on 4 per cent of the country's assets, the 20 per cent of our population that has the highest income has the use of 43 per cent of the country's assets. If one were to make a decision on a straight business proposition, it would seem that the low income 20 per cent were extremely efficient while the 20 per cent high income earners were profligate spenders who did not know how to manage the economy. Yet the tax system encourages upper income earners with reductions in their tax bite, while increasing the tax load on lower income Canadians.

The Budget estimates that individual taxes will increase three times faster than corporate taxes by the year 1986 and will have increased to ten times as much by 1990. The Government is taxing the poor without touching the rich and this is leading to greater unfairness. We believe this Bill needs study and that is why we suggest a six-month hoist.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make submissions concerning Bill C-99 through which the Government is requesting the authority to borrow some $22 billion in order to bring into effect certain measures and other Government expenditures related to the Budget. I want to take this opportunity to express my views on the Budget which my Leader referred to as regressive, unfair and harsh. Many Canadians agree with the Opposition that the Budget is unjust and unfair. If one examines this Budget and the first Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the evidence is overwhelming that both are unfair.

It is quite obvious that the intent of the combination of the two Budgets is to reduce the deficit. There are not too many Members in the House of Commons who would argue against reducing the deficit, which is in excess of $30 billion a year, but there is disagreement with respect to the method by which the Government should reduce that deficit.

The Conservative Government believes that the deficit should be reduced on the backs of the disadvantaged in our society and has already shown that it is quite prepared to do this through measures that are unjust and inequitable and which attack the disadvantaged. While it is prepared to give concessions and opportunities to its rich friends on Bay Street, it is absolutely insensitive to the plight of the needy and disadvantaged. The Government's performance in the past year and a half provides ample evidence to indicate that not only does the Government intend to reduce the deficit on the backs of the disadvantaged, it will do so on the backs of lower and middle income Canadian families as well.

When one analyses the net effect of the two Budgets, middle and lower income families will be hit the hardest. As my Leader has pointed out in the House and elsewhere, when one combines both Budgets the total tax increase for an individual earning between $100,000 and $200,000 a year over the next five years is only 1 per cent while it is in excess of 20 per cent for individuals earning $20,000 a year. Where is the justice or fairness?

The Conservative Government is paranoid about the deficit and is prepared to do anything in order to reduce it. While we all agree that Governments should be fiscally responsible, it is quite obvious that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his deputy are taking their marching orders from the oil barons in Calgary and Edmonton, as well as from the financiers on Bay Street and the money people in New York, Europe and elsewhere. The Government is more concerned about the Budget's acceptance on Wall Street, in Washington, Paris or London than its effect on the average Canadian. However, those financiers did not vote for the Government and the Government is not responsible to them. It is responsible to Canadians from coast to coast. The Government does not realize the effect that this regressive Budget will have on Canadians.

The Minister of Finance has made certain predictions in his Budget. He looked into the crystal ball provided to him by the oil barons, the wealthy and affluent on Bay Street and Wall Street and predicted that the average price of crude oil in this fiscal year will be $22.50 a barrel. He also predicted an average interest rate of 9.5 per cent. Those assumptions are the foundation upon which he and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) based the Budget. Building a foundation on such assumptions is like building a house with playing cards. What will happen if the prime rates does not average 9.5 per cent this fiscal year and the price of crude oil does not average $22.50 a barrel? All of the Minister's predictions about a reduction in the deficit and all of his economic forecasts will go out the window.

The reality today is that the price of crude oil is not $22.50 a barrel, $20 a barrel or $18 a barrel. The price of crude oil is less thant $15 a barrel, yet the Minister is basing his Budget on that average price of $22.50. I am not aware if the Minister is privy to what happens at OPEC. Perhaps he and the Premier of Alberta have a private telephone line to the OPEC ministers. But it does not appear that the price of oil will be $22.50 a barrel, or will average out at that amount over the next fiscal year. It is quite obvious that interest rates will not average 9.5 per cent.

We in the opposition, therefore, call into question the assumptions underlying this particular Budget. We also call into question its fairness because the Government and, indeed, this Parliament will not be judged by how low the deficit is, but the decency, civility and caring of the Government. This Parliament will be judged on how the disadvantaged in our society are dealt with. That is the reflection of the greater intention of the Government of Canada, indeed, of any Government or any Parliamentarian. It is how we treat the disadvantaged that tells the tale.

Might I say in conclusion that we support the motion to hoist this particular piece of legislation, Bill C-99, for six months. We ask that the Government, in view of the widespread dissatisfaction with this particular Budget, send the Minister of Finance back to the drawing table—

Mr. Gauthier: Change its assumptions.

Mr. Nunziata: The Government should change its assumptions and rethink what it is proposing. I see a lot of Hon. Members opposite nodding in agreement. They know in their heart of hearts that the Budget is regressive, unfair, harsh and anti-Canadian.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, some Tory is saying: "Thank you and good-night". I think he is falling asleep over there.

Mr. Lewis: This will really do it.

Mr. Nystrom: We are debating a Bill which gives the Government authority to borrow $22 billion. I want to begin my remarks by saying that I oppose the Budget because it is regressive. The only good thing about the Budget is that it helped Howard Pawley become the premier of Manitoba once again. For that, of course, we thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Gustafson: He barely got in.

Mr. Nystrom: I thank the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) and all of the people who helped us re-elect Howard Pawley in Manitoba. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, being unpartisan, would agree with that.

We must ask ourselves why the Government wants to borrow $22 billion. What kinds of progams does the Government have which calls for it to borrow $22 billion? I would like to look for the moment at a program introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). It is a program for summer employment for students called SEED, Summer Employment Experience Development program. In examining the brochure I get the impression that the SEED program is supposed to give students meaningful jobs which will help them in their careers. I am sure the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is hoping the Budget will help elect Allan Blakeney as the premier of our province in a few weeks.

Mr. Gustafson: I wouldn't count on it.

Mr. Nystrom: I am sure it will. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia agrees. The Hon. Member for MacKenzie (Mr. Scowen) agrees. I hope Conservatives will listen because when they were in opposition they complained about Liberals wasting money and not fulfilling the regulations of the various programs. The brochure on the SEED program states, and I quote:

SEED jobs will provide practical work experience to enhance the student's future employability or will relate to a field of study or future career.

This program is supposed to enhance the student's future employability and to relate to a field of study or future career. I would like to refer to some of the applications which have been approved under the SEED program and ask the House whether or not we want to spend the taxpayers' money, which we must borrow, to fund programs to enhance students' careers in this way.

I have an application which is being approved for a retail company in Richmond, British Columbia, to provide 15 jobs in Saskatchewan. Of course, we want summer jobs for students but what kind of jobs? This application is for 15 store clerks in the province of Saskatchewan. How is store clerk going to enhance his or her future employability or career? It seems to me if we are going to have a program designed to enhance the employability of students and to build one's career, they should be provided with jobs which are more relevant to their future. But here is a company which will receive a wage subsidy to employ 15 store clerks in the province of Saskatchewan.

I have another application here from a company called Peavey Industries Limited in Red Deer, Alberta.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has on occasion accused Ministers of making public information which should be private. I wonder if he would like to reconsider having read into the record the name of an applicant for Government funding which I do not believe is normally made public.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for debate as far as the Chair is concerned.

Mr. Nystrom: With great respect, I think the Chair has reason. We can go either way on that one, Mr. Speaker, but I will continue. Peavey Industries is in Red Deer, Alberta. It has received some money under the SEED program to hire nine sales clerks in Saskatchewan. Is that what the Minister of Employment and Immigration wanted to do in establishing this program for students in 1986? I have another application for funds to hire a farm labourer. In this particular case it is a farmer hiring his son to work on the farm. I just wonder whether that meets the criteria of the program.

I will read once again what the Minister tells us the program should be.

Summer Employment/Experience Development (SEED) provides wage subsidies to stimulate employers from all sectors to create jobs for students that would not otherwise be available. Under SEED, students in all parts of Canada will have job opportunities which will benefit their future labour market participation as well as assist them in the continuation of their studies.
